The facts and procedural background of Mavroudis v. Superior Court (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 594, 162 Cal. Rptr. 724 are discussed in § 81.142[3][a]. In addition to their contention of the inapplicability of the psychotherapist-patient privilege, the petitioners had argued that the privilege had been waived when the health care facility defendants had failed to assert the privilege in response to petitioners' request for production of the patient's records and to the motion to compel production of those records. The court of appeal found such a position lacking in merit because only the holder of a privilege could waive it. Since the holder of the privilege was the patient (or may be, when appropriate, the guardian or personal representative), the therapist had no power to waive it but, in fact, was under a duty to assert it (102 Cal. App. 3d 594, 602-603) . In reaching this result, the court cited Roberts v. Superior Court (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 330, 341, 107 Cal. Rptr. 309, 508 P.2d 309 , discussed in [3][a], above.

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to amotion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the grounds of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20), and relating to the psychotherapist-patient privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.150).]

THE PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE INCLUDES RELEVANT COMMUNICATIONS TO PSYCHOTHERAPISTS AND PSYCHIATRIC PERSONNEL BY INTIMATE FAMILY MEMBERS OF THE PATIENT.

Communications by Patient's Intimate Family Members to Psychotherapists. Communications by the patient's parents or other intimate members of the patient's family to psychotherapeutic personnel concerning the patient's behavior are within the purview of the psychotherapist-patient privilege of Section 1014 of the Evidence Code and are absolutely privileged (Grosslight v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 505, 508, 140 Cal. Rptr. 278).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery may be submitted by a party or other person who has resisted providing discovery on the ground that communications to psychotherapeutic personnel by intimate family members of the patient are covered under the psychotherapist-patient privilege. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to compelling discovery, as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege and relating to the psychotherapist-patient privilege generally.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Communications by Patient's Intimate Family Members to Psychotherapists

Petitioner in Grosslight v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 140 Cal. Rptr. 278 was a girl approximately 16 years old who was beingsued for personal injuries. Her parents were joined as defendants on the ground that they knew of her dangerous propensities for violence but failed to properly control her. The parents' demurrer was sustained for the plaintiff's failure to state specific facts about their culpable knowledge, but plaintiff was allowed time to discover the bases for requisite allegations in an amended complaint. Plaintiff then noticed the deposition of the custodian of records at a psychiatric hospital where petitioner had been treated, hoping to find that the parents had given her doctor a history of her condition that would include admissions concerning their alleged culpable knowledge. The trial court ordered an in camera examination to determine whether any such admissions might appear in the records. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to vacate that order.

In granting the writ, the court of appeal held that the psychotherapist-patient privilege established by Evid. Code § 1014 includes all relevant communications to psychotherapists and psychiatric personnel by intimate family members of the patient (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 508) . The court was not disturbed by the fact that the parents are not literally the patient, and it did not attempt to determine if they acted as her agent under analogy to an exception affording the attorney-client privilege to a third party acting on behalf of the client, as announced in People v. Lee (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 514, 527, 83 Cal. Rptr. 715 (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 506) . Instead, the court relied to some extent on the reasoning of In re Terry W. (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 745, 130 Cal. Rptr. 913 in which a minor attempted to assert a parent-child privilege to defeat a delinquency adjudication by barring disclosure of his confession of burglary to his mother, the only incriminating evidence in the case. Although the Terry court did not extend the privilege to the parents under the circumstances of that case, it did state that there must be times where a communication from child to parent falls within a professional privilege. For example, it concluded that when the communication is to further the child's interest in communication with, or as necessary to transmit information to a psychotherapist, the communication is protected by the pertinent privilege. The Grosslight court noted, however, that there was no actual showing of facts in the case before it that the communication, if any, between the parents and hospital personnel was to further their daughter's interest in communication with a psychotherapist or with psychiatric personnel, or that it was necessary for transmission of information to the psychotherapist. Nevertheless, the court concluded that such communication between parent and hospital was for the purpose of furthering the child's interest in communicating with the psychotherapist and facilitating the diagnosis and treatment of the child (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 506) . In response to the contention that the petitioner was old enough not to require her parents' presence in her professional consultations, the court observed that while she was clearly old enough to communicate verbally with her doctors, the nature of her problem was psychiatric. It was entirely possible that her psychiatric illness precludedobjective, accurate, and complete communication by her with hospital personnel without her parents' help (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 507) .

The court acknowledged that inclusion of the parents' disclosures under the daughter's privilege could ultimately benefit the parents in the suit against them for negligent supervision. However, in general, such an inclusion primarily and essentially benefits the patient, not the patient's parents. Such a policy would encourage full disclosure of pertinent matters that otherwise might be withheld by embarrassed parents to the detriment of the patient. The court also relied on the rule of liberal construction in favor of the patient as reiterated in Roberts v. Superior Court (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 330, 337, 107 Cal. Rptr. 309, 508 P.2d 309 (discussed in § 81.151[3][a]). The court determined that such inclusion of communications by intimate family members will encourage the fullest disclosure by the patient's intimate family; a decision otherwise would cause an atrophy and erosion of the privilege inconsistent with its purposes (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 507) . The court expressly added that it was not determining whether the privilege extends to nonfamily communications (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 508 n.5).

THE FACT OF HAVING RECEIVED PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT IS PROTECTED BY THE PSYCHOTHERAPIST-PATIENT PRIVILEGE BECAUSE DISCLOSURE WOULD REVEAL THE NATURE OF CONDITION FOR WHICH TREATMENT WAS SOUGHT.

Fact of Psychiatric Treatment Is Privileged If Disclosure Would Divulge Condition. The fact of having received psychiatrictreatment is privileged from disclosure if its disclosure would simultaneously divulge the nature of the condition for which the patient sought treatment (City of Alhambra v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 518-519, 168 Cal. Rptr. 49).

These points and authorities opposing a motion for an order compelling discovery may be submitted by a party or other person who has resisted providing discovery on the ground that disclosure of the fact of having received psychiatric treatment would also disclose the nature of the condition for which treatment was sought. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but it is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to compelling discovery as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege and relating to the psychotherapist-patient privilege generally.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fact of Psychiatric Treatment Is Privileged If Disclosure Would Divulge Condition

City of Alhambra v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 168 Cal. Rptr. 49 was an action for assault and battery, intentional infliction of mental distress, false imprisonment, and violation of the federal Civil Rights Act brought against individual police officers and the city for which they worked. Plaintiffs propounded certain interrogatories, including questions directed to one of the police officers concerning whether he had received any psychiatric treatment, and, if so, the name and address of each institution, hospital, or person providing the treatment, the dates of hospitalization, and the nature of each condition for which treatment or hospitalization was received. Being dissatisfied with the answers received, plaintiffs moved for and obtained an order compelling further answers. Defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate to vacate the order compelling further answers to the interrogatories in question.

The court of appeal ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate be issued directing the trial court to vacate the portion of its order compelling further answers to the interrogatories described above, and to enter a new anddifferent order denying the motion concerning them. The court held that the interrogatory that sought the nature of the condition for which the police officer received treatment clearly fell within the psychotherapist-patient privilege. The other interrogatories in question did not seek the contents of any communications that passed between the police officer and a psychotherapist, and thus technically might be regarded as outside the privilege. However, the court held that when disclosure of the fact of consultation also of necessity discloses the nature of the condition for which the patient sought treatment, then the fact of consultation also falls within the psychotherapist-patient privilege. The court relied on Marcus v. Superior Court (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25, 95 Cal. Rptr. 545 (discussed in § 81.121[3][a]). The court held that if the police officer was compelled to divulge the fact of psychiatric treatment, he would simultaneously divulge more about the nature of the condition for which he sought treatment--to wit, an emotional or mental problem--than Evid. Code § 1014 required him to disclose (110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 518-519) . The court also held that the exception to the physician-patient privilege contained in Evid. Code § 999 (no privilege in regard to communication relevant to issue concerning patient's condition in proceeding to recover damages on account of patient's conduct if good cause shown for disclosure) is not applicable to the psychotherapist-patient privilege (110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 519) . Further, the court noted that the police officer may have divulged information to the other defendants concerning any psychiatric treatment, and that he might have waived his psychotherapist-patient privilege. Plaintiffs should have the opportunity to solicit information from the other defendants about their knowledge of the police officer's psychiatric history (110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 519-520) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fact of Psychiatric Treatment Is Privileged If Disclosure Would Divulge Condition

The facts and procedural background of Pollock v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 817, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 are discussed in § 81.159[4][a]. On termination of his psychiatric disability benefits, petitioner insurance claimant served special interrogatories on real party in interest, his insurance company, including one in which he demanded the name and address of each insured whose psychiatric disability claim had been denied during a specified timeframe. The court of appeal held that the names of the insurance company's claimants were not discoverable because the disclosure of the names would reveal not only their identity but also the nature of their psychiatric disability (93 Cal. App. 4th 817, 821) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Identities of Psychotherapist's Patients Are Privileged

Smith v. Superior Court (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 136, 173 Cal. Rptr. 145 arose out of a marital dissolution action brought by a wife against her husband, a licensed psychologist. The wife served an interrogatory on the husband seeking to obtain the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of patients for a certain period, and amount of money received from those patients. The husband objected to the interrogatory, and the wife filed a motion to compel discovery. The trial court ordered the production of the information, noting that the husband's offer to furnish copies of bank deposits and tax returns was inadequate when he acknowledged he did not bill patients and had no other financial records. The husband then petitioned for a writ of mandate or prohibition.

The court of appeal directed that a peremptory writ of prohibition be issued restraining the enforcement of the discovery order that required disclosure of the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of the patients. Relying on City of Alhambra v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 168 Cal. Rptr. 49 (discussed in § 81.158[3][a]), which held that the fact of having received psychiatric treatment is privileged, the court held that the names, addresses, and telephone numbers were protected as confidential communications under Evid. Code § 1012. The patient's purpose would be inhibited and frustrated by compelling disclosure of his or her identity without consent, and public knowledge of such treatment reveals the existence and, in a general sense, the nature of the malady (118 Cal. App. 3d 136, 141-142) . The court noted that the husband had to assert his clients' privilege under Evid. Code § 1015 to prevent disclosure of the privileged communications (118 Cal. App. 3d 136, 139) . The court observed, however, that the wife could still examine her husband's receptionist or professional associates regarding the number of patients he ordinarily counseled and his customary fees and gross receipts, and could attempt to show any inconsistencies between her husband's representations regarding his income and past living expenses (118 Cal. App. 3d 136, 142) .

[a] Identities of Psychotherapist's Patients Are Privileged

In Pollock v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 817, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 , petitioner insurance claimant, sued real party in interest, his insurance company, for breach of contract and bad faith termination of psychiatric disability benefits. Petitioner moved to compel discovery of the names and addresses of other claimants whose psychiatric disability benefits had been terminated, in order to contact them about the manner,method, and procedures used in the adjustment of their claims. The superior court denied the motion, noting that petitioner's proposed letter would confront the claimants with the fact that their psychiatric condition had been revealed. The claimant petitioned for writ of mandate. He relied on Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 785, 183 Cal. Rptr. 810, 647 P.2d 86 (discussed in § 80.22[3][a]), in which the Supreme Court held that in an action alleging an insurer's bad faith refusal to pay benefits under an accident policy, the plaintiff was entitled to discover the names and addresses of other claimants whose accident claims had been adjusted by the person who had adjusted the plaintiff's claim (93 Cal. App. 4th 817, 821) .

The court of appeal found Colonial Life & Accident Ins. Co. inapplicable to this action alleging an insurer's bad faith termination of benefits under a disability (as opposed to an accident) policy. The court concluded that the plaintiff was not entitled to discover the names and addresses of other claimants whose psychiatric disability claims (as opposed to accident claims) had been denied during a four-year period. "[W]here, as here, the disclosure of a claimant's identity necessarily discloses the claimant's psychiatric condition, the claimant's psychotherapist-patient privilege trumps the plaintiff's right to use this particular form of discovery" (93 Cal. App. 4th 817, 821) . The court noted, however, that its ruling did not preclude petitioner from suggesting an alternative approach, for example, a letter from the insurer to its own insured, stating that no information about the insured had been disclosed, by that he or she had the option of contacting petitioner's lawyer (93 Cal. App. 4th 817, 822) .

In Scull v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 784, 254 Cal. Rptr. 24 , a psychiatrist was charged with sexually molesting one of his teen-aged patients. The district attorney moved to have the names, addresses, ages, and telephone numbers of defendant's female patients for the past 10 years released in order to contact them and determine whether any of them had been sexually abused or molested during treatment sessions. The trial court granted the motion, requiring that a psychotherapist make the initial contact to minimize the intrusion into the patients' privacy. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to set aside its order releasing the information. It said that the mere disclosure of the patient's identity violates the psychotherapist-patient privilege. It explained that the harm to the patient's interest of privacy is exacerbated by the stigma that society often attaches to mental illness (206 Cal. App. 3d 784, 789) . The court found that the prosecution's claim, that communication with the former patients would increase the likelihood that defendant would have to answer for his behavior and thereby avert harm to his other patients, was insufficient to overcome the patients' right to confidentiality because the evidence sought was neither crucial to the case, nor necessary to protect the public from harm. It distinguished those cases involvingdiscovery concerning dangerous patients, saying that the policy requiring a doctor to warn of the proclivities of dangerous patients in order to prevent harm to others is not implicated when the persons sought to be identified are not sources of danger to the public (206 Cal. App. 3d 784, 792-793) .

DISCLOSURE MAY BE COMPELLED WITH REGARD TO COMMUNICATIONS MADE TO A PSYCHOTHERAPIST APPOINTED BY THE COURT ONLY WHEN THE PURPOSE OF THAT APPOINTMENT IS TO GATHER INFORMATION CONCERNING THE PATIENT'S MENTAL OR EMOTIONAL CONDITION, BUT NOT WHEN THE APPOINTMENT IS FOR A DIFFERENT PURPOSE, SUCH AS PROVIDING THERAPEUTIC TREATMENT.

Limitation on Court-Appointed Psychotherapist Exception. The exception to the psychotherapist-patient privilege that exists when the psychotherapist was appointed by the court, as provided by Evidence Code section 1017, only exists when the appointment is for purposes of gathering information, such as determining the patient's mental or emotional condition for use by the patient or the court, or both. The exception does not apply when the appointment is for a different purpose, such as to provide a parent with therapeutic treatment (see In re Eduardo A. (1989) 261 Cal. Rptr. 68).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery by a party or other person who is resisting discovery on the ground that the material sought to be discovered is part of a communication protected by the psychotherapist-patient privilege. The ground for opposing discovery is that, although the psychotherapist was appointed by the court, the privilege nevertheless applies because that appointment was for a purpose other than providing information to the court or the patient.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to compelling discovery as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege and relating to the psychotherapist-patient privilege generally.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation on Court-Appointed Psychotherapist Exception

In In re Eduardo A. (1989) 261 Cal. Rptr. 68 , five children were declared dependent children of the juvenile court because of sexual molestation by their father. The children were left in their mother's custody and their father was ordered to have no contact with them. After the mother allowed contact between the children and their father, the County Department of Children's Services (DCS) filed petitions to remove the children from her custody. When the mother's therapist was called as a witness at the adjudication hearing, the trial court sustained the mother's objection to testimony concerning confidential communications made during therapy. The petitions were dismissed and DCS appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, but held that the trial court was correct on its ruling concerning testimony by the therapist. The juvenile court had referred the mother to a therapist at a mental health center. DCS argued that the therapist, a psychiatric social worker, was appointed by the court to work with the mother, and that any patient-psychotherapist communications were thus subject to the exception of Evid. Code § 1017(a). The court did not consider a juvenile court referralfor counseling to be the equivalent of a court-ordered examination of a patient by a psychotherapist within the meaning of Evid. Code § 1017(a) (, 209 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1041) . The court reviewed the broad powers given to juvenile courts by the Welfare and Institutions Code, and concluded that a juvenile court's referral of a parent for counseling after finding that children had been molested was consistent with those powers and goals, the purpose of that counseling being to assist the parent in understanding the problem and preventing its recurrence (, 209 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1041-1042) . It distinguished such a referral from a court-ordered psychiatric examination, saying that such an examination is an information-gathering tool, rather than a treatment tool. Its purpose is to determine the patient's mental or emotional condition for the information of the patient or the court, or both. The court-ordered psychiatrist exception is based on this information-gathering purpose. The court concluded that there was no basis for broadening the exception to the psychotherapist-patient privilege to encompass the very different situation of court-ordered counseling (, 209 Cal. App. 3d 1038, 1042) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see, e.g., § 81.10).]

THE PRIVILEGE NOT TO DISCLOSE TAX RETURNS DOES NOT APPLY _____ [WHEN IT HAS BEEN WAIVED or IN AN ACTION BETWEEN FORMER SPOUSES FOR ENFORCEMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS].

[EITHER]

Waiver by Contract. When a party is obligated by contract to furnish the opposing party with necessary information, some of which may be contained in tax returns, then there has been a waiver of the privilege not to disclose tax returns, in the sense of an intentional relinquishment of the right of nondisclosure (Crest Catering Co. v. Superior Court (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 274, 278, 42 Cal. Rptr. 110, 398 P.2d 150).

[OR]

Waiver by Litigation. The taxpayer privilege is waived if the taxpayer brings litigation that puts the existence or contents of his or her tax returns at issue (Wilson v. Superior Court (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 825, 829, 830, 134 Cal. Rptr. 130).

[OR]

Proceedings Involving Public Policy Greater Than That of Confidentiality of Tax Returns Involved--Proceedings Involving Child, Family, or Spousal Support. In proceedings involving child, family, or spousal support, no party may refuse to submit copies of his or her federal or state income tax returns to the court, whether individual or joint. The tax returns may be examined by the other party and are discoverable by the other party (Fam. Code § 3552(a),(b)). [Thus, a spouse is entitled to discovery of the corporate tax returns of a close corporation in which the other spouse has an interest, since such returns are related to the parties' interest in determining the value of the corporation and in ascertaining their financial status. The spouse is also entitled to discovery of the corporation's quarterly payroll tax returns regarding the other spouse (*Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 722-723, 21 Cal. [a] Waiver by Contract

Crest Catering Co. v. Superior Court (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 274, 42 Cal. Rptr. 110, 398 P.2d 150 arose out of an action to compel Crest Catering Company to pay contributions allegedly owed to a retirement fund under the provisions of a contract with a labor union. During discovery proceedings, the administrator of the fund sought production of Crest's employment tax returns, which the court granted. Crest then sought a writ of prohibition, claiming a privilege not to disclose the tax returns.

The Supreme Court declined to issue the writ, holding that there is a privilege not to disclose employment tax returns, but that Crest had waivedits rights to assert the privilege (62 Cal. 2d 274, 277) . The waiver was an intentional relinquishment of the right of nondisclosure that arose out of Crest's contract with the union, wherein Crest agreed to promptly furnish all necessary information on demand to the trustees or the plan administrator (62 Cal. 2d 274, 278) .

[b] Waiver by Litigation

Wilson v. Superior Court (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 825, 134 Cal. Rptr. 130 arose out of an action for malpractice filed against two tax accountants for their alleged negligence in advising plaintiff on the tax consequences of a sale of real property, reported on plaintiff's 1972 tax return. Defendants moved for an order for production and inspection of plaintiff's federal and state income tax returns for the years 1965 through 1973, and the trial court denied their motion. Defendants then sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal.

The court granted the writ, noting that while under Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 509, 319 P.2d 621 , former Rev. & Tax. Code § 19282 (now see Rev. & Tax. Code § 19542) requires that state and (by analogy) federal income tax returns are privileged, plaintiff nevertheless waived this privilege by putting her tax returns at issue (63 Cal. App. 3d 825, 830) . By analogy to the patient-litigant exception to the physician-patient privilege, the court held that by instituting litigation, plaintiff had placed the existence and contents of her tax returns in issue (63 Cal. App. 3d 825, 829, 830) . The relevance of her pre-1971 and post-1972 returns lay in the fact that the contents of such returns were relevant to the issues of mitigation of damages, and to other possible defenses that might have been available to defendants (63 Cal. App. 3d 825, 830, 831) .

[c] Proceedings Involving Child, Family, or Spousal Support

If a state or federal income tax return is produced pursuant to Fam. Code § 3552, the party submitting the return may be examined by the other party as to its contents [Fam. Code § 3552(b)]. If the judge finds that it is relevant to the case to retain the return, it will be sealed and maintained as a confidential court record [Fam. Code § 3552(c)]. If the court finds that the return is not relevant to the case's disposition, all copies of it must be returned to the party who submitted it [Fam. Code § 3552(c)].

In Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117 , the Supreme Court held that in a marital dissolution proceeding, a spouse is entitled to discovery of the tax records involving the other spouse, since the Legislature has established a strong policy of full disclosure in dissolution proceedings. Thus, for example, a spouse is entitled to discovery of the corporate tax returns of a close corporation inwhich the other spouse has an interest, since such returns are related to the parties' interest in determining the value of the corporation and in ascertaining their financial status. The spouse is also entitled to discovery of the corporation's quarterly payroll tax returns regarding the other spouse, but is not entitled to discovery of the corporation's quarterly payroll tax returns identifying third persons absent a specific showing of relevance or need for those returns (5 Cal. 4th 704, 722-723) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Proceedings Involving Public Policy Greater Than That of Confidentiality of Tax Returns Involved--Proceedings Involving Child, Family, or Spousal Support

In Weingarten v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 268, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 371 , defendant in a civil suit filed a petition for writ of mandate, after the trial court found she committed fraud and malice and ordered her to produce her tax returns to permit plaintiffs to prepare for the punitive damages phase. Defendant contended that the order violated her privilege to maintain confidentiality of her tax returns. The court of appeal agreed with defendant that finding a defendant liable for punitive damages is insufficient, by itself, to establish the tax return privilege is inapplicable. However, the court of appeal concluded that privilege was inapplicable in this case because the record showed defendant engaged in conduct precluding plaintiffs from obtaining relevant, nonprivileged financial information necessary to support plaintiffs' punitive damages claim, and there was no less intrusive alternative for plaintiffs to obtain the information (102 Cal. App. 4th 268, 271) . The court modified the order to include a provision requiring that defendant's husband receive notice and an opportunity to be heard before the court could compel disclosure of joint tax returns (102 Cal. App. 4th 268, 271) .

The court of appeal explained that the statutory tax return privilege is not absolute. The privilege will not be upheld when "(1) the circumstances indicate an intentional waiver of the privilege; (2) the gravamen of the lawsuit is inconsistent with the privilege; or (3) a public policy greater than that of the confidentiality of tax returns is involved" (quoting Schnabel v. Superior Court, discussed above) (102 Cal. App. 4th 268, 274) . This last exception is narrow and applies only "when warranted by a legislatively declared public policy" (102 Cal. App. 4th 268, 274) . Although the public policy favoring the confidentiality of tax returns does not give way merely because the information is relevant to prove punitive damages, the balance changes when the defendant, without a valid basis, refuses to comply with legitimate discovery requests that seek nonprivileged financial information. In this case, defendant's conduct not only interfered with plaintiffs' abilityto prove their case, but it also "undermined the discovery process and the judicial system's ability to ensure an ordered process designed to uncover the truth." These policies, when considered together with the importance of obtaining financial condition evidence to establish a proper punitive damages amount, outweighed defendant's right to claim the tax return privilege as a basis to refuse to produce highly relevant evidence of her financial condition (102 Cal. App. 4th 268, 275) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.190

§ 81.190 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Privilege Not to Disclose Tax Returns

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the grounds of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

TAX RETURNS AND THE INFORMATION CONTAINED IN THEM ARE PRIVILEGED, AND THUS MAY NOT BE DISCOVERED.

[EITHER]

A. State and Federal Income Tax Returns. State and federal income tax returns and the information contained in them are privileged from disclosure (Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 509, 513, 514, 319 P.2d 621 ; see Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739).

[AND/OR]

B. Corporate Tax Returns. Corporate tax returns and the information contained in them are privileged from disclosure (Aday v. Superior Court (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 789, 796, 13 Cal. Rptr. 415, 362 P.2d 47 ; see Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739).

[AND/OR]

C. Partnership Tax Returns. Income tax returns of a partnership and the information contained in them are privileged from disclosure (Rifkind v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 1048-1049, 177 Cal. Rptr. 82 , disapproved on other grounds in Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 723, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117).

[AND/OR]

D. Employment Tax Returns. Employment tax returns and the information contained in them are privileged from disclosure (Crest Catering Co. v. Superior Court (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 274, 277, 42 Cal. Rptr. 110, 398 P.2d 150 ; see Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 722-723, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117 ; Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 7, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739).

[AND/OR]

E. Estate Tax Returns. Estate tax returns and the information contained in them are privileged from disclosure (Deary v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1077-1078, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 132).

[AND/OR]

F. W-2 Forms. W-2 forms are an integral part of the income tax return, and qualify as information contained in the returns that is privileged from disclosure (Brown v. Superior Court (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 141, 143, 144, 139 Cal. Rptr. 327).

[AND/OR]

G. Sales Tax Returns. Sales tax returns and the information contained in them are privileged from disclosure (Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 6, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] H. Holder of the Privilege. The privilege not to disclose tax returns is held by each party to a joint return, and may not be waived unless there has been a waiver by both parties (Coate v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 113, 115, 144 Cal. Rptr. 350).

[Optional] I. New Spouse May Assert Privilege in Action for Modification of Child Support. Although the privilege not to disclose tax returns does not apply in an action between former spouses for enforcement of child support obligations, the new spouse of a party to an action for modification of child support may assert the privilege (In re Marriage of Brown (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 702, 709, 160 Cal. Rptr. 524).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery may be submitted by a party or other person who has resisted discovery on the ground that the material sought comes within the general privilege not to disclose tax returns or the information contained therein. Exceptions to the general rule of privilege are discussed in § 81.180.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion compelling discovery.

Counsel should note that the case authority for Optional Paragraph H, In re Marriage of Brown (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 702, 709, 160 Cal. Rptr. 524 was decided prior to the enactment of former Civ. Code § 4700.7 (now see Fam. Code § 3552). Fam. Code § 3552, discussed in § 81.180, provides that no party to a proceeding for child, family, or spousal support may refuse to submit his or her tax returns for discovery. It would thus appear that the tax return of a new spouse would be discoverable in the event it was a joint return with a party to a support action, since the party would not be able to assert the privilege against disclosure.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 et seq.] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that the material is privileged.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] State and Federal Income Tax Returns

Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 509, 319 P.2d 621 involved an action for property damage. Plaintiffs sued Standard Oil when their house was destroyed by a fire that was allegedly caused by defendant's negligent installation of propane gas cylinders. There was a court trial and a verdict of $30,000 was entered in favor of plaintiffs. Defendant appealed, claiming that the trial court should have ordered plaintiffs to producecopies of their federal and state income tax returns, since the contents of these returns might have been useful in impeaching plaintiffs' testimony concerning the amount of damages.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that former Rev. & Tax. Code § 19282 (now see Rev. & Tax. Code § 19542), which makes it a misdemeanor for an agent or employee of the Franchise Tax Board to disclose information contained in any return, manifested a legislative intent to preserve the secrecy of state tax returns (49 Cal. 2d 509, 512) . Thus, the effect of the statutory prohibition is to render the returns privileged (49 Cal. 2d 509, 513) . Moreover, federal tax returns are to be privileged as well as state returns, since they contain substantially the same information as state returns, and hence disclosure of federal returns would defeat the purpose of former Rev. & Tax. Code § 19282 (49 Cal. 2d 509, 513, 514) .

Criticism of the Webb case has been made in a Note, The Case for Abrogation of Taxpayer Privilege in California, 29 Hastings L.J. 775 (1978). The author noted that the creation of the privilege from statutes in the Revenue and Taxation Code flies in the face of California precedent [see, e.g., Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 656, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977] that privileges contained in the Evidence Code are exclusive, and that courts are not free to create new privileges as a matter of judicial policy (29 Hastings L.J. at p. 782). Moreover, the vast majority of states that have clearly faced this issue have held that there should be no taxpayer privilege for private litigants (29 Hastings L.J. at p. 784). Finally, the author contends that Webb misinterpreted the Revenue and Taxation statute in question, which was really only intended to prohibit disclosure by government officials (29 Hastings L.J. at p. 780), and that the policy of encouraging complete and truthful tax reporting might be better fostered by requiring disclosure, than by protection from disclosure (29 Hastings L.J. at p. 783).

Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 arose out of a class action against six defendant retailers for sales tax violations in connection with trading stamps. The named plaintiff served interrogatories on defendants, three of which inquired into the location and contents of defendants' sales tax returns. One of the defendants objected to answering these questions on the basis of privilege, but the trial court granted plaintiff's motion to compel answers. Defendant then petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that Rev. & Tax. Code § 7056 manifests a clear legislative intent to keep the information contained in sales tax returns confidential. In so holding, the Court relied on its previous decision in Webb (discussed above) that state and federal income tax returns are privileged from disclosure (15 Cal. 3d 1, 6) . The Court went on to hold that the privilege of nondisclosure protects the information contained in the returns as well as the returns themselves,since to hold otherwise would render meaningless the privilege recognized in Webb and its progeny (15 Cal. 3d 1, 7) .

[b] Corporate Tax Returns

Aday v. Superior Court (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 789, 13 Cal. Rptr. 415, 362 P.2d 47 involved a criminal investigation for obscenity. Among some items seized from petitioners by police officers during the course of the investigation were federal and state corporate tax returns. Petitioners sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to return the property that was taken, including the tax returns. Petitioners contended that the tax returns were privileged and therefore exempt from seizure.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that insofar as the tax returns were concerned, the portions of the Revenue and Taxation Code that deal with confidentiality of corporate tax returns [former Rev. & Tax. Code § 26451 et seq.] (now see Rev. & Tax. Code § 19542 et seq.) are substantially identical to those relating to personal income tax returns (55 Cal. 2d 789, 796) . The Court went on to hold that since the sole exception to nondisclosure is for criminal prosecution with respect to tax violations, the petitioners were correct in their contention that the search warrant was invalid as far as the corporate tax returns were concerned, since the returns were privileged, and therefore exempt from seizure (55 Cal. 2d 789, 796, 797) .

In Hicks v. Miranda (1975) 422 U.S. 332, 346 fn. 15, 95 S. Ct. 2281, 45 L. Ed. 2d 223 , the Supreme Court questioned Aday, above, as to the continuing validity of the procedure for seizing the records.

The facts and procedural background of Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 are set out in [a], above. In Sav-On, the Supreme Court held that the privilege recognized in Aday would be meaningless unless it protects the information contained in the returns as well as the returns themselves (15 Cal. 3d 1, 7) .

[c] Partnership Tax Returns

In Rifkind v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 177 Cal. Rptr. 82 , disapproved on other grounds in Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 723, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117 , a marriage dissolution proceeding, the wife sought to compel discovery of the state and federal income tax returns of three investment partnerships of which her husband was a member. After the trial court ordered production of the documents for inspection and copying, the husband petitioned for a writ of mandate to review the order.

The court of appeal ordered that a writ of mandate be issued directing the trial court to vacate its order and to strike certain paragraphs from it.The court stated that it is the law of California that the disclosure of the contents of an income tax return may not be coerced for the benefit of a private litigant. This rule is an immunity from coerced disclosure, although the taxpayer is free to disseminate copies of his or her tax return, or disclose its contents, as far as he or she sees fit to do so. The immunity applies even though the individual from whom discovery is sought holds the documents for the reporting entity. Additionally, the wife is not entitled to coerce disclosure of the tax returns on the ground that she is married to the man who has possession of the returns. Although an interest in a partnership may be community property, the spouse of a partner has no community interest in the partnership property (123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 1048-1049) .

[d] Employment Tax Returns

The facts and procedural background of Crest Catering Co. v. Superior Court (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 274, 42 Cal. Rptr. 110, 398 P.2d 150 are discussed in § 81.180[3][a]. The Crest court held that the privilege not to disclose tax returns applies to information submitted to the Department of Employment in employment tax returns (62 Cal. 2d 274, 277) .

In Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117 , the Supreme Court held that in a marital dissolution proceeding, a spouse is entitled to discovery of the tax records involving the other spouse, since the Legislature has established a strong policy of full disclosure in dissolution proceedings. Thus, for example, a spouse is entitled to discovery of the corporate tax returns of a close corporation in which the other spouse has an interest, and to discovery of the corporation's quarterly payroll tax returns regarding the other spouse. Nevertheless, the spouse is not entitled to discovery of the corporation's quarterly payroll tax returns identifying third persons absent a specific showing of relevance or need for those returns (5 Cal. 4th 704, 722-723) .

The facts and procedural background of Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 are discussed in [a], above. In Sav-On, the Supreme Court held that the privilege recognized in Crest Catering Co., above, would be rendered meaningless unless it is construed to protect the information contained in the returns as well as the returns themselves (15 Cal. 3d 1, 7) .

[e] Estate Tax Returns

In Deary v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 132 , plaintiff alleged that decedent promised to provide her a home and financial support for the rest of her life, in return for her giving up her own employment, moving into his residence, and becoming his full time companion and care giver. However, neither decedent's will nor family trustprovided plaintiff the benefits she claimed. Plaintiff moved that defendants provide her with "all writings" on decedent's estate planning. After an initial response, defendant's opposition to the motion stated that the estate tax returns were privileged under Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 509, 319 P.2d 621 , discussed under [3][a], above. In briefs, defendants explained that they viewed the tax returns and related materials as "estate administration" documents, rather than "estate planning documents," and therefore believed that the items did not fall with the scope of plaintiff's request for production. In addition, defendants reiterated their position that even if the returns were the intended target of the production demand, the returns were privileged from disclosure, citing Webb [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1074-1076] . The trial court rejected defendant's contention that the tax returns were not encompassed in the previously ordered production of all documents concerning estate planning. The trial court also found that the privilege assertion was untimely, and that it yielded to plaintiff's entitlement to discovery [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1074-1076] .

Defendants sought a writ of mandate, contending the discovery order requiring them to provide copies of estate tax returns to plaintiff violated their privilege to keep the returns confidential. The court of appeal concluded that the defendants' claim of privilege was well taken, and the order compelling disclosure was an abuse of discretion [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1081] . Given the lack of precision in plaintiff's description of the records she desired and her failure to specifically address the issue when it was first raised by defendants, the court found that defendants were not late in asserting the privilege [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1080] . Plaintiff did not dispute the fundamental premise that estate tax returns are entitled to the same protections against disclosure in civil proceedings as are other types of returns [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1078] . The court concluded that the statutory privilege, interpreted by Webb and it progeny, protected the federal and state estate returns from disclosure, in light of the fact that defendants had not waived the privilege and plaintiff demonstrated no supervening public policy [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1077, 1081] . The court declined to determine whether "related" tax documents, including those used to prepare the returns, were protected, given the complete lack of information, or legal argument supporting this expansive claim of privilege [87 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1077, 1082] .

[f] W-2 Forms

Brown v. Superior Court (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 141, 139 Cal. Rptr. 327 concerned a personal injury action in which plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from enforcing its order compelling her to produce and permit inspection of her W-2 forms. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that W-2 forms constitute an essential part of a taxpayer's state and federal income tax returns (71 Cal. App. 3d 141 ,143). Indeed, they are part of the information contained in the returns and are thus privileged within the holding of Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 (71 Cal. App. 3d 141, 144) .

[g] Sales Tax Returns

The facts and procedural background of Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 are discussed in [a], above. The Supreme Court in that case held that Rev. & Tax. Code § 7056, requiring nondisclosure of information contained in sales tax returns by administrative officers of the State Board of Equalization, manifests a clear legislative intent that disclosures made in sales tax returns shall not be exposed to public scrutiny (15 Cal. 3d 1, 6) .

[h] Holder of the Privilege

Coate v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 113, 144 Cal. Rptr. 350 arose out of an action for a breach of a partnership agreement. During the course of discovery, plaintiffs propounded interrogatories seeking information contained in joint tax returns of defendant and her deceased husband. Plaintiffs claimed that decedent had earlier waived the privilege of nondisclosure of the tax return, and the trial court granted their motion compelling further response.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, holding that the privilege is jointly held by each party to a joint tax return (81 Cal. App. 3d 113, 115) . Therefore, each party to a joint tax return must waive the privilege in order for there to be disclosure of the tax returns (81 Cal. App. 3d 113, 116) .

[i] New Spouse May Assert Privilege in Action for Modification of Child Support

In re Marriage of Brown (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 702, 160 Cal. Rptr. 524 involved an action against Roberta Brown for child support by her former husband, Gary Brown, who was custodial parent of their three children. The original decree did not require Roberta to pay child support. In support of this action, Gary deposed the present husband of his former wife (Paul Brown) who refused to produce income tax returns that were filed by him and Roberta, and refused to testify as well, claiming his marital privilege. Paul then moved to quash the subpoena summoning him to be deposed, and also moved to quash the subpoena duces tecum, ordering production of the tax returns. The trial court granted the motion to quash, and Gary then appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, distinguishing Miller v. Superior Court (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 145, 139 Cal. Rptr. 521 on two grounds: first, Miller dealt with enforcement of existing child support obligations, rather than the modification of an order that did not require child support payments; and, second, Miller involved an action between former spouses, while the Brown action involved rights of a third-party present husband (99 Cal. App. 3d 702, 709) . Thus, the court held that the public interest in the preservation of existing marital relationships requires that there be a privilege not to disclose tax returns filed jointly by an ex-spouse with his or her present spouse in an action for a modification of a decree that would create a new obligation of child support (99 Cal. App. 3d 702, 709) .

It is important to note that the holding of In re Marriage of Brown may have been affected by the subsequent enactment of former Civ. Code § 4700.7 (now see Fam. Code § 3552). See discussion in [2][a], above.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] State and Federal Income Tax Returns

In Firestone v. Hoffman (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 534 , lender sued borrower on a note, alleging that the loan was never repaid. The trial court excluded the lender's Canadian tax returns, offered to show that the lender had written off the note on his taxes, finding that they were privileged and not relevant. The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff's Canadian tax returns are relevant and not privileged. Neither Civ. Code § 1799.1a nor Bus. & Prof. Code § 17530.5 creates a privilege shielding a litigant from discovery of the litigant's own tax returns or making those returns inadmissible at trial. In addition, neither statute applies to foreign tax returns because they are expressly limited to "federal or state" income tax returns (140 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1419) . Although California case law does create a privilege for tax returns, that privilege does not apply to foreign taxes (140 Cal. App. 4th 1408, 1420) .

Fortunato v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 475, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 82 arose from a will contest. Real party in interest (decedent's daughter) served a subpoena duces tecum on a bank, requesting the production of several documents relating to loans made to or guaranteed by the decedent or petitioner (decedent's brother). Petitioner objected to the discovery of his personal tax returns, which he had submitted to the bank in connection with a home loan. He filed a motion for a protective order to prevent their production. When the probate court denied petitioner's motion, he filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court held that the submission of individual income tax returns to a bank to obtain a loan does not effect a waiver of the privilege against forced disclosure of tax returns enunciated in Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 509, 319 P.2d 621 (discussed in [3][a], above) because compliance with a bank's requirement of submitting tax returns with a loan application is not an "entirely voluntary relinquishment" (114 Cal. App 4th 475, 482) . The court further stated that a bank customer also has reasonable expectation of privacy in the confidential information submitted with a loan application, and that when a waiver of the confidentiality of tax returns is argued,the trial court should conduct an in camera inspection to balance the need for discovery against the interests in privacy (114 Cal. App 4th 475, 481) .

In King v. Mobile Home Rent Review Bd. (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1532, 265 Cal. Rptr. 624 , after the county mobile home rent review board refused to process an application for a hardship rent increase filed by a mobile home park owner because of his failure to include copies of his federal income tax returns, the applicant filed a petition for peremptory writ of mandate to compel the board to process his application. The trial court granted the writ and ordered the board to process the application without the tax returns. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the confidentiality of the applicant's federal income tax returns were privileged under former Rev. & Tax. Code § 19282 (now see Rev. & Tax. Code § 19542). The court said that the privilege applies in administrative proceedings as well as adversarial court proceedings (216 Cal. App. 3d 1532, 1537) . Further, it held that the applicant's voluntary participation in a publicly administered program did not amount to a waiver of the privilege, explaining that although the board required submission of tax returns, that requirement was adopted for the administrative convenience of the board, and was not part of the rent control ordinance (216 Cal. App. 3d 1532, 1538-1539) .

[b] Corporate Tax Returns

The facts and procedural background of Rifkind v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 177 Cal. Rptr. 82 are discussed in [3][c], above. The court of appeal vacated the part of the trial court order that granted the wife discovery of the income tax returns of her husband's law corporation based on the rule that disclosure of the contents of an income tax return may not be coerced for the benefit of a private litigant. The court noted that although a married person's stock in a corporation may be community property, knowledge of confidential corporate affairs is not necessarily to be shared with the spouse (123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 1048-1049) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.200

§ 81.200 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery Improperly Resisted on Ground of Work Product Protection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.]--Matters Not Protected by Work Product Doctrine

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11).]

WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION DOES NOT APPLY TO _____ [NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF POTENTIAL NONEXPERT WITNESSES and/or AN ATTORNEY'S LEGAL CONTENTIONS and/or FACTS RELIED ON BY A PARTY TO PROVE HIS OR HER CASE and/or NOTES THAT MERELY RECORD A STATEMENT OF A WITNESS and/or NOTES OF AN ATTORNEY MADE WHILE ACTING AS A BUSINESS AGENT].

[EITHER]

A. Identity of Potential Nonexpert Witnesses. Names, addresses, and statistical information concerning potential witnesses are not within the work product protection (see Borse v. Superior Court (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 286, 289, 86 Cal. Rptr. 559).

[AND/OR]

B. Attorney's Legal Contentions. The legal contentions of an attorney are discoverable (Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 276, 285, 78 Cal. Rptr. 481, 455 P.2d 409).

[AND/OR]

C. Facts Relied on to Prove Case. Facts presently relied on by a party to prove his or her case are not protected by the work product protection and are discoverable no matter how they came into the attorney's possession (Southern Pac. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 3 Cal. App. 3d 195, 199, 83 Cal. Rptr. 231 , disapproved on other grounds in Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822-823, 107 Cal. Rptr. 720).

[AND/OR]

D. Notes Recording Witness's Statements. Notes that merely record a witness's statements should not be given work product protection (Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 647, 151 Cal. Rptr. 399).

[AND/OR]

E. Attorney's Notes Made as Business Agent. The notes of an attorney made while acting as a business agent of a client are not given work product protection (Watt Indus., Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 802, 805, 171 Cal. Rptr. 503).

[AND/OR]

F. Events Provable at Trial or Identity and Location of Physical Evidence. Information regarding events provable at trial, or the identity and location of physical evidence cannot be brought within the work product privilege simply by transmitting it to the attorney (Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822, 107 Cal. Rptr. 720 ; Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280).

[AND/OR]

G. Report of Investigator-Witness. No work product protection is accorded an investigator's report once it is determined that the investigator is to be used as a witness (see Mize v. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. Co. (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 436, 449, 120 Cal. Rptr. 787).

[2] Comments

This memorandum is for use in refuting a claim of work product protection on the ground that the material for which protection is claimed is within the class of matters that have been held not to be protected by the work product doctrine [see, e.g., Borse v. Superior Court (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 286, 289, 86 Cal. Rptr. 559] .

This form may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery. It may be combined with additional memoranda when counsel wishes to contend that other material falls within the work product rule but is nevertheless discoverable on various grounds [see, e.g., § 81.202 (experts), § 81.203 (non-absolute work product protection), and § 81.204 (waiver)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Nature of Work Product Protection

The protection of work product is not one of the privileges enumerated in the Evidence Code, but is set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq., and is in the nature of a limitation on pretrial discovery [see Jasper Constr., Inc. v. Foothill Jr. College Dist. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 16, 153 Cal. Rptr. 767] . Note, however, that the term "privilege" is used in many cases regarding work product issues. In discussion of those cases, the terminology of the opinion is retained for the purpose of accurately reflecting the opinions.

The stated purpose of the work product rule is to preserve the rights of attorneys to prepare cases for trial with that degree of privacy necessary to encourage them to prepare their cases thoroughly and to investigate not only the favorable but the unfavorable aspects of those cases, and to prevent attorneys from taking undue advantage of their adversary's industry and efforts [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020].

Although a list of nonexpert trial witnesses may be entitled to qualified work product protection [see City of Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 73, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468 , discussed in § 81.223], under some circumstances, such as the application of a local court rule, disclosure of that list may be required. For example, a rule adopted by a juvenile court that required sealed witness lists to be submitted by the parties to the court seven to ten days prior to trial, and that provided that the lists would be distributed to the parties at the trial readiness conference was upheld by the court of appeal as a reasonable effort to manage the court's calendar efficiently, and one which was not in conflict with any legislative enactment, constitutional provision, or existing rule of court [In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 34-37, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9] .

[d] Protection Limited in Actions Between Attorney and Client

Work product is not protected in an action between and an attorney and a client or former client if it is relevant to an issue of breach of duty by the attorney [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.080; § 81.207]. Additionally, the State Bar may usually discover the work product of an attorney against whom disciplinary charges are pending when it is relevant to issues of breach of duty by the attorney [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.070].

[e] No Work Product Protection May Be Asserted by Attorneys Suspected of Knowingly Participating in Crime or Fraud If Their Services Were Sought to Commit Crime or Fraud

When an attorney is suspected of knowingly participating in a crime or fraud, work product is not protected in any official investigation, proceeding, or action brought by the state, if the attorney's services were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or fraud [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.050; see § 81.208]. There is no limitation, however, on an attorney's ability to request an in camera hearing as provided for in People v. Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 703, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 323, 23 P.3d 563 [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.060; see People v. Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 703, 709, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 323, 23 P.3d 563 (superior court has an obligation to determine claims of privilege regarding materials seized from attorneys, whether or not attorneys are suspected of criminal conduct, and court properly may conduct a hearing to resolve these claims)].

[f] Effect of Civil Discovery Act on Prior Case Law

The Civil Discovery Act did not change the substance of statutory law governing work product protection. Thus cases construing former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016 as it applied to work product are equally valid in construing current Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq. Furthermore, Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.040 provides that Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq. is intended to be a restatement of existing law relating to work product protection, and is not intended to expand or reduce the extent to which work product is discoverable under existing law in any action.

[g] Claim of Privilege or of Work Product Protection for Electronically Stored Information Produced in Discovery

If electronically stored information produced in discovery is subject to a claim of privilege or of work product protection, and the receiving party contests the legitimacy of that claim, he or she may seek a determination of the claim from the court by making a motion within 30 days of receiving the claim and presenting the information to the court conditionally under seal [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.285(d)(1)]. For further discussion of claims of privilege or work product protection for electronically stored information produced in discovery, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery) (Matthew Bender); see also Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 3, Ethical Issues for Attorneys in E-Discovery, §§ 3.14, 3.15; Ch. 9, Gathering and Producing Electronically Stored Information, § 9.36 et seq. (privilege review); Ch. 10, Opposing Demands for Production of Electronic Evidence in California Court, § 10.14.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Identity of Potential Nonexpert Witnesses

Borse v. Superior Court (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 286, 86 Cal. Rptr. 559 involved an FELA action against a railroad, in which plaintiff sought to prove that his signature on a release was fraudulently induced. In order to discover the names of others who might have similarly been induced to sign releases, plaintiff submitted interrogatories requesting the names of certain of defendant's employees involved in personal injury negotiations subsequent to 1963, the names of all claims adjusters, and the names and addresses of all others present at the negotiations. Defendant refused to respond, and plaintiff moved to compel answers. The trial court denied the motion, ruling that the information was not privileged and did not constitute work product, but that the interrogatories were burdensome and oppressive. Plaintiff brought a petition for a writ of mandate vacating the trial court's order sustaining defendant's objection.

The court of appeal granted the petition, holding however that the names and addresses of potential witnesses were not within the work product privilege (7 Cal. App. 3d 286, 289) .

[b] Attorney's Legal Contentions

Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 276, 78 Cal. Rptr. 481, 455 P.2d 409 was an action for damages based on a promissory note, in which plaintiff caused a writ of attachment to be issued and levied on property owned by one of the defendants. Judgment was rendered in favor of the defendant whose property was attached, and one of the petitioners, who was the receiver for the other successful defendant's affairs. Petitioners filed an action for wrongful attachment against the bonding company, alleging in their unverified complaint, inter alia, that the attachment could not have been set aside. The bonding company filed an unverified answer, denying all allegations. Petitioners sought discovery of whether the bonding company actually contended that the attachment was vulnerable to pretrial attack, and, if so, to state all facts, grounds, and evidence that they claim to support the contentions. Petitioners contend that they attempted thereby to determine whether the bonding company's denial of the allegation concerning the attachment was sham or based on facts unknown to them. The trial court denied petitioners' discovery attempts, and petitioners sought a writ of mandate requiring the court to vacate its orders.

The Supreme Court granted the petition, noting that it is possible that the attempted discovery could be construed as requesting, inter alia, the bonding company's legal reasoning or theories. Insofar as they did, they did not need to be answered. However, insofar as petitioners sought to ascertain the specific bases, if any, for a contention that the attachment was vulnerable to pretrial attack, discovery could not be denied on the basis that it called for legal opinion. For example, the bonding company may be required to divulge whether it contended that there was a defect in the undertaking or affidavit supporting the writ of attachment, although it did not have to divulge the legal theory or reasoning process underlying a contention that there was a defect (71 Cal. 2d 276, 285) .

[c] Facts Relied on to Prove Case

Southern Pac. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 3 Cal. App. 3d 195, 83 Cal. Rptr. 231 (disapproved on other grounds in Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822, 823, 107 Cal. Rptr. 720) involved a wrongful death action in which defendant served interrogatories seeking in detail all facts that formed the basis of the allegations in the complaint. Plaintiffs refused to answer on the ground that all the facts were gathered by plaintiff's attorneys or by investigators hired by the attorneys. The trial court accepted this contention, holding that the information was protectedwork product under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.). Defendant sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal let the writ issue, holding that inquiry into facts relied on to prove a party's case is permissible no matter how the facts came into the attorney's possession (3 Cal. App. 3d 195, 199) .

In Kadelbach, the court of appeal stated that its own decision in Southern Pac. was wrong insofar as it included statements of witnesses within the class of protected derivative material in an attorney's possession (31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 823) . However, Southern Pac. remains good law in its holding that facts relied on by a party in proving his or her case are discoverable no matter how they came into the attorney's possession.

[d] Notes Recording Witness's Statements

Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 151 Cal. Rptr. 399 concerned a personal injury action against several defendants. Prior to trial, an investigator hired by a law firm representing one of defendant corporations interviewed a witness and made notes of the interview. Following the trial court's refusal to quash a subpoena duces tecum to produce the notes, they were used to attack the witness's credibility. Defendant appealed from a jury verdict for plaintiff, claiming as one of the grounds of error the ordered production of the investigator's notes.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in favor of plaintiff, although it held that nonprejudicial error was committed by permitting disclosure of the notes that should have been given work product protection (87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 649) . The court held, however, that the part of the notes that merely recorded the witnesses' statements should not have been protected from disclosure under the work product doctrine (87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 647) .

[e] Attorney's Notes Made as Business Agent

Watt Indus., Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 802, 171 Cal. Rptr. 503 arose out of a rescission action against the purchaser of a condominium based on fraudulent violation of an alleged condition of sale requiring owner occupancy. Plaintiff deposed the defendant's attorney concerning a telephone conversation between the attorney and plaintiff's agent during which the attorney allegedly represented defendant's intention to reside in the unit. The attorney refused to produce notes he made during the conversation. Plaintiff's motion to compel production was denied, and plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted a peremptory writ directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order compelling production. Relying on the statutory work product rule contained in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.), the court held thatwhen the attorney acted merely as a business agent for the client in conveying the client's position to a contracting party, there was no justification for protecting the attorney's notes concerning the conversation. The work product privilege applies to documents related to legal work performed for a client, not to notes memorializing acts performed as a mere agent (115 Cal. App. 3d 802, 804-805) .

Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 107 Cal. Rptr. 720 arose out of a personal injury action resulting in a jury verdict for plaintiff. Defendants appealed, claiming that they were denied a fair trial in that tape recorded statements given by potential witnesses to defendant's counsel should not have been ordered to be disclosed even though the disclosure was subject to certain conditions, since the tape was the work product of defendant's counsel.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting defendant's contention that as a matter of law written or recorded statements of witnesses made to an attorney are to be given work product protection. Citing Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280 (discussed in [g], below), the court held that mere transmission to an attorney of events provable at trial or the identity and location of physical evidence does not bring the information within the work product privilege (31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822) .

[g] Report of Investigator-Witness

Mize v. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. Co. (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 436, 120 Cal. Rptr. 787 was an appeal by one of the defendants from an adverse jury verdict rendered in a wrongful death suit. One of the grounds for appeal was that the trial court committed prejudicial error when it allowed plaintiff's attorney to inspect a part of the file compiled by defendant's investigator, who was called as a witness.

The judgment was affirmed. The court of appeal noted that even if the work product objection had been timely and properly made, there was a waiver of this protection arising out of the fact that the investigator was used as a witness (46 Cal. App. 3d 436, 448, 449) . Indeed, the court suggested that any work product privilege that would attach to an investigator's report, ceases the moment it is determined that the investigator is to be used as a witness (46 Cal. App. 3d 436, 449) .

Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280 arose out of an eminent domain proceeding in which plaintiff sought answers to interrogatories concerning a real estate appraiser hired by defendants' former attorney. Defendants responded with a declaration that the answers sought concerned matters that were gathered solely for plaintiff's attorney's information, and that the appraiser was not to be called as a witness at trial. The trial court ordered defendants to answer, however, and defendants sought a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that information of a derivative character such as diagrams, audit reports, and appraisals, developed as the result of the initiative of counsel, are to be protected as work product, although information relating to events that are provable at trial, or the identity or location of physical evidence cannot be brought within work product protection merely by transmitting it to the attorney (259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10) . Since no showing of unfair prejudice was made to overcome work product protection, the court held that defendants should not have had to answer the questions (259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 11) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11).]

_____ [Specify material sought to be discovered] _____ [IS or ARE] NOT THE PRODUCT(S) OF ATTORNEY _____ [name] OR HIS/HER AGENTS OR EMPLOYEES, AND THUS _____ [IT or THEY] _____ [IS or ARE] NOT PROTECTED BY THE ATTORNEY WORK PRODUCT PRIVILEGE.

Work Product Required to Be Product of Attorney or Attorney's Agents or Employees. Material that is not the product of the attorney or of the attorney's agents or employees is not an attorney work product, and an attorney cannot by retroactive adoption convert the independent work of another, already performed, into the attorney's own work (Bank of Orient v. Superior Court (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 588, 598, 136 Cal. Rptr. 741 ; Wilson v. Superior Court (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 715, 723-724, 38 Cal. Rptr. 255 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in refuting a claim of work product protection on the ground that the material for which protection is sought was not the product of the attorney or the attorney's agents or employees [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.]. It may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery and with one or more forms refuting claims of work product protection on other grounds.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel may wish to show why the material for which protection was sought is not the work of the attorney or his or her agents or employees, but was done entirely at the behest of someone else.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Work Product Required to Be Product of Attorney or Attorney's Agents or Employees

Bank of Orient v. Superior Court (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 588, 136 Cal. Rptr. 741 was an action commenced in May, 1975, for damages for conversion and negligence arising from embezzlement by an employee of plaintiff savings and loan association. Plaintiff's employee had deposited the embezzled funds in his personal checking account at defendant bank. The trial court denied defendant's motion to compel plaintiff to produce two documents, including an accounting firm's "Report to Management," and to compel plaintiff to answer deposition questions reasonably related to the contents of the documents. Defendant sought a writ of mandate to compel production of the documents and answers to the deposition questions, as well as on several grounds unrelated to discovery.

In issuing a writ of mandate to compel the discovery orders, the court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contention that the accountants' report was attorney work product. The court pointed out that there was evidence that the report was requested by plaintiff's board of directors in January, 1975. It was not commissioned by an attorney, and was requested four months prior to plaintiff's commencement of the action. The court stated, relying on Wilson v. Superior Court (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 715, 724, 38 Cal. Rptr. 255 (see discussion, below), that a report that is not the product of the attorney or the attorney's agents or employees is not work product, and that an attorney cannot, by retroactive adoption, convert the independentwork already performed by that person into the attorney's own work (67 Cal. App. 3d 598).

In Wilson v. Superior Court (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 715, 38 Cal. Rptr. 255 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries allegedly caused by the blowout of a defective tire purchased from one of the defendants. Plaintiff took the deposition of an employee of an independent adjuster who was hired by an insurance company and completed his investigation before the complaint was filed. The deponent refused to answer a series of questions relating to the tire and how he had secured it, on the ground that his actions during the investigation were protected by the attorney work product rule. Plaintiff moved for an order compelling answers to the questions. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal upheld the trial court's order requiring the investigator to answer deposition questions, stating that the investigator was hired by an agent of the insurance carrier, not by defense counsel, and that the declarations showed that the matters he was questioned about took place long before the lawsuit was filed or counsel was retained by or on behalf of defendant. Even under the broadest possible definition of work product, it still must be the attorney's work or that of his or her agents or employees, and the attorney cannot, by retroactive adoption, convert the independent work already performed by another into the attorney's own work (226 Cal. App. 2d 715, 724) .

[a] Work Product Required to Be Product of Attorney or Attorney's Agents or Employees

Jasper Constr., Inc. v. Foothill Jr. College Dist. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 153 Cal. Rptr. 767 was an appeal by defendant from a judgment against it for breach of contract. One of the grounds claimed as error was that a certain witness was precluded from testifying at trial (on the basis of work product protection) on the rationale that this witness had been hired by plaintiff's manager as a consultant, although he had been hired long before the lawsuit had been filed, and although plaintiff eventually dismissed him and refused to pay him.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding, inter alia, that work product protection attaches only to the work of an attorney or the agents or employees of such attorney, while here the consultant was employed by plaintiff and not by plaintiff's attorney (91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 16) . The court went on to hold that the fact that the consultant in Jasper may have later reported his findings and conclusions to plaintiff's attorney did not retroactively confer work product status on them (91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 16, 17) .

THE OPINIONS AND REPORTS OF EXPERT _____ [name] ARE NOT PROTECTED BY THE WORK PRODUCT DOCTRINE BECAUSE _____ [HE/SHE WILL BE CALLED AS WITNESSES or JUSTICE AND FAIRNESS REQUIRE DISCLOSURE or WITHIN A REASONABLE TIME PRIOR TO TRIAL, _____ [specify party resisting discovery, e.g., DEFENDANT _____ (name)] HAS REFUSED TO STATE WHETHER THE EXPERT WILL BE CALLED AS WITNESSES or IT IS THE EXPERT'S OWN OBSERVATIONS, NOT COMMUNICATED TO THE ATTORNEY, WHICH ARE SOUGHT, or a combination of these].

[EITHER]

A. Expert to Be Called as Witness. Once it is reasonably certain that an expert is to be called as a witness, then no work product protection is accorded the expert's opinions (Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 202, 203, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 ; Brokopp v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 841, 857, 139 Cal. Rptr. 888 ; see Williamson v. Superior Court (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 829, 834, 835, 148 Cal. Rptr. 39, 582 P.2d 126).

[AND/OR]

B. Discovery of Expert's Opinions When Required by Fairness and Justice. The opinions of a nonwitness expert may be discovered when nondisclosure would not be consistent with fairness and justice (Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20).

[AND/OR]

C. Refusal to Designate Expert as Witness. An expert's opinions may be discovered if the attorney employing such expert is unwilling to state whether the expert will be used as a witness (Scotsman Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 531-532, 51 Cal. Rptr. 511).

[AND/OR]

D. Expert's Observations Not Communicated to Attorney. While an expert's communications to the attorney are protected by the work product doctrine, the expert's own observations, which are not communicated to the attorney, are not to be afforded the protection given to an attorney's work product (Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 271, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities is for use in refuting a claim of work product protection on the ground that the opinions of experts that are sought do not come under the protection of the work product doctrine. This form may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery and with one or more forms refuting claims of work product protection on other grounds such as waiver. For authorities that discuss the situations in which an expert's opinion may not be the subject of discovery, see § 81.224. For a form for use when a party designated as an expert trial witness has impliedly waived the privilege by producing privileged documents or testifying as an expert, see § 81.67[1].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Work Product of Experts

Opinions and reports of experts developed as a result of the initiative of counsel in case preparation come entirely under the protection of the qualified work product rule [see Williamson v. Superior Court (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 829, 834, 148 Cal. Rptr. 39, 582 P.2d 126 ; National Steel Products Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 487, 210 Cal. Rptr. 535] . Thus, experts' opinions and reports are not discoverable unless the party seeking disclosure can demonstrate that nondisclosure will undulyprejudice his or her preparation or result in an injustice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)]. The availability of discovery concerning the work of a party's expert depends largely on whether the expert will testify at trial. If the expert will testify at trial, discovery of the expert is generally permitted [Williamson v. Superior Court (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 829, 834-835, 148 Cal. Rptr. 39, 582 P.2d 126] .

However, when an individual is listed as an expert witness because a party intends to ask him or her one or more questions that "may call for the rendering of an expert opinion," discovery of that expert is very limited. Such an expert is a percipient expert witness rather than an employed or retained expert witness. Requiring the designating party to analyze that witness's anticipated testimony and share that analysis with opposing counsel would violate work product protection [Hurtado v. Western Medical Center (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1198, 1203, 272 Cal. Rptr. 324 (dicta because treating physicians designated as expert witnesses by plaintiff were never deposed); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.260(c) (percipient witness is not among those experts triggering requirement of expert witness declaration)].

On the other hand, if the expert was hired merely as a consultant, discovery is normally not permitted unless there is a compelling reason [National Steel Products Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 490, 210 Cal. Rptr. 535] .

[d] Exchange of Expert Witness Lists

Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq. provides a procedure by which a party to an action may initiate an exchange of expert witness information concerning experts who are expected to testify at trial. When the procedure is invoked, the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq. control the discovery of expert information to a large extent. However, this provision does not apply to information concerning experts who are not expected to testify at trial [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.210(a)]. For points and authorities relating to the expert witness exchange procedure, see Ch. 88, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expert to Be Called as Witness

Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 concerned an eminent domain proceeding brought by the state. In Swartzman, defendants noticed the deposition of the state's independent appraiser for a date in advance of the court-ordered exchange of appraisal reports. The state sought and obtained a protective order prohibiting the deposition on the grounds of annoyance, burden, oppression, and harassment, and defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal declined to issue the writ, noting that prior to being designated as a witness the expert wears two hats. He or she is both an advisor and technical consultant, and is also a potential witness at trial (231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 202) . However, it is only when it becomes reasonably certain that the expert will actually be a witness that his or her opinion should become the subject of pretrial discovery (231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 203) .

Brokopp v. Ford Motor Co. (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 841, 139 Cal. Rptr. 888 was an appeal from a jury verdict for plaintiff in a personal injury action. Plaintiff's recovery was for injuries incurred in a single vehicle collision, allegedly resulting from a defect in the power steering mechanism. On appeal, defendant claimed, as one of the grounds for error, that it was a violation of the work product doctrine for plaintiff's counsel to have been provided with a copy of the data showing the results of tests relating to the power steering mechanism.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that knowledge, reports, and opinions of an expert are immune from disclosure under the work product doctrine as long as an expert remains a consultant. However, once it seems reasonably certain that the expert is to become a witness at trial, the protection terminates (71 Cal. App. 3d 841, 857) . Thus, since defendant had determined long before trial that the expert would be called as a witness, work product protection would have been improper (71 Cal. App. 3d 841, 858) .

Williamson v. Superior Court (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 829, 148 Cal. Rptr. 39, 582 P.2d 126 arose out of a personal injury action in which a defense expert was designated as a witness by one of the defendants. Plaintiff then scheduled a deposition of the expert, but on the eve of the scheduled deposition, defendant withdrew the expert's designation as a witness.

The apparent reason for this withdrawal is that while the expert's analysis was favorable to this particular defendant, it was unfavorable to one of the others. The withdrawal formed the basis for an indemnification agreement between the two defendants.

After the withdrawal, defendant refused to let the witness be deposed. Plaintiff then moved for an order compelling the deposition, which the trial court granted with the proviso that the inquiry exclude the expert's investigation into and analysis of the accident. Plaintiff thereupon sought a writ of mandate, which the court of appeal granted. The Supreme Court then granted a hearing to resolve the novel issues of the work product doctrine that were involved.

The Court rejected the application of the work product doctrine in this case, discussing the general rule that although an expert's opinions are only discoverable on a showing of good cause, good cause may be shown by a demonstration that the expert may be called as a witness (21 Cal. 3d 829, 834, 835) .

The Court went on to hold that, while a party may ordinarily have the right to withdraw an expert's designation as a witness as a matter of trial tactics, the withdrawal in this case was done pursuant to an illegal contract between the two codefendants to suppress relevant evidence (21 Cal. 3d 829, 835-837) . Therefore, the Court held that to uphold the prohibition on discovery would aid in effectuating an illegal bargain between two codefendants, and would encourage a party in a multiparty case to, in effect, auction off the testimony of a witness to the highest bidder (21 Cal. 3d 829, 838) . The Court then issued a writ of mandate requiring full disclosure of the expert's report to prevent the conspiring codefendants from reaping any benefit from their attempted illegal contract (21 Cal. 3d 829, 838, 839) .

[b] Discovery of Expert's Opinions When Required by Fairness and Justice

Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20 concerned a will contest in which the contestants sought to depose the handwriting expert who had been engaged by respondents who were respondent beneficiaries of a holographic will. Respondents moved to prohibit the expert's deposition on the ground that the testimony sought was protected by the work product rule. The motion was accompanied by a declaration that the respondents had no intention of calling the expert as a witness at trial. The trial court denied the motion, and contestants petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal declined to issue the writ, holding, inter alia, that it is not true, as respondents contended, that a party can never show good cause to depose an adversary's expert once it is determined that the expert will not testify at trial (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 271, 272) . The court held to the contrary, noting that even where an expert is purely a consultant and is not to be called as a witness, there are situations in which there are compelling reasons for the discovery of the expert (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272) . Some of the situations outlined by the court include those in which the expert has tested an object that is no longer available, or situations in which the object was so altered by the testing that it cannot be subject to retesting. To prohibit the deposition of an expert under this or other of the infinite variety of circumstances that may arise in the course of human activity would not be consistent with principles of fairness and justice (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272) .

[c] Refusal to Designate Expert as Witness

Scotsman Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 51 Cal. Rptr. 511 arose out of a personal injury action in which a butane lamp exploded. Defendant Scotsman, the installer of the lamp, cross complainedagainst Roberts Brass Manufacturing, the manufacturer of the lamp's valve.

In preparation for the action, Scotsman hired an expert who made a report on the lamp and delivered it to Scotsman's attorney. Roberts sought production of the report, which Scotsman refused on work product grounds. The trial court ordered discovery, and Scotsman then petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the report was prepared by the expert following employment by the attorney, and thus constituted work product subject to the discovery limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b) ( see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030) (242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 529) . The court noted that Roberts had attempted to bring itself within the provisions of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b), which allow for discovery of conditionally protected work product, by contending that since the cross complaint was filed some eight months after the other parties were served, discovery of the report was needed to enable Roberts to prepare for trial. As to this contention, the court held that lack of time to prepare is not proper prejudice to overcome the work product rule; the proper remedy is to seek an order fixing a later trial date (242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 530) .

The court also noted that Roberts had contended that Scotsman was unwilling to declare its intention as to whether it would use the expert as a witness. In response to this assertion, the court stated that when a court believes that a party is unwilling to declare its intention to designate an expert as a witness, then the trial court is authorized to compel discovery by way of depositions or interrogation (242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 532) .

Note that in the later case of Sanders v. Superior Court (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 270, 109 Cal. Rptr. 770 , the court held that on a showing of good cause a party must designate the experts who will testify at trial at some appropriate stage of the proceedings, such as the pretrial hearing, and must disclose such election to the adversary (34 Cal. App. 3d 270, 279) . Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.220 requires that any party may file and serve on any other party a demand to exchange lists of expert witnesses not later than the 10th day after a trial date is selected, or 70 days prior to the trial date set, whichever is later. This provision has been interpreted as embodying the legislative preference for the time at which disclosure must be made about which experts will be trial witnesses [see South Tahoe Public Utility Dist. v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 135, 139, 154 Cal. Rptr. 1] . For points and authorities based on Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq., see Ch. 88, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information .

[d] Expert's Observations Not Communicated to Attorney

The facts and procedural background of Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20 are set out in [b], above. The Petterson court allowed discovery despite the claim that the expert's opinion constituted work product. In its opinion, the court noted that while an expert's communications to the attorney are protected by the work product privilege, his or her own observations based on those communications are not (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 271) .

[a] Expert to Be Called as Witness

In Shadow Traffic Network v. Superior Court (1994) Court 24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 , involving alleged business torts, the trial court granted the plaintiff's motion to disqualify the defendant's attorneys for having retained as an expert an accounting firm previously interviewed by the plaintiff for the same lawsuit.

The court of appeal denied the defendant's petition for a writ of mandate, holding that substantial evidence supported the trial court's implicit finding that the plaintiff's attorneys had imparted confidential information to the accounting firm even though the plaintiff subsequently chose not to retain the firm as an expert witness. The subjects of discussion between the plaintiff's attorneys and the accounting firm concerned the factual and legal theories about the case, matters traditionally considered confidential. The fact that the plaintiff decided not to retain the firm as an expert witness did not, as a matter of law, render the information imparted to the firm nonconfidential. Communications made to a potential expert can be considered confidential and therefore subject to protection from subsequent disclosure even if the expert is not retained, so long as there was a reasonable expectation of confidentiality (24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 1078-1085) .

In discussing the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine, the court noted that the attorney-client privilege embraces statements from the attorney to the expert that disclose confidential information communicated by the client when disclosure is reasonably necessary to further the attorney's representation of the client's interests. The privilege is lost on designation of the expert as a witness, since the decision to use the expert as a witness manifests the client's consent to disclosure of the information (24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 1078-1079) . Under the work-product doctrine, reports prepared by the expert as a consultant are protected until the expert is designated as a witness; then, the opposing party may seek disclosure of the reports on a showing of good cause. To the extent that the reports prepared by the expert witness embrace the attorney's impressions and conclusions, the work-product doctrine gives absolute protection to that information (24 Cal. App. 4th 1067, 1079) .

THE MATERIAL SOUGHT TO BE CONDITIONALLY PROTECTED AS WORK PRODUCT SHOULD BE DISCOVERED BECAUSE THE DENIAL OF DISCOVERY WILL UNFAIRLY PREJUDICE _____ [specify party seeking discovery, e.g., PLAINTIFF _____(name)] AND WILL RESULT IN AN INJUSTICE.

A. Discoverability of Conditionally Protected Material. A party may discover the conditionally protected work product of an attorney if the court determines that denial of discovery will unfairly prejudice the party seeking discovery in preparing that party's claim or defense or will result in an injustice (Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)).

[Optional] B. Partial Disclosure. Fairness requires that after the holder of a privilege reaches a certain point of disclosure, he or she may not withhold the remainder (Merritt v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 721, 731, 88 Cal. Rptr. 337).

[Optional] C. Disclosure Necessary to Impeach Credibility of Witness. The need for work product protection may be overcome by a showing that disclosure is necessary to impeach the credibility of a witness (see Jasper Constr., Inc. v. Foothill Jr. College Dist. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17, 153 Cal. Rptr. 767).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in overcoming a claim of conditional work product protection on the ground that unfair prejudice or injustice will result if discovery is denied.

This form may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery and with one or more forms refuting claims of work product protection on other grounds.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel might wish to show why foreclosing discovery would be basically unfair and unjust.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partial Disclosure

Merritt v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 721, 88 Cal. Rptr. 337 arose out of a claim against two insurance companies for negligent and bad-faith failure to settle within policy limits, based partially on the contention that one of the insurers prevented plaintiff's personal injury counsel from proposing a settlement, in that it furnished counsel with conflicting and confusing statements concerning the amount of insurance coverage. Personal injury claimants in the case in chief were assigned the cause of action against the insurer by the personal injury defendants. During pretrial discovery in the bad-faith action, defendant insurer served interrogatories on plaintiff, including Interrogatory No. 27, which inquired into the nature of the communications between the carrier's employees and agents, and plaintiff and his attorneys. The interrogatory also inquired into plaintiff's attorney's investigation, trial strategy, and evaluation of the settlement potential. All these questions related to the original action in which plaintiff was a personal injury claimant.

Plaintiff declined to answer Interrogatory No. 27 on grounds of both attorney-client and work product privilege. On defendant's motion, the trial court ordered plaintiff to answer the interrogatory. Plaintiff thereupon sought a writ of mandate or prohibition.

The court of appeal declined to issue the writ, holding that plaintiff had waived the protection against disclosure of work product in initiating the litigation for failure to settle within policy limits (9 Cal. App. 3d 721, 730) . In addition, the court held that it would be basically unfair and would result in injustice for plaintiff to be allowed to withhold information because of the general rule that when the holder of a privilege reaches a certain point of disclosure (here the tendering of the issue of the state of mind of the personal injury counsel in conducting the case in chief), fairness requires that he or she may not withhold the remainder (9 Cal. App. 3d 721, 731) .

[b] Disclosure Necessary to Impeach Credibility of Witness

The facts and procedural background of Jasper Constr., Inc. v. Foothill Jr. College Dist. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 153 Cal. Rptr. 767 are set out in § 81.201[4][a]. In Jasper, the trial court had refused to permit thetestimony of a consultant who had been hired by plaintiff's manager long before any litigation had been commenced, and whose findings were later reported to plaintiff's attorney.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding, inter alia, that the trial court ruling was improper, since work product protection only attaches to the work of an attorney or the agents or employees of such attorney (91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 16) . Moreover, the court went on to hold that given the need for the consultant's testimony to impeach plaintiff's manager's credibility, it was an abuse of discretion for the trial court not to have ruled that the prejudice that would result from the nondisclosure outweighed the need for work product protection (91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11).]

[EITHER]

A. Waiver of Work Product Protection by Revealing Material for Use by Witness. The work product protection is waived by an attorney who produces material to be used by a witness as a basis for the witness's testimony. The attorney cannot reveal the work product, allow the witness to testify from it, and then claim the work product protection to prevent the opposing party from viewing the document from which the witness testified (Kerns Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 405, 411, 72 Cal. Rptr. 74).

[AND/OR]

B. Waiver by Attorney's Voluntary Disclosure. An attorney's voluntary election to disclose certain matters during pretrialdiscovery that constitute his or her work product waives protection of that work product (Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 101, 146 Cal. Rptr. 171).

[AND/OR]

C. Voluntary Disclosure by Prior Attorney. If a prior attorney voluntarily discloses otherwise protected work product, then work product protection is waived permanently and it is not reinstated if the client retains another attorney (Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272, 273, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20).

[2] Comments

This memorandum is for use in refuting a claim of work product protection on the ground of waiver [see, e.g., Kerns Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 405, 411, 72 Cal. Rptr. 74] .

This form may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery. It may be combined with § 81.200 when counsel wishes to contend that other material is discoverable because it is not protected work product. It may be combined with additional memoranda when counsel wishes to contend that other material falls within the work product rule but is nevertheless discoverable on various grounds [see, e.g., § 81.202 (experts) and § 81.203 (non-absolute work product protection)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Waiver Under Discovery Act

For waiver of work product protection for failure to assert it by objection or response during discovery proceedings, see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.460(a) (depositions), 2028.050(a) (deposition by written questions), 2030.290(a) (interrogatories), 2031.300(a) (inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of documents, tangible things, land or other property, and electronically stored information), and 2033.280(a) (request for admission of documents). Work product protection may also be waived for specified purposes if an officer or agent who is acting as the attorney for a party that is a public or private corporation, partnership, association, or governmental agency signs responses to interrogatories on behalf of that party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.250(b)].

[d] Related Uses

This form may also be used in opposition to a motion for a protective order when the motion is based on the work product doctrine.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 81.225 may be used to oppose this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Work Product Protection by Revealing Material for Use by Witness

Kerns Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 405, 72 Cal. Rptr. 74 involved a personal injury action in which one of the defendants cross complained against petitioner. The deposition of an employee of cross complainant was taken, at which time the deponent testified that he had prepared reports in connection with his investigation of the accident. During the deposition, the deponent read the reports in order to refresh his memory as to their contents, and testified from them. When deposing counsel requested that copies of the reports be appended to the transcript of the deposition, counsel for cross complainant objected on attorney-client and work product privilege grounds. Petitioner then sought an order to produce and inspect the reports, and cross complainant again resisted on the ground that the material was protected as work product and by the attorney-client privilege. The trial court initially granted the motion, then vacated its prior ruling based on attorney-client privilege, and petitioner sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition, holding that if the reports were protected under the work product rule, the attorney for cross complainant waived the privilege when he produced the reports for the deponent's use. The court held that an attorney cannot reveal his or her work product, permit a witness to testify from them, and then claim work product protection to prevent the opposing party from viewing the document from which the witness testified (266 Cal. App. 2d 405, 411) .

[b] Waiver by Attorney's Voluntary Disclosure

Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 146 Cal. Rptr. 171 arose out of an action for breach of trust, personal injuries, and fraud, brought by a former conservatee against her temporary conservator and his attorney. Defendants sought to depose plaintiff's former attorney. The trial court issued an order requiring that the deponent answer the questions that he had declined to answer on the basis of attorney-client privilege. Plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition or mandamus to overturn the trial court's order on grounds of attorney-client privilege. She also requested suppression of those answers that had already been given by her former attorney, on the rationale that the answers were in violation of both the attorney-client privilege and the work product doctrine.

The court of appeal let the writ issue, based on the attorney-client privilege. Insofar as the work product privilege was concerned, however, the court held that it is the attorney, not the client, who is the holder of the privilege (81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 101) . Thus, the court held that since plaintiff's former attorney elected to waive the privilege by answering deposition questions, the client cannot have his answers suppressed on work product grounds (81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 101, 102) .

[c] Voluntary Disclosure by Prior Attorney

The facts and procedural background of Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20 are discussed in § 81.202[3][b]. In Petterson, the court of appeal ruled in favor of disclosure in the face of a work product claim. One of the grounds for its holding was that work product protection was waived by virtue of the respondents' former attorney's voluntary disclosures regarding the expert's opinions during the course of pretrial conversations with opposing counsel (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272, 273) . The court held it would be inconsistent with the waiver rule to reinstate the work product privilege when the client hires a new lawyer, once the client's former lawyer has waived the protection (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 273) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver by Attorney's Voluntary Disclosure

In Eddy v. Fields (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 1543, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 487 , predecessor trustees of an inter vivos trust hired appellant attorney (Fields) to assist in legal matters relating to the trust. After the predecessors resigned, the successor trustee requested that another attorney (Merzon) turn over his legal files. The trial court ordered Merzon to turn his complete legal files over to the successor trustee, rejecting Fields claim that some of those documents contained Field's attorney work product. Fields appealed, arguing that the trial court erred when it ruled that he had waived the work product privilege by turning over to Merzon any privileged documents. The court of appeal disagreed, concluding that Fields had waived any work product protection (121 Cal. App. 4th 1543, 1549) . The court noted the apparent conflict between the work product privilege in Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a) and the client's right to his or her file under Cal. Rules Prof. Conduct 3-700(D), but found it unnecessary to resolve the conflict (121 Cal. App. 4th 1543, 1549) . Even if Fields had an absolute privilege not to disclose his work product to his client, he implicitly waived that privilege by disclosing the allegedly privileged documents to Merzon in connection with Merzon's representation of one, or possibly both, of the predecessor trustees. In so doing, Fields effectively disclosed those documents to the predecessor trustees, thereby waiving the work productprivilege with respect to both the predecessor trustees and the successor trustee (121 Cal. App. 4th 1543, 1549-1550) . The court emphasized that it reached this result because Merzon was an agent of at least one of the former trustees, and it was a successor trustee who sought the documents. If an adversarial third party had made the demand, the court would have been "hard pressed" to say the privilege had been waived, given that a disclosure of work product to an attorney who represents a mutual client or a client with common interests does not necessarily operate as a waiver with respect to third parties (121 Cal. App. 4th 1543, 1550) .

McKesson HBOC, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1229, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 812 involved consolidated civil actions against a corporation that was the target of federal government investigation for securities fraud. Plaintiffs moved to compel the corporation to produce an audit committee report and memoranda of employee interviews, which had been prepared by the attorneys retained by the corporation to perform internal review of improperly recorded revenues, and which the corporation had shared with the government. The trial court found the documents were subject to work product protection, but that the corporation had waived that protection by disclosing the documents to third parties who did not have an interest in preserving the confidentiality of the documents. On appeal, the corporation again asserted the government was not an adversary and had a common interest in rooting out the source of any accounting improprieties.

The court of appeal disagreed. An interest in maintaining confidentiality exists "when the parties are aligned on the same side in the litigation and have a similar stake in the outcome" (115 Cal. App. 4th 1229, 1239-1240) . In this case, there was no real alignment of interests between the government and an entity or individuals under investigation for securities law violations. Accordingly, the corporation waived the protection afforded attorney work product when it shared the privileged documents with government investigators (115 Cal. App. 4th 1229, 1240) . The court of appeal declined to adopt the "selective waiver" theory, under which a client could disclose a privileged or protected communication to the government, while continuing to assert it against other parties. The court found no support for that theory in the work product policies set forth in Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020) (115 Cal. App. 4th 1229, 1241) .

The facts and procedural background of OXY Resources California LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 874, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 621 are discussed in § 81.65[4][a]. There, the court of appeal held that when parties negotiating a business transaction entered into a joint defense agreement in anticipation of litigation by a third party, in camera review was required to determine whether the disclosure of the documents in the course of the transaction waived the attorney-client privilege or work product protection (115 Cal. App. 4th 874, 879) . While the joint defenseagreement was not void as matter of public policy, it could not serve as sole ground for withholding the documents. Rather, the agreement evidenced the expectation of confidentiality necessary to avoid waiver by disclosure to someone outside the attorney-client relationship, but could not protect the documents from disclosure unless they contained or reflected attorney-client communications or attorney work product (115 Cal. App. 4th 874, 893) . For more detailed discussion, refer to § 81.65[4][a].

§ 81.205 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery Improperly Resisted on Ground of Work Product Protection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.]--Attorney Is Holder of Privilege

[1] FORM

THE ATTORNEY, NOT THE CLIENT, IS THE HOLDER OF THE WORK PRODUCT PRIVILEGE.

Attorney Is Holder of Privilege. The work product doctrine was created for the protection of the attorney (Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 101, 146 Cal. Rptr. 171 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020). Therefore, if the attorney chooses to claim or waive the privilege, the client may not object (Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 64, 65, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in refuting a claim of work product protection when a former attorney has waived work product protection and the client has objected to the waiver. It may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery and with one or more forms refuting claims of work product protection on other grounds.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney Is Holder of Privilege

The facts and procedural background of Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 146 Cal. Rptr. 171 are discussed in § 81.204[3][b]. The Lohman court discussed the fact that plaintiff's former attorney had waived the work product privilege by voluntarily answering deposition questions on protected matters (81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 101) . The court noted that the privilege is not the client's to claim or waive, but belongs solely to the attorney for the purpose of protecting the fruits of his or her labor from discovery (81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 100, 101) .

The court based this conclusion partially on an analysis of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(g) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020), which provided that it is the state's public policy both to preserve the rights of attorneys to prepare cases with the privacy necessary to encourage them to investigate all aspects of the case, and also to prevent an opponent from taking undue advantage of an attorney's preparation. The court noted that had the Legislature wished to afford the client some protection beyond the attorney-client privilege, it would have been relatively simple to so state in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(g) (81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 101) .

The holding in Lohman was clarified somewhat by the court of appeal in the later case of Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274 . Fellows arose out of an action for breach of an insurance contract, fraud, and deceit against an insurance company and others. The basis for the action against the insurance company was the alleged violation of its duty of fair dealing during the prior arbitration proceedings, which were undertaken to adjudicate plaintiff's claims for uninsured motorist coverage. During the pendency of the arbitration proceedings, plaintiffs were represented by attorney Kottler.

After the termination of the arbitration proceedings, plaintiffs filed a civil action for breach of contract, fraud, and deceit. Attorney Kottler turned his files over to plaintiffs, who retained new counsel to represent them in the subsequent civil action. During the course of discovery, defendants sought production of Kottler's files pertaining to the uninsured motorist claims and arbitration concerning them, and plaintiff resisted this claim on work product grounds. The trial court ordered production.

The court of appeal granted plaintiffs' petition for a writ of prohibition. In its opinion, the court noted that the Lohman decision was sound in holding that the work product privilege belongs to the attorney, who has the option of waiving it (108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 64) . Therefore, since the attorney in Lohman waived the privilege by agreeing to answer deposition questions concerning his work product, the former client could not object (108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 65) .

For further discussion of a client's rights vis-a-vis the work product privilege, see § 81.227[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Attorney Is Holder of Privilege

In Dowden v. Superior Court (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 180 , petitioner, a pro se litigant, filed a writ of mandate seeking relief from an order to compel production of a diary, claiming a work product privilege under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.). The underlying dispute arose when one brother (real party in interest) claimed another brother (petitioner) breached their agreement to divide certain property held in joint tenancy and sued for property damage and breach of contract. Petitioner cross-claimed for conversion and breach of contract. Petitioner's attorney allegedly advised him to keep a diary in anticipation of litigating his claims against real party in interest.

The trial court granted real party in interest's motion compelling production of the diary because it interpreted former Code Civ. Proc. § 2018's privilege to be available only to attorneys (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.) (73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 128) . The court of appeal held that pro se litigants may assert former Code Civ. Proc. § 2018's work product privilege and remanded the matter to the trial court to conduct an in camera review of the diary to determine whether it contained matter that was privileged under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 136) . The court of appeal distinguished the holding in Lohman v. Superior Court (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 90, 146 Cal. Rptr. 171 (discussed in [3][a], above), in which the court analyzed the application of the privilege in the context of a client trying to prevent his attorney from disclosing the latter's work product. In this case, the litigant was not asserting the privilege as a client, but rather as one performing the functions of an attorney. The court of appeal reasoned that protecting the right of a litigant appearing in propria persona to create work product was consistent with the Lohman court's rationale of protecting the attorney's labor from discovery (73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 134) . In reaching its conclusion that the work product privilege is intended for the protection of litigants and not just attorneys, the court also noted that the use of the word "attorney" in Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.) was ambiguous because other provisions of that code and the California Rules of Court apply to both attorneys and litigants appearing in propria persona (73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 129-130) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to compel discovery, when the party or person is resisting discovery on the ground that the information sought is protected work product under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq. The ground for compelling discovery is that, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq., work product protection does not prevent disclosure of information that is relevant to a proceeding under Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 6200-6206

(mandatory fee arbitration).

This form may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery and with one or more forms refuting claims of work product protection on other grounds.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION DOES NOT APPLY IN AN ACTION BETWEEN AN ATTORNEY AND A CLIENT OR FORMER CLIENT IF THE WORK PRODUCT IS RELEVANT TO THE ISSUE OF BREACH OF DUTY BY THAT ATTORNEY.

A. No Work Product Protection in Action Involving Client. No work product protection under Section 2018.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure exists in an action between an attorney and a client or former client if the work product is relevant to an issue of breach by the attorney of a duty to his or her client arising out of the attorney-client relationship (Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.080).

[Optional] B. State Bar May Discover Work Product in Client-Initiated Complaint. Whenever a client has initiated a complaint against an attorney, the State Bar may discover the work productof that attorney when it is relevant to issues of breach of duty by the lawyer (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.070).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to compel discovery, when the party or person from whom discovery is sought is the attorney who generated the work product and the person seeking discovery is a client or former client, and the work product is relevant to an issue of breach of duty by that attorney [see Code Civ. Proc. §

2018.080].

An optional paragraph is included for use when the proceeding is an investigation by the State Bar initiated by the client. The State Bar may discover the work product of an attorney against whom disciplinary charges are pending when it is relevant to issues of breach of duty by that attorney. Discoverability is subject to applicable client approval and to a protective order, when requested and for good cause, to ensure the confidentiality of work product except for its use by the State Bar in disciplinary investigations and its consideration under seal in State Bar court proceedings. For these purposes, whenever a client has initiated a complaint against an attorney, the requisite client approval is deemed to have been granted [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.070(c)].

"Client" means a person who, directly or through an authorized representative, consults a lawyer for the purpose of retaining the lawyer or securing legal service or advice from that lawyer in his or her professional capacity. Client includes an incompetent (a) who himself or herself so consults the lawyer or (b) whose guardian or conservator so consults the lawyer in behalf of the incompetent [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010; Evid. Code § 951].

This form may be combined with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery and with one or more forms refuting claims of work product protection on other grounds.

WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION DOES NOT APPLY IN ANY OFFICIAL PROCEEDING OR STATE ACTION, IF THE ATTORNEY'S SERVICES WERE SOUGHT TO ENABLE OR AID THE PLANNING OR COMMISSION OF A CRIME OR FRAUD.

No Work Product Protection in State Action Involving Attorney Suspect of Knowingly Participating in Crime or Fraud. When an attorney is suspected of knowingly participating in a crime or fraud, no work product protection exists under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018.010 et seq. in any official investigation, proceeding, or action brought by the state, if the attorney's services were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit a crime or fraud (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion to compel discovery, in any official proceeding, investigation, or state action, when the party or person from whom discovery is sought is the attorney who generated the work product and the attorney is suspected of knowingly participating in a crime or fraud. In these circumstances, the attorney may not assert work product protection on behalf of anyone who sought or obtained the attorney's services to commit or plan to commit the crime or fraud [*see Code Civ. [c] Attorney's Right to In Camera Hearing

Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.060 does not limit an attorney's ability to request an in camera hearing as provided for in *People v. Superior Court (Laff) (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 703, 107 Cal. [1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

THE WRITINGS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] ATTORNEY REFLECTING HIS/HER IMPRESSIONS, CONCLUSIONS, OPINIONS, OR LEGAL RESEARCH OR THEORIES ARE ABSOLUTELY PROTECTED FROM DISCLOSURE PURSUANT TO SECTION 2018.030(a) OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

A. Absolute Work Product Protection. Any writing that reflects an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories, whether prepared in anticipation of litigation or for trial, or prepared while acting in a nonlitigation legal capacity, is not discoverable under any circumstances (Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a); see Rico v. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 807, 815, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758, 171 P.3d 1092).

B. Legal Reasoning Not Discoverable. While a party's contentions may be the subject of discovery, it is improper to seek disclosure of the legal research, reasoning, or theory behind the contentions (Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 5, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739).

[Add points and authorities relating to the applicability of this protection in a specific factual context (see, e.g., § 81.222).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by a party resisting discovery on the ground that the information sought is attorney's work product that is absolutely protected from disclosure under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a). Counsel should use the points and authorities in § 81.222, instead of this form, if counsel wishes specifically to claim work product protection for the attorney's analysis of the testimony of nonexpert witnesses.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Discoverability of Work Product

Absolute protection extends to any writing that reflects an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a)]. Any other type of work product is subject to discovery under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b) [see, e.g., § 81.203 (supporting discoverability regarding material subject to conditional work product protection)].

[d] Work Product Protection Not a "Privilege"

The protection of attorney's work product is not one of the privileges enumerated in the Evidence Code, but is set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq., and is in the nature of limitations on pretrial discovery [see Jasper Constr., Inc. v. Foothill Jr. College Dist. (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 1, 16, 153 Cal. Rptr. 767] . Note, however, that the term "privilege" is used in many cases regarding work product issues. In discussion of those cases, the terminology of the opinion is retained for the purpose of accurately reflecting the opinions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Work Product Protection

In Rico v. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 807, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758, 171 P.3d 1092 , plaintiffs sued two auto companies and the California Department of Transportation after a sport utility vehicle rolled over while being driven on a freeway. During defendants' deposition of plaintiff's expert witness, one of plaintiff's attorneys inadvertently obtained a defense attorney's notes. Those notes were created for the attorney by his case manager, acting as the attorney's paralegal. They summarized a meeting at which defendants' attorney and two designated defense experts discussed their litigation strategy and vulnerabilities. The notes were written in a dialogue style and were dated, but were not labeled "confidential" or "work product." Plaintiff's attorney later used the notes during a deposition to impeach a defense expert. Defendants moved to disqualify plaintiffs' legal team and their experts on the ground that they had become privy to and had used a defense attorney's work product.

The trial court concluded that the notes were absolutely privileged by the work product rule. The court also held that the attorney had acted unethically by examining the document more closely than was necessary to determine that its contents were confidential, by failing to notify the defense that he had a copy of the document, and by surreptitiously using it to plaintiffs' gain. The court determined that the attorney'sviolation of the work product rule had irreparably prejudiced the defense. Accordingly, the court ordered plaintiffs' attorneys and experts disqualified. The court of appeal affirmed the disqualification order, and plaintiffs sought review (42 Cal. 4th 807, 813) .

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court concluded that the notes were absolutely protected work product, because they contained the counsel's thoughts and impressions about the case (citing Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a) (42 Cal. 4th 807, 815) . The Court also addressed the ethical duty owed by an attorney who inadvertently receives work product. The court concluded that plaintiffs' attorney should not have examined the document any more closely than was necessary to ascertain that it was privileged. Once it appeared that the document was privileged, plaintiffs' attorney should have immediately notified defense counsel and tried to resolve the situation, by agreement or with the court's guidance (42 Cal. 4th 807, 817) . Disqualification was the proper remedy (42 Cal. 4th 807, 819-820) .

[b] Legal Reasoning Not Discoverable

Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 arose out of a class action brought against several retailers for abuses related to trading stamps and sales tax collection. Plaintiffs served defendants with interrogatories that included inquiries into the legal basis for deductions and adjustments made in sales tax returns. One of the defendants objected to these interrogatories on a number of grounds, including an objection that the laws on which the deductions were based were not discoverable. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to compel answers to the interrogatories, and this petition for a writ of prohibition ensued.

The Supreme Court granted the writ for one of the challenged interrogatories, but refused to issue the writ for the others (15 Cal. 3d 1, 7-8) . Insofar as the interrogatory seeking defendant's legal reasoning was concerned, the Court held that no purpose would be served by compelling one party to perform legal research for the other. The Court further held that although a party's contentions may be the subject of discovery, it is improper to seek disclosure of the legal reasoning or theory behind the contentions (15 Cal. 3d 1, 5) .

Note that Sav-On Drugs construed law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see § 81.02[3]].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absolute Work Product Protection

In Bak v. MCL Financial Group, Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 800 , appellant, an attorney for defendants and cross-complainants, appealed a trial court judgment confirming an award issued by an arbitration panel. The court ordered the attorney to pay $ 7,500 in sanctions, based on of his conduct during a prehearing dispute over the return of privileged documents plaintiffs had inadvertently produced. Before the attorney returned the privileged material, he made a cursory review of the documents, copied them, and placed the copies in a sealed envelope, which he sent to the arbitration panel. In affirming the award of sanctions, the court of appeal clarified the rule first enunciated in State Compensation Ins. Fund v. WPS, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 644, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 799 and approved in Rico v. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 807, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758, 171 P.3d 1092 (discussed in § 81.220[3][a]): "When a lawyer who receives materials that obviously appear to be subject to an attorney-client privilege or otherwise clearly appear to be confidential and privileged and where it is reasonably apparent that the materials were provided or made available through inadvertence, the lawyer receiving such materials should refrain from examining the materials any more than is essential to ascertain if the materials are privileged, and shall immediately notify the sender that he or she possesses material that appears to be privileged. The parties may then proceed to resolve the situation by agreement or may resort to the court for guidance with the benefit of protective orders and other judicial intervention as may be justified" (170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1126-1127 , quoting State Compensation Ins. Fund v. WPS, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 644, 656-657, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 799). Contrary to the attorney's assertion, State Compensation did not approve of a receiving party copying privileged material and sending it to a third party. In fact, State Compensation suggested that when, as in this case, defendants objected to plaintiffs' demand for immediate return of the privileged documents, defendants' attorney should have sought guidance from the arbitration panel, rather than unilaterally copying the material and sending it to panel (170 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1127) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted by a party resisting discovery on the ground that the information sought is attorney's work product that is absolutely protected from disclosure by Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a), to which the crime-fraud exception to the lawyer-client privilege is inapplicable. It may be modified and used to resist discovery of absolutely protected work product based on other statutory exceptions to the lawyer-client privilege [see BP Alaska Exploration, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 1251, 245 Cal. Rptr. 682 ; see Evid. Code §§ 956-962].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Crime-Fraud Exception Not Applicable to Absolutely Protected Work Product Documents

BP Alaska Exploration, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 245 Cal. Rptr. 682 arose out of an action between two oil exploration businesses involving allegations of breach of agreement and confidential relationship, misappropriation of trade secrets, unfair competition, and unjust enrichment. Plaintiff alleged that it had disclosed certain unique, confidential information to defendant in an attempt to persuade defendant to join with it in a venture involving a third business. Defendant eventually entered into an agreement with the third business that excluded plaintiff. Plaintiff then accused defendant of breaching an implied agreement that plaintiff would participate with defendant and the third business in the venture. Plaintiff's claims were investigated by defendant's counsel, and reports concerning their legal opinions and conclusions about defendant's defense were prepared and turned over to defendant. Subsequently, after filing suit, plaintiff sought discovery from defendant about its investigation of plaintiff's claims. Defendant refused to disclose the communications prepared by its counsel, on the grounds that they were protected by the lawyer-client privilege and work product protection. Plaintiff contended the communications had lost their privileged status under Evid. Code § 956 because they were obtained in furtherance of a fraud. Plaintiff argued that alleged factual misrepresentations by defendant in a letter to plaintiff denying plaintiff's right to participate in the venture were made for the purpose of dissuading plaintiff from pursuing its claim. Plaintiff moved for an order compelling defendant to produce the documents. The trial court granted the order, and defendant filed a petition for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the petition, holding that the Evid. Code § 956 crime-fraud exception was limited to lawyer-client privileged matter, and thus was not applicable to those documents that reflected the absolute work product of the client's attorney. Observing that the motion was governed by the former discovery law, the court explained that the work product rule under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a)) specifies that any writing reflecting an attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions or legal theories is "not discoverable under any circumstances." Accordingly, courts have held that an attorney's opinion work product is absolutely insulated from discovery (199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 1250) . Evid. Code § 956 refers only to lawyer-client privileged matter, and there is no parallel fraud exception to the work product rule. The absence of a statutory crime-fraud exception to the work product rule implies that the exception does not apply to work product documents. The court concluded that in view of the absolute language of the work product statute, the plain meaning of that statute governs. Accordingly, it was error to order disclosure of documents that reflected the absolute work product of defendant's attorneys (199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 1251) .

B. Inquiry Into Expected Testimony of Nonexpert Witnesses. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by a party resisting discovery of an attorney's (or the attorney's agent's) notes that comment on a witness's statements, and the nature and extent of the testimony of all nonexpert witnesses. Different rules apply to disclosure relating to expert witnesses [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2018.030(b), 2034.010 et seq.; see also § 81.202]. Counsel should use the points and authorities in § 81.220, instead of this form, to claim absolute work product protection not based on the grounds set forth in this form.

This form may be combined with § 81.223 when counsel wishes to contend that other work product material that is not absolutely protected is not discoverable because the party seeking discovery has failed to meet the statutory burden to compel production.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inquiry Into Expected Testimony of Nonexpert Witnesses

Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468 was an action to seek damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Plaintiff served defendant city with interrogatories, one of which requested a list of the nonexpert witnesses intended to be called at trial and the nature and extent of their testimony. Defendant objected to the interrogatory on the ground that it was attorney work product under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b), (g) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a)). The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to compel further answers, and defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order.

The court of appeal granted the petition, holding that requiring the attorney to describe the extent of the expected testimony of the witnessesclearly calls for production of a writing reflecting the attorney's impressions, conclusions, and opinions. The material therefore falls within the absolute work product privilege (64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 80) . The court cited Sheets v. Superior Court (1967) 257 Cal. App. 2d 1, 10-11, 64 Cal. Rptr. 753 and People v. Boehm (1969) 270 Cal. App. 2d 13, 21, 75 Cal. Rptr. 590 , holding that if an analysis of the testimony of each witness had already been prepared by defendant's attorney it would have been absolutely privileged. The fact that under the trial court's order the analysis would have been prepared specifically for submission to plaintiff did not justify a contrary result (64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 80-81) .

[b] Comments on Statement of Witness by Attorney or Agent

The facts and procedural background of Rodriguez v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 151 Cal. Rptr. 399 are discussed in § 81.200[3][d]. In Rodriguez, the court of appeal held that the part of an investigator's notes that merely recorded the witnesses' statements should not have been protected from disclosure under the work product doctrine (87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 647) . However, that portion of the notes consisting of the investigator's comments should have been given absolute protection from disclosure under former Code Civ. Proc. 2016(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a)) (87 Cal. App. 3d 626, 648) .

[c] Attorney's Legal Reasoning or Theories

Burke v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 276, 78 Cal. Rptr. 481, 455 P.2d 409 is discussed in § 81.200[3][b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Attorney's Legal Reasoning or Theories

Sav-On Drugs, Inc. v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 1, 123 Cal. Rptr. 283, 538 P.2d 739 was a class action against retailers regarding allegedly excessive sales tax. One of the defendants brought a petition for a writ of prohibition restraining the trial court from compelling an answer to an interrogatory that asked what specific deductions or adjustments petitioner made in respect to sales tax returns for certain years, and also what law or regulation permits them. The Supreme Court granted the petition, holding, inter alia, that the request in essence seeks the legal reasoning and theories behind petitioner's contention that any sales tax deductions it took are proper; and that a party's contention may be the subject of discovery, but not the legal reasoning or theory behind the contention (15 Cal. 3d 1, 5) .

§ 81.223 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Work Product Protected From Disclosure [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020]--Conditional Protection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

THE _____ [describe work product sought to be discovered, e.g., LIST OF ALL NONEXPERT WITNESSES WHO WILL BE CALLED AT TRIAL] IS PROTECTED WORK PRODUCT BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS NOT SHOWN THAT DENIAL OF DISCOVERY WILL UNFAIRLY PREJUDICE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] OR WILL RESULT IN AN INJUSTICE.

A. Conditional Work Product Protection. Subject to Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018.030(a), the work product of an attorney is discoverable only if the court determines that denial of discovery will unfairly prejudice the party seeking discovery in preparing that party's claim or defense or will result in an injustice (Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)).

B. Definition of Work Product. Since there is no statutory definition of material protected as attorney's work product, the court must therefore resort to case law and to the policy declared in Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018.020 to determine whether work product is involved (see Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280).

C. Material Protected as Work Product. The cases indicate generally that material of a derivative character, such as diagrams prepared for trial, audit reports, appraisals, and other expert opinions, developed as a result of the initiative of counsel in preparing for trial are to be protected as work product (Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280).

D. Burden on Party Seeking Disclosure. The burden of proof is on the party seeking discovery, once the party resisting discovery has raised the objection of work product (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b); Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 79, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468).

[Optional] E. Complete List of Nonexpert Witnesses Who Will Be Called at Trial. A complete list of nonexpert witnesses designated by the attorney to testify at trial is a derivative product developed as a result of the initiative of counsel in preparing for trial, and the forced revelation of the list would violate the work product doctrine because counsel's decision in this respect is strategic and necessarily reflects counsel's evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses of the case (Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 73, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use by a party resisting discovery when the information sought is work product that is not absolutely protected from disclosure, and the party seeking discovery has not met the statutory burden to compel production [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)]. Optional Paragraph E is for use if the work product sought to be discovered consists of a list of nonexpert witnesses designated by the attorney to testify at trial.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel may wish to show why foreclosing discovery would not result in unfair prejudice or injustice to the party seeking discovery.

[c] Absolute Attorney Work Product Protection

If discovery is sought of an attorney's writing that reflects the attorney's impressions, conclusions, opinions, or legal research or theories, the work product is absolutely protected pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(a), and counsel should use § 81.220 or § 81.222 instead of this form.

[d] Discovery of Information Concerning Merely Potential Witnesses

The names of all witnesses with knowledge of relevant facts, i.e., potential witnesses, are not within the work product privilege [see Borse v. Superior Court (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 286, 289, 86 Cal. Rptr. 559 ; see also § 81.200]. However, an attorney's list of witnesses expected to be called at trial is distinguishable from a list of merely potential witnesses in that it reflects the initiative of counsel in preparing for trial [see Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 73, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468 ; but see In re Jeanette H. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 25, 34-37, 275 Cal. Rptr. 9 (juvenile court rule requiring disclosure of witness list at trial readiness conference was upheld)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Definition of Work Product

The facts and procedural background of Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280 are set out in § 81.200[3][g]. There, the court stated that since there is no statutory definition of work product, the courts must resort to the cases and to the policy set forth in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(g) [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020] in determining whether work product is involved in a particular case (259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10) . The court went on to hold that since the appraiser's opinions that were sought were indeed work product, they need not be disclosed (259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10, 11) .

[b] Material Protected as Work Product

The facts and procedural background of Mack v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 66 Cal. Rptr. 280 are discussed in § 81.200[3][g]. In Mack, the court held that while there is no statutory definition of work product, the cases generally have indicated that work product consists of such derivative material as diagrams prepared for trial, audit reports, appraisals, and other expert opinions developed as the result of an attorney's initiative in preparing for trial (259 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10) .

[c] Burden on Party Seeking Disclosure

Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b) provides for the nondisclosure of attorney work product, unless the court finds that such nondisclosure will unfairly prejudice the party seeking discovery, or will result in injustice. This has been characterized as presenting a major change from the prestatutory work product doctrine in California. Previously, the party from whom discovery was sought bore the burden of establishing not only that workproduct protection was applicable, but that it would also be unjust to permit discovery [see, e.g., San Diego Professional Asso. v. Superior Court of San Diego County (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 194, 204, 23 Cal. Rptr. 384, 373 P.2d 448] . Now, the burden of establishing that the material sought is work product remains with the party making the claim of work product, but the burden then shifts to the party seeking discovery to persuade the court that the denial of such discovery will cause unfair prejudice or will result in injustice [McCoy, California Civil Discovery: Work Product of Attorneys (1966) 18 Stan. L. Rev. 783, 803].

The facts and procedural background of Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468 are discussed in § 81.222[3][a]. In Long Beach, the court held that defendant had established that the list of all nonexpert witnesses and the nature and extent of their testimony that defendant sought was clearly work product. The court went on to hold that since former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b) [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)] specifically places the burden of proof on the party seeking discovery once the other party has raised the objection of work product protection, plaintiff ought to have made a showing of facts to overcome the qualified privilege. The court held that this showing was not made; plaintiff merely stated that the information was discoverable and not privileged, but never attempted to make the required showing of unfair prejudice (64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 79) .

[d] Complete List of Nonexpert Witnesses Who Will Be Called at Trial

The facts and procedural background of Long Beach v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 134 Cal. Rptr. 468 are discussed in § 81.222[3][a]. In Long Beach, the court of appeal held that requiring an attorney to describe the extent of the expected testimony of the witnesses calls for production of a writing reflecting the attorney's impressions, conclusions, and opinions, and therefore falls within the absolute work product protection (64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 80) . The governing statute (former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b); see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.) does not define work product, and the definition of work product must be resolved by individual court determinations on a case-by-case basis (64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 71) . Although a party may discover the names of all witnesses with knowledge of relevant facts, that is, percipient witnesses, the identity of witnesses who will be called at trial is a derivative product developed as a result of the initiative of counsel in preparing for trial. It necessarily reflects counsel's evaluation of the strengths and weaknesses of his or her case, and requiring disclosure of this information would inevitably chill counsel's willingness to investigate unfavorable as well as favorable aspects of the case (64 Cal. App. 3d 65, 73) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conditional Work Product Protection

The facts and procedural background of Dowden v. Superior Court (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 180 are set out in § 81.205[4][a]. In Dowden, the court of appeal held that litigants in propria persona may assert Code Civ. Proc. § 2018's (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.) work product privilege and that an in camera review of plaintiff's diary, which allegedly was prepared in anticipation of litigation, was required to determine whether it contained matter that was privileged under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.) (73 Cal. App. 4th 126, 136) .

In People v. Superior Court (Bauman & Rose) (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1757, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 734 , the Los Angeles District Attorney appealed the superior court's order sealing certain documents seized during a search of the respondents' law offices pursuant to a search warrant, as part of an investigation to uncover evidence of insurance fraud. The court ofappeal affirmed. The court held that an in camera hearing was required to determine whether the work-product privilege applies to the seized client files (37 Cal. App. 4th 1757, 1767) .

Good cause must be shown before there can be disclosure of the observations and conclusions of an independent expert engaged for the purpose of trial preparation (County of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 654, 271 Cal. Rptr. 698 ; Grand Lake Drive In v. Superior Court (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 122, 129, 3 Cal. Rptr. 621).

[AND/OR]

B. Broad Immunity From Discovery of Expert Witness Information If Expert Not Scheduled to Testify at Trial. Opinions ofan expert who has been engaged by an attorney to help in the preparation of a case should ordinarily be given broad immunity from discovery until such time as the expert is designated to be a witness at trial (Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 202, 203, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 ; Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20).

[AND/OR]

C. Discovery of Percipient, as Opposed to Retained, Experts. An analysis of the anticipated testimony of percipient expert witnesses, as opposed to retained expert witnesses, is protected by the work product doctrine and is not discoverable (Huntley v. Foster (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 753, 756-757, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358).

[AND/OR]

D. Opinions Imparted to Experts. It would be a violation of the work product rule to permit discovery of any information that an attorney might have imparted to experts in preparation for litigation (Kenney v. Superior Court (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 106, 112, 63 Cal. Rptr. 84).

[AND/OR]

E. Discovery of Experts Far in Advance of Trial. Discovery of the identity of experts consulted is improper when the party from whom discovery is sought has not yet determined whether to use any of the experts as witnesses, and when there is still a substantial period of time for trial preparation (South Tahoe Public Utility Dist. v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 135, 138, 154 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[AND/OR]

F. Services of Expert Rendered in Purely Advisory Capacity. Work product protection attaches to an expert's services that are rendered in a purely advisory capacity, even if the expert is a potential witness (National Steel Products Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 487, 210 Cal. Rptr. 535 ; Scotsman Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 531, 51 Cal. Rptr. 511).

[AND/OR]

G. Knowledge or Opinion of Expert Taken off List of Designated Trial Witnesses Before Deposition. When an expert previously designated as an expert trial witness is withdrawn from thatlist at any time before the expert's deposition, the work product protection is revived with respect to that expert's knowledge or opinion that was previously made discoverable by its relevance to his or her expected testimony (County of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 655-658, 271 Cal. Rptr. 698).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities are intended for use in opposition to a motion to compel discovery on the ground that expert opinions, reports, or names and addresses of experts that are sought are protected by the work product doctrine. This form may be combined with a general form in opposition to a motion to compel discovery, as well as with general points and authorities on conditional protection.

For authorities that discuss situations in which an expert's opinion may not come under the protection of the work product doctrine, see § 81.202. For a form that may be used in opposition to a motion to compel discovery on the ground that designation of a party as an expert trial witness is not itself an implied waiver of the privilege, if the designation is withdrawn before the party discloses a significant part of a privileged communication, or before it is known with reasonable certainty that the party will actually testify as an expert, see § 81.90.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Cause Needed for Discovery of Expert's Opinions

In County of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 271 Cal. Rptr. 698 , a medical malpractice action, defendant county designated a neuropathologist as an expert witness pursuant to an exchange of expert witnesses under Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq.). Before that neuropathologist's deposition was held, defendant amended its expert witness list by withdrawing the neuropathologist as a trial witness, but retained him as a consultant. Plaintiff's attorneys then contacted the neuropathologist, interviewed him, and attempted to designate him as an expert. Defendant moved for a protective order and to disqualify plaintiff's attorney. The trial court denied defendant's motions, and permitted plaintiff to augment his expert witnesslist to include the neuropathologist as his own expert. Defendant applied for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant the relief requested by defendant. The court explained that the neuropathologist's opinions about the case constituted defendant's attorney's work product. Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2018(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)), plaintiff may discover that work product only upon a showing of unfair prejudice or injustice. In other words, work product protection may be suspended on a showing of good cause. The good-cause exception has come to mean there is no adequate substitute for the material generated by the expert. Plaintiff claimed that there was no adequate substitute for the neuropathologist's work because he was the only available expert in that field. However, the only supporting evidence presented by plaintiff was a declaration made by his attorney consisting of hearsay statements that the neuropathologist was one of a handful in the state, and one of only two in the city, the other of whom was employed by defendant. The court of appeal found that to be an insufficient showing of good cause. It suggested that evidence concerning the specific number of potential experts in the field, or about any undue expense involved in contacting the other experts within the state might have constituted good cause (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 654) .

Grand Lake Drive In v. Superior Court (1960) 179 Cal. App. 2d 122, 3 Cal. Rptr. 621 predated the 1963 amendments to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016 [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.], which gave statutory protection to an attorney's work product. Nevertheless, its judicial importation of the requirement of good cause into the area of discovery of experts remains good law.

The case arose out of an action for personal injuries based on a slip and fall. Defendant's attorney engaged a firm of testing engineers to inspect defendant's sidewalk surface. Plaintiff deposed the expert who actually made the tests, but the deponent refused to answer any questions at all. On plaintiff's motion, the trial court ordered the expert to answer all questions concerning the tests he had made and what he had observed.

The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate, holding that although the attorney-client privilege and the work product rule were not applicable, fairness requires that there be a showing of good cause as a precondition to the exercise of the power of the court to require pretrial disclosure of the observations and conclusions of an independent expert engaged in preparation for trial (179 Cal. App. 2d 122, 129) . The court went on to hold that it would not define good cause, but that good cause should lie where the object tested no longer exists or has been greatly altered by the testing (179 Cal. App. 2d 122, 131) .

Note that work product protection was deemed inapplicable because what was sought was not the research, thought, and effort of the attorney,but was solely the product of the expert (179 Cal. App. 2d 122, 129) . Although there was no statutory work product doctrine then in effect, the above statement appears to still be valid. For example, in Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 271, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20 , the court of appeal distinguished the expert's protected reports to the attorney who retained that expert from an expert's own observations that are not communicated to the attorney, which are not so protected.

[b] Broad Immunity From Discovery of Expert Witness Information If Expert Not Scheduled to Testify at Trial

The facts and procedural background of Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 are set out in § 81.202[3][a]. There, in the context of an eminent domain proceeding, the court noted that consultation between the expert and counsel may be given broad immunity from discovery because the expert's opinion is ordinarily irrelevant unless and until he or she is called as a witness at trial (231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 202, 203) . This rule arose from the policy embodied in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020] that discovery may not be used for the purposes of substituting an adversary's preparation for one's own (231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 203) .

The facts and procedural background of Petterson v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 114 Cal. Rptr. 20 are discussed in § 81.202[3][b]. The Petterson court noted, in dictum, that an expert who has been engaged by an attorney to assist in trial preparation but who will not be called as a witness at trial must be given broad immunity from having to give testimony, since his or her opinion will ordinarily not be a relevant factor in the case, citing Swartzman v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 195, 41 Cal. Rptr. 721 , discussed above (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272) . Despite the foregoing statement, however, the court went on to hold that depositions of respondent's handwriting expert could be compelled on various grounds including waiver and fairness (39 Cal. App. 3d 267, 273, 274) .

[c] Discovery of Percipient, as Opposed to Retained, Experts

In Huntley v. Foster (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 753, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 , a personal injury action, the parties served a demand for expert witness information on each other. Plaintiff responded that she did not have any retained experts but would rely on the opinions of the medical care providers. At trial, one of the defendants sought to exclude the expert testimony of the doctors because plaintiff failed to provide the defendant with an expert witness declaration for them [now see Code Civ. Proc.§ 2034.260(c)]. The trial court granted defendant's in limine motion restricting the doctors to testifying as percipient, not expert, witnesses. The plaintiff and defendant stipulated to a monetary judgment in favor of plaintiff to enable plaintiff to appeal the trial court's order. Plaintiff then appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that Civ. Proc. § 2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq.)--under which the parties must provide an expert witness declaration on request--applies only to retained experts. An analysis of the anticipated testimony of percipient expert witnesses, as opposed to retained expert witnesses, is protected by the work product doctrine and is not discoverable. Thus, the disclosure requirements are not applicable to treating doctors, even if they may be asked for expert opinions at trial (35 Cal. App. 4th 753, 756-757) .

[d] Opinions Imparted to Experts

Kenney v. Superior Court (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 106, 63 Cal. Rptr. 84 arose out of a medical malpractice action in which plaintiff served interrogatories inquiring about whether defendant had consulted with experts on the question of diagnosis and treatment, and if so, the names, addresses, and professional backgrounds of those experts. Plaintiff also inquired about whether the experts would be called as witnesses, and requested the information that had been imparted to a medical committee as well. When some of the questions went unanswered, plaintiff sought and obtained an order compelling responses.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to modify its order requiring further answers. The court of appeal noted that while names, addresses, and other statistical information concerning known potential witnesses may be discovered, it would violate the work product rule to permit discovery of any information that defendant or his attorney might have imparted to such experts in preparation for litigation (255 Cal. App. 2d 106, 112) .

[e] Discovery of Experts Far in Advance of Trial

In South Tahoe Public Utility Dist. v. Superior Court (1979) 90 Cal. App. 3d 135, 154 Cal. Rptr. 1 , the trial court ordered plaintiff to answer an interrogatory inquiring about whether he had consulted with any experts regarding the issues raised in the complaint, and if so, to list the names, addresses, and areas of expertise of any such experts, except those who would not under any circumstances be called as trial witnesses. Plaintiff responded to this request by stating that it had not yet made a decision about whether to use any of its consultants as trial witnesses, and it therefore refused to answer on the ground that the information was protected by the work product doctrine. The trial court then ordered plaintiff to answer, and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ, noting that plaintiff had not yet determined whether to use any of its experts as witnesses in the trial, and that there was still a substantial period of time left for trial preparation (90 Cal. App. 3d 135, 138) . Therefore, to allow premature disclosure would violate former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(g) [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.020] by discouraging plaintiff from fully investigating its case, and by giving defendant such full advantage of plaintiff's attorney's efforts that defendant would be largely able to determine its trial strategy without independent effort on its own part (90 Cal. App. 3d 135, 138) .

The court gave added weight to its holding by discussing former Code Civ. Proc. § 2037 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq.], which was not in effect at the time of the court order. It noted that this section recognizes the importance of timing in the exchange of lists of expert witnesses (90 Cal. App. 3d 135, 139) .

[f] Services of Expert Rendered in Purely Advisory Capacity

National Steel Products Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 210 Cal. Rptr. 535 involved an action against a manufacturer for faulty design, fabrication, and erection of a metal building. A potential expert witness for defendant had prepared an engineering analysis during a prior, similar action against defendant in another state. The trial court granted plaintiff's request to discover this report, and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate to vacate this order. The court of appeal granted the writ and ordered the trial court to inspect the report in camera and permit its discovery only to the extent that it was unprotected by the work product privilege (164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 493) . The court held that not all of an expert's services, reports, or opinions are discoverable merely because he or she becomes a potential witness. Expert services rendered in an advisory capacity are subject to the conditional work product privilege; those that qualify the person as an expert witness are subject to discovery when severable from those that are privileged. Advisory services are those that are designed to assist the attorney in such matters as preparation of pleadings, the manner of presentation of proof, and cross-examination of opposing expert witnesses, i.e., matters that are often reflective of the mental processes of the attorney under whose direction the expert works. Services that qualify a person as an expert witness are those that contain findings and opinions of the expert that go to the establishment or denial of a principal fact in issue (164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 488-489) . Portions of an expert witness's work found to be advisory and subject to the conditional privilege may not be discovered absent some other compelling reason for discovery, such as the work's impeachment value or the availability of an adequate substitute (164 Cal. App. 3d 476, 490-492) .

The facts and procedural background of Scotsman Mfg. Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 51 Cal. Rptr. 511 are set out in § 81.202[3][c]. In Scotsman, the court held that even though an expert is a potential witness, that does not remove work product protection from the product of his services, which were rendered in a purely advisory capacity (242 Cal. App. 2d 527, 531) .

[g] Knowledge or Opinion of Expert Taken off List of Designated Trial Witnesses Before Deposition

The facts and procedural background of County of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 271 Cal. Rptr. 698 are discussed in [a], above. In County of Los Angeles, the court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate, directing the trial court to grant the relief requested by defendant, which included disqualification of plaintiff's attorney. It explained that plaintiff's attorney had acted improperly by contacting the neuropathologist serving as defendant's expert consultant. The court said that the work of an expert-consultant is protected by the attorney work product doctrine. Once it appears reasonably certain that the expert-consultant will give his or her professional opinion as a witness on a material matter in dispute, as indicated by inclusion of that expert on the designated expert witness list, the work product protection terminates and the expert's knowledge and opinions are subject to discovery and disclosure (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 654-655) . However, a party may withdraw a consultant-expert who has been named as a potential witness at any time before the expert's deposition (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 656) . In this event, the work product protection is revived with respect to that expert's knowledge or opinion that was previously made discoverable because of its relevance to his or her expected testimony (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 655-658) . Materials generated as a result of the expert's advisory services, the protection of which was not withdrawn by the expert's designation as a potential witness, remain protected work product (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 655) . The court held that defendant had properly withdrawn the neuropathologist from the designated expert witness list, thereby reviving the work product protection (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 656) .

The court noted further that once a previously designated expert has been withdrawn from the list of potential witnesses, if that expert continues his or her relationship with the party as a consultant, the opposing party is barred from communicating with the expert and from retaining him or her as an expert (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 657-658) . The penalty for an attorney violating this rule is disqualification from the case (222 Cal. App. 3d 647, 658) .

[a] Broad Immunity From Discovery of Expert Witness Information If Expert Not Scheduled to Testify at Trial

Armenta v. Superior Court, 101 Cal. App. 4th 525, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 (2002) arose from a case filed under the California False Claims Act, in which a qui tam plaintiff alleged on behalf of the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power (department) and other municipal water systems that real party in interest companies sold the water systems water valves, fittings and other metal water distribution parts that contained significantly higher levels of lead and zinc than allowed in the contract specifications and that could lead to an increase in lead levels in the water supply. The qui tam plaintiff and the department retained an expert on lead leaching, as well as two other experts. The expert on lead leaching and plaintiff individual's counsel consulted extensively with two other experts. To protect their work product, the parties executed a joint prosecution agreement. In response to a proposed settlement by the companies with the department, the department wanted to make all expert data available to them. The individual plaintiff, the district, city and county asserted a claim of work product under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.). The superior court, however, found that Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.) did not prohibit the companies from using the expert reports. Petitioners were granted a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal found that the qui tam plaintiff had a valid work product interest in the reports of the expert retained as a consultant, but not designated as a witness, that counsel for the department could not waive. The materials sought came within the qualified privilege under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.030(b)). "[R]eports prepared by an expert as a consultant are protected until the expert is designated as a witness ... . However, to the extent that said reports embrace counsel's impressions and conclusions, the work-product doctrine gives absolute protection to that information" (101 Cal. App. 4th 525, 534) . Further, the joint prosecution agreement provided full protection for that information. Because the expert's reports were the result of the qui tam plaintiff's and the department's joint collaboration, counsel for the department had no authority to waive the work product privilege on the qui tam plaintiff's behalf (101 Cal. App. 4th 525, 534) . Finally, no substantial evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that denial of access to the materials would unfairly prejudicial the companies' defense because the companies could generate comparable evidence (101 Cal. App. 4th 525, 536) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

THE WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION OF _____ [_____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT) or (PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S) ATTORNEY] IS NOT AUTOMATICALLY WAIVED BY _____ [FILING AND PROSECUTING A CIVIL ACTION and/or TENDERING A PROBABLE CAUSE OF DEFENSE IN A MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ACTION and/or TENDERING THE ISSUE OF DAMAGES IN A LEGAL MALPRACTICE ACTION and/or THE FORMER ATTORNEY'S GIVING THE FILE TO _____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT) and/or INVOLUNTARILY COMPELLED DISCLOSURE].

[EITHER]

A. Filing and Prosecuting Civil Action. Work product protection is not automatically waived by the filing and prosecution of a civil action (Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 66, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274).

[AND/OR]

B. Giving File to Clients. Work product protection is not waived by an attorney turning over the contents of his or her files to clients (BP Alaska Exploration, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 1260, 245 Cal. Rptr. 682 ; Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 65, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274).

[AND/OR]

C. Involuntary Disclosure. A waiver of work product protection is not effected when disclosure of material otherwise protected under the work product rule is involuntarily compelled (American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 595, 113 Cal. Rptr. 561).

[AND/OR]

D. Tendering Probable Cause Defense in Malicious Prosecution Action. A defendant in a malicious prosecution action does notwaive protection from his or her attorney's disclosure of work product in a prior action merely by tendering a defense of probable cause (Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 502, 503, 165 Cal. Rptr. 748).

[AND/OR]

E. Tendering Issue of Damages in Legal Malpractice Action. A plaintiff in a malpractice action against his or her former attorney does not waive protection from disclosure of the work product of his or her present attorney merely by tendering the issue of damages, even though the information requested may be relevant to the issue (Schlumberger Limited v. Superior Court (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 386, 393, 171 Cal. Rptr. 413).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use by a party resisting discovery on work product grounds when the opposing party has claimed that there has been a waiver of work product protection [see, e.g., Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 66, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274] .

It may be combined with a general form in opposition to a motion to compel discovery.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 81.204.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Filing and Prosecuting Civil Action

Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274 arose out of an action for breach of an insurance contract, fraud, and deceit against an insurance company and others. The basis for the action against the insurance company was the alleged violation of its duty of fair dealing during prior arbitration proceedings regarding plaintiff's claims for uninsured motorist coverage. Plaintiff's arbitration attorney turned his files over to plaintiffs, who retained new counsel to represent them in a subsequent civil action for breach of contract, fraud, and deceit. Defendantssought production of the arbitration attorney's files pertaining to the uninsured motorist claims, and plaintiff resisted the claim on work product grounds. The trial court ordered production, on the ground that the work product privilege was not applicable to litigation that arose after completion of the matter giving rise to the attorney's work product for which the privilege was claimed. Plaintiffs filed a petition for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the petition, holding that the filing and prosecution of the civil action, after termination of the arbitration proceedings, did not constitute a waiver of the work product privilege (108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 66) . Moreover, protection of both absolutely and conditionally protected work product survives the litigation or other matter in which the work product was created (108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 62, 63) . The two-fold policy behind the privilege (allowing an attorney to analyze unfavorable aspects of his or her case, and preventing one attorney from taking advantage of another's efforts) would be furthered by the rule that the privilege does not terminate with the litigation in which the work product was created (108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 63) .

[b] Giving File to Clients

The facts and procedural background of BP Alaska Exploration, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 245 Cal. Rptr. 682 are discussed in § 81.221[3][a]. In vacating the discovery order of the trial court, the court of appeal considered the issue of whether an attorney's opinion letter or memorandum to a client lost its absolute work product status once the letter or memorandum was delivered in confidence to the client. The court held that an attorney's absolute work product protection continues concerning the contents of a writing delivered to a client in confidence. The protection precludes third parties not representing the client from discovery of the writing. The court said that recognition of an attorney's right to assert a work product protection in the contents of a writing after it is delivered to the client strengthens the attorney-client relationship by enabling the attorney to evaluate the client's case and to communicate his or her opinions to the client without fear that those opinions and theories will later be exposed to the opposing party or to the public in general for criticism or ridicule (199 Cal. App. 3d 1240, 1260) .

The facts and procedural background of Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274 are discussed in [a], above. In Fellows, the court of appeal held that the attorney's work product protection had not been waived by virtue of plaintiff's filing of a civil action. Moreover, an attorney's disclosure of the contents of his or her files to a client is not a waiver of work product protection for the material contained in the files because disclosure has not been made to a disinterested person (108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 65) .

[c] Involuntary Disclosure

American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 113 Cal. Rptr. 561 arose out of four medical malpractice actions against a surgeon. At the conclusion of the first two of the actions, in which the respective plaintiffs received both compensatory and punitive damages, the surgeon sued his insurance carrier for misrepresentation and negligent and willful breach of its fiduciary obligations. Consequently, one of the firms hired by the carrier to defend the surgeon withdrew as counsel of record in all the cases then pending against him. In one of the pending actions, plaintiff's attorney served the withdrawn attorney with a subpoena duces tecum, requesting him to appear as a witness and to produce files of the prior cases, as well as all documents relating to the surgeon's competency and health. In addition, plaintiff sought all communications and records to or from the law firm concerning the surgeon's relationship to the codefendant hospital, and all communications among the members of the law firm and other counsel and investigators concerning the physician's judgment and abilities. The insurance carrier appeared specially in this action and objected to this disclosure as a violation of both the attorney-client privilege and the work product rule. The trial court ordered disclosure, and the malpractice carrier brought a petition for a writ of prohibition on the ground that the order was too broad.

The court of appeal granted the petition, noting the dual lawyer-client relationship that exists when a defense lawyer is retained by an insurance company (38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 590-593, 597 ; see § 81.80). Work product protection arose from the attorney's need for privacy and confidentiality (38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 594) . Although the protection may be waived, production of files in response to a subpoena duces tecum is involuntary disclosure, and therefore cannot constitute a waiver (38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 595) .

[d] Tendering Probable Cause Defense in Malicious Prosecution Action

Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 165 Cal. Rptr. 748 involved a malicious prosecution action against a law firm. One of the firm's partners refused to answer deposition questions relating to the prior action on which the claim of malicious prosecution was based, claiming attorney work product privilege. Plaintiffs moved to compel answers. The trial court granted the motion on the ground that defendant had waived any privilege because its answer raised the affirmative defense of probable cause. Defendant brought a petition for a writ of mandate requiring the trial court to vacate its order compelling answers.

The court of appeal granted the petition. The law firm's affirmative defense of probable cause merely denied plaintiffs' allegation of lack ofprobable cause, on which plaintiffs had the burden of proof, and was therefore redundant. Moreover, to hold the privilege waived in the instant case would be to hold it waived in every malicious prosecution action, thus defeating the purpose of the privilege (107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 503) .

[e] Tendering Issue of Damages in Legal Malpractice Action

Schlumberger Limited v. Superior Court (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 386, 171 Cal. Rptr. 413 arose out of an action for legal malpractice. Defendant requested production of communications and memoranda between plaintiff and his present counsel for a certain period. Plaintiff refused to produce the items, contending, in part, that production would violate his attorney's work product privilege. Defendant moved for and obtained an order compelling production of the items on the ground that they were not privileged and were relevant to the subject matter of the lawsuit. Plaintiff brought a petition for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order compelling production.

The court of appeal granted the petition, holding that affirmatively tendering an issue in litigation, such as the issue of damages, does not waive the privilege even though the evidence might be relevant on that issue (115 Cal. App. 3d 386, 393) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Waiver of Protection if Disclosure Involuntary

The facts and procedural background of Schlumberger Limited v. Superior Court (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 386, 171 Cal. Rptr. 413 are discussed in [3][e], above. In Schlumberger, the court held that affirmatively tendering an issue in litigation, such as the issue of damages, does not waive the work product privilege even though the evidence might be relevant on that issue (115 Cal. App. 3d 386, 393) . Moreover, plaintiff's failure to seek review of a prior court order compelling production of communications and memoranda for an earlier period did not prevent him from seeking relief from a subsequent order requiring production for a later period because the disclosure was coerced and did not constitute a waiver under Evid. Code § 919(b) (115 Cal. App. 3d 386, 391-392) .

THE WORK PRODUCT OF _____ [_____(PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT) or _____(PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S) ATTORNEY] IS NOT DISCOVERABLE BECAUSE THE WORK PRODUCT PROTECTION EXTENDS BEYOND THE TERMINATION OF LITIGATION.

Protection Extends Beyond Termination of Litigation. The work product protection does not terminate simply because the litigation or matter in which the work product was created has terminated (Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 62, 63, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274).

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use by a party resisting discovery on work product grounds when the work product that the party seeks to protect from disclosure has been created during the course of prior litigation or other matters that are no longer pending [see, e.g., Fellows v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 55, 62, 63, 166 Cal. Rptr. 274] .

It may be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery.

The facts and procedural background of Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 165 Cal. Rptr. 748 are discussed in § 81.225[3][d]. In Popelka, the court of appeal held that raising the affirmative defense of probable cause in a malicious prosecution action does not waive any work product privilege. The court noted with approval that the great weight of federal authority has held that the work product privilege may extend beyond the termination of litigation. The work product rule would not be served by a privilege that remained in effect only until the termination of the action. Therefore, in California, the privilege extends beyond the termination of the litigation for which the work product was prepared (107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 502) .

§ 81.240 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Refuting Claim of Privacy--General Form--Privacy Must Be Balanced Against Compelling State Interest

DISCOVERY WILL NOT BE BARRED BY A CLAIM OF RIGHT TO PRIVACY WHEN THE COMPELLING STATE INTEREST IN DISCLOSURE OUTWEIGHS THE RIGHT TO PRIVACY.

A. Requiring Discovery Despite Right to Privacy. The right of privacy is not absolute, and disclosure may be required if it serves a compelling state interest that justifies substantial infringement of that right (Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 855, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 ; Alch v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1421-1422, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 470 ; Save Open Space Santa Monica Mountains v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 248-250, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 ; Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 362-365, 282 Cal. Rptr. 1).

B. Compelling State Interest in Disclosure. The state has a compelling interest in disclosure when disclosure would facilitate the ascertainment of truth in connection with litigation (Save Open Space Santa Monica Mountains v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 253, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 ; Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 290, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194).

C. Disclosure of Relevant Matters Essential to Fair Resolution of Lawsuit. When activities within the zone of privacy are directly relevant to the cause of action, and when disclosure of these activities is essential to the resolution of the lawsuit, then the trial court may compel disclosure of the activities (Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 859, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 ; Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 363-364, 282 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery if the party or other person has resisted discovery on the grounds that disclosure would violate the right of privacy of that person or of third persons who are not involved in the lawsuit. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general memorandum in support of compelling discovery.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.100 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right to privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requiring Discovery Despite Right to Privacy

Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 involved an action by 936 owners of land for diminution in land values and for personal injuries arising out of the operation of a nearby airport. Defendant, the owner and operator of the airport, deposed some of the plaintiffs, attempting to inquire into any of their past political activities that were connected with the airport. Plaintiffs sought a protective order restraining inquiry into past political activities, asserting that such activities were constitutionally privileged. The trial court granted defendant's motion to compel discovery and denied plaintiffs' motion for a protective order. Plaintiffs then petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate, which the Court issued, directing the trial court to vacate its discovery order.

In its opinion, the Supreme Court held that the trial court's discovery order would cause an unconstitutional invasion of plaintiffs' rights to associational privacy (20 Cal. 3d 844, 852) . However, the Court went on to note that such right to privacy is not absolute; disclosure may beconstitutionally compelled if there is a compelling state interest that justifies the substantial impairment of such a right (20 Cal. 3d 844, 855) .

In Alch v. Superior Court (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 470 , a consolidated class action suit by television writers asserting an industry-wide pattern and practice of age discrimination, the writers served subpoenas on third parties, seeking disclosure of their personal information--beyond contact information--from which the writers could prepare a statistical analysis to support their claims of age discrimination. Approximately 7,700 individuals filed objections to the disclosure on privacy grounds. The writers moved to overrule the objections, but the trial court sustained the objections in their entirety. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its orders and to enter a new and different order granting the writers access to the requested information (165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1421-1422) . The court concluded that the trial court abused its discretion when it sustained all objections to the disclosure of the requested information on privacy grounds. The trial court used a "broad brush to deny the writers access to all data about the objectors out of hand," without considering whether "a more nuanced approach" to the different categories of data would satisfy the balance between privacy interests and the litigants' need for discovery (165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1421-1422) . The writers could not prove their disparate impact claims without access to the directly relevant evidence from which they could perform a statistical analysis. The trial court erred in its purported balancing of the objectors' privacy rights and the countervailing interests of the litigants and the state, and erred in failing to analyze the types of information requested, failing to consider the state's interest in preventing discrimination, and erroneously concluding the writers could proceed with a statistical analysis without information from the objectors (165 Cal. App. 4th 1412, 1428-1438) .

In Save Open Space Santa Monica Mountains v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 , plaintiff Save Open Space (SOS), a nonprofit organization devoted to maintaining open space, petitioned the Superior Court to compel real party in interest (the County of Los Angeles and the County Department of Regional Planning) to vacate decisions approving time extensions to maps for two neighboring proposed land divisions. Plaintiff obtained a court order vacating one of those decisions and filed a motion for attorneys's fees and expenses under Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.5, California's private attorney general statute. Opposing the motion, the County noticed the deposition of SOS persons "most knowledgeable" about their attorney's retainer agreement and demanded production of copies of the retainer agreement and of checks used to pay counsel. SOS moved for a protective order and imposition of sanctions, claiming that the information sought was irrelevant to the court's consideration of SOS's Section 1021.5 motion for attorney fees, and that the discovery would violate the attorney-client privilege and the attorney work product doctrine. In opposition to SOS's motion for protective order, the County justified its discovery request on the ground that courts have uniformly recognized that an attorney fee award is inappropriate when the applicant has a large economic or non-economic stake in the outcome. The County claimed that a public interest entity that pursues the private interests of its constituents rather than the broader public interests is not entitled to attorney fee reimbursement (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 240-241) . The trial court denied the motions for a protective order and for sanctions and ordered compliance with the subpoenas and deposition notices that had been issued. SOS did not seek relief. In the meantime, County served notice, together with subpoenas, for two additional depositions concerning payment of SOS's attorneys' fees by two non-profit organizations. SOS filed a motion to quash the depositions on grounds that the information sought was irrelevant to its fee request, that it was protected by the attorney-client privilege, and that disclosure would infringe on the constitutionally protected right of freedom of association (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 243) . The trial court denied SOS's motion, except to impose some limitations on the information real parties could obtain concerning donors and donation amounts. Regarding the identity of individual donors, the court ruled the County was entitled to learn the identity of only the 10 largest donors and donors who reside in certain areas near the proposed land divisions, as well as the amounts contributed by each of these donors. The trial court ruled this information could be disclosed only to persons who needed the information for the litigation and could be used only for the purpose of the litigation. SOS sought a writ of mandate to quash the subpoenas and a protective order prohibiting the County from discovering the donors to its litigation fund (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 245) .

The court of appeal granted the writ, although not as requested. As a matter of first impression, the court concluded that when a party opposing a section 1021.5 attorney fee award has produced evidence suggesting that a public interest organization is litigating an action primarily for the benefit of nonlitigants, the court should, in order to resolve the issue, allow the opposing party to conduct limited discovery. What kinds of discovery will be permissible is to be decided on a case-by-case basis. The court cautioned, however, that before a trial court orders such discovery it must first determine whether the discovery ordered impermissibly infringes on the important associational privacy rights of third parties (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 250) . Here, the court concluded that the right of privacy and a derivative right of confidentiality, as described in Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 , discussed above, were generally applicable to public interest organizations, such as those involved in this case (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 252) . However, the court explained that compelling state interests may warrant disclosure. When it can be shown that private associational activities are directly relevant to plaintiff's claim and are essential to the fair resolution of the issues at hand, compelled disclosure must be narrowly drawn to provide maximum protection of the constitutional interests at stake (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 252-253) . Limited discovery, beginning with an in camera review, was appropriate in this case. SOS would be required to provide information to the trial court about the amounts donated to its litigation fund. Eventually, the names and addresses of the donors would have to be disclosed to the County if it appeared that a donor making a substantial contribution to the fund had an interest in real property located in or around the area at issue (84 Cal. App. 4th 234, 255) .

In Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 282 Cal. Rptr. 1 , a city sued defendant private club under the Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ. Code § 51) for an injunction against membership policies and practices that allegedly discriminated based on sex and race. As part of its investigation, the city asked defendant for a list of the names and business addresses of the 41 applicants who were rejected for membership between 1980 and 1989. Defendant resisted, asserting the privacy rights of those persons. The trial court ordered defendant to turn over the requested names and addresses under protection of an order preventing the city from divulging that information. Defendant petitioned for relief from that order.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new order establishing procedures for notification to the rejected applicants prior to release of their names. The court acknowledged that an individual's membership in an association is entitled to protection from disclosure by the right of associational privacy. Compelled disclosure of an individual's private associational activitiesposes a serious threat to the free exercise of that right. A member's right of privacy is not restricted to associations that are political, but extends to associations that are created for other purposes (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 361) . Further, associational privacy rights extend to applications for membership. The right to apply for membership without governmental scrutiny is a natural adjunct to the right of associational privacy (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 361) . Public access to lists of applicants could as easily threaten associational freedom as could access to an organization's membership list. However, the court explained that an intrusion into associational privacy may be permitted after a demonstration of a very important, compelling state interest that necessitates the disclosure. It cautioned that even when such justification is present, the scope of the compelled disclosure must be narrowly circumscribed to avoid undue interference with private associational rights (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 362) .

[b] Compelling State Interest in Disclosure

The facts and procedural background of Save Open Space Santa Monica Mountains v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 are discussed in [a], above. In deciding a motion for attorneys' fees and expenses under Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.5, the court of appeal held that real parties' interest in discovering the donors to petitioner nonprofit organization's litigation fund implicated the right of privacy and a derivative right of confidentiality (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 252) . However, the court explained, these associational privacy interests must be balanced against the interests compelling disclosure (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 253) . Real parties in this case had a legitimate interest in ensuring that attorney fees are not awarded when the statutory requirements set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.5 were not met. A trial court ruling on a motion for attorney fees under § 1021.5 cannot realistically assess the interests of a fee applicant if the applicant (and thus the nature and extent of the applicant's interest) can be hidden behind a public interest organization. And because attorney fee awards paid by the County are necessarily paid from taxpayer funds, county taxpayers have an interest in limiting unwarranted attorney fee awards so that funds needed for public services are not diverted to pay unauthorized attorney fees. The state (and thus all taxpayers) has an interest in ensuring that charitable contributions are not shams-and that the donated funds truly become the property of the charity that receives them. Equally as important as these interests is the state's compelling interest, as reflected in its broad discovery statutes, in facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 254) . The court concluded that real parties demonstrated a need for the discovery that would justify an invasion of the privy interests involved, since the evidence sought by real parties was crucial to the court's thorough analysis of petitioner's attorney fee request (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 254) .

Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 arose out of a wrongful death action by a father and three minor children to recover for the death of their wife and mother. Interrogatories propounded by one of the defendants inquired into the plaintiff father's sexual relations with other women during the period of his marriage to the decedent. The interrogatories requested names, addresses, and phone numbers of the women. Plaintiff objected on relevancy grounds and on the grounds that any answers that he might have provided could possibly violate the right of privacy of certain individuals. Defendant then made a motion to compel answers, which was granted with the limitation that the answers be limited to contacts with other women within two years of decedent's death. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to command the trial court to overturn its order compelling answers, based on his rights to associational privacy and to privacy in sexual relations.

The court of appeal granted the writ in part, holding that while the inquiry was indeed relevant to the question of pecuniary loss of comfort, society, and protection under former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 et seq.] (the wrongful death statute), nevertheless, discovery would still be improper if it constituted an unreasonable invasion of the constitutional right to privacy (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 287-289) . The court went on to hold that the rights of sexual and associational privacy, both of which were applicable) are not absolute, but must be balanced against the compelling state interest in ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 289, 290) . The court held that because the state interest in a fair trial would be furthered by exploration of the possibility of impairment of the relation between plaintiff and his deceased wife, there must be some discovery regarding plaintiff's extramarital activities, but that it should be limited so as to assure the privacy of the other women involved (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 291, 292) . In this regard, the court instructed the trial court to fashion a discovery order eliciting only whether and when plaintiff had had extramarital contacts, but not inquiring into the names, telephone numbers, and addresses of the people with whom he had such contact, if any (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 292) .

[c] Disclosure of Relevant Matters Essential to Fair Resolution of Lawsuit

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are discussed in [a], above. There, the Supreme Court held that if a party's associational activities are directly related to that party's claim, and if the disclosure of the party's associational activities is essential to the fair resolution of the litigation, then a trial court may properly require such disclosure. However, even under such circumstances, general First Amendment principlesmandate that the compelled disclosure be narrowly drawn to assure maximum protection of the constitutional rights at stake (20 Cal. 3d 844, 859) .

The facts and procedural background of Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 282 Cal. Rptr. 1 are discussed in [a], above. In Olympic Club, the court of appeal permitted discovery of the names and addresses of the rejected applicants under carefully circumscribed conditions that would protect those applicants who wished to remain anonymous. The court said that the city had a palpable need to discover whether the rejected applicants were barred because of race, and that unless members of defendant's selection committee admitted that they rejected applicants on racial grounds, contact with the rejected applicants was necessary to determine whether race was a factor (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 363) . It said that although in ordinary civil litigation, a plaintiff's need for information will not easily override a third party's privacy rights, in an action to uphold fundamental societal principles such as those embodied in the Unruh Act, the need for discovery takes on added importance (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 363-364) .

[a] Requiring Discovery Despite Right to Privacy

In Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 360, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513, 150 P.3d 198 , plaintiff, real party in interest, filed a class action lawsuit against an electronics manufacturer, claiming that the DVD player he (and potential class members) purchased from manufacturer was defective. Plaintiff asserted that he needed identifying information (names, addresses) from complaining customers to facilitate communication with potential class members. The trial court entered an order adopting the plaintiff's proposed language for a letter to those customers, including the provision that a failure to respond would be treated as consent to release of the information.

The court of appeal vacated the trial court's order and ordered defendant not to disclose the identifying information to plaintiff without the customers' affirmative consent. The appellate court concluded that the state constitution's privacy provision (Cal. Const., art. I, § 1) protected disclosure of an individual's name and other identifying information, that adequate steps to assure actual notice is a prerequisite to an assumed waiver of a customer's right of privacy, and that the measures ordered were inadequate.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to the court of appeal for further proceedings. The Court held that as a matter of policy, requiring an affirmative waiver from persons whose personal identifying information is sought by others could hamper litigation designed to remedy social problems, including consumer rights litigation, and reduce the effectiveness of class actions in securing consumer relief [40 Cal. 4th 360, 374] . It seemed unlikely that these customers, who had already voluntarily disclosed their identifying information to the manufacturer in hopes of gaining some relief for their allegedly defective DVD players, would have a reasonable expectation that their information would be kept private and withheld from a class action plaintiff unless they expressly consented to disclosure [40 Cal. 4th 360, 372] . Further, the proposed disclosure was not particularly sensitive, because it did not involve disclosing personal medical history or current medical condition or details about personal finances or other financial information [40 Cal. 4th 360, 372] . Thus, the trial court reasonably concluded that on balance, the plaintiff's interest in obtaining the customers' contact information outweighed the possibility that some customers might fail to receive their notice and thus lose the opportunity to object to disclosure [40 Cal. 4th 360, 374-375] .

In John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 , real party in interest, the wife of petitioner husband, sued the husband for infecting her with HIV. She sought discovery of the identities of the husband's previous sexual partners and about his knowledge that he was infected. The superior court, on recommendations from a referee, granted the wife's discovery requests. The husband filed a petition for writ of mandate, to reverse the discovery orders.

The court of appeal held that discovery of the identities of the husband's previous sexual partners was precluded by the constitutional right of sexual privacy, Cal. Const. Art. I, § 1. The inference supporting the demand, that the husband might have revealed his HIV status to previous partners, was speculative and overly broad. Under these circumstances, the court declined to subordinate the husband's right to privacy to the wife's alleged need for the information. However, the court of appeal found no error in compelling discovery of the husband's medical records and HIV tests. The court reasoned that the husband waived his right to prevent disclosure by relying on what he claimed were negative test results in support of a summary judgment motion.

A divided Supreme Court affirmed in part, and reversed in part. After balancing the wife's right to discover relevant evidence against the husband's right to privacy, the Court concluded that the wife was entitled to discovery concerning husband's sexual history and HIV status. The wife had "amply" established good cause for disclosure of the husband's medical records concerning HIV and AIDS. Discovery might reasonably lead to evidence that husband was aware of his HIV status. Discovery would also serve "the historically important state interest of facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings," as well as the state's compelling interest in preventing the spread of AIDS (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) . While the wife's interrogatories and requests for admission sought information that fell within the zone of the husband's right to sexual privacy, he had a diminished privacy interest in his HIV status, since he hadadmitted his status in court filings and informally. Moreover, the husband also alleged in the complaint that the wife infected him. By thus putting his own medical condition at issue, the husband had a "substantially lowered" expectation of privacy (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) . The Court agreed that the court of appeal had appropriately limited the wife's discovery of the identities of the husband's previous sexual partners and admissions concerning his "lifestyle" (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199-1201) . However, the Court further narrowed the scope of discovery in light of husband's negative HIV test on August 17, 2000, which restricted the period of possible infection to the six months preceding the negative test. Accordingly, the Court reversed the court of appeal's order compelling responses to plaintiff's discovery requests to the extent they sought information about the husband's sexual history outside the six-month time frame. On remand, however, the wife could overcome this temporal limitation by offering some basis to question the accuracy or reliability of the husband's negative HIV test (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1201) .

In Crab Addison, Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 958, 974, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 400 , an employee who had filed a class action alleging wage and overtime violations served special interrogatories requesting identification of the class members' names, addresses, and telephone numbers. The employer objected on the ground that the interrogatories sought confidential and private information. The employer argued that its employees had a heightened expectation of privacy with respect to their contact information based on forms that they had signed regarding release of their contact information. The trial court granted discovery, and the employer sought mandamus relief.

The court of appeal affirmed. Relying on Puerto v. Superior Court (discussed below), the court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010 provides a broad right to discover any relevant information that is not privileged, including the identity and location of witnesses. The right of privacy in Cal. Const. art. I § 1 protects an individual's reasonable expectation of privacy against a "serious invasion" (169 Cal. App. 4th 958, 966) . Therefore, discovery of employee contact information should not be restricted unless privacy concerns or potential discovery abuses outweighs the right to discovery. In this employment law case, fundamental policy considerations tipped the balance of opposing interests toward permitting access to the information necessary to pursue the litigation (169 Cal. App. 4th 958, 968). Public policy concerns also weighed against enforcing a release form that had the effect of waiving an employee's right to notice of a pending class action lawsuit concerning the employer's alleged violations of overtime and wage statutes. Moreover, the employees who had indicated that they did not want their contact information disclosed were unaware of the litigation (169 Cal. App. 4th 958, 974) .

In Lee v. Dynamex, Inc. (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 241 , plaintiff, a driver for a parcel delivery company, alleged that the company improperly reclassified its drivers from employees to independent contractors. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion to compel the employer to identify and provide contact information for potential class members, and denied plaintiff's motion for class certification. Plaintiff appealed. The appellate court found reversible error in denying plaintiff's motion to compel disclosure (166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1338) . First, the identity of potential class members is generally discoverable, so that the lead plaintiff may learn the names of other persons who might assist in prosecuting the case (166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1337) . Second, discovery of potential class members' contact information should not be restricted unless the trial court can identify privacy concerns or potential discovery abuses that outweigh plaintiff's right to discovery. In this case, there was no showing of undue privacy invasion, and the employer's alleged violation of employment law would go unaddressed absent notice to potential class members (166 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1338) .

In Puerto v. Superior Court (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 701 , a suit alleging wage and hour violations, the trial court granted the employees' motion to compel the employer to provide the addresses and telephone numbers of individuals identified as potential witnesses in a response to the employees' interrogatory, but required the employees to obtain the non-party potential witnesses' affirmative consent to disclosure by an opt-in procedure. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, directing the trial court to vacate the challenged order and to enter a new order directing the disclosure of contact information for the individuals identified in response to the interrogatory. The court applied the framework from Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 360, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513, 150 P.3d 198 , discussed above, to conclude that the opt-in notice exceeded the protections necessary to safeguard the witnesses' legitimate privacy interests in their contact information (158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1259) . First, any employees who were similarly situated to plaintiffs could reasonably be supposed to want their information disclosed to counsel, to determine if there were similar claims the witnesses could assert (158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1253) . Second, there was "simply... no evidence" that disclosure of the contact information for the already identified witnesses violated their right to privacy. "Indeed, it is only under unusual circumstances that the courts restrict discovery of nonparty witnesses' residential contact information" (158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1254) . Finally, the balancing of opposing interests favored permitting access to relevant information necessary to pursue the litigation. The court noted that "[g]enerally, witnesses are not permitted to decline to participate in civil discovery, even when the information sought from them is personal or private" (158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1256-1257) . Further, the opt-in letter procedure endorsed by the trial court effectively gave more protection to nonparty witnesses' contact information than the Discovery Act gives to much more sensitive consumer or employment records (158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1259) . The court explained why the opt-out letter outcome of Pioneer was not appropriate here: In Pioneer, the plaintiffs were looking for people who would want to participate in the lawsuit. Because pursuing litigation is a voluntary activity, an opt-out letter that offered recipients the option of participating or declining to participate was appropriate. In contrast, a percipient witness's willingness to participate in civil discovery has never been considered relevant--"witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify whether they want to or not" (158 Cal. App. 4th 1242, 1251-1252) .

In Belaire-West Landscape, Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 554, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 197 , a putative class action lawsuit alleging wage and hour violations, the trial court granted the employees' motion to compel the employer to provide the names and contact information of all current and former employees, and adopted a proposed notice to those potential class members. The proposed notice required the potential class members to object in writing in order to prevent information about them from being disclosed to the employees. The employer filed a petition for writ of mandate, arguing that the opt-out notice should be rejected in favor of an opt-in privacy notice procedure.

The court of appeal denied relief. The court applied the analysis in Pioneer Electronics (USA), Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 360, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 513, 150 P.3d 198 , discussed above, to conclude that the opt-out notice was sufficient to protect potential class members' privacy rights [149 Cal. App. 4th 554, 561] . Although they had a reasonable expectation that their employer would disclose their identifying information only as required to governmental agencies and benefits providers, they also reasonably might be expected to want their information disclosed to a class action plaintiff who could recover for them unpaid wages that they were owed [149 Cal. App. 4th 554, 561] . The disclosure of the contact information was not overly personal or intrusive [149 Cal. App. 4th 554, 561-562] . Moreover, the current and former employees were potential percipient witnesses to the employer's employment and wage practices, and as such their identities and locations were discoverable under Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010. Finally, the case involved the fundamental public policy of ensuring the prompt payment of wages due to employees [149 Cal. App. 4th 554, 562] .

In Mansell v. Otto (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 276 , a crime victim sued the alleged perpetrator and his criminal defense counsel for invasion of her constitutional right of privacy based on the unauthorized reading of her mental health records by the defendants and other members of the defense team. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action. The trial court found the plaintiff's claim for invasion of her constitutional right of privacy was barred as a matter of law by the litigation privilege. The court of appeal, however, found the litigation privilege inapplicable to the noncommunicative acts alleged in the complaint. Nevertheless, the court found plaintiff could not state a claim for liability against defendants because they obtained her medical and psychiatric records through the court's normal processes, including a court order (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 276) . The appellate court distinguished this case from cases finding liability for unauthorized dissemination of a patient's privileged records because the defense here received the confidential records through the prescribed judicial process (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 277) . Unlike the cases in which courts have found liability for unauthorized dissemination, in this case the victim's confidential records were not delivered to counsel, but were delivered to the court under seal. The court then released the victim's records to the prosecutor, who in turn, provided copies to the defense. The trial court was underno legal obligation at the pretrial stage of the proceedings to review plaintiff's records in camera to determine which, if any, records could be released to counsel (108 Cal. App. 4th 265, 277) .

In Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 864 , petitioner parents and their child, conceived by an anonymous donor's sperm, sought to compel the donor's deposition and production of documents related to his identity and medical history, and the health and medical history of his family, in order to discover information relevant to their action for professional negligence, fraud, and breach of contract against a sperm bank which allegedly transmitted a serious kidney disease to the child. The trial court denied petitioners' motion and granted motions to quash the deposition subpoena. Petitioners sought a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order and to issue a different order compelling the donor's deposition and the production of records (80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1056-1060) . The court of appeal granted the writ and ordered the donor to appear at his deposition and answer all questions and produce all documents relevant to the litigation (80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1073) . The court rejected the argument by real parties that petitioners were precluded from deposing the donor because the constitutional right of privacy protected his identity. Although the court agreed that the donor had a privacy interest in his medical history and his identity, that right did not preclude his deposition and the production of documents regarding his medical history (80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1067-1068) . Here, the donor's reasonable expectation of privacy with regard to his medical history was lessened because the sperm bank routinely told its sperm donors that non-identifying medical history and related information could be disclosed to the purchasers of the sperm. Likewise, the donor's reasonable expectation of privacy in his identity was substantially diminished by his own conduct, which involved a substantial commercial transaction as a result of his hundreds of semen deposits (80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1069-1070) . However because petitioners sought all of the donor's records regarding his medical history of kidney disease and records pertaining to his family's affliction with kidney disease or cancer, such disclosure would involve an invasion of privacy unless reasonably curtailed. Accordingly, the court directed the trial court to fashion an appropriate order that would allow for the donor's testimony and production of documents while maintaining the confidentiality of his identity and that of his family (80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 1070-1073) .

The facts and procedural background of Rubio v. Superior Court (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 249 Cal. Rptr. 419 are set out in § 81.291[3][a]. In ruling on whether a videotape of the alleged victim's father and stepmother engaging in sexual acts was discoverable by the defendant accused of molesting the young girl, the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to reverse its order quashing the subpoena duces tecum and ordered that it view the videotape in camera to determine whether defendant's right to due process outweighed the couple's constitutional privacy interests and their marital privilege. The court explained that the federal Constitution provides a right to privacy in the marital relationship. There is an analogous state right protecting marital relations. California accords privacy the constitutional status of an inalienable right. The court found without question that a videotape of sexual relations between a married couple invokes the constitutional right of privacy. It also explained that defendant had constitutional rights of confrontation and cross examination. Thus, the court explained that it must balance two competing federal constitutional rights, both of which are also inalienable state constitutional rights (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1349) . It concluded there was no way to balance those competing rights without viewing the tape itself (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1350) . The court reminded the trial court of its power to issue whatever protective orders are necessary, should any further disclosure be compelled, to preserve defendant's right to a fair trial. It observed that such procedures might be sufficient to preserve defendant's due process rights without invading the couple's privacy rights any more than necessary. But any such remedy should be considered only after the trial court has made a preliminary determination, after in camera review, that some disclosure is required (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1350-351) .

[b] Compelling State Interest in Disclosure

The facts and procedural background of John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 , are discussed in.§ 81.240[4][a]. In the underlying case, a wife sued her husband for infecting her with HIV. With specified temporal limitations, the Supreme Court allowed discovery of husband's medical history, his sexual activity, and his HIV status, because discovery would serve "the historically important state interest of facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings," as well as the state's compelling interest in preventing the spread of AIDS (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) .

The facts and procedural background of Johnson v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1050, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 864 are discussed in [a], above. The court acknowledged that a person's medical history is a legally recognized privacy interest and that the donor had a privacy interest in his identity as a donor and in his medical history. However, the constitutional right to privacy is not absolute and when discovery orders are at issue, there must be a compelling state interest in disclosure. Balancing the donor's privacy interests with compelling state interests, including the state's interests in truth in court proceedings, compliance with subpoenas and discovery orders, and insuring that the injured receive full redress for injuries based on actionable conduct, the court concluded that the state's interests, as well as those of petitioners in obtaining information directly relevant to the issues in the litigation, outweighed the donor's privacy interests. Accordingly, the court ordered the donor to appear at his deposition and answer all questions and produce all documents relevant to the litigation. However, the court directed the trial court to fashion an appropriate order that would allow for the donor's testimony and production of documents while maintaining the confidentiality of

In Lantz v. Superior Court (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1839, 1857, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 , a sexual harassment case in which the defendant countysubpoenaed plaintiff's medical records relating to her breast surgery, the trial court denied plaintiff's motion for a protective order because the records were relevant. On appeal, plaintiff contended that her medical records were protected from discovery by the right to privacy guaranteed by the California Constitution. The court of appeal held that the lower court used the wrong standard in determining whether the records were discoverable. The trial court's finding of relevance was an insufficient inquiry; the trial court must balance the plaintiff's privacy interest against the county's compelling need for discovery (28 Cal. App. 4th 1839, 1853-1854, 1857) .

In Gregori v. Bank of America (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 291, 254 Cal. Rptr. 853 , during the course of litigation surrounding a lender-liability action brought by plaintiff growers' cooperative against defendant bank, plaintiff's attorney initiated and maintained an undisclosed social relationship with the defense counsel's secretary, who was familiar with all aspects of the litigation. Defendant moved to disqualify the attorney and, in the alternative, to compel further discovery regarding the nature of that relationship and the matters that may have been discussed. The trial court denied both motions. The court of appeal reversed the order refusing to compel discovery. The attorney had refused to answer numerous questions at his deposition, citing privacy grounds. The court of appeal explained that the right of privacy is not absolute, and under some circumstances disclosure may permissibly be compelled. Abridgement of the constitutional right has sometimes been justified in order to serve the historically important state interest of facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings. The court found this interest particularly strong here, where discovery is being resisted by an attorney whose inappropriate conduct created the issue the discovery is designed to resolve. The right to privacy of such an attorney is not the sort that courts have been at pains to protect in the context of civil discovery proceedings (207 Cal. App. 3d 291, 312-313) .

Rider v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 278, 244 Cal. Rptr. 770 was a defamation action brought by a husband and wife against the husband's former employer, who publicly charged the husband with raping the employer's minor daughter. Plaintiffs served a subpoena duces tecum on the police department requesting production of records containing the minor's statements to an officer investigating the alleged rape. The police refused to produce the records, claiming the conditional privilege of Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), which allows governmental agencies to refuse to disclose information acquired in confidence if disclosure would be "against the public interest." The trial court denied plaintiffs' motion to produce the records. On petition for a writ of mandate, the court of appeal granted a writ ordering the trial court to compel production of the investigation reports on condition the information not be used or disclosed for anypurpose outside the confines of the litigation. The court held that, under the circumstances, plaintiff husband's interest in preserving his reputation against a charge of committing a heinous felony outweighed the minor's interest in sexual privacy, particularly when the reports would have been available to plaintiff if he had been prosecuted for rape. Disclosure would not involve intrusion into the minor's sexual experiences beyond what she had already revealed to others, nor be more than what would have been revealed if the People had elected to pursue prosecution (199 Cal. App. 3d 278, 282-287) .

[c] Disclosure of Relevant Matters Essential to Fair Resolution of Lawsuit

The facts and procedural background of Save Open Space Santa Monica Mountains v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 725 are discussed in § 81.240[3][a]. In this writ proceeding, petitioner sought to require respondent superior court to quash certain subpoenas and issue a protective order prohibiting real parties in interest from discovering the donors to petitioner's litigation fund. The court of appeals acknowledged that the privacy interests of the donors and petitioner were strong. However, the court found equally strong the real parties' interests in determining whether a public interest organization had litigated an action for and at the direction of a specific group of individual, and whether those individuals had a private interest in the outcome of litigation so as to preclude the award of attorneys' fees under Code Civ. Proc. § 1201.5. The court found particularly strong the state's interest in promoting truth in litigation. Thus, the court concluded that real parties had demonstrated a need for the discovery that would justify an invasion of the privacy interests involved, since the evidence sought by real parties was crucial to the court's thorough analysis of petitioner's motion for attorneys' fees (84 Cal. App. 4th 235, 254) .

G. Right to Privacy

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.241

§ 81.241 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Refuting Claim of Privacy--Narrowly Limited Disclosure Will Not Invade Right of Privacy

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11) as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy (see § 81.240).]

DISCOVERY IS PERMISSIBLE WHEN NARROWED BY A PROPERLY FASHIONED PROTECTIVE ORDER, EVEN WHEN IT WOULD HAVE CONSTITUTED AN INVASION OF PRIVACY IN THE ABSENCE OF SUCH AN ORDER.

A. Disclosure Permissible When Limited. Disclosure of information that would otherwise violate the right of privacy is constitutionally permissible when it is limited by a properly fashioned protective order (Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 364-365, 282 Cal. Rptr. 1 ; Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 273, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77).

[Optional] B. Disclosure Not Revealing Identity of Nonparties. Discovery that would otherwise violate the right of privacy of nonparties will be constitutionally permissible if it is limited to the fact of the occurrences in which the nonparties were involved, without disclosing the identity of the nonparties (Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 292, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 ; see Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 300, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349).

[Optional] C. Disclosure Not Revealing Identity of Authors of Confidential Communications. Discovery that would otherwise violate the right of privacy of authors of confidential communications concerning the party requesting discovery will be constitutionally permissible if appropriate deletions are made of matters that identify the authors of the communications (Board of Trustees v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 531-533, 174 Cal. Rptr. 160).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery if the party or other person has resisted discovery on the ground that disclosure would violate the right to privacy. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion compelling discovery. The form may also be combined with a general form compelling discovery, when the disclosure is resisted on grounds of right to privacy [see § 81.240].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.100 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right to privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disclosure Permissible When Limited

The facts and procedural background of Olympic Club v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 282 Cal. Rptr. 1 are discussed in § 81.240[3][a]. In Olympic Club, the court of appeal found that the scope of the compelled disclosure must be narrowly circumscribed to avoid undue interference with private associational rights (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 362) . Accordingly, the court concluded that the names of the rejected applicants should be disclosed, but only after defendant sent them a letter informing them that the city was seeking to contact them and advising them to petition the court for protective orders if they sought anonymity. The names of those who obtain protective orders would be removed from the list furnished by defendant to the city (229 Cal. App. 3d 358, 364) .

Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77 was an action for malicious prosecution, intentional interference with business relations, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs propounded interrogatories concerning the financial status of the five defendants, who were members of a law firm. The relevance of the questions lay in the fact that the causes of action that were alleged permitted the assessment of punitive damages. Defendants filed objections to the interrogatories and moved for a protective order. The trial court overruled the objections, but issued a protective order requiring that answers be given, but that they should be sealed, delivered to the clerk of the court, and remain unopened except by the judge. The trial judge later dissolved the protective order, however, based on his belief that one of the defendants had not complied with the order.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, requiring the trial court to issue a new protective order (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 271-272) . The court held that so long as disclosure is correctly limited by a narrowly fashioned protective order, any invasion into the defendants' privacy would be within constitutional limits (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 273) . See also Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 550-551, 160 Cal. Rptr. 561 for the court's suggestions on how to protect defendants in punitive damages cases from invasion of privacy, while still requiring disclosure within narrow limitations.

Note that both Richards and Cobb were decided prior to the enactment of Civ.Code § 3295, which prohibits pretrial discovery of a defendant's financial condition or of profits gained by the defendant by means of the wrongful course of conduct, unless plaintiff shows that he or she has a substantial probability of prevailing on the punitive damages claim.

Under this statute, there can no longer be automatic discovery of the financial assets of a defendant in a punitive damages case. Discovery can only occur after plaintiff has made his or her motion, and has successfully shown the substantial probability of prevailing on the punitive damages issue. However, Richards remains good law, both in the general situation in which discovery would cause an invasion of privacy, and in the narrow context of discovery of defendant's assets in punitive damages situations, since once discovery is permitted, the party from whom discovery is sought should still be entitled to confine that discovery within the narrowest possible limits, so as to ensure that the intrusion into privacy is constitutionally permissible.

[b] Disclosure Not Revealing Identity of Nonparties

The facts and procedural background of Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 are discussed in § 81.240[3][b]. In Morales, the right to privacy of the other women who might have been involved with plaintiff was protected by an order that discovery disclose only whether and when plaintiff had affairs, without disclosing the identity of the persons, if any, with whom he had such contacts (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 291, 292) .

Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 was an action for personal injuries resulting from a motor vehicle accident. Plaintiff propounded interrogatories and a request for production of documents to defendant State of California regarding prior accidents at the same location. Defendant declined to provide discovery, arguing that the information sought was generated from required accident reports that are confidential under Veh. Code §§ 20012 and 20014, and was therefore privileged. The trial court declined to order discovery. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court determined that the material sought was discoverable. The Court stated that in according confidential treatment to required accident reports, the Legislature intended to protect the privacy of reporting parties by keeping confidential their identities and information that might disclose their identities (36 Cal. 3d 291, 299) . The Court held that this purpose does not require extending the confidentiality accorded to mandatory accident reports to data generated from those reports, as long as no identifying data or data compromising the privacy interests of the reporting parties is disclosed. Such a construction of the reach of the confidentiality of information created by Veh. Code §§ 20012 and 20014 is consistent with the need for a careful balancing of the rights of parties seeking discovery and of the persons for whose benefit confidentiality is created. The Court noted that in construing a statute that accords confidentiality to information sought by discovery, liberality in allowing discovery is the rule unless statutory or public-policy considerations clearly prohibit it (36 Cal. 3d 291, 300) . In reaching its holding, the Court disapproved earlier case law, such as People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Superior Court (Clark) (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 352, 131 Cal. Rptr. 476 to the extent that it had limited discovery of information derived from accident reports to the fact of prior accidents (36 Cal. 3d 291, 300-301) .

[c] Disclosure Not Revealing Identity of Authors of Confidential Communications

Board of Trustees v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 174 Cal. Rptr. 160 involved an action for defamation by a university faculty member against the university and other faculty members. Plaintiff sought to discover, along with other documents, his personnel, tenure, and promotion files with the university. The trial court ordered defendants to produce the documents except for letters of reference to the university written when plaintiff was being considered for employment. Defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ, ordering the trial court to enter a new order requiring discovery of plaintiff's personnel file, subject to appropriate safeguarding of the rights of privacy of those who had furnished information concerning plaintiff's qualifications for employment, promotion, additional compensation, or termination (119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 533) . The court stated that the dispute involved the conflicting privacy rights of plaintiff to have access to private information about himself and of those whose confidential communications were in plaintiff's personnel, tenure, and promotion files (119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 528-529) . The court held that the trial court should have extended privacy protection not only to those furnishing confidential information when plaintiff was being considered for employment, but also to those who furnished confidential information after his employment concerning promotion, additional compensation, or termination (119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 531) . However, the court held that there was no compelling state purpose in maintaining the confidentiality of the contents of the letters of reference when appropriate deletions of identification of the sources of the letters could be made, thereby imposing partial limitations rather than outright denial of discovery (119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 531-533) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Disclosure Permissible When Limited

The facts and procedural background of John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 , are discussed in § 81.240[4][a]. In the underlying case, a wife sued her husband for infecting her with HIV. With specified temporal limitations, the Supreme Court allowed discovery concerning husband's medical history, his sexual activity, and his HIV status. Although the interrogatories and requests for admission the Court held discoverable sought information that fell within the husband's right to sexual privacy, that right is not absolute. Narrowly drawn disclosure is permitted if it serves the compelling interest of the facilitation of the truth-finding process in court proceedings and if it may be reasonably inferred that the inquiry will likely be productive (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199-1200) .

In TBG Ins. Serv. Corp. v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 155 , petitioner employer filed for a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order refusing to compel production of an employer-provided home computer used by the real party in interest, an employee, who filed suit for wrongful termination. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the trial court erred in denying production. The court found that the evidence was relevant and that, given the employee's consent to his employer's monitoring of both his home and his office computers, the employee had no reasonable expectation of privacy when he used the home computer for personal matters. Even assuming that employee has some lingering privacy interest in the information he stored on the home computer, the court concluded that petitioner's demand for production did not constitute a serious invasion of that interest. The court noted that appropriate protective orders could define the scope of petitioner's inspection and copying of information on the computer to that which was directly relevant to the litigation, and could prohibit the unnecessary copying and dissemination of employee's financial and other information that had no bearing on the case (96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 454-455) .

For additional facts and the procedural background of TBG Ins. Serv. Corp., see § 85.11[4][a].

Bodenheimer v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 885, 167 Cal. Rptr. 26 arose out of an action for conspiracy to defame brought against four organizations, petitioner defendant, and other individual persons. Plaintiffs in the original action deposed petitioner, asking him whether he was a member of one of the defendant organizations, whether he knew any members of that organization, and whether he participated in any meetings of that organization. The trial court directed petitioner to answer, subject to the protective order that any information elicited pursuant to the discovery order be used solely in connection with the preparation and trial of the lawsuit and not be disclosed to any other person for any other purpose.

The court of appeal denied petitioner's application for a writ commanding the trial court to refrain from compelling the discovery. Citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 864-865, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 (discussed in § 81.240[3][a]), the court stated that disclosure of confidential associational affiliations and activities must be justified by a compelling state interest and must be precisely tailored to avoid undue infringement of constitutional rights (108 Cal. App. 3d 885, 888) . The Supreme Court in Britt had pointed out that the attempted discovery of plaintiffs' memberships and political activities that were connected withan airport in an action for diminution of land values and for personal injuries arising out of the airport's operation had but a tenuous connection to the pleaded defenses proffered, and concluded that the order compelling production of all this material was overbroad (108 Cal. App. 3d 885, 888-889) . In Bodenheimer, however, the court stated that the relationship between petitioner and the defendant organization was very pertinent to the lawsuit. All defendants were alleged participants in the conspiracy to defame, and petitioner was alleged to be an agent of the defendant organization, working under its direction and supervision and with knowledge of its purpose. The alleged defamatory material, part of which was signed by petitioner, when taken as a whole, suggested that petitioner and the organization were on the same side of a narrow local issue. Thus, to ask if petitioner was a member of that group was a narrow question having an important connection with the lawsuit (108 Cal. App. 3d 885, 889) . Although the pertinence of the other questions was less clear, the court stated that because the fact of membership was discoverable, the impact on privacy of the other questions was too minimal to warrant extraordinary relief. The question of whether petitioner knew any members or attended meetings could be prefatory to a permissible question: whether he knew any members of the organization who were involved in the writing of the alleged defamatory materials. However, if the questions were prefatory to an effort to discover the membership lists or protected discussions in meetings, a problem of impingement on associational privacy would emerge, but such questions had not yet been asked (108 Cal. App. 3d 885, 889-890) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.250

§ 81.250 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery Infringing Right of Privacy Is Improper--General Form

DISCOVERY IS IMPROPER WHEN THE INQUIRY CONSTITUTES AN INVASION OF THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY.

A. Right of Privacy Valid Basis for Refusal to Submit to Discovery. The right of privacy may be invoked by litigant as a ground forrefusal to answer questions that constitute an unreasonable intrusion on that right (Kahn v. Superior Court (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 752, 769-770, 233 Cal. Rptr. 662 ; Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 903, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210).

B. Right of Privacy Precludes Disclosure Even When Inquiry Is Relevant and Not Privileged. Even when the inquiry is relevant and not privileged, such overriding constitutional considerations as the right to privacy under Article I, Section 1, of the California Constitution may require limitations on discovery (Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 656, 658, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977).

C. Right of Privacy Self-Executing. The provision for the right of privacy under Article I, Section 1, of the California Constitution is self-executing in creating an enforceable right (Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 76, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19).

D. Burden on Party Seeking Discovery. When invasion of a right to privacy may occur, the relevance and materiality are not sufficient to establish discoverability. The party seeking discovery must demonstrate a compelling state interest to justify disclosure (Rancho Publications v. Superior Court (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1550, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274

; Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 239, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 ; Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 905, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210).

E. Broad Discovery May Be Impermissible Even When Compelling State Interest. Even when the compelling state interest in ascertainment of truth in connection with litigation exists, disclosure must be narrowly and precisely circumscribed so as not to intrude on the constitutional right of privacy (Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 904, 905, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210).

[Optional] F. Broad Discovery May Be Impermissible Even If Waiver of Right to Privacy. Even a waiver of the right to associational privacy by virtue of the bringing of a lawsuit must be narrowly construed so that plaintiffs will not be unduly deterred from instituting lawsuits (Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 859, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766).

[Optional] G. Any Required Disclosure Should Be Narrowly Drawn. Even when disclosure is necessary to the fair resolution of a lawsuit, the compelled disclosure should be narrowly drawn so as to insure maximum protection of the constitutional interests atstake (Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 859, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 ; El Dorado Savings & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 342, 235 Cal. Rptr. 303).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery may be submitted by a party or other person who has resisted discovery on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right to privacy. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion compelling discovery. When the person whose privacy is being invaded is not a party to the litigation, this form should be used in conjunction with § 81.253.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel should specify the reasons why discovery would cause an invasion of privacy. Counsel may also wish to point out various protective orders that may be used to keep the disclosure within constitutional limits in case discovery cannot be eliminated altogether.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right of privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Right of Privacy Valid Basis for Refusal to Submit to Discovery

In Kahn v. Superior Court (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 752, 233 Cal. Rptr. 662 , plaintiff, a visiting professor who was considered for permanent appointment with the history department of a university, brought an action against a member of that department for defamation and tortious interference with an advantageous business relationship after he was denied tenure. When plaintiff noticed the deposition of defendant, who waspresent at the meeting at which plaintiff's tenure was considered, defendant moved for a protective order to prevent the taking of his deposition and demurred to the complaint. The demurrer was sustained, and plaintiff was allowed to amend his complaint. The trial court stayed the deposition of defendant until the amended complaint could be considered, but allowed it to be taken for certain purposes. The parties then stipulated that defendant's deposition would not be taken until he had applied for an extraordinary writ.

The court of appeal issued an order staying the taking of the deposition, and later issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order allowing defendant to be deposed (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 758, 771) . Defendant argued that he had a qualified privilege, based on the California constitutional right to privacy and on the First Amendment right to academic freedom, not to disclose his vote or comments made in the course of plaintiff's tenure consideration (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 758) . The court agreed, finding that because the discussion and the vote at the faculty meeting were intended to be confidential, the comments made and the votes cast were covered by the communicator's constitutional right of privacy (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 768-769) . The court cited Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, which provides a right of privacy that may be abridged only when there is a compelling and opposing state interest. It noted that facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings is such a compelling state interest, and went on to discuss Board of Trustees v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 174 Cal. Rptr. 160 , a case in which the compelling state interest in discovery had clashed with the fundamental right of privacy in the university setting (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 765) . The court highlighted the competing interests at play in the case, observing that if defendant's expressions at the faculty meeting and the motives underlying those expressions may not be inquired into, plaintiff's ability to seek redress will be impaired. It characterized the competing privacy interest, the peer review process, as central to the maintenance of academic standards, and said that confidentiality is indispensable to the university's promotion of academic excellence and freedom (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 768) . The court acknowledged that peer evaluations may provide an opportunity for abuse, but that the fostering of academic excellence finds support in the constitutional right to privacy (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 769-770) . The court concluded that plaintiff had the right to seek redress in the courts; in this case his interest was only in monetary damages, and he had no right to be employed by defendant university. The complaint made no claim of discrimination. Thus, to permit plaintiff to depose defendant would allow the most serious breach of the confidentiality of the tenure selection process, and would seriously undermine the public interest in promoting academic excellence (188 Cal. App. 3rd 752, 770) .

In Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210 , the district attorney filed a paternity suit against defendant. During the course of this litigation, defendant propounded interrogatories to the petitioner (complainant in the paternity suit), two of which inquired into petitioner's sex life.

Petitioner objected to these interrogatories as irrelevant, embarrassing, and an invasion of her privacy, although in reply to a different interrogatory, she had answered that between three months before and three months after the probable date of conception, she had not had sexual intercourse with anyone other than defendant. The trial court disallowed petitioner's objections, but limited the scope of the interrogatories to a period of one year prior to the likely date of conception, and one year after that date.

The court of appeal agreed with the trial court that petitioner's relevancy objection was meritless (88 Cal. App. 3rd 899, 902) , but went on to issue a writ of mandate vacating the trial court's order on the ground that the interrogatories were constitutionally overbroad (88 Cal. App. 3rd 899, 905) . In discussing petitioner's contention that requiring her to answer questions about the most intimate aspects of her life would invade the right of privacy given to her by Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, the court of appeal stated that the right of privacy is properly invoked by a litigant as the basis for the refusal to answer questions that constitute an unreasonable intrusion on that right (88 Cal. App. 3rd 899, 903) .

[b] Right of Privacy Precludes Disclosure Even When Inquiry Is Relevant and Not Privileged Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 arose out of an action by the bank to recover the balance allegedly due on a promissory note. The defense claimed by defendant debtors was that the bank had misrepresented the amount of the additional financing that defendants could get. To prove these allegations, defendants noticed depositions of the bank's chairman, asking that he bring with him records of certain transactions between the bank and some of its customers.

The bank sought an order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)) to protect the confidentiality of its customers. Holding that the information sought was both relevant and not privileged, the trial court ordered disclosure, but limited the scope of discovery to certain time periods and certain types of financial transactions. The bank then sought a writ of mandate, which the Supreme Court issued.

The Court affirmed the trial court on the issues of relevance and privilege. Nevertheless, it went on to hold that even when information is both relevantand nonprivileged, there may exist overriding constitutional considerations that require limitations on discovery. Cal. Const., art. I, § 1 has elevated privacy to an inalienable constitutional right that may justify such limitations (15 Cal. 3rd 652, 656) .

[c] Right of Privacy Self-Executing

Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19 arose out of a misdemeanor prosecution in municipal court in which defendant obtained a discovery order for production of names and addresses of all persons who had been arrested on similar charges (battery and resisting arrest) within the preceding two years. Defendant hoped that others would testify about the police officers' violent conduct, which would be an important factor in his defense. The Commissioner of the California Highway Patrol petitioned the superior court for a writ of mandate ordering the municipal court to vacate the discovery order. The superior court issued the writ, holding that the discovery would be of minimal and speculative value, and would violate the rights of privacy of the arrestees. Defendant then appealed to the court of appeal, which affirmed the superior court ruling.

In discussing the standing of the Highway Patrol Commissioner to assert the right of privacy of the arrestees, the court noted that the constitutional provision allowing for the right of privacy is self-executing in creating an enforceable right (100 Cal. App. 3rd 69, 76) . Because the arrestees could not come forward to protect that right, it was proper for the Commissioner to seek protection in their behalf (100 Cal. App. 3rd 69, 77) .

See § 81.253 for a form dealing with protection of right to privacy of third parties.

[d] Burden on Party Seeking Discovery

Rancho Publications v. Superior Court (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274 arose out of a defamation action filed by a hospital against a physician and an anonymous organization whose members were fictitiously named as defendants. During the pendency of the action, petitioner newspaper ran a series of "advertorials" (advertisements with style and content similar to an editorial), paid for by another anonymous organization, which were critical of hospital's affiliation with a for-profit HMO (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1541-1542) . The hospital served a subpoena on the newspaper demanding production of all documents pertaining to these paid advertisements, including documents relating to communications to or from a member, supporter or representative of the anonymous organization. The newspaper sought to quash the subpoena and obtain a protective order based on the California constitutional qualified immunity of associational privacy articulated in Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 (discussed in § 81.240[3][a]) and the "absolute immunity" of the media shield law. The trial court denied the motion, and the newspaper petitioned for writ review of the order holding it in contempt and directing it to produce the documents (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1542) .

The court of appeal issued a writ to deny discovery. Declining to apply California media shield law "because it does not necessarily extend to paid advertisements" (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1542) , the court ruled instead that the information was not discoverable because the qualified constitutional privacy privilege protects the speech and privacy rights of individuals who wish to promulgate their nondefamatory information and ideas in a public forum while keeping their identities secret (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1547) .

The court explained that there is a nonstatutory qualified privilege grounded in federal and state free speech and privacy provisions which limits what courts can compel through civil discovery (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1547-1548 , citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 , discussed in § 81.240[3][a]). This qualified privilege is decided on a case-by-case basis, with courts carefully balancing the public need to disclose with confidentiality interests to withhold, giving great weight to fundamental privacy rights. The party seeking discovery must make a higher showing of relevance and materiality than otherwise would be required for less sensitive material (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1549) .

Applying the balancing test, the court found the hospital failed to defeat the qualified privilege by showing a compelling need for disclosure of the names of anonymous authors of the advertisements because those advertisements involved core political speech. Moreover, since one admitted purpose of the hospital in seeking the names was to add potential new defamation claims against additional defendants, the impact of the proposed discovery on protected constitutional rights was severe (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1550-1551) . The court deemed this "a classic First Amendment example" of why the speakers may have chose anonymity to avoid being swept into litigation purely out of spite for speaking out on hotly contested issues (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1550-1551) . The court reasoned that the hospital's mere conjecture, based on thematic and stylistic similarities, that the authors of the advertisements were the same as those who authored the defamatory statements alleged in the hospital's complaint was not enough to overcome the right to privacy, or warrant shutting off political discourse on an important public issue, since the advertisements were not directly relevant to the defamation action (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1551) .

In Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 , two doctors who had been dropped as plaintiffs from a class action lawsuit sued their former attorneys for malpractice, claiming they had been improperly dropped. The class actionsuit had been resolved by means of a confidential settlement. In the malpractice action, the trial court had granted the doctors' motion to compel discovery pertaining to the confidential settlement on the grounds it was relevant to proof of the doctors' damages. The court of appeals issued a writ of mandate to deny discovery, ruling that the information was not discoverable because it was protected by the right to privacy and the plaintiffs had not shown a compelling state interest that would justify disclosure of the information (51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 242) .

Discovery of the confidential settlement would have revealed detailed financial information about the practices of the individual doctors involved in the agreement. The court of appeals indicated that these matters should receive at least as much privacy protection as bank account or tax information (51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 241) .

The court emphasized that relevance and materiality are not sufficient to establish discoverability of information protected by the right to privacy. The party seeking discovery must demonstrate a compelling state interest to justify disclosure. The plaintiffs' showing of a possibility of discovering relevant information did not satisfy this burden (51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 239) .

The facts and procedural background of Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210 are discussed in [a], above. The Fults court held that the party seeking discovery must make an adequate foundation for inquiry prior to discovery. Since the challenged interrogatories concerning petitioner's sex life were not accompanied by any affirmative showing that the utility of the discovery manifestly outweighed the petitioner's right to privacy, the court struck them down, holding that they were constitutionally overbroad (88 Cal. App. 3rd 899, 905) .

[e] Broad Discovery May Be Impermissible Even When Compelling State Interest

The facts and procedural background of Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210 are discussed in [a], above. In Fults, the court held that the state interest in ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings is a compelling one, but that petitioner may have already served that interest by answering questions related to sexual activity within three months on either side of the likely date of conception (88 Cal. App. 3rd 899, 904) . In any event, even when, as here, a compelling state interest is shown, disclosure must still be narrowly and precisely circumscribed so as to assure maximum protection of constitutional interests (88 Cal. App. 3rd 899, 904, 905) .

[f] Broad Discovery May Be Impermissible Even If Waiver of Right to Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are discussed in § 81.240[3][a]. The Supreme Court in Britt discussed defendant's claim that plaintiffs had waived their right to privacy by bringing the lawsuit. In this regard, the Court held that, while the bringing of an action may indeed bring about a partial waiver of a litigant's right to associational privacy, the scope of such a waiver must be narrowly construed so that plaintiffs will not be unduly deterred from instituting lawsuits ( ), .

[g] Any Required Disclosure Should Be Narrowly Drawn

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are set out in § 81.240[3][a]. In Britt, the Supreme Court noted that even when disclosure must be made because of the direct relevance of associational activities to the fair resolution of the lawsuit, First Amendment principles dictate that the disclosure be narrowly drawn so as to assure maximum protection of the constitutional interests at stake (20 Cal. 3d 844, 859).

In El Dorado Savings & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 342, 235 Cal. Rptr. 303 , plaintiffs, female former employees of defendant, brought a sex and age discrimination action against defendant. During discovery plaintiffs sought production of the personnel records of the only male employee employed in the same capacity as they were, claiming he received compensation and benefits not afforded them. Defendant refused to produce the file, claiming it would violate the male employee's right to privacy. Plaintiffs filed a motion to compel production, and the court ordered defendant to produce the entire personnel file. Defendant and the male employee petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ (190 Cal. App. 3rd 342, 344) . Plaintiffs acknowledged the personnel records were protected by the right of privacy, but argued that disclosure was necessary to facilitate prosecution of the discrimination action. The court observed that even when confidential information in personnel files is directly relevant to litigation, discovery will not be permitted until a balancing of the compelling need for discovery against the fundamental right of privacy determines that the disclosure is appropriate. Even when the balance tips in favor of disclosure, constitutional concerns require a strict circumspection of the scope of the disclosure. The court found that the record was inadequate to support disclosure of the entire personnel file. It said that consideration must first be given to whether less intrusive means, such as depositions, would yield the information sought. Then, even if there were no means less intrusive to the privacy interests to satisfy plaintiff's legitimate need for relevant information, it was not established that the entire file was relevant to plaintiff's action. The trial court should first examine the file in camera and order disclosure of only that information that might be relevant to the suit (190 Cal. App. 3d 342, 346) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Broad Discovery May Be Impermissible Even When Compelling State Interest

In Garstang v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 526, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 84 , plaintiff sued her former employer, Caltech, and three coworkers for slander and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff attempted to depose two of the coworker-defendants, and one nonparty coworker, about their meetings with Caltech's ombudsman, during which they discussed rumors that plaintiff traded sexual favors for job advancement. Plaintiff claimed that during one meeting an admission was made that she had been treated unfairly. The deponents refused to answer questions relating to these meetings and opposed plaintiff's motion to compel further response, in part on the ground that the California constitutional right to privacy protected the communications. The superior court denied plaintiff's motion to compel response.

The court of appeal denied plaintiff's petition for writ of mandate. The court said that the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal claims (in this case, the discovery of what was said during the meetings with the ombudsman) is a compelling public need under which the constitutional right of privacy may be abridged. Nevertheless, the court held that, in this case, this need was outweighed by the right of privacy of those participating in the meetings because the communications related to the private affairs of Caltech employees and were maintained in confidence by the institution (39 Cal. App. 4th 526, 532) . The court added that the qualified privacy privilege applied because the ombudsman acted within her authority in discussing the facts of the dispute and attempting to resolve a workplace dispute (39 Cal. App. 4th 526, 536-537) .

In Scharf v. Regents of University of California (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 286 Cal. Rptr. 227 , plaintiffs, faculty members of the University of California who were denied tenure or promotion, sought complete access to information considered by the University in making its employment determinations. Plaintiffs contended that the University's refusal to reveal all the requested information violated the prior version of Educ. Code § 92612 and their constitutional right to privacy. Educ. Code § 92612, applicable only to University employees, grants specific rights of access to certain personnel information. The trial court granted the University's motion for a judgment on the pleadings, finding that the University's procedures were not violative of the right of privacy. In affirming the trial court's order, the court of appeal rejected plaintiffs' contention that their right of privacy demanded access to the records. Plaintiffs asserted that one purpose of the right of privacy is to prevent the use of inaccurate government and business records regarding individuals unaware of or unable to correct erroneous information that might adversely affect them.While not disagreeing with that purpose, the court reiterated that the right to privacy is not absolute, but may yield to the furtherance of a strong competing need for disclosure. It noted a direct conflict with the privacy rights of those persons who contributed evaluative information, and observed that other cases balancing these interests, as well as those of the employing university, have all held against disclosure. Moreover, unlike previous cases, which involved the records of a single employee and would have had little impact on broad policy, if plaintiffs succeeded, disclosure would pertain to all academic employees seeking tenure or promotion and not merely to a single candidate, which the court found would be a thorough undermining of the confidentiality of records (234 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 1408-1409) . The court also found that Educ. Code § 92612 is unconstitutional as an impermissible conflict with Cal. Const., art. IX, § 9 (autonomy of University of California) (234 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 1400-1405) . The court cautioned that its holding was limited to the facial constitutional validity of university's peer review process, and was not a ruling on the operation of that process in any particular instance (234 Cal. App. 3d 1393, 1409-1411) .

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are set out in § 81.240[3][a]. In Britt, the Supreme Court discussed defendant's contention that disclosure should be compelled because of the state's substantial interest in facilitating the ascertainment of truth in private litigation (20 Cal. 3d 844, 856) . The Court stated, however, that the identification of this interest is just the beginning of a court's analysis. In this regard, the permissible limits of discovery are circumscribed by state and federal constitutional considerations (20 Cal. 3d 844, 857) that dictate that orders compelling disclosure be narrowly drawn (20 Cal. 3d 844, 859) .

[b] Any Required Disclosure Should Be Narrowly Drawn

The facts and procedural background of John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 are discussed in detail in § 81.240[4][a]. In the underlying case, a wife sued her husband for infecting her with HIV. Petitioner husband challenged the discovery order denying his motion to quash the subpoenas of his medical records, including the results of any HIV tests he took. He claimed the compelled disclosure of this information violated his constitutionally protected right of privacy. The court of appeal limited the wife's discovery of the identities of the husband's previous sexual partners and admissions concerning his "lifestyle," as speculative and overbroad. However, the court found no error in compelling discovery of the husband's medical records and HIV tests. The court reasoned that the husband waived his right to prevent disclosure by relying on what he claimed were negative test results in support of a summary judgment motion.

A divided Supreme Court affirmed in part, and reversed in part. The Court agreed that the court of appeal had appropriately limited the wife's discovery of the identities of the husband's previous sexual partners and admissions concerning his "lifestyle" (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199-1201) . Further, after balancing the wife's right to discover relevant evidence against the husband's right to privacy, the Court also agreed that the wife was entitled to discovery concerning husband's medical history, his sexual activity, and his HIV status. However, the Court narrowed the scope of discovery in light of husband's negative HIV test on August 17, 2000, which restricted the period of possible infection to the six months preceding the negative test. Accordingly, the Court reversed the court of appeal's order compelling responses to plaintiff's discovery requests to the extent they sought information about the husband's sexual history outside the six-month time frame. On remand, however, the wife could overcome this temporal limitation by offering some basis to question the accuracy or reliability of the husband's negative HIV test (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199-1202) .

The facts and procedural background of Allison v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 654, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 915 are set out in § 81.124[4][a]. In Allison, the court of appeal considered petitioner's contention that information relating to her general past medical history was protected by her privacy rights and by the physician-patient privilege. Citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 , discussed in § 81.240[3][a] and in [3][g], above, the court declined to determine with precision which portion of the requested discovery information was privileged and which was not because the discovery authorized by the challenged order was clearly overbroad. The court held that on remand the defendant would bear responsibility for framing narrower, more precisely tailored discovery which does not improperly impinge on privileged information (72 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661) . The court explained that defendant's own medical expert's analysis of plaintiff's workers' compensation claim, based on injury to her wrist, narrowed the scopeof discovery to something far less broad than a general inquiry into plaintiff's hospitalization history prior to 1965 (72 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661) .

In City of Ontario v. Quon (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 2619, 177 L. Ed. 2d. 216 , the United States Supreme Court reversed a Ninth Circuit decision that had upheld plaintiff police officers' claims that a search of their text messages violated their Fourth Amendment and California constitutional privacy rights. They claimed a reasonable expectation of privacy in the content of those messages, in light of their employer's informal policy of not auditing messages on payment of usage overages (177 L. Ed. 2d. 216, 227) . The Supreme Court sidestepped the parties' disagreement over the officers' privacy expectation, finding it preferable to dispose of the case on narrower grounds (177 L. Ed. 2d. 216, 227-228). Prudence counseled caution, the Court stated, before the facts in this case were used to establish "far-reaching premises that define the existence, and extent, of privacy expectations" of employees using employer-provided communication devices (177 L. Ed. 2d. 216, 227). The Court observed that rapid changes in the dynamics of communication and information transmission are evident not just in the technology itself but in what society accepts as proper behavior. At present, it is uncertain how workplace norms, and the law's treatment of them, will evolve (177 L. Ed. 2d. 216, 227) . For further discussion of City of Ontario v. Quon, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery, § 85A.11.

PART II. FORMS
G. Right to Privacy

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.251

§ 81.251 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery Infringing Right of Privacy Is Improper--Activities and Communications Covered by Right to Privacy

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy (see, e.g., § 81.250).]

THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY EXTENDS TO ONE'S _____ [SEXUAL RELATIONSHIPS or FINANCIAL AFFAIRS or ASSOCIATIONAL ACTIVITIES or MATTERS THAT FALL WITHIN THE PHYSICIAN-PATIENT PRIVILEGE or CONFIDENTIAL CUSTOMER LISTS].

[EITHER]

A. Sexual Relationships Within Zone of Privacy. Sexual relationships are within a well-established zone of privacy in which questions need not be answered in the absence of a compelling state interest (Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 903, 904, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210).

[AND/OR]

B. Financial Affairs Within Zone of Privacy. The right of privacy secured by Article I, Section 1, of the California Constitution extends to one's confidential financial affairs (Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 656, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 ; Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 241, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 ; see Ameri-Medical Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1287-1288, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366).

[AND/OR]

C. Associational Activity Within Zone of Privacy. Associational activity is constitutionally protected both insofar as it relates to the exercise of the right to associate, and as it relates to freedom fromdisclosure. The right to associational privacy exists even when the associations involved are not unpopular ones (Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 852-854, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766).

[AND/OR]

D. Matters Protected by Physician-Patient Privilege Within Zone of Privacy. The physician-patient privilege under Sections 990 through 1007 of the Evidence Code creates a zone of privacy whose purposes are to protect the patient from humiliation, and to encourage the patient's full disclosure to the physician. Such right to privacy encompasses the state of the patient's mind, as well as the state of his or her viscera (Board of Medical Quality Assurance v. Gherardini (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 669, 678, 679, 156 Cal. Rptr. 55).

[AND/OR]

E. Confidential Customer List Within Zone of Privacy. A business's confidential customer list constitutes sensitive information entitled to qualified protection (Hofmann Corp. v. Superior Court (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 357, 362-363, 218 Cal. Rptr. 355).

[AND/OR]

F. Protection of Bank Customers. In proceedings in which a bank is a party, the bank must take reasonable steps to notify its nonparty customers of the pendency and nature of the proceedings prior to disclosing confidential customer information. The court may then make orders for the protection of the customers, such as the deletion of their names, the sealing of the information, and the holding of in-camera hearings (Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 658, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977).

[AND/OR]

G. Matters Protected by Psychotherapist-Patient Privilege Within Zone of Privacy. The zone of privacy created by Article I, Section 1, of the California Constitution extends to communications between a psychotherapist and a patient. The psychotherapist-patient privilege set forth in Evidence Code Sections 1010-1027 provides a scheme by which that right can be protected (Cutter v. Brownbridge (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 842, 845, 228 Cal. Rptr. 545 ; see Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1013, 1019-1020, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331).

[AND/OR]

[Optional] H. Disclosure of HIV Positive Status Within Zone of Privacy. The zone of privacy created by Article I, Section 1, of the California Constitution extends to the disclosure of HIV positive status to a healthcare worker for the purpose of alerting the worker to the need for taking safety precautions in handling medical implements contaminated with infected blood (Urbaniak v. Newton (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1135-1136, 277 Cal. Rptr. 354).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery, by a party or other person who has resisted discovery on the ground that disclosure would violate the right to privacy. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form in opposition to a motion compelling discovery, as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of the right to privacy.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right of privacy.

[d] Scope of Authority

The types of matters covered by the right to privacy that are set forth in this form are not intended to be exclusive or exhaustive. It is clear that the zone of privacy also includes one's arrest record [see Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 77-79, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19 (discussed in § 81.250[3][c])], one's participation as a witness or principal in the preparation of an accident report [see State of California ex rel. Department of Transportation v. Superior Court (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 25, 29, 162 Cal. Rptr. 78] , one's communications concerning the candidate for tenure made during the university tenure review process [see Kahn v. Superior Court (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 752, 769-770, 233 Cal. Rptr. 662 (discussed in § 81.250[3][a])], and one's personnel file [see El Dorado Savings & Loan Assn. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 342, 345-346, 235 Cal. Rptr. 303 (discussed in § 81.250[4][b])]. The points included in the foregoing form were chosen because they represent definitive statements by the courts about some of the areas included in the zone of privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sexual Relationships Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Fults v. Superior Court (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 152 Cal. Rptr. 210 are discussed in § 81.250[3][a]. In Fults, the court of appeal discussed various aspects of the right to privacy, such as associational or financial privacy, which have been recognized by California courts (88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 903, 904) . The court went on to hold that one's sexual relations are also within the zone of privacy recognized by the United States Supreme Court in Eisenstadt v. Baird (1972) 405 U.S. 438, 92 S. Ct. 1029, 31 L. Ed. 2d 349 and Griswold v. Connecticut (1965) 381 U.S. 479, 85 S. Ct. 1678, 14 L. Ed. 2d 510 (88 Cal. App. 3d 899, 904) .

[b] Financial Affairs Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 are discussed in § 81.250[3][d]. In refusing to permit discovery of a confidential settlement agreement, the court stated that such agreements generate the same privacy concerns as bank accounts and tax information, and are entitled to equivalent protection from discovery (51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 241) .

In Ameri-Medical Corp. v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 366 , a worker's compensation action, employers challenged the bills submitted by the corporate medical clinic that examined the applicants. The court of appeal held that the trial court erred in granting broad discovery into the financial relationship between the clinic and the physicians who examined the applicants. While the clinic had no reasonable expectation of privacy in the financial data used to prepare its bills, it did retain a privacy interest in financial and employment information unrelated to its billing practices. While the constitutional right to privacy may only be asserted by individuals, corporations nevertheless possess limited privacy rights as well (42 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1287-1288) .

The facts and procedural background of Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 are set out in § 81.250[3][b]. In Valley Bank, the Supreme Court discussedthe adoption of the constitutional amendment in 1974 which elevated the right of privacy to an inalienable right under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1, and held that this right extends to one's confidential financial affairs, as well as to the details of one's personal life (15 Cal. 3d 652, 656) .

[c] Associational Activity Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are discussed in § 81.240[3][a]. The Supreme Court in Britt discussed the fact that the rights to associational freedom and privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, §§ 1-3 and under the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, require both freedom of association and freedom of nondisclosure concerning that association (20 Cal. 3d 844, 852, 853) . The foregoing freedoms are to be protected even when the associations involved are neither unpopular nor controversial (20 Cal. 3d 844, 853-854) .

[d] Matters Protected by Physician-Patient Privilege Within Zone of Privacy

In Board of Medical Quality Assurance v. Gherardini (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 669, 156 Cal. Rptr. 55 , the custodian of the hospital's records resisted discovery on the grounds that the records were protected both by the physician-patient privilege and by the patients' right to privacy. The court of appeal recognized that a person's medical profile is an area of privacy that is vastly more intimate and personal than many of the areas already judicially recognized and protected (93 Cal. App. 3d 669, 678) . Indeed, the physician-patient privilege itself creates a zone of privacy that encompasses the state of the patient's viscera, as well as his or her state of mind. The dual purpose of this zone of privacy is protection of the patient from humiliation, and encouragement of full disclosure by the patient to the physician (93 Cal. App. 3d 669, 678-679) .

[e] Confidential Customer List Within Zone of Privacy

In Hofmann Corp. v. Superior Court (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 357, 218 Cal. Rptr. 355 , a products liability case, plaintiffs obtained an order compelling defendant to disclose its entire confidential customer list and permitting plaintiffs to mail notice of the action to all customers together with questions relating to each addressee's experience with the product in issue. Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate this order.

The court of appeal issued the writ (172 Cal. App. 3d 357, 365) . The court first noted that a limited protection is given to "sensitive information which people may wish to keep confidential," citing Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 (discussed in [b], above), and other cases that discuss the qualified protection afforded by the constitutional right of privacy (172 Cal. App. 3d 357, 362) . The court held that defendant's customer list was clearly within this sensitive category as evidenced by the protection given to confidential customer lists in the context of trade secret law (172 Cal. App. 3d 357, 363) . The court went on to hold that the trial court abused its discretion by permitting disclosure of the customer list because defendant had already disclosed other accidents or actions involving the product, and any benefit from further access to the customer list was outweighed by the potential harm to defendant (172 Cal. App. 3d 357, 363-365) .

Counsel should note that the opinion in Hofmann does not expressly mention the right of privacy as the basis for protection, but merely includes confidential customer lists within the category of "sensitive information" that cited cases held were protected as being within the zone of privacy. In addition, the court in Hofmann in effect holds that confidential customer lists are within this category due to their status as trade secrets, yet the court neither mentions nor considers the applicability of the trade secret privilege under Evid. Code § 1060.

[f] Protection of Bank Customers

The facts and procedural background of Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 are set out in § 81.250[3][b]. In Valley Bank, the Supreme Court upheld an order requiring limited disclosure of certain bank records of customer transactions insofar as the issues of relevance and privilege were concerned, finding that there is no bank-customer privilege among the list of exclusive privileges in the Evidence Code (15 Cal. 3d 652, 656) . Nevertheless, there is a right to privacy in the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. I, § 1) that allows a bank customer to have a reasonable expectation that matters that he or she reveals to the bank will be used by the bank only for internal banking purposes, absent compulsion by legal process (15 Cal. 3d 652, 656, 657) . Thus, any protective order that is made pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b) [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420] should represent a balance between the right of civil litigants to discover relevant information, and the right of bank customers to maintain reasonable privacy regarding their finances (15 Cal. 3d 652, 657) . In light of these considerations, the Court issued a writ of mandate to the trial court to refashion a protective order that would more thoroughly balance the competing interests (15 Cal. 3d 652, 658, 659) . The Court held, however, that before any confidential customer information may be disclosed during civil discovery proceedings, the bank must take reasonable steps to notify its customers of the pendency and nature of the proceedings in order to allow the customers the opportunity to protect their own interests (15 Cal. 3d 652, 658) . If, after being notified, a customer chooses to apply for aprotective order, the trial court may issue various orders such as 1) the deletion of the names, (2) the scaling of the information to be opened only on the further order of the court, and (3) in camera hearings (15 Cal. 3d 652, 658) .

[g] Matters Protected by Psychotherapist-Patient Privilege Within Zone of Privacy

In Cutter v. Brownbridge (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 228 Cal. Rptr. 545 , plaintiff's psychotherapist voluntarily executed a declaration describing his diagnosis of plaintiff, including details of plaintiff's personal life. The declaration was filed by plaintiff's former wife in an action seeking to suspend his visitation rights with his children. Plaintiff brought an action against the psychotherapist for damages from intentional infliction of emotional distress, alleging violation of his right of privacy. Defendant demurred, claiming the judicial proceedings immunity of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [see now Civ. Code § 47(b)]. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the complaint. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, determining that the constitutional right of privacy outweighs the policies underlying the judicial immunity when private material is published without resort to a prior judicial determination (183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 848) . The court reviewed the psychotherapist-patient relationship, and noted that it was recognized in In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 415, 85 Cal. Rptr. 829, 467 P.2d 557 , before Cal. Const., art. I, § 1 was amended to include privacy. The court observed that a psychiatric patient must expose his or her entire self, including dreams, fantasies, sins, and shame to the psychotherapist. That confidence would be impossible if the patient knew that the psychiatrist would reveal those communications to others. The court noted that an individual's right to privacy encompasses the state of his or her mind and complaints of physical ills and their emotional overtones, and that if there is a quintessential zone of human privacy, it is the mind (183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 842) . However, the court said that the right of privacy is not absolute. The psychotherapist-patient privilege set forth in Evid. Code §§ 1010-1027 provides a comprehensive scheme by which the need for ascertaining the truth in judicial proceedings can be balanced with a patient's right to privacy (183 Cal. App. 3d 836, 845) .

The facts and procedural background of Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331 are discussed in § 81.254[3][a]. In Davis, plaintiff sought to protect from discovery her records at a medical center specializing in the treatment of substance abuse. When the trial court permitted those records to be subpoenaed, plaintiff challenged that order as an improper violation of her psychotherapist-patient privilege and her right to privacy. The court of appeal said that the psychotherapist-patient privilege and the right of privacy are both interrelated and separate.Communications with a psychotherapist are within the zone of privacy. The court focused its analysis on the right of privacy, explaining that the privilege is merely one aspect of the broader privacy right, and that the privilege and any exceptions to it were subject to constitutional standards. Thus, even if the records fell outside the protection of the privilege, discovery might be improper as a contravention of plaintiff's right of privacy (183 Cal. App. 3d 836) . Without announcing the parameters of the requisite showing that a foundation for the right of privacy exists, the court concluded that plaintiff had make a sufficient showing (183 Cal. App. 3d 836) . The court noted that although a party may not assert the psychotherapist-patient privilege without first establishing the existence of the psychotherapist-patient relationship, such specificity is not required with the right of privacy (183 Cal. App. 3d 836) . A person's medical profile is an area of privacy that cannot be encroached except for good cause. The right of privacy also extends to the details of one's personal life, including records of treatment for substance abuse (183 Cal. App. 3d 836) . Further, the court observed that defendant tacitly recognized the confidential nature of the records sought, in that she subpoenaed the records under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.3, which sets forth the procedure for obtaining records maintained by persons who traditionally manage confidential information (183 Cal. App. 3d 836) .

[h] Disclosure of HIV Positive Status Within Zone of Privacy

In Urbaniak v. Newton (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 277 Cal. Rptr. 354 , after undergoing a neurological examination arranged by his former employer's insurer in response to his workers' compensation action, plaintiff informed the neurologist's nurse that he had tested positive for the HIV. He indicated that he did not want this information placed in the medical report, and that he was disclosing the information only to ensure that proper precautions be taken to sterilize the medical equipment. That information was included in the neurologist's report, which was then disseminated to attorneys for both sides, as well as the insurance company, plaintiff's chiropractor, and the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board. Plaintiff then sued the neurologist, opposing counsel, and the insurance company seeking damages for dissemination of the report on a variety of legal theories, including invasion of the right of privacy guaranteed by Cal. Const., art. I, § 1. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment and dismissed the action. Plaintiff's estate appealed.

The court of appeal reversed dismissal of the invasion of privacy action against the neurologist, and otherwise affirmed the judgment. The court said there is no confidential physician-patient relationship in a medical examination of a plaintiff arranged for the benefit of the defense. It observed that plaintiff's counsel advised him to cooperate with the examination onlybecause the defense could have secured an order compelling compliance under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq.). The court explained that in a discovery proceeding, the examining physician owes the claimant no duty of care. While an examining physician might incur liability by disclosing confidential information irrelevant to the purpose of the examination, that liability cannot be predicated on invasion of privacy in the absence of special circumstances indicating that the information was given in a confidential communication between patient and physician (226 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1135) . The court said that plaintiff's asserted right of privacy must be based on the circumstances surrounding his disclosure to the nurse. He revealed his HIV positive status at a time and for a purpose that had no connection with the medical examination for his workers' compensation case. In fact, the examination was over, and his illness had not been discussed. Plaintiff chose to disclose his HIV positive status solely to alert the nurse to the need to take precautions in handling electrodes contaminated with his blood. The court concluded that a right of privacy arises in the disclosure of HIV positive status to a health care worker for the purpose of alerting the worker to the need for taking safety precautions in handling medical implements contaminated with infected blood (226 Cal. App. 3d 1128, 1135-1136) .

[a] Sexual Relationships Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 are discussed in § 81.240[3][b]. The Morales court discussed the fact that discovery into extramarital activities may constitute an invasion of the protected rights of both associational and sexual privacy (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 289, 290) . The court went on to hold that the right of sexual privacy is not limited to the marital relationship (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 290) .

[b] Associational Activity Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Rancho Publications v. Superior Court (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 274 are discussed in § 81.250[3][d]. In Rancho Publications, a hospital was suing a physician and an organization whose members were anonymous for defamation. During the course of this litigation another anonymous organization published paid advertisements or "advertorials" in a local newspaper, criticizing the hospital's actions. The hospital served the newspaper with a deposition subpoena seeking information relating to the advertisements, including the names of their authors. The newspaper sought to quash the subpoena, asserting, among other things, the constitutional qualified immunity of associational privacy articulated in Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 (discussed in § 81.240[3][a]). The court of appeal stated that this qualified privilege protects the speech and privacy rights of individuals who wish to promulgate their information and ideas in a public forum while keeping their identities secret (68 Cal. App. 4th 1538, 1550-1551) .

In United Farm Workers of America v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 391, 216 Cal. Rptr. 469 , a grower brought an action for damages against a farm workers' union, based on alleged unlawful activity during a strike. The grower sought to compel discovery of certain membership and strike activity attendance lists. After the trial court denied the union's motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum compelling the production of these records, the union petitioned for writ of mandate. The court of appeal issued the writ. Citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 , the court stated that the First Amendment right of freedom of association is not absolute, and associational affiliations or activities may be inquired into to further a compelling state interest. Nevertheless, while truth in litigation is a compelling state interest, no inquiry into associational affiliations or activities may be compelled unless disclosure is directly related to the party's claim such that disclosure is essential to a fair resolution of the case. Moreover, when disclosure is compelled, the order must be drawn with narrow specificity so that the right to associate is not unduly curtailed (170 Cal. App. 3d 391, 394) . Applying these principles, the court directed the trial court to grant the motion to quash with respect to a list of those attending a union convention, as this list had no demonstrable relevance to the action. With respect to union membership lists and lists of persons participating in strike activities, the court directed the trial court to grant a protective order limiting disclosure to only those parts of the lists found to be directly relevant to the action after an in camera inspection (170 Cal. App. 3d 391, 394-396) .

In Church of Hakeem, Inc. v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 384, 168 Cal. Rptr. 13 , member-ministers of defendant church brought an action alleging fraud, misrepresentation, and other causes of action on behalf of themselves and other member-ministers. Plaintiffs obtained an order compelling disclosure of the identity and location of other member-ministers. On petition by defendant, the court of appeal issued a writ of prohibition directing nullification of the order as one that violated the nonlitigant member-ministers' rights of associational privacy. The court determined that plaintiffs needed the list to aid in the certification of their class, but that other methods of identifying the member-ministers were available that would protect their anonymity. The court then held that plaintiffs had not demonstrated a compelling state interest necessary to justify impairment of the rights of privacy of the nonlitigant members of the church (110 Cal. App. 3d 384, 388-390) .

[c] Matters Protected by Physician-Patient Privilege Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are discussed in § 81.240[3][a]. In Britt, defendant sought discovery into plaintiffs' lifetime medical histories. The relevance of this discovery request lay in plaintiffs' claim that defendant's activities in connection with its airport had caused them personal injuries and emotional distress. Although plaintiffs were willing to provide defendant with medical information relating to the physical and emotional injuries for which they sought redress, they objected to broad discovery into unrelated areas of physical and mental health. The trial court ordered plaintiffs to make the unlimited disclosure sought by defendant, and plaintiffs then petitioned for a writ of mandate to require the trial court to set aside this order, as well as the order requiring disclosure of plaintiffs' associational activities.

The Supreme Court ordered the trial court to limit the scope of the medical inquiry to those matters that plaintiffs themselves had put in issue by bringing the litigation. Following In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 415, 432, 85 Cal. Rptr. 829, 467 P.2d 557 , the Court held that plaintiffs are not required to sacrifice all privacy in seeking recovery for a specific physical or emotional injury, but are entitled to retain the confidentiality of all unrelated medical or psychotherapeutic treatment that they may have undergone in the past (20 Cal. 3d 844, 864) .

Bearman v. Superior Court (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 463, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 644 arose from an investigation by the Medical Board of California into a claim that a physician indiscriminately recommended the medicinal use of marijuana to one of his patients. The Medical Board issued an administrative subpoena for the patient's medical records. However, the patient refused to waive his right of privacy, and the physician refused to produce the records based on physician-patient confidentiality and that the Medical Board had not shown good cause for invading that confidentiality. The Medical Board obtained an order from the superior court directing the physician to comply with the subpoena.

The court of appeal granted the physician's petition for a writ of mandate and ordered the trial court to vacate its order enforcing the subpoena. The court concluded that the Medical Board failed to demonstrate sufficient facts to support a finding of good cause to invade the patient's right of privacy in his medical records (117 Cal. App. 4th 463, 472) . Moreover, the patient did not waive his right of privacy by showing park rangers a letter from his physician as proof that he was a qualified patient entitled to protection from prosecution for marijuana use (117 Cal. App. 4th 463, 473-474) . This was not a case in which the patient voluntarily initiated an action placing his medical records at issue. To find that a person automatically waives the right of privacy in his or her medical records merely byshowing a peace officer a physician's written recommendation for the medicinal use of marijuana would run counter to the intent of Health & Safety Code § 11362.5, which is to facilitate the medical use of marijuana for the seriously ill (117 Cal. App. 4th 463, 474) .

The facts and procedural background of Allison v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 654, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 915 are set forth in § 81.124[4][a]. In Allison, the court discussed petitioner's contention that information relating to her general past medical history was protected by her privacy rights and by the physician-patient privilege. Citing Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 , discussed above, the court of appeal declined to determine with precision which portion of the requested discovery information was privileged and which was not because the discovery authorized by the challenged order was clearly overbroad. The court held that "on remand the defendant will bear responsibility for framing narrower, more precisely tailored [discovery] which do[es] not improperly impinge on privileged information" (72 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661) . The court explained that defendant's own medical expert's analysis of plaintiff's workers' compensation claim, based on injury to her wrist, narrowed the scope of discovery to something far less broad than a general inquiry into plaintiff's hospitalization history prior to 1965 (72 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661) .

In Heda v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 275 Cal. Rptr. 136 , plaintiff in a medical malpractice action made a motion for trial preference based on defendant's ill health, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 36(d), which requires clear and convincing medical documentation of a party's terminal illness. To support her motion, plaintiff propounded interrogatories asking defendant to state information concerning any life-threatening physical ailments he suffered and their current prognosis. Over defendant's objections, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion to compel answers and ordered disclosure of defendant's medical records. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate vacating the trial court's order. The court found that defendant's right to privacy included his medical records and outweighed plaintiff's interest in obtaining a trial preference (225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 528) . Plaintiff's desire for trial preference failed to overcome defendant's privacy rights, particularly since defendant's presence at trial was not essential, and plaintiff could obtain much of the information she needed by deposition (225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 528-529) . The court also found that defendant had not waived his right to privacy by using his health as a reason to change the location of a deposition, or by disclosing to plaintiff that he had heart problems (225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 529) . Waivers of constitutional rights are not found lightly, and defendant had not waived his right by simply admitting to his ill health (225 Cal. App. 3d 525, 530) .

The facts and procedural background of Binder v. Superior Court (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 893, 242 Cal. Rptr. 231 are discussed in § 81.120[3][b].In Binder, the court of appeal stated that the physician-patient privilege creates a zone of privacy, the purposes of which are to preclude humiliation of the patient that might follow disclosure of his or her ailments, and to encourage the patient's full disclosure to the physician of all information necessary for effective diagnosis and treatment (196 Cal. App. 3d 893, 898) . The court elaborated on the patients' right of privacy, which defendant, as custodian of their records, was asserting. The court explained that although the constitutional right of privacy is not absolute it may be abridged only when there is a compelling and opposing state interest. An inquiry into an individual's private affairs will not be constitutionally justified simply because inadmissible and irrelevant matter sought to be discovered might lead to other relevant evidence. Even when discovery of private information is found directly relevant to the issues of ongoing litigation, it will not be automatically allowed; there must be a careful balancing of the compelling public need for discovery against the fundamental right of privacy. In balancing these interests, if state scrutiny is to be allowed, it must be by the least intrusive manner (196 Cal. App. 3d 893, 900-901) . The court applied this balancing test to the photographs in the medical records sought by plaintiffs. It concluded that plaintiffs had not shown that the photographs were directly relevant to any issue in the case and did not allow discovery (196 Cal. App. 3d 893, 901) .

[d] Protection of Bank Customers

The facts and procedural background of Fortunato v. Superior Court (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 475, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 82 are discussed in § 81.190[4][a]. In that case, the court of appeal held that the submission of individual income tax returns to a bank to obtain a loan does not effect a waiver of the privilege against forced disclosure of tax returns enunciated in Webb v. Standard Oil Co. (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 509, 319 P.2d 621 (discussed in § 81.190[3][a]) because compliance with a bank's requirement of submitting tax returns with a loan application is not an "entirely voluntary relinquishment" (114 Cal. App 4th 475, 482) . Moreover, although petitioner did not raise the issue, the court noted that "the constitutional right of privacy in financial documents in a bank's possession has bearing upon the question of whether the tax-return privilege was waived in this case" (114 Cal. App 4th 475, 481) . The court concluded that a bank customer has reasonable expectation of privacy in the confidential information submitted with a loan application, and that when a waiver of the confidentiality of tax returns is argued, the trial court should conduct an in camera inspection to balance the need for discovery against the interests in privacy (114 Cal. App 4th 475, 481-482) .

[e] Disclosure of HIV Positive Status Within Zone of Privacy

The facts and procedural background of John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 are discussed in § 81.240[4][a]. After balancing the wife's right to discover relevant evidence against the husband's right to privacy, the Supreme Court concluded that the wife was entitled to discovery concerning husband's sexual history and HIV status. The wife had "amply" established good cause for disclosure of the husband's medical records concerning HIV and AIDS. Discovery might reasonably lead to evidence that husband was aware of his HIV status. Discovery would also serve "the historically important state interest of facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings," as well as the state's compelling interest in preventing the spread of AIDS (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) . While the wife's interrogatories and requests for admission sought information that fell within the zone of the husband's right to sexual privacy, he had a diminished privacy interest in his HIV status, since he had admitted his status in court filings and informally. Moreover, the husband also alleged in the complaint that the wife infected him. By thus putting his own medical condition at issue, the husband had a "substantially lowered" expectation of privacy (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.252

§ 81.252 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery Infringing Right of Privacy Is Improper--Right to Privacy Outweighs Potential Usefulness of Information Sought

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy (see, e.g., § 81.250).]

DISCOVERY SHOULD BE ELIMINATED OR LIMITED WHEN DISCLOSURE WOULD INTRUDE ON THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY, AND WHEN THE VALUE OF THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IS HIGHLY SPECULATIVE.

[EITHER]

Value of Information Highly Speculative. When the right to privacy of individuals whose identities would be disclosed in the discovery process outweighs the tenuous usefulness of disclosure to the party seeking discovery, then discovery should be denied (Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 79, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19).

[OR]

Tenuous Relevance of Information Balanced Against Compelling State Interest Standard. The compelling state interest in disclosure is not met merely because the information to be disclosed may be relevant to some defense if the relationship is tenuous (Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 860, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 [dictum]).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery, by a party or other person who has resisted discovery on the ground that disclosure would violate the right to privacy. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form in opposition to amotion compelling discovery, as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel should point out why the information sought is only of tenuous usefulness.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right of privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Value of Information Highly Speculative

The facts and procedural background of Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19 are set out in § 81.250[3][c]. In Craig, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court ruling denying discovery based on the right of privacy of persons who had been arrested on charges similar to those made against defendant. The court of appeal discussed the denial of discovery in the light of defendant's contention that the privacy of arrestees who have been convicted does not need protection because the court records of conviction are public records. In this regard, the court noted that it is unlikely that such records could be located by anyone who did not have some prior knowledge of the arrests (100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 78) , thus affording convicted persons a limited de facto protection against disclosure (100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 79) .

Moreover, the usefulness to defendant of the records of persons convicted is highly speculative, in that it is unlikely that such persons will provide the information that defendant seeks (100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 79) . Finally, regarding the records of the arrestees who were not convicted, the court held that their right of privacy outweighed the tenuous usefulness to defendant that disclosure of their identities might bring (100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 79) .

[b] Tenuous Relevance of Information Balanced Against Compelling State Interest Standard

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are set out in § 81.240[3][a].The Supreme Court in Britt discussed defendant's contention that the state has a compelling interest in discovery because the information on associational activities that defendant sought was related to various possible defenses, including statute of limitations, res judicata, and failure to mitigate damages. The Court explained that the connection between all three possible defenses and plaintiffs' associational activities was highly tenuous at best (20 Cal. 3d 844, 860) . For example, the Court pointed out that disclosure of plaintiffs' history of meetings and discussions might show when they first became annoyed with the airport, but subjective annoyance does not provide a proper basis for the resolution of the statute of limitations issue (20 Cal. 3d 844, 860 n.4). Therefore, the Court noted that defendant had probably failed to show the compelling state interest necessary to justify disclosure (20 Cal. 3d 844, 860) .

The Court went on to note, however, that it need not definitively resolve the question of whether defendant had made the requisite showing because in any case, even if defendant could show that disclosure was more than tenuously related to its defense, the trial court order was clearly overbroad in allowing more discovery than would be necessary to resolve the issues tendered by defendant as a defense (20 Cal. 3d 844, 861) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Tenuous Relevance of Information Balanced Against Compelling State Interest Standard

In Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , an action in which plaintiff alleged that, while a member of a boy scout troop, he was sexually molested by his troop scoutmaster, plaintiff appealed a grant of judgment dismissing his action, challenging, among other things, the court's issuance of a protective order preventing discovery of certain confidential records maintained by the Boy Scouts. The files at issue identified individuals entirely unrelated to this case who had been determined to be "unfit" to serve as scouting volunteers and documented these determinations of ineligibility (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 384-385) . The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's issuance of a protective order. Plaintiff never disputed that the information contained in these confidential records fell "manifestly within the Constitution's protected area of privacy." When requested material is constitutionally protected, it is not enough to show that matters encompassed by the right to privacy are merely relevant to the litigation; there must be a careful balancing of the compelling public need for discovery against the fundamental right of privacy. Plaintiff's sole argument purporting to establish his compelling need for the information was to provide knowledge of the rampant risk of pedophiles entering the Boy Scouts and molesting vulnerable Boy Scouts. However, the Boy Scouts admitted in response to plaintiff's request foradmission that it knew molestation could and did occur between scoutmasters and scouts before plaintiff was molested. Thus, plaintiff failed to show that the requested information was directly relevant to any disputed issue in the case, let alone that there was a compelling need for this information that outweighed the right of privacy of the many individuals who were not parties to this lawsuit (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 391-392) .

In Lantz v. Superior Court (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1839, 1857, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 358 , a sexual harassment case in which the defendant county subpoenaed plaintiff's medical records relating to plaintiff's breast surgery, the trial court denied plaintiff's motion for a protective order because the records were relevant. On appeal, plaintiff contended that her medical records were protected from discovery by the right to privacy guaranteed by the California Constitution. The court of appeal held that the lower court used the wrong standard in determining whether the records were discoverable. The trial court's finding of relevance was an insufficient inquiry; the trial court must balance the plaintiff's privacy interest against the county's compelling need for discovery (28 Cal. App. 4th 1839, 1853-1854, 1857) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.253

§ 81.253 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery Infringing Right of Privacy as Improper--Disclosure Would Infringe Third Persons' Right of Privacy

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy (see, e.g., § 81.250).]

DISCOVERY IS IMPROPER IN THIS CASE BECAUSE IT WOULD CAUSE AN UNREASONABLE INVASION OF THE RIGHT OF PRIVACY OF PERSONS WHO ARE NOT PARTIES TO THE LITIGATION.

A. Burden on Party Seeking Discovery That Might Intrude on Third Parties' Privacy Rights. Before obtaining discovery that would intrude on the constitutionally protected right to privacy of a third party, the party seeking discovery must show a compelling and opposing state interest (Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 239, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791).

B. Narrowly Limited Discovery for Protection of Third Parties. The rights of persons who are not parties to a lawsuit deserve protection by means of disclosure only within narrowly prescribed limits (see Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 291, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 ; see also Harris v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 668, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564 (dicta)).

[Optional] C. Standing of Custodian of Records to Assert Rights of Third Parties. A custodian of records has the right and the duty to resist attempts at unauthorized disclosure of records when the records are compiled without the consent of third parties who are the subject of the records, or with their consent because of some legal requirement. Indeed, the third parties who are the subject of the records are entitled to expect that their rights will be thus asserted (Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 77, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19).

[Optional] D. Third Person Residing With Support-Paying Parent Does Not Waive Right of Privacy of Financial Records. A third person residing with a parent does not waive the right to maintain the privacy of his or her financial records in proceedings to change the amount of child support payments paid by the parent. The monetary contributions made by that person to a support-paying parent's living expenses are relevant in assessing the parent's ability to pay increased support, but that information should be discovered by requesting information concerning living expenses from the parent (Harris v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 664-665, 667-668, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564).

[Optional] E. Right of Third Party in Administrative Proceeding to Object to Disclosure of Personal Records. Before confidential third-party personal records may be disclosed in administrative proceedings, the subpoenaing party must take reasonable steps to notify the third party of the pendency and nature of the proceedings, and must afford the third party a fair opportunity to object to disclosure by seeking a protective order or by instituting other legal proceedings to limit discovery (Sehlmeyer v. Department of General Services (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1080-1081, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery when discovery is resisted on the grounds that disclosure would violate the right to privacy of third parties. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form in opposition to a motion compelling discovery as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right of privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden on Party Seeking Discovery That Might Intrude on Third Parties' Privacy Rights

The facts and procedural background of Hinshaw, Winkler, Draa, Marsh & Still v. Superior Court (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 are discussed in § 81.250[3][d]. The plaintiffs sought discovery concerning the confidential settlement of a class action. The court found that the privacy interests of the class members demanded that plaintiffs demonstrate a compelling state interest before such discovery could be allowed. The plaintiffs' showing of relevance was insufficient, and their motion to compel was denied (51 Cal. App. 4th 233, 239) .

[b] Narrowly Limited Discovery for Protection of Third Parties

The facts and procedural background of Morales v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 160 Cal. Rptr. 194 are set out in § 81.240[3][b]. In discussing the trial court's discovery order permitting disclosure of names and addresses of the other women with whom plaintiff might havehad extramarital relations within two years of his wife's death, the court of appeal held that the privacy of the nonparties also deserves protection, and that the discovery order must be narrowly drawn so as not to unduly curtail the precious freedoms of these nonparties (99 Cal. App. 3d 283, 291) .

The facts and procedural background of Harris v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564 are discussed in [d], below. After finding that the tax returns and wage statements of the former husband's housemate were not discoverable, the court observed that under different facts, some discovery of a third party's financial records may be appropriate in proceedings to change the amount of child support. It cited as an example the situation in which the former spouse, on moving in with a third party, realizes a sudden, significant gain in his or her standard of living. Even then, however, the third party is presumptively entitled to a protective order that permits discovery only to the extent necessary to a fair resolution of the case. To ensure that protection, a trial court must examine the financial documents in chambers and excise any information that is not necessary to a fair resolution of the case (3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 668) .

[c] Standing of Custodian of Records to Assert Rights of Third Parties

The facts and procedural background of Craig v. Municipal Court (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 161 Cal. Rptr. 19 are discussed in § 81.250[3][c]. In Craig, defendant had argued that the Commissioner of the California Highway Patrol had no standing to assert the constitutional right of privacy of the individuals who were the subject of the arrest records that defendant sought. The court of appeal rejected this contention, holding that the right to privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1 is self-executing, and that the statutory scheme restricting access to criminal records imposes a duty by public officials to prevent unauthorized disclosure (100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 76) . Thus, a custodian of records that are compiled without a person's consent, or because of some legal requirement, has the right, and in fact the duty, to resist attempts at disclosure, and the person who is the subject of those records is entitled to expect that his or her rights will be thus asserted (100 Cal. App. 3d 69, 77) .

[d] Third Person Residing With Support-Paying Parent Does Not Waive Right of Privacy of Financial Records

In Harris v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 564 , a former wife seeking to increase the award for child support subpoenaed confidential information in the form of tax returns and wage statements from a woman with whom the former husband resided. The womanmoved to quash the subpoenas on the ground that the requested discovery violated her right of privacy, and the trial court denied the motion. The woman petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant the motion to quash the subpoenas. The court said that the financial records of a third person are not automatically discoverable in proceedings regarding child support. Although a court may consider the monetary contributions made by anyone to the former spouse's living expenses in assessing his or her ability to pay increased support, that court must first balance the need for disclosure against the third person's interest in privacy (3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 663, 665) . Before the trial court should even balance these competing interests, however, the proponent of discovery must make a threshold showing that the privileged information is directly relevant to the claim for increased support (3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 665) . The court found that the former wife had failed to meet this burden. The relevant inquiry was not the source of the money available to the former husband, but the existence of that money. That money becomes relevant only in its impact on reducing the former husband's living expenses, which in turn, affects his ability to pay child support (3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 667) . The court observed that the woman had not waived her right to privacy by choosing to reside with the child-support-paying former husband (3 Cal. App. 4th 661, 668) .

[e] Right of Third Party in Administrative Proceeding to Object to Disclosure of Personal Records

In Sehlmeyer v. Department of General Services (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 840 , the court of appeal held that before confidential third party personal records may be disclosed in administrative proceedings, the subpoenaing party must take reasonable steps to notify the third party of the pendency and nature of the proceedings, and must afford the third party a fair opportunity to object to disclosure by seeking a protective order or by instituting other legal proceedings to limit discovery. The Legislature's failure to incorporate the notice provisions of Code Civ.

Proc. § 1985.3 (subpoena to produce personal records) into former Gov. Code § 11510 (now see Gov. Code § 11450.10 et seq.; subpoenas in administrative actions) does not diminish the constitutional privacy rights that protect confidential information. The right of administrative litigants to discover relevant facts must be balanced against the third party's privacy rights. The administrative law judge must consider the purpose of the information sought, the effect of disclosure on the parties and the hearing, the nature of the objections urged by the party resisting disclosure, and the ability to make an order granting partial disclosure, disclosure in another form, or disclosure only in the event that the party seeking the information undertakes certain specified burdens justifiedunder the circumstances (17 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1079-1081) . To the extent the third party's records come within a statutory privilege, additional considerations must be balanced, for example, the existence of the privilege and questions of waiver (17 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1081 n.9).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Narrowly Limited Discovery for Protection of Third Parties

In Tien v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 528, 43 Cal. Rptr. 3d 121 , a putative class action lawsuit alleging wage and hour violations, petitioner employee brought a writ proceeding to challenge the trial court's order requiring disclosure to the real party in interest employer of the names, addresses, and telephone numbers of all putative class members who contacted the employees' counsel. The court of appeal found no abuse of discretion in the trial court's conclusion that the names of class members who contacted the employees' counsel did not constitute work product under Code Civ. Proc., § 2018.030, because counsel was merely the passive recipient of telephone calls (139 Cal. App. 4th 528, 536) . The trial court's discovery order also did not violate the attorney-client privilege because no personal, confidential information was sought (139 Cal. App. 4th 528, 537-538) . However, discovery would violate the privacy rights of class members whose identities were disclosed because they had a significant interest in maintaining their privacy, and the employer had no compelling need to learn their identities (139 Cal. App. 4th 528, 540-541) .

In Experian Information Solutions, Inc. v. Superior Court (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 122 , the trial court denied plaintiff's motion for class certification in an action alleging fair credit reporting violations. However, the court approved a letter to former potential class members identified in discovery covered by a protective order. The letter would inform recipients they might have claims subject to running statutes of limitation and request each recipient's consent to be contacted by plaintiff's counsel to determine whether he or she had evidence relevant to the issue of plaintiff's damages. Experian filed a petition for writ of mandate, challenging the trial court's approval of the letter. The court of appeal held that evidence that other debtors were similarly subjected to inaccurate reporting was relevant to support plaintiff's claim for punitive damages. Therefore, the letter requesting that information was permissible, provided that it protected the privacy rights of recipients by requiring their written consent to be contacted and limiting contact to those who provided signed authorization (138 Cal. App. 4th 122, 134) .

The facts and procedural background of Best Buy Stores, L.P. v. Superior Court (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 772, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 575 are set out in 80.23[4][b]. In that case, the court of appeal approved a precertification discovery order for the purpose of identifying potential substitute class-action plaintiffs, in an action alleging that stores charged an illegal restocking fee for returned merchandise. The court directed that the trial court modify the letter to be sent to the prospective class-action plaintiffs to protect their privacy. In addition to using a neutral third party to communicate with customers, the court found that the letter should state that recipients were free to ignore it and that the sender would not disclose their identities to the attorney. The court also directed that the letter not identify the attorney by name and not contain any information that would facilitate direct contact (137 Cal. App. 4th 772, 778-779) .

In Perez v. County of Santa Clara (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 671, 3 Cal. Rptr. 3d 867 , plaintiff alleged employment discrimination on the basis of her race and national origin. The trial court denied recovery, finding that plaintiff had established a prima facie case of retaliation and harassment, but the defendant had rebutted her showing by clear and convincing evidence. Plaintiff appealed, challenging, in part, a protective order restricting her access to the personnel records of other nurses at the facility where she worked. The court of appeal found the trial court had struck the appropriate balance between the nurses' privacy rights and plaintiff's need for the information, by restricting access to the employees' disciplinary records but providing for interrogatory answers listing disciplinary acts by type and race (111 Cal. App. 4th 671, 678) .

In Boler v. Superior Court (1987) 201 Cal. App. 3d 467, 247 Cal. Rptr. 185 , a workplace sexual harassment action, the trial court ordered defendant to answer deposition questions regarding the identities of all women with whom he had sexual contact who were his coworkers or former coworkers. On appeal, the court issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its discovery order. The court held that the discovery order was overbroad and impermissibly intrusive into the sexual privacy of both defendant and the unknown women. The court found that because it could not be assumed that all defendant's sexual contacts were coercive, the inquiry was overbroad and would disclose the intimate details of several persons' private lives without justification, and that there were less intrusive means by which plaintiff could contact and interview other alleged victims (201 Cal. App. 3d 467, 474-475) .

In Rifkind v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 177 Cal. Rptr. 82 , disapproved on other grounds in Schnabel v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 704, 723, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 200, 854 P.2d 1117 , a marital dissolution proceeding, the trial court ordered the husband to produce certain records pertaining to his law corporation, including payroll journals and compensation cards, the schedule of pension and profit sharing plan contributions, and other documents reflecting liabilities of shareholders and related parties to the law corporation. The court of appeal ordered that a writ of mandate be issued vacating the order. The court stated that when the interest of a private litigant in discovering relevant facts conflicts withthe right of others to maintain reasonable privacy regarding their financial affairs, a court must indulge in a careful balancing before ordering disclosure. The court held that disclosure of the private financial affairs of nonparties was ordered without a careful scrutiny of the real needs of the litigant seeking discovery. The court suggested to the trial court that it consider whether disclosure, even if shown to be relevant, may not be deferred until it has resolved other issues that might make the disclosure unnecessary (123 Cal. App. 3d 1045, 1050-1052) .

In Board of Trustees v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 174 Cal. Rptr. 160 , a defamation action by a university faculty member against the university and other faculty members, the trial court ordered production of certain communications, and conclusions of, the university's committees that investigated plaintiff for possible misconduct. The court of appeal held that it was an abuse of discretion to order discovery of these documents. It stated that the communications of the university's faculty members as considered by the committees were tendered under a guaranty of confidentiality, and thus were within the Constitution's protected area of privacy. The court held that there was no direct relevance of the committees' investigation to the issues involved in the defamation action, and that even assuming such relevance, careful balancing disclosed no compelling public need for discovery as opposed to the fundamental right of privacy (119 Cal. App. 3d 516, 527) .

The facts and procedural background of Church of Hakeem, Inc. v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 384, 168 Cal. Rptr. 13 are discussed in § 81.251[3][c]. The court issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to nullify its contempt order and its discovery order requiring the disclosure of the membership lists of defendant church. The court held that plaintiff members failed to demonstrate a compelling state interest to obtain the disclosure, and thus the anonymity of the nonlitigant members remained protected by their right of associational privacy (110 Cal. App. 3d 384, 390) .

[b] Standing of Custodian of Records to Assert Rights of Third Parties

In Denari v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1488, 264 Cal. Rptr. 261 , plaintiff brought a civil rights action under 42 U.S.C. § 1983, claiming that the excessive use of force by police while she was being arrested and booked resulted in the breaking of her arm. In her search for witnesses, plaintiff sought the names of all persons arrested and booked in the county jail during the relevant time period. Defendant county refused to disclose that information, claiming that disclosure would violate the privacy rights of those arrestees. After the trial court denied plaintiff's discovery request, she filed a petition for a writ of mandate, which was denied by the court of appeal. In explaining its decision, the court said that release of arrestrecords or dissemination of information about arrests implicates the arrestees' right to privacy. Moreover, it said that litigants who are the recipients of discovery demands have standing to assert the privacy rights of third persons not present who would be affected by the litigant's obedience to the order (215 Cal. App. 3d 1488, 1498-1499) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy (see, e.g., § 81.250).]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT AUTOMATICALLY WAIVED HIS/HER RIGHT TO PRIVACY IN PSYCHOTHERAPEUTIC RECORDS BY FILING A PERSONAL INJURY LAWSUIT CLAIMING EMOTIONAL DISTRESS RESULTING FROM THE PAIN AND SUFFERING ASSOCIATED WITH THE PHYSICAL INJURIES SUSTAINED.

A. Filing of Lawsuit Is Not Waiver of Right to Privacy. A plaintiff does not automatically waive his or her right of privacy by filing a lawsuit. Any waiver must be narrowly construed and encompasses only discovery directly relevant to the claim and essential to the fair resolution of the lawsuit. Further, there must be a compelling need for the discovery (Tylo v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1386-1389, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731 ; Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1014, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331).

B. Personal Injury Plaintiff With Limited Emotional Distress Claim Does Not Waive Privacy of Psychotherapeutic Records. A personal injury plaintiff who limits his or her claim for emotional distress to the pain and suffering associated with the physical injuries sustained does not waive the right of privacy in his or her psychotherapeutic records (Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1015-1018, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in opposition to a motion for an order compelling discovery in a personal injury action when discovery is resisted on the grounds that the filing of an action does not waive the right to privacy in psychotherapeutic records. They may also be used in a motion to quash a subpoena for those records. This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form in opposition to a motion to compel discovery as well as with points and authorities relating generally to discovery resisted on the ground of right to privacy.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Related Uses

This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 et seq. (protective order in context of oral deposition)] when the protective order is being sought on the ground that disclosure would cause a violation of the right of privacy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Filing of Lawsuit Is Not Waiver of Right to Privacy

In Tylo v. Superior Court (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 731 , after defendants terminated her contract to act in a television program because of her pregnancy, plaintiff actress sued defendants on a variety of employment related claims for damages for compensatory losses, mental and emotional anxiety and distress, and medical expenses, as well as for punitive damages. When plaintiff refused to answer a number of questions relating to her relationship to her husband and her attempts to become pregnant, defendants brought a motion to compel answers to those questions. After the trial court granted the motion, plaintiff sought appropriate relief.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate and ordered the trial court to reverse its order on certain questions. Defendants contended that plaintiff had waived her privacy protection by filing the suit, and because plaintiff sought emotional distress damages, they had a right to discover other stressors that might have caused or contributed to heralleged emotional injuries, including any emotional distress resulting from her marriage. The court of appeal explained that the concept of waiver is construed narrowly and the necessary compelling public interest is demonstrated only when the material sought is directly relevant to the litigation. Further, depending on the claims and the information sought, certain information is discoverable based on waiver, while other information remains protected. The court found that plaintiff had tendered her psychological condition, but only as it related to termination of the employment contract, thereby limiting discovery to those injuries resulting from the contract termination. Before defendants could obtain information regarding any emotional distress from her marital relationship, they had to identify the specific emotional injuries allegedly the result of the contract termination and demonstrate a nexus between damages from termination and those that might arise out of the marital relationship (55 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1386-1389) . However, the court found that questions regarding plaintiff's state of mind relating to her pregnancy, and her attempts to become pregnant when she was negotiating her contract, were relevant to her claim for negligent misrepresentation, and as long as they relate to the specific subject matter tendered in the litigation, they were permissible (55 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1390-1391) .

In Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331 , a personal injury action, plaintiff claimed compensatory damages and general damages for pain and suffering. Defendant subpoenaed records related to her "care and treatment" from a medical center specializing in the treatment of substance abuse. Plaintiff filed a motion to quash the subpoena and for a protective order to limit the discovery to directly relevant medical history during the 10 years before the accident. The trial court denied the motion to quash, but granted the protective order, and directed that the records be kept confidential by defendant. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter an order granting the motion to quash. Although there may be an implicit, partial waiver of the right of privacy by bringing suit, the scope of any such waiver is narrowly construed, so that plaintiffs will not be deterred from instituting lawsuits. An implicit waiver encompasses only discovery directly relevant to the claim and essential to the fair resolution of the lawsuit. There must be a compelling and opposing state interest justifying the discovery. Moreover, even when discovery of private information is directly relevant, it is not automatically allowed; there must be a careful balancing of the compelling public need for discovery against the fundamental right of privacy. The scope of any disclosure must be narrowly circumscribed, drawn with narrow specificity, and must proceed by the least intrusive manner (7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1014) .

The facts and procedural background of Davis v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 331 are discussed in [a], above. In Davis, defendant sought discovery of plaintiff's psychotherapeutic records on the grounds that she had implicitly waived her right of privacy in them by filing a personal injury action. Acknowledging that mental condition may sometimes be an issue in such a case, the court said that the extent to which a mental component may be in issue in a particular suit depends on the facts of the particular case (7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1015-1016) . As the party seeking the constitutionally protected information, defendant had the burden to establish direct relevance. The court found that by limiting her claim for emotional distress to pain and suffering associated with stated physical injuries, and by explaining that the medical center provided no treatment in connection with those injuries, plaintiff established that it is not reasonably probable that the records were directly relevant to the condition she placed in issue. Defendant did not counter with any showing of direct relevance, but only speculated that in the records requested there could be material that might be relevant to various issues. The court held that mere speculation regarding the possibility that some portion of the records might be relevant to some substantive issue does not suffice. Defendant's request was overbroad because it necessarily encompassed privileged material that was not relevant. Nothing prevented defendant from seeking records directly relevant to plaintiff's claim by a narrowly drawn discovery request. If such a request were made, the trial court could then evaluate the respective interests of the parties and the necessity and appropriate extent of disclosure (7 Cal. App. 4th 1008, 1017-1018) .

§ 81.270 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Refuting Claim of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination [Evid. Code § 940]--Waiver of Privilege

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

THE MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF'S FILING OF THE ACTION OPERATES AS A WAIVER OF HIS/HER PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION WITH REFERENCE TO ANY FACTUAL ISSUES TENDERED BY THE COMPLAINT or THE OPPOSING PARTY HAS WAIVED HIS/HER PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION BY FAILING TO MAKE A TIMELY OBJECTION].

[EITHER]

Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Waived With Reference to Factual Issues Tendered by Complaint. Plaintiff's filing of an action operates to waive his or her privilege against self-incrimination, as provided for in civil actions by Section 940 of the Evidence Code, with reference to any factual issues tendered by the complaint (Fremont Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 560, 187 Cal. Rptr. 137).

[OR]

Failure to Make Timely Objection Based on Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Serves as Waiver. When a party has the legal standing and opportunity to claim the privilege against self-incrimination, the failure to make a timely objection based on that privilege will serve to waive that privilege (Brown v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 701, 711-712, 226 Cal. Rptr. 10).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery when the party opposing the motion is attempting to rely on the privilege against self-incrimination to resist discovery [see Evid. Code § 940] and the party seeking discovery is asserting a waiver of that privilege. The first alternate paragraph is based on a waiver of factual issues tendered by the complaint and should be used when the party claiming the privilege is the plaintiff in the action. The second alternate paragraph is based on a waiver due to failure to make a timely objection and will most likely be used against the defendant. This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling discovery, as well as a form refuting a claim of privilege generally.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should show that the factual issues about which discovery is sought were tendered in the complaint.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Waived With Reference to Factual Issues Tendered by Complaint

Fremont Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 187 Cal. Rptr. 137 involved an action by an insured against an insurer for recovery on a fire insurance policy after a fire had occurred on plaintiff's premises. Defendant insurer refused to pay on the claim, apparently asserting an exclusion under the policy for arson, when plaintiff came under suspicion of arson in an investigation following the fire. After plaintiff filed suit for defendant's alleged bad-faith refusal to settle the claim, defendant sought to depose plaintiff. Before the scheduled date of the depositions, plaintiff's counsel notified defendant's counsel that plaintiff would not appear for the deposition because plaintiff had been indicted for arson and was therefore asserting his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination. Defendant moved for an order to compel resumption of the deposition, coupled with a request for sanctions including dismissal if plaintiff persisted in his refusal to submit to deposition. Plaintiff countered with a motion for a protective order suspending resumption of the deposition until the criminal matter had been concluded. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion and denied defendant's motion. Defendant thereupon petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate directing the trialcourt to vacate its protective order and to enter a new order compelling discovery.

The court of appeal granted the writ of mandate, directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order compelling plaintiff to appear for the resumption of the deposition, and that if plaintiff refused to appear, to entertain and grant defendant's motion to dismiss the action. The court of appeal held that plaintiff's filing of an action to recover on the fire insurance policy operated to waive his constitutional privilege against self-incrimination for discovery purposes with reference to any factual issues tendered in the complaint, particularly regarding the applicability of the arson exclusion (137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 560) . In reaching its holding, the court relied on Newson v. City of Oakland (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 1050, 1055, 112 Cal. Rptr. 890 , in which plaintiff's effort to invoke the privilege against self-incrimination during testimony was denied because the action had tendered issues to which the otherwise privileged information was relevant (137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 557, 559) . The court also cited Wilson v. Superior Court (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 825, 829, 134 Cal. Rptr. 130 (discussed in § 81.180[3][b]), in which the taxpayer's privilege not to disclose tax returns had been waived by tender of the action and thus could not be relied on at the discovery phase of the case (137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 558-559) . The court in Fremont Indemnity Co. concluded that plaintiff cannot postpone discovery under the cloak of Fifth Amendment privilege (137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 559, 187 Cal. Rptr. 130) . The court pointed out that plaintiff may yet claim his privilege, but that he will have to dismiss the lawsuit if he persists in doing so (137 Cal. App. 3d 554, 560, 187 Cal. Rptr. 130) .

[b] Failure to Make Timely Objection Based on Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Serves as Waiver

In Brown v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 701, 226 Cal. Rptr. 10 , plaintiff sued defendants for assault and battery and for conspiracy to murder him. One defendant was facing criminal charges of attempted murder arising from the same incident. Plaintiff served written interrogatories on defendants, some of which were potentially self-incriminating. After receiving no response, plaintiff moved to compel answers. The court ordered answers within 30 days and awarded sanctions. When defendants did not respond, plaintiff moved that defendants' answer be stricken and a default judgment entered. When defendants did not object, the trial judge granted the motion unless the answers were filed within 10 days. After 11 days defendants served written objections to the interrogatories, asserting their privilege against self-incrimination under U.S. Const., amend. V, for all the interrogatories. These objections were made over six months after the interrogatories had been filed. In opposing plaintiff's motion for default for noncompliance, defendants claimed they were just one day late and that default was too great a sanction. After the trial court denied plaintiff's motion, plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel entry of default.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant the motion for default. The court initially noted that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination has been codified in Evid. Code § 940 and that privilege may be asserted by civil defendants who face possible criminal prosecution based on the same facts as the civil action. It framed the issue as whether a civil defendant may waive his or her right to assert the privilege against self-incrimination by failing to raise it as an objection to interrogatories within the 30-day period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.260) (180 Cal. App. 3d 701, 708) . The court observed that generally if an objection to interrogatories is not raised within that 30-day period, the objection is waived, absent good cause for relief from default (180 Cal. App. 3d 701, 709) . The means by which statutory privileges may be waived are specified in Evid. Code § 912. The court opined that the failure to include the self-incrimination privilege among those enumerated in Evid. Code § 912 as waived by a failure to claim was not determinative. Defendants failed to claim the privilege when they had the legal standing and opportunity to do so. Since this is a case of first impression, and the federal rules can provide guidance, the court looked to the federal law, noting that although there are no federal cases directly on point, under the federal rules a failure to object to an interrogatory constitutes a waiver of the objection, including an objection based on a privilege (180 Cal. App. 3d 701, 711) . The court concluded that the privilege against self-incrimination should be treated no differently than the other privileges that are waived by a failure to make a timely objection to interrogatories (180 Cal. App. 3d 701, 712) .

Note that Brown construed law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it appears to remain consistent with current provisions [see § 81.02[3]].

Dwyer v. Crocker National Bank (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1418, 240 Cal. Rptr. 297 involved an action for compensatory and punitive damages following a setoff by defendant bank against plaintiff's account for a check that had been, according to defendant, fraudulently endorsed by plaintiff and deposited into his account. Plaintiff invoked the privilege against self-incrimination in refusing to answer questions at deposition or to produce documents. The trial court imposed sanctions prohibiting plaintiff from introducing evidence at trial or by motion supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses to which his refusal to answer questions or produce documents pertained. On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed,observing that the party invoking the privilege was the plaintiff, rather than a defendant who had been brought involuntarily into court. It explained that courts do not permit a plaintiff to use the self-incrimination privilege as a "shield and a sword." Moreover, courts are quick to find a waiver of the privilege when a plaintiff seeks damages on the one hand and then attempts to inconvenience, hinder, or delay the defense in the presentation of its case by the imposition of a privilege (194 Cal. App. 3d 1418, 1431-1432) .

§ 81.271 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Refuting Claim of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination [Evid. Code § 940]--Insufficient Showing of Incrimination

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

THE MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY FROM THE OPPOSING PARTY SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE OPPOSING PARTY HAS NOT SUFFICIENTLY ESTABLISHED THE VALIDITY OF HIS/HER CLAIM OF PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION.

A. Claimant of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Required to Demonstrate That Fear of Incrimination Is Reasonable. A person invoking the privilege against self-incrimination in a civil proceeding has the burden of showing that his or her fear of incrimination is reasonable and is not advanced fancifully or merely imagined; absent this showing, his or her claim of the privilege cannot be sustained (Troy v. Superior Court (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1011-1013, 231 Cal. Rptr. 108 ; Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1043-1044, 207 Cal. Rptr. 94).

[Optional] B. Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Required to Be Claimed With Specific Reference to Particular Questions Asked or Other Evidence Sought. A person claiming the privilege against self-incrimination in a civil proceeding must do so withspecific reference to particular questions asked or other evidence sought, and the trial court must then undertake a particularized inquiry with respect to each specific claim of privilege to determine whether the claimant has sustained his or her burden of showing that the claim is justified (Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1045, 207 Cal. Rptr. 94).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery if the party opposing the motion is attempting to rely on the privilege against self-incrimination to resist discovery of information [see Evid. Code § 940]. This form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling discovery, as well as a form refuting a claim of privilege generally.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus counsel should show that the opposing party has not sufficiently demonstrated that his or her fear of incrimination is reasonable with respect to particular questions asked or other evidence sought.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claimant of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Required to Demonstrate That Fear of Incrimination Is Reasonable

In Troy v. Superior Court (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 231 Cal. Rptr. 108 , after defendant was convicted of conspiracy and mail fraud, a number of his victims filed civil suits and obtained money judgments against him. A receiver was appointed by the court to collect funds that could be used to satisfy the judgments. The receiver obtained a court order directing that defendant appear to answer questions at a judgment debtor examination. During the examination, defendant took the Fifth Amendment in response to several questions, even though the court had earlier ruled that he had not met his burden with regard to the privilege. After defendant indicated he would not answer the questions even though ordered to do so by the court, the court announced its intention to hold him in contempt of court, but gave him time to seek appellate review. Defendant's petition for anextraordinary writ was denied, and the trial court issued its contempt order, but again granted him a stay to seek appellate relief. Defendant again petitioned for an extraordinary writ.

The court of appeal initially summarily denied the petition, but, on direction of the Supreme Court, issued an order to show cause why the petition should not be granted. The court of appeal subsequently discharged the order to show cause, and denied the petition (186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1014) . The court recited well established law concerning the Fifth Amendment privilege. The privilege against self-incrimination may not be asserted by merely declaring that an answer will incriminate; it must be evident from the implications of the question, in the setting in which it is asked, that an answer or an explanation of why the question cannot be answered might be dangerous because injurious disclosure could result. It is not enough that the witness fears incrimination from answering the questions; the fear must be reasonable. The privilege protects only against real dangers, and not remote and speculative possibilities. If the trial court determines that no threat of self-incrimination is evident, then the burden of showing the danger of self-incrimination shifts to the individual asserting the privilege. It must determine whether the claimant is confronted by substantial and real, and not merely trifling or imaginary, hazards of incrimination (186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1010-1011) . The court said that the questions put to defendant were those customarily asked at judgment debtor examinations. Since their incriminating nature was not self-evident, defendant had the burden to show why any response on his part would pose a threat of self-incrimination. The court found that defendant did not meet this standard (186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1012) . Defendant claimed that the revelation of any assets or personal information about himself could lead to an inquiry of how and when those assets were acquired, making that information a link in the chain of evidence that might be used to initiate a new criminal action against him. He pointed out that there were at least 80 potential complaining witnesses, and that he was on form probation and was subject to an injunction, lation of either of which could result in his imprisonment. The court found that defendant had amply demonstrated his fear of further prosecution, but said that fear alone is not enough to invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege; the fear must be reasonable. In order to establish that his fear was reasonable, defendant must demonstrate some nexus between the information requested and the risk of criminal prosecution and conviction (186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1012-1013) . The court pointed out that there was no criminal investigation or prosecution pending against defendant. The pending action was a civil proceeding to discover assets that can be used to satisfy outstanding judgments. The court said that if defendant's argument was accepted, a defrauder could always be cloaked and immune from a subsequent judgment debtor examination because there would always be somebody whocould later initiate a prosecution. Defendant's fear of inadvertently providing information that might cause him to be pursued by various prosecutorial agencies was based on pure speculation, and not on the existence of the real danger that must exist for defendant to properly invoke the Fifth Amendment privilege (186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 1013) .

In Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 207 Cal. Rptr. 94 , plaintiffs filed a civil action in Hawaii and, subsequently in California, filed an application to compel discovery from nonparty deponents who had refused both to produce certain documents and to provide any deposition testimony other than their names and ages. The nonparty deponents opposed the application, invoking the privilege against self-incrimination. The trial court denied plaintiffs' application, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that a claim of privilege against self-incrimination under Evid. Code § 940 cannot be sustained in a civil proceeding unless the person claiming the privilege demonstrates that his or her fear of incrimination is reasonable and not advanced fancifully or merely imagined (160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1044) . The court noted that in the case at bench, the trial judge never questioned the nonparty deponents but had apparently relied exclusively on their attorney's conclusory declaration that all testimony from his clients could be construed to be incriminating. The court held that this was insufficient to sustain their claim of the privilege, and on remand the trial judge was directed to determine, after a particularized inquiry, whether their claim of privilege may validly be asserted (160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1045-1046) .

[b] Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Required to Be Claimed With Specific Reference to Particular Questions Asked or Other Evidence Sought

The facts and procedural background of Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 207 Cal. Rptr. 94 are discussed in [a], above. The court, by analogy to federal case law, held that a person claiming the privilege against self-incrimination under Evid. Code § 940 does not have a blanket right to refuse to testify. In other words, a person claiming the privilege must do so with specific reference to particular questions asked or other evidence sought. Once this is done, the trial court must undertake a particularized inquiry with respect to each specific claim of privilege to determine whether the claimant has sustained his or her burden of establishing that the testimony or other evidence sought might tend to incriminate the claimant (160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1045) . The court also held that it was within the trial court's discretion to conduct this inquiry either in camera or in open court (160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1048) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Claimant of Privilege Against Self-Incrimination Is Required to Demonstrate That Fear of Incrimination Is Reasonable

In In re the Marriage of Sachs (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273 , plaintiff ex-wife served an order to appear at a judgment debtor examination and a subpoena duces tecum on defendant ex-husband, after filing a statement of registration of foreign support. The ex-husband invoked the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination and refused to answer questions or produce documents about his financial affairs, claiming that the evidence could incriminate him on contempt charges arising out of his alleged failure to comply with child and spousal support orders entered in three states. The trial court denied the ex-wife's motion to compel her ex-husband to answer questions and produce documents, and she appealed. The court of appeal reversed. Relying on Troy v. Superior Court (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1006, 231 Cal. Rptr. 108 and Warford v. Medeiros (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 207 Cal. Rptr. 94 (discussed in [3][a], above), the court stated that the protection provided by the privilege against self-incrimination must be confined to "instances where the witness has reasonable cause to apprehend danger from a direct answer." To sustain the privilege, the burden is on the party or witness invoking the privilege to show that the testimony or other evidence could tend to incriminate him or her (95 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1150-1154, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273, 279-281) . Here, the appellate court concluded that the ex-husband's silence about his income would not have incriminated him, but instead, would have prevented him from defending against contempt orders in all three states (95 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1155-1156, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273, 283) . After balancing the importance of both the Fifth Amendment and the obligation of a former spouse to make support payments, the court held that the ex-wife could conduct a judgment debtor examination, and that in conjunction with Fam. Code § 3552, she could obtain a copy of the ex-husband's income tax returns and examine him about their contents (95 Cal. App. 4th 1144, 1160-1162, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 273, 287-288) .

THE MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY FROM _____ [specify, e.g, DEFENDANT] SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE HIS/HER PRIVILEGE AGAINST SELF-INCRIMINATION DOES NOT PROTECT PAPERS AND EFFECTS THAT ARE NOT HIS/HER PERSONAL PROPERTY BUT ARE HELD BY HIM/HER IN A REPRESENTATIVE CAPACITY.

Privilege Covers Only Personal Papers and Effects of Claimant. The privilege against self-incrimination cannot be employed by an individual to avoid production of papers, effects, or other property that he or she holds in a representative capacity because the privilege protects only the property of the individual claiming the privilege or property that is in his or her possession in a purely personal capacity (People ex rel. Clancy v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 740, 745, 218 Cal. Rptr. 24, 705 P.2d 347).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery if the opposing party is attempting to rely on the privilege against self-incrimination in order to resist discovery of another's property that he or she holds in a representative capacity. It does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling discovery, as well as a form refuting a claim of privilege generally.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should show that the property sought to be discovered is not the personal property of the person claiming the privilege.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Covers Only Personal Papers and Effects of Claimant

In People ex rel. Clancy v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 740, 218 Cal. Rptr. 24, 705 P.2d 347 , a city brought an action against a bookstore, its proprietor, and individual employees to abate, as a public nuisance, the sale of obscene publications. Plaintiff served a subpoena duces tecum on an individual defendant employed at the store, demanding the production of certain publications. Defendants sought, and the trial court granted, an order preventing the production of the publications on the ground that doing so would violate the employee's privilege against self-incrimination. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate, seeking to vacate this order.

The Supreme Court granted the writ and directed the trial court to vacate its order (39 Cal. 3d 740, 750) . The Court stated the rule that the privilege against self-incrimination cannot be employed by an individual to avoid the production of records that he or she holds in a representative capacity as custodian on behalf of an organization. The papers and effects that the privilege protects must be the property of the person claiming the privilege, or at least must be in his or her possession in a purely personal capacity. The rule applies even if the evidence might incriminate the holder personally. Applying the rule, the Court noted that the publications in question were the property of the bookstore, an artificial entity not entitled to assert the privilege against self-incrimination, and the employee had possession of them only in his representative capacity as clerk of the store. The court held that the employee therefore could not avoid compliance with the subpoena (39 Cal. 3d 740, 745) .

Privilege Does Not Cover Voluntarily Kept Business Records or Records That Are Required to Be Kept by Law. The privilege against self-incrimination cannot be employed to avoid the production of voluntarily-kept business records, or records that are required to be kept by law when (1) the purpose of the government's inquiry is regulatory, not criminal, (2) the information requested is contained in documents of a kind the regulated party customarily keeps, and (3) the records have public aspects (In re Grand Jury Proceedings (9th Cir. 1986) 801 F.2d 1164,1167-1169) .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should show that the records sought to be discovered are voluntarily-kept business records or records required to be kept by law.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Does Not Cover Voluntarily Kept Business Records or Records That Are Required to Be Kept by Law

In In re Grand Jury Proceedings (9th Cir. 1986) 801 F.2d 1164 , witnesses in a grand jury investigation refused to comply with a subpoena duces tecum compelling the production of voluntarily-kept business records and records that they were required to keep by law. The trial court issued an order holding the witnesses in contempt for their failure to comply with the subpoena duces tecum, and the witnesses appealed from the order.

The appellate court affirmed the order, holding that although the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination applies to grand jury proceedings, the contents of voluntarily-kept business records do not fall within the scope of the privilege, since the Fifth Amendment bars only compelled self-incrimination. Records that are required to be maintained by law are outside the scope of the privilege if certain conditions are met (801 F.2d 1164, 1167) . Citing Grosso v. United States (1968) 390 U.S. 62, 67-68, 88 S. Ct. 709, 19 L. Ed. 2d 906, 43 Ohio Op. 2d 226 , the court stated that the Fifth Amendment privilege does not apply with respect to required records if (1) the purpose of the government's inquiry is regulatory, not criminal, (2) the information requested is contained in documents of a kind the regulated party customarily keeps, and (3) the records have public aspects (801 F.2d 1164, 1168) .

The privilege against self-incrimination cannot be employed by a witness on the basis that the witness may be subject to civil, but not criminal, liability (*Blackburn v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Covers Only Matters That Will Subject Witness to Criminal, Not Civil, Liability

In Blackburn v. Superior Court (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 414, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 204 , an adult woman brought a civil action against her stepfather in which she alleged he had sexually abused her while she was a minor. The stepfather refused to answer most of the questions asked at his deposition, claiming the privilege against self-incrimination. The trial court denied his request for a protective order and for immunity from prosecution regarding his testimony during discovery or trial, since the statute of limitations for all possible offenses arising out of the woman's charges barred any criminal prosecution. The stepfather sought a writ of mandate and prohibition challenging the trial court's denial of his requests.

The court of appeal denied the petition for the writ, holding that the stepfather was not entitled to extraordinary relief because he had not demonstrated that he was compelled to testify or asked to incriminate himself. The stepfather's argument was based on the premise that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination protected him from being subject to civil penalties. The court stated that while accommodation in this regard is sometimes made to a defendant in a civil action, it is done from the standpoint of fairness, not from any constitutional right (21 Cal. App. 4th 414, 425) . The self-incrimination privilege is not applicable to matters that will subject a witness to civil liability. Although the Fifth Amendment privilege may be invoked by a civil litigant, it does not provide protection against purely civil penalties. While the self-incrimination privilege of a criminal defendant is absolute, in a civil case a witness or a party may be required to waive the privilege or accept the civil consequences of silence if he or she exercises the privilege (21 Cal. App. 4th 414, 426) .

§ 81.275 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Refuting Claim of Clergy-Penitent Privilege [Evid. Code § 1032]--Communication Not Within Scope of Privilege

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

THE CLERGY-PENITENT PRIVILEGE CANNOT BE INVOKED WHEN THE COMMUNICATION WAS NOT MADE _____ [IN CONFIDENCE and/or TO A MEMBER OF THE CLERGY AUTHORIZED TO HEAR SUCH COMMUNICATIONS and/or TO A MEMBER OF THE CLERGY WITH A RELIGIOUS DUTY TO KEEP SUCH COMMUNICATIONS SECRET].

A. Privileged Penitential Communications. A statement is protected from disclosure under the clergy-penitent privilege only when it satisfies all of the requirements of a penitential communication: (1) it must be intended to be in confidence, (2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his or her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications, and (3) that member of the clergy has a duty under the discipline or tenets of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret (Evid. Code § 1032; People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 1362-1363, 248 Cal. Rptr. 53).

[EITHER, when communication not made in confidence]

B. Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated in Confidence. The clergy-penitent privilege applies only to information communicated "in confidence" between a penitent and his or her clergyman. The privilege cannot be invoked when the penitent's communication was not intended to be confidential (Evid. Code § 1032; People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 419, 426-427, 184 Cal. Rptr. 72).

[AND/OR, when communication not made to authorized clergyman]

C. Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated to Authorized Clergy. The clergy-penitent privilege applies only to information communicated by a penitent to his or her clergyman who, in the course of the discipline or practice of his or her church, denomination, or organization, is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications (Evid. Code § 1032; Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (People) (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 417, 444-445, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 209 , modified, 2005 Cal. App. LEXIS 1274); People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 419, 426-427, 184 Cal. Rptr. 72).

[AND/OR, when clergyman is under no duty to keep communication secret]

D. Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated to Clergy With Religious Duty to Keep Communication Secret. The clergy-penitent privilege applies only to information communicated to a member of the clergy who has a duty under the discipline or tenets of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret (Evid. Code § 1032; People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 1363, 248 Cal. Rptr. 53).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery if a party or other person has resisted providingdiscovery on the ground that the information sought is a privileged communication between a member of the clergy and the penitent, but in fact the communication was not within the scope of the privilege. It does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling discovery, as well as a form refuting a claim of privilege generally. Depending on the circumstances of the case, Paragraphs B through D may be used together or separately to refute the claim of privilege.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should refer to facts showing that the person to whom the communication was made did not assure confidentiality and did not act as a spiritual counselor or assume the role of clergy for the person making the communication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privileged Penitential Communications

In People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 248 Cal. Rptr. 53 , defendant, who did not dispute her embezzlement of almost $30,000 from her Episcopal Church guild account, at the direction of the priest to whom she had initially confessed and asked forgiveness, sought out the pastor, requesting that their conversation be confidential. After he agreed, defendant explained that she needed his help in stopping payment on certain checks drawn against the guild account. She told him she had arranged to borrow money to cover her misappropriation but needed his help because the loan proceeds would not be available in time to prevent those checks from being dishonored. The pastor suggested two alternatives to defendant: he could keep her revelation in confidence as agreed, or he could talk to the church wardens on her behalf and seek their help in solving the problem. When defendant chose the latter option, the pastor informed the wardens of what had transpired and asked for their assistance. Acting on the advice of the diocese controller, the vestry reported the missing funds to the police because the church's fidelity bond was otherwise at risk.

Various bank records, ledgers, and cancelled checks seized during an authorized search of defendant's house were admitted in evidence at trial. The trial court determined that the clergy-penitent privilege did not apply and found defendant guilty of grand theft. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant argued that the trial court had erred in allowing into evidence the content of her confidential statement to the pastor and other incriminating evidence obtained as a direct result thereof. The court explained that in order for a statement to be privileged, it must satisfy all of the conceptual requirements of a penitential communication: (1) it must be intended to be in confidence, (2) it must be made to a member of the clergy who in the course of his or her religious discipline or practice is authorized or accustomed to hear such communications, and (3) that member of the clergy has a duty under the discipline or tenets of the church, religious denomination or organization to keep such communications secret. It noted that while there is a presumption of confidentiality whenever the statutory penitent's privilege is claimed, the right to claim such privilege may be waived when the claimant freely discloses, or consents to disclosure of, a significant part of the communication (203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 1363) .

[b] Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated in Confidence

In Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (People) (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 417, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 209 , modified, 2005 Cal. App. LEXIS 1274 , a grand jury subpoenaed documents from petitioners, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Los Angeles and two priests, for an investigation into allegations that the priests sexually assaulted children. Petitioners objected, in part, that the subpoenaed documents constituted privileged penitential communications within the meaning of Evid. Code § 1032 because they were generated in the course of the Archdiocese's interventions to help troubled priests. Petitioners appealed respondent superior court's adverse ruling.

The court of appeal agreed with the trial court: The penitential communications are not privileged because they were not "made in confidence, in the presence of no third person so far as the penitent is aware," to a cleric who is obligated "to keep those communications secret," as required by Evid. Code, § 1032 (131 Cal. App. 4th 417, 441) . Both parties to the Archdiocese's troubled-priest interventions knew any communications likely would be transmitted to third parties. Furthermore, the subpoenaed documents themselves demonstrated that communications to and from the individual priests were routinely shared by other Archdiocese employees. This sharing of information vitiated any privilege under Evid. Code § 1032, or, alternatively, constituted a waiver of the privilege under Evid. Code § 912(a) (131 Cal. App. 4th 417, 444-445) .

In People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 419, 184 Cal. Rptr. 72 , defendant was convicted of first-degree murder. Defendant was a salesperson for a company whose employees were all members of the Church of Scientology. The company hired a consultant, who was trained as an ethics officer in the Church of Scientology, to counsel its employees on how to improve sales. Defendant told the consultant that he had committed a murder. The consultant asked defendant to write down a confession andto turn himself in. Defendant gave the consultant a written confession that was admitted into evidence during trial. On appeal, defendant contended that his conversation with the consultant and his written confession were erroneously admitted in violation of the clergyman-penitent privilege.

The court of appeal affirmed the conviction. The court stated that it is necessary to show that the statement was made in confidence or in the course of the required relationship between clergy and penitent in order for the privilege to apply. The court held that substantial evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that the confession was not made in confidence. The confession was not made to confess to a crime and to receive religious consolation and guidance in return. While the consultant did have training as an ethics officer under the tenets of Scientology, he was not hired as an ethics officer nor was he an auditor of the church authorized to take confidential statements. The consultant was hired only to improve sales and did not give an assurance of confidentiality to defendant (133 Cal. App. 3d 419, 426-427) .

[c] Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated to Authorized Clergy Member

The facts and procedural background of People v. Thompson (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 419, 184 Cal. Rptr. 72 are discussed in [b], above. In denying that defendant's confession to a business consultant was protected by the clergyman-penitent privilege, the court of appeal found substantial evidence that the required relationship between clergyman and penitent did not exist. Although trained as an ethics officer under the tenets of Scientology, the consultant was hired solely to improve sales. He was not introduced to the employees as an ethics officer and had not assumed the role of clergyman or spiritual counselor (133 Cal. App. 3d 419, 426-427) .

[d] Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated to Clergy Member With Religious Duty to Keep Communication Secret

The facts and procedural background of People v. Edwards (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 248 Cal. Rptr. 53 are discussed in [a], above. In affirming the trial court's determination that the information communicated to the pastor was not protected by the clergy-penitent privilege, the court of appeal considered the relevant doctrine of the Episcopal Church. It recognizes the inviolability of an act of confession by a penitent seeking God's forgiveness and absolution through a priest. However, the court observed that the church recognizes that the aid of priests is frequently sought for the disparate purposes of religious confession and pastoral counseling. It noted that the pastor had no recollection of defendant's request to make a true "confession" seeking forgiveness or absolution, the very essence of the spiritual relationship privileged under the statute. Rather, the pastor's clear recollection was that defendant stated she needed his help to prevent the bad checks from bouncing, thereby disclosing her wrongdoing and inflicting hurt in the process. The pastor emphasized that the conversation did not even remotely resemble a religious confession; rather, it involved a problem-solving entreaty under a promise of confidence from which defendant ultimately released him. He believed that the situation involved no more than pastoral counseling which was not subject to the seal of a confession. Moreover, dual confessions are unusual, and because defendant had already confessed to another priest, her second communication to him could not ordinarily be considered a true religious confession (203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 1364-1365) . The court concluded that the trial court had fully considered all of the conflicting evidence and determined that the statement was not a penitential communication, and that no privilege attached preventing the pastor from otherwise consensually disclosing the content of the nonpenitential, though private, communication. When such a determination is supported by substantial, credible evidence, it will be upheld (203 Cal. App. 3d 1358, 1365) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Privilege Applicable Only to Information Communicated to Clergy Member With Religious Duty to Keep Communication Secret

Doe 2 v. Superior Court (Mark Calkins) (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 458 involved a discovery dispute in an action in which real parties in interest alleged that they were sexually abused as minors by a clergy member. The trial court granted motions to compel petitioner church to provide responses to interrogatories and to produce documents in response to a production request. The church petitioned for a writ of mandate, challenging the discovery order. The appellate court found the trial court abused its discretion by failing to apply the correct legal standard in its determination that the clergy-penitent privilege did not apply. The fact that the term "incident" in discovery requests was not ambiguous, and that the statements at issue would be disclosed subject to a protective order, were irrelevant to whether the communications were penitential (132 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1517) . The court provided guidance for the trial court in analyzing, on remand, whether the privilege applied to statements to a pastor by third persons. The court noted that the penitent is not required to be a member of any particular church, or to be of the same faith as the clergy member to whom he or she makes the penitential communication, unless the discipline of that church limits the clergy member's authority to receive penitential communications to church members only (132 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1517) . The court also rejected respondent's argument that the statements had to be "confessions" for the privilege to apply (132 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1518-1519) . Finally, the court directed that, if after remand the trial court rejected the church's clergy-penitent privilege assertion regarding communications by third parties to the pastor, the third parties must be formally notified of the proceedings and afforded a fair opportunity to assert their privacy interests (132 Cal.

§ 81.276 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery of Official Information [Evid. Code § 1040]--General Form

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

THE INFORMATION IN QUESTION IS DISCOVERABLE BECAUSE _____ [IT WAS NOT ACQUIRED IN CONFIDENCE and/or IT WAS PREVIOUSLY OPEN OR OFFICIALLY DISCLOSED TO THE PUBLIC and/or DISCLOSURE IS NOT FORBIDDEN BY A CALIFORNIA STATUTE OR FEDERAL ACT AND IS NOT AGAINST THE PUBLIC INTEREST].

[EITHER]

A. Information Not Acquired in Confidence. Information must be acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of his or her duty to become privileged "official information" (Evid. Code § 1040(a)).

[AND/OR]

B. Information Open or Previously Disclosed to Public. Information that has been open or officially disclosed to the public prior to the claim of privilege is not protected "official information" (Evid. Code § 1040(a)).

[AND/OR]

C. Disclosure of Official Information Is Not Prohibited by Act or Statute and Is Not Against Public Interest. The privilege of a public entity to refuse to disclose official information does not apply if disclosure is not prohibited by California statute or an act of the United States Congress and is not against the public interest (see Evid. Code § 1040(b)).

[Optional] D. Privilege Is Conditional in Absence of Specific Statute or Act Forbidding Disclosure. In the absence of a specific statutory grant of privilege, the privilege of a public entity to refuse to disclose official information is conditional. The privilege does not apply unless the information in the documents is confidential and disclosure is against the public interest because the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information, without considering the interest of the public entity in the outcome of the litigation, outweighs the necessity for the disclosure in the interests of justice (Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2); Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 124-128, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161).

[Optional] E. Interest of Public Entity Not Considered. In determining whether disclosure of information is against the public interest, the interest of the public entity as a party in the outcome of the proceeding may not be considered (Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of a motion to compel discovery of information if a public entity has refused to disclose the information on the ground that it is privileged official information.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, facts of the case that tend to show that the necessity for the disclosure in the interests of justice outweighs the public entity's interest in preserving the confidentiality of the information should be brought out. If any person authorized to do so has previously consented that the official information be disclosed in the proceeding, counsel should discuss the circumstances of the prior authorization [see Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Is Conditional in Absence of Specific Statute or Act Forbidding Disclosure

Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161 involved a wrongful death action against a city and certain of its employees, including the police officers who allegedly wrongfully shot plaintiff's decedent. The trial court denied plaintiff's request for discovery of certain official records and documents relating to the shooting. The Supreme Court, however, on petition by plaintiff, issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to conduct a further hearing on whether to permit the discovery.

The Court initially noted that the privileges accorded by Evid. Code § 1040 are applicable only when the information sought was received in confidence. The Court then noted that some of the material sought, such as voluntary statements of criminal suspects made to the investigating authorities, could not be deemed confidential. The Court assumed, however, that some of the material sought was confidential (17 Cal. 3d 107, 124) . The Court then concluded that the trial court had not followed the proper procedure in ruling on the discovery motions and remanded the case for a further hearing. The Court issued guidelines to be followed in determining whether a confidential privilege under Evid. Code § 1040 applies (17 Cal. 3d 107, 125) .

The Court declared that ruling on the conditional privilege of Evid. Code § 1040 entails a separate assessment of the "necessity for the disclosure in the interests of justice" and the "necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information," in light of the consequences to the litigant of nondisclosure and the consequences to the public entity of disclosure (17 Cal. 3d 107, 125-126) . The Court noted thatconsequences to the litigant involved matters similar to those in issue in determining materiality under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985, including (1) the importance of the material sought to the fair presentation of the litigant's case, (2) the availability of the material to the litigant by other means, and (3) the effectiveness and relative difficulty of such other means. The Court also noted that consequences to the public entity of disclosure included matters relative to the effect of the disclosure on the integrity of public processes and procedures. In this regard, the Court found that discovery would not impinge on the policy of grand jury secrecy merely because much of the material sought involved the subject of a prior grand jury investigation (17 Cal. 3d 107, 126-127) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Disclosure of Official Information is Not Prohibited by Act or Statute and Is Not Against Public Interest

In Kleitman v. Superior Court (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 324, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 813 , the trial court granted a discovery motion compelling answers to interrogatories concerning personal recollections of city council members as to proceedings which took place during an unrecorded closed session of the city council, held under the Brown Act (Gov. Code § 54956.8; see Gov. Code § 54950 et seq.). The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and entered a new order denying the motion. As a matter of first impression, the court held, among other things, that Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), which provides that a public entity is privileged to refuse to disclose official information when the privilege is properly claimed and disclosure is forbidden by a state statute, necessarily includes the Brown Act's prohibition of disclosure of closed session proceedings, except as provided by the Act (74 Cal. App. 4th 324 , 335). In this case, the Brown Act's exceptions did not authorize such discovery (74 Cal. App. 4th 324, 335) .

[b] Privilege Is Conditional in Absence of Specific Statute or Act Forbidding Disclosure

In San Joaquin Cty. Local Agency Formation Comm'n v. Superior Court (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 93 , the real party in interest, an irrigation district, sued a local agency formation commission, challenging denial of the district's application to provide retail electric service. The irrigation district noticed the taking of depositions of the commissioners and the commission's executive officer, and in response the commission moved for a protective order. It contended that discovery was not permitted because review of an administrative agency action was limited to the administrative record, and that questioning the commissioners about their decision violated the deliberative process privilege. The superior court granted the commission's motion for a protective order only partially. The commission petitioned for a writ of mandate (162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 163) .

The court of appeal issued the writ. A local agency formation commission is a quasi-legislative administrative agency, and its decisions are reviewed by traditional mandamus. The information sought did not fall within any exception to the rule that extra-record evidence was not admissible in traditional mandamus actions challenging quasi-legislative administrative decisions. Permitting the admission of extra-record evidence also would violate separation of powers principles (162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 167) . Even if an exception could be established, the commissioners' reasoning processes and the evidence they relied on in rejecting district's application were protected under the deliberative process privilege (162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 172) .

In Michael P. v. Superior Court (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 11 , petitioner father was the subject of a dependency action, after another child was fatally injured while in his care. Petitioner served subpoenas duces tecum on real parties in interest sheriff and police departments. Petitioner sought to discover forensic evidence and various investigative reports compiled by real parties during their ongoing criminal investigation into the death of the child. The juvenile court granted real parties' motion to quash the subpoenas, finding the official information privilege applied to preclude disclosure of materials relating to an ongoing criminal investigation. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate and requested a stay of the juvenile court proceedings. The court of appeal concluded the juvenile court abused its discretion by failing to conduct an in camera review of the requested items before ruling on real parties' motion. Accordingly, the court granted the stay and issued an alternative writ, directing the juvenile court to hold an in camera hearing to determine, with respect to each requested item of evidence, whether the claim of privilege should be upheld.

Citing Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161 (discussed in [3][a], above), the court stated that a public entity can withhold information as privileged under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2) "only upon a finding that ... its disclosure would be 'against the public interest.' " The weighing procedure entails a separate assessment, for each item of material sought, of the necessity for disclosure in the interest of justice and the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information. Implicit in this assessment is a consideration of consequences to the litigant of nondisclosure, and the consequences to the public of disclosure (92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1043-1044) . Here, the court found that petitioner father's desire for and right to "the companionship, care, custody and management" of his child was an important interest that "undeniably warrant[ed] deference and, absent a powerful countervailing interest, protection" (92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1044-1045) . The court noted that in County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 (discussed in § 81.292[3]), a civil action for damages, the court of appeal allowed the police to maintain the confidentiality of the entire investigative file "for some reasonable period of time" without any particularized judicial review of its contents. This court, however, declined to follow County of Orange, concluding that a parent's interest in having custody of his or her child weighs more heavily than a litigant's interest in prosecuting a civil action for damages. The court concluded the juvenile court's refusal to conduct an in camera review of the items listed on petitioner's subpoenas duces tecum, its failure to engage in any particularized inquiry of petitioner's need for disclosure of the requested items versus the government's need to preserve their confidentiality, and the court's resulting blanket application of the privilege to all of the items requested, violated the procedural mandates of Shepherdv. Superior Court (92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1045-1046) . The court noted that the mere fact evidence incriminates petitioner is not enough to prevent disclosure. The government must also show there is a real possibility release of the information would allow the perpetrator to avoid apprehension (for example, by allowing the perpetrator to tailor an explanation to fit the forensic evidence) (92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1047) .

In People v. Jenkins (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 900, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 997 P.2d 1044 , an automatic death penalty appeal, defendant contended, among other things, that the trial court erred in refusing to grant discovery of evidence of all cases which the murdered detective had investigated, or in which he had made an arrest, in the year before he was murdered. Defendant speculated that some person under investigation by the detective, but who had not, to the knowledge of the prosecution, made any threat against the officer, may have been responsible for murdering the officer. The Supreme Court found that individual citizens' arrest records were privileged under the official information privilege (Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2)) when weighed against defendant's discovery request. The significant interest in preserving the confidentiality of an individual citizen's arrest records outweighed defendant's showing of need for those records, which was based on speculation and constituted the "proverbial fishing expedition." Thus, the lower court acted within its discretion in concluding that defendant had not given sufficient justification for discovery and thus denying defendant's request to the extent that it was not focused on evidence of threats to the detective (22 Cal. 4th 900, 956-957) .

In Marylander v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 , defendant in pending civil litigation sought to compel discovery from a state agency of records which were relevant to his defense in the underlying case. The records were memoranda from the state agency to the Governor's Office. The trial court denied a motion to compel production, agreeing with the state agency that such memoranda are absolutely privileged on the grounds that correspondence to the Governor is exempt from disclosure as a public record, and that a common law "deliberative process" privilege absolutely protects interoffice communications in order to facilitate candid advice and disclosures to the Governor (81 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1121) . The court of appeal held that the trial court erred because Evid. Code § 1040, the official information privilege, represents the exclusive means by which a public entity may assert a claim of governmental privilege based on the necessity of secrecy (81 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1125) . Evid. Code § 1040(b)(1), an absolute privilege, did not apply in this case because an exemption from disclosure under the Public Records Act, Gov. Code § 6450 et seq., is not a statute forbidding disclosure with the meaning of Evid. Code § 1040(b)(1). Thus, the applicable privilege was not absolute but conditional under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), which required the trial court to consider the party's need for disclosure in the interest of justice, and to determine whether that interest were outweighed by the public interest in preserving confidentiality (81 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1126) . The appellate court directed the trial court to conduct further proceedings in accordance with Evid. Code § 1040 (81 Cal. App. 4th 1119, 1130) .

The facts and procedural background of County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 are discussed in § 81.292[3][a]. Police files in an ongoing criminal investigation into a child's murder were held to be privileged under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2) when weighed against the need for discovery in the suspect-parents' civil suit for defamation, conversion, spoilation of evidence and various civil rights violations, based on their public identification by police as suspects. The appropriate remedy in this case was for the trial court to stay discovery of the investigative information in the civil action in order to allow the police the necessary time to investigate. However, in the future, the trial court could determine that there has not been enough progress in the investigation to justify continued protection of most of the files (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 768-769) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

INFORMATION FOUND IN ACCIDENT REPORTS AND INFORMATION COMPILED FROM DATA FOUND IN SUCH REPORTS IS SUBJECT TO DISCOVERY.

A. Information Derived From Accident Reports Is Not Privileged. Information about other accidents that discloses neither theidentity of the reporting party nor identifying material, although generated from accident reports, is not made confidential by Sections 20012-20014 of the Vehicle Code (Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 294, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349).

B. Information Derived From Reports of Accidents at Same Location Is Discoverable. Information generated by the state from reports of other accidents at the same location is subject to discovery in an action in which the plaintiff alleges that the highway or street at which the accident occurred was designed, built, or maintained in a defective and dangerous condition (Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 294, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities is for use in support of a motion to compel discovery of information found in accident reports, as well as data compiled from such reports. It is for use primarily by persons involved in an accident at a given location who wish to establish that prior accidents were caused by a condition existing at that location. Accident reports, whether prepared by law enforcement officers or persons required to make an accident report under Veh. Code § 20008, are available to persons involved in the accident, as well as others who establish a "proper interest" in the reports under Veh. Code § 20012. For a form for use by persons with a proper interest in an accident report, see § 81.278.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Information Derived From Accident Reports Is Not Privileged

In Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 , plaintiff, who was injured in an automobile accident on a state highway, brought an action against the state on the theory that the highway was designed, built, and maintained in a defective and dangerous condition of which the state had notice. Plaintiff sought discovery of information about prior accidents at the same location, including interrogatories concerning the date, type of accident, parties involved, whether litigation against the state had followed, and whether the accidents hadbeen recorded in the TASAS computer (the TASAS computer stores data on accidents in the state highway system). Plaintiff also sought collision diagrams prepared in conjunction with accidents at the same location, and traffic collisions reports of accidents occurring after his. The state opposed the discovery on the grounds that Veh. Code §§ 20012 and 20014 precluded discovery of the accident reports and any information contained in or generated from those reports. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion to compel discovery. Plaintiff then sought a writ of mandate to compel discovery.

Before its final decision, the Supreme Court issued an alternative writ of mandate with which the superior court and the state complied. Although this rendered further proceedings moot, the Supreme Court issued an opinion on the grounds that the issue was one of statewide importance (36 Cal. 3d 291, 294) . The Court initially noted that Veh. Code §§ 20012-20014 do not create privileges to refuse to disclose information contained in accident reports but rather create rules that should be narrowly construed so as not to impinge on the policy of liberal discovery (36 Cal. 3d 291, 298-301) . In reaching its decision, the Court reasoned that the purpose of Veh. Code §§ 20012-20014 was to provide a limited confidentiality protecting the identity of the person who made the report in order to encourage truthfulness and accuracy in the reports. The Court then held that the confidentiality provided by statute to official accident reports does not extend to data generated from the reports from which the indicia of identity have been or can be excised (36 Cal. 3d 291, 302) .

[b] Information Derived From Reports of Accidents at Same Location Is Discoverable

The facts and procedural background of Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 are discussed in [a], above. In Davies, the Supreme Court rejected the claim of the state that plaintiff's attempt to discover information about prior accidents garnered from official accident reports was improper because such evidence was unlikely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. The Court reasoned that the data sought could reveal other accidents of a sufficient number at the location in question to suggest that a highway defect was a common contributory factor, and that such information was relevant to the lawsuit against the state based on a dangerous highway condition (36 Cal. 3d 291, 301) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Information Derived From Reports of Accidents at Same Location Is Discoverable

People v. Ansbro (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 273, 200 Cal. Rptr. 210 involved a prosecution for vehicular manslaughter. Defendant sought to introduceevidence of other accidents at the location of his accident in order to establish a dangerous condition as the cause of the accident and sought discovery of prior accident reports. The trial court refused discovery on the grounds that the reports were privileged under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(1), which provides that a public entity has a privilege to refuse to disclose official information if disclosure is forbidden by another California statute. The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court held that accident reports of police officers were not protected by Veh. Code § 20012 and thus were not privileged under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(1) (153 Cal. App. 3d 273, 277) .

§ 81.278 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery of Official Information [Evid. Code § 1040]--Discovery of Accident Reports

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

OFFICIAL ACCIDENT REPORTS ARE AVAILABLE TO ANY PERSON WITH A PROPER INTEREST IN THE REPORTS.

Accident Reports May Be Discovered by Person With Proper Interest. Reports of accidents, whether made by private individuals as required by Section 20008 of the Vehicle Code of persons involved in the accident or by an investigating law enforcement officer, are available to persons who have a proper interest therein, including, but not limited to, the drivers involved in the accident and any person who may incur civil liability arising out of the accident (Veh. Code § 20012; State of California ex rel. Dep't of Transportation v. Superior Court (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 847, 857, 210 Cal. Rptr. 219, 693 P.2d 804 ; Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 301, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities are for use in support of a motion to compel discovery of an accident report prepared by a party involved in the accident or an investigating law enforcement officer.

Note that even when a party is not an interested party within the meaning of Veh. Code § 20012 and thus is not able to discover this type of accident report, the party may still be able to discover information generated from such reports [see Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 294, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 (discussed in § 81.277[3][a])].

Reports expressly declared by Veh. Code § 20014 to be for the confidential use of designated governmental entities having jurisdiction over highway matters are not discoverable by private litigants, even though they contain information that is not confidential [Nelson v. Superior Court (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 444, 450-451, 229 Cal. Rptr. 94 (California Highway Patrol accident investigation reports)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, facts showing that the party seeking the discovery was a party with a proper interest under Veh. Code § 20012 should be brought out.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accident Reports May Be Discovered by Person With Proper Interest

The facts and procedural background of Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 are discussed in § 81.277[3][a]. In this case, plaintiff sought discovery of information derived from official reports of prior accidents in order to show that his accident was caused by a highway condition for which the state was responsible. In upholding plaintiff's right to discovery, the Supreme Court noted that it was not deciding whether plaintiff was entitled to the actual accident reports (36 Cal. 3d 291, 295 n.4). However, the Court, as part of its rationale in permitting discovery of information compiled from actual reports, did hold that such discovery might provide information showing that a highway defect may have been a cause of plaintiff's accident and that this information might then qualify plaintiff as a person with a proper interest in discovering the actual accident reports under Veh. Code § 20012 (36 Cal. 3d 291, 301) .

In State of California ex rel. Dep't of Transportation v. Superior Court (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 847, 210 Cal. Rptr. 219, 693 P.2d 804 , defendant in a criminal action was charged with vehicular manslaughter. She sought discovery of official accident reports prepared by law enforcement officers and by persons involved in the prior accidents as required by Veh. Code § 20008 in order to show that a highway condition was responsible for the accident that led to the criminal charge. The trial court upheld defendant's right to discovery on the grounds that defendant had a proper interest in the accident reports under Veh. Code § 20012.

The Supreme Court agreed and denied the state's petition for a writ of prohibition. The Court held that defendant had a proper interest in the reports, since they were necessary to her defense and in light of the fact that she agreed to the deletion of names and other information from the reports that might disclose the identity of the party who prepared the report.

The holding of this case is of particular interest to civil litigants in that the Court held that reports prepared by law enforcement officials are subject to disclosure to persons with a proper interest under Veh. Code § 20012, even though Veh. Code § 20014, which provides for confidentiality of reports prepared by law enforcement officers, does not contain a "proper interest" exception. The Court reasoned that the Legislature had evidenced no intent to provide for greater confidentiality under Veh. Code § 20014 than under Veh. Code § 20012 (37 Cal. 3d 847, 857) .

§ 81.278A Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery of Official Information [Evid. Code § 1040]--Discovery of Information Contained in DMV Records Relating to Physical and Mental Condition

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.81, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see, e.g., § 81.10).]

DMV RECORDS RELATING TO PHYSICAL AND MENTAL CONDITION ARE DISCOVERABLE BECAUSE THE NEED FOR DISCLOSURE OUTWEIGHS THE PUBLIC'S INTEREST IN PRESERVING CONFIDENTIALITY.

A. Information in DMV Files Relating to Physical and Mental Condition Is Not Privileged Under Vehicle Code Section 1808.5. Vehicle Code Section 1808.5, declaring all DMV records relating to physical and mental condition confidential and not open to public inspection, does not create a privilege, independent of Evidence Code Section 1040, to withhold information in DMV records required to be produced by subpoena (Dep't of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 366, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504).

B. Vehicle Code Section 1808.5 Is Not a Statute that Forbids Disclosure of DMV Information Relating to Physical and Mental Condition Under Evidence Code Section 1040(b)(1). Although information relating to party's driver's license involves "official information" within meaning of Evidence Code Section 1040, Vehicle Code Section 1808.5 does not forbid disclosure of that official information within meaning of Evidence Code Section 1040(b)(1) (Dep't of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 366, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504).

C. Necessity for Disclosure of DMV Information Relating to Motorist's Physical and Mental Condition Outweighs Public's Interest. Under Evidence Code Section 1040(b)(2), the necessity for disclosure of complete copies of motorist's driving records outweighs the DMV's interest in preserving confidentiality (Dep't of Motor Vehicles v.

Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 366, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities are for use in support of a motion to compel discovery of information found in DMV records relating to a motorist's physical and mental condition. It is for use primarily by the state or the defendant in a criminal prosecution.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel might argue that the state or the defendant, or both, have an interest in all reasonably accessible information that is relevant to the defense in a criminal prosecution arising from a auto accident, in order to ensure a fair trial and an intelligent defense.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Information in DMV Files Relating to Physical and Mental Condition Is Not Privileged Under Vehicle Code Section 1808.5

Dep't of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 366, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504 arose from a prosecution for vehicular homicide. The state issued a subpoena duces tecum for the motorist's driving records. Claiming privilege under Veh. Code § 1808.5 and Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), the DMV issued only redacted records, withholding the medical information contained in the motorist's driving records. The DMV petitioned to have the trial court's order to produce the records vacated. Real party in interest joined with the state, asking that the DMV be required to produce unredacted copies of his driving record. On that basis, the trial court denied the DMV's petition and ordered the DMV to comply in full with the state's subpoena. In response, the DMV filed a petition for writ of mandate, contending that Veh. Code § 1808.5 and Evid. Code § 1040 created statutory privileges to withhold the medical information contained in the motorist's driving record, unaffected by his consent to release the information. In the alternative, the DMV argued that, even in the absence of an absolute privilege, the public interest in maintaining the confidentiality of medical information in the motorist's records outweighed the need for disclosure.

The court of appeal disagreed. The court rejected the DMV's claim of privilege under Veh. Code § 1808.5, which provides, in relevant part: "all records of the department relating to the physical or mental condition of any person ... are confidential and not open to public inspection." The word "confidential" in the statute did not equate with privilege (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 371) . The court further held that the driving records sought constituted official information within the meaning of Evid. Code § 1040(a) (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 374) . However, Veh. Code § 1808.5 was not a statute that acted to forbid disclosure within the meaning of Evid. Code § 1040(b)(1) (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 374) . Because, under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2), the necessity for disclosure of complete copies of real party in interest's driving records outweighed the DMV's interest in preserving the confidentiality of the records, the trial court properly required the DMV to produce the records (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 377) .

[b] Vehicle Code Section 1808.5 Is Not a Statute that Forbids Disclosure of DMV Information Relating to Physical and Mental Condition Under Evidence Code Section 1040(b)(1)

The facts, procedural background, and related issues of Dep't of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 366, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504 are discussed in [a], above. In upholding the state's and real party in interest's right to discovery of information contained in DMV records relating to real party in interest's physical and mental condition, the court of appeal observed that the same reasons that led it to conclude that Veh. Code § 1808.5 does not establish a privilege also led to the conclusion that Veh. Code § 1808.5 is not a statute, within the meaning of Evid. Code § 1040, that "forbids disclosure" (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 374) . The court distinguished a statute, like Veh. Code § 1808.5 that "provides for confidentiality," from a statute that "prohibits the disclosure of records." A statute that "prohibits the disclosure of records" would invoke the absolute privilege of Evid. Code §§ 1040 and 1041; a statute that "provides for confidentiality" would not (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 374-375) .

[c] Necessity for Disclosure of DMV Information Relating to Motorist's Physical and Mental Condition Outweighs Public's Interest

The facts, procedural background, and related issues of Dep't of Motor Vehicles v. Superior Court (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 366, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504 are discussed in [a], above. In upholding the state's and real party in interest's right to discovery of information contained in DMV records relating to real party in interest's physical and mental condition, the court of appeal weighed the public policy against disclosure of the specified information against the requesting party's interest in obtaining that information, in accordance with Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2). The court of appeal found that the interests of the state and the real party in interest in records relevant to the defense to a vehicular homicide charge outweighed the DMV's interest in preserving the records to "assure physicians that, when they are asked to submit to the DMV a candid evaluation of the safety risks presented by a driver's medical condition, that evaluation will then not be disclosed" (100 Cal. App. 4th 363, 377) .

§ 81.279 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Refuting Claim of Newsperson's Qualified Privilege to Protect News Source--Existence and Veracity of News Source Placed in Issue by Newsperson

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as wellas with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

THE MOTION TO COMPEL DISCOVERY FROM THE OPPOSING PARTY SHOULD BE GRANTED, NOTWITHSTANDING THE NEWSPERSON'S QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE AGAINST DISCLOSURE OF CONFIDENTIAL NEWS SOURCES BECAUSE THE OPPOSING PARTY, AS PLAINTIFF/CROSS COMPLAINANT, HAS PLACED THE EXISTENCE AND VERACITY OF THE NEWS SOURCE IN ISSUE.

Newsperson's Qualified Privilege Must Give Way to Interest Favoring Disclosure When Newsperson Has Instituted Action Placing Existence and Veracity of News Source in Issue. When a newsperson seeks affirmative relief in an action or cross complaint that places in issue the existence or veracity of a confidential news source, the fair administration of justice compels disclosure notwithstanding his or her qualified privilege against disclosure of the news source; the shield of the newsperson's qualified privilege cannot be used as a sword (Dalitz v. Penthouse International, Ltd. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 468, 477-480, 214 Cal. Rptr. 254).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for an order compelling discovery if the party opposing the motion is attempting to rely on the newsperson's qualified privilege against disclosure of a confidential news source but is also seeking affirmative relief in an action or cross complaint that places the existence or veracity of the news source in issue. The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling discovery, as well as a form refuting a claim of privilege generally.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should show that the opposing party, as a plaintiff or cross complainant, has placed the existence or veracity of the news source in issue.

[c] Newsperson's First-Amendment Privilege Distinguished From Newsperson's Immunity From Contempt

These points and authorities relate to the application of the newsperson's qualified privilege to withhold disclosure of the identity of confidentialsources or unpublished information. This qualified privilege is constitutional rather than statutory, arising under the protections of freedom of the press under U.S. Const., amend. I, and Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(a) [see Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 279, 283-284, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 and § 81.293]. This newsperson's qualified privilege against disclosure is to be distinguished from the newsperson's shield of immunity from contempt, which arises under Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b) and Evid. Code § 1070; see § 81.294]. The immunity from contempt, unlike a qualified privilege, does not protect against non-contempt penalties such as monetary and issue-preclusion sanctions [see New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 462, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811 ; In re Willon (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1091, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245] .

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 81.293 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the points and authorities in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Newsperson's Qualified Privilege Must Give Way to Interest Favoring Disclosure When Newsperson Has Instituted Action Placing Existence and Veracity of News Source in Issue

In Dalitz v. Penthouse International, Ltd. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 468, 214 Cal. Rptr. 254 , plaintiffs brought a libel action against defendants, a publisher and other newspersons connected with an article that allegedly defamed plaintiffs. Defendant publisher then brought a cross complaint for defamation against plaintiffs, alleging that plaintiffs had made certain defamatory statements of it at a news conference held in response to the original article. The trial court dismissed the cross complaint as a sanction for defendants' failure to disclose the identity of their sources, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court recognized that a newsperson has a qualified privilege against disclosure of a confidential source absent a showing of compelling interest outweighing that privilege. The court concluded, however, that in the case at bench the fair administration of justice did compel disclosure, notwithstanding the qualified privilege, insofar as a newsperson had cross complained in a matter that arose because of reports by his or her news sources. The court reasoned that the "shield" of the qualified privilege cannot thus be used as a "sword" (168 Cal. App. 3d 468, 477) . On consideration of the factors set forth in Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 and KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211 (discussed in § 81.293[3][a]), the court concluded that disclosure was compelled under the circumstances because the existence and veracity of cross complainant's news source went to the heart of cross defendant's defense (168 Cal. App. 3d 468, 478-479) . The court also suggested that a newsperson who brings an action or cross complaint waives his or her qualified privilege against disclosure of confidential news sources when these sources have information that goes to the heart of the defense (168 Cal. App. 3d 468, 479) . The court thus held that the trial court, in dismissing the cross complaint, properly determined that the qualified privilege did not apply (168 Cal. App. 3d 468, 479-480) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.280

§ 81.280 Supporting Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery of Marital Communication [Evid. Code § 980]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11), as well as with points and authorities generally refuting a claim of privilege (see e.g., § 81.10).]

THE CONFIDENTIAL MARITAL COMMUNICATION PRIVILEGE CANNOT SUCCESSFULLY BE INVOKED TO PREVENT DISCOVERY BECAUSE THE PRIVILEGE _____ [IS INAPPLICABLE TO STATEMENTS MADE WHILE THAT RELATIONSHIP IS BEING ABUSED or HAS BEEN WAIVED THROUGH DISCLOSURE].

[EITHER]

A. Confidential Marital Communication Privilege Inapplicable to Statements Made While That Relationship Is Being Abused. A marital communication made while one spouse is abusing the relationship on which the confidential marital communication privilege is based, such as during an assault on the other spouse, is not confidential, and is not protected by that privilege (People v. Johnson (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 425, 437-438, 284 Cal. Rptr. 579).

[AND/OR]

B. Privilege Waived by Disclosure. The right of any person to claim the confidential marital communication privilege is waived ifthat communication has been disclosed. The purpose of the privilege--to encourage confidences between the spouses for the benefit of the marital relationship--ceases to operate when confidentiality is lost (see People v. Johnson (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 425, 437-438, 284 Cal. Rptr. 579).

[2] Comments

This form may be used to support a motion to compel discovery if the opposing party is attempting to assert the confidential marital communications privilege to prevent discovery [see Evid. Code § 980]. Alternative Paragraph A is based on the nonexistence of the privilege due to an abuse of the marital relationship on which it is based. Alternative Paragraph B is based on a waiver of the privilege through disclosure.

The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of compelling discovery [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.31; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.10, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11], as well as a form refuting a claim of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.10].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Confidential Marital Communication Privilege Inapplicable to Statements Made While That Relationship Is Being Abused

In People v. Johnson (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 425, 284 Cal. Rptr. 579 , defendant was charged with the murder of a woman. At the preliminary hearing, defendant's wife testified about an incident in which defendant severely beat her, during which he told her that what had happened to the murder victim would happen to her. The defense did not object to those statements because at the time of the preliminary hearing, defendant-husband was also charged with the attempted murder of his wife. Those charges were later dismissed, and the defense attempted to prevent the wife from testifying at the murder trial, claiming the confidential marital communication privilege. The trial court permitted the testimony, and defendant was convicted. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court explained that the statements had never been confidential because they were made while defendant was battering his wife, thereby abusing the marital relationship on which the confidential marital communication privilege is based. The policy underlying the privilege is to preserve the trust that exists between marital partners. This objective would be ill-served by regarding as privileged threats made by one spouse while assaulting the other spouse (233 Cal. App. 3d 425, 438) .

[b] Privilege Waived by Disclosure

The facts and procedural background of People v. Johnson (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 425, 284 Cal. Rptr. 579 are discussed in [a], above. In Johnson, the court of appeal upheld the admission of the wife's statements. It reasoned that once they were disclosed at the preliminary hearing, the statements lost their confidential character. Moreover, the reason for the privilege--to encourage confidences between the spouses for the benefit of the marital relationship--ceased to operate when confidentiality was lost. The court also cited Evid. Code § 912(a), which provides that consent to disclosure is manifested by conduct on the part of the holder of the privilege that indicates consent. Such conduct includes the failure to claim the privilege in any proceeding in which the holder has the legal standing and opportunity to claim the privilege. Any attempt by defendant to assert the marital communications privilege at the preliminary hearing would have been unsuccessful anyway because the privilege does not exist in a criminal proceeding in which one spouse is charged with committing a crime against the other spouse. At the time of the preliminary hearing, defendant had been charged with the attempted murder of his wife (233 Cal. App. 3d 425, 437) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

EXCEPT AS OTHERWISE PROVIDED BY STATUTE AND UNLESS A WAIVER HAS OCCURRED, A MARRIED PERSON WHOSE SPOUSE IS A PARTY TO A PROCEEDING HAS A PRIVILEGE NOT BE CALLED AS A WITNESS BY AN ADVERSE PARTY TO THAT PROCEEDING.

Spouse's Privilege Not to Be Deposed by Party Who Is Adverse to Other Spouse. Except as otherwise provided by statute and unless a waiver has occurred, a married person whose spouse is a party to a proceeding has a privilege to refuse to be deposed by a party adverse to his or her spouse (Evid. Code § 971; Jurcoane v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 886, 889, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 483 ; Duggan v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272, 179 Cal. Rptr. 410 ; see Evid. Code § 970).

[2] Comments

This form is for use in opposing a motion to compel discovery. It may be used by a married person whose spouse is a party to a proceeding to object to being deposed by a party adverse to his or her spouse. There are, however, statutory limitations on the use of the privilege. For example, the privilege is not available when the spouse claiming the privilege is opposing the other spouse in the action, or when the action was brought or defended for the immediate benefit of the spouse attempting to claim the privilege [see Evid. Code §§ 972, 973].

The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30], as well as a form resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.20].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Refusal to Testify Against One's Spouse

The privilege to refuse to testify against one's spouse is found in Evid. Code § 970. This privilege may be asserted in any action when a spouse is called as a witness but does not wish to testify against his or her spouse. The privileges of Evid. Code §§ 970 and 971 can only be asserted by acurrent spouse [People v. Dorsey (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 706, 120 Cal. Rptr. 508] . However, the marital testimonial privilege contains no limitation requiring that a viable marital relationship exist (see Evid. Code § 972 (exceptions to privilege)). Thus, the bright line of divorce is necessary to terminate the privilege.

The marital testimonial privilege of Evid. Code §§ 970 and 971 should be distinguished from the confidential marital communication privilege of Evid. Code § 980, which enables a spouse to prevent disclosure of a confidential marital communication even after the marriage has been terminated. For a form opposing discovery based on Evid. Code § 980, see § 81.291.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Spouse's Privilege Not to Be Deposed by Party Who Is Adverse to Other Spouse

In Jurcoane v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 886, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 483 , petitioner wife filed for a writ of prohibition to prevent the court from compelling her to testify against her husband. The trial court overruled petitioner's marital testimonial privilege claim (Evid. Code, §§ 970-971), holding that the privilege does not apply when a viable marital relationship no longer exists. Facts were undisputed that petitioner had had essentially no contact with her husband for 17 years, after he fled California to avoid prosecution for a double murder.

Finding the statutory scheme facially clear, the court of appeal held that the marital testimonial privilege contained express statutory exceptions (see Evid. Code § 972), which did not include whether the marital relationship was intact when one spouse asserted the privilege. The court also found that any additional exception could be created only by the legislature and not by judicial interpretation of the Evidence Code (93 Cal. App. 4th 886, 889) . The appellate court rejected the trial court's reliance on federal cases. Federal courts, interpreting federal rules, are expressly permitted to engage in common-law development of privileges and exceptions. California's statutory scheme, however, does not permit this approach, regardless of the strength of the government's policy argument in favor of such an exception, or the merits of the federal scheme. Moreover, California cases have consistently rejected attempts to judicially change a privilege or its exceptions, when the statutory term is clear on its face or has been defined by statute (see, e.g., Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 201, 206, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 716, 990 P.2d 591 , discussed in § 81.87[3][a]) (93 Cal. App. 4th 886, 897) . Accordingly, the court of appeal upheld the claim of privilege, even though petitioner had not seen her husband in the 17 years since the murders with which he was charged,and her assertion of the privilege might deprive the government of crucial evidence in a double murder case (93 Cal. App. 4th 886, 900) .

Duggan v. Superior Court (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 267, 179 Cal. Rptr. 410 was an action for dissolution of a partnership and an accounting. After defendant had obtained an order compelling the deposition of plaintiff's spouse, plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition to prevent the deposition. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the deposition could not be compelled in the face of the spousal privileges found in the Evidence Code. The court also rejected the argument of defendant that since plaintiff's action, if successful, would increase the value of the community estate, plaintiff's spouse was an immediate beneficiary of the action and thus within the exception to the rule of spousal immunity found in Evid. Code § 973(b) (127 Cal. App. 3d 267, 272) .

§ 81.291 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Confidential Marital Communication Privilege [Evid. Code § 980]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IS NOT SUBJECT TO DISCOVERY BECAUSE THE PERSON FROM WHOM IT IS SOUGHT HAS A MARITAL COMMUNICATIONS PRIVILEGE IN THAT THE COMMUNICATION WAS MADE IN CONFIDENCE TO HIS/HER SPOUSE WHILE THEY WERE HUSBAND AND WIFE.

A. Privilege Against Disclosure of Confidential Marital Communication. A spouse, whether or not a party, has a privilege during the marital relationship and afterwards to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a communication if he or she claims the privilege and the communication was made in confidence between the couple while they were husband and wife (Evid. Code § 980).

[Optional] B. Marital Privilege Is Not Restricted to Oral Communications. The marital privilege extends to written as well as oralcommunications, and includes videotapes (Rubio v. Superior Court (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1347-1348, 249 Cal. Rptr. 419 ; see Evid. Code § 250).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion to compel discovery by a party or person resisting discovery on the ground of the marital communication privilege of Evid. Code § 980. The ground for opposition is that the material sought is part of a confidential communication made to a spouse or former spouse during the course of their marriage.

While the confidential communication must have been made during the marriage relationship, the privilege may be asserted after the marriage has terminated [see Evid. Code § 980].

The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30], as well as a form resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.20].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Marital Communications

The marital communication privilege is distinct from the privilege to refuse to testify against a spouse provided by Evid. Code § 970. For a form opposing discovery based on Evid. Code § 970, see § 81.290.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Marital Privilege Is Not Restricted to Oral Communications

In Rubio v. Superior Court (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 249 Cal. Rptr. 419 , defendant was charged with molesting the seven-year-old daughter of his mother's employees. Defendant denied the molestation charges, and claimed the girl made up the story after viewing a videotape of her father and stepmother engaged in sexual acts. The girl's father and stepmotherrefused to turn the videotape over to the police and later moved to quash defendant's subpoena duces tecum to produce the videotape at his preliminary hearing. The magistrate granted their motion. At the preliminary hearing the girl was cross examined about what she saw on the tape. No objection was made to her testimony, although when called as witnesses, the couple asserted the marital privilege and refused to answer any questions concerning the videotape. After defendant was held to answer in superior court he again served the couple with a subpoena to produce the videotape, alleging the necessity of his access to the tape to show that the girl obtained her sexual knowledge and ideas concerning the alleged incident from the tape. The couple again sought to quash the subpoena. Their supporting affidavit established that the tape had been made by them privately in their home when no one else was present, that it was intended to be confidential, and that no one else had been given permission to view it. The trial court quashed the subpoena, concluding the marital privilege controlled. It ordered the couple to retain the tape until the issue of its discoverability was finally resolved by the appellate court. Defendant sought extraordinary writ relief. The court of appeal summarily denied a petition seeking reversal of the order quashing the subpoenas. The Supreme Court granted review, and directed the court of appeal to issue an alternative writ.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to reverse its order quashing the subpoena duces tecum, and ordered that it view the videotape in camera to determine whether defendant's right to due process outweighed the couple's constitutional privacy interests and their marital privilege. The court said that Evid. Code § 980 grants a spouse the privilege, during the marital relationship and afterwards, to refuse to disclose, and to prevent another from disclosing, a communication made between the couple while they were husband and wife, so long as the communication was made in confidence and the spouse asserts the privilege. The marital privilege extends to written as well as oral communications. A videotape is a writing within the meaning of Evid. Code § 250 (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1347) . The court observed that the fact of communicating, as opposed to the substance of the communication, is not privileged. Thus, the fact that sex acts were performed is probably not a privileged communication. Regardless, the videotape of those acts, as a writing, is a communication within the meaning of the privilege. A communication memorialized in ink does not diminish the spouse's intent to communicate confidentially. Neither does the recordation of the communication on videotape. Nor is the video camera a third party observer whose presence renders the communication nonconfidential. The court found that the couple took reasonable steps to preserve the tape's confidentiality by secreting it in the closet. The daughter's description of what she saw on the tape, as the recitation of an eavesdropper, is not privileged; themarital privilege does not apply to communications in the hands of a third party (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1348) .

The court also addressed the right of privacy, concluding that the videotapes invoked the couple's constitutional right of privacy (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1349) . The court found that it should intervene pretrial and order in camera review of the videotape to determine whether defendant's right to due process outweighs the couple's constitutional right of privacy and their statutory privilege not to disclose confidential marital communications. It concluded there was no way to balance those competing rights without viewing the tape itself (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1350) . The court reminded the trial court of its power to issue whatever protective orders are necessary should any further disclosure be compelled to preserve defendant's rights to a fair trial. The trial court might consider the appointment of a medical doctor to review the tape, provide a written report to the parties, and be available to provide expert testimony. That procedure might be sufficient to preserve defendant's due process rights without invading the couple's privacy rights any more than necessary. But any such remedy should be considered only after the trial court has made a preliminary determination, after in camera review, that some disclosure is required (202 Cal. App. 3d 1343, 1350-1351) .

§ 81.292 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery of Official Information [Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2)]--Discovery of Information in Police Investigative Files Sought in Civil Discovery

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

CONTENTS OF POLICE INVESTIGATIVE FILES SOUGHT IN CIVIL DISCOVERY MUST REMAIN CONFIDENTIAL AS LONG AS THE NEED FOR CONFIDENTIALITY OUTWEIGHS THE BENEFIT OF DISCLOSURE.

A. Evidence in Police Investigative Files Is Confidential. Evidence gathered by the police as part of an ongoing criminal investigation is by its nature confidential, pending the weighing of interestsunder Evidence Code Section 1040(b)(2). There is no need to separately analyze the manner in which each element was obtained for application of the official information privilege (County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 765-766 ; see Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2); Gov. Code § 6254(f)).

B. Information in Police Investigative Files Sought in Civil Discovery Remains Confidential When Need for Confidentiality Outweighs Benefit of Disclosure. The official information privilege applies to prohibit disclosure of information in police investigative files sought in civil discovery when the public interest in solving the crime and bringing the perpetrator to justice outweighs the civil litigants interest in obtaining the discovery sought (County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 765) .

[2] Comments

This form is for use in opposing a motion to compel discovery of police investigative files sought in a civil action on the ground that the information is privileged under the official information privilege of Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2).

The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30], as well as a form resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.20].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the moving party has failed to show that the benefits of disclosure outweigh the need for confidentiality required to proceed with the official investigation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence in Police Investigative Files Is Confidential

County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 involved a challenge to a superior court's order allowing suspects in an ongoing murder investigation to review the contents of the police investigative file through the medium of civil discovery. Suspects(real parties in interest), parents of a murdered child, filed a civil suit for defamation, conversion, spoilation of evidence and various civil rights violations, as a result of their initial detention and questioning by police and their public identification as suspects by police. The real parties in interest argued that much of the information contained in the investigative file, including their own statements, as well as the statements made by other witnesses, was not "acquired in confidence" and thus was not privileged under Evid. Code § 1040(a) (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 763-764) . The court, however, found no need to separately analyze the manner in which each element was obtained for application of the official information privilege. Instead, the court concluded that evidence gathered by the police as part of an ongoing criminal investigation is by its nature confidential, pending the weighing of interests under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2) (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 765-766) . In support of its position, the court cited case and statutory law recognizing confidentiality of investigative files (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 765-766) .

[b] Information in Police Investigative Files Sought in Civil Discovery Remains Confidential When Need for Confidentiality Outweighs Benefit of Disclosure

The facts and procedural background of County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 are discussed in [a], above. Citing Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 126, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161 , discussed in § 81.276[3][a], the court stated that the weighing procedure entails a separate assessment of the necessity of disclosure in the interests of justice and the necessity for preserving the confidentiality of the information (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 765) . Implicit in each assessment is a consideration of the consequences to the litigant of nondisclosure, and the consequences to the public of disclosure (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 765) . The court found that the public interest in solving a child's homicide and bringing the perpetrator to justice outweighed the murdered child's parents' interest in obtaining the discovery sought in their civil suit for defamation, conversion, spoilation of evidence and various civil rights violations, based on their public identification by police as suspects. Thus, police files in the ongoing criminal investigation into the child's murder were held to be privileged under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2). The appropriate remedy in this case was for the trial court to stay discovery of the investigative information in the civil action in order to allow the police the necessary time to investigate. However, in the future, the trial court could determine that there has not been enough progress in the investigation to justify continued protection of most of the files (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 768-769) . The court of appeal suggested that the trial court look for guidance from trade secret cases in fashioning a remedy to determine what parts of the investigative file to disclose when the passageof time reversed the balance of competing interests (79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 769) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Information in Police Investigative Files Sought in Civil Discovery Remains Confidential When Need for Confidentiality Outweighs Benefit of Disclosure

In Dixon v. Superior Court (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 1271, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 847 , petitioner reporter requested the complete coroner and autopsy reports of a murder victim from real party in interest sheriff-coroner under the California Public Records Act (CPRA), Gov. Code § 6250 et seq. The sheriff-coroner denied the request, and respondent Superior Court denied the reporter's petition for writ of mandate. The reporter sought writ review, and the court of appeal issued an alternative writ. The reviewing court applied Gov. Code § 6254(f), which exempts from public disclosure investigatory files compiled by any local agency for law enforcement purposes. The court concluded "emphatically" that the office of the coroner is a local agency, that, as part of its local agency duties, compiles investigatory files for law enforcement purposes (170 Cal. App. 4th 1271, 1276) . Accordingly, these coroner and autopsy reports that constituted investigations of a suspected homicide death--in which the prospect of criminal law enforcement proceedings was concrete and definite--were public records that were exempt from disclosure under Gov. Code § 6254(f) (170 Cal. App. 4th 1271, 1279) .

The facts and procedural background of Michael P. v. Superior Court (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 11 are discussed in § 81.276[4][b]. The court of appeal noted the striking procedural similarity between this case and County of Orange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 759, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 261 (discussed in [3][a], [b], above): both were writ proceedings involving the application of the official information privilege to a murder investigation file which the prime suspects sought to obtain through civil discovery. However, this court declined to follow County of Orange, in which police were allowed to maintain the confidentiality of the entire investigative file "for some reasonable period of time" without any particularized judicial review of its contents. This court reasoned that a litigant's interest in prosecuting a civil action for damages, as in County of Orange, "pales" in comparison to petitioner father's interest, in this case, in having custody of his child (92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1045-1046) . Accordingly, the court of appeal concluded that the juvenile court abused its discretion by failing to conduct an in camera review of the requested items before ruling on real parties' motion to quash under Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2) (92 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1046) .

H. Miscellaneous Evidence Code Privileges

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.293

§ 81.293 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Newsperson's Qualified Privilege to Protect News Source Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IS NOT SUBJECT TO DISCOVERY BECAUSE IT IS PROTECTED BY A NEWSPERSON'S QUALIFIEDPRIVILEGE TO PROTECT THE CONFIDENTIALITY OF A NEWS SOURCE.

A. Newsperson's First-Amendment Privilege to Protect News Source. In a civil action a reporter, editor, or publisher has a qualified privilege to withhold disclosure of the identity of confidential sources and of unpublished information supplied by such sources, based on the broad protections for freedom of the press guaranteed by the United States Constitution, Amendment I, and the California Constitution, Article I, Section 2(a) (Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 274, 279, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 ; see O'Grady v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 ; KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 384-386, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211).

B. Availability of Privilege Depends on Balancing of Relevant Factors in Each Case. The availability of the qualified newsperson's privilege in a given case depends on the consideration and weighing of a number of interrelated factors: (1) the nature of the litigation and whether the newsperson is a party; (2) whether the information sought is relevant to the extent that it goes to heart of the plaintiff's claim; (3) whether the party seeking discovery has exhausted all alternative means of obtaining the needed information; (4) the importance of protecting confidentiality under the circumstances; and (5) whether, in a defamation action, the plaintiff has made a prima facie showing that the alleged defamatory statements are false (Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 279-284, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 ; see O'Grady v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 ; Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1080, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 597 ; KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 385, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211).

[Optional] C. Privilege Applies in Libel Action Against Newsperson When Plaintiff Fails to Show That Information Sought Goes to Heart of Claim, That There Are No Alternative Sources, and That Alleged Defamatory Statements Are False. In a defamation action against a newsperson, the qualified privilege should apply to prevent disclosure of confidential sources, or of unpublished information supplied by those sources, when the plaintiff's request for information is overly broad and is not limited to information that goes to the heart of the plaintiff's claim, when the plaintiff has made no showing that alternative means of obtaining the information have been exhausted, and when the plaintiff has made no prima facie showing that the alleged defamatory statements are false (Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 282-284, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 ; see KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 385, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211).

[2] Comments

This form is for use by a newsperson party in opposing a motion to compel discovery of his or her notes concerning a confidential source on the ground that the material sought is privileged under a newsperson's qualified right, guaranteed by U.S. Const., amend. I, and Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(a), to protect the confidentiality of a news source.

The form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30], as well as a form resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.20].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the moving party has failed to show that the information sought is unavailable from any other source or that the materials desired actually go to the heart of the claim.

[c] Newsperson's First-Amendment Privilege Distinguished From Newsperson's Immunity From Contempt

The constitutional provisions protecting the freedom of the press provide a qualified privilege to withhold disclosure of the identity of confidential sources or unpublished information [U.S. Const., amend. I; Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(a)]. This qualified privilege arising under constitutional protections of freedom of the press is distinct from the newsperson's shield of immunity from contempt for refusing to disclose either published information or the source of information procured for publication [see Evid. Code § 1070]. The media shield law provides an almost absolute immunity against contempt which cannot be overcome even "by a showing of need for unpublished information" [New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 461, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811] . It is, however, just that, an immunity against contempt sanctions, rather than the more expansive protection afforded by an evidentiary privilege against disclosurethrough discovery or testimony [In re Willon (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1091, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 245] . Thus, the shield law does not protect against such non-contempt penalties as monetary and issue-preclusion sanctions [New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 462, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811] . For points and authorities relating to the media shield law, see § 81.294.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Newsperson's Qualified Privilege to Protect News Source

Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 involved a libel action by a church and its founder against a magazine and several individual newspersons, based on an allegedly defamatory article that implied that plaintiffs enriched themselves by soliciting funds on the basis of fraudulent claims concerning their success in drug rehabilitation work. Plaintiffs requested extensive discovery of the source material of two defendant newspersons, and these newspersons objected on the ground that the information sought was privileged under federal and state constitutional provisions protecting freedom of the press. The trial court held that there was no such privilege and ordered defendants to comply with plaintiffs' requests. Defendants then sought a writ of prohibition to bar enforcement of the trial court's order.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that the trial court erred in ruling that there was no newsperson's privilege in California (37 Cal. 3d 268, 283-284) . The Court, in reviewing pertinent federal decisions, noted that there were competing fundamental values involved. On one hand, the broad protections for freedom of the press guaranteed by U.S. Const., amend. I, and Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(a), argued in favor of a newsperson's privilege against disclosure of sources because news vital to the public interest could frequently be gathered only from sources that would not come forward in the absence of some guarantee of confidentiality. On the other hand, other values argued in favor of disclosure, such as an individual's interest in his or her reputation, the court's interest in discovering the truth, and the duty of witnesses to testify (37 Cal. 3d 268, 274-275) . The Court therefore concluded that in a civil action, the constitutional provisions protecting freedom of the press gave a reporter, editor, or publisher a qualified privilege to withhold disclosure of the identity of confidential sources and of unpublished information supplied by those sources (37 Cal. 3d 268, 279) .

In O'Grady v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1460-1466, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 , real party in interest, Apple Computer, Inc. (Apple) brought an action alleging that "persons unknown" caused the wrongful publication on the World Wide Web of Apple's secret plans to release a device that would facilitate the creation of digital live sound recordings on Apple computers. The trial court granted Apple authority to issue civil subpoenas to the publishers of the Web sites where the information appeared and to the email service provider for one of the publishers. The publishers moved for a protective order. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that the publishers had involved themselves in the unlawful misappropriation of a trade secret. The publishers filed a writ of mandate to prevent enforcement of the discovery order.

The court of appeal reversed. It held, in part, that discovery of confidential sources was barred by the conditional constitutional privilege against compulsory disclosure of confidential sources. The court determined, first, that the publishers of online news magazines were reporters, editors, or publishers for purposes of this privilege, finding "no sustainable basis to distinguish petitioners from the reporters, editors, and publishers who provide news to the public through traditional print and broadcast media" (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1467) . The court then applied the balancing process outlined in Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 (see [b], below) to conclude that discovery of the publishers' sources was barred by newsreporter's qualified first amendment privilege, primarily because Apple failed to show that it had exhausted alternative avenues of investigation (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1479) . For more detailed discussion of the court's application of the Mitchell factors in this case, see [b], below. For discussion of the application of California reporter's shield privilege (Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b) and Evid. Code § 1070), refer to § 81.294[3][d].

KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211 involved an action for libel by members of a city police department against a radio station, one of its reporters, and a newspaper publisher, arising from a news story broadcast by the station and repeated by thenewspaper that implicated plaintiffs' involvement in a drug smuggling operation. During a deposition conducted by plaintiffs, defendant reporter revealed the sources of his information that had led to the news story. Plaintiffs then brought a motion to produce documents seeking the reporter's notes and memoranda of conversations between the reporter and certain named persons. The trial court granted the motion, and defendants filed a petition for a writ of mandate or prohibition to prevent enforcement of the discovery order.

The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing the trial court to annul its discovery order. In framing its holding, the court held that a newsperson has a qualified privilege to confidentiality of a news source, deriving from the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, which reflects the premise that unless there is a constitutionally protected right to gather news, including the use of confidential sources, the free flow of information to the public would be inhibited (136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 384) .

[b] Availability of Privilege Depends on Balancing of Relevant Factors in Each Case

The facts and procedural background of Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 are discussed in [a], above. The Supreme Court, in holding that California courts should recognize a newsperson's qualified privilege against disclosure of confidential sources, held that the scope of the privilege in any given case depended on consideration and weighing of the following interrelated factors (37 Cal. 3d 268, 279) :

(1) The nature of the litigation and whether the newsperson is a party. For example, disclosure is, in general, appropriate in a libel action when a newsperson is a party, except when other factors weigh against disclosure (37 Cal. 3d 268, 279-280) .

(2) The relevance of the information sought to the plaintiff's cause of action. Mere relevance is insufficient to compel discovery. Discovery should be denied unless the information goes to the heart of a plaintiff's claim (37 Cal. 3d 268, 280) .

(3) The fact that discovery should be denied unless the plaintiff has exhausted all alternative means of obtaining the needed information. Compulsory disclosure is a last resort, permissible only when the party seeking disclosure has no other practical means of obtaining the information (37 Cal. 3d 268, 282) .

(4) The importance of protecting confidentiality in the case at bench. Thus, when the information sought relates to matters of great public importance and the risk of harm to the source is a substantial one, the court may refuse to require disclosure even though the plaintiff has no other way of obtaining essential information (37 Cal. 3d 268, 282-283) .

(5) In a defamation action, the fact that the court may require the plaintiff to make a prima facie showing that the alleged defamatory statements are false before requiring disclosure. A showing of falsity is not a prerequisite to discovery, but it may be essential to tip the balance in favor of discovery (37 Cal. 3d 268, 283) .

The factual and procedural background of O'Grady v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1460-1466, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 is set out in [3][a], above. In this case alleging misappropriation of trade secrets, the court of appeal applied the five factors outlined in Mitchell v. Superior Court, discussed above, to the circumstances shown by respondent computer company (Apple) to determine whether the qualified newsreporter's privilege was available to petitioner publishers of online news magazines.

The first factor noted in Mitchell--the "nature of the litigation and whether the reporter is a party"--favored nondisclosure, because this was not a libel action and petitioner publishers were not defendants (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1468-1470) . The second factor--the "relevance of the information sought to plaintiff's cause of action"--favored disclosure. When a plaintiff alleges a misappropriation of its trade secrets, the identity of the misappropriator is crucial to the plaintiff's cause of action (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1470-1471) . The third Mitchell factor--the extent to which the party seeking disclosure of confidential sources has "exhausted all alternative sources of obtaining the needed information"--weighed "decisively" against disclosure, based on the inadequacy of Apple's showing that it had exhausted alternative avenues of investigation (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1471-1475) . Although the third factor was dispositive, the court commented on the remaining two factors. The fourth consideration--the "importance of protecting confidentiality in the case at hand"--favored disclosure, because, in this case, the "statutory quasi-property right [in trade secrets] ... must give way, not the deeply rooted constitutional right to share and acquire information" (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1475-1479) . The fifth and final consideration--whether the plaintiff had made a prima facie case that the challenged statements were false--favored disclosure, because evidence supported an inference of wrongdoing on someone's part. On balance, however, the factors favoring disclosure did not outweigh the countervailing factors favoring application of the privilege (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1479-1480) .

One court of appeal has articulated an additional factor that may apply in determining whether the qualified journalist's privilege is available, that is: the extent to which a defendant obtained and used information for a journalistic purpose. In Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 597 , plaintiffs were 17 political activists opposed to certain policies of the governments of South Africa and Israel. They sued defendant Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith (ADL) under Civ. Code § 1798.53, which provides a statutory cause of action for invasion of privacy resulting from an intentional disclosure of personal information, not otherwise public, obtained from a state agency. Their claims alleged that ADL had secretly obtained from San Francisco police officers information relating to plaintiffs that was personal and not otherwise public, and that ADL had privately disclosed such information to the governments of South Africa and Israel (67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1077-1078) .

Plaintiffs sought production of documents. ADL moved for a protective order on the ground that it is a journalist protected by the qualified journalist's privilege set forth in Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 (1079) , discussed above. The trial court ruled that ADL qualified as a journalist based on its publication of magazines and newsletters, and granted the protective order as against the plaintiffs' request as then phrased. The trial court stayed subsequent attempts without prejudice until plaintiffs could establish entitlement to discovery under Mitchell (67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1080) . Later, plaintiffs' requested reconsideration of their request for discovery, and the trial court ruled that they had met the Mitchell criteria and were entitled to discovery of specified items (67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1082-1083) . Defendants petitioned for review, arguing that discovery from ADL could be compelled because it cannot, consistent with free press guarantees, be liable under Civ. Code § 1798.53, and alternatively because plaintiffs did not satisfy the requirements of Mitchell (67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1083) .

The court of appeal noted that ADL was indeed a journalist entitled to claim the qualified privilege, since it published newsletters and a magazine. Defendant also performed other nonjournalistic functions, however, in its general activities as a civil rights organization. The court concluded that the qualified privilege applied, but defendant would be entitled to First Amendment protection from liability under Civil Code § 1798.53 only to the extent that defendant obtained, used, and disseminated information for a journalistic purpose (67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1091-1092) . Thus,plaintiffs were entitled to limited discovery to determine whether defendant had in fact obtained personal and nonpublic information and whether it had in fact disseminated such information for a nonjournalistic purpose, in private disclosures to foreign governments or other not acting as ADL journalists (67 Cal. App. 4th 1072, 1098) .

The facts and procedural background of KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211 are discussed in [a], above. In KSDO, the court of appeal provided a general discussion of the extent and scope of the newsperson's qualified First Amendment privilege. The court stated that in facing the question of whether to compel disclosure of the newsperson's confidential source, a court must make a factual analysis to determine (1) the nature of the proceeding, (2) the status of the newsperson as a party or nonparty, (3) alternative sources of information, and (4) the relationship of the information sought to be discovered to the heart of the claim involved in the action (136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 385) .

[c] Privilege Applies in Libel Action Against Newsperson When Plaintiff Fails to Show That Information Sought Goes to Heart of Claim, That There Are No Alternative Sources, and That Alleged Defamatory Statements Are False

The facts and procedural background of Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690

P.2d 625 are discussed in [a], above. The factors weighed by the Supreme Court to determine whether the newsperson's qualified privilege should apply to prevent discovery in the case at issue are discussed in [b], above. After balancing these factors, the Court concluded that the privilege applied to prevent discovery to the extent ordered by the trial court (37 Cal. 3d 268, 284) . Despite the fact that discovery was generally appropriate in a libel action in which a newsperson was a defendant, several other factors weighed against disclosure. The Court found that the discovery order was overly broad and was not limited to the disclosure of source material that related to the alleged libelous statements that went to the heart of plaintiff's claim (37 Cal. 3d 268, 282, 284) . Moreover, plaintiffs had not shown that alternative sources had been exhausted, nor had they made a prima facie showing of the falsity of the alleged defamatory statements (37 Cal. 3d 268, 284) .

The facts and procedural background of KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211 are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal stated that when the newsperson is a party to a libel case and the truth or falsity of the material published is an essential issue, the reliability of the source or accuracy of the reporter's notes is called into focus. It observed that production of a newsperson's notes can be essential to the successful prosecution of the action, particularly when the plaintiff is a public figure who must prove malice (136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 385-386 ,citing Garland v. Torre (2d Cir. 1958) 259 F.2d 545 (applying heart-of-claim test), and Branzburg v. Hayes (1972) 408 U.S. 665, 686, 92 S. Ct. 2646, 33 L. Ed. 2d 626 (leaving Garland rule intact)). The court stated that, even though the newsperson's status as a party to a civil libel case would ordinarily tip scales in favor of disclosure, since defendant reporter had already revealed the identity of his source on deposition, thereby leaving plaintiff free to test the reliability of the source without the necessity of disclosure of his notes, plaintiff had not shown that the information could not be obtained from other sources or that the materials sought actually went to the heart of the claim (136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 386) .

§ 81.294 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Unpublished Information or Source of Nonparty Newsperson Protected From Discovery by Contempt Shield Law [Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b); Evid. Code § 1070]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

_____ [Name of newsperson] CANNOT BE HELD IN CONTEMPT FOR FAILING TO REVEAL INFORMATION SOUGHT IN DISCOVERY BECAUSE HE/SHE/IT IS A NONPARTY NEWSPERSON AND THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IS WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE NEWSPERSON SHIELD.

A. Unpublished Information or Source of Nonparty Newsperson Is Shielded. A publisher, editor, reporter, or other person connected with or employed on a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, or by a press association or a wire service, or any other person who has been so connected or employed, cannot be adjudged in contempt by a judicial, legislative, or administrative body, or any other body having the power to issue subpoenas, for refusing to disclose, in any proceeding as defined in Evid. Code § 901, the source of any information procured while so connected or employed for publication in a newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication, or for refusing to disclose any unpublished information obtained or prepared in gathering, receiving, orprocessing of information for communication to the public (Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b); Evid. Code § 1070).

[Optional] B. Nonconfidential Information Is Within Scope of Shield. The term "unpublished information" in the provision for a newsperson's shield from contempt, which is created by California Constitution, Article I, Section 2(b), and Evidence Code Section 1070, includes information not obtained by a newsperson in confidence. Thus, it includes a newsperson's nonconfidential, eyewitness observations of an occurrence in a public place, as well as a newspaper's unpublished photographs of an automobile accident on a public highway (see Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 785, 797-799, 268 Cal. Rptr. 753, 789 P.2d 934 ; New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 461, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811).

[Optional] C. Shield Encompasses Source Materials Merely Confirming or Amplifying Published Information. The protection set out in California Constitution, Article I, Section 2(b), and Evidence Code Section 1070 extends to materials that could confirm or amplify published information (Playboy Enterprises, Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23, 201 Cal. Rptr. 207).

[Optional] D. Criminal Defendant Seeking Disclosure of Unpublished Information Must Show Disclosure Will Materially Assist His or Her Defense. Once the nonparty newsperson meets the requirements of the shield law, any criminal defendant who seeks to compel disclosure on the ground that nondisclosure would violate the defendant's federal constitutional right to a fair trial must make a threshold showing that it is reasonably possible that unpublished information sought is necessary to his or her defense. The defendant's showing need not be detailed or specific but must rest on more than mere speculation (People v. Sanchez (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 1, 53, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 906 P.2d 1129 , overruled in part, 45 Cal. 4th 390 (2009) ; People v. Cooper (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 771, 820, 809 P.2d 865).

[Optional] E. Shield is Available to Online Journalists. The phrase "newspaper, magazine, or other periodical publication" in California Constitution, Article I, Section 2(b) applies to online news magazines. Therefore, online journalists are "reporters," "editors," or "publishers" entitled to assert the protections of the shield law (O'Grady v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1460-1466, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72).

This form is for use in opposing a contempt sanction when the newsperson is threatened with being held in contempt for failing to reveal information encompassed by the immunity provided by the newsperson's shield. With appropriate modification, the form may be used to oppose a motion to compel discovery of a newsperson or news organization's notes or other materials that are related to material published in a newspaper or periodical when the newsperson or organization is not a party to the underlying proceedings, on the theory that any order compelling discovery is inappropriate in that the newsperson cannot be held in contempt for failure to comply with discovery, and there would be no purpose served by such a discovery order. For discussion of a newsperson's qualified privilege that may apply to protect a confidential news source when the newsperson is a party, see § 81.293. This form may be combined with a general form in opposition to a motion to compel discovery.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should show that the newsperson or organization against which the order is sought is not a party to the underlying litigation, and that the material sought is related to information that was published in a newspaper or periodical.

[c] Newsperson's Shield Provides Immunity From Contempt

A reporter or other person connected with the news media is immune from contempt for refusing to disclose either unpublished information or the source of information procured for publication [Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b); Evid. Code § 1070]. Commonly referred to as the newsperson's shield, the protection thereby created is only an immunity from contempt; no privilege is created [see New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 458, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811] . Even when the shield is applicable, it is narrowly construed and protects the newsperson only from the imposition of a contempt sanction. Other sanctions may be imposed against the newsperson [New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 458, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811 (shield does not preclude monetary sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 1992, which provides, in part, that a witness who fails to obey a subpoena or a court order also forfeits to the aggrieved party the sum of $500, and all damages that that party sustains by reason of the failure of the witness to attend, decided under prior law)].

When the newsperson is a party, the newsperson's qualified First Amendment privilege to gather news may become an issue, in which case the court may apply a balancing test to determine whether that newsperson may be compelled to disclose a confidential news source [see Playboy Enterprises v. Superior Court (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 27, 201 Cal. Rptr. 207 ; KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375, 384, 186 Cal. Rptr. 211 ; see § 81.293].

[d] Additional Statutory Protections for Journalists Invoking Shield Law

Additional statutory protections exist with respect to the contempt immunity shield as set out in Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b). No testimony or other evidence given by a journalist under subpoena in a civil or criminal proceeding may be construed as a waiver of the immunity rights provided by Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1986.1(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1986.1(d) ("journalist" means persons specified in Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b)]. In addition, except in exigent circumstances, a journalist who is subpoenaed in a civil or criminal proceeding must be given at least five days' notice that his or her appearance will be required [Code Civ. Proc. § 1986.1(b)]. If a trial court holds a journalist in contempt of court in a criminal proceeding despite the constitutional provision, the court must set forth findings, either in writing or on the record, stating, at a minimum, why the information will be of material assistance to the party seeking the evidence, and why alternate sources of the information are not sufficient to satisfy the defendant's right to a fair trial under the Sixth Amendment [Code Civ. Proc. § 1986.1(c)].

Note that, when a journalist testifies for the defense in a criminal proceeding, but then invokes the shield law to resist proper cross examination by the prosecution, that journalist's direct testimony may, on motion by the prosecution, be barred or stricken, even if it did not consist of "unpublished information" protected by the shield law, unless the criminal defendant can show that the court's refusal to admit the direct testimony would deprive him or her of the federal constitutional right to a fair trial and that, in the circumstances, defendant's right transcends that of the witness under the shield law [Fost v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 724, 733-734, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 620] .

[e] Relief Inappropriate Until Newsperson Held in Contempt

Because the shield law provides only an immunity from contempt, there is nothing from which to seek relief until a newsperson has been adjudged in contempt, thus a newsperson's petition for extraordinary relief is generally premature until a judgment of contempt has been entered [cf. Optional Paragraph D]. To avoid confinement under a judgment of contempt that may subsequently be set aside, a trial court should stay its judgment of contempt to allow the contemner newsperson sufficient time in which to seek writ relief if it believes there is any colorable argument the newsperson can make against the contempt adjudication. If the trial court nevertheless declines to issue a stay, a reviewing court should do so pending its decision whether to issue an extraordinary writ [New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 459-461, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonconfidential Information Is Within Scope of Shield

In Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 785, 268 Cal. Rptr. 753, 789 P.2d 934 , two newspaper reporters accompanying two police officers on patrol observed their encounter with defendant, an individual later charged with illegal possession of brass knuckles. When asking him for his identification, the officers discovered the brass knuckles in defendant's jacket pocket. A few days later, the newspaper published a story about the police department and included information regarding the police contact with defendant, but did not refer to whether he had consented to the search of his jacket. In support of his motion to suppress evidence of the brass knuckles, based on an illegal search due to lack of consent, defendant subpoenaed the reporters to testify at the hearing. The reporters' motions to quash the subpoenas on the grounds their eyewitness observations of the public search and seizure were unpublished information protected by the newsperson shield were denied. At the hearing, the reporters refused to answer any questions concerning whether defendant had consented to the search. The municipal court cited the reporters for contempt. The reporters filed petitions for writ of habeas corpus with the superior court, which granted their petitions. Defendant and The People filed a joint petition in the court of appeal, seeking to vacate the orders of the superior court. The court of appeal ordered the superior court to vacate its orders.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal and directed it to issue a peremptory writ of mandate compelling the superior court to vacate its orders. Before discussing the scope of the meaning of "unpublished information," the Court emphasized the importance of the fact that the reporters were acting as newspersons and were directly engaged in the process of gathering, receiving, or processing information for communication to the public, and were thereby within the scope of the shield law when they made the observations in question (50 Cal. 3d 785, 797-798) . The parties seeking discovery argued that shield applies only to unpublished information obtained in confidence by a newsperson. The Court disagreed, saying use of the phrase "any unpublished information" made it clear that it applies to all information, regardless of whether it was obtained in confidence (50 Cal. 3d 785, 798) . The Court also found support for its conclusion by observing that nowhere in the constitutional definition of "unpublished information" is there an explicit or implied restriction of the shield to confidential information (50 Cal. 3d 785, 799) . The Court concluded by holding that the shield is not contingent on a showing that a newsperson's unpublished information was obtained in confidence, and that "unpublished information" includes a newsperson's nonconfidential, eyewitness observation of an occurrence in a public place (50 Cal. 3d 785, 805) .

After making this conclusion, the Court discussed whether the newsperson's protection under the shield law must yield to a criminal defendant's constitutional right to a fair trial when the newsperson's refusal to disclose information would unduly infringe on that right, and the Court ultimately concluded that the protection provision must yield (50 Cal. 3d 785, 805-817) . It specifically distinguished the application of the balancing test articulated in Mitchell v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 268, 208 Cal. Rptr. 152, 690 P.2d 625 (discussed in § 81.293[3][a]), which was a defamation action, saying an identical approach is not entirely appropriate in a criminal proceeding (50 Cal. 3d 785, 807) .

In New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811 , defendant automobile manufacturer in a product liability action arising out of an automobile accident sought discovery of unpublished photographs of the accident taken by a photographer working for the local newspaper. Defendant had served the newspaper with a subpoena for production of all photographs in its possession that related to the accident. The trial court quashed the subpoena, but ordered the newspaper to compare its photographs with those taken by the Highway Patrol to determine if its photographs contained any pertinent information not revealed by the Highway Patrol photographs. The newspaper did so and concluded that its photographs did contain some pertinent information of very little value. It opposed defendant's subsequent motion to compel production of the photographs, arguing that since it was not a party, its unpublished photographs were absolutely protected by the newsperson's shield. The trial court concluded that the newspaper had only a qualified privilege and ordered it to produce its photographs for in camera inspection so that the court could determine whether the claim of privilege was outweighed by defendant's right to discover relevant information. The newspaper petitioned the court of appeal for an extraordinary writ and stay of the trial court's order. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order and issue a new order denying defendant's motion.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Court initially observed that the newspaper's petition for extraordinary relief was premature because a judgment of contempt had not been entered. It explained that Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b), and Evid. Code § 1070, provide a shield of immunity only from contempt; they do not create a privilege. Thus, there is nothing from which to seek relief until a newsperson has been adjudged in contempt (51 Cal. 3d 453, 459) . However, after acknowledging the premature nature of the petition, the Court proceeded to the merits of the dispute without remanding the case to the trial court for the purpose of entering a contempt judgment, explaining that no purpose would be served by doing so (51 Cal. 3d 453, 460-461) . The Court, citing Delaney, said that the shield law's protection is not contingent on ashowing that a newsperson's unpublished information was obtained in confidence, and then concluded that the newspaper's unpublished photographs are clearly within the scope of the shield law. The Court said that nothing in its language or history suggested that the immunity provided by the shield law is qualified so that it can be overcome by a showing of need for the unpublished information within the scope of the shield law (51 Cal. 3d 453, 461) . Characterizing the instant case as a typical personal injury action for damages, in which a party seeks discovery of photographs taken by a nonparty newsperson in a public place, the Court distinguished it from Delaney. Delaney was a criminal case, which required a balancing of a newsperson's interest against a criminal defendant's well-established federal constitutional right to a fair trial from the case at issue. The Court said there was no federal or state constitutional right of the party seeking discovery sufficient to overcome the newspaper's claim of immunity under the state shield law. However, it specifically did not foreclose the possibility that in a future case a civil litigant seeking discovery from a nonparty newsperson might have either a state or federal constitutional right that would have to be weighed against a claim of immunity under the shield law (51 Cal. 3d 453, 462) .

Finally, the Court concluded that because the shield is a shield against contempt only, it provides no immunity for other applicable sanctions. Thus, defendant was entitled to bring an independent civil action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1992 against the newspaper for a $500 forfeiture, plus those damages sustained because of the newspaper's failure to comply with the subpoena. Although, as a policy matter, it might make sense to extend the immunity to all sanctions, in order to avoid the subversion of the policy of protecting unpublished information, the Court declined to do so, saying that determining what the shield law should do was beyond its authority. The language of the statutes was unambiguous, and any changes had to come from the Legislature (51 Cal. 3d 453, 462-463) .

[b] Shield Encompasses Source Materials Merely Confirming or Amplifying Published Information

Playboy Enterprises, Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 201 Cal. Rptr. 207 involved an action for fraud by plaintiff entertainers against their accountants. Defendants in the suit sought discovery from a magazine of source materials for an interview of plaintiffs published in the magazine. Plaintiffs also sought discovery of the address and whereabouts of the individual who wrote the interview. After the magazine refused to provide the requested information and materials, the trial court issued an order compelling discovery. The magazine thereupon petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ directing the trial court to vacate its order for production of source materials, but also directed it to issuea new order compelling disclosure of the whereabouts of the author of the interview. The court held that the source materials sought by defendants were covered by the newsperson's shield from contempt set forth in Evid. Code § 1070, and noted that the provisions of Evid. Code § 1070 had been given constitutional status by the adoption of the virtually identical provisions in Cal. Const., art. I, § 2 (154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23-24) . The court distinguished KSDO v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 375 (discussed in § 81.293[3][a]), noting that in that case the newsperson was a party. It said that KSDO had applied the First Amendment rather than Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, and Evid. Code § 1070 because a discovery order against a party can be enforced by civil discovery remedies other than contempt, against which Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, and Evid. Code § 1070 do not offer protection (154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 27) . The court rejected a construction of Cal. Const., art. I, § 2, and Evid. Code § 1070 that would render the newsperson's shield inapplicable whenever the unpublished material sought would confirm or amplify the published information because nothing new would be disclosed by the unpublished materials. The court said that the newsperson's shield applied whether or not published information based on or related to the material sought had been disseminated. The court stated that by necessity published material that could or would be confirmed, amplified or discredited by undisseminated source material is related to or based on such unpublished material (154 Cal. App. 3d 14, 23) .

[c] Criminal Defendant Seeking Disclosure of Unpublished Information Must Show Disclosure Will Materially Assist His or Her Defense

In People v. Sanchez (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 1, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 906 P.2d 1129 , overruled in part, 45 Cal. 4th 390 (2009) , a newspaper reporter interviewed the defendant after his arrest for murder. During the guilt phase of trial, the prosecution subpoenaed the newsperson as a witness, and, on cross-examination, the newsperson made a claim of immunity from contempt under the shield law. The defendant sought to compel disclosure by claiming that the newsperson's claim of immunity was premature under New York Times Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 453, 459-461, 273 Cal. Rptr. 98, 796 P.2d 811 (discussed in [a], above). The Court explained that its earlier holding in New York Times was based on a reasoning that granting precontempt relief from disclosure "would deprive trial courts of the opportunity to decide whether the shield law applies to the facts of the case." The Court held that this reasoning did not apply to foreclose a nonparty newsperson from asserting his or her "shield law" immunity as a basis for nondisclosure during cross-examination in a criminal case. The defendant argued that nondisclosure would deprive him of his constitutional right to a fair trial, but the Court concluded that the trial court had not erred in allowingnondisclosure. The defendant's showing consisted only of mere speculation (an unsupported claim that disclosure would impeach the nonparty's newsperson's credibility) or assertions that otherwise failed to show any possible deprivation of the right to a fair trial (in this instance an assertion undermining the defendant's own credibility, in that he claimed to have made inconsistent statements during the interview) (12 Cal. 4th 1, 48-57) , overruled in part, 45 Cal. 4th 390 (2009) .

In People v. Cooper (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 771, 809 P.2d 865 , a newspaper received a letter purportedly written by a sheriff homicide detective, criticizing the investigation of charges of murder filed against defendant. In the defendant's criminal trial, the court quashed defendant's subpoena seeking to compel the newspaper to produce the letter. Although the newspaper had not been held in contempt, the Supreme Court affirmed the action of the trial court, concluding in effect that the Shield Law was a proper basis to quash the subpoena. If the Shield Law is asserted by a nonparty newsperson in a criminal case to avoid disclosure of unpublished material, the criminal defendant can compel disclosure only by showing that nondisclosure would infringe his or her constitutional right to a fair trial; the defendant must make a threshold showing (which the defendant had failed to do in this case), of a reasonable possibility that the unpublished information would materially assist the defense. While the showing need not be detailed or specific, it must be more than mere speculation; if the defendant's threshold showing is adequate, the court then conducts a balancing test to decide whether disclosure is warranted (53 Cal. 3d 771, 818-820) .

[d] Shield is Available to Online Journalists

The factual and procedural background of O'Grady v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 72 is set out in § 81.293[3][a]. In this case alleging misappropriation of trade secrets, the court of appeal held, in part, that any subpoenas seeking unpublished information from the online magazines' publishers would be unenforceable through contempt proceedings in light of the California reporter's shield privilege (Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(b) and Evid. Code § 1070). The court concluded that the "open and deliberate" publication on a news-oriented Web site of news gathered for that purpose by site's operators was indistinguishable from publishing a newspaper, with respect to application of the shield law (139 Cal. App. 4th 1423, 1459-1460) . For discussion of other aspects of this case, refer to § 81.293[3][a], [b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nonconfidential Information Is Within Scope of Privilege

In Miller v. Superior Court (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 883, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 834, 986 P.2d 170 , the California Supreme Court resolved the issue left unresolved in Delaney v. Superior Court (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 785, 268 Cal. Rptr. 753, 789 P.2d 934 (discussed in § 81.294[3][a]): whether the prosecution in a criminal proceeding can have a constitutional interest sufficient to require the disclosure of information otherwise protected by the shield law. In this case, petitioner conducted a videotaped interview with a criminal defendant. Portions of the interview were broadcast on the news. The respondent issued a subpoena for the entire interview, and petitioner submitted only the broadcast portions of the interview, invoking the shield law as to the outtakes that were not broadcast. The trial court ordered the petitioner to turn over the unedited videotape to the prosecution. Petitioner refused to do so and was adjudged in contempt. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's contempt order, denied a writ of prohibition, and lifted a stay on an order denying petitioner's motion to quash an order directingthe unsealing of the videotape. Relying on Cal. Const., art. I, § 29, which gives "the people of the State of California ... the right to due process of law," the court of appeal concluded that the entire videotape should have been released and that a journalist's immunity from contempt is not absolute when the prosecution makes a showing of need for information the journalist possesses (21 Cal. 4th 883, 888-891) . The California Supreme Court reversed, finding that shield law immunity is not overcome by the prosecutor's need for evidence in a criminal prosecution. The Court explained that the prosecution's right to due process is not equivalent to a criminal defendant's right to due process and, therefore, does not carry the same weight as the federal rights enjoyed by a criminal defendant (21 Cal. 4th 883, 896-897) . Consequently, prosecutors are not entitled to unpublished information because they can show that it is relevant to their case (21 Cal. 4th 883, 897) . Rather, a newsperson's protection under the shield law is absolute and yields only to a "conflicting federal or, perhaps, state constitutional right" (21 Cal. 4th 883, 901) .

In Fost v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 724, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 620 , petitioner journalist, subpoenaed by a defendant in a state murder trial, was held in contempt of court for refusing to disclose "unpublished information" in answer to cross-examination questions by the prosecution. Petitioner claimed the shield law prohibited the contempt order and sought a writ to vacate the contempt order (80 Cal. App. 4th 724, 728-730) . The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of prohibition, restraining enforcement of the contempt order (80 Cal. App. 4th 724, 740) . As a matter of first impression, the court held that in a criminal trial, when a defense witness protected under California's shield law, Cal. Const. art. I, § 2(b), Evid. Code § 1070, resists proper cross-examination on the basis of that law, the testimony of that witness on direct examination may, on appropriate motion by the prosecution, be barred or stricken, even if the testimony did not consist of "unpublished information" protected by the shield law, unless the defendant can show that the court's refusal to admit that evidence would deprive defendant of the federal constitutional right to a fair trial and that, in the circumstances, defendant's right transcends that of the witness under the shield law. If the defendant makes such a showing, the testimony of the witness on direct may be admitted and the newsperson may be held in contempt of court for refusing to respond to proper cross-examination seeking information that would otherwise be protected under the shield law (80 Cal. App. 4th 724, 733-734) . In the context of this holding, the court also held that petitioner's direct testimony regarding "published information" could not constitute a waiver of the right to refuse to discuss related information because the shield law explicitly provides thatunpublished information remain protected whether or not the related information has been disseminated (80 Cal. App. 4th 724, 735) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IS NOT SUBJECT TO DISCOVERY BECAUSE IT WAS ACQUIRED IN CONFIDENCE BY A PUBLIC EMPLOYEE IN THE COURSE OF HIS OR HER DUTY AND IT WAS NOT PREVIOUSLY OPEN OR OFFICIALLY DISCLOSED TO THE PUBLIC and _____ [DISCLOSURE IS FORBIDDEN BY A CALIFORNIA STATUTE OR FEDERAL ACT or IS AGAINST THE PUBLIC INTEREST].

A. Information Acquired In Confidence by Public Employee in Course of Employee's Duty. Information acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of his or her duty may become privileged "official information" (Evid. Code § 1040(a)).

B. Information Not Open or Previously Disclosed to Public. "Official information" that has not been open or officially disclosed to the public prior to the claim of privilege is protected (Evid. Code § 1040(a)).

[EITHER]

C. Disclosure of Information Is Prohibited by Act or Statute. The privilege of a public entity to refuse to disclose official information applies if disclosure is prohibited by California statute or an act of the United States Congress (see Evid. Code § 1040(b)(1)).

[OR]

D. Disclosure of Information Is Prohibited When Disclosure Is Against Public Interest. The privilege of a public entity to refuseto disclose official information applies if disclosure is against public interest (see Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2)).

[Optional] E. Disclosure of Hospital Peer Review Records Is Against Public Interest. The necessity of preserving the confidentiality of hospital peer review records, which inures to the benefit of the public by encouraging candid and uninhibited evaluations of physicians by their peers, greatly outweighs the "necessity of disclosure in the interest of justice" (Fox v. Kramer (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 531, 542, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497, 994 P.2d 343 ; see Evid. Code § 1040(b)(2)).

[2] Comments

This form may be used to oppose a motion to compel discovery of information on the ground that it is privileged official information. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the petition supported by the points and authorities set out in § 81.276.

The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30], as well as a form resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.20].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, facts of the case that tend to show that the public's interest in preserving the confidentiality of the information outweighs the necessity of disclosure in the interests of justice should be brought out.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disclosure of Hospital Peer Review Records Is Against Public Interest

In Fox v. Kramer (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 531, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497, 994 P.2d 343 , a medical malpractice suit, plaintiff attempted to subpoena expert testimony from a physician whose conclusions relied on hospital peer review materials unavailable to the public under Evid. Code § 1157. Thesuperior court granted defendants' motion to quash the subpoena, relying on Evid. Code § 1157(a) (22 Cal. 4th 531, 536-537) . Plaintiff appealed, contending that the trial court erred in excluding the physician's testimony and the hospital's peer review records. The court of appeal affirmed (22 Cal. 4th 531, 538) .

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, but not the reasoning of the court of appeal, which erroneously based its holding on Evid. Code § 1151 (22 Cal. 4th 531, 538, 544) . Noting that the trial court did not directly address the Attorney General's argument that the subpoena should be quashed under Evid. Code § 1040, the Court nevertheless found that provision to be dispositive. The Court held that expert testimony from a physician whose conclusions relied on hospital peer review materials unavailable to the public under Evid. Code § 1157 was privileged under Evid. Code § 1040. The expert's opinions were based on "official information" under Evid. Code § 1040, that is, information acquired in confidence by a public employee in the course of his duty and not disclosed to the public. The court reasoned that the necessity of preserving such confidentiality with regard to hospital peer review records, which inures to the benefit of the public by encouraging candid and uninhibited evaluations by their peers, greatly outweighed "the necessity of disclosure in the interests of justice" (22 Cal. 4th 531, 542) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities relating to resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally (see, e.g., § 81.20).]

THE INFORMATION SOUGHT IS NOT SUBJECT TO DISCOVERY BECAUSE IT CONSTITUTES _____ [PROCEEDINGS AND RECORDS OF HEALTH CARE COMMITTEES or HEALTH CARE PEER REVIEW COMMITTEES].

A. Proceedings and Records of Health Care Committees and Peer Review Committees Are Not Subject to Discovery. Proceedings and records of organized health care committees and peerreview committees are protected from discovery under Evidence Code Section 1157 (see Evid. Code § 1157).

[Optional] B. Expert Testimony Based on Hospital Peer Review Materials Unavailable to Public Is Not Subject to Discovery. The protection of Evidence Code Section 1157 extends to expert testimony based on hospital peer review materials unavailable to the public under Evidence Code Section 1157(a) (Fox v. Kramer (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 531, 540-541, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497, 994 P.2d 343).

[2] Comments

This form may be used to oppose a motion to compel discovery of information on the ground that the information sought is privileged under Evid. Code § 1157, which protects the records and proceeding of certain organized health care committed and peer review committees against discovery [see Evid. Code § 1157].

The form does not provide a complete memorandum but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45; Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30], as well as a form resisting discovery on the ground of privilege generally [see, e.g., § 81.20].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, facts of the case that show that the records at issue relate to immune proceedings should be brought out.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

The facts and procedural background Fox v. Kramer (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 531, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497, 994 P.2d 343 are discussed in § 81.295[3][a]. In this medical malpractice case, the California Supreme Court held that protection of Evid. Code § 1157 extended to expert testimony from a physician whose conclusions relied on hospital peer review materials unavailable to the public under Evid. Code § 1157(a) (22 Cal. 4th 531, 540) . Plaintiff was not permitted to accomplish indirectly what she was forbidden to do directly, that is, obtain the equivalent of discovery of the contents of the hospital peer review committee records, by subpoenaing the testimony or the report of the state investigator who reviewed them in the course of his public duties. When an expert has relied on privileged material toformulate an opinion, the court may exclude his or her testimony or report as necessary to enforce the privilege (22 Cal. 4th 531, 540-541) .

[4] Additional Authorities

In County of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (2006) 139 Cal. App. 4th 8, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 390 , deceased inmate's family members claimed that the inmate was mentally ill and that he was not given his medications while in custody. The trial court compelled production of documents relating to the review of medical and mental health care complaints by the quality assurance committee for the county's jail mental health services agency. The County petitioned for a writ of mandate, challenging the trial court's order. The court of appeal held that the documents were exempt from disclosure because they met the criteria of Evid. Code §§ 1157 and 1157.6 for documents generated by peer review bodies and correctional treatment quality assurance committees (139 Cal. App. 4th 8, 14-15) . The committee met the definition of a peer review body in Bus. & Prof. Code § 805(a)(1), because it was comprised of the medical or professional staff of a health care facility, which included a correctional treatment center as defined in Health & Safety Code § 1250(j)(1), and because the agency employed more than 25 licensed mental health care providers (139 Cal. App. 4th 8, 14) . The court added that the documents were not subject to discovery under Evid. Code § 1156.1 because they were not research data (139 Cal. App. 4th 8, 18-19) .

§ 81.297 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Protection of Trade Secret Will Not Work Injustice [Evid. Code § 1060]

[The following may be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

THE REQUESTED DISCOVERY IS IMPROPER AND SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS NOT MADE A PRIMA FACIE PARTICULARIZED SHOWING THAT (1) THE TRADE SECRET IS RELEVANT AND NECESSARY TO THE _____ [PROOF OF or DEFENSE AGAINST] A MATERIAL ELEMENT OF ONE OR MORE CAUSES OF ACTION PRESENTED IN THE CASE, AND (2) IT IS REASONABLE TO CONCLUDE THAT THE TRADE SECRET IS ESSENTIAL TO A FAIR RESOLUTION OF THE LAWSUIT.

A. Trade Secret Is Protected From Disclosure. If the owner or his or her agent or employee claims the privilege, the owner of a trade secret has a privilege to refuse to disclose the secret, and to prevent another from disclosing it, if the allowance of the privilege will not tend to conceal fraud or otherwise work injustice (Evid. Code § 1060).

B. Trade Secret Is Protected Even When Relevant or Helpful. Allowance of the trade secret privilege does not "work injustice" within the meaning of Evidence Code Section 1060 simply because it would protect information generally relevant to the subject matter of an action, or be helpful to the preparation of a case (Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1390-1391, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709).

C. Only Trade Secret Information That Is Relevant and Necessary to Material Element of Proof and Essential to Fair Resolution Is Discoverable. The party seeking discovery of trade secrets must make a prima facie, particularized showing that the information sought is relevant and necessary to the proof of, or defenseagainst, a material element of a cause of action presented in the case, and that it is reasonable to conclude that the information is essential to a fair resolution of the lawsuit (Citizens of Humanity, LLC v. Costco Wholesale Corp. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455 ; Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1393, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709).

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in opposing a motion to compel discovery of information that is a trade secret. The party claiming the privilege must first establish its existence. If the party seeking discovery is able to make a prima facie, particularized showing that the information sought is relevant and necessary to a material element of one or more causes of action, and that it is reasonable to conclude that the information is essential to a fair resolution of the lawsuit, the claimant must then demonstrate any claimed disadvantages of discovery under the terms of a protective order [Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1393, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709 ; see Citizens of Humanity, LLC v. Costco Wholesale Corp. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trade Secret Is Protected Even When Relevant or Helpful

In Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709 , plaintiffs, the survivors of a woman who was killed in an automobile accident allegedly caused by a defective tire, brought a wrongful death action against defendant tire manufacturer. Plaintiffs served defendant with interrogatories, requesting tire manufacturing specifications, including chemical formulas. Defendant objected, and plaintiffs moved for an order to compel answers. The trial court foundthat the formulas were trade secrets, and ordered disclosure of the specifications and formulas subject to a protective order. Defendant's writ of mandate was ultimately referred back to the court of appeal by the Supreme Court.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order. The court said that Evid. Code § 1060 may not be read in isolation, but must be read in conjunction with the discovery statutes. Code Civ. Proc. § 2017 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010) permits discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter of the action or to the determination of any motion in that action, if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Emphasizing the "not privileged" clause of Code Civ. Proc. § 2017 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010), the court said that disclosure of trade secret information that is only relevant to the subject matter of the pending action within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 2017 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010) would render Evid. Code § 1060 meaningless. Allowance of the trade secret privilege may not be deemed to "work injustice" simply because it would protect information generally relevant to the subject matter of an action or helpful to preparation of a case (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1390-1391) .

[b] Only Trade Secret Information That Is Relevant and Necessary to Material Element of Proof and Essential to Fair Resolution Is Discoverable

In Citizens of Humanity, LLC v. Costco Wholesale Corp. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455 , plaintiff manufacturer of "high end denim apparel products" (Citizens) sued defendant (Costco) for the sale of stolen property under Pen. Code § 496 after Costco refused to disclose its source for the Citizen's jeans that were being sold in its low-price warehouse-style stores. Costco filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings. Before the motion could be heard, Citizens filed a motion to compel discovery, seeking to compel Costco to identify the sources from which Costco had obtained Citizens jeans, and the terms of those transactions. Citizens argued that this information was necessary to support its claim that the jeans were stolen and that Costco had known the jeans were stolen. Costco opposed the discovery on the basis that its vendor information constituted a protectable trade secret. Costco produced evidence that its supplier list has economic value and that Costco makes substantial efforts to keep its suppliers' identities secret. Costco also argued that Citizens could not show that the discovery was necessary to pursue its action, or that there was no other way Citizens could obtain the necessary information. The trial court granted the motion for judgment on the pleadings with leave to amend. With regard to the motion to compel, the trial court concluded that Costco had established that the identity of its suppliers was a protected trade secret, and that Citizens had failed to establish entitlement to that information. However, the court granted the motion to compel in part, allowing Citizens to discover the nonprivileged information regarding the terms of the transactions by which Costco had obtained the jeans. After that limited discovery was completed, Citizens filed its first amended complaint, alleging that the jeans sold by Costco had been stolen. The trial court sustained Costco's demurrer to that complaint. Citizens declined to amend the complaint, and trial court dismissed the action. Citizens appealed (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6-11) .

The court of appeal concluded that the trial court did not err in denying Citizen's motion to compel discovery because the identity of Costco's suppliers was a protectable trade secret. Costco showed that that the identity of its sources was information that derived economic value from not being generally known, and it introduced evidence indicating that it had taken reasonable efforts to maintain the secrecy of its sources (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13-14) . The court summarily rejected Citizen's argument that while Costco may have produced evidence that the identity of its vendors, in general, was a trade secret, it failed to establish that the identity of only its specific suppliers of Citizens denim apparel was a trade secret. The court found this contention "meritless." Citizens provided no authority for its proposition that when an entire category of information is a trade secret, an individual piece of that information is not (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 14) .

Because the identity of Costco's sources of Citizens jeans constituted a trade secret, the burden shifted to Citizens to make "a prima facie, particularized showing that the information sought is relevant and necessary to the proof of a material element of one or more causes of action presented in the case, and that it is reasonable to conclude that the information sought is essential to a fair resolution of the lawsuit" (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13, 15 , quoting Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1393, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709 , discussed below). Citizens sought disclosure of Costco's sources in order to establish that the jeans sold by Costco were stolen. But Citizens' own evidence indicated that it could determine whether any of its jeans had been stolen from its customers simply by inquiring whether its customers had experienced any thefts (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 15) . Moreover, Citizens failed to show that it would be unduly burdensome to ask its customers whether they had experienced any jeans thefts (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 16) . In sum, Citizens did not meet its burden of demonstrating that the identity of Costco's sources was necessary to an element of a then-pending cause of action, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion to compel (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 16) .

The facts and procedural background of Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 709 are discussed in [a], above. In Bridgestone, the court of appeal explained that failure to disclose information would work an injustice within the meaning of Evid. Code § 1060 when one side would have evidence--reasonably believed to be essential to a fair resolution of the lawsuit--that was denied the opposing party. Under such circumstances, a trial court is required to order disclosure of a trade secret unless, after balancing the interests of both sides, it concludes that under the circumstances no fraud or injustice would result from denying disclosure. In the balancing process, the trial court must necessarily consider the protection afforded the holder of the privilege by a protective order as well as any less intrusive alternatives to disclosure proposed by the parties (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1392-1393) . The party claiming the privilege has the burden of establishing its existence. The party seeking discovery then must make a prima facie, particularized showing that the information sought is relevant and necessary to the proof of, or defense against, a material element of one or more causes of action presented in the case, and that it is reasonable to conclude that the information is essential to a fair resolution of the lawsuit. Inresponse, the holder of the privilege must demonstrate any claimed disadvantages of a protective order. Either party may then propose or oppose less intrusive alternatives to disclosure of the trade secret. However, the claimant of the privilege has the burden of demonstrating that an alternative to disclosure will not be unduly burdensome to the opposing side and that it will maintain the same fair balance in the litigation that would have been achieved by disclosure (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1393) .

The court considered the elements of plaintiffs' causes of action, their theories of recovery, and defendant's defenses. To demonstrate negligent manufacture and design, plaintiffs could rely on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, which eliminates the need for proof of a particular defect. Proof of strict liability for defective manufacture could be made by comparing the injury-producing tire with the manufacturer's plans or with other tires in the same product line. Strict liability for defective design could be proven either by showing that the tire failed to perform as safely as an ordinary consumer would expect when used in an intended or reasonably foreseeable manner, or by demonstrating that the tire's design caused the injuries and that defendant failed to establish that the benefits of the design outweighed its inherent risks (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1394-1395) . To prevail on the cause of action for negligent failure to warn, plaintiffs could show that a reasonably prudent manufacturer would have decided that the risk of harm was sufficient to require a warning. Proof of strict liability for failure to warn could be made by demonstrating that defendant failed to give warnings of dangers that were known to the scientific community at the time of manufacture and distribution of the tire. Thus, the court reasoned that while the specifications and formulas might be useful to prove the negligence and strict liability causes of action, and to rebut defendant's defenses, plaintiffs had not made the requisite showing of particularized need (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1395) . The court relied on declarations submitted by the expert witnesses that established that the trade secret formulas would merely aid plaintiff's expert in evaluating the tire's failure, and other factual analysis. The court found nothing that demonstrated the necessity of the formulas to enable plaintiffs to carry their burden of proof (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1395-1396) . The court noted, however, that if at any point in the litigation plaintiffs were able to make the required prima facie particularized showing of need, they could renew their request for discovery of the formulas (7 Cal. App. 4th 1384, 1397 n.8).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Only Trade Secret Information That Is Relevant and Necessary to Material Element of Proof and Essential to Fair Resolution Is Discoverable

In Steiny and Co., v. California Electric Supply Co. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 920 , a business owner, contractor,subcontractor, supplier, and manufacturer litigated liability as the result of the explosion of a faulty electric switchboard. The contractor agreed to settle with the owner; and the subcontractor and supplier propounded discovery seeking information about the basis of the owner-contractor settlement, and about the owner's damages from the power outage. The owner and contractor moved for a protective order on the ground that the information needed to support the owner's damage calculation was proprietary, and the trial court granted the order. When the cases proceeded to trial, the subcontractor moved to exclude contractor's evidence of damages, arguing that exclusion was an appropriate and necessary remedy for the contractor's invocation of the trade secrets privilege to prevent disclosure of that evidence. The trial court agreed, and barred the contractor from offering damages evidence. The contractor appealed, asserting error (79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 288-290) .

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that when plaintiffs' proper assertion of the trade secret privilege, and the blanket protective order they obtained, prevented defendant from examining key evidence needed to test the reasonableness of the settlement which formed the basis for plaintiffs' damage claim, the trial court properly barred plaintiffs' damage evidence at trial (79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 288) . Although plaintiffs had the right to stand on the privilege, they did not have the right to proceed on its claim while at the same time insisting on withholding key evidence from their adversary. Further, they could have agreed to a more typical and less extreme protective order which would have allowed plaintiff to obtain the needed information while strictly confining its use. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in holding that defendants forfeited the right to proceed with their claim by instead insisting on an absolute withholding of all privileged information (79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 292) .

§ 81.330 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Discovery of Plaintiff's Sexual Conduct in Action for Sexual Harassment or Assault Is Improper When Good Cause Not Shown [Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30), as well as with points and authorities generally supporting an objection that matters sought are not relevant (see, e.g., Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.40).]

DISCOVERY CONCERNING PLAINTIFF'S SEXUAL CONDUCT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO ESTABLISH SPECIFIC FACTS SHOWING GOOD CAUSE FOR THE DISCOVERY, OR THAT THE MATTER SOUGHT TO BE DISCOVERED IS RELEVANT TO THE SUBJECT MATTER OF THE ACTION AND REASONABLY CALCULATED TO LEAD TO THE DISCOVERY OF ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.

A. Discovery of Plaintiff's Sexual Conduct Requires Showing of Good Cause and Relevancy. In any civil action alleging conduct that constitutes sexual harassment, sexual assault, or sexual battery, any party seeking discovery concerning the plaintiff's sexual conduct with individuals other than the alleged perpetrator is required to establish specific facts showing good cause for that discovery, and that the matter sought to be discovered is relevant to the subject matter of the action and reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. This showing must be made by noticed motion and must not be made or considered by the court at an ex parte hearing (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220; Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 843, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 ; Mendez v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 557, 569-574, 253 Cal. Rptr. 731).

B. Strong Showing of Good Cause Required. A stronger showing of good cause must be made to justify inquiry into a plaintiff's sexual conduct under Section 2017.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure thanis needed for a general examination under Section 2032.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal.

3d 833, 843 n.8, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 ; see Barrenda L. v. Superior Court (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 794, 800-803, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727).

[Optional] C. Protection From Discovery Includes Nonconsensual Sexual Conduct. The protection from discovery provided by Section 2017.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure includes nonconsensual, as well as consensual, sexual conduct (Knoettgen v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 11, 13-14, 273 Cal. Rptr. 636).

[2] Comments

This form is for use in a civil action for sexual harassment, sexual assault, or sexual battery to oppose a motion to compel discovery relating to plaintiff's sexual conduct with individuals other than the alleged perpetrator. The ground for opposition is that the party seeking discovery has failed to show good cause or that the matters sought are relevant to the subject matter of the action and reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220]. This form may be used in opposition to points and authorities supporting a motion to compel discovery based on a general contention of relevancy [see, e.g., Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.10].

Note that the party seeking discovery of plaintiff's sexual conduct must make the showing of good cause by noticed motion. This determination may not be made or considered by the court at an ex parte hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220]. Note also that if plaintiff consulted with a sexual assault victim counselor, the substance of such communications may be privileged from discovery [see Evid. Code § 1035 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery of Plaintiff's Sexual Conduct Requires Showing of Good Cause and Relevancy

In Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 , an applicant for employment with a school district was allegedly subjected to the interviewer's sexual advances, which she declined.She later obtained a different job at the school without the interviewer's knowledge. Plaintiff also alleged that after the interviewer discovered her other job, he had her transferred to a position for which she was not qualified, and terminated her employment. The dismissed employee brought an action against the school district and the employee who interviewed her, to recover damages for sexual harassment and intentional infliction of severe emotional distress. Defendants moved for an order compelling plaintiff to undergo a medical and a psychological examination. Plaintiff opposed the motion as a violation of her right to privacy. Alternatively, she requested that in the event of an examination, the court issue a protective order preventing any questions regarding her sexual history or practices, and that her attorney be present. The trial court granted the motion without imposing any limitations. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of prohibition or mandate to direct the trial court to forbid the examination or to issue appropriate protective orders. The court of appeal denied the petition. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal, with directions to issue a peremptory writ of mandate compelling the trial court to limit the scope of the mental examination (43 Cal. 3d 833, 847) . First, the Court rejected plaintiff's contention that the psychiatric examination would be an impermissible infringement on her right to privacy. Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020) permits the mental examination of a party in any action in which the mental condition of that party is in controversy. The filing of a suit for sexual harassment does not per se place a plaintiff's mental condition in issue (43 Cal. 3d 833, 840) . Allegations of ongoing mental and emotional distress do, however, place a plaintiff's own mental state in controversy (43 Cal. 3d 833, 839) . By asserting a causal link between plaintiff's mental distress and defendants' conduct, she implicitly claims it was not caused by a preexisting mental condition, thereby raising the question of alternative sources for the distress.

The Court held that plaintiff's right to privacy is protected by the requirement under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020) that the motion be made on a showing of good cause (43 Cal. 3d 833, 840) . With regard to an order preventing questions regarding plaintiff's sexual practices, the Court held that the mere initiation of a sexual harassment suit, even one alleging extreme mental and emotional damage, does not waive all of plaintiff's privacy interests (43 Cal. 3d 833, 841) . Plaintiff did not contend that the alleged acts were detrimental to her present sexuality, and her sexual history is even less relevant to her claim. Consequently, she did not waive her right to sexual privacy (43 Cal. 3d 833, 842) . Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220(a)), in a civil suit alleging conduct that constitutes sexual harassment, sexual assault, or sexual battery, any party seeking discoveryconcerning the plaintiff's sexual conduct with an individual other than the alleged perpetrator must establish specific facts showing good cause for that discovery, and that the inquiry is relevant to the subject matter and reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. In enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220), the Legislature declared that the discovery of sexual aspects of the plaintiff's lives, as well as those of past and current friends and acquaintances, has the clear potential to discourage complaints and to annoy and harass litigants. Without protection against it, individuals whose intimate lives are unjustifiably and offensively intruded on might be faced with the eventuality of invoking their remedy only at the risk of enduring further intrusions. Absent extraordinary circumstances, inquiry into those areas should not be permitted, either in discovery or at trial (43 Cal. 3d 833, 843) . Plaintiff contended that Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220 (formerly Code Civ. Proc. § 2036.1) does not adequately protect her privacy interests because Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq.) already requires "good cause" for a mental examination, and nothing is added by again requiring good cause for inquiry into a plaintiff's sexual history and practices. The legislative declaration accompanying former Code Civ. Proc. § 2036.1 states that inquiry into sexuality should not be permitted absent "extraordinary circumstances," suggesting that a stronger showing of good cause must be made to justify inquiry into this topic than is needed for a general examination. Furthermore, Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq.) merely requires good cause for the examination as a whole, whereas under Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220), a defendant must show specific facts justifying that particular inquiry (43 Cal. 3d 833, 843 n.8). Therefore, Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220) amply protects plaintiff's privacy interests. In the majority of sexual harassment suits, a separate weighing of privacy against discovery will not be necessary. It should normally suffice for the court, in ruling on whether good cause exists for probing into the intimate life of a victim of sexual harassment, battery, or assault, to evaluate the showing of good cause in light of the legislative purpose in enacting that statute and the plaintiff's constitutional right to privacy (43 Cal. 3d 833, 844) .

In Mendez v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 557, 253 Cal. Rptr. 731 , a county sheriff's department employee brought an action against the county and a sheriff coworker for sexual assault and battery and infliction of emotional distress by the coworker. At a deposition of plaintiff, defendants questioned her concerning her extramarital sexual relationships with other members of the sheriff's department for four years prior to the incident. She denied having any, and later brought a motion in limine to exclude from trial any evidence of her sexual conduct with anyone other than defendant officer. Defendants' opposition to the motion evolved into noticed motions for discovery under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2036.1 [seenow Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220]. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion and granted defendants' motions to discover. Plaintiff brought a motion for reconsideration and made a motion to stipulate concerning her sexual history. On reconsideration the court denied the discovery requests, and made plaintiff's stipulation a court order. After its motion for reconsideration was denied, defendant county sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the discovery motion.

The court of appeal denied the writ. It upheld the trial court's denial of discovery due to defendants' failure to establish good cause, observing that defendants made no showing of how incidents within such a substantial time span would bear on the issues in the case, and that the request was not narrowly drawn to the claimed reasons for discovery, which were a determination of the genesis of her emotional distress claim and the extent of her damages (206 Cal. App. 3d 557, 570-572) . The court explained that it should normally suffice for a court, in ruling on whether good cause exists for probing into the intimate life of a victim of sexual assault, to evaluate the showing of good cause in light of the legislative purpose in enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220) and the plaintiff's constitutional right to privacy. The court said that the essence of that legislative purpose is "absent extraordinary circumstances, inquiry into a complainant's sexual behavior should not be permitted, either in discovery or at trial" (206 Cal. App. 3d 557, 569) . The court reasoned that an essential aspect of the damage in any case of sexual assault is the outrage, shock, and humiliation of the individual abused. Thus, the typical case includes a concomitant claim for emotional upset inflicted by the conduct. Such distress is so inextricably intertwined in the cause of action that to allow privacy intrusion in the ordinary case would have a chilling effect on the pursuit of a cause of action for sexual assault (206 Cal. App. 3d 557, 573) . The court also observed that when vicarious liability is a potential basis for defendant's liability, that fact alone does not constitute good cause (206 Cal. App. 3d 557, 574-575) .

[b] Strong Showing of Good Cause Required

Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 is discussed in [a], above.

In Barrenda L. v. Superior Court (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 794, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727 , two former foster children sued the county and others for negligence, seeking damages for physical and psychological injuries allegedly sustained as a result of sexual abuse in their foster home. The county moved to compel plaintiffs to answer deposition questions concerning sexual encounters other than those directly at issue and to compel independent psychological examinations. When the trial court granted both motions, plaintiffs sought relief through writ proceedings.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to reverse its rulings ordering plaintiffs to answer deposition questions relating to sexual encounters other than those directly at issue and ordering them to undergo psychiatric examinations. The court concluded that defendants failed to demonstrate the necessary good cause for both motions (65 Cal. App. 4th 794, 803) . The court explained that the mere fact that a plaintiff initiated an action seeking damages for extreme mental and emotional distress arising out of conduct of a sexual nature does not ipso facto provide "good cause" for discovery of other sexual conduct. The issue is resolved by balancing the right to privacy with the defendant's right to discovery; a procedure articulated by Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220) (65 Cal. App. 4th 794, 800-801) . Each of the disputed deposition questions related to sexual activity of plaintiffs other than incidents on which the legal action is based. Thus, the court said, it was the burden of defendants to produce specific factual evidence to demonstrate the emotional distress resulting from this other sexual activity, if any, was directly related to the injuries claimed in the litigation. It observed that the only factual support to demonstrate good cause was the declaration of defendants' counsel, which did not demonstrate that he had any psychological training or qualification that would lay the foundation for him to demonstrate any nexus between other sexual conduct and the nature of the damages claimed. There was no declaration by a mental health professional that evidence of other sexual conduct would be relevant and necessary to a determination of the cause of plaintiffs' emotional distress. The court also rejected defendants' contention that evidence of other sexual conduct may be relevant for impeachment purposes, saying that to allow discovery to find information collateral to the issues raised solely to impeach plaintiff was not justified (65 Cal. App. 4th 794, 802) . The court also found defendants' support for the examination to be inadequate. No declaration of a mental health professional was proffered to establish the relevance of other sexual conduct, whether before the incidents alleged or after. Counsel's declaration was not specific, and presented only unjustified conclusions about why the examination was necessary. While a plaintiff may place her mental state in controversy by a general allegation of severe emotional distress, the opposing party may not require her to undergo psychiatric testing solely on the basis of speculation that something of interest may surface (65 Cal. App. 4th 794, 803) .

[c] Protection From Discovery Includes Nonconsensual Sexual Conduct

In Knoettgen v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 11, 273 Cal. Rptr. 636 , plaintiff sued her employer and coworkers for battery and employment discrimination based on sexual harassment. Defendant employerlearned that plaintiff had been attacked by men twice in her childhood, and questioned her at deposition concerning the attacks. After plaintiff refused to answer the questions, defendant moved for an order compelling her to answer, asserting that the information was directly relevant to plaintiff's sexual perceptions and to the nature and extent of emotional distress she claimed. When the trial court granted the motion, plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order. The court rejected defendant's claim that the protection of Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220) applies only to a plaintiff's consensual sexual conduct, and held that defendant had failed to make a good-cause showing sufficient to overcome the statute's protection (224 Cal. App. 3d 11, 14) . The court said that discovery of previous sexual attacks on a plaintiff was exactly the type of offensive and unjustifiable discovery that the Legislature was attempting to prohibit in enacting the statute (224 Cal. App. 3d 11, 13-14) . Further, the court said that even in the absence of Section 2017(d), defendant would not be entitled to the information because throughout the Discovery Act witnesses are afforded protection from unwarranted intrusiveness, annoyance, embarrassment, and oppression. The court further bolstered its holding by observing that when privacy is implicated, courts have been vigilant to provide extraordinary relief to prevent impairment of these protections (224 Cal. App. 3d 11, 14-15) .

§ 81.331 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Action for Misappropriation of Trade Secret Not Yet Identified [Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210]

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

A PLAINTIFF IN AN ACTION FOR MISAPPROPRIATION OF A TRADE SECRET MUST IDENTIFY THE TRADE SECRET PRIOR TO SEEKING DISCOVERY RELATED TO THE TRADE SECRET.

Plaintiff Required to Identify Trade Secret Prior to Seeking Discovery. In any action alleging the misappropriation of a trade secret under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (Section 3426 et seq. of the Civil Code), before commencing discovery relating to the trade secret, the party alleging them is appropriation must identify the trade secret with reasonable particularity (Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210; see Advanced Modular Sputtering, Inc. v. Superior Court (Sputtered Films, Inc.) (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 901, 903).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in opposing a motion to compel discovery related to a trade secret in a civil action alleging the misappropriation of a trade secret under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act [see Civ. Code § 3426 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Protection of Trade Secret Not Covered by Privilege

As a general rule, the holder of a trade secret has the privilege to refuse to disclose a secret if the allowance of the privilege will not tend to conceal fraud or otherwise cause injustice [see Evid. Code § 1060]. However, this privilege does not apply when the holder of the privilege has brought an action under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act alleging the misappropriation of the secret. In such a case, the holder of the secret is entitled to a protective order or other precautions to preserve the secrecy of the trade secret [see Civ. Code § 3426.5; Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210]. For a form supporting a motion for protective order in the context of an oral deposition that may be used in seeking an order protecting a trade secret, see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(13)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Required to Identify Trade Secret Prior to Seeking Discovery

In Advanced Modular Sputtering, Inc. v. Superior Court (Sputtered Films, Inc.) (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 901 , a trade secret civil discovery case of first impression, respondent trial court entered an order permitting real party in interest, a manufacturer, to conduct discovery on all of its causes of action against petitioner competitor other than its cause of action under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act (UTSA) (Civ. Code § 3426 et seq.) for misappropriation of trade secrets. The competitorpetitioned for a writ of mandate to reverse the order. The manufacturer also filed a writ petition, requesting that the court review the trial court's finding that its trade secrets designation did not satisfy Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210.

The court of appeal held that when the plaintiff makes a showing that is "reasonable"--that is, "fair, proper, just, rational"--the trade secret has been described with "reasonable particularity" sufficient to permit discovery to begin (132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 903) . A sufficient showing of "reasonable particularity" is "a flexible inquiry" and depends on the "facts, law, and equities" of the situation (132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 901, 907-908) . "Reasonable particularity," however, does not mean that the party alleging misappropriation "has to define every minute detail of its claimed trade secret at the outset of the litigation." While advances in the state of the art in a highly specialized technical field may require expert witness declarations, a discovery referee or trial court is not required to "conduct a miniature trial on the merits of a misappropriation claim before discovery may commence" (132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 901, 908) .

The court also held that Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210 is not limited in its application to a cause of action under the Uniform Trade Secrets Act, for misappropriation of the trade secret, but extends to any cause of action that relates to the trade secret (132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 901, 903) . The court reasoned that, by its express terms, Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210 is not "cause of action" specific, but instead refers to "any 'action,' i.e. the 'entire lawsuit.' " The court noted that it made no sense to bar discovery on the cause of action for misappropriation but permit it on the others, when every cause of action was dependent on the misappropriation allegation (132 Cal. App. 4th 826, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 901, 907) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Required to Identify Trade Secret Prior to Seeking Discovery

In Perlan Therapeutics, Inc. v. Superior Court (2009) 178 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 211 , petitioner, a trade secret claimant, sought a writ of mandate or prohibition to challenge a superior court order granting defendant competitors' motion for a protective order. That order precluded the claimant from pursuing discovery relating to its claimed trade secrets until it provided a sufficient identification of them under Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210. The claimant's Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210 trade secret statement repeated some of the narrative in the complaint and provided additional technical detail that was publicly available. The statement gave general descriptions of how various processes would be conducted, but it did not specifically identify the items used in these processes. The statement referenced a large quantity of other material, including grant and patent applications. The court of appeal concluded that the trial court was justified in finding that the statement was vague and did not meet the standard of reasonable particularity in Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210. While trade secret identification does not require "every minute detail" or the "greatest degree of particularity possible[,]" the claimant's Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210 trade secret statement was insufficient, in light of its broad language, surplusage, and voluminous attachments (178 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1350-1352) .

In Brescia v. Angelin (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 133, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 842 , appellant (Brescia), who had developed a high-protein, low-carbohydrate pudding, brought a cross-complaint against respondent cross-defendants, alleging that respondents participated with other cross-defendants in misappropriating Brescia's trade secrets. Brescia appealed from a judgment of dismissal. He argued that the trial court erred in finding his trade secret designation inadequate under Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210, for failing to explain how it differed from matters within the general knowledge of skilled persons in the field of commercial food science. Although the court of appeal did not agree with Brescia's contention that a trade secret claimant can never be required to particularize how the alleged trade secret differs from prior products, the court agreed that the trial court erred in imposing such a requirement here. Whether a trade secret designation adequately distinguishes the allegedly protected information from the general knowledge of skilled persons in the field is a function of the "particularity" of the designation--that is, whether the stated details themselves are sufficient--given the nature of the alleged secret and the technology in which it arises--to permit the defendant to ascertain whether and in what way the information is distinguished from matters already known, and to permit the court to craft appropriate discovery. Absent a showing that the details alone, without further explanation, are inadequate to permit the defendant to discern the boundaries of the trade secret in order to prepare available defenses, or to permit the court to understand the identification in order to fashion discovery, the trade secret claimant need not particularize how the alleged secret differs from matters already known to skilled persons in the field. Further, consistent with Advanced Molecular, discussed in § 81.331[3][a], the trade secret designation is to be liberally construed, and reasonable doubts regarding its adequacy are to be resolved in favor of allowing discovery to go forward (172 Cal. App. 4th 133, 143) .

Brescia's trade secret designation met Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.210's reasonable particularity requirement. He named two alleged trade secrets: the pudding formula and the manufacturing process. He particularly described the details of the pudding formula, listing the 15 specific ingredients by common name and the percentage of the total pudding. He also listed the same 15 ingredients by their supplier and brand name. He particularly described each step in the mixing, testing, and code marking of the pudding. This showing was adequate to permit respondents to investigate whether Brescia's alleged trade secrets were within the public domain and to prepare a defense, and to permit the trial court to determine the scope of relevant discovery (172 Cal. App. 4th 133, 151-152) .

The facts and procedural background of Citizens of Humanity, LLC v. Costco Wholesale Corp. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 455 , are discussed in § 81.297[3][b]. In Citizens, the court of appeal explained that in resolving a claim of trade secret privilege, the party claiming the privilege has the initial burden of proving existence of the privilege (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13) . The Uniform Trade Secrets Act (Civ. Code § 3426 et seq.), Civ. Code § 3426.1, defines trade secrets in California. " 'Trade secret' means information, including a formula, pattern, compilation, program, device, method, technique, or process, that: (1) Derives independent economic value, actual or potential, from not being generally known to the public or to other persons who can obtain economic value from its disclosure or use; and (2) Is the subject of efforts that are reasonable under the circumstances to maintain its secrecy." The defendant in Citizens provided "substantial evidence" on both elements by showing that the identity of its sources was information that derived economic value from not being generally known and that it had taken reasonable efforts to maintain the secrecy of its sources (171 Cal. App. 4th 1, 13-14) .

§ 81.332 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Information Sought Would Identify Individual Who Is Subject of Blood Test to Detect Antibodies to HIV [Health & Safety Code § 120975]

[The following may be combined with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

THE REQUESTED DISCOVERY IS IMPROPER AND SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE IT IDENTIFIES OR PROVIDES CHARACTERISTICS THAT WOULD IDENTIFY AN INDIVIDUAL WHO IS THE SUBJECT OF A BLOOD TEST TO DETECT ANTIBODIES TO HIV.

Information That Would Identify Individual Who Is Subject of Test for AIDS Is Not Discoverable. No person may be compelled in any state, county, city, or other local, civil, criminal, administrative, legislative, or other proceeding to identify or provide characteristics that would identify any individual who is the subject of a blood test to detect antibodies to HIV (Health & Safety Code § 120975; Irwin Memorial Blood Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 151, 157, 279 Cal. Rptr. 911).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to oppose a motion to compel discovery of information that identifies or provides characteristics that would identify any individual who is the subject of a blood test to detect antibodies to HIV. Except as provided in Health & Safety Code §§ 1603.1, 1603.3, or 121022 (required tests, reports, and disclosure), no person may be compelled in any state, county, city, or other local, civil, criminal, administrative, legislative, or other proceeding to provide this information [Health & Safety Code § 120975].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Information That Would Identify Individual Who Is Subject of Test for AIDS Is Not Discoverable

In Irwin Memorial Blood Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 151, 279 Cal. Rptr. 911 , plaintiffs, individuals infected with AIDS through transfusions, sued defendant blood bank for negligently furnishing blood or blood products containing the HIV virus in screening donors and testing donated blood. During discovery plaintiffs moved for access to blood donors who had been implicated in the transfusion of tainted blood. For donors who had been tested and found to be antibody positive, plaintiffs requested that anonymous depositions be arranged in which no identifying information would be revealed. For donors who had not been tested, plaintiffs requested that defendant be compelled to provide their names. The trial court ordered limited discovery in the form of written depositions supervised by a court-appointed referee pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2028 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.010 et seq.) of those donors who had been implicated as possible carriers of the HIV virus. The deposition procedures included a number of safeguards to ensure confidentiality. The names, addresses, social security numbers, and other identifying information were not to be disclosed to anyone, including representatives of either plaintiffs or defendant. Defendant was to send a certified letter with written questions to the donor, requesting that the donor arrange a deposition time and location by telephone. If the donor did not respond with a phone call, a process server would deliver to the donor a sealed notice of deposition. The only persons who were to be informed of the date, time, or location of a deposition prior to its occurrence were the referee, the court reporter, the donor, and the donor's counsel. The donor could give his or her deposition from behind a screen. Defendant was to send a sealed envelope containing a copy of the original donor card to the referee, who would then verify identification by having the donor open the envelope and confirm that it was his or nor card. Defendant challenged the discovery orders by filing a petition for a writ.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ restraining the trial court from enforcing the deposition orders. The court cited former Health & Safety Code § 199.20 [see now Health & Safety Code § 120975], which provides that no person may be compelled in any civil, criminal, administrative, or other proceedings to identify or provide identifying characteristics that would identify an individual who is the subject of blood testing for positive antibodies to the probable causative agent of AIDS. Plaintiffs contended that the trial court's order did not violate former § 199.20 in light of the elaborate procedures designed to protect the donor's identity. The court disagreed, noting that the donor will be seen or heard during the deposition by the referee and the reporter. The appearance and the voice of the donor are obviously identifying characteristics. It also held that the very production of a donor for deposition is an identification, explaining that until the donor arrives to be deposed, he or she is a number unconnected to a person. Once the association between the number and person is made, the person has become identified. The extent to which that identification is made known to third parties will depend on the care taken at the deposition, but the identification in a civil proceeding will have been made. Thus, the court concluded that the orders were in violation of former § 199.20 (229 Cal. App. 3d 151, 157) . The court found former § 199.20 to be determinative, and did not reach the question of whether the orders would violate the donors' constitutional right to privacy (229 Cal. App. 3d 151, 153) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Information That Would Identify Individual Who Is Subject to Test for AIDS Is Not Discoverable

The facts and procedural background of John B. v. Superior Court (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 1177, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 316, 137 P.3d 153 are discussed in detail in § 81.240[4][a]. After balancing the wife's right to discover relevant evidence against the husband's right to privacy, the Supreme Court concluded that the wife was entitled to discovery concerning husband's sexual history and HIV status. The wife had "amply" established good cause for disclosure of the husband's medical records concerning HIV and AIDS. Discovery might reasonably lead to evidence that husband was aware of his HIV status. Discovery would also serve "the historically important state interest of facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings," as well as the state's compelling interest in preventing the spread of AIDS (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) . While the wife's interrogatories and requests for admission sought information that fell within the zone of the husband's right to sexual privacy, he had a diminished privacy interest in his HIV status, since he had admitted his status in court filings and informally. Moreover, the husband also alleged in the complaint that the wife infected him. By thus putting his own medical condition at issue, the husband had a "substantially lowered" expectation of privacy (38 Cal. 4th 1177, 1199) .

§ 81.333 Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Requested Discovery Violates Requirements of International Comity

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel discovery (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.45, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.20, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

DISCOVERY THAT FAILS TO SATISFY THE REQUIREMENTS OF INTERNATIONAL COMITY IS IMPROPER.

A. Discovery Improper if Violates Requirements of International Comity. An order compelling international discovery is improper if it fails to show that Hague Convention procedures are justified by considerations of international comity, based on a case-by-case balancing of facts, sovereign interests, and the likelihood of successful discovery (Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. United States District Court (1987) 482 U.S. 522, 544, 107 S. Ct. 2542, 96 L. Ed. 2d 461 ; American Home Assurance Co. v. Societe Commerciale Toutelectric (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 436-437, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 430).

B. Matters Subject to Permissive Judicial Notice. The court may take judicial notice, to the extent it is not embraced within Section 451 of the Evidence Code relating to mandatory judicial notice, of the law of _____ [an organization of nations and/or foreign nations and/or public entities in foreign nations] (Evid. Code § 452(f)).

C. Requirement That Court Take Judicial Notice on Request. A trial court is, on proper request that it do so, required to take judicial notice of the matters specified in Section 452 of the Evidence Code (Evid. Code §§ 11, 453).

D. Propriety of Taking Judicial Notice. In determining the propriety of taking judicial notice of a matter, any source of pertinent information, including the advice of persons learned in the subject matter, may be consulted or used, whether or not furnished by a party (Evid. Code § 454(a)(1)).

E. Expert Advice in Writing. When the subject of judicial notice is the law of an organization of nations, a foreign nation, or a publicentity in a foreign nation and the court resorts to the advice of persons learned in the subject matter, such advice, if not received in open court, must be in writing (Evid. Code § 454(b)).

F. Request That Court Take Judicial Notice. The court is hereby requested to take judicial notice of _____ [specify, e.g., the Statutes of the nation of _____, and, specifically, of Sections _____ thereof; the Hague Convention of _____ (specify year) on the Taking of Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters, and, specifically, Article _____ thereof; and the following chapters by persons learned in the subject matter: _____ (specify)]. To enable the court to do so, copies of these authorities are attached hereto and made a part hereof.

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in opposing a motion to compel international discovery when the discovery sought by the moving party takes insufficient account of the requirements of international comity. This form may be combined with general memoranda in opposition to a motion to compel discovery.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel should set forth the facts and sovereign interests, showing that the use of Hague Convention procedures are not justified by considerations of international comity, and explain why resort to Convention procedures will not prove effective for discovery. Counsel should also request that judicial notice be taken of provisions of foreign law, treaties, and practice, and demonstrate how these provisions would be violated if the discovery order requested by the moving party is executed in the foreign nation. If counsel is agreeable to some form of discovery, he or she may wish to suggest specific discovery procedures that take into account ascertainable requirements of the foreign state and that are least likely to offend that state's sovereignty.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Improper If Violates Requirements of International Comity

In Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale v. United States District Court (1987) 482 U.S. 522, 544, 107 S. Ct. 2542, 96 L. Ed. 2d 461 ,petitioners foreign corporations appealed a decision, by United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, denying a writ of mandamus and holding that when the district court had jurisdiction over a foreign litigant, the Hague Convention on the Taking of Evidence Abroad in Civil or Commercial Matters, 23 U.S.T. 2555 (Hague Convention), did not apply to production of evidence in litigant's possession. Thus, the question presented in this case concerned the extent to which a federal district court must use the Hague Convention procedures when litigants sought answers to interrogatories, the production of documents, and admissions from a French adversary over whom the court had personal jurisdiction.

The United States Supreme Court held that the Hague Convention was not the mandatory and exclusive procedure for obtaining documents and information located within the territory of a foreign signatory. Rather, the Convention was intended to establish optional procedures that would facilitate the taking of evidence abroad (482 U.S. 522, 544) . The Court found support for this view, based on Convention's use of nonmandatory language, and on the fact that it does not expressly require contracting states to use the specified procedures or change their own procedures (482 U.S. 522, 534) .

The Supreme Court observed that in "many situations, the Letter of Request procedure authorized by the Hague Convention would be unduly time consuming and expensive, as well as less certain to produce needed evidence than direct use of the Federal Rules" (482 U.S. 522, 542) . However, the Court also observed that "in other instances a litigant's first use of the Hague Convention procedures can be expected to yield more evidence abroad more promptly than use of the normal procedures governing pre-trial civil discovery. In those instances, the calculations of the litigant will naturally lead to a first-use strategy" (482 U.S. 522, 542). Accordingly, the interests of international comity require a court to conduct a case-by-case balancing of facts, sovereign interests, and the likelihood that resort to Convention procedures will prove effective before requiring resort to those procedures (482 U.S. 522, 543-544) . Moreover, when a federal district court otherwise has jurisdiction over a foreign national party, the Convention does not preempt discovery procedures available under the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (482 U.S. 522, 544) .

In American Home Assurance Co. v. Societe Commerciale Toutelectric (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 430 , plaintiff bonding company sued defendant guarantor, a French corporation, in a superior court in California, to recover its losses on payment and performance bonds and security riders it issued in connection with a power plant construction contract. The trial court entered a default judgment, after striking the defendant's answer as a discovery sanction. Defendant appealed the denial of its motion for a new trial.

Defendant argued that the trial court erred by refusing to apply the Hague Convention discovery procedures. The trial court concluded that defendant's failure to produce three material witnesses for deposition, coupled with its earlier failure to produce financial records, demonstrated a "persistent, willful, and unjustified refusal" to comply with its legitimate discovery obligations (104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 419) .

The court of appeal held that the tactics of defendant in responding to discovery were so inconsistent with Hague Convention procedures that the trial court properly found it waived the right to insist on those procedures. The appellate court concluded that the rule of first resort announced in Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 840, 858, 176 Cal. Rptr. 874 had been superseded by the more particularized approach outlined by the United States Supreme Court in Societe Nationale Industrielle Aerospatiale (discussed above) (104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 436-437) . (Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft held that, even when a foreign defendant is subject to California jurisdiction, a California litigant must, as a matter of international comity, attempt to comply with the provisions of the Convention before attempting any discovery in the signatory nation). The court of appeal also held that the party seeking to utilize the Hague Convention procedures has the burden of convincing the trial court that they are justified by considerations of international comity (104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 427) . Moreover because Hague Convention procedures are only an optional method of pursuing discovery abroad, they may be waived by failing to raise the issue properly (104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 429 , overruling Pierburg GmbH & Co. KG v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 238, 186 Cal. Rptr. 876). However, a party's neglect of its right to request application of the Hague Convention procedures must be substantial to support a finding of waiver (104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 430) . Finally, the appellate court found that a terminating sanction for the discovery abuses was not abuse of discretion (104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 437) .

[b] Matters Subject to Permissive Judicial Notice

Matters of which judicial notice may be taken to the extent that they are not embraced within Evid. Code § 451 (matters subject to mandatory judicial notice) include the following: (1) official acts of the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the United States or of any state of the United States [Evid. Code § 452(c)]; and (2) the law of an organization of nations, of foreign nations, and public entities in foreign nations [Evid. Code § 452(f)].

[c] Requirement That Court Take Judicial Notice on Request

The trial court must take judicial notice of any matter specified in Evid. Code § 452 if a party requests it and (1) gives each adverse party sufficientnotice of the request, through the pleadings or otherwise, to enable such adverse party to prepare to meet the request; and (2) furnishes the court with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice of the matter [Evid. Code §§ 11, 453]. The request may be made in the memorandum, as appears here.

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for protective order (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.30, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.50).]

DISCOVERY RELATING TO A DEFENDANT'S FINANCIAL CONDITION OR CERTAIN PROFITS IS NOT PERMITTED WITHOUT A COURT ORDER MADE ON A SHOWING OF SUBSTANTIAL PROBABILITY THAT PLAINTIFF WILL PREVAIL ON THE PUNITIVE DAMAGES CLAIM.

Prohibition on Discovery Into Defendant's Financial Affairs. There shall be no discovery into the financial condition of a defendant or into the profits gained by means of the allegedly wrongful course of conduct, unless plaintiff shows that he or she has a substantial probability of prevailing on his or her punitive damages claim (Civ. Code § 3295(c)); see Jabro v. Superior Court (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 758, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843).

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in seeking an order to protect against untoward discovery of sensitive or confidential financial matters by a defendant in litigation that permits the assessment of punitive damages. It should be used when the plaintiff either has not made a motion pursuant to Civ. Code § 3295(c), or has made such a motion but without success. Because this type of protective order may be appropriate to thevarious forms of discovery, this form may be combined with any of the general forms of memoranda in support of a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.30, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.50].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 81.350 may be used to oppose the motion supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prohibition on Discovery Into Defendant's Financial Affairs

In Jabro v. Superior Court (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843 , petitioners, defendants in the underlying action arising from a racially-motivated altercation, petitioned for a writ of mandate reversing the trial court's order, entered in accordance with Civ. Code § 3295(c), allowing discovery of their financial condition. Petitioners argued that the trial court erred in allowing discovery because it considered only evidence in favor of discovery submitted by plaintiff and real party in interest, and concluded that plaintiff was entitled to discovery because he made a prima facie showing sufficient to avoid summary judgment on his punitive damages claim. The trial court determined that such a showing was all that is required under Civ. Code § 3295(c) (95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 755-756) .

The court of appeal rejected the standard articulated by the trial court, and issued a writ of mandate, directing the court to vacate its order granting discovery and to reconsider the matter applying the standard enunciated in this opinion. The court held that before a trial court may enter an order allowing discovery of financial condition information under Civ. Code § 3295(c), it must weigh the evidence presented by both sides, and make a finding that it is very likely the plaintiff will prevail on his claim for punitive damages (95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 755) . The court interpreted the words "substantial probability" in the context of this statute to mean "very likely" or "a strong likelihood" (95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 758) .

The court noted that although Civ. Code § 3295(c) was enacted in 1980, there has not been a published case in which the section is specifically at issue and interpreted (95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 757) . The court foundsupport for its interpretation of Civ. Code § 3295(c), however, by examining the statute's legislative history. The Senate Committee on the Judiciary noted that under Civ. Code § 3295(c), "in order for the plaintiff to discover evidence of defendant's wealth or of profits made through wrongful conduct, he would first be required to prove his case, with the burden of beyond a reasonable doubt, in a sort of 'mini-trial' before the judge" (emphasis added by this court) (95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 757) . However, the court clarified that the statute is a discovery statute and does not implicate the traditional fact finding process or the right to a jury trial in any way. Rather, it concerns a defendant's right to privacy and protection from being forced to settle non-meritorious lawsuits in order to protect this right (95 Cal. App. 4th 754, 759) .

8-81 California Points & Authorities § 81.341

§ 81.341 Supporting Motion for Protective Order--Presumptive Right Limiting Access to and Use of Financial Information [Cal. Const., art. I, § 1]

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for protective order (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.30, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.50).]

A PARTY AGAINST WHOM DISCOVERY OF FINANCIAL INFORMATION IS SOUGHT HAS A PRESUMPTIVE RIGHT TO A PROTECTIVE ORDER LIMITING ACCESS TO AND USE OF THE INFORMATION TO THAT WHICH IS NECESSARY TO THE LITIGATION.

[EITHER]

A. Presumptive Right to Protective Order Limiting Access to Financial Information. A party to a lawsuit in which the opposing party is entitled to discovery into the party's financial affairs is presumptively entitled, under the constitutional right to privacy established in Section 1 of Article I of the California Constitution, to a protective order requiring that the information only be revealed to persons for whom such information is necessary for trial preparation, and that after being so revealed, the information may only be used for purposes of the pending litigation, unless the party seeking discovery meets its burden of establishing a substantial reason related to the lawsuit why the protective order should be denied (see Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317-318, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4 ; see also Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 272, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77).

[Optional] B. Mere Failure to Show Annoyance, Embarrassment, or Oppression Does Not Negate Presumption of Right to Protective Order. Failure on the part of the party, against whom discovery of financial information is sought, to support his or her motion for a protective order with a factual showing that annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression would result from the discovery is not sufficient to overcome the presumption that the party has a right to such an order, or to overcome the burden of the party seeking discovery to show why the order should be denied (see Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4).

[Optional] C. Right to Protective Order Is Not Waived by Plaintiff's Putting Financial Condition in Issue. A plaintiff who puts his or her own financial worth in issue waives his or her constitutional right to privacy only to the extent necessary for a fair resolution of the action, and does not waive his or her presumptive right to a protective order limiting access to the discovered information (see Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317-318, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4).

[AND/OR]

D. Sealing Financial Information. The court may issue a protective order requiring that confidential information concerning a party's financial information be sealed (see Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 551, 160 Cal. Rptr. 561).

[AND/OR]

E. Use of Defendant's Stipulation or Financial Statement in Action Involving Punitive Damages Claim. The court may issue a protective order requiring that defendant stipulate that he or she is in a position to satisfy the punitive damages claim, or may order that defendant furnish an already prepared financial statement, thus eliminating the need for a full disclosure of defendant's financial affairs (see Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 551, 160 Cal. Rptr. 561).

[Optional] F. Access to Financial Information May Be Limited to Discovering Party's Attorney. A protective order limiting disclosure of financial information to the discovering party's attorneys and barring disclosure to the client is proper if the party seeking theorder meets its burden of showing good cause (see GT, Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 748, 754-755, 198 Cal. Rptr. 892).

[2] Comments

This form is for use in seeking an order to protect against untoward disclosure of sensitive or confidential financial matters properly discovered during litigation. Paragraphs A--C may be used by a party who is required to permit discovery into his or her financial affairs, but who is still presumptively entitled to a protective order limiting access to the information. In place of or in addition to Paragraphs A--C, Paragraph D may be used to support a request for an order sealing the financial information, and Paragraph E may be used by a defendant seeking to use a stipulation or financial statement instead of full disclosure in an action involving punitive damages claims, particularly when the defendant is a public corporation or business entity. Optional Paragraph F may be used when the party seeking a protective order desires to limit disclosure to the discovering party's attorney.

This form may be used when the party against whom discovery is sought is not seeking to prevent actual discovery of the financial information, or when the party seeking discovery has established its right to such discovery, such as when a plaintiff in an action for punitive damages has obtained an order for discovery on a showing that he or she has a substantial probability of prevailing on the punitive damages claim [see Civ. Code § 3295(c)]. It should be combined with memorandum generally supporting a motion for a protective order [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.80, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.30, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.50].

In addition to a protective order, a defendant may apply to the court to preclude admissibility of his or her profits or financial condition until after the trier of fact returns a verdict for the plaintiff awarding actual damages and finds that punitive damages are appropriate under Civ. Code § 3294 [Civ. Code § 3295(d)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumptive Right to Protective Order Limiting Access to Financial Information

Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4 involved an action for legal malpractice. Plaintiff alleged that because of the negligence of defendants, he was compelled, as a matter of financial survival and under threat of execution against his assets, to pay a substantial sum of money in settlement and satisfaction of a judgment in a case in which defendants had represented him. By means of a deposition, defendants elicited from plaintiff detailed information regarding his financial affairs for the past 20 years. Plaintiff moved the trial court for a protective order sealing the deposition and limiting dissemination of the information therein to counsel for the parties and such other persons related to the litigation who needed the information to prepare for trial. The trial court denied the motion, and plaintiff petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to overturn the order.

The court of appeal granted the petition and directed that the trial court's order be reversed. The court stated that personal financial information comes within the zone of privacy protected by Cal. Const., art. I, § 1 (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 315, 316) . Even when the state's interest in facilitating the ascertainment of truth in connection with legal proceedings weighs in favor of disclosure of private information, such disclosure is permitted only to the extent necessary for a fair resolution of the lawsuit. The court held that the fact that plaintiff was neither denying that his opponents were entitled to discovery of the information nor seeking to restrict the scope of such discovery did not justify denying plaintiff his constitutional right of privacy in the financial information (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 316) . The court cited Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77 (discussed below), for its basic holding that plaintiff was presumptively entitled to a protective order limiting access to the information disclosed in the deposition to those persons requiring it for purposes of trial preparation. The court concluded that the burden was on the party seeking discovery to establish a reason, related to the law suit, for denial of the protective order (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317-318) .

Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77 was an action for malicious prosecution, intentional interference with business relations, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Defendants were five members of a law firm. Plaintiffs propounded interrogatories concerning the financial status of each of them, the relevance of which lay in the fact that the causes of action that were alleged permitted the assessment of punitive damages. Defendants filed objections to the interrogatories and moved for a protective order. The trial court overruled the objections, but issued an order requiring that answers to interrogatoriesshould be given, but should be sealed, delivered to the clerk of the court, and should remain unopened except by the judge. The trial judge later dissolved his own protective order, believing that one of the five defendants had not complied with the order to disclose.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, requiring the trial court to make a new protective order in lieu of the one that had been dissolved (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 271, 272) . The court noted the range of undesirable consequences that may arise from an untoward disclosure of financial information. Because denial of the protective order to the fifth defendant would expose him to those consequences, the court held that denial to be an abuse of discretion (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 271) . The court went on to hold that in every situation in which a party is compelled to reveal financial information because of its relevance to the subject matter of a claim for punitive damages, that part is presumptively entitled to a protective order that the information only be revealed to the discovering party's attorney or representative of such attorney, and that once so revealed, the information may only be used for purposes of the pending litigation (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 272) . No statutory authority was cited for the imposition of this protective order. The court did indicate, however, that the constitutional right to privacy includes the right to be free from unnecessary disclosure of financial information (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 272, 273) .

Note that the decision in Richards was decided prior to the enactment of Civ. Code § 3295(c). That statute eliminates discovery of a defendant's financial condition in a case involving a punitive damages claim, except when the plaintiff has successfully moved the court for such discovery on a showing that he or she has a substantial probability of prevailing on the punitive damages claim. Thus, after plaintiff has obtained permission to inquire into defendant's financial affairs pursuant to Civ. Code § 3295(c), it is not clear as to whether the defendant's presumptive right to a protective order still exists. However, at least two court of appeal cases decided after the enactment of Civ. Code § 3295(c) have cited Richards as binding or persuasive precedent without mentioning any effect of Civ. Code § 3295(c) on either the rule set out in Richards or its underlying reasoning [see Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317-318, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4 ; Martin v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 391, 395, 167 Cal. Rptr. 811] . It thus appears that the enactment of Civ. Code § 3295(c) has not affected a party's right to a protective order limiting access to and use of discovered financial information.

[b] Mere Failure to Show Annoyance, Embarrassment, or Oppression Does Not Negate Presumption of Right to Protective Order

The facts and procedural background of Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4 are set out in [a], above. In Moskowitz, the court rejected the argument of defendants, who were opposing the motion for a protective order, that the trial court's denial of the motion was proper because plaintiff had failed to support his motion with a factual showing of annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, as required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)). The court stated that if the burden had rested on plaintiff to show good cause for the protective relief that he was seeking, the trial court's order denying the motion would not have constituted an abuse of discretion (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317) . The court held, however, that the burden was on defendants to establish a reason, related to the lawsuit, for denial of the protective order (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 318) . The court rejected defendants' reasons for denying the motion as erroneous or insufficient, and thus ordered the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion for protective relief (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 318-319) .

[c] Right to Protective Order Is Not Waived by Plaintiff's Putting Financial Condition in Issue

The facts and procedural background to Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4 are set out in [a], above. In Moskowitz, the court of appeal rejected argument by defendants, who were opposing the motion for protective relief, that plaintiff had waived his right of privacy with respect to the financial information by filing his action for legal malpractice. The action put in issue whether plaintiff had the financial resources to stay the execution of judgment entered against him in the action in which defendants had represented plaintiff (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 317-318) . The court held that in filing the lawsuit and putting in issue his financial worth, plaintiff had waived his constitutional right to privacy only to the extent necessary for a fair resolution of the action. The court acknowledged that Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77 (discussed in [a], above), on which the court based its holding, had involved discovery from a defendant that had not put its financial worth in issue. The court held, however, that Richards is applicable regardless of whether it is a plaintiff or defendant who seeks a protective order limiting the use of financial information obtained through discovery to legitimate purposes (137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 318) .

[d] Sealing Financial Information

Cobb v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 160 Cal. Rptr. 561 was an action for fraud and for money had and received. Plaintiff propounded interrogatories seeking the net worth of two defendants for punitive damages purposes. Defendants objected to the interrogatories, contending that they violated their constitutional right to privacy. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to compel answers, but added a protectiveprovision limiting the use of the information solely to plaintiff and plaintiff's counsel, and only for purposes of the lawsuit.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate requiring the trial court to set aside its order based on the grounds that the trial court appeared to have made no effort to fashion its protective order within constitutional limits so as to best protect defendants (99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 550) . Thus, the court ordered the trial court to make a new protective order and discussed a number of possibilities for such an order. Among the possibilities suggested by the court were sealing the information disclosed by the discovery, or limiting the inquiry to net worth alone, provided that plaintiff has first received a stipulation from defendant that defendant is able to meet the amount of the punitive damages claim (99 Cal. App. 3d 543, 550-551) .

[f] Access to Financial Information May Be Limited to Discovering Party's Attorney

GT, Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 748, 198 Cal. Rptr. 892 was a proceeding on a petition for review of a protective order in an antitrust action in which petitioner alleged that real parties in interest had driven it out of the alleged market through competitive underpricing practices. Petitioner sought extensive discovery of financial records and information of real parties pertinent to the question of whether real parties' pricing policy amounted to pricing below cost. After some procedural skirmishing, the trial court issued a protective order limiting disclosure of the information to petitioner's attorneys. Petitioner then petitioned for review.

The court of appeal denied the petition. The court initially held that the burden of showing good cause is on the parties seeking the protective order. The court stated that the application by the court in Moskowitz v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 313, 187 Cal. Rptr. 4 (discussed in [a], above), of the presumption of good cause when financial information pertinent to liability rather than punitive damages is sought was warranted if the protective order in issue limited dissemination to persons concerned with the lawsuit, but may have been improper if the order in issue sought to bar the clients from access to the information. A protective order is easy to justify when financial information is needed for punitive damages because the client has little need to know the information when preparinga case on the liability question, but that when the information goes to the heart of the cause of action itself, a litigant should not be denied access so easily (151 Cal. App. 3d 748, 754) . The court, however, rejected petitioner's argument that a court is not permitted to impose a "counsel only" protective order even when there is a showing of good cause. Reviewing the facts before it, the court noted that real parties did not at any point in the proceedings produce any evidence in favor of the protective order, but merely asserted on appeal that the trial judge had properly incorporated into the protective order a proper balance between real parties' privacy rights and petitioner's rights to discovery. Based on its own review of the record, however, the court concluded that the order was supported by good cause. The trial judge had shown that he understood the law on protective orders, had agreed that the evidence was directly relevant to the issues in the lawsuit, and had expressed concern that, given the animus between the parties, the information could be improperly used if disclosed to petitioner (151 Cal. App. 3d 748, 755) . There was no indication in the record as to whether petitioner ever objected to the evidentiary basis for the protective order. The court stated that petitioner had the burden of producing an adequate record and that it must presume the correctness of the order and, absent a showing to the contrary, that petitioner had failed to object before the trial court (151 Cal. App. 3d 748, 756) . The court also added that if petitioner' counsel concluded that disclosure of the information to their clients might resolve the case, such as by causing abandonment of settlement, they could seek an in camera hearing to determine whether disclosure to the clients would be warranted. The court cautioned that it was not deciding under what circumstances such disclosure should take place (151 Cal. App. 3d 748, 756 n.4).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Presumptive Right to Protective Order Limiting Access to Financial Information

In Martin v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 391, 167 Cal. Rptr. 811 , plaintiffs sought punitive damages in connection with three causes of action and sought discovery of defendants' assets in connection with the damage request. Defendants objected to the interrogatories that sought disclosure of their income, assets, and liabilities and made a motion to obtain a protective order. The trial court granted a protective order that directed that the financial information be sealed on filing with the court, that the information be used only in connection with the litigation and be disseminated only to the parties and/or counsel of record, or their designees, and that the information only had to be divulged after a specified date. Defendants considered the protective order insufficient, and petitioned for an extraordinary writ requiring the trial court to vacate its orderand issue a new one that would adequately protect their constitutional right of privacy.

The court of appeal directed that a peremptory writ of mandate be issued requiring the trial court to vacate the portion of its order that permitted dissemination of defendants' financial information and/or records to plaintiffs, as distinguished from their counsel, and enter a new order limiting dissemination solely to counsel for plaintiffs. The court held that the protective order was inadequate to preserve defendants' right of privacy defined by Carmel-by-the-Sea v. Young (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 259, 268, 85 Cal. Rptr. 1, 466 P.2d 225 . The court stated that the record at best showed a tenuous base for the pending action. It was sufficiently clear to the court that nothing of probative value in the record other than allegation thereof supported the charges of fraud, oppression, and malice made by plaintiffs on which the claim for punitive damages was grounded, and that it was not improbable that the interrogatories in question may have been dictated primarily for tactical purposes. Citing Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 271-272, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77 , the court held that when a party is compelled in civil discovery to reveal financial information because the information is relevant to the subject matter of a claim for punitive damages, that party is, on his or her motion, presumptively entitled to a protective order that the information need be revealed only to counsel for the discovering party or to counsel's representative, and that once so revealed, the information may be used only for the purposes of the lawsuit. The burden is on the opposing party to establish a substantial reason why the order should be denied, and the reason must be related to the lawsuit (110 Cal. App. 3d 391, 395) .

§ 81.350 Opposing Motion for Protective Order--Financial Information Sought Goes to Heart of Punitive Damages Case [Civ. Code § 3295(c)]

[The following should be combined with a memorandum opposing a motion for a protective order (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.100.]

THE REQUEST FOR A PROTECTIVE ORDER BY DEFENDANT TO LIMIT ACCESS TO HIS/HER/ITS FINANCIAL RECORDS SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE ORDER WOULD PREVENT DISCOVERY OF FINANCIAL INFORMATION THAT GOES TO THE HEART OF THE CAUSE OF ACTION.

Civ. Code 3295. When the financial information sought goes to the heart of the cause of action itself, and is the only way for the plaintiff to prove his or her case, the plaintiff should not be denied access to that information on the basis of Section 3295 of the Civil Code, which applies only when the financial information is unrelated to the substantive claim and is relevant to a measure of damages that may never be awarded (Rawnsley v. Superior Court (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 86, 91, 227 Cal. Rptr. 806).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in opposition to a motion for a protective order under Civ. Code § 3295. Civ. Code § 3295 provides that when a cause of action allows for the recovery of punitive damages, under certain circumstances the court may grant defendant a protective order requiring plaintiff to produce evidence of a prima facie case of liability for damages pursuant to Civ. Code § 3294 before defendant will be required to disclose evidence concerning his or her financial condition. The ground for opposition is that those circumstances are not present due to the basis of the cause of action, and thus a protective order is inappropriate. This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum in opposition to a motion for a protective order in a specific procedural context [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.100].

In an appropriate case, the foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 81.340.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Civ. Code § 3295 Is Not Applicable When Financial Information Sought Goes to Heart of Cause of Action

In Rawnsley v. Superior Court (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 86, 227 Cal. Rptr. 806 , plaintiff was solicited by defendants to invest in a limited partnership. After plaintiff had invested, the partnership was dissolved and replaced by four new limited partnerships to maximize tax benefits. Alleging that defendants siphoned and failed to distribute profits, received excessive compensation for management duties, and misled plaintiff abouttheir compensation, plaintiff brought an action setting forth ten causes of action, several of which, if proven, would give rise to a claim for punitive damages. Plaintiff served requests for production of documents on defendants. After agreeing to produce some documentation and being granted an extension of time, defendants objected to some of the requests. Plaintiff brought a motion to compel production. Defendants opposed that motion, claiming the financial records were protected by Civ. Code § 3295 and moved for relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 for any default that might have occurred by failing to produce the documents in a timely manner. The trial court granted defendants request for relief from default and denied plaintiff's motion. Plaintiff sought relief in the form of a writ.

The court of appeal affirmed the relief from default and issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying plaintiff's motion for an order compelling production. The court observed that a plaintiff's right to pretrial discovery of the defendant's financial status was severely limited by Civ. Code § 3295. However, Civ. Code § 3295 was designed to protect the defendant from a specific type of discovery abuse: a situation in which a plaintiff puts forth an easily alleged cause of action for punitive damages, thus requiring a defendant to expend time and money in compiling a complex mass of information unrelated to the substantive claim involved in the lawsuit and relevant only to a measure of damages that may never be awarded. The court distinguished plaintiff's case. Plaintiff did not seek discovery of defendant's financial status solely for the purpose of assessing a punitive damages claim; the documents sought were fundamental to his case. He was alleging conversion and diversion of his assets, and the only way he could prove his case was to obtain defendant's financial records. When the only reason for seeking financial information is to give a tactical edge to the party who has obtained discovery of the information by allowing that party the benefit of pressure in settlement negotiations by threat or implication of disclosure, the party against whom the discovery is sought should be afforded the full benefit of Civ. Code § 3295, including a protective order limiting access to that information. But when, as in plaintiff's case, the financial information goes to the heart of the cause of action itself, a litigant should not be denied access so easily (183 Cal. App. 3d 86, 91) .

CHAPTER 82 DISCOVERY: SANCTIONS FOR DISCOVERY MISUSE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-82 California Points & Authorities § 82.01

§ 82.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter includes memoranda relating to the general provisions of the California Civil Discovery Act that govern discovery sanctions:

- A general form supporting a motion for discovery sanctions [§ 82.10].

- Forms supporting a motion for the imposition of one of the particular types of discovery sanctions: monetary sanctions [§ 82.11]; issue sanctions [§ 82.12]; evidence sanctions [§ 82.13]; terminating sanctions [§ 82.14]; and a contempt sanction [§ 82.15].

- Forms opposing a motion for sanctions generally [§ 82.20 et seq.] and forms opposing a motion for the imposition of particular types of discovery sanctions [§ 82.30 et seq.].

In addition to the general sanction provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq. that are covered in this chapter, there are included with the code sections governing each of the specific methods of discovery provisions for the imposition of sanctions in the context of proceedings involving that particular method. The general memoranda in this chapter should be combined, whenever appropriate, with the memoranda relating to the more specific provisions for sanctions: these are set out in the chapters dealing with each of the particular discovery methods [see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions through Ch. 88, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information].

CHAPTER 82 DISCOVERY: SANCTIONS FOR DISCOVERY MISUSE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-82 California Points & Authorities § 82.02

§ 82.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified at Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in*Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000*, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Discovery Sanctions

The general provisions governing discovery sanctions are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq. These provisions generally define what constitutes an abuse of the discovery process, and the sanctions that may be imposed for such abusive conduct.

Note that elsewhere in the Discovery Act, the code sections governing the particular method of discovery include more specific provisions for sanctions. It is the provisions in these code sections that actually authorize the imposition of one or more sanctions in the context of a proceeding involving a particular discovery proceeding. Typically these provide for monetary sanctions in the case of unsuccessfully pursuing or opposing a particular discovery motion without justification [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.410(c) (motion to stay oral deposition and quash deposition notice); Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420 (motion for protective order in context of oral deposition); Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450 (motion to compel in context of oral deposition)]. Also typically, these provide for the imposition of issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions for a failure to obey an order compelling discovery [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(d) (failure to obey motion compelling attendance and testimony at oral deposition)]. The sanction provisions relating to particular discovery methods are covered in the chapters relating to those methods [see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions through Ch. 88, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information].

This power to impose evidentiary sanctions under the Civil Discovery Act [Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.010 et seq.] as a remedy for litigation misconduct supplements, but does not supplant, a court's inherent power to deal with litigation abuse [Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co. v. Superior Court (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 272, 285-291, 245 Cal. Rptr. 873] . Thus, one California appellate court has held that a trial court, when faced with pervasive, deliberate, and egregious misconduct--abuse that makes lesser sanctions inadequate to ensure a fair trial--may use its inherent judicial power to dismiss the action [Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v. The Walt Disney Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 736, 758, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268 ; but see New Albertsons, Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1431-1434, 1426, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 457 (imposition of evidence and issue sanctions based on court's inherent power to control litigation, absent defendant's failure to obey order compelling discovery, was abuse of discretion when there was no order compelling defendant to produce video recordings, and real parties had waived right to compel further response or inspection; sanctions based on court's inherent power are reserved for egregious violations of discovery process)]. In that case, the trial court properly terminated litigation for discovery misconduct "run riot," involving a plaintiff that employed an investigator to steal confidential documents from defendant's secure facilities and trash receptacles, altered those documents with the intent to mislead, and lied about the source and number of the stolen documents in its verified discovery responses [Stephen Slesinger, Inc. v. The Walt Disney Co. (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 736, 744-756, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 268] .

The provisions that currently govern the imposition of monetary sanctions in actions or proceedings generally, set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7, apply to actions or proceedings initiated after 1994 [Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7(i)]. These provisions do not apply to disclosures and discovery requests, responses, objections, and motions [Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7(g)]. Therefore, monetary sanctions for discovery violations in actions or proceedings started after 1994 are limited to those specified in the Discovery Act.

In Olmstead v. Arthur J. Gallagher & Co. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 804, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 298, 86 P.3d 354 , the California Supreme Court clarified that former Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 does not authorize trial courts to impose sanctions for any form of litigation misconduct arising "from a complaint filed, or a proceeding initiated" after December 31, 1994. The Court held that the Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 and former Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 establish mutually exclusive sanctions regimes, with Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 controlling in proceedings initiated before January 1, 1995 and Code Civ. Proc. § 128.7 controlling after that date [Olmstead v. Arthur J. Gallagher & Co. (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 804, 809-819, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 298, 86 P.3d 354 (rejecting court of appeal's interpretation that former Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 applies after 1994 to sanctions for conduct not involving pleadings)].

[3] Case Law Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

There is a considerable body of case law that interpreted the discovery provisions preceding the current Act, that is, the Civil Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9) and the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2036). The Civil Discovery Act, which became operative July 1, 2005 continued provisions of the prior law. Decisions construing these prior laws are therefore cited as controlling authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion for sanctions brought in the context of a particular discovery proceeding. They should be combined when appropriate with additional memoranda relating to the particular discovery proceedings. These are found in the related discovery chapters on particular discovery methods: Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions through Ch. 88, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form for a memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

§ 82.10 Supporting Motion for Discovery Sanctions [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.]--General Form

[1] FORM Supporting Motion for Discovery Sanctions [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.]--General Form

[The following may be combined with other memoranda as necessary to support a motion for sanctions (see, e.g., § 82.11 et seq.), and should be combined with memoranda supporting a motion for sanctions in the specific procedural context (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, §§ 83.31, 83.32, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, §§ 84.11, 84.12, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, §§ 85.12, 85.20).]

THE COURT MAY IMPOSE SANCTIONS ON ANYONE WHO HAS ENGAGED IN CONDUCT CONSTITUTING A MISUSE OF THE DISCOVERY PROCESS.

A. Court May Impose Sanctions for Misuse of Discovery Process. To the extent authorized by Section _____ [specify code section that governs particular discovery method, e.g., 2025.480 of the Code of Civil Procedure], the court, after notice to any affected party, person, or attorney, and after opportunity for hearing, may impose sanctions against anyone who has engaged in conduct that is a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030).

[Optional] B. Willfulness Is Not Prerequisite to Imposition of Sanctions. Sanctions may be imposed for engaging in conduct that is a misuse of the discovery process without regard to whether the person acted willfully (Kohan v. Cohan (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 967, 971, 280 Cal. Rptr. 474 (Second District interpreted imposition of monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)).

[Optional] C. Persisting in Attempt to Obtain Discovery Outside Scope Is Discovery Misuse. Persisting, over objection, and without substantial justification, in an attempt to obtain information or materials that are outside the scope of permissible discovery constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(a)).

[Optional] D. Failure to Comply With Procedures Is Discovery Misuse. Using a discovery method in a manner that does not comply with its specified procedures constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(b)).

[Optional] E. Employing Method Causing Annoyance, Embarrassment, Oppression, or Undue Burden and Expense Is Discovery Misuse. Employing a discovery method in a manner or to an extent that causes unwarranted _____ [annoyance and/or embarrassment and/or oppression and/or undue burden and expense] constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(c)).

[Optional] F. Failure to Respond or to Submit to Discovery Is Discovery Misuse. Failing to _____ [respond and/or submit] to an authorized method of discovery constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(d)).

[Optional] G. Unmeritorious Objection Is Discovery Misuse. Making an unmeritorious objection constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(e)).

[Optional] H. Evasive Response Is Discovery Misuse. Making an evasive response constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(f)).

[Optional] I. Disobeying Court Order Is Discovery Misuse. Disobeying a court order to provide discovery constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(g)).

[Optional] J. Making or Opposing Motion to Compel or to Limit Discovery Without Substantial Justification Is Discovery Misuse. Making or opposing a motion to compel or to limit discovery without substantial justification constitutes a misuse of the discovery process (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(h)).

[Optional] K. Failure to Confer With Opposing Party Is Discovery Misuse. Failing to confer in person, by telephone, or by letter with an opposing party or attorney in a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve informally any dispute concerning discovery, when Section _____ [specify code section that governs particular discovery motion, e.g. 2025.480] of the Code of Civil Procedure requires the filing of a declaration stating facts showing that such an attempt has been made, constitutes a misuse of the discovery process. Notwithstanding the outcome of the motion, the court must impose a monetary sanction ordering that any party or attorney who fails to confer as required pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of that conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(i)).

[Optional] L. Sanctions Are Not Limited to Listed Misuses. The list of discovery misuses contained in Section 2023.010 of the Code of Civil Procedure is illustrative, not exhaustive. Sanctions may be imposed for an unlisted discovery misuse, such as a motion for reconsideration, so long as the misuse was without substantial justification and no other circumstances make an award of sanctions unjust (Palm Valley Homeowners Assoc., Inc. v. Design MTC (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 563-564, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 ; Mattco Forge, Inc. v. Arthur Young & Co. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1429, 1440-1441, 273 Cal. Rptr. 262).

M. Sanctions Are Within Discretion of Trial Court. The imposition of a sanction pursuant to Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure is within the discretion of the trial court, so long as the sanction is appropriate to the dereliction, does not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party adversely affected by the discovery abuse, and is within the operation of Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure (see A & M Records, Inc. v. Heilman (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 554, 565, 142 Cal. Rptr. 390 ; Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 301, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321).

[Optional] N. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1030(a)).

[2] Comments

This form of memorandum is for use in supporting a motion for sanctions to be imposed against a party or attorney who has engaged in abuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.].

The memorandum should be combined with other memoranda relating to the imposition of specific sanctions as necessary, such as those set out in § 82.11 et seq. It should also be combined with forms supporting the imposition of sanctions in specific procedural contexts [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.32, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.12, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.12 (supporting sanctions for failure to obey inspection order)].

A request for a sanction in discovery matters must, in the notice of motion, identify every person, party, and attorney against whom the sanction is sought, and specify the type of sanction sought. The notice of motion must be supported by a memorandum, and accompanied by a declaration setting forth facts supporting the amount of any monetary sanction sought [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.040].

A judicial officer also has the power to impose reasonable money sanctions not exceeding $1,500, notwithstanding any other provision of law, for any violation of a lawful court order done without good cause or substantial justification. The money is payable to the court. Persons against whom the sanction is available include a witness, a party, a party's attorney, or both. However, this power is not applicable to advocacy of counsel before the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 177.5].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed aspersuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with the provisions of the current act.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the particular misuse of the discovery process in which the other party or attorney has engaged.

[c] Imposition of Sanctions

Sanctions may be imposed against anyone engaging in conduct constituting a misuse of the discovery process [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030]. The courts of appeal are divided on whether discovery sanctions can be awarded in favor of parties who did not propound the discovery that triggered the sanctions [see, e.g., Parker v. Wolters Kluwer United States, Inc. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 285, 301-302, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 18 (award of sanctions in favor of nonpropounding party is justified only if that party shows it suffered a detriment as result of sanctioned party's misuse of discovery process); Townsend v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1438, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333 ("outsiders [are] not entitled to be awarded sanctions"); Calvert Fire Ins. Co. v. Cropper (1983) 141 Cal. App. 3d 901, 905, 190 Cal. Rptr. 593 (there is no limitation on who may request sanctions, decided under prior law)]. For further discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Depositions (Matthew Bender).

The imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction is dependent on the party to be sanctioned having failed to obey a court order compelling discovery. Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030 provides that these sanctions are available to the extent authorized by the section governing the particular discovery method. The methods of discovery that permit the issuance of these sanctions are all based on, and require, disobedience of a court order compelling discovery [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450, 2025.480 (oral depositions), 2030.290, 2030.300 (interrogatories), 2031.300, 2031.310, 3031.320 (inspection, copying, testing, or sampling), 2032.240, 2032.410, 2032.420, 2032.620, 2032.650 (examinations), 2033.290 (admissions)]. Thus, although the court has the discretion to decide whether to impose these sanctions, they may not be imposed absent a prior court order compelling discovery or a stipulation that is "tantamount to a court order" [see Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 262, 279-281, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 831 (terminating sanctions were justified without evidence of violation of court order, based on parties' stipulation waiving right to insist on formal order compelling responses)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Willfulness Is Not Prerequisite to Imposition of Sanctions

In Kohan v. Cohan (1991) 229 Cal. App. 3d 967, 280 Cal. Rptr. 474 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendants for dissolution of partnership, an accounting, and other relief. In preparing for trial, the parties exchanged expert witness lists. Defendants' list included the name of a witness who had died two years earlier. Plaintiffs moved to exclude from trial a declaration by that expert, to preclude defendants from designating a different expert, and to impose monetary sanctions for misuse of discovery, claiming that the designation was an act of willful misconduct. The trial court granted plaintiffs' motions, including the motion for sanctions, finding that defendants manifested a lack of diligence that required plaintiffs to unnecessarily expend legal resources. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendants contended that sanctions were inappropriate in that their behavior was not willful or done in bad faith or to gain an advantage in the litigation. The court explained that the monetary sanctions were imposed pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)), which does not, by its terms, require that the misuse of the discovery process be willful. The court further explained that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)) allows the one against whom sanctions are sought to show substantial justification to avoid the imposition of sanctions (229 Cal. App. 3d 967, 971) . The court concluded that inasmuch as defendants did not contend that the trial court abused its discretion in failing to find substantial justification for their misuse of the discovery process, the order imposing sanctions must be affirmed (229 Cal. App. 3d 967, 972) .

For conflicting authority holding that willfulness is a prerequisite to imposition of sanctions, see § 82.22[3][a].

[b] Sanctions Are Not Limited to Listed Misuses

In Palm Valley Homeowners Assoc., Inc. v. Design MTC (2001) 85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 , a law firm appealed after the trial court imposed sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.) for discovery abuses and under Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 for bad faith actions in the underlying construction defect litigation. The basis for the imposition of sanctions was that the firm pursued litigation activities on behalf of its client, even after the firm knew that the client was a suspended corporation. The law firm argued, first, that it continued to represent its client in the good faith belief that suspension under the Corporations Code for failure to file a required information statement with the Secretary of State, unlike a suspension for nonpayment of taxes under the Revenue and Taxation Code, did not disable acorporation from litigation. The firm contended that the trial court erred in holding that the two types of suspensions were equivalent and that the firm acted in bad faith in believing that they should be treated differently (85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 555) . The firm also argued that the imposition of sanctions in reliance on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.) was improper, because the firm did not engage in any abuse of the discovery process itself (85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 558-559) .

The court of appeal rejected appellant's arguments and affirmed. The court acknowledged that whether the two types of corporate suspensions both result in a disqualification from litigation appeared to be an issue of first impression. However, the court of appeal concluded that the relevant statutory language, as well as legislative policy, were more than sufficient to put any reasonable attorney on notice that a corporation suspended under the Corporations Code, like a corporation suspended for nonpayment of taxes, is truly suspended, and disabled from participating in any litigation activities. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that the firm knew, or should have known, that the corporation was disqualified from representing itself in litigation (85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 561) . Further, the record belied the firm's assertions of good faith; rather, it showed that the firm deliberately concealed its knowledge of the suspension, and probable disability of its client, from both the court and opposing counsel, and continued to litigate vigorously, even seeking summary proceedings to terminate the case before the corporation's suspended status was discovered (85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 562-563) . Finally, the court rejected the firm's argument that the imposition of sanctions in reliance on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.) was improper, because its conduct in representing its client during ongoing discovery was not, in itself, an abuse of the discovery process (85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 563) . (Neither the client, nor the firm, for example, refused to provide relevant requested discovery, interposed abusive discovery requests, or did anything to harm or delay the regular processes ofdiscovery.) The conduct listed in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010) is not exclusive. In the court's view, participating in discovery on behalf of a suspended corporation, knowing that the corporation was suspended, and having reason to know or suspect that this suspension disabled the corporation from participating in the litigation, qualified as conduct abusive of the discovery process, and thus sanctionable. The court concluded that there was no abuse of discretion in so holding, particularly as the sanctions order was also fully justified on other grounds under Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 (85 Cal. App. 4th 553, 563-564) .

In Mattco Forge, Inc. v. Arthur Young & Co. (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1429, 273 Cal. Rptr. 262 , while defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's original complaint was pending, plaintiff served on defendant a demand for inspection of documents. After defendant responded with blanket objections, plaintiff asked to meet and confer. Defendant refused, claiming it was premature to discuss discovery until the pleading issues were resolved. After the trial court sustained defendant's demurrer with leave to amend, plaintiff renewed its request to meet and confer. Defendant again refused. Plaintiff filed a motion to compel production and for monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.) and 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.). The trial court granted four fifths of plaintiff's motion to compel and awarded monetary sanctions. Defendant then filed a motion for reconsideration of only the monetary sanction, without seeking a reconsideration of the order to produce. The trial court denied the motion for reconsideration and granted plaintiff's request for additional sanctions. Defendant appealed from the second order and filed a writ of mandate concerning the first order.

The court of appeal denied the writ of mandate and affirmed the second monetary sanction, holding that both sanction awards were proper. The court explained that under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(d)), the trial court was required to award monetary sanctions against defendant unless defendant acted with substantial justification or other circumstances make the imposition of sanctions unjust. The court said that defendant's objections were without substantial justification, because pleading deficiencies do not affect a party's right to conduct discovery (223 Cal. App. 3d 1429, 1436) . With regard to the second award of sanctions, which had been brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5 (frivolous actions or delaying tactics) as well as former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.), the court said that because it found the award was proper under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.), it would not address or consider any arguments based on Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5. It characterized defendant's motion for reconsideration of the sanction award as nothing more than a frivolous continuation of its opposition to plaintiff's motion to compel production based on defendant's unmeritorious objections (223 Cal. App. 3d 1429, 1437-1438) . The court said that the types of misuses of discovery listed in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010) are not exhaustive, and that misuse of discovery is not limited to what is contained in the list. It concluded that a frivolous motion for reconsideration is directly within the operation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010). Further, because the motion for reconsideration was made without substantial justification and in the absence of other circumstances making an award of sanctions unjust, the court held it was an abuse of the discovery process (223 Cal. App. 3d 1429, 1440-1441) .

[c] Sanctions Are Within Discretion of Trial Court

In A & M Records, Inc. v. Heilman (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 554, 142 Cal. Rptr. 390 , a corporation that commercially manufactured and sold recorded musical performances brought an action against a corporation and its founder, individually, for advertising and selling record and tape albums which included performances of songs duplicated from recordings manufactured by plaintiff without making payments to plaintiff or to any of the musicians involved. During the pretrial proceedings, plaintiff sought to take the individual defendant's deposition and to have him produce certain documents. Although defendant appeared for the deposition, he did not produce the documents and refused to answer any questions of substance concerning the documents. Based on this refusal, the trial court entered an order pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)], precluding defendant from testifying at the trial respecting any questions or matters which he refused to answer at the deposition and from introducing any documents at trial which he had not produced one week prior to trial. Defendant apparently produced the documents, and during the trial, the court interpreted the remainder of the order as limiting defendant's testimony and not that of any other witness. After the trial, judgment was entered for plaintiff. The individual defendant appealed in part on the grounds that the orders relating to discovery preventing his testimony at trial were improper in that the court could not make such orders without defendant first disobeying a court order, and that the order was an abuse of the court's discretion.

In denying the defendant's contentions and affirming the judgment, the court of appeal stated that the order employed in response to the defendant's failure to produce certain documents in discovery was a conditional order which only would have prevented him from introducing the documents at trial if he had once again failed to produce them a week before the scheduled start of the trial, in disobedience of the court order. The court said that when a party disobeys an order to produce documents, the court may make such orders in regard to the refusal as are just. As long as thesanction imposed was appropriate to the dereliction and did not exceed the protection required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery, its imposition was within the discretion of the trial judge (75 Cal. App. 3d 554, 565) . The court found that given the facts of the case and the imminent date of trial, the trial court's action was appropriate, just, and within its discretion (75 Cal. App. 3d 554, 565) .

Note that the California Civil Discovery Act significantly alters the procedure that was employed in A & M Records. Current law now provides that a party or party-affiliated deponent may be served with a deposition notice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq.]. If the notice is disobeyed, the noticing party may move for an order to compel attendance, testimony, or production [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450]. If the court grants this motion, the court must also impose a monetary sanction, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(c)(1)]. The court may impose an issue, evidence, or terminating sanction only if the party or party-affiliated deponent then fails to obey the order to compel [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(d)]. However, the principles discussed by the court in A & M Records remain similar to those under prior law, and thus the case is persuasive authority for the proposition that the sanction ordered is in the discretion of the trial court.

In Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321 , plaintiff sued defendant, individually, and a hospital and sanitarium of which defendant was president or manager, alleging it was the defendant's alter ego, for monies due on promissory notes. Subsequent to the filing of defendant's answer and counterclaim, plaintiff served defendant with interrogatories seeking information concerning defendant's relationship to the sanitarium, any defense which might be asserted against personal liability on the notes, and matters pertaining to the counterclaim. After defendant filed what he asserted to be answers to the interrogatories, plaintiff noticed a motion to compel further answers on the ground that certain of defendant's answers to the interrogatories were nonresponsive, incomplete, and evasive, and for monetary sanctions incurred in obtaining the orders. Defendant then filed a document purporting to contain additional answers. The motion was granted as to certain interrogatories, and defendant was given 30 days to file additional answers. When no further answers were filed within the time period, plaintiff sought an order striking defendant's answer and counterclaim and entering a default judgment. The court continued the matter and ordered defendant to provide further responses as previously ordered. Defendant moved for reconsideration and filed supplemental answers. At another hearing, the default judgment was entered. Defendant appealed, contending in part, that the ultimate sanction of striking his answer and counterclaim and entering a default was too severe, and that a lesser penalty would have been fitting.

In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal stated that while the purpose of sanctions under the discovery statutes is to enable the party to obtain the objects sought by the discovery and compliance with orders the court makes for such discovery, there are instances in which the sanction of striking an answer and entering default must be imposed in justice to the prevailing party (34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 301) . The true doctrine seems to be that so long as the penalty is appropriate to the dereliction, does not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery, and is one described by the statute, its imposition is within the discretion of the trial judge (34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 301) .

[a] Employing Method Causing Annoyance, Embarrassment, Oppression, or Undue Burden and Expense Is Discovery Misuse

In Blago Leko v. Cornerstone Home Inspection (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 , an action arising out of a suit for negligent disclosure of defects in real property, cross-defendant's attorney appealed his monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010). The court of appeal affirmed the order sanctioning the attorney for improperly filing a motion to compel attendance when he completely disregarded his obligation to attempt to informally resolve the discovery issue. Blago Leko is further discussed in § 82.10[4][b], below.

[b] Failure to Respond or to Submit to Discovery Is Discovery Misuse

In Sears, Roebuck and Co. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 717 , an insurance bad faith case, appellant attorney sought review of trial court orders that granted respondent policyholder's motion to compel discovery and imposed discovery sanctions on the attorney. The court of appeals affirmed the award of monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020(a), 2023(a)(4), (5), (6) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.010(a), 2023.010(d), (e), (f)), because evidence showed the attorney, in fact, knew he was obliged to produce documents to respondent's attorneys and repeatedly failed to do so. Moreover, the attorney's reliance on respondent's mistaken designation of him as the deposition officer to whom he should deliver the subpoenaed documents was not a good faith contention (131 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1351-1352) .

[c] Unmeritorious Objection Is Discovery Misuse

The factual and procedural background of Sears, Roebuck and Co. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 717 is discussed in 82.10[4][b]. The court of appeals affirmed the award of monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020(a), 2023(a)(4), (5), (6) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.010(a), 2023.010(d), (e), (f)), in part because the attorney's reliance on respondent's mistaken designation of him as the deposition officer to whom he should deliver the subpoenaed documents was not a good faith contention. "Not only did the subpoenas call for production at the address of [respondent's] lawyers, [appellant], as a lawyer himself, must have known what was intended. Simply put, his contention that he could comply by delivering the documents to himself is preposterous" (131 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1351-1352) .

[d] Evasive Response Is Discovery Misuse

For discussion of Sears, Roebuck and Co. v. Nat'l Union Fire Ins. Co. (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 717 , refer to § 82.10[4][c].

[e] Failure to Confer With Opposing Party Is Discovery Misuse

In Stewart v. Colonial W. Agency, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 115 , an action for breach of contract wrongful termination, defendant's attorneys argued that the trial court's order compelling further responses and awarding sanctions was erroneous, in part, because plaintiff's attorney failed to engage in a good faith effort to meet and confer. At a hearing on the motion to compel, the trial court specifically found that the attorney's meet and confer efforts complied with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(b)). The court of appeal agreed. Citing Obregon v. Superior Court, (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 431, 79 Cal. Rptr. 62 (discussed in § 82.11[4][a]), the court of appeal explained that determining whether an attempt at informal resolution is adequate involves the exercise of discretion. Relevant consideration include the history of the litigation, the nature of the interaction between counsel, the nature of the issues, the type and scope of discovery requested, the prospects of success, and similar factors (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1015-1016) . Apart from anything pertaining to the history of the litigation or the prior interaction between the parties of which the trial court may have been aware, the court of appeal noted a number of factors appearing in the record supported the finding of good faith. The objections were made during a deposition, so counsel had an opportunity to discuss the relatively simple matter face-to-face at the time the discovery dispute arose. There was need for immediate action because of the upcoming trial date and cut off dates for discovery and discovery motions. Moreover, defense attorney's announced unavailability for two long periods before trial left no time to conduct a lengthy meet and confer and file a discovery motion before the deadline. Finally, in his letter to plaintiff's attorney, the defense attorney did not himself suggest a date or time at which he would be available and did not indicate any intention to compromise. On these facts, the trial court did not err in finding that the efforts undertaken by plaintiff's counsel to meet and confer were adequate (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1015-1016) .

In Blago Leko v. Cornerstone Home Inspection (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 , an action arising out of a suit for negligent disclosure of defects in real property, cross-defendant's attorney appealed his monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(c)) and former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(i)). Defendant realtors sued cross-defendant home inspectors, contending they were entitled to seek equitable indemnity from the home inspection companies that breached their duty to a home buyer to discover and disclose defects. The inspectors' attorney unilaterally noticed depositions, but due to oversight and a possible misunderstanding arising from a conversation with his associate, realtors' attorney did not calendar the dates. Inspectors' attorney's office called to confirm the depositions, but was informed that neither realtors' counsel nor realtors would be available. Despite realtors' attorney's multiple efforts to arrange an alternate date, cross-defendant's attorney refused to reschedule the depositions, responding, in part, with an a demeaning, unprofessional letter. He also filed a motion to compel. The trial court denied the motion and ultimately awarded sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(c)), authorizing sanctions for "employing a discovery method in a manner or to an extent that causes unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense" (see optional Paragraph E in form, above). The court also referenced former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(i)), which authorizes sanctions for "failing to confer in person, by telephone, or by letter with an opposing party or attorney in a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve informally any dispute concerning discovery, if the section governing a particular discovery motion requires the filing of a declaration stating facts showing that such an attempt has been made" (86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1123) .

Inspectors' attorney contended he could not be sanctioned because he was authorized to proceed with his motion to compel and was not required to seek an informal resolution with opposing counsel. He relied on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(j)(3)(B) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(b)), which governs a party witness's failure to appear at or proceed with a properly noticed deposition, and provides that a motion to compel attendance "shall be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of each issue presented by it or, when the deponent fails to attend the deposition ... by a declaration stating that petitioner has contacted the deponent to inquire about the nonappearance (italics added)." The attorney reasoned that he complied with this statute by contacting realtors' attorney after he was toldher clients were unavailable on the scheduled dates (86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1124) .

The court of appeal rejected this argument. Instead, it held that implicit in the requirement that counsel contact the deponent to inquire about the nonappearance is a requirement that counsel listen to the reasons offered and make a good faith attempt to resolve the issue. Here, the failure to appear was due to oversight and opposing counsel expressed a willingness to reschedule the depositions at a mutually convenient date. The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it determined that inspectors' attorney did not comply with his obligations. Sanctions were properly awarded under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(3), and (9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(c), (i))(86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1124) .

[f] Sanctions Are Within Discretion of Trial Court

The factual and procedural background of Best Products, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 is discussed in § 85.10[4][a]. In this commercial litigation discovery dispute, the trial court erred when it issued, as a sanction, a judicial order that the attorney-client and work product privileges had been waived, based on defendant's failure to provide a privilege log in regard to the interrogatories propounded by plaintiff. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290(a)) provided the only method by which a claim of privilege can be waived in responding to an interrogatory: "If a party to whom interrogatories have been directed fails to serve a timely response, that party waives ... any objection to the interrogatories, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under Section 2018." This provision was inapplicable here, however, because defendant filed timely responses that complied with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(f)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.260). Thus, the lack of a privilege log was a non-issue (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189-1190) . If plaintiff had properly moved to compel further responses to contest defendant's conclusory attorney-client and work product objections under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310), defendant could have been required to produce a privilege log that was sufficiently specific so the trial court could determine whether a particular document was or was not privileged. However, plaintiff did not rely on that statutory provision in bringing its motion. Moreover, even if plaintiff had brought and prevailed on a motion on that statutory ground, the court could not have found a waiver of privilege. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310) set forth the exclusive remedies available to the court. The trial court can "make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under [former] Section 2023. In lieu of or in addition to that sanction, the court [could] impose a monetary sanction under [former] Section 2023." However, "even at that juncture, the statute does not include as an authorized sanction a judicial order that a privilege has been waived" (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189-1190) .

[EITHER]

B. Court May Impose Monetary Sanction for Engaging in or Advising Discovery Misuse. The court may impose a monetarysanction against one engaging in the misuse of the discovery process or any attorney advising that conduct, or both (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a); Obregon v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 434-435, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62).

[OR]

B. Court May Impose Monetary Sanction for Improperly Asserting That Someone Has Engaged in or Advised Discovery Misuse. The court may impose a monetary sanction against one who has unsuccessfully asserted that another engaged in the misuse of the discovery process, and against any attorney who advised that assertion, or both (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)).

[CONTINUE]

C. Monetary Sanction Mandatory If Substantial Justification or Mitigating Circumstances Not Found. If a monetary sanction is authorized by any provision of the Discovery Act (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050), the court shall impose that sanction unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a); Ghanooni v. Super Shuttle (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 256, 260-261, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 501).

D. Amount of Monetary Sanction. In imposing a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030(a), the court may order that the party or attorney subject to the sanction pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by another as a result of his or her conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)).

E. Nature and Purpose of Monetary Sanction. The nature of the monetary sanction available under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030(a) is similar to the awards that may be imposed under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 473 and 1024, and serves a similar purpose, that is, to compensate for expenses incurred; thus, the court may award a reasonable amount to compensate a party for his or her expenses incurred and is not limited to the costs that might properly be taxed against the losing party after the trial of the action (see Rosen v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 586, 593, 596, 53 Cal. Rptr. 347).

F. Value of Attorney's Services. The value of an attorney's services is a matter with which a judge must necessarily be familiar. When the court is informed of the extent and nature of such services, its own experience furnishes it with every element necessaryto fix their value (Bacon v. Bacon (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 131, 143, 194 P.2d 697 ; Spencer v. Collins (1909) 156 Cal. 298, 307, 104 P. 320).

[Optional] G. Pro Se Litigant's Recovery of Costs as Sanctions. A pro se litigant, including pro se lawyers, cannot recover attorney's fees as a discovery sanction; however a pro se litigant can recover reasonable expenses incurred as sanctions, including photocopying, computer-assisted legal research, and other identifiable and allocable costs (see Kravitz v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1015, 1017, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385).

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in generally supporting a motion for imposition of a monetary sanction against a party or attorney who has engaged in the misuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010, 2023.030(a)].

The memorandum should be combined with other memoranda of points and authorities relating to the imposition of specific sanctions as necessary, such as those set out in § 82.10 and 82.12 et seq. It should also be combined with forms supporting the imposition of sanctions in specific procedural contexts [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, §§ 83.30, 83.31, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, §§ 84.10, 84.11, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.10, 85.11 (supporting monetary sanctions in context of seeking motion to compel)].

A notice of motion seeking sanctions must be supported by a memorandum of points and authorities, and be accompanied by a declaration setting forth facts supporting the amount of any monetary sanction sought [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.040].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with the provisions of the current act.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the particular misuse of the discovery process in which the other party or attorney has engaged. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is sought tobe imposed by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction unless it finds that the person acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Impose Monetary Sanction for Engaging in or Advising Discovery Misuse

In Obregon v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , the trial court, finding that the moving party had not made an adequate effort to resolve the dispute informally, denied further discovery. The court of appeal vacated the ruling and remanded for reconsideration of a more appropriate sanction for the moving party's inadequate effort at informal resolution. The appellate court stated that, in deciding on a sanction for inadequate effort to achieve an informal resolution, the trial court should not automatically deny further discovery but should consider whether it would be appropriate to specify additional efforts that will be required of the offending party before the court will turn to the merits of the request to compel (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 434-435) . When appropriate, the court may assess monetary sanctions against the party whose efforts were found to be inadequate (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 435) . Obregon is further discussed in Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.11[4][c].

[b] Monetary Sanction Mandatory If No Substantial Justification or Mitigating Circumstances Found

In Ghanooni v. Super Shuttle (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 256, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 501 , the appellate court noted that it is no longer required that the alleged misuse of the discovery process be willful in order for the court to impose monetary sanctions against a party (20 Cal. App. 4th 256, 260) . Thus, the trial court properly imposed monetary sanctions against a plaintiff when she failed to provide substantial justification for her refusal to submit to the defendants' demand for X-rays, and when her attorney's argument that the X-rays were unnecessary because only soft tissue injuries were involved was not supported by any expert medical opinion and was, in fact, contradicted by the plaintiff's treating physician (20 Cal. App. 4th 256, 260-261) . For further discussion of Ghanooni, see § 82.21[3][a].

[c] Nature and Purpose of Monetary Sanction

In Rosen v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 586, 53 Cal. Rptr. 347 , after a continuance of the trial, plaintiff's attorneys learned that a material witness who lived in New York would be unable to attend the trial. They obtained a commission and served defendant's attorney with a notice of the taking of the deposition of that witness in New York City. Defendant's attorney traveled to New York, and found on the day set for the deposition that it had been continued, without notice to defendant or his attorney, by the New York attorney employed by plaintiff to take the deposition. After returning to California, defendant's attorney noticed a motion for an order imposing sanctions against plaintiff and his attorneys pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(g) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2025.450). The trial court denied the motion, and defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

In granting the peremptory writ, the court of appeal analyzed former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(g). Because no California cases had previously interpreted this statute, the court examined the power to impose sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 if a continuance is caused by an amendment permitted under that section, or if a party suffered loss or expense due to relief granted pursuant to that section from a judgment, order, or other proceeding. The court also compared former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(g) with Code Civ. Proc. § 1024, which at that time allowed the court to require the payment of costs (now termed "expenses"), which will be caused by the postponement of the trial as a condition of granting a continuance. The court concluded that the payment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 is not limited only to amounts which might be properly taxed as costs (244 Cal. App. 2d 586, 593) . When there is an amendment, the court may exercise its discretion in compensating the party for expenses to which he or she has been put, and when relief is granted from an order, judgment, or other proceeding, the court may require the payment of costs or attorney's fees to compensate the adverse party for loss or expense suffered due to the granting of the motion. Similarly, costs (now termed "expenses") due to a continuance pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1024 are not limited to items taxable as costs after the trial, but the court may award any reasonable amount to compensate the other party for expenses incurred in preparing for trial at the appointed time, including transportation and hotel bills of parties, attorneys, and witnesses. The court therefore held that the nature of monetary sanctions granted pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2019(g) and 2034(a), (d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2025.450) is the same as those that may be imposed under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 473 and 1024, and serve the same purpose (244 Cal. App. 2d 586, 593) . The trial court had the power under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(g) to order plaintiff whose attorney had given notice of the taking of the deposition to pay to defendant the reasonable expenses which he and his attorneyincurred in attending at the time and place set forth in the notice, including reasonable attorney's fees (244 Cal. App. 2d 586, 596) . In the absence of any adequate rebuttal to the factual showing made by plaintiff in support of the motion, there was no room for the court to exercise its discretion, and the outright denial of defendant's motion constituted an abuse of the trial court's discretion (244 Cal. App. 2d 586, 596-597) .

[d] Value of Attorney's Services

Bacon v. Bacon (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 131, 194 P.2d 697 , was an action for declaratory relief, an accounting, and the reconveyance of property. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that sums attributed to the prosecution of an underlying action for partition were unauthorized and excessive and should not have been allowed. The Court stated, relying on Riverside County v. Brown (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 747, 749, 87 P.2d 60 , which quoted from Spencer v. Collins (1909) 156 Cal. 298, 307, 104 P. 320 , that it was conceded that the value of an attorney's services is a matter with which a judge must necessarily be familiar and when the court is informed of the extent and nature of such service, its own experience furnishes it with every element necessary to fix their value. The Court held that the findings and judgment reasonably imply the further finding that the items of expenses were necessarily incurred and reasonable in amount (32 Cal. 2d 131, 143) .

[e] Pro Se Litigant's Recovery of Costs as Sanctions

In Kravitz v. Superior Court (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1015, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 , plaintiff sued defendant for legal malpractice. Defendant, an attorney, represented himself in the matter. Defendant served plaintiff with a request for the production of documents. When plaintiff's counsel failed to respond, defendant moved for an order compelling production and for sanctions pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023 and 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2031.300). With the exception of the court filing fee included in his motion, defendant calculated the amount of sanctions based upon the time it took him to prepare the motion, time in court, and travel time, multiplied by the hourly rate at which he charged his clients for his legal services. Although the court found that as a general rule a pro se lawyer cannot recover attorney's fees as a discovery sanction, it held that some of the costs that pro se litigants incur, if reasonably identifiable and allocable, are recoverable as sanctions, even though those costs are ones that lawyers ordinarily include in their hourly rates or other fee structures. Therefore, a pro se litigant, including a lawyer, is entitled to recover reasonable expenses actually incurred, including photocopying, computer-assisted legal research, and other identifiable and allocable costs (91 Cal. App. 4th 1015, 1017) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court May Impose Monetary Sanction for Engaging in or Advising Discovery Misuse

In Stewart v. Colonial W. Agency, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 115 , an action for breach of contract wrongful termination, defendant's attorneys argued that the trial court's order compelling further responses and awarding sanctions was erroneous, in part, because plaintiff's attorney failed to engage in a good faith effort to meet and confer. At a hearing on the motion to compel, the trial court specifically found that the attorney's meet and confer efforts complied with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(b)). The court of appeal agreed. Citing Obregon v. Superior Court, (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 431, 79 Cal. Rptr. 62 (discussed below), the court of appeal explained that determining whether an attempt at informal resolution is adequate involves the exercise of discretion. Relevant consideration include the history of the litigation, the nature of the interaction between counsel, the nature of the issues, the type and scope of discovery requested, the prospects of success, and similar factors (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1015-1016) . Apart from anything pertaining to the history of the litigation or the prior interaction between the parties of which the trial court may have been aware, the court of appeal noted a number of factors appearing in the record supported the finding of good faith. The objections were made during a deposition, so counsel had an opportunity to discuss the relatively simple matter face-to-face at the time the discovery dispute arose. There was need for immediate action because of the upcoming trial date and cut off dates for discovery and discovery motions. Moreover, defense attorney's announced unavailability for two long periods before trial left no time to conduct a lengthy meet and confer and file a discovery motion before the deadline. Finally, in his letter to plaintiff's attorney, the defense attorney did not himself suggest a date or time at which he would be available and did not indicate any intention to compromise. On these facts, the trial court did not err in finding that the efforts undertaken by plaintiff's counsel to meet and confer were adequate (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1015-1016) .

[b] Monetary Sanction Mandatory If No Substantial Justification or Mitigation Found

The factual and procedural background of London v. Dri-Honing Corp. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 is discussed in Ch. 85, Discovery: Production and Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11[4][b]. In a case arising out of a discovery dispute in a wrongful termination suit, the court of appeal held that a separate motion for discovery monetary sanctions may be made after an underlying motion to compel further response to an inspection demand is litigated (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1001) .The court found support for its decision in Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 (discussed below), in which the court of appeal concluded that a motion for discovery monetary sanctions was appropriate even after the verdict. "[C]ommon sense dictates sanctions cannot be pursued before the affected party finds out about the alleged discovery dereliction of his or her opponent. The true facts may not emerge until the end of trial" (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1007) . While the better practice may be to include the request for monetary sanctions in the motion to compel further response, there is no legal requirement to do so (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1008) . Further, the timeliness of a separate motion for sanctions is subject to the trial court's discretion, rather than the 45-day limit from the time of the initial service of the response under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(c)) (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1009) .

In Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 , an action for products liability based on design defect, plaintiffs sought records of all complaints regarding one of defendant's products, and the defendants provided only a small portion of the complaints it had actually received. The plaintiffs did not move to compel further responses because they had no reason to believe the response was incomplete. During trial defendant's officers and employees testified that there were no other complaints. After a verdict for defendant, plaintiffs discovered by chance the existence of a number of additional complaints. At this point other sanctions were not available. Under these circumstances, the court of appeal held that they were entitled not only to a new trial, but to an award of monetary damages under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)) in an amount at least equal to the costs and fees of the first trial (67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1162-1164) .

[c] Nature and Purpose of Monetary Sanctions

The facts and procedural background of Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 are discussed in § 82.11[4][b]. In light of the defendant's deceptive responses during discovery, and lack of candor, if not outright lies, when testifying at trial, the appellate court ruled in Sherman that the trial court, on remand, was required to award sanctions in amount sufficient to compensate plaintiffs for their expenses and fees in prosecuting the first trial, and that it had discretion to award more (67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1062, 1063-1064).

[2] Comments

This memorandum is for use in supporting a motion for imposition of an issue sanction against a party who has engaged in misuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010, 2023.030(b)].

The memorandum should be combined with other memoranda relating to the imposition of sanctions for discovery misuses as necessary, such as those set out forth §§ 82.10, 82.11, and 82.13 et seq. The memorandum should also be combined with other memoranda supporting the imposition of sanctions in a specific procedural context [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.32, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.12, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.12]. A notice of motion seeking sanctions must be supported by a memorandum of points and authorities [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.040].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the particular misuse of the discovery process in which the other party or attorney has engaged, as well as other facts that would indicate that the imposition of an issue sanction would be appropriate under the circumstances.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Impose Issue Sanction That Facts Be Taken as Established

In Kuhns v. State of California (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 982, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 773 , plaintiffs brought a negligence action against the State after a truck lost control rounding a curve and spilled its load onto the freeway below, causing personal injuries to plaintiffs. After the State failed to obey a court order to produce documents relevant to the alleged dangerous condition of the road and the State's prior notice of that condition, the trial court imposed an issue sanction in the form of a deemed admission by the State that a dangerous condition existed on the site, and that it had previous knowledge of that condition. Later the trial court precluded the State from asserting the defense that it had taken reasonable action to warn of the dangerous condition.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court judgment for plaintiffs. The State contended that the sanctions were unduly harsh and disproportionate to its discovery misuse and plaintiffs' need for the requested evidence. The appellate court disagreed, explaining that disobedience of the court's order was a misuse of discovery for which the court was authorized to impose the sanctions delineated in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)),which includes issue sanctions (8 Cal. App. 4th 982, 988). Because the State failed to produce information relevant to plaintiffs' claim of the dangerous condition of the property and the State's notice thereof, an issue sanction deeming those matters admitted was appropriate (8 Cal. App. 4th 982, 989) . The court also found the other issue sanction imposed--preclusion of the defense that a roadway sign constituted reasonable action to warn of the dangerous condition--appropriate because it was necessarily intertwined with the circumstances establishing the dangerous condition and was therefore precluded by the initial issue sanction (8 Cal. App. 4th 982, 990) .

[b] Court May Impose Issue Sanction Prohibiting Support or Opposition to Claims or Defenses

The facts and procedural background of Karlsson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 265 , are discussed in § 82.13[3][b]. Some of the sanctions precluded Ford from introducing evidence that Ford warned plaintiff that the two-point lap belt was or was not a dangerous condition and that Ford was unaware of its failure to warn, and stated that plaintiff was entitled to an instruction that the lap belt did not provide adequate protection and Ford failed to warn of that dangerous condition. These sanctions were based a pattern of misconduct by Ford that led the discovery referee and the trial court to find a persistent pattern of discovery abuse.

The court of appeal found no abuse of discretion in imposing the sanctions. The discovery referee and the trial court found, among other things, a failure by Ford to produce for deposition the person or persons best suited to testify about the issue of what seat belt warnings were given to minivan buyers such as the plaintiffs, including Ford's knowledge of the need for warnings, and why only certain warnings were given. The referee found that Ford's conduct was not in good faith. The referee also found that Ford did not act in good faith when it provided inadequate and incomplete information regarding the issue of three-point restraint system prototypes, and failed to disclose the existence of documents filed in its passive restraint reading room. Because "the persistent refusal to comply with discovery requests is equated with an admission that the disobedient party has no meritorious claim in regard to that issue, the appropriate sanction for such conduct is preclusion of that evidence from trial, even if that proves determinative in terminating the offending party's case" (140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1218-1219) . Moreover, given the nature of Ford's discovery violations, the sanctions were still warranted, despite the warning contained in the minivan's owner's manual about seat belt use and the increased risks to children from improper adjustment of the lap belt (140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1219) .

In Wells Fargo Bank v. DiLeonardo (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 873, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , a trustee sought a determination that a beneficiary's objections to the trustee's account were frivolous and in bad faith. The trial court found the objections to be frivolous, and imposed an issue sanction against the beneficiary. The appellate court upheld the sanction, finding that the beneficiary's objections were without merit and that her claims of conflict of interest were barred by res judicata or were untimely. The beneficiary had refused to comply with a court order compelling the production of documents that were highly relevant to her contention that she was excused by extrinsic fraud from timely raising her claim against the trustee. The trial court properly applied the issue sanction to all of the beneficiary's objections, even though the documents sought only related to two of the objections because the court found that the beneficiary had abandoned her other objections (22 Cal. App. 4th 873, 878-879) .

Sauer v. Superior Court (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 213, 240 Cal. Rptr. 489 , was a wrongful discharge action in which plaintiff failed to respond to six requests by defendant, his former employer, to produce his personal financial records, and then failed to comply with the referee's order requiring their production. The trial court adopted the referee's recommendation to impose monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)] and subsequently imposed an issue sanction order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)] precluding plaintiff from proving economic loss. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to reverse those orders.

The court of appeal denied the writ. After determining that imposition of sanctions was proper, the court found that the particular sanction chosen--exclusion of all evidence of economic loss--was appropriate under the circumstances. It noted that a trial court has broad discretion in imposing discovery sanctions, subject to reversal only for arbitrary, capricious, or whimsical action. The sanction imposed should be appropriate to the dereliction, and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. The court noted that when a motion to compel had previously been granted, the sanction should not operate in a fashion that puts the prevailing party in a better position than he or she would have had if the discovery sought had been obtained and been completely favorable to his or her case. The court observed that the issue sanction properly put defendant as the demanding party in the position in which it would have been had the discovery been entirely favorable, i.e., the documents would have shown plaintiff suffered no economic loss. In choosing to preclude evidence of economic loss, the court tailored the sanction to the harm caused by the withheld discovery (195 Cal. App. 3d 213, 228-229) .

[a] Court May Impose Issue Sanction Prohibiting Support or Opposition to Claims or Defenses

In re Marriage of Michaely (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 802, 810, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 56 was a dissolution proceeding in which the trial court imposed sanctions, in the form of factual findings, on the husband as the result of his conduct during discovery, in particular his uncooperative conduct at a deposition. The court of appeal found no abuse of discretion, based on the husband's egregious abuse of the discovery process both in his document production and in his answers to questions [150 Cal. App. 4th 802, 809-810] . The court also rejected the husband's claim that the wife had all the information she needed from other sources, including the business records he produced, finding that information "simply" too old, given the husband's plethora of assets and the fact that he moved money from entity to entity [150 Cal. App. 4th 802, 811] .

In re Marriage of Economou (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1466, 274 Cal. Rptr. 473 was a marital dissolution proceeding in which the husband refused to adhere to a stipulation between the parties regarding the disclosure of financial information to the wife. The wife then filed a series of motions to compel discovery in an attempt to determine the amount of community assets concealed by the husband. After the husband refused to comply with the resulting court's orders, the court entered an issue sanction against the husband by entering his default on all issues except dissolution, child custody, and visitation, and precluding him from offering any evidence, making any objections, or cross-examining any of the wife's witnesses at trial on any issue except dissolution, custody, or visitation. The trial court ordered the marriage dissolved and divided the community property, finding that the husband had misappropriated extensive community funds. In affirming, the court of appeal held that the imposition of the issue sanction by the trial court was proper, and was not an abuse of discretion (224 Cal. App. 3d 1466, 1476) . The court observed that a trial court has broad discretion in imposing sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)), subject to reversal only for arbitrary, capricious, or whimsical action (224 Cal. App. 3d 1466, 1475) .

THE COURT SHOULD IMPOSE AN EVIDENCE SANCTION ON _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE HE/SHE HAS ENGAGED IN MISUSE OF THE DISCOVERY PROCESS.

A. Court May Impose Sanctions for Misuse of Discovery Process. [See § 82.10[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Court May Impose Evidence Sanction. the court may impose an evidence sanction by an order prohibiting any party engaging in the misuse of the discovery process from introducing designated matters in evidence (*Code Civ. [Optional] C. Evidence Sanction Without Prior Court Order Is Appropriate When Order Would Be Futile. Although the conduct warranting imposition of an evidence sanction typically involves a refusal to comply with an order for discovery, when a formal order to comply would be futile, such as when the party is unable to provide the requested documents, and when imposition of a lesser sanction would permit the noncooperative party to benefit by its behavior, an evidence sanction precluding admission of specified evidence is appropriate (Karlsson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1214-1216, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 265 ; *Do It Urself Moving & Storage, Inc. v. Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 35-37, 9 Cal. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities for use in supporting a motion for imposition of an evidence sanction against a party who has engaged in the misuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010, 2023.030(c)].

These points and authorities should be combined with other points and authorities relating to the imposition of sanctions for misuse of the discovery process as necessary, such as those set out in §§ 82.10 -82.12 and §§ 82.14, 82.15. These points and authorities should also be combined with other points and authorities supporting the imposition of sanctions in a specific procedural context [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.32, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.12, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.12]. A notice of motion seeking sanctions must be supported by a memorandum of points and authorities [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.040].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the particular misuse of the discovery process in which the other party or attorney has engaged, as well as other facts that would indicate that the imposition of an evidence sanction would be appropriate under the circumstances.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Impose Evidence Sanction

In Waicis v. Superior Court (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 283, 276 Cal. Rptr. 45 , a dental malpractice action, plaintiff listed two dentists as expert witnesses. Defendant attempted to depose one of the designated dentists. The deposition was renoticed five times to accommodate the dentist's schedule. One week prior to the deposition, plaintiff informed defendant that the dentist would be unavailable, and proposed a date on the eve of the arbitration hearing, well after the discovery cut-off period. Defendant brought a motion to compel, seeking sanctions and an order compelling the dentist's attendance, or, in the alternative, the striking of the disclosure of the expert witness or the exclusion of the dentist's testimony. The trial court continued the matter on the condition that the dentist be available on a specified day and time. The dentist did appear for that deposition, but left before its completion. When defendant renewed his motion to compel, the trial court ordered that the dentist be excluded from testifying. Plaintiff filed a writ of mandate to vacate the order.

The court of appeal denied the writ. The court said that the sanction of preclusion of the testimony of a noncooperative deponent is authorized by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010, 2023.030(c), and 2025.450(d). The court characterized the question as whether the trial court had abused its discretion in imposing the evidence sanction. It said that whether the dentist had been noncooperative was a question of fact to be determined by the trial court on the basis of substantial evidence. Far from being an abuse of discretion by the trial court, the court of appeal observed that there was overwhelming evidence of noncooperation. The court said the trial court had done everything it could to permit the dentist's deposition, but he would not cooperate, and even directly violated its order that he be available for the final deposition scheduled. The court observed that the sanction was a response to an unvarying pattern of behavior (226 Cal. App. 3d 283, 287) . Although the sanction imposed was a severe one, the court concluded that it was not an abuse of discretion. It held that since plaintiff selected the dentist as an expert witness, she must bear the adverse consequences that flow from his failure. The court also noted that the consequences for plaintiff would not be unduly harsh in that she had other experts to testify on the same issues (226 Cal. App. 3d 283, 288) .

[b] Evidence Sanction Without Prior Court Order Is Appropriate When Order Would Be Futile

In Karlsson v. Ford Motor Co. (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 265 , a product liability suit relating to the absence of a three-point harness in a minivan, the trial court ordered evidence preclusion sanctions against Ford on the issues of warnings and the technical feasibility of a safer, alternative seat belt design, after Ford violated court orders and committed widespread, recurring discovery abuse. The trial court expressly based its findings and order on the pattern of abuse theory, citing Do It Urself (discussed below) as authority. A jury awarded plaintiff more than $30 million in compensatory and punitive damages. Ford appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the imposition of sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030, because Ford's repeated pattern of abuse led to loss of evidence on failure to warn (140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1215-1216) . Because the discovery cutoff had passed and trial was imminent, plaintiff lost the opportunity to explore fully any leads obtained from discovery that should have been produced. Lesser sanctions would have been futile because Ford no longer had the legal capability to correct its earlier abuses (140 Cal. App. 4th 1202, 1215) .

Do It Urself Moving & Storage, Inc. v. Brown, Leifer, Slatkin & Berns (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396 was an action for breach of contract, negligence, and breach of fiduciary duty against an accounting firm in which the parties stipulated, at plaintiffs' request, to a continuance shortly before trial to permit plaintiffs to complete an audit. The audit was essential to proof of plaintiffs' claims, and the information was to be made available to defendants. However, some time later at the settlement conference, plaintiffs told defendants that an audit was not possible after all, but promised a summary of their accountants' preliminary findings together with supporting documentation. After several unsuccessful attempts to obtain that information, defendants filed a motion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)) to preclude plaintiffs from introducing any accounting evidence. The trial court granted that motion, as well as defendants' motion for summary judgment on the basis that plaintiffs could not win their case without the accounting evidence. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal upheld the sanction order but reversed the summary judgment. The court said that the trial court had not abused its discretion in imposing the evidence sanction since it was appropriately tailored to accomplish no more than protect the interests of the parties seeking discovery (7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 35) . Even though generally a party must have disobeyed a prior court order compelling discovery before an evidence sanction may be imposed, a formal order by the trial court compelling production of the requested documents would have been futile since plaintiffs admitted that production was not possible (7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 35-36) . The imposition of a less drastic sanction, such as a monetary sanction, would have permitted plaintiffs to benefit from their stalling tactics (7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 36-37) . Further, since plaintiffs and defendants had stipulated to continue trial to permit the preparation of the audit, a lesser sanction would have forced defendants to proceed to trial without the benefit of evidence for which they had bargained (7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 37) . The court also found that an evidence sanction suited the harm caused by plaintiffs' behavior, and was not punitive in nature. The evidence sanction was justified because the record clearly demonstrated plaintiffs' willful noncompliance in failing to meet their discovery obligations (7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 36). The court reversed the summary judgment because defendants still had to disprove the claims plaintiffs would have to prove at trial (7 Cal. App. 4th 27, 38) .

[c] Evidence Sanction Appropriate When Discovery Abuse First Discovered During Trial

In Pate v. Channel Lumber Co*. (1997) 51 Cal. App. 4th 1447, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 919* , a retail tenant sued its landlord, charging that the landlord had overcharged them for the mall's common area maintenance. Plaintiff had sought discovery of all documents relating to expenses for which they were billed and relating to the calculation of their share of the expenses. Defendants had repeatedly assured them they had all the relevant documents. At trial, defendants offered testimony relating to documents that had not been made available to plaintiffs.

The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it disallowed introduction of any evidence relating to undisclosed documents. The court of appeal found that defendants had made a deliberate attempt to thwart discovery for the purpose of obtaining a tactical advantage. Given the late date on which the issue arose, no other sanction would have served any useful purpose (51 Cal. App. 4th 1447, 1454-1455).

[a] Court May Impose Evidence Sanction

In Juarez v. Boy Scouts of America (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , plaintiff alleged that, while a member of a boy scout troop, he was sexually molested by his troop scoutmaster. Plaintiff appealed a grant of summary judgment following the imposition of evidentiary sanctions conclusively establishing that no information was available to defendants that would cause them to suspect that the troop scoutmaster had a propensity to molest children before he was accused of molesting plaintiff (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 384). The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's evidence preclusion sanctions for failing to comply with the trial court's earlier orders (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 385). There was ample evidence of plaintiff's misuse of the discovery process, including repeated instances of violations of court orders and, on several occasions, imposition of monetary sanctions (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 388). The trial court's actions, "although certainly drastic," fell within the bounds of permissible discretion. By imposing an evidence preclusion sanction, the trial court simply prohibited plaintiff from producing at trial the evidence he repeatedly refused to produce during discovery (81 Cal. App. 4th 377, 389).

[b] Evidence Sanction Appropriate When Discovery Abuse First Discovered During Trial

In Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 , an action for products liability based on design defect, plaintiffs sought records of all complaints regarding one of defendant's products, and the defendants provided only a small portion of the complaints it had actually received. The plaintiffs did not move to compel further responses because they had no reason to believe the response was incomplete. During trial defendant's officers and employees testified that there were no other complaints. After a verdict for defendant, plaintiffs discovered by chance the existence of a number of additional complaints. Since the discovery abuse did not come to light until after trial, evidence sanctions were no longer available. Under these circumstances, the court of appeal held that plaintiffs were entitled to a new trial and to an award ofmonetary damages under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)) in an amount at least equal to the costs and fees of the first trial (67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1162-1164 , relying on Pate v. Channel Lumber Co., discussed in [3][c], above).

[c] Evidence Sanctions Without Prior Court Order Is Appropriate When Order Would Be Futile

The facts and procedural background of Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 262, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 831 are discussed in § 82.31[4][b]. Plaintiff physician appealed from a court order that struck his pleadings and entered monetary and terminating sanctions for discovery violations under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(4), (7) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010). The trial court ordered these sanctions, resulting in dismissal, in response to plaintiff's repeated and willful pattern of delay and non-production, even after plaintiff stipulated that discovery would be completed by a specified date.

In considering whether the trial court abused its discretion in ordering terminating sanctions, the court of appeal noted that there was no order requiring plaintiff to respond to the specific interrogatories and requests for production of documents. The court concluded, however, that the stipulation signed by both parties waived the right to insist on formal order compelling responses (required by former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030 and 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.010 et seq. and 2031.010 et seq.) as a precursor to imposing terminating sanctions, given that plaintiff's discovery violations were willful, preceded by a history of abuse, and evidence showed that less severe sanctions would not produce compliance (128 Cal. App. 4th 262, 279-280).

Gomez (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 366, 371, 102 Cal. Rptr. 657*).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in supporting a motion for impositionof a terminating sanction against a party who has engaged in the misuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010, 2023.030(d)(4)].

This memorandum should be combined with other memoranda relating to the imposition of sanctions for misuse of the discovery process as necessary, such as those set out in §§ 82.10 -82.13 and § 82.15. This memorandum should also be combined with other memoranda supporting the imposition of sanctions in a specific procedural context [see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.32, Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.12, Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.12]. A notice of motion seeking sanctions must be supported by a memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.040].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with the provisions of the current act.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the particular misuse of the discovery process in which the other party or attorney has engaged, as well as other facts that would indicate that the imposition of a terminating sanction would be appropriate under the circumstances.

For discussion and forms for moving papers relating to sanctions under the Discovery Act, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 192, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Abuse (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Dismiss Action

In R.S. Creative, Inc. v. Creative Cotton, Ltd. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 353 , the trial court imposed terminating sanctions for misuse of discovery and violation of court orders after it became evident that plaintiffs had incorporated a forged contract in their complaint, had refused to allow the completion of a principal's deposition after the forgery came to light, and had destroyed evidence.

The court of appeal affirmed the order dismissing plaintiffs' claim. The court observed that this was the first reported California case to consider terminating sanctions for spoliation of evidence after the California Supreme Court's decision in Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 (discussed in Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.90[3][a]). In that case, the Supreme Court ruled that there was no tort cause of action for intentional spoliation of evidence against a party to the litigation, and emphasized the availability of other remedies for spoliation, including terminating sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)) (75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 495). The court of appeal set out in detail the activity of the sanctioned party in this case, to illustrate the kind of egregious discovery abuse that is intolerable in civil litigation (75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 488-495). The court concluded that the record amply supported the trial court's exercise of its discretion in dismissing the plaintiffs' complaint as a sanction for the repeated violations of stipulations and court orders, a forged document offered as true, and deliberate destruction of evidence pertinent to exposing that fact (75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 496). The court also rejected plaintiffs' argument that they were prevented from obtaining a fair hearing on the motion for terminating sanctions because their attorney had a conflict of interest in that monetary sanctions were sought against both him and his clients for the failure of plaintiff corporation's principal to appear at her deposition. The court explained that a rule preventing a remedy against a party and the party's attorney based on this sort of "conflict" would eviscerate former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.), which expressly authorizes that relief (75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 496).

[b] Court May Order Default Judgment

In Doppes v. Bentley Motors, Inc. (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 967, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 802 , plaintiff consumer brought an action for violation of the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act (Civ. Code § 1790 et seq.), breach of express warranty, breach of implied warranty, and fraud, after defendant manufacturer failed to repair, repurchase, or replace a vehicle that had an obnoxious odor. The trial court denied plaintiff's request for terminating sanctions after defendant persistently "misused the discovery process," withheld documents, and violated discovery orders or directives from the discovery referee (174 Cal. App. 4th 967, 971) . Plaintiff argued on appeal that this was "the rare occasion" when the trial court abused its discretion by not imposing a terminating sanction for defendant's conduct (174 Cal. App. 4th 967, 991) . The court of appeal agreed, concluding the trial court abused its discretion by not imposing a terminating sanction pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450(d), 2023.030 against defendant for its consistent and serious misuse of the discovery process. Defendant had engaged in repeated and egregious violations of the discovery laws--including failure to timely produce relevant and properly demanded, but potentially damaging, documents--that "not only impaired plaintiff's rights, but threatened the integrity of the judicial process" (174 Cal. App. 4th 967, 993) .

In Lang v. Hochman (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 322 , the trial court imposed terminating sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(4) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)) and entered a $22 million default judgment against defendants when they failed to make full production after numerous discovery requests and court orders. The court of appeal affirmed, finding terminating sanctions appropriate when a substantial record indicated that defendant had spent months avoiding and evading discovery, thereby effectively preventing plaintiffs from preparing for trial (77 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1246-1247). The court explained that, as amply illustrated in this case, a trial court generally will impose a terminating sanction after considering the totality of the circumstances: conduct of the party to determine if the action is willful; the detriment to the propounding part; and the number of formal and informal attempts to obtain the discovery (77 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1244-1245).

The court also held that relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b) from a default judgment is not available when the attorney and client are both responsible for discovery misconduct that results in a default judgment or dismissal of the action. Rather, Section 473(b) relief is available only when the attorney is solely responsible for the misconduct (77 Cal. App. 4th 1225, 1228).

[c] Lesser Sanction Not Required Before Entering Default

In Housing Authority v. Gomez (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 366, 102 Cal. Rptr. 657 , plaintiff sued defendant to recover possession of property and to obtain money damages. Defendant answered, denying plaintiff's allegations, and cross complained, alleging that plaintiff had conspired with certain unnamed other parties to lower the value of his real estate. Defendant's deposition was noticed and then postponed by stipulation between both counsel, but defendant did not appear at the rescheduled time. Plaintiff moved to have the answer and cross complaint stricken, and to have reasonable expenses and attorney's fees imposed. The court heard the motion, but made an order for rescheduled depositions and continued the motion for the imposition of sanctions. When defendant failed to appear for the court-ordered deposition, plaintiff filed a supplemental motion for sanctions. Prior to the second hearing, various declarations under penalty of perjury were filed by the parties indicating that prior to the first scheduled deposition, defendant had indicated to his attorney that he would be spending time in Spain, and that his attorney had attempted to arrange a postponement of the first deposition on the ground that his client was out of the state. Also, prior to the second hearing, defendant notified his attorney that he had permanently transferred his residence to Spain and was no longer a resident of California. The trial court heard plaintiff's motion for sanctions and dismissed defendant's answer and cross claim, entering default judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appealed on the ground that he was not allowed a reasonable time within which to appear for the deposition, and that the sanctions imposed by the trial court were far too harsh a penalty in that they deprived him of a trial on the merits.

In affirming the trial court and rejecting defendant's position as "untenable," the court of appeal stated that although the sanction of striking an answer and entering a default is a drastic penalty that should be sparingly used, the unsuccessful imposition of a lesser sanction pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) or (d) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030] is not an absolute prerequisite to the utilization of that ultimate sanction, as long as the trial court has not abused its discretion when imposing it (26 Cal. App. 3d 366, 371). The court said that the facts of the case established both a willful failure of defendant to appear to be deposed and a disobedience of the lower court's order (26 Cal. App. 3d 366, 372-373). Under the circumstances, the trial court was justified in concluding that defendant had no intention of being deposed and would continue to engage in evasive tactics to achieve that end. The trial court clearly did not abuse its discretion in striking the answer and cross complaint and entering a default judgment (26 Cal. App. 3d 366, 373).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court May Stay Proceedings

In Fuller v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 299, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , petitioners, the plaintiffs in an underlying tort suit, were African-American shoppers who claimed they were beaten by security guards. Petitioners noticed the depositions of the individual guard-defendants. Fearing criminal prosecution arising from the same incident, the security guards moved the trial court for a protective order precluding the depositions, or staying them until the criminal statute of limitations expires. Petitioners opposed the motion and asked the trial court by a mandamus petition to prohibit the security guards from testifying at trial to matters about which they might, during deposition, invoke their privilege against self-incrimination. The trial court denied both the security guards' motion and petitioners' petition. Petitioners then sought a writ of mandate to direct the trial court to preclude the security guards from testifying at trial to matters about which the security guards might during deposition invoke their privilege (87 Cal. App. 4th 299, 302).

The court of appeal held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying petitioner's request for trial testimony preclusion and in refusing to stay the civil proceedings until the criminal statute of limitations expired (87 Cal. App. 4th 299, 308-309). With a view to accommodating all sides, the court weighed three competing interests: that of the defendant who invokes the privilege against self-incrimination during discovery in civil litigation to avoid exposure to criminal prosecution, that of the civil plaintiff who seeks to complete discovery without being unduly prejudiced if the defendant who invoked the privilege during discovery later waives it and testifies at trial, and that of the justice system and the court in fairly and expeditiously disposing of civil cases. The court concluded that any discovery order with respect to the security guards' privilege against self-incrimination was premature. The court explained that preclusion of trial testimony would have the unacceptable effect of penalizing the security guards for exercising their constitutional privilege. Moreover, the court noted, preclusion was only one tool available to petitioners to help avoid the surprise testimony at trial about matters previously not disclosed during discovery (87 Cal. App. 4th 299, 309). The court also concluded that a stay of discovery in the civil action until the criminal statute of limitations expired would run count to the interest of the courts in expeditious and efficient resolution of cases, and expose both side of the litigation to the risk of diminished memory and lost records (87 Cal. App. 4th 299, 309). Accordingly, the court denied the writ and held that the depositions should proceed. The court explained that if the security guards were to invoke their privilege, the court would then be able to fashion whatever protective order it deemed reasonable to balance the interests of the parties and the judicial system (87 Cal. App. 4th 299, 309-310).

In Avant! Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 505 , the court of appeal considered, as an issue of first impression in California, whether a corporation that is a defendant in related criminal and civil actions may obtain stay of discovery in a civil action while the criminal action is pending (79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 881). Petitioner corporation sought a writ of mandate to vacate an order denying its motion to stay civil proceedings or to stay discovery in respondent's suit for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and other torts, pending the disposition of a related criminal case (79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 878-879). Petitioner argued that the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination of the corporation's employees compelled a stay. The court denied the writ of mandate, holding that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the stay because a corporation has no right against self-incrimination and the employees' Fifth Amendment rights were protected by the trial court's discovery order, which provided that the corporation's officers, employees, and agents were required to provide only non-privileged information in their custody or control (79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 886-887).

The court articulated the standard to be applied in deciding whether to stay civil proceedings until disposition of the criminal matter. In the discovery context, the trial court's decisions on these matters are reviewed under the abuse of discretion standard, not on Fifth Amendment grounds (79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 886) . The court explained that the weight of authority holds that while the implication of the right against self-incrimination must be given serious consideration, staying a civil discovery process to await the outcome of a related criminal case does not implicate constitutional issues, even when the defendant raising the question is an individual defendant (79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 882-886) . A court, however, has discretion to stay civil proceedings, to postpone discovery, or to impose protective orders and conditions when the interests of justice seem to require such action. In making that decision, the court should consider five factors, including the plaintiff's interest in proceeding expeditiously with the litigation, the burden on the defendants, the court's convenience in managing its cases, the interests of nonparties to the civil litigation, and the interest of the public in the pending civil and criminal litigation (79 Cal. App. 4th 876, 885) .

[b] Court May Dismiss Action

In Williams v. Russ (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 1215, 1224-1225, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 813 , plaintiff, who had filed a legal malpractice complaint, demanded that his entire client file be turned over to him. Defendant attorney turned over to plaintiff's lawyer the entire file--36 file boxes. Before doing so, defendant's attorney copied only the correspondence between defendant and plaintiff. Plaintiff put the 36 file boxes in a storage space he rented for just that purpose. Plaintiff's attorney reviewed the contents of the file and copied about 11 boxes' worth. After the first month of the storage rental, plaintiff made only partial rental payments and eventually defaulted, despite repeated notifications that his default could lead to the sale of the items he was storing. The boxes containing his client filed were destroyed when no one made a bid to purchase them. Plaintiff did not tell defendant that the files had been destroyed and, in the meantime, filed an amended complaint. Defendant moved to dismiss the action as a discovery sanction, on the ground that the destroyed documents had included some materials relevant to the new allegations in the amended complaint and that it would not be possible to reconstruct the file accurately. Because the evidence supported an inference that plaintiff had intentionally allowed material unfavorable to his claims to be destroyed and because the spoliation was highly prejudicial to the defense of the case, a terminating sanction was appropriate under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010(d) and 2023.030(d) (167 Cal. App. 4th 1215, 1224-1225) .

In Garber & Assoc. v. Eskandarian (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 813, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , an action for unpaid attorney fees, the trial court granted plaintiff law firm's motions for terminating sanctions based on the defendants' discovery abuses, including failing to respond to interrogatories and production demands propounded by the firm, ignoring the trial court's orders compelling further answers, and failing to pay monetary sanctions. The court of appeal affirmed. Terminating sanctions were appropriate, even though defendants claimed that they had had no contact with their attorney and thus had no notice of the trial court's orders. Defendants "could not disappear in the midst of a pending case and avoid the consequences of such a tactic" (150 Cal. App. 4th 813, 821-822) .

In Reedy v. Bussell (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216 , defendants, the widow and the son of a former trustee who had allegedly withdrawn trust money for his own benefit, appealed default judgments against them, as well as terminating sanctions imposed at the request of plaintiff successor trustee. Discovery violations included the widow's failure to comply with a court order to turn over documents related to the trust, the widow's and son's failure to provide adequate responses to discovery and repeated groundless objections, the widow's failure to complete her deposition as ordered by the trial court, and the son's failure to appear for trial. After the widow and son attempted to take additional depositions while the trial was in recess and mischaracterized the nature of those depositions, the trial court granted motions for terminating sanctions. The appellate court agreed that terminating sanctions were appropriate, based on defendants' recalcitrance "in virtually every aspect of discovery," concluding that lesser sanctions (such as additional monetary penalties) would not be sufficient to curb defendants' continued abuses (148 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1291-1293) . However, the trial court erred in granting default judgments on two petitions that did not specify an amount of damages. If the complaint fails to specify the amount of damages sought, the trial court may impose a more limited discovery sanction that precludes litigation of other aspects of the case, while leaving the parties to have a contested trial on damages [148 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1294-1295] . The appellate court remanded those two petitions with directions that the trial court reconsider whether more limited issue sanctions, relating to liability only, would be appropriate (148 Cal. App. 4th 1272, 1295) .

In Hartbrodt v. Burke (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 168, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 562 , the plaintiff sought to recover money based on an oral agreement to create a company. The trial court dismissed the action because of plaintiff's refusal to comply with a discovery order to produce a tape recording of a conversation plaintiff recorded between him and the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the terminating sanction of dismissal of the complaint may be imposed for refusal to comply with an order of production made pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.). Moreover, a plaintiff may not avoid a dismissal by voluntarily dismissing without prejudice prior to the hearing on the motion to dismiss (42 Cal. App. 4th 168, 174-176) .

[c] Court May Order Default Judgment

In Liberty Mutual Fire Ins. Co. v. LcL Administrators, Inc. (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 200 , the plaintiff propounded three sets of interrogatories, asking for witnesses, documents, and facts supporting the defendant's affirmative defenses and allegations of the cross-complaint. The defendant provided inadequate or evasive answers, and the trial court granted the plaintiff's motions to compel further responses (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1096) . The defendant's supplemental responses were inadequate (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1097) . The trial court gave the defendant another opportunity to provide adequate responses, imposed monetary sanctions against the defendant, but denied the plaintiff's request for issue sanctions (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1097) . The defendant failed to provide adequate answers and ignored the plaintiff's request to meet and confer (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1099) . The trial court granted the plaintiff's motion for terminating sanctions, ruling the defendant "had abused the discovery process by repeatedly providing evasive and incomplete responses and by ignoring [the plaintiff]'s meet and confer letter requesting a third supplemental response" (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1099) . The trial court struck the answer and cross-complaint, noting the defendant "not only repeatedly gave deficient responses but also failed to meet and confer," and the defendant's conduct "constituted " 'a flagrant abuse of the discovery process' " (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1101) .

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding, given the defendant's months-long, willful lack of cooperation in providing straightforward information, witnesses, and documents to support its claims of malfeasance, the trial court could reasonably conclude that the ultimate sanction was appropriate (163 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1106) .

In Collisson & Kaplan v. Hartunian (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1611, 26 Cal.Rptr. 2d 786 , the appellate court held that it was entirely appropriate for the trial court to strike defendants' answer to the complaint and to enter their default when defendants had repeatedly attempted to thwart plaintiff's legitimate attempts to obtain information from them. Defendants failed to respond entirely, responded in stock phrases, or made meritless objections to plaintiff's interrogatories, requests for documents, and requests for admissions. Numerous formal and informal attempts to secure the requested information had been unavailing. Thus, a terminating sanction was an appropriate sanction for repeated abuses of the discovery process (21 Cal. App. 4th 1611, 1617-1621) .

In Morgan v. Southern Cal. Rapid Transit Dist. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 976, 237 Cal. Rptr. 756 , disapproved on other grounds in Schwab v. Rondel Homes, Inc. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 428, 280 Cal. Rptr. 83, 808 P.2d 226 , during the course of plaintiff's negligence suit against defendant, the trial court twice ordered defendant to answer interrogatories and imposed monetary sanctions. Eventually, the trial court struck defendant's answer to the complaint and entered a default judgment against defendant. The court of appeal reversed the judgment because plaintiff failed to serve notice of the amount of damages sought prior to moving for the sanction, and the trial court was required to amend the default judgment, in that the amount exceeded the ceiling on damages imposed under Code Civ. Proc. § 580 (192 Cal. App. 3d 976, 980) . However, it held that the order striking the answer was a proper discovery sanction. The court observed that since the trial court had already ordered defendant to answer interrogatories, it was authorized to make any just orders in regard to the refusal. It found that there was no time limit on enforcement of the discovery order by the trial court (192 Cal. App. 3d 976, 981) . The trial court has broad discretion in imposing discovery sanctions. A variety of factors may be relevant to the discretionary imposition of discovery sanctions, including the amount of time the party has had to answer; the difficulty in obtaining answers; the materiality of the unanswered questions; whether the party has acted in good faith and with reasonable diligence; whether the party was unable to comply with the previous order of the court; and whether a sanction short of default would be an appropriate remedy (192 Cal. App. 3d 976, 981-982) . In this case, the trial court had found that there was no meaningful sanction other than striking the answer, since it had already imposed two orders to answer the interrogatory, as well as monetary sanctions, and defendant had obeyed neither. It had also found that an order limiting evidence relating to the interrogatory would not be an effective sanction because the interrogatory only sought to discover a potential witness who might rebut defendant's claims. The court concluded that there is no question of the power of the trial court to apply the ultimate sanction of default against a litigant who persists in an outright refusal to comply with his or her discovery obligations, and that there were no less drastic sanctions available to the court (192 Cal. App. 3d 976, 983-984) .

[d] Lesser Sanction Not Required Before Entering Default

Williams v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 805, 123 Cal. Rptr. 83 concerned an action by a physician who was the father of a deceased infant son, for coverage of the infant's life under an insurance policy. Defendant insurance company cross complained for damages for plaintiff's alleged fraud in applying for life insurance, based on his concealment of the genetic disease suffered by his infant son. During the course of discovery, defendant propounded requests for admissions about the nature of the genetic disease from which the insured infant had suffered, and interrogatories concerning plaintiff's net and gross income. On plaintiff's providing evasive and equivocal answers (such as that he could not answer questions on the baby's disease because he was not a specialist in the field), the trial court ordered him to provide further answers. Plaintiff's new answers were still inadequate, and the court again ordered further answers. When plaintiff did not comply, the court ordered the complaint stricken. Plaintiff then appealed on the grounds that he was in substantial compliance with the discovery orders and that, in any case, the court had abused its discretion in imposing its severest sanctions. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff had failed to substantially comply with the trial court's discovery order, that his answers were indeed inadequate (49 Cal. App. 3d 805, 809) , and that his equivocal and incomplete responses constituted an attempt to frustrate the purposes of the discovery statutes (49 Cal. App. 3d 805, 810) . Moreover, the court took judicial notice of the fact that the record was replete with evidence of plaintiff's continuous use of obstructive tactics, thus justifying the severe sanction of dismissal (49 Cal. App. 3d 805, 810-811) . Finally, dismissal was also justified because the interrogatories that plaintiff had refused to answer went to the very heart of his claim against defendant (49 Cal. App. 3d 805, 811) .

The facts and background of Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321 , are discussed in § 82.10[3][c]. In Stein, the court of appeal affirmed the imposition of a default judgment that was entered against defendant, on the grounds that defendant had totally ignored two court orders, had repeatedly willfully refused to file adequate and sufficient answers to interrogatories, and had generally persisted in an outright refusal to comply with his discovery obligations (34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 302) .

[The following may be combined with other memoranda as necessary to support a motion for sanctions (see, e.g., §§ 82.10 -82.14), and should be combined with points and authorities supporting a motion for sanctions in the specific procedural context (see, e.g., Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.32.)]

THE COURT SHOULD IMPOSE A CONTEMPT SANCTION ON _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE HE/SHE HAS ENGAGED IN MISUSE OF THE DISCOVERY PROCESS.

A. Court May Impose Sanctions for Misuse of Discovery Process. [See § 82.10[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Court May Impose Contempt Sanction. The court may impose a contempt sanction by an order treating the misuse of the discovery process as a contempt of court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(e)).

[2] Comments

This memorandum is for use in supporting a motion for imposition of a contempt sanction against a party who has engaged in misuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010, 2023.030(e)].

This memorandum should be combined with other memoranda relating to the imposition of sanctions for discovery misuses as necessary, such as those set out in §§ 82.10 -82.14. The memorandum may also be combined with other memoranda supporting the imposition of sanctions in a specific procedural context. For example, contempt may be imposed against a deponent for failure to obey an order compelling answers or production under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(g) [see Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions, § 83.32]. A notice of motion seeking sanctions must be supported by a memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.040].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the particular misuse of the discovery process in which the other party or attorney has engaged, as well as other facts that would indicate that the imposition of a contempt sanction would be appropriate under the circumstances.

[c] Civil Contempt

Civil contempt is generally governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1209-1222. Contempt for disobedience of a subpoena requiring attendance before an officer out of court, pursuant to the Civil Discovery Act, is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1991.1 [see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1991.2]. Contempt is authorized in the Discovery Act by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.240 (disobedience of deposition subpoena), 2025.440(b) (refusal to attend or be sworn at deposition after being served with deposition subpoena), and 2025.480(g) (refusal to obey order requiring deposition answer).

SANCTIONS ARE IMPROPER WHEN THEY ARE PUNITIVE RATHER THAN REMEDIAL AND WHEN THEY GO BEYOND WHAT IS NECESSARY TO SECURE THE RESULTS OF THE DISCOVERY THAT WAS SOUGHT.

A. Purpose of Sanctions. The purpose of sanctions is to accomplish the object sought by the discovery process and to secure the just and expeditious resolution of actions, rather than to punish the party who has engaged in conduct constituting a misuse of the discovery process (see McGinty v. Superior Court (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 204, 210-216, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 292 ; Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 304, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377 ; Crummer v. Beeler (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858, 8 Cal. Rptr. 698).

B. Inappropriateness of Type and Severity of Sanctions. Sanctions are improper if they are not appropriate to the dereliction, and if they exceed that which is necessary to protect the interests of the party adversely affected by the misuse of the discovery process (see Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1545, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 311 ; Motown Record Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 492, 202 Cal. Rptr. 227 ; Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499).

C. Limitation on Use of Sanctions. The chief limitation on the use of sanctions is that the sanction may not be used to put the prevailing party in a better position than that party might have been in had the misuse of the discovery process not been engaged in, and had the results of the discovery process been totally favorable to the prevailing party (see Wilson v. Jefferson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 952, 958-959, 210 Cal. Rptr. 464 ; Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 303, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321).

D. Limitation on Court's Discretion. The court's discretion in making orders relating to discovery is not unlimited. The power to impose sanctions under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure should not be interpreted as giving the court the power to arbitrarily select the sanctions that are listed therein (see Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 303-304, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377).

[Optional] E. Failure to Oppose Motion Is Not Admission That Sanctions Are Proper. The failure to file a written opposition or to appear at a hearing or the voluntary provision of discovery shall not be deemed an admission that the motion was proper or that sanctions should be awarded (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1030(b)).

This form of memorandum is for use in opposition to a motion requesting a court to impose sanctions pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030. It is a basic form opposing the use of severe, punitive, or otherwise improper sanctions generally, and may be combinedwith § 82.31 as appropriate to oppose the imposition of the sanctions of default or dismissal, or with points and authorities opposing other types of sanctions. It may be combined with any other points and authorities opposing the imposition of sanctions in a specific procedural context.

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with the provisions of the current act.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. In particular, counsel may wish to point out why the requested sanction is inappropriate or too severe with respect to the goals to be accomplished by the intended discovery.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose of Sanctions

McGinty v. Superior Court (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 204, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 292 , involved a wrongful death action arising from an airplane crash. The plaintiffs alleged that the crash was caused by a defective airplane engine, and intended to call an expert witness to testify as to the cause of the engine failure. The expert inadvertently forwarded materials to the plaintiffs' attorney that were subject to a protective order in another action.

The court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion by precluding the plaintiffs from using their expert witness because he had inadvertently forwarded the protected materials to their attorney. The attorney's conduct was not willful, the defendant was not prejudiced as these materials would have been discoverable through normal discovery, and the order was tantamount to a dismissal of the case. The sanctions were pure punishment to deter violation of court orders, which is not an appropriate aim of discovery sanctions (26 Cal. App. 4th 204, 210-216) .

In Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377 , plaintiffs husband and wife sought damages against defendant for injuries to the wife's eyes allegedly received as a result of use of hair spray manufactured by defendant. During pretrial discovery proceedings, the trial court ordered a further answer to an interrogatory thathad been propounded by plaintiffs. Defendant provided a further answer, but did not state the exact proportions of each ingredient in the formula as requested in the interrogatory. Plaintiffs then moved the court for an order imposing sanctions either by striking defendant's answer and entering a default, or by an order that certain facts specified by plaintiff be established. The court denied the motion to strike the answer, but entered an order that certain facts be established unless defendant gave further answers within 15 days giving details of the proportions of the ingredients with their common chemical names. Defendant provided a statement with certain information, and plaintiffs made a motion asking for the same sanctions they had previously requested. Another judge heard the motion, found that the answer was not sufficient and that defendant had willfully failed to comply with the court's order, and ordered that the answer be stricken and a default entered. Defendant sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal requiring the trial court to vacate its order.

In granting defendant's petition, the court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in entering the default. The court said that one of the principal purposes of discovery statutes is to enable a party to obtain evidence in the control of the adversary party in order to further the efficient, economical disposition of cases in accordance with right and justice on the merits (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 303, 307) . The statutes are to be liberally interpreted so that they may accomplish their purpose (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 303) . The sanctions the court could impose pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) were such as were suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the objects of discovery being sought (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 304) . However, the court emphasized that the trial court may not impose sanctions that are designed not to accomplish the objects of the discovery but to impose punishment instead (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 304) . The court held that by striking defendant's answer and entering a default judgment, the trial court deprived defendant of due process because the judgment precluded trial on other facts and issues in the case (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305) . The court went on to state that an order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2)(i) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)) that the facts sought to be proven by the interrogatories be taken as established for the purpose of the action would have secured the results that plaintiff had sought, while not depriving defendant of due process on the other issues in the action (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305-306) .

Crummer v. Beeler (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 8 Cal. Rptr. 698 , involved a suit for money had and received. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's answer based on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1)) and on defendant's allegedly willful failure to appear for a noticed deposition. Defendant then moved to set aside the default under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, based on the factthat he was living in Canada and that, through his attorneys, he had attempted to move the depositions to a time that would have been convenient for him, but that plaintiff had adamantly refused. The motion to set aside the default was denied, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision, holding that the purpose of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) was not punishment, but the just and expeditious resolution of actions (185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858, 860) . In support of this statement, the court cited federal authority construing FRCP, Rule 37, which was substantially similar to the California sanctions statute. The court also noted that, under federal authority, imposition of sanctions was held to be improper unless the party who was not in compliance with discovery obligations was given an additional opportunity to comply (185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858-859) . Counsel should note that Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030 is derived in part from both former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 and FRCP, Rule 37.

[b] Inappropriateness of Type and Severity of Sanctions

The facts and procedural background of Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 311 are discussed in § 82.22[3][a].

In Motown Record Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 202 Cal. Rptr. 227 , an action on a personal service contract, defendant served plaintiffs with a request for production of documents. Plaintiffs objected that the documents sought were protected by the attorney-client privilege. There followed a protracted series of discovery proceedings in which plaintiffs served and filed several supplementary responses to their objections purportedly providing a factual basis for their claim of privilege, and defendants twice moved to strike plaintiffs' pleadings for plaintiffs' failure to verify that they had provided all nonprivileged material. The trial court on two separate occasions determined that plaintiffs' factual showings were inadequate to verify that the materials sought were privileged, and ordered plaintiffs to provide further factual basis for their claim of privilege and imposed monetary sanctions on plaintiffs. Plaintiffs eventually served and filed a final and much-expanded set of descriptions of the documents and declarations to establish their privilege. Service of these materials occurred one whole day after the deadline that the trial court had set in its final order to plaintiffs to produce a factual basis for their claim. These materials suggested a tenuous basis for a claim of the attorney-client privilege. After further proceedings the trial court imposed monetary sanctions of $1,000 on plaintiffs for their tardiness in providing the final set of descriptions, held that plaintiffs' delay in providing these materials constituted a waiver of any attorney-client privilege, and ordered plaintiffs to produce all of the documents sought. Plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court restated from earlier case law that the sanctions that a court could impose under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) were such as were suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the object of the discovery, but that the court could not impose sanctions that were designed to punish (155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 489) . Responding to defendant's argument that plaintiffs' prior acts of delay and avoidance in providing the factual basis should be taken into account in reviewing the appropriateness of the sanctions imposed, the court noted that sanctions had already been imposed on plaintiffs for their prior insufficient factual showings. The court noted further that the sanctions at issue in the case were imposed not for insufficiency of the factual showing made, but for their tardiness, and stated that the minimal delay caused by this tardiness did not prejudice defendant (155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 491) . The court held that the sanctions imposed by the trial court were excessive in that they were not reasonably calculated to achieve the purpose of affecting compliance with discovery and were punitive in nature. The court also held that if the compelled waiver was part of the sanction, it too was excessive (155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 490) .

In Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499 , an attorney sued a client for services rendered and the defendant, representing himself, filed an answer denying liability. Plaintiff served defendant with interrogatories, which were received by defendant while he was hospitalized with serious health problems that continued for the duration of the legal proceedings. After 60 days, during which time plaintiff granted defendant, through his wife, one extension to answer the interrogatories, the plaintiff brought a motion to strike defendant's answer for failure to answer, and the motion was denied. However, the court directed defendant to file answers by a specified date and ordered that his answers would be stricken if this was not done. Defendant filed answers by the date ordered, and although there was some response to each question and the answers did suggest a dispute existed concerning the amount of the fees, most of the answers were not fully responsive to the questions propounded. One month later, plaintiff filed a second motion for an order either compelling further answers to the interrogatories pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300), or to have the answer stricken and default judgment entered pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) or (d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1), (4)). The trial court granted the motion to strike the answer and to enter a default judgment, including reasonable expenses and attorney's fees, as a result of the motion. Defendant finally employed counsel and requested a new trial, which was denied. Defendant then appealed.

In reversing, the court of appeal discussed what sanctions are proper when a party fails to fully answer interrogatories, and provided generalguidelines for trial courts to follow in imposing sanctions. The court said that interrogatories expedite the resolution of lawsuits and enable counsel to evaluate the reasonable value of claims and defenses, thereby encouraging prompt settlements or serving to facilitate trial preparation (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 779, 798) . Answers must be complete and responsive (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 783) . When the party desires a further response, he or she was then required to make a timely motion to compel further answers pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300) (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 786-787) . Attorney's fees and expenses could only be awarded when a motion pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300) to compel was granted, and no other sanctions were authorized at that time (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 789) . The sanctions provided in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) applied only when the party refuses to obey an order made requiring further responses (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 789) . (Counsel should note that under the California Civil Discovery Act of 2005, this procedure is specifically codified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300(d), (e), which provide for the imposition of a monetary sanction to the prevailing party of a motion to compel, and provide for the imposition of an issue, evidence, or terminating sanction only if a party fails to obey an order compelling further response to interrogatories.) The court of appeal in Deyo went on to explain that when a party has refused to supply information relevant to a particular claim or defense, an order establishing certain facts or precluding designated claims or defenses pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)) may be the appropriate sanction (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 792) . When a motion to compel has previously been granted, the court stated that the sanction should be appropriate to the dereliction and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793) . The court then ruled that since answers had been made to interrogatories, although they might not have been fully responsive, and the plaintiff had also made a motion to compel, the trial court had jurisdiction to direct the defendant to file further answers, but did not have the jurisdiction at that time to strike the answer and enter a default judgment (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 797-798) .

[c] Limitation on Use of Sanctions

In Wilson v. Jefferson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 952, 210 Cal. Rptr. 464 , plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against defendant, seeking actual and punitive damages for defendant's alleged negligence and fraud in failing to file plaintiff's personal injury action within the applicable statutory limitation period. The trial court, on plaintiff's motion, ordered defendant to produce documents relating to his office procedure to insure timely filings. Defendant failed to comply with this order and the trial court, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2)(C) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1), (4)), ordered defendant's answer stricken and a default judgment entered. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a sanction should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party seeking discovery by placing that party in a position better than that which he or she would have enjoyed if he or she had obtained the discovery sought and it had been completely favorable to his or her cause. In the case at bar, defendant's conduct was an attempt to avoid inquiry into the merit of an affirmative defense that he had no duty to file the action because plaintiff had agreed first to pay filing fees but had failed to do so. The court held that this conduct was not dispositive of all the issues present in the case, such as the question of fraud or punitive damages, and to enter a default judgment based on this conduct erroneously placed plaintiff in a better position than that necessary to protect her interests in obtaining the discovery sought (163 Cal. App. 3d 952, 958-959) .

The facts and procedural background of Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321 , are discussed in § 82.10[3][c]. In Stein, the court of appeal upheld the sanction of default, noting that had proper discovery been conducted, it would have tended to support plaintiff's cause of action. Thus the sanction of dismissal was within the trial court's discretion, as limited by the rule that sanctions may not be used to put the prevailing party in a better position than that party might have been in had the discovery order been entirely favorable to the prevailing party. In support of this proposition, the Stein court cited Thompson, Sanctions in California Civil Discovery (1968) 8 Santa Clara L. Rev. 185 (34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 303) .

[d] Limitation on Court's Discretion

The facts and procedural background of Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377 , are discussed in [a], above. The court in Caryl Richards noted the limitations on a trial court's discretion in imposing sanctions, holding that the court's discretion is not unlimited, and that the court may not just select sanctions in an arbitrary manner (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 303-304) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inappropriateness of Type and Severity of Sanctions

In Maldonado v. Superior Court (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137 , an original writ proceeding arising from an employment discrimination action, petitioners (former employees) sought issue preclusion sanctions against real party in interest, former employer, for its failure to produce, as specified in deposition notices, and to answer at appropriatedepositions. Petitioner sought to preclude defendants from introducing testimony at trial or asserting affirmative defenses concerning matters for which they refused to disclose information and from "springing ... witnesses" who no longer worked for former employer on petitioners at trial. The court found that such a sanction would exceed the level of punishment justified under the facts and law (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398) .

The court explained that sanctions involving issue preclusion are not generally imposed at this point in a discovery dispute. When a party wrongfully fails to answer a question or produce a document requested in accordance with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq.), and the party seeking discovery has gone to the court for relief, "if the court determines that the answer or production sought is subject to discovery, it shall order that the answer be given or the production be made on the resumption of the deposition" (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(e)) (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398) . In addition, the court "shall" impose a monetary sanction "against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel answer or production ..." unless it finds that "the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." It is only when a deponent "fails to obey an order entered under this subdivision" that Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(g) permits the court to "make those orders that are just against the disobedient party, or against the party with whom the disobedient deponent is affiliated, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Section 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.010 et. seq.)" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398-1399) . The appellate court noted that some courts have held that the more serious sanctions may be imposed under former Code Civil Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030), even when no specific order has been violated. However, those cases, unlike this one, involved repeated and willful refusals to permit discovery or produce documents over a lengthy period of time, resulting in evidence becoming unavailable (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398-1399) . Accordingly, the court concluded that this case did not call for imposition of an issue-preclusion sanction. The court noted, however, that a monetary sanction could well be warranted in view of the fact that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(f)) required imposition of monetary sanctions unless the trial court finds that the party subject to sanction "acted with substantial justification" or that "other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1399) .

For additional facts and the procedural background of Maldonado, see § 83.31[4][a].

In In re de la Parra (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 228 Cal. Rptr. 864 , defendant failed to answer five of the interrogatories served on him byplaintiff without specifically objecting to them. Plaintiff filed a motion to compel answers, to which defendant objected on several grounds. The trial judge found that defendant should answer the questions. When defendant failed to answer four of the interrogatories, the judge found him in contempt of court and imposed punishment of 15 days incarceration. Defendant brought a writ of habeas corpus to review the contempt citation. The court of appeal vacated the contempt sanction because it was both unwarranted and jurisdictionally defective (184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 145) . The court observed that although statutory language does permit the use of the contempt power to enforce civil discovery, such a drastic solution is rarely imposed. It said that although lesser sanctions are more plentiful, even the imposition of those penalties requires that the punishments be tailored to the derelictions; draconian sanctions should be reserved to only the most flagrant abuses (184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 144) . The court said that the trial court had available many alternative solutions to imprisonment. It found the incarceration of defendant unnecessary and overbearing, and concluded that use of imprisonment should be reserved for situations where the court's dignity is truly compromised and no other suitable penalty can be found (184 Cal. App. 3d 139, 145) .

In Richards v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 150 Cal. Rptr. 77 , plaintiffs propounded interrogatories concerning the financial status of five defendants in relation to causes of action that permitted the assessment of punitive damages. The trial court initially issued an order limiting access to the answers to the interrogatories, but later dissolved the order in the belief that defendants had not complied with the order. The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing that a new protective order be issued in line with the order dissolved (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 273) . The court held that the order dissolving the protective order was clearly imposed as a sanction. It was inappropriate to whatever noncompliance there was by defendant in view of the potential violation of the right of privacy by the wholesale discovery of defendant's financial records (86 Cal. App. 3d 265, 269-273) .

[b] Limitation on Use of Sanctions

In Foothill Properties v. Lyon/Coply Corona Assoc. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1542, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488 , a seller of property sued the developers for breach of contract. The trial court awarded discovery sanctions against the defendant because it opposed the motion to compel production of documents. The court of appeal held that the propriety of a discovery sanction award is reviewed using the abuse of discretion standard. A sanction award can be overturned only if it was not based on a reasoned judgment or is at odds with legal principles and policies appropriate to the particular matter at issue. The court will uphold the award unless it exceeds the bounds of reason, all of the circumstances before it beingconsidered. Accordingly, the court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in imposing sanctions on a party that had a valid claim of a right to a protective order with respect to unproduced documents that were alleged to be proprietary and confidential, and had substantial justification, as a matter of law, for withholding these documents until the motion for the protective order was determined, and for opposing the motion to compel (46 Cal. App. 4th 1542, 1557) .

[a] Attorney Must Have Advised Misconduct

In Ghanooni v. Super Shuttle (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 256, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 501 , the appellate court held that although monetary sanctions against a party may be based on the party's misuse of the discovery process, whether willful or not, monetary sanctions against the party's attorney require a finding that the attorney advised the conduct. In this case, the attorney's unrebutted declaration was sufficient to establish that plaintiff's refusal to submit to a medical examination requested by defendants was not based on the attorney's advice and, thus, monetary sanctions could not properly be imposed against the attorney (20 Cal. App. 4th 256, 261) . For further discussion of Ghanooni, see § 82.11[3][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Misconduct Must Be Willful

In Vallbona v. Springer (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 311 , plaintiffs sued a physician, his wife and his medical clinic for fraud, negligent misrepresentation and breach of contract. The trial court imposed evidence and issue sanctions against the defendants in response to their noncompliance with plaintiff's discovery request to produce documents.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that defendants did not formally reply to plaintiff's timely request for production. Furthermore, one of the defendants testified that he neglected discovery until a burglary precluded compliance, but later brought some of the purportedly stolen documents to trial. Finally, after twice ordering the defendant to complete his deposition, the court appointed a referee to mediate the final deposition session. Thus, the court concluded that the defendants willfully failed to comply with discovery requirements (43 Cal. App. 4th 1525, 1545) .

Note that there is conflicting authority holding that wilfulness is not a prerequisite for the imposition of sanctions [see § 82.10[3][a]].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Monetary Sanctions Are Limited to Actual Costs

In In re Marriage of Niklas (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 28, 258 Cal. Rptr. 921 , a marital dissolution proceeding, respondent husband noticed the depositions of wife and her attorney. Although wife appeared and testified at her deposition, her attorney refused to answer most of the questions at his deposition, asserting the attorney work-product doctrine and the attorney-client privilege. Husband sought a court order to compel wife's attorney to answer the questions and to impose sanctions. The trial court determined the attorney had waived the asserted protections by submitting a declaration based on his personal knowledge of husband's financial situation, and ordered him to answer the questions at a second deposition. The trial court also denied the request for sanctions. Although the attorney indicated he wished to seek appellate review, he did not do so. He appeared at the second deposition and answered every question, but frequently responded that he did not know, and he neither reviewed his files nor brought certain documents. He adjourned the deposition, stating he intended to apply for a protective order. Husband deposed wife a second time, pursuant to court order. Wife did not bring any of the documents listed in the notice of deposition and refused to answer related questions on the advice of her attorney. Husband filed a motion for discovery sanctions. The trial court ordered both wife and her attorney to resume their depositions, and continued the issue of appropriate sanctions. The depositions were continued in order to permit wife and her attorney to seek appellate review. After they failed to do so, they also failed to appear at the depositions, and later unsuccessfully sought a writ from the court of appeal. The trial court imposed issue sanctions against wife and her attorney. Wife filed a second writ petition in the court of appeal. The appellate court gave notice that it was considering issuing a peremptory writ directing the trial court to modify its order to impose only monetarysanctions on condition that wife and her attorney first answer the deposition questions. In response to that order, the trial court ordered wife and her attorney to complete their depositions, and ordered wife and her attorney, jointly and severally, to pay sanctions to husband in the amount of $45,000. Wife and her attorney appealed.

The court of appeal granted review by treating the appeal as an application for extraordinary relief, dismissed the appeal, and issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to reconsider the amount of sanctions imposed. The court reviewed the provisions of former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023 and 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2025.480(f)) regarding monetary sanctions, and explained that monetary discovery sanctions payable to an opposing party are limited to the opposing party's actual costs, including attorney's fees. The wife and her attorney contended the sanctions awarded were excessive because they were not limited to the actual amounts expended by the husband as a result of their failure to comply with the trial court's orders. The court said it was unable to determine from the trial court record what portion of the sanctions imposed was based on fees and costs incurred as a result of the noncompliance of the wife and her attorney, because the trial court order did not explain how it computed the award. The court declined to consider two orders purporting to explain how the award was computed, because the trial court issued these orders subsequent to the filing of the notice of appeal. The court said that such blatant disobedience of court orders warrants severe sanctions, but the imposition of sanctions must comport with the statutory authority on which they are based. It did not hold $45,000 to be excessive, but only that (1) the evidence must be sufficient to support a finding that the amount of sanctions reflects the amount incurred by the husband in an attempt to obtain compliance with discovery, and (2) the record must reflect a determination by the trial court that such amount spent or incurred was reasonable. It concluded that on remand, the trial court must determine the amount of sanctions necessary to reimburse the husband for his reasonable attorney's fees and other costs and may consider other sanctions, including contempt, necessary to protect the dignity of the court and ensure compliance with the court's order (211 Cal. App. 3d 28, 37-38) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Monetary Sanctions Are Limited to Actual Costs

In Do v. Superior Court (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1210, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 855 , a creditor filed an action against a debtor, alleging breach of a loan agreement. Because the debtor was indigent, she was represented on a pro bono basis. When the creditor twice failed to appear at a noticed deposition, the debtor filed a motion seeking sanctions. The superior court denied the motion. Relying on Argaman v. Ratan (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1173, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 917 (discussed below), the superior court reasoned that the situation of a litigant with pro bono counsel is analogous to that of an attorney appearing in propria persona. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)) refers to "reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees incurred ... as a result of a misuse of the discovery process" and, here, the debtor incurred no expenses because she was not required to pay the attorney fees. The debtor filed a petition for writ of mandate (109 Cal. App. 4th 1210, 1212) .

In a case of first impression, the court of appeal held that a party represented by pro bono counsel was entitled to an award of sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(j)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(c)(1)) and former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) against the opposing party, even though the party did not actually "incur" additional fees as a result of the opposing party's conduct, when there was no finding that the failure to appeal was "with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust" (109 Cal. App. 4th 1210, 1213) . The court distinguished Argaman, in which the court of appeal concluded that awarding sanctions in the form of fees for discovery abuses by their opponents to lawyers representing themselves would result in disparate treatment between self-represented lawyer-litigants and self-represented non-lawyers. Rather, in this case, the court reasoned that "to permit lawyers who do not charge their clients to obtain monetary discovery sanctions in the form of fees does not result in disparate treatment; rather, the opposite is true" (109 Cal. App. 4th 1210, 1217) . To hold that parties represented by lawyers who provide their services free of charge are not entitled to sanctions, while parties who have to pay fees are, would be unfair, in effect creating two separate classes of discovery and granting different rights and remedies to each (109 Cal. App. 4th 1210, 1217) .

In Argaman v. Ratan (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1173, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 917 , plaintiff, an attorney litigating in propria persona, filed a motion to compel defendant to provide further answers to special interrogatories and for sanctions and attorney's fees. He requested compensation of $3500 for his time at his billable rate, as well as filing and copying costs. The trial court granted the motion to compel in part and denied the motion in part and ordered defendant to pay $500 in sanctions pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300(d)). Defendant appealed the sanction order.

In a case of first impression, the court of appeal held that an attorney litigating in propria persona may not be awarded a monetary discovery sanction under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)) based on attorney's fees incurred to compel compliance (73 Cal. App. 4th 1173, 1179) . The court was guided by the California Supreme Court's decision in Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 274, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 241, 902 P.2d 259 (discussed in Ch. 25, Attorney's Fees), which held that an attorney acting in propria persona is not entitled to recover "reasonable attorney's fees" under Civ. Code § 1717 because the attorney cannot be said to "incur," that is, become obliged to pay, compensation for his or her time and lost business opportunities (73 Cal. App. 4th 1173, 1177-1179) .

Similarly, an attorney is not entitled to an award of monetary discovery sanctions based on attorney's fees incurred, because a pro se attorney litigant does not incur attorney's fees, as the attorney litigant is not liable to pay consideration for the legal representation (73 Cal. App. 4th 1173, 1179) . The court then considered whether the value of the attorney's time and effort could be the basis of a monetary discovery sanction as a "reasonable expense" (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)). The court concluded that even if it were to view the attorney's time and effort as a reasonable expense, the expense would not be compensable under the statute because it had not been incurred (73 Cal. App. 4th 1173, 1180) .

[Caption. See § 82.20.]

THE SANCTION OF DEFAULT OR DISMISSAL SHOULD NOT BE ORDERED BECAUSE IT IS A DRASTIC ONE, WHICH IS FUNDAMENTALLY IMPROPER AND UNJUST EXCEPT IN CERTAIN NARROWLY PRESCRIBED CIRCUMSTANCES.

A. Default or Dismissal Should Be Used With Caution. The granting of a dismissal or default against a party who has engaged in conduct constituting a misuse of the discovery process, pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030(d)(3) or (4), is a drastic measure that should only be applied sparingly and with caution (see Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499).

[Optional] B. Dismissal Is Too Severe When Unable to Comply. Code of Civil Procedure Section _____ [specify code section governing specific procedure that authorizes court to issue order, including terminating sanction, e.g., 2025.450(d)] authorizes the court to order a terminating sanction, but the court may only make such an order if it is just. Thus, the court should not make such an order when the conduct of the offending party was due to aninability to comply rather than to willfulness, bad faith, or fault (see Puritan Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 885, 217 Cal. Rptr. 602 ; Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793-794, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499).

[Optional] C. Dismissal Is Unjust Unless Noncompliance Causes Interference With Court's Truth-Seeking Mission. Unless a person's conduct constituting a misuse of the discovery process interferes with the court's mission of seeking truth and justice, the sanction of dismissal is fundamentally unjust (see Morgan v. Ransom (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 670, 157 Cal. Rptr. 212).

[Optional] D. Discovery Relates to Some Issues Only. The sanction of default or dismissal imposed against a party who engaged in conduct constituting misuse of the discovery process is improper when it prohibits the party from presenting evidence on issues of fact that were completely unaffected by the discovery misuse (see Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377).

[Optional] E. Discovery Sought Is Irrelevant to Issues Raised by Pleadings. The sanction of dismissal or default is improper when the discovery method was not going to lead to the discovery of evidence that is relevant to any issue raised by the pleadings, and when there is no showing of prejudice arising from the conduct of the offending party (see Morgan v. Ransom (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 669-670, 157 Cal. Rptr. 212).

[Optional] F. Default or Dismissal Is Unjust When Lesser Sanction Would Be Appropriate. The entering of a default or a dismissal inflicts unnecessary and excessive punishment on one litigant and confers a windfall on the other when the wrong done could be readily redressed by a lesser sanction such as a reasonable monetary award or striking out part of the pleadings (see Thomas v. Luong (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 76, 82, 231 Cal. Rptr. 631 ; Fred Howland Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 605, 611, 612, 53 Cal. Rptr. 341).

[Optional] G. Dismissal Is Inappropriate for Attorney's Failure to Pay Monetary Sanction. Dismissal is never an appropriate remedy for an attorney's noncompliance with an order imposing monetary sanctions (see Hurtado v. Western Medical Center (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1198, 1204, 272 Cal. Rptr. 324 ; Jones v. Otero (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 754, 758-759, 203 Cal. Rptr. 90).

[Optional] H. Acquiescence by Moving Party. If the trial court can reasonably infer that the party moving for sanctions acquiesced to a request to defer discovery that had been made by the party who had engaged in questionable conduct, then the sanctions of default or dismissal are improper (see Garza v. Delano Union Elementary School Dist. (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 303, 315, 167 Cal. Rptr. 629).

[Optional] I. Dismissal Inappropriate Without Prior Court Order Compelling Discovery. Dismissal may be ordered as a sanction only after the court has ordered the party to comply with the requested discovery, and the party has had an opportunity to comply with the court order, but failed to do so (see Ruvalcaba v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1579, 1583, 272 Cal. Rptr. 541).

[Optional] J. Default as Sanction Does Not Apply When Defendant Fails to Appear at Trial. Default entered under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030(d)(4) as a sanction for the defendant's extreme misuse of the discovery process has no application to the situation where defendant simply fails to appear at trial (see Heidary v. Yadollahi (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 857, 864, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695).

[Optional] K. Order for Default Sanction May Not Be Based on Ex Parte Application. A failure to notify and provide an opportunity to be heard to the defendants that their defaults might be entered as a discovery sanction violates due process, because sanctions for abuse or misuse of discovery may not be awarded ex parte under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) (see Sole Energy Co. v. Hodges (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 208, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 823).

This form is for use in opposition to a motion for an order for the imposition of the sanctions of dismissal under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(3) or default under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(4). It may be used in combination with a general form opposing the imposition ofsanctions because of their severity, or because they are punitive rather than remedial or otherwise improper [see § 82.20].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with the provisions of the current act.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel might set forth facts showing that the conduct in question was due to an inability to comply rather than to willfulness, bad faith, or fault [see Optional Paragraph B], that the proposed discovery would not have furthered the ferreting out of the truth nor would it have expedited the litigation even if counsel or counsel's client had not engaged in the questioned conduct [see Optional Paragraph C], that the discovery which was sought related only to some or to none of the issues raised by the pleadings [see Optional Paragraphs D, E], that the only conduct involved was an attorney's failure to pay a monetary sanction [see Optional Paragraph G], that the moving party acquiesced to a request to defer discovery [see Optional Paragraph H], or that there had been no prior court order compelling discovery [see Optional Paragraph I].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Default or Dismissal Should Be Used With Caution

The facts and procedural background of Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499 , are discussed in § 82.20[3][b]. In Deyo, the court of appeal reversed the default judgment that the trial court had entered against defendant. In discussing the imposition of the sanction of default or dismissal under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b) and (d) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(3), (4)], the court noted that these were drastic measures that should only be sparingly employed (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793) .

[B] Dismissal Is Too Severe When Unable to Comply

Puritan Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 217 Cal. Rptr. 602 , involved an action for damages resulting from the failure of a drive shaft repaired by defendant. Plaintiff's expert lost the shaft after conducting an inspection. Consequently, plaintiff was unable to comply with an order compelling its production. Defendant sought and obtained an order of sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)], which excluded from evidence the shaft, photographs of the shaft, and any expert testimony based on examination of the shaft or photographs. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to vacate the order.

The court of appeal granted the writ, directing the trial court to vacate its order to the extent that it excluded photographs of the shaft and testimony based on the shaft (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 887-888) . The court equated the order with one for dismissal because its effect was to preclude proof of an essential element of plaintiff's action (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 884-885) . A sanction equivalent to dismissal was too harsh in this case, since the failure to produce the shaft was not willful and did not justify an inference that plaintiff's case lacked merit. It was proper to exclude the lost shaft and related testimony because defendant never had a chance to inspect the shaft. However, defendant was able to inspect any photographs. The court therefore held that it was an abuse of discretion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)] to exclude photographs of the shaft and related testimony (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 885-887) .

The facts and procedural background of Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499 , are discussed in § 82.20[3][b]. In Deyo, the court vacated the trial court's order striking defendant's answer and rendering a default judgment against defendant. In so doing, the court reasoned that, because sanctions imposed under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b) and (d) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030] must be appropriate and just, dismissal is unauthorized when the failure to comply is due to inability, and not to the willfulness, bad faith, or fault of the party who was ordered to comply (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793-794) . Note that statutes now govern the specific procedures that authorize issue, evidence, and terminating sanctions [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(d) (court may make orders that are "just" when deponent fails to obey order to compel)].

[c] Dismissal Is Unjust Unless Noncompliance Causes Interference With Court's Truth-Seeking Mission

In Morgan v. Ransom (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 157 Cal. Rptr. 212 , a legal malpractice suit against an attorney by a former criminal client, defendant took the deposition of plaintiff, who represented himself, and then sent plaintiff interrogatories, eventually followed up by a letter reminding him that the answers to the interrogatories were overdue. Defendant then made a motion to compel answers to the interrogatories, which plaintiff had still not answered, and this motion was granted. The trial court order also required plaintiff to pay $250 as reasonable expenses andfees of the motion. Plaintiff then filed some handwritten documents that included a declaration that he had never received the interrogatories nor any information concerning them until he received the notice of the trial court's order. Also included in plaintiff's set of documents was a motion to vacate the trial court's ruling. Defendant then moved to dismiss the action for failure to comply with the court order. The next papers to be filed in the trial court file were four hand-printed answers to defendant's interrogatories. The trial judge apparently never saw these answers to interrogatories, however, until some time later. The motion to dismiss was then heard in plaintiff's absence, and the dismissal was granted.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal (95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 670) . It gave a number of reasons for the reversal, including the fact that the court had not considered the existence and adequacy of plaintiff's answers to interrogatories when it ruled on defendant's motion to dismiss (95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 669) . More importantly, the court stated, defendant had never made a showing that he would be prejudiced in any way by plaintiff's failure to answer the interrogatory, nor was there any indication that the unanswered interrogatory was at all relevant (95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 669-670) . The court went on to hold that the sanction of peremptory dismissal is fundamentally unjust unless the conduct of the plaintiff is such that the noncompliance constitutes an interference with the court's mission of seeking truth and justice (95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 670) .

[d] Discovery Relates to Some Issues Only

The facts and procedural background of Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377 , are discussed in § 82.20[3][a]. In Caryl Richards, the trial court struck defendant's answer and entered a default because of defendant's refusal to give adequate answers to interrogatories relating to one of the issues in the lawsuit. The court of appeal granted a writ of mandate setting aside the entry of default on the ground that it was improper to deny defendant the right to present evidence on issues of fact that were completely unaffected by the discovery procedure before the court (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305, 307) . The court went on to note that a less severe sanction, such as an order establishing the facts that plaintiff would have to prove, would not work a denial of due process if the established facts related only to the information sought by the interrogatory that defendant had not adequately answered (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305-306) .

[e] Discovery Sought Is Irrelevant to Issues Raised by Pleadings

The facts and procedural background of Morgan v. Ransom (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 157 Cal. Rptr. 212 , are discussed in [c], above. Among the reasons that the Morgan court gave for reversing the dismissal of plaintiff's action for failure to comply with a discovery order were that defendant had never shown that he would be prejudiced in any way by the noncompliance, and that there was no indication that the unanswered interrogatory was at all relevant to the issues in the case (95 Cal. App. 3d 664, 669-670) .

[f] Default or Dismissal Is Unjust When Lesser Sanction Would Be Appropriate

In Thomas v. Luong (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 76, 231 Cal. Rptr. 631 , a personal injury action arising out of an automobile accident, plaintiff served defendant with a set of interrogatories, to which defendant responded. A year later plaintiff served defendant with form interrogatories, largely duplicative of the first set, and noticed defendant's deposition. Defendant failed to answer the interrogatories or appear at the deposition. Defendant's attorney was unable to locate defendant, but offered to admit defendant's liability, thereby making the only issue that of damages. Plaintiff brought a motion for sanctions. The trial court issued an order striking the answer, directing entry of default, and imposing monetary sanctions. Defendant's attorney petitioned for a stay and writ of mandate. After the petition was denied, a default hearing was held, and a default judgment was entered. Defendant's attorney appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and vacated the order striking defendant's answer and entering his default (187 Cal. App. 3d 76, 83) . The court said that the use of the ultimate sanction, such as a default, is a drastic penalty and should be used sparingly. A discovery penalty must be appropriate to the dereliction, and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery. A sanction should not put the prevailing party in a better position than he or she would have had if the discovery sought had been obtained and was completely favorable to his or her case. The purpose of discovery is not to provide a weapon for punishment, forfeiture, or the avoidance of a trial on the merits (187 Cal. App. 3d 76, 81) . The method chosen to sanction a party who refuses to provide discovery to which his or her adversary is entitled must not be arbitrary. It should not deprive a party of all right to defend any action if the discriminating imposition of a lesser sanction will serve to protect the legitimate interests of the party harmed by the failure to provide discovery. The court discussed defendant's attorney's offer to admit liability, saying that if the stipulation had been accepted or the lesser sanction of striking defendant's pleadings, insofar as they contested liability or causation, had been imposed, the deposition of defendant would have been superfluous. If plaintiff required further protection, the additional lesser sanction of precluding defendant from testifying could have been imposed (187 Cal. App. 3d 76, 81-82) . The court found that the sanction imposed substantially exceeded what was reasonably required toprotect the plaintiff. It constituted a forfeiture and abused judicial discretion (187 Cal. App. 3d 76, 82) .

In Fred Howland Co. v. Superior Court (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 605, 53 Cal. Rptr. 341 , defendant Howland was one of several parties sued by plaintiff for damages for personal injuries received while working as a pipe fitter on a construction project for which defendant was the project manager. Plaintiff served a single set of interrogatories on all of the parties in the action. While the other parties filed answers within the statutory time limit, defendant Howland received five extensions over a period of six months, and at the end of that time, its former attorney substituted another law firm on the basis of a potential conflict of interest. Two months later, plaintiff filed a motion to have the defendant Howland's answer stricken and default judgment entered as a sanction for failure to answer the interrogatories. The hearing on the motion was postponed by mutual consent, and prior to its being held, partial answers were filed to the interrogatories. The defendant Howland's attorneys also filed a declaration indicating that the interrogatories not answered could only be answered when records, which were in storage in another state, had been received and when former officers of the company, who had not been with the company for more than two years, were consulted. The declaration stated that when the records had been received and former officers consulted, further answers would be made. After the hearing, the trial court entered a default judgment and awarded attorney's fees as additional sanctions. Defendant Howland filed a motion for reconsideration, accompanying it with complete answers to the interrogatories and a second declaration of its attorneys detailing factual explanations about the delay in submitting complete answers.

The trial court denied the motion, indicating its actions were taken pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2023.030(d)(4)]. Defendant Howland then sought a writ of mandamus from the court of appeal to compel the trial court to vacate its order and reinstate the answer.

In granting the writ, the court of appeal held that in order for sanctions to be imposed pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d), the court must find that the failure to answer the interrogatories was "willful." (Counsel should note, however, that under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030 of the current California Civil Discovery Act, "willfulness" is not a requirement for the imposition of sanctions). However, the court also held that the trial court had abused its discretion in striking the answer and entering a default judgment after the answers were filed, since that tied the hands of defendant in defending against that judgment and the punishment did not fit either the offense or the offender (244 Cal. App. 2d 605, 610-611) . (Counsel should note that this principle of law is most likely still applicable to the current Civil Discovery Act.) The court explained that there is no question of the power of the court to apply the ultimate sanction of default against a litigant who persists in an outright refusal to comply with discovery obligations, but those were not the circumstances in this case (244 Cal. App. 2d 605, 612) . Instead, the default sanction inflicted unnecessary and excessive punishment on one litigant, while conferring a windfall on the other, when the wrong done could have been readily redressed by the lesser sanction of a reasonable monetary award (244 Cal. App. 2d 605, 611-612) .

[g] Dismissal Is Inappropriate for Attorney's Failure to Pay Monetary Sanction

In Hurtado v. Western Medical Center (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1198, 272 Cal. Rptr. 324 , a medical malpractice action, plaintiff responded to defendant's demand for exchange of expert trial witness information by designating three physicians as her treating physicians. After defendant noticed depositions for each physician, plaintiff advised defendant that two of the dates were inconvenient and asked defendant to consult with the physicians and reschedule the depositions. Defendant refused to change the dates, informing plaintiff that it was her responsibility to reschedule the depositions of her expert witnesses. The trial court granted defendant's motion to compel attendance of the physicians on the specified dates, and ordered plaintiff to pay defendant's fees and costs. Plaintiff neither produced the physicians for deposition nor paid the sanctions. Later, defendant successfully moved to dismiss the action because of plaintiff's failure to provide discovery and to pay the monetary sanctions. Plaintiff appealed.

Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal on the basis of Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 226 (now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 10.910) (plaintiff's inability to proceed), it held that dismissal based on plaintiff's failure to pay monetary sanctions was error. The court held that dismissal of an action as punishment for failure to pay monetary sanctions violates a plaintiff's due process rights and is an abuse of discretion (222 Cal. App. 3d 1198, 1204) .

The court also examined plaintiff's contention that the order for which plaintiff was sanctioned for disobeying was itself invalid. The court agreed with plaintiff's argument that it was not her responsibility to reschedule the depositions of the physicians. The physicians were designated as experts by plaintiff because she intended to ask them one or more questions that "may call for the rendering of an expert opinion." The court found they were percipient expert witnesses rather than employed or retained expert witnesses, and that plaintiff had no obligation to provide defendants with the amounts of the expert witness fees, nor any burden of producing the experts for deposition. Thus, the trial court's order to produce the physicians for deposition was directly contrary to statute and was invalid, as was the order to pay sanctions. The subsequent dismissal based on plaintiff's failure to comply with the invalid trial court order was also invalid (222 Cal. App. 3d 1198, 1203) .

Jones v. Otero (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 754, 203 Cal. Rptr. 90 involved an action for specific performance. Defendants moved to compel plaintiffs to provide answers to certain interrogatories and to produce certain documents, and for sanctions against plaintiffs for purposefully delaying prosecution of the case. The trial court ordered plaintiffs to provide the answers without objection and to produce the documents, and further ordered plaintiffs' attorney to pay a specified amount within 10 days as reasonable costs of obtaining the orders to compel. Plaintiffs' attorney hand delivered to defendants' attorney the interrogatory answers and a response to the requests for documents on the same day that the order was handed down. Plaintiffs' attorney failed to appear at the appointed time for commencement of trial, having informed the court clerk that he would appear for second call. Defendants erroneously informed the trial court under oath that the order compelling discovery had not been properly complied with, and also stated that the monetary sanctions had not been paid. At the suggestion of the trial court, defendants moved for dismissal pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(3)]. The trial court granted the motion and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order of dismissal. The court noted that the order to pay sanctions was directed to plaintiffs' attorney rather than to plaintiffs themselves and stated that a dismissal of the action based on the failure of either the plaintiffs' or the plaintiffs' attorney to pay the sanctions was an act in excess of the court's jurisdiction (156 Cal. App. 3d 754, 758) . The court held that dismissal can never be an appropriate remedy for an attorney's noncompliance with an order imposing monetary sanctions (156 Cal. App. 3d 754, 759) . The court also stated as an alternative ground for its reversal that plaintiffs had received no notice of defendants' motion to dismiss (156 Cal. App. 3d 754, 757) . However, counsel should note that the court reserved the question of whether dismissal could ever be an appropriate remedy for a party's noncompliance with a discovery order imposing monetary sanctions (156 Cal. App. 3d 754, 759) .

[h] Acquiescence by Moving Party

Garza v. Delano Union Elementary School Dist. (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 303, 167 Cal. Rptr. 629 , involved a personal injury action against a school district and an individual arising out of a collision involving a school bus on which plaintiff was riding. Defendant school district served notice to take the depositions of plaintiff and her parents, scheduled a medical examination of plaintiff, and served interrogatories on plaintiff's attorney. Plaintiff's counsel advised defendant that plaintiff had returned to Mexico and would not attend the deposition or doctor appointment, but promised that notice would be given to defense counsel on the minor's return. The parties granted an open extension to answer interrogatories previously served on each other. Subsequent doctor appointments were cancelled, and defense counsel cancelled the deposition on request of plaintiff's counsel until they could locate their client. All the parties then stipulated to vacate the trial date and reset a new trial. Both defendants moved to dismiss for failure to prosecute within two years after filing and for sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.] for failure to allow discovery, but the individual defendant's motion to dismiss for lack of discovery was dropped. Plaintiff argued that defendant school district had acquiesced to continuing discovery, and thus plaintiff's conduct should not be viewed as a willful failure to comply with discovery. (Counsel should note that Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq. no longer requires "willfulness" as a prerequisite to the imposition of sanctions.) Furthermore, plaintiff contended that there was no motion to compel attendance at the physical examination or compel answers to the interrogatories, and all parties had stipulated to continue the case. The trial court granted the motion to dismiss and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendant, holding that it was an abuse of the trial court's discretion to dismiss the action for lack of prosecution, and that the granting of the motion to dismiss for willful failure to allow discovery under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(3), which no longer requires "willful"] was also an abuse of discretion. Concerning the dismissal under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d), the court noted that defendant school district had not obtained a court order for answers or further answers. (Counsel should note that under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.290(c) and 2030.300(e) of the California Civil Discovery Act of 2005, a terminating sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d) may be ordered only if a party has failed to obey a court order compelling answers or further answers to interrogatories.) The court also noted that on plaintiff's request, the scheduled depositions were either continued or cancelled by defendant. The record did not disclose whether defendant ever informed plaintiff's counsel that his request to cancel was denied or that the deposition date was firm and the minor would be expected to appear. The record did disclose that the last scheduled deposition was cancelled by defendant at the oral and written request of plaintiff's counsel. Considering these matters, the court held that the trial court reasonably could have inferred that defendant school district acquiesced in plaintiff's request to defer the deposition and physical examination until the minor's return from Mexico. The court also held that the trial court improperly gave consideration to plaintiff's failure to answer interrogatories, as the parties had stipulated to give each other open time for answering. Thus, the ultimate sanction of dismissal was too harsh under the facts of the case, and prejudice to defendant due to the delay was speculative (110 Cal. App. 3d 303, 313-316) .

[i] Dismissal Inappropriate Without Prior Court Order Compelling Discovery

In Ruvalcaba v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1579, 272 Cal. Rptr. 541 , plaintiff insured sued his insurance carrier for unreasonably failing to settle a personal injury lawsuit, thereby exposing him to the excess judgment subsequently rendered. Throughout the action plaintiff failed to respond reasonably to a variety of discovery devices, and the trial court had ordered compliance and sanctions against plaintiff. Finally, defendant made a demand for inspection of documents, which plaintiff failed to answer, even after being granted two extensions of time. Because plaintiff failed to respond to that demand, defendant brought a motion to dismiss for failure to comply with that discovery. The trial court granted the motion and ordered the matter dismissed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the Discovery Act indicates that dismissal is among those sanctions that requires a prior court order compelling compliance with discovery. The court explained that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030), governing sanctions generally, and former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) and (m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(c), (e)), governing the failure to comply with a demand for production, permit a court to order a party to respond to the discovery request and impose a monetary sanction at that time. If the party fails to comply with that order, a variety of sanctions, including dismissal, are available. However, these sanctions are not available without the court order mandating compliance (222 Cal. App. 3d 1579, 1583) . The court also explained that the Discovery Act changed the law in this respect, in that cases decided prior to its enactment indicated that a court order was not necessary before a dismissal sanction could be ordered (222 Cal. App. 3d 1579, 1581) .

[j] Default as Sanction Does Not Apply When Defendant Fails to Appear at Trial

Heidary v. Yadollahi (2002) 99 Cal. App. 4th 857, 864, 121 Cal. Rptr. 2d 695 arose from a dispute concerning the ownership of two gas stations. Defendants were represented by counsel until he withdrew. Several months later, plaintiff's counsel served notice of a continuance of the trial date. However, defendants were not given this notice. They did not appear at the scheduled trial date, and the trial court continued the trial and ordered that a default be entered against them. Plaintiffs later filed an ex parte application for the entry of a judgment based on the default. A judgment was entered as requested, and the trial court refused to set it aside. Defendants appealed, arguing that the judgment was void because their default was improperly based upon their failure to appear at a trial for which they were given no notice.

The court of appeal agreed. Even assuming defendants had been given proper notice of the trial (which they were not) the court had no authority to enter their defaults for failure to appear. The court's only options when they did not appear were to proceed with the trial in their absence, or to continue the trial (99 Cal. App. 4th 857, 864) . Moreover, as relevant here, the court of appeal held that default as a sanction under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(4) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(4)) for defendant's extreme misuse of the discovery process does not apply when defendant simply fails to appear at trial. The court observed that even if default in this case could otherwise be properly characterized as a "sanction," analogous to the discovery sanctions, it could not be sustained, because former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b), (c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030, 2023.040) specifically requires notice to the affected party and an opportunity to be heard before imposition of any sanction (99 Cal. App. 4th 857, 864) .

[k] Order for Default Sanction May Not Be Based on Ex Parte Application

In Sole Energy Co. v. Hodges (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 823 , plaintiffs sued defendants, asserting causes of action for intentional interference with contractual relations, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, fraud, and breach of contract, based on a letter of intent from plaintiff's precursor to purchase from defendant specified stock and oil-and gas-related assets. The trial court entered a default judgment against defendants in an amount exceeding $27 million as a sanction for their discovery abuses. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal concluded that the sanction orders violated due process and the notice requirements of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030). Discovery sanctions may not be ordered ex parte, and an order purporting to do so is void. "Adequate notice prior to imposition of sanctions is mandated not only by statute, but also by the due process clauses of both the state and federal Constitutions" (128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 208) . Two defendants did not receive any notice, much less adequate notice, that the trial court might impose a terminating sanction as a result of their discovery abuses. The only notice given these defendants was for an order shortening time on a motion to compel attendance and for monetary and other unspecified sanctions (128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 208-209) . Defaulting a third defendant as a sanction was even more egregious because he was not named in any motion to compel or in any discovery order. Because no discovery order was directed to the third defendant, he could not have violated a discovery order (128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 209) . With respect to a fourth defendant, the ex parte applications mentioned that plaintiffs were seeking relief to file a motion to compel and for sanctions. The trial court's order requiring the fourth defendant to appear throughits counsel with documents in hand did not refer to sanctions of any type. The fourth defendant had no notice that sanctions of any kind might be imposed for its discovery abuses (128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 209) . Further, because the orders entering the defaults of defendants were void, the default judgment against defendants was also void (128 Cal. App. 4th 199, 210) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Default or Dismissal Is Unjust When Lesser Sanction Would Be Appropriate

In McArthur v. Bockman (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 256 Cal. Rptr. 522 , plaintiffs retained defendant architect to build them a house in Mexico. Under Mexican law, defendant held plaintiffs' power of attorney in reference to that property. Defendant architect exercised that authority and transferred the property to his mother, who then conveyed it to another relative. Plaintiffs filed an action for equitable and legal relief against defendant architect and his relatives. Defendants cross complained for malicious prosecution. After extensive discovery had been completed, plaintiffs successfully moved to depose defendants on their financial condition pursuant to Civ. Code § 3295, which authorizes pretrial discovery of a defendant's financial condition in an action seeking punitive damages. After defendants failed to appear at the deposition, plaintiffs obtained sanctions striking defendants' answer and cross complaint, which resulted in the entry of a default judgment against defendants. The court of appeal reversed, finding that a default judgment was an inappropriate sanction (208 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1080-1081) . The court observed that any discovery ordered pursuant to Civ. Code § 3295 is strictly limited to inquiry regarding the defendants' wealth and occurs after substantial discovery has already been conducted. Thus, it found that default was inappropriate in light of the specific purpose of the deposition and the minimal potential prejudice to plaintiffs, which consisted of the risk that they would be unable to obtain a punitive damage award commensurate with defendants' actual wealth. The court said the prejudice could have been eliminated by sanctions short of default, and suggested alternative sanctions more properly tailored to defendants' conduct, such as precluding defendants from introducing evidence of their wealth at trial or instructing the jury to assume that their financial condition would support the requested punitive damages award (208 Cal. App. 3d 1076, 1081) .

[b] Dismissal Inappropriate Without Prior Court Order Compelling Discovery

In Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 262, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 831 , plaintiff physician appealed from a court order that struck his pleadings and entered monetary and terminating sanctions for discovery violations under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(4), (7) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010). Plaintiff sued defendant health care providers, alleging beach of contract and various tort claims, after defendants' refused to reinstate him on their medical staff and suspended his clinical privileges. Plaintiff repeatedly and willfully failed to answer discovery requests, despite five motions to compel, $8,500 in monetary sanctions awarded to defendants, and five requests for terminating sanctions. Plaintiff had also stipulated that production would be complete by a specified date. The stipulation, however, was never signed by the referee or by the court or filed. Despite the stipulation, plaintiff produced only an incomplete "confidentiality log" prepared by counsel and produced with his opposition to defendant's fifth motion for terminating sanctions. Noting that monetary sanctions had not successfully gained plaintiff's attention, the referee recommended, and the trial court ordered, terminating sanctions.

In addressing whether defendants' motion for terminating sanctions was well taken, the court of appeal noted that there was no order requiring plaintiff to respond to the specific interrogatories and requests for production of documents. The court concluded, however, that the trial court did not err in treating the stipulation as the order required by former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030 and 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.010 et seq. and 2031.010 et seq.). By signing the stipulation, counsel essentially waived plaintiff's right to insist on a formal order compelling responses as a precursor to an issuance of evidentiary, issue, or terminating sanctions. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in ordering terminating sanctions, in light of plaintiff's repeated pattern of delay and non-production (128 Cal. App. 4th 262, 279-280) .

This chapter includes memoranda relating to civil discovery by oral and written depositions. Forms in Part II include the following:

- Subpart A has memoranda relating to a motion for leave to take an oral deposition at a location other than that authorized under the Discovery Act [§ 83.10], and points and authorities relating to a motion for monetary sanctions for noncompliance with the procedures for arranging or attending an oral deposition [§ 83.11].

- Subpart B has memoranda supporting [§ 83.30 et seq.] and opposing [§§ 83.40 et seq., 83.45 et seq., and 83.50] a motion to compel attendance and testimony at an oral depositions.

- Subpart C has memoranda supporting [§ 83.60] and opposing [§ 83.70] a motion to stay the taking of an oral deposition and quash the deposition notice.

- Subpart D has memoranda supporting [§ 83.80 et seq.] and opposing [§ 83.100 et seq.] a motion for a protective order in the context of an oral deposition.

- Subpart E has memoranda relating to a proceeding for leave to take a subsequent oral deposition not otherwise authorized under the Discovery Act [§ 83.130].

- Subpart F has memoranda relating to proceedings involving a deposition by written questions [§ 83.150 et seq.].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-83 California Points & Authorities § 83.02

§ 83.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified at Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Depositions

Civil discovery by oral deposition is governed primarily by Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq. Depositions on written questions are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.010 et seq. Oral depositions taken outside of California are governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2026.010 (another state, territory, or insular possession of United States) and 2027.010 (foreign nation). Limits on the use of depositions in limited civil cases are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 94(b).

The requirements and procedures for use of deposition subpoenas, to compel the attendance and testimony, or the production of evidence, or both, by non-party witnesses, are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.010 et seq. Statutory provisions governing subpoenas generally, set out in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985-1994, and Evid. Code §§ 1560-1567, apply to civil discovery proceedings to the extent that these general provisions are consistent with the more specific provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.010 et seq.

Depositions of incarcerated persons are governed also by provisions outside the Discovery Act: Penal Code § 2623 (prisoners in state prison) and Code Civ. Proc. § 1995 et seq. (prisoners confined in jail).

[3] Case Law Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

The Civil Discovery Act was passed in 2004 and became effective July 1, 2005. It repealed and renumbered the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 but did not substantively change the law of civil discovery [Stats. 2004, ch. 182 §§ 22, 23, 61]. Thus cases decided under the 1986 Act remain controlling authority. A considerable body of case law interpreted the discovery provisions of the Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9), which preceded the 1986

Act. Although the 1986 Act, which became operative July 1, 1987, implemented numerous changes in the prior law, it also continued provisions of the prior law in many other instances, or even codified decisions interpreting the prior law. Decisions construing this prior law are therefore cited as persuasive, rather than controlling, authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

8-83 California Points & Authorities § 83.03

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular type of discovery motion, such as motion to compel discovery or a motion for a protective order.

In many cases it will be appropriate to combine them with additional memoranda out in the related discovery chapters. In particular, they may be combined with the general memoranda for limiting or regulating discovery set out in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , or with the memoranda for limiting discovery based on the evidentiary privileges, work product protection, or other protective provisions found in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

It may also be appropriate to modify the memoranda in this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial or appellate brief or office memoranda relating to discovery practice.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER THE ATTENDANCE FOR DEPOSITION OF _____ [name], A NATURAL PERSON WHO IS [_____ (AN OFFICER OF or A DIRECTOR OF or A MANAGING AGENT OF or AN EMPLOYEE OF] A PARTY TO THE ACTION AT A PLACE THAT IS [_____ MORE THAN 75 MILES FROM THAT PERSON'S RESIDENCE or WITHIN THE COUNTY WHERE THE ACTION IS PENDING AND MORE THAN 150 MILES FROM THAT PERSON'S

RESIDENCE] BECAUSE THE INTERESTS OF JUSTICE WILL BE SERVED BY THE ORDER.

A. Statutory Authority. Ordinarily, the deposition of a natural person who is a party to an action must be taken at a place that is, at the option of the person giving notice of the deposition, either within 75 miles of the deponent's residence, or within the county where the action is pending and within 150 miles of the deponent's residence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.250(a)). However, on motion accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion, the court in its discretion may order that a natural person who is a party to the action or an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party attend for deposition at a place that is further than the distance permitted under Section 2025.250(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260).

B. Factors to Be Considered. In exercising its discretion to order attendance for deposition at a place that is more than 75 or 150 miles from the deponent's residence, the court shall take into consideration any factor tending to show whether the interests of justice will be served by requiring the deponent's attendance at that more distant place, including but not limited to the following: (A) whether the moving party selected the forum, (B) whether the deponent will be present to testify at the trial of the action, (C) the convenience of the deponent, (D) the feasibility of conducting the deposition by written questions under Section 2028.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, or of using a discovery method other than a deposition, (E) the number of depositions sought to be taken at a place more distant than 150 miles from a deponent's residence, (F) the expense to the parties of requiring the deposition to be taken within the distance permitted under Section 2025.250(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and (G) the whereabouts of the deponent at the time for which the deposition is scheduled (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260(b); Glass v. Superior Court (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1053, 251 Cal. Rptr. 690).

[Optional] C. Managing Agent of Party. Generally, the managing agent of a corporation is a person who may exercise his or her judgment and discretion in dealing with corporate matters, who can be expected to comply with his or her employer's directive to appear for pretrial examination, and who can be anticipated to identify himself or herself with the interests of the corporation (Waters v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 885, 896, 27 Cal. Rptr. 153, 377 P.2d 265).

D. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to increase travel limits for a party-deponent, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2025.260(d)).

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in supporting a motion for an order authorizing the moving party to take the deposition of a natural person who is a party to the action, or one who is an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, at a place more than 75 miles from the deponent's residence, or within the county where the action is pending and more than 150 miles from the deponent's residence. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260].

The court may grant the order subject to the advancement by the moving party of the reasonable expenses and costs to the deponent for travel to the place of deposition [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260(c)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Argument should be directed at showing the court how the facts of the case indicate that justice would be served by making the order, particularly in view of the factors expressly to be considered under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260(b), which are set out in Paragraph B and discussed in § 83.10[3][a]. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260].

[c] Place of Deposition

Absent an order for attendance at a more distant place under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260, a deposition must be taken either within 75 miles of the deponent's residence, or within the county in which the action is pending and within 150 miles of the deponent's residence, if the deponent is a natural person, whether or not a party to the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.250(a)]. Similarly, when the deponent is an organization that is a party to the action, the deposition must be taken at a place that is either within 75 miles of the organization's principal executive or business office in California, or in the county in which the action is pending and within 150 miles of the office [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.250(b)].

If the deponent is a nonparty organization, the deposition must be taken within 75 miles of the organization's principal executive or business office in California, unless the organization consents to a more distant place [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.250(c)]. If the organization has not designated a principal executive or business office in California, the deposition must be taken at a place that is, at the option of party giving notice of the deposition, either within the county where the action is pending or within 75 miles of any executive or business office of the organization in California [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.250(d)]. With respect to a party or nonparty organization, there is no express provision under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.250 for taking the deposition at another, more distant place pursuant to an order under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms of moving papers relating to depositions generally and to proceedings for an order authorizing the taking of a deposition at a place more than 75 or 150 miles from the deponent's residence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Factors to Be Considered

In Glass v. Superior Court (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 251 Cal. Rptr. 690 , plaintiffs, Indiana corporations, sued defendants, former officers of a subsidiary company headquartered in California, for damages, alleging tortious diversion of business. Defendants cross-complained on a number of causes of action. In order to depose three senior members of plaintiffs' management teams in California, defendants moved for an order under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260. Plaintiffs opposed the motion on the ground they were Indiana residents and principals of Indiana corporations and could only be deposed within 75 miles of their residences. The trial court, in reliance on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2026 (now see Code Civ. Proc.§ 2026.010) (oral deposition in another state), denied the motion and awarded monetary sanctions against defendants and their counsel. Defendants petitioned for review by extraordinary writ.

The court of appeal granted the writ and ordered the trial court to set aside and vacate its orders denying the motion and assessing sanctions and to enter new orders granting the motion and denying the request for sanctions. Plaintiffs claimed that the deposition of an out-of-state resident may be taken in California only pursuant to stipulation. Otherwise, pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2026 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2026.010(b)), it must be taken within 75 miles of the deponent's out-of-state residence or business address (204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1050) . The court disagreed, saying that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260) controls (204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1051) . Citing dicta from a California Supreme Court case that concerned the forerunner of Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260, the court found that counsel may follow the procedures described by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq.) and obtain an order to depose an out-of-state resident in California. Alternatively, counsel may travel to the witness within 75 miles of his or her residence pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2026 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2026.010(b)) (204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1052-1053) . The court observed that were it to remand for a hearing on the merits of the defendants' motion, the trial court would have no discretion but to grant it in light of the factors set forth in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(e)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260(b)). The court highlighted those factors in the case. Plaintiffs chose the forum. Defendants offered to schedule the depositions, if possible, at times convenient to all concerned, and indicated these might be the only depositions they would take at a distant place. The court explained that depositions are a preferred method of discovery in light of the complex nature of the lawsuit and the likelihood witness credibility will play a significant role in the litigation. Finally, it would be less expensive to conduct the depositions in California while the deponents are here on business than to require those concerned to travel to Indiana for that purpose. The court found that defendants' ameliorating offers more than offset any claim that California depositions would be burdensome, inconvenient, and unreasonable to plaintiffs. The court observed that the balance of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(e)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260(b)) factors weighed conclusively in defendants' favor. It concluded that because the trial court could exercise its discretion in only one way, a writ of mandate is appropriate to compel it to grant defendants' motion (204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1053) .

[b] Managing Agent of Party

In Waters v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 885, 27 Cal. Rptr. 153, 377 P.2d 265 , an attorney filed a complaint against Howard Hughes andthree corporate defendants for the recovery of legal fees. The summons was served on only one of the corporate defendants, but not on Hughes, of whom the corporation served was allegedly the alter ego. Plaintiff served the corporate defendant with a notice of taking the deposition of Hughes, and the corporate defendant served a notice of motion for an order that the deposition not be taken. Plaintiff then obtained an ex parte order to take the deposition without notice to unserved defendants. The court later vacated that order on the ground that plaintiff had obtained it by failing to disclose that he had already served the notice of taking the deposition, and that he had been served with a notice of motion for a protective order. Plaintiff then reapplied for orders under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(a)(3) to take Hughes's deposition as well as other depositions, and repeated the procedure of serving the notices of deposition prior to making an application under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(a)(3) to do so. The court denied both motions, and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to set aside those orders.

The Supreme Court granted a peremptory writ of mandate, holding that plaintiff had showed good cause for not serving Hughes with a notice of the taking of the depositions, and that plaintiff had made a sufficient showing for obtaining authorization for taking the depositions without notice to Hughes (58 Cal. 2d 885, 894-895) . However, the Supreme Court also held that plaintiff had not made an adequate showing pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(a)(4) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.280(a)) that Hughes was the managing agent of the company (58 Cal. 2d 885, 898) . In discussing the latter issue, the Court stated that the question of whether a particular deponent is a "managing agent" for purposes of pretrial discovery must necessarily be answered pragmatically on an ad hoc basis (58 Cal. 2d 885, 896) . The Court stated that federal decisions have defined "managing agent" of a party as used in Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 37(d) (sanctions for failure to attend deposition, or respond to interrogatories or request for inspection), although California courts had not interpreted a similar term as used in the Discovery Act of 1957 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050) (58 Cal. 2d 885, 896) . The Court stated that, in general, the managing agent of a corporation is a person who may exercise his or her judgment and discretion in dealing with corporate matters, who can be expected to comply with his or her employer's directive to appear for pretrial examination, and who can be anticipated to identify himself or herself with the interests of the corporation (58 Cal. 2d 885, 896) . Though the Court could see no reason why the sole shareholder of a corporation cannot qualify as a "managing agent" of the corporation under the appropriate circumstances, it found that it could not hold, as a matter of law, that the affidavit made the necessary showing or that the trial court had abused its discretion (58 Cal. 2d 885, 896-897) .

Note that Waters construed law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authorityto the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see § 23.03[3]].

to attend after being served with deposition notice]

Monetary Sanction May Be Imposed Against Deponent for Failure to Comply With Notice. If, after service of a deposition notice, a party to the action, an officer, director, managing agent, or employee of a party, or a person designated to appear on behalf of a party under Section 2025.230 of the Code of Civil Procedure, without having served a valid objection under Section 2025.410 of the Code of Civil Procedure, fails to appear for examination, fails to proceed with it, or fails to produce for inspection any document or tangible thing described in the deposition notice, that deponent or any party with whom the deponent is affiliated is subject to a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure in favor of any party who, in person or by attorney, attended at the time and place specified in the deposition notice in the expectation that the deponent's testimony would be taken,unless the court finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450).

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by a party seeking the imposition of a monetary sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a), to recover expenses incurred in attending a deposition. It may be used if the party noticing the deposition failed to attend and proceed with the deposition [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.430], or if the party noticing the deposition failed to serve a subpoena on a nonparty deponent, who consequently did not attend the deposition [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.440].

This memorandum may also be used if a party or party-connected deponent was served a deposition notice but failed to attend or proceed or to produce a document or thing for inspection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450]; however, if the moving party is also the party who served the deposition notice, and the moving party seeks also to compel attendance or production, counsel should use § 83.30 instead of this form. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state those expenses that were incurred due to the proponent's or deponent's failure to appear or proceed. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the proponent or deponent acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Insofar as Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) requires a court to impose monetary sanctions, when they are expressly authorized, unless it finds substantial justification, it effectively places theburden of showing substantial justification on the person subject to the sanction.

[c] Sanctions

The monetary sanction that may be imposed is an order that the deponent or party affiliated with the deponent pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of the deponent's conduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)]..

The sanction awarded under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.430 is payable to the party who made the appearance; direct payment to that party's attorney is not authorized [Poe v. Diamond (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1394, 1398-1399, 237 Cal. Rptr. 80 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(g)(1))]. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq., sanctions other than monetary sanctions are available only after a deponent has failed to comply with an order compelling attendance, testimony, or production [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450, 2025.480; see also § 83.32].

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion to allow a nonparty deponent to attend a deposition by telephone.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts and argument showing how this order is needed for protection from undue burden and expense.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use by a party giving notice of a deposition, to support a motion for an order to compel the appearance and testimony of, or production of documents or tangible things by, a party to the action, or that party's officer, director, managing agent, employee, or designee under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.230, when the party deponent has been served with a deposition notice but has failed to appear or proceed with examination or to produce for inspection any document or thing described in the deposition notice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450].

In addition, the moving party may use this form to seek a monetary sanction. If monetary sanctions are sought, this form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. §

2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11]. For a form of memorandum supporting a motion to impose monetary sanctions against the proponent of a deposition, or against a deponent when the motion seeks only monetary and not an order compelling compliance with a deposition notice, see § 83.11.

A motion to compel under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450 must set forth specific facts showing good cause justifying the production for inspection of any document or tangible thing described in the deposition notice, and must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion, or, when the deponent fails to attend the deposition and produce the documents or things described in the deposition notice, by a declaration stating that the petitioner has contacted the deponent to inquire about the nonappearance [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450].

One court has held that implicit in the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(b)(2) that counsel contact the deponent about a nonappearance is the requirement that counsel listen to the reasons offered and make a good faith attempt to resolve the issue. Accordingly, either declaration submitted with a motion to compel under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450 must show a reasonable and good faith attempt to resolve each issue presented, including those relating to a nonappearance [Blago Leko v. Cornerstone Home Inspection (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1124, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 (attorney sanctioned under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(a)(3), (9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010(c), (i)) for improperly filing motion to compel attendance when attorney completely disregarded his obligation to attempt to informally resolve discovery issue)]. Thus, if the deponent fails to appear, it appears that the better, if not the required, practice is to make a good faith effort to resolve the issue, and to include a description of those efforts in the supporting declaration [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(b)(2)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state that the party or party-connected deponent was properly served with a deposition notice, did not file anobjection to the notice, then failed to appear, proceed, or produce documents or things, and that counsel's client incurred expenses as a result of that failure. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the deponent acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2025.450 effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Sanctions

The monetary sanction that may be imposed is an order that the deponent, or the party affiliated with the deponent, pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of the deponent's conduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)]. Other penalties (e.g., issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions) are available only after a deponent has failed to comply with an order compelling attendance or testimony or production [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450, 2025.480; see also § 83.32].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

Proc. § 2025.450 to compel appearance and testimony or production of documents pursuant to a deposition notice, and to obtain a monetary sanction for the expenses incurred by the deponent's failure to comply with the deposition notice pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2025.450, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Compel Attendance, Testimony, or Production at Deposition; Sanctions

Blago Leko v. Cornerstone Home Inspection (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 858 , is an action arising out of a suit for negligent disclosure of defects in real property. The home inspectors' attorney unilaterally noticed depositions, but due to due to oversight and a possible misunderstanding arising from a conversation with an associate, the opposing attorney did not calendar the depositions and was unavailable. Despite opposing attorney's multiple efforts to arrange an alternate date, the home inspectors' attorney refused to reschedule the depositions, responding, in part, with a demeaning, unprofessional letter. He also filed a motion to compel. The trial court denied the motion and ultimately awarded sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023(a)(3), (9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010(c), (i), 2023.020) (86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1123) .

The attorney contended he could not be sanctioned because he was authorized to proceed with his motion to compel and was not required to seek an informal resolution with opposing counsel. He relied on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(j)(3)(B) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(b)(2)), which governs a party witness's failure to appear at or proceed with a properly noticed deposition, and provides that a motion to compel attendance must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution of each issue presented by it "or, when the deponent fails to attend the deposition ... by a declaration stating that the petitioner has contacted the deponent to inquire about the nonappearance (italics added)." The attorney reasoned that he complied with this statute by contacting realtors' attorney after he was told her clients were unavailable on the scheduled dates (86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1124) .

The court of appeal rejected this argument. Instead, it held that implicit in the requirement that counsel contact the deponent to inquire about the nonappearance is a requirement that counsel listen to the reasons offered and make a good faith attempt to resolve the issue. Here, the failure to appear was due to oversight and opposing counsel expressed a willingness to reschedule the depositions at a mutually convenient date. The trial court did not abuse its discretion when it determined that inspectors' attorney did not comply with his obligations. Sanctions were properly awarded under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023(a)(3), (9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010(c), (i), 2023.020) (86 Cal. App. 4th 1109, 1124) .

A. Party Seeking Discovery May Move for Order Compelling Discovery. If a deponent fails to answer any question or fails to produce any document or tangible thing under the deponent's control that is specified in the deposition notice or subpoena, the party seeking discovery may make a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion, that the court issue an order compelling the answer or production (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480).

B. Matters Subject to Discovery May Be Compelled. If the court determines that the answer or production sought is subject to discovery, the court shall order that the answer be given or that the production be made on resumption of the deposition (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480).

C. Matter Is Discoverable if Not Privileged and if Relevant to Subject Matter. Any matter is discoverable if it is not privileged and if it is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010).

D. Subject Matter of Action. The "subject matter" of the action is the circumstances and facts out of which the cause of action arises, that is, the property, contract, or other thing involved in the dispute. The subject matter of the action describes physical facts in relation to which the suit is prosecuted, not the act or acts that constitute the cause of action (see Darbee v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 680, 688, 25 Cal. Rptr. 520).

[Optional] E. Party May Be Compelled to Provide Nonverbal "Answers" by Reenacting Events During Video Recorded Deposition. The language in Section 2025.480 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which authorizes a trial court to issue an order compelling a deponent to "answer" a question, is construed to include nonverbal as well as verbal responses at a video recorded deposition. Thus a deponent may be compelled to perform a demonstration or reenactment at the request of a party (Emerson Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1111-1112, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 883, 946 P.2d 841).

[Optional] F. Right to Move for Order Not Waived by Adjournment or Completion of Examination. When a deponent fails to answer a question or fails to produce a document or tangible thing under the deponent's control that is specified in the deposition notice or subpoena, the party seeking the answer or production may adjourn or complete the examination on other matters without waiving the right at a later time to move for an order compelling the answer or production under Section 2025.480 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.460(d)).

G. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel answer or production, unless it finds that the one subject to thesanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2025.480(f)).

[Optional] H. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1030(a)).

This memorandum is for use by a party seeking an order to compel the answer to a question or production of a document or tangible thing under the deponent's control that is specified in the deposition notice or deposition subpoena, and for a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480]. When a monetary sanction is sought, this form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

The motion must be made no later than 60 days after the completion of the record of the deposition, and must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion. The motion must be noticed to all parties, and to the deponent either orally at the examination or by subsequent service in writing. Other procedures concerning transcripts are also required [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state the nature of the answer or document or thing that the deponent failed to give, and how it is subject to discovery. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the deponent acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2025.480 effectively place the burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that that party acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Sanctions

The monetary sanction that may be imposed is an order that the deponent or party affiliated with the deponent pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of the deponent's conduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)]. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq., sanctions other than monetary sanctions are available only after a deponent has failed to comply with an order compelling attendance, testimony, or production [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450(d), 2025.480(g); see also § 83.32].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of an order pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480 to compel an answer or the production of a writing or tangible thing pursuant to a deposition notice or subpoena, and to obtain a monetary sanction for the expenses incurred by the deponent's failure to comply pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2025.480, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subject Matter of Action

Darbee v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 680, 25 Cal. Rptr. 520 was an action for specific performance of an option contract for the purchase of land and for declaratory relief. Defendant took plaintiff's deposition and asked questions, including whether anyone had agreed to buy the property from plaintiff at the time he exercised the option and thereafter, and whether he had agreed to sell the property. Plaintiff refused to answer these questions, and the trial court ruled that questions relating to whether plaintiff had agreed to sell the property at or about the time he attempted to exercise the option were relevant to the subject matter of the action and that plaintiff must answer them. On further deposition, plaintiff refused to answer similar questions relating to a different time period, and another judge denied a motion to compel answers to these questions. Defendant then posed similar questions on written interrogatories; plaintiff objected, and defendant moved for an order requiring further response, which was denied by the trial court. Defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to order plaintiff to answer the interrogatories.

In finding that the trial court had abused its discretion, the court of appeal stated that there was little doubt that the information sought was relevant to the subject matter of the action. The "subject matter of the action" is the circumstances and facts out of which the cause of action arises; it is the property, contract, or other thing involved in the dispute. The subject matter is not the act or acts that constitute the cause of action, but it describes physical facts in relation to which the suit is prosecuted. The court stated that the thing involved in the present case was the option agreement and its enforceability. Any of the physical facts and circumstances bearing on or touching that agreement would be proper matters for inquiry in the search for facts which might lead to admissible evidence (208 Cal. App. 2d 680, 688) .

Note that Darbee construed law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions.

[b] Party May Be Compelled to Provide Nonverbal "Answers" by Reenacting Events During Video Recorded Deposition

In Emerson Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1111-1112, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 883, 946 P.2d 841), plaintiff brought an action against defendants for alleged injuries incurred while using defendant's product. Defendants sought to compel plaintiff, during a videotaped deposition, to demonstrate how the injury the occurred. The trial court deniedthe order to compel, based on a ruling in Stermer v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 777, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 that nonverbal responses could not be compelled. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeal, expressly disagreeing with Stermer, issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to grant the order to compel. Plaintiff petitioned for review and the Supreme Court granted the petition to resolve the conflicting court of appeal decisions.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal, holding that "answer," as used in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480), includes nonverbal as well as verbal responses at a video recorded deposition. The court disapproved the decision in Stermer v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 777, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 to the extent that it held to the contrary (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1104, 1111-1113) .

The Court reasoned that Stermer had construed "answer" too narrowly by limiting it to verbal responses, noting that the word also denotes any action of saying, writing, or doing something called for in return (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1106-1107) . A broader construction of "answer" is also more consistent with Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.330(d), which provides that examination and cross examination of a deponent shall proceed as permitted under the Evidence Code; it is undisputed that at trial, the Evidence Code permits nonverbal answers to questions, including a physical demonstration or reenactment of an incident (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1107) . The Court also reasoned that allowing nonverbal responses at a videotaped deposition serves one of the legislative purposes of the discovery statutes: to educate the parties concerning claims and defenses so as to encourage settlements and facilitate and expedite trials, citing with approval its earlier decision in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 376, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 and stating that the conclusions in Greyhound apply equally to the discovery statutes enacted by the Civil Discovery Act of 1986, which retain the expansive scope of discovery (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1107-1108) . The Court concluded that allowing such nonverbal responses was supported by the legislative history both of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480), authorizing orders compelling a response, and also of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(i) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.330(c)), authorizing videotaping of depositions (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1108-1109) . Finally, the court concluded that the discovery statutes' procedural requirements and safeguards provided adequate means to object and to protect deponents against potential abuses arising from distorted video recording or from requests for nonverbal responses that cause unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1109-1110) .

Having concluded that a nonverbal response may be compelled at a video recorded deposition, the Court held that sanctions could be imposed under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.), for failure to comply with such an order (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1112) .

The Court thus affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal and remanded the matter to the trial court for a new hearing in light of its holding and its disapproval of the language in Stermer v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 777, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 577 that the trial court had previously relied upon (16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1113) .

Note that the Court in Emerson Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1101, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 883, 946 P.2d 841 , aside from disapproving Stermer, also recognized that the Discovery Act of 1986 was intended to supersede its decision in Bailey v. Superior Court (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 970, 140 Cal. Rptr. 669, 568 P.2d 394 , in which the Court quashed an order to compel a video recorded reenactment after concluding that the former discovery statutes did not permit video recording absent mutual consent (see 16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1109). The Court did not, however, refer to a subsequent court of appeal decision, Bailey v. Superior Court (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 444, 144 Cal. Rptr. 875 . In that case, after the Supreme Court had quashed the video recording order, the defendant subsequently moved for an order requiring plaintiff to reenact the accident in issue for purposes of photographing it. The court of appeal held the reenactment was improper under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.), whether the reenactment is recorded by photographs, motions pictures, or video (79 Cal. App. 3d 444, 447) . This decision must likewise be deemed superseded by the Supreme Court's construction of the new discovery statutes in Emerson.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Matter Is Discoverable If Not Privileged and If Relevant to Subject Matter

Maldonado v. Superior Court (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137 , an original proceeding in mandate, arose from an employment discrimination action. Petitioners, former employees, sought to overturn the trial court's order denying their motions to compel further responses to discovery from real party in interest, former employer. The former employees submitted three deposition notices to depose the person or persons most knowledgeable concerning the reasons for terminating two of the petitioners, the documents supporting the decisions to terminate, the identity of persons participating in the decisions, and additional information regarding former employer's sales and service areas. The notices also asked that documents be produced from a number of categories, including personnel files, job descriptions, documents pertaining to petitioners' employment or termination which were not in the personnel files, correspondence involving petitioners, and documents pertaining to the sales and service area. After the depositions had concluded, the former employees brought motions to compel further responses with regard to allthree depositions, but the trial court denied the motions (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1392-1394) .

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate, directing that the trial court vacate its order denying the former petitioners' motions to compel further responses and enter an order granting the motions (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1399-1400) . The court agreed with petitioners that the former employer's responses were inadequate. It noted that the trial court specifically found that, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(d)(6) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.230), the former employees had the right to ask the person most knowledgeable to bring in all of the documents that they felt were supportive and that the former employer was wrong in not reproducing for the depositions the documents that it said it had previously produced (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1392-1394) . Thus, the trial court had no basis for denying the motions to compel. The former employer should have been ordered to bring its witnesses back to the depositions with the documents requested and with proof that the witnesses had undertaken some effort to familiarize themselves with the areas of their supposed "knowledge" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1397) . The appellate court expressed particular concern about the "cavalier attitude" displayed at the depositions concerning information that should have been readily available to the witnesses, as well as the fact that the witnesses appeared at the depositions at which document requests were made with no documents in their possession and no knowledge of whether documents responsive to the requests existed anywhere in the company's files (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1396) .

[b] Subject Matter of Action

Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 77 Cal. Rptr. 836 arose from an action for interference with contract filed by a county against defendants for money allegedly paid by the county to one of the defendants for medical services relating to injuries which he received when he was involved in an accident with one of the other defendants. The county caused a subpoena duces tecum (now termed "deposition subpoena" under the Discovery Act) to be issued and served on an investigator who investigated the accident for defendant insurance company, requiring the investigator to attend a deposition and to produce all records and correspondence between him and the insurance company prior to the filing of the complaint which concerned the accident and related settlement negotiations. The insurance company moved to quash the subpoena duces tecum and for a protective order, contending that the declaration filed as an application for the subpoena duces tecum was defective. The trial court denied the motions.

The court of appeal pointed out that although Code Civ. Proc. § 1985 (governing deposition subpoenas under Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.030)contains language referring to a showing of "materiality to the issues," it had been held in Shively v. Stewart (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 475, 481, 55 Cal. Rptr. 217, 421 P.2d 65 , that when the subpoena power is invoked to secure discovery, the good cause and materiality requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1985 must be governed by discovery standards and it is not necessary to show that the material sought would be admissible in evidence (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 64-65) . The county, therefore, was not required to show the materiality of the requested matter to the issues involved in the case. Since defendants made no claim that the documents were not relevant to the subject matter of the action, it had to be assumed that they were relevant to the subject matter (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 65) . The court found, however, that good cause had not been shown for the issuance of the subpoena duces tecum, and that the request was too broad (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 66-70), and therefore issued a writ of mandate requiring the court to vacate its order denying the motion to quash the subpoena duces tecum and to enter its order granting the motion (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 70-71).

Note

that Pacific Auto construed law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by a party seeking sanctions for the failure of a party or party-affiliated deponent to comply with an order compelling that deponent to attend and give testimony at a deposition, or to answer a question at a deposition, or to produce a document, writing, or tangible thing [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450, 2025.480]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of an issue sanction, evidence sanctions, or terminating sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82,

Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, §§ 82.12 -82.14]. If a monetary sanction is sought is addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, this form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11]. For memoranda of points and authorities to use in support of the motion to compel, see §§ 83.30 and 83.31.

[b] Argument

[c] Sanctions

The monetary sanction that may be imposed is an order that the deponent or party affiliated with the deponent pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of the deponent's conduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)].

If imposing an issue sanction, the court may order that designated facts shall be taken as established in the action in accordance with the claim of the party adversely affected by the deponent's discovery abuse, or the court may issue an order prohibiting the party deponent or the party with whom the deponent is affiliated from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)]. If imposing an evidence sanction, the court may issue an order prohibiting the party deponent or the party with whom the deponent is affiliated from introducingdesignated matters in evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)]. If imposing a terminating sanction, the court may issue one of the following orders: (A) an order striking out pleadings or parts thereof of the party deponent or the party with whom the deponent is affiliated, (B) an order staying further proceedings by that party until the order compelling discovery is obeyed, (C) an order dismissing the action, or any part thereof, of that party, or (D) an order rendering a judgment by default against that party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)].

Note also that if a deponent, whether or not he or she is a party or party-affiliated person, fails to obey an order compelling answers or production, the failure may considered a contempt of court [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(g)]. For a form relating to the imposition of contempt in general for discovery abuse, see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Impose Monetary Sanction

In the case of In re Marriage of Niklas (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 28, 258 Cal. Rptr. 921 , the court of appeal issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to reconsider the amount of sanctions imposed, but also held that sanctions were clearly appropriate. In Niklas, a marital dissolution proceeding, husband sought and was granted a court order compelling wife's attorney to answer deposition questions which he had previously refused to answer. The attorney appeared at the second deposition where he answered every question but frequently responded that he did not know, and neither reviewed his files nor brought certain documents. He adjourned the deposition, stating he intended to apply for a protective order. Husband also deposed wife a second time, pursuant to court order. She did not bring any of the documents listed in the notice of deposition and refused to answer related questions on the advice of her attorney. Again, after a motion by husband, the trial court ordered both wife and her attorney to resume their depositions. They failed to appear at those depositions, and monetary sanctions were imposed against them. The court of appeal reviewed the provisions of former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023 and 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030 and 2025.480) regarding monetary sanctions. It concluded that monetary sanctions were appropriate, observing that such blatant disobedience of court orders warrantssevere sanctions. In addition to directing the trial court to reconsider the award, the court of appeal suggested that the trial court consider other sanctions, including contempt, necessary to protect the dignity of the court and ensure compliance with the court's orders (211 Cal. App. 3d 28, 37-38) .

The decision in Niklas, is also discussed in Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.30[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court May Impose Monetary Sanction

The facts and procedural background of Maldonado v. Superior Court (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137 are discussed in § 83.31[4][a]. Petitioners (former employees) urged the court of appeal to instruct the trial court to issue an issue preclusion sanction, to prevent the former employer and real party in interest from introducing testimony at trial or asserting affirmative defenses concerning matters for which they refused to disclose information at appropriate depositions and from "springing ... witnesses" who no longer worked for former employer on petitioners at trial. The court found that such a sanction would exceed the level of punishment justified under the facts and law (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398) .

The court explained that sanctions involving issue preclusion are not generally imposed at this point in a discovery dispute. When a party wrongfully fails to answer a question or produce a document requested in accordance with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq.), and the party seeking discovery has gone to the court for relief, "if the court determines that the answer or production sought is subject to discovery, it shall order that the answer be given or the production be made on the resumption of the deposition" (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480) (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398) . In addition, the court "shall" impose a monetary sanction "against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel answer or production ..." unless it finds that "the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." It is only when a deponent "fails to obey an order entered under this subdivision" that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480) permits the court to "make those orders that are just against the disobedient party, or against the party with whom the disobedient deponent is affiliated, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under former Section 2023" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398-1399) . The appellate court noted that some courts have held that the more serious sanctions may be imposed under former Code Civil Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civil Proc. § 2023.030), even when no specific order has been violated. However, those cases, unlike this one, involved repeated and willful refusals to permit discovery or produce documents over a lengthy period of time, resulting in evidence becoming unavailable (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1398-1399) . Accordingly, the court concluded that this case did not call for imposition of an issue-preclusion sanction. The court noted, however, that a monetary sanction could well be warranted in view of the fact that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(f)) requires imposition of monetary sanctions unless the trial court finds that the party subject to sanction "acted with substantial justification" or that "other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1399) .

In Stewart v. Colonial W. Agency, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 115 , a case alleging breach of contract wrongful termination, the court of appeal rejected defense attorney's arguments that the questions she instructed the deponent not to answer were objectionable on the ground that they would not produce admissible evidence.

Contrary to defense counsel's assertion that the questions pertained to the terminating manager's "character," most of the questions were designed to elicit information concerning the manager's employment practices and policies and his methods of dealing with employment-related issues. These questions could have led to discovery of admissible evidence, assisting plaintiff in establishing that her manager administered unjustified discipline as a matter of practice. The fact that some of the incidents took place shortly after plaintiff's termination had no bearing on their relevance (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1013) . Moreover, irrelevance alone is an insufficient ground to justify preventing a witness from answering a question posed at a deposition. On these facts, the trial court's imposition of monetary sanctions was proper (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1014) .

For additional facts and the procedural background of Stewart, see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, §§ 82.10[4][b], 82.11[4][a].

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion by a party seeking an order to compel a deponent's appearance and testimony or production of a document or tangible thing. The grounds for opposition are that the deponent is not a party to the action or that party's officer, director, managing agent, employee, or designee of a party organization, or that the deponent has not been served or properly served with a deposition notice, or that the deponent has timely served a valid objection under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.410 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.450]. If the deponent opposes the motion on the grounds that the notice is defective and that he or she has served a valid objection, this form should be used in conjunction with a motion to quash the deposition notice on the grounds that the notice was defective or defectively served [see § 83.60; see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.210-2025.270, 2025.410].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the opposition is due to a defective notice that was defectively served and the deponent timely objected to the notice, counsel should set forth facts showing the particular defects under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.210-2025.270, and showing that the objection was proper and timely served under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.410.

_____ [Name of party seeking discovery] MAY MOVE FOR AN ORDER UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 2025.480, TO COMPEL THE DEPONENT'S _____ [ANSWER TO A QUESTION and/or PRODUCTION OF _____ (A DOCUMENT and/or A TANGIBLE THING) UNDER THE DEPONENT'S CONTROL THAT IS SPECIFIED IN THE DEPOSITION

_____ (NOTICE or SUBPOENA)], ONLY IN ACCORDANCE WITH THAT STATUTE.

[EITHER]

A. Motion Must Be Timely. A party seeking discovery must move for a motion to compel a deponent to answer questions or to produce documents or tangible things under his or her control no later than60 days after the completion of the record of the deposition (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480).

[AND/OR]

B. Motion Must Be Accompanied by Declaration. A party seeking discovery may only move for a motion to compel a deponent to answer questions or to produce writings or tangible things under his or her control if that motion is accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(b); Townsend v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1434-1438, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333).

[AND/OR]

C. Notice of Motion Must Be Properly Given. Notice of a motion to compel under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2025.480 must be given to all parties, and to the deponent either orally at the examination, or by subsequent service in writing (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(c)).

[AND/OR]

D. Moving Party Must Lodge Transcript With Court. Not less than five days prior to the hearing on a motion to compel under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2025.480, the moving party must lodge with the court a certified copy of any parts of the stenographic transcript of the deposition that are relevant to the motion. If the deposition is recorded by audio or video technology, the moving party is required to lodge a certified copy of a transcript of any parts of the deposition that are relevant to the motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(d)).

[AND/OR]

E. Answer or Production Must Be Subject to Discovery. The court will not order that the answer be given or that the production be made on the resumption of the deposition unless the court first determines that the answer or production sought is subject to discovery (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(e); see Ascherman v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 506, 514, 62 Cal. Rptr. 547).

[Optional] F. Matter Not Discoverable If Privileged or Irrelevant. Matter is not subject to discovery if it is privileged or if it is not relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action, and a court clearly cannot compel its discovery (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.010,2025.480; see Ascherman v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 506, 514, 62 Cal. Rptr. 547 ; see also City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 744, 752-753, 216 Cal. Rptr. 311).

[Optional] G. Matter Not Discoverable If Inadmissible or Does Not Lead to Admissible Evidence. Matter is not subject to discovery if it is neither itself admissible in evidence nor appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, and a court clearly cannot compel its discovery (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.010, 2025.480; see City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 744, 752-753, 216 Cal. Rptr. 311).

[Optional] H. Deponent Not Required to Answer "Legal Contention" Questions. A trial court may not require a deponent to answer "legal contention" questions at his or her deposition (Rifkind v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1259-1263, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 822).

[Optional] I. Impropriety of Questions at Oral Deposition That Would Otherwise Be Proper in Interrogatories. Certain questions, such as those which inquire as to a party's legal theories or those that assume a fact not in evidence, might be improper if posed at a deposition on oral examination, although they would otherwise be proper questions if posed as written interrogatories (see West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 421, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295).

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion by a party seeking an order to compel answers or the production of writings or tangible things, on the grounds that the proper procedure for the motion was not followed or that the answers or writings or things are not discoverable [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed aspersuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, if the opposition is on the grounds that an answer is not discoverable, counsel should set forth facts and argument showing that the answer is privileged or would not be relevant, or is not admissible and would not lead to the discovery of admissible evidence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to a motion pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480 to compel answers or production of a writing or tangible thing, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities relating to specific grounds of evidentiary privilege or other protection from discovery, see generally Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations . For memoranda of points and authorities supporting or opposing discovery on general grounds of relevancy, see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.10 et seq.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion Must Be Accompanied by Declaration

In Townsend v. Superior Court (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 72 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333 , plaintiff, acting on advice of counsel, objected to and refused to answer certain deposition questions. After heated discussion between counsel, the dispute was unresolved and the deposition adjourned. Defendants moved to compel further answers and for sanctions. Plaintiff sought writ of mandate after the trial court granted the motion and awarded sanctions.

The court of appeal directed the trial court to set aside its order granting the motion to compel and issue a new order denying the motion (61 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1438-1439) . It agreed with plaintiff that there had been no reasonable and good faith attempts by defendants to resolve the issues before they brought the motion. The court observed that depositions are different from other methods of discovery in that the presence of counsel for both parties permits instantaneous discussion of an objection or other disputed issue and attempts at informal resolution. However, it noted thata reasonable and good faith attempt at informal resolution entails something more than argument. Counsel are required to attempt to talk the matter over, compare their views, consult, and deliberate. The court noted that the record indicated that far from being an effort at informal negotiation, the exchanges between counsel were heated argumentative skirmishes. There was no indication that the discussion was intended as compliance with the requirement of informal resolution (61 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1434-1438) . The court was careful to explain that it was not proposing an absolute rule requiring that informal resolution must await the conclusion of a deposition. Instead, it said that the parties themselves should determine the proper time, manner, and place for such discussion and negotiation (61 Cal. App. 4th 1431, 1438) .

[b] Answer or Production Must Be Subject to Discovery

In Ascherman v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 506, 62 Cal. Rptr. 547 , the court of appeal reviewed an order requiring plaintiff and his attorneys to pay costs and expenses arising from proceedings to compel answers to a deposition question. In determining that the sanctions had been erroneously imposed, the court of appeal considered the question of whether the answer clearly could not have been compelled, a situation which would have justified an award of sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480). The court stated that answers to deposition questions clearly cannot be compelled when the matter is privileged or not relevant to the subject matter of the pending action (254 Cal. App. 2d 506, 514) .

[c] Matter Not Discoverable If Privileged or Irrelevant

The facts and procedural background of Ascherman v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 506, 62 Cal. Rptr. 547 , are set out in [b], above.

City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 744, 216 Cal. Rptr. 311 , involved an action by a city to enforce an alleged violation of a rent control ordinance. Defendant sought to depose a city attorney with regard to her research and opinions in drafting the ordinance, arguing that the information was relevant to a proper interpretation of the ordinance. The trial court ordered this disclosure, and the city petitioned for a writ of mandate to vacate this and other discovery orders. The court of appeal issued a writ directing the trial court to vacate its order compelling disclosure by the city attorney. The court noted that, even if the ordinance was ambiguous and required interpretation, the information sought was nonetheless irrelevant, because the ordinance was required to be interpreted according to the rules of statutory construction, not according to the drafter's opinion. Also, the information was not calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, because the motives or understandings of individual legislators are not considered in construing astatute, and the testimony of an individual legislator regarding his or her intention, motive, or opinion with respect to a particular piece of legislation is therefore inadmissible (170 Cal. App. 3d 744, 752-753) .

[d] Matter Not Discoverable If Inadmissible or Does Not Lead to Admissible Evidence

City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 744, 216 Cal. Rptr. 311 , is discussed in [c], above.

[e] Deponent Not Required to Answer "Legal Contention" Questions

In Rifkind v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 822 , the appellate court held that a trial court may not require a deponent to answer "legal contention" questions at his or her deposition, for example, to state all facts, list all witnesses, and identify all documents that support or pertain to a particular contention in the deponent's pleadings. These questions, while entirely appropriate for written interrogatories, are not proper at a party's deposition. The basic vice of such questions at a deposition is that they are unfair, in that they call on the deponent to sort out the factual material in the case according to specific legal contentions, and to do this by memory and on the spot (22 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1262) . Questions asking a deponent about the basis for, or information concerning, a factual conclusion or assertion, however, are appropriate questions for a deposition. For example, if a party states that a certain event happened at a particular time or place, it is entirely proper to ask the party at his or her deposition how he or she became aware of the event, his or her knowledge about the event, and for similar information of a factual nature (22 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1259) .

[f] Impropriety of Questions at Oral Deposition That Would Otherwise Be Proper in Interrogatories

West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295 arose out of an action against a loan company for allegedly making loans at usurious interest rates. Plaintiff propounded interrogatories, and defendant objected to one of them on the ground that the question assumed a fact not in evidence. The trial court sustained this objection, as well as the many other objections to other interrogatories, and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding, inter alia, that the objection that one of the interrogatories assumed a fact not in evidence is not a valid objection. The Court noted that even if this objection were well founded, the fact that the question was asked in written interrogatories, as opposed to in an oral examination, meant that the answering party haddue time for deliberation so that he or she might avoid the pitfalls that are inherent in the form of the question (56 Cal. 2d 407, 421) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion Must Be Timely

In Unzipped Apparel, LLC v. Bader (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 123, 67 Cal. Rptr. 3d 111 , an unfair competition action, the nonparties served timely objections and did not produce any documents in response to a subpoena for business records. The trial court granted a motion to compel that was brought more than 60 days after the objections were received, stating that, because no "deposition" had been taken, the 60-day time limit of Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(b) did not apply. The nonparty deponents challenged the order granting the motion to compel. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the 60-day limit applied because a response to a business records subpoena--in this case, objections--is a "record of a deposition" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480(b). The court noted that neither the number of objections nor the proportion of records produced could be used to define the record for purposes of determining when to bring a motion to compel. The record was complete as of the date set for the production, when the objections were received, and the 60-day period for filing a motion to compel began on that date. The deadline was mandatory (156 Cal. App. 4th 123, 136) .

The court rejected defendant's reliance on Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1. Defendant reasoned that because Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 does not contain a specific deadline for bringing a motion to compel, but states only that a motion must be "reasonably made," its motion was timely because it was brought within a reasonable time. The court concluded that "reasonably made" suggested the manner, not the time, in which an act is accomplished. Moreover, there was no need for Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 to set forth filing deadlines that appear in other statutes (156 Cal. App. 4th 123, 135-136)

§ 83.46 Opposing Motion for Order Compelling Answer to Question or Production of Document or Thing [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480]--Deposition Subpoena Duces Tecum Is Too Broad

[Caption. See § 83.45.]

PRODUCTION AT A DEPOSITION MAY NOT BE COMPELLED PURSUANT TO A DEPOSITION SUBPOENA THAT IS TOO GENERAL OR TOO BROAD.

[EITHER]

A. Subpoena Must Describe Items. A deposition subpoena that commands only the production of business records for copying must designate the business records to be produced either by specifically describing each individual item or by reasonably particularizing each category of item [Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.410(a); see Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 786, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79] .

[OR]

A. Subpoena Must Describe Items. A deposition subpoena that commands both the attendance and testimony of the deponent as well as the production of records, documents, or things, must designate the business records to be produced either by specifically describing each individual item or by reasonably particularizing each category of item, and must specify any testing or sampling that is being sought [Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.510(a); see Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 786, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79] .

[CONTINUE]

B. Description of Items Requested. The writing or thing must be described with such certainty as to apprise the opponent or custodian of records of what is desired. Whether the description of the item is sufficient to inform its custodian of what is desired presents a question merely of whether under the circumstances and situation generally, considered in the light of reason and common sense, he or she ought to recognize and be able to distinguish or to identify the particular thing that is required (see Union Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 449, 458, 81 P.2d 150 ; Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 68-69, 77 Cal. Rptr. 836).

C. "Omnibus" Description Improper. The requisite identification is defeated by generality of description, and is inadequate if the items are designated by or included within an "omnibus" description (see Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 786-787, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79).

D. Request for All Documents Improper. A request for all correspondence, records, and documents is too broad (see Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 69-70, 77 Cal. Rptr. 836).

[Optional] E. Request for Writings and Things Unnecessarily Burdensome. Production of writings and things should not be required when that production places a heavy burden on the party from whom production is sought, and the purposes of the discovery can be served by a less obtrusive means (see Stony Brook I Homeowners Ass'n v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 691, 699-700 ; Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 223, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 ; Allen v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 447, 453, 198 Cal. Rptr. 737).

These points and authorities are for use in opposition to a motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480 for production of writings or tangible things at a depositionpursuant to a deposition subpoena [see Code Civ.Proc. § 2020.020 (deposition subpoena)]. The ground for opposition is that the specification of documents or things to be produced is too general or broad. Optional Paragraph E may be used if the requested production is not only too broad but is also overly burdensome in view of the availability of less obtrusive means of discovery.

This form may be combined with the memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion to compel contained in § 83.45. For related forms of memoranda supporting a motion for a protective order under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.020 and 2019.030, on general grounds of unreasonable burden or expense, see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.80 and § 80.100.

With appropriate modifications, this form may used to support a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 to quash or to modify the deposition subpoena. Although a person served with a deposition subpoena may make a motion to quash or modify, he or she is not required to do so, but may simply refuse to produce the writings or things at the deposition, and then oppose any motion seeking to compel production [see, e.g., Johnson v. Superior Court (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 829, 837-839, 66 Cal. Rptr. 134 (prior law)]. Counsel should note, however, that Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.240 provides that a person who disobeys a deposition subpoena may be punished for contempt without the necessity of a prior court order directing compliance, and is subject to a civil action under Code Civ. Proc. § 1992 to recover a $500 forfeiture and damages, if any, incurred as a result of the disobedience. As an alternative to a contempt sanction, the court may issue a warrant for the arrest of witness or person who fails to appear [Code Civ. Proc. § 1993(a)(1); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1993(a)(2), (b), 1993.1-1993.2 (procedures)]. If, after a refusal to produce, the party who served the deposition subpoena seeks to impose a contempt sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.240 without first moving for an order compelling production, he or she must present an initiating affidavit or declaration pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1211. In this event, this form may be modified to support an opposing affidavit or declaration. For points and authorities relating generally to initiating affidavits under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, see Ch. 47, Contempt .

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should specify the phrases used in the deposition subpoena and explain why they are too general and too broad.

Proc. § 2025.480 to compel answers or production of a writing or tangible thing, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender). For general forms and discussion relating to a motion to quash or modify a subpoena under Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1, and relating to indirect contempt proceedings initiated by an affidavit or declaration presented under Code Civ. Proc. § 1211, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 535 Subpoena and Ch. 135 Contempt (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities relating generally to proceedings to quash or modify a subpoena and contempt proceedings, see respectively Ch. 218 Subpoena and Ch. 47 Contempt .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subpoena Must Describe Items

Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79 arose out of an action for breach of contract in which it was alleged that the individual defendant was the alter ego of the corporate defendant. Defendant filed a motion to quash a subpoena duces tecum (now termed "deposition subpoena") for a deposition. The trial court quashed the subpoena "without prejudice to the right to seek a new subpoena," and plaintiff filed a petition for a writ of mandate. The court of appeal applied the rule set out by the Supreme Court in West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 419-420, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295 , that inspection may not be had without adequate identification of the document sought to be inspected, to production of books and documents compelled by a subpoena duces tecum. The court noted, however, that the requisite identification may be defeated by generality of description, and that therefore, identification may be inadequate if the books and documents sought to be produced are identified by or included within a so called omnibus description (234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 786) . The unlimited characteristics of such a description may impair or destroy exactitude so that the custodian of records is not reasonably apprised of what he or she must produce (234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 787) .

[b] Description of Items Requested

Union Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 449, 81 P.2d 150 involved an action for recovery of a deficiency judgment, and a cross claim for negligence and fraud with respect to a specified trust. The SupremeCourt discussed orders for inspection under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1000, stating that an order under that section for books, papers, or documents to be inspected was required to be so specific in its terms with reference to its designation or description of the item to be inspected that the items could be readily identified (11 Cal. 2d 449, 454) . The Court stated that all that should be required of a party attempting to inspect records which he or she is entitled to examine, is that the party describe them with such certainty only as will or should apprise the opponent or custodian of the records of that which is desired (11 Cal. 2d 449, 458) . Whether the description is sufficient presents a question merely of whether under the circumstances and situation generally, considered in the light of reason and common sense, the custodian ought to recognize and be able to distinguish or identify the particular thing that is required (11 Cal. 2d 449, 458) .

Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 77 Cal. Rptr. 836 , arose from an action for interference with contract filed by a county against defendants for money allegedly paid by the county to one of the defendants for medical services relating to injuries which he received when he was involved in an accident with one of the other defendants. The county caused a subpoena duces tecum (now termed "deposition subpoena") to be issued and served on an investigator who investigated the accident for defendant insurance company, requiring the investigator to attend a deposition and to produce all records and correspondence between him and the insurance company prior to the filing of the complaint which concerned the accident and related settlement negotiations. The insurance company moved to quash the subpoena duces tecum and for a protective order, contending that the declaration filed as an application for the subpoena duces tecum was defective. The trial court denied the motions.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate requiring the court to vacate its order denying the motion to quash the subpoena duces tecum and to enter its order granting the motion, holding that the discovery request was too broad (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 66-70) . In deciding whether the application for the subpoena duces tecum sufficiently identified the material to be produced (now required to be contained in deposition subpoena itself), the court relied on the discussion in Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 785-787, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79 (discussed in [a], above), that there was no reason why the standards for identification set out in Union Trust Co. for inspection under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1000 as well as the standards for production under its successor, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031, should not be deemed applicable when the production of books and documents is compelled by a subpoena duces tecum. However, the court in Pacific Auto went farther, deciding that the description of documents in the case at bar was too broad (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 68-70) .

[c] "Omnibus" Description Improper

Flora Crane Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 767, 45 Cal. Rptr. 79 , is discussed in [a], above.

[d] Request for All Documents Improper

The facts and procedural background of Pacific Auto. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 77 Cal. Rptr. 836 , are discussed in [b], above. In Pacific Auto, the court stated that the moving party had made no attempt to specify any particular documents or records, or their contents, and that in the court's opinion, the request for all correspondence, records, and documents was too broad (273 Cal. App. 2d 61, 69-70) .

[e] Request for Writings and Things Unnecessarily Burdensome

Stoney Brook I Homeowners Ass'n v. Superior Court (2001) 84 Cal. App. 4th 691, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 67 arose out of a personal injury action in which real party in interest alleged that he fell when a stair railing on premises controlled by petitioner homeowner association collapsed. Petitioner's orthopedic expert (also a petitioner in this proceeding) examined the real party in interest and prepared a report for petitioner homeowners association. Real party in interest then served the expert with a subpoena duces tecum, that required the expert to produce at his deposition all of his defense litigation-related billings and all of his plaintiff litigation-related billing for the preceding four years. Petitioner homeowners association filed a motion to quash the subpoena or, in the alternative, for a protective order limiting the scope of records and testimony the expert would be required to produce at this deposition. Petitioner argued that the request for billing records was overly broad, burdensome, and an invasion of both expert's and his patients' privacy rights. In response, real party in interest produced excerpts of expert's deposition and trial testimony in six separate trials, showing that expert's prior responses to efforts to determine how much of his practice was devoted to providing expert testimony for defendants in personal injury actions were sorely inadequate. Petitioner homeowners association responded to the excepts by arguing that, since expert's deposition had not even been taken, real party in interest's deposition subpoena was premature and lacked foundation. The trial court denied petitioners' motion to quash the subpoena and, instead, issued an order requiring that the expert respond to it by producing a detailed summary setting forth the total number of patients he had treated over the last four years, the total number of patients he had examined for defendants and for plaintiffs, and his total compensation from defendants and from plaintiffs. Petitioner homeowners association applied for ex parte for relief fromthe order on the grounds that the time it would take to compile the information for the required summary was unduly burdensome. In response, the trial court ordered the expert to give temporary personnel retained by real party in interest access to his patient files to compile the summary. Petitioners filed a writ of mandate, asserting that the trial court's orders unduly invaded the expert's right to privacy and, further, that they would prevent petitioner homeowners association from obtaining expert testimony from this expert, who stated he would withdraw if compelled to comply with the trial court's order (84 Cal. App. 4th 691, 694-697) .

The court of appeal granted the writ. Although there was no serious dispute that real party in interest was entitled to know the percentage of expert's practice involving, and his compensation, for defense work, the court advanced two reasons for its decision. First, a litigant's right to evidence of an expert's potential bias is not unfettered or unconditional. When the interest of a private litigant in discovering relevant facts conflicts with the right of others to maintain reasonable privacy regarding their financial affairs, before ordering disclosure the trial court must indulge in a careful balancing before ordering disclosure. Further, a court must not order disclosure of the private financial affairs of nonparties without a careful scrutiny of the real needs of the litigant seeking discovery (84 Cal. App. 4th 691, 699) . Although experts generally are required to provide information about their roles in prior proceedings that would permit an adversary a meaningful opportunity to demonstrate any bias or prejudice, precise information about the number of cases in which the expert has testified or the amount of compensation the expert has received is not required. Moreover, because the expert in this case filed a declaration to the effect that if compelled to testify with the subpoena, he would withdraw as an expert, the court was hesitant to enter an order which, as a practical matter, would exclude the designated expert from testifying. Accordingly, the court issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its orders and to enter a new order directing that in his deposition, expert provide real party in interest with a less obtrusive summary of his defense and plaintiff-related medical-legal work (84 Cal. App. 4th 691, 700) .

In Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 , the court of appeal, in denying a discovery demand on grounds it was unnecessarily burdensome, held that the express statutory provision governing motions to compel production of documents under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. 2031.310), requiring that the party seeking discovery must supply evidence demonstrating a reasonable relationship between the material sought to be produced and the issues involved in the case, applies to motions to compel compliance with deposition subpoenas under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410-2020.440) (53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 218-219) . This requirement applies eventhough it is not stated expressly within the language of former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410-2020.440). Since deposition subpoenas are used to obtain document discovery from non-party witnesses, it is unlikely that the Legislature intended to impose greater discovery burdens on non-parties than may be imposed on litigants under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.310).

Allen v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 447, 198 Cal. Rptr. 737 involved an action for personal injury. Plaintiff noticed a defense expert who had examined plaintiff for depositions and served the expert with a subpoena duces tecum (now termed "deposition subpoena"). The subpoena duces tecum required the expert to produce, inter alia, records pertaining to all examinations that the expert had conducted at the request of the defense over the last five years, and any records showing what proportion of the expert's income over the past five years came from the treatment of patients instead of medical evaluation of persons for personal injury defendants. Defendant moved for a protective order precluding production of these records. Defendant stated that the expert saw a great number patients annually and that his records were not organized for easy search, since they were retrievable only by names of particular patients and not by the type of work done or by the source of income. Plaintiff argued that she required the records to show bias, prejudice, and unfairness on the part of the expert and submitted evidence that the expert had testified for the defense in a large number of cases in the last five years. The trial court denied the protective order for most of the types of records requested, and ordered only that the names of the expert's patients and examinees need not be disclosed. Subsequently, the trial court denied reconsideration, and defendant petitioned for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court preliminarily stated that the issue in the case did not involve propriety of discovery of the information contained in the records, since the trial court had balanced the expert's privacy rights against plaintiff's need to show bias and had properly concluded that plaintiff's need outweighed the expert's privacy rights (151 Cal. App. 3d 447, 452-453) . The court stated that the issue was whether the trial court had properly weighed the burden on the expert of actually producing the records and had assured itself that the need for this means of discovery justified imposing such a burden (151 Cal. App. 3d 447, 452) . The court noted that plaintiff had made no showing that the information sought, or substantially equivalent information, could not be obtained through other means, such as questions at a deposition without production of records. Thus, the court held that the trial court had abused its discretion when it had failed to require a less obtrusive means of discovery (151 Cal. App. 3d 447, 453) .

[Caption. See § 83.45.]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION TO COMPEL BECAUSE THE MATTER SOUGHT IS PRIVILEGED FROM DISCLOSURE. OBJECTION BASED ON PRIVILEGE MAY BE MADE FOR THE FIRST TIME IN OPPOSITION TO A MOTION TO COMPEL, AND IS NOT WAIVED FOR FAILURE TO RAISE THE OBJECTION EARLIER, FOR EXAMPLE, IN A MOTION TO QUASH THE DEPOSITION SUBPOENA.

A. Matter Not Discoverable If Privileged. Matter is not subject to discovery if it is privileged, and a court clearly cannot compel its discovery (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.010, 2025.480).

B. Nonparty's Timely Objection to Order Compelling Production Is Sufficient; Motion to Quash Is Not Required to Object. Nonparties who want to challenge a records only or records and testimony deposition subpoena may simply wait and object, putting the onus on the proponent to move to compel. They are not required to file a motion to quash to object to the request (Monarch Healthcare v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1284, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 619).

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a party seeking an order to compel either records or records and testimony [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410-2020.510]. The grounds for opposition are that the records or testimony, or both, are privileged and therefore notdiscoverable [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.010, 2025.480], and that the nonparty's timely objection to the order compelling production is sufficient. For memoranda of points and authorities relating to specific grounds of evidentiary privilege or other protection from discovery, see generally Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should set forth facts of the case that show that the records or records and testimony sought are privileged.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonparty's Timely Objection to Order Compelling Production Is Sufficient; Motion to Quash Is Not Required to Object

In Monarch Healthcare v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 619 , plaintiff physician, real party in interest, sued other physicians for unfairly competing to secure a managed care contract from petitioner. Real party in interest did not initially name petitioner as a defendant, but instead served a records only deposition subpoena on petitioner's custodian of records as a nonparty witness. Petitioner did not file a motion to quash, but produced some of the documents, raising trade secrets and privacy objections. After petitioner was named a defendant in the third amended complaint, plaintiff moved to compel production. Petitioner opposed the motion and suggested an in camera inspection because it claimed that discovery sought sensitive financial, business, and technical information unrelated to plaintiff's cause of action. At the hearing, the trial court, on its own accord, announced that petitioner, as a nonparty at the time of the discovery request, could only object via a motion to quash (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1285) .

As a matter of first impression, the court of appeal held that the discovery rules do not discriminate against nonparty deponents: Nonparties who want to challenge a records only or records and testimony deposition subpoena may simply wait and object, putting the onus on the proponent to move to compel. They are not required to file a motion to quash to object to the request (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1284) . The court explained that Code Civ. Proc. § 1987.1 contains permissive, not mandatory, language regarding motions to quash (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1287-1288) . Further, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq.) does not apply only to oral depositions, but rather contains provisions pertaining to depositions for production of business records and things underformer Code Civ. Proc. § 2020(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.410-2020.440) (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1288-1289) . The court also expressed concern about the potential for abuse if a harsher rule were created for nonparties than for parties (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1288-1289) . Accordingly, the court ordered a preemptory writ of mandate directing respondent court to vacate its orders granting the motion to compel further production and to set the matter of a new hearing on the grounds stated in the motion (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1291) .

SANCTION.

A. Motion to Stay Deposition and Quash. When a party is served with a deposition notice that does not comply with Sections 2025.210-2025.270 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that party may make a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of any issue presented by the motion, for an order staying the taking ofthe deposition and quashing the deposition notice (*Code Civ. B. Motion May Be Made in Addition to Objection. A party who is served with a defective deposition notice may move for an order staying the taking of a deposition and quashing its notice, in addition to serving a timely written objection specifying the error or irregularity on the party seeking to take the deposition and any other attorney or party on whom the deposition notice was served (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by a party seeking an order staying the taking of a deposition and quashing the deposition notice when the deposition notice has error or irregularity, and for a monetary sanction. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration statingfacts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of any issue presented by the motion. Timely objection must have been served on the party seeking to take the deposition and on any other attorney or party on whom the deposition notice was served, or the error or irregularity of the deposition notice is waived [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.410]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the error or irregularity in the deposition notice warranting the quashing of the notice, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied.

However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party who served the deposition notice acted without substantial justification because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring that court impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specific Findings

In California Shellfish, Inc. v. United Shellfish Co. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 16, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 797 plaintiff served a non-party witness with a deposition subpoena seeking discovery of business records before servingthe summons and complaint on the only named defendant, and without notice of the deposition to any defendant. The trial court granted the nonparty's motion to quash the deposition subpoena and imposed a monetary sanction against plaintiff.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court found that the "deposition hold" of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.210(b)) applies to deposition subpoenas issued under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2020(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.410 et seq.). Thus, plaintiff's improperly served deposition subpoena was properly quashed (56 Cal. App. 4th 16, 25) . The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contention that the trial court must expressly find that plaintiff acted willfully or without substantial justification in opposing the motion to quash the deposition subpoena. It explained that a trial court will impose a monetary sanction for unsuccessfully opposing such a motion unless the losing party convinces the court that it acted with substantial justification. Accordingly, plaintiff's unsuccessful opposition to the motion to quash, which consisted solely of a letter to the court, without any supporting papers such as a memorandum of points and authorities, was subject to sanctions (56 Cal. App. 4th 16, 25-26) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion May Be Made in Addition to Objection

The facts and procedural background of Monarch Healthcare v. Superior Court (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 619 are discussed in § 83.50[3][a]. As a matter of first impression, the court of appeal in Monarch held that the discovery rules do not discriminate against nonparty deponents: Nonparties who want to challenge a records only or records and testimony deposition subpoena may simply wait and object, putting the onus on the proponent to move to compel. They are not required to file a motion to quash to object to the request (78 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1284) .

A. Only Deposition Notice With Error or Irregularity May Be Quashed. A party served with a deposition notice may move that it be quashed and that the taking of the deposition be stayed, pursuant to Section 2025.410 of the Code of Civil Procedure, only if the deposition notice does not comply with Sections 2025.210-2025.270 of the Code of Civil Procedure (*Code Civ. [AND/OR]

B. Waiver of Error or Irregularity. Even if a party is served with a deposition notice that does not comply with Sections 2025.210-2025.270 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that party waives any error or irregularity unless that party promptly serves a written objection specifying that error or irregularity at least three calendar days prior to the date for which the deposition is scheduled, on the party seeking to take the deposition and any other attorney or party on whom the deposition notice was served. If the objection is made three calendar days before the deposition date, the objecting party is required to make personal service of that objection pursuant to Section 1011 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the party who gave notice of the deposition (*Code Civ. [b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the deposition notice had no error or irregularity under any of the provisions of *Code Civ. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the moving party acted without substantial justification, because *Code Civ. THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE A PROTECTIVE ORDER REGARDING THE ORAL DEPOSITION OF _____ [name] BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN AND THE ORDER IS REQUIRED BY JUSTICE TO PROTECT _____ [name], A _____ [PARTY or DEPONENT or NATURAL PERSON or ORGANIZATION] FROM UNWARRANTED ANNOYANCE, EMBARRASSMENT, OR OPPRESSION, OR UNDUE BURDEN AND EXPENSE. THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION.

A. Power of Court to Issue Protective Order. That the testimony be recorded in a manner different from that specified in the deposition notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(8)).

[AND/OR]

That certain matters not be inquired into (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(9); see John Z. v. Superior Court (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 789, 791-792, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556).

[AND/OR]

That the scope of the examination be limited to certain matters (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(10)).

[AND/OR]

That all or certain of the writings or tangible things designated in the deposition notice not be produced, inspected, or copied (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(11)).

[AND/OR]

That designated persons, other than the parties to the action and their officers and counsel, be excluded from attending the deposition (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(12)).

[AND/OR]

That a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information not be disclosed or be disclosed only to specified persons or only in a specified way (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(13)).

[AND/OR]

That the parties simultaneously file specified documents enclosed in sealed envelopes to be opened as directed by the court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(14)).

[AND/OR]

That the deposition be sealed and thereafter opened only on order of the court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(15)).

[AND/OR]

That the examination of the deponent be terminated (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(16)).

[CONTINUE]

C. Time for Motion. Before, during, or after a deposition, any party, deponent, affected natural person, or affected organization may promptly make a motion for a protective order, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faithattempt at an informal resolution of the issues presented (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(a)).

D. Power to Prevent Abuse. Under Sections 2025.420 and 2025.470 Code of Civil Procedure, the court has the power to prevent abuse of the discovery process, provided that the requisite factual showing is made by the party seeking the protective order (see Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 373, 383, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266).

E. Factual Showing of Good Cause. The good cause that is required for a protective order requires a factual exposition of a reasonable basis for the order sought (see Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682).

[Optional] F. Balancing Burden Against Likelihood of Discovering Admissible Evidence. The court shall limit the scope of discovery if, pursuant to a motion for protective order, it determines that the burden, expense, or intrusiveness of that discovery clearly outweighs the likelihood that the information sought will lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020(a); see Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 842-843, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 ; Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 383-384, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 ; Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 223 ; 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567).

[Optional] G. Timing as Constituting Annoyance, Embarrassment, or Oppression. When the timing of discovery proceedings would cause unfair advantage to accrue to one of the parties, then that unfair advantage may constitute annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression which the court is empowered to prevent by means of protective orders (see Rosemont v. Superior Court (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 709, 714, 36 Cal. Rptr. 439, 388 P.2d 671).

[Optional] H. Protection Against Disclosure of Privileged Matters. A protective order may be issued to protect against the disclosure of privileged communications that are sought during discovery (see Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 862-864, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766).

[Optional] I. Motion During Examination. The party conducting the deposition and the deponent may stipulate, or any party attending the deposition or the deponent may demand, that the testimony be suspended, to enable that party or deponent to make a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonableand good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of the issues presented, for a protective order on the ground that the examination is being conducted in bad faith or in a manner that unreasonably annoys, embarrasses, or oppresses that party or deponent. For good cause shown, the court may terminate the examination, which may not thereafter be resumed except on order of the court, or the court may limit the scope and manner of taking the deposition as provided in Code of Civil Procedure Section 2025.420 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470).

J. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion for a protective order under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2025.420, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2025.420, 2025.470).

[Add supporting points and authorities for each particular type of protective order sought (see, e.g., § 83.81 et seq.). When appropriate, include specific points and authorities relating to objections, privileges, or other grounds that provide the basis for "good cause." Add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

These points and authorities are for use in supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition. The motion must be made before the court in which the action is pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.020(b); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470], and must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(a)]. This form should be combined with points andauthorities supporting the granting of the particular protective orders sought [see § 83.81 et seq.]. It should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11]..

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]. Counsel should also state facts and insert argument in favor of particular protective orders that he or she desires, such as showing facts and reasons why the deposition should not be taken at all. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring that the court impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Particular Orders Available

In John Z. v. Superior Court (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 789, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556 , a utility company sued a contractor for fraud after it learneddefendant was allegedly being paid for services not rendered. While deposing a company employee, defendants learned of the existence of an informant on whose tip plaintiff had acted. When the employee refused to identify the informant, defendant moved to compel disclosure. Although the informant, who was not to be called at trial, filed a sealed declaration describing threats to his life, the trial court determined that the threat was not serious, and ordered disclosure of the informant's identity. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal vacated the order and directed that all sealed documents remain under seal, holding that the trial court had abused its discretion. In so ruling, the court noted that for good cause, a court has the authority under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(i)(9) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(9)) to issue a protective order directing that a matter not be inquired into during the taking of a deposition. This authority encompasses an order protecting the identity of an informant whose safety would be jeopardized by disclosure. The determination of whether to prohibit disclosure requires a balancing of the informant's interest in safety against the litigant's need for the information (1 Cal. App. 4th 789, 791) . Defendants claimed that knowledge of the informant's identity was necessary to obtain information regarding plaintiff's failure to mitigate damages and its motivation to put defendant out of business. Concluding that the informant's interests prevailed over defendant's, the court pointed out that either the informant was not an eyewitness to important events and would not be helpful, or he was an eyewitness and would be found during routine discovery (1 Cal. App. 4th 789, 791-792) .

[b] Power to Prevent Abuse

Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 , is the leading case construing the purposes and philosophy behind the former Discovery Act. Greyhound concerned a personal injury action involving an accident between plaintiffs' motor vehicle and defendant's bus. At the scene of the accident, before plaintiffs were taken to the hospital, defendant's adjusters and investigators obtained written and signed statements concerning the accident from various witnesses, many of whom were out-of-state residents. After unsuccessfully attempting to obtain these witnesses' accounts from other sources, plaintiffs made a motion to require defendant to produce and permit the inspection, copying or photographing of the witnesses' statements. Although defendant objected to the production of these statements on various grounds, the trial court ordered their production. This holding was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which denied defendant's application for a writ of prohibition (56 Cal. 2d 355, 402) .

In resolving the question of the propriety of the trial court's order, the Supreme Court laid down guidelines for courts to follow in ruling onobjections to discovery requests and on protective orders, setting forth the burdens of proof to be borne by the party seeking discovery and by the party resisting discovery (56 Cal. 2d 355, 377-384) . The Court characterized protective orders as a new method for controlling the abuse that might be occasioned by the wide latitude authorized by the newly enacted discovery statutes (56 Cal. 2d 355, 373) . Protective orders are thus within the power to prevent abuse bestowed on the trial court by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420], and that power of the court is tantamount to the power to exercise discretion based on the factual showing made by the parties (56 Cal. 2d 355, 383) .

Note that the Supreme Court has since cited its prior decision in Greyhound with approval, and stated that the general conclusions in Greyhound apply equally to the new discovery statutes enacted by the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 [see Emerson Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 1101, 1107-1108, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 883, 946 P.2d 841)].

[c] Factual Showing of Good Cause

Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682 was an action for wrongful termination of an agency contract. In that case, plaintiffs noticed the deposition of an out-of-state witness, and defendant moved for an order that plaintiffs pay defense counsel's travel expenses to Missouri where the deposition was to take place, citing only former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420] in support of this motion. The trial court granted defendant's motion for expenses.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that even assuming arguendo that the order requiring payment of travel expenses is an order protecting defendant from annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, there still needs to be a factual exposition of reasonable grounds constituting good cause for the order (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819) . Neither the statement that it would be necessary to travel from California to Missouri, nor the statement concerning anticipated expenses made on information and belief (and therefore of no evidentiary value) was sufficient to provide grounds for the trial court's order (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819-820) .

[d] Balancing Burden Against Likelihood of Discovering Admissible Evidence

For discussion of Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 , Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 , and Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 , see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.80[3][a] [see also discussion of Greyhound in [b], above].

[e] Timing as Constituting Annoyance, Embarrassment, or Oppression

Rosemont v. Superior Court (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 709, 36 Cal. Rptr. 439, 388 P.2d 671 was an action for a breach of oral contract. In Rosemont, after plaintiff's deposition was taken, defendants moved for a protective order to stay the taking of defendants' deposition pending the disposition of a mandamus action that, if granted, would require plaintiff to produce certain recordings. The trial court granted defendants' motion for a protective order, setting forth a schedule ordering the various forms of discovery, and requiring the plaintiff to identify the recordings in question. Plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition.

The Supreme Court denied the writ, reasoning that while ordinarily parties should be required to expedite discovery, and while the mere advantage to one party that may be gained by altering the timing does not constitute good cause, nevertheless plaintiff's withholding of the recordings in this case would give him an unfair advantage. Therefore, it was reasonable for the Court to conclude that denial of the stay in these circumstances would in itself constitute annoyance, embarrassment, or harassment (60 Cal. 2d 709, 714-715) .

[f] Protection Against Disclosure of Privileged Matters

In Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 , owners of land near an airport sought compensation for diminution in land value and for personal injuries allegedly caused by the operation of a nearby airport. Defendant sought depositions of plaintiffs in order to examine any of their past political activities which were connected with opposition to the airport. Defendant also asked for production of certain documents and for interrogatories dealing with complete accounts of lifetime mental and physical health histories of all of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs moved for a protective order, seeking to restrain defendant's inquiry into their past political associations and medical histories. They volunteered, however, to provide defendant with medical information relating to the injuries for which recovery was sought. The trial court denied the motion for a protective order.

The Supreme Court granted a writ, holding that the patient-litigant exception to the physician-patient privilege only extends to those conditions that the patient-litigant has himself disclosed by bringing an action in which they are in issue (20 Cal. 3d 844, 863) . The Court stated that, in order to determine the precise scope of the inquiry, on remand defendant must frame its interrogatories more narrowly so that they do not improperly impinge on privileged information (20 Cal. 3d 844, 862, 863 n.7).

[a] Power of Court to Issue Protective Order

In Steiny and Co. v. California Electric Supply Co. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 288, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 920 , the court of appeal found that the trial court properly barred defendants from offering damage evidence as a result of their earlier assertion of the trade secrets privilege (79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 288) . Defendants' invocation of the privilege, and the blanket protective order they obtained, prevented plaintiff subcontractor from examining key evidence needed to test the reasonableness of the settlement reached between defendant owner and defendant contractor. Although defendants had the right to stand on the privilege, they did not have the right to proceed on their claim while at the same time insisting on withholding key evidence from its adversary. Further, they could have agreed to a more typical and less extreme protective order that would have allowed plaintiff to obtain the needed information while strictly confining its use. Accordingly, the trial court did not err in holding that defendants forfeited the right to proceed with their claim by instead insisting on absolute withholding of all privileged information (79 Cal. App. 4th 285, 292) .

In Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 , to prove allegations of misrepresentation, defendants noticed depositions of the bank chairman to bring the banking records of certain customers. The bank sought a protective order to protect the privacy of its customers. The trial court ordered disclosure, but limited the scope of recovery to certain types of financial transactions and time periods. The Supreme Court held that because of the right to privacy in the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. I, § 1), which allows a bank customer to have a reasonable expectation that matters which he or she reveals to the bank will be used by the bank only for internal banking purposes, the trial court should refashion the protective order to balance the right of civil litigants to discover relevant information, and the right of bank customers to maintain reasonable privacy regarding their finances (15 Cal. 3d 652, 656-657) . The Court then suggested that one type of protective order that might be used to accommodate the competing considerations of confidentiality and disclosure, when a party seeks confidential information from a bank regarding its customer accounts, is that the information be sealed, to be reopened only by further order of the court (15 Cal. 3d 652, 657, 658) .

In re Lifschutz (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 415, 85 Cal. Rptr. 829, 467 P.2d 557 , was a habeas corpus action brought by a psychiatrist who was imprisoned for contempt for refusing to obey a trial court order directing him to answer certain deposition questions and to produce certain records. Petitioner claimed absolute privilege to refuse to disclose all psychotherapeutic communications relating to a plaintiff in an assault action, who had beenhis patient approximately 10 years earlier, but the trial court disagreed, reasoning that by bringing the assault action and alleging severe emotional distress, plaintiff brought himself within the patient-litigant exception to the statutory psychotherapist-patient privilege [Evid. Code § 1014], and therefore petitioner's objections based on privilege were improper. The Supreme Court denied petitioner's application for a writ of habeas corpus, holding that there is no absolute privilege with respect to psychotherapeutic communications (2 Cal. 3d 415, 438, 439) . The Court noted, however, that the litigant's waiver of the privilege is limited, and only applies to those mental conditions that the patient-litigant has disclosed by virtue of bringing of an action in which they are in issue. Moreover, the patient need not sacrifice all privacy with respect to his or her personality merely because he or she is seeking recovery for an emotional injury (2 Cal. 3d 415, 435) , but the burden of proof is on the patient to show that a given confidential communication is not relevant to the issues involved in the litigation (2 Cal. 3d 415, 436) . Included in the list of protective orders which the Court suggested might be appropriate in safeguarding the privacy of the patient was the option that the deposition be sealed and only opened on order of the court. The Court suggested that this and other protective orders (such as limiting the scope of the inquiry) are available to protect the patient-litigant in a situation in which the confidential communication at issue is relevant to a mental condition tendered by the plaintiff and therefore not privileged (2 Cal. 3d 415, 437-438) .

[b] Objection on Grounds of Relevance

In Sutter's Place Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , petitioner, a card room operator, sued the real party in interest, a city, challenging an ordinance that imposed limits on the operation of card rooms. Petitioner sought extensive, open-ended discovery from the city, which the city resisted. After an in camera review of certain documents, the superior court issued a discovery order protecting specified documents from disclosure on the ground that discovery would violate the "mental processes" principle (precluding judicial inquiry into the motivation or mental processes of legislators in enacting legislation). Petitioner sought a writ of mandate and/or prohibition to overturn the discovery order and compel discovery (161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1374) .

The court of appeal denied the writ, ruling that documents relating to individual legislators' mental processes or reasons for enacting the ordinance were irrelevant "to the judicial task" and consequently were not the proper subject of discovery requests (161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1376, 1378) . Moreover, even assuming that an ulterior purpose behind the ordinance were relevant to its validity, such discovery would violate the "mental processes principle" (161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1376) .

In Stewart v. Colonial W. Agency, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 115 , a case alleging breach of contract wrongful termination, defense counsel instructed the deponent not to answer questions pertaining to defendant on the ground that they were not calculated to lead to admissible evidence (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1013) . The court of appeal held that the only proper way to object to an interrogation into improper matters is to suspend the deposition and move for a protective order on the appropriate grounds (for example, based on privilege, or that the examination is being conducted in bad faith or with an underlying purpose to harass, annoy, embarrass, or oppress). Deponent's counsel should not even raise an objection to a question that counsel believes will elicit irrelevant testimony at a deposition. Relevance objections should be held in abeyance until an attempt is made to use the testimony at trial (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1014) .

For additional facts and the procedural background of Stewart, see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, §§ 82.10[4][a], 82.11[4][a].

D. Motion for Protective Order in Oral Deposition Matters

8-83 California Points & Authorities § 83.81

§ 83.81 Supporting Motion for Protective Order for Deposition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]--That Deposition Not Be Taken [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(1)]

[The following should be combined with memorandum generally supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.80).]

GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN, AND THUS THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE A PROTECTIVE ORDER REQUIRING THAT THE DEPOSITION NOT BE TAKEN AT ALL, AND SHOULD IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION.

A. Order That Deposition Not Be Taken at All. The court may issue a protective order under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2025.420 directing that the deposition not be taken at all (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(1)).

[EITHER]

B. Protection of Privileged Documents. If documents contain material privileged as confidential communications, the court may issue an order that the deposition of the custodian of those records not be taken (see Grosslight v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 508, 509, 140 Cal. Rptr. 278).

[AND/OR]

C. Need to Expedite Trial Balanced Against Relatively Unimportant Inquiry. The court may issue a protective order that depositions not be taken when the taking of the depositions would cause delay in the otherwise imminent starting date of the trial, when the information to be gained by the depositions is relatively unimportant, and when there has already been extensive discovery (see Jaffe v. Albertson Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 616-617, 53 Cal. Rptr.

25).

[AND/OR]

D. No Right to Discovery That Is Untimely. Except with regard to expert witnesses identified under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2034.010 et seq., no party is entitled as a matter of right to complete discovery proceedings within 30 days of the date initially set for the trial of the action or to have a motion concerning discoveryheard within 15 days of that date, except as ordered at the discretion of the court on motion of a party; unless otherwise ordered, a continuance or postponement of the trial date does not operate to reopen the discovery proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2024.020, 2024.030).

[AND/OR]

E. Protection Against Taking Depositions When Pretrial Disposition of Case Sought. In a proceeding for a pretrial disposition of a case such as a motion for summary judgment or for judgment on the pleadings, depositions should not be taken pending the outcome of the motion for pretrial disposition if the material sought is irrelevant and unlikely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (see Pacific Architects Collaborative v. State of California (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 126, 127, 166 Cal. Rptr. 184).

[AND/OR]

F. Protection Against Taking of Depositions When Party Seeking Discovery Has Failed to State Cause of Action. When the party seeking discovery has failed to state a cause of action, then a protective order prohibiting that party from taking depositions is proper (see Silver v. City of Los Angeles (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 673, 674, 54 Cal. Rptr. 203).

[AND/OR]

G. Party May Not Take Subsequent Deposition. Once any party has taken the deposition of any natural person, including that of a party to the action, neither the party who gave, nor any other party who received, notice of the deposition may take a subsequent deposition of that deponent, unless so stipulated by the parties with the consent of the non-party deponent or by leave of court on a showing of good cause[, but one subsequent deposition may be taken of natural person previously examined (1) on behalf of organization under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.230, or (2), pursuant to a court order under Code Civ. Proc. § 485.230, for limited purpose of discovering under Code Civ. Proc. § 485.230 the identity, location, and value of property in which deponent has an interest] (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.610).

[Add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in seeking a protective order that a deposition not be taken at all [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420]. The form should be combined with the general points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80. When monetary sanctions are sought, this form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [ see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

For memoranda of points and authorities relating to specific grounds of evidentiary privilege or other protection from discovery, see generally Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense, and should state facts and insert argument of the specific reasons why the deposition should not be taken at all. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized, unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Protection of Privileged Documents

Grosslight v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 140 Cal. Rptr. 278 was an action for personal injuries brought against a 16-year-old girl.Also joined as defendants were the girl's parents, who were charged with failure to exercise adequate control over their daughter despite their knowledge of her dangerous propensities for violence. Plaintiff noticed the deposition of the custodian of records at the psychiatric hospital where the girl had been treated. The purpose of the deposition was to ascertain if there were any admissions by the parents of knowledge of their daughter's dangerous propensities. Defendant patient moved for a protective order, and the trial court issued an order for an in camera inspection of the records to determine if any records existed which contained such admissions.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ vacating the order granting the in camera inspection. The court held that the discovery should be prohibited altogether on the rationale that the psychotherapist-patient privilege includes all relevant communications to psychotherapists and psychiatric personnel by intimate family members of the patient (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 508) , and directed the trial court to grant defendant's motion for a protective order (72 Cal. App. 3d 502, 509) .

[b] Need to Expedite Trial Balanced Against Relatively Unimportant Inquiry

In Jaffe v. Albertson Co. (1966) 243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 53 Cal. Rptr. 25 , defendants sought a protective order to the effect that depositions not be taken, when the subject matter of the depositions was only marginally relevant to the action, and when the taking of the depositions would delay the starting date of the trial. The trial court's grant of a protective order was upheld on the ground that the trial court is empowered to exercise reasonable control over discovery so that it is not executed for the purposes of delay, annoyance, or harassment (243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 617) . Therefore, it is within the sound discretion of the trial court to order that depositions not be taken at all when the information sought thereby is relatively unimportant, balanced against the need to expedite the trial (243 Cal. App. 2d 592, 616-617) .

[c] No Right to Discovery That Is Untimely

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2024.020(a) and 2024.030, parties are entitled to complete discovery proceedings as a matter of right only until 30 days before the date set for the trial of the case, and to have motions concerning discovery heard until 15 days before the date set for the trial of the case, unless the discovery pertains to an expert witness identified under Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.010 et seq. (exchange of expert witness lists). If either of those dates falls on a Saturday, Sunday, or holiday (see Code Civ. Proc. § 10 (designated holidays)), the last day is the next court day closer to the trial date [Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.060]. A continuance or postponement of the trial date does not operate to reopen the discovery proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 2024.020(b)]. However, on motion by a party, the court in its discretion may grant leave to complete discovery proceedings or to have a motion concerning discovery heard closer to the initial trial date, or to reopen discovery after a new trial date has been set [Code Civ. Proc. § 2024.050]. For a discussion of the factors that a court may take into consideration in determining the motion, see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.111.

Note that the parties to the action may agree to extend the time for the completion of discovery proceedings or for the hearing of motions concerning discovery, or to reopen discovery after a new date for trial of the action has been set [Code Civ. Proc. § 2024.060].

[d] Protection Against Taking Depositions When Pretrial Disposition of Case Sought

Pacific Architects Collaborative v. State of California (1979) 100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 166 Cal. Rptr. 184 was an appeal from a grant of summary judgment and judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants. Plaintiff had sued to recover expenses and lost profits incurred in preparing mobile trailers in response to a bid solicitation sent by the state. After filing their answer denying the allegations of the complaint, defendants moved for summary judgment and for judgment on the pleadings. Defendants also moved for and obtained a protective order postponing the depositions of some state employees until after the summary judgment hearing. The trial court then granted summary judgment and judgment on the pleadings, and plaintiff appealed, claiming the trial court erred when it refused to allow it to depose the employees, and question them as to their state of mind in stating the reasons why plaintiff's contract was rejected.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding in part that, while ordinarily a trial court must not rule on summary judgment until the party resisting the motion has had time to discover facts which may be used in opposition to the motion, in the present situation, when the information sought was not relevant to a material issue in the case, the protective order limiting discovery was proper (100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 126, 127) . Therefore, the court held, the trial court's order was correct because plaintiff sought discovery of irrelevant information which would be neither helpful in preparation for trial, nor likely to lead to evidence admissible at trial (100 Cal. App. 3d 110, 127) .

[e] Protection Against Taking of Depositions When Party Seeking Discovery Has Failed to State Cause of Action

Silver v. City of Los Angeles (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 673, 54 Cal. Rptr. 203 was an appeal in an action by a taxpayer to recover the salary of asuperintendent of a hospital on the ground that the superintendent had not devoted his entire time to his duties. The trial court dismissed the action for failure to state a cause of action, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. One of the grounds for appeal was that the trial court had granted a protective order to prohibit the taking of depositions. The court of appeal ruled that this protective order was correct in that the infirmity in the complaint was not one of form, and that there was no contention that the complaint could have been improved by amendment (245 Cal. App. 2d 673, 674) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Deposition of Opposing Counsel Permissible Only on Showing of Extremely Good Cause

Estate of Ruchti (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1593, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 arose out of a probate proceeding in which co-executors filed a petition to determine the nature and extent of estate property being withheld by plaintiff, a former co-executor who had been suspended from his duties. Plaintiff subsequently brought an action for fraud, declaratory relief, and assorted other causes. When plaintiff's attorney sought to depose the attorney for the co-executors, the attorney for the co-executors filed a motion for a protective order. The trial court granted the motion and imposed sanctions on plaintiff's attorney, who then appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff's attorney contended that the co-executors did not have personal knowledge of the facts alleged in the petition, and that only their attorney personally knew the facts, therebynecessitating his deposition. The court noted that taking the deposition of opposing counsel disrupts the adversarial system and lowers the standard of the profession, adds to the already burdensome time and costs of litigation, and detracts from the quality of client representation. Moreover, it said such a practice would have a chilling effect on the truthful communications from the client to the attorney. The court said that the circumstances under which opposing counsel may be deposed are limited to those where (1) no other means exist to obtain the information than to depose opposing counsel, (2) the information sought is relevant and not privileged, and (3) the information is crucial to the preparation of the case (12 Cal. App. 4th 1593, 1600) . Ultimately concluding that this test had not been met, the court observed that the co-executors' attorney had examined a variety of public records, conducted interviews with family members and others, and consulted with various experts in developing a foundation for the petition. None of these were matters peculiarly with the attorney's personal knowledge. Moreover he had suggested that interrogatories rather than his deposition would be a proper and effective method of discovery because properly drafted interrogatories could elicit the facts upon which the co-executors based their contentions and would require the identification of witnesses and of documents (12 Cal. App. 4th 1593, 1601) .

In Spectra-Physics, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 1487, 244 Cal. Rptr. 258 , a settling party brought a motion to determine the good faith of a settlement under Code Civ. Proc. § 877.6 and sought to depose opposing counsel on the issue of whether opposing counsel had acted in bad faith in impeding the settlement process. The trial court ordered that opposing counsel were required to submit to discovery.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order denying permission to take the depositions of counsel. The court initially noted that taking the deposition of opposing counsel disrupts the adversarial system, lowers the standard of the profession, and adds to the already burdensome time and costs of litigation. The court held that the circumstances under which opposing counsel may be deposed are limited to those in which (1) no other means exist to obtain the information than to depose opposing counsel, (2) the information sought is relevant and not privileged, and (3) the information is crucial to the preparation of the case. Applying these criteria, the court found that the settling party did not satisfy the first requirement because it had other means of obtaining the information. In regard to the second requirement, the court found that it was probably satisfied in that the information sought was relevant and the fact that some of it may have been privileged would not prevent the deposition entirely. In regard to the final requirement, the court held that because the settling party did not have the burden of attacking the good faith of the settlement, the deposition of opposing counsel was not immediately crucial to the presentation of itscase. The court also noted that the information sought was not necessarily of critical importance on the issues of the case because the actions of the attorney sought to be deposed, even as alleged, did not constitute a prima facie case of bad faith (198 Cal. App. 3d 1487, 1493-1497) .

Note that the deposition of an opposing attorney is most likely to be allowed in an insurance bad-faith case [see Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d 786, 789-790, 140 Cal. Rptr. 677] .

§ 83.83 Supporting Motion for Protective Order for Deposition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]--That Deposition of High-Ranking Official in Defendant Corporation or Top Governmental Executive Not Be Taken

[The following should be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities generally supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.80).]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT A PROTECTIVE ORDER THAT _____ [name]'S DEPOSITION NOT BE TAKEN, BECAUSE HE/SHE IS A _____ [HIGH-RANKING OFFICIAL IN THE/A CORPORATE DEFENDANT or TOP GOVERNMENTAL EXECUTIVE] AND THE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT _____ [SHOWN GOOD CAUSE THAT THE PROPOSED DEPONENT HAS UNIQUE PERSONAL KNOWLEDGE OF DISCOVERABLE INFORMATION and/or EXHAUSTED LESS INTRUSIVE METHODS OF DISCOVERY].

A. When Deponent Is High-Ranking Corporate Defendant Official or Top Governmental Executive, Burden of Proof for Protective Order Is Shifted. When a plaintiff seeks to depose a president or other official at the highest level of management within a defendant corporation, or a head of a governmental agency or top governmental executive, the burden of showing good cause for a protective order that the deposition not be taken is shifted from the proposed deponent to the plaintiff (Nagle v. Superior Court (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1465, 1467-1469, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 (top governmental executives); Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 363 (high-ranking corporate official)).

B. Protective Order Will Be Granted Unless Plaintiff Meets Burden of Proof. Such a deponent's motion for a protective ordershould be granted unless the plaintiff has shown good cause that the official has unique or superior personal knowledge of discoverable information or the plaintiff has exhausted less-intrusive methods of discovery and can make a colorable showing of good cause that the official possesses information necessary to the case (Nagle v. Superior Court (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1465, 1467-1469, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 ; Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 363).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] When Deponent Is High-Ranking Corporate Defendant Official or Top Governmental Executive, Burden of Proof for Protective Order Is Shifted

In Nagle v. Superior Court (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1465, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 , an employee of the California Employment Development Department (EDD) was dismissed from his job in part because he was absent due to an illness suffered by his mother. During the disciplinary action, EDD personnel obtained the mother's records from the California Department of Health Services (DHS). The mother filed an action against personnel of these agencies, contending that confidential medical records were obtained in violation of her privacy and due process rights. Depositions of the petitioners--director of the EDD and the former director of the DHS--were noticed, and the petitioners moved for a protective order. Petitioners filed declarations denying any personal knowledge of the circumstances of the disciplinary hearing or the subpoenaing of the medical records. The superior court denied the motion.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and grant the protective order. The court of appeal held that a party seeking to depose a head of a governmental agency or a top governmental executive must show that (1) the official has direct personal factual information pertaining to the material issues in the action, and (2) the information to be obtained from the deposition is not available through any other source. Here, the mother did not contend that either director had personal knowledge of the subpoenaing of her records. The mother did contend that the petitioners' declarations did not establish that they had no knowledge of either related cases or departmental requirements concerning confidentiality of records. However, the court of appeal held that these matters could be investigated through other sources and through less burdensome methods (28 Cal. App. 4th 1465, 1468) .

In Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 363 , plaintiff, wife of a disabled employee, sued defendant corporation, the workers' compensation insurance carrier for her husband's employer, for fraud and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on its failure to provide needed services for her husband. After plaintiff noticed the deposition of the defendant's president, he moved for a protective order to prohibit his deposition on the ground that she had no legitimate need to depose him and was doing so only to annoy and harass him. The trial court denied the motion, and defendant corporation and its president petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ commanding the trial court to vacate its order and enter an order granting the protective order. The president'sonly connection to the case was counsel's act of copying him, by title only, on two letters that were automatically rerouted to a lower-level employee. The court observed that the head of a large national corporation will generally not have knowledge of a specific case handled several levels down the corporate pyramid (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1287) . The court held that when a plaintiff seeks to depose a president or other official at the highest level of management within a defendant corporation, and that official moves for a protective order to prohibit the deposition, the trial court should first determine whether the plaintiff has shown good cause that the official has unique or superior personal knowledge of discoverable information. If not, as will often be the case with a large national or international corporation, the trial court should issue the protective order and require the plaintiff to first obtain the necessary discovery through less-intrusive methods (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289) . The court explained that shifting the burden in this manner will not frustrate a plaintiff's ability to penetrate high levels of corporate management in a search for information. Lower-level corporate officials, with some probable connection to the plaintiff's case, are not permitted to avoid being deposed through filing conclusory affidavits of ignorance (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289-1290) .

[b] Protective Order Will Be Granted Unless Plaintiff Meets Burden of Proof

The facts and procedural background of Nagle v. Superior Court (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1465, 1467-1469, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 are discussed in [a], above. In Nagle, the court of appeal held that a party seeking to depose a head of a governmental agency or a top governmental executive must show that (1) the official has direct personal factual information pertaining to the material issues in the action, and (2) the information to be obtained from the deposition is not available through any other source. The court stated that an official's ability to conduct his or her business affairs would be severely hindered if all plaintiffs filing a complaint against an agency head in his or her official capacity were permitted to take the official's oral deposition. The court added that the head of an agency typically has little or no knowledge of the facts of the case (28 Cal. App. 4th 1465, 1468) .

The facts and procedural background of Liberty Mutual Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 363 are discussed in [a], above. In Liberty Mutual, the court of appeal found that the burden of proof for a protective order that the deposition of a high-ranking corporate defendant official not be taken is shifted to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff does not meet that burden, the trial court should issue the protective order and require the plaintiff to first obtain the necessary discovery through less-intrusive methods (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289) . The court observed that it made no sense to permit a plaintiff to leap-frog to the apex of the corporate hierarchy as the first step in discovery withouthaving taken the intermediate steps of seeking discovery from lower-level employees more involved in the pertinent corporate operations. The court said that such "apex" depositions, when conducted before less-intrusive discovery methods are exhausted, raised a tremendous potential for discovery abuse and harassment. It would be unreasonable to permit a plaintiff to begin discovery in this manner (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1287) . The court elaborated that such less-intrusive discovery methods include interrogatories directed to the high-level official to explore the state of his or her knowledge or involvement in the plaintiffs' case; depositions of lower-level employees with appropriate knowledge and involvement in the subject matter of the litigation; and the organizational deposition of the corporation itself, thereby requiring the organization to produce for inspection the most qualified officer or employee to testify on its behalf regarding the specified matters to be raised at the deposition (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289) . The court further held that should such less-intrusive methods of discovery be exhausted, and the plaintiff make a colorable showing of good cause that the high-level official possesses information necessary to the case, the trial court may then lift the protective order and allow the deposition to proceed (10 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1289) .

[The following should be combined with memorandum of points and authorities generally supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.80).]

BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN, THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE A PROTECTIVE ORDER LIMITING THE SCOPE OF INQUIRY _____ [TO _____ (specify matter or matters to which inquiry should be limited) or TO PRECLUDE _____ (specify matter or matters on which inquiry should not be allowed)] AND THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION.

A. Protective Order Limiting Scope of Inquiry in General. The court may issue a protective order under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2025.420 directing that that the scope of the examination be limited to certain matters (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(10); see Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 852-862, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766).

[Optional] B. Protective Order Limiting Scope of Inquiry Into Plaintiff's Medical History. A protective order limiting the scope of examination into a plaintiff's medical history is proper; the scope of inquiry should include only those conditions or injuries that the plaintiff has brought before the court (see Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 864, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in seeking a protective order that the scope of the examination in a deposition be limited to certain matters [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(10)]. The form should be combined with the general points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80.

When monetary sanctions are sought, the foregoing form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense, state facts and insert argument of the specific reasons why the scope of the examination should be limited, and identify those matters to which the scope should be limited. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of a protective order and monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Protective Order Limiting Scope of Inquiry in General

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are set out in § 83.80[3][f]. In Britt, the plaintiffs had sought a protective order seeking to restrain defendant's inquiry into their past associational activities. In this regard, the Supreme Court held that such broad inquiry as defendant was attempting violated plaintiffs' First Amendment rights to freedom of association (20 Cal. 3d 844, 852-855, 861-862) . These rights were not waived by plaintiffs in bringing the lawsuit (20 Cal. 3d 844, 857-858) . Moreover, no compelling state interest in the discovery arose out of defendant's need for the associational information in order to prepare its defenses of statute of limitations and mitigation of damages (20 Cal. 3d 844, 860-861) . Therefore, although the Court did not specify what the exact scope of the discovery order should be regarding plaintiffs' associational activities, it did note that the existing order was so broad as to be constitutionally infirm, and that the order compelling disclosure must be narrowly drawn so as to assure maximum protection of the plaintiffs' constitutional interest (20 Cal. 3d 844, 859, 862) .

[b] Protective Order Limiting Scope of Inquiry Into Plaintiff's Medical History

The facts and procedural background of Britt v. Superior Court (1978) 20 Cal. 3d 844, 143 Cal. Rptr. 695, 574 P.2d 766 are discussed in § 83.80[3][f] and in [a], above. In Britt, the Supreme Court discussed the proper scope of an order relating to disclosure of medical histories of plaintiffs who are seeking redress for physical or mental injuries. The Court noted that although the plaintiffs may have waived the physician-patient privilege with respect to matters relating to the pending lawsuit, that waiver extends only to injuries or conditions which the plaintiff has brought before the court (20 Cal. 3d 844, 863-864) . Thus the scope of the inquiry should be limited to the nature of the injuries or condition that the plaintiff-litigant has himself put in issue (20 Cal. 3d 844, 864) .

§ 83.85 Supporting Motion for Protective Order for Deposition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]--That Deposition Be Taken by Written Questions Instead of Oral Examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(6)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with memorandum of points and authorities generally supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.80).]

FOR GOOD CAUSE SHOWN, THE COURT MAY ISSUE A PROTECTIVE ORDER REQUIRING THAT A DEPOSITION BE TAKEN BY WRITTEN QUESTIONS INSTEAD OF ORAL EXAMINATION.

Protective Order Requiring Deposition by Written Questions. The court may issue a protective order directing that the deponent's testimony be taken by written, instead of oral, examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(6); see Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 195 Cal. App. 2d 861, 867 , 16 Rptr. 236).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in seeking a protective order directing that the deposition be taken by written questions rather than by oral examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(6)]. The form should be combined as directed with the general points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80.

When monetary sanctions are sought, the foregoing form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense, state facts and insert argument of the specific reasons why the examination should be by written, instead of oral, questions. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of a protective order and monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Protective Order Requiring Deposition by Written Questions

The facts and procedural background of Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 195 Cal. App. 2d 861 , 16 Rptr. 236 are discussed in § 83.170[4][a]. In dictum, the court noted that while the party initiating discovery has a choice whether to take a deposition by oral or written examination, the trial court may overturn that choice, on a proper showing. Among the factors to be considered are convenience and expense (195 Cal. App. 2d 861, 867) .

§ 83.86 Supporting Motion for Protective Order for Deposition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]--That Defendants in Class Action Be Required to Compel Attendance of Unnamed Plaintiffs at Depositions

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with memorandum of points and authorities generally supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.80).]

FOR GOOD CAUSE SHOWN, THE COURT MAY ISSUE A PROTECTIVE ORDER REQUIRING THAT DEFENDANTS IN A CLASS ACTION BEAR THE BURDEN OF COMPELLING ATTENDANCE OF UNNAMED PLAINTIFFS AT DEPOSITIONS.

Compelling Attendance at Depositions of Unnamed Class Plaintiffs. For good cause shown, the court may issue an order requiring that defendants in a class action, brought by a plaintiff class, compel the attendance of unnamed plaintiffs at depositions (Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 842, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621).

[Add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for a protective order requiring that class action defendants, rather than named plaintiffs, be required to bear the burden of compelling attendance of the unnamed plaintiffs at depositions. The form should be combined as directed with the general points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80.

When monetary sanctions are sought, the foregoing form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts and argument showing how this type of protective order is needed for protection from undue burden and expense.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of a protective order and monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compelling Attendance at Depositions of Unnamed Class Plaintiffs

In Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 , the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff class had shown good cause under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420) for the trial court's order that defendants, rather than named plaintiffs, be required to compel attendance at depositions of unnamed plaintiffs. Good cause for the order was based on the following factors: defendant was just as capable as named plaintiffs of compelling the attendance at depositions of the unnamed plaintiffs; the unnamed plaintiffs were members of a loosely knit class; the named plaintiffs had little, if any, control over the class; and, most importantly, it appeared that defendant was planning to move for exclusion from the class of those unnamed plaintiffs who did not appear for depositions, thus forcing named plaintiffs to expend great time and effort to round up persons with whom they have had no prior contact or risk the permanent stifling of the class action (7 Cal. 3d 832, 841-842) .

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION FOR A PROTECTIVE ORDER BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS NOT BEEN SHOWN [AND OTHER EXPRESS REQUIREMENTS HAVE NOT BEEN MET].

A. Order Only as Justice Requires. The court may make an order under Section 2025.420 of the Code of Civil Procedure only as justice requires in order to protect a party, deponent, or other natural person or organization from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or from undue burden or expense (Code Civ. Proc. §

B. Order Only on Showing of Good Cause. The court may make an order under Section 2025.420 of the Code of Civil Procedure to protect any party, deponent, or other natural person or organization from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden or expense, only on a showing of good cause (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b); see Armstrong v. Gates (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 957, 108 Cal. Rptr. 604).

[Optional] C. Good Cause for Order During Examination. A party or deponent may move for a protective order under Section2025.470 of the Code of Civil Procedure only on the ground that the examination is being conducted in bad faith or in a manner that unreasonably annoys, embarrasses, or oppresses the party or deponent, and the court may grant the order terminating the examination or limiting the scope and manner of taking the deposition only on a showing of good cause (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420(b), 2025.470).

D. Good Cause Defined. Good cause, as is required for a protective order under Sections 2025.420 and 2025.470 of the Code of Civil Procedure, generally calls for a factual exposition of a reasonable ground for the order sought (see Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682).

E. Burden of Proof. The party seeking a protective order has the burden to show good cause (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470; Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 843, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621).

[Optional] F. Insufficient Showing. The party opposing discovery fails to make a sufficient showing for a protective order under Sections 2025.420 and 2025.470 of the Code of Civil Procedure by asserting mere conclusory allegations without any factual basis for the allegations (see Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 431, 440, 15 Cal. Rptr. 132, 364 P.2d 308).

[Optional] G. Motion Must Be Made in Forum Court. The only court authorized to issue a protective order under Sections 2025.420 and 2025.470 of the Code of Civil Procedure is the court in which the action is pending (Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.020(b)).

[Optional] H. Motion Must Be Accompanied by Declaration. A motion for a protective order under Sections 2025.420 and 2025.470 of the Code of Civil Procedure must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(a)).

I. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes a motion for a protective order, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2025.420(d)).

[Add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11), as well as additional points and authorities, when appropriate, opposing a protective order on more specific grounds (see, e.g., § 83.101 et seq.).]

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in opposing a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of a protective order and monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Only on Showing of Good Cause

Armstrong v. Gates (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 108 Cal. Rptr. 604 was an action to set aside a default judgment that was taken against defendant because of his failure to file a timely answer to a complaint for personal injuries. Defendant's motion to set aside the default was based largely on the declaration of Robert Brehm, senior claims specialist for State Farm, which was the insurance carrier for both plaintiff and defendant. The declaration stated that there had been delays in receipt of a medical breakdown from plaintiff's doctor, but that plaintiff's attorney had stated that he would not "stick you with the default." However, the default was entered, followed by an action to set it aside. In that later action, plaintiffs noticed depositions of Brehm, and defendants obtained a protective order denying plaintiffs the opportunity to depose Brehm. Some time later, the default was set aside.

The court of appeal ruled that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the protective order, because neither good cause nor a legally sufficient ground had been shown (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 957) . It was improper to base the order on what were possibly a judge's remarks from the bench that no depositions were to be taken until after the hearing on the motion to set aside the default (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 957-958) . Also improper was the trial court's articulated rationale for the protective order that there is almost never any need to have oral testimony in court or by depositions in motion matters, and that information in these situations is to be obtained solely from affidavits and declarations (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 958) . Therefore, both the "boot strap" ground (that the deposition was improper because the judge had remarked from the bench that it was premature) and the rationale that declarations and affidavits supplant deposition testimony in motion matters demonstrate the lack of legal justification for the court's exercise of discretion (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 959) . The court also noted that the depositions were relevant to the issue of setting aside a default judgment and that plaintiffs suffered prejudice because of the denial of the depositions (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 959-960) . Because of these considerations, the order setting aside the default judgment was reversed (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 960) .

[b] Good Cause Defined

The facts and procedural background of Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682 , are discussed in § 83.80[3][c]. In Goodman, the court overturned a protective order requiring that plaintiffs pay defense counsel's travel expenses between California and Missouri, where depositions were to be held. The court stated that the bare statement that it would be necessary for defense counsel to travel to Missouri, coupled with a showing made on information and belief of the anticipated expenses for the trip, was insufficient as a factual exposition of a reasonable ground for the order (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819-820) . Thus, it was an abuse of discretion to grant the order in the absence of facts that would tend to prove annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 820) .

[c] Burden of Proof

In Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 , the Supreme Court was urged to formulate a general rule for class actions under which defendants would be required to show good cause for deposing unnamed members of the plaintiff class. The Court declined to do so, holding that the burden of showing good cause clearly rests with the party seeking to deny discovery when that party moves for a protective order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470) (7 Cal. 3d 832, 843) . The Court did find, however, that under the particular circumstances of the case at bar, the plaintiffs had shown good cause for requiring that defendant be responsible for compelling attendance at depositions of the unnamed plaintiffs (7 Cal. 3d 832, 841-842) [see § 83.86].

[d] Insufficient Showing

In Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 431, 15 Cal. Rptr. 132, 364 P.2d 308 , an action for modification of alimony and child support, defendant wife sought to take depositions of plaintiff husband. Plaintiff moved the court for an order forbidding the depositions or, in the alternative, either limiting their scope or requiring that the depositions be taken only on written interrogatories. The grounds for his motion were that extensive depositions had already been taken, and that defendant's sole purpose was to harass, embarrass, and oppress the plaintiff. The trial court issued an order forbidding the taking of the depositions.

The Supreme Court reversed by issuing a writ of mandate that required the trial court to set aside its order prohibiting the taking of depositions (56 Cal. 2d 431, 441) . The Court held that defendant's declarations thatwere presented in opposition to plaintiff's motion clearly indicated sufficient grounds for taking the depositions, as opposed to a mere desire to harass or annoy. Moreover, the declarations filed by plaintiff in support of this motion contained no factual basis for the claim that defendant sought the depositions for improper purposes. Thus, because the allegations contained in plaintiff's declaration were mere statements of his opinion or conclusion, they had no probative value and could not support the protective order that plaintiff sought (56 Cal. 2d 431, 440) . However, counsel should note that Justice Schauer strongly dissented, stating that plaintiff's declarations set forth six legal-size pages documenting defendant's vindictiveness and her attempts to ruin him and alienate the children. In Justice Schauer's view, these charges were not mere conclusionary statements but instead constituted harassment, embarrassment, or oppression as contemplated by the statute (56 Cal. 2d 431, 442-443) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Order Only on Showing of Good Cause

Hauk v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 295, 38 Cal. Rptr. 345, 391 P.2d 825 involved an action for an accounting of profits derived from promotion of a real estate project. Defendants refused to answer deposition questions concerning gains and profits from certain business transactions, claiming that plaintiff must first establish the right to an accounting. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion requiring further answers to those particular questions. Although defendants had sought a protective order pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470), alleging that the questions would have subjected them to annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, it appeared that the trial court did not base its decision on these grounds. Instead, the trial court based its order on the rationale that the orderly administration of justice required that plaintiff should establish his right to an accounting before defendants had to answer the questions relating to gains and profits.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate to the trial court, directing that it require defendants to answer the relevant questions. In so doing, the Court held that the trial court had abused the discretion conferred on it by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b) when it denied discovery in the absence of good cause for the denial (61 Cal. 2d 295, 298, 299) . The Court found no ground whatever to support the trial court's decision, in that the trial court had failed to find that the defendants would have been prejudiced in any way by having to answer plaintiff's questions immediately, as opposed to some time after plaintiff had established his right to an accounting (61 Cal. 2d 295, 298-299) .

Kramer v. Superior Court (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 753, 47 Cal. Rptr. 317 involved an action for defamation in which both compensatory and punitive damages were sought. While being deposed, defendant refused to answer 86 questions, and plaintiff thereupon moved for an order to compel answers. Defendant opposed the motion on the grounds that it was not timely made, that some of the questions were not relevant, that others inquired into privileged matters, and that plaintiff had failed to show good cause for compelling answers. The trial court denied the motion on the sole ground that plaintiff had not shown good cause for the discovery within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2036, which provided that a party who was required to show good cause to obtain discovery must show specific facts justifying discovery and that the matter is relevant to the subject matter of the action or reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010 now uses similar language to define matter subject to discovery, but the Civil Discovery Act does not expressly define "good cause").

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order denying the motion to compel answers, on the ground that the mere interposing of an objection does not shift the burden of good cause from the party seeking to deny discovery to the party seeking discovery without prior court intervention (237 Cal. App. 2d 753, 758-759) . Moreover, even if defendant's objections were considered to be a request for a protective order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470), the trial court was still in error, in that the declaration filed by defendant in opposition to plaintiff's motion could not be said to have constituted good cause sufficient to have justified a protective order (237 Cal. App. 2d 753, 759) .

[c] Insufficient Showing

Department of Health Services v. Superior Court (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 80, 163 Cal. Rptr. 414 involved an action by a hospital seeking compensatory and punitive damages from the state of California, the Department of Health Services, and some individual defendants for their failure to promptly reimburse the plaintiff. In addition to the civil action filed by the hospital, there was also a formal administrative hearing on the same matter, which had been brought before hearing officer, Takashi Kanenaga. In support of its civil action, plaintiff hospital gave notice of its intention to take the oral deposition of hearing officer Kanenaga. The defendants moved for a protective order that the deposition not be taken on various grounds, including that the taking would subject the deponent to annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, and that inquiry into the mental processes of a quasi-judicial hearing officer is improper. The trial court deniedthe motion for a protective order, and the court of appeal denied defendants' petition for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal held that a protective order would be improper because plaintiff was entitled to make inquiries relevant to the factual allegations in its complaint, especially those relating to alleged conversations that some of the individual defendants had with the hearing officers (104 Cal. App. 3d 80, 85) . However, if the deposition questions to the hearing officer were to go beyond the bounds of propriety in seeking information relating to his mental processes, then the proper procedure would be refusal to answer such questions, which refusal could then be reviewed by the trial court on a question-by-question basis (104 Cal. App. 3d 80, 85) .

§ 83.101 Opposing Motion for Protective Order for Deposition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]--Matter Is Discoverable and Discovery Should Be Permitted

[The following should be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities generally opposing a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.100), as well as additional points and authorities, when appropriate, opposing a protective order on more specific grounds (see, e.g., § 83.102 et seq.).]

THE DISCOVERY STATUTES SHOULD BE LIBERALLY CONSTRUED TO PERMIT DISCOVERY, THROUGH A DEPOSITION, OF MATTER THAT IS DISCOVERABLE UNDER SECTION 2017.010 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

A. Liberal Interpretation of Discovery Rules. The discovery statutes should be liberally construed in favor of discovery so that discovery is encouraged (see Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 377-378, 383, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266).

B. Matter That Is Discoverable. Unless limited by court order, any party may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action, so long as the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence. Discovery may relate to the claim or defense of the partyseeking discovery or of any other party to the action. Discovery may be obtained of the identity and location of persons having knowledge of any discoverable matter, as well as of the existence, description, nature, custody, condition, and location of any writing or other tangible thing (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010).

C. Disclosure as Matter of Right. The party seeking discovery is entitled to disclosure as a matter of right absent statutory or public policy considerations that clearly prohibit it (see Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 378, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266).

[Optional] D. Discovery Proper in Motion Matters. A protective order should not be granted if it is based on the ground that discovery is improper or unnecessary in motion matters (see Armstrong v. Gates (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 958-959, 108 Cal. Rptr. 604).

[Optional] E. Information Available From Affidavits and Declarations. It is improper for the court to grant a motion for a protective order preventing a party from taking a deposition on the ground that the information that would be obtained by taking the deposition may be obtained from affidavits or declarations (see Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 431, 439, 15 Cal. Rptr. 132, 364 P.2d 308 ; Armstrong v. Gates (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 959, 108 Cal. Rptr. 604).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposing a motion for a protective order on the grounds that the matter is discoverable and that the discovery statutes should be liberally construed to permit the deposition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010]. The form should be combined with the general points and authorities opposing a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.100 and, when appropriate, with points and authorities on more specific grounds [see, e.g., § 83.102 et seq.]. When monetary sanctions are sought, this form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80 et seq.

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing how the taking of the deposition will lead to the discovery of admissible evidence, and how the moving party's arguments of good cause for a protective order do not warrant a protective order.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of a protective order and monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liberal Interpretation of Discovery Rules

The facts and procedural background of Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 are set out in § 83.80[3][b] [see also discussion in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.80[3][a]]. In laying down guidelines for courts to follow when interpreting the provisions of the former Discovery

Act, the Court in Greyhound emphasized that courts must construe the discovery statutes liberally in favor of discovery, in order to accomplish the legislative purposes behind the former Discovery Act (56 Cal. 2d 355, 377-378) . These purposes are to be given effect rather than thwarted, so that discovery will be encouraged (56 Cal. 2d 355, 383) . The Court also discussed the standard objection that the requested discovery is a mere "fishing expedition" (56 Cal. 2d 355, 384) . The Court noted the fact that the Legislature, in enacting the former Discovery Act, can now be said to have authorized "fishing expeditions" (56 Cal. 2d 355, 385) . Improper methods of "fishing" may be controlled by the trial court under the powers granted under the discovery statutes, but the mere possibility of abuse may not in itself be grounds for prohibiting the "fishing expedition" per se (56 Cal. 2d 355, 384-385) .

[b] Disclosure as Matter of Right

The facts and procedural background of Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 are discussed in § 83.80[3][b] and in [a], above. In Greyhound, the leading case construing the former Discovery Act, the Supreme Court held that not only is there to be liberal construction of the former Discovery Act in favor of discovery, but that disclosure of information is a matter of right, absent some statutory or public policy considerations clearly forbidding it (56 Cal. 2d 355, 378) .

[c] Discovery Proper in Motion Matters

The facts and procedural background of Armstrong v. Gates (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 108 Cal. Rptr. 604 are discussed in § 83.100[3][a]. In Armstrong, the trial court had granted defendant's motion for a protective order on the rationale that in almost all instances, there is no need in motion matters to have oral testimony in court or by deposition. The court of appeal rejected this contention, stating that there is no question but that discovery is allowed on new factual issues in motion matters (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 959) . In support of this position, the court cited Oak Grove School Dist. v. City Title Ins. Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 678, 711-713, 32 Cal. Rptr. 288 , in which it was held that the party seeking discovery was entitled to depositions as a matter of right on a motion to tax costs (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 959) .

[d] Information Available From Affidavits and Declarations

The facts and procedural background of Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 431, 15 Cal. Rptr. 132, 364 P.2d 308 are discussed in § 83.100[3][d]. In Carlson, one of the grounds for the order prohibiting the taking of depositions sought by plaintiff husband was that the depositions were unnecessary because all the contentions of the deponents concerning the facts were presented in declarations or affidavits that were filed by the parties. The Supreme Court held that this assertion was without merit in that it misconceived the distinction between the bilateral deposition and the unilateral affidavit. An affidavit contains only those facts supporting the affiant's contentions. A deposition, on the other hand, affords an opportunity to go beyond the facts given in affidavits by allowing the affiant's opponent to inquire into further facts with the possibility of obtaining information that might rebut the factual claims made in the affidavit or might impeach the credibility thereof (56 Cal. 2d 431, 439) . Carlson thus holds that the contention of overlap between matters sought in depositions and matters presented in declarations or affidavits will not be sufficient to support a protective order prohibiting depositions.

The facts and procedural background of Armstrong v. Gates (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 108 Cal. Rptr. 604 are discussed in § 83.100[3][a], and in [c], above. In Armstrong, the trial court granted a protective order denying plaintiff the right to depose a key witness in an action to set aside a default, on the rationale that in motion matters the court should be able to make its decision on the basis of opposing declarations and affidavits, thus eliminating the need for taking depositions. The court of appeal rejected this reasoning, citing Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 431, 439, 15 Cal. Rptr. 132, 364 P.2d 308 (discussed above), for the proposition that the contention that a deposition is unnecessary if facts were previously given in affidavits misconceives the distinction between a bilateral examination and a unilateral affidavit (32 Cal. App. 3d 952, 959) .

§ 83.102 Opposing Motion for Protective Order for Deposition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470]--Partial Limitation Preferable to Outright Denial of Discovery

[The following should be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities generally opposing a motion for a protective order concerning a deposition (see, e.g., § 83.100), as well as additional points and authorities, when appropriate, opposing a protective order on more specific grounds (see, e.g., §§ 83.101, 83.103).]

PARTIAL LIMITATIONS ON DISCOVERY ARE PREFERABLE TO PROTECTIVE ORDERS DENYING DISCOVERY OUTRIGHT[, SUCH AS ORDERS THAT DEPOSITIONS NOT BE TAKEN].

A. Discovery May Be Permitted on Just Terms and Conditions Without Protective Order. The court may deny a motion for a protective order under Section 2025.420 of the Code of Civil Procedure in whole or in part, and in doing so order that the deponent provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on those terms and conditions that are just (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(c)).

B. Partial Limitations Preferable to Outright Denial of Discovery. Even when annoyance or oppression has been demonstrated, disclosure should not necessarily be denied. Instead, Section 2025.420(c) of the Code of Civil Procedure gives the court discretion to make any order that justice requires, and the court should use this discretion to impose partial limitations rather than outrightdenial of discovery (see Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 380, 383, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266).

[Optional] C. Partial Limitations on Disclosure of Confidential Information. When depositions seek records or testimony relating to confidential information, then, when possible, protective orders imposing partial limitations on discovery are preferable to orders that deny discovery outright (see Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 658, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977).

Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposing a motion for a protective order, to argue that if the court decides to grant the protective order, it should do so only in part, so as to allow the deposition to at least a limited extent [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420]. The form should be combined with the general points and authorities opposing a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.100 and, when appropriate, with points and authorities on more specific grounds [see, e.g., §§ 83.101, 83.103]. When monetary sanctions are sought, this form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80 et seq.

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing the necessity of the discovery, the relevancy of the information sought, and that at least partial discovery of the information is not outweighed by other considerations, such as the burden on the responding parties or the need to protect privacy. Counsel might also wish to suggest to the court someless onerous form of protective order, such as sealing or limited access, which may be used in lieu of an order eliminating depositions altogether.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to the obtaining of a protective order and monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partial Limitations Preferable to Outright Denial of Discovery

The facts and procedural background of Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 are set out in § 83.80[3][b] [see also discussion in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.80[3][a]]. In Greyhound, the Supreme Court gave guidelines for courts to follow in exercising their discretion in regard to discovery. The Court stated that even when annoyance or oppression is demonstrated, disclosure need not be denied in every instance. Rather, courts should attempt to make such orders as "justice requires," including, for example, imposition of costs of disclosure on the party seeking discovery, when the other party shows that discovery would cause an undue burden (56 Cal. 2d 355, 380) . Indeed, in exercising discretion, trial courts should remember that the Legislature has suggested that courts should impose partial limitations on discovery in lieu of outright denial of discovery, whenever possible (56 Cal. 2d 355, 383) .

[b] Partial Limitations on Disclosure of Confidential Information

The facts and procedural background of Valley Bank of Nevada v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 652, 125 Cal. Rptr. 553, 542 P.2d 977 are discussed in § 83.80[4][a]. In Valley Bank, the Supreme Court spoke of the necessity for balancing the need for disclosure against the need to protect privacy and confidentiality (15 Cal. 3d 652, 657-658) . The Court cited Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 for the proposition that the factors that should be considered by courts in making the balance include purpose of the information sought and effect of disclosure, and that, whenever possible, partial limitations on discovery are preferable to outright denial (15 Cal. 3d 652, 658) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Protective Order Prohibiting Party From Attending Deposition Is Improper

In Willoughby v. Superior Court (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 890, 892-893, 218 Cal. Rptr. 486 , a former employee brought an action against two supervisors of her former employer, alleging harassment, abuse, and intimidation. When defendants noticed plaintiff's deposition, plaintiff sought and obtained a protective order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420) that prohibited defendants from attending plaintiff's deposition. This order was based on a showing by plaintiff that if defendants attended her deposition she would become so upset that she would not be able to "remain calm and testify with a cool head." Defendants challenged the order by a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ, directing the trial court to vacate the order (172 Cal. App. 3d 890, 893) . The court held that because former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) provides that a protective order may exclude any person from attending a deposition "except the parties to the action and their officers or counsel" (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(b)(12)), the exclusion of parties from attending a deposition is expressly precluded for any reason (172 Cal. App. 3d 890, 892-893) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, such as one used in support of a petition for a writ of mandate, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE TRIAL COURT'S DISCOVERY ORDER OF _____ [specify date] IS IMPROPER BECAUSE A PROTECTIVE ORDER PURSUANT TO SECTION 2025.420 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE MAY BE MADE ONLY ON PROPERLY NOTICED MOTION AND AFTER A HEARING.

Ex Parte Protective Order During Deposition Not Permissible. A protective order made during a deposition pursuant to Sections 2025.420 and 2025.470 of the Code of Civil Procedure to terminate the examination or limit the scope and manner of taking the deposition may only be made pursuant to a motion meeting the notice and hearing requirements generally applicable to motions, and may not be made by the court ex parte (see St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 82, 86, 202 Cal. Rptr. 571).

[2] Comments

This form may be used by a party taking a deposition to support a contention that an ex parte protective order made during a deposition pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470, terminating the examination or limiting the scope and manner of taking the deposition, was improper. The ground of the contention is that a protective order during deposition pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470 may only be made on a properly noticed motion and after a hearing.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the invalidity of the ex parte protective order. For example, it may be combined with points and authorities supporting a petition for writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085 and 1086, directing the trial court to vacate the order. The foregoing points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should include argument showing that the lower court made a protective order under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.420, 2025.470 and that the propounding party was not given notice of the motion pursuant to which the order was made, or was not given an opportunity to be heard before the lower court made the order.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ex Parte Protective Order During Deposition Not Permissible

St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 82, 202 Cal. Rptr. 571 involved an insurance bad-faith action against two corporate defendants. The parties to the action agreed that plaintiffs' depositions would be taken first, followed by the depositions of defendants' representatives noticed by plaintiffs. After deposition of the first plaintiff had continued for some 12 sessions, plaintiff's attorney notified defense counsel by telephone that he would seek a protective order terminating the deposition on the day following the telephone conversation. The following morning plaintiff's attorney filed with the court what was termed an ex parte request for a protective order. Defense counsel were given copies of this request when they appeared to oppose the request on the morning following the telephone conversation. The trial court declined to accept papers in opposition to the request offered by defense counsel, hear oral argument, permit the presence of a court reporter, or speak with defense counsel informally before ruling on plaintiff's request. An hour after plaintiff filed its request, the court handed down a protective order pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420) terminating the deposition of the first plaintiff until further order of the court, prohibitingdeposition of the second plaintiff, and directing that deposition of the persons noticed by plaintiff begin in sequence and without delay. Defendants then filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to set aside its protective order (156 Cal. App. 3d 82, 86) . The court preliminarily noted the general rules that notice of motion must be given whenever the order sought may affect the rights of an adverse party and that a statute that is silent on the point should not be interpreted as authorizing an ex parte application for an order (156 Cal. App. 3d 82, 85) . The court stated that one might conclude from the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(d) that a protective order could be issued on motion of a party or of a deponent without giving opposing counsel an opportunity to be heard. However, the court interpreted the fact that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470) refers to issuance of a protective order on motion, rather than on an ex parte application, as imposing the notice and hearing requirements generally applicable to motions. The court stated that its view was strengthened by additional language in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.470) that the deposition can be suspended for the time necessary to make a motion and order, on demand by the opposing party. This language made the expedited ex parte proceedings used by the trial court unnecessary (156 Cal. App. 3d 82, 85-86) .

Note that St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. construed law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

FOR GOOD CAUSE SHOWN, THE COURT MAY GRANT LEAVE TO TAKE A SUBSEQUENT DEPOSITION OF A NATURAL PERSON.

A. Court May Grant Leave on Showing of Good Cause. For good cause shown, the court may grant leave to take a subsequent deposition of a natural person, including that of a party to the action, regardless of whether the moving party was the party who gave or who received notice of the deposition of that natural person (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in supporting a motion for an order granting leave to take a subsequent deposition of a natural person [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.610]. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.610, no subsequent deposition of a natural person may be taken except by stipulation or court order on a showing of good cause. This section does permit one subsequent deposition of a natural person who has previously been examined (1) as a result of that person's designation to testify on behalf of an organization, or (2) pursuant to a court order under Code Civ. Proc. § 485.230, for the limited purpose of discovering under Code Civ. Proc. § 485.230 the identity, location, and value of property in which the deponent has an interest [see Optional Paragraph C]. With appropriate modifications, this form may used to oppose points and authorities set out in § 83.81, which support a motion for a protective order directing that a deposition not be taken at all on the ground that the deponent has been previously deposed.

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to proceedings for leave to take a subsequent deposition, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Subsequent Deposition When New Facts Arise

The facts and procedural background of Carlson v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 431, 15 Cal. Rptr. 132, 364 P.2d 308 are set out in § 83.100[3][d]. In Carlson, defendant wife sought depositions with respect to her motion for modification of child support and alimony based on changed circumstances. Plaintiff husband moved to prohibit the depositions on the ground, inter alia, that there had been prior extensive depositions at the time of the original divorce trial. The Supreme Court noted that the new depositions concerned issues of fact that did not exist at the time of the original trial, and that it would be an unwarranted limitation on discovery if it were to be held that a litigant has no right to inquire into matters relating to new factual issues merely because she had taken depositions before the existence of the facts that gave rise to that issue (56 Cal. 2d 431, 439) .

Note that Carlson construed law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 83.02[3]].

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in supporting a motion for an order sustaining an objection to the form of a written deposition question and for the imposition of a monetary sanction [Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.040, 2028.070(c)]. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.040(b)]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state the reasons for the objections to the questions and any facts to support those reasons, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2028.040 effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction whenit is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Objection to Form of Written Deposition Question

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.040(a), a party waives objection to the form of any written question for a deposition unless the party timely serves the specific objection on all parties entitled to notice of the deposition within 15 days after service of the question. This period is extended if service is made by mail [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050]. After having made service, the objecting party may promptly move the court to sustain the objection. Unless the court sustains the objection, the deposition officer will propound to the deponent any question to which objection is made subject to that objection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.040(b)].

When an objection is made based on privilege or work product protection rather than the form of the written question, a motion to sustain is not necessary. In this event the party propounding the question must make a motion to overrule the objection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.050(b); see § 83.160].

A. Party May Move for Order Overruling Objection. When a party objects to a written question for a deposition on the ground that it calls for information that is privileged or protected work product under Section 2018.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, the party propounding the question to which the objection is made may then make a motion that the court overrule the objection, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of the issue presented (*Code Civ. B. Court May Order That Objection Be Overruled. The court may order that an objection under Section 2028.040 or 2028.050of the Code of Civil Procedure be overruled (Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.070(c)).

[Optional] C. [a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in supporting a motion for an order overruling an objection to a written deposition question that is based on privilege or work product protection, and for the imposition of a monetary sanction [Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.050, 2028.070(c)]. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.050(b)]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11]. For memoranda of points and authorities relating to specific grounds of evidentiary privilege or other protection from discovery, see generally Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the question does not call for information that is privileged or is protected work product, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2028.050 effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Objection to Written Deposition Question Based on Privilege or Work Product Protection

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.050(a), a party who objects to a written question for a deposition on the ground of privilege or work product must serve a specific objection to the question on all parties entitled to notice of the deposition within 15 days after service of the question. This period is extended if service is by mail [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050]. If the objecting party fails to timely serve the objection, he or she waives the objection. After being served, the propounding party may promptly move the court to overrule the objection. Unless the court overrules the objection, the deposition officer will not propound to the deponent the question to which the objection is made [Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.050; cf. Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.040]..

When an objection based on the form of the question is made, a motion to overrule the objection is not necessary. In this event the objecting party must move to sustain the objection [Code Civ. Proc. § 2028.040(b); see § 83.150].

This form of points and authorities is for use in seeking a protective order in the context of a deposition by written questions [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2028.010, 2028.070]. The motion must be made before the court in which the action is pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.020(b); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420], and must be accompanied by a declaration stating factsshowing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420(a)]. The form should be combined as directed with the general points and authorities supporting a motion for a protective order set out in § 83.80. When monetary sanctions are sought, this form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should state facts showing need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense, should state facts and insert argument of the specific reasons why the written deposition should be restricted by the particular protective order sought, and should otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification, because Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring that the court impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that he or she acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Deposition Taken Only on Oral Examination

In Beverly Hills Nat'l Bank & Trust Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 195 Cal. App. 2d 861, 16 Cal. Rptr. 236 , an action for an accounting and constructive trust, defendant sought to depose a nonresident witness on oral examination. Although defendant had stated that the person to be deposed was a material witness who could shed light on whether the property in question was separate or community in character (a principal issue), the trial court sustained plaintiff's objection to the proposed deposition, whichwas based on insufficient grounds for the deposition. Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ, ordering that the deposition be taken (195 Cal. App. 2d 861, 868) . Although the main ground for error was that the trial court placed the burden of showing good cause on the examining party rather than on the party seeking to oppose the discovery, the court also noted that if good cause is shown, the trial court may exercise its discretion to overrule the choice of the examining party whether to conduct depositions on oral examination or by written questions. Some of the factors to be considered in the exercise of this discretion are convenience and expense (195 Cal. App. 2d 861, 867) .

Note that Beverly Hills construed law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it appears to remain consistent with current provisions.

CHAPTER 84 DISCOVERY: INTERROGATORIES
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-84 California Points & Authorities § 84.02

§ 84.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified at Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Interrogatories

Civil discovery by written interrogatories is governed primarily by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.010-2030.410. Judicial Council form interrogatories are authorized and governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.710-2033.740. Limits on the use of interrogatories in limited civil cases are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 94(a).

[3] Case Law Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

The Civil Discovery Act was passed in 2004 and became effective July 1, 2005. It repealed and renumbered the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 but did not substantively change the law of civil discovery [Stats. 2004, ch. 182 §§ 22, 23, 61]. Thus cases decided under the 1986 Act remain controlling authority.

A considerable body of case law interpreted the discovery provisions of the Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9), which preceded the 1986 Act. Although the 1986 Act, which became operative July 1, 1987, implemented numerous changes in the prior law, it also continued provisions of the prior law in many other instances, or even codified decisionsinterpreting the prior law. Decisions construing this prior law are therefore cited as persuasive, rather than controlling, authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular type of discovery motion, such as motion to compel discovery or a motion for a protective order.

In many cases it will be appropriate to combine them with additional memoranda set out in the related discovery chapters. In particular, they may be combined with the general memoranda for limiting or regulating discovery set out in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , or with the memoranda for limiting discovery based on the evidentiary privileges, work product protection, or other protective provisions found in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

It may also be appropriate to modify the memoranda this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial or appellate brief or office memoranda relating to discovery practice.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE AN ORDER COMPELLING _____ [specify party served with interrogatories, e.g., DEFENDANT] TO ANSWER _____ [specify set and numbers, e.g., INTERROGATORIES 1-10, PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET], BECAUSE _____ [specify party served with interrogatories, e.g., DEFENDANT] HAS FAILED TO SERVE A TIMELY RESPONSE. IF THE MOTION IS GRANTED, THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT _____ [HE/SHE/ IT or THEY] ACTED WITH SUBSTANTIAL JUSTIFICATION OR THAT OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE THE IMPOSITION OF THE SANCTION UNJUST.

A. Statutory Authority. If a party to whom interrogatories have been directed fails to serve a timely response, the party propounding the interrogatories may move for an order compelling response (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290).

b. Burden of Justification on Nonresponding Party. The service and filing of interrogatories pursuant to Section 2030.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure places the burden on the interrogated party to respond by answer, the production of writings, or objection. The obligation of response must be satisfied unless excused by a protective order obtained on a factual showing of good cause why no response should be given (Coriell v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 487, 492, 114 Cal. Rptr. 310).

[Optional] C. Guardian Ad Litem May Be Ordered to Verify Responses on Behalf of Ward. If a party to whom interrogatories have been directed is incompetent and represented by a guardian ad litem, that guardian may be ordered to verify proper responses to interrogatories on behalf of the ward (Regency Health Services, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 1504-1505, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95).

D. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel a response to interrogatories, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2030.290(c)).

[Optional] E. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (*Cal. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use by a party who has served written interrogatories on another party but has not received responses to any of them. This form may also be used in support of a motion to compel answers to specific interrogatories in a set, if no answers at all to those interrogatories have been served. If anobjection to interrogatories has been served and the propounding party wishes further answers to those interrogatories, § 84.11 should be used in lieu of this form.

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 84.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should identify the interrogatories that were not answered by set and number, and show that the date by which responses were due has passed. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms of motion for use in seeking an order compelling response to interrogatories if no responses have been served, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 194, Discovery: Interrogatories (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Justification on Nonresponding Party

Coriell v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 487, 114 Cal. Rptr. 310 was a class action in which plaintiffs alleged deliberate and negligent mislabeling of packaged meat sold by Safeway and sought injunctive relief and damages. In its answer, Safeway claimed that the action could not be maintained as a class action. Plaintiffs served 167 interrogatories. Safeway answered three of them and responded with motions to extend its time to answer or object and to defer its obligation to respond to the unanswered interrogatories, relating to its liability, until the trial court determined the worthiness of the class at a scheduled hearing. The court required both parties to designate the interrogatories that should be answered before the class action hearing. It ultimately entered an order that Safeway need not respond to any of the unanswered interrogatories until after the hearing to determine the worthiness of the class action, and then only as required by subsequent court order. Plaintiffs filed an application for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ, stating that the trial court acted in excess of its jurisdiction by (1) placing the burden on plaintiffs to demonstrate that they were entitled to answers to interrogatories, rather than on Safeway to establish factually that it was entitled to a protective order against being required to answer; and (2) denying plaintiffs discovery on issues relevant to the subject matter of class worthiness of the lawsuit (39 Cal. App. 3d 487, 491-492) . In discussing the burden of persuasion, the court stated that the service and filing of interrogatories pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.010 et seq.) places the burden on the interrogated party to respond by answer or objection (39 Cal. App. 3d 487, 492) . That obligation of response must be satisfied unless excused by a protective order obtained on a factual showing of good cause for not responding (39 Cal. App. 3d 487, 492) .

Although the court made general statements relating to answering interrogatories in the context of a protective order, the statements appear to be general enough to apply to the duty of any party to respond to interrogatories, and could properly be used in support of a motion to compel answers to interrogatories in a situation in which there has been no response. Coriell interpreted Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 prior to its 1986 repeal and reenactment, which, among other changes, limits the number of specially prepared interrogatories that may be served by one party to another party as a matter of right [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.010-2030.070].

[b] Guardian Ad Litem May Be Ordered to Verify Responses on Behalf of Ward

Regency Health Services, Inc. v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 involved a personal injury action against a nursing home brought by an incompetent plaintiff who was represented by a guardian ad litem. Plaintiff moved for a protective order that she be relieved from responding to interrogatories propounded by defendant. Part of the reasoning for plaintiff's motion was that as an incompetent, she was legally disabled from verifying interrogatory responses and that as a nonparty, the guardian was not legally competent to respond to discovery. In ruling for plaintiff, the trial court cited former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(g) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.250(a)), which provides that answers to interrogatories must be under oath and signed by the party to whom they are directed. Defendant petitioned for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and issue a new and different order denying the motion (64 Cal. App. 4th1496, 1505) . The court framed the issue as whether a guardian ad litem for an incompetent plaintiff has the duty and authority to verify interrogatory responses on behalf of the plaintiff. The court said that a guardian ad litem is an officer of the court appointed to represent a ward in litigation, and to protect and promote the ward's interests. Part of that protective function involves ensuring that the ward complies with his or her legal obligations. Every litigant has a legal obligation to comply with the provisions of the Civil Discovery Act. Responding to interrogatories is one of those obligations, and no exemption is provided for litigants represented by guardians (64 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 1497-1498) . The court considered whether the term "party" as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.250 encompasses a guardian acting on behalf of the real party in interest. It observed that no case has been found that has ruled on the precise question, opining that this may be because the answer has always been assumed (64 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 1499) . The court said there were two possible constructions of the term: the strictly literal and the one that would include the guardian ad litem as a substitute for the real party when the real party in interest is represented by a guardian ad litem. After a thorough discussion of the legal ramifications and consequences of each construction, the court concluded that a guardian ad litem has the authority, subject to the court's ultimate supervision, to verify proper responses to interrogatories on behalf of the ward. It said that to conclude otherwise would exempt a ward from discovery (64 Cal. App. 4th 1496, 1499-1505) .

[a] Statutory Authority

In Sinaiko Healthcare Consulting, Inc. v. Pacific Healthcare Consultants (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 390, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 751 , a lawsuit alleging breach of contract and related causes of action, a defense attorney appealed from an order imposing a monetary sanction for failure to comply with an order compelling responses to interrogatories. After the deadline for a timely response to the discovery requests, plaintiff served motions to compel responses. However, before the motions were filed, the attorney provided responses and answered some of the questions by indicating that his clients were unable to respond because they lacked knowledge. The attorney did not file any opposition to the motions to compel responses, and the motions were granted. When no further interrogatory answers were provided, the trial court granted monetary sanctions based on failure to comply with the order compelling responses.

The court of appeal addressed whether, under Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290(b), the trial court has the authority to hear a motion to compel responses to written interrogatories when the party on whom the interrogatories were served fails to serve any response within the required time, thereby waiving all objections, but after the motion is served, provides an untimely response that the propounding party deems inadequate (148 Cal. App. 4th 390, 390,55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 751).

The court held that the mere service of an untimely interrogatory response, which may or may not reflect a good faith effort to comply with the party's discovery obligations, does not divest the trial court of authority to hear and grant a motion to compel responses under Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290(b). Whether the trial court should proceed with a motion to compel responses when there has been an untimely interrogatory response is within the court's "sound discretion" (148 Cal. App. 4th 390, 408-409) . Moreover, a response to some interrogatories does not divest a trial court of authority to compel answers to those interrogatories for which there was no appropriate response (148 Cal. App. 4th 390, 406) .

[b] Burden of Justification on Nonresponding Party

West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295 was an action in which plaintiff alleged that certain "sales" transactions from defendant were actually loans to plaintiff at usurious rates of interest. A counterclaim was also filed. Plaintiff propounded interrogatories and defendant answered some and filed objections to the rest. The trial court overruled some of the objections and sustained others, and plaintiff brought a proceeding in mandate to compel the trial court to set aside its order sustaining the objections. In reviewing the objections, the appellate court noted that a litigant is entitled to demand answer to its interrogatories as a matter of right and without prior showing, unless the other party objects and shows cause why the questions are not in the purview of the code section (56 Cal. 2d 407, 422) .

Note

that Code Civ. Proc. § 2030, as it existed at the time the order in West Pico was issued, required the objecting party to bring the objections on for hearing. The 1961 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 substituted the right to state objections in lieu of responses, with the proponent of the interrogatories then able to move for an order requiring further response. The court in West Pico commented that this amendment had the effect of placing the burden on the proponent rather than the objector (56 Cal. 2d 407, 414 n.1). The Court's similar statement in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 379, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 , however, has been interpreted to mean that the burden of obtaining a judicial determination of the objections, not the burden of proof, was shifted to the party propounding the interrogatories [see Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 220, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457] .

Although the court in West Pico was dealing with a situation in which responses had been made to interrogatories and the responses were unsatisfactory, its statement that the party propounding interrogatories is entitled to an answer as a matter of right appears to apply to the situation in which no responses at all have been made. Former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc.§§ 2030.010 and 2030.020), which permit a party to serve written interrogatories on another party, does not require any showing of good cause for serving interrogatories [see Coy v. Superior Court of Contra Costa County (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 220-221, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457] . Therefore, the party bringing the motion supported by the memorandum set out in the foregoing form could argue that the burden of justifying a lack of response to interrogatories is on the party on whom interrogatories were served.

Welgoss v. End (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 982, 61 Cal. Rptr. 52 was an action to establish paternity. Defendant served interrogatories on plaintiff and 10 months later plaintiff served the answers. After the court granted defendant's motions for further answers to those interrogatories, defendant made a motion to dismiss the action. The court dismissed under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290) for plaintiff's failure to comply with an order that she file a further answer to one of the interrogatories. Plaintiff's attorneys filed motions under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290, which supersedes Code Civ. Proc. § 473 with respect to interrogatories) to set aside the order and judgment of dismissal, and the court conditionally granted the motion vacating the judgment if plaintiff: (1) paid $1,000 in fees to defendant's attorney and (2) answered fully the interrogatory as previously ordered. Plaintiff appealed from the order conditionally vacating the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed the order except for the provision requiring the payment of fees to defendant's attorney, which it reversed. In finding that the condition that plaintiff answer the interrogatory fully and in detail was entirely reasonable and proper, the court stated that defendant was entitled to demand answers to his interrogatories as a matter of right unless plaintiff had stated a valid objection to them (252 Cal. App. 2d 982, 991) .

[c] Court Must Impose Monetary Sanctions Absent Specific Findings

The facts and procedural background of Sinaiko Healthcare Consulting, Inc. v. Pacific Healthcare Consultants (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 390, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 751 are discussed in § 84.10[4][a]. In that case, the court of appeal affirmed that the violation of an order compelling responses was a proper basis for a monetary sanction under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.290(c) and 2023.030. Neither a 45-day limit nor a meet-and-confer requirement applied to a motion for sanctions for failure to obey a court order compelling answers (148 Cal. App. 4th 390, 411) .

IF THE MOTION IS GRANTED, THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT _____ [HE/SHE/IT or THEY] ACTED WITH SUBSTANTIAL JUSTIFICATION OR THAT OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE THE IMPOSITION OF THE SANCTION UNJUST.

A. Motion to Compel Further Response to Interrogatories. If the propounding party, on receipt of a response to interrogatories, deems that (1) an answer to a particular interrogatory is evasive or incomplete, (2) an exercise of the option to produce documents under Section 2030.230 of the Code of Civil Procedure isunwarranted or the required specification of those documents is inadequate, or (3) an objection to an interrogatory is without merit or too general, that party may move for an order compelling a further response (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300(a)).

B. Scope of Examination by Written Interrogatories. Any party may obtain discovery within the scope fixed by Section 2017.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, and subject to the restrictions set forth in Section 2019.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, by propounding to any other party to the action written interrogatories to be answered under oath (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.010(a)). Unless otherwise limited by order of the court in accordance with Sections 2016.010 through 2036.050 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the Discovery Act, any party may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.010, 2030.010(a); Perkins v. Superior Court (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 761, 765, 173 Cal. Rptr. 596). Discovery may relate to the claim or defense of the party seeking discovery or of any other party to the action. Discovery may be obtained of the identity and location of persons having knowledge of any discoverable matter, as well as of the existence, description, nature, custody, condition, and location of any document, tangible thing, or land and other property (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.010, 2030.010(b)).

C. Burden on Party Raising Objections. There is no requirement of a showing of good cause for serving interrogatories, and the burden is on the party raising objections to show that the objections are valid (Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 220-221, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457).

[Optional] D. Permissible Subject Matter. An interrogatory may relate to whether another party is making a certain contention, or to the facts, witnesses, and writings on which a contention is based. An interrogatory is not objectionable because an answer to it involves an opinion or contention that relates to fact or the application of law to fact, or would be based on information obtained or legal theories developed in anticipation of litigation or in preparation for trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.010(b)).

[Optional] E. Requirement of Reasonable Effort to Obtain Information. If the responding party does not have personal knowledge sufficient to respond fully to an interrogatory, that party must so state, but must make a reasonable and good-faith effort to obtain the information by inquiry to other natural persons or organizations, except when the information is equally available to the propounding party (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.220; see West v. Johnson & Johnson Products, Inc. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 874, 220 Cal. Rptr. 437).

[Optional] F. Untimely Response Waives Objection. Unless the time has been extended or shortened by the court on motion by either party, or service is made by mail, a party must respond to interrogatories within 30 days after service of the interrogatories. In unlawful detainer proceedings, the party must respond within five days from the date of service unless the court has shortened the time for response (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.260(a); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050 (extension of time when service by mail)). If a party to whom interrogatories have been directed fails to serve a timely response, that party waives any objection to the interrogatories, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under Section 2018.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, unless the court relieves that party from the waiver (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290).

[Optional] G. Adequate Response Identifying Documents Must Include Document's Description. If an interrogatory asks the responding party to identify a document, an adequate response must include a description of the document (Hernandez v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 285, 293, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 883).

H. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel further response to interrogatories, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2030.300(d)).

[Optional] I. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1030(a)).

This memorandum may be used to support a motion to compel further responseto interrogatories. It is intended to be used in support of a motion to compel further response to interrogatories if (1) an answer is evasive or incomplete; (2) an exercise of the option to produce documents under Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230 is unwarranted or the required specification of those documents is inadequate; or (3) an objection to an interrogatory is without merit or too general [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300].

This form contains general points and authorities and may be combined with more specific forms, such as memoranda relating to various types of questions and objections, relevance of particular matters to the subject matter, and applicability of particular privileges, which are set forth in Part I of this form. This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 84.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should discuss the interrogatories on which the motion is based, as well as the responses, by referring to the declaration or other document in which the interrogatories and answers are set forth [see, e.g., declarations in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 194, Discovery: Interrogatories , (Matthew Bender)]. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2030.300(d) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Procedural Requirements

A motion for an order compelling a further response must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by it. The notice of motion must be given within 45 days of the service of the response, or any supplemental response, if served personally, or by any specific later date to which the parties have agreed in writing [Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300]. When service is made by mail, the 45-day period is extended [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050 (allowing for extension of time under Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a))]. If the notice of motion is untimely, the propounding party waives any right to compel a further response to the interrogatories [Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300(c)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Examination by Written Interrogatories

Perkins v. Superior Court (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 761, 173 Cal. Rptr. 596 was an action for personal injuries against a manufacturer and seller of an automobile battery that exploded in plaintiff's face when he attempted to remove the battery cap. Plaintiff served interrogatories requesting information concerning any other lawsuits filed against defendants arising out of similar battery explosions. After defendants objected that the interrogatories were overly broad, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for further answers, but restricted the scope of response to actions filed against defendants within two years prior to plaintiff's injury and to accidents involving pulling stuck battery caps. Defendants answered, stating that they had no records of the lawsuits, after which plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to remove the restrictions on the scope of responses.

The court of appeal let a writ of mandate issue, holding that while the interrogatories as propounded were perhaps overly broad, the trial court's limitations too severely restricted their scope. A party to a civil action is entitled to discovery by written interrogatory of any matter not privileged that is relevant to the subject matter of the pending action [citing former Code Civ. Proc. § 2016(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010) and Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 prior to its 1986 reenactment]. The restriction regarding filing dates was an abuse of discretion because it prevents discovery of other similar actions filed and served after the date of the alleged injury, particularly because defendants did not show that the search would require undue effort and expense. Moreover, discovery should not have been limited to injuries caused by the pulling of a stuck battery cap, because similar if not identical forces could cause the same defect, and the causal connection is for determination by the trier of fact (118 Cal. App. 3d 761, 765-766) .

[b] Burden on Party Raising Objections

Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457 , was an action for damages for abuse of process. Plaintiff alleged special, general, and punitive damages, and served interrogatories on three defendants. One defendant answered a few of the interrogatories, objected to others on the grounds that they were irrelevant or involved a privileged communication, and left several to which he neither replied nor objected. The other two defendants each answered a few of the interrogatories. They objected to others on the ground that the answers could be found in a deposition previously taken or that they were irrelevant. The trial court denied plaintiff's motions for orders requiring further response.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the orders denying the motions for further answers and to enter orders requiring the answers. The Court found that defendants' objections to the interrogatories were insufficient to support the trial court's order, rejecting their contention that the order should be sustained because plaintiff failed to meet the burden of proving that his interrogatories merited further answer. The only burden on the party seeking reply to his or her interrogatories despite objections is to move to require further answers. The objecting party has the burden of showing that the interrogatories were interposed for improper purposes (58 Cal. 2d 210, 220) . Because former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.010 et seq.) does not require any showing of good cause for the serving of interrogatories, the burden of showing good cause required for some of the other discovery procedures does not exist in the case of interrogatories. Thus, it would be anomalous to hold that the mere interposing of an objection creates a burden when none existed before (58 Cal. 2d 210, 220-221) .

Coy interpreted Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 prior to its 1986 repeal and reenactment. The reenacted statute also does not require any showing of good cause for the serving of interrogatories. It does, however, limit the number of specially prepared interrogatories that may be served by one party to another party as a matter of right [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.010-2030.070].

[c] Requirement of Reasonable Effort to Obtain Information

In West v. Johnson & Johnson Products, Inc. (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 220 Cal. Rptr. 437 , plaintiff contracted toxic shock syndrome and brought an action based on strict product liability. The jury found for plaintiff. Defendant moved for a new trial and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The trial court denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict but granted the motion for new trial on the ground of excessive damages. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. In its decision it addressed defendant's claims of error regarding jury instructions, one of which was the willful suppression of evidence based on the allegation that defendant had intentionally withheld certain research notebooks. Plaintiff had made a demand for the production and inspection of documents pertaining to testing and also propounded interrogatories, one of which asked for a description of the tests performed. Defendant offered to make all the records available for inspection. Its response to the interrogatories was that it had identified and produced for plaintiff's inspection all the records pertaining to testing. During a deposition plaintiff learned of the existence of test research notebooks maintained by defendant's parent company and which were not produced for inspection, and requested an instruction on the willful suppression of evidence. In upholding the appropriateness of the instruction, the court said that a party served with interrogatories is required to make a reasonable investigation to ascertain facts when it has available to it sources of information pertaining to the matters in the interrogatories. Defendant was required to investigate in order to provide full and accurate answers to plaintiff's interrogatories. An investigation would have been neither burdensome nor unreasonable because defendant had a lot of discourse and technical interaction with its parent company (174 Cal. App. 3d 831, 874) .

[d] Adequate Response Identifying Documents Must Include Document's Description

In Hernandez v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 285, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 883 , wrongful death plaintiffs in a complex case against numerous defendants disputed defendants' interrogatory requests for identification of documents, based on privilege. The trial court entered an order granting one defendant's motion to compel further responses, and issued a case-management order requiring disclosure of plaintiffs' medical experts and other facts. Plaintiffs filed petitions for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal held, in part, that if an interrogatory asks the responding party to identify a document, an adequate response must include a description of the document. Interrogatories may be used to discover the existence of documents in the other party's possession. Thus, a responding party may object to an interrogatory that seeks privileged information by clearly stating the objection and the particular privilege invoked. However, the existence of a document containing privileged information is not privileged (112 Cal. App. 4th 285, 293) . Accordingly, the trial court did not err in compelling further responses, even though its order incorrectly characterized the required response as a "privilege log." Although it may have used the "incorrect jargon," the court adequately explained its ruling in the oral proceedings. The court orally warned petitioners not to use a boilerplate response in order to identify documents, but to relate each document to the specific interrogatory requesting the identification (112 Cal. App. 4th 285, 294) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Burden on Party Raising Objections

In Southern Pac. Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 3 Cal. App. 3d 195, 83 Cal. Rptr. 231 , disapproved on other grounds in Kadelbach v. Amaral (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 814, 822-823, 107 Cal. Rptr. 720 , defendant in a wrongful death action sought a writ directing the trial court to compel plaintiffs to answer four interrogatories seeking detailed facts underlying plaintiffs' allegations of negligence. Plaintiffs resisted answering on the ground that the material requested was protected as attorney's work product. In granting the writ, the court stated that, at the hearing of a motion to require answers to interrogatories, the objector bears the burden of establishing a valid objection (3 Cal. App. 3d 195, 198) .

Columbia Broadcasting Sys., Inc. v. Superior Court (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 12, 69 Cal. Rptr. 348 was an action for damages for plagiarism, breach of an implied-in-fact contract, and breach of trust and confidence. In overturning the trial court's order that defendants answer three interrogatories, and upholding the order on a fourth, the appellate court stated that at the hearing of a motion to compel under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300), the burden is on the party interrogated to show facts from which the trial court might find that the interrogatories were imposed for improper purposes (263 Cal. App. 2d 12, 18) . Therefore, in the case before the court, the burden was on defendants to show that their objections were valid (263 Cal. App. 2d 12, 18) .

[b] Requirement of Reasonable Effort to Obtain Information

In Stewart v. Colonial W. Agency, Inc. 87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 115 , an action for breach of contract wrongful termination, defendant's attorneys argued that the trial court's order compelling further responses and awarding sanctions was erroneous, in part, because plaintiff's attorney failed to engage in a good faith effort to meet and confer. At a hearing on the motion to compel, the trial court specifically found that the attorney's meet and confer efforts complied with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.480). The court of appeal agreed. Citing Obregon v. Superior Court, (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 431, 79 Cal. Rptr. 62 (discussed below), the court of appeal explained that determining whether an attempt at informal resolution is adequate involves the exercise of discretion. Relevant consideration include the history of the litigation, the nature of the interaction between counsel, the nature of the issues, the type and scope of discovery requested, the prospects of success, and similar factors (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1015-1016) . Apart from anything pertaining to the history of the litigation or the prior interaction between the parties of which the trial court may have been aware, the court of appeal noted a number of factors appearing in the record supported the finding of good faith. The objections were made during a deposition, so counsel had an opportunity to discuss the relatively simple matter face-to-face at the time the discovery dispute arose. There was need for immediate action because of the upcoming trial date and cut off dates for discovery and discovery motions. Moreover, defense attorney's announced unavailability for two long periods before trial left no time to conduct a lengthy meet and confer and file a discovery motion before the deadline. Finally, in his letter to plaintiff's attorney, the defense attorney did not himself suggest a date or time at which he would be available and did not indicate any intention to compromise. On these facts, the trial court did not err in finding that the efforts undertaken by plaintiff's counsel to meet and confer were adequate (87 Cal. App. 4th 1006, 1015-1016) .

In Obregon v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , the court of appeal upheld the trial court's decision that a greater effort at informal resolution should have been made (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 433) . In this action for sexual harassment and related claims, plaintiff's discovery request was overbroad, and responded to objections with a single brief letter late in the relevant time period. Moreover, when moving to compel, plaintiff offered no reason to justify the breadth of the request, which reasonably suggested a lack of a proper discovery objective. While a single letter, followed by a response refusing concessions, may be a sufficient effort in light of some other circumstances, in this case these facts amply supported the trial court's ruling that plaintiff should have made a greater effort, whether viewed according to the substantial evidence standard, the abuse of discretion standard, or an amalgam of the two (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 432-433) . What constitutes a reasonable good faith effort to arrive at an informal resolution varies with the circumstances of each case, the consideration of which are in the trial court's discretion (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 432-433) . Relevant considerations include whether the discovering party has demonstrated a legitimate discovery objective; the time available before the motion filing deadline, and the extent to which the responding party was complicit in the lapse of time; and whether, from the perspective of a reasonable person in the position of the discovering party, additional efforts appeared likely to be fruitful (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 432) .

[c] Adequate Response Identifying Documents Must Include Document's Description

The factual and procedural background of People ex rel. Lockyer v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 324 is discussed in § 85.10[4][a]. In the underlying case, petitioner state of California filed an action against real parties in interest, a corporation and related entities, alleging violations of statutes governing the practice of optometry. In this writ proceeding, the state sought to overturn the superior court's order granting real party in interest's motion to compel and denying their motion to quash and for a protective order. The state argued that the court abused its discretion entering its discovery orders because the state raised timely objections under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.) on the grounds of privilege to real party in interest's request for production of documents and served a privilege log. The court of appealed granted the writ, concluding that Best Products, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 (discussed below) dictated that the court erred in overruling the state's privilege objections (122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1075) . Because the state timely objected on the grounds of privilege, it preserved its objections, regardless of whether the objections were sufficiently detailed in their response or privilege log. Thus, as a matter of law, the superior court could not find that the state had waived these privileges under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300) (122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1074-1075) .

The factual and procedural background of Best Product, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal.

Rptr. 3d 154 is discussed in § 85.10[4][a]. In this commercial litigation discovery dispute, the trial court erred when it found that defendant's failure to provide a privilege log constituted a waiver of its right to assert the attorney-client and work product privileges in regard to the interrogatories propounded by plaintiff. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290) provides that the only method by which a claim of privilege can be waived in responding to an interrogatory: "If a party to whom interrogatories are directed fails to serve a timely response, ...#x2026; [that party] waives ...#x2026; any objection to the interrogatories, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under [former Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.)]." However, this provision was inapplicable here, because defendant filed timely responses that complied with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(f)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.240). Thus, the lack of privilege log was a non-issue. The court of appeal explained, quoting Hernandez v. Superior Court, 112 Cal. App. 4th 285, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 883 (discussed in [3][d], above): "[A] responding party may object to an interrogatory that seeks privileged information by clearly stating the objection and the particular privilege invoked. But the existence of a document containing privileged information is not privileged. ...#x2026; Interrogatories may be used to discover the existence of documents in the other party's possession. ...#x2026; If an interrogatory asks the responding party to identify a document, an adequate response must include a description of the document. ...#x2026; [Consequently], a 'privilege log' is unnecessary with regard to answering interrogatories seeking the identification of documents" (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189-1190) .

[d] Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings

In Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts, Inc. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 , an action for products liability based on design defect, plaintiffs served a demand for production of documents under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.), seeking records of all complaints regarding the product in issue. The defendants provided only three such complaints. During trial defendant's officers and employees testified that there were no other complaints. After a verdict for defendant, plaintiffs heard by chance from an out-of-state attorney, who was pursuing a similar claim against defendant. This attorney had been able to obtain discovery of almost 20 such complaints. Given this new information, plaintiffs sought monetary sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) in the context of a motion for a new trial. The trial court denied the request for discovery sanctions, reasoning that it could not award them "after the case [was] over." The court of appeal reversed, ruling that post-trial request for monetary discovery sanctions was not untimely (67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1162-1164) . As to the merits of plaintiffs' request, the applicable discovery statute authorizes monetary sanctions only in the context of a motion to compel further responses (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.). Nevertheless, the court ruled that a motion to compel was not a prerequisite for monetary sanctions in this case, when defendant's misconduct essentially precluded plaintiffs from making the motion. Due to defendant's deceptive conduct, plaintiffs did not deem defendant's original responses incomplete or evasive, and had no reason to do so until they fortuitously received information from a nonparty, by which time the case was over. At this point other sanctions were not available. It was therefore appropriate to seek monetary sanctions in connection with a motion for new trial (67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 1162-1164) .

In Obregon v. Superior Court (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , the trial court, finding that the moving party had not made an adequate effort to resolve the dispute informally, denied further discovery. The court of appeal vacated the ruling and remanded for reconsideration of a more appropriate sanction for the moving party's inadequate effort at informal resolution. The appellate court stated that, in deciding on a sanction for inadequate effort to achieve an informal resolution, the trial court should not automatically deny further discovery but should consider whether it would be appropriate to specify additional efforts that will be required of the offending party before the court will turn to the merits of the request to compel. Relevant considerations would include the history of the case, past conduct of counsel as it reflects upon the good faith of their efforts, the nature and extent of actual efforts expended, the nature of the discovery requested and its importance to the case, the size and complexity of the case, the effect of expense upon litigation of the case (including whether unfeasible levels of expense might force resolution on a basis other than merits), the margin by which the moving party deviated from a reasonable good faith effort at informal resolution under the circumstances, the predictability that an effort of the type made would be found wanting, whether supplemental responses have been served, and such other factors as are relevant under all the circumstances presented. Because the court has a duty to minimize delay and unnecessary expense, it should also consider whether further informal efforts would be fruitful (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 434-435) . When appropriate, the court may assess the party whose efforts were found inadequate with monetary sanctions (67 Cal. App. 4th 424, 435) .

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by a party seeking sanctions for the failure of a party to comply with an order compelling answers or further response to interrogatories [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290, (l)]. Optional

Paragraph B may be used when money sanctions are sought against an attorney who advised the client to disobey a discovery order [see Corns v. Miller (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 195, 200, 226 Cal. Rptr. 247 (interpreting former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2)(D), now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a))].

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of an issue sanction, evidence sanctions, or terminating sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.]. If a monetary sanction is sought is addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, the foregoing form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

[c] Sanctions

The monetary sanction that may be imposed is an order that the party who failed to obey the order compelling answers or further response to interrogatories, or any attorney advising that conduct, pay the reasonable expenses, including attorney's fees, incurred by anyone as a result of that conduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)].

If imposing an issue sanction, the court may order that designated facts shall be taken as established in the action in accordance with the claim of the party adversely affected by the misuse of the discovery process, or the court may issue an order prohibiting the party engaging in the misuse of the discovery process from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)]. If imposing an evidence sanction, the court may issue an order prohibiting the party engaging in the misuse of the discovery process from introducing designated matters in evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)]. If imposing a terminating sanction, the court may issue one of the following orders: (A) an order striking out pleadings or parts thereof of the party engaging in the misuse of the discovery process, (B) an order staying further proceedings by that party until the order compelling discovery is obeyed, (C) an order dismissing the action, or any part of the action, of that party, or (D) an order rendering a judgment by default against that party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sanctions After Order Compelling Answers

In Laguna Auto Body v. Farmers Ins. Exchange (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 481, 282 Cal. Rptr. 530 , disapproved on other grounds in Garcia v. McCutchen (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 469, 478 n.1, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 319, 940 P.2d 906 , as part of discovery in plaintiffs' action against it, defendant insurance company served a set of form interrogatories, a request for admissions, and a demand for production of documents on plaintiffs. When plaintiffs did not respond, defendants filed a motion to compel answers to interrogatories. The trial court made an order formalizing a stipulation between the parties that provided for plaintiffs' complete compliance with the requested discovery. Plaintiffs were late in providing the discovery, and when responses were made to the interrogatories, they took the form of objections. After several additional time concessions were granted by defendant, plaintiffs still had not complied with the requested discovery, and defendants filed a motion to dismiss, or in the alternative, for sanctions pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023(a)(7), 2030(k) and 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010(g), 2030.290, and 2033.280). Plaintiffs filed no opposition to the motion, and the trial court granted dismissal. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed and awarded costs to defendant. The court observed that the dismissal sanction was not imposed for plaintiffs' first misuse of discovery. Rather, it was imposed in response to the culmination of a history of acts in which plaintiffs had obstructed discovery. The lack of prior monetary sanctions did not invalidate the appropriateness of dismissal (231 Cal. App. 3d 481, 486) . The court said that the trial court order is presumed correct and all presumptions are indulged to support the order on matters on which the record is silent (231 Cal. App. 3d 481, 487) . It went on to say that a prerequisite to the imposition of the dismissal sanction is the failure to comply with a court order. Although plaintiffs argued that their response consisting of objections to the interrogatories constituted compliance with the trial court order, the court was not persuaded. It said that even though plaintiffs changed their responses to unverified answers of "no," the simplicity of those responses belies plaintiffs' assertion that there were ever grounds for objection to the questions. The trial court could reasonably infer that plaintiffs were merely obstructing and delaying discovery. Moreover, plaintiffs' responses were legally invalid because they were unverified. Plaintiffs were aware of the potential consequences of violating the court's order and, in light of their continued defiance of discovery and the court order, repeated warnings would have been futile. The court concluded that it would be unjust to require defendant to file another motion to compel further answers when the responses given were patently defective and merely served to further delay discovery (231 Cal. App. 3d 481, 489) . It concluded that substantial evidence supports the trial court's conclusion that plaintiffs obstructed discovery, failed to honor their stipulation with counsel that they would comply with discovery, and defied the court's order (231 Cal. App. 3d 481, 491) .

[b] Monetary Sanctions Against Attorney

In Corns v. Miller (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 195, 226 Cal. Rptr. 247 , an action to quiet title to a parcel of real property, after defendants failed to obey an order compelling answers to interrogatories, their answer to the complaint was struck and a default was entered against them. The court ordered defendants and their attorney to pay sanctions. The attorney moved for reconsideration of the portion of the order imposing sanctions against him. The order was denied and the attorney appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, citing former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2)(D) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290) as authority for its decision. With regard to its applicability to the attorney, the court noted that it could only penalize an attorney who had advised his or her client to disobey a discovery order. Although there was nothing in the moving papers establishing that the attorney had advised disobedience, in a motion for attorney sanctions, it is the attorney rather than the party seeking sanctions who has the burden of proof (181 Cal. App. 3d 195, 200) . Because an attorney's advice to a client is a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the attorney and client, to place the burden of proof on the moving party would effectually nullify the statutory language and frustrate the statutory purpose. The attorney neither submitted any opposition to the sanction motion nor appeared at the hearing, and failed to discharge his burden of proof (181 Cal. App. 3d 195, 201) .

Note that Corns construed law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sanctions After Order Compelling Answers

In Biles v. Exxon Mobil Corp. (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 22 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282 , plaintiff, a contractor's employee, appealed a summary judgment in favor of defendant property owner in a premises liability action arising from asbestos exposure. In opposition to the summary judgment motion, the contractor's employee submitted a declaration from one of his former coworkers, stating that while they were working on the property owner's premises, employees of the property owner used air hoses to blow asbestos dust in their direction. The property owner objected to the declaration, and the trial court excluded it, on the ground that the coworker had not been identified in an answer to a previous interrogatory and that the answer had not been supplemented to include the name. The court of appeal reversed. A responding party has no duty to supplement his or her responses to interrogatories on the receipt of new information, absent an order compelling further answers, regardless of whether the party reserved the right to amend or supplement his or her earlier responses. Thus, the contractor's failure to supplement its interrogatory answer promptly did not constitute grounds for excluding the declaration under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(k), (l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.290, 2030.300) when no order compelling further answers had been sought or entered, and the trial court made no finding that the initial responses were willfully false (124 Cal. App. 4th 1315, 1328) .

The factual and procedural background of Best Product, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 is discussed in § 85.10[4][a]. In this commercial litigation discovery dispute, the trial court erred when it issued, as a sanction, a judicial order that the attorney-client and work product privileges had been waived, based on defendant's failure to provide a privilege log in regard to the interrogatories propounded by plaintiff. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290(a)) provides the only method by which a claim of privilege can be waived in responding to an interrogatory: "If a party to whom interrogatories are directed fails to serve a timely response, ...#x2026; [that party] waives ...#x2026; any objection to the interrogatories, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under [former Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.)]." This provision was inapplicable here, however, because defendant filed timely responses that complied with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(f)(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.240). Thus, the lack of a privilege log was a non-issue (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189-1190) . If plaintiff's complaint was that defendant tendered boiler-plate responses lacking any specificity to its interrogatories, plaintiff could have sought relief under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300). However, plaintiff's motion to compel answers to its interrogatories did not cite or discuss that statutory provision (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1190) .

FURTHER RESPONSE MAY BE COMPELLED WHEN A PARTY HAS ANSWERED AN INTERROGATORY WITH A BROAD STATEMENT THAT THE INFORMATION IS AVAILABLE FROM A MASS OF DOCUMENTS.

Broad Direction to Search Mass of Documents Is Improper. An answer to an interrogatory consisting of a broad statement that the information is available from a mass of documents is insufficient (see Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 784, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion compelling further answers to interrogatories when a previous request for information has been met by a broad direction to search a mass of documents for the answer to the question. The foregoing form may be combined with general memoranda of points and authorities in support of a motion to compel further response to interrogatories [see § 84.10].

Note that, under certain narrowly prescribed circumstances, it is proper to direct the propounder of interrogatories to search through documents for the information that is sought [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230]. This exception is developed further in § 84.21, which in an appropriate case may be use to oppose these points and authorities.

Note also that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 84.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Broad Direction to Search Mass of Documents Is Improper

Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499 was an appeal from a default judgment rendered against defendant as a sanction for failing to properly answer interrogatories. The original action was one for money owed for legal services rendered. Defendant was ill and was hospitalized during much of the time after interrogatories were propounded to him. When defendant did not serve timely answers to the interrogatories, plaintiff initially moved for sanctions, which the trial court denied. It did, however, order defendant to answer by a certain date and ruled that defendant's answer to the complaint would be stricken if answers were not forthcoming. Defendant then filed some answers, most of which were clearly not fully responsive. On plaintiff's motion, the trial court then awarded sanctions against defendant, including the striking of his answer. Defendant appealed, and the court of appeal reversed the judgment of default.

In its opinion, the court of appeal laid down guidelines for trial courts to follow in ruling on the propriety of responses to interrogatories, and in deciding whether or not sanctions are to be imposed. The court discussed the fact that while it may be a valid response to an interrogatory to direct the propounding party to search through some records, this is only true if a summary is not available, and if the responding party specifies the records from which the information may be ascertained (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 784) . Moreover, the court held that the propounding party must be given a reasonable opportunity to examine all pertinent records, and that it is not sufficient to merely state that the information is available from a mass of documents (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 784, 785) . See also Kaiser Foundation Hospitals v. Superior Court (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 801, 804, 805, 80 Cal. Rptr. 263 (discussed in § 84.21[3][a]), in which the court stated that if the records turned out to be deficient or ambiguous, then a motion to compel further answers might be in order.

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION TO COMPEL FURTHER RESPONSE TO _____ [specify, e.g., INTERROGATORIES 1-10 OF PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET] BECAUSE FURTHER RESPONSE _____ [specify, e.g., WOULD COMPEL DISCLOSURE OF PRIVILEGED INFORMATION or WOULD LEAD TO THE DISCOVERY OF MATERIAL THAT IS NOT RELEVANT TO THE SUBJECT MATTER OF THE ACTION or specify other reason]. IF THE MOTION IS DENIED, THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE THERE IS NO SHOWING

THAT _____ [HE/SHE/IT or THEY] ACTED WITH SUBSTANTIAL JUSTIFICATION OR THAT OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE THE IMPOSITION OF THE SANCTION UNJUST.

A. Scope of Examination by Written Interrogatories. [See § 84.11[1], Paragraph B].

[Optional] B. Waiver by Untimely Notice of Motion. The notice of motion for an order compelling a further response to interrogatories must be given within 45 days of the service of the response, or any supplemental response, if served personally, within the period applicable under Section 2016.050 of the Code of Civil Procedure if served by mail, or by any specific later date to which the parties have agreed in writing. If the notice of motion is untimely, the propounding party waives any right to compel a further response to the interrogatories (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050; Professional Career Colleges, Magna Institute, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 490, 493-494, 255 Cal. Rptr. 5).

[Optional] C. Denying Motion Totally. The court may deny a motion to compel answers to interrogatories in toto if the questions are objectionable in their entirety. The court is not under any obligation to redraft interrogatories so that proper questions would be presented for consideration (Deaile v. General Telephone Co. of California (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 851, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582).

[Optional] D. Number of Specially Prepared Interrogatories in Excess of 35. Absent a declaration that satisfies the requirements of Section 2030.050 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and except for supplemental interrogatories, no party shall, as a matter of right, propound to any other party more than 35 specially prepared interrogatories (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2030.030-2030.050; Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 280 , disapproved on other grounds in Lewis v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1232, 1243-1244, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 970 P.2d 872).

[Optional] E. Improper Format of Questions. No set of interrogatories may contain a preface or instruction, unless it has been approved under Section 2033.710 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure. No specially prepared interrogatory may contain subparts, or a compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive question (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(f)).

[Optional] F. Continuing Interrogatory Prohibited. An interrogatory may not be made a continuing one so as to impose on the party responding to it a duty to supplement an answer that was initially correct and complete with later-acquired information (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(g)).

[Optional] G. Lack of Personal Knowledge. A responding party who lacks personal knowledge sufficient to respond to an interrogatory need not attempt to obtain the information if the information is equally available to the propounding party (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.220(c)).

[Optional] H. Reference to Writings. If the answer to an interrogatory would necessitate the preparation or the making of a compilation, abstract, audit, or summary of or from the documents of the party to whom the interrogatory is directed, and if the burden or expense of preparing or making it would be substantially the same for both the propounding and responding party, the responding party may specify the writings from which the answer may be derived or ascertained (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230).

I. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes a motion to compel further response to interrogatories, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2030.300(d)).

[Add points and authorities supporting objections to particular interrogatories (see, e.g., § 84.21 et seq. and general objections based on privilege or other protections against disclosure set out in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations). If a protective order is sought, combine with § 84.30. Also add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

This form of memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to compel further response to interrogatories, such as the one set out in § 84.11. It provides general points to be used by a party who is resisting discovery sought by written interrogatories. It may be combined with specific points and authorities relating to particular privileges or other limitations on the scope of discovery raised by the opposing party as grounds for not responding [see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations].

Optional Paragraph C may be used by a party who is contending that the interrogatories are objectionable in their entirety, and that the motion to compel answers should be denied in toto. This point should be used with caution due to the trial court's discretion to fashion just and equitable orders short of denying the discovery totally [see Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 221-222, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457 ; West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 418-419, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295] .

The memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion to compel further response must be tailored to the particular questions and responses involved, which are usually set out in the moving party's supporting declaration. Counsel should insert argument in this form, relating the points of law to the particular facts and questions involved, cross referring to any appropriate declarations.

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 84.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Untimely Notice of Motion

In Professional Career Colleges, Magna Institute, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 490, 255 Cal. Rptr. 5 , plaintiff, a former student at defendant school, filed an action against it for fraud and breach of contract. He served a first set of interrogatories on defendant. In its response defendant objected to one of the questions. At that time plaintiff made no motion to compel further response, but more than 45 days later served a second set of interrogatories which included the same question to which defendant objected. When defendant objected that it was the same question, plaintiff filed a motion to compel a further response pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300). When the trial court granted that motion, defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition and issued a peremptory writ. The court discussed the Civil Discovery Act, observing that its pattern of restrictions, sanctions, and its attempt to force cooperation clearly evinces the legislative intent that discovery proceed not only smoothly, but swiftly as well (207 Cal. App. 3d 490, 493) . The court said it would be an absurdity to allow a party who fails to meet specified time limits to avoid the consequences of his or her delay and lack of diligence by propounding the same questions again. It opined that such a construction of the statute would obviously encourage delay and provide no incentive to attempt to resolve any dispute with the opposing party. The Legislature explicitly stated that unless a party moves to compel further response within 45 days of the unsatisfactory response, he or she waives any right to compel a further response. Thus, the court held plaintiff's motion to be untimely (207 Cal. App. 3d 490, 494) .

[b] Denying Motion Totally

Deaile v. General Telephone Co. of California (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582 was an action for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and wrongful discharge from employment. Plaintiff brought a motion to compel answers to two interrogatories that she had propounded to defendant, one of which requested the names and addresses of each woman employed by defendant when plaintiff was forced to retire. The second interrogatory asked defendant to state which women were still employed by defendant, and where they were employed. Defendant objected that the interrogatories were oppressive, burdensome, unreasonable, and unlikely to lead to discovery of relevant evidence. During the hearing on the motion to compel answers, the trial court suggested that the interrogatories be modified, but the parties were unable to agree on a modification, and the trial court denied the motion. The trial court awarded plaintiff nothing, but ordered costs for defendant. Plaintiff appealed, alleging, among other errors, the denial of her motion to compel.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. With regard to the motion to compel, it noted that plaintiff had requested both relevant and irrelevant information and that each of the original questions was subject to objection because it called for information not likely to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 850-851) . The trial court had not abused its discretion by denying in toto the motion to compel further answers. Generally, a court should tailor its discovery orders to the needs of the particular case; it ordinarily constitutes an abuse of discretion to deny in toto a motion to compel further answers merely because some of the interrogatories are objectionable [see Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457 (discussed in § 84.11[3][b]); West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295] . However, the questions before the trial court were objectionable in their entirety, because they related to all women employees and were of a type that had been previously disapproved. The trial court was not under any obligation to redraft plaintiff's interrogatories so that proper questions would be presented for consideration (40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 851) .

[c] Number of Specially Prepared Interrogatories in Excess of 35

In Catanese v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164-1165, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 280 , disapproved on other grounds in Lewis v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1232, 1243-1244, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 970 P.2d 872 , defendant sought a writ of mandate directing the superior court to set aside its order that he provide further answers to interrogatories propounded by the plaintiff.

Granting the writ, the court of appeal found that the plaintiff violated the "rule of 35" set forth in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(c)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.030) when her interrogatories referred to eight volumes of deposition testimony and, as worded, effectively posed upward of 10,000 separately worded questions and when she filed no former section 2030(c)(3) (now see section 2030.050) declaration, but instead treated the interrogatories as consisting of five questions only (46 Cal. App. 4th 1159, 1164-1165) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Format of Questions

In Clement v. Alegre (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 791 , plaintiffs appealed a superior court order imposing monetary sanctions against them for interposing frivolous objections to special interrogatories propounded by defendant in a dispute arising out of the sale of real property. Plaintiffs' objections to most of the interrogatories propounded by defendant were based on the assertion that an interrogatory failed to comply with the statutory requirement that each be "full and complete in and of itself," as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(d), when it referred to a previous interrogatory. Plaintiffs did not contend that any of the interrogatories to which they objected on this basis were unclear, or that the interrogatories undermined or violated Code Civ. Proc. 2030.030(b)'s numerical limitation. Rather, plaintiffs objected on the grounds that the interrogatory was not "self-contained," because it violated (1) the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(d) that questions be full and complete, by referring to a response in an earlier special interrogatory, and (2) the prohibition of Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(f), against compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive questions (177 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1287) . The court of appeal concluded that because the interrogatories did not arguably exceed the limit of 35 specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.030(b), referring to another answer violated neither Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(d), nor Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.060(f) (177 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1287) . Plaintiffs "seized on what might have been at most an arguable technical violation of the rule to object to interrogatories that were clear and concise where the interrogatories did not even arguably violate the presumptive numerical limitation set by statute. In so doing, plaintiffs themselves engaged in the type of gamesmanship and delay decried by the drafters of the Act," meriting sanctions (177 Cal. App. 4th 1277, 1287, 1293) .

[1] FORM Opposing Motion to Compel Discovery--Interrogatory Answer Requiring Responding Party to Search Records and Public Records Is Sufficient [Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in opposition to a motion to compel further responses to interrogatories (see, e.g., § 84.20).]

FURTHER DISCOVERY MAY NOT BE COMPELLED WHEN _____ [PRIOR ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES INDICATE THAT THE INFORMATION IS AVAILABLE IN SPECIFIED RECORDS and/or AN INTERROGATORY CALLS FOR INFORMATION WHICH IS IN PUBLIC RECORDS].

[EITHER]

A. No Compilation, Abstract, Audit, or Summary Available. When an answer to an interrogatory would necessitate the responding party to make a compilation, abstract, audit, or summary of that party's documents, and if the burden or expense of preparing or making it would be substantially the same for the party propounding the interrogatory as for the responding party, it is a sufficient answer to the interrogatory to refer to Section 2030.230 of the Code of Civil Procedure and to specify the documents from which the answer may be derived or ascertained (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230; see also Kaiser Foundation Hospitals v. Superior Court (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 801, 804-805, 80 Cal. Rptr. 263).

[AND/OR]

B. Answers Contained in Records That Are Equally Available to Both Parties. When each party has equal access to records that contain information sought by the party propounding interrogatories, it is a proper answer to the interrogatories to refer that party to the documents and records from which the information may be gleaned (Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 723-724, 62 Cal. Rptr. 458).

[AND/OR]

C. Improper to Seek Discovery of Information Contained in Public Records. Discovery is improper if it seeks information contained in public records, since the information is equally available to the propounding party and the answering party (Alpine Mut. Water Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 45, 53-54, 66 Cal. Rptr. 250).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in opposing a motion to compel discovery when (1) answers have previously been given directing the propounding party to search specified documents for which no compilation, abstract, audit, or summary is available but which will give the propounding party all the information sought; (2) answers have previously been given directing the propounding party to search some records that are equally available to both parties; or (3) discovery of information contained in public records is sought. This form may be used in opposition to points and authorities compelling further answers on the general basis of the impropriety of an answer that requires the propounding party to search through a broadly described mass of records [see § 84.15]. This form may also be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to compel further response to interrogatories [see, e.g., § 84.20].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 84.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Compilation, Abstract, Audit, or Summary Available

If a party responding to interrogatories specifies the documents from which an answer may be derived or ascertained, the specification must be in sufficient detail to permit the propounding party to locate and to identify, as readily as the responding party can, the documents from which the answer may be ascertained. The responding party must then afford to the propounding party a reasonable opportunity to examine, audit, or inspect these documents and to make copies, compilations, abstracts, or summaries of them [Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230].

Kaiser Foundation Hospitals v. Superior Court (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 801, 80 Cal. Rptr. 263 , arose out of a medical malpractice action in which plaintiff propounded interrogatories inquiring into the circumstances leading up to the medical procedure that was the subject of the lawsuit. Defendant responded that the answers to plaintiff's questions might be found by an inspection of defendant's medical records. The trial court ordered further answers, and defendant petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the answers were presumptively proper and responsive under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230) (275 Cal. App. 2d 801, 804-805) , but that once plaintiff had inspected the records, a motion for further answers might be in order if he should find deficiencies or ambiguities in the records (275 Cal. App. 2d 801, 805) .

[b] Answers Contained in Records That Are Equally Available to Both Parties

Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 62 Cal. Rptr. 458 , arose out of a defamation action that had previously been tried twice. The first time, a new trial was granted, and the second time a mistrial was declared. In response to interrogatories propounded to plaintiff regarding any witnesses who had allegedly heard the defamatory statements, plaintiff responded that defendant should see the testimony given in prior depositions and trials. Defendant then made a motion to compel further answers, which was granted. Plaintiff's further answers were essentially the same as those given earlier.

Defendant moved again for an order requiring further answers, and this time the trial court granted an order that provided, in effect, that if further answers were not forthcoming within five days, plaintiff would not be permitted to present any witnesses at trial. Plaintiff then petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal granted the writ, noting that plaintiff was correct in refusing to give any other answer than the one that he had given (254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 723) . The court held that there was really nothing to discover except for statements and facts contained in the old transcripts that each party had in his possession. Hence it was just a question of which party would have to go to the trouble of researching the transcripts (254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 723) . The court went on to hold that because former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230) may be seen by analogy as placing the burden of research on the propounder of interrogatories when the answer is to be found in various records, the trial court abused its discretion in ordering further answers and imposing sanctions (254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 724) .

[c] Improper to Seek Discovery of Information Contained in Public Records

In Alpine Mut. Water Co. v. Superior Court (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 45, 66 Cal. Rptr. 250 , some of the plaintiffs objected to a number of the interrogatories propounded by defendant on the ground that they sought information (such as who were the owners of record of various lots) that was contained in public records. In this regard, the court of appeal held that to the extent that the trial court required plaintiffs to answer interrogatories calling for information contained in public records, it was pro tanto invalid, since the information was as readily available to the propounding party as to the answering party (259 Cal. App. 2d 45, 53-54) .

Note, however, that in City of Alhambra v. Superior Court (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 513, 521, 168 Cal. Rptr. 49 , the court of appeal held that the trial court had not abused its discretion in ordering petitioners to share its own records, which were more easily accessible to it than public records of the same lawsuits.

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion to compel further responses to interrogatories (see, e.g., § 84.20).]

THE RESPONDING PARTY IS UNDER NO DUTY TO PERFORM RESEARCH FOR THE PROPOUNDING PARTY IN ORDER TO PROVIDE ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES.

Answers Equally Available to Both Parties. If a party responding to interrogatories does not have personal knowledge sufficient to respond fully to an interrogatory, that party shall so state, but does not have to make a reasonable and good faith effort to obtain the information by inquiry to other natural persons or organizations when the information is equally available to the propounding party (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.220(c); see Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 723-724, 62 Cal. Rptr. 458 ; *see also Schaefer v. Manufacturers Bank (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 75, 163 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion to compel discovery when discovery is sought concerning matters not within the personal knowledge of the responding party but that are equally available to both parties, and when the responding party has so stated in answers to interrogatories. This form may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion to compel further answers to interrogatories [see, e.g., § 84.20].

are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 84.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Answers Equally Available to Both Parties

Bunnell v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 720, 62 Cal. Rptr. 458 , is discussed in § 84.21[3][b].

Schaefer v. Manufacturers Bank (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 163 Cal. Rptr. 402 was an appeal from a summary judgment in favor of defendant escrow holder in a suit for losses sustained in a real estate sale. Plaintiffs had propounded interrogatories requesting such items as the name, address, and phone number of the person who had prepared Exhibit 1 to plaintiffs' complaint. The document in question had never been made a part of the escrow and there was no showing that defendant had anything to do with its preparation. However, plaintiffs themselves were signatories to the document in question. Accordingly, defendant's reply to the interrogatory stated that it had no personal knowledge of the answer and, after making a reasonable inquiry, it found that the information obtained was insufficient to allow it to answer. Plaintiffs' discovery motions were denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the discovery motions, holding that when information is sought that is either equally available to both parties or more readily available to the party seeking discovery, then a denial of a motion to compel further discovery is correct (104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 75) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Answers Equally Available to Both Parties

Holguin v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 99 Cal. Rptr. 653 arose out of an action against some physicians for wrongful death of a mother who died in childbirth. Plaintiffs, husband and children of decedent, propounded interrogatories, some of which related to the autopsy. Defendants responded that they could not answer because they were not present at that event. The trial court refused to compel further answers, and the court of appeal declined to issue a writ of mandate. In its opinion, the court held that defendants' response to the interrogatories was correct, and that responding parties are under no duty to start an investigation that will aid in preparation of his opponent's case (22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 821) .

THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE A PROTECTIVE ORDER _____ [specify, e.g., THAT INTERROGATORIES 5-10 OF PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET SHOULD NOT BE ANSWERED], BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN FOR THE ORDER AND BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., DEFENDANT WOULD SUFFER UNWARRANTED ANNOYANCE, EMBARRASSMENT, OR OPPRESSION or specify other reason]. IF THE MOTION IS GRANTED, THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT _____ [HE/SHE/IT or THEY] ACTED WITH SUBSTANTIAL JUSTIFICATION OR THAT OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE THE IMPOSITION OF THE SANCTION UNJUST.

A. Protective Orders. When interrogatories have been propounded, the responding party, and any other party or affected natural person or organization, may promptly move for a protective order. The court, for good cause shown, may make any order that justice requires to protect any party or any other natural person or organization from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden or expense (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090).

B. Types of Orders. The protective orders that the court may make under Section 2030.090 of the Code of Civil Procedure may include, but are not limited to, one or more of the following directions:

[EITHER]

That the set of interrogatories, or particular interrogatories in the set, need not be answered (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(1)).

[AND/OR]

That contrary to the representations made in a declaration for additional discovery submitted under Section 2030.050 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the number of specially prepared interrogatories is unwarranted (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(2)).

[AND/OR]

That the time specified in Section 2030.260 of the Code of Civil Procedure to respond to the set of interrogatories, or to particular interrogatories in the set, be extended (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(3)).

[AND/OR]

That the response be made only on specified terms and conditions (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(4)).

[AND/OR]

That the method of discovery be an oral deposition instead of interrogatories to a party (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(5)).

[AND/OR]

That a trade secret or other confidential research development or commercial information not be disclosed or be disclosed only in a certain way (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(6)).

[AND/OR]

That some or all of the answers to interrogatories be sealed and thereafter opened only on order of the court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b)(7)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] C. Rephrasing Interrogatories. In order to protect a party from annoyance, expense, embarrassment, or oppression, the court may issue an order that interrogatories be rephrased (West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 417-419, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295).

D. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion for a protective order, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2030.090(d)).

[When appropriate, include specific points and authorities relating to objections, privileges, or other grounds that provide the basis for "good cause." Add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use by the responding party in support of a motion for a protective order after interrogatories have been propounded [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090]. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by it. If the motion for a protective order is denied in whole or in part, the court may order that the party provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on terms and conditions that are just [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should therefore specify the material sought to be discovered, and explain which of the grounds applies to limit or prevent disclosure. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party seeking discovery acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2030.090(d) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to protective orders in the context of discovery by interrogatories, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 194, Discovery: Interrogatories (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rephrasing Interrogatories

In West Pico Furniture Co. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 407, 15 Cal. Rptr. 119, 364 P.2d 295 , plaintiff alleged that certain sales transactions were actually loans at usurious interest rates. Defendants cross-complained for money owed; plaintiff counterclaimed for violation of the Financial Code. During the course of discovery, plaintiff propounded a number of interrogatories, some of which were answered by defendant. Objections were made to the remainder of the interrogatories on various grounds, including irrelevance, burden, and oppression. The trial court sustained some objections and overruled others.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate, ordering the trial court to set aside its order sustaining the objections (56 Cal. 2d 407, 422) . The Court noted that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090) allowed a court to protect a party from annoyance, expense, embarrassment, or oppression. Although the word "expense" was omitted, the Court stated that burden was not a valid ground for objection (56 Cal. 2d 407, 417, 418) . The Court added that the interrogatories themselves, because of their "shotgun" nature, might constitute a burden in themselves, as opposed to a burden in answering them. This still does not constitute a valid ground for sustaining an objection in toto, however, although the burdensome nature of the interrogatories may be a fact to be considered by the trial court in exercising its discretion to regulate the discovery. One way in which it may do this is to require that the interrogatories be rephrased (56 Cal. 2d 407, 419) .

West Pico was decided prior to the 1986 repeal and reenactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 2030, which precludes specially prepared interrogatories from containing subparts and compound, conjunctive, or disjunctive questions. It should also be noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.090(b) presently includes "undue burden and expense" among grounds for obtaining a protective order.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Rephrasing Interrogatories

In Jones v. Holy Cross Hospital Silver Spring, Inc. (D. Md. 1974) 64 F.R.D. 586 , an action for racial discrimination in employment, plaintiff propounded 70 interrogatories, which contained between two and 23 subparts. The interrogatories sought information relating to sex of employees as well as to race, and involved periods of time before the incorporation or operation of defendant hospital. Defendant sought a protective order under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 26(c) (which is substantially similar to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b), now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq.), and the court held that defendant was clearly entitled to an order protecting it from having to answer overbroad interrogatories. Thus, the court ordered plaintiff's attorney to review the interrogatories, and then to rephrase and reduce them (64 F.R.D. 586, 591) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by a party on whom interrogatories have been served, but who failed to serve timely response to them, to obtain an order for relief from waiver of the rights to produce writings under Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.230 and to object to interrogatories [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290(a)]. If the propounding party has served a notice of motion to compel response and for a monetary sanction, counsel should set the motion for relief from waivers for hearing either prior to or concurrent with the propounding party's motion.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[c] Grounds for Relief

The grounds for relief from waiver under Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290 are similar to some of the grounds for relief from default judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b), that is, that the party's failure to serve a timely response to the interrogatories was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. Counsel may wish to use authority supporting a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b) that interprets those grounds, bearing in mind that Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b) allows relief under the additional ground of surprise. For memoranda of points and authorities regarding relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, see Ch. 70, Defaults, Default Judgments, and Relief From Judgments and Orders .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use to oppose a motion for relief from waiver after failure to serve timely response, on the ground that the responding party failed to show a reasonable excuse for the delay, but also a reasonable explanation for the failure to seek a further extension from counsel or an enlargement of time from the court [see Mannino v. Superior Court (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 776, 779, 191 Cal. Rptr. 163] . For discussion of the grounds for relief from waiver, see § 84.50.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 84.50.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequate Showing of Excusable Neglect in Filing Untimely Objections

In Mannino v. Superior Court (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 776, 191 Cal. Rptr. 163 , a personal injury action, plaintiff propounded a sixth set of interrogatories consisting of 190 questions. At defendant's request, plaintiff's counsel granted one extension to respond. Six days after the time on the extension had passed, defendant filed a verified response containing objections to 151 of the 190 questions, on the grounds that the questions were vague and ambiguous, the answers would be remote and irrelevant, and the efforts required to answer were overly burdensome. After attempting unsuccessfully to resolve the matter pursuant to former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 222.1 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300), plaintiff filed a motion to compel further answers without objection and for sanctions. Defendant did not seek relief from default after failing to respond to the interrogatories within the statutory time period, but submitted a declaration in opposition to plaintiff's motion to compel. In the declaration, defendant's counsel stated that he had not received an executed verification until five days after the extended deadline for responding to the interrogatories had passed, but did not explain if he made efforts to obtain a timely verification. The trial court denied the motions, and plaintiff petitioned the court of appeal for issuance of a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, directing the trial court to grant the motion to compel and to consider the request for sanctions. A party who fails to respond to interrogatories within the relevant period for response waives the right to interpose objections. Belated objections are not valid unless the defaulting party demonstrates good cause to grant relief from default, and the burden is on the defaulting party to seek and justify relief (142 Cal. App. 3d 776, 778) . Counsel could easily have arranged a substituted verification by messenger because the place of verification and counsel's office were in close proximity. Furthermore, it does not require more than 60 days to raise the familiar objections that defendant finally interposed. A showing of excusable neglect after counsel has knowingly allowed the time to respond to interrogatories to expire must include not only a reasonable excuse for the delay, but also a reasonable explanation for the failure to seek a further extension from counsel or an enlargement of time from the court (142 Cal. App. 3d 776, 779) .

Note that Mannino construed law in effect prior to the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act of 1986. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it appears to remain consistent with current provisions. Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.290 now provides a procedure for relief from the waiver after failure to serve timely response, superseding Code Civ. Proc. § 473 with respect to interrogatories [see also § 84.50[2][c]].

BEEN SUBSTANTIALLY PREJUDICED BY HIS/HER/ITS INITIAL FAILURE TO ANSWER CORRECTLY, WHICH CANNOT BE CURED BY EITHER A CONTINUANCE FOR FURTHER DISCOVERY OR USE OF THE INITIAL ANSWER PURSUANT TO SECTION 2030.410 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE. IF THE MOTION IS GRANTED, THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT _____ [HE/SHE/IT or THEY] ACTED WITH SUBSTANTIAL JUSTIFICATION OR THAT OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE THE IMPOSITION OF THE SANCTION UNJUST.

A. Initial Answer Deemed Binding. The party who propounded an interrogatory to which an amended answer has been served may move for an order that the initial answer to that interrogatory be deemed binding on the responding party for the purpose of the pending action. The court shall grant this motion if it determines that (1) the initial failure of the responding party to answer the interrogatory correctly has substantially prejudiced the party who propounded the interrogatory, (2) the responding party has failed to show substantial justification for the initial answer to that interrogatory, and (3) the prejudice to the propounding party cannot be cured either by a continuance to permit further discovery or by the use of the initial answer pursuant to Section 2030.410 of the Code of Civil Procedure (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by the propounding party after the responding party has served an amended answer, to support a motion to obtain an order that the initial answer be deemed binding and for a monetary sanction.

The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.310]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should show how the initial failure of the responding party to answer the interrogatory correctly has substantially prejudiced the propounding party, why the responding party's reasons for the failure do not constitute substantial justification for the initial answer, why the prejudice to the propounding party cannot be cured by a continuance or by use of the initial answer at trial against the responding party, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.310]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2030.310(d) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

THE COURT SHOULD ENTER AN ORDER ALLOWING SERVICE OF INTERROGATORIES ON _____, WHO IS A CLASS MEMBER, BUT NOT A CLASS REPRESENTATIVE, AND WHO HAS NOT APPEARED.

A. Rule. A court order is required in order to serve interrogatories on a member of a class who is not a party representative, and who has not appeared (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.768(c)).

B. Factors to Be Considered. Under [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.768(c)], the court must consider, among other relevant factors, the following factors, before issuing an order allowing interrogatories to be served upon a class member who is not a party representative, and who has not appeared:

(1) The timing of the request;

(2) The subject matter to be covered;

(3) The materiality of the information being sought;

(4) The likelihood that class members have such information;

(5) The possibility of reaching factual stipulations that eliminate the need for such discovery;

(6) Whether class representatives are seeking discovery on the subject to be covered; and

(7) Whether discovery will result in annoyance, oppression, or undue burden or expense for the members of the class.

[Address factors as they pertain to facts and circumstances of the case, stressing the importance of information sought to the full and fair determination of the issues.]

[Optional] C. Additional Factors. [Discuss other factors bearing on how obtaining the requested information will serve the interests of justice.]

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum is for use in support of a motion to allow a class member who is not a class representative, and who has not appeared in the case to be served with interrogatories in the action.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts and argument showing how this order is needed for full and fair determination of the issues in the case, and how the information requested is not available from class representatives or other members of the class who have appeared.

CHAPTER 85 DISCOVERY: PRODUCTION OR INSPECTION OF TANGIBLE EVIDENCE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85 California Points & Authorities § 85.01

§ 85.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter includes memoranda relating to civil discovery by demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of documents, tangible things, land or other property, and electronically stored information--specifically, to inspect and to photograph, test, or sample any tangible things that are in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom the demand is made; to enter on any land or other property that is in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom the demand is made, and to inspect and to measure, survey, photograph, test, or sample the land or other property, or any designated object or operation on it; and to inspect, copy, test, or sample electronically stored information in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom demand is made [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010]. Forms in Part II include the following:

- Subpart A has memoranda supporting a motion to compel a response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling documents, tangible things, land or other property or electronically stored information [§ 85.10 et seq.] or a motion to compel compliance with such a demand [§ 85.20 et seq.], as well as memoranda opposing these motions [§ 85.30 et seq.].

- Subpart B has memoranda supporting [§ 85.50] and opposing [§ 85.60] a motion for a protective order in the context of a demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling documents, tangible things, land or other property or electronically stored information.

- Subpart C has memoranda relating to miscellaneous motions in matters pertaining to a demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling documents, tangible things, land or other property or electronically stored information, including those supporting [§ 85.70] and opposing [§ 85.80] a motion for relief from a waiver of an objection to such a demand. Subpart also includes memoranda supporting the contention that, because of availability of discovery sanctions in the context of a demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling documents, tangible things, land or other property or electronically stored information, as well as other public policy considerations, there is no tort cause of action for the spoliation of tangible evidence [§ 85.90].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85 California Points & Authorities § 85.02

§ 85.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified at Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Demand for Inspection, Copying, Testing, or Sampling of Documents, Tangible Things, Land or Other Property, or Electronically Stored Information

Civil discovery by demand to a party for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of documents, tangible things, land or other property, and electronically stored information is governed primarily by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.010-2031.320. A specific duty to disclose nonprivileged relevant written evidence pertaining to the boundaries of land patented or granted by the state, or to the validity of a state patent or land grant prior to 1950, in an action involving a dispute as to such boundaries or validity, is set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.510. Limits on the use of inspection demands in limited civil cases are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 94(a).

Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq. does not authorize a party to make a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of documents, tangible things, land or other property, and electronically stored information on a nonparty. The proper procedural device to be employed in this situation is the deposition subpoena duces tecum, governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2020.010 et seq. and 2025.280(b). Points and authorities relating to depositions generally are set out in Ch. 83, Discovery: Depositions .

Production of electronic information presents thorny issues, often based on the Sheer volume of information or on the fact that the data is not readily accessible because of undue burden or cost [see Playboy Enters. v. Welles (S.D. Cal 1999) 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1055 ; Maldonado v. Superior Court (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1396, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137]. For discussion of e-discovery, including the duty to preserve and produce electronic evidence, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery. For discussion and forms relating to electronically stored evidence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery) (Matthew Bender). For detailed coverage of the California e-discovery process, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence.

[3] Case Law Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

The Civil Discovery Act was passed in 2004 and became effective July 1, 2005. It repealed and renumbered the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 but did not substantively change the law of civil discovery [Stats. 2004, ch. 182 §§ 22, 23, 61]. Thus cases decided under the 1986 Act remain controlling authority. A considerable body of case law interpreted the discovery provisions of the Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9), which preceded the 1986 Act. Although the 1986 Act, which became operative July 1, 1987, implemented numerous changes in the prior law, it also continued provisions of the prior law in many other instances, or even codified decisions interpreting the prior law. Decisions construing this prior law are therefore cited as persuasive, rather than controlling, authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind is page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular type of discovery motion, such as motion to compel discovery or a motion for a protective order.

In many cases it will be appropriate to combine them with additional memoranda set out in the related discovery chapters. In particular, they may be combined with the general memoranda for limiting or regulating discovery set out in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , or with the memoranda for limiting discovery based on the evidentiary privileges, work product protection, or other protective provisions found in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

It may also be appropriate to modify the memoranda in this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial or appellate brief or office memoranda relating to discovery practice.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form for a memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

This form is for use in support of a motion by a party for an order compelling response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling and for a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300].

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing when the demand was made and the failure of the other party to respond, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.300(c) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust. However, Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(c) notwithstanding, absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(d)(1)].

For further discussion of e-discovery, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery.

[c] Timely Response

Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq. governs discovery by inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of documents, tangible things, land or other property, and electronically stored information in the possession, custody, or control of any other party. The party on whom a demand is made is required to respond separately to each item or category of item in the demand [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)], and make certain statements [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.220-2031.240, 2031.280]. The response must be served on all parties who have appeared in the action within 30 days after service of the demand, or in unlawful detainer proceedings within five days of the demand, with certain extensions of time when service is by mail [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.260; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a) (requirements for service by mail; extensions of time); Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(c), (e) (requirements for service by express mail or fax; extensions of time); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050 (service generally)]. The period for service of the response may also be extended or shortened by the court on motion by the demanding or responding party [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.260], or extended pursuant to a written agreement of the demanding and responding parties [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.270].

For detailed discussion of discovery of electronically stored evidence (e-discovery), see Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver of Objection to Demand

In the underlying case in People ex rel. Lockyer v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 324 , petitioner state of California filed an action against real parties in interest, a corporation and related entities, alleging violations of statutes governing the practice of optometry. In this writ proceeding, the state sought to overturn the superior court's order granting real party in interest's motion to compel and denying their motion to quash and for a protective order. The state argued that the court abused its discretion entering its discovery orders because the state raised timely objections under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.240) on the grounds of privilege to real party in interest's request for production of documents and served a privilege log. The court of appeal granted the writ, concluding that Best Product, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 (discussed below) dictated that the court erred in overruling the state's privilege objections (122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1074) . Because the state timely objected on the grounds of privilege, it preserved its objections, regardless of whether the objections were sufficiently detailed in their response or privilege log. Thus, as a matter of law, the superior court could not find that the state had waived these privileges under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(a)) (122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1075) .

In Best Product, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 , commercial litigation plaintiff served a set of requests for inspection and production of documents and propounded a set of interrogatories. Defendant responded, in part, with boilerplate objections of attorney-client privilege and work product privilege. Plaintiff brought motions to compel and to preclude defendant from making any further objections. The trial court effectively held that defendant had waived its right to assert the attorney-client and work product privileges because it had failed to file a privilege log in regard to plaintiff's request to inspect and produce.

The court of appeal found this ruling was error. Statutory law recognizes only three ways in which a party can waive a privilege, only one of which was applicable in this case. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300) stated: "If a party to whom an inspection demand is directed fails to serve a timely response to it, ... [that party] waives any objection to the demand, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under [former section 2018 (now see section 2018.010 et seq.)]." Consequently, the court could find a waiver of privilege only if defendant had failed to file a timely response to plaintiff's demand. "There is absolutely no requirement that a privilege log be tendered at this point of the discovery proceedings." Because defendant did assert the attorney-client and work product privileges in a timely manner, albeit in a boiler-plate fashion, the trial court erred in finding a waiver of privileges (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1187-1188) .

A. Party May Move for Order Compelling Further Response. The party demanding an inspection under Code Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 et seq. may make a motion, supported by specific facts showing good cause justifying the discovery sought by the demand, for an order compelling further response to the demand when, on receipt of a response to the demand, the party deems that _____ [a statement of compliance with the demand is incomplete and/or a representation of inability to comply is inadequate, incomplete, or evasive and/or an objection in the response is without merit or too general] (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310).

[Optional] B. Matter Is Discoverable If Not Privileged and If Relevant to Subject Matter. Any matter is discoverable if it is not privileged and is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action, and if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010). [The "subject matter" of the action includes the facts and circumstances out of which the cause of action arises (see Darbee v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 680, 688, 25 Cal. Rptr. 520).] [Thus, relevant and unprivileged matter sought under Section 2031.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure that is "reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence" need meet only that requirement, and need not itself be admissible at trial (see Associated Brewers Distr. Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 65 Cal. 2d 583, 587, 55 Cal. Rptr. 772, 422 P.2d 332 .)]

[Optional] C. Inconvenience No Bar to Inspection, Copying, Testing, or Sampling. Although a party complying with an inspection demand might be put to inconvenience and trouble, this is not a valid objection to a request for production and inspection (see Milton Kauffman, Inc. v. Superior Court (1949) 94 Cal. App. 2d 8, 19, 210 P.2d 88).

[Optional] D. Photographing of Face and Body. A party may demand that any other party produce and permit the demanding party to inspect and to photograph any tangible thing that is in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom the demand is made (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(c)). "Tangible thing" includes the face and body of a person, and thus the demand may be for the photographing of the face and body of a person (see Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 118, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161).

E. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel further responses to an inspection demand, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2031.310(h)).

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion by a party for an order compelling further response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling and for a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310]. The motion must set forth specific facts showing good cause justifying the discovery sought by the demand, and must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of any issue presented by it [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(b)].

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 85.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing how the responding party's statement of compliance is incomplete, how the representation of inability to comply is inadequate, incomplete, or evasive, or how the objection is without merit or is too general, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.310(h) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust. However, in a motion for an order compelling further response to a demand under Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(a) relating to the production of electronically stored information, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system, absent exceptional circumstances [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(j)(1)].

In an appropriate case, the memorandum set out in § 85.30 may be used to oppose the motion supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Matter Is Discoverable If Not Privileged and If Relevant to Subject Matter

Darbee v. Superior Court (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 680, 25 Cal. Rptr. 520 was an action for specific performance of an option contract for the purchase of land and for declaratory relief. Defendant took plaintiff's deposition and asked questions, including whether anyone had agreed to buy the property from plaintiff at the time he exercised the option and thereafter, and whether he had agreed to sell the property. Plaintiff refused to answer these questions, and the trial court ruled that questions relating to whether plaintiff had agreed to sell the property at or about the time he attempted to exercise the option were relevant to the subject matter of the action and that plaintiff must answer them. On further deposition, plaintiff refused to answer similar questions relating to a different time period, and another judge denied a motion to compel answers to these questions. Defendant then posed similar questions on written interrogatories; plaintiff objected, and defendant moved for an order requiring further response, which was denied by the trial court. Defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to order plaintiff to answer the interrogatories.

In finding that the trial court had abused its discretion, the court of appeal stated that there was little doubt that the information sought was relevant to the subject matter of the action. The "subject matter of the action" is the circumstances and facts out of which the cause of action arises; it is the property, contract, or other thing involved in the dispute. The subject matter is not the act or acts that constitute the cause of action, but it describes physical facts in relation to which the suit is prosecuted. The court stated that the thing involved in the present case was the option agreement and its enforceability. Any of the physical facts and circumstances bearing on or touching that agreement would be proper matters for inquiry in the search for facts which might lead to admissible evidence (208 Cal. App. 2d 680, 688) .

Associated Brewers Distr. Co. v. Superior Court (1967) 65 Cal. 2d 583, 587, 55 Cal. Rptr. 772, 422 P.2d 332 involved an action for recovery of amounts allegedly due for goods delivered under a distributorship contract. Defendant counterclaimed for breach of an oral distribution agreement. During the course of discovery, defendant moved for production and inspection of some documents under former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031 and 2036, contending that it had good cause to support its motion (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010, which does not require good cause for an inspection demand). The trial court denied discovery and the court of appeal denied defendant's petition for a writ of mandate, but the Supreme Court issued an alternative writ to decide the question of good cause and then issued a peremptory writ to require the trial court to set aside its order (65 Cal. 2d 583, 585, 589) .

In resisting discovery, plaintiff had contended that defendant had failed to show good cause in that it failed to show that the documents sought would have been admissible in evidence. The Supreme Court noted that the purpose of discovery is not only the discovery of admissible evidence, but is also to enable the parties to effectively prepare for trial. Therefore, when discovery was requested pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031, it was not necessary that the material sought be admissible in evidence (65 Cal. 2d 583, 587) . This principle has been incorporated into Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010 of the California Civil Discovery Act.

[b] Inconvenience No Bar to Production and Inspection

Milton Kauffman, Inc. v. Superior Court (1949) 94 Cal. App. 2d 8, 210 P.2d 88 arose out of an action for an accounting, for damages for breach of a letter agreement, and for money held in constructive trust. Plaintiff sought an order for production of (1) the books and records relating to defendant's profits, receipts, and disbursements, (2) records showing salaries and loans given to and withdrawals made by defendant's officers and directors, (3) tax returns of defendant, and (4) all records of transactions between defendant and its president during the relevant time period. Defendant opposed the motion for production as a violation of the constitutional guaranty against unreasonable searches and seizures, and argued that plaintiff should first have to establish his right to an accounting. The trial court granted plaintiff the order for production, and defendant petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal declined to issue the writ, holding that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1000 (the predecessor to both the pre-1986 and post-1986 Code Civ. Proc. § 2031, now divided without substantive change into Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.010-2031.320) was to be liberally construed and that the right of inspection is to be encouraged (94 Cal. App. 2d 8, 15) . The court held further that there was no authority to support the proposition that the right to an accounting must be established before an order for inspection may be granted (94 Cal. App. 2d 8, 16) . Finally, the court held that defendant's contention that it would be put to great inconvenience and trouble if it were to comply with the trial court's order was not a valid objection to an order for production and inspection of documents (94 Cal. App. 2d 8, 19) .

[c] Photographing of Face and Body

Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161 concerned a wrongful death action against a city and some police officers. Among the items that plaintiff sought to discover were photographs of defendant police officers in the clothes they wore on the night of the incident; plaintiff wanted to use those photographs in interviewing witnesses. On defendants' refusal to comply with this request, plaintiff moved for an order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2034.210) for production and also for sanctions. The trial court denied all relief, and plaintiff petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that because the photographing of objects or tangible things was within the purview of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(c)), and because the discovery statutes are to be liberally construed, "photographing of tangible things" was construed to permit the photographing of the face and body of a person (17 Cal. 3d 107, 118) .

[a] Matter Is Discoverable If Not Privileged and If Relevant to Subject Matter

In TBG Ins. Serv. Corp. v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 155 , petitioner employer filed for a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order refusing to compel production of an employer-provided home computer used by the real party in interest, an employee, who filed suit for wrongful termination. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the trial court erred in denying production. Under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010), a "party may obtain discovery regarding any matter, not privileged, that is relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action ... if the matter either is itself admissible in evidence or appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence." In the discovery context, evidence is "relevant" if it might reasonably assist a party in evaluating its case, preparing for trial, or facilitating a settlement. "Admissibility is not the test, and it is sufficient if the information sought might reasonably lead to other, admissible evidence" (96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 448-449) . In the more specific context of a demand for production of a tangible thing under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(c)), the party who asks the trial court to compel production must show good cause for the request; however, the party meets its burden simply by a fact-specific showing of relevance, unless there is a legitimate privilege issue or claim of attorney work product. Here, the court found that the home computer was "indisputably relevant." The court rejected the superior court's reasoning that defendant was not entitled to production because the information on the computer merely corroborated facts already in defendant's possession. Rather, defendant was entitled to discover any non-privileged information, cumulative or not, that might reasonably assist it in evaluating its defense, preparing for trial, or facilitating a settlement (96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 448-449) . Moreover, the court found that, in light of the employee's consent to his employer's monitoring of both computers, the employee had no reasonable expectation of privacy when he used the home computer for personal matters (96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 454-455) .

Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 489, 12 Cal. Rptr. 783 involved a personal injury action in which defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant its motion for inspection of a record of plaintiff's statement of facts surrounding the accident, made at the behest of and typed by defendant's agent. The agent, who claimed to have forgotten the contents of the statement, had left the original and the only copy of the statement with plaintiff. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that defendant had a right to production and inspection of plaintiff's statement, even though the statement might not be admissible in evidence (191 Cal. App. 2d 489, 492) .

Note

that the decision in Atchison was disapproved on other grounds in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 378 n.6, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 .

[b] Court Must Impose Monetary Sanctions Absent Specified Findings

In London v. Dri-Honing Corp. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 , an employee sued his former employer for wrongful termination, age and physical handicap discrimination, fraud, and other causes of action. The trial court granted the employee's motion for discovery monetary sanctions after he had successfully litigated the underlying motion to compel further response to his inspection demand. The employer appealed, arguing, in part, that employee's motion was untimely because it was not set forth in the motion to compel further response under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310).

The court of appeal disagreed. Plaintiff's separate motion for discovery monetary sanctions, made after an underlying motion to compel further response to an inspection demand was litigated, was legally authorized, properly noticed, and timely made (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1008) . The court found support for its decision in Sherman v. Kinetic Concepts (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1152, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 (discussed in Ch. 82, Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11[4][b]), in which the court of appeal concluded that a motion for discovery monetary sanctions was appropriate even after the verdict. "[C]ommon sense dictates sanctions cannot be pursued before the affected party finds out about the alleged discovery dereliction of his or her opponent. The true facts may not emerge until the end of trial" (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1007) . While the better practice may be to include the request for monetary sanctions in the motion to compel further response, there is no legal requirement to do so (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1008) . Further, the timeliness of a separate motion for sanctions is subject to the trial court's discretion, rather than the 45-day limit from the time of the initial service of the response under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310) (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1009) .

This memorandum is for use by a party seeking sanctions for the failure of a party to comply with an order compelling a response [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300] or a further response [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310] to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, sampling, or entry on property. For memoranda to use in support of the motion to compel, see §§ 85.10 and 85.11.

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.]. If a monetary sanction is sought in addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, this form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Although the better practice may be to include the request for monetary sanctions in the motion to compel further response, a separate motion for discovery monetary sanctions may be made after an underlying motion to compel further response to an inspection demand is litigated [London v. Dri-Honing Corp. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1001, 1008, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 ; see § 85.11[4][b]].

[b] Argument

[c] Sanctions

When a party to whom a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling has been made fails to comply with an order compelling a response to the demand pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300, or fails to comply with an order compelling a further response to the demand pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310, the court may make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.300(c), 2031.310(i)]. However, in a motion for an order compelling response to a demand or further response to a demand under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.300(b) or 2031.310(a) relating to the production of electronically stored information, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system, absent exceptional circumstances [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.300(d)(1), 2031.310(j)(1)].

If imposing an issue sanction, the court may order that designated facts be taken as established in the action in accordance with the claim of the demanding party who was adversely affected by the misuse of the discovery process by the party to whom the demand was made, or the court may issue an order prohibiting the party to whom the demand was made from supporting or opposing designated claims or defenses [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)]. If imposing an evidence sanction, the court may issue an order prohibiting the party to whom the demand was made from introducing designated matters into evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(c)]. If imposing a terminating sanction, the court may issue one of the following orders: (1) an order striking out pleadings or parts thereof of the party to whom the demand was made, (2) an order staying further proceedings by that party until the discovery order is obeyed, (3) an order dismissing the action, or any part thereof, of that party, or (4) an order rendering a judgment by default against that party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)].

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.300 and 2031.310 set forth the exclusive remedies available to the court at this juncture of the proceeding. For example, in a commercial litigation discovery dispute, the trial court erred when it entered an order overruling defendant's boilerplate privilege objections to plaintiff's requests for inspection and production of documents and interrogatories, based on defendant's failure to produce a privilege log. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310) authorized the court to make orders compelling further responses that adequately identify and describe documents for which a party has raised boilerplate assertions of the attorney-client and work product privileges. If defendant fails to comply with such an order, the trial court can "make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Section 2023 [now Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030]. In lieu of or in addition to that sanction, the court [could] impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023 [now Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)]." However, the statute does not include as an authorized sanction a judicial order that a privilege has been waived [Best Product, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 ; see People ex rel. Lockyer v. Superior Court (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1074-1075, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 324 (in discovery disputes, deficient objections or claims of privilege are not grounds for waiver, so long as party raised timely objections under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.240) on grounds of privilege in its original response)]. For further discussion, see § 85.10[4][a].

A. Party May Move for Order Compelling Compliance. [a] Use of Form

This form is for use in support of a motion by a party for an order compelling compliance with a response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling and for a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320].

This form should also be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

For a form for a supporting motion for an order compelling response to a demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information, see § 85A.20. For a discussion of e-discovery generally, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery, § 85A.03 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should set forth the demand (identifying the demand by set and number), the responding party's statement of compliance in that party's response, explain how the responding party nevertheless failed to permit the inspection, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.320(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Responses to Demand

When a party serves a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling on another party, that other party is required to serve a response on all parties who have appeared in the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.260]. The party must respond separately to each item or category of item by any of the following: (1) a statement that the party will comply with the particular demand and any related activities, (2) a representation that the party lacks the ability to comply with the demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of a particular item or category of item, or (3) an objection to the particular demand [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)].

If a party objects to the discovery of electronically stored information on the grounds that it is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense and that the responding party will not search the source in the absence of an agreement with the demanding party or court order, the responding party must identify in its response the types or categories of sources of electronically stored information that it asserts are not reasonably accessible. By objecting and identifying information of a type or category of source or sources that are not reasonably accessible, the responding party preserves any objections it may have relating to that electronically stored information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(d)].

If the response contains a statement that the responding party will comply with the particular demand, that statement must include all of the following: (1) that the production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, and related activity demanded will be allowed either in whole or in part, and (2) that all documents or things in a demanded category that are in the possession, custody, or control of that party and to which no objection is being made will be included in the production [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.220]. Any documents demanded must either be produced as they are kept in the usual course of business, or be organized and labeled to correspond with the categories in the demand [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(a)]. If a party responding to a demand for production of electronically stored information objects to a specified form for producing the information, or if no form is specified in the demand, the responding party shall state in its response the form in which it intends to produce each type of information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(c)]. Unless the parties otherwise agree or the court otherwise orders, if a demand for production does not specify a form or forms for producing a type of electronically stored information, the responding party must produce the information in the form or forms in which it is ordinarily maintained or in a form that is reasonably usable [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(d)(1)]. Further, a party need not produce the same electronically stored information in more than one form [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(d)(2)]. If necessary, the responding party at the reasonable expense of the demanding party must, through detection devices, translate any data compilations included in the demand into reasonably usable form [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(e)]. When there is no dispute about the application of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(g)(1), now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(b), the statute automatically shifts the reasonable expense of a necessary translation of a data compilation into usable form to the demanding party [Toshiba America Electronic Components, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 772, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 (discussed in [4][a], below); decided prior to statutory revision].

When the responding party serves a response that contains a statement of compliance pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.220, but the responding party thereafter fails to permit the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling in accordance with the statement of compliance, the demanding party may move for an order compelling compliance [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(a)].

For additional discussion of the discovery of electronically stored information in California, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery

[d] Monetary Sanctions

In most circumstances, the court must impose a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010] against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes or opposes a motion to compel further response to a demand, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust [Code Civ. Proc. 2031.320(b); see Code Civ. Proc. 2031.320(c) (issue, evidence, or terminating sanctions)]. Absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. 2031.320(d)(1)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Responses to Demand

Toshiba America Electronics Components v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 arose from a dispute, in trade secret litigation, over which party should pay the expense of recovery of a large quantity of additional responsive material stored on computer backup tapes. The trial court did not require the demanding party to pay any part of the cost of restoring and searching the backup tapes. The court of appeal granted relief, holding, as a matter of first impression, that when there is no dispute about the application of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(g)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(b)), the statute automatically shifts the expense of translating a data compilation into usable form to the demanding party (124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 772) . However, the demanding party is expected to pay only the reasonable expense for a necessary translation (124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 773) . Reasonableness and necessity are factual issues, which, when disputed, are to be determined by the trial court. If a demanding party is asked to pay for translations that the party does not believe are necessary, or when the party disputes the reasonableness of the expenses alleged, the party may seek a protective order or move to compel production, and the trial court may then make whatever orders justice requires (124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 772-773, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.060, 2031.320).

THE COURT SHOULD IMPOSE _____ [specify, e.g., ISSUE AND MONETARY] SANCTIONS AGAINST _____ [specify responding party, e.g., DEFENDANT] BECAUSE HE/SHE/IT FAILED TO COMPLY WITH A COURT ORDER PURSUANT TO CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 2031.320 COMPELLING COMPLIANCE WITH A DEMAND FOR INSPECTION and/or COPYING and/or TESTING and/or SAMPLING] OF _____ [DOCUMENTS and/or TANGIBLE THINGS and/or LAND OR OTHER PROPERTY and/or ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION], _____ [identify set number, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET].

A. Court May Make Orders That Are Just. If the court issues an order under Code of Civil Procedure Section 201.320 compelling compliance by a party who has filed a response to a demand for inspection but has failed to permit the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling in accordance with that party's statement of compliance, and that party then fails to obey that order compelling compliance, the court may make those orders that are just against the party (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(c)).

B. Court May Impose Issue, Evidence, or Terminating Sanction. In making those orders that it deems just under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.320 against a party who has failed to comply with an order compelling compliance with a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, the court may order the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(c)).

C. Court May Impose Monetary Sanction. In lieu of or in addition to the imposition under §§ 2023.030 and 2031.320 of the Code of Civil Procedure of an issue, evidence, or terminating sanction, the court may impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030(a) against the party who has failed to comply with an order compelling compliance with a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(c)).

This form is for use by a party seeking sanctions for the failure of the other party to comply with an order compelling compliance with a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320]. For memoranda to use in support of the motion to compel compliance, see § 85.20.

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.]. If a monetary sanction is sought in addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, this form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. §

2023.030(a) [Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

For forms supporting motions for an order compelling response to a demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information, see Ch. 85A, Discovery: E-Discovery , §§ 85A.20-85A.22.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel might wish to insert argument in favor of one particular type of sanction over another. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party to whom the demand was made acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust [see § 85.20[2][d]].

[c] Sanctions

If a party fails to obey an order compelling inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, the court may make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq. (sanctions)]. In lieu of or in addition to that sanction, the court may impose a monetary sanction [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq. (monetary sanctions)].

Absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(d)(1); see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery, § 85A.09].

THE DEMANDING PARTY IS NOT ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING FURTHER RESPONSE AND

THEREFORE THE MOTION SHOULD BE DENIED AND THE RESPONDING PARTY AWARDED A MONETARY SANCTION.

[EITHER]

A. Demanding Party May Move Only When Response Is Incomplete, Inadequate, Evasive, Without Merit, or Too General. The party demanding an inspection under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 et seq. may move for an order compelling further response to the demand only when the response contains a statement of compliance that is incomplete, a representation of inability to comply is inadequate, incomplete, or evasive, or an objection that is without merit or is too general (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310).

[AND/OR]

B. Motion Must Show Good Cause Justifying Discovery Sought. The party demanding an inspection under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 et seq. may move for an order compelling further response to the demand only if the motion sets forth specific facts showing good cause justifying the discovery sought by the demand (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310).

[AND/OR]

C. Motion Must Be Accompanied by Declaration. The party demanding an inspection, copying, testing, or sampling under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 et seq. may move for an order compelling further response to the demand only if the motion is accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of any issue presented by it (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(b)).

[AND/OR]

D. Waiver of Right to Compel Further Response. The party demanding an inspection under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 et seq. waives any right to compel a further response to the demand, unless notice of the motion to compel is given within 45 days of the service of the response, or any supplemental response, or within any extended period if service of the response was by mail[, or within any specific later date to which the parties have agreed in writing] (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(c); see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1013(a), 2016.050; Sexton v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1408-1410, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 ; see Standon Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 898, 902-903, 275 Cal. Rptr. 833).

[AND/OR]

E. Failure to Comply With Procedure. When the party demanding an inspection, copying, testing, or sampling under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 et seq. fails to comply with the procedures outlined by that statute, the court has no basis on which to issue an order compelling compliance (see People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 352, 358, 131 Cal. Rptr. 476 , disapproved on other grounds in Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 300-301, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 ; Field Research Corp. v. Patrick (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 603, 612, 106 Cal. Rptr. 473).

[AND/OR]

F. Matter Not Discoverable if Privileged or Irrelevant or Subject to Work Product Rule. Matter is not subject to discovery if it is privileged or if it is not relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action, or if it is subject to the work product limitations of Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018.010 et seq. (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010).

[AND/OR]

G. Matter Not Discoverable if Inadmissible or Does Not Lead to Admissible Evidence. Matter is not subject to discovery if it is neither itself admissible in evidence nor appears reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010).

[AND/OR]

H. Informal Interviews Are Improper. Compelling the opposing party to give the moving party access to its employees for the purpose of conducting informal interviews is not among the demands for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling expressly authorized under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010; see also Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 840, 849, 176 Cal. Rptr. 874 , overruled on other grounds, American Home Assurance Co. v. Societe Commerciale Toutelectric (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 430).

[AND/OR]

I. Valid Claim to Protective Order. When a party has a valid claim of a right to a protective order with respect to unproduced documents that were alleged to be proprietary and confidential, it has substantial justification, as a matter of law, for withholding these documents until the motion for the protective order is determined, and for opposing the motion to compel (Foothill Properties v. Lyon/Copley Corona Assoc. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1542, 1558, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488).

[CONTINUE]

J. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes a motion to compel further response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2031.310(h)).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in opposition to a motion by a party for an order compelling further response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling and for a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310]. For memoranda relating to specific grounds of evidentiary privilege or other protection from discovery, see generally Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the memorandum set out in § 85.11.

For additional memoranda opposing orders to compel further responses to demands for production of electronically stored information (ESI), and discussion of the grounds for seeking or opposing orders to compel in the context of e-discovery, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery, §§ 85A.30, 85A.31.

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 85.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel might set forth facts showing that the statement of compliance is complete; that the representation of inability to comply is adequate, complete, and not evasive; and that objections have merit and are not too general. These facts should help show that the responding party had substantial justification for his or her actions, or that a monetary sanction against the responding party would be unjust [see, e.g., Standon Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 898, 904, 275 Cal. Rptr. 833 (case sent back for reconsideration because it was not clear that trial court considered these exceptions)]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the moving party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.310(h) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

Absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(j)(1) see Ch. 85A, Discovery: E-Discovery , § 85A.09].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Right to Compel Further Response

In Sexton v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , plaintiff sued defendant medical center for negligence. In his response to defendant's demand for production of documents, plaintiff objected to 16 of the demands. Although defendant attempted to resolve the disagreement with plaintiff, it never requested an extension of time in which to file a motion to compel, and none was granted. Over two months after receipt of plaintiff's response, defendant filed a motion to compel compliance. Plaintiff filed written opposition papers to the motion, but did not raise the untimeliness of motion until the commencement of hearing on motion. When it became clear that the trial court did not and would not deny or dismiss the motion on the ground that it was not timely filed, plaintiff applied for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate compelling the trial court to deny as untimely defendant's motion to compel (58 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1411) . The court examined the legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310). It found those changes indicative of a Legislative intent to not vest any authority in the court to permit discovery that is not timely made, furthering the policy that discovery proceed not only smoothly, but swiftly as well. Thus, the court concluded that the 45-day limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(c)) is mandatory and jurisdictional in that it renders the court without authority to rule on an untimely motion other than to deny it (58 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1408-1410) .

In Standon Co. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 898, 275 Cal. Rptr. 833 , defendants in a personal injury action served on plaintiff a demand for inspection and production of documents on May 9, 1990. Plaintiff responded on May 31, 1990, objecting to some of the requests as privileged, but agreeing to produce some of the other documents requested. The documents about which plaintiff had no objections were produced on June 13, 1990, at which time plaintiff repeated his objections to the remaining documents that were not produced. On August 8, 1990, defendants filed a motion to compel further response, directed only at the documents that were not produced. The trial court found the motion untimely and imposed sanctions of $1 against each defendant. Defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate.

Although the court of appeal issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to vacate its order awarding sanctions, in all other respects the petition was denied. The court explained that Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310) requires that a motion to compel further response to a demand for production be made within 45 days of the service of the response. Failure to so move within that specified time constitutes a waiver of any right to compel a further response. It said that defendants' motion was made less than 45 days after the date for production, but more than 45 days after the response date. Thus, the motion was untimely (225 Cal. App. 3d 898, 902) . The court further explained that this means that nonmeritorious objections in the response must be attacked by a motion made within 45 days. If the court finds that the objections are unfounded, it will order a further response that completely identifies the available, nonprivileged documents and agrees to produce them. This ensures that the validity of any privilege objections raised by the responding party is resolved by the court. An adequate response ends any dispute over the right to inspect the documents or objects. If later the responding party actually refuses to produce the items promised, the party demanding inspection should bring a motion to compel compliance. The court emphasized that these are different motions and are not interchangeable (225 Cal. App. 3d 898, 902-903) . The court of appeal also addressed the propriety of the $1 sanctions, saying that the trial court is not required to award monetary sanctions against the unsuccessful party. The trial court should exercise its discretion and consider whether the losing party acted with "substantial justification," or whether "other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." Because it was unclear whether the trial court had made these considerations, the issue was sent back for reconsideration (225 Cal. App. 3d 898, 904-905) .

[b] Failure to Comply With Procedure

People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 352, 358, 131 Cal. Rptr. 476 , disapproved on other grounds in Davies v. Superior Court (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 291, 300-301, 204 Cal. Rptr. 154, 682 P.2d 349 , arose out of a wrongful death action in which a pretrial conference order directed that all discovery and law and motion matters were to close 30 days before trial. However, 12 days before the scheduled trial, and in the absence of a prior request to defendant, plaintiff moved for an order directing the state to produce certain accident reports for inspection and copying. The trial court granted the motion and continued the trial date.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its discovery order (60 Cal. App. 3d 352, 361) . In so doing, it held that the 1974 amendments to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.] providing for a request procedure for inspection and production were designed to lighten the trial court's burden of hearing motions in every case in which documentary evidence is sought. Because of this, compliance with the request procedures outlined in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 was a mandatory prerequisite to the seeking of a court order for production of documents (60 Cal. App. 3d 352, 358) .

Field Research Corp. v. Patrick (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 603, 106 Cal. Rptr. 473 is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for compensatory and punitive damages in a libel action. Among defendant's assignments of error was that the trial court erred in failing to order production of 1,042 completed questionnaires on which plaintiff's poll was based. Defendant had made his demand for production midway through the trial. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that there was no basis for such an order, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that defendant had not complied with the requirement of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 (now see Code Civ. Proc § 2031.010 et seq.) providing for 10 days notice to all parties, and no excuse had been offered for the noncompliance (30 Cal. App. 3d 603, 612) .

[c] Informal Interviews Are Improper

In Volkswagenwerk Aktiengesellschaft v. Superior Court (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 840, 176 Cal. Rptr. 874 , overruled on other grounds, American Home Assurance Co. v. Societe Commerciale Toutelectric (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 406, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 430 , an action for personal injuries against an automobile manufacturer and other defendants, plaintiffs moved for and obtained a complex discovery order that included a provision granting plaintiffs' representative permission, during normal working hours, to question any of defendant's employees in West Germany, not under oath, to identify persons who possess knowledge for purposes of selecting persons for depositions and locating documents. Defendant was permitted to have counsel present and to tape record, and was required to minimize inconvenience and to advise and request cooperation from its employees. Defendant petitioned for mandate or prohibition to vacate the discovery order on multiple grounds, including that the order permitting informal interviews was not authorized by California law.

The court of appeal ordered that a writ of mandate be issued directing the trial court to set aside its discovery order. Concerning that part of the order permitting informal interviews, the court held that the interviews could not be brought within the former Discovery Act by simple construction, no matter how liberal, and that to validate the interviews it would be required to extend the former Discovery Act beyond its statutory text. Although a party to litigation is entitled to unimpeded access to persons who may have relevant information, and may if necessary have court orders to forestall interference with such access, the discovery order in question went farther, requiring petitioner not only to permit plaintiffs to interview its employee within its plant during working hours but also to advise and request that the employees cooperate with plaintiffs (123 Cal. App. 3d 840, 849) .

In Foothill Properties v. Lyon/Copley Corona Assoc. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 1542, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 488 , the court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in imposing sanctions on a party that had a valid claim of a right to a protective order with respect to unproduced documents that were alleged to be proprietary and confidential, and had substantial justification, as a matter of law, for withholding these documents until the motion for the protective order was determined, and for opposing the motion to compel (46 Cal. App. 4th 1542, 1557) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver of Right to Compel Further Response

The factual and procedural background of Best Product, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 is discussed in § 85.10[4][a]. In this commercial litigation discovery dispute, the trial court erred when it issued, as a sanction, a judicial order that the attorney-client and work product privileges had been waived, based on defendant's failure to provide a privilege log in response to plaintiff's requests to inspect and produce. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300) provides the only method by which a claim of privilege can be waived in these circumstances Under that section, if a party to whom interrogatories have been directed fails to serve a timely response, that party waives any objection to the interrogatories, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2018 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq.). This provision was inapplicable in this case, however, because defendant filed timely responses, albeit boilerplate responses. Thus, the lack of a privilege log was a non-issue (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189-1190) . If plaintiff had properly moved to compel further responses to contest defendant's conclusory attorney-client and work product objections under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310), defendant could have been required to produce a privilege log that was sufficiently specific so the trial court could determine whether a particular document was or was not privileged. However, plaintiff did not rely on that statutory provision in bringing its motion. Moreover, even if plaintiff had brought and prevailed on a motion on that statutory ground, the court could not have found a waiver of privilege. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310) sets forth the exclusive remedies available to the court. The trial court can "make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Section 2023 [now see Section 2023.030]. In lieu of or in addition to that sanction, the court [could] impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023 [now see Section 2023.030(a)]." However, "even at that juncture, the statute does not include as an authorized sanction a judicial order that a privilege has been waived" (119 Cal. App. 4th 1181, 1189-1190) .

In Sperber v. Robinson (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 736, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659 , the defendant served a response to the plaintiff's request for production of documents on May 29, 1991. Allowing five days for mail service pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a) (requiring 5 calendar days as of January 1, 2002), the last date on which the plaintiff could have filed a timely motion to compel under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310) was July 18, 1991. The plaintiff did not file a motion to compel until September 23, 1991.

The court of appeal held that the plaintiff's failure to make the motion within the 45-day period prescribed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(c)) (in this case by July 18, 1991) constituted a waiver of any right to compel a further discovery response. The court noted that the plaintiff could take no solace from the fact that he filed an earlier motion to compel giving notice that a hearing on the motion would be heard on August 27, 1991. The plaintiff effectively withdrew that motion by unilaterally requesting that it be placed off calendar, and then filed an entirely new motion on September 23, 1991, that gave notice for hearing on November 4, 1991 (26 Cal. App. 4th 736, 745-746) .

[b] Court Must Impose Monetary Sanctions Absent Specified Findings

The factual and procedural background of London v. Dri-Honing Corp. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 240 is discussed in § 85.11[4][b]. In a case arising out of a discovery dispute in a wrongful termination suit, the court of appeal held that a separate motion for discovery monetary sanctions may be made after an underlying motion to compel further response to an inspection demand is litigated (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1001) . The timeliness of the request is subject to the trial court's discretion, rather than the 45-day limit from the time of the initial service of the response under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(c)) (117 Cal. App. 4th 999, 1009) .

THE COURT MAY ONLY MAKE THOSE ORDERS OF SANCTIONS THAT ARE JUST, AND MAY NOT IMPOSE A SANCTION THAT IS TOO HARSH UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES BECAUSE THAT SANCTION WOULD BE PUNITIVE RATHER THAN REMEDIAL AND WOULD GO BEYOND WHAT IS NECESSARY TO SECURE THE RESULTS OF THE INSPECTION DEMAND THAT WAS SOUGHT.

A. Court May Only Make Orders That Are Just. When a party fails to obey an order compelling _____ [response to or further response to or compliance with] a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, the court may only make those orders that are just (Code Civ. Proc. §_____ [2031.300 or 2031.310 or 2031.320]).

B. Purpose of Sanctions. The purpose of sanctions is to accomplish the object sought by the discovery process and to secure the just and expeditious resolution of actions, rather than to punish the party who has engaged in conduct constituting a misuse of the discovery process (see McGinty v. Superior Court (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 204, 210-216, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 292 ; Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 304, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377 ; Crummer v. Beeler (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858, 8 Cal. Rptr. 698).

C. Inappropriateness of Type and Severity of Sanctions. Sanctions are improper if they are not appropriate to the dereliction, and if they exceed that which is necessary to protect the interests of the party adversely affected by the misuse of the discovery process (see Motown Record Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 492, 202 Cal. Rptr. 227 ; Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499).

D. Limitation on Use of Sanctions. The chief limitation on the use of sanctions is that the sanction may not be used to put the prevailing party in a better position than that party might have been in had the misuse of the discovery process not been engaged in, and had the results of the discovery process been totally favorable to the prevailing party (see Wilson v. Jefferson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 952, 958-959, 210 Cal. Rptr. 464 ; Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 303, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321).

[Optional] E. Terminating Sanction Should Not Be Imposed If Responding Party Unable to Comply and Lesser Sanction Available. A terminating sanction or other sanction equivalent to dismissal is too harsh and an abuse of discretion for a party's failure to obey an order compelling _____ [response to or further response to or compliance with] a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, if the refusal to obey was due to an inability rather than a willful refusal to comply, and if another lesser sanction could be imposed that would be proper (see Puritan Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 884-885, 217 Cal. Rptr. 602).

[Optional] F. Proc. § 2031.300(d)(1) or Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(j)(1) or Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320(d)(1)*]).

This memorandum is for use in opposition to a motion for an order for sanctions against a party for his or her failure to obey an order compelling a response or further response to, or compliance with, a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.300-2031.320].

An issue, evidence, or terminating sanction is available only after an order compelling compliance with discovery has been issued by the court, and disobeyed by the party to be sanctioned [Ruvalcaba v. Government Employees Ins. Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 1579, 1581-1583, 272 Cal. Rptr. 541 ; see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.300-2031.320]. Thus, in the absence of such an order, counsel may argue that the imposition of any of these sanctions is premature. For further discussion of the available sanctions for failing to obey an order compelling responses, further responses, or compliance with a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, see § 85.12[2][c].

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the motions supported by the memoranda in §§ 85.12 and 85.21.

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 85.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel might set forth facts showing that the sanction being sought is too harsh for the circumstances, and that certain lesser sanctions could be imposed that would put the moving party in the position he or she would have been in had the order been obeyed but that would not punish the disobedient party.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Purpose of Sanctions

McGinty v. Superior Court (1994) 26 Cal. App. 4th 204, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 292 involved a wrongful death action arising from an airplane crash. The plaintiffs alleged that the crash was caused by a defective airplane engine, and intended to call an expert witness to testify as to the cause of the engine failure. The expert inadvertently forwarded materials to the plaintiffs' attorney that were subject to a protective order in another action.

The court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion by precluding the plaintiffs from using their expert witness because he had inadvertently forwarded the protected materials to their attorney. The attorney's conduct was not willful, the defendant was not prejudiced as these materials would have been discoverable through normal discovery, and the order was tantamount to a dismissal of the case. The sanctions were pure punishment to deter violation of court orders, which is not an appropriate aim of discovery sanctions (26 Cal. App. 4th 204, 210-216) .

In Caryl Richards, Inc. v. Superior Court (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 10 Cal. Rptr. 377 , plaintiffs husband and wife sought damages against defendant for injuries to the wife's eyes allegedly received as a result of use of hair spray manufactured by defendant. During pretrial discovery proceedings, the trial court ordered a further answer to an interrogatory that had been propounded by plaintiffs. Defendant provided a further answer, but did not state the exact proportions of each ingredient in the formula as requested in the interrogatory. Plaintiffs then moved the court for an order imposing sanctions either by striking defendant's answer and entering a default, or by an order that certain facts specified by plaintiff be established. The court denied the motion to strike the answer, but entered an order that certain facts be established unless defendant gave further answers within 15 days giving details of the proportions of the ingredients with their common chemical names. Defendant provided a statement with certain information, and plaintiffs made a motion asking for the same sanctions they had previously requested. Another judge heard the motion, found that the answer was not sufficient and that defendant had willfully failed to comply with the court's order, and ordered that the answer be stricken and a default entered. Defendant sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal requiring the trial court to vacate its order.

In granting defendant's petition, the court of appeal held that the trial court abused its discretion in entering the default. The court said that one of the principal purposes of discovery statutes is to enable a party to obtain evidence in the control of the adversary party in order to further the efficient, economical disposition of cases in accordance with right and justice on the merits (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 303, 307) . The statutes are to be liberally interpreted so that they may accomplish their purpose (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 303) . The sanctions the court could impose pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) were such as were suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the objects of discovery being sought (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 304) . However, the court emphasized that the trial court may not impose sanctions that are designed not to accomplish the objects of the discovery but to impose punishment instead (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 304) . The court held that by striking defendant's answer and entering a default judgment, the trial court deprived defendant of due process because the judgment precluded trial on other facts and issues in the case (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305) . The court went on to state that an order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2)(i) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)) that the facts sought to be proven by the interrogatories be taken as established for the purpose of the action would have secured the results that plaintiff had sought, while not depriving defendant of due process on the other issues in the action (188 Cal. App. 2d 300, 305-306) .

Crummer v. Beeler (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 8 Cal. Rptr. 698 , involved a suit for money had and received. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to strike defendant's answer based on former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1)) and on defendant's allegedly willful failure to appear for a noticed deposition. Defendant then moved to set aside the default under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, based on the fact that he was living in Canada and that, through his attorneys, he had attempted to move the depositions to a time that would have been convenient for him, but that plaintiff had adamantly refused. The motion to set aside the default was denied, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision, holding that the purpose of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) was not punishment, but the just and expeditious resolution of actions (185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858, 860) . In support of this statement, the court cited federal authority construing Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 37, which was substantially similar to the California sanctions statute. The court also noted that, under federal authority, imposition of sanctions was held to be improper unless the party who was not in compliance with discovery obligations was given an additional opportunity to comply (185 Cal. App. 2d 851, 858-859) . Counsel should note that Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030 is derived in part from both former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 and Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 37.

[b] Inappropriateness of Type and Severity of Sanctions

In Motown Record Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 202 Cal. Rptr. 227 , an action on a personal service contract, defendant served plaintiffs with a request for production of documents. Plaintiffs objected that the documents sought were protected by the attorney-client privilege. There followed a protracted series of discovery proceedings in which plaintiffs served and filed several supplementary responses to their objections purportedly providing a factual basis for their claim of privilege, and defendants twice moved to strike plaintiffs' pleadings for plaintiffs' failure to verify that they had provided all nonprivileged material. The trial court on two separate occasions determined that plaintiffs' factual showings were inadequate to verify that the materials sought were privileged, and ordered plaintiffs to provide further factual basis for their claim of privilege and imposed monetary sanctions on plaintiffs. Plaintiffs eventually served and filed a final and much-expanded set of descriptions of the documents and declarations to establish their privilege. Service of these materials occurred one whole day after the deadline that the trial court had set in its final order to plaintiffs to produce a factual basis for their claim. These materials suggested a tenuous basis for a claim of the attorney-client privilege. After further proceedings the trial court imposed monetary sanctions of $1,000 on plaintiffs for their tardiness in providing the final set of descriptions, held that plaintiffs' delay in providing these materials constituted a waiver of any attorney-client privilege, and ordered plaintiffs to produce all of the documents sought. Plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ. The court restated from earlier case law that the sanctions that a court could impose under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) were such as were suitable and necessary to enable the party seeking discovery to obtain the object of the discovery, but that the court could not impose sanctions that were designed to punish (155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 489) . Responding to defendant's argument that plaintiffs' prior acts of delay and avoidance in providing the factual basis should be taken into account in reviewing the appropriateness of the sanctions imposed, the court noted that sanctions had already been imposed on plaintiffs for their prior insufficient factual showings. The court noted further that the sanctions at issue in the case were imposed not for insufficiency of the factual showing made, but for their tardiness, and stated that the minimal delay caused by this tardiness did not prejudice defendant (155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 491) . The court held that the sanctions imposed by the trial court were excessive in that they were not reasonably calculated to achieve the purpose of affecting compliance with discovery and were punitive in nature. The court also held that if the compelled waiver was part of the sanction, it too was excessive (155 Cal. App. 3d 482, 490) .

In Deyo v. Kilbourne (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 149 Cal. Rptr. 499 , an attorney sued a former client for services rendered and the defendant, representing himself, filed an answer denying liability. Plaintiff served defendant with interrogatories, which were received by defendant while he was hospitalized with serious health problems that continued for the duration of the legal proceedings. After 60 days, during which time plaintiff granted defendant, through his wife, one extension to answer the interrogatories, the plaintiff brought a motion to strike defendant's answer for failure to answer, and the motion was denied. However, the court directed defendant to file answers by a specified date and ordered that his answers would be stricken if this was not done. Defendant filed answers by the date ordered, and although there was some response to each question and the answers did suggest a dispute existed concerning the amount of the fees, most of the answers were not fully responsive to the questions propounded. One month later, plaintiff filed a second motion for an order either compelling further answers to the interrogatories pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300), or to have the answer stricken and default judgment entered pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) or (d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1), (4)). The trial court granted the motion to strike the answer and to enter a default judgment, including reasonable expenses and attorney's fees, as a result of the motion. Defendant finally employed counsel and requested a new trial, which was denied. Defendant then appealed.

In reversing, the court of appeal discussed what sanctions are proper when a party fails to fully answer interrogatories, and provided general guidelines for trial courts to follow in imposing sanctions. The court said that interrogatories expedite the resolution of lawsuits and enable counsel to evaluate the reasonable value of claims and defenses, thereby encouraging prompt settlements or serving to facilitate trial preparation (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 779, 798) . Answers must be complete and responsive (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 783) . When the party desires a further response, he or she was then required to make a timely motion to compel further answers pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300) (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 786-787) . Attorney's fees and expenses could only be awarded when a motion pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2030(a) to compel was granted, and no other sanctions were authorized at that time (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 789) . The sanctions provided in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)) applied only when the party refuses to obey an order made requiring further responses (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 789) . (Counsel should note that under the California Civil Discovery Act, this procedure is specifically codified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.300, which provides for the imposition of a monetary sanction to the prevailing party of a motion to compel, and provides for the imposition of an issue, evidence, or terminating sanction only if a party fails to obey an order compelling further response to interrogatories.) The court of appeal in Deyo went on to explain that when a party has refused to supply information relevant to a particular claim or defense, an order establishing certain facts or precluding designated claims or defenses pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)) may be the appropriate sanction (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 792) . When a motion to compel has previously been granted, the court stated that the sanction should be appropriate to the dereliction and should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party entitled to but denied discovery (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 793) . The court then ruled that since answers had been made to interrogatories, although they might not have been fully responsive, and the plaintiff had also made a motion to compel, the trial court had jurisdiction to direct the defendant to file further answers, but did not have the jurisdiction at that time to strike the answer and enter a default judgment (84 Cal. App. 3d 771, 797-798) .

[c] Limitation on Use of Sanctions

In Wilson v. Jefferson (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 952, 210 Cal. Rptr. 464 , plaintiff brought a legal malpractice action against defendant, seeking actual and punitive damages for defendant's alleged negligence and fraud in failing to file plaintiff's personal injury action within the applicable statutory limitation period. The trial court, on plaintiff's motion, ordered defendant to produce documents relating to his office procedure to insure timely filings. Defendant failed to comply with this order and the trial court, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2)(C) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1), (4)), ordered defendant's answer stricken and a default judgment entered. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a sanction should not exceed that which is required to protect the interests of the party seeking discovery by placing that party in a position better than that which he or she would have enjoyed if he or she had obtained the discovery sought and it had been completely favorable to his or her cause. In the case at bar, defendant's conduct was an attempt to avoid inquiry into the merit of an affirmative defense that he had no duty to file the action because plaintiff had agreed first to pay filing fees but had failed to do so. The court held that this conduct was not dispositive of all the issues present in the case, such as the question of fraud or punitive damages, and to enter a default judgment based on this conduct erroneously placed plaintiff in a better position than that necessary to protect her interests in obtaining the discovery sought (163 Cal. App. 3d 952, 958-959) .

In Stein v. Hassen (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 109 Cal. Rptr. 321 , the court of appeal upheld the sanction of default, noting that had proper discovery been conducted, it would have tended to support plaintiff's cause of action. Thus the sanction of dismissal was within the trial court's discretion, as limited by the rule that sanctions may not be used to put the prevailing party in a better position than that party might have been in had the discovery order been entirely favorable to the prevailing party. In support of this proposition, the Stein court cited Thompson, Sanctions in California Civil Discovery (1968) 8 Santa Clara L. Rev. 185 (34 Cal. App. 3d 294, 303) .

[d] Terminating Sanction Should Not Be Imposed if Responding Party Unable to Comply and Lesser

Sanction Available

Puritan Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 217 Cal. Rptr. 602 involved an action for damages resulting from the failure of a drive shaft repaired by defendant. Plaintiff's expert lost the shaft after conducting an inspection. Consequently, plaintiff was unable to comply with an order compelling its production. Defendant sought and obtained an order of sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.320), which excluded from evidence the shaft, photographs of the shaft, and any expert testimony based on examination of the shaft or photographs. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to vacate the order.

The court of appeal granted the writ, directing the trial court to vacate its order to the extent that it excluded photographs of the shaft and testimony based on the shaft (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 888) . The court equated the order with one for dismissal because its effect was to preclude proof of an essential element of plaintiff's action (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 884-885) . A sanction equivalent to dismissal was too harsh in this case, since the failure to produce the shaft was not willful and did not justify an inference that plaintiff's case lacked merit (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 885) . It was proper to exclude the lost shaft and related testimony because defendant never had a chance to inspect the shaft. However, defendant was able to inspect any photographs. The court therefore held that it was an abuse of discretion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b)(2) to exclude photographs of the shaft and related testimony (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 885-887) .

Note that the court of appeal in Puritan discussed whether the failure to obey the discovery in question needed to be "willful" in deciding whether the sanction was appropriate under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(b). The court decided that the fact of noncompliance, not the willfulness or good faith of the responding party, was the important factor in deciding whether to impose a sanction (171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 882-884) . Similarly, neither former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010 et seq.) nor any of the code sections governing individual methods of discovery include "willfulness" as a requirement for the imposition of sanctions. Nevertheless, it could still be argued that willfulness may still be considered in deciding which sanction is appropriate, as was apparently done by the Puritan court (see 171 Cal. App. 3d 877, 885) . Until this point is further clarified by the courts, counsel should proceed with caution in asserting willfulness as a factor to be considered in deciding the appropriateness of a sanction.

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT _____ [specify moving party or affected person, e.g., DEFENDANT] A PROTECTIVE ORDER REGARDING _____ [specify demanding party, e.g.,

PLAINTIFF]'S DEMAND FOR _____ [INSPECTION and/or COPYING and/or TESTING and/or SAMPLING] OF _____ [DOCUMENTS and/or TANGIBLE THINGS and/or LAND OR OTHER PROPERTY and/or ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION], _____ [identify set number, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET], AND A MONETARY SANCTION, BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN AND THE ORDER IS REQUIRED BY JUSTICE TO PROTECT _____ [specify moving party or affected person or organization, e.g., DEFENDANT] FROM _____ [UNWARRANTED ANNOYANCE and/or EMBARRASSMENT and/or OPPRESSION and/or UNDUE BURDEN AND EXPENSE].

A. Motion for Protective Order. When an inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of documents, tangible things, land or other property, or electronically stored information has been demanded, _____ [the party to whom the demand has been directed or any other party or any affected person] may promptly make a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion, for a protective order (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060).

B. Power of Court to Issue Protective Order. For good cause shown, the court may make any order concerning the demand that justice requires to protect any _____ [party or other person] from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b); see Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 119 n.4, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161).

C. Types of Protective Order. The protective order that the court may issue pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.060 may include, but is not limited to, [one or more of] the following direction(s):

[EITHER]

That all or some of the items or categories of items in the inspection demand not be produced or made available at all (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(1)).

[AND/OR]

That the time specified in Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.260 to respond to the set of demands for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling, or to a particular item or category in the set, be extended (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(2)).

[AND/OR]

That the place of production be other than that specified in the inspection demand (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(3)).

[AND/OR]

That the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling be made only on specified terms and conditions (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(4)).

[AND/OR]

That a trade secret or other confidential research, development, or commercial information not be disclosed, or be disclosed only to specified persons or only in a specified way (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(5); see Stadish v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1144, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 ; Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. v. Superior Court (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1138, 1141, 286 Cal. Rptr. 50).

[AND/OR]

That the items produced be sealed and thereafter opened only on order of the court (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(6)).

[If party or affected person seeks protective order regarding production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information, add:]

[EITHER]

D. Power of Court to Issue Protective Order When Electronically Stored Information Is Not Reasonably Accessible Because of Undue Burden [and/or Expense]. If the _____ [moving party or affected person] demonstrates that the requested electronically stored information is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense, the court may issue a protective order (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(c)).

[AND/OR]

E. Limitations on Production of Electronically Stored Information That Is Not Reasonably Accessible Because of Undue Burden and/or Expense. If the court finds good cause for the production of electronically stored information from a source that is not readily accessible, the court's protective order may include, but is not limited to, the following condition(s) for the discovery: _____ [specify limitations of frequency and extent of discovery of electronically stored information and/or allocation of expense of discovery] (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(e); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(f)).

[CONTINUE]

F. Factual Showing of Good Cause. The good cause that is required for a protective order requires a factual exposition of a reasonable basis for the order sought (see Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682).

[Optional] G. Balancing Burden Against Likelihood of Discovering Admissible Evidence. The court must limit the scope of discovery if, pursuant to a motion for protective order, it determines that the burden, expense, or intrusiveness of that discovery clearly outweighs the likelihood that the information sought will lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020; see Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 842-843, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 ; Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 383-384, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 ; Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 223, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567).

[Optional] H. Protection Against Nonlitigation Use of Discovered Information. A protective order that prohibits a litigant from using, publishing, or disseminating information obtained by discovery for any purpose other than the litigation does not offend the right of freedom of speech guaranteed under the United States Constitution, Amendment I, when the order is issued on a showing of good cause, is limited to context of pretrial civil discovery, and does not restrict the dissemination of information gained from other sources (Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S.

20, 37, 104 S. Ct. 2199, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17 ; Coalition Against Police Abuse v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 888, 896-906, 216 Cal. Rptr. 614).

I. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion for a protective order, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2031.060(h)).

[Add supporting memoranda for each particular type of protective order sought. When appropriate, include specific memoranda relating to objections, privileges, or other grounds that provide the basis for "good cause." Add memoranda generally supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

This memorandum is for use in supporting a motion for a protective order concerning a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060].

Optional Paragraph H is for use when protection is sought to prevent nonlitigation uses of the matters discovered, such as when the discovering party has indicated an intent to publish discovered matter before trial.

The motion for a protective order must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(a)]. This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 85.02[3]].

For a memorandum supporting a motion for a protective order in the context of e-discovery, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery, § 85A.40. For a discussion of e-discovery generally, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing a need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)]. Counsel should state facts and insert argument in favor of particular protective orders that are desired, such as showing facts and reasons why certain or all items or categories of items in the demand should not be produced at all. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.060(h) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

Note, however, that despite Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(h), absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(i)(1)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Power of Court to Issue Protective Order

Shepherd v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 107, 130 Cal. Rptr. 257, 550 P.2d 161 was a wrongful death action against a city and some individual police officers. Among plaintiff's discovery requests was a request under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.010-2031.320) to photograph the individual defendants in the clothes they wore the night of the shooting of plaintiff's son. Plaintiff claimed that such photographs would facilitate the interviewing of potential witnesses. When defendants refused to comply with this request for photographing, plaintiff made a motion pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300), for an order requiring defendants to be photographed in the clothing they wore on the night of the incident. Believing that it lacked the authority to make the requested order, the trial court denied plaintiff's motion.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate, requiring the trial court to make a determination of whether good cause was present, as was required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 for the granting of an order compelling the photographing of the officers in the specified clothing (17 Cal. 3d 107, 119) . In response to defendants' objections that such photographs would jeopardize their usefulness in undercover assignments, or would put their own safety and that of their families at risk, the Supreme Court noted that the court should consider plaintiff's need for the photographs, the adverse effects on defendants from such photographs, and alternative methods of procedure. In this regard, the Court stated that the trial court is free to make use of appropriate protective orders pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019 when fashioning orders under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060) (17 Cal. 3d 107, 119 n.4).

[b] Types of Protective Order

In Stadish v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 , plaintiff sued defendant alleging injuries from exposure to toxic chemicals while living near an underground natural gas storage field owned by defendant. Plaintiff served a demand for production of documents and then agreed to an extension of time to respond; and defendant responded within this extended period. In response to further demands, defendant advised plaintiff that it would fully produce and allow inspection of further documents if plaintiff signed a confidentiality agreement designed to protect defendant's trade secrets. Plaintiff objected to the proposed agreement and to a modified agreement and filed a motion to compel. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion and issued a protective order, finding that defendant's responses to plaintiff's document demands were timely and impliedly finding that defendant had not waived its right to assert the trade secret privilege as a basis for its request for a protective order (71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1136-1138) . A petition for writ of mandate followed (71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1139) .

The court of appeal found that the record showed that plaintiff's counsel agreed to an extension of time to respond and that defendant responded within this extended period and therefore did not waive under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(k) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300] the objections to the demand stated within in its response (71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1140) . Although the court of appeal determined that defendant waived the trade secret privilege by failing to assert it in response to the demand, it held that defendant was still entitled to seek a protective order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(e)(5) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060] to limit the manner in which trade secrets subject to discovery would be disclosed (71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1141, 1144) . The court reasoned that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(e) has no time limit for the application for a protective order against "unwarranted ... undue burden and expense." Accordingly, the party who has otherwise waived the right to object to the production of documents and has produced most of the documents requested may still seek a protective order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(e)(5) (that trade secret be disclosed only to specified persons or only in a specified way), restricting dissemination of documents previously produced (71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1144) .

For discussion of whether good cause exists for a protective order under Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(5), see the discussion of this case in [4][a], below.

In Fireman's Fund Insurance Company v. Superior Court (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1138, 286 Cal. Rptr. 50 , plaintiff insured sued defendant insurance company for bad faith failure to contribute to a settlement after defendant, which provided it with excess insurance coverage, refused to contribute to a settlement between plaintiff and a third party. Plaintiff sought from defendant production of all documents related to any reinsurance agreement covering plaintiff's policy, and all documents and communications related to reinsurance of the particular claims arising out of the action against plaintiff. When defendant refused the requested production, plaintiff moved to compel the production. The trial court granted the motion. Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal found that the blanket order of production was in error. It said that the reinsurance agreement should not be disclosed because it contained highly sensitive commercial information (233 Cal. App. 3d 1138, 1141) . Citing both former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(e)(5) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(5)], which specifically authorizes a court to make any order for good cause shown that protects confidential commercial information from unwarranted disclosure, and former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(e)(6) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(6)], which allows a court to order potentially sensitive documents produced under seal and opened only after conducting an in camera review, the court found the trial court abused its discretion in ordering disclosure of the other requested materials without first reviewing the materials in camera to determine their value and to excise any sensitive matter before ordering disclosure (233 Cal. App. 3d 1138, 1140-1141) .

[c] Factual Showing of Good Cause

Goodman v. Citizens Life & Cas. Ins. Co. (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 61 Cal. Rptr. 682 was an action for wrongful termination of an agency contract. In that case, plaintiffs noticed the deposition of an out-of-state witness, and defendant moved for an order that plaintiffs pay defense counsel's travel expenses to Missouri where the deposition was to take place, citing only former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.420] in support of this motion. The trial court granted defendant's motion for expenses.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that even assuming arguendo that the order requiring payment of travel expenses is an order protecting defendant from annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, there still needs to be a factual exposition of reasonable grounds constituting good cause for the order (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819) . Neither the statement that it would be necessary to travel from California to Missouri, nor the statement concerning anticipated expenses made on information and belief (and therefore of no evidentiary value) was sufficient to provide grounds for the trial court's order (253 Cal. App. 2d 807, 819-820) .

Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020 codifies the holding in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 383-384, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 and its progeny, discussed below, that in exercising their discretion in considering requests for discovery, courts should weigh the relative importance of the information sought against the hardship entailed by its production. The Reporter's Note to Proposed [former] Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020) explains that in drafting Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(c), the State Bar-Judicial Council Joint Commission on Discovery "concluded that this discretion was so important as a counter-balance to the broad standard of discovery relevance, that it should be written into the statute, and not left to implication."

Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 was a class action suit in nuisance and/or trespass, in which the class consisted of five named plaintiffs. In the course of discovery proceedings, defendant received the names of some unnamed plaintiffs and sought to depose 20 of them at random. When plaintiffs' attorney could only produce two, defendant sought depositions of 20 others, stating its intention to exclude from the class those who did not appear for depositions. On plaintiff's motion, the trial court issued a protective order which required defendant to subpoena the unnamed plaintiffs.

The Supreme Court upheld this order, denying defendant's petition for a writ of mandate (7 Cal. 3d 832, 843) . The Court noted that without the protective order, which shifts from plaintiffs to defendant the onus of compelling attendance of unnamed class members at depositions, the hardship on plaintiffs in class actions would be great (7 Cal. 3d 832, 842) . First of all, there is no particular reason for plaintiffs to be required to compel attendance; they have little control over the loosely knit class, and the defendants are just as capable as the named plaintiffs of compelling deponents' attendance (7 Cal. 3d 832, 841-842) . More importantly, however, the burden on the class in the absence of this particular type of protective order is severe in that plaintiffs' attorneys would be forced to expend extraordinary time and trouble to round up persons with whom they have had no prior contact. The risk they take if they fail to compel the attendance of these persons is that the prospective deponents will be excluded from the class. Therefore, a defendant would effectively be able to stifle a class action at the discovery stage (7 Cal. 3d 832, 842) . The Supreme Court thus went on to hold that in fashioning this particular protective order, the trial court wisely balanced defendant's right to discovery against the hardships which would be imposed on plaintiffs in the absence of the protective order (7 Cal. 3d 832, 842-843) .

Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 is the leading case construing the purposes and philosophy behind the former Discovery Act. Greyhound concerned a personal injury action involving an accident between plaintiffs' motor vehicle and defendant's bus. At the scene of the accident, before plaintiffs were taken to the hospital, defendant's adjusters and investigators obtained written and signed statements concerning the accident from various witnesses, many of whom were out-of-state residents. After unsuccessfully attempting to obtain these witnesses' accounts from other sources, plaintiffs moved to require defendant to produce and permit the inspection, copying, or photographing of the witnesses' statements. Although defendant objected to the production of these statements on various grounds, the trial court ordered their production. This holding was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which denied defendant's application for a writ of prohibition (56 Cal. 2d 355, 402) .

In discussing factors which courts should apply in deciding whether to uphold or deny discovery, the Greyhound Court stated that courts should weigh the relative importance of the information sought against the hardship entailed by its production in exercising their discretion (56 Cal. 2d 355, 383-384) . Thus if great hardship would be imposed on the party whose depositions are sought, and if relatively unimportant information would be elicited from the depositions, then it is reasonable to infer that a protective order is proper.

Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 arose from a dispute over a contract to supply gun mounts for military aircraft. The defendant in the contract action had allegedly repudiated its original contract with the plaintiff and had arranged to obtain the gun mounts from Calcor, one of the contract plaintiff's competitors. The contract plaintiffs had served a deposition subpoena on Calcor's custodian of records, seeking production of extensive documentation regarding all of Calcor's gun mount business, including any dealings with the contract defendant.

In this opinion, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of Calcor's motion for a protective order because the 12-page demand, which included six pages of instructions and definitions was burdensome in the extreme, was overly general and failed to demonstrate any reasonable relationship between the materials sought to be produced and the issues in the case (53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 218-219) . The court observed that in ruling on discovery motions, trial judges must carefully weight the cost, time, expense, and disruption of normal business resulting from an order compelling the discovery against the probative value of the material which might be disclosed (53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 223) .

[e] Protection Against Nonlitigation Use of Discovered Information

In Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 104 S. Ct. 2199, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17 , plaintiffs, a spiritual leader, his religious group, and individual members of the group, brought an action in a Washington state court, alleging that defendant had published several defamatory articles concerning plaintiffs. To prepare against allegations that the articles had resulted in diminished donations and membership, defendant sought discovery of donor and membership lists and amounts of donations. Plaintiffs resisted a motion by defendant to compel discovery of this information and also sought a protective order barring defendant from disseminating any discovered information. Plaintiffs declared that defendant had expressed intent to continue publishing articles about plaintiffs, including information gained through discovery. The trial court granted defendant's motion to compel discovery and denied plaintiffs' motion for a protective order. Plaintiffs sought reconsideration of their motion, describing incidents of harassment and declaring that public release of donor and membership lists would adversely affect membership and income of the religious group, and would subject members to further harassment and reprisals. Based on this showing of good cause, the trial court issued a protective order covering discovered matter that pertained to the financial affairs of plaintiffs and to the identity of the religious group's members and donors. The order expressly did not cover any information gained by means other than discovery. The order prohibited defendant from publishing, disseminating, or using the covered matter in any way except as necessary to prepare for and to try the case. The state supreme court upheld both orders on separate appeals by the parties. Defendant petitioned the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari, arguing that the protective order infringed its right of freedom of speech guaranteed by the U.S. Const., amend. I.

The Court granted certiorari to resolve a conflict between the federal courts of appeals, and affirmed the judgment. The Court stated that the critical question was whether a litigant's freedom of speech includes the right to disseminate information obtained under a court order that both granted access to that information and placed restraints on the way in which the information might be used. The applicable test is whether the practice in question furthers an important governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of speech, and whether the restraint on First Amendment freedoms is no greater than that necessary to protect that governmental interest. Applying this test, the Court first determined that judicial restraint on a litigant's ability to disseminate discovered information implicates First Amendment rights to a far lesser degree than restraints on dissemination of information in other contexts. There is no First Amendment right of access to information that is made available pursuant to state statutes only for purposes of litigating an action. Moreover, restraint on discovered, but not yet admitted, information does not restrict a traditionally public source of information, because discovery proceedings are not a public component of a civil trial and are generally conducted in private. Finally, an order prohibiting dissemination of discovered information before trial is not a classic type of prior restraint that requires exacting First Amendment scrutiny, because it does not prevent dissemination of the same information gained through means independent of the court's processes. The Court then determined that the discovery rule in question, modeled on Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 26(c), furthers a substantial governmental interest unrelated to the suppression of speech. Because the rule permits liberal discovery solely for litigation purposes, there is a significant potential for abuse, including that which seriously implicates privacy interests of litigants and third parties. The prevention of abuse that can attend compulsory production of information is sufficient to justify a rule that gives the trial court broad discretion to fashion protective orders (467 U.S. 20, 34-35) . The Court therefore held that, when, as in this case, a protective order is entered on a showing of good cause as required under Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 26(c), is limited to the context of pretrial discovery, and does not restrict the dissemination of the information if gained from other sources, it does not offend the First Amendment (467 U.S. 20, 32-34, 37) .

Note that the showing of good cause required under Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(c)(1) is substantially similar to that required under Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060.

Coalition Against Police Abuse v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 888, 216 Cal. Rptr. 614 involved actions by plaintiffs against a city challenging certain practices of the city's police department. The parties reached a settlement agreement after extensive discovery but before trial, and a consent judgment was filed accordingly. Plaintiffs retained numerous documents that they had obtained through discovery, many of which had been produced subject to protective orders that limited their copying, use, and dissemination. Defendant sought and obtained an order that required the return of all documents subject to the protective orders, and gave plaintiffs limited access to the documents pursuant to court order. Plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate this order, arguing among other things that it violated their freedom of speech under U.S. Const., amend. I and Cal. Const., art. I, § 2(a).

The court of appeal granted the writ, directing modification of the return order in some respects, but otherwise denying relief (170 Cal. App. 3d 888 , 906). The court first noted that the protective orders, subject to which the documents in issue had been discovered, had been entered on a showing of good cause and did not prohibit dissemination of information received from sources other than the discovered documents (170 Cal. App. 3d 888, 896) . Citing the reasoning and holding in Seattle Times Co. v. Rhinehart (1984) 467 U.S. 20, 104 S. Ct. 2199, 81 L. Ed. 2d 17 , the court held that these protective orders, and, in turn, the return order, did not offend the First Amendment (170 Cal. App. 3d 888, 900-901) . In addition, the court found no abuse of discretion in fashioning the return order. The court did, however, hold that the return order was not valid to the extent that it prevented dissemination of documents that had already been released to the public, either pursuant to the terms of the protective orders or by defendant's consent (170 Cal. App. 3d 888, 902-904) . The court therefore directed the trial court to modify its order in this respect (170 Cal. App. 3d 888, 906) .

[a] Power of Court to Issue Protective Order

The facts and procedural background of Stadish v. Superior Court (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1145, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 350 are discussed in [3][b], above. The Stadish court held that, when determining good cause for a protective order under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(e)(5) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(5)] setting conditions for disclosure of a trade secret, a trial court should refer to the procedures for a protective order set out in Evid. Code § 1061. These detailed procedures, although applicable to the disclosure of trade secrets in a criminal proceeding, have a utility in a civil action and should be followed (71 Cal. App. 4th 1130, 1145) . For discussion of Evid. Code § 1061, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 191, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations (Matthew Bender).

[b] Types of Protective Order

In Raymond Handling Concepts Corp. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 584, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 885 , plaintiff was injured while operating a forklift manufactured by defendants. The superior court issued a protective order providing that certain discovery produced by defendants (1) may be designated by defendants as confidential or a trade secret, (2) may be used by plaintiffs solely for the purposes of this litigation, and (3) may be disclosed by plaintiff's counsel to counsel in other pending similar litigation; however, the other counsel must execute a stipulation agreeing to be bound the protective order, and plaintiff's counsel must notify defense counsel when the disclosure is made. The defendants challenged the protective order in a mandamus proceeding.

The court of appeal denied the petition and held that the court did not abuse its discretion in entering the protective order. The court said that the issuance of protective orders is largely discretionary (39 Cal. App. 4th 584, 588) . The court held that by disclosing the information in this case and seeking a protective order, defendants have conceded that the information was discoverable in this case. Because plaintiff's attorney may share the discovery only with counsel in other similar cases, the information is assumed discoverable in those cases as well. The court also said that the order's requirement that plaintiff's counsel notify defense counsel when disclosure is made affords defense counsel an opportunity to argue that the cases are not similar enough to warrant discovery (39 Cal. App. 4th 584, 590) .

B. Order Only on Showing of Good Cause. [EITHER]

C. Party [or Affected Person] Seeking Protective Order on Basis That Electronically Stored Information Is Not Reasonably Accessible Because of Undue Burden [and/or Expense] Has Burden of Making That Showing. A party or affected person who seeks a protective order regarding the production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information on the basis that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense bears the burden of demonstrating that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense (*Code Civ. D. Court May Order Discovery of Electronically Stored Information Even if Party Moving for Protective Order Shows That Information Is Not Reasonably Accessible Because of Undue Burden [and/or Expense]. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in opposing a motion for a protective order concerning a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060].

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that some cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 85.02[3]].

For a memorandum in support of a motion specifically opposing a protective order in the context of e-discovery, see Ch. 85A, Discovery : E-Discovery § 85A.41. For a discussion of e-discovery generally, see Ch. 85A, Discovery :

E-Discovery.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel might state facts showing that under the terms of the demand, no person or organization would suffer unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense; that no good cause has been shown for a protective order; or that the protective order being sought is not required by justice. If the party seeking a protective order is seeking monetary sanctions, such facts should help show that the demanding party had substantial justification for his or her actions, or that a monetary sanction against the demanding party would be unjust. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the moving party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.060(h) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

Note, however, that despite Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(h), absent exceptional circumstances, the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(i)(1)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Transporting of Records to Allow for Inspection

Transbay Constr. Co. v. Superior Court (1936) 12 Cal. App. 2d 565, 55 P.2d 1237 arose out of an action to recover wages earned for work on the substructure of the Oakland-San Francisco Bay Bridge. On plaintiff's motion, made under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1000 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq.), the trial court ordered inspection in San Francisco of records that were kept at Hetch Hetchy. Defendant was adjudged in contempt when it refused to permit inspection within the City and County of San Francisco; it then petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of review.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court order, holding that records may properly be transported from one place within the state to another for the purpose of allowing inspection (12 Cal. App. 2d 565, 568) , although ordinarily an inspection made under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1000 should be made at the place where the documents or records are kept by the party in possession (12 Cal. App. 2d 565, 569) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver Resulting From Tactical Choice by Counsel Does Not Warrant Relief

In Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 263, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 112 , an action for declaratory relief pertaining to insurance coverage for a landslide, plaintiff served an unverified response to defendant's demand for production of documents which contained several objections that the requests were overbroad, oppressive, and burdensome, as well as objections that the discovery fell within the scope of a requested protective order. Disagreeing with the asserted objections, and contending that under former Code of Civ. Proc. § 2031(f) (now see Code Civ. Proc.

§§ 2031.210-2031.240 and 2031.280), all objections other than those asserted, were waived, defendant moved to compel production. After the trial court granted the motion, plaintiff brought an ex parte application for relief from waiver of its attorney-client privilege pursuant to former Code of Civ. Proc. § 2031(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300).

The court of appeal denied the writ (59 Cal. App. 4th 263, 276) . Beginning with the issue of waiver, the court explained that failure to include an objection expressly based on a privilege in the initial response resulted in a waiver of that privilege. Thus, plaintiff's objection that the requests were overbroad, oppressive, and burdensome did not preserve the attorney-client privilege (59 Cal. App. 4th 263, 272-274) . The court said that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(k) provided the sole remedy for relief from the waiver of an objection. Plaintiff sought relief based on counsel's alleged mistake of law. The court disagreed with plaintiff's argument, characterizing the "mistake" as insufficient to qualify for relief. It said that plaintiff's counsel made tactical choices that did not yield the results he expected. To the extent that counsel's alleged mistake may have resulted from his negligence, it is not the type of negligence upon which relief can be granted. The court said this was not a mistake of law on a point that is debatable and unsettled. Rather, counsel ignored the clear requirement of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(f) that specific responses and objections must be made to each item listed in a request, and chose to file blanket objections. He justified this approach by relying on the potential relief plaintiff might receive from its motion for a protective order. There was no suggestion indicating counsel mistakenly interpreted former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(k) and thus failed to assert the attorney-client privilege. Instead, the issue was not timely raised because plaintiff's attorney made no attempt to review the documents sought to be produced until after he served the response and after the court denied the motion for a protective order. It was only then that he discovered some of the documents fell within the attorney-client privilege. The court concluded that such neglect was inexcusable (59 Cal. App. 4th 263, 274-276) .

§ 85.90 Supporting Contention That No Cause of Action Exists for Spoliation of Evidence--Availability of Discovery Sanctions and Other Litigation Remedies Preclude Cause of Action

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That No Cause of Action Exists for Spoliation of Evidence--Availability of Discovery Sanctions and Other Litigation Remedies Preclude Cause of Action

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT/SUSTAIN DEFENDANT'S _____ [DEMURRER or MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT or MOTION TO STRIKE or other as appropriate] AS TO PLAINTIFF'S ACTION FOR INTENTIONAL SPOLIATION OF EVIDENCE, BECAUSE CALIFORNIA DOES NOT RECOGNIZE SUCH A TORT CAUSE OF ACTION WHEN LITIGATION REMEDIES SUCH AS A MOTION FOR DISCOVERY SANCTIONS ARE AVAILABLE.

A. No Cause of Action for First-Party Intentional Spoliation of Evidence. California does not recognize a tort of cause of action for intentional spoliation of evidence when the plaintiff knew or should have known of the loss or destruction of evidence during the course of the litigation to which that evidence was allegedly pertinent, and the action is against one who was/is a party to that same litigation. In this situation, the availability of litigation remedies, such as a motion for discovery sanctions, among other policy considerations, preclude the recognition of any such cause of action (Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 17-18, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511).

[AND/OR]

B. No Cause of Action for Third-Party Spoliation of Evidence. California does not recognize a tort cause of action for intentional spoilation of evidence by a third party, that is, by a person not a party to the underlying litigation to which the spoliated evidence is related (Temple Community Hospital v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 464, 466, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 852, 976 P.2d 223).

[AND/OR]

C. No Cause of Action for First-Party Negligent Spoliation of Evidence. There is no tort cause of action for negligent first party spoliation of evidence. The same policy considerations that weigh against providing a tort remedy for intentional spoliation of evidence, including the burden and costs to litigants, the judicial system, and others, also weigh against providing a tort remedy for negligent spoliation of evidence. Moreover, it would be anomalous to impose liability for negligence with respect to conduct that would not give rise to liability if committed intentionally. In this situation, the party claiming negligent spoliation may mitigate the effect of the missing evidence by demonstrating why it is missing or make use of available discovery sanctions (Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1301, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68 ; Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1089-1090, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884).

[AND/OR]

D. No Cause of Action for Third-Party Negligent Spoliation of Evidence. There is no tort cause of action for negligent third-party spoliation of evidence, that is, by a person not a party to the underlying litigation to which the spoliated evidence is related (Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1089-1090, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884 ; Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1407, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51 ; see Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1299 n.3, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68).

[Optional] E. Contractual Duty to Preserve Evidence. A cause of action for breach of a contractual duty to preserve evidence exists, only if based on [mutual agreement or promissory estoppel], and absent a showing that such a contract would be illegal, unconscionable, or otherwise unenforceable (Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1091-1092, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884).

[Optional] F. Statutory Duty to Preserve Evidence. The fact that a public entity has a statutory duty to preserve evidence is not, by itself, enough to create tort liability for a violation of that duty. Instead, the plaintiff also must show the resulting injury would be actionable against a private person (Forbes v. County of San Bernardino (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 58-59, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 721 ; Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1300, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that a plaintiff who is alleging intentional spoliation of evidence cannot maintain the cause of action because it is not a recognized tort in California when brought by one party to an action against another, and the plaintiff knew or should have known of the alleged loss or destruction of evidence during the litigation of the action between those actions.

This memorandum should be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue. For example, they may be used to support a general demurrer by defendant or a motion by defendant for summary judgment, judgment on the pleadings, order striking the cause of action, or other pretrial disposition of the cause of action. This memorandum may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

Any statement of fact should be supported by adequate reference to the pleading (or to matters subject to judicial notice), if the form is used in a memorandum supporting a demurrer or another challenge to the sufficiency of the pleading. Similarly, any statement of fact should be supported by adequate reference to evidence admitted or otherwise cognizable by the court, if the form is used in support of a motion challenging the adequacy of proof. For example, a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment may refer to affidavits or declarations based on personal knowledge or matters subject to judicial notice [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2009, 2015.5 (affidavits and declarations); Evid. Code § 450 et seq. (judicial notice)]. [3] Discussion of Authorities

In Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 , plaintiff, a child injured during birth, brought a medical malpractice action through his guardian ad litem against defendant hospital. During pretrial discovery, plaintiff's attorney sought from defendant hospital copies of plaintiff's medical records; defendant hospital was unable to locate certain records, including fetal monitoring strips recording plaintiff's heartbeat during labor.

Plaintiff's attorney then filed an amended complaint adding a cause of action for intentional spoliation of evidence and alleging that the hospital had intentionally destroyed the missing records to prevent plaintiff from prevailing in his malpractice action. The complaint sought punitive damages on the cause of action for intentional spoliation. Defendant moved to strike plaintiff's punitive damages claim on the ground that plaintiff had not complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 (requiring that a plaintiff may not file a complaint seeking punitive damages in an action arising out of the professional negligence of a health care provider unless the court grants an order permitting the complaint to be filed), and the trial court granted the motion. Plaintiff then moved under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 for leave to file a third amended complaint seeking punitive damages. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion. Defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate, and the court of appeal denied defendant's petition, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 did not apply to plaintiff's claim of intentional spoliation because the alleged spoliation did not occur while defendant hospital was rendering professional medical services to plaintiff.

The Supreme Court granted review to decide it should recognize a tort remedy for the intentional destruction or suppression of evidence by a party to the underlying litigation and, if so, whether Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13 applies to claims for punitive damages for acts of intentional spoliation by a health care provider. The Court reversed, and remanded with directions to the court of appeal to issue a writ directing the trial court to vacate its order granting plaintiff leave to file his amended complaint (18 Cal. 4th 1, 18) .

The Court did not reach the issue concerning Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13, because after considering the threshold issue, it concluded that there was no tort remedy in California for intentional spoliation of evidence by a party to the underlying cause of action to which the evidence is relevant (what the Court termed a "first party" spoliator) when, as in this case, the spoliation was or reasonably should have been discovered before the trial or other decision on the merits of the underlying cause of action (18 Cal. 4th 1, 17-18) .

The Court noted that intentional destruction of evidence should be condemned; that alone, however, was not sufficient policy reason for creating tort liability for the conduct. Three concerns stand out against imposing such liability: the conflict between a tort remedy for intentional first party spoliation and the policy against creating derivative tort remedies for litigation-related misconduct; the strength of existing nontort remedies for spoliation; and the uncertainty of the fact of harm in spoliation cases (18 Cal. 4th 1, 8) .

The Court discussed other situations in which courts refused to impose tort liability for litigation-related misconduct, such a perjury, and concluded that the reasoning underlying those decisions applied in this case as well. In those cases, the courts held that using tort law to correct misconduct arising during litigation raised policy considerations not present in deciding whether to create tort remedies for harms arising in other contexts. Courts favored remedying litigation-related misconduct by sanctions imposed within the underlying lawsuit rather than by creating new derivative torts, because to do otherwise would have led to repetitious, unending litigation, undermining the finality of judicial decisions (18 Cal. 4th 1, 9-11) .

The Court also concluded that tort liability was outweighed by the strong policy favoring use of nontort remedies to punish and correct litigation misconduct, and that such remedies already exist to punish and deter intentional spoliation of evidence. For example, an inference arises under Evid. Code. Code § 413, when one party has destroyed or rendered unavailable evidence, that the evidence was unfavorable to that party (18 Cal. 4th 1, 11-12) .

In addition, the provision for discovery sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) may be brought to bear for misuses of the discovery process that include "[f]ailing to respond or to submit to an authorized method of discovery." The Court held that destroying evidence in response to a discovery request after litigation has commenced would surely be a misuse of discovery within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.010), as would such destruction in anticipation of a discovery request. The Court noted that sanctions under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030) are potent, and a party, such as plaintiff in this case, may seek remedies under that section rather than seeking tort damages (18 Cal. 4th 1, 12) . Another remedy is State Bar disciplinary sanctions that can be imposed on attorneys who participate in the spoliation of evidence (18 Cal. 4th 1, 12-13) . Finally, Penal Code § 135 creates criminal penalties for spoliation (18 Cal. 4th 1, 13) . The Court concluded that these nontort remedies for spoliation are both extensive and apparently effective, precluding a need for establishing tort liability (18 Cal. 4th 1, 13) .

The Court held finally that tort liability was not appropriate because of the inherent uncertainty of the fact of harm in spoliation cases, a factor which, by itself, can be sufficient refuse to impose tort liability (18 Cal. 4th 1, 13-14) .

The Court thus concluded that there is no tort remedy for the intentional spoliation of evidence by a party to the cause of action to which the spoliated evidence is relevant, in cases in which, as here, the spoliation victim knows or should have known of the alleged spoliation before the trial or other decision on the merits of the underlying action (18 Cal. 4th 1, 17-18) . The Court disapproved of Willard v. Caterpillar, Inc. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 892, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 607 and Smith v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 491, 198 Cal. Rptr. 829 , to the extent these decisions were inconsistent (18 Cal. 4th 1, 18 n.4).

[b] No Cause of Action for Third-Party Spoliation of Evidence

In Temple Community Hospital v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 464, 466, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 852, 976 P.2d 223 , plaintiff was injured during a surgical procedure, when an electrocautery tool sparked and ignited the oxygen with which the anaesthesia was being delivered, burning plaintiff's face. Plaintiff sued the physicians and the hospital for medical malpractice, and the tool manufacturer for products liability.

Plaintiff alleged in the cause of action for intentional spoliation that defendant hospital knew of the existence of evidence such as the oxygen tank and mask, and the electrocautery tool used in the surgery, as well as related written records, knew that these items might constitute relevant evidence in potential litigation, knew of plaintiff's potential products liability claims, and knew that defendant hospital was engaging in acts likely to cause the loss or concealment of such evidence. Plaintiff also alleged that defendant hospital caused the loss or concealment of this potential evidence by failing to provide plaintiff with timely access to this evidence, despite numerous requests by counsel, and that it disposed of the oxygen tank that was the source of the explosion. The trial court subsequently granted summary judgment in favor of the tool manufacturer because there was no evidence the electrosurgical device was defective, and because the manufacturer had provided adequate warnings regarding the use of the device. After the trial court denied defendant hospital's motion to strike portions of the complaint, the hospital petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant its motion to strike a claim for punitive damages in connection with plaintiff's spoliation claim (20 Cal. 4th 464, 466-468) . The Supreme Court granted review of the court of appeal's denial of hospital's petition (20 Cal. 4th 464, 469) .

The Court first noted that plaintiff's spoliation claim was a hybrid in that it accused defendant hospital of destroying evidence relevant both to a malpractice claim to which it was a party, as well as to a product liability claim to which it was not a party. To the extent it concerned the hospital as a first-party spoliator, the claim for intentional spoliation would not lie in light of the Court's recent decision in Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 , discussed in [a], above (20 Cal. 4th 464, 469) .

The Court then addressed the extent to which the claim would lie against the hospital as a third-party or nonparty spoliator. The Court held that no tort remedy should be available in such a case, in consideration of many of the factors that influenced it previous decision in Cedars-Sinai. The Court held that, in third party as well as with first party claims, there is too much potential for endless litigation derivative of the underlying cause of action, which would undermine the recognized need for "finality of adjudication." The Court expressed reluctance to provide disappointed litigants a second opportunity to seek the compensation they sought in the original lawsuit, even if they seek it against a party not involved in the original lawsuit, as well as reluctance to require courts to provide a forum for parties who seek to avoid the effect of a prior judgment by asserting that a collateral wrong improperly affected the verdict. The spoliation tort not only would provide the disappointed litigant a second opportunity to seek compensation, it would require retrial of the first case in order to permit the plaintiff to demonstrate in what respect the alleged spoliation altered the outcome of the first trial. Indeed, the matter might still continue, for spoliation in the second trial might give rise to yet a third lawsuit (20 Cal. 4th 464, 472-473) . Although these considerations apply primarily to actions brought after the conclusion of the underlying litigation, the Court noted that different problems would occur in the event the spoliation claim were to be tried concurrently with the underlying litigation. Such a claim would have to be alleged, as in the present case, before discovery had disclosed whether the allegedly spoliated evidence actually had been destroyed or whether its loss is significant. These circumstances would lead to the bringing of premature and meritless claims--a situation that in turn might lead to later derivative claims of malicious prosecution. Further, concurrent litigation of the claims would give rise to a "significant potential for jury confusion and inconsistency" (20 Cal. 4th 464, 470-471) .

To the extent that a real problem of intentional spoliation by third parties exists, the Court explained that it often will be the case that such spoliation will be exposed in the trial of the underlying action (20 Cal. 4th 464, 474) .

Moreover, the Court was reluctant to have courts provide compensation when it is so difficult to determine who has suffered the loss (20 Cal. 4th 464, 474) . The Court explained that without knowing the content and weight of the spoliated evidence, it would be impossible for the jury to meaningfully assess what role the missing evidence would have played in the determination of the underlying action. In addition, it may be difficult to identify whether the spoliation caused damage to the defendant or to the plaintiff in the underlying litigation, because when the spoliator is not acting on behalf of a party, both parties in the underlying litigation may be victimized by the destruction of evidence (20 Cal. 4th 464, 474) .

The Court recognized that the salient distinction between first-party and third-party spoliation of evidence is the disparity in sanctions available within the confines of the underlying litigation. The Court explained that if existing remedies appear limited in the context of third-party spoliation, that may well be because third-party spoliation has not appeared to be a significant problem in the courts (20 Cal. 4th 464, 476) . The Court noted, however, that the victim of third-party spoliation is not entirely helpless: Some discovery sanctions are available to punish third-party spoliation, including monetary and contempt sanctions against persons who flout the discovery process by suppressing or destroying evidence (citing former Code Civ. Proc. § 2020(h) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2020.240) (contempt sanction for disobeying deposition subpoena), former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a), (e)) (monetary and contempt sanctions for misuse of discovery generally), former Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(j), (o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450, 2025.480) (contempt and monetary sanctions for disobeying order compelling response or production at deposition); Brun v. Bailey (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 641, 658-659, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 624 (reference to "any person" in statute imposing discovery sanctions permits sanctions against nonparty); a criminal sanction remains available under Penal Code § 135; and disciplinary sanctions are available against attorneys who may be involved in spoliation (20 Cal. 4th 464, 477) . The victim of third-party spoliation also may deflect the impact of the spoliation on his or her case by demonstrating why the spoliated evidence is missing [see Evid. Code § 412] (20 Cal. 4th 464, 477) . It also may be possible to establish a connection between the spoliator and a party to the litigation sufficient to invoke the sanctions applicable to spoliation by a party [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2025.450, 2025.480] (20 Cal. 4th 464, 477) . The Court concluded that the distinction between the sanctions available to victims of first party and third-party spoliation did not justify employing the burdensome and inaccurate instrument of derivative tort litigation in the case of third-party spoliation (20 Cal. 4th 464, 477) .

Finally, the Court explained that it would be anomalous to impose liability--including potential punitive damages--on spoliators who are third parties to litigation, when such liability is not imposed on first party spoliators. In the present case, for example, it would be a strange outcome to hold that the hospital may not be held liable as a defendant in a tort action for destroying evidence relevant to plaintiff's medical malpractice claim against the hospital, but that it might be liable in punitive damages as a third party for the same act of destruction, because the evidence in question also was relevant to plaintiff's separate products liability claim against the equipment manufacturer (20 Cal. 4th 464, 477-478) .

The Court concluded that the benefits of recognizing a tort cause of action, in order to deter third-party spoliation of evidence and compensate victims of such misconduct, are outweighed by the burden to litigants, witnesses, and the judicial system that would be imposed by potentially endless litigation over a speculative loss, and by the cost to society of promoting onerous record and evidence retention policies (20 Cal. 4th 464, 478) .

Although the issue of the existence of a cause of action for negligent spoliation was not presented in Cedars-Sinai and Temple, the reasons on which the Supreme Court relied to deny liability for intentional spoliation, particularly the policy against imposing tort liability in cases in which there is such inherent uncertainty with respect to causation and damages, arguably apply to preclude negligent spoliation. Subsequent decisions addressing this issue are discussed in [c] and [d], below.

[c] No Cause of Action for First-Party Negligent Spoliation of Evidence

Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68 arose from a chain reaction collision after a left front tire on an oil tanker blew out, and driver lost control. The driver and the owner of the tanker wanted the tread as evidence for a lawsuit filed against them by motorists who were injured as a result of the crash. However, the piece of tread had been taken from the scene of the crash, and later discarded, by employees of the law enforcement agency that investigated the accident. The driver and the owner of the tanker, plaintiffs in this case, sued the investigating agency and some of its employees for discarding the evidence. A jury awarded plaintiffs damages of $195,264.85 for negligent spoliation of the evidence and $1.50 for its conversion. Defendants appealed, arguing that the California Supreme Court's rationale in precluding tort causes of action for intentional spoliation of evidence must be extended to preclude a tort cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence, citing Temple Community Hospital v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 464, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 852, 976 P.2d 223 (discussed in [b], above) and Cedars-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1,74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 (discussed in [a], above). Having prevailed at trial on a tort claim of negligent spoliation, plaintiffs responded by asserting that "negligent spoliation is alive and well in the Third [Appellate] District," citing Johnson v. United Services Automobile Assn. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 626, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 234 . (recognizing a limited cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence). The appellate court's "short answer" was "not any more" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1288) .

The court of appeal noted that although the Supreme Court did not address the issue of negligent spoliation in either Cedars-Sinai and Temple Community, other courts of appeal have. Prior to Temple Community, this court, in Johnson v. United Services Automobile Assn., recognized "a limited cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence by a third-party spoliator," based on a special relationship that arises out of such things as an undertaking to preserve the evidence, an agreement to preserve the evidence, a specific request to preserve the evidence, or a relationship based on contract, statute, or regulation (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1295) . The Fourth Appellate District disagreed with Johnson's holding in Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51 (discussed in detail in [d], below). Considering the policy factors identified in Temple Community, the Farmers Ins. Exchange court concluded that the fact the tort "is for negligent rather [than] intentional spoliation carries no significant weight in the balancing process," and "declined to recognize a tort for negligent third-party spoliation of evidence" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1295) . Similarly, the Second Appellate District in Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884 (discussed in detail below) concluded that the policy considerations concerning intentional spoliation identified in Cedars-Sinai and Temple Community apply equally to negligent spoliation (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1295) .

This court agree with the results in Farmers Ins. Exchange and Coprich, finding that the circumstances of this case "amply demonstrated" that the factors identified by the Supreme Court in Temple Community, in rejecting a tort of intentional third-party spoliation, militated against the recognition of a tort of negligent spoliation of evidence (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1295) .

The appellate court explained that it would anomalous to impose tort liability upon a negligent spoliator whose conduct is not nearly so egregious as that of an intentional spoliator (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1295-1296) . Further, recognizing a negligent spoliation cause of action would provide a loophole that effectively could swallow the holdings of Cedars-Sinai and Temple Community, because most types of conduct that could be called intentional also can be rephrased in terms of negligence (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1296) . Moreover, the burden of increased litigation of meritless claims, unnecessary and expensive evidence retention policies, and the uncertainty of the fact of harm and causation also militated against recognizing a tort of negligent spoliation. The court acknowledged that a special-relationship limitation on a tort of negligent spoliation, as espoused in Johnson v. United Services Automobile Assn., might tend to restrain the "endless spiral of lawsuits" that Temple Community feared, but the appellate court found the amorphous requirement of a "special relationship" insufficient to overcome those concerns (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1296-1297) .

For the reasons stated above, the court of appeal refused to recognize the tort of negligent spoliation of evidence against a private party. The court accordingly rejected plaintiffs' argument that defendant California Highway Patrol, as a state agency that "prevented [them] from taking [their] own tire tread from the accident scene" had a duty to preserve the evidence. The court found that absent a statute specifically imposing liability, a public entity and its employees are not liable for causes of action in tort that could not be pursued against a private party. Thus, any liability for spoliation against a public entity and its employees would have to be created statutorily rather than judicially (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1300) .

In Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884 , plaintiffs sued defendants for injuries sustained in an automobile accident. Plaintiffs asserted, among other things, a cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence against defendant insurance company and defendant automobile manufacturer, as a result of the destruction of the automobile involved in the accident. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants against the cause of action for negligent spoliation of evidence, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court on that claim; however, the court directed the trial court to grant plaintiffs leave to amend their complaint to allege a cause of action for breach of a contractual duty to preserve evidence (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1083) .

The court of appeal held that there is no tort remedy for negligent spoliation of evidence (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1085) . The court noted that the issue of the existence of such a cause of action was not presented in Cedar-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 (discussed in [a], above) and Temple Community Hospital v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 464, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 852, 976 P.2d 223 (discussed in [b], above). The court concluded, however, that the policy considerations concerning intentional spoliation discussed by the Court in Cedars-Sinai and Temple apply equally to negligent spoliation (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1085) .

The court explained that to recognize a cause of action for negligent spoliation would lead to potentially endless derivative litigation by parties to the underlying action against other parties and third parties. Such litigation is contrary to the policy against creating derivative tort remedies for litigation-related misconduct and favoring the resolution of a dispute in a single lawsuit (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1088) . Moreover, the potential for jury confusion and inconsistent results would be great, whether the spoliation claim were tried in the same lawsuit as the underlying cause of action, or in another lawsuit (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1088-1089) .

The court noted that the risk of meritless claims for negligent spoliation was particularly troublesome in light of the uncertainty concerning the nature of the missing evidence and its potential effect in the underlying litigation and the fact that documents and other evidence often are destroyed without fault in the ordinary course of events. Potential liability for negligent spoliation could cause individuals and entities to take extraordinary measures to retain documents and other things, at substantial costs (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1089) .

The court concluded that although the nontort remedies available to a victim of negligent spoliation appear to be very limited, even more so than the remedies available to a victim of third-party intentional spoliation, that circumstance alone did not override the other policy considerations that weighed against providing a tort remedy for negligent spoliation (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1089) .

Finally, the court recognized that it would be anomalous to impose liability for negligence with respect to conduct that would not give rise to liability if committed intentionally (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1089) .

The court distinguished prior appellate court opinions, most of which predated Cedars-Sinai and Temple Community, that recognized a limited cause of action for negligent spoliation against a third party. Examples cited were Johnson v. United Services Automobile Assn. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 626, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 234 (negligent spoliation not precluded by Cedars-Sinai), Velasco v. Commercial Bldg. Maintenance Co. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 874, 876-877, 215 Cal. Rptr. 504 (assuming, without deciding, that negligent spoliation survives as tort cause of action and holding that janitorial service had no duty to preserve evidence), Hernandez v. Garcetti (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 675, 680, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 443 (assuming, without deciding, that negligent spoliation survives as tort cause of action and holding that government tort claim for negligent spoliation was untimely), Galanek v. Wismar (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1417, 1425, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 236 (legal malpractice claim based on negligent spoliation of evidence). The court declined to follow Velasco and the cases it cited because they did not adequately address the compelling policy considerations discussed in Cedars-Sinai and Temple (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1090-1091) . The court also found inapposite cases, such as Hernandez, in which the court assumed without deciding that a cause of action for negligent spoliation exists, and those, such as Galanek, premised on the breach of a fiduciary duty (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1091) . Finally, the court rejected the conclusions in the appellate court in Johnson v. United Services Automobile Assn. (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 626, 631-632, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 234 , overruled by Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68 (discussed above), that the burdens and costs of a tort remedy for third-party spoliation did not justify precluding such a cause of action, as contrary to the California Supreme Court's decision in Temple, which emphasized the need for "finality of adjudication" in the third-party context, the uncertainty of the fact of harm and causation, the potential for arbitrary and inconsistent results, and other costs and burdens (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1091) .

The court also concluded that the policy considerations that apply to negligent spoliation do not preclude a cause of action for breach of a contractual duty to preserve evidence, absent a showing that a contract to preserve evidence would be illegal, unconscionable, or otherwise unenforceable (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1091-1092) .

[d] No Cause of Action for Third-Party Negligent Spoliation of Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884 are discussed in [c], above. The court concluded that the burdens and costs to litigants, the judicial system, and others if the courts were to allow a tort remedy for negligent spoliation of evidence would outweigh the limited benefits. The court therefore held that there is no tort remedy for first-party or third-party negligent spoliation of evidence (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1089-1090) .

In Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Superior Court (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 51 , plaintiff, injured in a car accident, claimed that the accident was caused by a defective tire. Plaintiff sued her insurance company, alleging, among other things, that the company negligently lost or destroyed the tire. Petitioner insurance company moved for judgment on the pleadings, but respondent trial court denied the motion. The court of appeal issued a writ on mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order denying petitioner's motion and to enter a new order granting the motion (79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1401) .

The court declined to recognize a tort for negligent third-party spoliation of evidence. The court reasoned that the same policy considerations that led the California Supreme Court to refuse to recognize both first party and third-party intentional spoliation in Cedar-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 (discussed in [a], above) and in Temple Community Hospital v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 464, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 852, 976 P.2d 223 (discussed in [b], above) applied with equal force when the loss or destruction of evidence was the result of negligence (79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1404) . The court concluded that the benefits of recognizing a tort cause of action in order to deter third-party spoliation of evidence and to compensate spoliation victims was outweighed by the burden to litigants, witnesses, and the judicial system. These burdens include potentially endless litigation over a speculative loss, the significant potential for jury confusion and inconsistency as a result of trying a spoliation claim, either jointly with the underlying action or in a separate action, and the cost to society of promoting onerous record and evidence retention policies (79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1406-1407) . Finally, the court noted the absurdity of holding a party liable for negligent conduct when the same party could not be held liable if he or she acted intentionally (79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1407) .

The court added that plaintiff's attempt to distinguish her cause of action for negligent interference with prospective business advantage from negligent spoliation of evidence was unavailing. The cause of action for negligent interference with prospective business advantage was virtually identical to her claim of intentional spoliation of evidence, differing only in the allegation that her insurance company negligently, rather than intentionally, lost or destroyed the car and tire

(79 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1405-1407) .

[e] Contractual Duty to Preserve Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68 are discussed in [c], above. Although this case was concerned solely with the question of a cause of action in tort, the court of appeal noted that "the decisional authorities do not foreclose an action in contract where the defendant is under a contractual obligation to preserve evidence" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1299) .

The facts and procedural background of Coprich v. Superior Court (2000) 80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 884 are discussed in [c], above. The court's conclusion that there is not tort remedy for negligent spoliation did not preclude its finding the existence of a duty based on contract (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1091) . The court explained that while the existence of a tort duty in certain circumstances depends on policy considerations, those policy considerations do not negate the existence of a contractual obligation created by mutual agreement or promissory estoppel. The court concluded that it could not negate a contractual obligation based on policy considerations other than on specific grounds such as illegality and unconscionability (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1092) .

The court added that the potential uncertainty of the fact of harm and other difficulties as to proof were matters of proof, not pleading; therefore, they could not be decided at the pleading stage and did not preclude the existence of a cause of action based on a contractual duty (80 Cal. App. 4th 1081, 1092) .

[f] Statutory Duty to Preserve Evidence

Forbes v. County of San Bernardino (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 721 was the second appeal arising from an underlying contractual dispute. The plaintiffs and defendants in the original civil action appealed the trial court's decision. The prior court of appeal vacated the judgment and granted a new trial, in accordance with Code Civ. Proc. § 914, because virtually all of the prior trial court transcripts were unavailable. In this consolidated action, the plaintiffs, who were adversaries in the original civil action, sued defendants, county and state, for intentional and negligent destruction of court records relating to the prior action and for denial of civil and constitutional rights.

The Fourth Appellate District panel held that plaintiffs had no tort cause of action against the county or the state for intentional or negligent destruction of trial records from the prior civil action. The court of appeal panel concluded that the statutory duty to preserve evidence is not enough by itself to warrant tort liability (101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 57) . In reaching its decision, the panel relied on the Supreme Court's decisions in Cedars-Sinai and Temple Community, as well as on Coprich, Lueter, and its own decision in Farmers Ins., all of which establish "beyond reasonable dispute" that there is no tort cause of action against a litigant or third party for intentional or negligent destruction of evidence (101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 57) . The court rejected plaintiffs' argument that the spoliation cases were inapposite because they involved parties who, unlike defendants here, had no statutory duty to maintain records. Rather, under California law, the fact a public entity has a statutory duty to act or refrain from acting is not enough to create tort liability for a violation of that duty. Instead, the plaintiff also must show the resulting injury would be actionable against a private person. The spoliation cases established that the plaintiffs' alleged injuries for intentional destruction of court records and negligence did not meet that requirement (101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 58) . The Lueter decision (discussed in detail below) further supported the conclusion there should be no tort liability, notwithstanding a public entity's duty to preserve evidence. This court of appeal panel agreed with the Lueter court that the existence of a statutory duty is an inadequate basis for tort liability in the absence of a statute expressly creating that liability when the injury giving rise to the claim would not be actionable against a private party (101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 58-59) . Finally, this court observed that it would have reached the same conclusion based on the public policy considerations that led the Supreme Court to reject tort liability in Cedars-Sinai and Temple Community (see [a], [b], above). Most of those considerations applied fully to this case: potentially endless litigation, the existence of non-tort remedies (Code Civ. Proc. § 914 and Penal Code § 135) to address the problem of destruction of records, and the impossibility of proving causation and damages (

101 Cal. App. 4th 48, 59) .

The facts and procedural background of Lueter v. State (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 68 are discussed in [c], above. The plaintiffs were sued when a tire on their tanker truck blew out and caused an accident. The plaintiffs alleged the California Highway Patrol (CHP) took a piece of the tire from the scene as potential evidence but later negligently threw it away, preventing the plaintiffs from proving the tire was defective. The appellate court held the plaintiffs could not assert a claim for negligent spoliation. The court reached this conclusion despite the plaintiffs' argument that the CHP, as a state agency, had a duty to preserve the evidence. The court noted that under Gov. Code § 815.2(a), a public entity is liable for injury proximately caused by its employee if the employee would be liable. Gov. Code 820(a) also provides that a public employee "is liable for injury caused by his act or omission to the same extent as a private person." Consequently, "absent a statute specifically imposing liability, a public entity and its employees are not liable for causes of action in tort that could not be pursued against a private party" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1300) . Since the tort of negligent spoliation cannot be pursued against a private party, "it follows that any liability for spoliation against a public entity and its employees must be created statutorily rather than judicially" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1300) . The court of appeal further held that "in order to find a statutorily based cause of action for negligent spoliation, it is not enough to find that the public entity had a legal duty with respect to property. Even though a person may have a duty to preserve evidence, countervailing considerations dictate against an expansive, speculative tort of spoliation ... . Instead, a duty to preserve evidence should be addressed through other means, such as effective sanctions devised by the Legislature or by regulatory bodies ... . It follows that in order to establish a tort for spoliation of evidence, a statute must expressly impose a spoliation remedy" (94 Cal. App. 4th 1285, 1300) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action for First-Party Intentional Spoliation of Evidence

In Hassoldt v. Patrick Media Group, Inc. (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 153, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 662 , appellant, an outdoor advertising company was sued for tortiously trimming respondents' tree and destroying evidence. The jury awarded compensatory and punitive damages. The jury verdict form did not indicate the cause or causes of action that formed the basis of the compensatory damages award; the award of punitive damages related only to the spoliation claim. Appellants challenged the awards, based on the retroactive application of Cedar-Sinai Medical Center v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 (discussed in [3][a], above), which was decided after the trial in this case and while the appeal was pending (84 Cal. App. 4th 153, 159) . The court of appeal held that retroactive application of Cedars-Sinai mandated that the verdict be overturned (84 Cal. App. 4th 153, 159) . The court reasoned that respondents did not have a reasonable belief in the continued existence of a spoliation of evidence as a tort remedy, because the Supreme Court granted a hearing in Cedars-Sinai almost a year before this case went to trial. Moreover, retroactive application did not divest respondents of any property or contract right, or leave them without remedy (84 Cal. App. 4th 153, 161) . The court remanded the case for a new trial on the remaining causes of action for trespass, conversion, and negligence (84 Cal. App. 4th 153, 162-163) .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.01

§ 85A.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter includes a discussion of, and memoranda relating to, the provisions of the Electronic Discovery Act [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985.8, 2031.010-2031.510].

Subpart IIA has memoranda supporting a motion to compel a response to a demand for the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information [§ 85A.20 et seq.], as well as memoranda opposing those motions [§ 85A.30 et seq.].

Subpart IIB has memoranda supporting [§ 85A.40] and opposing [§ 85A.41] a motion for a protective order in the context of a demand for the production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of ESI.

This chapter is intended to be used in conjunction with Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence. Chapter 85 contains general forms relating to production or inspection demands. Most of these forms are also usable in the e-discovery context, and some contain specific alternatives relevant to electronically stored information. Users of this publication should consult Chapter 85 for relevant forms that are not contained in this chapter.

CHAPTER 85A DISCOVERY: E-DISCOVERY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.02

§ 85A.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Electronic Discovery

Discovery of electronically stored information under the Civil Discovery Act (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050) is governed specifically by the Electronic Discovery Act [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1985.8, 2031.010-2031.510], which became effective as an urgency measure on June 29, 2009 [see Stats. 2009, ch. 5]. Related provisions of the Civil Discovery Act include the provisions governing discovery generally, set out in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2019.030, 2023.010-2023.040. The Electronic Discovery Act is further discussed in §§ 85A.03 -85A.11.

The extent of discovery permitted under the Civil Discovery Act is restricted in limited civil cases by the economic litigation provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95 [see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345A, Limited Civil Cases (Matthew Bender)]. The use of demands for the production or inspection of tangible evidence is limited specifically by Code Civ. Proc. § 94(a).

"Meet and confer" requirements regarding discovery of electronically stored information are set out in California Rules of Court, Rules 3.724(8) [see § 85A.05]. Statewide rule provisions relating to the format, content, and service of discovery papers and motions, and to discovery sanctions, are contained in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1020, 3.1025, and 3.1030.

[3] Cases Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

The Civil Discovery Act was passed in 2004 and became effective July 1, 2005. It repealed and renumbered the Civil Discovery Act of 1986, but did not substantively change the law of civil discovery [Stats. 2004, ch. 182 §§ 22, 23, 61].

Thus cases decided under the 1986 Act remain controlling authority. A considerable body of case law interpreted the discovery provisions of the Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9), which preceded the 1986 Act. Although the 1986 Act, which became operative July 1, 1987, implemented numerous changes in the prior law, it also continued provisions of the prior law in many other instances, or even codified decisions interpreting the prior law. Decisions construing this prior law therefore are cited as persuasive rather than controlling authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

[4] Federal Authority

California's Electronic Discovery Act generally is modeled on federal rules governing e-discovery [see Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(b)(3)(B)(iii), (iv), 26(b)(2)(B), (b)(5), (f)(3)(c), 34(b)(1)(C), (b)(2)(D), (b)(2)(E), 37(e)]. The federal rules were revised to address e-discovery issues, effective December 1, 2006--before most states (including California) had enacted their own rules governing e-discovery in state proceedings. As a result, state courts throughout the United States frequently look to federal judicial decisions dealing with e-discovery issues under the federal rules--primarily in the federal district courts--for guidance on how to deal with similar e-discovery issues under state law. Because the California electronic discovery statutes are new, and e-discovery issues were considered only infrequently in published California court opinions prior to enactment of the Electronic Discovery Act [see, e.g., People v. Lugashi (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 632, 640, 252 Cal. Rptr. 434 (allowing admission of bank computer records); R.S. Creative v. Creative Cotton (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 353 (terminating sanctions for actions including spoliation of evidence on computers)], California courts may be expected to look to federal decisions construing the federal rules, and to out-of-state authority, for guidance on the treatment of e-discovery issues.

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.03

§ 85A.03 "Electronically Stored Information" (ESI) Defined

The Electronic Discovery Act broadly defines "electronically stored information" (ESI) as "information that is stored in an electronic medium" [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.020(e)]. "Electronic" is defined as "relating to technology having electrical, digital, magnetic, wireless, optical, electromagnetic, or similar capabilities [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.020(d)]. Some common types of electronically stored information are e-mail, word processing documents or spreadsheets, instant messages, text messages, database information, digital photographs, digital video, electronic voice mail, temporary files, metadata, and even fragments of deleted files. ESI can be found in many locations, including (but not limited to) computer hard drives, network servers, cell phones, personal digital assistants (PDAs), back-up tapes, CD-ROMs, DVD ROMs, digital cameras, and internet websites.

For further discussion of the nature and sources of ESI, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 1, Understanding Electronic Evidence.

CHAPTER 85A DISCOVERY: E-DISCOVERY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.04

§ 85A.04 Duty to Preserve Electronic Evidence

A party to a lawsuit, or anyone who anticipates being a party, has an obligation to not destroy evidence [see Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511] . Failure to do so can result in negative evidentiary inferences [see Evid. Code § 413], sanctions for misuse of the discovery process [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)], disciplinary action against the party's attorney [see Bus. & Prof. Code, § 6106; Cal Rules Prof. Conduct, Rule 5-220 ("[a] member shall not suppress any evidence that the member or the member's client has a legal obligation to reveal or to produce")], and criminal penalties for spoliation [Pen. Code § 135; see Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 11-13, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511] .

Under federal law, a party's duty to preserve electronic evidence is triggered when the party has notice that the evidence is relevant to litigation or when the party should have known that the evidence might be relevant to litigation [Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC (S.D.N.Y. 2003) 220 F.R.D. 212, 216] . Under California law, the precise point at which the duty to preserve documents comes into existence is not yet clear. Commentators have suggested that it is likely that California case law may develop along lines similar to federal law [see Kiesel & Williams, California's 2009 E-Discovery Laws--Text and Analysis (LexisNexis 2009), § 4[3]]. The California Supreme Court, in discussing spoliation of evidence, has stated that "[d]estroying evidence in response to a discovery request after litigation has commenced would surely be a misuse of discovery within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 2023, as would such destruction in anticipation of a discovery request" [Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 12, 74 CR2d 248, 954 P2d 511 (emphasis added); see Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Services, Inc. v. Riley (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1414, 1418-1420, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 (injunction was appropriate remedy to prevent defendants from destroying potentially discoverable evidence)]. However, the decision did not deal with the question of the earliest point at which the duty to preserve evidence could initially arise.

The Electronic Discovery Act created a safe harbor for parties and counsel for failure to preserve evidence that has been "lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good-faith operation of an electronic information system" [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(i)].

Informal agreements regarding preservation of electronic evidence will sufficiently preserve a party's right to seek spoliation sanctions against the opposing party if that party breaches the agreements [R.S. Creative v. Creative Cotton (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 497-498, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 353 (sanctions for destroying evidence of forgery contained on plaintiffs' computer); see Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.14[3][a]].

For discussion of guidelines for preserving electronic evidence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery) (Matthew Bender). For further discussion of the preservation of evidence generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 199, Discovery: Preservation of Evidence (Matthew Bender).

For a form for a preliminary injunction to preserve electronic evidence pending a discovery order, see Ch. 116, Injunctions, § 116.31; see also Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 7, Obtaining Injunction to Protect Against Destruction of Electronic Evidence pending Discovery. § 85A.05 Meet and Confer Requirement

At least 30 calendar days before the date set for the initial case management conference, all parties must meet and confer, in person or by telephone, to consider the following [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.724(8)]:

- Issues relating to the preservation of discoverable ESI.
- The form or forms in which information will be produced.
- The time within which the information will be produced.
- The scope of discovery of the information.
- The method for asserting or preserving claims of privilege or attorney work product, including whether such claims may be asserted after production.
- The method for asserting or preserving the confidentiality, privacy, trade secrets, or proprietary status of information relating to a party or person not a party to the civil proceedings.
- How the cost of production of ESI is to be allocated among the parties.
- Any other issues relating to the discovery of ESI, including developing a proposed plan relating to the discovery of the information.

The court's case management order may include appropriate orders relating to the discovery of ESI [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.728(13), 3.724(8)].

For a sample ESI protocol addressing issues related to the preservation of discoverable electronically stored information, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery). For a detailed discussion of meet and confer requirements, including a checklist of issues to be considered in connection with the obligation to meet and confer, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 5, Initial Procedures in E-Discovery--Notice, Document Preservation, Meeting and Conferring, and Case Management Conference.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.06

§ 85A.06 Demand for Electronically Stored Information

[1] Right to Demand Discovery of Electronically Stored Information

Any party may demand that any other party produce ESI for inspecting, copying, testing, or sampling under Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(a), (e). A party may also subpoena production of ESI from nonparties under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8(a)(1), or may demand production of ESI from any person, including a party to the action, using a request for documents in a deposition notice under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.010 et seq. For a memorandum supporting a motion for an order compelling response to a demand for production of ESI, see § 85A.20. For memoranda supporting motions directing compliance with, or quashing or modifying, a subpoena under Code Civ. Proc. § 1985.8, see Ch. 218, Subpoena, §§ 218.26A, 218.26B, 218.30A, 218.30B. For general forms relating to production or inspection demands in California discovery, see Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence .

Whatever method is used, demands for production of ESI should be specific and drawn as narrowly as possible under the circumstances. Discovery of ESI will not be permitted if it is duplicative, unreasonably burdensome or expensive, or is designed to harass the other side [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.020, 2019.030].

A party demanding the production of ESI may specify the form or forms in which each type of ESI is to be produced [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.030(a)(2), 1985.8(b)]; see Daewoo Electronics Co., Ltd. v. United States (Ct. Int'l Trade 1986) 650 F. Supp. 1003, 1006 (plaintiff sought specific data sets that were utilized in administrative review that resulted in challenged governmental order); see § 85A.21 (demanding party may specify form). For discussion of the responding party's options for producing ESI, see § 85A.07.

The requesting party should work with the responding party to ensure minimal disruption to the responding party's business in complying with an electronic discovery request [see Playboy Enters. v. Welles (S.D. Cal 1999) 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1055 (finding need for requested emails outweighed burden on defendant); Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Servs., Inc. v. Riley (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1414, 1421, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 (approving temporary injunction to prevent spoliation); Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(c), (d) (inspection demand)].

For a discussion of the production of ESI in the possession of nonparties, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery). For a detailed discussion of the demands for production of ESI, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 6, Demanding Production of Electronically Stored Evidence in California Court.

[2] Testing and Sampling

Inspection and copying were the traditional means of obtaining information from documents under the Civil Discovery Act. As amended in 2009, the Civil Discovery Act also allows a party to test and sample electronically stored information in addition to inspecting and copying it [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(a), (e)]. Under this provision, a party may review a small sample of electronically stored information for relevant information and based on the results, request broader access [see, e.g., AAB Joint Venture v. United States (Fed. Cl. 2007) 75 Fed. Cl. 432, 444 (court ordered defendant to restore portion of backup tapes from time periods specified by plaintiff, after which parties would have an opportunity to argue whether or not additional restoration of back-up tapes was likely to lead to production of relevant evidence); Toshiba America Electronics Components v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 (court suggested sampling to determine if backup tapes contained relevant data)].

CHAPTER 85A DISCOVERY: E-DISCOVERY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.07

§ 85A.07 Response to Demand for Production

[1] General Discovery Rules

The responding party has a duty to produce electronic evidence unless the court determines that production would impose burden, expense, or intrusiveness that clearly outweighs the likelihood that the information sought will lead to the discovery of admissible evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020(a); see Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.02[2]; see also § 85A.40 (supporting motion for protective order under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2017.020, 2031.060; Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.80 (supporting motion for protective order under Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020)].

In response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling under Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq., the responding party must respond to each item or category of item [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)]. The responding party must respond with any of the following:

- A statement that the party will comply, in whole or part, with the particular demand and any related activities, by a reasonable time that is at least 30 days after service of the demand, unless the court, for good cause shown, has approved an earlier date [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)(1); see Code Civ. Proc § 2031.030(2)(c) (for unlawful detainer actions, at least five days after service of demand)].

- A representation that the party lacks the ability to comply with the demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of a particular item or category of item [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)(2)]. A representation of inability to comply with a particular demand must affirm that a diligent search and reasonably inquiry was made [see § 85A.07[2]] and must specify whether the inability to comply is because the particular item or category never existed, has been destroyed, has been lost, misplaced, or stolen, or has never been or no longer is in possession of the responding party. If the natural person knows or believes that another person or organization has possession, custody, or control of that item or category, the name and address of that person or organization must be given [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.230].

- An objection to the particular demand [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)(3)].

In practice, a response to an e-discovery demand often involves a combination of all of the above options.

For a detailed discussion of responses to demands for production of ESI, for forms for a response to a California e-discovery demand, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 8, Responding to Electronic Discovery Demands in California Court.

[2] Diligent Search

The responding party must perform a diligent search and a reasonable inquiry in order to comply with a demand for production of electronically stored information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.230]. The governing statute does not specify what constitutes a diligent search and reasonable inquiry for this purpose, but federal case law has held that such a search must include electronic storage devices, including computer hard drives, disks, peripheral storage devices, and networks [see Playboy Enters. v. Welles (S.D. Cal. 1999) 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1054 ; see also Maldonado v. Superior Court (2002) 94 Cal. App. 4th 1390, 1396, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 137] . In recognition of the fact that there are many ways to manage electronic data, litigants are free to choose how this task is accomplished [see Zubulake v. UBS Warburg LLC (S.D.N.Y. 2003) 220 F.R.D. 212, 218 (commenting that presumably there are "a multitude of" ways to create a complete set of relevant documents)]. However, the responding party cannot refuse inspection and copying, or condition access to records by not preparing a record when the raw data is available to do so [Person v. Farmers Ins. Group of Cos. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 813, 818, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30 (access to medical records)].

[3] Source Not Reasonably Accessible

In its response to a demand for discovery of electronically stored information, a party may object on the grounds that the ESI is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense. The responding party must identify in its response the types or categories of sources of ESI that it asserts are not reasonably accessible. By objecting and identifying the type or category of sources that are not reasonably accessible, the responding party preserves its objections relating to that ESI [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(d)].

Whether a source is "reasonably accessible" is a factual question for the court that depends upon many factors, including the media on which the ESI is stored, the volume of the ESI, the time and cost required to restore, search and review the ESI, the amount at issue in the case, whether the ESI is cumulative and/or available from other sources, and the relevance of the ESI to key issues in the case [Best Buy Stores, L.P. v. Developers Diversified Realty Corp. (D. Minn. 2007) 247 F.R.D. 567, 570 (database was not reasonably accessible because it would have to be restored from original sources at minimum cost of $124,000, plus monthly storage cost over $27,000); *see Parkdale Am., LLC v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am. (W.D.N.C. Nov. 2007) 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88820, at 34 (e-mails in LotusNotes format were reasonably accessible when cost of producing them was no more than $20,000)].

For discussion of the specific issue of whether backup tapes and other archived data are "reasonably accessible," see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 1, Understanding Electronic Evidence, § 1.22[6], and Ch. 5, Initial Procedures in E-Discovery--Notice, Document Preservation, Meeting and Conferring, and Case Management Conference, § 5.06[7].

[4] Specified Form of Production

The party demanding the production of electronically stored information may specify the form of production for each type of electronically stored information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.030(a)(2)], but is not required to do so. If the responding party objects to the form of production specified in the demand, it may state in its response the form in which it intends to produce each type of information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(c)].

If the demand does not specify a particular form of production, the responding party must state the form in which it intends to produce the information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(c)]. The information must be produced in the form or forms in which it is ordinarily maintained, or in a form that is reasonably usable [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(d)(1)]. "Reasonably usable" likely requires that the ability to search and sort the ESI is maintained in the form in which it is produced [*see, e.g., L.H. v. Schwarzenegger (C.D. Cal. 2008) 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 86829, at *10-14 (sanctions for converting electronic documents from their original searchable and sortable format and producing non-searchable PDF versions of those documents)].

A party may not be required to produce the same ESI in more than one form [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(d)(2)].

For a detailed discussion of the process of producing ESI, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 9, Gathering and Producing Electronically Stored Evidence. For discussion of privacy and privilege in e-discovery, see § 85A.10.

[5] Translation of Data Compilations

If necessary, the responding party, at the reasonable expense of the demanding party, must use detection devices to translate any data compilations included in the demand into reasonably usable form [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(e); Toshiba America Electronics Components v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 772, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 (former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(g)(1) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(b)) is "a legislatively determined exception to the general rule that the responding party bear the cost of responding to discovery")]. In some circumstances, the entire computer or hard drive must be produced if requested [see, e.g., TBG Ins. Servs. Corp. v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 443, 448-449, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 155 (defendant employee had diminished expectation of privacy in data found on company-owned computer and waived any expectation of privacy by agreeing to allow company to inspect computer at any time), discussed in Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.11[4][a]; R.S. Creative v. Creative Cotton (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 496, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 353 (terminating sanction for repeated violations of stipulations and court orders, including deliberate destruction of electronic evidence pertinent to exposing forgery), discussed in Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.14[3][a]].

Reasonableness and necessity are factual issues that, if disputed, are left to the trial court's discretion. When a demanding party is asked to pay for translations that the party does not believe are necessary, or when the party disputes the reasonableness of the expenses alleged, the party may seek a protective order or move to compel production, and the trial court then may make whatever orders justice requires [see Toshiba Am. Electronics Components, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 772-773, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 ; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.060(a), 2031.300(b)].

PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.08

§ 85A.08 Cost-Shifting in Electronic Discovery

As with discovery generally, each party to litigation is expected to bear the ordinary burden and expenses typically involved in responding to e-discovery requests, such as the expense of producing documents, answering interrogatories, or submitting to depositions [see San Diego Unified Port Dist. v. Douglas E. Barnhart, Inc. (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1400, 1404, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 ("[t]hat principle is violated when a party is ordered to pay for discovery sought by another party")].

However, when responding to a discovery request requires the responding party to translate electronic data compilations in order to produce information in reasonably useable form, the expense of translation shifts to the demanding party [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(b); Toshiba Am. Electronics Components, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 772, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 (former Code Civ. Proc. § 2031(g)(1); now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(b)) is "a legislatively determined exception to the general rule that the responding party bear the cost of responding to discovery")]. The demanding party is expected to pay only its reasonable expense for a necessary translation [Toshiba Am. Electronics Components, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 773, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(b); for further discussion of Toshiba, see Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.20[4][a]].

Furthermore, in ruling on a motion for a protective order [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060], or a motion to compel further response to the demand [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310], if the court finds that good cause exists for the production of electronically stored information from a source that is not reasonably accessible, the court has broad authority to set conditions for the discovery of ESI, including allocation of the expense of discovery [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(e)].

For further discussion of cost-shifting in e-discovery, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery) (Matthew Bender).

PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.09

§ 85A.09 Sanctions for Electronic Discovery Abuses

Sanctions are available for "misuses of discovery," including altering or destroying electronic evidence [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030; Hassoldt v. Patrick Media Group (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 153, 169, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 662 (on remand, plaintiffs were free to apply to trial court for issue or evidentiary sanctions based on defendant's spoliation of evidence); see also Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.90[4][a]]. E-discovery sanctions may include money, issue, evidence, and terminating sanctions [Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030; Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1, 11, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 248, 954 P.2d 511 (discussed in Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.90[3][a]); Electronic Funds Solutions, LLC v. Murphy (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1161, 1183-1184, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663 ; R.S. Creative, Inc. v. Creative Cotton, Ltd. (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 353 (discussed in Ch. 84, Discovery: Interrogatories, § 84.14[3][a])]. For example, in a case involving destruction of electronic data, the court held that a terminating sanction was appropriate under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2023(b)(4)(A) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(d)(1)) for "pervasive and consistent" misuse of the discovery process, including failure to comply with any discovery orders regarding plaintiffs' document inspection demands and specially prepared interrogatories, and the intentional, "brazen" destruction of data on the hard drives of several computers [Electronic Funds Solutions, LLC v. Murphy (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1161, 1183-1184, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 663] .

The Electronic Discovery Act contains a "safe harbor" provision, however, under which, absent "exceptional circumstances," the court is not permitted to impose sanctions against a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060[i]].

For motions supporting and opposing motions for discovery sanctions, including sanctions in the context of e-discovery, see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse . For a detailed discussion of monetary, issue, evidence, and terminating sanctions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 192, Discovery: Sanctions (Matthew Bender). For more detailed coverage of sanctions in the specific context of e-discovery, see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch.13, Seeking or Opposing Sanctions for Noncompliance.

CHAPTER 85A DISCOVERY: E-DISCOVERY
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.10

§ 85A.10 Protecting Confidentiality and Privilege

E-discovery activity may involve requests for production of confidential, proprietary, or privileged information. The same considerations of confidentiality and privilege that apply to other types of communications apply equally to electronically stored information [see Playboy Enters. v. Welles (S.D. Cal 1999) 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1054-1055 ; Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Services, Inc. v. Riley (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1414, 1421, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385] . Further, a communication between a client and his or her attorney does not lack confidentiality solely because the communication is transmitted by facsimile, cellular telephone, or other electronic means [Evid. Code § 917; see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations, § 81.80[1] (no presumption of confidentiality for electronic communications)].

Courts addressing privacy or privilege considerations in the context of e-discovery generally rely on agreement of the parties or on a protective order to minimize these concerns [see, e.g., Playboy Enters. v. Welles (S.D. Cal 1999) 60 F. Supp. 2d 1050, 1054-1055 ("[d]efendant's attorney-client privilege and privacy concerns will be protected by the protective order, which will be signed by the expert, and this Court's Order finding that this process will not waive any attorney-client privilege"); Dodge, Warren & Peters Ins. Services, Inc. v. Riley (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1414, 1421, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 ("[t]he copied material [from defendant's computer and electronic storage media] would be unavailable to anyone except upon agreement of the parties or order of the court. Thus, concerns over privacy and privilege were minimized to the point of nonexistence"); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060 (protective order)]. However, failure of a party to seek a protective order waives the privacy rights to electronic information that is not otherwise privileged [see R.S. Creative v. Creative Cotton (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 486, 498, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 353 ; Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(a)].

In City of Ontario v. Quon (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 2619, 177 L. Ed. 2d 216 , the United States Supreme Court reversed a Ninth Circuit decision that had previously upheld plaintiff police officers' claims that a search of their text messages violated their Fourth Amendment and California constitutional privacy rights. They claimed a reasonable expectation of privacy in the content of those messages, in light of the employer's informal policy of not auditing messages on payment of usage overages (see Quon v. Arch Wireless Operating Co., Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 529 F.3d 892, 907 , overruled by City of Ontario v. Quon (2010) ___ U.S. ___, 177 L. Ed. 2d 216). The Supreme Court sidestepped the parties' disagreement over the officers' privacy expectation, finding it preferable to dispose of the case on narrower grounds (177 L. Ed. 2d 216, 227-228). Prudence counseled caution, the Court stated, before the facts in this case were used to establish "far-reaching premises that define the existence, and extent, of privacy expectations" of employees using employer-provided communication devices (177 L. Ed. 2d 216, 227). The Court observed that rapid changes in the dynamics of communication and information transmission are evident not just in the technology itself but in what society accepts as proper behavior. For example, many employers expect or at least tolerate personal use of that equipment by employees because it often increases worker efficiency. Further, the law is beginning to respond to these developments, as some States have recently passed statutes requiring employers to notify employees when monitoring their electronic communications. The fact that cell phone and text message communications are so pervasive that some may consider them to be "essential means or necessary instruments for self-expression, even self-identification" might strengthen the case for an expectation of privacy. On the other hand, the ubiquity of those devices has made them generally affordable, so that employees who need cell phones or similar devices for personal matters can purchase and pay for their own. At present, however, it is uncertain how workplace norms, and the law's treatment of them, will evolve (177 L. Ed. 2d 216, 227) .

For supporting and opposing motions to compel discovery based on the right to privacy, see Ch. 81, Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations . For further discussion of privilege and privacy considerations in e-discovery, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 191, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations (Matthew Bender). CHAPTER 85A DISCOVERY: E-DISCOVERY

8-85A California Points & Authorities § 85A.11

§ 85A.11 Inadvertent Disclosure of Protected or Privileged Information

The Electronic Discovery act contains a so-called "claw back" provision that allows a party who inadvertently produces an electronic document to take it back after production without regard to waiver issues. The party seeking return of the material may notify any party that received the information of the claim and the basis for the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.285(a)]. Upon receipt of notice, the recipient is required to immediately sequester the information and either return the information and any copies that exist, or present the information to the court under seal for a determination of the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.285(b)]. The recipient has 30 days from receipt of the claim and presentation of the information to the court conditionally under seal within which to file a motion seeking determination of the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.285(d)(1)].

The recipient is prohibiting from using or disclosing the information until the claim is resolved [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.285(c)(1), (d)(2)]. A receiving party who disclosed the information prior to receiving the notice of the claim of privilege must immediately take "reasonable steps" to retrieve the information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.285(c)(2)].

Wholly aside from the procedure established by the "claw back" rule, an attorney has additional affirmative obligations upon receiving information that is obviously privileged when it is reasonably apparent that the materials were provided or made available through inadvertence. In this situation, the recipient has an affirmative duty to refrain from examining the materials any more than is essential to ascertain if the materials are privileged, and must immediately notify the sender that the recipient possesses material that appears to be privileged. The parties then may proceed to resolve the situation by agreement of may resort to the court for guidance and resolution of the issue [Rico v. Mitsubishi Motors Corp. (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 807, 817, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 758, 171 P.3d 1092 ; see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations, § 81.220[3][a]].

The responding party may consider asking the requesting party to stipulate to procedures designed to prevent waiver of privilege through inadvertent disclosure of electronic information [see, e.g., Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(b)(5) (allowing a party to claim a privilege for information already produced in discovery and requiring notified party to return, sequester, or destroy the information); see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 195A, Discovery: Discovery of Electronically Stored Evidence (E-Discovery) (Matthew Bender)].

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

Among the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are the page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular type of discovery motion, such as motion to compel discovery or a motion for a protective order.

In many cases it will be appropriate to combine these forms with additional memoranda set out in the related discovery chapters. In particular, they may be combined with the general points and authorities for limiting or regulating discovery set out in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , or with the points and authorities for limiting discovery based on the evidentiary privileges, work product protection, or other protective provisions found in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

It may also be appropriate to modify the memoranda in this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial or appellate brief or office memoranda relating to discovery practice.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form for a memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

IMPOSING A MONETARY SANCTION FOR THE FAILURE TO RESPOND.

A. Party Has Right to Inspect, Copy, Test, or Sample Electronically Stored Information. A party may demand that another party produce and permit the demanding party, or someone acting on that party's behalf, to inspect, copy, test, or sample electronically stored information in the possession, custody, or control of the party on whom demand is made (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010(a), (e)).

[EITHER]

B. Plaintiff May Make Demand for Inspection, Copying, Testing, or Sampling Electronically Stored Information Within Time Limit Provided by Statute. A plaintiff may make a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling electronically stored information without leave of court at any time that is _____ [10 or, in unlawful detainer action or other proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1159 et seq., five] days after the service of the summons on, or appearance by, the party to whom the demand is directed, whichever occurs first (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.020(b), (c)).

[OR]

B. Defendant May Make Demand for Inspection, Copying, Testing, or Sampling Electronically Stored Information Without Leave of Court. A defendant may make a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling electronically stored information without leave of court at any time (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.020(a)).

[CONTINUE]

C. Party May Move for Order Compelling Response and for Monetary Sanction. When a party makes a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2031.010 and the party to whom the demand is directed fails to respond, the demanding party may move for an order compelling response and for a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300).

D. Waiver of Objection to Demand. When the party to whom an inspection demand has been directed fails to serve a timely response to it, that party waives any objection to the demand, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018.010 (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(a)).

E. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. With exceptions not relevant here, the court must impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel a response to an inspection demand, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2031.300(c); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(d)).

[Optional] F. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (*Cal. [2] Comments

This form is for use in support of a motion by a party for an order compelling response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information and for a monetary sanction [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.010, 2031.020, 2031.300].

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing when the demand was made and the failure of the other party to respond, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [compare former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2031.300(c) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

Note that despite Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(c), absent exceptional circumstances the court may not impose sanctions on a party or any attorney of a party for failure to provide electronically stored information that has been lost, damaged, altered, or overwritten as the result of the routine, good faith operation of an electronic information system [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(d)(1)]. This exception, however, does not alter any obligation to preserve discoverable evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.300(d)(2)].

[c] Timely Response

Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq. govern discovery by inspection, copying, testing, or sampling ESI in the possession, custody, or control of any other party. Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.020 governs the timing of a demand.

The party on whom a demand for inspection is made is required to respond separately to each item or category of item in the demand [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)], and make certain statements [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2031.220-2031.240], 2031.280]. The response must be served on all parties who have appeared in the action within 30 days after service of the demand, or in unlawful detainer proceedings within five days of the demand, with certain extensions of time when service is by mail [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.260; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a) (requirements for service by mail; extensions of time); Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(c), (e) (requirements for service by express mail or fax; extensions of time); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050 (service generally)]. The period for service of the response may also be extended or shortened by the court on motion by the demanding or responding party [Code Civ. Proc. §

2031.260], or extended pursuant to a written agreement of the demanding and responding parties [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.270].

A PARTY DEMANDING THE _____ [INSPECTION and/or COPYING and/or TESTING and/or SAMPLING] OF ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION MAY SPECIFY THE FORM OR FORMS IN WHICH EACH TYPE OF ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION IS TO BE PRODUCED.

Demanding Party May Specify Form or Forms of Production. A party demanding the inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information may specify the form or forms in which each type of electronically stored information is to be produced (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.030(a)(2)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion compelling response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling electronically stored information, when the demanding party wants to specify the form or forms in which each type of ESI is to be produced. Typically, such an argument will follow an attempt by the responding party to produce the information in a form that is different than that specified in the demand and that is unacceptable to the demanding party, or following an objection by the responding party to the form requested. This form is intended to be combined with a general memorandum supporting a motion compelling response [see § 85A.20]. If the party responding to the e-discovery request contends that the information in question is not "reasonably accessible," this form should also be combined with the memorandum in § 85A.22[1].

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Specifically, counsel should show that the demanded requested production in a specific form, and the responding party produced it in some other form, or did not produce it at all.

The party [or affected person] opposing the production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information on the basis that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense bears the burden of demonstrating that inaccessibility (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(d)).

[AND/OR]

B. Court May Order Discovery of Electronically Stored Information From Source That Is Not Reasonably Accessible If Demanding Party Shows Good Cause. The court may order production of electronically stored information from a source that is not reasonably accessible if the demanding party shows good cause (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(e)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in combination with the form in § 85A.21 to support a motion for an order compelling further response to a demand for production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information, when the party or person opposing inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of the ESI objects on the ground that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense. It may be used to support either or both of the following contentions:

- The party opposing production has not met its burden of demonstrating that the information is not reasonably accessible [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310 (d)], and/or

- Even if the information is found to be reasonably accessible, the demanding party has shown good cause for the production of the information [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(e)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

In its response to a demand for discovery of electronically stored information, the responding party may object on the grounds that the ESI is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(d); see Code Civ. Proc § 2031.280(c) (objecting party must state form in which it does intend to supply the information)]. The law in this area is developing. Whether a source is "reasonably accessible" is a factual question for the court that depends upon many factors, including the media on which the ESI is stored, the volume of the ESI, the time and cost required to restore, search and review the ESI, the amount at issue in the case, whether the ESI is cumulative and/or available from other sources, and the relevance of the ESI to key issues in the case [Best Buy Stores, L.P. v. Developers Diversified Realty Corp. (D. Minn. 2007) 247 F.R.D. 567, 570 (database was not reasonably accessible because it would have to be restored from original sources at minimum cost of $124,000, plus monthly storage cost over $27,000); *see Parkdale Am., LLC v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. of Am. (W.D.N.C. Nov. 2007) 2007 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 88820, at 34 (e-mails in LotusNotes format were reasonably accessible when cost of producing them was no more than $20,000)]. Thus, counsel may find it necessary to include argument that the requested information was in fact "reasonably accessible" under the factors noted above.

The party or person objecting to production of the electronically stored information has the burden of demonstrating that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible [Code Civ. Proc. §2031.310(d)].

For discussion of the issues relating to whether or not electronically stored information is "reasonably accessible," see Matthew Bender(R) Practice Guide: California E-Discovery and Evidence, Ch. 10, Opposing Demands for Production of Electronic Evidence in California Court, § 10.07[1], Ch. 11, Seeking or Opposing Protective Order, § 11.06[2].

[c] Limits on Extent or Frequency of Discovery

The court may require the production of the information even if it is from a source that is not reasonably accessible, if the court finds that good cause exists for the production of the evidence. In this situation, the court may set conditions for the discovery of the information, including allocation of the expense of discovery (cost shifting) [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(f); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(g); see also § 85A.31[2][c]].

Proc. § 2031.280(c)*).

[OR]

A. Responding Party Must Specify Form of Production if No Form Is Specified in Demand. If a demand for production does not specify a form or forms for producing a type of electronically stored information, the responding party must state in its response the form in which it intends to produce each type of information. Unless the parties otherwise agree or the court otherwise orders, the responding party must produce the information in the form or forms in which it is ordinarily maintained or in a form that is reasonably usable (*Code Civ. [2] Comments

This memorandum is for use in opposition to a motion compelling response to a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling electronically stored information, if:

- The responding party objects to a specified form for producing ESI [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(c), or

- The demand for production does not specify a form or forms stated in the demand for producing a type of ESI, and the responding party specifies that it will produce the information in the form or forms in which it is ordinarily maintained or in a form that is reasonably usable [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(c), (d)(1)].

The form also states that a party need not produce the same ESI in more than one form [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.280(d)(2)].

This form is intended to be combined with a general memorandum opposing a motion compelling response (or further response) [see Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case.

[1] FORM Opposing Motion for Order Compelling Further Response to Demand for Inspection, Copying, Testing or Sampling of Electronically Stored Information--Information Is Not From Source That Is Reasonably Accessible [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(d)] and No Good Cause Exists for Production of Information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(e)]

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum opposing a motion for an order compelling response (or further response) to a demand for ESI (see, e.g., Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.30).]

THE DEMANDING PARTY IS NOT ENTITLED TO AN ORDER COMPELLING FURTHER RESPONSE BECAUSE THE ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION DEMANDED IS FROM A SOURCE THAT IS NOT REASONABLY ACCESSIBLE [AND NO GOOD CAUSE EXISTS FOR PRODUCTION OF THE INFORMATION].

A. Party [or Affected Person] May Object to Production of Electronically Stored Information on Ground That It Is Not Reasonably Accessible. In its response to a demand for discovery of electronically stored information, a party may object to discovery on the grounds that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense, and state in its response that the responding party will not search the source in the absence of an agreement with the demanding party or a court order (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.210(a)(3), (d)).

B. Demanding Party Must Show Good Cause for Discovery of Electronically Stored Information From Source That Is Not Reasonably Accessible. Once the objecting party has met its burden of demonstrating that electronically stored information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense, the demanding party must show good cause in order to obtain a court order compelling the production of that information ( Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(d), (e)).

[Optional] C. Court May Set Conditions [and Allocate Expense] of Discovery of Information That Is Not Reasonably Accessible. If the court finds that good cause exists for the production of electronically stored information from a source that is not reasonably accessible, the court may set conditions for discovery of the electronically stored information [, including allocation of the expense of discovery] (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(f)).

[Optional] D. Court Must Limit Frequency and Extent of Electronic Discovery in Accordance If Specified Conditions Exist. The court must limit the frequency and extent of discovery of electronically stored information, even from a source that is reasonably accessible, if the court determines that any of the following conditions exist: (1) it is possible to obtain the information from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive; (2) the discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative; (3) the party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the action to obtain the information sought; or (4) the likely burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues in the litigation, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(g)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used in combination with the form in § 85A.30 in support of a motion opposing an order to compel further response to a demand for production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information when the responding party asserts that (1) the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense; (2) the responding party has met its burden of demonstrating that the information is not reasonably accessible; and (3) the demanding party has not shown that good cause exists for the production of the ESI despite its inaccessibility [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(d), (e)]. Optional Paragraph C states the court's authority to impose cost-shifting when ordering discovery of ESI that is not reasonably accessible [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(f)], thereby shifting some or all of the expense of production to the demanding party. Optional Paragraph D may used when the responding party seeks to have the court limit discovery because the information may be obtained more conveniently or less expensively, the information is duplicative, the other party already has had ample opportunity to obtain the information, or the burden of producing it outweighs the likely benefit [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(g)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Thus, counsel should state that responding party objected to production on the basis of inaccessibility, show that the information in fact was not reasonably accessible, and, if appropriate, show that no good cause exists for the court to order production of the inaccessible information.

[c] Cost-Shifting

If the court finds good cause for the production of ESI from a source that is not reasonably accessible, the court may set conditions for the discovery of the information, including allocation of the expense of discovery [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(f)]. As a practical matter, the expense of e-discovery is likely to be one of the principal concerns of the responding party, and cost-shifting may be a major reason for that party to argue inaccessibility. Conversely, the party seeking the information may think twice about the necessity of obtaining the information if the court will require that party to assume all or part of the substantial production costs.

[d] Limits on Extent or Frequency of Discovery

The court must limit the frequency or extent of discovery of electronically stored information, even from a source that is reasonably accessible, if the court determines that any of the following conditions exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(g)]:

- It is possible to obtain the information from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive.

- The discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative.

- The party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the action to obtain the information sought.

- The likely burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues in the litigation, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues.

Each of the grounds specified above may be an independent basis for opposing an order to compel further response.

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in support of a motion for a protective order for production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling electronically stored information (see, e.g., Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.50).]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT _____ [specify moving party or affected person, e.g., DEFENDANT] A PROTECTIVE ORDER REGARDING _____ [specify demanding party, e.g., PLAINTIFF]'S DEMAND FOR _____ [INSPECTION and/or COPYING and/or TESTING and/or SAMPLING OF ELECTRONICALLY STORED INFORMATION], _____ [identify set number, e.g., PLAINTIFFS FIRST SET], BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN AND JUSTICE REQUIRES THE ORDER TO PROTECT _____ [specify moving party or affected person, e.g., DEFENDANT] FROM _____ [UNWARRANTED ANNOYANCE and/or EMBARRASSMENT and/or OPPRESSION and/or UNDUE BURDEN AND EXPENSE].

A. Power of Court to Issue Protective Order. For good cause shown, the court may make any order concerning an inspection demand that justice requires to protect any _____ [party or affected person] from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense (Code Civ. Proc. 2031.060(b); see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020; Cal Rules of Ct., Rule 3.728(13)).

B. Types of Protective Order. The court is empowered to issue a protective order that may include, but is not limited to, [one or more of] the following direction(s):

[EITHER]

That all or some of the items or categories of items in the demand for inspection, copying, testing or sampling of electronically stored information not be produced or made available at all (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)(1)).

[AND/OR]

That _____ [specify moving party or affected person, e.g., Defendant] has met its burden of showing that the electronically stored information demanded is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense (Code Civ. Prov. § 2031.060(c)).

[AND/OR]

That the frequency and extent of discovery of electronically stored information be limited, even if the court finds good cause for production of electronically stored information from a source that is not reasonably accessible, if the court determines that any of the following conditions exist: (1) it is possible to obtain the information from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive; (2) the discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative; (3) the party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the action to obtain the information sought; or (4) the likely burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues in the litigation, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(d), (f)).

[Optional] C. Court May Allocate Expense of Electronic Discovery. If the court finds good cause for the production of electronically stored information from a source that is not reasonably accessible, the court may set conditions for discovery of the electronically stored information [, including allocation of the expense of discovery] [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(e)].

This memorandum is for use in supporting a motion by the recipient of an e-discovery demand for a protective order concerning a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information [see Code Civ. Proc. 2031.060].

Optional Paragraph C provides for additional court-mandated conditions, including the allocation of the expense of e-discovery, if the court finds good cause of the production of electronically stored evidence from a source that is not reasonably accessible [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.310(f)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the requested information is not reasonably accessible, and/or that there is a need for protection from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden and expense [see Code Civ. Proc. 2031.060].

A party claiming that ESI is inaccessible must present the court with detailed information demonstrating undue burden or cost; a mere cost estimate and conclusory characterizations of their ESI as inaccessible will not suffice [*see Mikron Indus. v. Hurd Windows & Doors, Inc. (W.D. Wash. Apr. 21, 2008) 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35166, 6 ; OpenTV v. Liberate Techs. (N.D. Cal. 2003) 219 F.R.D. 474 (in cost shifting analysis, criticizing conclusory statements without supporting evidence on cost of production)].

[c] Protection from Annoyance or Undue Burden

The court, for good cause shown, may make any order that justice requires to protect any party or other person from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, or oppression, or undue burden or expense, in the face of a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(b)]. This power is in addition to the court's general power to limit discovery [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020] and the court's power to make case management orders relating to the discovery of electronically stored information [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.728(13)].

[d] Limits on Extent or Frequency of Discovery

The court must limit the frequency or extent of discovery of ESI, even from a source that is reasonably accessible, if the court determines that any of the following conditions exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(f)]:

- It is possible to obtain the information from some other source that is more convenient, less burdensome, or less expensive.
- The discovery sought is unreasonably cumulative or duplicative.
- The party seeking discovery has had ample opportunity by discovery in the action to obtain the information sought.
- The likely burden or expense of the proposed discovery outweighs the likely benefit, taking into account the amount in controversy, the resources of the parties, the importance of the issues in the litigation, and the importance of the requested discovery in resolving the issues.

Each of the grounds specified above may be an independent basis for a protective order.

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum opposing a motion for a protective order for production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling electronically stored information (see, e.g., Ch. 85, Discovery: Production or Inspection of Tangible Evidence, § 85.60).]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION FOR A PROTECTIVE ORDER BECAUSE _____ [_____ (name of party, e.g., DEFENDANT) HAS FAILED TO MEET ITS BURDEN OF DEMONSTRATING THAT THE INFORMATION IS FROM A SOURCE THAT IS NOT REASONABLY ACCESSIBLE and/or GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN TO EXIST FOR PRODUCTION OF THE INFORMATION].

[EITHER]

A. Party [or Affected Person] Seeking Protective Order on Basis That Electronically Stored Information Is Not Reasonably Accessible Because of Undue Burden or Expense Has Burden of Making That Showing. A party or affected person who seeks a protective order regarding the production, inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information on the basis that the information is from a source that is not reasonably accessible because of undue burden or expense bears the burden of demonstrating that inaccessibility (Code Civ. Prov. § 2031.060(c)).

[AND/OR]

B. Court May Order Discovery of Electronically Stored Information Even if Party Moving for Protective Order Shows That Information Is Not Reasonably Accessible Because of Undue Burden [and/or Expense]. The court may order production of electronically stored information that is not reasonably accessible if the demanding party shows good cause (Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(d)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in opposing a motion for a protective order concerning a demand for inspection, copying, testing, or sampling of electronically stored information under Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060. The grounds for opposing the demand are (1) that the person seeking a protective order on the basis that the information in question is not reasonably accessible has the burden of demonstrating inaccessibility (and, arguably, has failed to meet that burden) and/or (2) that even if the party seeking the order can successfully make a showing of inaccessibility, the court still has the power to order discovery of the information if good cause exists [Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.060(c), (d)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should state facts showing that the information in question is in fact reasonably accessible within the meaning of the statute, and/or that even if it is not reasonably accessible, the information is sufficiently important to the litigation to warrant a finding that good cause exists to order discovery. For example, counsel might argue, in an appropriate case, that the party seeking the order has given a mere unsupported cost estimate and conclusory characterizations of its ESI as inaccessible, and has failed to provide the court with detailed information demonstrating undue burden or cost [*see Mikron Indus. v. Hurd Windows & Doors, Inc. (W.D. Wash. Apr. 21, 2008) 2008 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 35166, 6 ; OpenTV v. Liberate Techs. (N.D. Cal. 2003) 219 F.R.D. 474 (in cost shifting analysis, criticizing conclusory statements without supporting evidence on cost of production)].

A party also may seek a protective order from discovery of electronically stored information on the grounds that the information may be obtained more conveniently or less expensively from some other source, that the information is duplicative, that the other party already has had ample opportunity to obtain the information, or that the burden of producing it outweighs the likely benefit [see Code Civ. Proc. 2031.060(f); for discussion, see § 85A.40[2][d]. If the party seeking the order relies on any of those grounds, counsel should add argument showing that those grounds are not supported by the facts of the case.

This chapter includes memoranda relating to civil discovery by means of requests to another party to admit the genuineness of specified documents, the truth of specified matters of fact, or the truth of specified opinions relating to fact or the application of law to fact. Forms in Part II include the following:

- Subpart A has memoranda supporting [§ 86.10 et seq.] and opposing [§ 86.20 et seq.] a motion to compel a response for further response to a request for an admission.

- Subpart B has memoranda relating to motions for protective orders in the context of a request for admissions [§ 86.30].

- Subpart C has memoranda relating to miscellaneous motions in matters pertaining to a requests for admissions, including those supporting [§ 86.50] and opposing [§ 86.60] a motion that specified matters be deemed admitted, supporting a motion to withdraw or amend a response to a request for an admission [§ 86.51], supporting [§ 86.52] and opposing [§ 86.61] a motion for expenses relating to proof of a matter following a failure to respond, and supporting a motion for relief from a waiver of the right to object to a request for admissions [§ 86.53].

§ 86.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified at Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010-2036.050. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Requests for Admissions

Civil discovery by requests to a party for admissions is governed primarily by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.010-2033.420. Judicial Council forms of requests for admissions are authorized and governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.710-2033.740. Limits on the use of requests for admissions in limited civil cases are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 94(a).

[3] Case Law Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

The Civil Discovery Act was passed in 2004 and became effective July 1, 2005. It repealed and renumbered the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 but did notsubstantively change the law of civil discovery [Stats. 2004, ch. 182 §§ 22, 23, 61]. Thus cases decided under the 1986 Act remain controlling authority. A considerable body of case law interpreted the discovery provisions of the Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9), which preceded the 1986 Act. Although the 1986 Act, which became operative July 1, 1987, implemented numerous changes in the prior law, it also continued provisions of the prior law in many other instances, or even codified decisions interpreting the prior law. Decisions construing this prior law are therefore cited as persuasive, rather than controlling, authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

§ 86.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular type of discovery motion, such as motion to compel discovery or a motion for a protective order.

In many cases it will be appropriate to combine them with additional memoranda set out in the related discovery chapters. In particular, they may be combined with the general memoranda for limiting or regulating discovery set out in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , or with the points and authorities for limiting discovery based on the evidentiary privileges, work product protection, or other protective provisions found in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

It may also be appropriate to modify the memoranda in this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial or appellate brief or office memoranda relating to discovery practice.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

A. Inadequate Answer. If the party requesting admissions, on receipt of a response to them, deems that (1) an answer to a particular request is evasive or incomplete, or (2) an objection to a particular request is without merit or too general, that party may bring a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of the disputed answers, for an order compelling a further response (*Code Civ. B. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel further response, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This form is for use in support of a motion for an order compelling a further response to a request for admission [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290]. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290(b)]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts ofhis or her case. For example, if counsel contends that an answer is inadequate, counsel should show particular reasons why the answer is evasive or incomplete. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the responding party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2033.290(d) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Notice

Unless notice of the motion for an order compelling a further response is given within 45 days of the service of the response, or any supplemental response, (or later if service is by mail), or any specific later date to which requesting party and the responding party have agreed in writing, the party requesting admissions waives any right to compel further response to the requests for admission [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290(c); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050 (extension of time for service by mail)].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memoranda set out in § 86.20 et seq. may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general memorandum in support of a motion compelling further response (see, e.g., § 86.10).]

IT IS PROPER FOR THE COURT TO COMPEL FURTHER RESPONSE TO _____ [identify set, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET OF] REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION [identify individual requests if appropriate, e.g., REQUESTS 1-5], BECAUSE _____ [specify, e.g., PLAINTIFF] FAILED TO ADMIT _____ [ALL or PART] OF THE REQUEST(S) ON THE GROUND OF LACK OF _____ [INFORMATION and/or KNOWLEDGE], BUT DID NOT STATE THAT _____ [A REASONABLE INQUIRY CONCERNING THE MATTER IN THE PARTICULAR REQUEST(S) HAS BEEN MADE and/or THE INFORMATION KNOWN OR READILY OBTAINABLE IS INSUFFICIENT TO ENABLE THAT PARTY TO ADMIT THE MATTER].

Reasonable Inquiry Required. If a responding party gives lack of information or knowledge as a reason for a failure to admit all or part of a request for admission, that party must state in the answer that a reasonable inquiry concerning the matter in the particular request has been made, and that the information known or readily obtainable is insufficient to enable that party to admit the matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.220(c); Chodos v. Superior Court (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 318, 323, 30 Cal. Rptr. 303).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is for use in support of a motion compelling further response if the responding party gives lack of information or knowledge as a reason for failure to admit all or part of a request for admission but fails to state that either a reasonable inquiry concerning the matter has been made, or the available information provides an insufficient basis for admission, or both [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.220(c)]. This form is intended to be combined with a general form of memorandumof points and authorities supporting a motion compelling further response [see § 86.10].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should make a showing, supported by a declaration if appropriate, that the responding party has access to available sources of information.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonable Inquiry Required

In Chodos v. Superior Court (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 318, 30 Cal. Rptr. 303 , an action for damages involving a landslide, defendants claimed that they could neither truthfully admit nor deny certain technical matters regarding landfill construction, because they lacked independent information; the trial court sustained defendants' objections. The court of appeal let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, ordering the trial court to vacate its order, and order defendants to respond. Since plaintiffs' declaration set forth facts from which it may have been inferred that defendants had sources available to them regarding the matters involved, it was neither unfair nor improper to require defendants to make a reasonable investigation in order to determine whether or not they would dispute the matters involved at time of trial (215 Cal. App. 2d 318, 323) .

Note

that Chodos was cited with approval by the court of appeal in Lindgren v. Superior Court (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 743, 748, 47 Cal. Rptr. 298 , which held, however, that in certain burdensome circumstances a responding party is not required to investigate [see Holguin v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 821, 99 Cal. Rptr. 653 (respondent to interrogatories in wrongful death case not required to start an investigation constituting preparation of opponent's case and stipulation of own case); see also Smith v. Circle P Ranch Co. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 273, 150 Cal. Rptr. 828 (discussed in § 86.51[3][d])].

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion compelling further response (see, e.g., § 86.10).]

THE OBJECTION TO _____ [identify set, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET OF] REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION [identify individual requests if appropriate, e.g., REQUESTS 1-5], IS IMPROPERLY BASED ON THE GROUND THAT THE REQUESTS DEAL WITH CONTROVERSIAL OR COMPLEX MATTERS AND CALL FOR AN OPINION, BECAUSE A REQUEST FOR ADMISSION MAY RELATE TO A MATTER THAT IS IN CONTROVERSY OR IS COMPLEX, AND MAY CALL FOR OPINIONS RELATING TO FACT OR THE APPLICATION OF LAW TO FACT.

A. Scope of Requests for Admission. Any party may obtain discovery within the scope fixed by Section 2017.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, and subject to the restrictions set forth in Section 2019.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, by a written request that any other party to the action admit the genuineness of specified documents, or the truth of specified matters of fact, opinion relating to fact, or application of law to fact. A request for admission may relate to a matter that is in controversy between the parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.010).

B. Opinions or Controversial or Complex Matters of Fact. An objection to a request for admission is improper if it is based on the ground that the request calls for an opinion or deals with controversial or complex matters of fact (see Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 429, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion compelling further response to requests for admission when the responding party has objected to a request on the ground that it calls for opinions or relates to a matter in controversy. The foregoing form is intended to becombined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion compelling further response [see § 86.10].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Opinions or Controversial or Complex Matters of Fact

Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303 was a personal injury action against, inter alia, a drug manufacturer, seeking damages allegedly caused by long-term ingestion of defendant's product. Plaintiff served defendant with requests for admission concerning several matters, including defendant's advertising and marketing policies, side effects caused by ingestion of defendant's product, and defendant's knowledge of the harmful effects caused by use of its product. Defendant objected to the requested admissions, asserting, inter alia, that various requests (1) were irrelevant; (2) called for conclusions; (3) involved matters that were both complex and controversial; (4) could not be clearly either admitted or denied; and (5) overlapped answers previously given in depositions. The trial court sustained the objections, and plaintiff brought a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to set aside its order.

The Supreme Court let the writ of mandate issue, requiring the trial court to set aside its order sustaining objections and reconsider the objections to the requests for admission. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.010 et seq.) required more than objections to the requests as a whole, and defendant should have been required to admit, deny, or explain many of the matters to which it made blanket objection. By not explaining its inability to admit or deny when appropriate, defendant failed to show the good faith required by the statute (56 Cal. 2d 423, 430) . With respect to the objections that the requests called for conclusions, or involved matters that were both complex and controversial, the Court stated that the fact that a request is for the admission of a controversial matter, involves complex facts, or calls for an opinion is inconsequential (56 Cal. 2d 423, 429) . Contrary to most of the other discovery procedures, which are aimed primarily at assisting counsel to prepare for trial, requests for admission are primarily aimed at settling triable issues so that they will not have to be tried (56 Cal. 2d 423, 429) .

Note that Cembrook was decided before the 1986 repeal and reenactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 2033 (now see §§ 2033.010 -2033.420). However, with respect to the foregoing issues, the Legislature intended by its reenactment to codify the holding in Cembrook [see Reporter's Notes to the Proposed California Civil Discovery Act of 1986, Note to § 2033(a)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Scope of Requests for Admission

The facts and procedural background of Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303 , are discussed in [3][a], above. In Cembrook, the Supreme Court held that a request for admission cannot be objected to on the ground that it regards a controversial matter, or one involving complex facts, or calls for an opinion (56 Cal. 2d 423, 429) . The controlling statute, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.010), permitted requests for admission of "relevant" documents and matters of fact. Interpreting the entire Discovery Act as a whole, the Court found that the Legislature intended to authorize discovery in regard to all matters relevant to the subject matter. All of petitioner's requests were relevant to the subject matter or reasonably calculated to lead to admissible evidence (56 Cal. 2d 423, 429) .

Note

that Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.010 now omits the term "relevant," and authorizes discovery within the scope fixed by Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010 et seq. and subject to the restrictions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.010 et seq. In doing so, the Legislature intended to codify the interpretation in Cembrook of the expansive definition of relevance with respect to requests for admission [see Reporter's Notes to the Proposed California Civil Discovery Act of 1986, Note to § 2033(a)].

Requesting Party Previously Deposed on Same Subject Matter. The fact that one party is unilaterally bound by deposition answers does not excuse the other party from being required to make an admission regarding the same facts (see Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 429, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion compelling further response when the party receiving the requests objects on the ground that the requesting party already knows the answer, as evidenced by the fact that he or she has previously given testimony during depositions on the same matters [see Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 429, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303] . This form is intended to be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion compelling further response [see § 86.10].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also §

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requesting Party Previously Deposed on Same Subject Matter

The facts and procedural background of Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303 , are discussed in § 86.12[3][a]. In Cembrook, the Supreme Court held that a request for admission cannot be objected to on the ground that it regards a controversial matter, or one involving complex facts, or calls for an opinion. The responding party also objected on the ground that the requesting party had already been deposed on the same subject matter. However, the fact thatone party has unilaterally bound itself, through deposition, does not excuse the other party from being required to make an admission regarding the same facts. The issue is not fully determined until both parties are heard (56 Cal. 2d 423, 429) .

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion for an order for deemed admissions and monetary sanction, when the moving party has served requests for admission on the opposing party, and the opposing party has failed to obey an order compelling further response [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290(e)]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

THE MATTER AS IS UNTRUE IN and/or SPECIFIED THAT HE/SHE LACKS SUFFICIENT INFORMATION OR KNOWLEDGE REGARDING THE TRUTH OF and/or OBJECTED TO] THE REQUESTS IN CONTROVERSY. IF THE MOTION IS DENIED, THE COURT SHOULD ALSO IMPOSE A MONETARY SANCTION AGAINST _____ [name(s)] BECAUSE THERE IS NO SHOWING THAT _____ HE/SHE/IT/THEY ACTED WITH SUBSTANTIAL JUSTIFICATION OR THAT OTHER CIRCUMSTANCES MAKE THE IMPOSITION OF THE SANCTION UNJUST.

[EITHER]

A. Permissible Answers. Each answer in the response shall be as complete and straightforward as the information reasonably available to the responding party permits. Each answer shall (1)admit so much of the matter involved in the request as is true, either as expressed in the request itself or as reasonably and clearly qualified by the responding party, (2) deny so much of the matter involved in the request as is untrue, and (3) specify so much of the matter involved in the request as to the truth of which the responding party lacks sufficient information or knowledge. If a responding party gives lack of information or knowledge as a reason for a failure to admit all or part of a request for admission, that party shall state in the answer that a reasonable inquiry concerning the matter in the particular request has been made, and that the information known or readily obtainable is insufficient to enable that party to admit the matter (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.220).

[AND/OR]

B. Number of Requests Not Pertaining to Genuineness of Documents Exceeds Limit. If no declaration for additional discovery has been made, a respondent need only respond to the first 35 admission requests that do not relate to the genuineness of documents and state an objection to the balance on the ground that the limit has been exceeded (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.030(b), 2033.230).

[AND/OR]

C. Number of Requests Regarding Genuineness of Documents. The number of requests for admission regarding the genuineness of documents may be limited in the interests of justice in order to protect the responding party from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.030(c)).

[AND/OR]

D. Claim of Privilege. The responding party may object to a request for admission on a claim of privilege if he or she clearly states the particular privilege invoked (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.230(b)).

[AND/OR]

E. Protected Work Product. The responding party may object to a request for admission by expressly asserting that the matter in controversy is protected work product under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2018.010 et seq. (see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.230(b)).

[AND/OR]

F. Joint Response by Coparties Is Proper Response to Identical Requests for Admission. Coparties who have been served withidentical, but separate, sets of requests for admission may respond with a single, joint document containing identical responses, so long as it is verified under penalty of perjury by both of them (Tobin v. Oris (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 829, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 736 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727).

G. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2023.030 against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes a motion to compel further response, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2033.290(d)).

This form of points and authorities is a general form for use in opposition to a motion for an order compelling further answers to requests for admission, on the ground that the respondent has properly provided an answer or objection to the request [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.220, 2033.290]. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

This form may be combined with forms of points and authorities for specific objections, such as those set out in § 86.21 et seq. For memoranda of points and authorities relating to specific grounds of evidentiary privilege or other protection from discovery, see generally Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 86.10 and 86.11.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, if counsel for the moving party has contended that the responding party's objection to a response is too general, counsel should discuss facts showing that the objection is sufficiently specific. Counsel should also argue how the answers are clear and complete. If more than 35 requests for admission have been propounded, counsel should argue, if appropriate, that the greater number is not warranted by the complexity or quantity of the existing and potential issues [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.040]. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for opposing the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is granted. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the moving party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2033.290(d) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Protective Order

Note that, if requests cause annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense, the responding party may apply for a protective order under Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080 [see § 86.30].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to requests for admissions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 196, Discovery: Requests for Admissions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Joint Response by Coparties Is Proper Response to Identical Requests for Admission

The facts and procedural background of Tobin v. Oris (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 736 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , are discussed in § 86.60[3][a]. In Tobin, plaintiff served two identical, but separate, sets of requests for admission to a husband andwife codefendants represented by the same counsel. Codefendants responded with a single document containing identical responses, but which was verified under penalty of perjury by both of them. The court of appeal upheld the validity of the joint response. Such a response does not violate the statutory requirement of a "separate" response. The court reasoned that plaintiff received all that he was entitled to receive. Each defendant responded, each verified his or her response, and each could be held separately accountable for the response. To require them to have done so on separate pieces of paper would have added nothing but another triumph of form over substance (3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 829) .

[1] FORM Opposing Motion for Order Compelling Further Response to Requests for Admission [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.010, 2033.220, 2033.290]--Subject of Requested Admission Not Relevant to Pending Action

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion compelling further response (see, e.g., § 86.20).]

THE OBJECTION TO THE REQUESTED ADMISSION IS PROPER BECAUSE THE SUBJECT OF THE REQUEST IS NOT RELEVANT TO THE PENDING ACTION NOR REASONABLY CALCULATED TO LEAD TO ADMISSIBLE EVIDENCE.

A. Relevance to Subject Matter of Pending Action. Unless otherwise limited by order of the court, any party may obtain discovery regarding any matter not privileged, but it must be relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action or to the determination of any motion made in that action and be admissible in evidence or appear reasonably calculated to lead to the discovery of admissible evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.010).

B. Objection on Ground of Irrelevance. If the subject of the requested admission is neither relevant to the subject matter involved in the pending action, nor reasonably calculated to lead to admissible evidence, then an objection on the ground of irrelevance is proper (see Cembrook v. Sterling Drug Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 52, 62, 41 Cal. Rptr. 492).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion for an order compelling further response if the subject matter of the requested admission is irrelevant to the pending action. This form is intended to be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion compelling further response [see § 86.20].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the issues in the pending action and explain why the subject of the request is irrelevant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Objection on Ground of Irrelevance

In Cembrook v. Sterling Drug Inc. (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 52, 41 Cal. Rptr. 492 , a consumer of a drug manufactured by defendant brought an action for damages for personal injuries allegedly arising from plaintiff's use of defendant's drug. Plaintiff requested that defendant admit that it conspired with the news media not to publicize the court proceedings, and that the public was therefore wrongfully denied access to knowledge of the ill effects of defendant's product. The trial court sustained defendant's objections on the ground of irrelevance. Defendant prevailed, and plaintiff appealed on the ground that he was denied a fair trial because of lack of media publicity.

The court of appeal affirmed. The right to a public trial does not include the right to publicity thereof by the news media; nor is the subject of media publicity a triable issue in the instant case. The subject of the requested admission was not, therefore, relevant to the instant action, nor was it reasonably calculated to lead to admissible evidence. Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in sustaining defendant's objections to the disputed requests (231 Cal. App. 2d 52, 62) . (This case is related to Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303 , discussed in § 86.12[3][a].)

[1] FORM Opposing Motion for Order Compelling Further Response to Requests for Admission [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.220, 2033.290]--Responding Party's Denial Not Ground for Compelling Further Response

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion compelling further response (see, e.g., § 86.20).]

FURTHER RESPONSE SHOULD NOT BE COMPELLED, BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS DENIED _____ [identify set, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET OF] REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION, _____ [identify individual requests, e.g., REQUESTS 1-5], AND MAY NOT THEREFORE BE COMPELLED TO SUBMIT FURTHER RESPONSE, EVEN IF THE DENIAL IS UNFOUNDED.

Request for Further Response Based on Denial. If a responding party has denied requested admissions, the requesting party may not move for further answers requiring the responding party to change the response, even if the denials are entirely unwarranted (see Holguin v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 820, 99 Cal. Rptr. 653).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion for an order compelling further response if the responding party has denied the requested admissions and the requesting party seeks further response on the ground that the denials were unjustified. This form is intended to be combined with a general memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for an order compelling further response [see § 86.20].

Note that if the party requesting an admission about the genuineness of a document or the truth of a matter thereafter proves the matter, he or she may move for an order requiring the responding party to pay the reasonable expenses incurred in making the proof [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420 and § 86.52].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should indicate that the responding party has already denied the requests in controversy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Request for Further Response Based on Denial

In Holguin v. Superior Court (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 99 Cal. Rptr. 653 , an action for wrongful death during childbirth, plaintiffs sought requested admissions from defendant doctors concerning placement of the anesthesia injection, decedent's height and weight, and various facts relating to the autopsy. Defendants denied all the requests. Plaintiffs then filed for an order compelling further response, on the ground that certain matters that defendants had denied were so unquestionably true that they could not be denied. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion, and plaintiff brought a petition for writ of mandate to compel reversal of the court's order.

The court of appeal denied the petition (22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 822) . A litigant cannot be forced to admit any particular fact if that litigant is willing to risk financial sanctions or a perjury prosecution (22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 820) . When, as in Holguin, the responding parties have clearly denied the requested admissions, the holding in Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303 , that the responding party is required to give further answers when he or she has improperly refused to admit or deny, is inapplicable (22 Cal. App. 3d 812, 820) .

[1] FORM Opposing Motion for Order Compelling Further Response to Requests for Admission [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.220, 2033.290]--Improper Inquiry Into Decision-Making Process of Administrative Agency

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in opposition to a motion for an order compelling further response (see, e.g., § 86.20).]

FURTHER RESPONSE SHOULD NOT BE COMPELLED FROM _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] BECAUSE _____ [identify number of each contested request, e.g., REQUESTS 2-4] OF _____ [identify set, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRSTSET] OF REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION IMPROPERLY CALL FOR AN INQUIRY INTO THE DECISION-MAKING PROCESS OF AN ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY.

Improper Inquiry Into Decision-Making Processes. When the subject of requests for admission is the decision-making process of an administrative agency and its members, the requests are improper, and the responding party is not required to provide answers (Board of Administration v. Superior Court (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 314, 319, 323, 123 Cal. Rptr. 530).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities are for use in opposition to a motion for an order compelling further response if the subject matter of requested admissions concerns the decision-making process of an administrative agency and its members. This form is intended to be combined with a general memorandum opposing a motion for an order compelling further response [see § 86.20].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss facts showing that the subject matter of the requests necessarily involves the decision-making process of a particular administrative agency.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Inquiry Into Decision-Making Processes

Board of Administration v. Superior Court (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 314, 123 Cal. Rptr. 530 involved actions for wrongful denial of disability retirement benefits brought by a police officer against a city and by the city against the administrative board of the Public Retirement System. The city propounded requests for admission to the board concerning the mechanics of the board's decision denying the retirement benefits. The trial court, over the board's objections, ordered the board to answer the disputed requests. The board brought a petition for writ of prohibition seeking, inter alia, to restrain the court from enforcing its order on the ground that it could not compel disclosure of an administrative decision-making process.

The court of appeal let issue a peremptory writ of prohibition, which, inter alia, restrained the trial court from enforcing the order compelling response to requests for admission concerning the administrative decision-making process (50 Cal. App. 3d 314, 324) . A reviewing court may not inquire into the physical and mental processes by which an administrative agency and its members arrived at a decision. Judicial action, not judicial reasoning, is subject to review (50 Cal. App. 3d 314, 319) . Therefore, when an administrative agency is acting in a quasi-judicial capacity, there can be no inquiry into the process by which it and its individual members arrive at decisions (50 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323) .

[4] Additional Authorities

In San Joaquin Cty. Local Agency Formation Comm'n v. Superior Court (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 93 , the real party in interest, an irrigation district, challenged a local agency formation commission's denial of the district's application to provide retail electric service. At issue on appeal was whether the irrigation district could take the depositions of the commissioners to learn what extra-record information the commissioners had when they denied the application, and what additional information was needed to change their minds. The court of appeal held that the "deliberative process privilege" protected from discovery the commissioners' decisionmaking process and the evidence they relied on in rejecting the district's application (162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 172) . Under this privilege, senior officials of all three branches of government enjoy a qualified privilege not to disclose or be examined concerning the mental processes by which a decision was reached, as well as the substance of conversations, discussions, or deliberations reflecting advice, opinions, and recommendations that underlie government policy (162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 170) . Accordingly, the trial court erred by not granting the commission's motion for a protective order in its entirety (162 Cal. App. 4th 159, 173) . For further discussion of this case, see § 81.276[4][b].

In Sutter's Place Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , petitioner, a card room operator, sued real the party in interest, a city, challenging an ordinance that imposed limits on the operation of card rooms. The superior court issued a discovery order protecting specified documents from disclosure on the ground that their discovery would violate the "mental processes" principle (precluding judicial inquiry into the motivation or mental processes of legislators in enacting legislation). Petitioner sought a writ of mandate and or prohibition to overturn the discovery order and compel the discovery (161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1374). The court of appeal denied the writ, ruling that documents relating to individual legislators' mental processes or reasons for enacting the ordinance were irrelevant and not discoverable. Even assuming that an ulterior purpose behind the ordinance were relevant to its validity, such discovery would violate the "mental processes principle" (161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1376) . The court added that the "common law privilege protecting the "mental processes of legislators" is to be distinguished from the analogous "common law privilege that attached to confidential intraagency advisory opinions," which is now codified and sometimes referred to as the "deliberative process" or "executive" privilege (161 Cal. App. 4th 1370, 1377-1378) . For additional facts and procedural background, see § 83.80[4][b].

A. Grounds for Protective Order. When requests for admission have been made, the court, for good cause shown, may make any order that justice requires to protect any party from unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080).

B. Scope of Protective Order. The protective order regarding requests for admission may include, but is not limited to, [one or more of] the following direction(s):

[EITHER]

That the set of admission requests, or particular requests in the set, need not be answered at all (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080(b)(1)).

[AND/OR]

That, contrary to the representations made in a declaration for additional discovery submitted under Section 2033.050 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the number of admission requests is unwarranted (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080(b)(2)).

[a] Use of Form

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion for a protective order regarding requests for admission, on the ground that responding to the requests would cause unwarranted annoyance, embarrassment, oppression, or undue burden and expense [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080]. Optional Paragraph D is for use to obtain an order requiring the requesting party to rephrase ambiguous requests for admissions [see Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 430, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303] .

The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080(a)]. This form should also be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Note that the case cited in this form construes law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should specify which of the grounds for a protective order are relevant and discuss facts supporting those grounds. If appropriate, counsel should specify how answering the requests would subject the responding party to undue burden and expense, and should show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc.§ 2033.080]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party propounding the requests acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2033.080(d) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Order Allowing Discovery

If the motion for a protective order is denied in whole or in part, the court may order that the responding party provide or permit the discovery against which protection was sought on terms and conditions that are just [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080(c)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rephrasing Requests for Admission

The facts and procedural background of Cembrook v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 423, 15 Cal. Rptr. 127, 364 P.2d 303 , are discussed in § 86.12[3][a]. In Cembrook, the Supreme Court held that a request for admission cannot be objected to on the ground that it regards a controversial matter, or one involving complex facts, or calls for an opinion (56 Cal. 2d 423, 429) . With regard to the ambiguity objection, the Supreme Court stated that if the trial court should find that certain requests are too ambiguous to allow for intelligent reply, it may order that those requests be rephrased. The Court found authority for the order in former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2019 and 2033 (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.080), which gave the trial court ample power to correct any abuses that may exist in the requests without sustaining the objections in toto (56 Cal. 2d 423, 430) .

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER THAT THE _____ [GENUINENESS OF THE DOCUMENTS and/or TRUTH OF ALL MATTERS] SPECIFIED IN _____ [identify requests, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S FIRST SET OF REQUESTS FOR ADMISSION] BE DEEMED ADMITTED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS FAILED TO SERVE A TIMELY RESPONSE TO THEM.

A. Failure to Serve Timely Response. If a party to whom requests for admission have been directed fails to serve a timely response, the requesting party may move for an order that the genuineness of any documents and the truth of any matters specified in the requests be deemed admitted, as well as for a monetary sanction pursuant to Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280(b)).

[Optional] B. Unsworn Response Is Deemed No Response. Unsworn responses are tantamount to no responses at all (Allen-Pacific, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1550-1551, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 ; Appleton v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 636, 253 Cal. Rptr. 762).

C. Order on Motion After Failure to Serve Timely Response. If a party to whom requests for admission have been directed fails to serve a timely response, on motion by the requesting party, the court shall make the requested order for deemed admissions, unless it finds that before the hearing on the motion the party to whom the requests for admission have been directed has served a proposed response to the requests for admission that is in substantial compliance with Sections 2033.210-2033.230 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280; Allen-Pacific, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1550-1552, 1556-1557, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 ; *Courtesy Claims Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 52, 55, 268 Cal. D. Waiver of Objection to Requests. If a party to whom requests for admissions have been directed fails to serve a timely response, that party thereby waives any objection to the requests, including one based on privilege or on the protection for work product under Section 2018.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280(a)).

E. Mandatory Monetary Sanction. It is mandatory that the court impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the party, or attorney, or both, whose failure to serve a timely response to requests for admission necessitated the motion for deemed admissions (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280(c); Appleton v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 635-636, 253 Cal. Rptr. 762).

This form of memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion for an order for deemed admissions and a monetary sanction when the moving party has served requests for admission but the party on whom they were served has failed to serve a timely response [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280]. Optional Paragraph B may be used when the party to whom the requests for admission have been served does not verify his or her response. This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

Use § 86.10 instead of this form to support a motion for an order compelling further response.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should show that the opposing party has failed to serve a timely response to the requests for admission.

[c] Comparison to Prior Law

Under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(a), on a party's failure to respond to requests for admission, each of the matters of which an admission was requested was deemed admitted if the original request contained a sufficient warning to that effect. Under current law, however, there is no provision for a warning, and to obtain deemed admissions, the requesting party must move the court for an order. The burden regarding deemed admissions is therefore now on the requesting party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280(b)].

[d] Relief From Waiver of Objections to Requests

Note that when a party has failed to serve a timely response to requests for admission, the court, on motion, may relieve that party from the waiver of objections to the requests on its determination that (1) the party has subsequently served a response that is in substantial compliance with Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.210-2033.230 and (2) the party's failure to serve a timely response was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect [Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280(a); see § 86.53].

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to deemed admissions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 196, Discovery: Requests for Admissions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unsworn Response Is Deemed No Response

In Allen-Pacific, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , an action for fraud and conversion, plaintiff served defendant Chan with requests for admission. When no response was served, plaintiff moved to deem the truth of the matters specified and for monetary sanctions. Before the hearing, defendants served a response that was signed by counsel and not made under oath. After the trial court denied its motion, plaintiff petitioned for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted plaintiff's petition and issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the order denying plaintiff's motion to deem admitted matters covered in its requests for admission and for monetary sanctions, and to enter a new appropriate order (57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1556-1557) . Citing Appleton (discussed below), the court said that an unsworn response is tantamount to no response at all (57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1550-1551) .

In Appleton v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 253 Cal. Rptr. 762 , plaintiffs, insureds under a policy issued by defendant insurance company, brought an action against defendant insurer and defendant individual for fraud in connection with the sale of that policy. Defendant individual served on plaintiffs a set of three requests for admissions. Plaintiffs objected, did not provide any answers, and did not verify their response. After unsuccessful attempts to obtain more complete answers and a verification, defendant moved to have the requests deemed admitted and for sanctions pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280). The trial court ordered that defendant's requests be deemed admitted but denied sanctions. Defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the portion of its order denying sanctions and to enter a new order granting sanctions in the appropriate amount. The court said that unsworn responses are tantamount to no responses at all. Thus, it held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280), the provision governing the failure to serve a response, is applicable (206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 636) .

[b] Order on Motion After Failure to Serve Timely Response

The facts and procedural background of Allen-Pacific, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , are discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new appropriate one (57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1556-1557) . The court of appeal said that the sole question was whether the trial court had discretion to deny plaintiff's motion. It noted that defendants admitted that the initial response failed to conform to the prescription of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(g) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.240), and was tantamount to no response at all (57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1550-1551) . The court said that the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280), which controlled the case, was very clear: a trial court must grant a motion to have admission requests deemed admitted when responses have not been served before the hearing or, if responses were served, they were not in substantial compliance. Further, the trial court must impose monetary sanctions (57 Cal. App. 4th 1546, 1550-1552, 1556-1557) .

In Courtesy Claims Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 52, 268 Cal. Rptr. 30 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , after plaintiffs sued an individual for personal injuries and property damages sustained in an automobile accident, and received partial payment of a default judgment by his insurance company, they and the insured individual brought a bad-faith action against the insurance company and its adjuster. The adjuster served identical sets of requests for admission on each plaintiff. The insurance company served similar requests two months later. Plaintiffs did not respond to either set of requests. The insurance company filed a motion to deem matters contained in its requests admitted. Before the hearing, a response was filed with the insurer on behalf of one plaintiff only. Later, all plaintiffs responded to the adjuster's requests. The trial court denied the insurance company's motion "in the interest of justice," gave the remaining plaintiffs 20 days to submit their responses, and imposed sanctions against plaintiffs and their attorney. Defendants filed a petition for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant its motion.

The court of appeal granted the petition. It said the trial court's ruling was contrary to the mandatory language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280). It explained that Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) makes no exception for "the interest of justice"; rather, it specifically provides that if proposed responses are not served before the hearing on the motion, the court shall make an order that the matters raised inthe requests be deemed admitted (219 Cal. App. 3d 52, 55) . The court also rejected plaintiffs' argument that they be allowed to amend their responses, observing that there was nothing to amend in that the responses were made to a different party (219 Cal. App. 3d 52, 56) .

[c] Mandatory Monetary Sanction

The facts and procedural background of Appleton v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 253 Cal. Rptr. 762 , are discussed in [a], above. In Appleton, the court of appeal found monetary sanctions were mandatory and ordered the trial court to grant them. The court quoted the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280), emphasizing the words, "[i]t is mandatory that the court impose a monetary sanction." The court pointed out that the burden is on the propounding party to file the motion to have requests deemed admitted, and that whenever an opponent's failure to serve answers necessitates such a motion, the moving party is entitled to sanctions. It concluded that by the clear language of Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k), sanctions are mandatory (206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 634-635) . The court stated that the trial court, in holding that it had the discretion to decide whether or not to impose sanctions, had acted under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290) and its exculpatory language, which provides that sanctions are to be imposed "unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust." The court found a distinction between former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033(k) and 2033(l). It explained that although former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(l) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.290) allows the court to use its discretion in imposing sanctions, it applies only when incomplete responses have been given. When no response is given, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280) applies, and sanctions are mandatory (206 Cal. App. 3d 632, 635-636) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion for permission to amend or withdraw an admission made in response to a request for admission on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. For example, counsel should show facts supporting a finding of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, and that the other party's action or defense will not be substantially prejudiced.

[c] When Withdrawal or Amendment of Admission Is Permitted

Relief under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300) is available for all admissions, and thus permits withdrawal or amendment of admissions deemed admitted for failure to respond as well as of admissions contained in an actual response [Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727] . Rejecting the decisions of the majority of courts of appeals, which held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300) applies only to admissions contained in an actual response [see, e.g., Courtesy Claims Service, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 52, 268 Cal. Rptr. 30 , disapproved in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727] , the California Supreme Court in Wilcox found that applying former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300) to all admissions, including deemed admissions, is more consistent with both the statutory language and legislative history of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.010 et seq.) [Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973 979-983, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727] . The Court acknowledged that the plain meaning of the rule is not helpful. However, the Court found that reading former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) in light of other relevant subdivisions compelled the conclusion that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300) provides relief from deemed admissions. The Court explained that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(n) (now see Code

Civ. Proc. § 2033.410) codified the case law existing at the time of its enactment, which held that matters deemed admitted in an actual response or deemed admitted for failure to respond constitute binding judicial admissions [Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 979, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.410]. Because the admissions referred to in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(n) encompass deemed admissions, the court concluded that in order to harmonize these subdivisions, it must give the same meaning to the word "admission" found in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) [Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 979, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727] . The Court further held that this interpretation is consistent with the legislative intent underlying the statute's enactment, which was, in part, to remedy previous "draconian" sanctions for nonresponse or tardy response [Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 979-980, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727] . Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300) achieved this result by eliminating the prior time limits on obtaining relief. The Court observed that precluding the withdrawal or amendment of deemed admissions is arguably more draconian than the previous practice [Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 980, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 987 P.2d 727] .

[d] Notice

A party may amend or withdraw an admission made in response to a request for admission only on leave of court granted after notice to all parties [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300].

[e] Conditions on Granting of Motion

The court may impose conditions on the granting of the motion that are just, including, but not limited to, an order that (1) the party who obtained the admission be permitted to pursue additional discovery related to the matter involved in the withdrawn or amended admission, and (2) the costs of any additional discovery be borne in whole or in part by the party amending or withdrawing the admission [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court May Permit Amendment or Withdrawal of Admission

In Burch v. Gombos (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 352, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 119 , appellants sued to prevent respondents from using a portion of the road that crossed their property to conduct logging operations. The trial court found that the portion of the road in issue had been impliedly dedicated to the public as a result of earlier public recreational use. The court enjoined appellants from interfering with respondents' use of the road, and denied appellants' cross-request for injunctive relief.

Appellants contended, among other things, that the trial court erred in permitting respondents to introduce evidence of public use of the roadway, because respondents had previously responded to a request for admission by admitting they had no such evidence, which was true at the time (82 Cal. App. 4th 352, 355) . The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling that respondent's admission was limited to its knowledge as of the time its admission was made. The appellate court held that respondents had no duty to update their response to the request for admission when they subsequently discovered such evidence (82 Cal. App. 4th 352, 359) . The court explained that nothing in the text of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.010 et seq.) creates any ongoing duty to update responses. In fact, the statute authorizes amending or withdrawing a response only in cases in which a court finds the original admission "was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect" (82 Cal. App. 4th 352, 359) . Moreover, although an admission is dispositive in most cases, a trial court retains discretion to determine its scope and effect so that it accurately reflects what facts are admitted in light of other evidence. Here, there was nothing in the record to demonstrate any intent to mislead on the part of respondents, nor any indication of real prejudice to appellants (82 Cal. App. 4th 352, 359-360) . The court added, as an aside to practitioners, that appellant could have avoided this issue if she had used a more typical request for admission, addressing a matter of historical fact, rather than using a request for admission regarding a matter of a party's present knowledge (82 Cal. App. 4th 352, 360) .

[b] Doubts Must Be Resolved In Favor of Moving Party

In New Albertsons, Inc. v. Superior Court (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 457 , real parties in interest, a customer and his wife, filed suit against a supermarket operator for negligence and premises liability. The supermarket operator filed a petition for a writ of mandate after the trial court denied its motion to withdraw an admission made in response to a request for admission and imposed evidence and issue sanctions for misuse of the discovery process.

The court of appeal held that any doubts in ruling on a motion to withdraw or amend an admission under Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300 had to be resolved in favor of the moving party (168 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1408, 1420) . Because the record did not clearly establish that the supermarket operator's mistake in admitting the matter was inexcusable, or show that the withdrawal of the admission would substantially prejudice the real parties, the policy in favor of trial on the merits required granting the motion to withdraw admission (168 Cal. App. 4th 1403, 1421) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Amendment or Withdrawal of Admission

In Valerio v. Andrew Youngquist Constr. (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 , a general contractor appealed from the trial court's judgment in favor of a subcontractor, in the subcontractor's suit for breach of express written contract and quantum meruit. The contractor contended that the trial court failed to give conclusive effect to the subcontractor's judicial admissions regarding the existence of a written contract. The court of appeal agreed. It found that the subcontractor admitted the existence of a written contract in his answer to the cross-complaint. This admission had the effect of establishing the truth of the existence of the written contract.

Although a court has inherent power to relieve a party from the effects of judicial admissions by amendment to the pleadings under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, the subcontractor never sought to amend his answer to the cross-complaint. He did not request to amend his answer orally at the timethe cross-complaint was filed nor did he request a continuance to file an amended answer (103 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1271-1272) .

The appellate court also found former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300), permitting a party to withdraw or amend an admission with leave of court, inapplicable. Under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(m), the court may grant leave if it determines the admission was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect and that the party who obtained the admission will not be substantially prejudiced by the withdrawal or amendment. Here, there was no ambiguity in the subcontractor's understanding at the time he responded to the requests for admissions; he believed that a written contract existed. Accordingly, there was no reason for the court to interpret the admission in order to resolve an ambiguity or to reflect the subcontractor's reasonable understanding of the facts (103 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1272-1273) . The appellate court observed that if the subcontractor disagreed that a written contract existed, he was required under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(f)(1)(B) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.220(b)(2)) to deny the portion of the requested admission that he considered untrue. "Simply put, [the subcontractor] filed a mistaken response that he never later moved to amend or withdraw" (103 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1273) . In sum, the subcontractor failed to take the necessary procedural steps to remove his conclusive judicial admissions; and his "informal notification to the opposing party of a change in case theory" did not obviate their conclusive effect (103 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1274) .

In Jahn v. Brickey (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 399, 214 Cal. Rptr. 119 , plaintiff initially admitted the validity of his signature on certain documents, then sought to amend the responses and deny the validity of his signature on some of the documents, on the ground that he discovered during trial that some of the signatures were forged. The trial court granted the motion, and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding, inter alia, that the trial court had not abused its discretion in permitting amendment of plaintiff's responses to the requests for admissions, because the responding party demonstrated good cause therefor, and the requesting party failed to show legally cognizable prejudice (168 Cal. App. 3d 399, 405, 409) .

Note

that Jahn was decided before the 1986 repeal and reenactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 2033. The motion for relief in Jahn was brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, which provides general relief from judgments on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.300, codifying in part the holding in Jahn, now specifically allows withdrawal and amendment of responses on the grounds of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, thereby superseding the general statute with respect to responses to requests for admission.

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER _____ [specify responding party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] TO PAY THE REASONABLE EXPENSES INCURRED BY _____ [specify propounding party, e.g., DEFENDANT] IN PROVING _____ [THE GENUINENESS OF A DOCUMENT and/or THE TRUTH OF MATTERS] THAT _____ [specify responding party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] REFUSED TO ADMIT WHEN REQUESTED TO DO SO.

A. Payment of Expenses. If a party fails to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter when requested to do so under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2033.010 et seq., and if the party requesting that admission thereafter proves the genuineness of that document or the truth of that matter, the party requesting the admission may move the court for an order requiring the party to whom the request was directed to pay the reasonable expenses incurred in making that proof, including reasonable attorney's fees (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420(a)).

B. Order Required in Absence of Specific Conditions. The court should make the order unless it finds that (1) an objection to the request was sustained or a response to it was waived under Code of Civil Procedure Section 2033.290; (2) the admission sought was of no substantial importance; (3) the party failing to make the admission had reasonable ground to believe that that party would prevail on the matter; or (4) there was other good reason for the failure to admit (Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420(b)).

[Optional] C. Only Expenses Incurred in Proving Matters Denied by Opposing Party Are Recoverable. A party may recover only expenses incurred in proving the matters denied by the opposing party, and not expenses incurred in trial preparation prior to the opposing party's denial of admission requests (*Wimberly v. [Optional] D. Substantial Importance of Requested Admission. A requested admission is of substantial importance when the matter requested for admission is central to disposition of the case (Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 634-635, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532 ; see Brooks v. American Broadcasting Co. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 500, 509, 224 Cal. Rptr. 838).

[Optional] E. Denial Given for Delaying Purposes. When the respondent to requests for admission files false denials as part of a course of conduct for the purpose of delay, the award of expenses incurred to prove the truth of the subject matter of the request is appropriate (see Hillman v. Stults (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 848, 883, 888, 70 Cal. Rptr. 295).

[Optional] F. Standing to Recover Expenses. A party need not be the prevailing party in the action in order to recover expenses incurred in making proof of the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter after the responding party failed to do so when requested (see *Smith v. [A] Use of Form

These points and authorities are for use in support of a motion by a party who proved the genuineness of documents or the truth of matters that the opposing party failed to admit when requested to so, to seek an order requiring the opposing party to pay the costs of proof [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420]. Since the motion seeks reimbursement of costs of proof, it is typically made after trial [see, e.g., Smith v. Circle P Ranch Co. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 271, 150 Cal. Rptr. 828 (discussed in [3][d], below)].

The expenses imposed by Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420 are awarded only against the party, and not against the attorney who advises that party [compare Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a)]. In addition, a party may recover only expenses incurred in proving the matters denied by the opposing party, and not expenses incurred in trial preparation prior to the opposing party's denial of admission requests [Garcia v. Hyster Co. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 724, 736-737, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 (discussed in [3][a], below)].

Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(c) required the moving party to show, inter alia, that the admissions sought were of substantial importance. Note that under Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420, the order is mandatory absent a finding that for each request in issue (1) an objection was sustained or response was waived; (2) the admission sought was not substantially important; (3) the responding party had reasonable ground to believe it would prevail on that matter, or (4) there was good cause for the failure to admit [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420(b)]. Consequently, the moving party in a motion for expenses need not show a lack of substantial importance unless the responding party opposes the motion on that ground [see § 86.61]. However, counsel may wish to discuss facts showing the absence of the circumstances enumerated above. For convenience of counsel, Optional Paragraph D has been included for guidance regarding the issue of substantial importance.

Note that some of the cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 86.61 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Only Expenses Incurred in Proving Matters Denied by Opposing Party Are Recoverable

Stull v. Sparrow (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 860, 866, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 239 arose from a traffic accident. Plaintiff served defendants, owners and driver of the vehicle involved in the accident, several requests for admissions of liability. Immediately before trial, defendants admitted fault for the accident. A jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Plaintiff then moved for expenses incurred in proving matters that defendants did not admit, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420). The trial court denied the motion, holding that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) did not authorize the requested order because plaintiff did not prove the truth of the matters that were not admitted. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal panel affirmed the trial court's order denying plaintiff's motion for costs. The purpose of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420) is to expedite trial. "Proof" for purposes of the statute is "the establishment of a fact in the mind of a judge or jury by way of evidence" (92 Cal. App. 4th 860, 865) . Defendants' admission of liability before the trial obviated the need for plaintiff to produce any proof on that element of her case and served the purpose of the statute by expediting the trial (92 Cal. App. 4th 860, 865) . Plaintiff, in this case, merely prepared to offer proof of liability. Because plaintiff did not put on any evidence regarding defendants' liability, whether she would have been able to prove liability was "pure speculation" (92 Cal. App. 4th 860, 865) . Accordingly, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in determining that plaintiff was not entitled to an order of costs and fees under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420) on the ground that the issue had not been proved (92 Cal. App. 4th 860, 866) .

The facts and procedural background of Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532 are discussed in [b], below. In Wimberly, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denialof plaintiff's motion for expenses incurred in proving the matters denied by defendant. The court remanded the matter to the trial court for its determination of an appropriate cost award, noting that plaintiff's request appeared to include expenses incurred before defendant denied the requests for admission. It said that the award may only include expenses incurred in proving matters denied; it may not include expenses incurred before the request for admission was denied (56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 638) .

In Garcia v. Hyster Co. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 724, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 283 , plaintiffs sought damages for injuries and medical expenses, lost earnings, and loss of consortium resulting from the use of equipment designed and manufactured by defendant. Additionally, plaintiff-in-intervention/appellant, an insurance company, sought reimbursement for workers' compensation benefits it paid to plaintiff as a result of defendant's negligence, as well as reasonable litigation expenses and attorney's fees. Defendant served on the insurance company a request for admissions regarding the employer's negligence and the extent of the employee's resulting damages. The insurance company denied all the requests. Subsequently, defendant obtained nonsuit on the insurance company's complaint in intervention, then moved for an award of costs and attorney's fees, including fees and costs incurred before the insurance company's denial of the admission requests. Based solely on the declarations of defendant's counsel, the lower court granted the motion in the amount requested by defendant.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded, holding that a party may recover only expenses incurred in proving the matters denied by the opposing party, and not expenses incurred in trial preparation prior to the opposing party's denial of admission requests (28 Cal. App. 4th 724, 736-738) .

[b] Substantial Importance of Requested Admission

In Wimberly v. Derby Cycle Corp. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 532 , after the fork assembly on his mountain bike broke and he sustained grievous injuries, plaintiff brought suit for several causes of action, including strict product liability, against various defendants. In the strict liability action against defendant, plaintiff propounded requests for admissions seeking defendant's admissions that the product was defectively manufactured and that the defect was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Defendant denied those requests, but failed to produce any witness at trial regarding those issues. Plaintiff prevailed on those issues, and sought an award of the expenses incurred in making such proof. When the trial court denied that motion, plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed that order, and remanded for redetermination, finding that the trial court had abused its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for expenses (56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 638) . The courtreviewed the circumstances under which an award for payment of expenses of proof under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420) is appropriate. It said that a request for admission will be of substantial importance when the subject of the matter requested for admission has at least some direct relationship to one of the central issues in the case. A central issue in the case is one that, if not proven, would have altered the results in the case (56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 634-635) . The court observed that it was obvious that plaintiff's requests for admissions that the product was defectively manufactured and that the defect was a proximate cause of his injuries involved issues of substantial importance in a product liability action. Thus, when defendant denied those requests, but failed to produce any witness at trial regarding those issues, plaintiff should be awarded the expenses in proving those issues (56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 638) .

The court was not persuaded by defendant's claim that it had a reasonable belief that it could prevail on those issues, noting that defendant's misunderstanding of the law regarding testimony of experts did not provide reasonable grounds for denying the admissions (56 Cal. App. 4th 618, 638) .

Brooks v. American Broadcasting Co. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 500, 224 Cal. Rptr. 838 was an action for damages for personal injuries suffered in a motor vehicle accident by the driver of a truck/semitrailer rig. Plaintiff contended that he was forced to swerve off the highway to avoid defendants' oncoming bus, which was over the centerline of the road in his lane. The Highway Patrol report had concluded that plaintiff's truck had to have been over the centerline of the road because of the tire marks it had made on the pavement. Defendants served plaintiff with requests for admission, including the admission that his rig was a certain number of feet in the bus's lane of the highway at a certain point from its final location. Plaintiff denied the fact. At trial, defendants introduced evidence proving the fact, and plaintiff's counsel did not dispute it. The jury returned a special verdict finding that defendants were not negligent. Implicit in the jury's verdict was its finding that plaintiff's rig, and not the bus, was over the centerline. The trial court granted defendants' motion for an order awarding them reasonable expenses incurred in proving the fact. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, including the order awarding defendants reasonable expenses incurred in proving the matter denied. With regard to whether an issue is of substantial importance, the court noted that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420) was derived from former Fed. R. Civ. Proc., Rule 37(c). The court approved of the federal courts' general view that an issue is substantially important when it is central to the disposition of the case (179 Cal. App. 3d 500, 508-509) . The location of the truck was a central issue because plaintiff alleged that his swerving to miss the oncoming buscaused the accident. The trial court was therefore well within its discretion in determining that the requested admission was of substantial importance (179 Cal. App. 3d 500, 511-512) .

Note that expenses were allowed under the former statute only after the responding party wrongfully served "a sworn denial." Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420(a) now provides recovery of expenses if a party "fails to admit the genuineness of any document or the truth of any matter," i.e., on all unjustified failures to admit, and not only after sworn denials [see Reporter's Notes to the Proposed California Civil Discovery Act of 1986, Note to § 2033(o)].

[c] Denial Given for Delaying Purposes

In Hillman v. Stults (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 848, 70 Cal. Rptr. 295 , plaintiff brought an action against his relative (and later the administrator of her estate), to establish the existence of a trust and require an accounting. Plaintiff had transferred his property to his relative in trust at the time of his incarceration. Before trial, plaintiff propounded requests for admission concerning the genuineness of certain documents, e.g., the initial trust letter allegedly signed by his relative, and concerning various matters of fact. Defendants denied both the truth of the facts and the genuineness of the documents. Plaintiff prevailed at trial and also prevailed on his motion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(c) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420) to recover the costs of proof of matters that defendants had wrongfully denied. The trial court noted that the totally unjustified denials were part of a continuing course of conduct by defendants to delay the course of the litigation and to force plaintiff to settle. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, modifying the amount of sanctions. The award of sanctions was proper because defendants' denials were dilatory and evasive and resulted in both an obstruction of justice and a depletion of the trust property (263 Cal. App. 2d 848, 883-885) . Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034 does not provide for penalties, but for reimbursement of expenses for going to trial as a result of the unfounded and unjustified denials. The trial court properly awarded reimbursement or compensation (263 Cal. App. 2d 848, 884) .

[d] Standing to Recover Expenses

In Smith v. Circle P Ranch Co. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 150 Cal. Rptr. 828 , a personal injury action, the jury returned a special verdict of lack of negligence against certain defendants, and a general verdict for plaintiff against the remaining defendants. Plaintiff moved for an award against all defendants of expenses of proof for wrongful denial of requests for admission. The trial court granted the motion only in regard to the prevailing defendants, who appealed on the ground that the trial court erred in imposing expenses on a prevailing party.

The court of appeal reversed the order imposing sanctions because the dollar amount was erroneously calculated, and remanded the matter for redetermination regarding expenses and attorney's fees (87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 279-280) [see discussion in § 86.61[3][b]]. With regard to the issue of awarding sanctions against a prevailing party, however, the court held that the burden of proof on negligence is not coextensive with the showing required to prevail on a motion under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(c) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420). A party may prevail in the case in chief, while still contravening the admissions statutes by denying matters of substantial importance without any good reasons. One need not be a prevailing party to recover expenses of proof (87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 274-275) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use by a party on whom requests for admission have been served, but who failed to serve timely response to them, to obtain an order for relief from waiver of the right to object to the requests [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280]. If the propounding party has served a notice of motion to compel response and for a monetary sanction, counsel should set the motion for relief from waiver for hearing either prior to or concurrent with the propounding party's motion.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[c] Grounds for Relief

The grounds for relief from waiver under Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280 are similar to some of the grounds for relief from default judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b), i.e., that the party's failure to serve a timely response to the requests was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. Counsel may wish to use authority supporting a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 473(b) that interprets those grounds, bearing in mind that Code Civ. Proc. § 473 allows relief under the additional ground of surprise. For memoranda of points and authorities regarding relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, see Ch. 70, Defaults, Default Judgments, and Relief From Judgments and Orders .

A. Admission Should Not Be Deemed When Substantially Complying Response Is Served. A motion to have the genuineness of any documents and the truth of any matters specified in the request for admission deemed admitted should not be granted when (1) proposed responses to the requests are served before the hearing date and (2) those responses are in substantial compliance with Code of Civil Procedure Sections 2033.210-2033.240 (Tobin v. Oris (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 828, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 736 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727).

B. Admission Should Not Be Deemed Automatically When Responses Are Verified by Defendant's Counsel Because Defendant Cannot Be Located. A motion to have the genuineness of any documents and the truth of any matters specified in the requests for admission deemed admitted should not be granted automatically when the responses were verified by defendant's counsel because the defendant could not be located (Brigante v. Huang (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1582-1588, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354 , disapproved on other grounds in *Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion for an order for that the genuineness of any documents and the truth of any matters specified in the request for admission be deemed admitted [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280].

In an appropriate case, the foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 86.50.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general discussion and forms relating to deemed admissions to requests for admission, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 196, Discovery: Requests for Admissions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Admission Should Not Be Deemed When Substantially Complying Response Is Served

In Tobin v. Oris (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 736 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , plaintiff filed a complaint for property damage against defendants. After defendants failed to respond in a timely fashion to plaintiff's request for admissions, plaintiff moved to have the requests deemed admitted. Defendants opposed the motion, and served proposed responses to the requests. After the hearing on the motion the trial court ordered that the requests be deemed admitted. Plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment based entirely on the matters deemed admitted. The trial court granted the motion and entered judgment accordingly. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It said that the obvious implication of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280) is that when a proposed response is served prior to the hearing on a motion to deem admissions and there is no finding that the substantial compliance requirement has not been met, then the motion may not be granted. Thus, a motion to have admission requests deemed admitted may not be granted when the record establishes that (1) proposed responses to the requests have been served prior to the hearing date, and (2) those responses are in substantial compliance with former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(f)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2033.220-2033.240), which governs the form and content of the responses (3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 827-828) . Plaintiff had received defendants' responses over 30 days prior to the hearing. Although it criticized the proposed responses, characterizing them as unintelligible, and faulting them for not originally including signed verifications and containing errors in the proof of service, the trial court did not make any finding that the responses were not in substantial compliance. After examining the record, the court of appeal said that essentially all of the responses were in substantial, if not literal, compliance. That some of the responses were less than clear or complete did not change that conclusion. Thus, the trial court erred in granting the motion for deemed admissions (3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 827) . Moreover, the summary judgment, based on the deemed admissions, was also in error (3 Cal. App. 4th 814, 829) .

[b] Admission Should Not Be Deemed Automatically When Responses Are Verified by Defendant's Counsel Because Defendant Cannot Be Located

In Brigante v. Huang (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 354 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , the reviewing court held that if responses to requests for admission are verified by defendant's counsel because the defendant cannot be located, a court should not automatically deem all of the requests to be admitted without exercising its discretion to determine whether a less drastic remedy is appropriate. In such a case, the court has the power to fashion a remedy that will do justice, such as deeming only some requests admitted or relieving the defense from admitting or denying requests on a showing of efforts made to locate the defendant (20 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1583) . Thus, in a personal injury action involving a defendant who could not be located, when the complaint had been served by publication, and defendant's insurer had assigned counsel to represent defendant, the trial court erred in deeming all of plaintiff's requests for admissions to be admitted, thereby establishing plaintiff's entire case, including $500,000 damages, for purposes of summary judgment (20 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1571-1572) . On plaintiff's motion to have his or her requests for admissions deemed admitted on the ground that defendant's counsel, rather than defendant, verified the responses, defendant's counsel adequately raised the issue of oppression by opposing plaintiff's motion, and need not have filed a separate motion for a protective order (20 Cal. App. 4th 1569, 1585-1586) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Admission Should Not Be Deemed When Substantially Complying Response Is Served

In Demyer v. Costa Mesa Mobile Home Estates (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 393, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260 , disapproved on other grounds in Wilcox v. Birtwhistle (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 973, 983 n.12, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 260, 267, 987 P.2d 727 , residents sued mobilehome park owners. Three defendants served requests for admissions on each plaintiff. Plaintiff's counsel missed the deadline for response to the requests. Defendants filed a motion to deem certain matters admitted. The discovery referee shortened the time for the hearing. Plaintiffs served proposed responses to the requests for admissions after the shortened time, but before the time the hearing would have been scheduled absent the shortening of time. The referee recommended that the motion to deem the matters admitted be granted, and the trial court confirmed the decision and subsequently granted summary judgment for defendants.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. Under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(k) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.280), the trial court must order that requests for admission be deemed admitted unless the party to whom the requests have been directed has served a proposed response before the hearing on the motion. The court of appeal concluded that a "hearing on the motion" does not include a hearing on shortened time (36 Cal. App.4th 393, 399-400) . Because plaintiffs served their responses within 20 days of the notice of the motion to deem matters admitted, the trial court had to deny the motion. Thus, the summary judgment motion, which was predicated on the admission, was reversed (36 Cal. App. 4th 393, 402-403) .

A. Grounds for Denial of Order. The court may deny an order requiring the responding party to pay expenses incurred in making proof of a matter not admitted if (1) an objection to the request was sustained or a response to it was waived under Section 2033.290 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) the admission sought was of no substantial importance; (3) the party failing to make the admissionhad reasonable ground to believe that that party would prevail on the matter; or (4) there was other good reason for the failure to admit (*Code Civ. [Optional] B. Good Reason for Failure to Admit. If the party failing to admit the request for admissions has good cause in that the issues that were presented by the requested admissions were strenuously contested and difficult to resolve, the party propounding the requests may not recover the statutory costs of proving the truth of the matters therein, even if the matters were eventually proved to be true by uncontroverted evidence (see Haseltine v. Haseltine (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 48, 60-61, 21 Cal. Rptr. 238).

[Optional] C. [Optional] D. Moving Party Must Prove Truth of Matters. Expenses are recoverable under *Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion for an order awarding expenses of proof against the party that denied requested admissions that were subsequently proved to be true [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420; see also § 86.52[2][a]].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 86.52.

Note that some of the cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussedas persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 86.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, if appropriate, counsel should discuss facts showing that responding party had reasonable ground to believe that he or she would prevail in the matter.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general discussion and forms relating to expenses of proof of matters that were denied, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 196, Discovery: Requests for Admissions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Reason for Failure to Admit

In Haseltine v. Haseltine (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 48, 21 Cal. Rptr. 238 , an action for divorce and property division, defendant husband submitted requests for admissions to plaintiff wife. Plaintiff admitted the truth of a few of the requests and denied the remainder. After the matters involved in some of the denied requests were proved true at trial, defendant moved for an order awarding him the expenses of proof pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(c) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420). The trial court denied defendant's motion on the ground that good cause existed for the denials and ultimately awarded plaintiff a divorce decree. Defendant appealed from that portion of the judgment regarding money and property distribution on the ground, inter alia, that his motion for expenses of proof was improperly denied.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding, inter alia, that the trial court acted within its discretion in finding that good cause existed for denials of the disputed requests for admission (203 Cal. App. 2d 48, 60) . The fact that matters denied were subsequently proved by uncontradicted evidence does not make the denial unreasonable per se in retrospect (203 Cal. App. 2d 48, 61) . Denial of a motion for expenses of proof is appropriate when, as in the instant case, the responding party did not have access to all the necessary facts; and the key issues embodied in the requests for admissions were hotly contested and difficult to resolve (203 Cal. App. 2d 48, 60-61) [see also dicta in Chodos v. Superior Court (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 318, 324, 30 Cal. Rptr. 303 ; Hillman v. Stults (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 848, 886, 70 Cal. Rptr. 295 ("good cause" synonymous with whether issues were strenuously contested and difficult to resolve; discussed for another issue in § 86.52[3][c])].

Note that the above holding in Haseltine was criticized by the court in Brooks v. American Broadcasting Co. (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 500, 511, 224 Cal. Rptr. 838 (discussed for another issue in § 86.52[3][b]). In Brooks, the court of appeal listed factors relevant to whether a party had good reasons to deny a request for admission and disagreed with "the suggestion" in Haseltine that "it is enough for the party making the denial to 'hotly contest' the issue." However, as can be seen from the discussion in this form, Haseltine did not hold that it was enough to justify a denial that the issue be hotly contested. Haseltine required two conditions: that the issues be (1) hotly contested, and (2) difficult to resolve. Moreover, in Haseltine, the responding party did not have access to all of the facts necessary to answer the questions. In Brooks, although the plaintiff denied a substantially important requested admission, plaintiff had ignored the accident report, which stated as a fact the matter sought to be admitted; the issue was not hotly contested at trial; and plaintiff's counsel did not contest the issue at all (179 Cal. App. 3d 500, 512) . Finally, note that neither case involved a reversal but, rather, an affirmance of the order under review.

[b] Limitation on Amount of Recoverable Expenses

The facts and procedural background of Smith v. Circle P Ranch Co. (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 150 Cal. Rptr. 828 are discussed in § 86.52[3][d]. In Smith, the court of appeal held that one need not be a prevailing party in order to recover expenses of proof (87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 274-275) . Plaintiff had requested expenses in the amount of $61,000 against all defendants. The trial court granted plaintiff's request against only the prevailing defendants, in the amount of $30,500, apparently by dividing the amount requested in half. The court of appeal noted that it was not reasonable simply to divide the requested amount in half to arrive at the portion attributable to the defendants against whom sanctions were warranted, because the amount of the sanctions must bear a reasonable relationship to the costs incurred in proving matters that were wrongfully denied (87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 279 n.4). The amount that may properly be assessed as sanctions is limited to those fees and expenses related to a particular abuse of discovery; there may be no assessment for expenses that are unrelated to the specific grounds of the motion before the court (87 Cal. App. 3d 267, 279) .

[c] Moving Party Must Prove Truth of Matters

In Wagy v. Brown (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 48 , a personal injury action that was the subject of judicial arbitration, the arbitrator awarded damages to the plaintiff and ordered the parties to bear their own costs. Neither party requested a trial de novo, and a judgment was entered on the award. Thereafter, plaintiff filed a motion for attorney's fees pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc.§ 2033.420) based on the defendants' denial of a request for admission that they were negligent. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion.

The court of appeal reversed holding that the plaintiff was not entitled to an award of expenses under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2033(o) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2033.420) based on the defendants' denial of a request for admission that they were negligent. The defendants had subsequently admitted, for purposes of arbitration only, that they were negligent, which obviated the necessity for proof on that issue. Thus, the attorney's fees paid by the plaintiff in preparation for trial or arbitration were not incurred to prove the truth of the defendant's negligence so as to authorize an award of attorney's fees under former Section 2033(o). Expenses are recoverable under that section only if the party requesting the admission "proves" the truth of the matter, not if the party merely prepares to do so (24 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-6) .

CHAPTER 87 DISCOVERY: PHYSICAL AND MENTAL EXAMINATIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

8-87 California Points & Authorities § 87.02

§ 87.02 Governing Law

[1] California Civil Discovery Act and Related Law

Civil discovery in California is governed primarily by the California Civil Discovery Act, codified at Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016.010 et seq.-2036.010 et seq. Discovery in limited civil cases is further governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 94 and 95. Statewide rules of court relating to discovery papers and discovery motions are set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1000, 3.1345, 3.1346, 3.1347, and 3.1348.

[2] Provisions Governing Demands for Physical or Mental Examinations

Civil discovery by requests to a party for admissions is governed primarily by Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq. Physical or mental examinations under this code section are authorized in limited civil cases under Code Civ. Proc. § 94(d).

Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq. does not affect tests under the Uniform Act on Blood Tests to Determine Paternity (Fam. Code § 7550 et seq.) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010(a)].

[3] Case Law Decided Under Prior Discovery Acts

The Civil Discovery Act was passed in 2004 and became effective July 1, 2005. It repealed and renumbered the Civil Discovery Act of 1986 but did not substantively change the law of civil discovery [Stats. 2004, ch. 182 §§ 22, 23, 61]. Thus cases decided under the 1986 Act remain controlling authority.

A considerable body of case law interpreted the discovery provisions of the Discovery Act of 1956 (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2016-2037.9), which preceded the 1986 Act. Although the 1986 Act, which became operative July 1,1987, implemented numerous changes in the prior law, it also continued provisions of the prior law in many other instances, or even codified decisions interpreting the prior law. Decisions construing this prior law are therefore cited as persuasive, rather than controlling, authority to the extent that they are consistent with current provisions [see In re Marriage of Skelley (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 365, 369, 134 Cal. Rptr. 197, 556 P.2d 297] .

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda filed in discovery motion proceedings may not exceed 15 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, the table of contents, the table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a particular type of discovery motion, such as motion to compel discovery or a motion for a protective order.

In many cases it will be appropriate to combine them with additional memoranda set out in the related discovery chapters. In particular, they may be combined with the general points and authorities for limiting or regulating discovery set out in Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing , or with the points and authorities for limiting discovery based on the evidentiary privileges, work product protection, or other protective provisions found in Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

It may also be appropriate to modify the points and authorities in this chapter for use in a different procedural context, such as in a trial or appellate brief or office memoranda relating to discovery practice.

For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[EITHER, if plaintiff has not filed any response]

A. Defendant May Move for Order Compelling Response and Compliance. A defendant may make a motion for an order compelling response and compliance with a demand for physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff to whom demand for physical examination under Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure has been directed if that plaintiff fails to serve a timely response to the demand (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240(b)).

B. Plaintiff May Not Object to Demand. By failing to serve a timely response to a demand for physical examination under Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the personal injury plaintiff to whom the demand was directed waives any objection to the demand (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240(a)).

The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel response and compliance with a demand for a physical examination, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2032.240(c)).

[Optional] D. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1030(a)).

[OR, if plaintiff has responded]

A. Defendant May Move for Order Compelling Compliance. A defendant may make a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by it, for an order compelling compliance with a demand for a physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff, when the defendant has demanded the examination pursuant to Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the plaintiff's response to the demand includes a [modification of the demand and/or refusal to submit to the examination] that is unwarranted (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.250(a)).

[Optional] B. Physical Examination May Be Ordered When It Is Not Painful, Protracted, or Intrusive. A physical examination may be ordered when it does not involve a procedure that is painful, protracted, or intrusive. For example, when a procedure is necessary to make a medical determination of the etiology of a condition, and involves little cosmetic damage, and minimal painand risks, that procedure is not painful, protracted, or intrusive (Abex Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 755, 757-758, 257 Cal. Rptr. 498 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(a)(1)).

C. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion by defendant for an order compelling response to and/or compliance with a demand for a physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2032.240 (response and compliance), 2032.250 (compliance)]. If the plaintiff has responded and defendant seeks only an order for compliance, the motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.250(a)].

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing either that plaintiff never responded or how and why the modification or refusal to submit to the demand for examination contained in the plaintiff's response is unwarranted, and otherwise show substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that plaintiff acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2032.240(c) and 2032.250(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] General Procedures for Examination of Personal Injury Plaintiff

Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220 provides a new procedure for obtaining one physical examination, on demand and without a court order, of a plaintiff who seeks recovery for personal injury. Former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) required a court order on a showing of good cause for all physical examinations. Counsel should note that in lieu of the procedures and restrictions specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220, the physical examination may be arranged by and carried out under a written agreement of the parties [Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.030].

Specifically, any defendant may demand one physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff, provided the examination does not include any diagnostic test or procedure that is painful, protracted, or intrusive, and is conducted at a location within 75 miles of the residence of the examinee. The defendant may make the demand without leave of court after the defendant has been served or has appeared in the action, whichever occurs first. The demand is required to specify the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination, and the identity and specialty, if any, of the physician who will perform the examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(a)-(c)]. The demand must be scheduled for a date that is at least 30 days after service of the demand, with certain extensions of time when service is by mail, unless shortened by the court on motion of the demanding defendant [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(d); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(a) (requirements for service by mail; extensions of time); Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(c), (e) (requirements for service by Express Mail or fax; extensions of time); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.050 (service generally)]. The demand is served on the plaintiff and on all other parties who have appeared in the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(e)]. The demand is not filed with the court, but is retained by the demanding defendant [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.260].

The plaintiff to whom the demand is directed is required to respond to the demand by a written statement that he or she (1) will comply with the demand as stated, (2) will comply with the demand as specifically modified by the plaintiff, or (3) will refuse, for reasons specified, to submit to the demand. The responsemust be served on all parties who have appeared in the action within 20 days after service of the demand, with certain extensions of time when service is by mail [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1013(a), 2016.050; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(c), (e) (service by Express Mail or fax)], unless extended by the court on motion by the plaintiff [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.230].

If a plaintiff to whom the demand for physical examination has been directed fails to respond to it, that plaintiff waives any objection to the demand, and the defendant may move for an order compelling response and compliance. However, the court, on motion, may relieve the plaintiff of the waiver, in the circumstances discussed in § 87.20 [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240(a)].

[e] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the memorandum set out in § 87.20 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Physical Examination May Be Ordered When It Is Not Painful, Protracted, or Intrusive

In Abex Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 755, 257 Cal. Rptr. 498 , a personal injury action alleging asbestos skin disease, plaintiff refused to permit an histopathologic examination, or biopsy, of the warts scattered over his hands, claiming that the procedure was painful, protracted, and intrusive. Defendants' dermatologist had performed a visual examination of plaintiff's warts, and concluded that they were ordinary viral warts, but a biopsy was necessary to be certain. The trial court denied defendants' motion to compel the biopsy and imposed sanctions in the form of reasonable attorney's fees against defendants. Defendants filed a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion and imposing sanctions. The court pointed out that when defendants filed their motion, they included a dermatologist's declaration stating that the procedure was necessary to determine the warts' etiology, and that there would be little cosmetic damage, and minimal pain and risks. Also, plaintiff did not provide any documentation regarding the danger or the discomfort of the proposed biopsy, and in fact, had himself scraped warts off with a pocket knife, essentially the same procedure that defendants sought to compel. The court concluded that to believe that the procedure qualified as being painful, protracted, or intrusive, within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(c)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(a)(1)) strained credulity past the breaking point (209 Cal. App. 3d 755, 757-758) .

THE COURT SHOULD ORDER THE _____ [PHYSICAL or MENTAL] EXAMINATION OF [_____ (AN AGENT OF or A NATURAL PERSON IN THE CUSTODY OR UNDER THE LEGAL CONTROL OF)] _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE GOOD CAUSE HAS BEEN SHOWN AND THE _____ [PHYSICAL or MENTAL] CONDITION OF THAT _____ [PARTY or PERSON] IS IN CONTROVERSY IN THE ACTION.

A. Court May Order Examination. On noticed motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt to arrange for the examination by an agreement under Section 2016.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and for good cause shown, the court may order the _____ [physical or mental] examination of [_____ (an agent of or a natural person in the custody or under the legal control of)] a party to an action in which the _____ [physical or mental] condition[, including the blood group], of that _____ [party or person] is in controversy in the action (*Code Civ. B. Condition in Controversy Is Not Raised by Pleadings. When a party's _____ [physical or mental] condition is sought to be placed in issue and the pleadings have not placed the condition in controversy, the party seeking the examination must produce sufficient information to show that the condition is in controversy, but the moving party need not prove his or her case on the merits and an evidentiary hearing is not required to be held by the court in all cases, since the showing of a condition in controversy can be made by affidavits or other usual methods short of a formal hearing (see Schlagenhauf v. Holder (1964) 379 U.S. 104, 119-120, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (interpreting Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 35).

[Optional] E. More Than One Examination May Be Ordered. There is nothing in the language of Code of Civil Procedure Section 2032.010 et seq. that expressly limits the number of mental or physical examinations. When good cause is shown, multiple defense examinations of the personal injury plaintiff may be permitted (*see Shapira v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1249, 1254-1256, 274 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion by a party seeking a physical or mental examination of another party, an agent of that party, or person in the custody or under the legal control of that party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a), (d)]. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt to arrange for the examination by an agreement under Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.030 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020(a); see also Ch. 80, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing, § 80.80 (discovery to be limited when intrusiveness or burden outweighs likelihood that admissible evidence will be discovered)].

This motion procedure is unnecessary if defendant is seeking a physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff. Under these circumstances, defendant should serve a demand for the physical examination on plaintiff, rather than move the court for an order [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220]. For further discussion, see § 87.10.

Note that some of the cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 87.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing good cause for the examination, or exceptional circumstances if a mental examination of a personal injury plaintiff who has made certain stipulations is sought, and that the physical or mental condition of the person to be examined is in controversy. If the pleadings do not place the condition in controversy, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations to the court presenting facts that show that the person's condition is in controversy.

[c] General Procedures for Motion to Take Physical or Mental Examination

The motion for examination is required to specify the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination, and the identity and the specialty, if any, of the person or persons who will perform the examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.310(b)]. A physical examination must be performed only by a licensed physician or other appropriate licensed health care practitioner; a mental examination must be performed only by a licensed physician, or by a licensed clinical psychologist who holds a doctoral degree in psychology and has had at least five years of postgraduate experience in the diagnosis of emotional and mental disorders [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(b), (c)].

The order granting a physical or mental examination must specify the person or persons who may perform the examination, and the time, place, manner, diagnostic tests and procedures, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320(d)].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion related to demands for physical and mental examinations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 197, Discovery: Physical and Mental Examinations (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Condition in Controversy Is Raised by Pleadings

In Reuter v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 155 Cal. Rptr. 525 , a mother brought an action on behalf of herself and her son for damages sustained in an automobile accident in which her husband, the son's father, was killed. She sued in the capacity of guardian ad litem for her son in his cause of action for personal injuries, individually for the wrongful death of her husband [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 et seq.], and as executrix of her husband's estate [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 377.20 et seq.]. The trial court granted defendant's motion for an order pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.310] compelling the mother and son to submit to a battery of psychological tests administered by a psychologist and interviews with a child psychiatrist. Plaintiff petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate on the grounds that a psychologist was not included in the statutory term "physician" in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 [but now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(c)], providing that mental examination shall be performed only by licensed physician or licensed clinical psychologist with certain qualifications] and that the mother's mental state was not in controversy as required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.

In issuing a writ requiring the trial court to modify its order requiring the mother to submit to psychological tests, the court of appeal said that there was no doubt that the son's mental condition was in controversy, since the condition was placed in controversy by the son's complaint, which alleged that he suffered great mental pain and suffering as a result of the accident (93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 340) [but now compare Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320(b), requiring showing of exceptional circumstances for ordering mental examination of personal injury plaintiff who has made certain stipulations regarding mental and emotional distress damages claim]. Citing Schlagenhauf v. Holder (1964) 379 U.S. 104, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 (discussed below), which interpreted Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 35, on which former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 was originally based, the court stated that allegations of physical or mental injury in a complaint and a denial of the injury or the extent of such injury places a party's condition in controversy. However, for a party's condition to be in controversy, the court said, the condition need not be first raised in the pleadings and may be placed in controversy in ways other than through the pleadings (93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 341) .

In Schlagenhauf v. Holder (1964) 379 U.S. 104, 85 S. Ct. 234, 13 L. Ed. 2d 152 , the United States Supreme Court interpreted the meaning of "condition in controversy" as stated by Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 35, on which former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 [see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a)] was based. The case involved an action, brought by bus passengers who were injured when the bus in which they were riding rear-ended a tractor-trailer, against the bus company, the bus driver, the tractor-trailer owners, and the tractor driver. The tractor-trailer owners requested, and the district court granted, without a hearing, a motion for examination of the bus driver by specialists in internal medicine, ophthalmology, neurology, and psychiatry. The order rested on allegations in a cross complaint that the bus driver was not mentally or physically capable of driving the bus because the bus driver's eyes and vision were impaired and deficient. The bus driver's appeal to the court of appeal was denied.

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari, and reversed and remanded the case. The reversal was based, in part, on the fact that no showing had been made of the bus driver's physical or mental condition, or of good cause for the examination as required by Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 35. The Court stated that Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 35 requires discriminating application by the trial judge, who must decide, as an initial matter in every case, whether the party requesting a mental or physical examination has adequately demonstrated the existence of the Rule's "in controversy" and "good cause" requirements, which are necessarily related. This does not mean that the party requesting the examinations must prove his or her case on the merits in order to meet the requirements for a mental or physical examination. It also does not mean that an evidentiary hearing is required in all cases. The Court said that such a hearing may be necessary in some cases, but in other cases the showing could be made by affidavits or other usual methods short of a formal hearing. However, it does mean that the party requesting the examination must produce sufficient information, by whatever means, so that a trial judge can fulfill his or her function mandated by the Rule to prove a condition is in controversy. The Court stated that there are situations in which the pleadings alone are sufficient to meet these requirements in showing that the condition is "in controversy." For instance, a plaintiff in a negligence action who asserts mental or physical injury in the complaint places that mental or physical injury clearly in controversy and provides the defendant with good cause for an examination to determine the existence and extent of such asserted injury. This applies equally to a defendant who asserts his mental or physical condition as a defense to an action, where, for example, insanity is asserted as a defense to the action (379 U.S. 104, 118-119) .

[b] Condition in Controversy Is Not Raised by Pleadings

[c] More Than One Examination May Be Ordered

In Shapira v. Superior Court (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 1249, 274 Cal. Rptr. 516 , a dental malpractice action, plaintiff alleged organic brain damage due to the malpractice. Plaintiff submitted to two defense examinations: a physical examination by a neurologist and a mental examination by a neuropsychologist. When defendant requested an additional mental examination by a psychiatrist, plaintiff refused to cooperate, and defendant brought a motion to compel the examination. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220) provides only for one mental examination. Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to reconsider its denial of the motion. The court held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 does not restrict the number of mental examinations that may be ordered on a showing of good cause, and found that the trial court should have exercised its discretion to determine whether another examination was authorized by good cause. The court explained that there is nothing in the language of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 that expressly limits the number of mental or physical examinations. However, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320) provides that mental examinations and physical examinations, other than the initial one specific to a personal injury plaintiff, require leave of court based on a showing of good cause. The court reasoned that when good cause is shown, multiple defense examinations of the personal injury plaintiff may be permitted. Indeed, depending on the injury alleged by the plaintiff, multiple examinations by medical specialists in different fields pertinent to a plaintiff's injury may be very appropriate. The court cautioned that even though permissible, multiple examinations should not be ordered routinely. However, the court found that the potential for harassment of plaintiffs by repetitive examinations should be eliminated by the good-cause requirement. It also observed additional protection was afforded by the language in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a)) specifically subjecting examinations to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2019.010 et seq.), which provides for protective orders against discovery abuse (224 Cal. App. 3d 1249, 1255-1256) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Condition in Controversy Is Raised by Pleadings

In Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 , an action for damages for sexual harassment, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff placed her mental condition in issue by alleging ongoing mental and emotional distress (43 Cal. 3d 833, 839) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion by a party for sanctions for failure of another party to submit to or produce another for a physical examination, as required to do so by Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220, 2032.320, or 2016.030 [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2032.410, 2032.420]. For forms for motions for examinations, see §§ 87.10 and 87.11. For a form of memorandum in support of sanctions for failure of a personal injury plaintiff to obey an order requiring response to and/or compliance with a demand for physical examination under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240, see § 87.13.

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.]. If a monetary sanction is sought is addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, this form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel might wish to insert argument in favor of one particular type of sanction over another. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party against whom the monetary sanction is to be imposed acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2032.250(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion by a defendant in a personal injury action for sanctions against a plaintiff who failed to obey an order under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240 requiring him or her to respond to and comply with a demand for physical examination [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240(d)]. Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.410 also authorizes sanctions for failure to submit to a physical examination when required by Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220 to do so, but Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240(d) is the only authority for imposition of these sanctions for failure to obey the order requiring response to the demand [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.010(d), (g), 2032.240, 2032.410; see also § 87.12 regarding sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2032.410, 2032.420]. For forms for motions for response and examinations, see § 87.10.

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.]. If a monetary sanction is sought in addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, this form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer specifically to the order and the time provided for response or compliance. Counsel might wish to insert argument in favor of one particular type of sanction over another. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party against whom the monetary sanction is to be imposed acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) effectively places that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[EITHER, if no response was timely served]

A. Relief from Waiver. A personal injury plaintiff who has failed to file a timely response to a demand for a physical examination under Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure may be relieved by the court from the resulting waiver of any objections to the demand if the court, on motion, determines that the plaintiff has subsequently served a response that is in substantial compliance with Section 2032.230 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that plaintiff's failure to serve a timely response was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240(a)).

[AND/OR, if reasonableness of response is at issue]

B. Order Only if Response Unwarranted. A defendant may move for an order compelling compliance with a demand for examination under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220 only if the responding party's response to the demand has included _____ [modification of the demand for or a refusal to submit to] the examination that is unwarranted (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.250(a)).

[Optional] C. Motion Must Be Accompanied by Declaration. A defendant's motion for an order compelling compliance with a demand for examination under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220 must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by it (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.250(a)).

[Optional] D. Demand Must Be by Defendant for One Physical Examination of Personal Injury Plaintiff. The demand procedure of Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure may only be initiated by a defendant in a case in which a plaintiff is seeking recovery for personal injuries. The demand may only be made by the defendant on that plaintiff. The demand may only be made for one examination, which may only be a physical and not a mental examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(a)).

[Optional] E. Examination May Not Be Painful, Protracted, or Intrusive. A defendant may not demand a physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff pursuant to Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure if that examination includes any diagnostic test or procedure that is painful, protracted, or intrusive (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(a)(1)).

[Optional] F. Examination Must Be at Location Within 75 Miles of Residence of Examinee. A defendant may not demand a physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff pursuant to Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure if that examination is to be conducted at a location that is not within 75 miles of the residence of the examinee (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(a)(2)).

[Optional] G. Examination Must Be Ordered by Court or Agreed To by Parties. When a party desires to obtain discovery by a physical examination other than that described in Section 2032.220 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or by a mental examination, that party must either obtain leave of court pursuant to Section 2032.310 of the Code of Civil Procedure, or enter into a written agreement of the parties arranging the examination pursuant to Section 2016.030 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2032.310, 2016.030).

[Optional] H. Demand Must Specify Information. A demand for physical examination of a personal injury plaintiff pursuant to Section 2032.310 of the Code of Civil Procedure is required to specify the time, place, manner, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination, as well as the identity and the specialty, if any, of the physician who will perform the examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220(c)).

[Optional] I. Examination Must Be Conducted by Licensed Physician or Practitioner. A physical examination conducted pursuant to Section 2032.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be performed only by a licensed physician or other appropriate licensed health care practitioner (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(b)).

[Optional] J. Physical Condition Must Be in Controversy in Action. A defendant may not obtain discovery by means of a physical examination pursuant to Section 2032.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure unless the physical condition of that plaintiff is in controversy in the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a)).

K. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully makes a motion to compel [response and] compliance with a demand for a physical examination, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (*Code Civ. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in opposition to a motion for an order compelling response to and compliance with a demand for physical examination under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240 or, if a timely response has been filed, for an order compelling compliance with a demand for examination pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.250.

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 87.10.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing specific reasons justifying the modification or refusal to submit to the demand for examination, such as that the opposing party is not a personal injury plaintiff, that the examination will involve a painful and protracted procedure, or that the demand has not specified the identity of the physician to perform the examination. If no timely response was served, facts demonstrating that the late response was the result of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect must be set forth in order to reestablish plaintiff's right to object to the demand [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.240]. If the moving party is seeking monetary sanctions, counsel should demonstrate a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of the disputed issues. All these facts should help show that plaintiff party had substantial justification for his or her actions, or that a monetary sanction against plaintiff would be unjust. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the moving party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2032.240(c) and 2032.250(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Examiner's Qualifications

The physical examination must be performed only by a licensed physician or other appropriate licensed health care practitioner [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(b) (codifying and expanding holding in Reuter v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 338-339, 155 Cal. Rptr. 525 that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032's designation of "physician" meant only a person licensed as a physician and surgeon)].

THE COURT SHOULD NOT GRANT THE MOTION FOR _____ [PHYSICAL or MENTAL] EXAMINATION OF _____ [specify party or person, e.g., PLAINTIFF] BECAUSE THE MOVING PARTY HAS FAILED TO SHOW GOOD CAUSE [AND EXCEPTIONAL CIRCUMSTANCES][, AND HAS FAILED TO MEET OTHER STATUTORY REQUIREMENTS].

A. Good Cause Must Be Shown. The court may grant a motion for a _____ [physical or mental] examination only on a showing of good cause (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320(a); see also In re Marriage of Halpern (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 297, 315-316, 184 Cal. Rptr. 740).

[Optional] B. Exceptional Circumstances Must Be Shown for Mental Examination. Unless the moving party shows exceptional circumstances, the court shall not order a person for whose personal injuries a recovery is being sought to submit to a mental examination under Section 2032.310 of the Code of Civil Procedure when the party seeking recovery has stipulated that no claim is being made for mental and emotional distress over and above that usually associated with such physical injuries, and that no expert testimony regarding this usual mental and emotional distress will be presented at trial in support of the claim for damages (*Code Civ. An order of examination of any other person may violate the person's constitutionally protected right of privacy under Article I, Section 1 of the California Constitution and the Fourteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution (*see Reuter v. [The condition of the person is not placed in controversy by the mere fact that he or she has instituted the action on behalf of a minor as a guardian ad litem of the child and is therefore a party to the action (see *Reuter v. [Optional] I. Mental Examination Must Be Conducted by Licensed Physician or Psychologist. A mental examination conducted pursuant to Section 2032.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure shall be performed only by a licensed physician, or by a licensed clinical psychologist who holds a doctoral degree in psychology and has had at least five years of postgraduate experience in the diagnosis of emotional and mental disorders (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(c)).

[Optional] J. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities are for use in opposition to a motion for an order of physical or mental examination pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.310.

Optional Paragraph D sets forth the court's authority under Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020(a) to limit discovery when the burden or intrusiveness of the particular method outweighs the likelihood that it will lead to discovery of admissible evidence. This may be used, for example, in opposition to a motion for a physical or mental examination under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.310 that involves the performance of unusual, painful, protracted, dangerous, or intrusive diagnostic procedures that are not likely to be conclusive or outweigh the likelihood of leading to admissible evidence. It is recommended that a party opposing an examination submit a physician's declaration that supports the opposition, for example, indicating that the procedure is dangerous or intrusive but is not likely to be conclusive; this may be particularly persuasive when the party seeking the examination has not submitted a physician's declaration supporting its necessity or usefulness.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 87.11.

Note that some of the cases cited in this form construe law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. They are cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that they remain consistent with current provisions [see also § 87.02[3]].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that the moving party has not made a sufficient showing of good cause, or of exceptional circumstances, if a mental examination is being sought of a person and the party seeking recovery has made specified stipulations [see Optional Paragraph B] or that the motion has not specified the identity of the physician to perform the examination, or otherwise does not conform to the statutory requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320. If appropriate, counsel should also demonstrate any attempts to arrange for the examination pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2016.030.

[c] Examiner's Qualifications

A physical examination must be performed only by a licensed physician or other appropriate licensed health care practitioner; a mental examination must be performed only by a licensed physician, or by a licensed clinical psychologist who holds a doctoral degree in psychology and has had at least five years of postgraduate experience in the diagnosis of emotional and mental disorders [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(b), (c) (codifying and expanding holding in Reuter v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 338-339, 155 Cal. Rptr. 525 , that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032's designation of "physician" meant only a person licensed as a physician and surgeon)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Cause Must Be Shown

In re Marriage of Halpern (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 297, 184 Cal. Rptr. 740 , was a marriage dissolution proceeding in which the husband sought joint custody of a child and reasonable visitation rights. The mother's amended petition for dissolution denied that the child was of the marriage. The husband sought an order requiring the mother and child to be examined by the husband's psychiatric witness to establish the elements of psychological parenthood, to show that visitation was in the child's best interests, and to establish estoppel. A tissue test showed that the husband was not the biological father. The trial court denied the order, and the husband appealed portions of the interlocutory judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the interlocutory judgment, upholding the trial court's denial of the husband's request that the child submit to a psychiatric examination. The court of appeal observed that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320) places in the trial court's discretion whether to order a psychiatric examination, and saw no reason to override the trial court's exercise of discretion. The trial court had considered the burden and inconvenience of examining the child, the probable irrelevance of the examination since the husband was not the natural father of the child, and the doubtful benefit of examining a child under two years of age (133 Cal. App. 3d 297, 316) .

[b] Balancing Burden Against Likelihood of Discovering Admissible Evidence

Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020(a) codifies the holding in Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 383-384, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 and its progeny, discussed below, that in exercising their discretion in considering requests for discovery, courts should weigh the relative importance of the information sought against the hardship entailed by its production. The Reporter's Note to Proposed Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(c) explains that in drafting former Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(c) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.020(a)), the State Bar-Judicial Council Joint Commission on Discovery "concluded that this discretion was so important as a counter-balance to the broad standard of discovery relevance, that it should be written into the statute, and not left to implication."

Southern California Edison Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 832, 103 Cal. Rptr. 709, 500 P.2d 621 was a class action suit in nuisance and/or trespass, in which the class consisted of five named plaintiffs. In the course of discovery proceedings, defendant received the names of some unnamed plaintiffs and sought to depose 20 of them at random. When plaintiffs' attorney could only produce two, defendant sought depositions of 20 others, stating its intention to exclude from the class those who did not appear for depositions. On plaintiff's motion, the trial court issued a protective order which required defendant to subpoena the unnamed plaintiffs.

The Supreme Court upheld this order, denying defendant's petition for a writ of mandate (7 Cal. 3d 832, 843) . The Court noted that without the protective order, which shifts from plaintiffs to defendant the onus of compelling attendance of unnamed class members at depositions, the hardship on plaintiffs in class actions would be great 7 Cal. 3d 832, 842) . First of all, there is no particular reason for plaintiffs to be required to compel attendance; they have little control over the loosely knit class, and the defendants are just as capable as the named plaintiffs of compelling deponents' attendance (7 Cal. 3d 832, 841-842) . More importantly, however, the burden on the class in the absence of this particular type of protective order is severe in that plaintiffs' attorneys would be forced to expend extraordinary time and trouble to round up persons with whom they have had no prior contact. The risk they take if they fail to compel the attendance of these persons is that the prospective deponents will be excluded from the class. Therefore, a defendant would effectively be able to stifle a class action at the discovery stage (7 Cal. 3d 832, 842) . The Supreme Court thus went on to hold that in fashioning this particular protective order, the trial court wisely balanced defendant's right to discovery against the hardships which would be imposed on plaintiffs in the absence of the protective order (7 Cal. 3d 832, 842-843) .

Greyhound Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 355, 15 Cal. Rptr. 90, 364 P.2d 266 , is the leading case construing the purposes and philosophy behind the former Discovery Act. Greyhound concerned a personal injury action involving an accident between plaintiffs' motor vehicle and defendant's bus. At the scene of the accident, before plaintiffs were taken to the hospital, defendant's adjusters and investigators obtained written and signed statements concerning the accident from various witnesses, many of whom were out-of-state residents. After unsuccessfully attempting to obtain these witnesses' accounts from other sources, plaintiffs made a motion to require defendant to produce and permit the inspection, copying, or photographing of the witnesses' statements. Although defendant objected to the production of these statements on various grounds, the trial court ordered their production. This holding was affirmed by the Supreme Court, which denied defendant's application for a writ of prohibition (56 Cal. 2d 355, 402) .

In discussing factors which courts should apply in deciding whether to uphold or deny discovery, the Greyhound Court stated that courts should weigh the relative importance of the information sought against the hardship entailed by its production in exercising their discretion (56 Cal. 2d 355, 383-384) . Thus if great hardship would be imposed on the party whose depositions are sought, and if relatively unimportant information would be elicited from the depositions, then it is reasonable to infer that a protective order is proper.

Calcor Space Facility, Inc. v. Superior Court (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 arose from a dispute over a contract to supply gun mounts for military aircraft. The defendant in the contract action had allegedly repudiated its original contract with the plaintiff and had arranged to obtain the gun mounts from Calcor, one of the contract plaintiff's competitors. The contract plaintiffs had served a deposition subpoena on Calcor's custodian of records, seeking production of extensive documentation regarding all of Calcor's gun mount business, including any dealings with the contract defendant.

In this opinion, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of Calcor's motion for a protective order because the 12-page demand, which included six pages of instructions and definitions was burdensome in the extreme, was overly general and failed to demonstrate any reasonable relationship between the materials sought to be produced and the issues in the case (53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 218-219) . The court observed that in ruling on discovery motions, trial judges must carefully weight the cost, time, expense, and disruption of normal business resulting from an order compelling the discovery against the probative value of the material which might be disclosed (53 Cal. App. 4th 216, 223) .

[c] Examination Must Only Be of Party, Party's Agent, or Person Under Party's Custody or Control

The facts and procedural background of Reuter v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 155 Cal. Rptr. 525 , are discussed in § 87.11[3][a]. In Reuter, the court of appeal reversed the lower court's order requiring the mother to submit to a battery of psychological tests to be administered by a psychologist under the direction of a psychiatrist, on the grounds that the mother's mental condition was legally not in controversy (see discussion of Reuter in Examination Must Be of Condition That Is in Controversy, below). Therefore, the examination had been ordered outside the scope of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320). The court stated that although an examination properly ordered pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 would not violate the person's right of privacy or constitutional rights under U.S. Const., Amends. IV, V, and XIII, an examination ordered outside the scope of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032, and unsupported by other authority, possibly would violate a person's constitutionally protected right of privacy under Cal. Const., art. I, § 1 and U.S. Const., Amend. XIV (93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 343) .

For points and authorities pertaining to the right to privacy, see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations, § 81.240 et seq.

[d] Examination Must Be of Condition That Is in Controversy

In Doyle v. Superior Court (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1878, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 476 , a suit for sexual harassment in employment, the plaintiff made a claim for emotional distress. The plaintiff alleged that she had suffered distress for a period of about six months after the harassment occurred and that her distress had not continued after that time. The court denied the defendant's motion to compel a mental examination of the plaintiff, holding that a party's mental condition is not "in controversy" for purposes of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a)) where the party alleges suffering mental distress in the past (50 Cal. App. 4th 1878, 1886) .

The facts and procedural background of Reuter v. Superior Court (1979) 93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 155 Cal. Rptr. 525 , are discussed in § 87.11[3][a]. In reversing the lower court's order requiring the mother to submit to a battery of psychological tests to be administered by a psychologist under the direction of a psychiatrist, the court said that it agreed with all parties to the action that the mother's mental condition was legally not in controversy (93 Cal. App 3d 332, 340) . However, the party seeking the examination contended that the mother's condition was "collaterally" in controversy since her examination was collateral to that of the son. In rejecting this view, the court said that the argument of a condition being collaterally in controversy suggests that a court has the power to order anyone to submit to examinations regardless of whether their mental state was in controversy or they were one of the persons defined by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a)) (93 Cal. App 3d 332, 341) . According to the declaration of the psychiatrist submitted in support of an examination of the mother, the mother's examination was required because child psychiatrists normally interview parents when diagnosing a child. The mother was not needed because of any of her three roles as a party in the case as guardian ad litem for her son in his cause of action for personal injuries, as an individual suing for wrongful death of her husband [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 377], or as executrix of her husband's estate [see former Prob. Code § 573]. Rather, she was needed because she was the mother of her son and may have influenced his mental state. This influence needed to be separated from the influence of the accident in appropriately assessing what damages were allocable to any provable negligence of the defendant (93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 341-342) . In addition to the parent, many different parties could have been the main influence in any particular child's mental state, such as a parent, a priest, a teacher, or a little league coach. The court said that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 does not create a power broad enough to allow the court to order all those parties to submit to a battery of tests to determine the extent of their influence on a child's mental state, merely on a psychiatrist's declaration that they were needed for his or her examination of the child (93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 342) . In rejecting the argument that the mother's examination was "collateral" to the son's, the court also noted that the argument could also have been interpreted as presenting the contention that the mother was a party whose mental condition was in controversy in her capacity as guardian ad litem of the son. However, since a guardian ad litem would not necessarily be a parent of the minor in all cases, the legal incapacity of a minor that requires him or her to have an adult representative to pursue his or her interests offers no justification for ordering such a guardian to submit to the invasion of his or her body or intimate mental processes (93 Cal. App. 3d 332, 343-344) .

[e] Examination Must Be of Living Person

Holm v. Superior Court (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 232 Cal. Rptr. 432 was a probate case in which the real parties in interest were contesting decedent's will, alleging that the decedent lacked testamentary capacity and that the will was the product of fraud and undue influence. They requested permission to exhume decedent's corpse so that an autopsy could be performed on the brain to determine whether he had suffered from any organic brain disorder. The probate court issued the requested order. Petitioners filed a writ of mandate and requested a stay of disinterment and autopsy pending review.

The court of appeal issued the stay and issued a writ directing the probate court to vacate its order (187 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1244, 1249) . The court reviewed the various arguments raised by real parties, including the argument that an exhumation and autopsy was permitted by former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.020(a)). The court did not agree that the remains of a deceased person were included within the words "party" or "person." It said that those words must be construed in their ordinary and commonsense meaning, and that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 applied to requests for examinations of living persons. It went on to note that the body of a decedent is neither a party to the probate court action nor a person (187 Cal. App. 3d 1241, 1248) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Good Cause Must Be Shown

In Sporich v. Superior Court (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 422, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 752 , petitioner, a recidivist child molester, sought a writ of mandate commanding respondent court to set aside its order requiring him to undergo additional psychiatrist interviews for purposes of his civil commitment trial under the Sexually Violent Predators Act (Welf. & Inst. Code § 6600 et seq.). Petitioner had undergone two psychological evaluations in 1996, after the Director of Corrections determined petitioner might be a sexually violent predator within the meaning of the newly enacted statutory scheme. The court of appeal issued the writ. Assuming, but not deciding, that the 1986 Civil Discovery Act had application in the sexually violent predator context, the court found that under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(d) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320(a)) the district attorney was required to come forward with compelling proof of good cause for additional mental examinations. This he did not do. The passage of time did not itself establish good cause for further mental examinations when there was no showing otherwise that petitioner's mental status had changed (77 Cal. App. 4th 422, 427-428) . The court noted that additional psychological interviews impinged petitioner's constitutional right of privacy (77 Cal. App. 4th 422, 428) .

[b] Motion Must Specify Certain Information

In Carpenter v. Superior Court (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 249, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 821 , plaintiff was injured in a motorcycle accident. He alleged that the motorcycle was defective and that, as a result of the accident, he sustained brain damage. The manufacturer requested physical and mental examinations, but did not identify the specific diagnostic tests and procedures to be used during the mental examination. Plaintiff did not dispute that the manufacturer was entitled to a mental examination, but argued that the court could not issue an order comporting with Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320, because the manufacturer never identified, with specificity, the diagnostic tests and procedures to be used. The trial court ordered plaintiff to submit to standardized written psychological tests of his emotional and cognitive functioning. Plaintiff filed a writ petition, seeking to vacate the court's order. The court of appeal held that the trial court's order did not comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320 because it did not describe the "diagnostic tests and procedures--fully and in detail--[...#x2026; by] list[ing] them by name (141 Cal. App. 4th 249, 260) . The court of appeal rejected the manufacturer's argument that Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320 is "arguably ambiguous" because it requires the order for a mental examination to specify more information than is required for the motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.310. "We fail to see how a statutory requirement to 'specify the ...#x2026; diagnostic tests and procedures' in an order can be properly ignored by the court merely because the moving party has omitted the information the court needs to issue the order. The court's duty in this instance is not to turn a blind eye to the legislative mandate, but to deny the motion. The prudent defendant, cognizant of the requirements of section 2032.320, will include the necessary information in its motion, whether expressly required to do so by section 2032.310 or not" (141 Cal. App. 4th 249, 264 n.5).

A. Motions for Physical or Mental Examination

8-87 California Points & Authorities § 87.22

§ 87.22 Opposing Motion for Order of Physical or Mental Examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320]--Terms and Conditions to Safeguard Examinee

[1] FORM Opposing Motion for Order of Physical or Mental Examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320]--Terms and Conditions to Safeguard Examinee

[The following should be combined with the memorandum of points and authorities opposing a motion for order of physical or mental examination (see § 87.21).]

IF THE COURT ORDERS [_____ (AN AGENT OF or A NATURAL PERSON IN THE CUSTODY OR UNDER THE LEGAL CONTROL OF)] _____ [specify opposing party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] TO SUBMIT TO A _____ [PHYSICAL or MENTAL] EXAMINATION PURSUANT TO SECTION 2032.320 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE, THE COURT SHOULD INCLUDE, AS PART OF THAT ORDER, TERMS AND CONDITIONS TO SAFEGUARD THE RIGHTS OF THE PERSON BEING EXAMINED.

A. Order for Examination to Specify Terms and Conditions of Examination. An order issued by a court pursuant to Section 2032.320 of the Code of Civil Procedure, compelling [_____ (an agent of or a natural person in the custody or under the legal control of)] a party to submit to a _____ [physical or mental] examination is required to specify the person or persons who may perform the examination, and the time, place, manner, diagnostic tests and procedures, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320(d)).

[EITHER, if physical examination]

B. Attorney or Attorney's Representative Must Be Allowed to Attend, Observe, and Record Examination. The attorney for [the party producing] the examinee, or the attorney's representative, must be permitted to attend and observe a physical examination conducted for discovery purposes under Section 2032.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, and to record stenographically or by audiotape any words spoken to or by the examinee during any phase of the examination (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a)). [The right to record stenographically should include being permitted to have the examination conducted in the presence of a court reporter (see Gonzi v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 586, 589, 335 P.2d 97 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.530(b) (nothing in article shall be construed to alter, amend, or affect existing case law with respect to presence of counsel or other persons during examination by agreement or court order))].

[OR, if mental examination]

B. Mental Examinee Has Right to Record Examination. The mental examinee has the right to record the examination on audiotape (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.530(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in opposition to a motion for an order of physical or mental examination pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320. It supports the use of certain terms and conditions in an order for examination to safeguard the party to be examined. One safeguard that may be included in the order is a direction that the party moving for the examination not interfere with the statutory right of the party submitting to or producing another for the examination to record the examination, and if desired at a physical examination, to be permitted to have a court reporter present to stenographically record that examination (see Alternative Paragraphs B). This memorandum of points and authorities should be combined and used in conjunction with those set forth in § 87.21.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, if particular safeguards are desired regarding the conduct of and scope of the examination, counsel should set those forth in detail, and should set forth facts justifying the inclusion of those safeguards in the order. If the moving party has indicated that he or she intends to interfere with the opposing party's right to record the examination, that fact should be set forth and argument made with regard to Alternative Paragraphs B of this form.

[c] Conduct of Examination

Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320 derives from former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) insofar as it provides that the order granting a physical or mental examination shall specify the person or persons who may perform the examination, and the time, place, manner, diagnostic tests and procedures, conditions, scope, and nature of the examination [see Carpenter v. Superior Court (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 249, 260-262 (under Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320, trial court must "specify the ... ; diagnostic tests and procedures" of mental examination by naming tests and procedures to be performed; see § 87.21[4][b]].

However, Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.530 differs from former law in that it provides for the right to record the examination without prior court order, as was required under former case law [see, e.g., Ebel v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 934, 937, 114 Cal. Rptr. 722 (requiring prior court order for use of recording device at physical examination)]. Specifically, a mental examinee now has the right to record the examination on audiotape [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.530(a)].

Additionally, the attorney for a party submitting to or producing another for a physical examination, or the attorney's representative, is now permitted to attend and observe the examination, and to record stenographically or by audiotape any words spoken to or by the examinee during any phase of the examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a); see also Munoz v. Superior Court (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 643, 645, 102 Cal. Rptr. 686 (court reporter may be present in addition to attorney)]. A representative of the attorney may serve as observer, if the attorney has provided written authorization identifying that individual as his or her representative [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(c)]. Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.530(b) also provides that nothing in the Civil Discovery Act shall be construed to alter, amend, or affect existing case law with respect to the presence of counsel or other persons during the examination by agreement or court order. Thus, for example, it appears counsel and a court reporter may be present at a physical examination [see Gonzi v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 586, 589, 335 P.2d 97 (discussed in [3][a], below)], while counsel may not be present at a psychiatric examination [see Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 844-845, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 ; Edwards v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 905, 909-912, 130 Cal. Rptr. 14, 549 P.2d 846] .

For further discussion of a motion for physical or mental examination pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.310, see § 87.11 and § 87.21. For discussion of a motion for a protective order during a physical examination, see § 87.30.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attorney or Attorney's Representative Must Be Allowed to Attend, Observe, and Record Examination

In Gonzi v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 586, 335 P.2d 97 , a minor, through a guardian ad litem, sued defendants for injuries sustained in an automobile accident and was ordered by the trial court to submit to a physical examination by defendants' doctor. Plaintiff brought a petition for a writ of mandate when the trial court refused his request that the examination be conducted in the presence of a certified court reporter.

In reversing the trial court and ordering that the examination be conducted in the presence of a court reporter, the Supreme Court reaffirmed its holding in Sharff v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 508, 282 P.2d 896 , that a person is entitled to have an attorney present when submitting to a court-ordered physical examination (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a)), and said that its reasoning in that case was applicable to the instant case. It stated that if an injured plaintiff is not permitted to have a court reporter present at the court-ordered examination by defendants' doctors, there is no disinterested person present to report and later testify about what occurred during the examination. If the defense-employed doctor is called on to testify at the trial on the issue of the plaintiff's injuries, his or her version of the questions and answers elicited at the examination might differ materially from the plaintiff's counsel's version of the same questions and answers. Orderly procedure in the administration of justice requires that permission be granted at the request of either party for a reporter's presence at the physical examination. This holding in Gonzi probably remains good law, and is further supported by Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a), which provides for the right of the examinee's attorney to "record stenographically" the physical examination. However, in Gonzi, the Court rejected plaintiff's request that the examination be conducted in the presence of a "certified" court reporter on the grounds that the orderly procedure in the administration of justice requires only that such an examination be conducted in the presence of any reporter if a report thereof is requested by either party. The Court also rejected defendants' contention that a court reporter should not be allowed at such an examination because former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(a) provided that a party subjected to such an examination may demand a copy of the examining physician's report. The Court said that such a report, made by defendants' doctor, would not be a sufficient substitute for a transcript of the proceedings made by a court reporter (51 Cal. 2d 586, 589) .

Note that Gonzi construed law in effect before the operative date of the Civil Discovery Act. It is cited and discussed as persuasive authority to the extent that it remains consistent with current provisions [see § 87.02[3]].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Mental Examinee Has Right to Record Examination

In Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 , the Supreme Court held that a plaintiff in a sexual harassment suit is subject to a mental examination, properly limited by privacy concerns, not by virtue of the nature of the suit, but by alleging ongoing mental and emotional damages (43 Cal. 3d 833, 840-841) . The Court also held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2017(d) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 2017.220(a)) allows a defendant in a sexual harassment suit to question the plaintiff regarding sexual conduct with other individuals only after a very strong showing of good cause, a standard more stringent than that required for an ordinary mental examination under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.320(a))(43 Cal. 3d 833, 843 n.8). The Court rejected plaintiff's request for her attorney's presence at the mental examination, holding that plaintiff's rights are otherwise amply safeguarded. Among the protections afforded the subject of a mental examination is the option to record the examination on audiotape, an unobtrusive measure that will permit evidence of abuse to be presented to the court in any motion for sanctions (43 Cal. 3d 833, 846) .

In Golfland Entertainment Ctrs., Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 739, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828 , the court of appeal held that an attorney's presence is not required during a mental examination, although "trial courts retain the power to permit the presence of counsel or to take other prophylactic measures when needed." In this case, however, the appellate court found no evidence to justify an exception to the standard rule barring counsel. The court concluded that plaintiffs' rights in general, and the minor examinee's rights in particular, were adequately safeguarded by the trial court order and this decision specifying the conditions and scope of the mental examination and by audio-taping the examination (108 Cal. App. 4th 739, 748) . In reaching its decision, the court of appeal relied on Edwards v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 905, 130 Cal. Rptr. 14, 549 P.2d 846 and Vinson v. Superior Court (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 833, 239 Cal. Rptr. 292, 740 P.2d 404 (discussed above) (108 Cal. App. 4th 739, 748-749) .

In addition to barring the presence of counsel, the court of appeal also barred the presence of a court reporter. The court reasoned that the differences between physical examination statute, allowing the presence of counsel or counsel's representative to record the examination by audio technology or stenography as matter of right, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(g)(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a)), and mental examination statute, permitting the presence of counsel or counsel's representative only by agreement or court order, and providing only for the right of examiner or examinee to record the examination by means of audio technology, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(g)(2) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.530(a)), indicated the legislature's intent that court reporters should not attend mental examinations and that those examinations should be audio-recorded (108 Cal. App. 4th 739, 750-751) .

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion by a party for a protective order either to prevent the examiner in a physical examination from being abusive to the examinee or undertaking to engage in unauthorized diagnostic tests and procedures, or to prevent the observer of a physical examination from participating or disrupting the examination [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(d), (e)].

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing that the examiner is being abusive or is conducting unauthorized diagnostic tests and procedures, or that the observer is participating in or disrupting the examination. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(f)]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the person against whom the monetary sanction is to be imposed acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2032.510(f) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Protective Order Regarding Conduct at Examination

Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510, which governs protective orders concerning physical examinations, derives in part from former Code Civ. Proc. § 2019(b)(1) and case law. The attorney for the examinee or for a party producing the examinee, or that attorney's representative, if that attorney has provided written authorization identifying that individual as his or her representative, must be permitted to attend and observe any physical examination conducted for discovery purposes [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a)]. The observer must be permitted to record stenographically or by audiotape any words spoken to or by the examinee during any phase of the examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(a); compare Ebel v. Superior Court (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 934, 937, 114 Cal. Rptr. 722 (decided under former law, requiring prior court order approving use of recording device at examination)]. The observer may monitor the examination, but is not permitted to participate in or disrupt it [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(b)].

If in the judgment of the observer the examiner becomes abusive to the examinee or undertakes to engage in unauthorized diagnostic tests and procedures, the observer may suspend the examination to enable the party being examined or producing the examinee to make a motion for a protective order. Conversely, if the observer begins to participate in or disrupt the examination, the person conducting the physical examination may suspend the examination to enable the party at whose instance it is being conducted to move for a protective order [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.510(d), (e)].

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion by a party for an order compelling compliance with the party's demand that a party at whose instance a physical or mental examination was made deliver to the demanding party a copy of the medical reports of the examinee [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620]. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of any issue presented by the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620(a)].

This form should be combined with general memoranda supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing the date on which the demand was made and the contents of that demand, and that the party on whom the demand was made failed to timely deliver the demanded medical reports. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620(b)]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party on whom the demand was made acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2032.620(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

[c] Procedures for and Effect of Demand for Reports

The party who submits to or produces another for a physical or mental examination has the option to demand that the party at whose instance the examination was made deliver to the demanding party a copy of the medical reports of the examinee [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610(a)]. By exercising this option, however, the party who submitted to or produced another for the examination waives in the pending action, and in any other action involving the same controversy, any privilege and any protection for work product under Code Civ. Proc. § 2018.010 et seq. that the party or other examinee may have regarding the testimony of every other physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner who has examined or may thereafter examine the party, in respect of the same physical or mental condition [Code Civ. Proc. §

2032.630 (also waived by taking deposition of examiner other than under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2034.410-2034.470)]. Additionally, if the option is exercised, the party receiving the demand is entitled to an exchange of a copy of any existing report of any examination of the same condition by any other physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner, as well as later reports of previous or subsequent examinations [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.640; see § 87.52].

If the option is exercised, the copy of the reports must be delivered within 30 days after service of the demand, with certain extensions of time when service is by mail [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1013(a), 2016.050], or within 15 days of trial, whichever is earlier [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610(b); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1013(c), (e) (service by Express Mail or fax)]. If the party at whose instance the examination was made fails to make a timely delivery of the reports demanded, the demanding party may move for an order compelling their delivery [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620(a)]. This form of points and authorities supports this motion.

For discussion and a form for use in obtaining sanctions when a party fails to comply with an order compelling the production of the examinee's records, see § 87.51.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Party Is Entitled to Report Even If Written Report Does Not Exist

In Kennedy v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 674, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against defendant corporation after she slipped and fell in one of its stores and required plastic surgery. After plaintiff complied with defendant's demand that she submit to a medical examination pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.220), she demanded a report of the examination, to which she was entitled under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(h) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610). Defendant refused, claiming the examining physician had not prepared a report, and designated that physician as an expert. Defendant withdrew the physician as an expert, and designated him a defense "consultant" after plaintiff noticed his deposition. It then canceled his deposition on the ground that he had been withdrawn as an expert. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion to compel defendant to produce a physician's report of the examination as well as her motion to produce the examining physician for deposition. Plaintiff sought writ review.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion to compel, and to enter a new and different order granting the motion. It noted that it had no authority to directly order the physician, a nonparty, to prepare a report, but assumed that defendant could obtain a report from him (64 Cal. App. 4th 674, 679, fn. 2). Defendant argued that former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(h) only requires disclosure of a defense examiner's report if the examiner actually made one. The court noted that although there is a general reluctance to order parties to produce reports not in existence, former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(h) clearly provides that a party who submits to a physical examination is entitled to a report of that examination, which must contain certain specified information. The court said the trade off is clear: if one party to a personal injury litigation is required by an opponent to submit to a medical examination, at the very least that party is are entitled to a report of the information obtained by the adversary in litigation (64 Cal. App. 4th 674, 678) . The court also noted that in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(j) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.640), the Legislature provides for reciprocal disclosure of any "existing" reports of the examinee. This suggests that by not using the word "existing" in former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(h) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610), the Legislature expected a written report be prepared for the examinee whenever requested, even if one did not exist. The court concluded that had the Legislature been concerned only with "existing" reports when it drafted former Section 2032(h), it could have so specified (64 Cal. App. 4th 674, 678) .

[b] Party Is Entitled to Depose Examining Physician Even After Withdrawal as Expert

The facts and procedural background of Kennedy v. Superior Court (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 674, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 373 , are discussed in [a], above. In Kennedy, the court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate commanding the trial court to vacate its order denying plaintiff's motion to produce the examining physician for deposition. The court said that withdrawing the physician as an expert did not entitle defendant to shield him from deposition with regard to the examination. By the explicit terms of former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032(h) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610(c)), the work product protection with regard to examination is waived. A party may generally "hide" an expert from deposition by withdrawing him and dubbing him a "consultant," thereby reinstating work product protection, but when the expert is also the examining physician under former Code Civ. Proc. § 2032 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.010 et seq.), its specific terms control. Despite the withdrawal, the court said that plaintiff was entitled to depose the surgeon with regard to the physical examination (64 Cal. App. 4th 674, 678-679) .

THE COURT SHOULD IMPOSE _____ [specify sanctions sought, e.g., ISSUE AND MONETARY] SANCTIONS AGAINST _____ [name] FOR HIS/HERS/ITS FAILURE TO OBEY THE ORDER COMPELLING HIM/HER/IT TO DELIVER DEMANDED MEDICAL REPORTS PURSUANT TO SECTION

2032.610 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE, AND SHOULD EXCLUDE AT TRIAL THE TESTIMONY OF THE EXAMINER WHOSE REPORT HAS NOT BEEN PROVIDED.

A. Court May Make Orders That Are Just. When a party is ordered by the court to deliver medical reports to a demanding party pursuant to Section 2032.610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the party fails to obey that court order, the court may make those orders that are just, including the imposition of an issue sanction, an evidence sanction, or a terminating sanction under Section 2023.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620(c)).

[Optional] B. Exclusion of Trial Testimony of Examiner. When a party fails to provide a report of an examination conducted under Section 2032.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure after having been ordered to do so by the court, the court shall exclude that examiner's testimony at trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620(c)).

C. Imposition of Monetary Sanction. In lieu of or in addition to any other sanction imposed pursuant to Sections 2023.010 et seq. and 2032.620(c) of the Code of Civil Procedure, the court may impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620(c)).

[Add points and authorities generally supporting the imposition of issue, evidence, terminating, contempt, and monetary sanctions (see, e.g., Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11).]

This memorandum of points and authorities is for use in support of a motion for sanctions for failure of a party to obey a court order compelling him or her to deliver medical reports demanded by the moving party pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.620]. For a form of motion for an order compelling delivery, see § 87.50.

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of an issue, evidence, or terminating sanction under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(b)-(d) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.12 et seq.]. If a monetary sanction is sought in addition to or in lieu of these sanctions, this form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel might wish to insert argument in favor of one particular type of sanction over another. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the party against whom the monetary sanction is to be imposed acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2032.620(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.

THE COURT SHOULD COMPEL DELIVERY OF ALL EXISTING AND LATER MEDICAL REPORTS OF PREVIOUS AND SUBSEQUENT EXAMINATIONS OF _____ [name of examinee] PERTAINING TO THE CONDITION(S) IN ISSUE BECAUSE _____ [name of moving party] HAS DELIVERED

COPIES OF ALL THE MEDICAL REPORTS DEMANDED BY _____ [name] PURSUANT TO SECTION 2032.610 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE.

A. Party Entitled to Exchange of Reports. A party who has received a demand for a medical report under Section 2032.610 of the Code of Civil Procedure is entitled at the time of compliance to receive in exchange a copy of any existing written report of any examination of the same condition by any other physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner. In addition, that party is entitled to receive promptly any later report of any previous or subsequent examination of that condition by any physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.640).

B. Party May Move for Order Compelling Delivery. When the party who has demanded and received delivery of medical reports under Section 2032.610 of the Code of Civil Procedure fails to deliver existing or later reports of previous or subsequent examinations to the party who has complied with Section 2032.610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the party who has complied may make a motion, accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion, for an order compelling delivery of the medical reports (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.650(a)).

[Optional] C. Waiver of Privilege or Work Product. By demanding and obtaining a report of a _____ [physical or mental] examination under Section 2032.610 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the party who submitted to, or produced another for, the examination waives in the pending action, and in any other action involving the same controversy, any privilege, as well as any protection for work product under Section 2018.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, that the party or other examinee may have regarding reports and writings as well as the testimony of every other physician, psychologist, or licensed health care practitioner who has examined, or may thereafter examine the party or other examinee, in respect of the same physical or mental condition (Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.630).

D. Court Must Impose Monetary Sanction Absent Specified Findings. The court must impose a monetary sanction under Section 2023.010 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure against any party, person, or attorney who unsuccessfully opposes a motion to compel delivery of medical reports, unless it finds that the one subject to the sanction acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of the sanction unjust (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a), 2032.650(b)).

[Optional] E. Court May Impose Sanctions Despite Lack of Opposition to Motion to Compel Discovery. The court may award sanctions under the Discovery Act in favor of a party who files a motion to compel discovery, even though no opposition to the motion was filed, or opposition to the motion was withdrawn, or the requested discovery was provided to the moving party after the motion was filed (Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1030(a)).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum is for use in support of a motion by a party for an order compelling compliance with a demand for delivery of medical reports and identification of examiners pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.650, after that party has complied with a demand for delivery of medical reports pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.610. The motion must be accompanied by a declaration stating facts showing a reasonable and good-faith attempt at an informal resolution of each issue presented by the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.650(a)].

This form should be combined with general points and authorities supporting the imposition of monetary sanctions under Code Civ. Proc. § 2023.030(a) [see Ch. 82, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse, § 82.11].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth facts showing the date on which the opposing party's demand was made, the date on which the moving party complied with the demand, the date on which the moving party demanded the exchange of reports and that the opposing party failed to deliver the demanded reports. Counsel's factual showing should demonstrate substantial justification for the motion in order to avoid a monetary sanction if the motion is denied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 2032.650(b)]. However, counsel need not set forth facts showing that the opposing party acted without substantial justification [cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 2034(a)]. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 2023.030(a) and 2032.650(b) effectively place that burden on the person against whom the sanction is to be imposed, by requiring the court to impose a monetary sanction when it is expressly authorized unless it finds that there was substantial justification or that other circumstances would make the monetary sanction unjust.
