condemnation action in which the plaintiffs claimed damages because of the closing by the defendants of a railroad crossing for a county road running through their property. This resulted in the destruction of all access from their property over the road and the placing of their property in a cul-de-sac. A grade crossing had been provided at another road at some distance from the previous crossing. The trial court sustained the defendants' general demurrer and entered judgments of dismissal. The Supreme Court stated that the complaint did not sufficiently allege the necessary showing under the substantial impairment test, but reversed the judgments to grant plaintiffs a further opportunity to amend their complaint. The Court noted that a showing of substantial impairment of access is necessary; the bare allegation of a cul-de-sac is not sufficient. The plaintiffs should specify the use to which plaintiffs have put their property, the added distance, if any, that they must travel in order to reach the general system of public streets or public highways, the lack of availability of reasonable alternative routes to the general system, and any other factors showing that the closing has substantially impaired plaintiffs' right of access.

Jones v. People ex rel. Dep't of Transp. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 144, 148 Cal. Rptr. 640, 583 P.2d 165 , was a proceeding in inverse condemnation by plaintiffs who had purchased nine and one-half acres of city land in 1963 for the purpose of subdividing it. Thereafter, the State Department of Public Works (now Department of Transportation) announced plans to construct a freeway that would cross the northern portion of the property, requiring acquisition of approximately two and one-half acres of land. The proposed freeway would have cut off access to a city street and, without this access, plaintiffs would have been unable to subdivide the property. Plaintiffs were unsuccessful in their attempts to sell the land and in 1973 filed their suit in inverse condemnation. After trial by jury, plaintiffs were awarded $75,000 for diminution in the fair market value of their land and $25,000 attorney's fees and costs. Several months after judgment was rendered, the Legislature deleted the proposed freeway from the highway system. The Supreme Court held that a landowner is entitled to compensation for a substantial impairment of a temporary right of access, but reversed the judgment for further proceedings on the ground that the damages assessed were based on the assumption that plaintiffs' land had diminished in value because it was permanently deprived of access to the city street, but that since access was restored by deletion of the freeway project, the amount awarded had to be adjusted accordingly (22 Cal. 3d 144, 154) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationProcedure

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Demurrer to Complaint

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.42

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.42 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] in Inverse Condemnation Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350]--Intangible Intrusion Resulted in Damage That Is Direct, Substantial, and Peculiar to Property

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.40.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT ALLEGING AN INTANGIBLE INTRUSION ON HIS/HER PROPERTY BY DEFENDANT'S ACTIVITIES STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR INVERSE CONDEMNATION BECAUSE IT APPEARS ON THE FACE OF THE COMPLAINT THAT THE INTANGIBLE INTRUSION RESULTED IN A BURDEN ON THE PROPERTY THAT IS DIRECT, SUBSTANTIAL, AND PECULIAR TO THE PROPERTY ITSELF.

A. Compensation for Taking. (See § 95.41, Paragraph A.)

B. The Concept of "Taking" Does Not Require Physical Damage to Property. Physical damage to property is not invariably a prerequisite to a right to compensation in an inverse condemnation action (Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 296, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43).

C. Intangible Intrusion That Burdens Property in Direct, Substantial, and Peculiar Manner. A public entity's intangible intrusion onto private property that does not physically damage the property nonetheless can serve as a basis for inverse liability if the intrusion amounts to a permanent and substantial impairment in the use of the property (Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 297-298, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43).

D. Allegation of Direct, Substantial, and Peculiar Impairment. An allegation that plaintiff's property has suffered a direct, substantial, and peculiar burden as a result of a public entity's intangible intrusion onto the property pleads a cause of action in inverse condemnation sufficient to withstand a general demurrer (Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 298-299, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to an inverse condemnation complaint when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint that the intangible intrusion on plaintiff's property caused by defendant's activities did not result in a burden on the property that is direct, substantial, and peculiar to the property.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Concept of "Taking" Does Not Require Physical Damage to Property

The plaintiffs in Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43 brought an action against the City of Madera. It included a cause of action in inverse condemnation, which alleged that their farm was directly in the path of odors blown by the prevailing winds from defendant's waste treatment facility located on land 600 feet from plaintiffs' residence. At trial the court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings on the inverse condemnation cause of action and dismissed that count, stating that recovery on an inverse condemnation theory required "physical damage to the property."

The California Supreme Court reversed and remanded, ordering that the judgment be amended to reinstate the inverse condemnation cause of action. The Court noted that physical damage to property is not invariably a prerequisite to compensation. Rather, the determination of the scope of the just compensation clause rests on its construction as a matter of interpretation. Contending policies guide this construction. On one hand, the policy underlying the eminent domain provision in the Constitution is to distribute throughout the community the loss inflicted on the individual by the making of public improvements. On the other hand, there is a fear that compensation allowed too liberally will seriously impede, if not stop, beneficial public improvements because of the greatly increased cost (20 Cal. 3d 285, 290) .

The Court found that the presence of several factors militated in favor of a distribution throughout the community of the type of loss at issue. In particular, it noted the plaintiffs' claim stemmed from the recurring violation of their property by a gaseous effluent. This injury was not far removed from the core cases of direct physical invasion (such as invasions of water or other liquid effluents) that indisputably require compensation (20 Cal. 3d 285, 296-297) .

[b] Intangible Intrusion That Burdens Property in Direct, Substantial, and Peculiar Manner

The facts in Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43 are discussed in § 95.42[3][a]. That discussion also notes that the Varjabedian Court found several factors present that militated in favor of a distribution throughout the community of the type of loss at issue. One of these was the claim that plaintiffs' land was made "untenantable for residential purposes." The Court ruled that this claim was clearly sufficient to depict a permanent and substantial impairment in plaintiffs' use of the land (20 Cal. 3d 285, 297) . At the same time, the Court acknowledged that fears that compensation would seriously impede or stop the beneficial construction of sewage treatment plants might be realized if courts were to award compensation for every objectionable odor produced by such facilities. The Court found, however, that the problem of reconciling this consideration with the competing policy of loss-distribution was not presented in its most difficult form in this case because it appeared from the allegations that plaintiffs' property may have been peculiarly burdened by the odors. This brought the case within the doctrine of Richards v. Washington Terminal Co. (1914) 233 U.S. 546, 34 S. Ct. 654, 58 L. Ed. 1088 , which held that federal statutes immunizing a railroad from nuisance liability in light of the Fifth Amendment do not authorize the imposition of so direct, peculiar, and substantial a burden on the plaintiff's property without compensation. The Court noted that Richards could be factually distinguished from this case, but that the factual differences did not render the underlying principle of Richards inapplicable to the issue at hand. Thus, the Court ruled that if a plaintiff can establish that his or her property has suffered a direct, peculiar, and substantial burden as a result of recurring odors produced by a sewage facility--that the plaintiff has been in effect "singled out" to suffer the detrimental environmental effects of the enterprise--then the policy favoring distribution of the resulting loss of market is strong and the likelihood that compensation will impede necessary public construction is relatively slight (20 Cal. 3d 285, 297-299) .

[c] Allegation of Direct, Substantial, and Peculiar Impairment

The facts in Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43 are discussed in § 95.42[3][a]. After determining that compensation will be allowed in a particular case if plaintiff can show that defendant's activities burdened plaintiff's property in a direct and substantial manner that is peculiar to plaintiff's property, the Court applied this standard to plaintiffs' complaint, which alleged that their farm was directly in the path of the odors from defendant's waste treatment plant as they were blown by the prevailing winds. The Court held that plaintiffs' should have been given the opportunity, through amendment of their pleadings if necessary, to demonstrate that the burden on their farm was sufficiently direct, substantial, and peculiar to justify compensation. On that showing, the Court held that the plaintiffs could base a claim for inverse condemnation (20 Cal. 3d 285, 299) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Intangible Intrusion That Burdens Property in Direct, Substantial, and Peculiar Manner

San Diego Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1996) 13 Cal. 4th 893, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 724, 920 P.2d 669 , involved, among other things, an inverse condemnation claim against an electric utility arising from electric and magnetic fields emitted from electric power lines located on a easement adjacent to the plaintiffs' property. Citing Varjabedian v. City of Madera (1977) 20 Cal. 3d 285, 142 Cal. Rptr. 429, 572 P.2d 43 , the California Supreme Court held that when the conduct of a public entity results in an intangible intrusion onto the plaintiff's property but does not cause physical damage, the plaintiff will be entitled to compensation only on a showing that the burden imposed on the property is direct, substantial, and peculiar to the property itself (13 Cal. 4th 893, 940-941) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationProcedure

151 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Demurrer to Complaint

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.43

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.43 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] in Inverse Condemnation Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350]--Public Entity Does Not Need Statutory Power to Condemn by Eminent Domain

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.41.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT NEED NOT ALLEGE THAT DEFENDANT PUBLIC ENTITY HAS THE STATUTORY AUTHORITY TO EXERCISE AFFIRMATIVE EMINENT DOMAIN POWER TO ACCOMPLISH THE SAME RESULT.

A. Compensation for Taking. [See § 95.41, Paragraph A.]

B. The Concept of "Taking" Does Not Require a Physical Seizure. [See § 95.41, Paragraph B.]

C. No Need to Show Eminent Domain Power of Defendant. Liability in inverse condemnation does not depend on a showing that there is statutory authority in the defendant entity to exercise affirmative eminent domain powers to accomplish the same result. Any governmental entity may be liable for inverse condemnation, even agencies that lack eminent domain authority. Inverse condemnation is an action grounded not on statutory condemnation power, but on the constitutional proscription against the taking (pursuant to California Constitution, amendment V), or the taking or damaging (pursuant to California Constitution, article I, section 19), of property for public use without just compensation (Baker v. Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport Authority (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 862, 866-867, 218 Cal. Rptr. 293, 705 P.2d 866 , cert. denied, (1986) 475 U.S. 1017, 106 S. Ct. 1200, 89 L. Ed. 2d 314).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint in inverse condemnation when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that the defendant public entity lacks statutory authority to exercise affirmative eminent domain powers to accomplish the same result [see Baker v. Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport Authority (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 862, 867, 218 Cal. Rptr. 293, 705 P.2d 866 , cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1017 (1986)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts present in the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Need to Show Eminent Domain Power of Defendant

Baker v. Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport Authority (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 862, 218 Cal. Rptr. 293, 705 P.2d 866 , cert. denied, 475 U.S. 1017 (1986) , was an action in inverse condemnation and nuisance brought by homeowners against an airport adjacent to their properties. The trial court sustained demurrers to both causes of action, dismissing the inverse condemnation action because defendant was prohibited by statute from exercising the power of eminent domain, and dismissing the nuisance action pursuant to the statute of limitations covering permanent nuisances. Plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that liability in inverse condemnation does not depend on a showing that there is statutory authority in the defendant entity to exercise affirmative eminent domain powers to accomplish the same result (39 Cal. 3d 862, 867) . The Court rejected defendant's argument that inverse condemnation is another description of a landowner's remedy for a taking of his or her property when condemnation proceedings have not been instituted, and that an entity that lacks the power to condemn by eminent domain is therefore not liable in inverse condemnation. Although there is some authority for defendant's contention, inverse condemnation is based not on statutory condemnation power, but on the constitutional proscription against the taking (Cal. Const., amend. V), or the taking or damaging (Cal. Const., art. I, § 19), of property for public use without just compensation (39 Cal. 3d 862, 866) . A landowner whose property has been invaded by a public entity that lacks eminent domain power suffers no less a taking merely because the defendant was not authorized to take. Plaintiff need only show that the damage resulted from an exercise of governmental power, and that this occurred while the defendant was "seeking to promote the general interest in its relation to any legitimate object of government" (39 Cal. 3d 862, 867) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationProcedure

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Demurrer to Complaint

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.44

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.44 Supporting Application for Temporary Restraining Order and Preliminary Injunction [Code Civ. Proc. § 527]--Use of Power of Eminent Domain Without Compensation

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF APPLICA-
vs.	)	TION FOR [TEMPORARY RESTRAINING OR-
_____ [name],	)	DER AND] PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept.: _____
		Trial Date: _____

_____

THE COURT SHOULD ISSUE A [TEMPORARY RESTRAINING ORDER AND] PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION TO ENJOIN DEFENDANTS' ATTEMPTED USE OF THE POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN TO TAKE PLAINTIFF'S PROPERTY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS RECEIVED NO COMPENSATION FOR THE TAKING.

A. Injunction Against Eminent Domain Without Compensation. The ascertainment and payment of damages is a condition precedent to the right of a public entity to do public work that will destroy or damage private property. When a taking is attempted under the power of eminent domain without any provision being made for compensation, an injunction will lie (Beals v. Los Angeles (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 381, 387-388, 144 P.2d 839 ; Wilcox v. Engebretsen (1911) 160 Cal. 288, 299, 116 P. 750).

B. Preliminary Injunction to Prevent Taking of Property. In an action to enjoin the taking of private property without compensation or in a condemnation proceeding, a superior court has the power to issue a preliminary injunction to prevent the taking of the property before compensating the plaintiff or before the final judgment in the proceeding (Geurkink v. Petaluma (1896) 112 Cal. 306, 308-310, 44 P. 570 ; Felton Water Co. v. Superior Court (1927) 82 Cal. App. 382, 388, 256 P. 255).

C. Great or Irreparable Injury or Waste. An injunction may be grantedwhen it appears by the complaint or affidavits (or declarations) that the commission or continuance of some act during the litigation would produce waste, or great or irreparable injury, to a party to the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 526(a)(2), 2015.5; Volpicelli v. Jared Sydney Torrance Memorial Hosp. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 242, 167 Cal. Rptr. 610 ; Smith v. Smith (1942) 49 Cal. App. 2d 716, 718-719, 122 P.2d 346). The term "irreparable injury" means that species of damages, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand or inflicted on the other (Wind v. Herbert (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 276, 285, 8 Cal. Rptr. 817). This definition warrants the use of the injunctive power of the court against a wrong that a trial judge deems insufferable because it constitutes an overbearing assumption by one person of superiority and domination over the rights and property of others (Fretz v. Burke (1967) 247 Cal. App. 2d 741, 746, 55 Cal. Rptr. 879).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of an application for a temporary restraining order and preliminary injunction or for a preliminary injunction by itself when the defendant is taking private property without any compensation or is threatening to do so. With modification of the caption, it may be used in support of a motion for a preliminary injunction to the same effect.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of complaint for provisional and permanent injunctive relief as well as other forms for use in obtaining provisional injunctive relief, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 303, Injunctions (Matthew Bender). For practice forms for use in connection with eminent domain proceedings, see Ch. 247, Eminent Domain and Inverse Condemnation in that set.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda supporting applications for preliminary injunctions and temporary restraining orders generally, see Ch.

116, Injunctions in this set.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Injunction Against Eminent Domain Without Compensation

In Beals v. Los Angeles (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 381, 144 P.2d 389 , plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to restrain defendants from closing a public alley pursuant to ordinances enacted by the City of Los Angeles and to have the ordinances declared void. The superior court sustained defendants' demurrer and entered a judgment dismissing the action. Plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed.

The court of appeal agreed with plaintiff's contention that the complaint stated a cause of action. It noted that the closing of an alley results in the taking or damaging of private property for a public use. It further found that it is settled that the ascertainment and payment of damages is a condition precedent to the right of a city to do public work that will destroy or damage private property (23 Cal. 2d 381, 387) . Accordingly, the court held that when a taking is attempted under the power of eminent domain without any provision being made for compensation, an injunction will lie. Even though the city council concluded that there would be no damages arising out of the work when it ordered the closing of the alley, the court of appeal stated that a property owner cannot be deprived of the constitutional guarantee of compensation and prepayment by the decision of a city council that the owner is not damaged (23 Cal. 2d 381, 388) .

Wilcox v. Engebretsen (1911) 160 Cal. 288, 116 P. 750 , involved an action by an abutting property owner to enjoin the city council of San Diego and defendant Engebretsen, as contractor under a street grading contract, from proceeding to reduce the street surface in front of the plaintiff's property to the established grade. Defendants' demurrer was sustained by the superior court, and they obtained a judgment. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed.

The Supreme Court stated that under former Cal. Const., art. I, § 14 [now see Cal. Const., art. I, § 19], the ascertainment and payment of damages in a condemnation proceeding is a condition precedent to the right of a city to do any public work that will cause damage. Thus, a property owner has the right to enjoin such work until his or her damages have been lawfully ascertained and paid in the manner prescribed by the Constitution (160 Cal. 288, 298-299) .

[b] Preliminary Injunction to Prevent Taking of Property

In Geurkink v. Petaluma (1896) 112 Cal. 306, 44 P. 570 , plaintiffs owned two lots that abutted certain streets in the City of Petaluma. They brought an action to enjoin defendant city from changing a natural course of a creek and thusdamaging their property by preventing free access to the street unless the city compensated them for the damage. The superior court issued a temporary restraining order, but after trial it gave judgment for defendant and denied plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed.

The Supreme Court stated that a threatened permanent injury to a party's real property may be enjoined (112 Cal. 306, 309) . Until compensation was made, the city had no right to damage the plaintiffs' property. Payment of the damages was a condition precedent to the creation of the right, and, until payment, the city was a trespasser. In such a case an injunction is the plain, ordinary, and best remedy (112 Cal. 306, 310) .

In Felton Water Co. v. Superior Court (1927) 82 Cal. App. 382, 256 P. 255 , plaintiff was a corporation that had organized for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of the town of Felton and its vicinity with water. It filed an action to condemn an easement consisting of the right to take, divert, and carry away 150,000 gallons of water per day from a particular stream. Defendants' answer denied the allegations of the complaint; defendants also cross complained for damages and for a preliminary injunction restraining plaintiff from taking any part of defendants' property pending the trial of the action. The superior court issued an order requiring plaintiff to show cause why it should not be restrained pending the trial of the action from further obstructing the flow and diverting the waters of the stream. Plaintiff brought a prohibition proceeding in the court of appeal to prevent the superior court from conducting any further proceedings on the order to show cause. It contended that the superior court did not have jurisdiction to grant affirmative relief to a defendant in a condemnation proceeding or to entertain an application therefor. The court of appeal rejected this contention and denied the writ.

The court of appeal noted that the taking of private property before the amount of the compensation is ascertained will be enjoined unless the owner with knowledge has permitted without protest the property to be devoted to a public use by one engaged in administering the use. In such a case, the owner's conduct is regarded as a dedication of the property to the use, and the owner's only remedy will be an action for compensation (82 Cal. App. 382, 387-388) .

In a condemnation proceeding when the court has jurisdiction both of the parties and of the subject of the litigation, the court, in the exercise of its power to hear and determine the issues necessarily involved, has the incidental power to prevent the plaintiff from taking possession prior to the entry of judgment. Because it has this power in a proper case, its conclusion as to whether the facts alleged or the pleadings are sufficient to warrant the relief sought is an exercise of jurisdiction even though it might be erroneous (82 Cal. App. 382, 388). Further, a writ of prohibition will not lie to prevent a subordinate court from deciding erroneously or to prescribe what a court shall or shall not consider in a matter before it and within its jurisdiction. For the foregoing reasons, the writ was denied (82 Cal. App. 382, 389).

[c] Great or Irreparable Injury or Waste

In Volpicelli v. Jared Sydney Torrance Memorial Hosp. (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d 242, 167 Cal. Rptr. 610 , a trial court granted a preliminary injunction in a case involving the termination of plaintiff physician from the medical staff due to a dispute over staff dues. Plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to be temporarily reinstated to the staff pending adequate notice and hearing on the matter. Defendants argued, however, that injunctive relief was not proper because plaintiff failed to show irreparable injury. Defendants contended that plaintiff's fundamental right to practice his profession was not impaired because plaintiff still retained staff membership at two other hospitals.

The court of appeal upheld the injunction, reasoning that plaintiff had the right to fully and capably practice his profession, and an exclusion from one hospital out of three could substantially bear on plaintiff's right to fully practice. Furthermore, defendant hospital had a unique burn center. Because it was clear that plaintiff may have been deprived of a valuable right without due process of law, the court concluded that there was a sufficient showing of irreparable injury, thereby upholding the issuance of the preliminary injunction (109 Cal. App. 3d 242, 248) .

In Smith v. Smith (1942) 49 Cal. App. 2d 716, 122 P.2d 346 , appellant contended that the trial court did not have jurisdiction to order him to remove himself from the family home pending the trial of the divorce action. The complaint had alleged that appellant had committed acts of violence about the residence, had threatened the life of respondent and the children, and had destroyed property. There was also testimony that appellant had on one occasion discharged firearms in the home, destroyed property, and threatened the lives of his family to the extent that it was necessary to summon the police to disarm him.

In affirming the order, the court of appeal stated that the trial court acted within its jurisdiction in entering an order in the nature of a preliminary injunction excluding appellant from the residence during the pendency of the action because such an order is specifically granted to the courts by statute (citing former Code Civ. Proc. § 526 first subd (2); now Code Civ. Proc. § 526(a)(2)) (49 Cal. App. 2d 716, 718-719) .

In Wind v. Herbert (1960) 186 Cal. App. 2d 276, 8 Cal. Rptr. 817 , the superior court had granted a preliminary injunction ancillary to an accounting, declaratory relief, and dissolution of a limited partnership. The defendants argued in appealing the order granting the injunction that plaintiffs had failed to show that a preliminary injunction was necessary to prevent irreparable injury to the partnership assets. They contended that any conceivable future injury would be readily ascertainable and could be compensated by money damages and that there was no claim that defendants could not respond in damages.

In affirming the preliminary injunction, the court of appeal stated that this argument was without merit. It explained that the concept of irreparable injury does not concern itself entirely with injury beyond the possibility of repair or beyond possible compensation in damages. Rather, as defined by Civ. Code § 3422, an injunction properly issues in any case in which it would be extremely difficult to ascertain the amount of compensation that would afford adequate relief. Quoting from Anderson v. Souza (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 825, 834, 243 P.2d 497 , it defined the term "irreparable injury" as meaning that species of damages, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand or inflicted on the other.

It further stated that the argument that there is no "irreparable damage" would not be so often used by wrongdoers if they would take the trouble to observe that the word "irreparable" is a very unhappily chosen one used in expressing the rule that an injunction may issue to prevent wrongs of a repeated and continuing character or that occasion damages estimable only by conjecture and not by any accurate standard. Thus, because in the instant case the wrongs complained of were obviously of a repeated and continuing character, the preliminary injunction was properly issued by the trial court (186 Cal. App. 2d 276, 285) .

In Fretz v. Burke (1967) 247 Cal. App. 2d 741, 55 Cal. Rptr. 879 , plaintiffs obtained a preliminary injunction requiring defendants to pay their respective shares of profits of a corporation. They appealed from this part of the order, and one of the points that defendant argued was that plaintiffs did not show any irreparable injury.

The court of appeal rejected this argument and affirmed the order granting the preliminary injunction. It quoted the definition of "irreparable injury" set forth in Anderson v. Souza (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 825, 834, 243 P.2d 497 , as that species of damages, whether great or small, that ought not to be submitted to on the one hand or inflicted on the other. The court rejected the assertion by defendants that under this definition all injuries approach the status of "irreparability." The court stated that this definition should be deemed as warranting the use of the injunctive power of the court against a wrong that a trial judge deems insufferable because it constitutes an overbearing assumption by one person of superiority and domination over the rights and property of others (247 Cal. App. 2d 741, 746) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Injunction Against Eminent Domain Without Compensation

O'Connor v. Southern P. R. Co. (1898) 122 Cal. 681, 55 P. 688 , involved an action by an owner of real property that abutted on a street to restrain defendant from constructing a railroad on the street. The superior court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. It noted that the superior court's findings of fact declared that the street was 72 feet wide, but that the railroad would have left plaintiff with the use of only 31 feet between the tracks and his lot. The Court found, as a matter of law, that it could not say that 31 feet would have answered all the legitimate uses to which the street might have been put by the plaintiff. Thus, the Court held that it was clear that the facts gave plaintiff the right of invoking the remedy of injunction (122 Cal. 681, 683-684) .

In Schaufele v. Doyle (1890) 86 Cal. 107, 24 P. 834 , plaintiff owned and operated a hotel that abutted onto a street. Defendants were engaged in regrading the street when plaintiff brought an action for an injunction to stop their work. Defendants' answer alleged that they were working under the authority of the City of Monterey in regrading the street. After plaintiff rested her case at trial, defendants moved for a nonsuit; they based their motion on the ground that it appeared from the evidence that any damage plaintiff might sustain by the performance of the proposed work could be fully compensated for in money and that it did not appear that defendants were insolvent and unable to make such compensation. The superior court granted the motion, and it also denied a motion for a new trial. Plaintiff appealed, and the Supreme Court reversed the judgment and order. The Court stated that every person whose property abuts on a street has the right of access to and egress from the land abutting on the street. This right of access and egress is property that a person cannot be deprived of without compensation being made first (86 Cal. 107, 109) .

[b] Great or Irreparable Injury or Waste

In Rudel v. Los Angeles County (1897) 118 Cal. 281, 50 P. 400 , plaintiff brought an action to restrain the supervisors of Los Angeles County from diverting the waters of the Rubio Canyon and causing them to flow into and through the Eaton Canyon. The Supreme Court affirmed a judgment so restraining the defendants. It stated that the facts entitled plaintiff to an injunction under the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 526 first subd (2) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 526(a)(2)), and brought the case within the scope of the general rules under which courts of equity restrain the doing of wrongful acts that necessarily result in irreparable injury to others (118 Cal. 281, 289) .

In Brookshire Oil Co. v. Casmalia Ranch Oil & Dev. Co. (1907) 151 Cal. 577, 91 P. 383 , defendant had torn up an oil pipeline on the assertion that he held paramount title to the property through which the line passed. Plaintiff alleged that he was entitled to an easement for his pipeline and that, therefore, defendant should be enjoined from interfering with the pipeline. The superior court granted a preliminary injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with therelaying and reestablishment of the pipeline. The defendant appealed to the Supreme Court after the trial court denied its motion to dissolve the preliminary injunction. The Supreme Court affirmed the order denying the motion. It stated that the continuance of the use of the pipeline would not materially interfere with defendant's use of the land, even if it ultimately prevailed, but that if the preliminary injunction was dissolved and the plaintiff eventually prevailed, plaintiff would have suffered great and irreparable damages (151 Cal. 577, 580) .

Ketchens v. Reiner (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 470, 239 Cal. Rptr. 549, involved a plaintiff charged with violation of certain Education Code provisions pertaining to verbal and related abuse of teachers. Plaintiff claimed that the statutes under which she was cited were unconstitutionally vague and overbroad. Although a TRO was initially granted, after an order to show cause hearing, a preliminary injunction was denied, and the TRO was dissolved. The court of appeal reversed. It said that trial courts should evaluate two interrelated factors in deciding whether to issue a preliminary injunction: (1) the likelihood that the plaintiff will prevail on the merits at trial, and (2) the interim harm that the plaintiff is likely to sustain if the injunction were denied as compared to the harm that the defendant is likely to suffer if the preliminary injunction were issued (194 Cal. App. 3d 470, 474). The court held that it was likely that plaintiff would prevail at trial, and that the loss of First Amendment freedoms (freedom of speech) for even minimal periods of time unquestionably constitutes irreparable injury (194 Cal. App. 3d 470, 480) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesInjunctionsPreliminary & Temporary InjunctionsCivil ProcedureRemediesInjunctionsTemporary Restraining OrdersCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
B. Opposing Demurrer to Complaint

9-95 California Points & Authorities §§ 95.45-95.59

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

[Reserved]

§§ 95.45[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.60

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.60 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Defendant--Stated Purpose Is Not Public Use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(b)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR
vs.	)	SUMMARY JUDGMENT
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept.: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____

_____

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE STATED PURPOSE FOR THE TAKING IS NOT A PUBLIC USE.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. The rules of practice that govern civil actions generally are the rules of practice for eminent domain proceedings (Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040).

B. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. The motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (c)).

C. Nonpublic Use as Ground for Objection. A defendant may object to the plaintiff's right to take on the ground that the stated purpose is not a public use (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(b)).

D. Public Use. A public use is one that concerns the whole community or promotes the general interest in its relation to any legitimate object of government. To make a use public in character, a duty must fall on the person or corporation holding the property appropriated by eminent domain to furnish thepublic with the use intended, and the public must be entitled to use or enjoy the property taken (Bauer v. County of Ventura (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 276, 284, 289 P.2d 1).

[Optional] E. Property Taken by Eminent Domain and Leased to Private Party Must Be Restricted to Public Use. When property taken by eminent domain is to be leased to a private party, the public entity must exercise strict control to guarantee that the private lessee is not using the property for purely private gain (City and County of San Francisco v. Ross (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 52, 57, 279 P.2d 529).

[Optional] F. Government Agencies Are Prohibited From Condemning Owner-Occupied Home to Transfer it to Another Private Owner or Developer. Cal. Const., art. I, § 19 expressly prohibits government agencies from using eminent domain to take an owner-occupied home to transfer it to another private owner or developer.

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an eminent domain action when (1) the defendant has raised the affirmative defense that the stated purpose is not a public use, and (2) the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to entry of judgment as a matter of law. This objection may be raised regardless of whether the plaintiff has adopted a resolution of necessity that satisfies the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.210-1245.270.

Optional Paragraph E should be used if the public entity appropriating property for a public use plans to lease the property to a private party and does not plan to exercise adequate control over the property to ensure that the property will be operated for a public use.

Optional Paragraph F should be used if the public entity appropriating an owner-occupied home for public use plans to transfer the property to a private party.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding

Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040 codifies the general principle that eminent domain proceedings are governed by the same rules of practice applicable to civil actions [see Felton Water Co. v. Superior Court (1927) 82 Cal. App. 382, 388, 256 P. 255] .

The rules of practice that govern civil actions generally may be found in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 307-1062.10. However, Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040 does not limit its incorporation of general rules to these statutes. Other statutes and many non-statutory rules of procedure may also be applicable to eminent domain proceedings. The intent of Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040 is to include as many rules of practice as are consistent with the efficient administration of the Eminent Domain Law, whether the rule refers to an action rather than a proceeding and despite the fact that a provision has not been applied to other special proceedings [Recommendation-- The Eminent Domain Law, 12 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1681 (1974)].

[b] Nonpublic Use as Ground for Objection

Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(b) specifies that a defendant may object to the right to take when the stated purpose is not a public use. This is based on the limitation of Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.010 that the power of eminent domain may be exercised to acquire property only for a public use. This provision is itself a reiteration of the basic constitutional limitation [see Cal. Const., art. I, § 19].

Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.010 also provides that when the Legislature provides by statute that a use or purpose is one for which the power of eminent domain may be exercised, this action is deemed to be a declaration by the Legislature that the use, purpose, object, or function is a public use. While this does not preclude judicial review to determine whether a proposed use is actually a public use [see, e.g., City & County of San Francisco v. Ross (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 52, 55, 279 P.2d 529] , the Legislature's determination will be accepted as controlling unless it is shown to be clearly erroneous and without reasonable foundation [The Housing Authority v. Dockweiler (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 437, 449-450, 94 P.2d 794 ; see County of Los Angeles v. Anthony (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 103, 106, 36 Cal. Rptr. 308] .

[c] Public Use

The United States Supreme Court has held that economic development constitutes a "public use" within the meaning of the Takings Clause of the Fifth Amendment [Kelo v. City of New London (2005) 545 U.S. 469, 125 S. Ct. 2655, 162 L. Ed. 2d 439]. However, states may impose "public use" requirements that are stricter than the federal baseline. In 2008, Cal. Const., art. I, § 19, which gives state and local government the power of eminent domain, was amended through the initiative process [Proposition 99 (effective June 4, 2008)] to expressly prohibit government agencies from using eminent domain to take an owner-occupied home to transfer it to another private owner or developer [Proposition 99, § 1 (effective June 4, 2008)]. Proposition 99 was enacted in response to Kelo v. City of New London [see Proposition 99, §§ 1(b), 2 (effective June 4, 2008)]. Furthermore, under California's redevelopment law, a governmental entity may only take land for economic development purposes in blighted areas [Health & Safety Code § 33030 et seq.; see Redevelopment Agency of Chula Vista v. Rados Bros. (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 309, 314, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 234].

In Bauer v. County of Ventura (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 276, 289 P.2d 1 , the plaintiffsowned real property located near a storm drain that was constructed by a county and a storm drain maintenance district. When the waters contained in the ditch overflowed upon and damaged the plaintiffs' property, they commenced an action to recover the resulting damages. The trial court's judgment of dismissal was based on its orders sustaining the demurrers of each defendant to the amended complaint.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment in favor of the county with directions to overrule its demurrers, and affirmed as to the other defendants. Noting that former Cal. Const., art. I, § 14 [now see Cal. Const., art. I, § 19] requires the payment of compensation when private property is taken for a public use, the Court defined "public use" as a use that concerns the whole community or promotes the general interest in its relation to any legitimate object of government. According to the Court, to make a use public in character, a duty must fall on the person or entity holding the property appropriated by eminent domain to furnish the public with the use intended, and the public must be entitled to use or enjoy the property taken (45 Cal. 2d 276, 284) .

In City and County of San Francisco v. Ross (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 52, 279 P.2d 529 , the plaintiff, the City and County of San Francisco, sought a writ of mandamus to compel defendant, the Controller of the City and County of San Francisco, to release funds allowing the city to acquire property under eminent domain for use as a public parking lot. The city planned to lease the property to private parties who would then build a parking garage to the city's specifications and operate parking and other facilities on the property. The city did not intend to directly regulate the rates of the parking facility or otherwise regulate the operation of the facility. The Controller's refusal to release the funds was based on his contention that the city could not condemn private property to be immediately leased to private parties for use as a private venture.

The Supreme Court denied the writ of mandamus. The Court considered Rhode Island and United States Supreme Court cases that had allowed the leasing of property taken by eminent domain to private parties. The Court distinguished these cases by pointing out that the public entities involved in them planned to maintain stringent control over the properties to ensure that the use of the property taken by eminent domain remained public. In the case at hand this control was lacking. The Court concluded that the leasing of the property to a private party without controls amounted to an exercise of the power of eminent domain for the purpose of "private gain and not public need."

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nonpublic Use as Ground for Objection

In Yeshiva Torath Emeth Academy v. University of So. Calif. (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 618, 25 Cal. Rptr. 422 , the plaintiff appealed entry of judgment in favor of the defendant after a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. The ground of the demurrer was that the complaint failed to state a cause of action in that the proposed condemnation was not for a public use as authorized by the Legislature. Plaintiff was a private educational institution for elementary grade students that sought to condemn property it was leasing from defendant so that it could continue to use the property. The court of appeal held that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1238(3), which authorized school districts to exercise the right of eminent domain over public buildings and grounds, did not apply to a private elementary school because the use was not a public one. Thus, the demurrer was properly sustained (208 Cal. App. 2d 618, 620) .

The issue of whether a taking is for a public use must be distinguished from the issue of necessity. Only the former is justiciable; the latter is conclusively established by the adoption of a resolution of necessity [People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Superior Court (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 206, 215, 65 Cal. Rptr. 342, 436 P.2d 342] .

[b] Public Use

Public use was an issue in City of Needles v. Griswold (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 1881, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 753 , a case in which a city obtained a preliminary injunction against two licensees and operators of a golf course owned by the city. The city exercised its option to terminate the operating license and, in response to the city's request for immediate relief, the trial court enjoined the licensees from preventing the city from taking possession of and using the licensees' private personal property (such as golf carts, trucks, office machines, etc.) purportedly necessary for the proper operation of the golf course.

The court of appeal held that the city had taken the licensees' personal property for a public purpose without the constitutionally required compensation. The court noted that the United States Constitution does not make a distinction between personal property and real property and modified the injunction accordingly (6 Cal. App. 4th 1881, 1891) .

The issue of public use also arose in City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 60, 183 Cal. Rptr. 673, 646 P.2d 835 , when the California Supreme Court ruled that the city could attempt to prove that its proposed acquisition of a professional football team, even if a subsequent sale to private parties was contemplated, was an appropriate exercise of its eminent domain power. Ultimately, it was held that the proposed taking unreasonably burdened interstate commerce, and the city was unsuccessful in its attempt to acquire the Raiders [see City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (1985) 174 Cal. App. 3d 414, 422, 220 Cal. Rptr. 153] .

Damages for the loss of personal property resulting from inverse condemnation were upheld in McMahan's of Santa Monica v. City of Santa Monica (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 683, 194 Cal. Rptr. 582 , and Aetna Life & Casualty Co. v. City of Los Angeles (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 865, 216 Cal. Rptr. 831 .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.61

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.61 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Defendant--Property Not Subject to Acquisition by Eminent Domain for Stated Purpose [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(e)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.60.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE PROPERTY DESCRIBED IN THE COMPLAINT IS NOT SUBJECT TO ACQUISITION BY THE POWER OF EMINENT DOMAIN FOR THE STATED PURPOSE.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. Summary Judgment. [See § 95.60, Paragraph B.]

C. Property Exempt From Condemnation for Certain Purposes. A defendant may object to the plaintiff's right to take when the described property is not subject to acquisition by the power of eminent domain for the stated purpose (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(e)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an eminent domain action when (1) the defendant has raised the affirmative defense that the described property is not subject to acquisition by the power of eminent domain for the stated purpose, and (2) the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to entry of judgment as a matter of law. This objection may be raised regardless of whether the plaintiff has adopted a resolution of necessity that satisfies the requirement of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.210-1245.270.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Property Exempt From Condemnation for Certain Purposes

Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(e) provides that a defendant may object if the property sought to be taken is not subject to acquisition by the power of eminent domain for the purpose specified in the complaint. For example, condemnation may not be utilized by a city to acquire an existing golf course for golf course purposes [Gov. Code § 37353(c)]. Similarly, cemetery land may not be taken for rights-of-way [Health & Safety Code §§ 8134, 8560, 8560.5].

The purpose for which the power of eminent domain may be exercised may be implied, however. Golden Gate Bridge Etc. Dist. v. Muzzi (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 707, 148 Cal. Rptr. 197 involved former Sts. & Hy. Code § 27166, which provided that the district "may have and exercise ... the right of eminent domain for the condemnation of any property, whether such property is already devoted to the same use or another public use, or otherwise, necessary to the exercise of the powers granted in this part, or in any provision of law, to the district" (emphasis omitted). These powers included the powers to "study, construct, acquire, improve, maintain, and operate any and all modes of transportation within or partly within the district, including, but not limited to water transportation" (83 Cal. App. 3d 707, 711-712) . In connection with the construction of a ferry terminal within a city, the district condemned between 589 and 600 acres of which 369-380 were tidelands (submerged) and the remaining 199-220 acres lay behind dikes. Of the area behind the dikes, about 60 acres were filled; the rest was low and marshy. The property was a short distance from the ferry terminal site. The resolution of public interest and necessity stated that the property was "suitable, adaptable, necessary, and required for public use" by the district "for the placement of dredged spoils incident to the construction of the district's Larkspur Ferry Terminal, for the implementation of recommended environmental mitigation measures, and for various transit purposes." The landowner argued that "environmental mitigation" was neither an expressed nor an implied public purpose justifying the condemnation.

In affirming the judgment of condemnation, the court of appeal held that the view that the power to condemn property for a water transportation system implicitly includes the power to condemn for necessary mitigation of the resulting environmental effects was consistent with the legislative intent and policy expressed in the California Environmental Quality Act [Pub. Res. Code § 21000 et seq.] (83 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713) . The court also noted the following limitation on this power to condemn, however: "In concluding that [district's] power to condemn for the construction, acquisition and operation of a water transportation system implicitly includes the power to condemn for environmental mitigation, we recognize this latter power only as to environmental mitigation necessitated by an authorized activity. The power to condemn for specified purposes does not implicitly include the power to condemn for general environmental purposes unrelated to the agency's powers" (83 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713) .

When property is already appropriated to a public use it may not be taken except for a more necessary or a compatible use [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240.510, 1240.610]. See § 95.62.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

156 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.62

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.62 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Defendant--Failure to Meet Requirements for Excess Condemnation [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.410], Condemnation for Compatible Use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510], or Condemnation for More Necessary Public Use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610] [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(f)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.60.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF SEEKS TO ACQUIRE THE DESCRIBED PROPERTY PURSUANT TO _____ [either SECTION 1240.410 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (EXCESS CONDEMNATION) OR SECTION 1240.510 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (CONDEMNATION FOR COMPATIBLE USE) or SECTION 1240.610 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE (CONDEMNATION FOR MORE NECESSARY PUBLIC USE)] BUT THE ACQUISITION FAILS TO SATISFY THE REQUIREMENTS OF THAT PROVISION.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. Summary Judgment. [See § 95.60, Paragraph B.]

C. Failure to Satisfy Statutory Requirements as Ground for Objection. A defendant may object to the plaintiff's right to take when the property described in the complaint is sought to be acquired pursuant to _____ [either Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.410 or Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.510 or Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.610] but the acquisition does not satisfy the requirements of that provision (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360(f)).

[EITHER]

D. Requirements for Excess Condemnation. Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.410, a public entity may exercise the power of eminent domain to acquire a remnant left after the acquisition of part of a larger parcel of property only when the remnant will be left in such a size, shape, or condition that it will be of little market value (Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.410).

[OR]

D. Requirements for Condemnation for Compatible Use. Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.510, a person authorized to acquire property for a particular use by eminent domain may exercise that power to acquire property appropriated to public use if the proposed use will not unreasonably interfere with or impair the continuance of the public use as it then exists or may reasonably be expected to exist in the future. When property is sought to be acquired in this manner, the complaint, and the resolution of necessity if one is required, must refer specifically to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.510 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510).

[OR]

D. Requirements for Condemnation for More Necessary Public Use. Pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure 1240.610, a person authorized to acquire property for a particular use by eminent domain may exercise that power to acquire property appropriated to public use if the use for which the property is sought to be taken is a more necessary public use than the use to which the property is appropriated. When property is sought to be acquired in this manner, the complaint, and the resolution of necessity if one is required, must refer specifically to Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.610 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610; see Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 773-774, 225 Cal. Rptr. 768).

[Optional] E. Nonauthorized Taking of Remnant. Excess property may not be taken _____ [either to avoid the cost and inconvenience of litigating the issue of damages or to preclude the payment of damages, even when the damages may be substantial or to coerce the condemnee to accept the price offered by the condemnor for the property actually needed for the public project or to coerce the condemnee into waiving severance or consequential damages to avoid an excess taking or to recoup damages by speculating as to the futuremarket value of the property] (see People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Superior Court (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 206, 213-214, 65 Cal. Rptr. 342, 436 P.2d 342).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an eminent domain action when (1) the defendant has raised the affirmative defense that the plaintiff is seeking to acquire property pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.410 (excess condemnation), Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510 (condemnation for compatible use), or Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610 (condemnation for more necessary public use) without satisfying the requirements imposed by the appropriate section, and (2) the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law. This objection may be raised regardless of whether the plaintiff has adopted a resolution of necessity that satisfies the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.210 through 1245.260.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Excess Condemnation

Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.410 sets forth the test to be applied by a court in determining whether a remainder or portion thereof is a remnant that may be acquired by eminent domain. The remnant must be such that its size, shape, or condition render it of little market value. This test is substantially the same one applied in People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Superior Court (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 206, 212-213, 65 Cal. Rptr. 342, 436 P.2d 342 .

The concept of "little market value" has various applications and a determination must depend on the facts of a particular case. Property may have little market value after the rest of the parcel is taken when, for example, it would be totally landlocked and no physical solution would be practical. This may also be the result when the size of the remaining property is reduced below the minimum required by zoning enactments for building purposes and it is not reasonably probable that there will be a zoning change. If the remnant would be of significant value to only one or a few persons, such as adjoining landowners, or it would be landlocked and have primarily a speculative value dependent on access being provided when adjacent land is developed at an unspecified time in the future, then it has little market value [Recommendations-- The Eminent Domain Law, 12 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1722 (1974)].

[b] Requirements for Condemnation for Compatible Use

Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510 governs condemnation for compatible use. When property is already appropriated to a public use it may be taken by eminent domain only if the proposed use is compatible with the existing use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510] or is more necessary than the existing use [Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610; see § 95.62[3][c]].

The requirement that the proposed use be compatible with the existing use continues the substance of prior law, which allowed condemnation for consistent uses [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 1240(3), (4), (6)]. Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510 does not contemplate displacement of the existing use by the proposed use, but it allows common utilization of the property when the proposed use will not unreasonably interfere with or impair the continuance of the existing use.

The facts and procedural background of Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 225 Cal. Rptr. 768 are discussed in § 95.62[3][c]. That case involved an eminent domain action brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610 (condemnation for more necessary public use). The court of appeal found that the complaint was fatally flawed and that the property owner's demurrer should have been sustained because the complaint (and the resolution of public need and necessity it incorporated by reference) did not contain the required reference to Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610 (180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 772-774) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.510 contains a comparable reference requirement, and counsel should expect a similar result to occur if the requirement is violated. In that case, however, the public entity will be permitted to correct the deficiency and to apply to the trial court for permission to file an amended complaint (180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 774) .

[c] Requirements for Condemnation for More Necessary Public Use

Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610 allows condemnation of property appropriated to a public use if the proposed use is a more necessary public use. The authority to condemn for a more necessary public use is independent of the authority to take for a compatible use, and vice versa. When property is taken under more necessary use authority, however, the defendant may be entitled to continue joint use of the property [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.630].

In Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. Superior Court (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 225 Cal. Rptr. 768 , a public utility district commenced an eminent domain action to acquire power transmission facilities that were owned by a utility company and devoted to a public use (i.e., the distribution of electric power). The complaint incorporated by reference the resolution of public need and necessity adopted by the district's board of directors. The utility company demurred on the ground, among others, that the district failed to comply with Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610 by neglecting to refer to that statute in the complaint and the incorporated resolution of necessity. The trial court overruled the demurrer and the utility company sought writ review (180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 772-773) .

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court (1) to vacate its order overruling the demurrer, and (2) to enter an order sustaining the demurrer with leave to amend. The court found that the complaint was fatally flawed because neither it nor the incorporated resolution of necessity complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.610. The court also ruled, however, that the district's board of directors could still take steps to correct that deficiency [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.255(c)], and that if they did so, the district could apply to the trial court for permission to file an amended complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.340] (180 Cal. App. 3d 770, 772, 774) .

[d] Nonauthorized Taking of Remnant

In People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Superior Court (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 206, 65 Cal. Rptr. 342, 436 P.2d 342 , the construction of a freeway resulted in a parcel of land becoming landlocked. The Department of Public Works sought to condemn that parcel (along with the land the freeway occupied) to avoid excessive severance damages that might have been awarded. The real parties in interest challenged the excess condemnation on the ground that taking property for such a purely economic purpose violated the constitutional requirement that a taking be for a public use. The trial court decided in favor of the real parties in interest, and ordered the complaint dismissed insofar as it sought to condem that landlocked parcel. The department then petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to proceed with the condemnation of the landlocked parcel and the land occupied by the freeway. The writ was granted.

The Supreme Court held that the trial court was required to proceed with the action to condemn the landlocked parcel, but that it should refuse to condemn the property if it found that the taking was not justified and was only to avoid excessive severance or consequential damages. The court stated that the economic benefit to the state must be clear in cases of excess condemnation. This condemnation is not authorized (1) any time the condemnee claims severance or consequential damages or (2) to coerce condemnees into either accepting whatever value the state offered for the property actually taken or waiving severance or consequential damages to avoid an excess taking. Nor is excess condemnation authorized for recoupment purposes.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.63

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.63 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Defendant--Resolution of Necessity Fails to Satisfy Requirements [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(a)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.60.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF IS A PUBLIC ENTITY AND HAS NOT ADOPTED A RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY THAT SATISFIES THE REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTIONS 1245.210 THROUGH 1245.270.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. Summary Judgment. [See § 95.60, Paragraph B.]

C. Failure to Adopt Resolution of Necessity as Prescribed as Ground for Objection. When the plaintiff is a public entity, the failure to adopt a resolution of necessity that satisfies the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.210 through 1245.270 is a ground for objection to the right to take (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(a)).

[EITHER]

D. Contents of Resolution Insufficient. A resolution of necessity does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.210 through 1245.270 when it fails to contain _____ [either a general statement of the public use for which the property is to be taken and a reference to the statute that authorizes the public entity to acquire the property by eminent domain or a description of the general location and extent of the property to be taken, with sufficient detail for reasonable identification or a declaration that the governing body of the public entity has found and determined that the public interest and necessity require the proposed project, that the proposed project is planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury, that the property described in the resolution is necessary for the proposed project, and that either the offer required by Government Code Section 7267.2 has been made to the owner or owners of record, or the offer has not been made because the owner cannot be located with reasonable diligence] (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.230).

[OR]

D. Failure to Provide Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard. A resolution ofnecessity does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.210 through 1245.270 if the governing body of the public entity has failed to provide each person whose property is to be acquired by eminent domain and whose name and address appears on the last equalized county assessment roll with notice and a reasonable opportunity to appear and be heard on the matters referred to in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1240.030 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(a); Redevelopment Agency v. Norm's Slauson (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1121, 1125, 219 Cal. Rptr. 365 ; City of Lincoln v. Barringer (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 1223-1224, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178).

[OR]

D. Lack of Two-Thirds Vote of All Members of Governing Body. A resolution of necessity does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.210 through 1245.270 when the resolution is not adopted by a vote of two thirds of all the members of the governing body of the public entity (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.240).

[OR]

D. Resolution Procured by Bribery. A resolution of necessity does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.210 through 1245.270 if a member of the governing body who voted in favor of the resolution received or agreed to receive a bribe involving adoption of the resolution and but for that conduct the resolution would not otherwise have been adopted (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.270(a)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an eminent domain action when the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff is a public entity and has not adopted a resolution of necessity that satisfies the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.210-1245.270. This objection may be raised because an invalid resolution of necessity is not conclusive as to the matters referred to in Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Adopt Resolution of Necessity as Prescribed as Ground for Objection

The ground for objection set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(a) applies only to public entities. It is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.040, which provides that a public entity may exercise the power of eminent domain only if it has adopted a resolution of necessity that meets the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.210-1245.270 [see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.220].

[b] Contents of Resolution Insufficient

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.230 lists the required contents of a resolution of necessity by a public entity. It supersedes various provisions that required a resolution of necessity by particular public entities.

The requirement of a general statement of the public use is satisfied by a statement that the public use is "right-of-way for a freeway" or "open space to be maintained in its natural condition" [Recommendation-- The Eminent Domain Law, 12 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1746 (1974)]. A statement that property is being acquired for the elimination of blight and for redevelopment purposes is also sufficient [Anaheim Redevelopment Agency v. Dusek (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 249, 263, 239 Cal. Rptr. 319] .

The description of the property to be taken that is required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.230 must be sufficiently precise so as to enable the owner to determine the physical extent of the taking and the interest sought [Recommendation-- The Eminent Domain Law, 12 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1746 (1974)].

The resolution is also required to contain a declaration that the governing body of the public entity has found and determined the existence of each of the four elements of public necessity required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030(c). See § 95.64.

[c] Failure to Provide Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(a) establishes the requirement that public entities must give notice to persons whose property is sought to be acquired by eminent domain and afford them a reasonable opportunity to appear and be heard before a resolution of necessity may validly be adopted.

This code provision sets forth a procedure that satisfies the requirement fornotice and hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(b), (c)], but the governing body may satisfy the requirements through any other procedure that gives reasonable written personal notice and a reasonable opportunity to appear and be heard [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(d)]. Thus, they may be combined with other administrative procedures such as those relating to environmental impact reports.

In Redevelopment Agency v. Norm's Slauson (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1121, 219 Cal. Rptr. 365 , the redevelopment agency instituted an action in eminent domain to take four lots that constituted a major portion of a restaurant's parking area. Its attempt to take the lots was preceded by an agreement between the agency and a developer by which the agency agreed to acquire the property for transfer to the developer so that the developer could build a condominium project thereon. Thereafter, the agency issued and sold tax exempt bonds to pay for the acquisition before conducting the hearing that led to the adoption of the resolution of necessity. The trial court found that the resolution was affected by a gross abuse of discretion and ruled that the agency had no right to take the property.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the requirement for a hearing prior to the adoption of a resolution of necessity implicitly includes the concept that the government agency must engage in good faith and judicious consideration of the pros and cons of the proposed taking, and that the decision to adopt a resolution of necessity must be buttressed by substantial evidence of the existence of the three basic requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030. In concluding that the hearing that led to the adoption of the resolution of necessity was a sham and that a predetermined result had merely been "rubber stamped," the court noted that by the time the hearing to determine the necessity for the proposed taking was held, the redevelopment agency had, by virtue of its contract with a developer and the issuance of revenue bonds, irrevocably committed itself to take the subject property, regardless of any evidence that might be presented at a hearing. The court opined that the redevelopment agency's hearing was affected not by just a gross abuse of discretion but by the prior elimination of any discretion whatsoever (173 Cal. App. 3d 1121, 1127) .

The facts of this case are an extreme example of abuse of discretion. Counsel seeking to challenge a resolution of necessity must be sure to search, through both formal and informal discovery, for more subtle evidence supporting a claim that a predetermined result was "rubber stamped" following a public hearing.

In City of Lincoln v. Barringer (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178 , the city filed a complaint in eminent domain alleging that 6,000 acres in the southeastern part of the city were the subject of a "Revised Twelve Bridges Specific Plan," and that development within the plan area required construction of extensive off-site improvements and the acquisition of easements, rights-of-way, and fee simple interests for such improvements. At the city's request and over defense objections, the trial court granted an Order for Immediate Possession pursuant to which the city took possession of the property interests described in the initial complaint and completed construction of the off-site improvement project. Defendants opposed the taking, claiming the resolution was invalid in part due to defective notice.

Defendants argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(b)(3), which provides that the "failure to file a written request to appear and be heard within 15 days after the notice was mailed will result in waiver of the right to appear and be heard," mandates that property owners are entitled to a minimum of 15 days before adoption of a resolution of necessity affecting their property. The court of appeal found that this argument was refuted by Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(d), which provides "[n]otwithstanding subdivision (b), the governing body may satisfy the requirements of this section through any other procedure that has given each person described in subdivision (a) reasonable written personal notice and a reasonable opportunity to appear and be heard on the matters referred to in Section 1240.030" (102 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 1225) . The court concluded that the procedure followed by the city, under which the defendants had actual notice 14 days before the hearing and written notice 11 days before the hearing, gave the defendants reasonable written personal notice and a reasonable opportunity to appear and be heard (102 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 1225) .

The defendants asserted that they had not attended the public hearing due to their belief that it would be futile to do so because the decision to condemn was already a "done deal," and that this meant that they had not been given a "reasonable and meaningful" opportunity to be heard as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235(d). The court stated that "reasonable opportunity" refers to the procedure of notice and hearing. The defendants' futility argument did not go to the notice and hearing procedure, and thus the defendants' asserted belief that it would be futile to attend the hearing did not establish a violation of § 1245.235(d) (102 Cal. App. 4th 1211, 1227) .

[d] Lack of Two-Thirds Vote of All Members of Governing Body

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.240 sets forth the general rule that a resolution of necessity must be adopted by a two-thirds vote of all of the members of the governing body of the public entity, not just two thirds of those present at the time of adoption, in order to be valid. Under prior law, it was unclear as to whether the requirement pertained to all members or just those present.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.240 continues the provision of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1241(2) that made the resolutions of many local public entities conclusive on necessity if the resolution was adopted by a two-thirds vote. It superseded the requirement for takings by the state that required only a majority vote [see, e.g., former Gov. Code § 15855]. More stringent voting requirements may be imposed by special statute, charter, or ordinance [see, e.g., Sts. & Hy. Code § 760 (four-fifths vote required for taking by county for state highway purposes)].

[e] Resolution Procured by Bribery

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.270 precludes condemnation when the resolution of necessity is procured by a bribe. A resolution might also be subject to attack under Gov. Code § 91003(b) when it was influenced by a conflict of interest, or under Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.255 when its content or adoption were influenced or affected by gross abuse of discretion by the governing body.

The degree of proof required to demonstrate bribery is not as stringent as that required in a criminal prosecution. However, if there has been a criminal prosecution based on the conduct, proof of conviction is conclusive evidence that such conduct occurred. Likewise, an acquittal or other dismissal of a criminal prosecution is conclusive evidence that the conduct did not occur. When a criminal action is pending, the court may exercise its discretion to take such actions as staying the eminent domain proceeding until the criminal case is resolved, permitting the proceeding to continue but reserving the issue of necessity, or permitting the case to proceed [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.270(b)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.64

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.64 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Defendant--Lack of Public Necessity [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(b)-(d)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.60.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE _____ [either THE PUBLIC INTEREST AND NECESSITY DO NOT REQUIRE THE PROPOSED PROJECT or THE PROPOSED PROJECT IS NOT PLANNED OR LOCATED IN THE MANNER THAT WILL BE MOST COMPATIBLE WITH THE GREATEST PUBLIC GOOD AND THE LEAST PRIVATE INJURY or THE PROPERTY DESCRIBED IN THE COMPLAINT IS NOT NECESSARY FOR THE PROPOSED PROJECT].

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. Summary Judgment. [See § 95.60, Paragraph B.]

[EITHER]

C. Project Not Required by Public Interest and Necessity as Ground for Objection. A defendant may object to the plaintiff's right to take when the public interest and necessity do not require the proposed project (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(b)).

[OR]

C. Project Not Planned or Located to Be Most Compatible With Greatest Public Good and Least Private Injury as Ground for Objection. A defendant may object to the plaintiff's right to take when the proposed project is not planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(c)).

[OR]

C. Property Not Necessary to Project as Ground for Objection. A defendant may object to the plaintiff's right to take when the property described in the complaint is not necessary for the proposed project (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(d)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an eminent domain action when the motion asserts that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law one of the following grounds: the public interest and necessity do not require the proposed project; the proposed project is not planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury; or the property described in the complaint is not necessary for the proposed project. These objections may be raised only when the plaintiff has not adopted a resolution of necessity because then these matters would not be conclusively established [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250(b)].

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Project Not Required by Public Interest and Necessity as Ground for Objection

Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030 generally requires that the necessity for a taking be established before property may be taken for a project by eminent domain. The word "project" applies to any type of public use regardless of whether the use is active (requiring construction of an improvement) or passive (requiring appropriation of property in unimproved condition) [Recommendation-- Eminent Domain Law, 12 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1699 (1974)].

The ground for objection set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(b) is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030(a), which restricts the exercise of the power of eminent domain to situations where the public interest and necessity require the project. Public interest and necessity include all aspects of the public good including social, economic, environmental, and aesthetic considerations [Recommendation--The Eminent Domain Law, Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1700 (1974)]. Under prior law, the necessity of a proposed improvement was not subject to judicial review; the decision of the condemnor on this factor was conclusive [see, e.g., City of Pasadena v. Stimson (1891) 91 Cal. 238, 253, 27 P. 604] . This is still true when a public entity has adopted a resolution of necessity [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250]. However, in the absence of such a resolution, lack of public interest and necessity is a ground for objection [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(b)].

[b] Project Not Planned or Located to Be Most Compatible With Greatest Public Good and Least Private Injury as Ground for Objection

The ground for objection found in Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(c) is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030, which prevents the taking of property by eminent domain unless the project is planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury. This provision generalizes the plan or location requirement found in former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1240(6) and 1242(a). The limitation has been described as "the necessity for adopting a particular plan" for a given project [People v. Chevalier (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 299, 307, 340 P.2d 598] .

Both the public good and private injury must be considered under this requirement. The condemnor's choice is correct unless another site would involve an equal or greater public good and a lesser private injury. When a different site would result in a lesser public good it cannot be counterbalanced by a lesser private injury [see Montebello etc. School Dist. v. Keay (1942) 55 Cal. App. 2d 839, 844, 131 P.2d 384] . A choice is not improper even though another location may involve an equal public good and an equal private injury [California Cent. R'y Co. v. Hooper (1888) 76 Cal. 404, 412-413, 18 P. 599] .

As a practical matter, determination of whether a project is planned or located in the manner most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury will almost always involve questions of fact. Prevailing on a motion for summary judgment on this ground absent very compelling facts may be nearly impossible. From a strategic point of view, a well drafted motion for summary judgment may compel the party opposing the motion to set forth all supporting evidence, thus aiding trial preparation even if the motion is denied. However, counsel must remain mindful of the potential ramifications of filing a frivolous motion.

[c] Property Not Necessary to Project as Ground for Objection

The ground for objection found in Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(d) is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030(c), which requires that the property or interest sought to be acquired be necessary for the proposed project.

The requirement of necessity does not mean that the proposed project would be impossible without taking the particular land, but merely that the land must be reasonably suitable and useful for the improvement [City of Hawthorne v. Peebles (1959) 166 Cal. App. 2d 758, 763, 333 P.2d 442] . Determination of whether property is necessary for a project will almost always involve questions of fact. It may be extremely difficult to prevail on a motion for summary judgment on this ground absent very compelling facts. Nevertheless, from a strategic point of view, a well drafted motion for summary judgment may compel the party opposing the motion to set forth all supporting evidence, thus aiding trial preparation even if the motion is denied. Counsel must remain mindful of the potential ramifications of filing a frivolous motion, however.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain

ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

159 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.65

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.65 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Defendant--Plaintiff's Failure to Satisfy Requirements for Resolution of Consent [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(e)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.60.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF IS A QUASI-PUBLIC ENTITY WITHIN THE MEANING OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 1245.320 AND THE LEGISLATIVE BODY OF THE _____ [either CITY or COUNTY] WHERE THE PROPERTY SOUGHT TO BE TAKEN IS LOCATED HAS NOT SATISFIED THE REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTIONS 1245.310 THROUGH 1245.390 GOVERNING THE ADOPTION OF A RESOLUTION CONSENTING TO THE ACQUISITION BY EMINENT DOMAIN.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. Summary Judgment. [See § 95.60, Paragraph B.]

C. Failure to Meet Requirements for Resolution of Consent as Ground for Objection. The failure of a plaintiff to satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.310 through 1245.390 is a ground for objection when the plaintiff is a quasi-public entity within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1245.320 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(e)).

[EITHER]

D. No Resolution of Consent. A quasi-public entity may not commence an eminent domain proceeding to acquire property until the legislative body of the city or county where the land is located has adopted a resolution consenting to that acquisition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.330).

[OR]

D. Contents of Resolution Insufficient. A resolution of consent does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.310 through 1245.390 if it fails to contain _____ [either a general statement of the public use for which the property is to be taken and a reference to the statute that authorizes the quasi-public entity to acquire the property by eminent domain or a description of the general location and extent of the property to be taken, with sufficient detail for reasonable identification or a declaration that the legislative body has found and determined that the public interest and necessity require the proposed project, the proposed project is planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest good and least private injury, the property described in the resolution is necessary for the proposed project, and the hardship to the quasi-public entity if the acquisition of the property by eminent domain is not permitted outweighs any hardship to the owners of the property] (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.340).

[OR]

D. Failure to Hold Hearing. A resolution of consent does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.310 through 1245.390 if the legislative body adopted it without first holding a hearing at which persons whose property is to be acquired by eminent domain had a reasonable opportunity to appear and be heard (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.350(a)).

[OR]

D. Inadequate Notice of Hearing. A resolution of consent does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.310 through 1245.390 if the legislative body failed to give adequate notice of the hearing concerning the resolution in that _____ [either notice was not sent to each person whose property is to be acquired and whose name and address appear on the last equalized county assessment roll or the notice did not state the time, place, and subject of the hearing or the notice was not mailed at least 15 days before the date of the hearing] (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.350(b)).

[OR]

D. Lack of Two-Thirds Vote of All Members of Legislative Body. A resolution of consent does not satisfy the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1245.310 through 1245.390 if the resolution is not adopted by a vote of two thirds of all the members of the legislative body (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.360).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an eminent domain action when the motion asserts that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff is a quasi-public entity and either (1) the legislative body of the city or county where the land sought to be acquired is located has not adopted a resolution consenting to the taking, or (2) the resolution that was adopted failed to meet the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.310 through 1245.390.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts present in the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Meet Requirements for Resolution of Consent as Ground for Objection

The ground of objection set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(e) applies onlyto quasi-public entities within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.320. It is based on Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.330, which provides that a quasi-public entity may not commence an eminent domain proceeding to acquire any property until the legislative body of the city or county has adopted a resolution consenting to the acquisition of the property by eminent domain.

[b] No Resolution of Consent

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.330 is part of a series of provisions dealing with the resolution of consent [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1245.310-1245.390]. The consent of the appropriate local public entity is required before a quasi-public entity may condemn property. "Quasi-public entity" is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.320 and does not include privately-owned public utilities [see Pub. Util. Code §§ 610-624] or other private persons. Consent must be obtained from the legislative body of each city in which the entity seeks to condemn property. When property is not located within city limits, the consent of the legislative body of the appropriate county must be secured [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.310]. The requirement of a resolution of consent is in addition to any other requirements imposed by law, such as those imposed by Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030 (requirement of necessity). The legislative body of the local public entity may decline to adopt a resolution of consent without a hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.350], and such a decision is not subject to appeal [Recommendation -- The Eminent Domain Law, 13 Cal. L. Rev. Comm'n Reports 1001, Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.330 (1975)].

[c] Contents of Resolution Insufficient

The resolution of consent must contain the information and determinations required of resolutions of necessity [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.230; see § 95.63[3][b]], and a finding of hardship to the condemnor that outweighs the hardship to the property owner [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.340(c)(4)].

[d] Failure to Hold Hearing and Inadequate Notice of Hearing

Unlike the hearing and notice requirements for a resolution of necessity, which may be satisfied by the statutory procedure or by any procedure that gives reasonable notice and an opportunity to appear and be heard [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.235], these requirements for a resolution of consent appear to be mandatory. In any case, there is no specific statutory authorization for utilization of any other procedure.

[e] Lack of Two-Thirds Vote of All Members of Legislative Body

Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.360, requiring a two-thirds vote of all members of the legislative body to adopt a resolution of consent, differs from the two-thirds vote requirement for a resolution of necessity in that it does not provide for more stringent voting requirements [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.240].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.66

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.66 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Inverse Condemnation Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.350]--By Defendant--Legally Erroneous Decision Resulting in Delay in Development Approval Does Not Constitute Compensable Taking

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.60]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE A LEGALLY ERRONEOUS DECISION BY DEFENDANT, WHICH RESULTED IN A DELAY IN THE APPROVAL PROCESS FOR PLAINTIFF'S DEVELOPMENT, WAS PART OF A REASONABLE REGULATORY PROCESS DESIGNED TO ADVANCE LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENTAL INTERESTS AND THEREFORE DID NOT CONSTITUTE A COMPENSABLE TEMPORARY TAKING OF PROPERTY.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 95.60 Paragraph B.]

B. Error During Development Approval Process Does Not Amount to Temporary Taking. An error by a governmental agency during the development approval process resulting in delay does not necessarily amount to a temporary taking compensable under the Fifth Amendment, even if the error in some way diminishes the value of the subject property, when the agency's action was part of a reasonable regulatory process designed to advance legitimate government interests (Landgate, Inc. v. California Coastal Com. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 1006, 1020-1021, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 953 P.2d 1188).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by the defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in an inverse condemnation action when the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of lawbecause any delay in the development approval process that was caused by a legally erroneous decision by the defendant was part of a reasonable regulatory process designed to advance legitimate government interests and therefore did not rise to the level of a compensable taking.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the delay was caused by a legally erroneous decision, which was part of a reasonable regulatory process designed to advance legitimate government interests.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Error During Development Approval Process Does Not Amount to Temporary Taking

In Landgate, Inc. v. California Coastal Com. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 1006, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 953 P.2d 1188 , in exchange for a dedication of portions of two long, narrow, side-by-side lots for a roadway easement, the county reconfigured the lots into a lot above the road and another lot below the road. Plaintiff bought the lot above the road. The Coastal Commission denied plaintiff a development permit on the bases of visual impacts, the amount of grading required, and the fact that the Commission had not approved the county's lot line adjustment on the parcel. Commission staff concluded that the lot line adjustment had been illegal, citing (1) Pub. Res. Code § 30106 ("development" requiring coastal development permit includes change in density or intensity of use of land, including lot splits), and (2) a state Attorney General memorandum concluding that a lot line adjustment is a form of a lot split. The staff concluded that the lot line adjustment here altered the intensity of development. Plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate asserting that the Commission had no jurisdiction over the lot line adjustment, and a complaint seeking damages for a taking. The trial court granted plaintiff's petition for writ of mandate, holding that the definition of development in Pub. Res. Code § 30106 did not include the lot line adjustment here. The court of appeal affirmed in an unpublished decision. The trial court subsequently denied the Commission's motion for summary judgment and granted plaintiff's motion for summary adjudication on the takings claim, holding that the Commission's erroneous assertion of permit jurisdiction over the lot line adjustment prevented plaintiff from making any economically viable use of the property before the Commission's approval of the project. It awarded plaintiff $155,657 in damages. The court of appeal affirmed the grant of summary adjudication. The Supreme Court granted review.

In reversing the court of appeal's decision, the Supreme Court held that a legally erroneous decision of a government agency during the development approval process resulting in delay does not necessarily amount to a taking even if the error in some way diminishes the property's value. If the error is of a particular constitutional type--the passage and enforcement of a law or regulation that deprives property of all value--the error is a compensable taking. However, government land use regulations and decisions that, despite their ultimately determined statutory defects, are part of a reasonable regulatory process designed to advance legitimate governmental interests, are not takings of property. In this case, the plaintiff failed to show that delay in approving its development application was due to anything other than a bona fide dispute over the legality of a lot line adjustment and the Coastal Commission's jurisdictional authority over the lot line adjustment. The delay was an incident of property ownership and not a taking of property (17 Cal. 4th 1006, 1020) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Error During Development Approval Process Does Not Amount to Temporary Taking

Landgate, Inc. v. California Coastal Com. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 1006, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 953 P.2d 1188 (discussed in § 95.66[3][a]) was distinguished by the court of appeal in Ali v. City of Los Angeles (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 246, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 458 , which held that a delay in issuing a demolition permit for a fire-damaged hotel that was caused by the city's enforcement of restrictions in its residential hotel ordinance despite the prohibitions of the Ellis Act [Gov. Code § 7060 et seq. (allowing landlords to go out of business by withdrawing their rental units from the market, provided the landlords comply with the Act's requirements)] constituted a temporary regulatory taking (77 Cal. App. 4th 246, 254-255) . The Ali court noted that Landgate cautioned that even if the agency action depriving the owner of all viable use occurs during the development process, and ostensibly serves a proper governmental purpose, it is not a "normal" delay in the process if it is so unreasonable from a legal standpoint as to be arbitrary (77 Cal. App. 4th 246, 254 , citing Landgate, Inc. v. California Coastal Com. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 1006, 1024, 1029, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 953 P.2d 1188). The Ali court stated that the defendant's attempt to enforce its residential hotel ordinance in violation of the Ellis Act was so unreasonable from a legal standpoint as to be arbitrary, not in furtherance of any legitimate governmental objective, and for no other purpose than to delay any development other than for a single-room-occupancy hotel. The court held, therefore, that the delay in demolition of the hotel was a temporary regulatory taking requiring compensation (77 Cal. App. 4th 246, 254-255).

In Calprop Corp. v. City of San Diego (2000) 77 Cal. App. 4th 582, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792 , the court of appeal held that a city's extended delay in making planning decisions with respect to a former military base on which the plaintiffs owned property did not constitute a taking (77 Cal. App. 4th 582, 600-601) . The court found that the record showed that the delay in adopting an updated plan for the area occurred while the city staff negotiated with the property owner's association over the impact and applicability of resource conservation measures for the area and while it considered the area for development as a landfill. The court concluded that the city was advancing important interests and that while the time the city took in negotiating over the conservation measures and considering the landfill development was lengthy, it was necessary under the circumstances. The court held that because the delay in developing a plan was therefore part of the normal regulatory process, it did not give rise to any takings claim (77 Cal. App. 4th 582, 600-601) .

Loewenstein v. City of Lafayette (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 718, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79 followed Landgate, Inc. v. California Coastal Com. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 1006, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 841, 953 P.2d 1188 (discussed in § 95.66[3][a]) in holding that a two-year delay in development precipitated by the city's erroneous action in denying an application for a lot line adjustment was not an unlawful temporary taking of private property for a public use (103 Cal. App. 4th 718, 733) . The city's reasons for rejecting the lot line revision application were based on concerns that the reduced area of the new parcels would not conform to the minimum lot size requirements for hillside lots, and that the application created a fifth lot in a duly restricted subdivision with improvements and utilities designed for four lots. The court concluded that even if the city incorrectly maintained that lot size and subdivision restrictions applied, the monitoring of density and hillside slope requirements were legitimate governmental interests (103 Cal. App. 4th 718, 732) . It held that the delay in the plaintiffs' development plans caused by the need for resolution of these threshold issues, and the trial court's subsequent determination that the city was mistaken, did not convert the pursuit of a reasonable policy into an unconstitutional taking (103 Cal. App. 4th 718, 733) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationGeneral OverviewReal Property LawInverse CondemnationProcedure

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
C. Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment

9-95 California Points & Authorities §§ 95.67-95.79

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

[Reserved]

§§ 95.67[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
D. Supporting Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.80

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.80 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--By Plaintiff--Excessive Damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)] and Insufficiency of Evidence to Justify Decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]--Severance Damages Awarded When Property Taken Was Not Part of Larger Parcel [Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(a)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL
vs.	Date: _____
_____ [name],	Time: _____
Defendant.	Location: _____
	[Judge: _____]
	Date Action Filed: _____
	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL FOLLOWING A DETERMINATION THAT EXCESSIVE DAMAGES WERE AWARDED OR THAT THERE WAS INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE TO JUSTIFY THE DECISION, AND THAT SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF DEFENDANT WERE MATERIALLY AFFECTED THEREBY, WHEN AFTER WEIGHING THE EVIDENCE THE COURT IS CONVINCED FROM THE ENTIRE RECORD, INCLUDING REASONABLE INFERENCES THEREFROM, THAT

THE _____ [either COURT or JURY] SHOULD HAVE REACHED A DIFFERENT DECISION BECAUSE SEVERANCE DAMAGES WERE AWARDED WHEN THE PROPERTY TAKEN WAS NOT PART OF A LARGER PARCEL.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. New Trial for Excessive Damages. A new trial may be granted on theground of excessive damages if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby and if, after weighing the evidence, the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the court or jury should have reached a different decision (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)).

C. New Trial for Insufficient Evidence. A new trial may be granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby and if, after weighing the evidence, the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the court or jury should have reached a different decision (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)).

D. Consideration of Sufficiency of Evidence. In considering the sufficiency of the evidence on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, it is the exclusive province of the trial court to judge the credibility of the witnesses, to determine the probative force of testimony, and to weigh the evidence, and the court may draw reasonable inferences from the foregoing that are opposed to those drawn by the trier of fact at the trial (Yarrow v. State of California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 434, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687).

E. Court Not Bound by Prior Rulings. In granting a new trial, the court is not bound by its prior rulings on questions of law or by its prior view of the evidence (Yarrow v. California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 437, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687).

[Optional] F. Duty to Grant New Trial When Jury Verdict Clearly Wrong. It is the duty of the court to grant a new trial when, after weighing the evidence, the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the jury clearly should have reached a contrary verdict (Weinman v. Gray (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 817, 819-821, 24 Cal. Rptr. 189).

G. Severance Damages. When the property acquired is part of a larger parcel, compensation must be awarded for the injury, if any, to the remainder (Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(a)).

H. Requisites for Unity of Property. Three elements must ordinarily be present to constitute unity of property: (1) unity of title; (2) contiguity; and (3) unity of use (People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Dickinson (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 934, 41 Cal. Rptr. 427).

[Optional] I. Lack of Unity of Title. The property acquired is not part of a larger parcel when the property is owned by different individuals (People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Dickinson (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 934, 41 Cal. Rptr. 427).

[Optional] J. Prospective Use as Insufficient to Overcome Lack of Contiguity. Severance damages are not allowed when the property is not contiguous and there is merely a possible or prospective, and not a presently existing, unity of use (People v. Ocean Shore Railroad (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 406, 424, 196 P.2d 570).

[Optional] K. Separation With No Access Rights as Defeating Contiguity. When parcels are separated by land held in fee title by another person and there are no direct access rights between the parcels, the properties are non-contiguous and an award for severance damages is improper (People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Fair (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 801, 808, 40 Cal. Rptr. 644).

[Optional] L. Lack of Unity of Use. When a parcel is set apart from the remainder of the property and is devoted to a different use, it is not part of a larger parcel and severance damages are improper (City of Stockton v. Marengo (1934) 137 Cal. App. 760, 767, 31 P.2d 467).

[Optional] M. Prospective Use as Insufficient. When land is devoted to separate uses at the time an eminent domain action is brought, a reasonable probability of combined use in the future is insufficient to meet the requirement of unity of use and severance damages are improper (City of Menlo Park v. Artino (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 261, 269-270, 311 P.2d 135).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial alleging an award of excessive damages and/or insufficiency of the evidence to justify an award of severance damages when the property taken was not part of a larger parcel.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts present in the case and the points of law stated. Additionally, counsel should submit affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c), (d)].

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, contentions set out in § 95.100 may be used to oppose the motion supported by this points and authorities.

[c] Related Jury Instructions

For jury instructions on severance damages, see Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions, CACI Nos. 3511, 3512 (LexisNexis Matthew Bender, Official Publisher), also available in LexisNexis Automated Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consideration of Sufficiency of Evidence

Yarrow v. State of California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687 , was an action for damages for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiffs when their car went out of control while attempting to avoid a collision with a state-owned bulldozer engaged in construction work on the highway. There was a conflict in the evidence as to the negligence of the state employees and there was some evidence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiffs. After the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiffs, defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence was granted. Plaintiffs appealed the order.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The Court held that only when there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment will an appellate court reverse an order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. It is within the exclusive province of the trial court to judge the credibility of the witness, to determine the probative force of testimony, and to weigh the evidence, and it may draw reasonable inferences from the foregoing that are opposed to those drawn by the trier of fact at the trial (53 Cal. 2d 427, 434) .

[b] Court Not Bound by Prior Rulings

The factual background of Yarrow v. State of California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687 , is discussed in § 95.80[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that in granting a new trial the court was not bound by its prior rulings on questions of law or its prior view of the evidence (53 Cal. 2d 427, 437) .

[c] Duty to Grant New Trial When Jury Verdict Clearly Wrong

Weinman v. Gray (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 817, 24 Cal. Rptr. 189 , involved an action and cross action to recover for damage to property arising out of a collision of automobiles. The jury found against each of the parties and the court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis that the evidence did not justify the verdict. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that it was not only the right but the duty of the trial judge to grant a new trial when he believed that the evidence did not justify the verdict (206 Cal. App. 2d 817, 819) .

[d] Severance Damages

Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(a) indirectly limits the award of severance damages to instances when the property acquired is part of a larger parcel.

[e] Requisites for Unity of Property

People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Dickinson (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 41 Cal. Rptr. 427 , involved a proceeding to condemn, for highway purposes, part of a parcel owned by one defendant and all of another parcel owned by the second defendant. The two tracts were separated by a distance of about 500 feet but were connected by a nonpublic road over which one of the defendants owned an easement of way. Both parcels were leased and utilized for an automobile salvage and wrecking business by a partnership comprised of the two defendants. The court entered judgment denying the defendants severance damages.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of severance damages. While finding that there was unity of use, the court also ruled that there was no unity of title since the partners retained the parcels in individual ownership, effecting by the lease the right of the use for the partnership (230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 934) . Also lacking was the element of contiguity. The general rule is that when parcels are noncontiguous and are separated by property to which parties other than the condemnee hold the fee, they are not a single parcel merely because of unity of use. The defendants could not unite by an easement two parcels 500 feet apart with the intervening land owned in fee by other persons. The court suggested that the type of easement might affect a determination of contiguity (230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 934-936) .

An exception to the general rule requiring unity of property for an award of severance damages was stated by the California Supreme Court in City of Los Angeles v. Wolfe (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 326, 336, 99 Cal. Rptr. 21, 491 P.2d 813 . The defendants in that case sought severance damages following the condemnation of their parking facility, which was near, but not physically contiguous with, their commercial building. The Court held that the facts made a showing of constructive, or legal, contiguity. For a complete discussion of Wolfe, see § 95.100[3][a] and [b].

[f] Lack of Unity of Title

The factual background of People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Dickinson (1964) 230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 41 Cal. Rptr. 427 , is discussed in § 95.80[3][e]. The court of appeal noted that under certain circumstances land held in the names of individual partners could be found to be partnership property, but that land is not necessarily partnership property merely because it is used for partnership purposes. In this case, the existence of the lease showed that the partners retained the parcels in individual ownership and thus there was no unity of title (230 Cal. App. 2d 932, 934) .

[g] Prospective Use as Insufficient to Overcome Lack of Contiguity

In People v. Ocean Shore Railroad (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 406, 196 P.2d 570 , the state brought an action in eminent domain to condemn property for highway purposes. The defendant appealed in part from a judgment denying severance damages for a portion of the property. The property taken was located north of Sharp Park and the property for which the defendant sought severance damages was south of the park and was not contiguous. The defendant had formerly possessed an easement across Sharp Park, but there was evidence that it was lost by abandonment (or nonuse) when the company removed its tracks and represented that it was no longer a public utility.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. The Court stated that it was for the trier of fact to determine whether the right-of-way was abandoned and the easement terminated (32 Cal. 2d 406, 418) . The trial court found that abandonment and termination had occurred; thus, the parcels were not contiguous. The defendant urged that the parcels north and south of Sharp Park were inseparable in use and should be considered in the nature of a single parcel for purposes of severance damages. The Court stated that the mere fact that there was a possible or prospective use of separate properties as a unit, or that they were susceptible to a common use, did not justify the allowance of severance damages (32 Cal. 2d 406, 423) .

[h] Separation With No Access Rights as Defeating Contiguity

People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Fair (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 801, 40 Cal. Rptr. 644 , was an eminent domain action to condemn property for freeway purposes. The plaintiff appealed the portion of the judgment holding that the special benefits to property on the east side of the highway should not be offset against the severance damages accruing to the property on the west side. The plaintiff argued that all of the property taken was part of the same larger parcel. Prior to this action, the defendants' property had been divided by a highway owned in fee by the state. Defendants' lands did not have access rights directly to the highway but did have access rights to a road that intersected the highway at a grade and thus served to provide access between the land on either side of the highway. The special benefits found were predicated on the access that defendants' property on the east side would acquire to the new frontage road; the severance damages were based on the loss of direct access to the road by defendants' remaining property on the west side of the highway.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the two parcels were not part of a larger parcel (229 Cal. App. 2d 801, 808) . The parcels were separated by the intervening fee title of the state and there was no unlimited direct access between the parcels. The court distinguished cases where the intervening land was only an easement and where there was a taking of direct access rights.

[i] Lack of Unity of Use

City of Stockton v. Marengo (1934) 137 Cal. App. 760, 31 P.2d 467 , involved an action in eminent domain to condemn a strip of land for extension of a street. The tract through which the street was to be extended consisted of several acres of land. All of this land was used by the defendants for the purpose of farming except for one corner of the tract. That corner, consisting of two lots, was separated from the balance of the tract by a fence and was occupied by a gas station, which was leased to a third party. The condemned strip of land cut across that corner, forming a shortcut between two streets that bypassed the gas station. The effect of the construction of the street extension would have been to divert a large proportion of the traffic and thus depreciate the value of the gas station property. Both parties appealed from the judgment for damages entered pursuant to a jury verdict. The plaintiff argued that the court erred in holding that the entire tract of defendants' land constituted but one parcel.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the ground that the trial court erred in considering the lots operated as a gas station as part of the balance of defendants' property. The larger portion of the tract was used solely for farming purposes. The gas station property was separated from the balance of the tract by a fence and was set apart from the tract to be used exclusively for the operation of another business. It had been actually used for several years for operating a gas station. The gas station property was not part of the larger parcel of which the condemned property was a part, and the decrease in its rental value could not be included in the assessment of severance damages (137 Cal. App. 760, 766-767) .

[j] Prospective Use as Insufficient

In City of Menlo Park v. Artino (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 261, 311 P.2d 135 , the plaintiff sought to condemn land for the construction of parking areas. Defendants appealed from the judgment for damages. The appeal was based in part on the trial court's directing the jury to disregard all evidence of severance damages as to a certain parcel. This parcel was contiguous to two other parcels also owned by the defendants that were taken in the eminent domain proceeding. The defendants argued that severance damages should have been allowed based on the reasonable probability of the combined use of all three lots in the near future for commercial purposes. The defendants' expert witness testified that these three lots were the only piece of land of that size left on that street under one ownership that were not commercially improved. At the time of the action, each of the three lots had a separate dwelling on it. There was no evidence introduced that showed any intention to use the three lots in any manner other than as individual rental properties as they were being used.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court stated that since the lots were used separately there was no unity of use. Unity of use cannot be onlyprospective; to recover severance damages the loss in market value claimed must directly and proximately flow from the taking. Damage that is speculative, remote, imaginary, contingent, or merely possible cannot serve as a legal basis for recovery (151 Cal. App. 2d 261, 270) .

Counsel should be aware of the contradictory holding in City of San Diego v. Neumann (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 738, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480, 863 P.2d 725 . The facts and procedural background of that case are discussed in § 95.100[3][f]. Neumann held that separate but contiguous legal parcels in common ownership currently devoted to diverse uses may be aggregated and considered as a "larger parcel" for purposes of proving entitlement to severance damages when the owner establishes a reasonable probability that all of the contiguous commonly owned lots will be available for development or use as an integrated economic unit in the reasonably foreseeable future (6 Cal. 4th 738, 756) . The dissent strongly criticizes the majority opinion with the somewhat valid accusation that the majority arrived at a "doubtful conclusion that the rule they adopt is not precluded by precedent." The dissent further argues that the new rule stated by the majority will require California taxpayers to compensate owners of condemned parcels for speculative claims based on possible development. Not only may this encourage claims and litigation, but the successful owner will receive the benefits of a project without any of the attendant risks. The dissent concludes by stating that this decision mandates that California taxpayers are being ordered to pay for a dream.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
D. Supporting Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.81

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.81 Supporting Motion for New Trial in Eminent Domain Action--By Plaintiff--Benefits Not Deducted From Damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(b)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.80.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL BECAUSE THE BENEFITS ACCRUING TO THE REMAINDER WERE REASONABLY CERTAIN, IMMEDIATE, AND NONSPECULATIVE, AND THUS SHOULD HAVE BEEN DEDUCTED FROM THE DAMAGES IN DETERMINING THE AMOUNT OF SEVERANCE DAMAGES.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. New Trial for Excessive Damages. [See § 95.80, Paragraph B.]

C. New Trial for Insufficient Evidence. [See § 95.80, Paragraph C.]

D. Consideration of Sufficiency of Evidence. [See § 95.80, Paragraph D.]

E. Court Not Bound by Prior Rulings. [See § 95.80, Paragraph E.]

[Optional] F. Duty to Grant New Trial When Jury Verdict Clearly Wrong. [See § 95.80, Paragraph F.]

G. Severance Damages. [See § 95.80, Paragraph G.]

H. Compensation After Offsetting Benefit. Compensation for injury to the remainder is the amount of the damage to the remainder reduced by the amount of the benefit to the remainder (Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(b)).

I. Offset of All Reasonably Certain, Immediate, and Nonspeculative Benefits. All benefits to the remainder that are reasonably certain, immediate, and nonspeculative must be offset against an award for severance damages (Los Angeles Co. Metropolitan Transp. Auth. v. Continental Development Corp. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 694, 716-718, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 941 P.2d 809).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial alleging an award of excessive damages and/or insufficiency of the evidence to justify an award of severance damages when the benefits to the remainder were not deducted from the damages in determining the amount of severance damages.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may refer to the allegations in the complaint that establish that there were benefits to the remainder that were reasonably certain, immediate, and nonspeculative.

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, contentions set out in § 95.101 may be used to oppose the motion supported by this form.

[c] Related Jury Instructions

For a jury instruction on severance damages and an offset for benefits, see Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions, CACI No. 3512 (LexisNexis Matthew Bender, Official Publisher), also available in LexisNexis Automated Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compensation After Offsetting Benefit

Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410 requires that the amount of the benefit to the remainder be subtracted from the amount of damage to the remainder to determine the amount of compensation. If the amount of the benefit equals or exceeds the amount of the damage, no compensation can be awarded. If the amount of the benefit exceeds the amount of damage, the excess must be deducted from the compensation awarded for loss of goodwill [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.510] but not from any other award [Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(b)].

Damage to the remainder is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.420; benefit to the remainder is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.430.

[b] Offset of All Reasonably Certain, Immediate, and Nonspeculative Benefits

In Los Angeles Co. Metropolitan Transp. Auth. v. Continental Development Corp. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 694, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 941 P.2d 809 , the plaintiff brought an eminent domain proceeding to acquire three interests in a small part of the defendant's property. The interests consisted of an air rights easement for the area in which an elevated rail line was to be constructed, a construction easement located under the air rights easement, and a small area taken in fee. When the suit was filed, the property was unimproved, but by the time of trial, the defendant had constructed a four-story office building on the site. Before trial, the court conducted a hearing to determine whether the plaintiff would be permitted to present evidence on the issue of severance damages. This evidence indicated that proximity to a transit station, which was to be constructed as part of the rail line project, was a special benefit that enhanced the value of the defendant's remaining property. After hearing expert testimony to the effect that the value of buildings within walking distance of transit stations in other cities was enhanced due to the proximity to the stations, the court ruled that such a benefit is merely the benefit of access. As such, the court concluded, it confers no peculiar or unique benefit on the defendant's property. Accordingly, the court declined to permit introduction of evidence or cross-examination on the subject of any enhancement in value to the defendant's property resulting from its proximity to the new station. The jury returned a general verdict that included a substantial severance damage award. The plaintiff moved for a new trial contending, among other things, that the trial court erred in refusing to admit evidence of enhanced value to the defendant's property resulting from proximity to a transit station, and in failing to instruct the jury to state separately in its verdict the amount of any benefits resulting from proximity to the station. The plaintiff's motion was denied.

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment, but the Supreme Court granted review and reversed. The Court overruled the long-standing distinction between general and special benefits announced in Beveridge v. Lewis (1902) 137 Cal. 619, 623-624, 70 P. 1083 (16 Cal. 4th 694, 718) , pursuant to which only special benefits could be offset against severance damages. Under the Beveridge analysis, general benefits consist of an increase in value that is common to the community generally from advantages that will accrue to the community from the improvement. They are conjectural, incapable of estimation. Special benefits are those that result from the mere construction of the improvement. They are peculiar to the condemned property and can be evaluated with reasonable certainty. Thus, general and special benefits have been distinguished along two distinct dimensions: generality versus peculiarity, and conjecture versus certainty. In Los Angeles Co. Metropolitan Transp. Auth. v. Continental Development Corp., the Court revisited this distinction and noted that it does not resolve whether a reasonably certain, nonspeculative, nonconjectural enhancement that is not peculiar to the property in question, but is shared by a number of properties in the neighborhood, can nevertheless constitute a special benefit and therefore constitute an offset against severance damages (16 Cal. 4th 694, 707). The Court overruled the decision in Beveridge to the extent that it holds that only special benefits may be offset against severance damages. Instead, the Court adopted a rule permitting the offset of all reasonably certain, immediate, and nonspeculative benefits. Thus, in determining a defendant's entitlement to severance damages, the Court held that the jury must consider competent evidence that is relevant to any conditions caused by the project that affect the remainder property's fair market value, provided that evidence is neither conjectural nor speculative (16 Cal. 4th 694, 716-718).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Severance Damages

In San Diego Gas & Electric Co. v. Daley (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1334, 253 Cal. Rptr. 144 , the court of appeal found that the following are all compensable as direct damages pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(a): impairment of view, restriction of access, increased noise, invasion of privacy, unsightliness of the project, lack of maintenance of an easement, and nuisances in general, such as trespassers and safety risks (205 Cal. App. 3d 1334, 1345) .

Commerce City v. National Starch & Chemical Corp. (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 1, 173 Cal. Rptr. 176 , was a condemnation action in which a city took defendants' right-of-way and slope easement that bisected industrial property owned by defendants for street purposes. The court of appeal found that the trial court properly considered evidence of accelerated depreciation of fixtures and equipment used in defendants' plant for manufacturing adhesives for the purpose of determining severance damages to the remainder parcel because (1) the originalparcel was a special use property, and (2) defendants, by virtue of the taking, lost the opportunity to sell their property as an adhesives manufacturing plant. Further, there was ample evidence to support the trial court's findings that the remaining life of the machinery and fixtures was reduced to six years and to support the court's use of the calculations of severance damages based on this determination (118 Cal. App. 3d 1, 18-19) .

Placer County Water Agency v. Hofman (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 890, 211 Cal. Rptr. 894 , was an action in which the court held that legal and engineering expenses incurred by owners attempting to compel a county water agency to comply with an environmental impact report were incurred to alter the taking of the owners' land rather than to mitigate damages caused by the taking. Therefore, the expenses could not be recovered as condemnation damages pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.420 (165 Cal. App. 3d 890, 903) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
D. Supporting Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities §§ 95.82-95.99

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

[Reserved]

§§ 95.82[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
E. Opposing Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.100

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.100 Opposing Plaintiff's Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--Excessive Damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)] and Insufficiency of Evidence to Justify Decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]--Property Taken Was Part of Larger Parcel [Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.410(a)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION
vs.	)	FOR NEW TRIAL
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____

_____

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE IS SUFFICIENT TO PROVE THAT THE PROPERTY TAKEN WAS PART OF A LARGER PARCEL AND THE AWARD OF SEVERANCE DAMAGES IS PROPER.

[Optional] A. Constructive Contiguity as Sufficient. Actual physical contiguity is not required if there is constructive or legal contiguity and a strong showing of interdependent present use (City of Los Angeles v. Wolfe (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 326, 336, 99 Cal. Rptr. 21, 491 P.2d 813).

[Optional] B. Factors in Determining Constructive Contiguity. In determining whether lands that are physically separated should be treated as constructively contiguous, all relevant facts must be analyzed and considered, including the degree of access before and after the taking, ownership of the underlying fee of the separating property, and the unified use or lack of diversity of use of the separated parcels (City of Los Angeles v. Wolfe (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 326, 335, 99 Cal. Rptr. 21, 491 P.2d 813).

[Optional] C. Separation by Easement With Free Access as Not DefeatingContiguity. If land is crossed by an easement for a street or highway that is in actual use but that permits unlimited access at all points, the sections are contiguous and severance damages may be awarded (People v. Thompson (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 13, 23-25, 271 P.2d 507).

[Optional] D. Failure to Use as Not Defeating Unity of Use. A failure to use some of the property, as opposed to diversity or division of use, does not defeat a finding of unity of use (People v. Thompson (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 13, 26, 271 P.2d 507).

[Optional] E. Subdivision Plan as Not Defeating Unity of Property. If several contiguous lots or tracts are used for one general purpose by a common owner, they constitute one parcel, even when the land is platted and a subdivision map is filed (City of Stockton v. Marengo (1934) 137 Cal. App. 760, 765-766, 31 P.2d 467).

[Optional] F. Unity of Property Exists When All Contiguous Lots Will Be Available for Development or Use as Integrated Economic Unit. Separate lots may be considered as a single larger parcel when the landowner establishes a reasonable probability that all of the contiguous commonly owned lots are or will be available for development or use as an integrated economic unit in the reasonably foreseeable future (City of San Diego v. Neumann (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 738, 756, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480, 863 P.2d 725).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the basis of excessive damages and/or insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision when the defendant argues that the property taken was part of a larger parcel.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 95.80.

[c] Related Jury Instructions

For jury instructions on severance damages, see Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions, CACI Nos. 3511, 3512 (LexisNexis Matthew Bender, Official Publisher), also available in LexisNexis Automated Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constructive Contiguity as Sufficient

In City of Los Angeles v. Wolfe (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 326, 99 Cal. Rptr. 21, 491 P.2d 813 , the defendants erected a commercial building on a parcel they owned. Thereafter, the city enacted a zoning ordinance requiring that parking be provided within 750 feet of a commercial building. Under the ordinance, if parking space for a preexisting building was insufficient, it could continue to operate as a nonconforming building, but could not be altered or enlarged. Defendants' building was such a nonconforming building. To remedy this situation, defendants purchased a second parcel that was not physically contiguous to the first parcel but that was well within 750 feet of it. Defendants had access over the public roads between their parcels. The city then brought an action to condemn several parcels of property for public off-street parking, including the defendants' second parcel. Because the loss of this parcel would subject the defendants to more restrictive zoning, the defendants claimed a right to severance damages. The court of appeal held that there was a single taking, denied the claim, and entered judgment for the fair market value of the second parcel only.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings on the issue of severance damages. The Court held that the special circumstances of the case brought it within the exception to the usual requirement of physical contiguity. When the facts demonstrate constructive or legal contiguity, a strong showing of interdependent present use, and unity of ownership, the case falls within an exception to the requirement of physical contiguity (6 Cal. 3d 326, 336) .

For coverage of the general requirement of physical contiguity, see § 95.80[3][e] and [g].

[b] Factors in Determining Constructive Contiguity

The factual background of City of Los Angeles v. Wolfe (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 326, 99 Cal. Rptr. 21, 491 P.2d 813 , is discussed in § 95.100[3][a]. The Supreme Court stated that the degree of access before and after the taking, who owns the underlying fee of the separating property, and the unified use or lack of diversity of use of the separated parcels are all relevant facts to be considered indetermining whether unity exists for purposes of a claim for severance damages (6 Cal. 3d 326, 335) .

[c] Separation by Easement With Free Access as Not Defeating Contiguity

In People v. Thompson (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 13, 271 P.2d 507 , an eminent domain proceeding was brought to condemn part of defendants' land for enlargement of a highway and to obtain a fee interest in a presently existing easement. The judgment granted severance damages to the defendants and the plaintiff appealed. The defendants owned a parcel of land through which ran a highway easement. As the roadway existed at the time the action commenced, the defendants had unlimited access back and forth across it from any part of their parcel to any other part. Construction of the proposed improvement (i.e., widening the highway and erecting a fence) would sever the defendants' remaining property into separate parcels, and the right of access would be substantially impaired. The defendants' expert witnesses testified that cutting off the free passage across the old highway would lessen the value of the property for development as a unit for residential and business purposes. The Supreme Court held that the existence of the highway easement with free access across it did not constitute a true or complete separation and that the land taken was part of a larger parcel, thus entitling the defendant to severance damages (43 Cal. 2d 13, 23-25) .

[d] Failure to Use as Not Defeating Unity of Use

The factual background of People v. Thompson (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 13, 271 P.2d 507 , is discussed in § 95.100[3][c]. Some of the property involved was undeveloped and part was used for agricultural purposes. The Supreme Court noted that this situation, involving a failure to use some of the property, differed from cases where there was actual diversity or division of use. Simple nonuse does not negate the existence of unity of use (43 Cal. 2d 13, 26) .

[e] Subdivision Plan as Not Defeating Unity of Property

City of Stockton v. Marengo (1934) 137 Cal. App. 760, 31 P.2d 467 , involved an action in eminent domain to condemn a strip of land for extension of a street. Both parties appealed from the judgment for damages entered pursuant to a jury verdict. The land taken divided the remaining land into two sections. With the exception of a portion used for a gas station [see § 95.80[3][i]], the tract as a whole was used for farming. The tract had been platted and a map of the subdivision project was filed, but the land was continuously farmed as one parcel without regard to the subdivision plan. The court of appeal upheld the part of the judgment that awarded severance damages for the loss in value to this farmland, stating that the mere fact that the tract was mapped and platted for future prospective sales did not necessarily determine its identity as separate parcels. If the lots are used as one tract by a common owner, the owner may recover severance damages (137 Cal. App. 760, 765-766) .

[f] Unity of Property Exists When All Contiguous Lots Will Be Available for Development or Use as Integrated Economic Unit

In City of San Diego v. Neumann (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 738, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 480, 863 P.2d 725 , Neumann owned a trailer park and two parcels that jutted out from the trailer park and abutted San Ysidro Boulevard. The two parcels were not used for access to the park and were leased for separate businesses. The city brought an action to condemn the two parcels to widen the street. At trial, Neumann claimed that all the parcels together were suitable for commercial development as a shopping center and that the condemnation of the adjacent parcels damaged the trailer park's value because of the loss of access to San Ysidro Boulevard. Neumann had no plans to undertake this project, but hoped instead to sell the entire property to a developer. The trial court held that Neumann was not entitled to severance damages for the trailer park because there was no present unity of use between the separate parcels. The court of appeal reversed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal. The Court found that the measure of compensation for property taken for public use is the fair market value, which is the highest price on the date of valuation that would be agreed to by a buyer and seller, each dealing with the other with full knowledge of all the uses and purposes for which the property is reasonably adaptable and available (6 Cal. 4th 738, 744) . When the property taken is part of a larger parcel, the property owner must also be compensated for the injury to the part that remains. Traditionally, three requirements must be met to establish that the land remaining is part of a larger parcel: unity of title, contiguity of the parcels, and unity of use (6 Cal. 4th 738, 745) . The Court found that only unity of use was at issue. However, the Court also determined that the courts have not always insisted on strict application of the three unities to find that a "larger parcel" exists, and that the courts have been flexible in applying the title and contiguity requirements (6 Cal. 4th 738, 746) . The Court then examined the existing California authorities on severance damages and concluded that they did not preclude it from considering whether severance damages may be awarded based on a prospective integrated use of several parcels. The Court noted that City of Stockton v. Marengo (1934) 137 Cal. App. 760, 31 P.2d 467 [see § 95.100[3][e]], is the case often cited as the original source for the rule that there must be actual unity of use. However, the Court also found that the owner in that case did not contend that future uses were relevant (6 Cal. 4th 738, 749) . In City of Los Angeles v. Wolfe (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 326, 99 Cal. Rptr. 21, 491 P.2d 813 [see § 95.100[3][a]], the Court allowed an award for severance damages when the parcels were not contiguous because of the parcels' interdependence in use for parking.

In addition, the Court found that certain broad statements in People v. Ocean Shore Railroad (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 406, 196 P.2d 570 [see § 95.80[3][j]], which indicated that the possibility of joinder ofparcels had no bearing on the allowance of severance damages, were based on no cited authority and have not been followed. The Court also noted that other jurisdictions and authorities, including Nichols on Eminent Domain [see 4A Nichols on Eminent Domain, § 14B.03 (Matthew Bender)], have recognized that reasonably prospective future use may be used to satisfy the unity of use requirement (6 Cal. 4th 738, 749-755) .

The Court further stated that it has long recognized that future use may affect the present value of real property. The statutory definition of fair market value acknowledges that it includes uses to which the property is adaptable and available. The Court's recognition that the present value of property may reflect its development potential was nothing more than an acknowledgment of the realities of the marketplace. These realities suggest that the Court acknowledge an economic fact, i.e., that contiguous property held in common ownership but devoted to separate uses may nonetheless be valued by the market for an integrated use. When the government impairs that integrated use by taking some of the property, the remaining property declines in value. The Court held that if the landowner establishes that there is a reasonable probability that his or her contiguous commonly owned lots are or will be available for development or use as an integrated economic unit in the reasonably foreseeable future, all of the separate lots may be considered as a larger parcel for purposes of awarding severance damages (6 Cal. 4th 738, 756) . The Court found that the facts relevant to this proof will typically include evidence of the existing uses of the property, the time and expense necessary for their termination, the physical adaptability of the property for use as an integrated whole, the existing and proposed zoning, local market conditions, the local regulatory climate, and the property owner's plans for development (6 Cal. 4th 738, 757) .

Counsel arguing that the reasonable probability for future development mandates entitlement to severance damages should carefully consider the factors listed at the end of the majority opinion and note that the Supreme Court stated that trial courts may consider the distinct factual issues present in each case.

For coverage of the strongly-worded dissent in Neumann, see § 95.80[3][j].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Separation by Easement With Free Access as Not Defeating Contiguity

In People v. Chastain (1960) 180 Cal. App. 2d 805, 4 Cal. Rptr. 785 , an eminent domain proceeding was instituted to condemn for freeway purposes certain farming lands owned by the defendant and located on both sides of a highway. Defendant's motion for a new trial was denied and he appealed. The proposed improvements to the existing highway would result in depriving the defendant of free passage over the road, i.e, defendant's degree of access would be reduced after the state made the highway into a limited access freeway. The trial court refused to allow the defendant's expert witness to testify as to the increased cost to defendant resulting from the reduced degree of access. This ruling formed the basis for the appeal.

The court of appeal held that this exclusion of evidence was error and reversed. The court noted that here, as in the Thompson case [see § 95.100[3][c]], free passage across the highway between the two parcels of land would be cut off and the prior unity of use of the land would be permanently damaged (180 Cal. App. 2d 805, 807) . Defendant's parcels were held to constitute one parcel for severance purposes. In this case, however, the court did not comment on whether the state owned the existing highway in fee or merely had an easement.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureEminent Domain

ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

166 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
E. Opposing Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.101

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.101 Opposing Plaintiff's Motion for New Trial in Eminent Domain Action--Benefits to Remainder Were Not Reasonably Certain, Immediate, and Nonspeculative

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.100.]

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE IS SUFFICIENT TO PROVE THAT THE BENEFITS ACCRUING TO THE REMAINDER WERE NOT REASONABLY CERTAIN, IMMEDIATE, AND NONSPECULATIVE; THUS, THEY WERE NOT SUBJECT TO DEDUCTION FROM THE AMOUNT OF SEVERANCE DAMAGES AND THE AMOUNT OF SEVERANCE DAMAGES AWARDED IS PROPER.

Only Reasonably Certain, Immediate, and Nonspeculative Benefits Are Subject to Deduction. Only benefits to the remainder that are reasonably certain, immediate, and nonspeculative must be offset against an award for severance damages (Los Angeles Co. Metropolitan Transp. Auth. v. Continental Development Corp. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 694, 716-718, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 941 P.2d 809).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motionfor a new trial on the basis of excessive damages and/or insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision if the defendant argues that the benefits to the remainder were not reasonably certain, immediate, and nonspeculative and thus that it was proper not to deduct them from the damages.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel may refer to (1) the lack of allegations in the complaint establishing that there were reasonably certain, immediate, and nonspeculative benefits to the remainder, or (2) any facts controverting the material allegations in the complaint relating to such benefits.

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 95.81.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Deductible Benefits Must Be Reasonably Certain, Immediate, and Nonspeculative

Los Angeles Co. Metropolitan Transp. Auth. v. Continental Development Corp. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 694, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 630, 941 P.2d 809 is discussed in § 95.81[3][b].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
E. Opposing Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.102

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.102 Opposing Plaintiff's Motion for New Trial in Eminent Domain Action--Capitalization of Excess Income Is Proper Measure of Damages for Loss of Goodwill [Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.510]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 95.100.]

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE DAMAGES FOR LOSS OF GOODWILL DUE TO THE FORCED RELOCATION OF A BUSINESS MAY BE MEASURED BY CAPITALIZATION OF EXCESS INCOME.

[EITHER]

Capitalization of Excess Income Based on Lost Profits or Income Is Proper Measure of Damages. If a taking causes a defendant to relocate his or her business to a location with a higher rent, a proper measure of damages for loss of goodwill is capitalization of excess income based on the present value of profits lost as a result of the higher rent (People ex rel. Dep't of Transportation v. Muller (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 263, 269-271).

[OR]

Fair Market Value Capitalization of Excess Income Is Proper Measure of Damages. If a taking causes loss of income from a business located in a blighted area, a proper measure of damages for loss of goodwill is capitalization of the excess income of the business, using a capitalization rate derived from a fair market value analysis (Community Development Com. v. Asaro (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1301-1305, 261 Cal. Rptr. 231).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial alleging that excessive damages were awarded for loss of goodwill. Although goodwill may properly be measured using the "excess earnings" method of valuation, there is no single acceptable method of valuing goodwill. Valuation methods vary based on the nature of the business and the purpose for which the evaluation is conducted. Both alternative paragraphs above are for use when lost goodwill is valued based on the excess earnings method. The first alternative is appropriate when the value is derived from the present value of profits lost as a result of the taking. The second alternative is for use when the capitalization rate is based on a fair market value analysis.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the nature of the loss of income and the basis for the capitalization rates.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Capitalization of Excess Income Based on Lost Profits Is Proper Measure of Damages

In People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Muller (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 263, 203 Cal. Rptr. 772, 681 P.2d 1340 , defendant's veterinary building was taken to build a freeway. Defendant was forced to relocate and pay a significantly higher rent although he did not lose any patronage. At trial, defendant's experts testified that defendant lost all his goodwill in paying the higher rent. They based their testimony on capitalization of defendant's profits at the lower rent, using the excess earnings method of valuation. The capitalization rates were based on current interest rates. Plaintiff's expert testified that defendant did not have any goodwill to lose. The jury awarded $96,000 for loss of goodwill, an amount that was less than defendant's experts' testimony.

The Supreme Court affirmed. It held that the loss of lower rent resulting from a forced relocation to a premises with higher rent was compensable as a loss of goodwill. It also held that loss of patronage was not required and that the statute provided for consideration for loss of location. The Court stated that itsinterpretation of the statute providing for compensation for loss of goodwill was required by the remedial nature of the statute, which was enacted in response to widespread criticism of the injustice wrought by the inability to recover for loss of goodwill. The Court held that goodwill may be measured by the capitalized value of net income or profits using a capitalization rate based on current interest rates (36 Cal. 3d 263, 266 n.2, 271) .

[b] Fair Market Value Capitalization of Excess Income Proper Measure of Damages

Community Development Com. v. Asaro (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 261 Cal. Rptr. 231 , involved the taking of a building leased as a restaurant in a blighted part of National City. The only issue at trial was the value of the goodwill lost by the lessee of the premises. Three experts testified. Defendant/lessee's experts applied capitalization rates of 14 and 9 percent to the lessee's income stream from the business to reach values of $775,000 and $963,000, respectively. Plaintiff's expert used a capitalization rate of 50 percent, which represented the percent per year return that a buyer on the open market purchasing goodwill would expect to receive on his or her investment given the risks and the location. The value of the goodwill pursuant to this fair market analysis was $160,000. The trial court adopted the rationale of plaintiff's expert, but used a capitalization rate of 25 percent to reach a value of $328,000.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Muller (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 263, 269-271, 203 Cal. Rptr. 772, 681 P.2d 1340 (discussed in § 95.102[3][a]), affirmed use of capitalization of excess earnings based on prevailing interest rates, but expressly stated that there were other reasonable methods of measuring loss of goodwill. The court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1263.310 expressly bases compensation on fair market value and concluded that a market analysis is an acceptable method of valuing goodwill (212 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1303-1305) . The court then found that there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's determination of the value of the lost goodwill, which was confirmed by comparison with four somewhat comparable sales in the open market. It was within the trial court's discretion to apply its own capitalization rate somewhere between the rates applied by the parties' experts. The appellate court noted that the lessee's approach treated the profits as an annuity subject to no risk when there were obvious risks in the restaurant business in a blighted area (212 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1305-1306) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New TrialsCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
E. Opposing Motion for New Trial

9-95 California Points & Authorities §§ 95.103-95.119

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

[Reserved]

§§ 95.103[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
F. Miscellaneous Supporting Motions

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.120

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.120 Supporting Motion to Strike Irrelevant Matter in Answer [Code Civ. Proc. § 436] in Eminent Domain Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1230.040]--Allegations Attacking Resolution of Necessity [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250(a)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO
vs.	)	STRIKE IRRELEVANT MATTER IN ANSWER
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____

_____

ALLEGATIONS IN THE ANSWER ATTACKING MATTERS COVERED BY THE RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY SHOULD BE STRICKEN AS IRRELEVANT.

A. General Practice Rules Applicable in Eminent Domain Proceeding. [See § 95.60, Paragraph A.]

B. Striking Irrelevant Matter. Irrelevant, false, or improper matter asserted in an answer may be stricken (Code Civ. Proc. § 436).

C. Resolution of Necessity as Conclusive. A resolution of necessity adopted by the governing body of a public entity that satisfies the statutory requirements conclusively establishes that the public interest and necessity require the project, that the project is planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury, and that the property sought to be acquired is necessary for the project (Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250(a)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to strike irrelevant matter in an answer in an eminent domain action when the answer contains allegations attacking matters that are conclusively determined by a resolution of necessity.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts present in the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Resolution of Necessity as Conclusive

A valid resolution of necessity precludes judicial review only of the matters specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030. A condemnee may still base a challenge to a resolution of necessity on the grounds listed in Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.360 or on other specific statutory grounds provided in the Eminent Domain Law [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.230 (taking for future use)]. The validity of the resolution itself may also be attacked [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.370(a); see § 95.63].

As recognized in Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250(a), there may be exceptions to the general rule of conclusiveness. One exception is found in Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250(b) for takings by a local public entity when the property described in the resolution is not entirely within the boundaries of that entity. In such a case, the presumption created is not conclusive but merely affects the burden of producing evidence. Another exception is when the resolution is the result of a gross abuse of discretion [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.255(b)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
F. Miscellaneous Supporting Motions

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.121

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.121 Supporting Motion for Increase of Deposit of Probable Amount of Compensation [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR
vs.	)	INCREASE OF DEPOSIT OF PROBABLE
_____ [name],	)	AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept: _____
		Trial Date: _____

_____

THE COURT _____ [either MAY or MUST], ON MOTION, ORDER AN INCREASE IN THE DEPOSIT OF THE PROBABLE AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION IF THE COURT DETERMINES THAT THE PROBABLE AMOUNT OF COMPENSATION EXCEEDS THE AMOUNT DEPOSITED.

A. Motion for Determination of Probable Amount of Compensation. At any time after a deposit of an amount alleged to be the probable amount of compensation, the court must, on motion of the plaintiff or of any party having an interest in the property for which the deposit was made, determine or redetermine whether the amount deposited is the probable amount of compensation that will be awarded in the proceeding; provided the motion is supported with detail sufficient to indicate clearly the basis for the motion, including information specifically required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 1255.030(a)(1) through (3) to the extent such information is relevant to the motion (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030(a)).

[EITHER]

B. Determination Before Possession Is Taken. If the plaintiff has not taken possession of the property and the court determines that the probable amount of compensation exceeds the amount deposited, the court may order the plaintiff to increase the deposit (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030(b)).

[OR]

B. Determination After Possession Is Taken. If the plaintiff has takenpossession of the property and the court determines that the probable amount of compensation exceeds the amount deposited, the court must order the amount deposited to be increased to the amount determined to be the probable amount of compensation (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030(c)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] C. Trial Court Has Jurisdiction to Order Increase in Deposit After Filing of Notice of Appeal. The trial court has jurisdiction under Code of Civil Procedure Section 1255.030 to order a plaintiff in possession of the property to increase the deposit of probable compensation when a judgment exceeding the amount on deposit has been entered and the plaintiff seeks to retain possession pending appeal (Whittier Redevelopment Agency v. Oceanic Arts (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1060, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for an increase of the deposit of the probable amount of compensation when the probable amount of compensation exceeds the amount deposited.

Special rules of evidence are applicable to determinations of the value of property in eminent domain and inverse condemnation proceedings [see Evid. Code §§ 810-824]. Counsel should insert authority on the matter of evidence, using the applicable Evidence Code provisions, as additional paragraphs to this form. For comprehensive coverage of the statutory rules, see California Real Estate Law & Practice, Ch. 508 (Matthew Bender).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts present in the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination Before Possession Is Taken

If the court determines that the probable amount of compensation exceeds the amount deposited and the plaintiff has not taken possession of the property, Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030(b) permits the court to order the plaintiff to increase the deposit. As an alternative, the court may deny the plaintiff possession of the property until the amount deposited has been increased to the amount specified in the order.

[b] Determination After Possession Is Taken

If the court determines that the probable amount of compensation exceeds the amount deposited and the plaintiff has taken possession of the property, Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030(c) compels the court to order the amount deposited to be increased to the amount determined to be the probable amount of compensation. If the amount on deposit is not increased accordingly within 30 days from the date of the court's order, or any longer time allowed by the court at the time of making the order, the defendant may serve on the plaintiff a notice of election to treat the failure as an abandonment of the proceeding. If the plaintiff does not cure its failure within 10 days after receipt of this notice, the court must, on motion of the defendant, enter judgment dismissing the proceeding and awarding the defendant his or her litigation expenses and damages as provided in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1268.610 and 1268.620.

[c] Trial Court Has Jurisdiction to Order Increase in Deposit After Filing of Notice of Appeal

In Whittier Redevelopment Agency v. Oceanic Arts (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 396 , the court of appeal held that a trial court has jurisdiction under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030 to order an increase in deposit after the filing of a notice of appeal. It concluded that the phrase "at any time" as used in the statute is not limited to "any time before judgment" (33 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1058-1059) . The court also held that the trial court must require an increase in deposit when a plaintiff who has obtained prejudgment possession appeals a judgment in excess of its deposit of probable compensation (33 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1059) . However, the trial court must provide the plaintiff with an opportunity to request a period longer than 30 days to increase the deposit (33 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1060) .

The Whittier court agreed with the result but not the reasoning of People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Zivelonghi (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1045-1046 , which held that Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.030 only applies to deposits for purposes of acquiring and retaining possession before judgment is entered, but that the trial court may require an increase in deposit on appeal pursuant to its inherent powers (33 Cal. App. 4th 1052, 1058) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion for Determination of Probable Amount of Compensation

The amount deposited or withdrawn may not be given in evidence or referredto in the trial on the issue of compensation [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.060(a)]. At trial, an appraisal report, written statement and summary of an appraisal, or other statement made in connection with a deposit or withdrawal may not be considered to be an admission of any party [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.060(b)]. The person who made the report, written statement and summary, or other statement may not be called by any other party to give an opinion as to compensation at the trial on that issue over the objection of the party at whose request the report or statement was made. If the person who prepared the report or statement is called as a witness to give an opinion as to compensation, the report, statement and summary, or other statement may be used for impeachment purposes [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.060(c)].

Notwithstanding these provisions, counsel should endeavor to analyze the relevant issues fully and obtain complete appraisals and expert reports as soon as possible. Even if a motion for increase or decrease of the deposit is not made, this preparation will not only provide clients and counsel with clear expectations of their case and the ensuing litigation, but will also assist in settlement negotiations.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

171 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
F. Miscellaneous Supporting Motions

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.122

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.122 Supporting Motion for Order for Possession [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name]	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR Plaintiff,	)	ORDER FOR POSSESSION
vs.	)	Date: _____
_____ [name],	)	Time: _____
Defendant.	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR AN ORDER AUTHORIZING PLAINTIFF TO TAKE POSSESSION OF THE PROPERTY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO TAKE THE PROPERTY BY EMINENT DOMAIN AND HAS DEPOSITED AN AMOUNT THAT SATISFIES THE REQUIREMENTS OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTIONS 1255.010 THROUGH 1255.080.

A. Motion for Order Authorizing Possession. At the time of filing the complaint or at any time thereafter before entry of judgment, the plaintiff may move the court for an order for possession, demonstrating that the plaintiff (1) is entitled to take the property by eminent domain, and (2) has deposited an amount that satisfies the requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1255.010 through 1255.080 (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410(a)).

B. The Plaintiff Is Authorized to Take the Property by Eminent Domain. The power of eminent domain may be exercised to acquire property for a proposed project if all of the following are established: (1) the public interest and necessity require the project; (2) the project is planned or located in the manner that will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury; and (3) the property sought to be acquired is necessary for the project (Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030).

C. The Plaintiff Has Deposited an Amount That Satisfies the Requirements of Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1255.010 through 1255.080. Before making a deposit, the plaintiff shall have an expert qualified to express an opinion as to the value of the property (1) make an appraisal of the property, and (2) prepare a written statement of, or summary of the basis for, the appraisal. The written statement must be in sufficient detail to indicate clearly the basis for the appraisal, including all information specifically required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 1255.010(b)(2)(A) through (C) (Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.010(b)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for an order authorizing the plaintiff to take possession of the property prior to judgment if the plaintiff is entitled to take the property by eminent domain and has deposited an amount that satisfies the requirements of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1255.010 through 1255.080.

Special rules of evidence are applicable to determinations of the value of property in eminent domain and inverse condemnation proceedings [see Evid. Code §§ 810-824]. Counsel should insert authority on the matter of evidence, using the applicable Evidence Code provisions, as additional paragraphs to this form. For comprehensive coverage of the statutory rules, see California Real Estate Law & Practice, Ch. 508 Evidence: General (Matthew Bender).

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts present in the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion relating to motions for an order for possession prior to judgment, see Ch. 247, Eminent Domain and Inverse Condemnation , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion for Order Authorizing Possession

A motion for possession may be opposed by any defendant or occupant of the property provided written opposition is filed with the court within 30 days after service of the motion. If the written opposition asserts a hardship, is must be supported by a declaration signed under penalty of perjury stating facts supporting the hardship. The plaintiff must serve and file any reply to the opposition not less than 15 days before the hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410(c)].

If the motion is not opposed, the court will make an order for possession if it finds that the plaintiff is entitled to the property by eminent domain, and has deposited an amount that satisfies the statutory requirements [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410(d)(1)]. If the motion is opposed, the court will hold a hearing and issue an order for possession if it finds that [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410(d)(2)]:

- The plaintiff is entitled to take the property by eminent domain;
- The plaintiff has deposited an amount with the court that meets the statutory just compensation requirements;
- There is an overriding need for the plaintiff to possess the property before final judgment is issued, and the plaintiff will suffer a substantial hardship if the motion is denied; and
- The hardship to the plaintiff if possession is denied outweighs the hardship to the defendant or occupant if possession is granted.

The plaintiff is entitled to take possession either 30 days (if the property is lawfully occupied by a person dwelling on it or by a farm or business operation) or 10 days (in all other cases) after service of the order [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.450(b)].

[b] The Plaintiff Is Authorized to Take the Property by Eminent Domain

The matters referred to in Code Civ. Proc. § 1240.030 are conclusively established if a resolution of necessity is adopted by the governing body of the public entity [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.250(a)].

A motion for an order of possession may be a defendant's first and/or best opportunity to attempt to establish that the resolution of necessity should not have presumptive effect because its adoption or contents were influenced or affected by gross abuse of discretion by the governing body [Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.255(b)]. Prudent counsel will have conducted an informal investigation and/or formal discovery prior to the hearing on the motion to determine whether there is any evidence of abuse of discretion. If no such case can be made, a defendant may choose to not oppose the motion for possession and direct all resources toward the issue of just compensation.

[c] The Plaintiff Has Deposited an Amount That Satisfies the Requirements of Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.010 et seq.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.010 does not require the plaintiff to provide the defendant with a copy of the appraisal. Such an exchange does not take place until after the trial date is selected [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1258.210-1258.300].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion for Order Authorizing Possession

The court's order of possession must do all of the following [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.460]:

- Recite that it has been made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.460;

- Describe the property to be acquired, which may be by reference to the description in the complaint; and

- State the date after which the plaintiff is authorized to take possession.

If an order for possession before judgment has been made under Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.410 and the court subsequently determines that the statutory conditions for issuing the order have not been satisfied, the order must be vacated [Code Civ. Proc. § 1255.440].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
F. Miscellaneous Supporting Motions

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.123

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.123 Supporting Motion to Set Aside Abandonment of Eminent Domain Proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(b)]--By Defendant

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION TO
vs.	)	SET ASIDE ABANDONMENT
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept: _____
	)	Trial Date: _____

_____

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO SET ASIDE THE ABANDONMENT OF THE EMINENT DOMAIN PROCEEDING BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT HAS SUBSTANTIALLY CHANGED HIS/HER POSITION TO HIS/HER DETRIMENT IN JUSTIFIABLE RELIANCE ON THE PROCEEDINGS AND THE DEFENDANT'S PRIOR POSITION CANNOT BE RESTORED.

Motion to Set Aside Abandonment. The abandonment of an eminent domain proceeding may be set aside on motion made within 30 days after the filing of notice of abandonment if the position of the moving party has been substantially changed to his or her detriment in justifiable reliance on the proceeding and the party cannot be restored to substantially the same position as if the proceeding had not been commenced (Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(b)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to set aside theabandonment of an eminent domain action when the defendant has relied on the proceeding in substantially changing his or her position to his or her detriment and cannot be restored to the prior position.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the factors present in the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms and discussion relating to proceedings to set aside an abandonment of an eminent domain proceeding, see Ch. 247, Eminent Domain and Inverse Condemnation , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Set Aside Abandonment

Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(b), allowing the abandonment of an eminent domain proceeding to be set aside, continues prior law [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 1255a(b)]. This provision allows a court to relieve a property owner from hardship when the owner has relied on a condemnation proceeding in good faith and cannot be restored to his or her original position. For example, this provision applies when an owner has constructed a new building to replace an old one that was supposed to be condemned or when an owner has relocated and incurred moving expenses [see Times-Mirror Co. v. Superior Court (1935) 3 Cal. 2d 309, 333-334, 44 P.2d 547] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Set Aside Abandonment

Redevelopment Agency v. Heller (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 517, 519, 246 Cal. Rptr. 160 , held that inverse condemnation damages could not be recovered in an eminent domain proceeding that had been abandoned because no timely motion to set aside the abandonment (pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(b)) had been filed. The owner's action to recover monetary damages for precondemnation delay under Klopping v. City of Whittier (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 39, 43, 104 Cal. Rptr. 1, 500 P.2d 1345 , had to be asserted in a separate action alleging inverse condemnation damages.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

173 of 174 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
CHAPTER 95 EMINENT DOMAIN
PART II. FORMS
F. Miscellaneous Supporting Motions

9-95 California Points & Authorities § 95.124

AUTHOR: Jeffrey S. Rosen

§ 95.124 Supporting Motion for Dismissal of Abandoned Eminent Domain Proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(c)] and Award of Litigation Expenses [Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.610]--By Defendant

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR
vs.	)	DISMISSAL AND AWARD OF LITIGATION EX-
_____ [name],	)	PENSES
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept: _____
		Trial Date: _____

_____

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR DISMISSAL AND FOR AN AWARD OF LITIGATION EXPENSES BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF HAS SERVED AND FILED A WRITTEN NOTICE OF ABANDONMENT AND A MOTION TO SET ASIDE THE ABANDONMENT _____ [HAS BEEN DENIED or WAS NOT FILED].

A. Motion to Dismiss. On denial of a motion to set aside an abandonment or, if no such motion is filed, on the expiration of the time for filing such a motion, the court must, on motion of any party, enter judgment wholly or partially dismissing the proceeding (Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(c)).

B. Award of Litigation Expenses. The court must award the defendant his or her litigation expenses whenever the proceeding is wholly or partly dismissed for any reason (Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.610(a)(1)).

C. Litigation Expenses Defined. Litigation expenses include the following: (1) all expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in the proceeding in preparing for trial, during trial, and in any subsequent judicial proceedings; and (2) reasonable attorney's fees, appraisal fees, and fees for the services of other experts when these fees were reasonably and necessarily incurred to protect the defendant's interests in the proceeding in preparing for trial, during trial, and in any subsequent judicial proceedings, whether the fees were incurred for services rendered before or after the filing of the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 1235.140).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's motion for dismissal and an award of litigation expenses when the plaintiff has wholly or partially abandoned an eminent domain proceeding by serving on the defendant and filing in court a written notice of the abandonment at any time after the filing of the complaint and before the expiration of 30 days after final judgment.

When the defendant claims litigation expenses on dismissal, these expenses must be claimed in and by a cost bill that is prepared, served, filed, and taxed as in a civil action [Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.610(d)]. The cost bill should be filed along with this memorandum.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show the facts establishing the plaintiff's filing of the notice of abandonment, the denial or failure to file a motion to set aside the abandonment, and the defendant's entitlement to litigation expenses.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms and discussion relating to the dismissal of an eminent domain proceeding following abandonment, see Ch. 247, Eminent Domain and Inverse Condemnation , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Dismiss

Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(c) provides a method for effecting an abandonment of an eminent domain proceeding, either in whole or in part. It also provides for dismissal of the proceeding following abandonment, on motion of any party, in the event a motion to set aside the abandonment is denied or is not filed prior to the expiration of the time for filing the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510(b)].

[b] Award of Litigation Expenses

Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.610(a)(1) applies whenever the proceeding is wholly or partially dismissed for any reason, including abandonment under Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.510, implied abandonment (such as that resulting from failure to pay the judgment) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.020], or partial abandonment by amendment of the complaint to add additional property [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.340(c)].

[c] Litigation Expenses Defined

Code Civ. Proc. § 1235.140 defines the term "litigation expenses" as including all expenses reasonably and necessarily incurred in the proceeding in preparing for trial, during trial, and in any subsequent judicial proceedings. Reasonable attorney's fees, appraisal fees, and fees for the services of other experts, if reasonably and necessarily incurred to protect the defendant's interests, are recoverable.

A property owner may not recover fees for the owner's time spent preparing and presenting testimony, even if the owner is qualified to testify as an expert [County of Madera v. Forrester (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 57, 61-62, 170 Cal. Rptr. 896] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Award of Litigation Expenses

Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410 provides that at least 20 days before trial of the issues relating to compensation, the plaintiff must file and serve its final offer of compensation and the defendant must file and serve its final demand for compensation. The offer and demand must include all required compensation, including any compensation for loss of goodwill, and must state whether interest and costs are included. The offer and demand must be the only ones considered by the court in determining the entitlement, if any, to litigation expenses [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(a)]. "Litigation expenses" means the party's reasonable attorney's fees and costs, including reasonable expert witness and appraiser fees [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(e)].

If a settlement demand is accepted, a defendant is entitled to recover ordinary costs and prejudgment interest [Coachella Valley County Water Dist. v. Dreyfuss (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 949, 953, 154 Cal. Rptr. 467] .

If the court, on motion of the defendant made within 20 days after entry of judgment, finds that the offer of the plaintiff was unreasonable and that the demand of the defendant was reasonable viewed in light of the evidence admitted and the compensation awarded in the proceeding, the costs allowed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1268.710 must include the defendant's litigation expenses [Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410(b)].

In City of Los Angeles v. Cannon (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 559, 562, 127 Cal.Rptr. 709 , the court of appeal considered the reasonableness of the city's offer, which was $10,000 lower than the owner's demand. While acknowledging that $10,000 is "a significant amount of money," the court found that such a differencebetween a demand and offer may or may not be unreasonable depending on a variety of factors. Reasonableness depends not only on monetary amounts or the percentage of difference between the offer and the demand, but also on the good faith, care, and accuracy in how the offer and demand were determined. Those were factual determinations best made by the trial court. The offer was not unreasonable as a matter of law, and the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the owner's request for attorney's fees and appraiser's expenses.

A contrary result was reached in City of Commerce v. National Starch & Chemical Corp. (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 1, 19, 173 Cal. Rptr. 176 , a case in which the court determined that the city had made no effort to show good faith because it had not obtained an appraisal that took into consideration the reduced value of fixtures in calculating severance damages. The city's offer was $78,950; the owner's demand was $145,000, an amount approximately $96,000 less than the eventual judgment. The owner's application for litigation expenses was successful.

In People ex rel. Dept. of Transportation v. Yuki (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1754, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 616 , the court of appeal concluded from a survey of results in other cases that final offers that are 60 percent or less of the jury's verdict are generally found to be unreasonable, while offers that are above 85 percent are generally considered to be reasonable per se. Final offers that come within the middle range can fall within either group depending on other factors, particularly whether the government agency was unyielding and the extent of the "good faith, care and accuracy in the method of determination of offer and demand" (31 Cal. App. 4th 1754, 1764) . In the Yuki case, the final offer was 77 percent of the jury's verdict. The court held that the trial court was well within its discretion in finding the final offer unreasonable, because the offer (1) was based on an unwavering reliance on an appraisal that was over $2 million low in its valuation of the acquired land, and (2) was incorrect in its evaluation of both severance damages and special benefits (31 Cal. App. 4th 1754, 1767) .

In San Diego County v. Woodward (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 82, 91, 230 Cal. Rptr. 406 , the county's offer was held to be reasonable even though it was substantially less than the jury verdict, when the owner did not have an appraisal and failed to furnish the county with any appraisal information before the deadline for filing the statutory settlement offer. The court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 1250.410 imposes on both parties "the duty to act reasonably in an effort to settle disputes" (186 Cal. App. 3d 82, 91) .

In County of Contra Costa v. Pinole Point Properties, Inc. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 1105, 1115, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 38 , an award of litigation expenses was reversed on the ground the owner's demand of an amount that was $800,000 more, and five times greater, than the amount awarded at trial was unreasonable.

In addressing the issue of attorney's fees, the court in City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 78, 83, 249 Cal. Rptr. 606 , stated that trial courts must consider factors such as the amount of time spent on a case, the reasonable hourly rate of attorneys, the difficulty of the issues involved, the skill employed in presenting the case, and the extent to which the case precluded the attorneys from working on other matters. The trial court set attorney's fees by multiplying the number of hours spent by an hourly rate similar to one charged by law firms in the area. The court then raised the fee because of the complexity of the issues, the nature of the litigation, and the results obtained. The court of appeal affirmed.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePretrial MattersGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawEminent Domain ProceedingsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 9 Chapters 90-99 DISMISSAL---to---EMINENT DOMAIN
Chapters 96through 99 RESERVED

9-96 California Points & Authorities Chapters 96through 99

RESERVED

Chapters 96RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE

10-100 California Points & Authorities 100.syn

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.syn Synopsis to Chapter 100: EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE

§ 100.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 100.02 Page Limits on Memoranda

§ 100.03 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 100.04 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§ 100.05 Related California Torts Chapters

§ 100.06 Related California Employment Law Chapters

§§ 100.07-100.19 [Reserved]

§ 100.20 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Was Not "At Will"--Right to Terminate Limited by Express Agreement Between Parties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express "Good Cause" Agreement Rebuts "At Will" Presumption

§ 100.21 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Is Not "At Will"--Right to Terminate Limited by Implied Agreement Between the Parties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts "At Will" Presumption

[b] Totality of Circumstances May Establish "Good Cause" Agreement

[c] Parol Evidence Is Admissible to Show "Good-Cause" Agreement

[d] Employer's Breach of Written Personnel Policy May Support Cause of Action

[e] Independent Consideration Not Required

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts "At Will" Presumption

[b] Totality of Circumstances May Establish "Good Cause" Agreement

[c] Parol Evidence Is Admissible to Show "Good-Cause" Agreement if Written Agreement Is Not Integrated

[d] Employer's Breach of Written Personnel Policy May Support Cause of Action

§ 100.22 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Was "At Will"--No Express or Implied Agreement Limited Defendant's Right to Discharge Plaintiff "At Will" [Lab. Code § 2922]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employment for Unspecified Term Terminable At Will Absent Other Agreement

[b] Personnel "Guidelines" Do Not Indicate That Employment Was Not "At Will"

[c] Existence of Progressive Discipline Policy Does Not Negate "At Will" Presumption

[d] Positive Performance Reviews, Commendations, Salary Increases, and Vague Assurances of Advancement in Company Do Not Negate "At Will" Presumption

[e] Employer's Unilaterally Adopted "No-Layoff" Policy May be Unilaterally Discontinued

[f] Contractual Provision for Performance Review After 12 Months Does Not Negate "At Will" Presumption

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employment for Unspecified Term Terminable At Will Absent Other Agreement

§ 100.23 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Was "At Will"--Parties' Agreement Retaining Right to Discharge "At Will" Is Integrated, Precluding Oral or Implied Modification

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement Expressly Retains Right to Terminate "At Will"

[b] Implied Contract Contradicted by Express Agreement

[c] Integrated "At Will" Employment Application Precludes Parol Evidence

[d] Personnel Policy May Not Contradict Express "At Will" Agreement

[e] Contractual Right to Review of Termination Decision Does Not Change Nature of "At Will" Employment

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Implied Contract Contradicted by Express Agreement

§ 100.24 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--No Discharge in Failure to Renew Fixed-Term Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Discharge Where Fixed-Term Employment Contract Fully Executed

§ 100.25 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Good-Faith Determination of Conduct Justifying Discharge Notwithstanding Implied Agreement Between Parties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Wrongful Discharge When Employer's Termination of Implied Agreement Was Based on Good-Faith Conclusion That Good Cause Existed to Discharge Employee

§ 100.26 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Implied Agreement to Terminate Only for Good Cause Did Not Limit Employer's Right to Eliminate Plaintiff's Job as Part of Reduction in Workforce

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Agreement to Terminate Only for Good Cause Does Not Ordinarily Include Restriction on Employer's Right to Reduce Workforce

§ 100.27 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Breached Contract Because No Good Cause to Terminate Existed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Cause Defined

[b] Trivial, Capricious, or Pretextual Reason for Discharge Precludes Finding of Good Cause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Trivial, Capricious, or Pretextual Reason for Discharge Precludes Finding of Good Cause

§ 100.28 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Breached Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing in Employment Contract

[b] Employer's Bad Faith Conduct Extraneous to Contract and Intent to Frustrate Employee's Contract Rights Breach Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

[c] Termination of Long-Term Employment Without Cause Breaches Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

§ 100.29 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Did Not Breach Contract Because Good Cause to Terminate Existed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Good Cause" Defined

[b] Serious Misconduct Violating Company Policy Provides Good Cause for Discharge

[c] Legitimate Business Reasons Provide Good Cause for Discharge

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] "Good Cause" Defined

§ 100.30 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Did Not Breach Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing--Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Not Breached

Absent Breach of Underlying Employment Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Breached Only Where Defendant in Bad Faith Deprived Plaintiff of Benefit of Employment Agreement

[b] No Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing if Underlying Employment Agreement Not Breached

[c] No Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Where Employer Makes Mistaken but Good-Faith Determination That Misconduct Occurred

[d] Claim for Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Cannot Be Maintained Where Employment Was At-Will

§ 100.31 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Constructively Discharged

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constructive Discharge Legally Regarded as Firing

[b] Constructive Discharge as Breach of Good Cause Agreement

[c] Constructive Discharge as Violation of Public Policy

[d] Employer Created Intolerable or Aggravated Working Conditions

[e] Series of Separate Incidents May Constitute Constructive Discharge

[f] Knowledge or Intent of Employer

[g] Statute of Limitations Period Commences on Date of Actual Termination

[h] Leaving Job Because of Intolerable Conditions Constitutes Resignation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employer Created Intolerable or Aggravated Working Conditions

§ 100.32 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Was Constructively Discharged--Employer Created Intolerable Working Conditions--Hostile Work Environment Caused by Widespread Sexual Favoritism

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Widespread Sexual Favoritism Can Create Hostile Work Environment for All Employees

§ 100.33 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Discipline of Employee Violated Public Policy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Exists for Wrongful Discipline in Violation of Public Policy

§ 100.34 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Right to Demote Limited by Express or Implied Agreement Between Parties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express or Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts Presumption That Employee May Be Demoted At Will

[b] Implied Contract Terms Not to Demote May Arise From Employer's Policies and Practices

§ 100.35 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Constructive Discharge of Plaintiff Was Neither Breach of Contract, Nor Tort, Nor Violation of Fundamental Public Policy or Statutory or Constitutional Right

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Employee, Even Constructive Discharge, Does Not Give Rise to Cause of Action Unless It Violates Employee's Contractual Rights or Constitutes Actionable Tort or Violates a Fundamental Public Policy or Statutory or Constitutional Right

§ 100.36 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Not Constructively Discharged--Conditions of Employment Were Not Sufficiently Intolerable That Reasonable Employee Would Have Felt Compelled to Resign

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constructive Discharge Determined by Objective Standard

[b] Single, Trivial, or Isolated Acts of Misconduct Insufficient

[c] Poor Performance Rating or Demotion Insufficient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Constructive Discharge Determined by Objective Standard

[b] Poor Performance Rating or Demotion Insufficient

§ 100.37 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Not Constructively Discharged--Employer Did Not Have Actual Knowledge of Allegedly Intolerable Conditions That Caused Plaintiff to Resign

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Must Have Actual Knowledge of Intolerable Working Conditions

[b] Employer Took Steps to Correct the Allegedly Intolerable Working Conditions

§ 100.38 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Not Constructively Discharged--Passage of Time Before Resignation Indicates That Conditions Not Sufficiently Intolerable to Cause Reasonable Person to Resign

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Passage of Time Before Resignation Factor in Determining Whether Conditions Were Intolerable

§ 100.39 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--No Express or Implied Agreement Limited Defendant's Right to Demote Plaintiff "At Will"

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption That Employee May Be Demoted At Will

§ 100.40 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Exists--Change in Terms of Employment Does Not Constitute Breach of Employment At Will Contract, But Rather Termination and Offer of New Agreement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[e] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employment At Will Includes the Right to Impose Prospective Changes in Terms as a Condition of Continued Employment

§ 100.41 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Violated Public Policy Established by Constitutional Provision, Statute, or Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy

[b] Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy

§ 100.42 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Violated Statute That Limits Right to Discharge Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Provision Precluding Discharge for Conduct Within Statute Can Be Basis of Common Law Wrongful-Discharge Action

[b] Prohibition Against Sexual Orientation Discrimination

[c] Prohibition Against Age Discrimination

[d] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Taking Family Care and Medical Leave

[e] Right to Report and Refuse to Participate in Illegal Activity

[f] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Opposing Practices Forbidden by Fair Employment and Housing Act

[g] Prohibition of Retaliation Against Physician for Advocating for Appropriate Health Care

[h] Prohibition Against Retaliation Based on Race

[i] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Filing Complaint Under Age Discrimination in Employment Act

[j] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Opposing Practice That Violates Title VII of Civil Rights Act

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Provision Precluding Discharge for Conduct Within Statute Can Be Basis of Common Law Wrongful-Discharge Action

§ 100.43 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Violated Constitutionally-Based Public Policy Regarding Discrimination

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Cause of Action Inapplicable to Independent Contractor

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[g] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employment Discrimination Prohibited by California Constitution

[b] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Not Required

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Not Required

§ 100.44 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Based on Violation of Constitutional Rights Other Than Right to Nondiscriminatory Treatment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Exercising (or Refusing to Waive) a Fundamental Constitutional Right Actionable as Against Public Policy

§ 100.45 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Based on Employee's Protest of Unsafe Working Conditions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Protest of Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions Actionable as Against Public Policy

[b] Common-Law Action for Wrongful Discharge Not Precluded by California Occupational Safety and Health Act

[c] Actual Violation of OSHA Not Necessary

[d] Action Against Subsequent Employer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discharge for Protest of Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions Actionable as Against Public Policy

§ 100.46 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Based on Employee's Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Termination for Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act Violates Public Policy

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Termination for Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act Violates Public Policy

§ 100.47 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge in Retaliation for Employee's Attempt to Rectify Employer's Public Policy Violation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Seeking to Rectify Public Policy Violation

[b] Termination in Retaliation for Voicing Concerns About Legality or Morality of Conduct of Enterprise

[c] Termination for Reporting Coworkers' Illegal Activity

[d] Termination in Retaliation for Voicing Concerns About Legality or Morality of Conduct of Enterprise

[e] Termination for Reporting Employer's Hiring of Undocumented Aliens

§ 100.48 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge in Retaliation for Employee's "Whistleblowing"

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Disclosure of Improper Governmental Activities

§ 100.49 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge in Retaliation for In-House Counsel's Compliance With Mandatory Ethical Requirements--Cause of Action Can Be Maintained Without Violating Attorney-Client Confidences

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of In-House Counsel for Following Mandatory Ethical Obligation

[b] Discharged In-House Counsel May Bring Wrongful Discharge Action if Attorney-Client Confidences Will Not Be Publicly Revealed

§ 100.50 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge of Employee for Refusing to Sign Employment Agreement Containing Illegal Covenant Not to Compete

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Refusal to Sign Illegal Covenant Not to Compete

§ 100.51 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge of Employee for Designating Attorney to Conduct Negotiations With Employer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Designating Attorney to Negotiate With Employer

§ 100.51A Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Employer May Not Retaliate Against Employee Who Makes Good-Faith but Mistaken Complaint or Claim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Employee for Making Good-Faith but Mistaken Complaint or Claim of Right Violates Public Policy

§ 100.52 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Asserted Public Policy Not Delineated in Constitutional Provision, Statute, or Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Must Be Delineated in Constitutional or Statutory Provision or in Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations

§ 100.53 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Asserted Public Policy Does Not Inure to Benefit of Public at Large

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Underlying Public Policy Must Inure to Benefit of Public at Large

[b] Termination of Employee for Refusing Drug Test Is Not Violation of Public Policy

[c] Denial of Employee's Request to Work Part-Time Does Not Violate Public Policy

§ 100.54 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Asserted Public Policy Is Inapplicable to Defendant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inapplicable Constitutional or Statutory Policy Cannot Be "Fundamental"

§ 100.54A Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Alleged Discharge Because of Pregnancy--Defendant Was Unaware That Plaintiff Was Pregnant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Establish That Defendant Knew Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class

§ 100.55 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--In-House Counsel's Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Not Based on Explicit and Unequivocal Mandatory Ethical Requirement

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Must Be Based on Explicit and Unequivocal Mandatory Ethical Obligations

[b] Action Must Be Based on Mandatory Ethical Requirement Intended to Benefit Public

§ 100.56 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--In-House Counsel's Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Cannot Be Maintained Without Violating Attorney-Client Privilege

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Wrongful Discharge Claim May Not Breach Attorney-Client Privilege

§ 100.57 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Policy Relied on by Plaintiff Is Counterbalanced by Another Policy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Will Not Support Wrongful Discharge Action If Counterbalanced by Other Public Policy

§ 100.58 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--No Fundamental Public Policy Against Discharge for Exercise of Constitutional or Statutory Right

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Employee for Exercising Constitutional or Statutory Right Is Not Actionable Unless Discharge Violates Clear Public Policy

§ 100.59 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Failure to Exhaust Internal Grievance Procedure

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Tort Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Tort Action

§ 100.59A Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Employer Is Public Entity

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action for Wrongful Discharge in Violation of Public Policy Is Unavailable Against Public Entity

§ 100.60 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Discharged in Retaliation for "Whistleblowing"--Discharge Occurred for Legitimate, Independent Reasons

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 100.61 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Discharged in Retaliation for "Whistleblowing"--Failure to Exhaust Internal Grievance Procedure

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Retaliatory Discharge Action

§ 100.61A Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Discharged for "Whistleblowing"--Plaintiff's Conduct Did Not Amount to Protected "Whistleblowing"

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Have Engaged in Protected Activity

§ 100.61B Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Physician Not Terminated for Advocating for Medically Appropriate Health Care

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Memorandum

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Physician May Be Terminated for Failure to Comply With Employer's Directives That Are Medically Appropriate

§ 100.62 Supporting Contention That Tort Cause of Action for Fraud Exists--Fraud Independent of Termination

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraud Cause of Action Not Precluded in Wrongful Discharge Action If Misrepresentation Was for Purpose Separate From Effecting Termination of Employment

[b] Action for Promissory Fraud

[c] Action for Fraud in Inducing Employment Not Barred by Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Rule

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraud Cause of Action Not Precluded in Wrongful Discharge Action if Misreprentation Was for Purpose Separate From Effecting Termination of Employment

§ 100.63 Opposing Contention That Tort Cause of Action for Fraud Exists--Fraud Not Independent of Termination

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Misrepresentation in Course of Termination of Employment Does Not Support Cause of Action in Tort

§ 100.64 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Preempt Action--National Labor Relations Board Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Jurisdiction of National Labor Relations Board

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exclusive Jurisdiction of National Labor Relations Board

§ 100.65 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Preempt Action--Section 301 of Labor Management Relations Act Preempts State-Law Cause of Action [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim

§ 100.66 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Preempt Action--Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Preempts State-Law Claim Against Labor Organization

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption by Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act

§ 100.67 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--ERISA Preempts State-Law Claim--Claim Relates to Benefit Plan Regulated by ERISA [29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] ERISA Preempts State Laws That Relate to Benefit Plans

[b] "Relates to" Defined

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] "Relates to" Defined

§ 100.68 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--ERISA Preempts State-Law Claim--ERISA Action Covers Same Misconduct Alleged in State-Law Action [29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption Based on ERISA Claims

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Preemption Based on ERISA Claims

§ 100.69 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim by National Bank Act [12 U.S.C. § 24]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption by National Bank Act

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption by National Bank Act

§ 100.70 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Action Preempted by Statute Providing Exclusive Remedy--Workers' Compensation Act Provides Exclusive Remedy for Injury Caused by Termination [Lab. Code §§ 3600, 3602]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Remedy for Personal Injury Caused by Discharge

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exclusive Remedy for Injury Caused by Discharge

§ 100.71 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Action--Labor Management Relations Act Does Not Preempt Action--Action Based on Right Independent of Collective Bargaining Agreement [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Federal Preemption of Independent State--Law Claim

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Federal Preemption of Independent State-Law Claim

§ 100.72 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Action--National Labor Relations Act Does Not Preempt Action--Unrelated Causes of Action Not Preempted by National Labor Relations Act [29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims Unrelated to Unfair Labor Practices Not Preempted

§ 100.73 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Cause of Action--Action Based on Conduct Not Exclusively Regulated by National Labor Relations Act [29

U.S.C. § 151 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] NLRA Does Not Exclusively Regulate All Areas Concerned With Labor Standards

§ 100.74 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Action--Labor Management Relations Act Does Not Preempt Action--Plaintiff Not Covered by Collective Bargaining Agreement Action [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employee Not Covered by Labor Agreement

§ 100.75 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Preempted--ERISA Does Not Preempt Action--State-Law Claim Not Preempted by ERISA if Claim Only Tenuously Related to Administration of Benefit Plan

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] ERISA Preempts Only State Law That Covers the Same Subject or That Prevents an Interstate Benefit Plan From

Having Uniformity in Its Benefits Structure and Administration

[b] ERISA Does Not Preempt State-Law Claim for Recovery of Lost Wages and Benefits as Consequence of Wrongful Discharge

§ 100.76 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Preempted--ERISA Does Not Preempt Action--ERISA Does Not Preempt State Claims That Are Independent of ERISA-Related Claims

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations Independent of Benefit Plan Are Not Preempted

§ 100.77 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Action Not Preempted by Statute Providing Exclusive Remedy--Workers' Compensation Act Does Not Provide Exclusive Remedy for Discharge in Violation of Public Policy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception to Exclusive Remedy Provisions

[b] Workers' Compensation Remedy for Retaliatory Discharge Is Not Exclusive

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exception to Exclusive Remedy Provisions

§ 100.78 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--National Bank Act [12 U.S.C. § 24] Does Not Preempt FEHA Claims Not in Conflict With Federal Antidiscrimination Laws

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption by National Bank Act Is Limited

§ 100.79 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Does Not Preempt Wrongful Discharge Claims Based on Public Policy Against Discrimination

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Does Not Preempt Wrongful Discharge Claims Based on Public Policy Against Discrimination

§ 100.80 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Termination Cause of Action Is Barred by After-Acquired Evidence Justifying Termination

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] After-Acquired Evidence Doctrine

[b] Misconduct Relating to Heart of Employment Relationship Bars Wrongful Termination Action

[c] After-Acquired Evidence Admissible to Support Employer's Originally Proffered Reason for Termination

§ 100.81 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Termination Cause of Action Is Barred by After-Acquired Evidence Justifying Termination

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] After-Acquired Evidence Does Not Defeat Wrongful Termination Action

[b] After-Acquired Evidence Does Not Bar or Limit Employee's Action Unless It Would Actually Have Resulted in Termination

[c] After-Acquired Evidence Pertaining to Plaintiff's Immigration Status Does Not Bar Wrongful Termination Action

§ 100.82 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Alleged Damages Were Avoidable--Affirmative Defense to Hostile Environment Sexual Harassment Claim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Not Liable for Avoidable Consequences of Alleged Sexual Harassment

§ 100.83 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Subjected to Hostile Environmental Sexual Harassment--Alleged Conduct Not Hostile or Abusive to Employees Because of Their Sex

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Establish Sex-Based Harassment That Alters Conditions of Employment

Carolyn Rashby n*

FOOTNOTES:
(n10)Footnote *. Carolyn Rashby is an attorney and free-lance writer, specializing in labor and employment law.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.01

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda that may be submitted in actions asserting wrongful termination from employment. It also contains points and authorities pertaining to wrongful demotion and other discipline short of termination. It includes memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 100.20, 100.21] and opposing [see §§ 100.22, 100.23] contentions regarding the applicability of the presumption of "at-will" employment; opposing a contention that failure to renew a fixed-term employment contract can be a wrongful discharge [see § 100.24]; supporting [see §§ 100.27, 100.28] and opposing [see §§ 100.25, 100.26, 100.29, 100.30] contentions that a cause of action can be stated because good cause to terminate the employment did not exist; supporting [see §§ 100.31 -100.33] and opposing [see §§ 100.35 -100.38] the contention that plaintiff was constructively discharged; supporting [see § 100.34] and opposing [see § 100.39] the contention that plaintiff was demoted in violation of an express or implied agreement to demote for cause only; opposing breach of at will contract because of change in terms and conditions [see § 100.40]; and supporting [see §§ 100.41 -100.51A] and opposing [see §§ 100.52 -100.61B] the contention that the termination of plaintiff's employment violated public policy and therefore could be the basis of a tort cause of action. It also includes memoranda supporting [see § 100.62] and opposing [see § 100.63] the contention that a fraud cause of action exists against the employer, and memoranda supporting [see §§ 100.64 -100.70] and opposing [see §§ 100.71 -100.79] the contention that any wrongful termination cause of action is preempted by other law. This chapter also contains Memoranda supporting [see § 100.80] and opposing [see § 100.81] the contention that a wrongful termination action is barred by after-acquired evidence justifying the termination. Finally, this chapter includes a form for use in supporting a contention that the defendant is not liable for the avoidable consequences of workplace sexual harassment alleged by the plaintiff [see § 100.82], and a form for use in opposing a contention that the plaintiff was subjected to hostile environmental sexual harassment [see § 100.83].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaLabor & Employment LawDiscriminationHarassmentSexual HarassmentHostile Work

EnvironmentLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationGeneral OverviewLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationBreach of ContractGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.02

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.02 Page Limits on Memoranda

Generally, a memorandum must not exceed 15 pages, or in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. For further discussion of the page limitations under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113, and of other basic format requirements of memoranda,see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.03

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.03 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to wrongful termination of employment, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsGeneral OverviewLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.04

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.04 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to employer's liability for employee's torts, see Ch. 100A, Employer and Employee: Respondeat Superior .

For discussion and forms relating to workers' compensation, see Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedies Doctrine .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsDuties & LiabilitiesNegligent Acts of AgentsLiability of PrincipalsTortsVicarious LiabilityEmployersGeneral OverviewWorkers' Compensation & SSDIRemedies Under Other LawsExclusivityGeneral Overview

6 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.05

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.05 Related California Torts Chapters

For discussion relating to wrongful termination actions, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 40, Pt. E (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Labor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationGeneral OverviewLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationPublic PolicyTortsBusiness TortsBad Faith Breach of ContractGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.06

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.06 Related California Employment Law Chapters

For a discussion of California law regarding wrongful termination, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, Ch. 61, Bringing and Defending Wrongful Termination Claims, Ch. 62, Avoiding Wrongful Termination and Discipline Claims, and Ch. 63, Cause of Action Related to Wrongful Termination (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Labor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsGeneral OverviewLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100 California Points & Authorities §§ 100.07-100.19

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

[Reserved]

§§ 100.07[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.20

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.20 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Was Not "At Will"--Right to Terminate Limited by Express Agreement Between Parties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO TERMINATE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT AT WILL, BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO TERMINATE PLAINTIFF IS LIMITED BY AN EXPRESS AGREEMENT TO TERMINATE ONLY FOR "GOOD CAUSE."

Express "Good Cause" Agreement Rebuts "At-Will" Presumption. The Labor Code Section 2922 presumption of "at-will" employment is rebuttable by evidence of an express agreement to terminate only for good cause (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 677, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Drzewiecki v. H & R Block, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 704, 101 Cal. Rptr. 169).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that the employment was not "at-will" because there was an express agreement limiting defendant's right to discharge plaintiff except for good cause.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the statutory at-will presumption does not apply because there is an agreement limiting discharge except for good cause, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence (such as a written employment agreement or evidence of an employer's policies and practices) of an express agreement not to terminate except for good cause, and should argue that the agreement overcomes the presumption established by Lab. Code § 2922 [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 677, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Drzewiecki v. H & R Block, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 704, 101 Cal. Rptr. 169] . If the evidence of an express agreement is equivocal, or if it appears that defendant may be able to argue that there is a defense to the enforcement of any express agreement, counsel should also use the appropriate contentions from § 100.21 to argue that the at-will presumption is overcome by an implied agreement.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.22 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.05 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express "Good Cause" Agreement Rebuts "At Will" Presumption

In Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , a discharged employee brought a wrongful discharge action against his former employer, alleging causes of action for tortious breach of public policy, tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of implied-in-fact contract. At the time of employment, plaintiff was required to sign a "Confidential and Proprietary Information Agreement" in which he promised not to engage in certain competition with defendant for one year after the termination of his employment for any reason. He also signed agreements to disclose to defendant all information and developments relating to computers for oneyear following termination, and to assign to defendant all rights to computer inventions for one year. There was no agreement stating any limitation on the grounds for which plaintiff's employment could be terminated. Plaintiff was given good evaluations and promoted regularly, and alleged that the officers of defendant corporation made repeated oral assurances of job security so long as his performance remained adequate. Plaintiff also alleged that during his employment, defendant maintained written "Termination Guidelines" that set forth express grounds for discharge and a mandatory seven-step pretermination procedure, which he alleged applied to him. He alleged that he reasonably believed, on the basis of representations contained in those guidelines, that he would not be discharged except for good cause, and that he therefore refrained from accepting or pursuing other job opportunities.

Almost seven years after being employed, plaintiff's supervisor was replaced by a man whom plaintiff discovered was under federal investigation for embezzlement from the supervisor's former employer, a financial institution. Plaintiff disclosed that information to an officer of the corporation, in a private conversation, because he was worried about working for that supervisor in light of his suspected criminal conduct. He asserted that he made the disclosure in the interest and for the benefit of his employer, allegedly because he believed that because defendant and its parent company did business with the financial community on a confidential basis, the company would have a legitimate interest in knowing about a high executive's alleged prior criminal conduct. The officer told plaintiff to "forget" what he had heard about the supervisor's past. A few months later, the supervisor told plaintiff that defendant had decided to replace him for "performance reasons," first telling him that he could transfer to a position in another state, then making the transfer contingent on satisfactory performance under a "performance plan." Ultimately, the supervisor gave plaintiff the choice of resigning or being fired. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to all three causes of action without leave to amend, and dismissed the action. The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of all three counts.

The Supreme Court affirmed with respect to the causes of action for tortious breach of public policy and tortious breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, but reversed with respect to the cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract, holding that the claim is not barred by the statute of frauds (47 Cal. 3d 654, 700) . In its most significant aspect, the decision clarified the law with regard to damages in wrongful discharge actions, holding that a plaintiff can recover available contract remedies for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, but may not recover tort damages (47 Cal. 3d 654, 682-699) .

Although the Court reaffirmed that a wrongful discharge cause of action may also be based on an implied-in-fact contract not to discharge except for "good cause," [citing Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , discussed in § 100.21[3][a]], it recognized that an "at will" agreement is presumed if there is no express oral or written agreement specifying the length of employment or the ground for termination [Lab. Code § 2922] (47 Cal. 3d 654, 675-677) .

In Drzewiecki v. H & R. Block, Inc. (1972) 24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 101 Cal. Rptr. 169 , the plaintiff was hired in 1959 by defendant as an income tax preparer. In April 1959, defendant and plaintiff executed an agreement entitled "Articles of Employment" that gave plaintiff the opportunity to manage a new company office that was yet to be opened in another city. The "Articles of Employment" stated that the agreement was for a period of two years and thereafter would automatically renew from year to year unless either party gave written notice of termination 90 days prior to the renewal date. The Articles also stated that the defendant could give notice of termination only if the plaintiff improperly conducted the business. The plaintiff moved his family and opened up the office. Several years later, the defendant terminated the agreement after the plaintiff had refused to sign a new agreement limiting his share of net profits. The trial court found that the agreement employed plaintiff for so long as he properly conducted business and that the agreement could not be terminated by the defendant except for good cause. Further, the trial court held that the defendant did not have good cause to terminate the agreement, and entered judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the general rule is that a contract for employment, whether or not it is based on some consideration other than the employee's services, cannot be terminated at the will of the employer if it contains an express or implied condition to the contrary. Finding that the agreement explicitly stated, inter alia, that the employer could give notice only if the plaintiff improperly conducted the business, the court concluded that if the contract had been terminable at the defendant's will, "these provisions, which were inserted in a contract prepared by [defendant's] own lawyer, were redundant and useless" (24 Cal. App. 3d 695, 703-705) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsAt-Will EmploymentDuration of EmploymentLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsAt-Will EmploymentExceptionsExpress ContractsLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationBreach of ContractExpress Contracts

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.21

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.21 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Is Not "At Will"--Right to Terminate Limited by Implied Agreement Between the Parties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO TERMINATE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT AT WILL, BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO TERMINATE PLAINTIFF WAS LIMITED BY AN IMPLIED AGREEMENT TO TERMINATE ONLY FOR "GOOD CAUSE."

A. Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts "At-Will" Presumption. The presumption of "at-will" employment is rebuttable by evidence of an implied agreement to terminate only for good cause (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 677, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-325, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 ; see Lab. Code § 2922).

[Optional] B. Totality of Circumstances May Establish "Good Cause" Agreement. The court may consider the totality of the parties' relationship to determine the existence of a "good cause" agreement. Thus, the acts and conduct of the parties, interpreted in light of the subject matter and of the surrounding circumstances, may show such an agreement (Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 ; see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 681-682, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373).

[Optional] C. Parol Evidence Is Admissible to Show "Good Cause" Agreement if Written Agreement Is Not Integrated. Parol evidence is admissible to show that a written agreement, which is not a complete and final expression of the parties' agreement because it lacks an integration clause and specific terms of employment, is reasonably susceptible to the interpretation that the parties agreed to a requirement that termination be based only on "good cause" (McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1483-1486, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863).

[Optional] D. Employer's Breach of Written Personnel Policy May Support Cause of Action. An allegation of breach of written guidelines, such as a personnel manual or policy, that imply self-imposed limitations on the power to discharge at will, may be sufficient to state a cause of action for breach of a "good cause" agreement (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 681-682, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373).

[Optional] E. Independent Consideration Not Required. Separate consideration is not necessary to support a "good cause" agreement; an employee's promise to render services, or the actual rendition of services over time, can be sufficient consideration for an agreement to terminate for cause only (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 679-680, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 325-326, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that an implied agreement between the parties limited the defendant's right to terminate the plaintiff's employment at will, permitting discharge only for good cause [see Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 327, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917] . Optional Paragraph B is for use if plaintiff wishes to contend that the existence of an implied "good-cause" contract, which is supported by the totality of the relationship. Optional Paragraph C may be used when a "good-cause" agreement was orally created and is not contradicted by a written agreement that is integrated and therefore precludes modification by parol evidence. Optional Paragraph D is for use if the employer has a written personnel policy, such as a manual, which limits its power to terminate "at will." The plaintiff may use Optional Paragraph E to counter an assertion that there was no independent consideration for any "good-cause" agreement.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's employment is not at will because there is an implied agreement not to terminate except for good cause, for example in a summary judgment motion. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel could discuss evidence which indicates that, although the employment relationship initially may have been at will, the parties impliedly altered it by a promise by defendant not to discharge plaintiff without good cause. Thus, counsel should specify the conduct of the parties that evidences the implied agreement, such as the personnel policies or practices of the employer, the employee's longevity of service, actions or communications by the employer reflecting assurances of continued employment, and the practices of the industry in which the employee is engaged [see Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 327, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.23 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, §§ 60.05, 60.09[5] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts "At Will" Presumption

The facts and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , are discussed in § 100.20[3][a]. In Foley, the California Supreme Court cited with approval Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , discussed below, which held that a jury could determine the existence of an implied promise that an employer would not arbitrarily terminate employment. The court noted that Lab. Code § 2922 establishes a presumption of at will employment if the parties have made no express oral or written agreement specifying the length of employment or the grounds for termination. However, this presumption may be overcome by evidence that, even though the agreement does not specify the term of employment, the parties agreed that the employer's power to terminate would be limited in some way, for example, by a requirement that termination be based only on "good cause." Moreover, the absence of an express written or oral contract term concerning termination of employment does not necessarily indicate that the employment is actually intended by the parties to be "at will," because the presumption of at will employment may be overcome by evidence of contrary intent. Generally, to enforce the actual understanding of the parties to a contract, courts may inquire into the parties' conduct to determine if it demonstrates an implied contract. Thus, it is a question of fact whether the parties acted in such a manner as to provide the necessary foundation for an implied contract, and evidence may be introduced to rebut the inferences and show that there is another explanation for the conduct (47 Cal. 3d 654, 677) .

In Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , an employee sued his former employer for wrongful discharge on grounds of breach of contract and the employer's violation of public policy. The plaintiff, who worked his way up the corporate ladder from dishwasher to vice-president, worked for the defendant for 32 years. When the plaintiff first went to work for the defendant in 1941, the defendant's president told him that if he was loyal to the company, his future was secure. In addition, the defendant had a practice of not terminating administrative personnel except for good cause. Nevertheless, in 1973, the defendant fired the plaintiff without giving him a reason and without notice or warning. The defendant never formally criticized the plaintiff's work and never complained about him at annual meetings. In fact, the defendant regularly promoted the plaintiff and congratulated him on his accomplishments and loyal service. Plaintiff alleged that the defendant fired him because he objected to a questionable agreement between the defendant and the union representing the defendant's employees. On conclusion of the plaintiff's case-in-chief, the trial court granted the defendants' motions for nonsuit. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that an employer may not dismiss an employee "at will" if the discharge is contrary to the terms of an express or implied agreement between the parties (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 322) . The court noted that the law of employment relationships has undergone continuing evolution (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 319) , and the employer's right to terminate employees is no longer absolute (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 321) . An employer's right to terminate employment is limited in two situations: (1) when an employee's discharge violates fundamental principles of public policy; and (2) when the discharge is contrary to the terms of an express or implied agreement (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 322) . With respect to the latter issue, the court stated that the presumption that an employment contract is intended to be terminable at will is subject, like any presumption, to contrary evidence, which may take the form of an express or implied agreement that the relationship will continue indefinitely, pending the occurrence of some event such as the employer's dissatisfaction with the employee's services or the existence of some "cause" for termination (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-325) . The court held that such an agreement is no less enforceable because it places no equivalent limits on the power of the employee to quit the employment (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 325) .

[b] Totality of Circumstances May Establish "Good Cause" Agreement

The facts and procedural background of Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , are discussed under§ 100.21[3][a]. Pugh held that an employer may not fire an employee "at will" if there is an express or implied agreement that the employee may be fired only "for cause" (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-325) . The court also held that in determining whether an implied-in-fact promise for some form of continued employment exists, courts have considered a variety of factors, including personnel policies or practices, longevity of service, actions or communications reflecting assurances of continued employment, and industry practices (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 327) . In the instant case, there were facts in evidence from which the jury could determine the existence of such an implied promise: the duration of plaintiff's employment, the commendations and promotions he received, the apparent lack of any direct criticism of his work, the assurances he was given, and the employer's acknowledged policies (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329) . Although oblique language will not, standing alone, be sufficient to establish an agreement, it is appropriate to consider the totality of the parties' relationship. Agreement may be shown by the acts and conduct of the parties, interpreted in the light of the subject matter and of the surrounding circumstances (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329) .

[c] Parol Evidence Is Admissible to Show "Good-Cause" Agreement

In McLain v. Great American Ins. Companies (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 256 Cal. Rptr. 863 , an employee signed a job application that stated that he could be terminated with or without cause, but that also stated that the terms of employment could be changed. After being discharged, the employee sued for wrongful termination and recovered a judgment in his favor. The employer appealed on the basis that the written application provided an at will employment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for the employee. The court first determined that the employment application was not an integrated contract meant to embody the final agreement of the parties (208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1484-1485) . A standardized employment application, stating that employment could be "terminated with or without cause, and with or without notice, at any time," but which contained no integration clause, did not cover the employee's salary or position, and provided that the terms and conditions of employment could be changed at any time without cause or notice, was not an integrated document (i.e., a final and complete expression of the parties' agreement that precludes evidence of collateral agreements) (208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1486) . The court went on to state that even if the writing had been an integrated contract, parol evidence would have been admissible to prove a meaning to which the language of the instrument was reasonably susceptible. The court stated that the evidence introduced by the employee, which included language from the employer's personnel manual requiring cause for termination, supported the verdict for the employee (208 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1486-1487) .

[d] Employer's Breach of Written Personnel Policy May Support Cause of Action

The facts and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , are discussed in § 100.20[3][a]. In Foley, the Court relied on Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , discussed under § 100.21[3][b], to hold that an allegation of breach of written "Termination Guidelines" implying self-imposed limitations on the employer's power to discharge "at will" may be sufficient to state a cause of action for breach of an employment contract.

[e] Independent Consideration Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , are discussed in § 100.20[3][a]. In Foley, the Court agreed with Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , discussed below, and under § 100.21[3][b], that a requirement of separate consideration as a substantive limitation on "good cause" employment agreements is contrary to the general contract principle that courts should not inquire into the adequacy of consideration (47 Cal. 3d 654, 679) . Thus, the California

Supreme Court rejected the defendant's contention that such an agreement should not be enforced without separate consideration (47 Cal. 3d 654, 678) . The Court noted that the defendant relied on limitations developed during a period when courts were reluctant to look beyond the parties' explicit promises, whereas courts now consider factors apart from consideration and express terms to ascertain the existence and content of employment agreements (47 Cal. 3d 654, 680) .

The facts and procedural background of Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , are discussed under § 100.21[3][b]. Pugh, which held that an employer may not dismiss an employee "at will" if the discharge is contrary to the terms of an express or implied agreement between the parties (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 322) , also rejected the notion that "independent consideration," i.e., consideration other than the services rendered, must support a "for cause" agreement. The court held that such a rule is contrary to general contract principles, and that there was "no analytical reason why an employee's promise to render services, or his [or her] actual rendition of services over time, may not support an employer's promise to refrain from arbitrary dismissal" (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 325-326) . Rather, the "independent consideration" requirement serves an evidentiary function, in that it is more probable that the parties intended a continuing relationship, with limitations on the employer's dismissal authority, when the employee has provided some benefit to the employer, or suffers some detriment, beyond the usual rendition of service (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 326) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts "At Will" Presumption

In Wilkerson v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1217, 261 Cal. Rptr. 185 (disapproved on other grounds in Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 96, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412), a bank officer was discharged for misconduct in authorizing an overdraft that personally benefited him. Plaintiff alleged that there was an implied-in-fact contract not to discharge except for good cause. The trial court granted summary judgment for the bank based on the bank's argument that an employee handbook and operations manual contained at-will employment provisions. The appellate court reversed that portion of the judgment, holding that the handbook provisions did not constitute an integrated contract and that therefore were not controlling. Instead, the provisions were only factors to be considered by a jury, along with the defendant's personnel policies and practices, in determining the existence and content of any employment agreement (212 Cal. App. 3d 1217, 1226-1228) .

[b] Totality of Circumstances May Establish "Good Cause" Agreement

In Thomka v. Financial Corp. (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 877, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382 , a former account executive brought an action against a savings and loan association alleging wrongful termination based on breach of an implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for good cause. After a jury trial, the plaintiff accepted a remittur and judgment, and defendants appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding, inter alia, that the existence of the contract was supported by the circumstances of plaintiff's employment, including evidence at trial of express or implied promises of continued employment (15 Cal. App. 4th 877, 881-885) .

In Walker v. Blue Cross of California (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 985, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184 , plaintiff sued her former employer for wrongful termination based on breach of an implied-in-fact contract not to terminate her employment except for good cause. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer. The court of appeal reversed, holding that in view of the totality of circumstances surrounding plaintiff's employment, including her 19 1/2 years of service, her receipt of consistent promotions, salary and merit increases, and satisfactory evaluations, and the employer's personnel policies, there was a triable issue of material fact with respect to whether there was an implied agreement not to terminate except for good cause (4 Cal. App. 4th 985, 993) .

[c] Parol Evidence Is Admissible to Show "Good-Cause" Agreement if Written Agreement Is Not Integrated

In Esbensen v. Userware Internat., Inc. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 631, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93 , plaintiff sued his former employer for wrongful termination. He had worked under a series of one-year employment contracts, and was terminated before the last one expired, allegedly for failing to timely return from a vacation. The contract provided that either party could terminate the agreement on two-weeks notice. The trial court found that the contract was an integrated one-year agreement, and prevented plaintiff from offering evidence of an unwritten but consistent oral agreement to terminate only for cause; the parties entered into a stipulated judgment based on that ruling. On appeal by plaintiff, the court of appeal reversed, holding that the contract was only partially integrated, in that it was silent with respect to acceptable grounds for termination; therefore, plaintiff could properly introduce parol evidence of related oral understandings to prove additional terms of the contract not inconsistent with the express language of the writing (11 Cal. App. 4th 631, 636-640) .

In Aragon-Haas v. Family Security Ins. Services, Inc. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 282 Cal. Rptr. 233 , an employment contract provided that it would expire in one year and would automatically extend for six consecutive one-year terms. Under the contract, the defendant could terminate the plaintiff with or without cause during the first year, but it was unclear whether the defendant could do so after the first year. The defendant did not terminate the plaintiff during the first year, and in fact promoted her, praised her in reviews, gave her raises and bonuses, and never significantly criticized her performance. After the first year, the defendant sold the plaintiff three percent of its shares pursuant to a stock purchase and sale agreement. Shortly thereafter, without warning, or any stated justification or cause, the defendant terminated plaintiff's employment by letter. The plaintiff sued defendant for wrongful termination, alleging breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, estoppel to terminate except for good cause, and fraud. The defendant demurred and the trial court sustained the demurrer. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed as to the breach of contract and implied covenant causes of action.

The court declared that even if the parties to a contract agree that it is an integrated agreement, extrinsic evidence is admissible to explain what the parties meant by the language they used (231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 240) . The court also held that the plaintiff was entitled to plead her own construction of the ambiguous employment contract, and a demurrer was improper to resolve the meaning of the contract against the plaintiff, so long as her construction was not clearly erroneous. The court explained that the contract was unclear whether the right to terminate "with or without cause" existed only during the first year or whether the right continued throughout the specified term of employment (i.e., throughout the subsequent six years). The court concluded that the contract was ambiguous and was reasonably susceptible to the plaintiff's interpretation that after successful completion of the first year, the defendant could not fire her without cause (231 Cal. App. 3d 232, 239-240) .

In Harden v. Maybelline Sales Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1550, 282 Cal. Rptr. 96 , a court of appeal declared that the parol evidence rule does not apply to a standardized preprinted employment application, because such an application is not a contract, but instead is a solicitation of an offer of employment. It is evidence concerning the ultimate agreement entered into by the parties, but is not an integrated agreement that cannot be modified by contemporaneous oral agreements (230 Cal. App. 3d 1550, 1555) . Therefore, if a plaintiff introduces evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement that the employment could be terminated only for good cause, there is a triable issue of fact concerning the terms of his or her employment (230 Cal. App. 3d 1550, 1556) .

[d] Employer's Breach of Written Personnel Policy May Support Cause of Action

In Prevost v. First Western Bank (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 239 Cal. Rptr. 161 , an employee under an oral employment contract brought a wrongful discharge action against his former employer, alleging that the stated grounds for his dismissal were pretextual, and that the true reason for discharge was his refusal to support the ultimately successful executive in a corporate power struggle. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, based at least in part on defendant's argument that the statute of frauds applied. The court of appeal reversed, stating that the contract appeared to require cause to terminate, and holding that there was a triable issue of material fact regarding whether just cause was the basis for termination, or whether the termination was for a reason that defendants did not believe constituted good cause under the contract (193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1500-1501) . The court based its discussion of the limits on defendant's right to terminate plaintiff on the policies and procedures regarding termination that were set forth in the employer's personnel policy manual (193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1501) .

In Rulon-Miller v. International Business Machines Corp. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 208 Cal. Rptr. 524 , an employee sued her former employer based on allegations that she was discharged for engaging in a romantic relationship with an employee of defendant's competition, in contravention of defendant's written policy of respecting the private lives of its employees, although defendant stated the reason for discharge to be "conflict of interest." The court of appeal affirmed the trial court judgment for plaintiff for compensatory and punitive damages, holding, among other things, that the jury properly considered the question of whether defendant's overall policy, based partly on personnel guidelines, precluded the discharge absent good cause (162 Cal. App. 3d 241, 247-251) . Counsel should note that Rulon-Miller was disapproved by the California Supreme Court in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 700 n.42, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , to the extent that it permitted tort remedies for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. However, the discussion of the permissible sources of an agreement to terminate only for cause should not be affected by the disapproval.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsAt-Will EmploymentEmployersLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsAt-Will EmploymentExceptionsImplied ContractsLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationBreach of ContractImplied Contracts

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.22

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.22 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Was "At Will"--No Express or Implied Agreement Limited Defendant's Right to Discharge Plaintiff "At Will" [Lab. Code § 2922]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT FOR AN UNSPECIFIED TERM WAS AT WILL BECAUSE NO EXPRESS OR IMPLIED AGREEMENT LIMITED THE DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO DISCHARGE PLAINTIFF AT WILL.

A. Employment for Unspecified Term Terminable At Will Absent Other Agreement. An employment, having no specified term, may be terminated at the will of either party on notice to the other, in the absence of some other agreement, either express or implied, between the parties. [Employment for a specified term means an employment for a period greater than one month] (Lab. Code § 2922; Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 671-675, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373).

[Optional] B. Personnel "Guidelines" Do Not Indicate That Employment Was Not "At Will." A personnel policy that is not mandatory, but merely sets forth guidelines for employee terminations, does not overcome the statutory presumption of at will employment (Knights v. Hewlett Packard (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780, 281 Cal. Rptr. 295).

[Optional] C. Existence of Progressive Discipline Policy Does Not Negate "At Will" Presumption. The mere existence of a progressive discipline policy neither proves nor disproves that the employment relationship was at will. (Davis v. Consolidated Freightways (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 354, 367, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438).

[Optional] D. Positive Performance Reviews, Commendations, SalaryIncreases, and Vague Assurances of Advancement in Company Do Not Negate "At Will" Presumption. Such matters, by themselves, are insufficient to support an inference that there was an implicit agreement to terminate the employee only for cause (Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 341-343 ; Kovatch v. California Casualty Management Co. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1275-1276, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217).

[Optional] E. Employer's Unilaterally Adopted "No-Layoff" Policy May be Unilaterally Discontinued. A no-layoff policy, unilaterally adopted by the employer, may be unilaterally discontinued, so long as the employer does so after a reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with employees' vested benefits. Once the policy is discontinued, the statutory at-will presumption is applicable (Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 9-18, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71).

[Optional] F. Contractual Provision for Performance Review After 12 Months Does Not Negate "At Will" Presumption. A contractual provision that a performance review will be completed after 12 months' employment is not by itself sufficient to overcome the statutory presumption that the employment is at will (Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 969-970, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff-employee's contention that employment cannot be terminated at will, if there is no allegation that there is an agreement, either express or implied, that limits the defendant-employer's right to terminate the plaintiff's employment at will. If the plaintiff contends that the defendant's personnel policies created an implied agreement limiting the defendant's right to discharge plaintiff, the defendant may use Optional Paragraph B if it can show that its personnel policy, although it sets forth guidelines for terminating employees, including termination for unacceptable performance, is not mandatory, and therefore does not establish a for cause agreement. Similarly, if the plaintiff relies on circumstances such as the defendant's progressive discipline policy, performance reviews, or discontinued no-layoff policy to rebut the statutory presumption that the employment was at will, Optional Paragraphs C--E may be used as appropriate. Because the at will presumption may be easily overcome by a plaintiff, in an appropriate case these points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities such as those set out in § 100.29 contending that, even if the employment was not at will, defendant had good cause to terminate the plaintiff.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.21.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's employment was at will, for example in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the employment was an at will relationship based on an oral contract of employment, and that there was no agreement written or otherwise altering the employer's right to discharge at will. If the plaintiff relies on personnel policies to argue an implied agreement to terminate only for cause, counsel should argue that the personnel policies did not create an agreement because they were merely guidelines for termination. If the plaintiff relies on the defendant's discontinued no-layoff policy to rebut the at-will presumption, the argument should show that the employer discontinued the policy a reasonable time after adopting it, on reasonable notice, and without interfering with employees' vested benefits.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Formsof Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.05 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employment for Unspecified Term Terminable At Will Absent Other Agreement

The facts and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , are discussed in § 100.20[3][a]. Generally, Foley held (1) that in an action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the policy must affect a duty to the public at large and not merely to a particular employee or employer, and, most significantly, (2) that an action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing does not afford tort remedies, but rather gives rise only to ordinary contract damages (47 Cal. 3d 654, 682-699) . Although the Court reaffirmed that a wrongful discharge cause of action may also be based on an implied-in-fact contract not to discharge except for "good cause" [citing Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , discussed in § 100.21[3][a]] (47 Cal. 3d 654, 675-676) , it recognized that an "at will" agreement is presumed if there is no express oral or written agreement specifying the length of employment or the ground for termination [Lab. Code § 2922] (47 Cal. 3d 654, 677) .

[b] Personnel "Guidelines" Do Not Indicate That Employment Was Not "At Will"

In Knights v. Hewlett Packard (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 281 Cal. Rptr. 295 , an employee was injured on the job and went on medical leave. While he was on leave, the employee won a vacation and informed his defendant-employer that he could not return to work until after the vacation. When he did not return to work when he was supposed to, the defendant demanded that he return or be fired. When the employee then requested a personal leave because he was unhappy, the defendant offered him a further six weeks of leave with assurances that his job was safe if he returned on time. When his time was up, the employee requested an extension. The defendant told him that an extension was possible, but that he had to finalize his plans by a specified date. When the employee did not respond by that date, the defendant demanded that he contact the defendant within four days or be fired. The employee did not respond until seven days later, at which time the defendant told him he was fired. The employee sued for wrongful termination, alleging an implied contract requiring good cause for termination. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, finding that employment was "at will" and that good cause existed for the employee's discharge. The employee appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the employee did not raise a triable issue as to whether the defendant promised only to terminate for good cause. The court disagreed with the employee that the defendant's personnel policies were a part of his employment contract, and that the defendant failed to comply with its own policies. The court noted that the policy stated that it was a "guide for supervisors involved with employment termination[,]" and therefore it was only a guideline (230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780) . The court also held that sufficient cause existed if the policies were binding (230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780-781) .

[c] Existence of Progressive Discipline Policy Does Not Negate "At Will" Presumption

In Davis v. Consolidated Freightways (1994) 29 Cal. App. 4th 354, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 438 , an employee was terminated for theft after an investigation by management. The employee had worked for the defendant for ten years and had received regular merit increases and promotions. The employee sued for wrongful termination, alleging, among other things, breach of an implied contract not to terminate except for good cause. The defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted.

The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the plaintiff could not raise a triable issue of fact as to whether he could overcome the presumption of at will employment. The court found that the existence of the defendant's progressive discipline policy proved "nothing regarding the existence or nonexistence of [the defendant's] at will employment policy" (29 Cal. App. 4th 354, 367) .

[d] Positive Performance Reviews, Commendations, Salary Increases, and Vague Assurances of Advancement in Company Do Not Negate "At Will" Presumption

In Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317 , a longtime employee was released at age 49 when his work unit was eliminated and its tasks transferred to another office of theemployer. The employee sued the employer, alleging among other things, an implied contract to be terminated only for good cause, based on his long and successful service with the employer. The employee argued that by retaining him for 20 years and by providing steady raises, promotions, commendations, and good performance reviews, the employer had engaged in actions reflecting assurances of continued employment. The California Supreme Court rejected this contention, holding that an employee's mere passage of time in the employer's service, even when marked with tangible indicia that the employer approves of the employee's work, cannot alone form an implied-in-fact contract to be terminated only for good cause. Absent other evidence of the employer's intent, the employee's longevity, raises, and promotions are their own rewards for continuing valued service; they do not, in and of themselves, additionally constitute a contractual guarantee of future employment security (24 Cal. 4th 317, 341-343) .

Kovatch v. California Casualty Management Co. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 , concerned a plaintiff who was claiming wrongful termination. Among other things, he alleged that his termination constituted a breach of an implied contract of continued employment. As part of his employment application, the plaintiff had signed a section providing as follows: "In consideration of my employment, I agree to conform to the rules and regulations of CASUALTY MANAGEMENT CO., and my employment and compensation can be terminated, with or without cause, at any time, at the option of either the Company or myself. I understand that no representative of CASUALTY MANAGEMENT CO. other than the President of the Company, has any authority to enter into any agreement for employment for any specified period of time, or to make any agreement contrary to the foregoing." Later, the plaintiff signed a document entitled "Employment Agreement," which stated "CCMC has offered to employ [the plaintiff] subject to ... the terms and conditions ... set forth in the CCMC employee handbook and personnel manual. [The plaintiff] desires to accept such employment on the basis offered." The plaintiff also signed an acknowledgment of receipt of an employee handbook, which provided "[a]ny individual may voluntarily leave employment with California Casualty Management Co. upon proper notice, and may be terminated by California Casualty Management Co. at any time and for any reason." The employer moved for summary judgment, contending that these documents, plus the statutory presumption of at-will employment (Lab. Code § 2922), established that the plaintiff's employment could be terminated at will. In opposition to the motion, the plaintiff offered evidence that throughout his five years of employment with the employer, he had received positive performance reviews, commendations from his superiors, and salary increases. He also offered evidence of various statements made to him over the years by various supervisory employees in which they allegedly assured him he had a future with the company and undoubtedly would be promoted (65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1262-1265) .

The trial court granted the employer summary judgment on the plaintiff's breach-of-contract claim. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiff's evidence of positive performance reviews, commendations, salary increases, and vague assurances that he would be promoted was not sufficient to create a triable issue of fact as to whether the parties had implicitly agreed to limit the employer's right to terminate the plaintiff. The court noted that most of those factors are natural occurrences for an employee who remains with an employer for a substantial length of time (65 Cal. App. 4th 1275-1276), 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1276 .

[e] Employer's Unilaterally Adopted "No-Layoff" Policy May be Unilaterally Discontinued

In Asmus v. Pacific Bell (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 1, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 179, 999 P.2d 71 , the employer issued a Management Employment Security Policy ("MESP") in 1986 that stated it was the employer's policy to "offer all management employees who continue to meet our changing business expectations employment security through reassignment to and retraining for other management positions, even if their present jobs are eliminated." The policy was to be maintained so long as no changes occurred that would materially affect the employer's business plan achievement. In 1990, the employer notified its managers that it might have to discontinue the MESP for business reasons. Almost two years later, the employer did terminate its MESP. In its place, the employer adopted a new layoff policy designed to decrease management through job reassignments and voluntary terminations and providing a generous severance package. Those employees who opted to retire under this policy would be given enhanced benefits. Those employees who opted to remain were given increased pension benefits, which were less than those given employees who opted to leave.

A group of employees who remained and were affected by the MESP cancellation, but who were given increased pension benefits, sued the employer in federal district court. The plaintiffs sought, among other things, damages for breach of contract. The district court granted the plaintiffs' summary judgment on the breach of contract claim, holding that the employer could not terminate the MESP without demonstrating that the condition specified in the MESP for allowing its termination occurred. Pursuant to the parties' agreement, on interlocutory appeal the Ninth Circuit certified the following question for the California Supreme Court to answer: "Once an employer's unilaterally adopted policy--which requires employees to be retained so long as a specified condition does not occur--has become a part of the employment contract, may the employer thereafter unilaterally terminate the policy, even though the specified condition has not occurred?" The California Supreme Court granted the certification request and answered the question in the affirmative.

The Supreme Court noted that an implied contract not to terminate or demote except for good cause rebuts the statutory presumption that employment is at will (see Lab. Code § 2922). Similarly, an employer may adopt a no-layoff policy that may become a part of a unilateral contract. The Court defined a unilateral contract as having only one promisor, who gives the promise in consideration of the promisee's act or forbearance, including the employee's continuing to work in response to the unilateral promise. The Court explained that in a unilateral contract of employment, the employer promises additional advantages to employees, and the offer is accepted if the employee continues in employment (23 Cal. 4th 1, 9-10) .

The Court next addressed how such a unilateral contract may be terminated. The Court looked to the rules of termination of unilateral contracts in other jurisdictions because California had no case on point. The Court stated that the majority of jurisdictions that have addressed the issue of whether and how an employer may terminate or modify a unilateral employment contract with no fixed duration period have held that the employer may terminate or modify such a contact after a reasonable time period if it provides employees with reasonable notice, and the modification does not interfere with vested employee benefits. The Court noted that only a minority of jurisdictions hold that employers cannot terminate or modify a unilateral employment contract without the employees' express knowledge and consent, and that continued employment is inadequate consideration for the change. The Court disagreed with this notion, finding that employers may be forced by economic reasons to shut down or curtail their operations, and when an employer chooses in good faith to modify or eliminate a policy as a business alternative to totally shutting down, the employer has shown forbearance that constitutes a benefit to the employees in the form of continuing employment under modified terms (23 Cal. 4th 1, 11-14) .

The court reiterated that the general rule governing the termination of unilateral contracts is that additional consideration is not necessary, so long as the employer provides reasonable notice of the change. The Court explained that the principle of mutuality of obligation does not apply to unilateral contracts. The continued employment by the employees constitutes the acceptance of the modification to a unilateral contract. The Court held that, here, when the employees' signed the acknowledgment of notice of the policy termination and continued to work, it constituted their acceptance of the change (23 Cal. 4th 1, 14-15) .

The Court next addressed the plaintiffs' argument that if the employer could unilaterally modify the MESP, it was an illusory contract. The Court made the distinction that if the words in the contract expressly give one party the sole and unfettered right to make changes, the promise is illusory, but if one party reserves the implied power to terminate or modify the contract, it is not illusory if the exercise of that right is subject to limitations, such as fairness and reasonable notice. The Court pointed out that as long as the MESP remained in effect, the employer was required to follow it, and it was fully enforceable until terminated or modified (23 Cal. 4th 1, 15-16) .

The Court also addressed the plaintiffs' argument that a contract specifying termination on the occurrence or nonoccurrence of a future happening, instead of on a specific date, is one of definite duration and cannot be terminated until that event occurs. The event at issue pertained to the language in the MESP stating that it would maintain the MESP so long as its business conditions did not substantially change. The Court pointed out that this condition did not refer to a specific, ascertainable event, but rather a series of changes that would lead to the need to terminate or modify the policy. The court therefore determined that the condition in the MESP did not restrict the employer's ability to terminate or modify it so long as it did so after a reasonable time, on reasonable notice, and in a manner that did not interfere with employees' vested benefits. Applying that standard, the Court found that those conditions were met. The policy remained in effect for six years, until the company determined that there was a business need to make the change. It then implemented a new program providing ample advance notice of the termination and corresponding benefits for a two-year period, and it did not interfere with the employees' vested benefits. In addition, the employees accepted the policy by continuing to work for the employer (23 Cal. 4th 1, 16-18) .

[f] Contractual Provision for Performance Review After 12 Months Does Not Negate "At Will" Presumption

In Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , the plaintiff was discharged after six months of employment. The plaintiff sued for breach of his employment contract, contending that the contract contemplated a minimum one-year term of employment. The plaintiff's written employment contract did not state that the employment was for any specific term. However, the plaintiff argued that a minimum one-year term was necessarily implied because the contract included a provision that a performance review would be conducted "after twelve (12) months employment." The court of appeal vacated a judgment in favor of the plaintiff on his breach-of-contract claim. The court held as a matter of law that the contractual provision for a performance review after 12 months' employment was not sufficient to overcome the statutory presumption of at-will employment (see Lab. Code § 2922), especially since the plaintiff had signed an employment application confirming that the employment would be at will and had acknowledged receipt of an employee manual with an express at-will provision (89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 969-970) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employment for Unspecified Term Terminable At Will Absent Other Agreement

In Miller v. Pepsi-Cola Bottling Co. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 1554, 259 Cal. Rptr. 56 , the court held as a matter of law that there was no enforceable contract to terminate the plaintiff, a salesman, for good cause only. It was uncontroverted that the employer had no established policies governing termination of sales personnel, and plaintiff received no oral assurances of job security (210 Cal. App. 3d 1554, 1558-1559) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsAt-Will EmploymentDuration of EmploymentLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationBreach of ContractExpress ContractsLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationBreach of ContractImplied Contracts

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.23

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.23 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Employment Was "At Will"--Parties' Agreement Retaining Right to Discharge "At Will" Is Integrated, Precluding Oral or Implied Modification

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT WAS TERMINABLE "AT WILL" BECAUSE THE PARTIES' AGREEMENT EXPRESSLY RETAINED DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO TERMINATE THE EMPLOYMENT AT WILL [AND BECAUSE THE "AT WILL" AGREEMENT WAS EXPRESS AND INTEGRATED, IT CANNOT BE MODIFIED OR LIMITED BY EVIDENCE OF AN ORAL OR IMPLIED-IN-FACT AGREEMENT THAT THE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT COULD BE TERMINATED ONLY FOR GOOD CAUSE].

A. Agreement Expressly Retains Right to Terminate "At Will." If the employment contract expressly states that the employment is "at will" and terminable "at any time," it unambiguously creates an at-will employment relationship, even if it does not also state that termination can be without cause (Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 389-393, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668). Similarly, if the employment contract expressly reserves the employer's right to discharge the employee at any time for any reason, with or without cause, the employment is "at will" (Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 474-475, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613).

[Optional] B. Implied Contract Contradicted by Express Agreement. An employee cannot reasonably rely on any implied promise of continued employment that contradicts express provisions of an agreement signed by the employee (Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 393-394 ; Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 603-605, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565 ; Starzynski v. Capital Pub. Radio, Inc. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 37-39, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 ; Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 482, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613 ; Tollefson v. Roman Catholic Bishop (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 855, 268 Cal. Rptr. 550).

[Optional] C. Integrated "At Will" Employment Application Precludes Parol Evidence. An application [and employment agreement] providing that employment is "at will" and constituting an integration, i.e., the final expression of the parties' agreement with respect to grounds for termination, may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior agreement or of a contemporaneous oral agreement (Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care Inc. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 521, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 ; Slivinsky v. Watkins-Johnson Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 799, 804-805, 270 Cal. Rptr. 585 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 1856(a)).

[Optional] D. Personnel Policy May Not Contradict Express "At Will" Agreement. An employee may not use a personnel policy to establish an implied-in-fact "good cause" contract if the original employment agreement clearly defines the relationship as employment "at will" (DeHorney v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2d 459, 466) .

[Optional] E. Contractual Right to Review of Termination Decision Does Not Change Nature of "At Will" Employment. A contractual provision that gives an employee the right to request management review of the employee's termination does not change an at-will employment relationship into one that can be terminated only for cause (Bernard v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 304, 310-311, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff-employee's contention that his or her employment could not be terminated at will pursuant to an agreement limiting the employer's right to terminate, based on the argument that the parties had an agreement that expressly retained the employer's right to terminate the employment at will [Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 482, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613] . Optional Paragraph B may be used to oppose the contention that employment cannot be terminated at will because there is an implied agreement that limits the defendant-employer's right to terminate the plaintiff's employment at will, where the defendant can show that an implied promise not to discharge except for good cause is contradicted by a valid express "at will" agreement. Optional Paragraph C may be used to preclude evidence of an oral agreement if the plaintiff signed an integrated employment application that states the employment relationship was "at will," based on the argument that the application is part of the employment contract, and an express "at will" agreement in that contract controls. The defendant may use Optional Paragraph D to oppose plaintiff's contention that the employer has a written personnel policy, such as a manual, that limits its power to terminate "at will," based on the argument that the express at will agreement controls. If plaintiff contends that the employment agreement contained a "good-cause" limit on defendant's right to terminate plaintiff, this form may be combined with a memorandum, such as that in § 100.29, asserting that the termination did not breach the employment agreement because good cause for discharge existed.

This form may be combined with a memorandum pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an implied promise not to discharge except for good cause is effectively contradicted by a valid express "at will" agreement, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the evidence of an express agreement that the employment is "at will," in addition to evidence of the integrated nature of the agreement. The argument should refer specifically to the contract language showing an intent that the contract be the entire agreement between the parties.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, §§ 60.05, 60.09[3] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement Expressly Retains Right to Terminate "At Will"

In Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 , the plaintiff's employment agreement provided "[y]ou will have a 90 day assessment with your supervisor at which time you will receive initial performance feedback. This assessment will also be the time that you will work with your supervisor to set objectives against which you will be evaluated at the time of your annual review." The agreement further stated that "your employment with [the employer] is at will. This simply means that [the employer] has the right to terminate your employment at any time just as you have the right to terminate your employment ... at any time" (39 Cal. 4th 384, 388) . After the employer terminated the plaintiff, he sued, asserting breach of contract, fraud, and other claims. The defendant contended that the employment agreement was terminable at will. The plaintiff contended that, even though the agreement stated that the employment was at will, it did not unequivocally create an at-will relationship because it did not expressly state that the employment could be terminated without cause. As a result, the plaintiff argued, the provisions for performance reviews and aspects of the employer's conduct and oral representations created an implied contract not to terminate the employment except for cause. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer, and the California Supreme Court agreed. The Court held that an employment contract stating that the employment is "at will" and terminable "at any time" unambiguously creates an at-will employment relationship, even if it does not also state that termination can be without cause. Because there is no ambiguity about the at-will nature of the employment, additional provisions in that contract regarding a probationary period and annual reviews ordinarily will not expressly or impliedly create a right to be terminated only for cause (39 Cal. 4th 384, 389-393) .

The facts and procedural background of Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613 , are discussed under § 100.23[3][b]. Shapiro held that the implied contract alleged by plaintiff was contradicted by a valid express contract. The contract, which expressly reserved defendant's right to "discharge [plaintiff] at any time for any reason whatsoever, with or without good cause," defined plaintiff's position as an "at will" employee (152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 474-475, 482) .

[b] Implied Contract Contradicted by Express Agreement

The background of Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668 , are discussed under § 100.23[3][a]. In that case, the California Supreme Court found that the parties' contract unambiguously created an at-will employment relationship. Based on that finding, the Court went on to hold that the plaintiff could not maintain an action for fraudulent inducement of an employment contract on the basis of an alleged false representation regarding the duration of employment. The Court explained that when there is an unambiguous at-will employment relationship, the employee will be unable to show justifiable reliance on an alleged false representation about the duration of employment (39 Cal. 4th 384, 393-394) .

In Agosta v. Astor (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 565 , the plaintiff signed a document entitled "Compensation Plan." The document outlined the plaintiff's compensation for proposed employment and included the following language: "Company is an 'at will' employer, and either party may terminate employment upon notice to the other party or at a mutually agreed upon departure date."

After the employer terminated the plaintiff's employment, the plaintiff sued the employer for intentional misrepresentation, negligent misrepresentation, fraudulent inducement of employment contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and defamation. The trial court denied summary adjudication as to the defamation cause of action, but granted it as to the other causes of action on the ground the Compensation Plan unambiguously provided that the plaintiff's employment was terminable at will, and thus he could not have justifiably relied on the defendants' representations of long-term employment. The plaintiff then voluntarily dismissed the defamation claim and appealed the ensuing judgment on the other causes of action.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment on the misrepresentation and fraudulent inducement claims. However, the court affirmed the summary disposition of the cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, relying on the established principle that a breach of the implied covenant cannot logically be based on a claim that the discharge of an at-will employee was made without good cause (120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 607-608) . In holding that the plaintiff was indeed an at-will employee, the court of appeal held that an at-will provision in an express written agreement, signed by an employee, cannot be overcome by proof of an implied contrary understanding. The court explained that there cannot be a validexpress contract and an implied contract, each embracing the same subject, but requiring different results. Thus, the express term is controlling even if it is not contained in an integrated employment contract (120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 604) .

The court of appeal rejected a contention that the "at-will" provision in this case was ineffective because it did not include a warning that the employer could fire the plaintiff without good cause. The court pointed out that, by definition, an express at-will contract allows an employer to sever the employment relationship with or without cause (120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 604) .

The court of appeal also rejected a contention that the "at-will" provision in this case was inapplicable because the Compensation Plan failed to indicate that it was a "contract" or that it did anything other than set forth compensation guidelines. The court explained that to be enforceable, a written agreement need not be entitled "contract" (120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 604-605) .

Further, the court of appeal rejected an assertion the Compensation Plan was ambiguous because it did not indicate whether the plaintiff would be considered an "at-will" employee. The court found that the statement "Company is an 'at will' employer" meant that the company's employees were necessarily employed at-will. Moreover, the contract stated that "either party may terminate employment upon notice to the other party" (120 Cal. App. 4th 596, 605) .

In Starzynski v. Capital Pub. Radio, Inc. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , the plaintiff signed an employment agreement that expressly stated, "I understand and agree that my employment is AT-WILL and that either [the employer] or I may terminate the employment relationship at any time, with or without cause or advance notice. I understand further that only the Board of Directors, by affirmative action, has the authority to change or make any agreement contrary to this at-will employment relationship." Three days later, the plaintiff's supervisor orally advised the plaintiff that, notwithstanding the written agreement, the plaintiff's employment would not be terminated as long as his performance was satisfactory. Six years later, the plaintiff resigned and sued the employer for wrongful discharge. The plaintiff claimed that he had been constructively discharged in violation of an implied contract not to terminate him so long as his performance was satisfactory. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that, although the statutory presumption of at-will employment [Lab. Code § 2922] may be overcome by an implied agreement, the parties cannot have a valid express contract and a valid implied contract that contradict each other. The express term is controlling even if it is not contained in an integrated contract. In this case, the written agreement clearly and unambiguously stated that the employment was at will and that only the employer's board of directors, by "affirmative action," could change the at-will nature of the employment. Therefore, the plaintiff's supervisor's assurances could not create an implied agreement in the face of the written provision directly addressing that issue. This result was not changed by the fact that the supervisor's oral assurance was made subsequent to the signing of the written agreement. The supervisor's assurance could not serve as a modification of the contract, because the written agreement expressly limited the manner in which modifications could be made, and there was no evidence that the supervisor's oral statement constituted the "affirmative action" of the employer's board of directors (88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 37-39) .

In Shapiro v. Wells Fargo Realty Advisors (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 199 Cal. Rptr. 613 , a discharged employee filed an action for wrongful discharge, alleging, among other things, that he was advised orally by his supervisors, and in writing through benefit brochures, that he would have an opportunity to achieve the maximum level of base pay, and that he would not be terminated without good cause. Defendant filed a demurrer, motion to strike, and request for judicial notice of a stock-option agreement that defendant and plaintiff signed. The agreement stated that nothing in it conferred on plaintiff any right to continue in defendant's employ or interfere with the rights expressly reserved by defendant to discharge plaintiff for any reason, with or without cause. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of all counts, holding that the alleged implied contract was contradicted by a valid express contract, which rendered the relationship "at will" (152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 482) . Although mindful that Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 329, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (discussed in § 100.21[3][a]), held that "[a] contract for permanent employment, whether or not it is based on some consideration other than the employee's services, cannot be terminated at the will of the employer if it contains an express or implied condition to the contrary," the court rejected plaintiff's contention that in order to determine if there was an implied promise to discharge only "for cause," the factors presented in Pugh must be considered only by the trier of fact in all cases, with the court not allowed to determine the issue as a matter of law (152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 480) . The court distinguished Pugh, because in that case, there was no contract that expressly defined the employment relationship. In the instant case, the stock option agreement, signed by plaintiff, stated that it did not confer a right to continued employment on plaintiff, and did not limit the employer's right to discharge him at any time for any reason, with or without good cause. Therefore, the agreement defined the relationship as "at will." Since there cannot be a valid express contract and an implied contract, each embracing the same subject, but requiring different results, plaintiff was unable as a matter of law to rebut the presumption of his at will status (152 Cal. App. 3d 467, 482) .

In Tollefson v. Roman Catholic Bishop (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 853-857, 268 Cal. Rptr. 550 , Maria Tollefson was employed for five years as an assistant principal in a Catholic school run by the Diocese. She was employed under a series of one-year contracts which specifically stated no requirement for renewal. In 1985, she did not receive a new contract and sued, stating that there was an implied in fact or implied promise to renew her contract in the absence of good cause and that the Diocese had a duty to apply an "objective standard" to determine whether her contract would be renewed (219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 854) .

On review of a motion for summary judgment brought and won by the defendants, the court reviewed the sufficiency of the evidence presented by Ms. Tollefson and determined that proof of the professional nature of her position, her length of service(she had worked for the Diocese as a teacher for over 7 years prior to becoming an administrator), her prior contract renewals, the Diocese's failure to evaluate her performance as an administrator, the lack of negative evaluations, and the custom and practice of retaining administrators in their positions so long as they perform satisfactorily did not constitute proof establishing an implied contract to employ Ms. Tollefson indefinitely, in light of the existence of the express one year contract (219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 855) . Citing well established precedent that there cannot be both a valid express contract and an implied one "each embracing the identical subject but requiring different results and treatment" (219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 855) the court found that her evidence could not change her express one year contract into one that was indefinite.

The court further stated that "lengthy service combined with promotions and salary increases are natural occurrences for an employee who remains with an employer for a substantial length of time and do not evince or create" an implied contract for permanent employment, terminable only for cause (219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 856) .

[c] Integrated "At Will" Employment Application Precludes Parol Evidence

In Haggard v. Kimberly Quality Care Inc. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16 , the court held that an at will clause in a confidentiality agreement constituted a fully integrated agreement with respect to the subject of termination so that parol evidence was precluded (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 521) . Cynthia Haggard was hired as a field staff supervisor by Quality Care, in 1986; a year later she was promoted to the position of branch manager. In 1988, Quality Care merged with Kimberly to form Kimberly Quality Care (KQC). KQC provided Haggard with an "Employment and Confidentiality Agreement" in 1989, which she signed. This agreement contained an at will provision and an integration clause. Plaintiff testified that she read the agreement before signing it and was reluctant to sign it, but understood that her future employment with KQC depended on her signing it (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 514) . In 1991, Haggard was given an employee handbook and signed an acknowledgment of receipt which reiterated that her employment was at will (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 515) . When Haggard was fired six weeks after signing the acknowledgment she filed suit alleging wrongful termination and disability discrimination (she had been diagnosed with multiple sclerosis in 1990), among other things. Her claims for breach of implied contract terminable only for cause and disability discrimination survived pretrial motions and were tried to a jury (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 515) , which ruled in her favor and awarded her $250,000 (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 516) .

During deliberation, the jury had asked several questions regarding the interaction of implied and express contracts and the meaning of "integration." KQC appealed the verdict on the ground that the trial court should have ruled, as a matter of law, that an integrated express contract barred Haggard's breach of implied contract claim (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 516) . The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the implied in fact contract on the ground that, since the 1989 agreement was an express integrated agreement with respect to the term of her contract, evidence of prior and contemporaneous oral agreements should not have been allowed. The court further found that language in the 1990 employee handbook regarding progressive discipline, KQC's reservation of the right to change the policies at any time, the fact that the 1989 agreement was not an employment agreement, and the suggestion that employees give two weeks written notice did not modify the earlier agreement (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 522-524) . Accordingly, the appellate court found that there was insufficient evidence to find in favor of the plaintiff and reversed the judgment with respect to the breach of implied contract claim (39 Cal. App. 4th 508, 524) .

Slivinsky v. Watkins-Johnson Co. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 799, 270 Cal. Rptr. 585 , involved a plaintiff employee who was terminated as a result of a reduction in force. When plaintiff initially applied for her position, the employment application provided that employment was conditioned on the execution of an employment agreement, and stated that there was "no agreement, express or implied ... for any specific period of employment, nor for continuing or long term employment." When the plaintiff accepted the defendant's offer of employment and reported for work, she signed an employment agreement setting forth the same language and stating that the "[e]mployee and the [defendant] each have a right to terminate employment, with or without cause." After she was fired, the plaintiff sued, alleging, among other things, breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The plaintiff contended that the defendant breached the implied covenant because it fired her in violation of an express and implied-in-fact agreement that she would be employed for as long as she satisfactorily performed her duties. She claimed that the defendant made these assurances during her preemployment interviews. However, the trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment. The plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court concluded, as a matter of law, that the parties" written employment agreement defined plaintiff's employment as "at will" (221 Cal. App. 3d 799, 802) . It relied on the parol evidence rule, which precludes the introduction of evidence that varies or contradicts the terms of an integrated written instrument (i.e., an instrument representing the final agreement of the parties) [Code Civ. Proc. § 1856(a)] (221 Cal. App. 3d 799 , 804). Noting that the question whether an agreement is an integration is one of law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1856(d)], the court concluded that the agreement in the instant case was integrated with respect to the grounds for termination. Both the application (which conditioned employment on execution of an employment agreement) and the employment agreement expressly provided that there was no express or implied agreement for continuing or long-term employment. Moreover, the agreement expressly stated that both parties could terminate employment "with or without cause." The court read these documents together and concluded that the parties intended that there would be no other agreement regarding termination, and that the plaintiff's employment was terminable at will (221 Cal. App. 3d 799, 805-806) .

[d] Personnel Policy May Not Contradict Express "At Will" Agreement

In DeHorney v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2d 459 , the plaintiff, a bank teller for the defendant, alleged that she had inadvertently processed a $20 check twice, thereby causing a shortage in her end-of-the-day tally.After an investigation and interview, during which a bank auditor made racially suggestive statements and accused plaintiff of stealing the $20, the defendant fired the plaintiff. The plaintiff then sued the defendant for, among other things, wrongful discharge. The defendant had the case removed to federal court (based on federal question jurisdiction because the plaintiff also alleged a violation of 42 U.S.C. § 1981), and filed a motion for summary judgment. The district court granted the defendant's motion, finding, among other things, that the defendant had "good cause" to fire the plaintiff because its policies permitted termination even for errors occurring through inadvertence. The plaintiff appealed, and the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed.

The court held that the plaintiff did not raise a triable issue of material fact as to the existence of an implied-in-fact contract modifying her original "at will" employment agreement. The plaintiff had argued that the original contract was modified by the defendant's "Code of Corporate Conduct," which promised "all employees fair treatment, good career opportunities, and attractive working conditions" and provided that employees would be discharged "whenever such action is justified." The court, however, held that the plaintiff could not have reasonably believed that the defendant's personnel policies modified the clear terms of her "at will" employment agreement (879 F.2d 459, 466) .

[e] Contractual Right to Review of Termination Decision Does Not Change Nature of "At Will" Employment

Bernard v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 304, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , involved an agreement between an insurance company and an agent. The agreement included a provision that either the company or the agent had "the right to terminate this Agreement by written notice delivered to the other or mailed to the other's last known address." Citing the Supreme Court's decision in Dore v. Arnold Worldwide, Inc. (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 384, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 668, 139 P.3d 56 (discussed in [a], above), the court of appeal held that this provision was not reasonably susceptible to an interpretation requiring good cause for termination (158 Cal. App. 4th 304, 310) .

The agreement also provided that "[i]n the event we terminate this Agreement, you are entitled upon request to a review in accordance with the termination review procedures approved by the Board of Directors of the Compan[y], as amended from time to time." The court of appeal held that this provision did not change the at-will nature of the parties' employment relationship. The court of appeal noted that, in discussing a similar agency agreement that had been involved in an earlier appellate case (see Wallis v. Farmers Group, Inc. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 718, 269 Cal. Rptr. 299), the Dore court focused simply on the termination-notice provision and did not mention the termination-review provision as providing something "more" that would change the at-will employment nature of the relationship in that appellate case (158 Cal. App. 4th 304, 311) .

The court of appeal construed the termination-review provision in this case as merely providing an internal forum, primarily for the company's benefit, for reconsidering a decision to end the agency agreement (for example, when a good agent is terminated merely because of a personality conflict with an immediate supervisor). The termination-review procedure did not, however, substantively transform termination on notice into something other than at-will termination (158 Cal. App. 4th 304, 311) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Implied Contract Contradicted by Express Agreement

In Comeaux v. Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F.2d 1264 , the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that an employee's assertions that a prospective employer's personnel verbally assured him that he would only be terminated for cause was parol evidence inadmissible to contradict the express, unambiguous terms of the employee's employment application, which stated that it constituted the terms of the employment contract and that the relationship was "at will" (915 F.2d 1264, 1271) .

In Anderson v. Savin Corp. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 356, 254 Cal. Rptr. 627 , the court of appeal held that an employment letter giving the employer the right to terminate the employee at any time superseded any contrary implied agreements between the parties (206 Cal. App. 3d 356, 364) . The court stated that there was no conflict between California and New York law on this issue, so New York law was applied because the employment letter stated that the arrangement should be governed by New York law (206 Cal. App. 3d 356, 362-364) .

In Gerdlund v. Electronic Dispensers International (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 235 Cal. Rptr. 279 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment for independent sales representatives whose contract with the manufacturer had been terminated by the manufacturer without cause pursuant to notice provisions in the agreement. The contract provided that notice of termination could be given at any time and for any reason. The court first determined that no extrinsic evidence should have been admitted to vary the terms of the written agreement between the parties (190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 272-276) . The court stated that although the covenant of good faith and fair dealing has been held to supply a requirement of good cause for termination when the contract between the parties is silent or ambiguous on that subject, the covenant of good faith and fair dealing cannot be used to imply a requirement for good cause to terminate when a written contract expressly provides that it may be terminated at will or for any reason on notice (190 Cal. App. 3d 263, 277-278) .

In Malmstrom v. Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 231 Cal. Rptr. 820 , an employee who accepted a transfer from California to Florida and was terminated within months after relocating, brought an action against the employer for breach of written policies, breach of an implied contract to retain him until retirement, and breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing. The court of appeal affirmed the order of the trial court granting summary judgment in favor of the employer, holding, in part, that the written employment contract under which the employee could be terminated at will precluded, as a matter of law, the contradictory implied promise to retain him until retirement (187 Cal. App. 3d 299, 317-318) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionContracts LawContract InterpretationParol EvidenceGeneral OverviewLabor & Employment LawEmployment RelationshipsAt-Will EmploymentDuration of EmploymentLabor & Employment LawWrongful TerminationBreach of ContractGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.24

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.24 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--No Discharge in Failure to Renew Fixed-Term Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT PROVE A WRONGFUL DISCHARGE BECAUSE HIS/HER CONTRACT EXPIRED BY ITS OWN TERMS.

A. No Discharge When Fixed-Term Employment Contract Fully Executed. A claim for wrongful termination requires that the employee be discharged. Where a contract is for a fixed term, even if it is renewable and has been renewed, failure to renew is not a termination (Motevalli v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 97, 112-113, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 562 ; Daly v. Exxon Corp. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 45, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff could not have been wrongfully terminated because his or her employment contract expired by its own terms. It should be combined with any of the other forms in this chapter that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or plaintiff's allegations showing that the contract was for a fixed term and was honored until it expires.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for alleging affirmative defenses in wrongful discharge cases, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender). There is no pleading form for alleging that the contract expired, because this is not an affirmative defense; all that is necessary is to deny that there was a discharge and then demur to the complaint or move for summary judgment.

[d] Related Memoranda

Any of the other points and authorities for opposing a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with this form.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Discharge Where Fixed-Term Employment Contract Fully Executed

In Motevalli v. Los Angeles Unified Sch. Dist. (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 97, 18 Cal. Rptr. 3d 562 , the plaintiff was a schoolteacher who was employed under an emergency teaching credential; as such, she was a probationary employee [see Educ. Code § 44915], and her contract specified a termination date at the end of the school year. The school district failed to offer the plaintiff a new employment contract for the following school year. The plaintiff then sued the district for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, claiming, among other things, that she had been terminated because she had engaged in constitutionally protected activity. The superior court granted summary adjudication in favor of the school district on this claim.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court found it significant that the school district had not terminated the plaintiff. Rather, the plaintiff had been a probationary teacher (working under an emergency credential), whose contract was not renewed. Absent a termination, there is no cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. Further, the court held that the plaintiff would have been incapable of amending her complaint to allege a new cause of action for tortious nonrenewal of her employment contract in violation of public policy, because no such cause of action is recognized (122 Cal. App. 4th 97, 112-113) .

In Daly v. Exxon Corp. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 727 , plaintiff was hired for a one-year term, renewable at defendant's option, and the contract had been twice renewed. Her contract was not renewed after she complained of Cal-OSHA violations, was told to stop complaining, and learned that the subcontractor whose practices she complained of had requested her termination (55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 42) .

The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend on the ground that there was no cause of action for wrongful discharge where the contract had been allowed to expire on its terms (55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 43) .

The court of appeal affirmed this portion of the trial court's ruling, citing Tollefson v. Roman Catholic Bishop (1990), 219 Cal. App. 3d 843, 854, 268 Cal. Rptr. 550 , and Schimmel v. NORCAL Mutual Ins. Co. (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1282, 1286, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 401 , for the proposition that an employee may not sue for tort damages where the employment contract is for a fixed term and expires, expressly declining to create a new cause of action for tortious nonrenewal of an employment contract in violation of public policy (55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 45-46) .

However, the court reversed, with directions to the trial court to sustain the demurrer with leave to amend, since there was another theory available to plaintiff. It cited Labor Code § 6310(b), providing a statutory cause of action (for reinstatement and recovery of lost wages and benefits) for one discharged, threatened, or in any manner discriminated against because of a bona fide complaint of unsafe working conditions. The court found that failure to renew a contract because of a protected complaint could be a form of the discrimination the statute intended to prohibit (55 Cal. App. 4th 39, 43-44) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.25

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.25 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Good-Faith Determination of Conduct Justifying Discharge Notwithstanding Implied Agreement Between Parties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NO CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S DECISION TO TERMINATE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT, NOTWITHSTANDING AN IMPLIED AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES TO TERMINATE FOR GOOD CAUSE ONLY, WAS BASED ON A GOOD FAITH CONCLUSION THAT PLAINTIFF HAD ENGAGED IN MISCONDUCT CONSTITUTING GOOD CAUSE FOR TERMINATION.

No Wrongful Discharge When Employer's Termination of Implied Agreement Was Based on Good-Faith Conclusion That Good Cause Existed to Discharge Employee. In a claim for wrongful termination under an implied agreement to terminate for good cause only, when the plaintiff denies the misconduct that was the basis for defendant's decision to terminate for good cause, the applicable standard is not whether the misconduct actually happened, but rather whether the defendant had reasonable grounds for believing that it happened, thoroughly investigated, and otherwise acted fairly (Cotran v. Rollins Huding Hall Internat., Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 107-108, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412); Silva v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 256, 264-277, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff could not have been wrongfully terminated because his or her implied agreement for termination on good cause only was not breached: the defendant employer, after investigation of alleged misconduct by plaintiff, concluded in good-faith that plaintiff had in fact engaged in misconduct that constituted good cause for termination.

This forms may be combined with any of the other forms in this chapter that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should, for example, show allegations or evidence, depending on the proceeding in which the issue is raised, showing that defendant conducted an investigation of alleged misconduct by plaintiff that resulted in a good-faith conclusion by defendant that the plaintiff had engaged in misconduct that constituted good cause for termination.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for alleging affirmative defenses in wrongful discharge cases, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

Any of the other points and authorities for opposing a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with this form.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Wrongful Discharge When Employer's Termination of Implied Agreement Was Based on Good-Faith Conclusion That Good Cause Existed to Discharge Employee

In Cotran v. Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 900, 948 P.2d 412 , plaintiff was a senior vice-president and western regional international manager of Rollins Hudig Hall International, Inc. ("Rollins") from 1988 until he was fired on April 23, 1993. In March 1993, an employee reported to Redmond, human resources director for Rollins, that Cotran was sexually harassing two female employees, Dolce and Pickett. When interviewed by Redmond, Dolce and Pickett both stated that Cotran had exposed himself and masturbated in their presence more than once and that they had received obscene phone calls from him. Rollins's president, Feldman, then arranged a meeting with Cotran that included Hurvitz, the head of EEO, and Held, the manager for EEO compliance. At the meeting, Feldman reviewed the accusations against Cotran and explained that an investigation of the complaints would be made, and the outcome would depend on credibility. Cotran did not say anything about having had consensual relations with either Dolce or Pickett nor offer any explanation for their complaints (17 Cal. 4th 93, 97) .

Later, Morris, an account executive, told Held that Cotran had made obscene phone calls to her soon after they had ended a sexual relationship. In addition, during the investigation, one employee whom Cotran had asked to be interviewed, and who at first called Cotran a "perfect gentleman," later complained of a strange early morning phone call from Cotran. As a result of the investigation, Held concluded it was more likely than not the harassment had occurred and fired Cotran (17 Cal. 4th 93, 97-98) .

Cotran brought suit for wrongful termination. At trial, Cotran presented evidence that he had a sexual relationship with Dolce, whom he hired as a secretary in his department, from May 1991 to February 1993 and that he had a sexual relationship with Pickett from January to April 1992. He testified that he did not mention the relationships to Feldman because he was upset and frightened and felt "ambushed." Both Dolce and Pickett denied having sex with Cotran but testified that he had masturbated in front of them and had made obscene phone calls to them (17 Cal. 4th 93, 98-99) .

Rollins defended its decision to fire Cotran on the ground that its decisions had been reached honestly and in good faith. The trial court rejected that defense, stating that it was not available in a contract action. Accordingly, the court instructed the jury that Rollins's good faith belief was not at issue, but rather, what was at issue was whether the claimed acts of harassment actually took place. The jury returned a verdict of $1.78 million for Cotran. In the special verdict, it found that Cotran had not engaged in any of the behavior on which Rollins based its decision to terminate him (17 Cal. 4th 93, 99) .

The court of appeal overturned the verdict and ordered a new trial. The Supreme Court granted review to determine the standard to be applied when an employee denies committing the misconduct that provoked his or her termination. The Court affirmed the decision of the court of appeal (17 Cal. 4th 93, 99, 109) .

The Court began its analysis by surveying the legal policies in the employment relationship to assist it in determining the appropriate standard to apply in this case. The Court noted in interpreting the terms "just cause" or "good cause," several appellate courts have emphasized that it is important not to interfere with the employer's exercise of managerial discretion, but to give the employer substantial scope to exercise its subjective judgment, and that a balance must be made between the employer's interest in operating its business efficiently and profitably and the employee's interest in continued employment [see Walker v. Blue Cross of California (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 985, 994 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 769 (Pugh II); Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330 (Pugh I)] (17 Cal. 4th 93, 100) .

With this background, the Court went on to address the issue of what exactly the trier of fact must decide in evaluating a defense based on employee misconduct. An employee hired under an implied agreement not to dismiss except for good cause brought a wrongful termination action challenging his termination for misconduct, the jury must determine not whether the misconduct actually happened, but rather whether the employer had reasonable grounds for believing that it happened, thoroughly investigated, and otherwise acted fairly (17 Cal. 4th 93, 107) .

The Court noted that prior to the court of appeal decision in the case before it, the law on this issue was sparse, consisting only of the decision in Wilkerson v. Wells Fargo Bank (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 1217 . Wilkerson, relying exclusively on Pugh II, held that the employer had the burden of proving that the misconduct leading to the dismissal actually occurred. The Court in Cotran asserted that such reliance was erroneous. The Court cited to the court of appeal opinion in Cotran, which made the point that the portion of Pugh II that the Wilkerson court relied on is actually a quotation from a Michigan case, Toussaint v. Blue Cross (Mich. 1980) 292 N.W.2d 880 . Thus, Wilkerson's reasoning was actually based on a Michigan case, not Pugh II, according to the Court (17 Cal. 4th 93, 102) .

The Court disagreed with Toussaint's view that the promise to terminate for cause only would be illusory if the employer is the sole judge of the propriety of the discharge and that, therefore, the jury should be allowedto review the employer's decision. The Cotran Court asserted that the standard it now established provided a middle ground, adopted by a number of other jurisdictions, that combined the employee's interest in continued employment with the employer's interest in efficient personnel decisions. That standard establishes the jury's role as assessing the objective reasonableness of the employer's factual determination as of the time the decision was made. The Court described this standard as adopting the contract model of just cause analysis and conjoining it with a requirement that the employer adhere to an objective good faith standard that the jury applies. Thus, according to the Court, the jury checks the subjective good faith of the employer with an objective reasonable belief standard (17 Cal. 4th 93, 104-105) .

In summarizing, the Court held that the Wilkerson-Toussaint standard was too intrusive, unreasonably tipping the balance between the employee's and employer's interest. Additionally, the Court pointed out that the jury is too remote from the every day realities of the workplace. The Court added that requiring the employer to have the factual exactness of a signed confession or eyewitness account of wrongdoing would thwart effective workplace desisionmaking. The Court acknowledged that these factors do not justify a rule permitting employees to be arbitrarily dismissed, but the Court asserted that a rule allowing the jury to make the factual determination of whether there was sufficient cause for dismissal would be at odds with the underlying policy of finding a balance between the interests of employer and employee. The Court reiterated that its implementation of an objective good faith standard that strikes a fair balance between the interests of the parties would in fact ensure that good cause dismissals would promote limitations on the at-will doctrine and the continuing scrutiny of good cause dismissals (17 Cal. 4th 93, 106-107) .

The Court further elucidated its good cause standard derived from Pugh and Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 467, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 , as requiring "fair and honest reasons, regulated by good faith on the part of the employer, that are not trivial, arbitrary or capricious, unrelated to business needs or goals, or pretextual." The court also noted that it requires an adequate investigation that includes notice of the claimed misconduct and a chance for the employee to respond. Beyond that, the Court found it to be more prudent not to specify in detail what would constitute an adequate investigation, but rather to allow the determination to be made on a case-by-case basis (17 Cal. 4th 93, 108) .

Based on the above standard established by the Court, the Court determined that a retrial was necessary in which the jury would be instructed to determine whether at the time the decision to terminate Cotran's employment, Rollins acted in good faith, and, following an investigation that was appropriate under the circumstances, Rollins had reasonable ground for believing Cotran had committed the misconduct (17 Cal. 4th 93, 109) .

Justice Mosk, joined by Justice Werdegar, wrote separately to concur with the standard established by the majority, but to make three additional points. First, Justice Mosh emphasized that "substantial evidence" does not mean simply "any" evidence, but requires the ultimate determination of whether a reasonable employer could have found that the employee committed the misconduct. Similarly, the fair procedures the employer must adopt require a truly meaningful opportunity on the part of the employee to tell his or her story and influence the employer's decision. Second, the good cause standard established by the Court is a "default" standard when there is not a specific agreement between the parties that more explicitly defines "good cause," but the parties may make their own agreement that overrides this more general standard. Third, the good cause standard established in the majority opinion applies only to implied contracts between employers and individual employees and does not apply to the term as construed by arbitrators pursuant to collective bargaining agreements between unions and employers (17 Cal. 4th 93, 109-110 , concurring opinion of Mosk, J.).

Justice Kennard also wrote a separate concurring and dissenting opinion. In her view, the issue of the "good cause" condition of the parties' implied employment agreement is one of contract interpretation that should be resolved by determining the parties's intent when they entered into the contract. Kennard opined that only if the parties's intent cannot be discerned should the court supply the meaning that comports with community standards of fairness and public policy. Kennard added that employers should be held to a standard whereby they may discharge employees only for acts of misconduct that were actually committed. Acknowledging the difficulty this places on employers, Kennard would limit employers's liability to back pay if they reinstated a falsely accused and wrongfully discharged employee (17 Cal. 4th 93, 110-118 , concurring and dissenting opinion of Kennard, J.).

In Silva v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 256, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 382 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment in favor of the employer in a wrongful termination suit brought by an employee who had been fired for sexual harassment. Applying the criteria set forth by the Supreme Court in Cotran v. Rollins Huding Hall International, Inc. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 93 , the court found that the employer (1) had acted in good faith in deciding to terminate the plaintiff, (2) had made an appropriate investigation under the circumstances, and (3) had reasonable grounds for believing the employee had engaged in misconduct. In this case, the employee had allegedly been involved in two incidents of harassment. The employer had a clear policy against sexual harassment, stating how such allegations were to be investigated. The employer assigned a human resources officer with expertise in the subject to investigate immediately. The investigation included interviews with 15 witnesses, including eyewitnesses to the alleged incidents.Several key employees were reinterviewed and were given an opportunity to respond to information provided by other employees. The court found that although the investigation was not perfect, it was appropriate, given that it was conducted under the exigencies of the workaday world. The investigator's report included some hearsay, gossip, and rumor, but the court found that that was not the basis for the employer's conclusion that the employee had indeed engaged in harassment. Rather, the employer's conclusion was based on the witnesses' statements and the plaintiff's admission that physical contact had occurred in both incidents. Under the circumstances, the court found no triable issue of fact, especially since the plaintiff had conceded that the employer had acted in good faith in investigating the matter (65 Cal. App. 4th 256, 264-277) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.26

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.26 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Implied Agreement to Terminate Only for Good Cause Did Not Limit Employer's Right to Eliminate Plaintiff's Job as Part of Reduction in Workforce

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NO CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE, NOTWITHSTANDING AN IMPLIED AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE PARTIES TO TERMINATE ONLY FOR GOOD CAUSE, BECAUSE THE IMPLIED AGREEMENT DID NOT RESTRICT THE DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO REORGANIZE, REDUCE, AND CONSOLIDATE ITS WORKFORCE, AND THE PLAINTIFF'S DISCHARGE OCCURRED AS PART OF SUCH A REORGANIZATION.

Implied Agreement to Terminate Only for Good Cause Does Not Ordinarily Include Restriction an Employer's Right to Reduce Workforce. An implied agreement not to terminate an employee except for good cause does not prohibit the employer from legitimately terminating an employee on the basis of the need to eliminate the employee's work unit, in the absence of evidence of an agreement restricting that right (Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 338).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that an implied agreement to terminate an employee only for good cause limits the employer's right to legitimately terminate the employee as part of a reorganization, workforce reduction, or consolidation of the employer's operations. In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set forth in § 100.21.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should, therefore, establish that there is no documentary or other evidence of any agreement between the parties restricting the employer's right to eliminate jobs as part of a reorganization, workforce reduction, or consolidation of the employer's operations.

[c] Related Memoranda

Any of the other points and authorities for opposing a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with this form.

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Agreement to Terminate Only for Good Cause Does Not Ordinarily Include Restriction on Employer's Right to Reduce Workforce

In Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317 , a longtime employee was released at age 49 when his work unit was eliminated and its tasks transferred to another office of the employer. The employee sued the employer, alleging age discrimination, breach of an implied contract to be terminated only for good cause, and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The California Supreme Court held that, even though there was evidence in certain written personnel documents of an implied agreement not to terminate except for good cause under certain circumstances, this implied agreement did not prohibit the employer from legitimately terminating the employeeon the basis of the need to eliminate his work unit. There was no evidence of an agreed restriction on the employer's right to reorganize, reduce, or consolidate its work force for whatever reasons it wished. This was so, the Court said, even if the employer's decision was influenced by dissatisfaction with the eliminated unit's performance and even if individual employees were entitled to progressive discipline procedures before being fired for poor performance. However, the Court left to the court of appeal on remand the issue of whether the employer had failed to follow its fair layoff policies when it made individual decisions leading to the employee's termination (24 Cal. 4th 317, 338-348) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.27

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.27 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Breached Contract Because No Good Cause to Terminate Existed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT BREACHED THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BY TERMINATING PLAINTIFF BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE GOOD CAUSE TO DISCHARGE PLAINTIFF.

A. "Good Cause" Defined. The term "good cause" connotes "a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith on the part of the party exercising the power" (Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917).

B. Trivial, Capricious, or Pretextual Reason for Discharge Precludes Finding of Good Cause. An employer does not have the right to make an arbitrary or unreasonable decision about terminating an employee when there is a contract to terminate only for good cause. If the reasons advanced by the employer for the termination are either trivial, capricious, unrelated to business needs or goals, or pretextual, the trier of fact may find that the termination was not for good cause (Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 769-770, 250 Cal. Rptr. 195).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that a wrongful discharge cause of action exists, based on the argument that the defendant breached the employment agreement by terminating plaintiff's employment without good cause. This form should be combined with the points and authorities in § 100.20, 100.21 which support the contention that an express or implied employment agreements limits the employer's right to discharge plaintiff in the absence of good cause.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the employer lacked good cause for discharge, for example in a motion for summary judgment. The above points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employer did not have good cause for discharge and evidence tending to show that the reason advanced by the employer for discharge is either trivial, capricious, pretextual, or unrelated to business needs or goals. Counsel should also discuss any evidence that can arguably support an inference that the employer did not reasonably believe that good cause to discharge existed given the facts known to the employer at the time. This argument could be supported by evidence that the employer either did not investigate, or conducted a cursory investigation of the employee, or by evidence that the employer terminated the employee despite evidence exonerating the employee from the alleged wrongdoing.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.29 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, §§ 60.05, 60.09[5] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good Cause Defined

The facts and procedural background of Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , are discussed in § 100.21[3][a]. Pugh held that an employer may not fire an employee "at will" if there is an express or implied agreement that the employee may be fired only "for cause" (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-325) . According to the court, the terms "just cause" and "good cause," although difficult to define, connote a "fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith on the part of the party exercising the power." The court added that care must be taken not to interfere with the legitimate exercise of managerial discretion, particularly when the employee occupies a sensitive managerial or confidential position (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330) .

[b] Trivial, Capricious, or Pretextual Reason for Discharge Precludes Finding of Good Cause

In Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 250 Cal. Rptr. 195 (Pugh II), the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court denying the plaintiff's motion for a new trial after, on remand from the court's earlier decision in Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 (Pugh I) discussed under, (§ 100.27[3][a]) the jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants. The court examined and rejected plaintiff's contention that the trial court should have instructed the jury that even if the defendant was, in good faith, dissatisfied with plaintiff's performance, that would not be sufficient to constitute good cause. The court stated that the trial court properly instructed the jury on good cause consistent with the definition of good cause set out in Pugh I, and properly instructed the jury to balance the employer's interest in operating its business with the employee's interest in maintaining his employment, giving substantial weight to managerial discretion. Under the Pugh I instruction, the employer's good faith dissatisfaction alone is not sufficient to constitute good cause to discharge the employee in breach of the contract; therefore, the plaintiff's proffered jury instruction was unnecessary (203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 768-769) . The court then further expanded on the standard the trier of fact should apply in determining whether there was good cause for discharge, finding that the employer does not have an unfettered right to exercise discretion under the guise of business judgment; the trier of fact will scrutinize the employer's business judgment and determine whether the discharge was justified under the circumstances. If the reasons advanced by the employer are either trivial, capricious, unrelated to business needs or goals, or pretextual, that will allow the trier of fact to find that the discharge was not for good cause (203 Cal. App. 3d 743, 769-770) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Trivial, Capricious, or Pretextual Reason for Discharge Precludes Finding of Good Cause

In Sheppard v. Morgan Keegan & Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 61, 266 Cal. Rptr. 784 , the defendant, an investment banking and stock brokerage firm located in Memphis, Tennessee, offered plaintiff, who worked in California, a position as a stock analyst. Plaintiff accepted the offer and quit his job in California. Several weeks later, he flew to Memphis to lease and apartment and set up his office. While in Memphis, he visited the office several times dressed in casual attire. The managing director told him that such attire was inappropriate for the office. Two days before plaintiff was to begin working for defendant, the managing director told him that they had decided to "separate" from plaintiff before plaintiff started working, but that he did not know the reason for the separation. Plaintiff filed suit for breach of contract, fraud, and wrongful termination. The lower court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed, in part on the basis that there was a triable issue of fact regarding whether good cause existed for terminating his employment.

The court of appeal held that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether good cause existed. Defendant had relied on two alleged instances of good cause contained in the managing director's declaration supporting the summary judgment motion. First, the declaration contained the conclusory statement that plaintiff had made disparaging and demeaning remarks regarding defendant and the Memphis area. The court found that this conclusory statement could not support good cause. Second, the declaration stated that plaintiff had appeared at the office inappropriately attired. However, these visits had been prior to his start date and while he was house hunting. Also, the declaration did not state that this was the reason for the termination; indeed, the managing director admitted in his deposition that he did not know why plaintiff was terminated (218 Cal. App. 3d 61, 67-68) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.28

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.28 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Breached Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S TERMINATION BREACHED THE COVENANT OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING IN THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF WITHOUT CAUSE AND IN BAD FAITH.

A. Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing in Employment Contract. Every employment contract imposes on each party to the contract a duty of good faith and fair dealing in the performance and enforcement of the contract (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 683, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373).

B. Employer's Bad Faith Conduct Extraneous to Contract and Intent to Frustrate Employee's Contract Rights Breach Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing. A breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing in employment contracts is established where the employer engages in bad faith conduct that is extraneous to the employment contract and intends to frustrate the employee's enjoyment of his or her contract rights (Khanna v. Microdata Corp. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 250, 262-263, 215 Cal. Rptr. 860).

[Optional] C. Termination of Long-Term Employment Without Cause Breaches Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing. Termination of employment without legal cause after an employee has satisfactorily performed for a lengthy period of time deprives the employee of the benefits of an employment agreement not to discharge without good cause and, thus, breaches the covenant of good faith and fair dealing contained in the employment contract (Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 455, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The above points and authorities may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that a wrongful discharge cause of action exists, based on the argument that the discharge breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in the employment agreement. Optional Paragraph C is for use where the plaintiff is discharged without cause after satisfactorily working for defendant for a substantial period of time.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's discharge breached the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, for example in a motion for summary judgment. The above points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the terms of the employment contract and evidence that the employer, in discharging plaintiff, acted in bad faith and deprived plaintiff of the benefits of the employment contract. In making this argument, counsel should emphasize the evidence that the employee was a good worker, apparently valued by the employer. If there is evidence of a specific motive for the termination, which can be characterized as one exercised in bad faith, that should be discussed as well.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.30 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.06 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing in Employment Contract

The factual and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , are set forth in § 100.20[3][a]. In Foley, the Supreme Court held that an action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in an employment contract does not afford tort remedies, but rather gives rise only to ordinary contract damages (47 Cal. 3d 654, 682-699) . In discussing the cause of action for breach of the implied covenant, the Court noted that every contract imposes on each party to the contract a duty of good faith and fair dealing in its performance and its enforcement (47 Cal. 3d 654, 683) . The Court, however, did not set forth the elements of a prima facie case for breach of the implied covenant.

[b] Employer's Bad Faith Conduct Extraneous to Contract and Intent to Frustrate Employee's Contract

Rights Breach Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

In Khanna v. Microdata Corp. (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 250, 215 Cal. Rptr. 860 , the plaintiff, Nand Khanna, was recruited to work as a salesperson for defendant Microdata Corp., a computer manufacturer, by Richard Manuel, a branch manager for Microdata. Khanna initially rejected the job offer to join Microdata in San Francisco, but changed his mind on the basis of Manuel's representations that he would be assigned the profitable Van Waters and Rogers (VWR) account. In a letter of July 12, 1978, to Khanna, Manuel specified that Khanna would be paid a 4% commission for hardware sold to VWR through a dealer ESCOM, and that Khanna would be paid a full commission, ranging from 8% to 12%, where the hardware was sold directly to VWR without ESCOM's participation. From this letter, Khanna understood that he would receive a commission on any Microdata computer sold to VWR, which was a national company, regardless of who sold the computer or where the computer was installed. Khanna began work for Microdata in mid-July of 1978. During his first few months with Microdata, Khanna expended time and effort to land the VWR account. Eventually, however, Manuel directed him to stop working on the account because ESCOM was going to be providing computers to VWR as a retail dealer. Thus, even though Microdata would still make a profit on the sales, there no longer was a need to directly pitch the Microdata product to VWR. Khanna stopped working on the account, but then asked Manuel how he was to be compensated under the terms of the July 12 letter. Manuel told him that he should just forget about the July 12 letter. A November 7, 1978, memo stated that Khanna would receive 60% of the normal commission for direct sales of computers for units sold to VWR and actually installed within the San Francisco Branch territory. Khanna believed that this was inconsistent with the terms of the July 12 letter which stated that he would receive a commission regardless of where the computers were installed In November 1979, Khanna complained that he had not received any commissions from sales to VWR and ased to be compensated under the terms of the July 12 letter. Microdata responded that it would only compensate him under the terms of the November 1978 memo. Khanna filed suit against Microdata seeking to recover his commissions. While the suit was pending, he continued to perform well and use his best efforts to sell Microdata's products. On the day after Khanna was denied a jury trial in the lawsuit and fired his lawyer, he received a letter from Microdata informing him that he was being terminated for inability to maintain a normal employee relationship in that his lawsuit was based on unfounded representations and was construed by Microdata as being disloyal. At the time he was fired, he had commissions pending on nearly $250,000 in sales, which Microdata refused to pay under the terms of a Microdata compensation plan, which Khanna had signed, specifying that when employment was terminated, regardless of the reason, there was no right to collect a commission on sales that were not booked, installed, and paid for before termination. Khanna then filed suit for fraud, wrongful discharge, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of contract. The jury returned a general verdict for Khanna.

The court of appeal affirmed the verdict. With respect to Khanna's claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the court traced the decisional history of the claim in employment cases. The court acknowledged that the cause of action emanated from a footnote in Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 179 n.12, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (discussed in § 100.42[3][a]) recognizing that a cause of action could be established on the ground that an employer's discharge of an at-will employee violated the employer's good faith and fair dealing obligations. The court then stated that several subsequent cases (beginning with Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722 , discussed under § 100.28[3][c]) acknowledged that the covenant is implied by law in employment contracts. The court rejected Microdata's contention that the cause of action for breach of the covenant could be made out only if, as in Cleary, the employee establishes lengthy satisfactory service and establishes that the employer acted contrary to it own procedures or acted arbitrarily in terminating the employee. The court found instead that to establish a breach of the covenant, the employee must show that the defendant engaged in bad faith extraneous to the contract, combined with the defendant's intent to frustrate the employee's enjoyment of contract rights. The court stated that the facts in Clearyindicate only one manner among many in which an employer might violate the covenant (170 Cal. App. 3d 250, 262-263) .

Applying this standard to the facts of the instant case, the court found that there was substantial evidence to support the claim that Microdata fired Khanna in bad faith retaliation for bringing his lawsuit and that Microdata intended to deprive Khanna of the benefits of his employment contract. Specifically, given the discrepancy between the July 12 letter and the November 7 memo, the jury could have concluded that the lawsuit was not unfounded, and that this characterization of the lawsuit was advanced merely as a pretext to fire Khanna. Moreover, Khanna's outstanding performance, even after filing his lawsuit, belied the claim that he was disloyal. Further, the fact that he was fired the day after he was denied a jury trial and fired his lawyer supported an inference that the termination was retaliatory. Finally, there was substantial evidence to conclude that the termination was intended to deprive Khanna of commissions on nearly $250,000 worth of computers (170 Cal. App. 3d 250, 264) .

Note that Khanna was disapproved by Foley to the extent that Khanna held that tort damages were recoverable for a breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing.

[c] Termination of Long-Term Employment Without Cause Breaches Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing

In Cleary v. American Airlines, Inc. (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 168 Cal. Rptr. 722 , plaintiff worked for American Airlines from 1958 through 1976, first as a payroll clerk, then as a ramp agent, and then as an airport operations agent, until his termination on December 30, 1976. Plaintiff alleged that, in violation of its own regulations regarding employee grievances and discharge, the company falsely and without just cause accused him of theft, leaving his work area without authorization, and threatening a fellow employee with bodily harm. Plaintiff contended that the real reason for his termination was his union-organizing activities and that the company denied to review his suspension and discharge, although such review was required by company regulations. At the time of the termination, plaintiff had acquired certain retirement and pension benefits. Plaintiff filed suit for breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, as well as a cause of action for wrongful interference with business relationship and wrongful inducement to breach the employment contract. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the suit. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that plaintiff had stated a viable cause of action. With respect to the claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the court found two factors to be of paramount significance. First, that the plaintiff had worked for defendant for 18 years with satisfactory performance. The court stated that termination of employment without legal cause after such a period of time offends the covenant. Second, the policies of defendant set forth specific procedures for adjudicating employee disputes such as the plaintiff's. The court stated that the existence of these policies compels the conclusion that defendant had recognized its responsibility to engage in good faith and fair dealing, rather than in arbitrary conduct, with respect to its employees. The court concluded that the longevity of service coupled with the defendant's policies operated as a form of estoppel to preclude discharge without good cause (111 Cal. App. 3d 443, 455-456) .

Note that Cleary was disapproved by Foley to the extent that Cleary allowed tort damages for a breach of the covenant.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.29

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.29 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Did Not Breach Contract Because Good Cause to Terminate Existed

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S DISCHARGE DID NOT BREACH THE EMPLOYMENT CONTRACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD GOOD CAUSE TO DISCHARGE PLAINTIFF, IN THAT_____ [specify grounds for termination, such as serious misconduct violating company policy or legitimate business reasons].

A. "Good Cause" Defined. The term "good cause" connotes "a fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith on the part of the party exercising the power" (Moore v. May Dept. Stores (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 839-840, 271 Cal. Rptr. 841 ; Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917).

[Optional] B. Serious Misconduct Violating Company Policy Provides Good Cause for Discharge. There is good cause for discharge as a matter of law when misconduct is serious and violates the employer's security procedures (Moore v. May Dept. Stores Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 839-840, 271 Cal. Rptr. 841).

[Optional] C. Legitimate Business Reasons Provide Good Cause for Discharge. There is good cause for discharge when the employer has a legitimate business reason for terminating theemployment (Clutterham v. Coachmen Industries, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1226-1227, 215 Cal. Rptr. 795).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that the discharge breached the employment contract because no good cause to terminate existed. Specifically, the form may be used when defendant is able to show that although its employment relationship with plaintiff was one in which the plaintiff could be discharged only for cause, the defendant had good cause to discharge the plaintiff. Optional Paragraph B may be used if an employee's serious misconduct violated company policy. Optional Paragraph C can be used where the employer had legitimate business reasons for terminating the employment. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.27.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that good cause for discharge existed, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employer had good cause for discharge. Counsel should explain the specific grounds for the dismissal, such as dissatisfaction with the employee's performance, serious misconduct on the part of the employee that violated company policy [Moore v. May Dept. Stores Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 839-840, 271 Cal. Rptr. 841] , or the employer's legitimate business reasons (for example, a company reorganization [Clutterham v. Coachmen Industries, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1226-1227, 215 Cal. Rptr. 795)]. Unless there is an express employment agreement containing a good cause provision, counsel should also consider using the appropriate contentions from § 100.22 to argue that the employment was at will and could be terminated for any reason.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleasing and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, §§ 60.05, 60.09[5] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Good Cause" Defined

In Moore v. May Dept. Stores Co. (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 271 Cal. Rptr. 841 , the plaintiff, a managerial employee for the defendant jewelry store, left two boxes of jewelry unattended while she helped a customer. The jewelry was stolen and never recovered. Consequently, the defendant fired the plaintiff, as she had violated defendant's security procedures which required that all merchandise valued at $60 or more be locked up. The defendant's personnel policy provided that a "[f]ailure to follow [the] operating selling procedure" could result in termination. The plaintiff sued the defendant for breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that it had good cause for firing the plaintiff. The trial court agreed and granted the defendant's motion. The plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court held that the trial court correctly concluded there was "good cause," as a matter of law, to terminate the plaintiff because her violation of security procedures (of which she was aware) resulted in the loss of over $50,000 in merchandise (222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 840) . In reaching its holding, the court relied on the definition of "just cause" or "good cause" set forth in Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , discussed below (222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 839-840) .

The facts and procedural background of Pugh v. See's Candies, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330, 171 Cal. Rptr. 917 , are discussed in § 100.21[3][a]. Pugh held that an employer may not fire an employee "at will" if there is an express or implied agreement that the employee may be fired only "for cause" (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 324-325) . According to the court, the terms "just cause" and "good cause," although difficult to define, connote a "fair and honest cause or reason, regulated by good faith on the part of the party exercising the power." The court added that care must be taken not to interfere with the legitimate exercise of managerial discretion, particularly when the employee occupies a sensitive managerial or confidential position (116 Cal. App. 3d 311, 330) .

[b] Serious Misconduct Violating Company Policy Provides Good Cause for Discharge

The facts and procedural background of Moore v. May Dept. Stores (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 271 Cal. Rptr. 841 , are discussed under § 100.29[3][a]. Moore held that, as a matter of law, the defendant had good cause to terminate the plaintiff for leaving valuable jewelry unattended, resulting in its subsequent theft. The plaintiff argued that the issue of "good cause" is a question of fact, and thus the trial court should not have granted summary judgment for the defendant (222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 838-839) . The court of appeal disagreed, explaining that there was no question as to the plaintiff's fault for the lost jewelry, nor could there be any argument as to the seriousness of her conduct. Furthermore, the plaintiff clearly violated the defendant's security procedures and the defendant's personnel policy stated that failure to follow procedures could result in termination, depending on the seriousness of the violation (222 Cal. App. 3d 836, 839) .

[c] Legitimate Business Reasons Provide Good Cause for Discharge

In Clutterham v. Coachmen Industries, Inc. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 215 Cal. Rptr. 795 , plaintiff was a sales representative working under a written "independent sales representative agreement" that contained a clause providing for termination by either party on 30 days" written notice. Plaintiff was given notice that for a number of reasons, including depressed market conditions and corporate reorganization involving transfer of manufacturing and marketing divisions to another state, plaintiff's employment would be terminated. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor the defendant, holding that even assuming the issue of contractual interpretation would be resolved in appellant's favor, good cause for appellant's termination existed in view of market conditions and company reorganization (169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1226) . Observing that the courts must take care not to interfere with the legitimate exercise of managerial discretion, the court held that in the absence of a showing by the appellant that the employer's professed reasons for termination were pretextual or that the employer acted in bad faith toward him, the motion for summary judgment was properly granted (169 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1227) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] "Good Cause" Defined

Knights v. Hewlett Packard (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 281 Cal. Rptr. 295 , involved an employee who was fired when he failed to return to work after he was injured on the job, failed to comply with several deadlines to return to work, and failed to request leave extensions. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the employer, noting that the employer's personnel policies permitted termination for unacceptable performance and holding that by any standard or definition the employee's conduct constituted unacceptable performance. The court stated that whether an employee's performance was unacceptable and whether good cause for discharge existed are issues that may be determined on a summary judgment motion (230 Cal. App. 3d 775, 780) . The facts and procedural background of Knights are discussed in § 100.22[3][b].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.30

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.30 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists--Discharge Did Not Breach Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing--Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Not Breached Absent Breach of Underlying Employment Contract

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S TERMINATION DID NOT VIOLATE THE COVENANT OF GOOD FAITH AND FAIR DEALING BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT ACT IN BAD FAITH IN TERMINATING THE EMPLOYMENT RELATIONSHIP [AND PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO PROVE A BREACH OF THE UNDERLYING EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT].

A. Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Breached Only Where Defendant in Bad Faith Deprived Plaintiff of Benefit of Employment Agreement. The implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires only that the employer act fairly and in good faith. Thus, to prevail on a claim of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, plaintiff must prove that the employer acted in bad faith and without probable cause in terminating the employment agreement (Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 979, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277).

[Optional] B. No Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing if Underlying Employment Agreement Not Breached. To establish a claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, plaintiff must establish that a termof the employment agreement was violated by the termination (Guz v. Bechtel Nat., Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317, 349-353 ; Flait v. North American Watch Corp. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 467, 481, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522 ; see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 698 n.39, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373).

[Optional] C. No Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Where Employer Makes Mistaken but Good-Faith Determination That Misconduct Occurred. The implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires only that the employer act fairly and in good faith. If the employer terminates the plaintiff based upon a mistaken although good faith belief that the employee has committed misconduct, there is no breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, even if the plaintiff could prove that the factual finding of misconduct was a mistake (Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 978-979, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277).

[Optional] D. Claim for Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Cannot Be Maintained Where Employment Was At-Will. An at-will employee cannot maintain a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing based on the argument that the discharge was made without cause (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 698 n.39, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; Alexander v. Nextel Communications, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1376, 1381 & n.5, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 293).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that defendant breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in terminating plaintiff's employment, on the ground that plaintiff has not alleged facts sufficient to show that the termination was made in bad faith. Paragraph B is for use where there is no breach of the underlying employment agreement. Optional Paragraph C is for use to counter an assertion that defendant's determination that plaintiff committed misconduct warranting discharge was mistaken, based on the argument that the determination was made in good faith. Optional Paragraph D should be used to counter an at-will plaintiff's contention that termination without cause breached the covenant. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.28.

These points and authorities may, in an appropriate case, be combined with the points and authorities in § 100.22 arguing that plaintiff's employment was at will. Also, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the breach of the implied covenant and good faith was not violated, for example, in a motion for summary judgment. The above points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the specific reasons for the termination, showing that the employer acted consistent with the terms of the employment agreement and personnel policies (for example, that the employer gave the plaintiff the required written warnings of performance deficiency) and that the employer at all times acted fairly and in good faith. If plaintiff contends that the employer's factual findings regarding plaintiff's misconduct or poor performance, for example, were erroneous, counsel should also discuss evidence that such findings were merely mistaken but made in good faith [Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 978-979, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277] . If there is no evidence of either an express or implied employment agreement, counsel should use appropriate contentions from § 100.22 to argue that the employment was at will and therefore, there was no covenant of good faith and fair dealing [Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 698 n.39, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.06 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Breached Only Where Defendant in Bad Faith Deprived Plaintiff of Benefit of Employment Agreement

In Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 243 Cal. Rptr. 277 , plaintiff was hired for an indefinite period of time under an oral agreement. Almost two years after he was hired, he was given a written warning for excessive absenteeism, but never received prior oral warnings as required by the employer's policy. Two days after the warning, plaintiff's supervisor observed plaintiff reading a confidential personnel book that contained sensitive salary and disciplinary information about other employees. The book was kept in a file cabinet in a restricted area. The next day, plaintiff was discharged for unauthorized entry into a restricted area and for reading confidential materials. Plaintiff argued that he was reading nonconfidential materials in a nonconfidential area. He appealed his discharge to the vice-president of corporate employee relations, who after listening to plaintiff's story and discussing the matter with other personnel, denied the appeal. Plaintiff sued for breach of oral contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, fraud, and negligent misrepresentation. The trial court sustained defendant's motion for summary judgment and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the cause of action for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the court held that plaintiff's contention that he was in a nonconfidential area reading nonconfidential materials did not raise an issue of bad faith on the part of the employer. The implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires only that the employer act fairly and good faith, and to prevail on a claim of breach of the covenant, the plaintiff must show that the employer acted in bad faith and without probable cause. The court stated that the employer had investigated the incident and that there was no contrary evidence that the employer lacked probable cause to believe that plaintiff was in a confidential area reading confidential documents or that the employer lacked a good-faith belief that the charge was true. The fact that the employer chose to believe witnesses other than plaintiff does not raise an inference of bad faith. If an employer makes a determination in good faith that misconduct occurred, there is no breach of the covenant, even if the employee subsequently could prove that the finding of misconduct was mistaken. The court concluded that if an employee were entitled to a jury trial for breach of the covenant merely by asserting that the charged misconduct was not true, the decision to terminate would be at the discretion of the jury rather than the employer (197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 978-979) .

[b] No Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing if Underlying Employment Agreement Not Breached

In Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc. (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 317 , a longtime employee was released at age 49 when his work unit was eliminated and its tasks transferred to another office of the employer. The employee sued the employer, alleging age discrimination, breach of an implied contract to be terminated only for good cause, and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The California Supreme Court held that the cause of action for violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing was inapplicable or superfluous. The employee had argued that even if he was an at-will employee, the employer had violated its own established personnel policies and therefore had violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The Court responded that the covenant cannot impose substantive duties or limits on the contracting parties beyond those incorporated in the specific terms of their agreement. Thus, unless a contract term provides otherwise, the employer may terminate the employee for any reason or no reason and in any manner; unless the employer's action breaches a specific contract provision providing otherwise, the unfairness of the manner of termination does not set forth a cause of action for breach of the covenant (24 Cal. 4th 317, 349-353) .

In Flait v. North American Watch Corp. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 467, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 522 , Flait began working for the defendant in 1984 as a sales representative under a contract of employment that stated that it was not for a definite term.

Although Flait increased defendant's sales volume, defendant nevertheless became dissatisfied with his performance because he exhibited greater allegiance to customers than to the company, did not require customers to carry all segments of defendant's line of products, and did not adequately service some stores. In 1986 and 1987, the vice president of human resources and Flait's supervisor, Pistner, spoke to Flait about an "attitude problem," and he agreed to improve. A female employee whom Flait supervised complained to him on several occasions that Pistner had made several inappropriate sexual comments to her. In several conversations, Flait told Pistner that his conduct was inappropriate, but during each such conversation, Pistner ignored Flait's concerns. In January 1988, Pistner made the decision to terminate Flait because he was not a "company man" and because Pistner had been dissatisfied with Flait's performance. Flait filed a complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing and received a right-to-sue letter. He then filed this lawsuit alleging that he had been dismissed in retaliation for his efforts to prevent the female employee from being sexually harassed. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary adjudication, finding, among other things, that Flait was terminated for good cause and not for engaging instatutorily-protected behavior, and that his breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim was either statutorily preempted or barred because he was an at-will employee. Flait appealed.

On the claim of breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the court of appeal stated that a contract cause of action may be stated for breach of the implied covenant if the plaintiff was denied the benefits of the parties' agreement. The court found that the contract between Flait and the defendant stated that it was not for a definite term, and therefore was terminable at the will of either party. Moreover, Flait did not present any evidence of any other contract term or established company policy which assured him continued employment, or which was violated by his termination. The court concluded that because Flait could not show a violation of a contractual covenant or promise, summary judgment for the defendant was proper on the claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (3 Cal. App. 4th 467, 480-481) .

[c] No Breach of Implied Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Where Employer Makes Mistaken but Good-Faith Determination That Misconduct Occurred

The facts and procedural background of Burton v. Security Pacific Nat. Bank (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 972 , are discussed under § 100.30[3][a]. The court held that if an employer makes a determination in good faith that misconduct occurred, there is no breach of the covenant, even if the employee subsequently could prove that the finding of misconduct was mistaken. In reaching this decision, the court noted that if an employee were entitled to a jury trial for breach of the covenant merely by asserting that the charged misconduct was not true, the decision to terminate would be at the discretion of the jury rather than the employer (197 Cal. App. 3d 972, 978-979) .

[d] Claim for Breach of Covenant of Good Faith and Fair Dealing Cannot Be Maintained Where Employment Was At-Will

The factual and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , are set forth in § 100.20[3][a]. In discussing whether tort damages were available for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing this holding, the Court noted that with regard to an at-will employment relationship, breach of the covenant cannot be based on a claim that the discharge was made without good cause. The court stated that if such an interpretation was applied, all at-will contracts would be transformed into contracts requiring good cause for termination and Labor Code § 2922 would be eviscerated (47 Cal. 3d 654, 698 n. 39).

In Alexander v. Nextel Communications, Inc. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1376, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 293 , plaintiff alleged that he accepted a position in a new division of his employer, was not given the responsibilities and resultant compensation he had been promised in accepting the new position, and that he was subsequently terminated. He won a judgment based on breach of an express contract to give him the new position and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The appellate opinion does not make clear how the case was framed as a wrongful-termination one but treats it as such: the court reversed on the basis that the jury was never instructed on the statutory presumption that the employment agreement was at will and the plaintiff's burden to overcome that presumption.

In the course of its opinion, the court stated that on neither cause of action (breach of express contract, breach of implied covenant) was the jury permitted to find for plaintiff before determining that there was an agreement that his employment was terminable only for cause (52 Cal. App. 4th 1376, 1381 & n. 5).

In holding this, the opinion can be cited for a broader proposition than the one stated in the form: that no at-will employee can maintain a claim for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing. However, this part of the opinion can be criticized for the breadth of its language. The case it cites in support of its position on the implied covenant (see 52 Cal. App. 4th 1376, 1381 n. 5), Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 631 , makes clear that there is a need for rebuttal of the at-will presumption in an breach-of-implied-covenant case only where the sole allegation of a benefit of the contract taken from plaintiff by the breach is the right to continued employment. In this Camp is consistent with Foley, discussed immediately above. Similarly, it seems illogical to tie a finding of a breach of an express promise to employ plaintiff in a specified position to the issue of whether the contract would be at will or not.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.31

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.31 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Constructively Discharged

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW THAT HE/SHE WAS CONSTRUCTIVELY DISCHARGED IN BREACH OFTHE EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT [or IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY] IN THAT THE EMPLOYER CREATED CONDITIONS OF EMPLOYMENT THAT WERE SO INTOLERABLE THAT A REASONABLE PERSON WOULD RESIGN.

A. Constructive Discharge Legally Regarded as Firing. Constructive discharge occurs when the employer's conduct forces the employee to resign. Although the employee resigns, the employment relationship actually is severed involuntarily by the employer's acts, and against the employee's will. Thus, constructive discharge is legally considered a firing rather than a resignation (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1244-1245, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] B. Constructive Discharge as Breach of Good Cause Agreement. When the employment is governed by an express or implied agreement not to terminate except for good cause, the employer has no right to constructively discharge the employee in contravention of that agreement (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1252, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] C. Constructive Discharge as Breach of Public Policy. The employer has no right to terminate employment for a reason that contravenes public policy. An actual or constructive discharge in violation of fundamental public policy gives rise to a tort action in favor of the terminated employee (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1252, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

D. Employer Created Intolerable or Aggravated Working Conditions. Constructive discharge is established when the employer either intentionally created or knowingly permitted working conditions that were so intolerable or aggravated at the time of the employee's resignation that a reasonable employer would realize that a reasonable person in the employee's position would be compelled to resign (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; see Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders (2004) 542 U.S. 129, 124 S. Ct. 2342, 2351-2355, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 216-220) .

[Optional] E. Series of Separate Incidents May Constitute Constructive Discharge. Although single, trivial, or isolated incidents ordinarily are insufficient to constitute a constructive discharge, a series of separate incidents may establish a constructive discharge through a continuous pattern of harassment of the employee, even if each incident considered separately might be viewed as trivial (Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1171-1172, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95).

F. Knowledge or Intent of Employer. For purposes of establishing a claim of constructive discharge, the requisite knowledge or intent may exist either on the part of the employer, or on the part of persons who effectively represent the employer, including its officers, directors, managing agents, or supervisory employees (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] G. Statute of Limitations Period Commences on Date of Actual Termination. In a constructive discharge action, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the date of the actual termination, rather than from the date the employee is subjected to allegedly intolerable working conditions (Mullins v. Rockwell International Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 737-741).

[Optional] H. Leaving Job Because of Intolerable Conditions Constitutes Resignation. To have a valid claim of constructive eviction, an employee need not have completely resigned from the job. It is sufficient if the employee establishes that, because of intolerable conditions, he or she needed to remove himself or herself from the job (for example, by electing to go on disability retirement) and thus was effectively constructively discharged (Colores v. Board of Trustees (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1316-1318).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff was constructively discharged. Optional Paragraph B is for use where the constructive discharge violates an express or implied agreement that the employment will be terminated only for cause. If Optional Paragraph B is used, these points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 100.20, 100.21 regarding the existence of an express or implied contract not to terminate except for good cause. Optional Paragraph C is for use where the constructive discharge violates public policy. If Optional Paragraph C is used, these points and authorities should be combined with the points and authorities in § 100.42 regarding the nature of the public policy violation. Optional Paragraph E may be used if the adverse working conditions establishing the constructive discharge resulted from a series of separate incidents that,considered individually, might be viewed as trivial. Optional Paragraph G is for use if the employer contends that the constructive discharge claim is time-barred because the suit was not filed within the appropriate limitations period following the date the employee was subjected to the intolerable working conditions. Optional Paragraph H is for use if the employer contends that the employee has not been constructively discharged because he or she took disability retirement rather than simply quitting the job.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff was constructively discharged, for example in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. The above points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that plaintiff was a diligent, hard working employee, but was forced to resign because of intolerable working conditions. Counsel should specifically identify such conditions and show that they either were aggravated or continuous. Generally, single, trivial, or isolated incidents are not sufficient to support a claim for constructive discharge (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022). However, counsel may establish that a series of separate incidents constituted a continuous pattern of intolerable conditions by showing that the incidents amounted to a campaign of harassment against the employee (Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1171-1172, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95). Further, counsel must show that the employer, or persons representing the employer (including officers, directors, managing agents, or supervisors) either intentionally created the conditions or knowingly permitted them to continue, such as evidence that plaintiff complained about the conditions but the employer failed to take remedial action.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.35 -100.38 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.07 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constructive Discharge Legally Regarded as Firing

In Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , James Turner (Turner) resigned from his employment with Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (ABI) after he received a negative personnel evaluation, and filed suit alleging, inter alia, that he was wrongfully discharged in violation of public policy. The public policy discharge cause of action was based on allegations that he had been harassed for reporting (several years before the evaluation) ABI's violations of federal and state laws, internal company policies, and provisions of ABI's collective bargaining agreement. The trial court granted ABI's motion for summary judgment, but the court of appeal reversed, holding that the "cumulative effect" of the "long list of alleged actions [by ABI] and [workplace] conditions" established a triable case of constructive wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. The California Supreme Court granted review, and reversed the court of appeal's judgment.

The Court discussed the nature of a constructive discharge, stating that although the employee resigns, the employment relationship actually is severed involuntarily by the employer's acts, and against the employee's will. Thus, constructive discharge is legally considered a firing rather than a resignation (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1245) . To support a claim of constructive discharge, the conditions giving rise to the resignation must be sufficiently extraordinary and egregious to overcome the normal motivation of a competent, diligent, and reasonable employee to earn a livelihood and serve his or her employer. The proper focus is on whether the resignation was coerced, not whether it was simply one rational option for the employee (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1246) . The adverse working conditions must be unusually aggravated or amount to a continuous pattern before the situation will be deemed intolerable (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . In some circumstances, asingle intolerable incident, such as a crime of violence against an employee by an employer, or an employer's ultimatum that an employee commit a crime, may constitute a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247 n.3). Generally, though, single, trivial, or isolated acts of misconduct are insufficient to support a constructive discharge claim. Citing Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6 , the Court also stated that a poor performance rating or a demotion, even if accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not by itself trigger a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . The Court also held that the authorities are in agreement that a constructive discharge can only exist if, under an objective standard, a reasonable person faced with the allegedly intolerable employer actions or conditions of employment would have no reasonable alternative but to quit, citing Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 201, 212, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248) . The Court examined Turne's allegations of illegality at ABI in the light of this standard, and relied on the absence of any evidence that Turner was required, or even requested, to join in the illegal conduct, as well as the nature of the alleged violations (involving violations of state law regulating the economic and contractual relationships between beverage manufacturers and their customers and competition), to conclude that the conditions were not so obnoxious as to cause a reasonable employee to feel compelled to resign (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254-1255) .

[b] Constructive Discharge as Breach of Good Cause Agreement

The factual and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth under § 100.31[3][a]. The Court stated that after proving the existence of a constructive discharge, the employee must independently prove a breach of contract or violation of public policy in connection with the termination. The Court's rationale was that constructive discharge in and of itself is neither a tort nor a breach of contract, but is merely a doctrine that transforms an ostensible resignation into a dismissal (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251) .

[c] Constructive Discharge as Violation of Public Policy

The factual and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth under § 100.31[3][a]. The Court stated that after proving the existence of a constructive discharge, the employee must independently prove a breach of contract or violation of public policy in connection with the termination. The Court's rationale was that constructive discharge in and of itself is neither a tort nor a breach of contract, but is merely a doctrine that transforms an ostensible resignation into a dismissal (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251) .

[d] Employer Created Intolerable or Aggravated Working Conditions

The factual and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth under § 100.31[3][a]. The Court found that in order to support a claim of constructive discharge, the conditions giving rise to the resignation must be sufficiently extraordinary and egregious to overcome the normal motivation of a competent, diligent, and reasonable employee to earn a livelihood and serve his or her employer. The proper focus is on whether the resignation was coerced, not whether it was simply one rational option for the employee (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1246) . The adverse working conditions must be unusually aggravated or amount to a continuous pattern before the situation will be deemed intolerable (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . In some circumstances, a single intolerable incident, such as a crime of violence against an employee by an employer, or an employer's ultimatum that an employee commit a crime, may constitute a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247 n.3). Generally, though, single, trivial, or isolated acts of misconduct are insufficient to support a constructive discharge claim. Citing Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6 , the Court also stated that a poor performance rating or a demotion, even if accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not by itself trigger a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . The Court also held that the authorities are in agreement that a constructive discharge can only exist if, under an objective standard, a reasonable person faced with the allegedly intolerable employer actions or conditions of employment would have no reasonable alternative but to quit, citing Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 201, 212, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248) .

In Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders (2004) 542 U.S. 129, 124 S. Ct. 2342, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204 , the plaintiff sued her former employer in federal district court, alleging that sexually harassing conduct by her supervisors violated Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.). She further alleged that the hostile work environment created by the supervisors' conduct was so severe that she was forced to resign; in other words, she claimed that she had been constructively discharged. The district court granted the employer's motion for summary judgment, holding that the employer was not vicariously liable for the supervisors' harassment because the harassment did not culminate in a tangible employment action. The Third Circuit reversed and remanded for further proceedings, holding that the plaintiff's claim of constructive discharge, if proved, would constitute a sufficient tangible employmentaction to render the employer vicariously liable under Title VII for the supervisors' harassing conduct.

The United States Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that a constructive discharge does not by itself constitute a tangible employment action for this purpose. Thus, if a Title VII plaintiff alleges that he or she was constructively discharged, the employer may assert an affirmative defense based on the employee's failure to use the employer's internal procedure for reporting harassment [see Burlington Industries v. Ellerth (1998) 524 U.S. 742, 765, 118 S. Ct. 2257, 141 L. Ed. 2d 633 ; Faragher v. City of Boca Raton (1998) 524 U.S. 775, 807-808, 118 S. Ct. 2275, 141 L. Ed. 2d 662] unless the employee quit in reasonable response to an employer-sanctioned adverse action that would qualify as a tangible employment action (for example, a humiliating demotion, extreme cut in pay, or transfer to a position in which the employee would face unbearable working conditions) (159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 216-223) .

In the course of its analysis, the Supreme Court examined the origins and scope of the constructive discharge doctrine. Under that doctrine, an employee's reasonable decision to resign because of unendurable working conditions is assimilated to a formal discharge for remedial purposes. The test is objective: an employee's resignation will be deemed a constructive discharge only if working conditions become so intolerable that a reasonable person in the employee's position would have felt compelled to resign. The constructive discharge concept originated in the 1930's, when the National Labor Relations Board developed the doctrine to address situations in which employers coerced employees to resign, often by creating intolerable working conditions, in retaliation for the employees' engaging in collective activities. Since then, the doctrine has become firmly established in the courts and has been applied in a variety of situations, including Title VII cases (159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 216-217) .

The Court went on to hold that a plaintiff who advances a hostile environment constructive-discharge claim must show that (1) the offending behavior was sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the plaintiff's employment and create an abusive working environment, and (2) the resulting working environment was so intolerable that a reasonable person would have felt compelled to resign. Harassment so intolerable as to cause resignation may be effected through co-worker conduct, unofficial supervisory conduct, or official company acts (159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 217-220) .

[e] Series of Separate Incidents May Constitute Constructive Discharge

In Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 , the plaintiff resigned from her job as human resources director and then sued her former employer for wrongful termination, alleging that she had been constructively discharged in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (see Gov. Code § 12940). The plaintiff alleged that a series of incidents in which the employer's general manager mistreated the plaintiff had resulted in intolerable working conditions that amounted to constructive discharge. The incidents involved various forms of intimidation and harassment by the general manager, such as shouting at the plaintiff, glaring at her, and suggesting in the presence of other managers that the plaintiff was not a "team player." The plaintiff's supervisor testified that it seemed that the general manager was "picking on" the plaintiff and "going out of his way to make her life difficult." The jury found that the plaintiff had indeed been constructively discharged, and the trial court entered a judgment awarding the plaintiff compensatory and punitive damages.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court acknowledged that each incident alleged by the employee did not by itself justify the employee's decision to resign. However, an overall campaign of harassment can justify a decision to resign. In this case the evidence supported the jury's finding that the separate incidents, considered together, constituted a continuous pattern of intolerable working conditions (86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1171-1172) .

[f] Knowledge or Intent of Employer

The factual and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , is set forth under § 100.31[3][a]. The Court stated that because a constructive discharge is equivalent to a termination, the resignation must be coerced by the employer and not simply caused by the voluntary action of the employee or by conditions that are not within the employer's control. The Court therefore disapproved of the constructive knowledge standard established by Brady v. Elixir Industries (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 1306, 242 Cal. Rptr. 324 , because that standard would not ensure that the employer had the opportunity to take corrective measures (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248) . The Court stated that an employer's actual knowledge of the intolerable conditions and subsequent failure to remedy the situation may be circumstantial evidence that the employer coerced the resignation (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1249) . The Court reasoned that this actual knowledge standard will require the employee to notify someone in a position of authority, thus giving employers who were previously unaware of the conditions a chance to remedy them, but preventing employers from shielding themselves from liability by ignoring the conditions (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1250) .

[g] Statute of Limitations Period Commences on Date of Actual Termination

In Mullins v. Rockwell International Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 936 P.2d 1246 , Cornelius Mullins (Mullins), a 22-yearemployee of Rockwell International Corp. (Rockwell), was demoted in early 1988 from his executive-level position to a non-executive position, without a change in pay. Thereafter, Mullins's job responsibilities and working environment continued to diminish, and in mid-1988 he was told that he would be assigned to a new grade level to reflect the responsibilities of his new position. Mullins expected that this would lead to lower pay and loss of benefits. Due to stress and humiliation, he took several medical leaves of absence and eventually resigned on September 20, 1989. On September 19, 1991, Mullins filed suit against Rockwell alleging constructive discharge. The trial court granted Rockwell's motion for summary judgment on the ground, inter alia, that Mullins's contract claims were barred by the two-year statute of limitations set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 339. The court ruled that the limitations period began to run once Mullins suffered appreciable harm, which, according to the court, was when Mullins first learned that his status was being downgraded. The court of appeal affirmed. The California Supreme Court granted review and reversed the court of appeal's judgment.

The Court, referring to its decision in Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 (discussed under § 100.31[3][a]), stated that a constructive discharge occurs only when an employer terminates employment by forcing the employee to resign. To ensure that the resignation is actually coerced, courts require proof that the employer intentionally created or knowingly permitted working conditions that were so intolerable or aggravated at the time the employee resigned that a reasonable employer would realize that a reasonable person in the employee's situation would be compelled to resign (15 Cal. 4th 731, 737-738) . The Court then reviewed its decision in Romano v. Rockwell International, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 479, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20, 926 P.2d 1114 , in which it held that the statute of limitations in an action based on breach of an implied contract not to terminate employment without good cause begins running at the time of the actual termination of employment. According to the court, the same result applies in a constructive discharge action. Any early breach of contract committed through Rockwell's creation of intolerable working conditions did not rescind the contract because Mullins continued to perform. Mullins had an election of remedies, and the statute of limitations did not begin to run until he made an election by resigning (15 Cal. 4th 731, 738-739) . Rockwell argued that this result would allow employees to control the limitations period, such that an employee could delay filing suit until memories have faded and the claim is stale. The Court, however, said that an employer that creates intolerable conditions should be prepared for a possible lawsuit when the coerced resignation finally occurs; because intolerable conditions normally continue up to the date of the resignation, litigation will often involve recent circumstances. The longer an employee delays resigning, however, the more difficult it may be for him or her to prove that the working conditions actually were intolerable. The Court also noted that the parties' efforts to resolve differences informally would be stifled if the statute of limitations began to run on the first date that an employee suffered appreciable harm, rather than on the date of actual termination (15 Cal. 4th 731, 739-741) .

[h] Leaving Job Because of Intolerable Conditions Constitutes Resignation

In Colores v. Board of Trustees (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1293 , the plaintiff was a state-university employee who sued the university for constructive wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant university, holding that the facts of the case could not support the plaintiff's allegation of constructive discharge. The plaintiff appealed, and the university filed a cross-appeal challenging the trial court's order denying the university's first motion for summary adjudication of issues. The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment and denied the university's cross-appeal (105 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1321) .

On the university's cross-appeal, one issue was whether an employee who takes a disability retirement from employment is precluded from recovering on a wrongful constructive discharge cause of action. The university contended that, under the laws governing the Public Employees Retirement System, a disability retirement does not sever the employment relationship. For example, a disability retiree who sufficiently recovers his or her health may request reinstatement (see Gov. Code § 21193). Therefore, the university contended, a disability retirement will not support a claim of constructive discharge, because it is inconsistent with the notion of a coerced termination of the employer-employee relationship that is the basis of the doctrine of constructive discharge (105 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1317-1318) .

The court of appeal rejected the university's position on this issue, preferring instead to focus on "the true logic of plaintiff's case--that the university, through its agents, allegedly made plaintiff's working conditions so intolerable that her preexisting medical condition worsened to the point where she was no longer able to function in her duties and needed to remove herself from her job, and thus was effectively constructively discharged." The court explained that an abusive employer does not have the right to orchestrate how its employee exits his or her employment by demanding that the employee quit or take a service retirement before acquiring a cause of action for wrongful constructive discharge (105 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1318-1319) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employer Created Intolerable or Aggravated Working Conditions

In Zilmer v. Carnation Co. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 29, 263 Cal. Rptr. 422 , the plaintiff had worked for defendant Carnation for 31 years. At the time of his resignation, he was a controller for Carnation. Approximately one year prior to his resignation, his supervisors informed him that all accounting directors and controllers had to obtain a CMA certificate as a condition of further employment. He told the supervisors that because of his immense job responsibilities, in part due to the recent acquisition of Carnation by the Nestle Co., he did not believe that he could obtain the certificate. They told him that there would be no exceptions to the requirement. However, following his resignation, they hired noncertified accounting directors and controllers and relieved them, and other similarly-situated employees, of the certificate requirement. Plaintiff sued, alleging that the certificate requirement was false and intended to create intolerable working conditions for him and to force his resignation, all as part of a plan to replace high-level managerial personnel with associates and friends of one of the supervisors. The trial court sustained the defendants" demurrer and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed, finding that plaintiff had properly plead an implied-in-fact contract not to terminate except for cause, and that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for constructive discharge. In particular, the certification requirement imposed by defendants was unreasonable under the circumstances and created an intolerable work situation that could result only in his termination or resignation (215 Cal. App. 3d 29, 38-39) . Note that Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , disapproved Zilmer to the extent that Zilmer is inconsistent with the standard of actual employer knowledge required for a showing of constructive discharge.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.32

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.32 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff Was Constructively Discharged--Employer Created Intolerable Working Conditions--Hostile Work Environment Caused by Widespread Sexual Favoritism

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW THAT THE DEFENDANT CREATED INTOLERABLE WORKING CONDITIONS BY ALLOWING WIDESPREAD SEXUAL FAVORITISM THAT PRODUCED A HOSTILE WORK ENVIRONMENT.

Widespread Sexual Favoritism Can Create Hostile Work Environment for All Employees. When favoritism in a workplace based on a supervisor's consensual sexual affairs with female employees is sufficiently widespread, it may create a hostile work environment in which the demeaning message is conveyed to female employees that they are viewed by management as "sexual playthings" or that the way for women to get ahead in the workplace is by engaging in sexual conduct with their supervisors or managers. Such conduct is actionable by any employee, male or female, who finds it offensive and can establish that it is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter his or her working conditions and create a hostile working environment (Miller v. Department of Corr. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 446, 464-467, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797, 115 P.3d 77).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that the plaintiff was constructively discharged because of a hostile work environment created by widespread sexual favoritism in the workplace.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or allegations showing that at the relevant times the plaintiff and other employees were aware that certain employees who had engaged in consensual sexual affairs with supervisors recieved preferential treatment, such as promotions or sought-after assignments.

[c] Related Memoranda

This form may be combined with the points and authorities in § 100.31 to support a claim that the plaintiff was wrongfully, constructively discharged by the employer's creation of intolerable working conditions that prompted the plaintiff to resign.

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in §§ 100.35 -100.38, 100.82 may be used in appropriate cases to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of hostile work environment, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 41, § 41.81[1][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Widespread Sexual Favoritism Can Create Hostile Work Environment for All Employees

The plaintiffs in Miller v. Department of Corr. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 446, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 797, 115 P.3d 77 , sued their former employer, claiming that they had been victims of sexual harassment under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). Specifically, the plaintiffs claimed that an actionable hostile work environment existed as a result of their supervisor's having accorded unwarranted favorable treatment to numerous female employees with whom the supervisor was having sexual affairs. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer, concluding that the conduct in question did not support a claim of sexual harassment, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The California Supreme Court reversed, holding that although an isolated instance of favoritism on the part of a supervisor toward a female employee with whom the supervisor is conducting a consensual sexual affair ordinarily would not constitute sexual harassment, when such sexual favoritism in a workplace is sufficiently widespread it may create an actionable hostile work environment (36 Cal. 4th 446, 451-452) .

In general, an employee claiming harassment based on a hostile work environment must demonstrate that the conduct complained of was severe enough or sufficiently pervasive to alter the conditions of employment and create a work environment that qualifies as hostile or abusive to employees because of their sex, as judged from the perspective of a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position, considering all the circumstances. In holding that the plaintiffs in this case had at least raised a question of fact concerning the existence of a hostile work environment, the Supreme Court placed great reliance on a 1990 policy statement of the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) regarding hostile environment claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.). The Court cited with approval the policy statement's explanation that widespread sexual favoritism of the kind alleged in the present case may create a hostile work environment by sending employees the demeaning message that female employees are viewed by management as "sexual playthings" or that the way for women to get ahead in the workplace is to engage in sexual conduct with their supervisors (36 Cal. 4th 446, 462-463) .

Again citing the EEOC policy statement, the Court also held that if favoritism based on the granting of sexual favors is widespread in a workplace, both male and female colleagues who do not welcome this conduct can establish a hostile work environment, regardless of whether any objectionable conduct is directed at them and regardless of whether those who were granted favorable treatment willingly bestowed the sexual favor. Thus, sexual favoritism of the kind alleged in the present case is actionable by any employee who can establish that the conduct is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of employment and create an abusive working environment. The employee need not demonstrate the existence of coercive sexual conduct directed at him or her, or even conduct of a sexual nature (36 Cal. 4th 446, 464) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.33

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.33 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Discipline of Employee Violated Public Policy

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT EXISTS ABSENT TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT WHERE DEFENDANT'S DISCIPLINE OF PLAINTIFF WAS IMPOSED IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY.

Cause of Action Exists for Wrongful Discipline in Violation of Public Policy. The doctrine of wrongful termination in violation of public policy embraces wrongful discipline. Thus, an employee can maintain a tort claim against his or her employer where disciplinary action has been taken against the employee in violation of a public policy, even though the ultimate sanction of discharge has not been imposed (Garcia v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1562, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The above points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that, absent termination, a tort cause of action can exist for discipline imposed in violation of public policy. These points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities which describe the nature of the public policy that has been violated, for example, the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.41 -100.47.

The above points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a cause of action exists absent termination where the plaintiff has been disciplined in violation of public policy, for example in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the conduct of plaintiff that is alleged to have lead to the discipline (for example, whistleblowing or refusing to violate the law), the nature of the discipline imposed (such as demotion or suspension), and the public policy at issue. Further, counsel should discuss evidence that tends to link the discipline to plaintiff's conduct. This could include evidence of threats, statements made by the employer as to the reason for the disciplinary action, or other evidence indicating a relationship between the discipline and the conduct, such as the fact that plaintiff was performing his or her job satisfactorily.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.52 -100.54 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.07[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Exists for Wrongful Discipline in Violation of Public Policy

In Garcia v. Rockwell Internat. Corp. (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 232 Cal. Rptr. 490 , plaintiff Joe Garcia began work for defendant Rockwell in 1960. From October 1977 to April 21, 1980, he was a supervisor in manufacturing operations and was responsible for keeping time records for employees in his department and charging an employee's time to a "charge number" that represented the project on which they were working. Garcia mischarged the time of his employees to projects they were not working on. In July 1979, Garcia told a NASA representative that he had been ordered to mischarge the time by his supervisor, Ray Ciotta. Ciotta denied this allegation. In November 1979, Garcia told Rockwell officials that he had reported to NASA overcharging on the Shuttle program by another supervisor. He did not tell the Rockwell officials that he had reported his own mischarging. In March 1980, Garcia met again with Rockwell officials and signed a statement admitting the mischarging. Four days later, he was placed on leave without pay and subsequently was suspended without pay. Six months later, Rockwell reinstated him to a nonsupervisory position with no reduction in pay. Garcia sued, claiming that he had been wrongfully suspended and demoted in retaliation for revealing the mischarging to NASA. The lower court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer who claimed that, as a matter of law, an employee who is wrongfully disciplined in retaliation for whistle blowing may not maintain an action unless the discipline imposed is termination. Garcia appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, rejecting defendant's argument that a tort claim under Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co.

(1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (discussed in § 100.42[3][a]), cannot as a matter of law be based on alleged retaliatory discipline. The court stated that it saw no reason why the rationale of Tameny could not be applied where an employee is wrongfully disciplined and suffers damage as a result of a breach of a duty growing out of the contract, as opposed to breach of a contract term. The court then found that public policy, specifically Labor Code § 1102.5, forbids retaliation against an employee who discloses information regarding the employer's violation of the law to a government agency. The same wrongful conduct is involved whether the retaliation that is inflicted is discharge or a suspension, the only difference being in the extent of the damages suffered. The court concluded that an employee can maintain a tort claim against his or her employer where disciplinary action has been taken against the employee in retaliation for "whistle blowing," even though the employee was not terminated (187 Cal. App. 3d 1556, 1561-1562) .

23 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.34

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.34 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Right to Demote Limited by Express or Implied Agreement Between Parties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT DID NOT HAVE THE RIGHT TO DEMOTE PLAINTIFF AT WILL, BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S RIGHT TO DEMOTE PLAINTIFF WAS LIMITED BY AN_____ [EXPRESS and/or IMPLIED] AGREEMENT TO DEMOTE OR DISCIPLINE PLAINTIFF ONLY FOR "GOOD CAUSE."

A. Express or Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts Presumption That Employee May Be Demoted at Will. The presumption that an employee may be demoted at will is rebuttable by evidence of an express or implied agreement to demote only for good cause (Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 464-465, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834).

[Optional] B. Implied Contract Terms Not to Demote May Arise From Employer's Policies and Practices. Courts will look to the employer's policies, both official and unofficial, practices, and communications in order to discover the contents of an implied employment agreement not to demote without good cause. In particular, an employer's discipline policy may be evidence of an implied contract not to demote without cause (Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 463-464, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention that either an express or an implied agreement between the parties limited the defendant's right to demote plaintiff at will, permitting demotion only for good cause [see Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 464-465, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834] .

Optional Paragraph B is for use if plaintiff bases the contention on the existence of an implied agreement not to demote without good cause. Counsel may combine these points and authorities with the points and authorities in § 100.27, which support the contention that the defendant lacked good cause to discharge plaintiff; however, counsel will need to modify those points and authorities to reflect lack of good cause for demotion rather than termination.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an express or implied agreement limited defendant's right to demote plaintiff at will, for example in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should discuss evidence indicating that the defendant promised not to demote plaintiff without good cause. If the contention is based on the existence of an express agreement, counsel should specify the defendant's express promise. If the contention is based on an implied agreement, counsel should specify the conduct of the parties that evidences an implied agreement not to demote without good cause. For example, counsel could discuss evidence of defendant's personnel policies or practices, such as, if appropriate, a progressive discipline policy. Counsel also should discuss evidence that in demoting plaintiff, defendant breached the express or implied promise not to demote without good cause.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.39 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.07[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express or Implied Good Cause Agreement Rebuts Presumption That Employee May Be Demoted At Will

In Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 , the plaintiffs, Scott and Johnson, were engineers with Pacific Gas & Electric Co. ("PG&E") for 24 and 20 years, respectively. Scott was a director of technical services with responsibility for 250 employees, and Johnson was a supervisory engineer with responsibility for 56 employees. In 1979, plaintiffs began their own consulting business, S&J Engineering ("S&J"). All S&J work was done in the evenings, on vacation days, or on weekends. PG&E managers were aware of the existence of S&J and the plaintiff's involvement in it, and PG&E employment policies permitted such outside work so long as it was not a conflict of interest with PG&E. On occasion, several PG&E technicians were employed on S&J projects, but they performed this work only during their off hours. In late 1988, PG&E's internal auditing department began investigating plaintiffs supervisorial practices and outside business interests. Plaintiffs were eventually charged with being negligent supervisors, and with having conflicts of interests with PG&E arising out of their work in S&J. In August 1989, plaintiffs were suspended with only a brief explanation of the charges against them. In September, they were finally allowed to read, but were not given copies of, the investigation report. Plaintiffs responded to the charges in writing, but nonetheless were demoted in October to nonsupervisory positions, and their salaries and benefits were accordingly reduced by approximately 25 percent. At trial, personnel supervisors testified that the demotion decision actually had been made in July.

Plaintiffs brought suit for breach of an implied employment contract, based on evidence that PG&E did not comply with the terms of its positive discipline policy. The policy contained a progressive system of discipline, beginning with counseling, followed by an oral reminder, a written reminder, and then a paid one-day leave for the employee to consider whether he or she could comply with PG&E's standards of conduct. The policy provided for termination when the positive discipline steps were ineffective, or in extreme circumstances when the employee forfeited the right to positive discipline, such as for theft. Demotion was discussed as an intermediate disciplinary step short of discharge. There was evidence that the policy was intended to be uniformly applied to all nonprobationary employees, and that PG&E considered the policy to express what the company expected from employees and what employees could expect from the company. The jury found that PG&E had breached an implied agreement not to discipline or demote plaintiffs without good cause. PG&E then appealed following the trial court's denial of PG&E's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for the plaintiffs on the grounds that no cause of action existed for breach of an implied-in-fact contract not to demote except for good cause because such a contract would be too vague and uncertain to enforce.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court reviewed the principles applicable to a cause of action for breach of an implied in fact contract not to terminate without good cause, and concluded that, consistent with the reasoning in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (discussed in § 100.20[3][a]), there was no rational reason why an employer's policy that it will not demote employees except for good cause cannot become an implied contract term of an employment contract (11 Cal. 4th 454, 464) . The Court explained that there is a common-law presumption that an employee may be demoted at will (derived from the employment at will presumption of Lab. Code § 2922), but that the employer's right to demote, just like the right to discharge, is not absolute. The presumption that an employee may be demoted at will may be rebutted by evidence of a contractual agreement, express or implied, to limit the employer's power to demote (11 Cal. 4th 454, 465) .

The Court then found that there was sufficient evidence to conclude that PG&E had entered into an implied contractual agreement not to demote without good cause. PG&E's detailed positive discipline policy was intended to apply to all employees, and there was ample evidence that employees had a reasonable expectation that the company would follow its own discipline policy, which had as its basic premise the disciplining of employees only based on good cause (11 Cal. 4th 454, 465) . The Court also found that PG&E had breached the implied contract. The evidence indicated that plaintiffs did not commit significant conflict of interest or supervisory violations, and, pursuant to the positive discipline policy, PG&E should have given plaintiffs an opportunity to cure any minor offenses (11 Cal. 4th 454, 465) .

[b] Implied Contract Terms Not to Demote May Arise From Employer's Policies and Practices

The facts and procedural background of Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 , are discussed under § 100.34[3][a]. The Court explained that in examining whether an implied in fact contract exists in the employment context, courts will look not only to express agreements, but also to the employer's policies, practices, and communications to discover the contents of an employment contract (11 Cal. 4th 454, 463) . The Court concluded that in the case before it, the employer's progressive discipline policy created an implied in fact contract that it would not demote employees without good cause (11 Cal. 4th 454, 465) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.35

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.35 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Constructive Discharge of Plaintiff Was Neither Breach of Contract, Nor Tort, Nor Violation of Fundamental Public Policy or Statutory or Constitutional Right

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT ESTABLISHED THAT HIS/HER ALLEGED CONSTRUCTIVE DISCHARGE WAS A BREACH OF CONTRACT OR A TORT.

Discharge of Employee, Even Constructive Discharge, Does Not Give Rise to Cause of Action Unless It Violates Employee's Contractual Rights or Constitutes Actionable Tort. A constructive discharge, by itself, is not necessarily a wrongful discharge. Even after establishing a constructive discharge, an employee must independently prove a breach of contract or a tort, or a violation of fundamental public policy or statutory or constitutional right in connection with the termination in order to recover damages for wrongful discharge. Thus, an at-will employee who is constructively discharged has no viable contractual claim for wrongful discharge because at-will employment may be terminated for any reason (Starzynski v. Capital Pub. Radio, Inc. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 40-41, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff has a cause of action based solely on an alleged constructive discharge, when the plaintiff has not alleged or established that the discharge was a violation of contractual rights or a tort.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of the case. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or allegations showing that the plaintiff's employment was at will, and that the termination of the plaintiff's employment did not violate public policy.

[c] Related Memoranda

Any of the other points and authorities for opposing a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with this form. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in §§ 100.20, 100.21, 100.31, 100.42 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.07 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Employee, Even Constructive Discharge, Does Not Give Rise to Cause of Action Unless It Violates Employee's Contractual Rights or Constitutes Actionable Tort or Violates a Fundamental Public Policy or Statutory or Constitutional Right

In Starzynski v. Capital Pub. Radio, Inc. (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , the plaintiff was an at-will employee. After he resigned from his job, he sued his employer, alleging that his resignation was a constructive discharge prompted by intolerable working conditions and that the termination of his employment violated an implied contract not to terminate him so long as his performance was satisfactory. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first determined that there was no implied contract modifying the plaintiff's status as an at-will employee. Thus, the plaintiff could be terminated "for any or no reason" (88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 37-39) .

The court of appeal next considered the plaintiff's contention that the trial court had erred in finding that the plaintiff had not been constructively discharged. The court of appeal held that it was unnecessary to decide whether the plaintiff had been constructively discharged. Even assuming the truth of the plaintiff's allegations that intolerable conditions had forced him to resign (that is, assuming he had been constructively discharged),the plaintiff still had no cause of action. The court explained that constructive discharge by itself is neither a tort nor a breach of contract, but a doctrine that transforms a resignation into a firing. Even after establishing a constructive discharge, the employee must independently prove a breach of contract or a tort or a violation of fundamental public policy or statutory or constitutional right in connection with the termination of employment in order to obtain damages for wrongful discharge. In this case, because the plaintiff was an at-will employee and because he had not asserted that the termination of employment violated any public policy, the plaintiff could not prove a breach of contract or a tort in connection with the termination. Therefore, he had no cause of action for wrongful discharge (88 Cal. App. 4th 33, 40-41) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.36

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.36 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Not Constructively Discharged--Conditions of Employment Were Not Sufficiently Intolerable That Reasonable Employee Would Have Felt Compelled to Resign

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT ESTABLISHED THAT HE/SHE WAS CONSTRUCTIVELY DISCHARGED BECAUSE THE RESIGNATION WAS NOT CAUSED BY WORKING CONDITIONS SO INTOLERABLE THAT A REASONABLE EMPLOYEE WOULD HAVE FELT COMPELLED TO RESIGN.

A. Constructive Discharge Determined by Objective Standard. Whether plaintiff was constructively discharged is determined by an objective standard: plaintiff must prove that a reasonable person faced with the allegedly intolerable employer actions or conditions of employment would have no reasonable alternative except to quit (Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders (2004) 542 U.S. 129, 124 S. Ct. 2342, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 216-220 ; Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] B. Single, Trivial, or Isolated Acts of Misconduct Insufficient. To amount to a constructive discharge, adverse working conditions must be unusually aggravated or amount to a continuous pattern before the situation will be deemed intolerable; in general, single, trivial, or isolated acts of misconduct are insufficient to support a constructive discharge claim (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] C. Poor Performance Rating or Demotion Insufficient. A poor performance rating or a demotion, even when accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not by itself trigger a constructive discharge (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; Soules v. Cadam, Inc.

(1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form can be used in support of the contention that the plaintiff in a wrongful discharge action has not established that his or her resignation from employment was in fact a constructive discharge that can be the basis for a wrongful discharge action. The ground asserted for the contention is that the conditions that allegedly forced the plaintiff to resign were not so intolerable that a reasonable person in that position would be compelled to resign. Optional Paragraphs B and C set forth factual scenarios that have been found insufficient to meet the objective standard.

The points and authorities in this form may be combined with those in §§ 100.37, 100.38 in an appropriate case. In addition, even if a resignation is found to constitute a constructive discharge, that finding alone does not establish liability; a constructive discharge is neither a breach of contract nor a tort, and a plaintiff must independently prove a breach of contract or a tort in order to obtain damages for a wrongful discharge. Thus, substantive contentions such as those set forth in §§ 100.22, 100.23, 100.29, 100.30, 100.49, 100.52 -100.54 may also be combined with the constructive discharge contentions in this form and in §§ 100.37, 100.38.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a reasonable person, faced with the conditions of employment that allegedly caused plaintiff to resign, would not have found the conditions so intolerable that resignation was the only reasonable course of action. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counselshould discuss evidence that the conditions that allegedly caused plaintiff to resign were not sufficiently intolerable to cause a reasonable person to resign, such as evidence that any misconduct was merely trivial or isolated, or occurred on only one instance. Counsel also should discuss evidence, if appropriate, that the employer (and the employer's representatives) at all times dealt fairly and in good faith with plaintiff. If plaintiff resigned due to a poor performance rating, other criticism of work performance, or demotion, counsel should argue that such conduct does not create the type of intolerable conditions necessary to support a claim of constructive discharge [Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.07[1] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constructive Discharge Determined by Objective Standard

The factual and procedural background of Pennsylvania State Police v. Suders (2004) 542 U.S. 129, 124 S. Ct. 2342, 159 L. Ed. 2d 204 , is set forth in § 100.31[3][d]. The Court emphasized that the test for determining whether a constructive discharge has occurred is objective: an employee's resignation will be deemed a constructive discharge only if working conditions become so intolerable that a reasonable person in the employee's position would have felt compelled to resign (159 L. Ed. 2d 204, 216-217) .

The factual and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , is set forth in § 100.31[3][a]. The Court stated that, in order to support a claim of constructive discharge, the conditions giving rise to the resignation must be sufficiently extraordinary and egregious to overcome the normal motivation of a competent, diligent, and reasonable employee to earn a livelihood and serve his or her employer. The proper focus is on whether the resignation was coerced, not whether it was simply one rational option for the employee (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1246) . The adverse working conditions must be unusually aggravated or amount to a continuous pattern before the situation will be deemed intolerable (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . In some circumstances, a single intolerable incident, such as a crime of violence against an employee by an employer, or an employer's ultimatum that an employee commit a crime, may constitute a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247 n.3). Generally, though, single, trivial, or isolated acts of misconduct are insufficient to support a constructive discharge claim. Citing Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6 , the Court also stated that a poor performance rating or a demotion, even if accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not by itself trigger a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . The Court also held that the authorities are in agreement that a constructive discharge can only exist if, under an objective standard, a reasonable person faced with the allegedly intolerable employer actions or conditions of employment would have no reasonable alternative but to quit, citing Rochlis v. Walt Disney Co. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 201, 212, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 793 (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248) . The Court examined Turner's allegations of illegality at ABI in the light of this standard, and relied on the absence of any evidence that Turner was required, or even requested, to join in the illegal conduct, as well as the nature of the alleged violations (involving violations of state law regulating the economic and contractual relationships between beverage manufacturers and their customers and competition), to conclude that the conditions were not so obnoxious as to cause a reasonable employee to feel compelled to resign (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254-1255) .

[b] Single, Trivial, or Isolated Acts of Misconduct Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth in § 100.31[3][a]. In discussing the requirement that the resignation must have been coerced, rather than merely one rational option for the employee, the Court quoted with approval a federal case that noted that employees are not guaranteed a workplace free from stress, and from a variety of sources that used varying language such as "intolerable" or "aggravated" to describe the character of the working conditions required to establish constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . The Court did note that in some circumstances, such as a crime of violence by an employee against an employer, or an employer's ultimatum that an employee commit a crime, may constitute a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247 n.3). However, the Court set forth a general rule that single, trivial, or isolated acts of misconduct are insufficient to support a constructive discharge claim (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) .

[c] Poor Performance Rating or Demotion Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth in § 100.31[3][a]. The Court's discussion of the requirement that a resignation be coerced by intolerable working conditions cited with approval the holding of Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6 , that a poor performance rating or a demotion, even when accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not by itself trigger a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1247) . In holding that ABI was entitled to summary judgment, the Court relied on this principle to reject Turner's claim that the negative evaluation, allegedly part of a campaign of harassment, could establish a constructive discharge (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1255) .

In Soules v. Cadam, Inc. (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 6 , plaintiff brought an action against her former employer (various related corporations, referred to here as "defendant"), stating causes of action for age discrimination, sex discrimination, wrongful constructive termination in breach of employment contract, and related claims, based on her resignation because of a series of occurrences that culminated in a job reassignment. Plaintiff had been hired as an electronic data processing typist. At that time, she signed a document in which she acknowledged that no representations of employment conditions other than those set forth specifically, are valid; at no time did she enter into a written contract of employment. Ten years later, she was hired to work for a subsidiary company of that employer; she again signed a document acknowledging no additional representations of employment conditions. A year later, she was promoted to a managerial position. Two years later, plaintiff received another promotion, which entailed a change in her supervisor. Shortly afterward, plaintiff received a critical performance evaluation, although her overall performance was rated as good, and ultimately was informed of a demotion to a nonmanagerial position without a reduction in pay. Plaintiff became upset, took sick leave, and then resigned. Defendant invited plaintiff to return to her job; she rejected the offer and filed suit. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 404) . The court noted that an employee who is forced to resign due to actions and conditions so intolerable or aggravated at the time of his or her resignation that a reasonable person in the employee's position would have resigned, and whose employer had actual or constructive knowledge of the intolerable actions and conditions and of their impact on the employee and could have remedied the situation, but did not, is constructively discharged (2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 399) . Whether conditions were so intolerable as to justify a reasonable employee's decision to resign is normally a question of fact. However, the court stated, situations may exist in which the employee's decision to resign is unreasonable as a matter of law (2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 400) .

The court observed that the allegedly intolerable working conditions that forced plaintiff to resign consisted of an evaluation of plaintiff's performance to which she objected and her demotion to a nonmanagerial position (2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 400-401) . The court held that the fact that an employee received a poor performance rating will not support a finding of constructive discharge. It cited the absence of authority holding that the features of plaintiff's performance evaluation constituted working conditions so intolerable as to cause a reasonable employee to resign. Further, the court stated, demotion of job level, even when accompanied by a reduction in pay, does not in itself constitute constructive discharge. In another context, the court noted, the California Supreme Court has held that when the misconduct attributed to an employer is based on actions that are a normal part of the employment relationship, such as demotions, promotions, and criticism of work practices, an employee suffering emotional distress may not avoid the exclusive remedy provisions of the Labor Code by characterizing the employer's decisions as manifestly unfair or intended to cause emotional disturbance resulting in disability (citing Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743). Since demotion of an employee or criticism of his or her job performance--even if alleged to be unfair or outrageous--does not permit the employee to bypass the remedy afforded by the workers' compensation law and sue the employer for emotional distress and resultant physical disability, the same conduct does not create the intolerable working conditions necessary to support a claim of constructive discharge (2 Cal. App. 4th 390, 401) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Constructive Discharge Determined by Objective Standard

In Schnidrig v. Columbia Machine, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 80 F.3d 1406 , the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reviewed the termination of an older employee on a motion for summary judgment brought and won by the employer. Schnidrig, a longtime employee of Columbia Machine, was made general manager/vice-president when its president resigned. When a younger candidate was hired as President, he claimed he was constructively discharged (80 F.3d 1406, 1409) . The employer moved for summary judgment, which Schnidrig unsuccessfully opposed with evidence that his employer replaced him with an employee 15 years his junior, moved him to a smaller office, gave another vice-president a pay raise so that he was earning more than plaintiff, did not give him a new position, excluded himfrom a lunch meeting with bank officers, and told other executives that they were not to speak with him regarding financial affairs of the company (80 F.3d 1406, 1411) . The Ninth Circuit agreed with the lower court that these action, as a matter of law, were not so intolerable that Schrindrig was forced to resign (80 F.3d 1406, 1412) . Note that this case was decided under Oregon law.

King v. AC & R Advertising (9th Cir. 1995) 65 F.3d 764, 767 , involved constructive termination claims based on the facts that the employee's status was changed to that of an at will employee, that the employee's supervisory and client contact duties were reduced and that his salary was reduced to $175,000 (65 F.3d 764, 768) . The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals, following Turner, discussed above, found that as a matter of law these actions did not create working conditions egregious or intolerable enough to constitute constructive termination (65 F.3d 764, 769) .

[b] Poor Performance Rating or Demotion Insufficient

In Addy v. Bliss & Glennon (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 205 , the court of appeal upheld summary judgment for the employer on a constructive termination claim (44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 218-219) . The plaintiff, Addy, predicated her constructive termination claim on denial of training and demotion. However, her employer produced evidence that she received the same training as one of her peers, with the exception of a session she missed due to illness, and that her demotion was due to her failure to do her job successfully (44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 219) . Further, the court stated, relying on Turner, discussed above, that "[d]emotions, even with reductions in pay, are not by themselves, enough to constitute constructive discharge" (44 Cal. App. 4th 205, 219) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.37

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.37 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Not Constructively Discharged--Employer Did Not Have Actual Knowledge of Allegedly Intolerable Conditions That Caused Plaintiff to Resign

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT ESTABLISHED THAT HE/SHE WAS CONSTRUCTIVELY DISCHARGED BECAUSE HE/SHE HAS NOT PROVEN THAT THE EMPLOYER HAD ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE ALLEGEDLY INTOLERABLE WORKING CONDITIONS THAT CAUSED PLAINTIFF TO RESIGN.

A. Employer Must Have Actual Knowledge of Intolerable Working Conditions. To establish constructive discharge, plaintiff must prove that the resignation was coerced by the employer and, therefore, that the employer created or knowingly permitted the allegedly intolerable working conditions to continue (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1251, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] B. Employer Took Steps to Correct the Allegedly Intolerable Working Conditions. Where the employer takes steps to remedy the allegedly intolerable working conditions that caused plaintiff to resign, the employer is shielded from liability for constructive discharge (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1250, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted to oppose a plaintiff's constructive discharge claim. The opposition is based on the fact that the employer did not have actual knowledge of the allegedly intolerable working conditions. Optional Paragraph B is for use where the employer did have knowledge of the conditions, but took steps to correct the conditions.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff has not established a claim of constructive discharge because he/she has not proven (or alleged) that the employer had actual knowledge of the allegedly intolerable working conditions, for example in a motion for summary judgment or in a demurrer. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employer and the employer's representatives (including officers, directors, managing agents, or supervisors) did not have actual knowledge of the allegedly intolerable conditions. The argument should refer to the fact that the employer neither created the conditions (for example, the misconduct was on the part of a coworker only) andthe fact that the employer did not knowingly permit the conditions to continue. With respect to the latter, counsel should show that the employer was not aware of the conditions and had no reason to be aware of them (because, for example, plaintiff did not complain), or that, once the employer became aware of the conditions, it took immediate remedial steps.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.31.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.07[1] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Must Have Actual Knowledge of Intolerable Working Conditions

The facts and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth in § 100.31[3][a]. The Court held that since a constructive discharge is equivalent to a dismissal, the employee's resignation must be coerced by the employer, not simply caused by the voluntary action of the employee or by conditions not within the employer's control. Therefore, the Court disapproved the standard in Brady v. Elixir Industries (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1299, 242 Cal. Rptr. 324 , which held that constructive knowledge by the employer was sufficient. According to the Court, an employer's actual knowledge of the intolerable working conditions and subsequent failure to remedy them may constitute circumstantial evidence that the employer deliberately forced the employee's resignation. The Court explained that it did not require express intent by the employer to force the resignation, because that would require a showing by direct evidence which rarely is available. Rather, under the actual knowledge standard, it would be sufficient to establish that the employer's actions were deliberate or that the employer was aware of the situation but permitted it to continue (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1248-1250) .

In Gibson v. Aro Corp. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 882 , the court reviewed testimony of the employee regarding what, if anything, he told his employer about the effect of his demotion and decrease in pay on his working conditions and determined that since the employee had not communicated to his employer his displeasure with the change, he could not, as a matter of law establish constructive termination (32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 1639) . The court found that while, of course, the employer was aware of the change in conditions, it could not be presumed to be aware that the impact of those conditions was to create an intolerable workplace (32 Cal. App. 4th 1628, 1640) .

[b] Employer Took Steps to Correct the Allegedly Intolerable Working Conditions

The facts and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth in § 100.31[3][a]. The Court held that the employer must have actual knowledge of the intolerable working conditions. Since this actual knowledge standard requires the employee to notify someone in a position of authority with the employer of the conditions, employers who were previously unaware of the situation would have an opportunity to correct it, while employers will be prevented from shielding themselves from liability by deliberately ignoring such a situation (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1249-1250) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.38

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.38 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--Plaintiff Was Not Constructively Discharged--Passage of Time Before Resignation Indicates That Conditions Not Sufficiently Intolerable to Cause Reasonable Person to Resign

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT ESTABLISHED THAT HE/SHE WAS CONSTRUCTIVELY DISCHARGED BECAUSE THE PASSAGE OF TIME BEFORE HIS/HER RESIGNATION INDICATES THAT THE CONDITIONS WERE NOT SO INTOLERABLE THAT A REASONABLE PERSON WOULD HAVE RESIGNED.

Passage of Time Before Resignation Factor in Determining Whether Conditions Were Intolerable. Although the passage of time after the onset of allegedly intolerable working conditions is not dispositive of whether or not a constructive discharge existed, it may be a relevant consideration regarding the intolerability of the situation (Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; Mullins v. Rockwell International Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 740, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 939 P.2d 1246 ; Mullins v. Rockwell International Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 740, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 939 P.2d 1246).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted to oppose a plaintiff's constructive discharge claim if plaintiff's resignation was well after the time the allegedly intolerable conditions began. The opposition is based on the fact that the length of time between the resignation and the onset of the allegedly intolerable working conditions indicates that the conditions were not so intolerable that a reasonable person would have resigned because of them.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff has not established a claim of constructive discharge because the passage of time between the onset of the conditions and the resignation indicate that the conditions were not so intolerable, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that plaintiff remained on the job for a significant period of time after the onset of the allegedly intolerable conditions. If appropriate, other evidence that continuing to work during the interim was not problematic for plaintiff could also be discussed, such as evidence that plaintiff's job performance did not decline between the onset of the conditions and the resignation. Counsel should argue that the conditions could not, therefore, have been so intolerable as to force a reasonable person to resign.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.31.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.07[1] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Passage of Time Before Resignation Factor in Determining Whether Conditions Were Intolerable

The facts and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are set forth in § 100.31[3][a]. The Court rejected the rule used by the court of appeal in Panopulos v. Westinghouse Electric Corp. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 660, 669-670, 264 Cal. Rptr. 810 , under which a delay longer than the applicable statute of limitations barred the action, finding the rule unduly arbitrary. Instead, the Court held that the length of time may be one relevant factor in determining the intolerability of employment conditions from the standpoint of a reasonable person, but that the length of the delay alone is not dispositive (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1254) . In examining the facts of the case before it, though, the Court noted that the passage of time (at least four years) between the allegedly illegal acts and plaintiff's resignation "strongly suggests" that the working conditions were not intolerable (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1255) .

The facts and procedural background of Mullins v. Rockwell International Corp. (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 731, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 636, 939 P.2d 1246 , are set forth in § 100.31[3][g]. Upon holding that in a constructive discharge action the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the date of the actual termination, rather than the date the employee is subjected to the allegedly intolerable conditions, the Court dismissed the employer's argument that such a rule would allow employees to delay bringing a lawsuit indefinitely. However, the Court stated that the longer the employee delays resigning, the more difficult it may be for the employee to prove that the allegedly intolerable working conditions actually were intolerable on an objective basis (15 Cal. 4th 731, 740) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.39

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.39 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Exists Absent Unequivocal Termination of Plaintiff's Employment--No Express or Implied Agreement Limited Defendant's Right to Demote Plaintiff "At Will"

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT HAD THE RIGHT TO DEMOTE PLAINTIFF AT WILL BECAUSE NO EXPRESS OR IMPLIED AGREEMENT TO DEMOTE ONLY FOR "GOOD CAUSE" EXISTED.

Presumption That Employee May Be Demoted At Will. There exists a strong common law presumption that an employee may be demoted at will, in the absence of some other agreement, either express or implied, between the parties (Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 464-465, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff-employee's contention that he or she could not be demoted at will, if there is no allegation or proof that there is an agreement, either express or implied, that limits the defendant's right to demote plaintiff at will [see Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 464-465, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834] . In an appropriate case, counsel may also combine these points and authorities with points and authorities from §§ 100.22, 100.23 contending that no implied contract exists. Moreover, because the at-will presumption may be easily overcome by a plaintiff, in an appropriate case these points and authorities should be combined with points and authorities from § 100.29 to contend that there was good cause for the adverse action. Counsel, however, will need to modify the points and authorities from §§ 100.22, 100.23, 100.29 to reflect that the subject of the alleged agreement is demotion rather than termination.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities set out in § 100.34.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an express or implied agreement limited defendant's right to demote plaintiff at will, for example in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should show that defendant had the right to demote plaintiff at will, and that there was no agreement, written or otherwise, altering this right.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.07[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption That Employee May Be Demoted At Will

The facts and procedural background of Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427, 904 P.2d 834 , are discussed in § 100.34[3][a]. The Supreme Court explained that there is a strong common law presumption that an employee may be demoted at will. However, under the principles enunciated in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (discussed in § 100.20[3][a]), the presumption that an employee may be demoted at will may be rebutted by evidence of a contractual agreement, express or implied, to limit the employer's power to demote (11 Cal. 4th 454, 464-465) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.40

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.40 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Exists--Change in Terms of Employment Does Not Constitute Breach of Employment At Will Contract, But Rather Termination and Offer of New Agreement

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT'S REDUCTION OF PLAINTIFF'S COMPENSATION TERMINATED THE PARTIES' FIRST AT-WILL EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT AND CONSTITUTED AN OFFER OF NEW EMPLOYMENT AT A NEW RATE.

Employment At Will Includes the Right to Impose Prospective Changes in Terms as a Condition of Continued Employment. As a matter of law, an at-will employee who continues to work after the employer has given notice of changed terms or conditions of employment has accepted the changed terms and conditions. Under these conditions, the employer's modification has expressly and impliedly terminated the old contract and stated an offer of a new contract. The employee's continuing to work under the modified terms and conditions, even if grudging and protest-filled, constitutes the employee's acceptance of the new offer (DiGiacinto v. Ameriko-Omserv Corp. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 637-638, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 300).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff-employee's contention that the employer has breached an at-will employment agreement by unilaterally modifying the terms and conditions of employment. In an appropriate case, counsel may combine this form with § 100.39, contending that under an at-will employment agreement, an employee may also be demoted at will.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should establish that the original employment agreement was at-will, permitting either party to terminate the employment at any time, with or without cause. The argument should also establish that the employer gave the employee notice of the modification of the terms and conditions of employment and that the employee continued to work for the employer under the terms of the modification.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for alleging affirmative defenses in wrongful discharge cases, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60 (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For discussion of the requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employment At Will Includes the Right to Impose Prospective Changes in Terms as a Condition of Continued Employment

In DiGiacinto v. Ameriko-Omserv Corp. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 300 , plaintiff began his employment with Ameriko Inc. in 1990. In 1993, Ameriko and Omserv Corporation formed a joint venture. Later that year, defendant transferred plaintiff to a new project; and in August 1994, plaintiff signed a letter agreement setting forth the terms and conditions of his employment. The agreement stated, among other things, that plaintiff would receive wages at the rate of $23.97 per hour for the position of structural/mechanical supervisor and that the employment "may be voluntarily terminated at any time by either party, with or without cause, with or without notice ..." (59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 632) .

In December 1994, defendant instituted a reorganization and on January 30, 1995, notified plaintiff orally and in writing that plaintiff would have new and reduced responsibilities and a new rate of compensation, $18.00 per hour. Although plaintiff asked that his wages not be reduced and refused to sign the January 30th letter, he continued in defendant's employ at the new rate of pay. In January 1996, plaintiff filed an action for breachof contract in municipal court, seeking as damages the $5.97 per hour pay differential; plaintiff contended that by continuing to work, he was mitigating his damages (59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 632-633) .

The trial court held for plaintiff on the ground that although defendant could have terminated plaintiff because of his at-will status, it could not unilaterally reduce his compensation. The appellate department of the superior court reversed the trial court, and finding the case to be one of first impression, held that the power to terminate at will includes the lesser power to prospectively modify the terms of the employment relationship. Adopting the majority view, the superior court stated that a prospective change in the rate of compensation "effectively constitutes a negation of the old contract and becomes an offer of new employment at the new rate" (59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 633) .

The court of appeal affirmed. It found at-will employment having no specified term to be terminable at will, regardless of the duration (59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 634) . It noted, also, that the California Supreme Court has held that the presumption of at-will employment similarly applies to "lesser quantums [sic] of discipline" [see Scott v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 454, 464-465] . The court added that in cases involving employee benefits, a rule has developed that an offer of such benefits constitutes an offer of a unilateral contract which is accepted if the employee continues in employment after the offer (59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 634-635) .

Surveying cases from other jurisdictions, the court adopted the majority view that as a matter of law, an at-will employee who continues in the employment after receiving notice of prospectively changed terms or conditions has accepted the changed terms and conditions. The court explained its rationale: the old contract has been expressly or impliedly terminated by the employer's modification, and the modification constitutes both the termination of the old contract and the offer of a new contract (59 Cal. App. 4th 629, 637) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.41

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.41 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Violated Public Policy Established by Constitutional Provision, Statute, or Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION VIOLATED THE PUBLIC POLICY ESTABLISHED BY_____ [specify constitutional provision, statute, or statutorily authorized administrative regulation].

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. Although an at-will employee may be terminated for no reason, or for an arbitrary or irrational reason, there can be no right to terminate for an unlawful reason, or for a reason that contravenes fundamental public policy as expressed in a statutory or constitutional provision (Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1094-1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 ; see Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1252, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 ; Casella v. Southwest Dealer Servs., Inc. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138-1143, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 445), or in administrative regulations authorized by statute (Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 71-72, 80-90, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046).

B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. To support a tortious discharge claim, a public policy must (1) be supported by either constitutional or statutory provisions, (2) inure to the benefit of the public rather than serving merely the interests of the individual, (3) have been articulated at the time of the discharge, and (4) be fundamental and substantial. In addition, the public policy must be one framed to include, rather than exempt, the employer against whom it is sought to be applied (Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 890-894, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 ; see Silo v. CHW Med. Found. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1108-1110, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 45 P.3d 1162 ; Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 230-238, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770). For this purpose, a public policy embodied in statutorily authorized administrative regulations is considered to be supported by the statutory provisions (Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 71-72, 80-90, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that sufficient facts are alleged to show that, in terminating plaintiff's employment, the employer violated public policy because the termination violated the public policy established by a statutory, administrative, or constitutional provision. Use this form when none of the more specific grounds set forth in § 100.42 et seq. exists, as each of those is tailored to a situation where direct authority exists for the defendant's particular action being a public-policy tort or where other more specific arguments may apply (see § 100.41[2][c]). This form is is suitable when it is necessary to argue that the fact situation meets the general test for an actionable public-policy violation.

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's discharge violated a statute or constitutional provision, and therefore can be the basis of a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the public policy alleged to have been violated, specifying the constitutional, statutory, or administrative provision on which it is based, and, unless there is already authority that a violation of the particular policy supports a wrongful discharge claim, the reasons thepolicy inures to the public and is substantial and fundamental. In addition counsel should specify evidence of the plaintiff's conduct which lead to the discharge, and evidence of the employer's misconduct, explaining how that misconduct contravenes the public policy. Facts tending to show that the discharge was due to plaintiff's protected conduct, rather than for a legitimate reason (such as poor performance or misconduct), should also be discussed, such as evidence of threats or statements made by the employer, or that plaintiff was a long-term employee, had received favorable performance evaluations, and had not previously been disciplined. For an example of arguments regarding the lack of good cause for discharge, see § 100.27.

[c] Related Memoranda

Section 100.42 et seq. are tailored to specific situations for which it has been established that discharge may be a common law public-policy tort or where more particular arguments for such a holding may apply. See § 100.42 (where the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.43 (where the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.44 (where the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.45 (where the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.46 (where the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act), § 100.47 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), § 100.49 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (where the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the contentions made in this form. In an appropriate case, this form may be adapted for use in opposing the contentions made in the memorandum set out in § 100.22.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful termination and demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy

In Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , plaintiff brought an action against his former employer and various individuals, stating causes of action that included tortious discharge in violation of public policy. A coworker of plaintiff had complained to plaintiff, who was one of her supervising managers, and others, about sexual harassment by another manager. Plaintiff supported her claim, but the harassment continued, and the complaining employee was eventually fired. In response to an ensuing investigation by the Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH), plaintiff spoke to a DFEH investigator, and expressed his fears that, based on his employer's conduct thus far, he would be retaliated against if he cooperated with the investigation. The day before plaintiff's formal DFEH interview, the employer's house counsel reminded him that he was the only management employee supporting his coworker's claims of harassment. In plaintiff's view, the attorney was displeased with his testimony and intended to induce him to change it. The attorney also told him about another employee against whom claims of sexual harassment were confirmed, but whom the company retained because he was a loyal employee. At this meeting, plaintiff also discovered a disfavorable alteration in a previous performance evaluation. These events confirmed his fears that the employer was threatening to retaliate against him unless he withheld truthful testimony from the DFEH. He proceeded to take part in the formal interview, and subsequently experienced negative treatment from his employer, including a demotion and deprivation of information required to perform his job. He ultimately resigned "as a result of the pressure" from defendants. After trial, the jury returned a special verdict in plaintiff's favor, finding, inter alia, that he had been constructively discharged, and that he was discharged in retaliation for refusing to testify untruthfully or to withhold his testimony to the DFEH; judgment was entered for plaintiff accordingly. The court of appeal reversed with respect to the individual defendants, but affirmed in all other respects. Defendant petitioned the Supreme Court for review.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding, inter alia, that plaintiff stated a cause of action for tortious wrongful discharge based on defendant's violation of public policy (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1097) . The Court discussed the background of the public policy exception to the at-will employment rule, noting the establishment of that principle in Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 . An at-will employee possesses a tort action when he or she is discharged for performing an act that public policy would encourage, or discharged for refusing to do something that public policy would condemn. Pursuant to Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669-670, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (discussed in § 100.20[3][a]), the policy in question must involve a matter that affects society at large, rather than a purely personal or proprietary interest of the plaintiff or employer; in addition, the policy must be fundamental, substantial, and well-established at the time of discharge (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1090). In dictum, the Court clarified that the public policy in support of this cause of action must derive from either constitutional orstatutory provisions (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095) .

In applying those principles to this case, the Court noted that the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) prohibits a person from willfully impeding or interfering with FEHA employees in the performance of their duties and subjects a violator of this provision to criminal penalties [see Gov. Code § 12975]. Thus, the Court concluded, any attempt to induce or coerce an employee to lie to a DFEH investigator plainly contravenes the public policy of California. Accordingly, the Court held that plaintiff established a Tameny claim based on the theory of retaliation for refusal to withhold information or to provide false information to the DFEH (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1097) .

The facts and procedural background of Turner v. Anheuser-Busch, Inc. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1238, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 223, 876 P.2d 1022 , are discussed in § 100.31[3][a]. In affirming summary judgment in favor of the defendant employer, the Court held that plaintiff's failure to identify a statutory or constitutional policy that would be thwarted by his alleged discharge doomed his cause of action. The Court relied on Gantt for the requirement that the policy be established by statute or constitutional provision, without mentioning that the requirement was not essential to the holding of that case (7 Cal. 4th 1238, 1256) .

In Casella v. Southwest Dealer Servs., Inc. (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 445 , the plaintiff claimed that his employment was wrongfully terminated in violation of public policy because he had reported his employer's participation in some of its car dealership clients' fraudulent business practices. The fraudulent conduct involved was "payment packing," in which car dealership sales personnel quoted inflated monthly payment amounts for cars to customers in order to hide the true cost of aftermarket products, thereby facilitating the sale of such products.

The defendants contended that the plaintiff's claim was not based on a fundamental public policy as expressed in a constitutional or statutory provision. Specifically, the defendants pointed out that it was not until after the trial in this case that the Car Buyer's Bill of Rights was enacted to address the specific payment packing activity involved in this case and impose new disclosure requirements on car dealers (see Stats. 2005, ch. 128). The court of appeal rejected this argument. Payment packing practices were indeed specifically addressed in legislation enacted after the trial in this case. However, aside from this legislation, payment packing violated long-established policies prohibiting theft by misrepresentation to customers as proscribed by Penal Code § 487. Thus, the viability of the plaintiff's claim did not depend on the existence of another statute specifically proscribing car dealers from secretly inflating monthly payment quotes to customers (157 Cal. App. 4th 1127, 1138-1143) .

In Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 , the Supreme Court squarely held that public policy supporting a wrongful discharge claim must be "tethered to fundamental policies that are delineated in constitutional or statutory provisions." The court further held that public policy supporting a wrongful discharge claim may be embodied in statutorily authorized administrative regulations (19 Cal. 4th 66, 71-72) . In this case, the plaintiff brought a wrongful termination action against his former employer, alleging that he had been discharged from his job as an inspector of airplane components in retaliation for complaining to the employer that its inspection practices violated regulations issued by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA). The trial court, finding no fundamental public policy in the regulations, granted the employer's motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal reversed, and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Supreme Court noted that in the Federal Aviation Act (49 U.S.C. § 40101 et seq.), Congress declared the public interest in commercial air safety and then delegated regulatory power to the FAA, which established an intricate regulatory scheme to ensure that aircraft design meets safety standards and that aircraft manufacture conforms to the design. Thus, the regulations were clearly "tethered" to their statutory basis and promoted a most important and fundamental public policy goal: air safety. Since the plaintiff's job was to perform inspections of aircraft components to further that fundamental public policy, that policy could serve as the basis for the plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim (19 Cal. 4th 66, 80-90) . In so holding, the Supreme Court expressly declined to address whether any other potential sources of public policy may serve as the basis of such an action (19 Cal. 4th 66, 80 n.6).

[b] Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination

The facts and procedural background of Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 , are discussed in § 100.42[3][c]. The Court again reviewed its previous holdings regarding the tort of wrongful termination in violation of public policy and concluded that those holdings established a four-fold test for a policy that would protect a worker from that at-will employment rule: the policy must (1) be supported by either constitutional or statutory provisions, (2) inure to the benefit of the public rather than serving merely the interests of the individual, (3) have been articulated at the time of the discharge, and (4) be fundamental and substantial (16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890) . The Court noted that its precedents had not recognized a distinction between substantial and fundamental in this context, so that it was treating them as one requirement (16 Cal. 4th 880, 890 n.4).

The Court also discussed its determination in Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 , that the statutory exemption of employers with fewer than five employees from the FEHA's age-discrimination ban meant that there was no fundamental public policy against age discrimination in that circumstance (16 Cal. 4th 880, 890-894) . Presumably, therefore, in addition to the four factors listed by the Court when it articulated its test, the public policy must be one framed to include, rather than exempt, the employer against whom it is sought to be applied.

The facts and procedural background of Silo v. CHW Med. Found. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1097, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 698, 45 P.3d 1162 are set forth in § 100.57[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that a wrongful discharge claim cannot be based on a fundamental public policy created by a statute that was enacted after the plaintiff's discharge. In such a case, the public policy obviously would not have been manifest at the time of the alleged violation; thus, one of the requirements for maintaining a tort claim for violation of public policy would fail (27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1110) .

In Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 , the plaintiff filed a wrongful discharge action against his former employer, a nonprofit religious corporation. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff had been discharged for filing race- and sex-discrimination charges with state and federal agencies. The plaintiff claimed that the discharge violated public policy set forth in the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), the California Constitution (see Cal. Const., art. I, § 8), and Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 (see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.). The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, holding that the FEHA's exemption for religious employers (as in effect at the relevant time) shielded the defendant from liability (96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 223-225) .

The court of appeal reversed, holding that if a statutory exemption or limitation prevents a particular statute from serving as the basis for a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the plaintiff may rely on alternative sources of fundamental public policy in support of the claim. At the time of the relevant events in this case, for example, an express exemption for religious employers prevented the FEHA from serving as a public-policy basis for the plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim (see Gov. Code § 12926(d) [FEHA's formerly unqualified general exemption for religious employers]; now see Gov. Code § 12926.2(c) [effective January, 2000, FEHA exemption for religious employers generally does not apply to persons employed to perform nonreligious duties at health-care facilities that are not restricted to adherents of religion that established employer]). The court of appeal held, however, that the plaintiff could pursue a wrongful discharge claim on the basis of a violation of public policy derived from the California Constitution and from Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964 (96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 230-238) .

In Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 , discussed under § 100.41[3][a], the Supreme Court held that public policy supporting a wrongful discharge claim may be embodied in statutorily authorized administrative regulations (19 Cal. 4th 66, 71-72) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy

In Gould v. Maryland Sound Industries, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718 , plaintiff alleged, among other things, that his employer terminated him to avoid paying him accrued commissions and vacation pay, and that the discharge contravened the fundamental public policy regarding the prompt payment of wages due employee. The trial court sustained the defendant employer's demurrer, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal found that a number of statutory provisions supported plaintiff's contention that the prompt payment of wages due an employee is a fundamental public policy in California, including Lab. Code §§ 201, 202, and 216. The court concluded that if plaintiff was discharged in order to avoid payment of commissions and vacation pay, such discharge violated a fundamental public policy (31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1147-1148) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.42

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.42 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Violated Statute That Limits Right to Discharge Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION VIOLATED _____ [specify statutory provision, e.g., LABOR CODE SECTION 232], WHICH PRECLUDES TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT IN RETALIATION FOR CONDUCT PROTECTED UNDER THE STATUTE.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41, Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41, Paragraph B.]

C. Statutory Provision Precluding Discharge for Conduct Within Statute Can Be Basis of Common Law Wrongful-Discharge Action. As long as statutory remedial provisions are not exclusive, a statute that prohibits termination of employment based on specified conduct by the employee can articulate a public policy which serves as the basis for the common law tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 ; Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1702-1706, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65).

[Optional] D. Garnishment of Wages. No employer may discharge any employee by reason of the fact that garnishment of his or her wages has been threatened or that his or her wages have been subjected to garnishment for the payment of one judgment. A provision of a contract of employment that provides an employee with less protection than is provided by these provisions is against public policy and void (Lab. Code § 2929).

[Optional] E. Right to Time Off for Jury Duty. No employer may discharge or in any manner discriminate against an employee for taking time off to serve as required by law on an inquest jury or trial jury, if such employee, prior to taking such time off, gives reasonable notice to the employer that he or she is required to serve (Lab. Code § 230(a)).

[Optional] F. Right to Time Off to Appear as Witness in Compliance With Subpoena or Other Court Order. No employer may discharge or in any manner discriminate or retaliate against an employee for taking time off to appear in court to comply with a subpoena or other court order as a witness in any judicial proceeding (Lab. Code § 230(b)).

[Optional] G. Right to Time Off to Deal With Effects of Domestic Violence. No employer may discharge, discriminate against, or retaliate against an employee who is a victim of domestic violence or of sexual assault for taking time off from work to obtain or attempt to obtain judicial relief (such as a temporary restraining order, restraining order, or other injunctive relief) to help ensure the health, safety, or welfare of the victim or his or her child (Lab. Code § 230(c)). [If appropriate add: Further, no employer with 25 or more employees may discharge, discriminate against, or retaliate against an employee who is a victim of domestic violence or of sexual assault for taking time off from work to seek medical attention for injuries caused by domestic violence or sexual assault; to obtain services from a domestic violence shelter, program, or rape crisis center as a result of domestic violence or sexual assault; to obtain psychological counseling related to an experience of domestic violence or sexual assault; or to participate in safety planning and take other actions to increase safety from future domestic violence or sexual assault, including temporary or permanent relocation (Lab. Code § 230.1(a))]. The right to time off for these purposes may be exercised if the employee gives the employer reasonable advance notice of the intention to take time off, unless advance notice is not feasible, in which case the employee must, within a reasonable time after the absence, provide the employer with a certification (such as a police report or court or medical records) documenting that the employee was a victim of domestic violence or sexual assault or has appeared in court (Lab. Code §§ 230(d), 230.1(b)).

[Optional] H. Right to Time Off to Attend Criminal Proceedings. An employer may not discharge an employee for taking time off from work to attend judicial proceedings related to a crime perpetrated against the employee, a member of employee's immediate family, the employee's domestic partner (see Fam. Code § 297 et seq.), or the domestic partner's child, if the crime is a serious or violent felony(see Penal Code §§ 667.5(c), 1193.7(c)) or a violation of a felony provision of law proscribing theft or embezzlement (Lab. Code § 230.2(a), (b), (f), (g)). The right to time off for this purpose may be exercised if the employee gives the employer a copy of the notice of the scheduled proceeding that is provided to the crime victim by the agency responsible for providing notice, unless advance notice is not feasible or an unscheduled absence occurs, in which case the employee must, within a reasonable time after the absence, provide the employer with documentation evidencing the judicial proceeding from (1) the court or government agency setting the hearing, (2) the district attorney or prosecuting attorney's office, (3) or the victim/witness office that is advocating on behalf of the victim (Lab. Code § 230.2(c)).

[Optional] I. Right to Disclose Amount of Wages. No employer may discharge, formally discipline, or otherwise discriminate against an employee who discloses the amount of his or her wages (Lab. Code § 232).

[Optional] J. Prohibition Against Sexual Orientation Discrimination. An employer may not discharge or discriminate against an employee based on the employee's actual or perceived sexual orientation (Gov. Code § 12940(a), (d), (j)(1); see Gov. Code § 12926(m); see also Lab. Code §§ 1101, 1102). Termination of employment in violation of this prohibition violates a fundamental public policy and creates a common law tort claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1702-1704, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65).

[Optional] K. Prohibition Against Age Discrimination. With exceptions not applicable here, an employer may not discharge an individual over the age of 40 on the ground of age (Gov. Code §§ 12926(b), 12940(a)). Termination of employment in violation of this prohibition violates a fundamental public policy and creates a common law tort claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 897, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157).

[Optional] L. Prohibition Against Retaliation for Taking Family Care and Medical Leave. An employer may not discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because of the employee's exercise of the right to family care and medical leave under the Dudley v. Department of Transportation (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 255, 262 ; see Gov. Code § 12945.2(l)(1)).

[Optional] M. Right to Disclose Working Conditions. No employer may discharge, formally discipline, or otherwise discriminate against an employee who discloses information about the employer's working conditions (Lab. Code § 232.5(c)).

[Optional] N. Right to Report and Refuse to Participate in Illegal Activity. An employer may not retaliate against an employee for refusing to participate in any activity that would result in a violation of state or federal law, or for providing information to a government or law enforcement agency (including the employer) if the employee reasonably believes the information discloses a violation of state or federal law (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b), (c), (e); Patten v. Grant Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1385-1390, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113). This provision prohibits retaliation not only for conduct of the employee in current employment, but also for conduct in former employment (Lab. Code § 1102.5(d)).

[Optional] O. Prohibition Against Retaliation for Opposing Practices Forbidden by Fair Employment and Housing Act. An employer may not discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because of the employee's opposition to any practice forbidden by the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), or because the employee has filed a complaint, testified, or assisted in any proceeding under FEHA (Gov. Code § 12940(h); Yanowitz v. L'Oreal USA, Inc. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1035, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 436, 116 P.3d 1123).

[Optional] P. Prohibition of Retaliation Against Physician for Advocating for Appropriate Health Care. An employer of a physician or surgeon may not terminate, retaliate against, or otherwise penalize the physician or surgeon for advocating for medically appropriate health care consistent with the degree of learning and skill ordinarily possessed by reputable physicians practicing according to the applicable legal standard of care (Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c); Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 32, 45-51, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627).

[Optional] Q. Prohibition Against Retaliation Based on Race. 42 U.S.C. § 1981 prohibits retaliation on the basis of race, including retaliation against a person for complaining about a violation of another person's rights under the statute (CBOCS W., Inc. v. Humphries (2008) 553 U.S. 442, 128 S. Ct. 1951, 1954-1955, 1961, 170 L. Ed. 2d 864, 869, 877) .

[Optional] R. Prohibition Against Retaliation for Filing Complaint Under Age Discrimination in Employment Act. The federal-sector provision of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, 29 U.S.C. § 633a(a), which prohibits "discrimination based on age" in federal employment, includes a prohibition of retaliation based on the filing of an age discrimination complaint (Gomez-Perez v. Potter (2008) 553 U.S. 474, 128 S. Ct. 1931, 170 L. Ed. 2d 887, 894-896, 902) .

[Optional] S. Prohibition Against Retaliation for Opposing Practice That Violates Title VII of Civil Rights Act. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which generally prohibits employment discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex, or national origin (42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)), also prohibits retaliation against an employee or applicant because he or she has opposed any violation of Title VII, or because he or she has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing under Title VII (42 U.S.C. § 2000e-3(a)). This protection extends to an employee who opposes unlawful discrimination by speaking out about it in answering questions during the employer's internal investigation, even if that employee did not report the discrimination on his or her own initiative (Crawford v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County (2009) ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 846, 172 L. Ed. 2d 650, 656-658) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a contention that sufficient facts are alleged or proved to show that, in terminating plaintiff's employment, the employer violated public policy because the termination violated a statute that precluded discharge based on conduct specified in the statute. Use Optional Paragraph B if none of the options (Paragraphs G et seq.) with direct authority applicable to plaintiff's factual situation applies. Optional Paragraphs D et seq. set forth contentions concerning specific statutes that preclude discharge of employees. For further discussion of these and additional statutes that expressly prohibit discharge and the effects of those statutes, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, §§ 60.03, 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

This form may be combined with forms pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's discharge violated a statute that expressly prohibited discharge, and therefore can be the basis of a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy.This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should review the statute that the discharge is alleged to have violated, and should argue that the statutory remedial provisions are not plaintiff's exclusive remedy. Further, counsel should specify plaintiff's conduct that led to the dismissal, explaining how such conduct is protected by the statute. Evidence indicating that discharge was the proximate result of the protected conduct, and not for a legitimate reason (such as poor performance or misconduct), should also be discussed, such as evidence of statements or threats made by the employer, or evidence that plaintiff was a long-term employee, had received favorable performance evaluations, and had not previously been disciplined. For an example of arguments regarding lack of good cause for discharge, see § 100.27.

[c] Related Memoranda

Section 100.41 is a general memorandum for a situation in which there is no statute that limits the employer's right to discharge the plaintiff, and in which none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See § 100.43 (when the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.44 (when the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.45 (when the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.46 (when the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act, § 100.47 (when the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), § 100.49 (when the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (when the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memoranda set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form. In an appropriate case, this form may be adapted and submitted in opposition to the memorandum set out in § 100.22.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form for notice of summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04[2][c] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Provision Precluding Discharge for Conduct Within Statute Can Be Basis of Common Law Wrongful-Discharge Action

The facts and procedural background of Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 , are discussed under § 100.42[3][c]. In Stevenson, the Court ruled that the Fair Employment and Housing Act, in banning discharge from employment because of age discrimination, articulates a public policy sufficient to permit the bringing of an age-discrimination claim as a common law tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, irrespective of the remedies and procedures created by the FEHA itself (16 Cal. 4th 880, 897) . The core of the Court's analysis was its review of whether the Legislature intended the statutory remedies to be exclusive (16 Cal. 4th 880, 898-905) .

The facts and procedural background of Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 , are discussed under § 100.42[3][b]. In Leibert, the court held that Lab. Code §§ 1101 and 1102 and former Lab. Code § 1102.1 [now see Gov. Code § 12940(a), (d), (j)(1)] state a fundamental public policy against employment discrimination based on sexual orientation, sufficient to support a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy (32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1703-1704) .

[b] Prohibition Against Sexual Orientation Discrimination

In Leibert v. Transworld Systems, Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 65 , following plaintiff's employer's discovery that plaintiff was a homosexual, coworkers and managers harassed plaintiff, including calling him a "fag" and portraying him in an effeminate manner. The employer's vice president instructed another employee to keep a close watch on plaintiff, and said that any mistake by plaintiff would get plaintiff fired because they did not need a homosexual working in the office. Plaintiff subsequently was terminated. He brought an action against the employer alleging that he had been harassed and discharged him on the basis of his sexual orientation in violation of Lab. Code §§ 1101 and 1102 and former Lab. Code § 1102.1 [now see Gov. Code § 12940(a), (d), (j)(1)]. Plaintiff also alleged that he had been wrongfully discharged in violation of the public policy against sexual orientation discrimination as embodied in those statutes. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the statutory violations on the ground that plaintiff failed to exhaust the administrative remedies provided for violations of those statutes [see Lab. Code § 98.7]. The trial court then granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of the employer on the public policy claim on the ground that the direct statutory causes of action underlying the public policy claim had been removed from the case by demurrer.

The court of appeal reversed with respect to the public policy claim. The court stated that Lab. Code §§ 1101 and 1102 and former Lab. Code § 1102.1 [now see Gov. Code § 12940(a), (d), (j)(1)] state a fundamental public policy against employment discrimination and harassment based on sexual orientation sufficient to support a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy (32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1702-1706) . The court found that this cause of action remained viable notwithstanding the dismissal of plaintiff's Labor Code causes of action due to failure to exhaust administrative remedies. The administrative remedies provided for a violation of those statutes, as contained in Lab. Code § 98.7, are not exclusive, and exhaustion of them is generally not required before instituting a civil suit alleging certain nonstatutory claims. The court explained that the rationale of a public-policy wrongful discharge claim would be undermined if a public-policy violation had to remain unaddressed simply because a plaintiff failed to exhaust nonexclusive administrative remedies (32 Cal. App. 4th 1693, 1704-1706) .

[c] Prohibition Against Age Discrimination

In Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 , plaintiff alleged she was terminated from her job at age 60 because of her age. She sued her former employer, alleging, among other causes of action, a tort claim for wrongful discharge in violation of a public policy against age discrimination. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend because plaintiff had not exhausted her statutory remedies under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). The court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that there is a common law cause of action to enforce the right against age discrimination created by FEHA and that under such a cause of action the statutory exhaustion-of-remedies requirement is inapplicable.

The Court first reviewed the development in California of the cause of action for tortious discharge in violation of public policy, observing that its prior decisions had created four requirements which a policy must satisfy to support such a cause of action: (1) it must be supported by either constitutional or statutory provisions; (2) it must inure to the benefit of the public rather than serving merely the interests of the individual; (3) it must have been articulated at the time of the discharge; and (4) it must be fundamental and substantial (16 Cal. 4th 880, 887-890) . The Court discussed its holdings in Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 , that FEHA's remedies are not exclusive, that its administrative remedies need not be exhausted before the assertion of a common law claim, and that sexual harassment in the workplace violates fundamental public policy, founded in the state constitutional ban on sex discrimination. It also discussed its determination in Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 , that the statutory exemption of employers with fewer than five employees from FEHA's age-discrimination ban meant that there was no fundamental public policy against age discrimination in that circumstance (16 Cal. 4th 880, 890-894) . Note, therefore, that in addition to the four factors listed by the Court when it articulated its test, the public policy must be one framed to include, rather than exempt, the employer against whom it is sought to be applied.

The Court then turned to the question of whether a wrongful discharge claim for age discrimination could be brought against a larger employer, one subject to FEHA. The Court found the first three requirements of the four it had articulated clearly met (16 Cal. 4th 880, 895) and then considered whether the public policy against age discrimination was substantial and fundamental (It had previously noted that there was no distinction between substantial and fundamental in this context (16 Cal. 4th 880, 890 n. 4)). Noting that age discrimination is ethically comparable to race and sex discrimination and that it is prohibited in the same statute with them, that prohibitions on age discrimination have been California law for more than 35 years and take multiple forms, and that Congress and 45 other states have enacted similar bans, the Court concluded that FEHA's policy against age discrimination in employment is sufficiently substantial and fundamental to support a tort claim for wrongful discharge (16 Cal. 4th 880, 895-897) .

The Court went on to reject the contention that its Rojo holding on FEHA's non-exclusivity was distinguishable because the sex discrimination claim considered in Rojo was founded in policy set forth in the Constitution (16 Cal. 4th 880, 898-903) . It similarly found unpersuasive defendant's attempt to distinguish the Rojo holding on the inapplicability of FEHA's exhaustion-of-remedies requirements to public-policy based antidiscrimination claims (16 Cal. 4th 880, 903-905) . The Court concluded its analysis by considering a suggestion, argued in a dissenting opinion, that the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy be recognized only in situations where there is no statutory remedy.

The Court found this position to fly in the face of legislative intent to preserve common law remedies, as already explicated in Rojo (16 Cal. 4th 880, 905-909) .

There appears to be a certain circularity in the Court's reasoning. The core of its argument is that the Legislature intended FEHA to expand, not supplant, existing antidiscrimination remedies (16 Cal. 4th 880, 891, 900-901) , but wrongful discharge via age discrimination was not a cause of action that existed before FEHA grounded it in statutorily-expressed public policy. Under the Court's method of analysis, any future legislation, therefore, protecting another class against discharge and creating statutory remedies for its violation will implicitly create common law remedies as well, as long as (a) it meets the fourfold test for the type of public policy that will be so enforced, and (b) the legislation declares itself nonexclusive. Where the legislation is silent on the question of preemption, there will still be room for argument either way.

[d] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Taking Family Care and Medical Leave

In Dudley v. Department of Transp. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 255, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 739 , the plaintiff sought to assert a cause of action for discrimination under the Moore-Brown-Roberti Family Rights Act (Gov. Code §§ 12945.1, 12945.2). The plaintiff alleged that she had suffered discrimination for, among other things, exercising her right to take medical leave under the Act. The trial court dismissed the plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the Act does indeed provide a cause of action for an employee who suffers discrimination or other adverse employment action in retaliation for exercising his or her right to take leave under the Act (see Gov. Code § 12945.2(l)(1)). The elements of the cause of action are satisfied if (1) the defendant was an employer covered by the Act, (2) the plaintiff was an employee eligible to take leave under the Act, (3) the plaintiff exercised his or her right to take leave, and (4) the plaintiff suffered an adverse employment action as a result (90 Cal. App. 4th 255, 259-261) .

[e] Right to Report and Refuse to Participate in Illegal Activity

The plaintiff in Patten v. Grant Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113 , was a school principal who sued her employer, a public school district, under the whistleblower-retaliation statute. That statute prohibits an employer from retaliating against an employee for disclosing information to a government or law-enforcement agency when the employee had reasonable cause to believe that the information disclosed a violation of state or federal statute, or a violation or noncompliance with a state or federal rule or regulation (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)). Specifically, the plaintiff alleged that she had been transferred to a less desirable position in retaliation for disclosures that she had made to her employer, which qualified as a government agency for this purpose (see Lab. Code § 1102.5(e)), and to legislative personnel. The relevant disclosures arose from the district's discovery, in its year-end financial audit, of a surplus of approximately $127,000 in the budget for the Immediate Intervention/Underperforming Schools Program (II/USP) for the plaintiff's school. The district wanted to reassign expenditures already incurred for at least one other educational program, and perhaps others, to nearly $104,000 of this surplus. The reassignment would allow the district to retain that amount of unspent II/USP funds (rather than return the amount to the state) and, the plaintiff maintained, would provide the district with funds to clean up its budget. To effectuate the reassignment of expenditures, the district requested that the plaintiff sign blank "transfer of funds" forms. The plaintiff refused, explaining to the district that she was "fearful of the legality of this action." The district later carried out the reassignment, and the plaintiff eventually met with a state assembly member and a representative of a state senator regarding the matter. She also attended a school-board meeting and provided information about the II/USP funding issue (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1381-1382) .

The trial court granted the district's motion for summary judgment, holding that as to the disclosure regarding II/USP funding, the district had not retaliated against the plaintiff by subjecting her to an adverse employment action, because the complained-of transfer was between essentially equivalent positions (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1383) .

The court of appeal began its analysis by stating that, to establish a prima facie case of retaliation under the whistleblower statute (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)), the plaintiff had to show (1) she engaged in a protected activity, (2) her employer subjected her to an adverse employment action, and (3) there was a causal link between the two (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384) . On the first element--whether the plaintiff had engaged in protected activity--the court of appeal found that the disclosure regarding II/USP funding presented a triable question of whistleblowing activity. The court of appeal explained that the plaintiff's disclosures to the district and to legislative personnel regarding the reassignment of other program expenditures to the II/USP surplus presented a whistleblowing archetype: disclosing the allegedly unauthorized use of public assets. Also, the plaintiff presented a triable issue that she reasonably believed she was disclosing a violation of law: she informed a state Assembly member, his assistant, and a representative of a state Senator; she had refused to sign the blank "transfer of funds" forms that the district requested because "there was no way to ensure the [reassigned] expenditures were legitimate based on II/USP guidelines"; and she "was fearful of the legality of this action" (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1385-1386) .

The court of appeal went on to find that there was a triable issue of fact on the second element of the plaintiff's prima facie case, whether she had suffered an adverse employment action when the district transferred her to another school. Generally, an adverse employment action is one that materially affects the terms and conditions of employment. The California Supreme Court has applied the"materiality" test in the context of a retaliation action under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Yanowitz v. L'Oreal USA, Inc. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1050-1061, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 436, 116 P.3d 1123 , discussed in [f], below; see Gov. Code § 12940(h)), and in this case the court of appeal held that the same test applies in a retaliation action under the whistleblower statute (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1386-1388 ; see Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)). Applying that test in this case, the court of appeal found that, even though the wages, benefits, and duties of the two positions (as set forth in the job descriptions) were the same, the transfer could reasonably be viewed as an adverse employment action. The plaintiff's new school was a smaller, higher-achieving school, and it did not present the same challenges for a principal as did the plaintiff's former school. The court of appeal remarked that the new school did "not present the kinds of administrative challenges an up-and-coming principal wanting to make her mark would relish." Also, the year-round schedule of the new school conflicted with the plaintiff's family schedule and her own educational plans. Considering the plaintiff's allegations collectively, the court of appeals concluded that the plaintiff had presented a triable issue on the question of adverse employment action (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1388-1390) .

Finally, the court of appeal found that the chronology of events raised a triable issue concerning the existence of a causal link between the plaintiff's II/USP disclosures and her transfer to the new school. Accordingly, the court of appeal reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings on the plaintiff's retaliation claim (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1390-1391) .

[f] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Opposing Practices Forbidden by Fair Employment and Housing Act

The plaintiff in Yanowitz v. L'Oreal USA, Inc. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1028, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 436, 116 P.3d 1123 , was a regional sales manager for the defendant, a cosmetics and fragrance company. The plaintiff claimed that she had been subjected to adverse employment action in retaliation for her refusal to carry out her supervisor's instruction to terminate a dark-skinned female sales associate whom the supervisor found to be insufficiently attractive. The complaint included a claim of retaliation under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), which prohibits discrimination against an employee in retaliation for the employee's engaging in activity protected under FEHA (Gov. Code § 12940(h)). On the retaliation claim, the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant, finding that the plaintiff had not engaged in any protected activity. The court of appeal reversed, holding, among other things, that the plaintiff's refusal to obey the supervisor's sexually discriminatory order to fire the sales associate was a protected activity under FEHA.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's judgment. The Supreme Court began its analysis by restating the elements of a plaintiff's prima facie case of retaliation under FEHA: the plaintiff must show (1) he or she engaged in a protected activity, (2) the employer subjected the employee to an adverse employment action, and (3) a causal link existed between the protected activity and the employer's action. The Court found that the first element--that the plaintiff engaged in protected activity--was satisfied by the plaintiff's refusal to follow the supervisor's order to terminate the sales associate. FEHA's anti-retaliation provision indicates that protected conduct includes opposing any practices forbidden by FEHA (Gov. Code § 12940(h)). The Court noted that an employee's conduct in opposing an employer's practice may constitute protected activity so long as the employee reasonably and in good faith believed the practice to be discriminatory, whether or not the conduct is ultimately found to be in violation of the law (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1043) . In this particular instance, the Court found that there was sufficient evidence to support a finding that the plaintiff had a reasonable belief that the supervisor's order to terminate a sales associate who was "not good looking enough" represented an instance of impermissible discrimination on the basis of sex (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1044-1045 ; see Gov. Code § 12940(a)).

The Supreme Court rejected the defendant's contention that the plaintiff's conduct could not be protected activity because the plaintiff had never explicitly informed the defendant that she believed the supervisor's order was discriminatory. The Court explained that FEHA's anti-retaliation provision applies so long as the circumstances are sufficient to establish that the employer had knowledge that the employee's refusal to engage in the particular practice was based on the employee's reasonable belief that the practice was discriminatory (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1046) . In this case, the Supreme Court found that, although the plaintiff had not explicitly informed the defendant that she believed her supervisor's order to be discriminatory, the circumstances--including the plaintiff's requests that the supervisor provide "adequate justification" for the order--provided a sufficient basis for a trier of fact to find that the defendant knew that the plaintiff's refusal to obey the order to terminate the sales associate was based on the plaintiff's belief that the order was discriminatory (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1046-1048) .

In this case the Supreme Court also held that to qualify as an "adverse employment action" under FEHA, an employer's act must have a material effect on the terms, conditions, or privileges of employment; it is not sufficient that the act deter the plaintiff or other employees from engaging in protected activities (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1050-1055) . Also, a series of separate retaliatory acts collectively may constitute an "adverse employment action," even if some or all of the component acts might not be individually actionable (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1055-1056) . The Supreme Court concluded that the alleged circumstances of this case, including unwarranted negative performance evaluations, unwarranted criticism, solicitation of negative feedback from the plaintiff's staff, and a refusalto allow the plaintiff to respond to criticisms, were sufficient to support a finding by a trier of fact that the plaintiff had suffered an adverse employment action (36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1059-1061) .

[g] Prohibition of Retaliation Against Physician for Advocating for Appropriate Health Care

In Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 32, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627 , the plaintiff was an anesthesiologist whose employment was terminated after he had a disagreement with a surgeon about the medical wisdom of subjecting a particular patient to cataract surgery. The anesthesiologist sued the surgeon and the employer medical group; one of his claims was that he had been wrongfully discharged in violation of public policy. In support of this claim, the plaintiff cited Business and Professions Code Section 2056, which declares it a violation of public policy for "any person ... to terminate an employment or other contractual relationship with or otherwise penalize ... a physician ... principally for advocating for medically appropriate health care" (Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c)).

At the close of the plaintiff's case-in-chief, the trial court granted the defendants' motion for nonsuit on the wrongful-discharge claim. The trial court relied on Section 2056's declaration of legislative intent, which states that "[t]he purpose of this section is to provide protection against retaliation for physicians who advocate for medically appropriate health care for their patients pursuant to Wickline v. State of California [(1986)] 192 Cal. App. 3d 1630 [239 Cal. Rptr. 810] " (Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(a)). Because the Wickline case involved a dispute between a physician and a health-care payor, the trial court construed Section 2056 as proscribing only retaliation by a third-party payor against a physician (84 Cal. App. 4th 32, 45) .

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the plain language of Section 2056, as well as the legislative history, made it clear that the statute was intended to provide an express public policy in favor of physicians' advocacy for appropriate health care of their patients and against employment termination or penalization of physicians for such advocacy, and to state that a physician who has an employment or other contractual relationship with a person should not be terminated or otherwise penalized principally for advocating for appropriate health care for his or her patient. Thus, Section 2056 was intended to apply not just to disputes between physicians and third-party payors, but also to disputes between physicians and their employers (84 Cal. App. 4th 32, 45-51) . In this case, the evidence proffered by the plaintiff would have been sufficient to support a jury finding that the plaintiff's employment had been terminated because of his disagreement with the surgeon, and that the disagreement constituted the plaintiff's advocacy of medically appropriate health care. Therefore, the court of appeal reversed the judgment of nonsuit and remanded for further proceedings (84 Cal. App. 4th 32, 52, 63) .

[h] Prohibition Against Retaliation Based on Race

The plaintiff in CBOCS W., Inc. v. Humphries (2008) 553 U.S. 442, 128 S. Ct. 1951, 170 L. Ed. 2d 864 , sued his former employer, claiming that he had been discharged in retaliation for complaining that the defendant had discharged another employee for race-based reasons. The plaintiff charged that the alleged retaliatory conduct violated federal civil-rights laws, including 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a). Specifically, 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a) provides that "[a]ll persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts ... as is enjoyed by white citizens." The basic question for the United States Supreme Court in this case was whether 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a) encompasses a complaint of retaliation against a person who has complained about a race-based violation of another person's contract-related "right." The Court concluded that 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a) does prohibits retaliation based on race (170 L. Ed. 2d 864, 869, 877) .

The United States Supreme Court acknowledged that 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a) does not expressly refer to the claim of an individual (black or white) who suffers retaliation because he has tried to help a different individual secure his or her rights under 42 U.S.C. § 1981. Nevertheless, the Court concluded that the statute encompasses retaliation claims, basing its reasoning on its previous decisions construing other, similarly worded provisions. For example, the Court has long construed 42 U.S.C. § 1982, which provides that all citizens will have the same right as white persons to own and dispose of real and personal property, as covering retaliation against those who advocate the rights of persons expressly protected by that provision [see Jackson v. Birmingham Bd. of Educ. (2005) 544 U.S. 167, 176, 125 S. Ct. 1497, 161 L. Ed. 2d 361 ; Sullivan v. Little Hunting Park, Inc., 396 U.S. 229, 237, 90 S. Ct. 400, 24 L. Ed. 2d 386]. Moreover, the Court has long construed 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and 1982 similarly, because of their common language, origin, and purposes; both statutes were originally enacted just after the Civil War to protect the rights of black citizens [see Runyon v. McCrary (1976) 427 U.S. 160, 173, 96 S. Ct. 2586, 49 L. Ed. 2d 415]. Therefore, despite the fact that 42 U.S.C. § 1981 does not use the word "retaliation," the Court concluded that principles of stare decisis strongly support adhering to the line of cases interpreting 42 U.S.C. §§ 1981 and 1982 similarly. Accordingly, and the Court held that 42 U.S.C. § 1981(a) encompasses claims of retaliation (170 L. Ed. 2d 864, 869-873, 877) .

[i] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Filing Complaint Under Age Discrimination in Employment Act

The question before the United States Supreme Court in Gomez-Perez v. Potter (2008) 553 U.S. 474, 128 S. Ct. 1931, 170 L. Ed. 2d 887 , was whether a federal employee who is a victim of retaliation due to the filing of a complaint of age discrimination may assert a claim under the federal-sector provision of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA) [see 29 U.S.C. § 633a(a)]. That statute provides that "[a]ll personnel actions affecting employees or applicants for employment who are at least 40 years of age ... shall be made free from any discrimination based on age." Although the statute does not expressly refer to "retaliation," the Supreme Court held that the statutory phrase "discrimination based on age" includes retaliation based on the filing of an age discrimination complaint (170 L. Ed. 2d 887, 894, 902) .

In reaching its conclusion, the Court was guided by its prior decisions interpreting similar language in other antidiscrimination statutes [see, e.g., Jackson v. Birmingham Bd. of Educ. (2005) 544 U.S. 167, 173-174, 125 S. Ct. 1497, 161 L. Ed. 2d 361 (retaliation claims are encompassed by 20 U.S.C. § 1681(a), which provides that no person shall, "on the basis of sex, ... be subjected to discrimination" under federally funded education programs; Sullivan v. Little Hunting Park, Inc., 396 U.S. 229, 237, 90 S. Ct. 400, 24 L. Ed. 2d 386 (42 U.S.C. § 1982, which that all citizens will have the same right as white persons to own and dispose of real and personal property, prohibits retaliation based on race)]. Applying the reasoning of those decisions, the Court concluded that the federal-sector provision of the ADEA prohibits retaliation against individuals who complain about age discrimination in federal employment (170 L. Ed. 2d 887, 894-896) .

[j] Prohibition Against Retaliation for Opposing Practice That Violates Title VII of Civil Rights Act

The plaintiff in Crawford v. Metro. Gov't of Nashville & Davidson County (2009) ___ U.S. ___, 129 S. Ct. 846, 172 L. Ed. 2d 650 , was a public employee who had been questioned by her employer as part of the employer's investigation of rumors that another one of its employees was committing sexual harassment. In response to the employer's questioning, the plaintiff described several instances of sexually harassing behavior. The employer ultimately took no action against the employee who allegedly committed harassment, but shortly after completing the harassment investigation, the employer dismissed the plaintiff, saying that the dismissal was for embezzlement. The plaintiff brought a Title VII claim against the employer, charging that the dismissal was actually done in retaliation for her report of the other employee's harassing behavior. The Title VII antiretaliation provision makes it an unlawful employment practice for an employer to discriminate against an employee (1) because the employee "has opposed any practice made an unlawful employment practice" by Title VII (the "opposition" clause); or (2) because the employee has made a charge, testified, assisted, or participated in any manner in an investigation, proceeding, or hearing under Title VII (the "participation clause") (42 U.S.C. § 2000e-3(a)). The lower courts granted and affirmed summary judgment for the employer, holding that the plaintiff was not protected by the opposition clause, because she had not initiated the employer's internal investigation, and that she was not protected by the participation clause, because that clause applies only to participation in a investigation conducted pursuant to a pending charge filed with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari, primarily to review the applicability of the opposition clause. Construing the statutory word "opposed," the Court stated that "'[o]ppose' goes beyond 'active, consistent' behavior in ordinary discourse, where we would naturally use the word to speak of someone who has taken no action at all to advance a position beyond disclosing it. ... There is, then, no reason to doubt that a person can 'oppose' by responding to someone else's question just as surely as by provoking the discussion, and nothing in the statute requires a freakish rule protecting an employee who reports discrimination on her own initiative but not one who reports the same discrimination in the same words when her boss asks a question" (172 L. Ed. 2d 650, 657) . Therefore, the Court concluded that the plaintiff's conduct had constituted opposition to the alleged harassment and was within the scope of the opposition clause of Title VII's antiretaliation provision (172 L. Ed. 2d 650, 657-659) .

Accordingly, the Court reversed the appellate court's judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings (172 L. Ed. 2d 650, 659) . Because the plaintiff's conduct was covered by the opposition clause, the Court found it unnecessary to reach the question whether the participation clause also covered the plaintiff's conduct (172 L. Ed. 2d 650, 659) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statutory Provision Precluding Discharge for Conduct Within Statute Can Be Basis of Common Law Wrongful-Discharge Action

Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 , arose out of an action against defendant by its former employee for wrongful discharge. Plaintiff claimed that his former employer wrongfully terminated him in retaliation for his actions in attempting to obtain a reasonably smoke-free environment. Plaintiff's complaint contained five causes of action, including tortious wrongful discharge. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action. Plaintiff appealed, contending, among other things, that he had a common-law right to bring his action in tort irrespective of the provisions of Lab. Code §§ 6310 and 6312, prohibiting retaliatory dismissal for actions relating to safe and healthy working conditions and providing for maintenance by an administrative agency of a lawsuit on behalf of a complaining employee. In response, defendant argued that plaintiff's rights were limited to the filing of a complaint with the Labor Commissioner under Lab. Code § 6312.

The court of appeal reversed the order of the trial court that sustained defendant's demurrer and dismissed the complaint. The court held that plaintiff's complaint was sufficient to state a cause of action for the tort of wrongful discharge based on a retaliatory dismissal arising out of plaintiff's activities in attempting to obtain a reasonably smoke-free environment (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-304) . The court ruled that this common-law right of action was available to the plaintiff irrespective of Lab. Code §§ 6310 and 6312 of the California Occupational and Safety Health Act (Cal OSHA), which provides protection for employees who complain about unsafe or unhealthy working conditions and for maintenance of a suit by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of wrongfully discharged employees (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-302) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.43

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.43 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Violated Constitutionally-Based Public Policy Regarding Discrimination

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS IN VIOLATION OF THE FUNDAMENTAL PUBLIC POLICY PROHIBITING DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41, Paragraph A.]

B. Employment Discrimination Prohibited by California Constitution. Article I, Section 8, of the California Constitution, which declares that a person may not be disqualified from entering or pursuing, among other things, employment because of sex, race, creed, color, or national or ethnic origin, sets forth a fundamental public policy against discrimination in employment on any of those bases. An employee who has been terminated on any of those bases may therefore bring a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 90, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 (involving sex discrimination)).

[Optional] C. Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Not Required. A plaintiff who brings a civil tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy based on discrimination in employment is not required to first exhaust his or her administrative remedy under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 903-905, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 ; Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a contention that plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts to show that, in terminating plaintiff's employment, the employer violated public policy, based on constitutional provisions prohibiting discrimination, sufficient to support an action for wrongful discharge. Optional Paragraph D is for use where defendant contends that plaintiff's action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is preempted because plaintiff failed to exhaust his or her administrative remedy under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.).

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's termination violated a fundamental public policy against discrimination, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or summary judgment motion. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence which indicates that plaintiff was discharged in violation of the fundamental public policy against employment discrimination contained in Cal. Const., art. I, § 8. Counsel should, therefore, set forth facts tending to show that the discharge was premised on one or more of the bases enumerated in the constitutional provision, including sex, race, creed, color, or national origin. Such evidence could include, for example, statements made by the employer or evidence that other similarly situated employees were treated differently. Further, if appropriate, counsel should argue that plaintiff was not required to exhaust FEHA administrative remedies prior to filing a wrongful termination lawsuit [Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373] .

[c] Related Memoranda

Section 100.41 is general points and authorities for a situation where there is no constitutional antidiscrimination provision that limits the employer's right to discharge the plaintiff, and where none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See § 100.42 (where the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.44 (where the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.45 (where the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.46 (where the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act, § 100.47 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), § 100.49 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (where the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities set out in § 100.22.

[e] Cause of Action Inapplicable to Independent Contractor

The theory set forth in this memorandum only applies to employer/employee relations, and cannot support a recovery of damages in tort for termination of a contract with an independent contractor pursuant to a contract provision allowing either party the right to terminate the contract unilaterally [Abrahamson v. NME Hospitals, Inc. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1325, 1329-1330, 241 Cal. Rptr. 396 (independent-contractor physician charged termination was due to his refusal to condone poor practices in healing arts; court held that no cause of action was stated)].

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

For a discussion and forms relating to the California Fair Employment and Housing Act [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination (Matthew Bender).

[g] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04[2][c], [e] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employment Discrimination Prohibited by California Constitution

Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 , involved female employees who were allegedly sexually harassed by their employer, a doctor and medical corporation. The employer's offensive conduct eventually forced the plaintiffs to quit, after which they filed a complaint for violations of FEHA, for intentional infliction of emotional distress, and for tortious discharge in contravention of public policy. The trial court granted the employer's motion for summary judgment on the grounds that FEHA constituted the plaintiffs' exclusive remedy and that they had failed to exhaust FEHA's administrative channels. The court of appeal reversed, holding that FEHA does not preempt other state law claims, that administrative remedies must be exhausted only with respect to FEHA claims, and that the allegations of sexual harassment would support a claim of tortious discharge in violation of public policy. The employer sought review by the California Supreme Court.

The Court affirmed, holding that sex discrimination in employment offends fundamental public policy, and may provide the basis for a suit for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (52 Cal. 3d 65, 90) . Relying on Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 176-177, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , which was reaffirmed in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 665-669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , the Court agreed with the plaintiffs that Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, which prohibits, among other things, employment discrimination based on sex, is declaratory of fundamental public policy (181 Cal. App. 4th 218, 231) . The Court acknowledged that FEHA, which declares that discrimination on specified grounds, including sex, violates public policy [see Gov. Code § 12920], establishes administrative procedures to redress discrimination, and that the DFEH, FEHA's enforcement agency, must issue a "right to sue" letter before a complainant may sue under FEHA [see Gov. Code §§ 12930, 12965] (181 Cal. App. 4th 218, 233-234) . It pointed out, however, that FEHA also clearly disclaims an intent to repeal any other California discrimination law [see Gov. Code § 12993(a)], and added that it is settled that California law includes common law as well as the Constitution and the codes [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1895, 1899; Victory Oil Co. v. Hancock Oil Co. (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 222, 229, 270 P.2d 604] (52 Cal. 3d 65, 73-74) . The Court repeated its declaration, originally made in State Personnel Board v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 422, 431, 217 Cal. Rptr. 16, 703 P.2d 354 that "[t]he FEHA was meant to supplement, not supplant or be supplanted by, existing antidiscrimination remedies, in order to give employees the maximum opportunity to vindicate their civil rights against discrimination ... ." (52 Cal. 3d 65, 74-75) . The Court interpreted FEHA as thus amplifying rather than abrogating common-law remedies for employment discrimination (178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 550-551) .

The Court acknowledged that FEHA states that it is the Legislature's intent to "occupy the field" of employment discrimination "exclusive of all other laws banning discrimination ... by any city, city and county, county, or other political subdivision ..." [see Gov. Code § 12993(c)]. Accordingly, the Court construed FEHA's legislative history, pointing out that FEHA is an amalgamation of the former Fair Employment Practices Act ("FEPA") (former Lab. Code § 1410 et seq.), FEHA's predecessor, and the former Rumford Fair Housing Act ("Rumford Act") (former Health & Safety Code § 35700 et seq.). It concluded that when those statutes were combined to form FEHA, the present Gov. Code § 12993(c) was created by merging two separate sections, neither of which was intended to preempt any but local law (178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 553) .

The Court found the "new right-exclusive remedy" rule to be inapplicable to FEHA. That rule states that if a statute creates a right that did not exist at common law and provides a comprehensive and detailed remedial scheme for its enforcement, the statutory remedy is exclusive [see Flores v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 736, 746-747, 13 Cal. Rptr. 201, 361 P.2d 921 ; Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 301, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159] . The Court explained that (1) the unequivocal language of FEHA disclaims an intent to repeal existing law [see Gov. Code § 12993(a)], (2) common-law remedies for employment discrimination existed prior to the enactment of FEHA and its predecessor, and (3) FEHA is not such a "general and comprehensive" legislative scheme as to imply an intent to displace existing law. The Court cited various circumstances under which FEHA does not apply [see Gov. Code §§ 12926(c) (now see Gov. Code § 12926(d)) (employers with less than five employees), 12926(c) (now see Gov. Code § 12926(d)) (religious organizations); Gay Law Students Assn. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 458, 489, 156 Cal. Rptr. 14, 595 P.2d 592 (sexual orientation)], and observed that it has a limited administrative remedial scheme [see Peralta Community College Dist. v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 40, 55-57, 60, 276 Cal. Rptr. 114, 801 P.2d 357 (FEHC may not award compensatorydamages); Dyna-Med, Inc. v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 1379, 1404, 241 Cal. Rptr. 67, 743 P.2d 1323 (FEHC may not award punitive damages)] (52 Cal. 3d 65, 79-81) .

Acknowledging that a complainant must exhaust FEHA's administrative process before filing a lawsuit alleging FEHA causes of action [see People v. Craycroft (1852) 2 Cal. 243, 244 (when right is given and remedy provided by statute, remedy so provided must ordinarily be pursued); see also Gov. Code § 12965(b) ("right to sue" letter must be obtained before bringing civil action under FEHA); State Personnel Board v. Fair Employment & Housing Com. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 422, 433 n.11, 217 Cal. Rptr. 16, 703 P.2d 354 ("right to sue" letter is prerequisite to judicial action); Commodore Home Systems, Inc. v. Superior Court (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 211, 218, 185 Cal. Rptr. 270, 649 P.2d 912 (same)], the Court held, however, that a complainant need not exhaust FEHA administrative process before filing a civil suit alleging nonstatutory causes of action. The Court explained that the exhaustion doctrine applies only to rights created by the statute providing the administrative system. It declared that the policy considerations served by the doctrine, namely the promotion of administrative autonomy, utilization of agency expertise, mitigation of damages, and conservation of judicial resources, although particularly apt in the context of a self-contained entity (e.g., a hospital, a private or professional association, or a public agency), which has a pervasive and self-contained internal mechanism for addressing disputes that are singularly within the technical competence of that mechanism, are not applicable to FEHA, since it does not regulate or monitor employment relationships (Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 83-88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373).

Thus, the Court concluded that an employee may elect to waive his or her FEHA claims and proceed directly to court on common-law claims; alternatively, the employee may pursue both the administrative and judicial remedies either sequentially or simultaneously (in the latter case by amending his or her complaint to join FEHA cause of action once the DFEH issues a "right to sue" letter) (Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373).

Based on Rojo, it appears that a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy based on employment discrimination may be based on any of the categories protected by Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, namely sex, race, creed, color, or national or ethnic origin. However, FEHA also proscribes employment discrimination based on a number of other classifications that are not mentioned in Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, including physical and mental disability, medical condition, marital status, and age [Gov. Code § 12940]. The California Supreme Court has held that the broad statements of policy in Gov. Code §§ 12920 and 12921 cannot be the basis of a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of the public policy against age discrimination in employment against an employer exempt from the substantive provisions of FEHA; because there is no other statutory or constitutional basis for the public policy against age discrimination, FEHA does not create new common-law rights beyond the rights created by the statute itself [Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 134-136, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 (employer exempt from age discrimination prohibition of former Gov. Code § 12941 [now see Gov. Code § 12940(a)]due to employment of fewer than five employees cannot be liable for wrongful termination in violation of public policy); cf. Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 897, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 (larger employer, covered by FEHA age-discrimination prohibition, subject to age-discrimination claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy)]. Thus, it appears that a cause of action for discrimination on bases not listed in Cal. Const., art I, § 8, must be based on a violation of FEHA or some other comparable statutory provision, and that the defendant must be subject to the statutory provision. At least in the case of FEHA, a wrongful-discharge action would be functionally identical to the action under the statute. Because the benefits of suing under a wrongful discharge cause of action based on alleged violations of constitutional rights--administrative procedures need not be exhausted before filing suit, and the broader applicability of the constitutional provisions--do not apply to actions based solely on FEHA, there is no reason to assert both causes of action.

[b] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Not Required

Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 , is discussed under § 100.43[3][a]. Acknowledging that a complainant must exhaust FEHA's administrative process before filing a lawsuit alleging FEHA causes of action, the Court held that a complainant need not exhaust FEHA administrative process before filing a civil suit alleging nonstatutory causes of action (Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 88, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373).

The facts and procedural background of Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 , are discussed in § 100.42[3][c]. The Stevenson court vigorously reaffirmed the Rojo analysis regarding exhaustion of remedies under FEHA. It also rejected an attempt by the Stevenson age-discrimination defendant to distinguish Rojo, a sex-discrimination case, on the basis that only in Rojo was the discrimination proscribed by the state constitution as well as by the statute (16 Cal. 4th 880, 903-907) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies Not Required

In Schifando v. City of Los Angeles (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1074, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 457, 79 P.3d 569 , the California Supreme Court considered whetherexhaustion of an employer's internal grievance procedures is a prerequisite for a civil action asserting a claim under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). The plaintiff in this case was a city employee who alleged employment discrimination based on physical disability under FEHA (see Gov. Code §§ 12926(k), 12940(a)). Before filing suit, the plaintiff complied with the administrative procedures prescribed by FEHA, by filing a complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) (see Gov. Code § 12960). After investigating the complaint, the DFEH issued the plaintiff a right-to-sue letter (see Gov. Code § 12965(b)), and the plaintiff filed suit. On appeal, the city argued that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed because he had failed to pursue administrative remedies provided under the city charter. Those remedies included the filing of a demand for reinstatement, which would have given the local board of civil service commissioners the opportunity to consider the propriety of the plaintiff's discharge.

The Supreme Court acknowledged that its precedents establish that employers' internal grievance procedures are subject to an exhaustion requirement (see, e.g., Westlake Cmty. Hosp. v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 465, 476, 131 Cal. Rptr. 90, 551 P.2d 410). However, those precedents did not involve statutory claims for which the Legislature had specifically mandated its own administrative review process, as in FEHA, and the Court found this distinction to be "compelling." Accordingly, the Supreme Court held that exhaustion of an employer's internal procedures is not a prerequisite for a civil action asserting a claim under FEHA or another statutory scheme that contains its own exhaustion prerequisite. Thus, an employee who has exhausted FEHA administrative process and obtained a right-to-sue letter from the DFEH need not also exhaust internal administrative procedures provided by the employer prior to filing lawsuit alleging an FEHA claim (31 Cal. 4th 1074, 1084-1086) .

The Supreme Court recognized that procedural issues might arise if an employee chooses to pursue both statutory and internal administrative remedies, but the Court left the resolution of those issues for the future (31 Cal. 4th 1074, 1087-1089) . Also, the Court expressly left open the question whether an employee would be required to satisfy internal administrative remedies before suing on a claim based on a statute that does not provide its own administrative procedures (31 Cal. 4th 1074, 1089 n.5).

In Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 , plaintiff was employed by Myers, an employer of less than five people. When Myers terminated plaintiff after learning of her pregnancy, plaintiff attempted to file a complaint with the Department of Fair Employment of Housing but her complaint was not accepted because Myers was not covered by FEHA, Gov. Code § 12940 et seq. Plaintiff then filed suit alleging, among other things, wrongful termination in violation of a policy against pregnancy discrimination based on the proscription against sex discrimination embodied in the California Constitution even though her employer was not subject to FEHA. After the jury ruled in plaintiff's favor on this claim, Myers appealed, claiming that FEHA was the exclusive basis of recovery for pregnancy discrimination (Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1293, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229). The court of appeal rejected Myers's position and upheld the verdict. After a lengthy review of earlier authorities defining pregnancy as a sex characteristic, the court held that pregnancy discrimination falls within the proscription of sex discrimination stated in Cal. Const., art. I, § 8.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.44

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.44 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Based on Violation of Constitutional Rights Other Than Right to Nondiscriminatory Treatment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS IN VIOLATION OF PLAINTIFF'S CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph B.]

C. Discharge for Exercising (or Refusing to Waive) a Fundamental Constitutional Right Actionable as Against Public Policy. An employer who discharges an employee to punish or retaliate for the employee's choice to exercise (or refuse to waive) a fundamental state constitutional right violates public policy, and the discharged employee may bring an action in tort for wrongful discharge on that ground (Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 452-457, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of the contention that a cause of action for wrongful discharge inviolation of public policy can be based on an employer's termination of employment to punish or retaliate for the employee's exercise of (or refuse to waive) a fundamental state constitutional right. If it is arguable that the authority cited in Paragraph C is distinguishable, use the optional paragraph as a basis for arguing in more detail how the plaintiff's conduct is entitled to public-policy protection.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the termination was punishment or retaliation for exercising or refusing to waive a fundamental state constitutional right. Counsel should discuss facts showing that plaintiff exercised or refused to waive a specific constitutional right, for instance refusal to waive the constitutional right to privacy set forth in Cal. Const., art. I, § 1 [Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 456-457, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46] .

[c] Related Memoranda

The form in § 100.41 is a general form for a situation in which there is no constitutional provision protecting the plaintiff, and when none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See the forms in § 100.42 (when the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.43 (when the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.45 (when the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.46 (when the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act), § 100.47 (when the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), § 100.49 (when the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (when the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form. In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities set out in § 100.22.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form for notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04[2][e] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Exercising (or Refusing to Waive) a Fundamental Constitutional Right Actionable as Against Public Policy

One of the claims addressed in Pettus v. Cole (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , was a claim for discharge because the employee refused to enroll in an inpatient alcohol treatment program chosen by his employer and mandated as a condition of continued employment (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 452) . The trial court had ruled that the termination was justified and that the requirement imposed by the employer was neither an invasion of privacy nor wrongful termination in violation of the public policy embodied in the privacy clause of the California Constitution, art. I, § 1, and granted judgment to the defendant-employer, Du Pont, on motion made after the plaintiff's case.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings. The court first reviewed the role of the California constitutional right to privacy in the private workplace and the tort of wrongful termination in violation of public policy in general (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 452-453) . In particular, the court focused on two cases which involved workplace drug-testing, Semore v. Pool (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1087, 266 Cal. Rptr. 280 , and Luck v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 939 (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 454-456) . These cases are discussed in more detail in § 100.53[3][b]. The court discussed the majority opinions in those cases as well as the dissents, and concluded that the reason the results in those two cases were inconsistent was because the courts had tried to "shoehorn the privacy claims at issue in those cases into the Foley model of a tort cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy" (49Cal. App. 4th 402, 457) . Instead it viewed Mr. Pettus's termination by Du Pont as economic coercion to affect Mr. Pettus's decision whether to exercise or waive the constitutional right of privacy (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 457) .

The court stated that, while the drug-testing case of Hill v. National Collegiate Athletic Assn. (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 834, 865 P.2d 633 , did not involve employment, it was clear from that case that an employee's claim for invasion of privacy was subject to the test set forth in Hill. Accordingly, it first determined that there was a legally protected privacy interest: Mr. Pettus had an autonomy privacy interest in determining his own medical treatment (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 457) . It then turned to whether Mr. Pettus had a reasonable expectation of privacy, and stated that by becoming an employee one does not give up their right to control their medical destiny (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 458-459) . Thirdly, it determined that the invasion was serious and finally, it examined the countervailing interests of the employer and whether there were less intrusive alternatives. In doing so, the court found that Du Pont had put forth no justification for the invasion it proposed and that there were equally effective, less intrusive means to address the interests of the employer (49 Cal. App. 4th 402, 460-463) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.45

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.45 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Based on Employee's Protest of Unsafe Working Conditions

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS BASED ON PLAINTIFF'S PROTEST OF UNSAFE OR UNHEALTHY WORKING CONDITIONS.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41[1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Discharge for Protest of Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions Actionable as Against Public Policy. An employer that discharges an employee for protesting unhealthy or unsafe working conditions impermissibly violates public policy, and the discharged employee may bring an action in tort for wrongful discharge on that ground (Boston v. Penny Lane Ctrs., Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 936, 944-947, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 707 ; Franklin v. Monadnock Co. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 259, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 692 ; Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 447-449, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 ; Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159).

[Optional] D. Common-Law Action for Wrongful Discharge Not Precluded by California Occupational Safety and Health Act. Provisions of the California Occupational Safety and Health Act prohibiting discharge or discrimination because of an employee's activity in relation to health and safety matters under Labor Code Section 6310(a), providing victims of discharge or discrimination with the right to reinstatement and reimbursement for lost wages and work benefits under Labor Code Section 6310(b), and providing for the maintenance of suit under certain circumstances by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of employees discharged or discriminated against under Labor Code Section 6312 are not exclusive and do not preclude an employee from bringing a common-law cause of action for tortious wrongful discharge (Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 447-449, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 ; Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 298-304, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159).

[Optional] E. Actual Violation of OSHA Not Necessary. An employee is protected against discharge or discrimination for complaining in good faith about working conditions or practices he or she reasonably believes to be unsafe, whether or not an OSHA violation actually exists at the time of the complaint (Cabesuela v. Browning-Ferris Industries of Cal., Inc. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60).

[Optional] F. Action Against Subsequent Employer. An employee may bring an action for retaliatory discharge in violation of public policy against a subsequent employer who discharges the employee for having made claims of health and safety violations against a former employer (Skillsky v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 893 F.2d 1088, 1092-1094) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used in support of the contention that a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy can be based on an employer's termination of employment in retaliation for protesting unsafe or unhealthy working conditions. If it is arguable that the authority cited in Paragraph C is distinguishable, use the optional paragraph as a basis for arguing in more detail how the plaintiff's conduct is entitled to public-policy protection.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a discharge based on an employee's protest of unsafe or unhealthy working conditions can be the basis for a tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the dismissal was the proximate result of plaintiff's protest of unhealthy or unsafe working conditions. For example, counsel could discuss facts showing how plaintiff attempted to obtain safe or healthy working conditions, that the employer ignored these attempts or made threats or statements undermining the attempts, that plaintiffsoon thereafter was terminated, and that there was not another, legitimate reason for the discharge (such as poor performance or misconduct); for an example of this type of argument, see § 100.27. Counsel should argue that the remedial provisions of the California Occupational Safety and Health Act are not exclusive and should cite legal authority supporting the contention that the employer is legally bound to provide plaintiff with safe and healthful working conditions [see Lab. Code § 6400 et seq.].

[c] Related Memoranda

The form in § 100.41 is a general form for a situation in which the plaintiff's termination was not connected to health or safety issues, and when none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See the forms in § 100.42 (when the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.43 (when the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.44 (when the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.46 (when the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act), § 100.47 (when the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), § 100.49 (when the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (when the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

This form set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form. In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose the contention supported by the form set out in § 100.22.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form for notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, §§ 60.03[2][r], 60.04[2][c] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Protest of Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions Actionable as Against Public Policy

The plaintiff in Boston v. Penny Lane Ctrs., Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 936, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 707 , was employed by the defendant, a social services agency, to provide therapy for clients in a day treatment program operated by the defendant. After the plaintiff complained several times about an unsafe work environment that was largely the result of inadequate staffing, the defendant terminated the plaintiff's employment. The plaintiff sued for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. After a jury verdict and judgment in favor of the plaintiff, the defendant appealed.

The defendant contended that the judgment should be reversed because the plaintiff's exclusive remedy was under the whistleblower protections of the California Child Day Care Act, which governs the licensing and staffing of various facilities (see Health & Safety Code § 1596.70 et seq.). Specifically, the Act provides that no employer may discriminate against an employee who makes a good-faith complaint to a regulatory agency or the employer regarding the employer's violations of the Act, including the Act's staffing requirements (Health & Safety Code 1596.881). The Act also provides that an employee who is discriminated against in violation of the Act must, in most cases, pursue a grievance through the Division of Labor Standards Enforcement (Health & Safety Code § 1596.882).

The court of appeal rejected this argument. The court noted that the Act's exclusive-remedy provision specifies that it applies only to claims brought "under this article" (Health & Safety Code § 1596.882(f)). The court found it significant that although the Act expressly preempts other claims brought under the article in which it appears, the statutory language is silent as to nonstatutory claims. Although the plaintiff's complaints to the employer included complaints about inadequate staffing, she presented a broader range of workplace safety concerns. Thus, the gravamen of her lawsuit was not that she was retaliated against for objecting to the employer's noncompliance with statutory staffing requirements; it was that she was retaliated against for objecting to unsafe working conditions. Accordingly, her lawsuit asserted a wrongful-termination claim under common law, not a statutory claim under the Act. The court concluded, therefore, that the Act's provision of an exclusive remedy for claims brought under the Act did not bar the plaintiff's lawsuit asserting a common-law claim. The court viewed this as an application of the settled principle that when a statutory remedy is provided for the enforcement of a preexisting common-law right, the newer statutory remedy will be considered only cumulative unless the statute expressly extinguishes the common-law right (170 Cal. App. 4th 936, 944-947) .

The plaintiff in Franklin v. Monadnock Co. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 692 , sued his employer for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. The plaintiff claimed that he had been discharged as a result of his complaints to the employer and police about a coworker who had threatened to kill the plaintiff and had physically attacked him. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the complaint and dismissed the case.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal order, holding that the plaintiff's allegations were sufficient to state a claim for wrongful termination based on the public policy requiring employers to provide safe and secure places to work and encouraging employees to report credible threats of violence in the workplace (151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 255) .

The court of appeal specifically rejected a contention that the plaintiff's complaint about threats by his coworker did not involve a fundamental public policy. The court noted that the California Occupational Safety and Health Act (Lab. Code § 6400 et seq.) requires every employer to provide a safe and healthful workplace (see Lab. Code § 6400(a)). Also, Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 requires every employer to take reasonable steps to address credible threats of violence in the workplace. These statutes, taken together, establish an explicit public policy requiring employers to provide safe and secure workplaces (151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 258-260) .

The court of appeal observed that it is self-evident that the policy of ensuring a safe and secure workplace, and not terminating an employee for raising concerns about safety, is fundamental and substantial, since threats of violence can be crimes (151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 260 (citing Penal Code § 422). In addition, the policy inures to the benefit of the public, because it allows employers to prevent crimes and foreseeable violence from occurring in the workplace (151 Cal. App. 4th 252, 263-266) .

Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 , involved a wrongful discharge action by a nurse practitioner against her former employer. Plaintiff alleged in part that she was discharged for complaining to defendant that conditions were in many cases substandard and required modification to make the conditions fair and safe for both employees and patients. Plaintiff cited violations of Labor Code provisions protecting women, which were repealed subsequent to plaintiff's discharge. The court sustained the demurrer to this cause of action without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed the order of dismissal, stating that the trial court should have allowed plaintiff leave to amend. The court stated thatthere were other grounds besides the repealed statutes to support a public policy argument based on protest of unsafe working conditions. The court cited Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 297-298, 302-303, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 , discussed below, to show that a public policy wrongful termination may be brought against an employer for retaliatory discharge for protesting unsafe working conditions under Lab. Code §§ 6310 and 6312, which prohibit discharge or discrimination because of such a protest by an employee (214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 448-449) .

The facts and procedural background of 178 Cal. App. 4th 536, 554-555) , are discussed in § 100.42[4][a]. Plaintiff claimed that his former employer wrongfully terminated him in retaliation for his actions in attempting to obtain a reasonably smoke-free environment. Plaintiff's complaint contained five causes of action, including tortious wrongful discharge. The court of appeal held that plaintiff's complaint was sufficient to state a cause of action for the tort of wrongful discharge based on a retaliatory dismissal arising out of plaintiff's activities in attempting to obtain a reasonably smoke-free environment (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-304) . The court ruled that this common-law right of action was available to the plaintiff irrespective of Lab. Code §§ 6310 and 6312 of the California Occupational and Safety Health Act (Cal OSHA), which provides protection for employees who complain about unsafe or unhealthy working conditions and for maintenance of a suit by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of wrongfully discharged employees (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 295-302) . For further discussion of the effect of Cal OSHA on the action, see § 100.45[3][b].

[b] Common-Law Action for Wrongful Discharge Not Precluded by California Occupational Safety and Health Act

The factual and procedural background of Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 , is discussed under § 100.45[3][a]. The court in Jenkins cited Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 297-298, 302-303, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 , discussed below, which held that the remedy under Lab. Code §§ 6310 and 6312, which protect certain activities of employees relating to reporting safety and health matters, is neither exclusive nor requisite to the maintenance of a private cause of action, thus allowing their incorporation in a public policy wrongful discharge action (214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 448-449) .

The factual and procedural background of Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 , is discussed in § 100.42[4][a]. In Hentzel, the court of appeal observed that provisions of Cal OSHA expressly protect certain activities by employees relating to safety and health matters, by prohibiting discharge or discrimination because of that activity [Lab. Code § 6310(a)], by declaring victims of discharge or discrimination to be entitled to reinstatement and reimbursement for lost wages and work benefits [Lab. Code § 6310(b)], and by providing for the maintenance of suit by the Labor Commissioner on behalf of victims under certain circumstances [Lab. Code § 6312] (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 298) . The court held that these provisions are not exclusive and do not destroy an employee's common-law cause of action for tortious wrongful discharge. The court stated that under Lab. Code § 6310(b), an employee is protected against discharge or discrimination for complaining about working conditions or practices that he or she reasonably believes to be unsafe, whether or not any violation of any Cal OSHA standard or order exists (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 301-302) . Moreover, Lab. Code § 6312 is not the sole remedy available to an employee wrongfully discharged for protesting unsafe or unhealthy working conditions, since plaintiff's complaint depended on a common-law right of action that existed prior to that section. Thus, the statutory remedy is only cumulative (138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 302-304) .

[c] Actual Violation of OSHA Not Necessary

In Cabesuela v. Browning-Ferris Industries of Cal., Inc. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 101, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60 , the plaintiff alleged that he was discharged because he had complained to his employer about extended working hours, which the plaintiff believed posed a health and safety hazard. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order sustaining the defendant's demurrer. The court of appeal held that an employee is protected against discharge or discrimination for complaining in good faith about working conditions or practices he or she reasonably believes to be unsafe, whether or not an OSHA violation actually exists at the time of the complaint (68 Cal. App. 4th 101, 109) . Therefore, for the employee to maintain a cause of action for wrongful discharge in this context, it is not necessary to allege or prove that the workplace actually was unsafe.

[d] Action Against Subsequent Employer

Skillsky v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 893 F.2d 1088 , involved a wrongful discharge action by an employee against his employer, charging that the employer had discharged the employee in violation of public policy because of health and safety complaints the employee had made against his former employer. The district court granted summary judgment for the employer. The Ninth Circuit reversed the judgment in part, holding that although the California courts had not determined the issue, the federal court predicted that the California Supreme Court would allow a cause of action for retaliatory discharge against subsequent employers because the public policy prohibiting retaliatory discharge for reporting safety and health considerations in California is a strong one. Additionally, there would be a significant threat to employees, the public, and the Cal OSHAstatute if subsequent employers, hearing of health and safety complaints against previous employers, could discharge such employees. Employers could then threaten retaliation in future employment, and employees might hesitate to file such complaints (893 F.2d 1088, 1092-1094) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discharge for Protest of Unsafe or Unhealthy Working Conditions Actionable as Against Public Policy

In Dabbs v. Cardiopulmonary Management Services (1987) 188 Cal. App. 3d 1437, 234 Cal. Rptr. 129 , plaintiff was a certified respiratory therapist who refused to work the night shift at San Clemente General Hospital. Her refusal was in protest of the working conditions, in that she was required to work the shift with only one other therapist, who was not qualified to handle the assigned work, and the shift customarily required three qualified therapists. After she was discharged for refusal to work, she filed an action against her employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress and for wrongful termination, alleging that she was fired for protesting conditions that "violate fundamental public policy of the State of California." The trial court granted defendant's motion for partial summary adjudication of the issues, ruling that a cause of action for wrongful termination cannot be based on violation of an alleged public policy that is not embodied in a statute or regulation. The parties stipulated that the trial court's order could be treated as a judgment on the pleadings, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. The court stated that plaintiff was not required to rely on a specific statutory violation by her employer to state a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of fundamental public policy considerations. The court cited various sections of the Business and Professions Code dealing with safeguards for the health of patients, to support a state public policy favoring qualified care for its ill and infirm. In addition, the court noted that general societal concerns for qualified patient care militate against an employer's discharging an employee for voicing dissatisfaction with procedures he or she reasonably believes might endanger the health, safety, and well-being of the patients (188 Cal. App. 3d 1437, 1444) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.46

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.46 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Discharge Based on Employee's Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS BASED ON PLAINTIFF'S REFUSAL TO PERFORM AN UNLAWFUL ACT.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph B.]

C. Termination for Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act Violates Public Policy. An employee's continued employment may not be made contingent on his or her commission of an unlawful act at the instance of his or her employer; a discharge based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act gives rise to a tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 176, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 ; see Lab. Code § 1102.5(c)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a contention that, in terminating plaintiff's employment, the employer violated public policy because the termination was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act. If it is arguable that the authority cited in Paragraph C is distinguishable, use the optional paragraph as a basis for arguing in more detail how the plaintiff's conduct is entitled to public-policy protection.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's discharge was due to plaintiff's refusal to commit an unlawful act, and therefore can be the basis of a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or in a summary judgment motion. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that plaintiff was discharged as a proximate resultof his/her refusal to commit an unlawful act. Counsel should also cite legal authority for the unlawfulness of the act. For example, counsel could discuss facts that the employer pressured plaintiff to commit an illegal act, that plaintiff refused to yield to the pressure, and that soon thereafter plaintiff was fired. Evidence that there was not another, legitimate reason (such as poor performance or misconduct) for the discharge also should be discussed, such as evidence that plaintiff had a long-term employment relationship with the employer and had received favorable performance evaluations. For an example of arguments regarding lack of good cause for discharge, see § 100.27.

[c] Related Memoranda

Section 100.41 is general points and authorities for a situation where the termination was not based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act, and where none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See § 100.42 (where the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.43 (where the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.44 (where the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.45 (where the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.47 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), § 100.49 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (where the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.22.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04[2][d] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Termination for Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act Violates Public Policy

In Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , plaintiff's complaint alleged that he had worked for defendants for 15 years, receiving regular advances, merit increases, and commendatory evaluations throughout the early years. Beginning sometime after his tenth year, however, defendants allegedly began to pressure plaintiff to coerce independent service stations to cut their prices. Plaintiff further alleged that when he refused to yield to this pressure, his supervisor threatened termination, and that soon thereafter plaintiff was fired. The ostensible reason for the termination was incompetence, but in fact, plaintiff contended that the sole reason for his discharge was his refusal to commit the unlawful acts that were the subject of defendants' attempted coercion. Plaintiff sought relief on a number of grounds, including the ground that defendants had committed the tort of wrongful discharge. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that a terminated employee's remedy sounds only in contract and not in tort, and that trial court sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court overturned the judgment, holding that well-reasoned California and out-of-state authority supports the position that when a discharge would contravene a fundamental public policy, the employee injured by the discharge may sue the employer in tort (27 Cal. 3d 167, 176-178) . In discussing the parameters of the tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the Court noted with approval past cases such as Kouff v. Bethlehem-Alameda Shipyard (1949) 90 Cal. App. 2d 322, 325, 202 P.2d 1059 , in which a tort cause of action was stated by allegations that plaintiff had been terminated from his job for acting as an election poll official, in violation of statute (27 Cal. 3d 167, 176) .

The Court held further that an employer's authority over its employee does not extend to the right to coerce the employee to perform an unlawful act in furtherance of the employer's interests, and that an employee whohas been discharged for refusal to yield to the coercion, thereby incurring damages, may sue the employer in tort (27 Cal. 3d 167, 178) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Termination for Refusal to Commit Unlawful Act Violates Public Policy

In Jacobs v. Universal Development Corp. (1997) 53 Cal. App. 4th 120 , the court of appeal was confronted with an employer's contention that, since the discharged employee had for a time participated in the illegal conduct, the in pari delicto doctrine barred recovery. The employer had won summary judgment based on the in pari delicto theory.

Plaintiff worked for a two-year period as sales and marketing director for a residential developer. On a number of occasions, from nearly the beginning of his employment, he protested that he thought certain rebates to purchasers were illegal. There were also periods in which he acquiesced in the program, fearing that he would be fired if he did not. He received commissions on the sales which were made with illegal terms. After finally taking a stand that he would not acquiesce further, he was discharged (53 Cal. App. 4th 692, 696, 700-701) .

The court noted that the purpose of the in pari delicto doctrine was to prevent the courts from being used to enforce an illegal bargain or permit the plaintiff to recover benefits based on illegal conduct. The situation presented by the current case was not of that nature, but rather of the kind which the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy was meant to address. I.e., there was a clear need to vindicate a public policy against employers forcing their employees into illegality (53 Cal. App. 4th 692, 699-700, 702-703) . To hold otherwise when an employee initially acquiesces in an employer's criminality would simply discourage employees in that situation from ceasing their participation in the illegal conduct (53 Cal. App. 4th 692, 703) . The court remanded the case for trial.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.47

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.47 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge in Retaliation for Employee's Attempt to Rectify Employer's Public Policy Violation

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS RETALIATION FOR PLAINTIFF'S ATTEMPT TO RECTIFY HIS/HER EMPLOYER'S PUBLIC POLICY VIOLATION.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph A.]

B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph B.]

C. Discharge for Seeking to Rectify Public Policy Violation. A former employee discharged in retaliation for seeking to rectify the employer's public policy violation has a common-law cause of action in tort against the employer (Blom v. N.G.K. Spark Plugs (U.S.A.), Inc. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 388, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 139).

[Optional] D. Termination in Retaliation for Voicing Concerns About Legality or Morality of Conduct of Enterprise. Public policy favors protection of employees from dismissal for voicing concerns, within an enterprise, concerning the legality or morality of the enterprise's conduct. A terminated employee states a cause of action for wrongful discharge based on violation of public policy by pleading (1) the employer's policy to contravene a statutory proscription affecting matters relating to the employer's business; (2) the employee's protest to company management regarding the unlawful policy; and (3) retaliatory termination of employment resulting from the protest (Hejmadi v. AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 538-540, 249 Cal. Rptr. 5).

[Optional] E. Termination for Reporting Coworkers' Illegal Activity. An employee who is terminated in retaliation for reporting to his or her employer reasonably suspected illegal conduct by other employees that harms the public as well as the employer, has a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Collier v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1119-1120, 279 Cal. Rptr. 453).

[Optional] F. Termination for Reporting Employer's Hiring of Undocumented Aliens. By prohibiting the employment of undocumented aliens, the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (8 U.S.C. § 1324a) establishes a public policy that protects an employee who complains to the authorities that the employer has hired undocumented aliens (Jie v. Liang Tai Knitwear Co., Ltd. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661-662, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 682).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used in support of the contention that plaintiff's allegations of discharge in retaliation for his or her attempt to rectify a public policy violation committed by defendant do in fact state a cause of action.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy can be based on a discharge in retaliation for an employee's attempt to rectify his or her employer's violation of public policy, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or in a summary judgment motion. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employer committed a public policy violation (for example, racially discriminatory practices), that plaintiff sought to rectify the violation, and that soon thereafter plaintiff was discharged. Counsel should also discuss any other evidence of retaliation for plaintiff's protests, such as facts that plaintiff's working conditions deteriorated or that plaintiff received a wage cut or poor performance ratings. Facts tending to show that there was not another, legitimate reason for the dismissal (such as poor performance or misconduct) also could be discussed, such as proof that plaintiff had a long-term employment relationship with the employer and previously had received favorable performance evaluations. For an example of arguments regarding lack of good cause for discharge, see § 100.27.

[c] Related Memoranda

Section 100.41 is general points and authorities for a situation where the discharge was not in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation, and where none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See § 100.42 (where the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.43 (where the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.44 (where the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.45 (where the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.46 (where the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act), § 100.49 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's disclosure of wrongdoing to upper management or governmental authorities), and § 100.50 (where the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.22.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Seeking to Rectify Public Policy Violation

In Blom v. N.G.K. Spark Plugs (U.S.A.), Inc. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 139 , a former personnel manager of a company brought an action against the employer (a subsidiary and its parent corporation) for wrongful discharge, following his termination because of his efforts to end discriminatory practices in the company against the minority of employees who were not Japanese. When plaintiff was hired, he was told to "Americanize" the staff. However, his efforts to diversify personnel andeliminate discrimination against non-Japanese and women employees regarding wages and other benefits were resisted. The efforts included attempts to secure compliance with the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.] and with Title VII of the federal Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.]. The employer not only rejected plaintiff's efforts, but also retaliated against him with respect to his salary, working conditions, and performance evaluations. Ultimately, he was terminated because of his antidiscrimination efforts and defendants' resistance to them (whether plaintiff resigned or was constructively discharged was found by the appellate court to be a triable issue). The complaint alleged causes of action that included wrongful termination and breach of employment contract. Defendants moved for summary adjudication that the wrongful discharge causes of action were groundless, contending, inter alia, that California common law provided no cause of action for wrongful discharge in retaliation for seeking to correct an employers' sex or national origin discrimination. With respect to that issue, the trial court ruled that although plaintiff stated public policies sufficient to state a Tameny cause of action, it was preempted by FEHA [Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 173-178 , 164 Cal. Rpr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , discussed in § 100.46[3][a]]. Defendants successfully moved for summary judgment on all causes of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that FEHA does not preempt a common-law cause of action for wrongful termination based on violation of public policy, and that plaintiff stated a cause of action for discharge in retaliation for seeking to rectify defendants' violations (3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 386-390) . With respect to the existence of a cause of action based on defendants' conduct, the court noted that the cause of action for tortious wrongful discharge derives from Tameny, and that the strength and sufficiency of the public policies cited by plaintiff in the instant case were irrefutable (3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 387) . The court rejected defendants' claim that no common-law right of action exists for discharge in retaliation for seeking to correct or remedy an employer's sex or national origin discrimination (3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 386-388) . The court noted that the Supreme Court decided Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 (discussed in § 100.43[3][a]) after the trial court's decision in the instant case. The court held that Rojo supports the existence of a California public policy against discrimination based on sex as well as national origin. Moreover, the court stated, "retaliation" has long provided a basis for wrongful discharge cases, including Tameny itself. In the present case, the alleged basis of plaintiff's discharge was "retaliation" for his efforts to require defendants to conform to employment discrimination laws and policies (3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 388-389) . The court stated that this retaliation frustrates and contravenes the underlying public policy so as to give rise to a Tameny cause of action. The court concluded that Tameny and its progeny confirm that discharge of an employee in retaliation for resisting employer violations of laws that secure important public policies contravenes those policies, and gives rise to a common-law action in tort. Accordingly, the court reversed (3 Cal. App. 4th 382, 387-390) .

[b] Termination in Retaliation for Voicing Concerns About Legality or Morality of Conduct of Enterprise

In Hejmadi v. AMFAC, Inc. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 249 Cal. Rptr. 5 , after shopping in a department store owned by the corporation in which he was employed as vice-president and treasurer, plaintiff and his girlfriend were forcibly detained, and the girlfriend was accused of theft and subjected to a strip search by store personnel. As a corporate officer and senior executive, plaintiff voiced his concerns and later tried to change the corporate policy regarding store security, which he claimed was illegal and violative of personal rights. Plaintiff was discharged five months after the incident and subsequently brought suit on several causes of action against defendant, including a wrongful discharge action based on public policy violation. The trial court dismissed the action after sustaining without leave to amend defendant's demurrer to that action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed on that action, finding that plaintiff had stated a cause of action. The court explained that when the discharge of an employee violates fundamental principles of public policy, it is seen as wrongful because it arises out of a duty implied in law on the part of the employer to conduct its affairs in compliance with public policy (202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 538) . Plaintiff argued that public policy favors protection of employees against dismissal for voicing concerns, within an enterprise, concerning the legality or morality of the enterprise's conduct, and that a cause of action for wrongful discharge will be stated when it is alleged the employee was terminated in retaliation for complaining to management that the employer's acts violated public policy. The court agreed, finding that even in the absence of "whistleblowing," an activity specifically protected by Lab. Code § 1102.5, plaintiff may still state a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 539) . The court said that Penal Code § 490.5, as it was written at the time of the incident, did not authorize defendant to subject plaintiff's girlfriend to a strip search, and therefore plaintiff's concerns were well grounded. The court concluded that a tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy will be stated when the former employee-plaintiff pleads (1) the employer's policy to contravene a statutory proscription affecting matters relating to the employer's business; (2) the employee's protest to company management regarding the unlawful policy; and (3) retaliatory termination of employment resulting from the protest (202 Cal. App. 3d 525, 540) .

[c] Termination for Reporting Coworkers' Illegal Activity

The plaintiff in Collier v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 279 Cal. Rptr. 453 , was a regional manager at his employer's distribution center, which shipped phonograph records and other recorded products ("cleans"), at no cost to the recipients, for promotional purposes. "Cleans" could, however, have monetary value to a recipient who chose to ignore their promotional purpose and sell them at retail or to return them for credit. In 1984, the plaintiff became suspicious of criminal conduct by certain "cleans" recipients and required shipping personnel to give him copies of all documents for "cleans" ordered by certain company vice presidents. He also reported his suspicions to higher management. Subsequently, the plaintiff was fired, purportedly for failing to perform his job adequately. He then sued, claiming that he was actually fired in retaliation for checking on, trying to prevent, and reporting possible illegal conduct. He asserted three causes of action: (1) wrongful termination in violation of public policy; (2) breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing; and (3) breach of implied contract. The employer demurred to the first cause of action, arguing that under Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , an employee cannot state a cause of action for wrongful termination based on reporting a fellow employee's illegal conduct to the employer [see discussion in § 100.20[3][a]]. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to overturn the ruling, and the court of appeal issued it.

The court of appeal held that an employee who is terminated for reporting to his employer suspected illegal conduct by other employees has a cause of action for tortious wrongful discharge (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1119-1120) . The court distinguished Foley from the case before it as not having the same public policy implications. In particular, the plaintiff reported suspected conduct that may have violated antitrust laws and laws against bribery and kickbacks, embezzlement, tax evasion, and possibly even drug trafficking and money laundering (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1122) . In addition, under Foley's hypothetical test [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 670 n.12, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] , an agreement prohibiting an employee from reporting to an employer suspicions of ongoing criminal conduct by coworkers would be a disservice to both the employer's and the public's interests (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1124-1125) . The plaintiff's report served not only the interests of his employer, but also the public interest in deterring crime and the interests of persons who stood to suffer specific harm, namely artists and tax authorities (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1123) . The court also felt that it was important that the alleged misconduct involved, as it did in Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , violations of the antitrust laws, which provide for both criminal prosecution and civil liability [see, e.g., 15 U.S.C. §§ 1, 4, 13a], and offer a broad scope of citizen enforcement [see Blue Shield of Virginia v. McCready (1982) 457 U.S. 465, 472, 102 S. Ct. 2540, 73 L. Ed. 2d 149] (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1124) .

The court also relied on Lab. Code § 1102.5(b), which prohibits employers from retaliating against employees who report a reasonably suspected violation of the law to a government or law enforcement agency. Although Lab. Code § 1102.5 did not directly protect the plaintiff, it evinces a strong public interest in encouraging employee reports of illegal activity in the workplace (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1123-1124) .

Finally, the court distinguished American Computer Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 261 Cal. Rptr. 796 [discussed in § 100.53[3][a]], which held that an employee fired for telling his employer that he believed certain individuals were receiving consulting fees without rendering any services did not allege a public-policy cause of action. The only victim of wrongdoing in American Computer, explained the court of appeal, was the employer itself (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1125-1126) . Furthermore, American Computer focused on the absence of any attempt to coerce criminal conduct and the absence of a direct violation of a statute protecting the employee's rights, a position expressly rejected by Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 91, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 . Rojo held that discharge because of resistance and objection to sexual harassment contravened a fundamental and substantial public policy, and recognized a "fundamental public interest in a workplace free from ... sexism" [Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 90, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 ; see discussion in § 100.43[3][a]]. The court of appeal felt that there is an equally compelling fundamental public interest in a workplace free from crime (228 Cal. App. 3d 1117, 1127) .

[d] Termination in Retaliation for Voicing Concerns About Legality or Morality of Conduct of Enterprise

In Gould v. Maryland Sound Industries, Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718 , plaintiff alleged, among other things, that his employer had terminated him in retaliation for reporting to management that certain employees were working overtime but not being paid overtime wages, and that the discharge was in contravention of fundamental public policy involving the payment of overtime wages. The trial court sustained the defendant-employer's demurrer to this cause of action, but the court of appeal reversed.

The appellate court found that the duty to pay overtime wages is indeed a fundamental public policy. The court then rejected the employer's contention that the discharge did not contravene the public policy because the plaintiff himself was not entitled to overtime wages. The court explainedthat plaintiff need not be a direct beneficiary of the fundamental public policy violated by his or her discharge. Finally, the court rejected the contention that the discharge did not contravene a fundamental public policy because plaintiff's report of overtime violations to management served only the employer's private interests. The court stated that plaintiff informed management about ongoing conduct which was illegal and inimical to the public health and general welfare, and that prior cases have recognized the tort of wrongful discharge for terminating an employee for reporting to the employer about existing unhealthful or unlawful conduct (31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1150) .

[e] Termination for Reporting Employer's Hiring of Undocumented Aliens

In Jie v. Liang Tai Knitwear Co., Ltd. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 654, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 682 , the plaintiffs sued their former employer for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. The plaintiffs alleged that they had been discharged in retaliation for complaining to the employer, and then reporting to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, that the employer had been employing undocumented workers. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs. The court held that the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (8 U.S.C. § 1324a), which provides criminal and civil sanctions for knowingly hiring illegal aliens, embodies a fundamental, substantial, and well-established public policy of protecting documented workers from employment discrimination and from competition by undocumented workers. When the employer hired undocumented workers, it violated that policy, and when the employer terminated the plaintiffs in retaliation for reporting the violation, that was also a violation of the policy (89 Cal. App. 4th 654, 661-662) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.48

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.48 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge in Retaliation for Employee's "Whistleblowing"

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS IN RETALIATION FOR PLAINTIFF'S ATTEMPT TO DISCLOSE DEFENDANT'S WRONGFUL CONDUCT.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41[1], Paragraph A].

B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41[1], Paragraph B].

C. Discharge for Disclosure of Improper Governmental Activities. Discharge in violation of the public policy that government employees should be able to disclose wrongful conduct without suffering work-related reprisal is the common law tort of wrongful termination in violation of public policy (Bayley v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1330-1331 & n.15, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707). The policy protects an employee who makes a disclosure to the employing agency; it is not necessary that the employee have disclosed the wrongful conduct to an outside agency (Lab. Code § 1102.5(e); Gardenhire v. Housing Auth. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 236, 241-243, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 893).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff was wrongfully terminated for disclosing improper activities by the employer or one of its agents. The language in Paragraph C relating to improper governmental activities and disclosures by governmental employees should be added if applicable.

Caution:

Before using the form on behalf of a nongovernmental employee or when the disclosure was not to a governmental agent, counsel should read the Discussion of Authorities in § 100.48[3].

The form should be combined with any of the other forms in this chapter that are applicable to the particular case.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or allegations showing that the plaintiff sought to rectify particular wrongful conduct by contacting the appropriate higher-level person or outside authority.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for alleging wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

Any of the other points and authorities for supporting a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with this form. If the case involves a nongovernmental employee, counsel should consider whether some of the optional paragraphs of § 100.47 are more appropriate. See the concluding paragraph of the discussion of the Bayley case in § 100.48[3][a].

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Disclosure of Improper Governmental Activities

In Bayley v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 707 , plaintiff alleged that he was assigned by his superior at the Associated Students of UCLA, apparently a University of California entity, to examine the feasibility of a major construction project. When he reported that ASUCLA was in financial difficulty and that the project would make matters worse, he was reassigned to a project for which he was not qualified. After further issues with his supervisor, whom he believed was misleading the ASUCLA board regarding a fiscal crisis that could bankrupt the Association, he spoke to two Board members about the problem. His supervisor terminated him. Plaintiff sued for wrongful termination in violation of public policy and negligence, along with other causes of action. The trial court sustained demurrers to all causes of action without leave to amend (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1320-1323) .

The court of appeal first considered a contention that plaintiff's action was defective for failure to allege exhaustion of internal remedies of the employer. Because plaintiff had alleged and offered amended allegations showing that the supervisor had misled him as to what his grievance rights were, the court concluded that the employer's alleged conduct either estopped it from requiring that the internal procedures be followed or amounted to a waiver of its rights to have those procedures be used (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1325-1326) .

The court then noted that there was a three-part test for determining whether there is a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy in a particular area: whether the policy is delineated in a statutory or constitutional provision; whether it involves a matter affecting society at large rather than the purely personal interests of the plaintiff or the employer; and whether the policy is fundamental, substantial, and well-established at the time of termination (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1326-1327) . (For a more authoritative statement of the test, see the discussion of Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 in § 100.42[3][c].)

In this case the court concluded that all three tests were met. The primary statutory delineation of the policy was The Reporting of Improper Governmental Activities Act (now called California Whistleblower Protection Act) (Gov. Code § 8547 et seq.), which protects those who report improper governmental activities to the State Auditor, but the court also cited Lab. Code § 1102.5(b) (protecting non-governmental employees who report employer misconduct to public authorities) and Gov. Code § 53296 et seq. (protecting local agency employees) (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1327-1331 & n.15). It considered the plaintiff's having made the report to persons other than the Auditor immaterial: the point was not whether the statute applied to plaintiff, but whether it delineates a public policy, the protection of which he could claim (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1330) .

The court rejected a defense contention that plaintiff's failure to pursue a statutory internal remedy barred the suit, concluding that pursuing the remedy is a prerequisite for a statutorily-based legal action but not for a common law one (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1328) .

The court also found that plaintiff could successfully plead a negligence claim, since it alleged breach of defendant's duties to apprise plaintiff of his rights as an employee and to follow its own grievance procedures (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1331-1332) .

The case is only direct authority in support of a claim by a former governmental employee for making a disclosure to a governmental authority. A non-public-sector employee could note the court's citation of Lab. Code § 1102.5(b) as additional support for its conclusion that there is a "public policy that employees should be able to disclose wrongful conduct without suffering work-related reprisal" (57 Cal. App. 4th 1314, 1330-1331 n.15).

Similarly, if the disclosure is not to a governmental authority, a plaintiff might argue that Bayley on its facts was about a disclosure to those with authority over the offending supervisor, not to a governmental agent charged with investigating wrongdoing. However, a defendant would have a strong basis for distinguishing the case, and plaintiff's counsel would do well to consider whether some of the optional paragraphs of § 100.47 would be more appropriate.

In Gardenhire v. Housing Auth. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 236, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 893 , the plaintiff was an employee of the Housing Authority of the City of Los Angeles. In her first six years of employment, the plaintiff had good and outstanding performance reviews; she received promotions and pay increases and was named employee of the year in 1996. Later that year, the plaintiff reported to her supervisor that an individual who had several consulting contracts with the Housing Authority had asked the plaintiff to allow certain illegal acts regarding his contracted work. Soon thereafter, a substantial portion of the plaintiff's responsibilities were transferred to another employee, and the plaintiff eventually received a very unfavorable performance evaluation.

The plaintiff filed suit against the Housing Authority and her supervisor, alleging causes of action for discrimination, retaliation, and harassment under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.). At the end of trial, the trial court granted the plaintiff's motion to amend the complaint to add a cause of action against the Housing Authority under Labor Code Section 1102.5, the "whistle-blower" statute. That statute prohibits employment discrimination against an employee who discloses to a government agency or law-enforcement agency information about violations of federal or state law (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)). This provision is applicable to employees of public agencies such as the defendant Housing Authority (Lab. Code § 1106). After the trial court dismissed all but the "whistle-blower" cause of action and a cause of action for the intentional infliction of emotional distress, the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The Housing Authority appealed, contending that the plaintiff had not established a cause of action under the whistle-blower statute because she had reported her suspected violation of the law to her employer, rather than to a separate government agency or a law-enforcement agency. The court of appeal rejected this contention. Relying on the clear language of the statute, the court held that in this case the plaintiff's report to her employer was sufficient to bring her within the coverage of the statute. The statute clearly covers employees who report their concerns to public agencies, and the plaintiff reported directly to a public agency, which happened also to be her employer (85 Cal. App. 4th 236, 241-243) . The "whistle-blower" statute was later amended to provide expressly that it applies to a report made by an employee of a government agency to his or her employer [Lab. Code § 1102.5(e)].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.49

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.49 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge in Retaliation for In-House Counsel's Compliance With Mandatory Ethical Requirements--Cause of Action Can Be Maintained Without Violating Attorney-Client Confidences

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION OF PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT AS IN-HOUSE COUNSEL WAS IN RETALIATION FOR PLAINTIFF'S COMPLIANCE WITH MANDATORY ETHICAL OBLIGATIONS. [THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IS NOT PRECLUDED BECAUSE THE PROOFS NECESSARY TO ESTABLISH THE CAUSE OF ACTION WILL NOT VIOLATE PRINCIPLES OF PROFESSIONAL CONFIDENTIALITY].

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph B.]

C. Discharge of In-House Counsel for Following Mandatory Ethical Obligation. An in-house attorney who is discharged from employment for following a mandatory ethical obligation prescribed by professional rule or statute can maintain a wrongful discharge action against the employer (General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188-1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487).

[Optional] D. Discharged In-House Counsel May Bring Wrongful Discharge Action if Attorney-Client Confidences Will Not Be Publicly Revealed. A claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy that could be maintained by a non-attorney employee may be maintained by a discharged in-house counsel, if the elements of the action can be established without the public disclosure of confidential information protected by the attorney-client privilege (General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 ; Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 308-315, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a contention that sufficient facts are alleged to show that in terminating plaintiff's employment, the employer acted in retaliation for plaintiff's following a mandatory ethical obligation. If it is arguable that the authority cited in Paragraph C is distinguishable, use Optional Paragraph B as a basis for arguing in more detail how the plaintiff's conduct is entitled to public-policy protection. Optional Paragraph D may be used if defendant contends that the wrongful discharge cause of action cannot be maintained without violating attorney-client confidences, on the ground that the essential elements of the cause of action would not require disclosure of material protected by the attorney-client privilege.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's discharge can be the basis of a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy because the discharge was in retaliation for plaintiff following a mandatory ethical obligation. Also, these points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff can establish the elements of his or her cause of action for wrongful discharge without violating the attorney-client privilege (in General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , the Court pointed out that these issues will ordinarily not be resolvable at the demurrer stage, but would instead be litigated and determined in the context of motions for protective orders or to compel further discovery responses, as well as at the time of motions for summary judgment). These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should cite the professional rule or statute in which the ethical requirement at issue is delineated, establish the unequivocal requirements of the ethical norm, and argue that the ethical norm is intended for the protection of the public at large. Counsel further should discuss facts indicating that but for plaintiff's exercise of the ethical requirement, plaintiff would not have been discharged. If appropriate, facts should be set forth showing that proof of the wrongful discharge cause of action can be established without the need to disclose matters protected by the attorney-client privilege. For example, counsel could argue that the trial court could impose certain measures to maintain confidentiality, such as protective orders, in camera proceedings, limited admissibility, and other restrictions on evidence. In making this showing, counsel should ensure that the confidentiality of matters covered by the privilege is maintained.

[c] Related Memoranda

Section 100.41 is general points and authorities for a situation where the plaintiff was not defendant's in-house counsel, and where none of the other specific situations covered by § 100.42 et seq. applies. See § 100.42 (where the discharge was in violation of a statute protecting plaintiff against discharge), § 100.43 (where the discharge discriminated against plaintiff as a member of a class protected against discrimination by a constitutional provision), § 100.44 (where the discharge punished plaintiff for exercising or refusing to waive a constitutional right), § 100.45 (where the discharge was based on the employee's protest of unsafe working conditions), § 100.46 (where the discharge was based on the employee's refusal to commit an unlawful act, § 100.47 (where the discharge was in retaliation for the employee's attempt to rectify the employer's public policy violation), and § 100.50 (where the plaintiff was defendant's in-house counsel).

For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be adapted and submitted in opposition to the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.55, 100.56.

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of In-House Counsel for Following Mandatory Ethical Obligation

In General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , Andrew Rose (Rose) was an attorney employed by General Dynamics, Inc. General Dynamics terminated Rose's employment, and Rose sued, alleging that his termination violated an implied agreement that he would be terminated only for good cause and violated public policy on the ground that the real reason for the discharge was to cover up illegal conduct at General Dynamics. General Dynamics demurred to the complaint, arguing that Rose's employment as an attorney could be terminated at any time, for any reason or for no reason. The trial court overruled the demurrer, and the court of appeal denied General Dynamics' petition for a writ of mandate, holding that the complaint was sufficient to survive a general demurrer. The California Supreme Court granted review, and affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal.

The Court noted the increasing number and professional stature of so-called in-house or corporate counsel, and the difficulties inherent in attempting to apply standards applicable to outside law firms to attorneys whose economic fate is tied to a single employer. The Court described their status as often similar to other corporate executives, with the addition (by virtue of the attorney's professional license) of ethical imperatives that exceed those of non-attorneys. The issue was therefore phrased by the Court as a consideration of the effects of in-house counsel's professional role and ethical duties on access to judicial remedies for alleged wrongful termination that are available to the nonattorney colleague (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1173) .

The Court held that the fiduciary values of mutual trust and confidence can be protected from the threat of damages by limiting judicial access to those claims grounded in explicit and unequivocal ethical norms embodied in the Rules of Professional Conduct and statutes, and claims that are maintainable by the non-attorney employee under Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1094-1097, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , under circumstances in which the Legislature has manifested a judgment that the principle of professional confidentiality does not apply (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188) .

If the elements of a wrongful-discharge-in-violation-of-public-policy claim cannot, for reasons peculiar to the particular case, be fully established without breaching the attorney-client privilege, the suit must be dismissed in the interest of preserving the privilege (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190) . Whether the attorney-client privilege precludes a plaintiff's recovery will ordinarily not be resolvable at the demurrer stage. Rather, in the usual case, whether the privilege serves as a bar to the plaintiff's recovery will be litigated and determined in the context of motions for protective orders or to compel further discovery responses, as well as at the time of summary judgment (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190) . In making this determination, the trial court can and should apply an array of ad hoc measures within its equitable powers in order to permit the attorney plaintiff to attempt to make the necessary proof while protecting from disclosure client confidences subject to the privilege (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) . The Court rejected any suggestion that the scope of the attorney-client privilege should be diluted in the context of in-house counsel and their corporate clients (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190) .

The Court also set forth subsidiary rules that will deter the incidence of strike suits or claims filed in bad faith. The contested ethical requirement must be clearly established by the ethics code or statutory provision; disagreements over policy are not actionable. Further, the plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the unequivocal requirements of the ethical norm at issue, and of establishing that the employer's conduct was motivated by impermissible considerations under a "but for" standard of causation. The ethical norm at issue must be one that is intended for the protection of the public at large; measures designed solely for the benefit of the attorney or the client will not suffice to support a wrongful discharge claim (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) .

[b] Discharged In-House Counsel May Bring Wrongful Discharge Action if Attorney-Client Confidences Will Not Be Publicly Revealed

The facts and procedural background of General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , are discussed under § 100.49[3][a]. The Court held that judicial access for claims of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy extends to those limited circumstances in which in-house counsel's nonattorney colleagues would be permitted to pursue a cause of action, and governing professional rules or statutes expressly remove the requirement of attorney confidentiality (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188) .

In Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 , a former in-house counsel sued her former employer for wrongful discharge. The employer filed its own suit against the employee, alleging that the disclosure of the employer's confidential information to the employee's attorneys constituted a violation of the employee's ethical duties (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e)). The employer alsomoved to disqualify the employee's attorneys on the ground that they had been exposed to confidential information concerning the defendant. The trial court denied the employer's motion to disqualify the employee's attorneys; the trial court also denied the employee's motion to dismiss the employer's suit.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the employer's motion to disqualify the employee's attorneys and reversed the denial of the employee's motion to dismiss the employer's suit. The court of appeal acknowledged that the Supreme Court had held in General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court that a former in-house counsel's wrongful termination suit must be dismissed if it cannot be fully established without breaching the attorney-client privilege (see General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , above). However, the court of appeal noted that the Supreme Court's primary concern was over the public disclosure of confidential information. Thus, the court of appeal reasoned, disclosure of confidential information to a plaintiff's own attorneys for purposes of the wrongful-termination action would not violate the rule of General Dynamics because (1) the Supreme Court's opinion in General Dynamics contemplated such nonpublic disclosure to the plaintiff's own attorneys, (2) such a disclosure would not violate the plaintiff's duty of confidentiality to the employer (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e)) so long as the disclosure was limited to the information necessary to prepare and prosecute the wrongful-termination action, and (3) fundamental fairness requires that the plaintiff be allowed to make such a disclosure to the extent necessary to prepare the claim for wrongful termination (89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 310-314) . Once such a disclosure has been made to the plaintiff's attorneys, it is up to the attorneys to determine if, when, and how such information can be utilized in the wrongful-termination action in conformity with the guidelines laid down by the Supreme Court in General Dynamics (89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 315) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.50

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.50 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge of Employee for Refusing to Sign Employment Agreement Containing Illegal Covenant Not to Compete

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS BASED ON PLAINTIFF'S REFUSAL TO SIGN AN EMPLOYMENT AGREEMENT THAT CONTAINED AN ILLEGAL COVENANT NOT TO COMPETE.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Discharge for Refusal to Sign Illegal Covenant Not to Compete. Discharge of an employee for refusing to sign a noncompetition covenant that violates Business and Professions Code Section 16600 gives rise to a tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (D'Sa v. Playhut, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 929, 931-935, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff was wrongfully terminated for refusing to sign an employment agreement that contained an illegal covenant not to compete. A covenant not to compete is ordinarily void to the extent that it restrains a person from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind (Bus. & Prof.

Code § 16600; Edwards v. Arthur Andersen LLP (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 937, 945-950, 955, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 282, 288-292, 296, 189 P.3d 285 (noncompetition agreement is invalid under Bus. & Prof. Code § 16600, even if narrowly drawn, unless it falls within one of statutory exceptions provided by Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16601, 16602, 16602.5, which authorize noncompetition agreements in connection with sale of goodwill of business or dissolution of partnership or limited liability company)).

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or allegations showing that the defendant sought to condition employment, or continued employment, on the plaintiff's signing an employment agreement that contained an illegal covenant not to compete.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for alleging wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

Any of the other memoranda for supporting a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with thisform. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Refusal to Sign Illegal Covenant Not to Compete

In D'Sa v. Playhut, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 495 , the defendants had hired the plaintiff pursuant to an oral contract of employment for an indefinite term. Thereafter, the defendants presented the plaintiff with an employee confidentiality agreement, and when he refused to sign it, the defendants terminated the plaintiff's employment.

The confidentiality agreement contained provisions addressing employees' responsibilities concerning the nondisclosure of the defendants' trade secrets and the transfer to the defendants of inventions or patents arising from the employees' work. The agreement also contained a provision restricting an employee's competition with the defendants by, among other things, prohibiting the employee from rendering services to a competing entity for a year after the termination of employment with the defendants. The agreement also contained a severability provision, which stated that a judicial declaration that any part of the agreement was void or invalid would not invalidate the remainder of the agreement.

The plaintiff sued the defendants, claiming that his dismissal was in violation of public policy embodied in Business and Professions Code Section 16600, which provides that (with exceptions not relevant in this case) "every contract by which anyone is restrained from engaging in a lawful profession, trade, or business of any kind is to that extent void." The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, but the court of appeal reversed and remanded for further proceedings.

The court of appeal began its discussion by observing that the very broad noncompetition covenant contained in the confidentiality agreement was at least partially within the prohibition of Section 16600 and therefore to that extent void and unenforceable (85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 931) . The court then held that, because the noncompetition covenant was illegal, the plaintiff's discharge for refusing to sign it was a violation of public policy. The court characterized Section 16600 as a clear legislative declaration of the public policy against covenants not to compete (85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 932-933) .

The inclusion in the confidentiality agreement of a severability provision that would have preserved the enforceability of the remainder of the agreement contained did not change the result. The defendants argued that the severability provision would prevent the confidentiality agreement from being construed in a manner that would violate the public policy of Section 16600, and that therefore the agreement did not violate public policy. The court of appeal rejected this argument, noting that it was not likely that the defendants' employees would know that they could sign the confidentiality agreement without fear that they would be bound by the noncompetition covenant. Therefore, the court concluded, the illegality of the noncompetition covenant made the plaintiff's discharge a violation of public policy despite the presence of the severability provision (85 Cal. App. 4th 927, 933-934) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.51

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.51 Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Discharge of Employee for Designating Attorney to Conduct Negotiations With Employer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS BASED ON PLAINTIFF'S DESIGNATING AN ATTORNEY TO CONDUCT NEGOTIATIONS WITH DEFENDANT.

A. Employer's Right to Terminate Employment Cannot Be Exercised in Violation of Public Policy. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph A.]

B. Test for Public Policy Creating Protection Against Termination. [See § 100.41]1], Paragraph B.]

C. Discharge for Designating Attorney to Negotiate With Employer. Discharge of an employee for designating an attorney torepresent the employee in negotiations with the employer gives rise to a tort cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of the public policy embodied in Labor Code Section 923, which protects workers' right to organize (Gelini v. Tishgart (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 223-228, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that plaintiff was wrongfully terminated for designating an attorney to negotiate with the employer.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Counsel should, for example, cite evidence or allegations showing that the employer discharged the employee in retaliation for the employee's hiring of an attorney to negotiate with the employer.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for alleging wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

Any of the other points and authorities for supporting a wrongful discharge claim that are set out in this chapter may be combined with this form. For discussion of requirements and considerations for drafting memoranda, discussion on how to combine the forms of this publication in drafting, and discussion and general forms for completing a draft memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 100.52 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge for Designating Attorney to Negotiate With Employer

In Gelini v. Tishgart (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 447 , the plaintiff was an employee of the defendant attorney. When the plaintiff became pregnant, the defendant reduced the plaintiff's hours and pay by half. The plaintiff then retained counsel, who wrote a letter to the defendant advising him that he was discriminating against the plaintiff in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.]. Counsel's letter suggested the problem be resolved by having the plaintiff continue working full-time for four and a half months, at which time the plaintiff would take parental leave and eventually return to work for the defendant only if they both agreed. The defendant fired the plaintiff within a week.

The plaintiff sued alleging, among other things, wrongful termination in violation of Labor Code Section 923, which states in part that it is the public policy of the state "that it is necessary that the individual workman have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection." At trial, the jury found that the defendant had fired the plaintiff in retaliation for the letter. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for the plaintiff.

On appeal, the defendant did not challenge the jury's factual finding, instead contending that Section 923 applies only to collective bargaining or nonunion self-organizing among employees and does not protect individual employees like the plaintiff. The court of appeal rejected this contention, holding that it was settled law that Section 923 declares a public policy of protecting individual employees who retain counsel to represent them in negotiating terms and conditions of employment (77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 222-226) .

The court of appeal stated that if the issue presented were one of first impression, it would have decided that Section 923 protects only the rights of employees to bargain collectively or pursue other mutual remedies, and not the right of an individual employee to choose an attorney to represent him or her in negotiations over a personal dispute with an employer. However, the court felt bound by precedent to hold that the employer in this case had violated the public policy declared in Section 923 (see Montalvo v. Zamora (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 69, 75, 86 Cal. Rptr. 401 ; accord, Hentzel v. Singer Co. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 290, 296, 188 Cal. Rptr. 159 ;see also Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 666 n.5, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 (citing Montalvo with approval); Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 176, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (citing Montalvo with approval)) (77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 222-226) .

The court of appeal went on to hold that the public policy set forth in Section 923 met the requirements for a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. That is, (1) the policy is delineated in a statute; (2) the policy is "public" in the sense that it inures to the benefit of the public rather than serving merely individual interests, as shown by the Section 923's express statement that it expresses public policy; (3) the policy was well established at the time of the discharge; and (4) the policy is substantial and fundamental, as demonstrated by the vast array of statutes concerning employment, including Section 923 (77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 226-228) .

The court also stated that, although it is not obvious from Section 923's terms that it applies to individual employees, the statute does use the term "the individual workman," but it also recognizes that the individual unorganized worker is helpless to protect his or her rights, and thus is given the right to band together with others for mutual aid and protection. The court stated that it seemed anomalous for the Legislature to emphasize individual freedom on the one hand, while on the other hand limiting the protection of individual employees while extending protection to several employees together. Thus, although the court found the fairest reading to be that the statute is meant to protect individual employees only to the extent that they band together to negotiate with their employer, it found that the previous precedential construction of Section 923 by the courts does find support in the statute and provides notice to employers that the statute protects individual employees. Because the precedential interpretation is the settled law to this point, the court said that only the Supreme Court could alter that construction (77 Cal. App. 4th 219, 228) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.51A

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.51A Supporting Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Violation of Public Policy--Employer May Not Retaliate Against Employee Who Makes Good-Faith but Mistaken Complaint or Claim

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY, IN THAT THE TERMINATION WAS BASED ON THE PLAINTIFF'S REASONABLE, GOOD-FAITH BELIEF THAT _____[e.g., DEFENDANT HAD UNLAWFULLY FAILED TO PAY PLAINTIFF OVERTIME COMPENSATION].

Discharge of Employee for Making Good-Faith but Mistaken Complaint or Claim of Right Violates Public Policy. An employee's good-faith but mistaken belief that the employer is acting unlawfully is protected from employer retaliation (Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 87, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 ; Barbosa v. Impco Techs., Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1121-1123, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 923).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a contention that public policy is violated by the termination of an employee for making a good-faith complaint or claim against the employer, even though the complaint or claim turns out to be wrong. This form may be combined with other forms that may establish the fundamental public policy underlying the employee's complaint or claim (see, e.g., §§ 100.41 -100.51).

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law

stated. For example, counsel should show that, although the employer was not actually violating the law, the employee's belief that there was a violation was reasonably based on the information available to the employee at the relevant time.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Employee for Making Good-Faith but Mistaken Complaint or Claim of Right Violates Public Policy

In Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 , discussed in § 100.41[3], the California Supreme Court held that a plaintiff's failure to prove an actual violation of law by his employer did not defeat the wrongful termination cause of action. The Court explained that "an employee need not prove an actual violation of law; it suffices if the employer fired him for reporting his 'reasonably based suspicions' of illegal activity" (19 Cal. 4th 66, 87) .

In Barbosa v. Impco Techs., Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 923 , the court of appeal held that public policy protected the plaintiff from being terminated for making a good-faith claim to overtime pay, even though it was subsequently discovered that the defendant employer had not wrongfully denied the plaintiff any overtime pay (179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1121, 1123) . The court noted that the duty to pay overtime wages is a well-established fundamental public policy affecting the broad public interest; that public policy therefore protected the plaintiff against retaliation for making a good-faith claim to overtime pay (179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1122) . The court of appeal cited Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 16, 960 P.2d 1046 (discussed above), and Freund v. Nycomed Amersham (9th Cir. 2003) 347 F.3d 752, 759 , which held that as long as an employee makes a health or safety complaint in good faith, it does not matter for purposes of a wrongful-termination action whether the complaint identifies an actual violation of workplace-safety statutes or regulations. The court of appeal concluded that the same result should obtain when an employee exercises his or her statutory right to overtime wages out of a reasonable, good-faith belief that he or she is entitled to it, notwithstanding the later discovery that he or she is wrong (179 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1123) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.52

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.52 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Asserted Public Policy Not Delineated in Constitutional Provision, Statute, or Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT STATED A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL TERMINATION BASED ON VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY BECAUSE THE ASSERTED PUBLIC POLICY IS NOT DELINEATED IN ANY CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION, STATUTE, OR STATUTORILY AUTHORIZED ADMINISTRATIVE REGULATIONS.

Public Policy Must Be Delineated in Constitutional or Statutory Provision or in Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations. In a wrongful discharge action based on the employer's alleged violation of public policy, the underlying public policy must be delineated in constitutional or statutory provisions (Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 ; Sequoia Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1472, 1480, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888), or in administrative regulations authorized by statute (Green v. Ralee Engineering Co. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66, 71-72, 80-90).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a plaintiff's contention that the termination was in violation of public policy, based on the argument that the asserted public policy is not delineated in any constitutional or statutory provision [see Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] . In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the form set out in § 100.42.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the termination did not violate public policy because the asserted public policy is not delineated in a statutory or constitutional provision, for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, if appropriate, counsel should argue that plaintiff has not asserted a statutory or constitutional provision that contains the public policy at issue. If plaintiff has asserted a statutory or constitutional basis for the public policy, counsel should discuss evidence that the gravamen of defendant's alleged conduct is not delineated in the provisions relied on by plaintiff.For example, counsel could argue that although the provisions concern the subject matter generally, they do not state a public policy specifically prohibiting that conduct.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04[2][a] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Must Be Delineated in Constitutional or Statutory Provision or in Statutorily Authorized Administrative Regulations

The factual and procedural background of Gantt v. Sentry Insurance Co. (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , is discussed in § 100.41[3][a]. The California Supreme Court held that in wrongful termination actions based on violation of public policy, the public policy must derive from constitutional or statutory authority; i.e., reliance on judicial or other nonlegislative source is insufficient to support this cause of action (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095) . The Court also held that courts in wrongful discharge actions may not declare public policy without a basis in either constitutional or statutory provisions, and that a public-policy exception carefully tethered to fundamental policies that are delineated in constitutional or statutory provisions strikes the proper balance among the interests of employers, employees, and the public (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1095) . Although technically dictum, inasmuch as the issue was not raised in the case and plaintiff never asserted a basis for the action that was not founded on statutory authority, the Court treated the statement as settled law in Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-890, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 . Stevenson is discussed in full under in § 100.42[3][c].

In Sequoia Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 13 Cal. App. 4th 1472, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , a former employee brought a wrongful termination action against the insurance company employer after his termination allegedly for disagreeing with the perceived overall company practice by the claims department of inflating case reserves. He asserted that Proposition 103, which was adopted by voters in the 1988 general election for the express purpose of reducing and controlling insurance rates, created a public policy prohibiting that case reserve practice. Defendants unsuccessfully moved for summary judgment or summary adjudication, on the ground that plaintiff failed to state a factual or legal foundation for a wrongful termination claim based on public policy, then sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal.

The court of appeal let the writ issue, directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion for summary adjudication of the public policy cause of action and to enter a new order granting the motion (13 Cal. App. 4th 1472, 1482) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that Gantt permitted a public policy to be merely "derived from" or "based on" a statute, holding rather that under Gantt, the fundamental policies underlying the public policy exception must be delineated in a constitutional or statutory provision. The court in the instant case stated that a requirement that a policy be "delineated" entails more specificity than merely being "derived from" or "based on" its source, i.e., "delineate" means "to describe in detail." The court stated that although one should not assume that the employer's precise act must be specifically prohibited for the public policy exception to apply, a constitutional or statutory provision must sufficiently describe the type of prohibited conduct to enable an employer to know the fundamental public policies that are expressed in that law. In this case, the court noted, the employer was accused of violating public policy by attempting to persuade plaintiff to "inflate" case reserves. That court noted that plaintiff could not point to a specific statement in Proposition 103 or another statute that restricts the amount of reserves an insurer may set aside for the anticipated cost of a pending claim, and therefore no public policy could be inferred (13 Cal. App. 4th 1472, 1480) .

The factual and procedural background of Green v. Ralee Engineering Company (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 66 , is discussed in § 100.41[3][a]. In Green, the Supreme Court squarely held that public policy supporting a wrongful discharge claim may be embodied in statutorily authorized administrative regulations (19 Cal. 4th 66, 71-72) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.53

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.53 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Asserted Public Policy Does Not Inure to Benefit of Public at Large

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BASED ON VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY BECAUSE DEFENDANT DID NOT VIOLATE ANY POLICY THAT INURED TO THE BENEFIT OF THE PUBLIC AT LARGE.

A. Duty Underlying Public Policy Must Inure to Benefit of Public at Large. When a wrongful-discharge action alleges a violation of public policy, the discharge must affect a duty that inures to the benefit of the public at large, rather than to a particular employer or employee (Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; American Computer Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 667-669, 261 Cal. Rptr. 796).

[Optional] B. Termination of Employee for Refusing Drug Test Is Not Violation of Public Policy. Although drug testing may violate an employee's constitutional right to privacy, such a violation is a private, not public, one, and as such does not give rise to a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy (Luck v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 28-29, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 939).

[Optional] C. Denial of Employee's Request to Work Part-Time Does Not Violate Public Policy. An employer's denial of an employee's request for a reduced workload may not serve as the basis of an action for wrongful constructive discharge in violation of public policy. Even a statute authorizing the employer to establish programs allowing senior employees to work part-time does not create a sufficiently fundamental and substantial public policy to support a cause of action for wrongful constructive discharge in violation of public policy (Sinatra v. Chico Unified Sch. Dist. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 701, 706-708, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a wrongful discharge complaint based on a cause of action alleging the employer's violation of public policy, based on the argument that the public policy alleged does not affect a duty owed to the public at large, but rather affects only the particular employer or employee [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373] . In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.41 -100.45 regarding an employee's cause of action for wrongful discharge based on the employer's violation of public policy.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the public policy on which plaintiff bases the claim of wrongful discharge does not affect a duty to the public at large, for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the statutory or constitutional provision relied on by plaintiff, showing how such provision does not affect a duty to the public at large, but rather benefits only one particular party. For example, if plaintiff contends that he or she was discharged for reporting to the employer a coworker's violation of company rules, counsel could argue that such disclosure was only of a private nature because it was of interest only to the employer [see Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669-671, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 ; American Computer Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 667-669, 261 Cal. Rptr. 796] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04[2][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty Underlying Public Policy Must Inure to Benefit of Public at Large

The factual and procedural background of Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , is discussed in § 100.20[3][a]. With respect to the plaintiff's cause of action regarding violation of public policy, the Court noted that under Lab. Code § 2922, an "employment, having no specified term, may be terminated at the will of either party on notice to the other." This presumption may be superseded by a contract, express or implied, limiting the employer's right to discharge the employee. Absent any contract, however, the employment is "at will," and the employee can be fired with or without good cause. The employer's right to discharge an "at will" employee is still subject to limits imposed by public policy, because otherwise the threat of discharge could be used to coerce employees into committing crimes, concealing wrongdoing, or taking other action harmful to the public interest (47 Cal. 3d 654, 665) .

The Court traced the decisional history of wrongful-discharge actions based on public-policy violations. In Petermann v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 184, 188-189, 344 P.2d 25 , the court of appeal had held that it is contrary to public policy and sound morality to allow an employer to discharge any employee, whether the employment be for a designated or unspecified duration, on the ground that the employee declined to commit perjury, an act specifically enjoined by statute (47 Cal. 3d 654, 665-666) . Similarly, in Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , an action based on violation of federal anti-trust laws, the Court held that a tort action for wrongful discharge may lie if the employer conditions employment on required participation in unlawful conduct by the employee (47 Cal. 3d 654, 666) (for discussion of Tameny, see § 100.46[3][a]). The theoretical reason for labeling the discharge wrongful in those cases is not based on the terms and conditions of the contract, but rather arises out of a duty implied in law on the part of the employer to conduct its affairs in compliance with public policy. The Court reiterated an appellate-court decision holding that there is no logical basis to distinguish, in cases of wrongful termination for reasons violative of fundamental principles of public policy, between situations in which the employee is an at-will employee and those in which the employee has a contract for a specified term, because the tort is independent of the term of employment (47 Cal. 3d 654, 667) .

In Tameny, the Court deemed the cause of action based on public policy as "ex delicto," or arising "from a breach of duty growing out of the contract," rather than "from a breach of a promise set forth in the contract" or "ex contractu" (47 Cal. 3d 654, 667-667) . The Court held in Tameny that an employer's obligation to refrain from discharging an employee who refuses to commit a criminal act does not depend on any express or implied promises set forth in the employment contract, but rather reflects a duty imposed by law on all employers in order to implement the fundamental public policies embodied in the state's penal statutes. As such, a wrongful discharge suit exhibits the classic elements of a tort cause of action. In Tameny, because there was no statute specifically barring an employer from terminating an employee who refused to act illegally, the Court was required to consider whether, without the authority of an express prohibition on the reasons for discharge, the plaintiff's action could proceed. It concluded that even in the absence of explicit statutory provisions prohibiting the discharge of a worker on those grounds, fundamental principles of public policy and adherence to the objectives underlying the state's penal statutes require the recognition of a rule barring an employer from discharging an employee who has simply complied with a legal duty and has refused to commit an illegal act. The Court noted that the public policy examined in Tameny was one about which reasonable persons can have little disagreement, and that was "firmly established" at the time of discharge (47 Cal. 3d 654, 668) .

The Court in Foley observed that the law is unsettled with regard to whether tortious violation of public policy as a ground for wrongful discharge requires the violation of a specific statute or constitutional provision, but did not decide that issue (47 Cal. 3d 654, 668-669) . (Subsequently, in Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , the Court stated, in dictum, that the public policy supporting a wrongful termination action must be based on statutory or constitutional authority [see discussion of Gantt in § 100.41[3][a]].) However, the Court held that even when a statutory touchstone has been asserted (as in the instant case), it must still inquire whether the discharge is against public policy and affects a duty that inures to the benefit of the public at large rather than to a particular employer or employee. The Court held that, whether or not the existence of a statutory or constitutional link is required under Tameny, disparagement of a basic public policy must be alleged (47 Cal. 3d 654, 669) . Plaintiff alleged that defendant discharged him in derogation of a substantial public policy that imposes a legal duty on employees to report relevant business information to management, asserting that an employee is an agent, and as such is required to disclose to the principal all information relevant to the subject matter of the agency. Plaintiff contended that if he discovered information that might lead his employer to conclude that an employee was an embezzler, and should not be retained, plaintiff had a duty to communicate that information to hisprincipal (47 Cal. 3d 654, 669) . The Court concluded that the alleged duty was not founded in statute, noting that no enactment expressly requires an employee to report relevant information concerning other employees to the employer, and none prohibits discharge of the employee for so doing. The Court stated that it is unclear whether the duty to communicate relevant information is subsumed under the statutory duty of ordinary care regarding master-servant relations under Lab. Code § 2854, or is a separate duty not codified in that provision. Whether or not there is a statutory reporting duty, the Court did not find a substantial public policy prohibiting an employer from discharging an employee for performing that duty (47 Cal. 3d 654, 670) . When the duty of an employee to disclose information to the employer serves only the private interest of the employer, the rationale underlying the Tameny cause of action is not implicated (47 Cal. 3d 654, 670-671) . Therefore, with respect to that cause of action, the Court held that the court of appeal properly upheld the trial court's ruling sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend (47 Cal. 3d 654, 670) .

In American Computer Corp. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 261 Cal. Rptr. 796 , plaintiff, the director of marketing and sales at a computer firm, brought a wrongful termination action against his former employer alleging, among other things, that he was discharged in violation of public policy. Plaintiff alleged that he discovered that funds were being embezzled by several employees and former employees, but that when he reported his findings to his superiors, he was first told not to concern himself with this, and later discharged. The trial court overruled defendant's demurrer to this cause of action. Subsequently, the Supreme Court filed its opinion in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 669-671, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , discussed above. Relying on Foley, defendant filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, or in the alternative, for summary judgment. The court denied the motion, and defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition based on the decision in Foley. The court reiterated the holding in Foley that the policy violated must be a public one, and not a policy that serves only the private interest of the employer. The court stated that under the facts of the case, the only interest served was that of the employer because plaintiff was not punished for reporting criminal activity to a law enforcement agency, but for reporting the activity to his superiors. The court concluded that although plaintiff's actions might have conferred a public benefit in possibly preventing the commission of a crime, the potential for such a public interest was not a public policy weighty enough to give rise to a claim for wrongful discharge (213 Cal. App. 3d 664, 668-669) .

[b] Termination of Employee for Refusing Drug Test Is Not Violation of Public Policy

In Luck v. Southern Pacific Transportation Co. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 267 Cal. Rptr. 618 , cert. denied, 498 U.S. 939 , a computer programmer for a railroad was discharged for failure to take a required drug test. The employee filed suit for wrongful termination and other causes of action, and the jury returned a verdict in her favor. The employee applied for an award of attorney's fees without success, and appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order denying attorney's fees, and affirmed the judgment, although it found that several theories of liability were without legal support. The court held that a private employer may be liable for violating an employee's right to privacy, and that discharging an employee for exercising his or her right to privacy by refusing to take a drug test could constitute bad faith (218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 19, 26) . However, the court held that, measured against the standard in Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 668-669, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , requiring that the public policy affect a duty that inures to the public benefit, violation of the right to privacy, by its very name, cannot be a public right. In addition, the court stated that two other requirements set forth in Foley for a public policy case were missing. First, the public policy must be one about which reasonable persons can have little disagreement, and drug testing is a hotly contested issue about which there is no consensus concerning whether it is consistent with privacy rights. Second, the public policy must be one that was firmly established at the time of the termination, and at that time no cases had held that drug testing intruded on privacy rights (218 Cal. App. 3d 1, 28-29) .

Note that there is an apparent conflict among the courts of appeal on this point. The court of appeal in Semore v. Pool (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1087, 1096-1098, 266 Cal. Rptr. 280 , held that termination for refusing to take a drug test violates an employee's constitutional right to privacy, which is an assertion of a fundamental principle of public policy.

[c] Denial of Employee's Request to Work Part-Time Does Not Violate Public Policy

The plaintiff in Sinatra v. Chico Unified Sch. Dist. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 701, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661 , was a former school-district employee who claimed that he had been constructively discharged in violation of public policy when the district denied his request for a reduced workload. Specifically, the plaintiff claimed that the statute authorizing school districts to establish programs allowing educators who might otherwise retire to work part-time [see Educ. Code § 44922] embodies a fundamental and substantial California public policy. The superior court granted the school district's motion for judgment on the pleadings, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the school district's denial of the plaintiff's request for a reduced workload could not serve as the basis of an action for wrongful constructive discharge in violation of public policy. The court explained that not all statutes encompass a sufficient policy to support a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. Although the Legislature presumably believes that each statute enacted serves the public interest, the courts have clearly and consistently demanded that public policy supporting a wrongful discharge must be fundamental and substantial and must inure to the benefit of the public at large. Turning to the statute involved in this case, the court acknowledged that the statute grants school districts the discretion to implement part-time programs for senior employees [see Educ. Code § 44922]. While it enables school districts, therefore, to bestow a valuable right on a select segment of their employees, the court concluded that the statute does not embody the kind of universal and important right recognized as fundamental to the public good. School districts are not obligated to provide part-time programs, and the statute provides no direct benefit to the public at large. While individual teachers and administrators are able to reap the benefits of the part-time option, the benefit to the public is indirect and tangential. Accordingly, court of appeal concluded that the statute does not create a sufficiently fundamental and substantial public policy to support a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (119 Cal. App. 4th 701, 706-708) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.54

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.54 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Asserted Public Policy Is Inapplicable to Defendant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS NOT STATED A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY BECAUSE THE CONSTITUTIONAL/STATUTORY PROVISION(S) STATED AS THE BASIS FOR THE ALLEGATION THAT THE DISCHARGE VIOLATED PUBLIC POLICY DOES/DO NOT APPLY TO DEFENDANT OR TO DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT, AND THEREFORE IS/ARE NOT "FUNDAMENTAL" PUBLIC POLICY.

Inapplicable Constitutional or Statutory Policy Cannot Be "Fundamental." A constitutional or statutory provision that is inapplicable to defendant or to defendant's conduct cannot be the basis of a "fundamental" public policy for the purposes of a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 125, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 ; see, e.g., Ross v. RagingWire Telecommunications, Inc. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 920, 925931, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 382, 174 P.3d 200 ; Estes v. Monroe (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1355-1360, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 616 ; Grinzi v. San Diego Hospice Corp. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 72, 80-84, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that plaintiff's termination was in violation of public policy, based on the argument that the statutory basis for the alleged public policy does not apply to the defendant. This form is not for use when there is a separate statutory or constitutional basis for the public policy allegedly violated that applies to the defendant [see Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 230-238, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 ;

Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1292-1295, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229] . In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the forms set forth in §§ 100.41, 100.42.

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the public policy is not "fundamental" due to defendant's exemption from the statutory provision(s), for example, in a demurrer or summary judgment motion. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should identify the statute underlying plaintiff's claim for wrongful discharge and describe the specific provision of the statute which exempts the employer from the statute's coverage. Counsel also should set forth facts indicating that the employer falls within the statutory exemption. Further, the absence of any other statutory or constitutional basis for the public policy allegedly violated by plaintiff's dismissal also should be discussed.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inapplicable Constitutional or Statutory Policy Cannot Be "Fundamental"

In Jennings v. Marralle (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 121, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275, 876 P.2d 1074 , plaintiff brought a wrongful discharge action alleging that defendant terminated her employment in violation of the statutory prohibition of age discrimination in the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (former Gov. Code § 12941; now see Gov. Code § 12940(a); see also Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). After the defendant's summary judgment motion was granted on the ground that he was exempt from the provisions of FEHA because he employed fewer than five persons (see Gov. Code § 12926(d)), plaintiff sought leave to amend her complaint to allege a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. The proposed amendment asserted the public policy against age discrimination, set forth in Gov. Code §§ 12920 and 12921. The trial court denied leave to amend, plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed, holding that the general statements of policy were sufficient to formthe basis for a wrongful discharge action. The California Supreme Court granted review, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeal.

The Court contrasted the broad statement of policy set forth in Gov. Code §§ 12920 and 12921 with the express exemption of small employers from the age discrimination prohibition, set forth in Gov. Code § 12926(d), and concluded that the Legislature did not intend to make the right to be free of age discrimination by a small employer a "fundamental" public policy and to thereby subject employers who are not within FEHA's statutory prohibitions and remedies to common law civil liability for age discrimination (8 Cal. 4th 121, 135) . Although the public policy declared by the Legislature in § 12920 applies to all employers, it does not follow that in declaring the policy the Legislature intended to create the basis for a common law tort action and to thereby subject employers whom it expressly exempted from FEHA coverage to liability for age discrimination (8 Cal. 4th 121, 134-135) . The Court therefore concluded that the inclusion of age in the policy statement of FEHA alone is not sufficient to establish a "fundamental" public policy for the violation of which an employer may be held liable in a common law tort action (8 Cal. 4th 121, 135-136) .

Counsel should note that this argument should not be used in the event that there is a separate statutory or constitutional basis for the public policy allegedly violated that applies to the defendant. In Badih v. Myers (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1289 , a court of appeal rejected an employer's argument that his exemption from FEHA because he employed fewer than five employees compelled reversal of a jury verdict that he had wrongfully discharged a former employee on the basis of pregnancy in violation of public policy. The court explained that, unlike age discrimination, there is a proscription against pregnancy discrimination that is independent of FEHA. Specifically, Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, expresses a public policy against sex discrimination, which, the court found, includes pregnancy discrimination (36 Cal. App. 4th 1289, 1292-1295) .

NOTE:

Subsequently, in Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770 , the court of appeal cited Jennings v. Marralle and Badih v. Myers in holding that if a statutory exemption or limitation prevents a particular statute from serving as the basis for a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the plaintiff may rely on alternative sources of fundamental public policy in support of the claim. For example, if the express exemption for religious employers prevents FEHA from serving as a public-policy basis for a plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim against a religious employer (see Gov. Code §§ 12926(d), 12926.2(c)), the plaintiff may pursue a wrongful discharge claim on the basis of a violation of public policy derived from the California Constitution (Cal. Const., art. I, § 8) and from Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.) (Phillips v. St. Mary Reg'l Med. Ctr. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 218, 230-238, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 770).

In Ross v. RagingWire Telecommunications, Inc. (2008) 42 Cal. 4th 920, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 382, 174 P.3d 200 , the California Supreme Court held that the Compassionate Use Act of 1996 (Proposition 215; Health & Safety Code § 11362.5) does not establish a public policy against terminating employees who use marijuana for medical purposes. The Act does exempt certain medical users of marijuana from criminal liability under two specific California statutes (see Health & Safety Code § 11362.5(d) (providing defense against prosecution under Health & Safety Code §§ 11357 and 11358 for person who possesses or cultivates marijuana for medical purposes on recommendation or approval of physician)). However, marijuana possession remains illegal under federal law, even for medical use (21 U.S.C. §§ 812, 844(a); Gonzales v. Raich (2005) 545 U.S. 1, 26-29, 125 S. Ct. 2195, 162 L. Ed. 2d 1). Moreover, the Compassionate Use Act is limited in scope: it merely exempts medical users and their primary caregivers from criminal liability under two specified state statutes, and it does not address the rights and obligations of employers and employees. Therefore, the Compassionate Use Act cannot be read as requiring employers to accommodate medical marijuana use (42 Cal. 4th 920, 925-931) .

In Estes v. Monroe (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 16 Cal. Rptr. 3d 616 , the California National Guard terminated a state active duty guardsman after he was paralyzed in an automobile accident. The guardsman then brought a wrongful termination claim against the California Military Department, alleging that his discharge violated the California public policy of providing reasonable accommodation to disabled workers.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the claim. The court acknowledged that the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) embodies a general public policy of accommodating disabled workers [see Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.]. However, applying a deferential analysis of the pertinent provisions of FEHA, the court concluded that the policy at issue was not applicable to members of the military (120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1350) .

In Feres v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 135, 71 S. Ct. 153, 95 L. Ed. 152 , the United States Supreme Court held that members of the armed forces may not bring tort lawsuits under the Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA) [see 28 U.S.C. § 2671 et seq.] for physical injuries that arise out of or occur in the course of activity incident to service. Specifically, the Court construed the FTCA provision that the federal government is liable under local law "in the same manner and to the same extent as a private individual under like circumstances ..." [28 U.S.C. § 2674]. The Court rejected the notion that Congress intended to extend the remedies of the FTCA to members of the military for injuries that arise out of or are in the course of activity incident to service. The Court stated that "[w]ithout exception, the relationship of military personnel to the Government has been governed exclusively by federal law. We do not think that Congress, in drafting this Act, created a new cause of action dependent on local law for service-connected injuries or death due to negligence. We cannot impute to Congress such a radical departure from established law in the absence of express congressional command" [Feres v. United States (1950) 340 U.S. 135, 146, 71 S. Ct. 153, 95 L. Ed. 152] . Although frequently criticized, the rationale of Feres has been used to construe a wide variety of statutory and constitutional claims, and it has come to be known as the Feres doctrine.

In this case, the court of appeal applied the Feres doctrine to the plaintiff's claim of wrongful discharge in violation of the public policy embodied in FEHA. Although it is established that FEHA's provisions prohibiting discrimination may provide the policy basis for such a claim, the tort claim based on a violation of FEHA is limited by the terms of the statute. That is, the viability of plaintiff's tort claim is tethered to the meaning of the pertinent provisions of FEHA (120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1355) .

To ascertain the meaning of the pertinent FEHA provisions in light of the Feres doctrine, the court of appeal looked to federal decisions interpreting federal antidiscrimination statutes. Because the antidiscrimination objectives and relevant wording of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.], the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) [29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.], and the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) [42 U.S.C. § 12111 et seq.] are similar to those of FEHA, California courts often look to federal decisions interpreting these statutes for assistance in interpreting FEHA (120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1355-1357) . Federal courts have construed these federal statutes as being inapplicable to members of the national armed forces or a state militia [see, e.g., Frey v. California (9th Cir. 1993) 982 F.2d 399, 402-404 ; Helm v. California (9th Cir. 1983) 722 F.2d 507, 509 ; Gonzalez v. Department of Army (9th Cir. 1983) 718 F.2d 926, 928] .

The court of appeal found that the public policy incorporated into FEHA is as broadly stated as the policies set forth in the federal cases construing the federal antidiscrimination statutes [see Gov. Code § 12920]. Like the federal statutes, FEHA generally prohibits an employer from discriminating in the "terms, conditions, or privileges of employment" [see Gov. Code § 12940], and the definition of "employer" in FEHA is as broad as in federal provisions [see Gov. Code § 12926(d)]. The court of appeal held, therefore, that the Legislature did not express the requisite intent to extend FEHA to cover claims by those on active duty when the challenged personnel actions are incident to service. Because the California National Guard terminated the plaintiff in this case based on his physical disability and did not provide a reasonable accommodation, the decision was clearly "incident to service" and directly affected the peculiar and special relationship between soldiers and their superiors. The court observed that the Legislature certainly has the prerogative to subject the California National Guard to the same obligation to provide reasonable accommodation for disabled guardsmen as other California employers, but under the Feres doctrine, the court concluded that the Legislature would have to explicitly extend a FEHA remedy to military personnel to overcome the judicial predisposition to defer to military wisdom. Hence, in the absence of express statutory language extending FEHA to military personnel, the court held that the public policy embodied in FEHA is not applicable to the California National Guard and therefore does not support the plaintiff's claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (120 Cal. App. 4th 1347, 1358-1360) .

In Grinzi v. San Diego Hospice Corp. (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 72, 14 Cal. Rptr. 3d 893 , the plaintiff claimed that she was wrongfully terminated from private employment in violation of established public policy supported by the free-speech provision of the First Amendment of the United States Constitution. The court of appeal affirmed a dismissal of the plaintiff's complaint. The court reasoned that the First Amendment free-speech provision fails to establish a public policy against terminations by private employers for speech-related activities because it applies only to government actions and expresses no public policy regarding terminations by private employers (120 Cal. App. 4th 72, 80-84) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.54A

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.54A Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Alleged Discharge Because of Pregnancy--Defendant Was Unaware That Plaintiff Was Pregnant

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IN VIOLATION OF THE PUBLIC POLICY AGAINST DISCRIMINATION ON THE BASIS OF PREGNANCY, BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF'S PREGNANCY WAS NOT APPARENT AT THE TIME OF HER DISCHARGE, AND THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING THAT THEDEFENDANT KNEW OF THE PREGNANCY AT THE TIME OF THE DISCHARGE.

Plaintiff Must Establish That Defendant Knew Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class. To establish that the defendant discharged the plaintiff with an unlawful discriminatory intent, the plaintiff must show that the defendant was aware of the plaintiff's membership in the protected class. For example, in a case of alleged discharge on the basis of pregnancy (see Gov. Code §§ 12926(p), 12940(a)), if the pregnancy was not apparent at the time of discharge and the employee had not disclosed it to her employer, she must allege that the plaintiff had knowledge of the pregnancy and must present, as part of her prima facie case, evidence from which a rational trier of fact could infer that the employer knew she was pregnant (Trop v. Sony Pictures Entm't Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1145-1146, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention that the plaintiff's termination was in violation of the public policy against employment discrimination on the basis of pregnancy [see Gov. Code §§ 12926(p), 12940(a)], on the ground that the termination could not have been based on pregnancy because the defendant was not aware of the pregnancy at the relevant time [see Trop v. Sony Pictures Entm't Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1145-1146, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144] . In an appropriate case, this form may be adapted for use in other cases of claimed unlawful discrimination, if the defendant was unaware at the time of termination that the plaintiff was a member of the relevant protected class.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should explain that the plaintiff has not made any allegation or produced any credible evidence to support a finding that the defendant knew the plaintiff was pregnant at the time of the termination.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 43, § 43.01[2][b], [10][h].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Establish That Defendant Knew Plaintiff Was Member of Protected Class

The plaintiff in Trop v. Sony Pictures Entm't Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 144 , worked as an assistant to one of the defendants. The plaintiff alleged that her employment had been terminated on the basis of her pregnancy, in violation of public policy established by the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). FEHA prohibits an employer from terminating an employee because of her sex, which includes "pregnancy, childbirth, or medical conditions related to pregnancy or childbirth" (Gov. Code §§ 12926(p), 12940(a)). In this case, the court of appeal noted that a three-stage burden-shifting test generally applies in trying employment discrimination claims that are based on a disparate-treatment theory: (1) the plaintiff must establish a prima facie case of discrimination; (2) if the plaintiff is successful, the employer must offer a legitimate nondiscriminatory reason for its actions; and (3) if the employer produces evidence on that point, the plaintiff must show that employer's reason was a pretext for discrimination. This test is inapplicable, however, if the plaintiff presents direct evidence of discrimination (129 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1144) .

The court of appeal in this case affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendants. The court of appeal explained that the plaintiff could not establish a prima facie case of discrimination on the basis of pregnancy, because she had failed to raise a triable issue of fact that the defendants knew the plaintiff was pregnant before she was fired. In response to the defendant's motion for summary judgment, the plaintiff presented no evidence that she was visibly pregnant at the time of her firing, and she had not told the defendants she was pregnant. In the absence of credible evidence that the defendants knew the plaintiff was pregnant, the plaintiff was unable to establish a prima facie case of discrimination (129 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1145-1146) .

Similarly, the court of appeal found that the plaintiff had not presented any direct evidence of discrimination. The defendant for whom the plaintiff worked had made remarks to the effect that a pregnant woman could not work as her assistant. However, those remarks did not rise to the level of direct evidence of discrimination, because those remarks were made either (1) after the plaintiff was fired, or (2) before the plaintiff was fired but without knowledge that she was pregnant (129 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1146-1149) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.55

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.55 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--In-House Counsel's Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Not Based on Explicit and Unequivocal Mandatory Ethical Requirement

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IN VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY ESTABLISHED BY ETHICAL STANDARDS DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE THE DISCHARGE OF PLAINTIFF AS IN-HOUSE COUNSEL WAS NOT BASED ON PLAINTIFF'S FOLLOWING OF EXPLICIT AND UNEQUIVOCAL MANDATORY ETHICAL OBLIGATION.

A. Action Must Be Based on Explicit and Unequivocal Mandatory Ethical Obligations. A cause of action brought by in-house counsel for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy established by ethical obligations must be based on explicit and unequivocal ethical norms established in the Rules of Professional Responsibility and statutes (General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487).

[Optional] B. Action Must Be Based on Mandatory Ethical Requirement Intended to Benefit Public. An ethical norm that is merely permissive rather than mandatory, or that is designed solely for the benefit of the attorney or the client rather than for the protection of the public at large, cannot be the basis for a wrongful discharge cause of action (General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention that a discharged in-house counsel has stated a cause of action for wrongful termination in violation of the public policy underlying an attorney's ethical obligations, based on the argument that the policy allegedly violated by the discharge was insufficient to support the action. Optional

Paragraph B may be used if the ethical requirement involved is permissive rather than mandatory, or if it can be argued that the provision involved is not for the protection of the general public. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 100.49.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the discharged in-house attorney's action does not meet the requirements set forth in General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , for example, in a demurrer or summary judgment motion. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should argue that plaintiff has failed to identify a professional rule or statute as the basis for the wrongful discharge claim. If plaintiff has identified a professional rule or statute, counsel should argue that the ethical norm is merely permissive, rather than mandatory, or that it is designed solely for the benefit of the attorney rather than the public at large. If appropriate, counsel also could set forth facts indicating that plaintiff would have been discharged regardless of plaintiff's exercise of the ethical requirement. For an example of arguments regarding good cause for discharge, see § 100.29.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Must Be Based on Explicit and Unequivocal Mandatory Ethical Obligations

The facts and procedural background of General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , are discussed in § 100.49[3][a]. Regarding the required elements of a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy as expressed in attorneys' ethical responsibilities, the Court discussed the conflicting values presented: on the one hand, the case for shielding the in-house attorney from retaliation by the employer for either insisting on adhering to mandatory ethical norms of the profession or for refusing to violate them; on the other hand, protecting the confidential role of the attorney from the damage that could be caused by suits against the client, especially given an attorney's ethical obligation to withdraw from representation when an ethical conflict arises (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1181-1182) . The Court rejected the approach taken by courts in other states (citing Balla v. Gambro, Inc. (Ill. 1991) 584 N.E.2d 104), under which actions by in-house counsel are precluded on the ground that the ethical obligation to withdraw insufficient (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188) . Instead, the Court held that it is because of the nature of the attorney's rule that a remedy should be available when mandatory ethical norms embodied in the Rules of Professional Conduct collide with illegitimate demands of the employer, and the attorney insists on adhering to his or her clear professional duty (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188) . The "remedy" of withdrawal was seen as illusory, in that it appeared more likely that, in the absence of any available remedy, counsel would tend to remain silent in the face of unethical demands (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188) .

Instead, the Court fashioned a rule designed to support in-house counsel in remaining faithful to the fundamental public policies reflected in the governing ethical code when carrying out professional assignments (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1188-1189) . The Court held that the fiduciary values of mutual trust and confidence can be protected from the threat of damages by limiting judicial access to those claims grounded in explicit and unequivocal ethical norms embodied in the Rules of Professional Conduct and statutes (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189) . The claim must be based on a mandatory ethical obligation; if the conduct in which the attorney has engaged is merely permissible, but not required by statute or ethical code, the court must treat the claim under the rules applicable to nonattorneys under Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1094-1097, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , and determine whether some statute or ethical rule permits the attorney to depart from the usual requirement of confidentiality (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1189 ; see § 100.56).

[b] Action Must Be Based on Mandatory Ethical Requirement Intended to Benefit Public

The facts and procedural background of General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , are discussed in § 100.49[3][a]. The Court set out subsidiary rules that it claimed would deter the incidence of strike suits or claims filed in bad faith. The contested rules must be clearly established by the ethics code or statutory provision; disagreements over policy are not actionable (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) . The plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the unequivocal requirements of the ethical norm at issue and that the employer's conduct was motivated by impermissible considerations under a "but for" standard of causation (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) . The ethical norm at issue must be one that is intended for the protection of the public at large; measures designed solely for the benefit of the attorney or the client will not suffice to support a retaliatory discharge claim (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.56

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.56 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--In-House Counsel's Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Cannot Be Maintained Without Violating Attorney-Client Privilege

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE FROM HIS/HER POSITION AS IN-HOUSE COUNSEL CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE IT CANNOT BE ESTABLISHED WITHOUT THE PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION PROTECTED BY THE ATTORNEY-CLIENT PRIVILEGE.

Wrongful Discharge Claim May Not Breach Attorney-Client Privilege. A wrongful discharge cause of action brought by in-house counsel must be dismissed if the elements of the action cannot, for reasons peculiar to the particular case, be established without the public disclosure of confidential information protected by the attorney-client privilege (General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 ; Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 308-315, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that a wrongful discharge action may be maintained by former in-house counsel, on the ground that the action must be dismissed because the elements of the claim cannot be fully established without breaching the attorney-client privilege. Note that in General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , the California Supreme Court referred specifically to actions to recover tort damages based on a wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, and stated that actions for breach of a contract provision to terminate the employment only for cause are unlikely to implicate values central to the attorney-client relationship. However, even in breach-of-contract actions there may be contested issues that involve the attorney-client privilege, such as issues regarding whether or not cause to terminate existed in a particular case. Therefore, the points and authorities set forth in this form may be appropriate in either type of action, depending on the particular factual circumstances present. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 100.49.

Counsel may use these points and authorities in conjunction with those in § 100.55 if the discharged in-house attorney's complaint also alleges a cause of action for wrongful discharge based on a violation of public policy as expressed in the ethical standards applicable to attorneys.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff cannot establish the elements of his or her cause of action for wrongful discharge without violating the attorney-client privilege. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts indicating that plaintiff's claim for wrongful discharge cannot be prosecuted without violating the attorney-client privilege because matters covered by the privilege will be an essential part of plaintiff's case. In making this showing, counsel should ensure that the confidentiality of matters covered by the privilege is maintained. Counsel also should show that there are no equitable measures that the trial court could impose with respect to plaintiff's proof that would effectively protect the privilege.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Wrongful Discharge Claim May Not Breach Attorney-Client Privilege

The facts and procedural background of General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , are set forth in § 100.49[3][a]. The Court held that if the elements of a wrongful discharge in violation of public policy claim cannot, for reasons peculiar to the particular case, be fully established without breaching the attorney-client privilege, the suit must be dismissed in the interest of preserving the privilege (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190) . Whether the attorney-client privilege precludes a plaintiff's recovery will ordinarily not be resolvable at the demurrer stage. Rather, in the usual case, whether the privilege serves as a bar to the plaintiff's recovery will be litigated and determined in the context of motions for protective orders or to compel further discovery responses, as well as at the time of summary judgment (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190) . In making this determination, the trial court can and should apply an array of ad hoc measures within its equitable powers in order to permit the attorney plaintiff to attempt to make the necessary proof while protecting from disclosure client confidences subject to the privilege (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) . The Court rejected any suggestion that the scope of the attorney-client privilege should be diluted in the context of in-house counsel and their corporate clients (7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1191) .

In Fox Searchlight Pictures, Inc. v. Paladino (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 906 , a court of appeal held that the rule of General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 (discussed above) is limited to circumstances in which the maintenance of a wrongful discharge claim would result in public disclosure of the employer's confidential information. In the case before the court of appeal, a former in-house counsel sued her former employer for wrongful discharge. The employer filed its own suit against the employee, alleging that the disclosure of the employer's confidential information to the employee's attorneys constituted a violation of the employee's ethical duties (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e)). The employer also moved to disqualify the employee's attorneys on the ground that they had been exposed to confidential information concerning the defendant. The trial court denied the employer's motion to disqualify the employee's attorneys; the trial court also denied the employee's motion to dismiss the employer's suit.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the employer's motion to disqualify the employee's attorneys and reversed the denial of the employee's motion to dismiss the employer's suit. The court of appeal acknowledged that the Supreme Court had held in General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court that a former in-house counsel's wrongful termination suit must be dismissed if it cannot be fully established without breaching the attorney-client privilege (see General Dynamics Corp. v. Superior Court (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1164, 1190, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1, 876 P.2d 487 , discussed above). However, the court of appeal noted that the Supreme Court's primary concern was over the public disclosure of confidential information. Thus, the court of appeal reasoned, disclosure of confidential information to a plaintiff's own attorneys for purposes of the wrongful-termination action would not violate the rule of General Dynamics because (1) the Supreme Court's opinion in General Dynamics contemplated such nonpublic disclosure to the plaintiff's own attorneys, (2) such a disclosure would not violate the plaintiff's duty of confidentiality to the employer (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6068(e)) so long as the disclosure was limited to the information necessary to prepare and prosecute the wrongful-termination action, and (3) fundamental fairness requires that the plaintiff be allowed to make such a disclosure to the extent necessary to prepare the claim for wrongful termination (89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 310-314) . Once such a disclosure has been made to the plaintiff's attorneys, it is up to the attorneys to determine if, when, and how such information can be utilized in the wrongful-termination action in conformity with the guidelines laid down by the Supreme Court in General Dynamics (89 Cal. App. 4th 294, 310-314) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.57

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.57 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Policy Relied on by Plaintiff Is Counterbalanced by Another Policy

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT DID NOT VIOLATE A FUNDAMENTAL AND SUBSTANTIAL PUBLIC POLICY.

Public Policy Will Not Support Wrongful Discharge Action If Counterbalanced by Other Public Policy. For purposes of an action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, a public policy is not sufficiently fundamental and substantial if it is counterbalanced by another established public policy (Silo v. CHW Med. Found. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1108-1109).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that a plaintiff's termination was in violation of fundamental public policy, based on the existence of a competing public policy. To support a tortious discharge claim, the public policy relied on by the plaintiff must be fundamental and substantial [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 889-890, 941 P.2d 1157 ; see § 100.41]. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 100.41.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the public policy is not fundamental and substantial, for example, in a demurrer or summary judgment motion. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should identify the specific public policy relied on by the plaintiff, as wellas the counterbalancing public policy. Counsel should cite the constitutional or statutory basis for each policy and demonstrate how the facts of the case bring the defendant's conduct within the scope of the counterbalancing policy.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Policy Will Not Support Wrongful Discharge Action If Counterbalanced by Other Public Policy

In Silo v. CHW Med. Found. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 1097 , the plaintiff had been employed by a religious hospital. After being discharged for discussing his contrary religious beliefs on the job, the plaintiff sued the hospital. The complaint alleged, among other things, a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment in favor of the plaintiff on this cause of action, finding that Article I, § 8, of the California Constitution established a fundamental public policy against religious discrimination in employment (27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1100-1103) .

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the public policy against religious discrimination in employment must be qualified by another public policy--that of permitting religious employers considerable discretion to choose employees who will not interfere with their religious mission or message (see U.S. Const., Amend. I; Cal. Const., art. I, § 4). Construing the two policies together, along with FEHA's formerly unqualified general exemption for religious employers (see Gov. Code § 12926(d); now see Gov. Code § 12926.2(c) [effective January 2000, FEHA exemption for religious employers generally does not apply to persons employed to perform nonreligious duties at health-care facilities that are not restricted to adherents of religion that established employer]), the Court stated that it could not find a fundamental and substantial public policy prohibiting a religious employer from terminating an employee because of the employee's objectionable religious speech in the workplace (27 Cal. 4th 1097, 1108-1109) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.58

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.58 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--No Fundamental Public Policy Against Discharge for Exercise of Constitutional or Statutory Right

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT DID NOT VIOLATE A FUNDAMENTAL AND SUBSTANTIAL PUBLIC POLICY.

Discharge of Employee for Exercising Constitutional or Statutory Right Is Not Actionable Unless Discharge Violates Clear Public Policy. The termination of an employee for exercising a constitutional or statutory right does not violate public policy unless the termination undermines a clearly mandated policy embodied in the provision from which that right emanates. For example, an employer may terminate an at-will employee for refusing to drop a lawsuit against the employer's customer, even though access to courts is guaranteed by the federal and state Constitutions, because there is no clearly mandated policy against such a termination (Jersey v. John Muir Med. Ctr. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 814, 820-829, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that a plaintiff's termination was in violation of fundamental public policy. To support a tortious discharge claim, the public policy relied on by the plaintiff must be fundamental and substantial [Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 889-890, 941 P.2d 1157 ; see § 100.41]. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in §§ 100.41, 100.44.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the public policy is not fundamental and substantial, for example, in a demurrer or summary judgment motion. The points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe the plaintiff's conduct that allegedly resulted in the discharge, identify the constitutional or statutory source of the right the plaintiff allegedly exercised, and demonstrate that the source of the right does not embody a clearly mandated public policy protecting the plaintiff against discharge.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discharge of Employee for Exercising Constitutional or Statutory Right Is Not Actionable Unless Discharge Violates Clear Public Policy

In Jersey v. John Muir Med. Ctr. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 814, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807 , the plaintiff, while employed by the defendant hospital, was attacked by a patient of the hospital. The plaintiff sued the patient, alleging assault, battery, and sexual battery. Citing the patient's condition as a head-trauma victim who might not have been responsible for his conduct at the relevant time, and the hospital's mission to serve its clients with compassion, the hospital demanded that the plaintiff dismiss her suit against the patient. When the plaintiff refused, she was discharged. The plaintiff then sued the hospital for, among other things, wrongful termination in violation of public policy. The plaintiff contended that her discharge violated her constitutional right of access to the courts. The trial court disagreed, holding that although access to courts is a right owed to the public by the government, there is no general public policy that bars private employers from reacting adversely to lawsuits filed by their employees (97 Cal. App. 4th 814, 818-819) .

The court of appeal agreed. The court noted that while discharging an employee for exercising a right or privilege may in some instances contravene a fundamental public policy, not every such discharge necessarily satisfies the criteria for a wrongful termination action. The court acknowledged that access to the courts is indeed a right guaranteed to all persons by the federal and state Constitutions; it is regarded as arising from the First Amendment right to petition the government for redress of grievances. Nonetheless, in determining whether discharging an employee for exercising a right violates a fundamental public policy, the focus is not simply on the importance of the right that was exercised. The issue is whether permitting an employer to discharge an employee for exercising that right would undermine a "clearly mandated public policy" embodied in the provision from which that right emanates. Thus, it must be clear from the provision itself or from some other legislative or regulatory enactment that employers are not free to disregard or limit that right. After reviewing several statutory provisions that clearly limited an employer's right to discharge an employee for exercising particular rights (see, e.g., Lab. Code § 98.6 [no employer may discharge employee for filing claim with Labor Commissioner]), the court found no such provision relating to the exercise of the right of access to courts. The court also noted that an agreement between plaintiff and defendant in which the plaintiff agreed that she would not sue patients for their behavior while in the hospital would not be unenforceable as against public policy. The court reasoned that because the plaintiff could expressly waive the right to bring such an action, it followed that there is no strong public policy preventing her employer from discharging her for commencing litigation, despite the absence of an express agreement not to do so (97 Cal. App. 4th 814, 820-829) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.59

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.59 Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Failure to Exhaust Internal Grievance Procedure

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO EXHAUST THE REMEDIES AVAILABLE THROUGH THE DEFENDANT'S INTERNAL GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE.

Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Tort Action. If an employer provides an internal grievance procedure, an employee must exhaust that remedy before pursuing a tort action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Palmer v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 903-906, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that the plaintiff has a cause of action for wrongful termination in violationof public policy, based on the plaintiff's failure to exhaust internal grievance procedures established by the defendant. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 100.43.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should establish that the defendant has an established internal grievance procedure that would encompass the claim asserted by the plaintiff.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline, § 60.04, and Ch. 62, Avoiding Wrongful Termination and Discipline Claims, § 62.03 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Tort Action

In Palmer v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 567 , the plaintiff was a University of California employee who sued the regents of the university for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, claiming that she had been the victim of retaliation for reporting improper activities. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment based on the plaintiff's failure to exhaust the University of California's internal grievance procedures expressly created to protect employees like the plaintiff who claim to be victims of retaliation.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court acknowledged that when a statute (such as the Fair Employment and Housing Act, Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) provides an administrative process for the resolution of grievances, exhaustion of those administrative remedies is a precondition to bringing a civil suit on a statutory cause of action, but not for seeking judicial relief on a common-law tort claim for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. However, if an employer establishes an internal grievance mechanism, a failure to exhaust those internal remedies precludes a subsequent private civil action (107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 903-906) .

The court of appeal explained that exhaustion of internal grievance procedures is required not because of contractual obligation but because of compelling policy considerations. If an employer is given the opportunity quickly to determine through the operation of its internal procedures that it has committed error, it may be able to minimize, and sometimes eliminate, any monetary injury to the employee by immediately reversing its initial decision; an employee should not be permitted to increase damages by forgoing available internal remedies. Moreover, an exhaustion requirement reflects the courts' recognition of the "expertise" of the employer's quasi-judicial tribunal, permitting it to adjudicate the merits of the plaintiff's claim in the first instance (107 Cal. App. 4th 899, 905) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Tort Action

In McDonald v. Antelope Valley Cmty. Coll. Dist. (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 88, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734, 194 P.3d 1026 , the California Supreme Court held that the one-year statute of limitations for actions brought under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12960(d)) is subject to equitable tolling while the employee voluntarily pursues the employer's internal administrative remedy, even though the internal remedy is optional and need not be exhausted before filing a FEHA action, and even if the employee voluntarily terminates the internal proceeding before an administrative decision is rendered (45 Cal. 4th 88, 105-114) . However, the Court cautioned that if the employee elects to pursue the employer's internal administrative process to a decision that is of a sufficiently judicial character to support collateral estoppel, the employee must pursue that process to completion, including exhausting any available judicial avenues for reversal of adverse findings. A failure to do so will result in any quasi-judicial administrative findings having binding, preclusive effect in later judicial proceedings (45 Cal. 4th 88, 113) .

In Schifando v. City of Los Angeles (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1074, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 457, 79 P.3d 569 , the California Supreme Court considered whether exhaustion of an employer's internal grievance procedures is a prerequisite for a civil action asserting a claim under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). The plaintiff in this case was a city employee who alleged employment discrimination based on physical disability under FEHA (see Gov. Code §§ 12926(k), 12940(a)). Before filing suit, the plaintiff had complied with the administrative procedures prescribed by FEHA, by filing a complaint with the Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) (see Gov. Code § 12960). After investigating the complaint, the DFEH issued the plaintiff a right-to-sue letter (see Gov. Code § 12965(b)), and the plaintiff filed suit. On appeal, the city argued that the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed because he had failed to pursue administrative remedies provided under the city charter. Those remedies included the filing of a demand for reinstatement, which would have given the local board of civil service commissioners the opportunity to consider the propriety of the plaintiff's discharge.

The Supreme Court acknowledged that its precedents establish that employers' internal grievance procedures are subject to an exhaustion requirement (see, e.g., Westlake Cmty. Hosp. v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 465, 476, 131 Cal. Rptr. 90, 551 P.2d 410). However, because those precedents did not involve statutory claims for which the Legislature had specifically mandated its own administrative review process, as in FEHA, the Court found this distinction to be "compelling." Accordingly, the Supreme Court held that exhaustion of an employer's internal procedures is not a prerequisite for a civil action asserting a claim under FEHA or another statutory scheme that contains its own exhaustion prerequisite. Thus, an employee who has exhausted FEHA administrative process and obtained a right-to-sue letter from the DFEH need not also exhaust the employer's internal administrative procedures prior to filing lawsuit alleging an FEHA claim (31 Cal. 4th 1074, 1084-1086) .

The Supreme Court recognized that procedural issues might arise if an employee chooses to pursue both statutory and internal administrativeremedies, but the Court left the resolution of those issues for the future (31 Cal. 4th 1074, 1087-1089) . Also, the Court expressly left open the question whether an employee would be required to satisfy internal administrative remedies before suing on a claim based on a statute that does not provide its own administrative procedures (31 Cal. 4th 1074, 1089) .

In Williams v. Housing Auth. (2004) 121 Cal. App. 4th 708, 17 Cal. Rptr. 3d 374 , the court of appeal addressed a question that was not answered by Schifando v. City of Los Angeles (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1074, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 457, 79 P.3d 569 [discussed above]: whether a public employee who claims employment-related discrimination, and asserts both Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) claims and nonstatutory claims for wrongful termination in violation of public policy must exhaust the internal administrative remedy provided by the employer with respect to those nonstatutory claims before filing a civil action. The court of appeal held that Schifando's exemption from the need to exhaust administrative remedies also applies to FEHA-related nonstatutory claims when the resolution of those claims would have a preclusive impact on FEHA claim (121 Cal. App. 4th 708, 727-731) . The court of appeal reasoned that as in Schifando, the policy reasons for enforcing an exhaustion requirement, including judicial economy, agency expertise, and potential for swift resolution of grievances, are not served by requiring a public employee to pursue FEHA-related nonstatutory claims in a separate forum that might result in inconsistent rulings, or worse, preclude the employee from pursuing a FEHA claim in the forum of his or her choice (121 Cal. App. 4th 708, 728-729) . The court emphasized that in determining whether a nonstatutory claim falls within the exemption from the internal-exhaustion requirement, the primary focus is not on whether the claim is based on the same set of facts as FEHA claim, although that circumstance might well bear on the issue, but on whether the resolution of the nonstatutory claim will have a preclusive impact on FEHA claim (121 Cal. App. 4th 708, 729-730) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.59A

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.59A Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Employer Is Public Entity

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT EMPLOYER IS A PUBLIC ENTITY, AND THE OTHER DEFENDANTS DID NOT HAVE AN EMPLOYMENT RELATIONSHIP WITH THE PLAINTIFF.

Action for Wrongful Discharge in Violation of Public Policy Is Unavailable Against Public Entity. Public entities are subject to liability only as provided by statute (Gov. Code § 815(a)). Therefore, the common law cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is not available against a public entity (Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 899-900, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629). Further, because the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy can be committed only by an employer, any defendant who was not the plaintiff's employer is not liable for that tort. Moreover, a public entity is liable for the conduct of its employee within the scope of employment only if that conduct would otherwise subject the employee to liability (Gov. Code § 815.2(a)). Therefore, the conduct of the entity's employees--who were not themselves employers of the plaintiff--cannot serve as a basis for imposing liability on the entity for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 901, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 ; Lloyd v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 328-330, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that the plaintiff has a cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, based on the following: (1) the defendant employer is a public entity and therefore is not liable for torts except as provided by statute; (2) the entity's liability for conduct of its agents extends only to conduct that would subject the agents themselves to liability; and (3) the entity's agents cannot be subjected to tort liability for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, because they did not themselves have an employer-employee relationship with the plaintiff [see Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008)44 Cal. 4th 876, 899-901, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the defendant employer is a public entity within the scope of the Government Claims Act [Gov. Code § 810 et seq.], and that other defendants did not have an employment relationship with the plaintiff.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action for Wrongful Discharge in Violation of Public Policy Is Unavailable Against Public Entity

In Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 , the plaintiffs were former employees of the University of California who sued the university and their former supervisors. The plaintiffs asserted, among other claims, that their employment had been wrongfully terminated in violation of public policy. The plaintiffs based their claims on the public policy reflected in the Whistleblower Act, which provides that state employees should be free to report waste, fraud, abuse of authority, violation of law, or threat to public health without fear of retribution [Gov. Code § 8547.1]. The plaintiffs also relied on Lab. Code § 6310, which prohibits the firing of an employee who complains to a governmental agency having responsibility for regulating safety in the relevant industry.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the plaintiffs' claim, on the grounds that a common law claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is not available against a public entity.

The Court started its analysis of this issue with the Government Claims Act [Gov. Code § 810 et seq.], which provides that except as otherwise provided by statute, a public entity is not liable for any injury, whether the injury arises out of an act or omission of the public entity or a public employee or any other person [Gov. Code § 815(a)]. Thus, the Act clearly protects public entities from common law tort liability, including claims of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (44 Cal. 4th 876, 899) .

The plaintiffs argued, however, that despite the general abolition of common law liability for public entities, the individual defendants were subject to common law liability, and that their liability should be imputed to the university. This argument was based on Government Claims Act's respondeat superior provision, which states that a public entity is liable for injury proximately caused by an act or omission of an employee of the public entity within the scope of his employment if the act or omission would otherwise give rise to a cause of action against that employee [Gov. Code § 815.2(a)].

The Supreme Court rejected the plaintiffs' respondeat superior argument. The Court emphasized that a common-law action for wrongful discharge can be asserted only against an employer. An individual who is not an employer (for example, a supervisorial employee) cannot commit the tort of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy; rather, he or she can only be the agent by which an employer commits that tort. Therefore, since the individual defendants in this case could not be personally liable for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the Government Claims Act's respondeat superior provision did not impose liability on the university (44 Cal. 4th 876, 900-901) .

In Lloyd v. County of Los Angeles (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 872 , the plaintiff asserted common-law tort claims against his former employer, which was a public entity. The plaintiff's complaint included claims of retaliation in violation of public policies set forth in the California Constitution (see Cal. Const., art. I, § 1) and in statutory provisions prohibiting retaliation for whistleblower activity (see Lab. Code §§ 98.6, 1102.5, 6399.7; Gov. Code § 8547). The court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment in favor of the employer, holding that under Government Code Section 815, the defendant had statutory immunity against such common-law tort claims (172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 328-329) . The court of appeal went on to explain that although a public entity that is immune from direct liability could theoretically be held liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the conduct of its employees, such liability could not be imposed in this case. Citing Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 , discussed above, the court of appeal explained that a common-law action for wrongful discharge can be asserted only against an employer, not against the supervisor through whom the employer commits the tort. Therefore, the doctrine of respondeat superior had no application to the plaintiff's common-law claims of wrongful retaliation in this case (172 Cal. App. 4th 320, 330) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.60

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.60 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Discharged in Retaliation for "Whistleblowing"--Discharge Occurred for Legitimate, Independent Reasons

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

EVEN IF PLAINTIFF'S _____ [specify plaintiff's activity protected under Lab. Code § 1102.5, e.g., REFUSAL TO PARTICIPATE IN ILLEGAL ACTIVITY] WAS A CONTRIBUTING FACTOR IN THE DISCHARGE OF PLAINTIFF, DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE IF CLEAR AND CONVINCING EVIDENCE SHOWS THAT THE DISCHARGE WOULD HAVE OCCURRED FOR LEGITIMATE, INDEPENDENT REASONS.

Employer Not Liable for Retaliatory Discharge if Employee Would Have Been Terminated for Legitimate, Independent Reasons. In an action for wrongful discharge based on alleged retaliation for an employee's "whistleblowing" activity (see Lab. Code § 1102.5 ["whistleblower" statute, prohibiting retaliation against employees who report or refuse to participate in illegal activity]), the employer may defend by claiming that the employee would have been discharged anyway. If it has been demonstrated by a preponderance of the evidence that a protected activity was a contributing factor in the alleged retaliatory discharge, the employer has the burden of proof to demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged discharge would have occurred for legitimate, independent reasons even if the employee had not engaged in protected activities (see Lab. Code § 1102.6).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that the employee was discharged because he or she had refused to participate in illegal activity, or had reported illegal activity to a government or law-enforcement agency ("whistleblowing"). In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in §§ 100.42, 100.46 -100.48.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should establish that the plaintiff would have been discharged for legitimate, independent reasons even if the plaintiff had not engaged in activities protected by the whistleblower statute (see Lab. Code § 1102.5). If the plaintiff shows by a preponderance of the evidence that a protected activity was a contributing factor in the alleged retaliatory discharge, the defendant will have the burden of proving by clear and convincing evidence that the alleged discharge would have occurred for legitimate, independent reasons even if the employee had not engaged in protected activities (Lab. Code § 1102.6).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for defending against claims of wrongful termination in violation of public policy, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.61

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.61 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Discharged in Retaliation for "Whistleblowing"--Failure to Exhaust Internal Grievance Procedure

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR RETALIATORY DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO EXHAUST THE REMEDIES AVAILABLE THROUGH THE DEFENDANT'S INTERNAL GRIEVANCE PROCEDURE.

Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Retaliatory Discharge Action. If an employer provides an internal grievance procedure, an employee must exhaust that remedy before pursuing a statutory action for retaliatory discharge (Campbell v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 311, 329-331, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 106 P.3d 976).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that the employee was discharged because he or she had refused to participate in illegal activity, or had reported illegal activity to a government or law-enforcement agency ("whistleblowing") [see Lab. Code § 1102.5; Gov. Code § 12653(c)]. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in §§ 100.42, 100.46 -100.48.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should establish that the defendant has an established internal grievance procedure that would encompass the claim asserted by the plaintiff.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of retaliatory discharge actions and exhaustion of internal grievance procedures, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, Liability for Wrongful Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exhaustion of Internal Grievance Procedure Is Prerequisite to Retaliatory Discharge Action

In Campbell v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 311, 25 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 106 P.3d 976 , a University of California employee filed suit for retaliatory termination under two whistleblower provisions, Gov. Code § 12653 and Lab. Code § 1102.5. Section 12653, which is part of the False Claims Act, provides that no employer may discharge an employee because that employee has acted lawfully in disclosing false claims to law enforcement agencies [Gov. Code § 12653(b)]. Section 1102.5 stipulates that an employer may not retaliate against an employee for refusing to participate in any activity that would result in a violation of state or federal law, or for providing information to a government or law enforcement agency (including the employer) if the employee reasonably believes the information discloses a violation of state or federal law [Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)-(e)].

Construing both statutory provisions as requiring the exhaustion of administrative remedies before a lawsuit is filed, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was required to exhaust the University's internal grievance procedure before filing suit. The Court emphasized that the exhaustion of administrative remedies generally is a jurisdictional prerequisite to resort to the courts. The exhaustion requirement has important benefits: (1) it serves the salutary function of mitigating damages; (2) it recognizes the quasi-judicial tribunal's expertise; and (3) it promotes judicial economy by unearthing the relevant evidence and by providing a record should there be a review of the case (35 Cal. 4th 311, 327-328) . The Court rejected an argument that the whistleblower statutes' silence regarding administrative remedies should be construed as an indication of legislative intent to abrogate the exhaustion requirement for retaliatory-termination suits. Rather, the Court found that the Legislature's silence makes the common-law exhaustion rule applicable and requires employees to exhaust their internal administrative remedies prior to filing a lawsuit (35 Cal. 4th 311) .

The Supreme Court also rejected an argument that exhaustion should not be required in this case because the internal grievance procedure provided by the University could not provide the full range of remedies available in a lawsuit. The Court explained that even if an eventual lawsuit is inevitable because the employee seeks a remedy that is not available inthe administrative (e.g., damages) the "policy considerations which support the imposition of a general exhaustion requirement remain compelling," since the administrative proceeding will still promote judicial efficiency by unearthing the relevant evidence and by providing a record that the court may review (35 Cal. 4th 311, 328-329) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.61A

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.61A Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Discharged for "Whistleblowing"--Plaintiff's Conduct Did Not Amount to Protected "Whistleblowing"

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR RETALIATORY DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE ALLEGED CONDUCT OF PLAINTIFF'S DID NOT AMOUNT TO PROTECTED "WHISTLEBLOWING" ACTIVITY.

Plaintiff Must Have Engaged in Protected Activity. To establish a prima facie case of retaliation, a plaintiff must show (1) the plaintiff engaged in a protected activity, (2) the defendant employer subjected the plaintiff to an adverse employment action, and (3) there is a causal link between the two (Patten v. Grant Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113). Protected activities include "whistleblowing," that is, disclosing to a government or law-enforcement agency (including the employer if it is a governmental agency) information that the employee reasonably believes discloses a violation of law (see Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)). However, an employee's disclosure to the employer of an internal personnel matter, such as forwarding a complaint about another employee's behavior that does not involve a legal violation, does not qualify as protected "whistleblowing" (Carter v. Escondido Union High Sch. Dist. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 922, 933-936, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262 ; Patten v. Grant Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384-1386, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that the plaintiff suffered a retaliatory discharge, on the ground that the plaintiff's alleged "whistleblowing" does not qualify as a protected activity [see Lab. Code § 1102.5; Patten v. Grant Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384-1386, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113] . This form may be adapted for use in cases of other adverse employment actions alleged to have been taken in retaliation for whistleblowing.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should explain that the plaintiff's alleged reporting of information involved internal personnel matters rather than legal violations.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, §§ 60.03[2][aa], 60.04[2][e].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Have Engaged in Protected Activity

The plaintiff in Carter v. Escondido Union High Sch. Dist. (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 922, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262 , was a schoolteacher who claimed that his employment was wrongfully terminated in violation of public policy because, while employed by another school district, he reported that the football coach had recommended a nutritional supplement to a student. The coach had suggested to the student, who aspired to play football in college, that consuming protein drinks containing creatine would help him gain weight. After the student became ill, the plaintiff informed the athletic director at the school that the student had taken the supplement at the suggestion of the football coach. When the athletic director took no action against the coach, the plaintiff sought other employment. After accepting a position at a school in the defendant school district, the plaintiff learned that his principal there was the wife of the football coach who had been the subject of the plaintiff's report at his previous school. Two years later, when his employment was terminated, the plaintiff filed suit, claiming that his termination was motivated by his reporting of the coach during his previous employment. The plaintiff contended that the termination violated a public policy against teachers recommending weight-gaining substances to students.

After a jury trial resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff, the school district appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that because the football coach's conduct violated no law--protein drinks containing creatine were not unlawful under state or federal law--the public policy asserted by the plaintiff did not support his cause of action.

The court of appeal explained that a discharge is actionable as against public policy only if it violates a policy that is (1) delineated in either constitutional or statutory provisions; (2) "public" in the sense that it inures to the benefit of the public, rather than serving merely the interests of the individual; (3) well established at the time of the discharge; and (4) substantial and fundamental. In this case, the court found that the public policy claimed by the plaintiff was not sufficiently fundamental, because it was not "tethered" to a specific constitutionalor statutory provision (148 Cal. App. 4th 922, 929) .

The plaintiff argued that Education Code Section 49423 and its implementing regulations establish a policy against teachers recommending weight-gaining substances to students. The court pointed out, however, that Section 49423 simply authorizes school personnel, under certain conditions, to assist in taking a prescribed medication (Educ. Code § 49423(a), (b)). The court opined that since Section 49423 does not prohibit any conduct, it does not establish a fundamental public policy that could support a wrongful-termination claim. Although the regulations implementing Section 49423 define "medication" as including over-the-counter nutritional supplements (see 5 Cal. Code Reg. § 601(b)), they too contain no prohibition of any conduct and address solely the administration by school personnel of required medical care. In sum, the court of appeal found that Section 49423 and its implementing regulations did not establish any fundamental and well-established public policy against teachers recommending weight-gaining substances to students (148 Cal. App. 4th 922, 930-932) .

The court of appeal also rejected the plaintiff's argument that his termination violated the general whistleblower statute, Labor Code Section 1102.5. That statute prohibits termination of an employee "for disclosing information to a government or law enforcement agency, where the employee has reasonable cause to believe that the information discloses a violation of state or federal statute, or a violation or noncompliance with a state or federal rule or regulation" (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b); see also Lab. Code § 1102.5(d), (e)). The court of appeal concluded that the plaintiff's conduct in reporting the football coach was not protected by Section 1102.5. First, as noted above, the information disclosed by the plaintiff did not disclose a violation of a state or federal statute, or a violation or noncompliance with a state or federal rule or regulation. Second, the plaintiff's report was not motivated by his belief that a law had been broken: he had taken no action upon learning that the coach had recommended the protein shakes; rather, the plaintiff testified he made his report only after the student became ill. Third, even if the plaintiff subjectively believed that the coach had violated a statute or regulation, that belief was not reasonable, since protein shakes containing creatine were not unlawful under either state or federal law. Since the plaintiff's report was not protected by the whistleblower statute, the court of appeal concluded that the defendant school district was not prohibited from discharging the plaintiff based on that report (148 Cal. App. 4th 922, 933-935) .

The plaintiff in Patten v. Grant Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 113 , was a school principal who sued her employer, a public school district, under the whistleblower-retaliation statute. That statute prohibits an employer from retaliating against an employee for disclosing information to a government or law-enforcement agency when the employee had reasonable cause to believe that the information disclosed a violation of state or federal statute, or a violation or noncompliance with a state or federal rule or regulation (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)). Specifically, the plaintiff alleged that she had been transferred to a less desirable position in retaliation for four disclosures that she made to her employer, which qualified as a government agency for this purpose (see Lab. Code § 1102.5(e)). The first disclosure arose from the district's discovery, in its year-end financial audit, of a surplus of approximately $127,000 in the budget for the Immediate Intervention/Underperforming Schools Program (II/USP) for the plaintiff's school. The district wanted to reassign expenditures already incurred for at least one other educational program, and perhaps others, to nearly $104,000 of this surplus. The reassignment would allow the district to retain that amount of unspent II/USP funds (rather than return the amount to the state) and, the plaintiff maintained, would provide the district with funds to clean up its budget. To effectuate the reassignment of expenditures, the district requested that the plaintiff sign blank "transfer of funds" forms. The plaintiff refused, explaining to the district that she was "fearful of the legality of this action." The district later carried out the reassignment, and the plaintiff eventually met with a state assembly member and a representative of a state senator regarding the matter. She also attended a school-board meeting and provided information about the II/USP funding issue (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1381-1382) .

The second disclosure occurred when the plaintiff received complaints from female students that a male physical-education teacher was peering into the girls' locker room. The plaintiff disclosed this information to her district superiors for personnel action (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1382) .

The third disclosure involved an off-color remark that a male science teacher had made to a female student. Again, the plaintiff disclosed this information to her superiors for personnel action (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1382) .

The fourth and final disclosure occurred after a student was assaulted on the school campus. The plaintiff requested additional staff to keep the campus safe (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1382) .

The trial court granted the district's motion for summary judgment, holding that only the disclosure regarding II/USP funding constituted protected whistleblowing. As to that disclosure, however, the court determined that the district had not retaliated against the plaintiff by subjecting her to an adverse employment action, because the complained-of transfer was between essentially equivalent positions (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1383) .

The court of appeal began its analysis by stating that, to establish a prima facie case of retaliation under the whistleblower statute (Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)), the plaintiff had to show (1) she engaged in a protected activity, (2) her employer subjected her to an adverse employment action, and (3) there was a causal linkbetween the two (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384) . On the first element--whether the plaintiff had engaged in protected activity--the court of appeal held as a matter of law that the second and third disclosures (relaying complaints about two teachers) did not amount to whistleblowing. Although the disclosures were made to a government agency (the district), the court found that the disclosures indisputably encompassed only the context of internal personnel matters involving a supervisor and her employees, rather than the disclosure of a legal violation. The court found it significant that the plaintiff had admitted she merely forwarded complaints by students of inappropriate conduct of the teachers for personnel action (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1384-1385) . The court remarked that "[t]o exalt these exclusively internal personnel disclosures with whistleblower status would create all sorts of mischief. Most damagingly, it would thrust the judiciary into micromanaging employment practices and create a legion of undeserving protected 'whistleblowers' arising from the routine workings and communications of the job site" (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1385) .

The court of appeal also found as a matter of law that the fourth disclosure (regarding the need for more staff for safety purposes) did not amount to whistleblowing. Again, the disclosure was made in an exclusively internal administrative context and did not show any belief on the plaintiff's part that she was disclosing a violation of state or federal law in any sort of whistleblowing context (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1385) .

The court of appeal thus agreed with the trial court that only the first disclosure (regarding II/USP funding) presented a triable question of whistleblowing activity. The court of appeal explained that the plaintiff's disclosures to the district and to legislative personnel regarding the reassignment of other program expenditures to the II/USP surplus presented a whistleblowing archetype: disclosing the allegedly unauthorized use of public assets. Also, the plaintiff presented a triable issue that she reasonably believed she was disclosing a violation of law: she informed a state Assembly member, his assistant, and a representative of a state Senator; she had refused to sign the blank "transfer of funds" forms that the district requested because "there was no way to ensure the [reassigned] expenditures were legitimate based on II/USP guidelines"; and she "was fearful of the legality of this action" (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1385-1386) .

The court of appeal went on to find held that there was a triable issue of fact on the second element of the plaintiff's prima facie case, whether she had suffered an adverse employment action when the district transferred her to another school. Generally, an adverse employment action is one that materially affects the terms and conditions of employment. The California Supreme Court has applied the "materiality" test in the context of a retaliation action under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Yanowitz v. L'Oreal USA, Inc. (2005) 36 Cal. 4th 1028, 1050-1061, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 436, 116 P.3d 1123 , discussed in § 100.42[3][f]; see Gov. Code § 12940(h)), and in this case the court of appeal held that the same test applies in a retaliation action under the whistleblower statute (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1386-1388 ; see Lab. Code § 1102.5(b)). Applying that test in this case, the court of appeal found that, even though the wages, benefits, and duties of the two positions (as set forth in the job descriptions) were the same, the transfer could reasonably be viewed as an adverse employment action. The plaintiff's new school was a smaller, higher-achieving school, and it did not present the same challenges for a principal as did the plaintiff's former school. The court of appeal remarked that the new school did "not present the kinds of administrative challenges an up-and-coming principal wanting to make her mark would relish." Also, the year-round schedule of the new school conflicted with the plaintiff's family schedule and her own educational plans. Considering the plaintiff's allegations collectively, the court of appeals concluded that the plaintiff had presented a triable issue on the question of adverse employment action (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1388-1390) .

Finally, the court of appeal found that the chronology of events raised a triable issue concerning the existence of a causal link between the plaintiff's II/USP disclosures and her transfer to the new school. Accordingly, the court of appeal reversed the grant of summary judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings on the plaintiff's retaliation claim (134 Cal. App. 4th 1378, 1390-1391) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.61B

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.61B Opposing Contention That Tort Action Exists Due to Public Policy Violation--Physician Not Terminated for Advocating for Medically Appropriate Health Care

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF WAS NOT TERMINATED PRINCIPALLY FOR ADVOCATING FOR MEDICALLY APPROPRIATE HEALTH CARE.

Physician May Be Terminated for Failure to Comply With Employer's Directives That Are Medically Appropriate. Although public policy prohibits the termination of a physician for advocating for medically appropriate health care (see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c)), an employer may terminate a physician for refusing to comply with the employer's directives that are medically appropriate (Sarka v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 261, 271-275, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that a physician's employment was terminated because of the physician's advocacy of medically appropriate health care [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 2056(c)]. Specifically, this form supports a contention that the termination was based on the physician's refusal to comply with the employer's medically appropriate directives.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should (1) cite instances of the physician's refusal or failure to comply with the employer's directives, and (2) explain how those directives comported with medically appropriate health care.

[b] Opposing Memorandum

In an appropriate case, the memorandum set out in § 100.42 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Physician May Be Terminated for Failure to Comply With Employer's Directives That Are Medically Appropriate

Sarka v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 261, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 810 , involved a physician who had been employed as a primary-care physician in the student health service at the University of California at Los Angeles. After the university terminated his employment, the physician filed an administrative grievance, contending that he had been terminated in violation of Business and Professions Code Section 2056(c), which declares it a violation of public policy for employers to penalize physicians "principally for advocating for medically appropriate health care." The termination was upheld by an administrative hearing officer. The physician then sought a writ of administrative mandate to overturn the termination decision. The trial court denied the petition, and the physician appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the writ. The court noted that Section 2056 was intended to provide an express statutory public policy in favor of physicians' advocacy for appropriate health care of their patients and against employment termination or penalization of physicians for such advocacy, and to state that a physician who has an employment or other contractual relationship with a person should not be terminated or otherwise penalized principally for advocating for appropriate health care for his or her patient (see Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 32, 45-51, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 627 , discussed in § 100.42[3][f]). In this case, however, the court of appeal found that there was substantial evidence supporting the trial court's conclusion that the physician had not been terminated principally for advocating for medically appropriate health care (146 Cal. App. 4th 261, 271-272) .

Specifically, the university had introduced evidence that the physician had been terminated for refusing to modify his practice in response to his supervisor's requests to be less wasteful of health-service resources by relying more on his clinical judgment and utilizing testing and follow-up procedures more judiciously. The university substantiated its position with medical literature and references to generally accepted standards of practice in the community of primary health care physicians at the student health service, at student health centers at the other University of California campuses, and at "benchmark universities." Thus, the university's evidence established that its policies were medically appropriate for student health care at large university campuses (146 Cal. App. 4th 261, 272-274) .

The court of appeal found it significant that the physician did not counter the university's showing with any evidence that the university's requirements were not medically appropriate. Therefore, even if the physician's practice was medically appropriate, his failure to comply with the university's medically appropriate constituted insubordination. Accordingly, the physician's termination was not principally based on his advocating for medically appropriate health care, and the termination did not violate the public policy embodied in Business and Professions Code Section 2056 (146 Cal. App. 4th 261, 274-275) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.62

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.62 Supporting Contention That Tort Cause of Action for Fraud Exists--Fraud Independent of Termination

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED SUFFICIENT FACTS TO ESTABLISH A TORT CAUSE OF ACTION FOR FRAUD AND DECEIT ON THE GROUND THAT THE MISREPRESENTATION(S) MADE BY DEFENDANT WAS/WERE AIMED NOT AT EFFECTING THE TERMINATION OF PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT, BUT AT INDUCING PLAINTIFF TO ALTER DETRIMENTALLY HIS/HER POSITION IN RESPECT TO_____ [specify].

A. Fraud Cause of Action Not Precluded in Wrongful Discharge Action If Misrepresentation Was for Purpose Separate From Effecting Termination of Employment. A cause of action for fraud as a basis for recovery of tort damages, is not precluded in a wrongful discharge action if the employer's misrepresentation is not aimed at effecting a termination of plaintiff's employment, but rather at causing plaintiff to alter his or her position in some other respect, thereby causing plaintiff to suffer detriment separate from the harm caused by loss of plaintiff's employment (Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 646-649, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981).

[Optional] B. Action for Promissory Fraud. A tort cause of action for promissory fraud is available to a plaintiff, in addition to a cause of action for wrongful discharge, if the employer made misrepresentations which induced plaintiff to enter into the employment contract, and plaintiff justifiably relied on the misrepresentations to change his or her position with resulting detriment (Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 646-649, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981).

[Optional] C. Action for Fraud in Inducing Employment Not Barred by Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Rule. An action for fraud in inducing the plaintiff to accept employment is not barred by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule, if the defendant employer's misrepresentations were not a normal part of the employment relationship or a risk reasonably encompassed within the compensation bargain (Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 970-973, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 ; see Lab. Code § 3602).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that plaintiff cannot seek tort remedies for fraud in connection with defendant's allegedly wrongful discharge of plaintiff, based on the argument that the fraud was aimed at some purpose other than the termination of the employment and therefore can be a proper basis for a fraud claim [Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 646-649, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981] .

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff has established a fraud cause of action, based on the argument that the fraud was independent of the termination, for example in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts indicating that each element of the fraud cause of action has been established [see Kerr v. Rose (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1551, 1564-565, 265 Cal. Rptr. 597] . Counsel also should set forth facts showing that the misrepresentation at issue was not aimed at effecting the termination of plaintiff's employment, but rather at some purpose separate from the termination. For example, counsel could show, if appropriate, that the employer committed fraud in inducing plaintiff to settle an agency charge [Miller v. Fairchild Industries, Inc. (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2d 498, 509-510] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.63.

[d] Related Memoranda

For detailed points and authorities relating to a tort cause of action for fraud and deceit, including points and authorities relating to the elements of, and defenses to, the cause of action, see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit .

[e] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fraud Cause of Action Not Precluded in Wrongful Discharge Action If Misrepresentation Was for Purpose Separate From Effecting Termination of Employment

In Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 , plaintiff alleged that real party in interest, Rykoff-Sexton, Inc., had recruited him away from his secure and successful position as president of his New York family-owned company, where he earned $120,000 a year. Lazar further alleged that Rykoff, through its vice president and president, induced him to accept its employment based on representations that led him to believe that he would continue to be employed by Rykoff so long as he performed well, that he would be eligible for continued advancement, that he would be part of the Rykoff "family," that the company was strong financially and anticipated solid growth and a stable, profitable future, and that the department in which Lazar worked was a growth division within the company. In accepting the offer, Lazar asked for a written employment contract but alleged that Rykoff refused on the ground that "our word is our bond." Lazar further alleged that Rykoff's offer caused him to uproot his family and move to Los Angeles at significant financial and emotional expense and to forfeit the security and success of his prior employment.

Rykoff performed his job in an exemplary manner. He increased sales in his region, and under his direction, his region achieved its sales budget for the first time. Two years after Lazar quit his old job and relocated with his family to California, Rykoff reorganized, with the resulting elimination of Lazar's job. Rykoff advised Lazar that he would be better off tendering his resignation, but keeping his position for three months longer while he sought other work. However, Rykoff gave Lazar a desk in its warehouse where the noise made it impossible to use a telephone. Lazar had lost touch with the restaurant business in New York and was burdened with house payments he could not afford. Lazar and his family suffered emotional distress due to the situation.

Lazar brought an action against Rykoff, alleging a number of causes of action, including (1) violation of Lab. Code § 970 (false representations to induce relocation); (2) wrongful termination in violation of public policy; (3) fraud; (4) negligent misrepresentation; (5) breach of contract; (6) promissory estoppel; and (7) intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained Rykoff's demurrer to all causes of action except the Labor Code and breach of contract claims. The court of appeal granted Lazar's petition for writ of mandate and directed the trial court to vacate its order sustaining demurrers to the causes of action for public policy wrongful termination, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The Supreme Court granted review on the issue of whether and under what circumstances a plaintiff may state a cause of action for fraudulent inducement of employment contract. The Supreme Court affirmed the ruling of the court of appeal.

Calling promissory fraud a "subspecies of the action for fraud and deceit," the Court set forth the element of the prima facie case: (1) misrepresentation; (2) knowledge of falsity; (3) intent to defraud; and (4) resulting damage. The Court noted that an action for promissory fraud may lie when a defendant fraudulently induces the plaintiff to enter into a contract. The Court observed that if true, Lazar's allegations established all of the elements of promissory fraud since (1) Rykoff represented that he would be employed by the company so long as he performed his job, that he would receive significant salary increases, and that the company was strong financially; (2) the representations were false, and Rykoff knew that they were false at the time they were made since Rykoff was planning an operational merger likely to eliminate Lazar's job and company policy limited annual increases to less than what was promised him; (3) Lazar justifiably relied on them; and (4) he left the New York employment market, uprooted his family, and purchased a California home to his detriment (12 Cal. 4th 631, 646-649) .

[b] Action for Promissory Fraud

Lazar v. Superior Court (1996) 12 Cal. 4th 631, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 377, 909 P.2d 981 , is discussed under § 100.62[3][a].

[c] Action for Fraud in Inducing Employment Not Barred by Workers' Compensation Exclusivity Rule

In Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , the plaintiff was discharged after six months of employment. The plaintiff sued the employer for fraud in inducing the plaintiff to leave his former employer; the relief sought by the plaintiff included damages for emotional distress. After the plaintiff obtained a judgment, the employer appealed, contending that the plaintiff's emotional-distress damages were barred by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule (see Lab. Code § 3602). The court of appeal rejected the employer's contention, holding that the exclusivity-of-remedy rule of the workers' compensation applies only if the conditions for workers' compensation exist. Those conditions include a requirement that the injury arise from, or be a normal risk of, the employment relationship (see Lab. Code § 3600(a)). In this particular case, the court of appeal found that the conditions of compensation did not exist because the injury was not part of the normal risk of employment. Specifically, the employer's false statements about the company's financial stability, future plans, and the plaintiff's prospects for promotion--all designed to induce the plaintiff to accept employment--were not a normal part of the employment relationship or a risk reasonably encompassed within the compensation bargain. Therefore, the plaintiff's fraud cause of action seeking emotional distress damages for such false statements was not barred by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule (89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 970-973) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraud Cause of Action Not Precluded in Wrongful Discharge Action if Misreprentation Was for Purpose Separate From Effecting Termination of Employment

Miller v. Fairchild Industries, Inc. (9th Cir. 1989) 885 F.2d 498 , was an action in which plaintiffs alleged that defendant discharged them in retaliation for filing discrimination charges before the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) in violation of statute, and also alleged various state-law causes of action. One cause of action alleged that defendant committed fraud by inducing plaintiffs to settle their complaint with the EEOC and waive their rights to sue for discrimination in exchange for improved training opportunities and other changes in terms of employment, without informing plaintiffs that they were likely to be laid off, as they were shortly after they executed the settlement agreements. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of the defendant on the fraud claim, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeals reversed the directed verdict on the fraud claim, holding that the evidence that some representatives of defendant knew that layoffs were likely to occur soon after the agreements were executed and that plaintiffs were likely candidates to be laid off, but that those representatives did not inform plaintiffs of that fact, could support a jury conclusion that the information was intentionally concealed from plaintiffs (885 F.2d 498, 509) . Because a reasonable jury could have found for plaintiffs on the fraud claim, directed verdict was improper (885 F.2d 498, 510) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.63

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.63 Opposing Contention That Tort Cause of Action for Fraud Exists--Fraud Not Independent of Termination

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO STATE A TORT CAUSE OF ACTION BASED ON FRAUD AND DECEIT, BECAUSE TORT DAMAGES CANNOT BE RECOVERED BASED ON MISREPRESENTATIONS MADE IN THE COURSE OF THE TERMINATION OF PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT.

A. Misrepresentation in Course of Termination of Employment Does Not Support Cause of Action in Tort. A cause of action for fraud or deceit, sounding in tort, cannot be based on an employer's misrepresentation made in the course of terminating an employment relationship (Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1178, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88 ; Kerr v. Rose (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1551, 1564-1565, 265 Cal. Rptr. 597).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff has established a tort cause of action for fraud and deceit based on allegations that the former employer's misrepresentation during the course of the termination of employment constituted fraud or deceit, on the ground that such a misrepresentation cannot be the basis of recovery in tort. Optional Paragraph B is for use where the plaintiff has failed to establish one or more of the elements of the cause of action for fraud or deceit. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the points and authorities set out in § 100.62.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff cannot maintain a tort cause of action for fraud and deceit because the fraud was not independent of the termination, for example in a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the misrepresentation alleged by plaintiff was aimed solely at terminating plaintiff's employment, and did not induce plaintiff to alter his/her position detrimentally in any other respect. Counsel also should argue that plaintiff's damages result only from the termination itself. If appropriate, facts indicating that all elements of the fraud cause of action have not been met should be discussed.

[c] Related Memoranda

For detailed points and authorities relating to a tort cause of action for fraud and deceit, including points and authorities relating to the elements of, and defenses to, the cause of action, see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit .

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes . For discussion and forms relating to actions for fraud and deceit, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 269, Fraud and Deceit .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Misrepresentation in Course of Termination of Employment Does Not Support Cause of Action in Tort

The facts and procedural background of Hunter v. Up-Right, Inc. (1993), 6 Cal. 4th 1174, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 8, 864 P.2d 88 , are discussed in § 100.62[3][a]. The Court held that, although a misrepresentation made by an employer to effect a termination probably could not constitute a separately actionable tort, a misrepresentation designed to induce the employee to alter detrimentally his or her position in some other respect might form a basis for a valid fraud claim even in the context of a wrongful termination. In the Court's summary of its holding, it phrased the rule as permitting tort recovery "only if the plaintiff can establish all of the elements of fraud with respect to a misrepresentation that is separate from the termination of the employment contract, i.e., when the plaintiff's fraud damages cannot be said to result from termination itself " (6 Cal. 4th 1174, 1178) .

In Kerr v. Rose (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1551, 1564, 265 Cal. Rptr. 597 , plaintiff sued his former employer and supervisors alleging that they failed to recall him to work as required by company policy, after his layoff from employment. Among other claims, plaintiff alleged fraud regarding entitlement to recall and rehire. Plaintiff appealed the trial court's grant of defendants' motions for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the facts as disclosed by the evidence supporting and opposing the summary judgment motions showed, at most, one representation made to plaintiff during the layoff recall period, but that this was not a false representation and thus did not satisfy one of the elements of a cause of action for fraud (216 Cal. App. 3d 1551, 1564-1565) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.64

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.64 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Preempt Action--National Labor Relations Board Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE TRIAL COURT HAS NO JURISDICTION OVER PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED A VIOLATION OF FEDERAL LABOR LAW. PLAINTIFF'S STATE-LAW WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CLAIM THEREFORE IS PREEMPTED BY THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT, WHICH GIVES THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OVER THE ACTION.

Exclusive Jurisdiction of National Labor Relations Board. The National Labor Relations Board has exclusive jurisdiction over awrongful discharge claim, filed in state court, that alleges both state and federal labor law violations (Rodriguez v. Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 668, 674-679, 253 Cal. Rptr. 779 ; Bassett v. Attebery (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 290, 294, 225 Cal. Rptr. 399 ; Henry v. Intercontinental Radio, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713-715, 202 Cal. Rptr. 328).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention by a defendant-employer that a wrongful discharge action is preempted by the National Labor Relations Act, where the employee has alleged violations of both state and federal labor laws.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge cause of action is preempted by the National Labor

Relations Act, for example in a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the employer's misconduct alleged by plaintiff and show how that conduct, if proven, would be a violation of the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA), specifying the applicable provision of the NLRA. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that plaintiff has alleged that he or she engaged in activity protected by section 7 of the NLRA and was discharged in retaliation for such conduct. If the alleged conduct does not clearly fall within the NLRA's coverage, counsel should argue that it is the type of activity that the NLRA is intended to cover, and not merely of peripheral concern to federal labor policy, and that there is no state or local compelling interest which would justify interference with federal labor law [San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon (1959) 359 U.S. 236, 244-245, 79 S. Ct. 773, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.71 -100.73 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Jurisdiction of National Labor Relations Board

In Rodriguez v. Yellow Cab Cooperative, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 668, 253 Cal. Rptr. 779 , a taxicab driver brought an action for wrongful termination against his employer on the basis of public policy violations and interference with his political activities. While employed, the plaintiff had received many warnings concerning violation of company rules and refusals to convey passengers. He had also founded a labor organization and organized fellow employees. After his termination, plaintiff filed an unfair labor practice charge with the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB), claiming he was discharged in retaliation for his union activities. The NLRB refused to issue a complaint, on the ground that other employees had been discharged for similar misconduct. In bringing the civil action, the plaintiff argued that the action was based not on the allegation that he was fired for his union activities, but rather that he was fired in retaliation for testimony he had given the PUC in opposition to defendant's application for an airport van permit, which he opposed as against the interest of cab drivers. The employer moved for summary judgment based on preemption of the action by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA). The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court stated that plaintiff's testimony was protected by NLRA § 7 (29 U.S.C. § 157), which guarantees employees the right, among other things, to engage in concerted activities for the purpose of mutual aid and protection. The court further held that plaintiff's conduct did not fall within any of the exceptions to the broad preemption rule established in San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon (1959) 359 U.S. 236, 244-245, 79 S. Ct. 773, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775 . The court also analyzed the test in Farmer v. Carpenters (1977) 430 U.S. 290, 297, 302-303, 97 S. Ct. 1056, 51 L. Ed. 2d 338 , for application of the preemption rule. That case posited two questions: (1) did the natureof the conduct complained of create a risk that the lawsuit would result in regulation of conduct protected by the NLRA? and (2) did the state have a substantial interest in protecting the plaintiff from the harm he alleged? (206 Cal. App. 3d 668, 677) . The court in Rodriguez stated that although the second question could be answered affirmatively, the first could also be answered affirmatively (206 Cal. App. 3d 668, 678) . The court stated that because the state court would look at the same aspects of plaintiff's conduct as would the NLRB, to prove his case in state court the plaintiff would have to disprove the factual finding of the NLRB. The court did not find merit in plaintiff's attempt to characterize his activity as "political," rather than "union" activity, and stated that there was no doubt the activity was protected by the NLRA and that the state civil action was therefore preempted (206 Cal. App. 3d 668, 679) .

In Bassett v. Attebery (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 225 Cal. Rptr. 399 , plaintiff was terminated from his position as executive producer and supervisor of a television news program. Plaintiff brought an action in superior court against his employer and supervisor. The complaint alleged several causes of action, including one for wrongful discharge that alleged serious violations of state and federal labor laws in connection with a recent union election. Defendants moved for summary judgment, which was granted. With regard to the wrongful discharge cause of action, the superior court granted summary judgment on the ground that the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) had exclusive jurisdiction over the claim. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the NLRB has exclusive jurisdiction over a wrongful discharge claim filed in state court alleging federal labor law violations (180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 290) . The court rejected plaintiff's claim that he was entitled to maintain a cause of action under Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 , which held that an employee who is discharged for refusing to comply with the employer's demand to commit a criminal act may maintain a tort action against the employer. The court explained that since Tameny did not address the preemption issue, it did not support plaintiff's argument (180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 293-294) . The court also rejected plaintiff's argument that, as a supervisor, he was exempt from the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Act, because his allegations fell within one of the three basic exceptions to the exemption rule (180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 294-295) .

In Henry v. Intercontinental Radio, Inc. (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 202 Cal. Rptr. 328 , a radio station manager brought a wrongful termination action against the station that discharged him, claiming that his work to bring a union to the station and to improve the working conditions of other employees was a significant factor in the decision to terminate him. The trial court sustained the defendant employer's demurrer, on the ground that the causes of action were preempted by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA).

The court of appeal affirmed on the basis of the guidelines set forth by the United States Supreme Court in San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon (1959) 359 U.S. 236, 244-245, 79 S. Ct. 773, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775 , concerning preemption of activities involving labor-management relations. The court reiterated the Garmon rule that any activity arguably subject to the NLRA is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB), unless the activity is only peripherally involved with the federal law or involves state interests deeply rooted in local feeling and responsibility (155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 712-713) . The court stated that the critical inquiry is whether the activity that is arguably subject to preemption could have been presented to the NLRB even though it was not so presented (155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 714) . The court concluded that the question of whether certain labor-related activities of the plaintiff were significant contributing factors in his discharge was a subject for decision by the NLRB in the first instance. The court added that the action was not merely of peripheral concern to federal labor policy and that there was no compelling interest so deeply rooted in local law as to justify local interference with federal labor law (155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 715) . The court also discounted the plaintiff's theory that his supervisorial status immunized him from the NLRA, on the basis of a line of federal cases holding otherwise (155 Cal. App. 3d 707, 713) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exclusive Jurisdiction of National Labor Relations Board

In Kelecheva v. Multivision Cable T.V. Corp. (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 , the plaintiff alleged that his discharge from employment violated the fundamental public policy embodied in state and federal labor law statutes, in that the discharge was based on plaintiff's refusal to illegally prevent coworkers' unionization attempts. Plaintiff also alleged that his discharge breached an implied covenant to discharge only for good cause and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, ruling that all three causes of action were preempted by federal labor law. The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of the cause of action based on public policy, holding that the cause of action was preempted under the analysis of the United States Supreme Court in San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon (1959) 359 U.S. 236, 245, 79 S. Ct. 773, 3 L. Ed. 2d 775 , and Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Carpenters (1978) 436 U.S. 180, 197, 98 S. Ct. 1745, 56 L. Ed. 2d 209 . Under that analysis, the critical inquiry is whether the controversy presented to the state court is identical to or different fromthat which could have been, but was not, presented to the NLRB (18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 527-528) . Because the employer's conduct that was alleged to violate the federal labor laws would, if proven, be a violation of the NLRA, the cause of action was held preempted (18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528) . However, the court held that the contract causes of action were not preempted, on the ground that the issues involved in those causes of action would not be identical to issues involved in an unfair labor practice claim, and that the state's interests in providing contract remedies for employees such as plaintiff (supervisors who are neither covered by collective bargaining agreements nor directly protected by the NLRA) outweigh any marginal effect the adjudication of those claims might have on the administration of national labor policies (18 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529-532) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.65

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.65 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Preempt Action--Section 301 of Labor Management Relations Act Preempts State-Law Cause of Action [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IS PREEMPTED BY SECTION 301 OF THE LABOR MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT IN THAT RESOLUTION OF PLAINTIFF'S STATE-LAW CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL TERMINATION IS SUBSTANTIALLY DEPENDENT ON ANALYSIS OF THE TERMS AND CONDITIONS OF THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT THAT GOVERNS PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT.

Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim. A state-law claim for wrongful termination by an employee is preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) if the application of state law requires interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement or is substantially dependent on the analysis of such an agreement (Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 413, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410, 423 ; Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 220, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 ; Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142, 1147 ; DFEH v. Verizon Cal., Inc. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 160, 164-171, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 258 ; Friday v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 123, 236 Cal. Rptr. 291).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant employer's contention that a plaintiff's state-law claim for wrongful discharge is preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act, based on the argument that determination of the claim under state law would require interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement or is substantially dependent on the analysis of such agreement.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a state-law wrongful discharge claim is preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act, for example in a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that plaintiff is covered by a collective bargaining agreement, discuss the specific provisions of the collective bargaining agreement that are implicated by plaintiff's state-law claim, and show how such provisions would necessarily have to be interpreted or analyzed to determine the claim. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that plaintiff's claim for breach of contract or breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing are preempted because the collective bargaining agreement, rather than a separate employment agreement, governs the plaintiff's employment relationship (e.g., the contract contains a job security clause [Cook v. Lindsay Olive Growers (9th Cir. 1990) 911 F.2d 233, 239]).

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.71 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice forsummary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim

In Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 , an employee who was covered under a collective bargaining agreement was discharged for allegedly filing a false workers' compensation claim and sued her employer in state court for retaliatory discharge for filing a workers' compensation claim. The employer removed the case to the federal district court on grounds of diversity of citizenship and moved that the district court either dismiss on the ground of preemption or stay the proceedings until completion of arbitration. The district court dismissed on the basis that the claim for retaliatory discharge was inextricably intertwined with a collective bargaining provision that generally prohibited wrongful discharge and that allowing the state-law action to proceed would undermine the arbitration procedures called for in the parties' contract. The circuit court of appeals upheld the dismissal.

The U.S. Supreme Court first stated its agreement with Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 , discussed below, which held that a state-law claim is preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) if its resolution depends on the meaning of a collective bargaining agreement, because state-law interpretations of collective bargaining agreements could be inconsistent with each other ( 486 U.S. 399, 405-406) . The Court went on to state that if the state-law claim can, however, be resolved without interpreting the collective bargaining agreement, the claim is independent and will not be preempted (486 U.S. 399, 407-410) . The Court emphasized that collective bargaining agreements should be interpreted by arbitrators as generally provided by the agreements, but that judges can determine state-law questions involving labor-management relations if they do not require construing the labor contracts (486 U.S. 399, 411) . The Court held that an application of state law is preempted under Section 301 only if the application requires the interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement (486 U.S. 399, 413) . The Court stated, however, that in the case before it, the claim of retaliatory discharge simply required the employer's factual showing of a nonretaliatory reason for the discharge and did not require an inquiry into the meaning of any provision of the collective bargaining agreement (486 U.S. 399, 407) .

In Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 , an employee sued his employer for the bad-faith handling of a disability claim included in an insurance plan contained in a collective bargaining agreement. On the employer's and disability insurer's motion for summary judgment, the trial court ruled that the action either arose under Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act or that the state-law claim was preempted by Section 301. The state court of appeal affirmed, and the state Supreme Court reversed on the ground that a Section 301 suit arises out of a labor contract and the employee's claim was a tort claim of bad faith that was distinguishable from a contract claim.

The United States Supreme Court stated that for purposes of uniformity in the application of federal law, questions relating to what the parties to a labor agreement agreed to and the legal consequences of a breach of such an agreement must be resolved by reference to uniform federal law under Section 301, whether such questions arise in the context of a suit for breach of contract or for a suit alleging tort liability (471 U.S. 202, 211) . However, the Court pointed out that Section 301 was not meant to preempt state rules proscribing conduct or establishing rights independent of labor contracts (471 U.S. 202, 212-213) . The Court formulated its test to require the determination of whether the tort claim was independent of any right established by contract or whether the tort claim was "inextricably intertwined with consideration of the terms of the labor contract" (471 U.S. 202, 213) . The Court found that because the right asserted under the tort claim not only derived from the contract but was defined by the contractual obligation of good faith, any attempt to assess liability would inevitably involve contract interpretation (471 U.S. 202, 218) . The Court also stated that the full scope of the preemptive effect of federal labor-contract law must be determined on a case-by-case basis (471 U.S. 202, 220) .

In Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142 , a racetrack employee discharged for misappropriation of funds sued her former employer for wrongful discharge and related actions, claiming that the charges against her were a pretext for her firing. Defendants removed the case to federal court on the basis of that court's jurisdiction over federal questions. The district court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on all claims.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals held that the employee's claims were preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (854 F.2d 1142, 1146-1147) . The court applied what it termed the "twin tests" of the U.S. Supreme Court derived from Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 , and Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 , both discussed above. The court presented the tests as follows: Does the application of state law (1) require the interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement (Lingle test), or (2) substantially depend on analysisof the terms of an agreement made between the parties in a labor contract (Lueck test)? (854 F.2d 1142, 1147) . In applying this test to the employee's claim that the employer breached the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the court stated that the claim was preempted because the basis of the complaint was the plaintiff's employment contract, which in this case was the collective bargaining agreement (854 F.2d 1142, 1147-1148) .

In DFEH v. Verizon Cal., Inc. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 160, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 258 , the plaintiff was an employee who took time off under the Moore-Brown-Roberti California Family Rights Act (CFRA) (see Gov. Code § 12945.2).

CFRA allows an employee in a firm over a certain size to have up to 12 weeks off each year because of a need to care for seriously ill family members or because of the employee's own serious health condition (Gov. Code § 12945.2(a), (b)). CFRA does not require that an employee be paid for leave time unless the employee would otherwise have had the right to be paid for the time, such as an employee's having accrued vacation leave or sick leave (Gov. Code § 12945.2(e)).

In this case, the plaintiff was an hourly worker covered by a collective bargaining agreement (CBA). She had accrued 300 hours of sick leave under the relevant terms of the CBA when she began taking time off for chiropractic treatment of back problems. The employer used the accrued sick leave to pay her for the time off, pursuant to CFRA, for the first four weeks. After that, the employer demanded that the employee provide a medical report from a specialist in orthopedics or neurology showing total incapacitation. She never provided such a report. She continued to have chiropractic treatment, for which she was not penalized by the employer, but she did not continue to receive paid time off. The California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH) filed a complaint alleging that the employer's failure to pay the employee for all absences after the first four weeks was a violation of CFRA. The employer defended on the basis that the state-law CFRA claim was preempted by Section 301 of the federal Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 (LMRA) (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)). The trial court rejected the preemption argument and entered judgment in favor of the employee, and the employer appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that in general, Section 301 preempts a state-law claim that is "substantially dependent" on an analysis of a CBA. However, factual and legal issues independent of a CBA are not preempted, and a state-law claim is not preempted if it implicates rights and obligations that exist independent of the CBA (108 Cal. App. 4th 160, 164-168) . Applying those principles, the court of appeal found that the resolution of the dispute clearly depended on an analysis of the CBA. The CBA contained several complex provisions governing sickness and accident benefits. A crucial portion of the CBA reserved to management the right to investigate disabilities due to injury or other causes, and it granted management "sole discretion" to require an opinion from a nontreating physician, with "the payment of benefits [to] be governed by such investigation and opinion." The court pointed out that the relevant provisions of the CBA were subject to different interpretations: one possible interpretation could be that the employer had the right to cut off benefits if the employee failed to provide the requested specialist's opinion, but another possible interpretation could be that a simple note from a chiropractor would have sufficed. The court found that under the circumstances, determining whether the employee was entitled to paid leave after the first four weeks could not be resolved without interpreting the relevant provisions of the CBA. Moreover, this case did not involve a state-law right independent of the CBA. CFRA only mandated unpaid leave; whether the employee was entitled to be paid for the time off depended on what had been negotiated in the CBA regarding paid sick leave (see Gov. Code § 12945.2(e)) (108 Cal. App. 4th 160, 169-171) .

Because resolution of the employee's claim required interpretation of the CBA, the court of appeal concluded that the employee's claim was preempted by Section 301 of the LMRA. Applying federal law, the court found that the six-month limitations period applicable to Section 301 claims had expired when the action was filed. Accordingly, the court reversed the trial court's judgment and remanded with directions to dismiss the action as time-barred (108 Cal. App. 4th 160, 172) .

In Friday v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 236 Cal. Rptr. 291 , an employee of an aircraft manufacturing company, though not a union member, was a member of the bargaining unit and thus bound by the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement. This employee brought an action against his employer for wrongful termination of employment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor or the employer on the grounds of federal preemption and collateral estoppel.

Without ruling on the collateral estoppel issue, the court of appeal affirmed, holding, in part, that both causes of action were preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 123, 125) . Federal law preempts state wrongful discharge law because the right not to be dismissed without just cause is essentially equivalent to a right created by the collective bargaining agreement (188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 123) . The one exception to the rule of preemption for wrongful discharge claims stemming from violations of public policy or statute was not applicable because plaintiff did not report a clear violation of a specific statute for the protection of the public, but merely complained about the safety of his workplace, a subject covered by the collective bargaining agreement (188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 124) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim

In Schlacter-Jones v. General Telephone (9th Cir. 1991) 936 F.2d 435 , a former employee brought an action against the employer for wrongful termination, violation of state constitutional rights, and related claims, based on termination following mandatory drug-testing that revealed the presence of cocaine. The federal court of appeals upheld summary judgment for the defendant, holding that the action was preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act because determination of the employer's liability necessarily involved contract interpretation, even though the collective bargaining agreement contained no provision regarding the drug-testing program, which was implemented by the employer after the plaintiff had been hired, and was not the subject of bilateral negotiation (936 F.2d 435, 439-443) .

In Cook v. Lindsay Olive Growers (9th Cir. 1990) 911 F.2d 233 , an employee was fired because he took personal leave and then did not report to work or call in for five consecutive days after the employer transferred him to a position that paid him less money, but which accommodated his religious requirement that he observe the Sabbath. The employee, who was covered by a collective bargaining agreement, sued the employer for, among other things, wrongful termination in violation of public policy, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed summary judgment for the employer, in part because Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act preempted the implied covenant (911 F.2d 233, 241) . The court found that Section 301 preempted the implied covenant claim because the collective bargaining agreement contained terms governing job security. Since the claim asserted rights which were based directly on those terms, it required analysis of the collective bargaining agreement (911 F.2d 233, 239) . Section 301 preempted the emotional distress claims because the determination of whether the employer acted outrageously in firing the employee depended on the court's interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement provisions governing discharge, seniority, and work transfers (911 F.2d 233, 239-240) . Section 301 did not preempt the public policy claim because the public policy at issue was religious discrimination in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) and it was not necessary to interpret the collective bargaining agreement to enforce that statute (911 F.2d 233, 238, 240) . However, FEHA preempted the public policy claim because that statute provides the exclusive remedy for religious discrimination claims (911 F.2d 233, 238) (but cf. Rojo v. Kliger (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 65, 90-91, 276 Cal. Rptr. 130, 801 P.2d 373 (involving sex discrimination, but holding that Cal. Const., art. I, § 8, which prohibits discrimination based on sex, race, creed, color, or national origin, is declaratory of fundamental policy, and may provide basis for claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, independent of FEHA), discussed in § 100.43[3][a]).

In Harris v. Alumax Mill Products, Inc. (9th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2d 400 , an employee brought a state wrongful termination action against his employer based on his termination resulting from application of the employer's rule deeming any three-day unauthorized absence to be a voluntary termination. The district court granted summary judgment for the employer, holding that the action was preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act and was time-barred under the six-month statute of limitations for Section 301 actions of that kind. The Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that the employee's wrongful termination claim that his employer had violated the covenant of good faith and fair dealing was clearly dependent on analysis of the terms of the collective bargaining agreement and was thus preempted. The agreement expressly provided for grievance procedures for an employee to follow regarding any discharge or application of work rules. Because the complaint involved both wrongful discharge and application of a work rule, both of which were covered under the agreement, the court held that the action was preempted (897 F.2d 400, 402-403) .

In Jackson v. Southern California Gas Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 881 F.2d 638 , a former employee brought an action alleging race discrimination and constructive wrongful discharge based on several theories, including breach of contract and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The employer removed the state action to federal court on the basis of preemption under Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act, and the district court dismissed the contract and covenant of good-faith actions for failure to exhaust the grievance procedures contained in the collective bargaining agreement between the parties. The Ninth Circuit affirmed these actions of the district court, stating that the collective bargaining agreement covered in detail the conduct that would give rise to dismissal for cause. The appellate court agreed with the district court's determination that the employee's action for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing was preempted by Section 301 and that he had not exhausted his remedies under the agreement (881 F.2d 638, 644-645, 646) .

In Moreau v. San Diego Transit Corp. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 258 Cal. Rptr. 647 , an employee brought suit for wrongful termination and related causes of action when he was forced to resign after being entrapped into selling drugs in the work place. The defendant employer claimed that the action was preempted by the collective bargaining agreement, and the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the state-law action was preempted because the agreement stated that employees could not be discharged without justcause, and in order to determine whether the employer could terminate the employee on the basis of the entrapment procedure, the court would have to interpret the agreement to determine whether the just-cause requirement was intended to encompass entrapment to control drug use in the work place (210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 624-625) . In addition, the court held that even if the state remedy was a nonnegotiable one, preemption would occur because the parties would have to interpret the terms of the agreement (210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 627) .

In Abreu v. Svenhard's Swedish Bakery (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 1446, 257 Cal. Rptr. 26 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of the defendants in a wrongful termination action on the basis that five of the plaintiff's causes of action were preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act because of the existence of a collective bargaining agreement. The court stated that because the plaintiff was terminated for fighting on the job, his complaint regarding termination could only be handled through the grievance procedure set out in the collective bargaining agreement, and it was therefore proper for the trial court to find certain causes of action were preempted by federal law (208 Cal. App. 3d 1446, 1452-1454) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.66

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.66 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Preempt Action--Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Preempts State-Law Claim Against Labor Organization

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IS PREEMPTED BY THE LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT, IN THAT PLAINTIFF WAS A _____ [insert either POLICYMAKING or CONFIDENTIAL] EMPLOYEE OF DEFENDANT LABOR UNION.

Preemption by Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act. The federal Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.) preempts wrongful discharge claims brought against labor unions or their officials by former policymaking or confidential employees (Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1021, 1024, 1032, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873 ; Thunderburk v. United Food & Commercial Workers' Union, Local 324 (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 1341-1343, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 609 ;

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that a wrongful discharge claim against a labor organization by a former policymaking or confidential employee is preempted by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge action against a labor organization by a policymaking or confidential employee is preempted by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act, for example in a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of plaintiff's job duties, and show how those duties put plaintiff in a policymaking or confidential position with defendant union. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that plaintiff was not a rank and file union employee, but had significant discretion and decisionmaking authority, such as with respect to handling union members' grievances, implementing union policies, or granting waivers under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement [see Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1031-1032, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249,Employment Law: Termination and Discipline, and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption by Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act

In Screen Extras Guild, Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1017, 275 Cal. Rptr. 395, 800 P.2d 873 , the plaintiff was a business agent for the defendant union and was considered a union management employee. The plaintiff filed and handled members' claims, settled wage claims and grievances, and granted waivers of certain collective bargaining agreement terms. After the union discharged the plaintiff, allegedly for dishonesty and insubordination, she sued the union and its executive secretary, alleging breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, and defamation. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff's action was preempted by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA) [29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.]. The trial court denied the motion, and the court of appeal summarily denied defendant's petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to reverse its decision. The defendant sought review by the California Supreme Court.

The Court granted review and reversed, holding that the LMRDA, which mandates that unions be democratically governed and that elected union officials be responsive to the will of their union membership-electorate [see Finnegan v. Leu (1982) 456 U.S. 431, 435-436, 102 S. Ct. 1867, 72 L. Ed. 2d 239] , preempts wrongful discharge claims brought against labor unions or their officials by former policymaking or confidential employees (51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1021, 1024, 1032) . It explained that a state-law action is preempted by federal law whenever the action stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of Congress' full purposes (51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1022) . According to the Court, the LMRDA was the product of congressional concern over abuses of power by union leadership, but its primary purpose is to ensure that unions are democratically governed and responsive to the will of their memberships (51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1024) . The Court observed that elected union officials must necessarily rely on their appointed representatives to carry out the officials' programs and policies, and consequently the officials' ability to select their own administrators is an integral part of ensuring that the administrators are responsive to the will of union members (51 Cal. 3d 1017, 1024-1025) . The Court thus concluded that to allow such administrators to sue for wrongful discharge would interfere with the elected officials' ability to implement the union members' will, therefore frustrating the goal of union democracy embodied by the LMRDA, and would violate the Supremacy Clause [see U.S. Const., art. VI, § 2] (51 Cal.

3d 1017, 1030) .

In Thunderburk v. United Food & Commercial Workers' Union, Local 324 (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 609 , the plaintiff had been employed by the defendant labor union as a secretary. After her discharge, she sued the union for wrongful termination. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the wrongful-termination claims were preempted by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA) (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.). The court of appeal affirmed, holding that although the plaintiff was not a management or policymaking employee, she was a confidential employee. In this context, "confidential" employees include secretaries who do not have policymaking responsibilities but who have access to confidential union information that, if disclosed, could thwart union policies and objectives. In this case, the plaintiff's job responsibilities had given her access to confidential information such as the union's communications with its attorneys, union representatives' mail, members' disciplinary notices, grievance files, membership files, and information regarding the union's political propaganda. Accordingly, she was a confidential employee and her cause of action was preempted by the LMRDA (92 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 1341-1343) .

In Hanson v. Int'l Ass'n of Machinists & Aerospace Workers (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 977 , cert. denied, 535 U.S. 1078 (2002) , the plaintiff was a labor union's business representative who had been discharged for making disparaging remarks about the union's leadership. The plaintiff sued the union for wrongful termination in violation of public policy. After the entry of a judgment for the plaintiff, the union appealed, contending that the plaintiff's cause of action was preempted by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA) (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.). In response, the plaintiff asserted that his action should not be barred, because the LMRDA does not preempt wrongful-termination suits by elected union officials (see Sheet Metal Workers' Int'l Ass'n v. Lynn (1989) 488 U.S. 347, 355, 109 S. Ct. 639, 644-645, 102 L. Ed. 2d 700). The plaintiff argued that because he initially attained his position as a union business agent through an election, his cause of action was not preempted by the LMRDA. The court of appeal rejected this contention, however, because after the plaintiff's election the union had been reorganized, and at the time of his termination he held the business-agent job as an appointee of the union's district president. Therefore, at the relevant time the plaintiff was not an elected official, and his cause of action was preempted by the LMRDA. Accordingly, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, with instructions to dismiss the complaint (90 Cal. App. 4th 977, 982-983, 986) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.67

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.67 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--ERISA Preempts State-Law Claim--Claim Relates to Benefit Plan Regulated by ERISA [29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IS PREEMPTED BY ERISA IN THAT THE CLAIM RELATES TO AN EMPLOYEE BENEFIT PLAN UNDER ERISA.

A. ERISA Preempts State Claims That Relate to Benefit Plans. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) supersedes any and all state laws, including state wrongful termination actions, insofar as they relate to any employee benefit plan covered by ERISA (29 U.S.C. § 1144(a); Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 138-139, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 ; Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799-800) .

B. "Relates to" Defined. A cause of action "relates to" a benefit plan if it has a connection with or refers to such a plan (Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 139-140, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 ; Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799-800) , especially if the cause of action is premised on the existence of a plan (see Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 140, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474, 484-485) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant employer's contention that a plaintiff's wrongful discharge cause of action is preempted when the claim relates to an employee benefit plan under ERISA.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that ERISA preempts a wrongful discharge cause of action, for example in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence indicating the existence of an ERISA-covered plan, showing how the cause of action either refers to or is premised on such plan. For example, counsel could set forth facts establishing the existence of a pension plan under which plaintiff was covered and facts indicating that plaintiff has alleged that he/she was dismissed because the employer wished to avoid contributing to the pension fund [Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 139-140, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 100.75, 100.76 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] ERISA Preempts State Laws That Relate to Benefit Plans

29 U.S.C. § 1144(a) provides that, except to the extent that they are expressly exempted by 29 U.S.C. § 1144(b) (savings clause for insurance laws), ERISA supersedes any and all state laws insofar as they may now or hereafter relate to any ERISA-covered employee benefit plan [see 29 U.S.C. § 1003 (benefit plans covered and exempted by ERISA)].

Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 , and Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794 , are discussed under § 100.67[3][b].

[b] "Relates to" Defined

Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 , involved an employee who was fired after almost ten years of service, ostensibly because of a workforce reduction. The plaintiff employee sued his former employer, alleging that he was fired because his employer wished to avoid contributing to his pension fund. The employee did not sue under ERISA, but instead sought damages under various tort and contract theories. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer and the intermediate appellate court affirmed, holding that the plaintiff's employment was at will. The Texas Supreme Court reversed, holding that public policy limits the at-will doctrine and reasoning that the employee's case was not preempted by ERISA because he was seeking tort and contract damages rather than lost pension benefits.

The United States Supreme Court reversed, holding that such a cause of action is preempted by ERISA because it specifically refers to, and is premised on, the existence of a pension plan; thus, the cause of action "relates to" a pension plan. Relying on the "deliberately expansive language" of the ERISA preemption provision [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a)], the Court explained that Congress used the words "relate to" in the broad sense, and did not limit their application only to state laws that relate to the specific subjects covered by ERISA. It added that Congress also used broad language to define "state law" as "all laws, decisions, rules, regulations, or other [s]tate action having the effect of law" [29 U.S.C. § 1144(c)(1)]. The Court explained that a law "relates to" a benefit plan if it has a connection with or reference to such a plan [see Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799-800] , and concluded that a state law may "relate to" a plan, and thereby be preempted, even if the law is not specifically designed to affect the plan or the effect is only indirect (498 U.S. 133, 139-140) . The Court rejected the employee's argument that ERISA did not preempt his cause of action because it did not focus on benefit terms and conditions, but rather on the employer's termination decision. The Court explained that the ERISA definition of the term "state" is expansive, rather than restrictive, because it includes state agencies and instrumentalities whose actions might not otherwise be considered state law [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(c)(2) ("state" as including any political subdivision, or any agency or instrumentality, which purports to regulate, directly or indirectly, the terms and conditions of benefit plans)]. Thus, Congress did not intend to restrict the ERISA preemption provision to state laws purporting to regulate plan terms and conditions (498 U.S. 133, 141-142) .

In Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794 , a former employee brought a wrongful discharge action against his former employer, alleging in part that the discharge was intended to prevent the employee from acquiring certain retirement benefits that he was promised. The action was originally brought in state court, and the employer successfully moved for removal to federal court. The district court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the summary judgment with regard to the issue of preemption under ERISA. The court held that the employee's claims concerning the retirement plan were completely preempted because they "related to" the employer's employee benefit plan (826 F.2d 794, 799) . The court stated that Congress intended for the words "relate to" to be interpreted broadly (826 F.2d 794, 799) . The court explained that state-law causes of action relate to an employee benefit plan if they have a connection with or reference to such a plan, and certain allegations in the employee's complaint related to the retirement plan, which established such a connection (826 F.2d 794, 799-800) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] "Relates to" Defined

In Nishimoto v. Federman-Bachrach & Associates (9th Cir. 1990) 903 F.2d 709 , a plaintiff argued that her wrongful termination claim, which in substance alleged that her employer fired her to prevent her from receiving pension and insurance benefits, was improperly removed to federal court because she did not state an ERISA claim. In concluding that the district court would have had jurisdiction over the plaintiff's claim had it originally been filed there, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals discussed the "complete preemption" of any claims that "relate to" employee benefit plans [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a)], and held that ERISA preempted the plaintiff's claim because it referred to, and was connected with, an ERISA-covered plan (903 F.2d 709, 713) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.68

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.68 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--ERISA Preempts State-Law Claim--ERISA Action Covers Same Misconduct Alleged in State-Law Action [29 U.S.C. § 1001 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL DISCHARGE CLAIM IS PREEMPTED BY HIS/HER ERISA CAUSE OF ACTION FOR_____ [DISCHARGE FOR EXERCISING HIS/HER RIGHTS UNDER ABENEFIT PLAN or INTERFERENCE WITH THE ATTAINMENT OF BENEFIT RIGHTS].

Preemption Based on ERISA Claims. ERISA preempts a wrongful termination claim that conflicts directly with a Title 29, United States Code, Section 1140, cause of action that alleges either discharge of a plan participant for exercising his or her rights under the plan or interference with the attainment of benefit rights (Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila (2004) 542 U.S. 200, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 326 ; Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 145, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant employer's contention that a wrongful discharge state-law claim is preempted because the facts alleged in support of the claim would also support ERISA claims covering the same employer misconduct.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge state-law claim is preempted by ERISA because the facts alleged in support of such claim also support ERISA claims covering the same employer misconduct, for example, in a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence indicating the existence of an ERISA-covered plan, and should demonstrate that plaintiff has alleged that he/she was discharged for exercising his/her rights under the plan or that the employer interfered with his/her attainment of benefits under the plan. For example, counsel could set forth facts establishing that plaintiff has alleged that the employer dismissed him/her to prevent the attainment of pension benefits [Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 139-140, 142-145, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.76 may be used to oppose the contention supported by the above points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption Based on ERISA Claims

In Aetna Health Inc. v. Davila (2004) 542 U.S. 200, 124 S. Ct. 2488, 159 L. Ed. 2d 312 , a participant and a beneficiary in employee benefit plans regulated under the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) (see 29 U.S.C. § 1132 et seq.) sued their respective health-maintenance organizations in state court. In separate complaints, the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had failed to exercise ordinary care in the handling of coverage decisions, in violation of a duty imposed by a state health-care liability statute. The plaintiffs both suffered injuries allegedly arising from the defendants' decisions not to provide coverage for certain treatment and services recommended by plaintiffs' treating physicians. Invoking state law, the plaintiffs argued that defendants' refusal to cover the requested services violated their state-law "duty to exercise ordinary care when making health care treatment decisions," and that these refusals proximately caused their injuries. The defendants removed the cases to federal district courts, arguing that the plaintiffs' causes of action fit within the scope of, and were therefore completely preempted by, ERISA Section 502(a) [29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)]. The district courts declined to remand the cases to state court. Then, because the plaintiffs refused to amend their complaints to bring explicit ERISA claims, the district courts dismissed the complaints with prejudice. On appeal, the Fifth Circuit consolidated the cases and reversed the district courts' judgments, holding that the plaintiffs' claims did not duplicate or fall within the scope of an ERISA Section 502(a) remedy.

The United States Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the Fifth Circuit and held that the plaintiffs' state-law claims were completely preempted by ERISA and thus were removable to federal court. The Supreme Court explained that if a federal statute wholly displaces a state-law cause of action through complete preemption, the state claim can be removed. This is so because if the federal statute completely preempts thestate-law cause of action, a claim that comes within the scope of that cause of action--even if pleaded in terms of state law--is, in reality, based on federal law.

ERISA is one of these statutes (159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 326) .

The purpose of ERISA is to provide a uniform regulatory regime over employee benefit plans. To this end, ERISA includes expansive preemption provisions (see 29 U.S.C. § 1144), which are intended to ensure that employee-benefit-plan regulation would be exclusively a federal concern. ERISA's comprehensive legislative scheme includes an integrated system of procedures for enforcement that is essential to accomplish Congress's purpose of creating a comprehensive statute for the regulation of employee benefit plans. The Supreme Court has held that the policy choices reflected in the inclusion of certain remedies, and the exclusion of others, would be completely undermined if ERISA-plan participants and beneficiaries were free to obtain remedies under state law that Congress had rejected in ERISA. Accordingly, any state-law cause of action that duplicates, supplements, or supplants the ERISA civil enforcement remedy is deemed to conflict with the clear congressional intent to make the ERISA remedy exclusive. Any such cause of action is therefore preempted (159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 326) .

ERISA Section 502(a)(1)(B) provides that a civil action may be brought by a plan participant or beneficiary to recover benefits due to him or her under the terms of the plan, to enforce his or her rights under the terms of the plan, or to clarify his or her rights to future benefits under the terms of the plan (29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B)). Section 502(a)(1)(B) is relatively straightforward. If an individual brings suit complaining of a denial of coverage for medical care, when the individual is entitled to such coverage only because of the terms of an ERISA-regulated employee benefit plan, and when no legal duty independent of ERISA or the plan terms is violated, then the suit falls within the scope of ERISA Section 502(a)(1)(B) (159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 328) .

In this case, the only actions complained of were the defendants' refusals to pay or cover medical care for the plaintiffs, and the only connection the defendants had with the plaintiffs was the defendants' administration of the employee benefit plans. It was clear, then, that the plaintiffs complained only about denials of coverage promised under the terms of ERISA-regulated employee benefit plans. Upon the denial of benefits, plaintiffs could have sought injunctive relief under Section 502(a)(1)(B), or they could have paid for the treatment themselves and then sought reimbursement through a Section 502(a)(1)(B) action (159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 329) .

The Court emphasized that interpretation of the terms of the plaintiffs' benefit plans formed an essential part of their state-law claims, and any liability under that state law would exist only because of the defendants' administration of ERISA-regulated benefit plans. In essence, the plaintiffs sued only to rectify a wrongful denial of benefits promised under ERISA-regulated plans, and they did not attempt to remedy any violation of a legal duty independent of ERISA. The Supreme Court therefore concluded that the plaintiffs' state-law claims fell within the scope of ERISA Section 502(a)(1)(B), were therefore completely preempted by Section 502, and were removable to federal district court (159 L. Ed. 2d 312, 329-330) .

The facts and procedural background of Ingersoll-Rand v. McClendon (1990) 498 U.S. 133, 111 S. Ct. 478, 112 L. Ed. 2d 474 , are discussed in § 100.67[3][b]. In Ingersoll-Rand, the United States Supreme Court held that ERISA preempted a claim alleging that an employee was wrongfully discharged to prevent him from attaining pension benefits, even though the employee was seeking various tort and contract remedies rather than pension benefits. The Court noted, however, that even if there was no express preemption provision [see 29 U.S.C. § 1144(a)], ERISA would preempt the employee's cause of action because the latter conflicted directly with an ERISA cause of action for discharging or otherwise discriminating against a plan participant for exercising his or her rights under the plan or for interfering with the attainment of benefit rights [see 29 U.S.C. § 1140]. Although the existence of such an enforcement scheme does not itself imply preemption, the ERISA provision contains "special features" warranting preemption, in that it authorizes equitable relief and gives federal courts exclusive jurisdiction in ERISA actions [see 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)] (498 U.S. 133, 142-145) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Preemption Based on ERISA Claims

In Dytrt v. Mountain State Tel. & Tel. Co. (9th Cir. 1990) 921 F.2d 889 , the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the dismissal of an employee's claim for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, holding that the claim was preempted by ERISA because the conduct alleged in the claim was identical to the misconduct she alleged in two ERISA claims for breach of fiduciary duty and interference with protected rights [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 1104(a)(1), 1140] (921 F.2d 889, 897) .

In Nishimoto v. Federman-Bachrach & Associates (9th Cir. 1990) 903 F.2d 709 , the court of appeals held that a district court had jurisdiction over a plaintiff's wrongful termination claim that alleged that she was fired to deprive her of employee benefits because federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction over ERISA actions alleging interference with benefits [see 29 U.S.C. §§ 1132(e), 1140], and pendent jurisdiction over state claims arising from a nucleus of operative facts common to both state law and ERISA claims (903 F.2d 709, 713-714) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.69

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.69 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim by National Bank Act [12 U.S.C. § 24]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IS PREEMPTED BY THE NATIONAL BANK ACT, WHICH PROVIDES THAT BANK OFFICERS MAY BE TERMINATED "AT PLEASURE."

Federal Preemption by National Bank Act. Section 24 of the National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5), which provides that national banks have the power to dismiss bank officers "at pleasure," preempts state-law wrongful termination claims by such officers, except Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) claims that do not conflict with federal antidiscrimination laws (Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 167-176, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539 ; Aalgaard v. Merchants National Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 692, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 ; see 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.; Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a contention that a state-law wrongful discharge claim is preempted by the National Bank Act because plaintiff was a bank officer. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set forth in § 100.78.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a state-law wrongful discharge claim is preempted by the National Bank Act, for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that plaintiff was a bank officer, including a president, vice president, cashier, or other officer. In particular, counsel should discuss facts indicating that plaintiff was appointed by the board of directors and held an office created by the board of directors and listed in the bylaws, that plaintiff had express legal authority to bind the bank in its transactions by executing contracts or other legal instruments on the bank's behalf, and that plaintiff's decisionmaking authority related to fundamental banking operations in such a manner as to potentially affect public trust in the bank [Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1091, 282 Cal. Rptr. 841, 811 P.2d 1025] .

If the plaintiff's claim is based on alleged discriminatory discharge in violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.], counsel should show that the alleged basis for the discrimination is not prohibited by Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.] or the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA) [29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.]. For example, physical disability, mental disability, medical condition, sexual orientation, and marital status are grounds of discrimination prohibited by FEHA but not by Title VII or the ADEA [see Gov. Code § 12940(a)]. This showing is necessary because the National Bank Act does not preempt claims based on discrimination that violates Title VII or the ADEA [Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 167-176, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption by National Bank Act

In Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539 , the plaintiff had been employed as an officer of a national bank. After she was demoted and then discharged by the bank's board of directors, the plaintiff sued the bank, alleging that the grounds for her termination were her race (African-American) and her age (45 years at the time of the demotion and 47 years at the time of discharge). The complaint asserted five causes of action: (1) breach of implied contract ofemployment, (2) violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA, Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), (3) wrongful discharge in violation of public policy as declared in FEHA, (4) breach of a covenant of good faith and fair dealing that was part of the implicit contract of employment, and (5) misrepresentation and deceit. The bank filed a motion for summary judgment, contending that it was entitled to judgment as a matter of law because Section 8 of the National Bank Act of 1864 (now codified as 12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5) preempts all state-law causes of action arising from the dismissal of a bank officer. The superior court granted the bank's motion, and the court of appeal affirmed. The California Supreme Court granted review on the sole issue of whether 12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5 preempts FEHA (22 Cal. 4th 147, 154-156) .

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal, finding that the plaintiff's FEHA claims of racial and age discrimination were not preempted by the federal statute (22 Cal. 4th 147, 179) . The Court held that 12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5 does indeed preempt FEHA to the extent the two laws are in conflict. However, the Court also held that the actual scope of the National Bank Act provision has been limited since its original enactment in 1864. Reading federal law as a whole, the Court found that the National Bank Act has been impliedly amended by subsequently enacted federal civil-rights laws, specifically Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.) and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA, 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.). Thus, as impliedly amended by Title VII and the ADEA, the National Bank Act provision actually grants a national bank only a limited power to dismiss its officers; the power does not extend to dismissal on the grounds of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age. As so amended, the National Bank Act provision preempts FEHA, but only to the extent that FEHA confers on officers of a national bank a right against dismissal on grounds not mentioned in Title VII or the ADEA (for example, physical disability, mental disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation; see Gov. Code § 12940(a)) (22 Cal. 4th 147, 167-176) . Presumably, the Court's reasoning would also apply to prevent preemption of a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, if the public policy is embodied in a provision of FEHA that is not preempted by the National Bank Act.

In Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 , the plaintiff, a bank executive, had most of his duties and responsibilities taken away and given to younger employees. Then, allegedly because the plaintiff's performance had been inadequate for three years, the defendant demanded that the plaintiff draft a letter requesting his early retirement. The plaintiff quit without doing so, but produced a letter two weeks later. He then sued the defendant for, among other things, breach of implied contract not to terminate him except for good cause, and breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. The defendant moved for summary judgment, asserting, among other things, that the plaintiff's claims were preempted by Section 24 of the National Bank Act [12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5]. The trial court granted defendant's motion and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal, after reviewing the long history and the purpose of the National Bank Act, held that allowing state employment termination claims, whether framed in tort or in contract, would frustrate the effectiveness of federal law by limiting the power of bank officials to dismiss "at pleasure" [see 12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5] (224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 686-692) . The court explained that the purpose of the National Bank Act preemption provision is to confer on a bank's board of directors sweeping powers of dismissal in order to insure the fiscal integrity of and public confidence in national banking institutions (224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 689) . The court also noted that California has long recognized that the National Bank Act preempts suits based on breach of express contractual employment rights [see, e.g., Kozlowsky v. Westminster Nat. Bank (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 593, 596-597, 86 Cal. Rptr. 52 ; Cox v. First Nat. Bank (1935) 10 Cal. App. 2d 302, 52 P.2d 524] , and that cases in other states hold that the National Bank Act bars suits based on implied contracts [see, e.g., Kemper v. First Nat. Bank of Newton (1981) 94 Ill. App. 3d 169, 418 N.E. 2d 819] (224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 690-691) . Furthermore, a number of federal decisions construing the power to dismiss "at pleasure" in other, analogous federal banking statutes and regulations have concluded that state claims based on express or implied covenants are preempted [see, e.g., Bollow v. Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco (9th Cir. 1981) 650 F.2d 1093, 1098] (224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 691-692) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption by National Bank Act

In Wells Fargo Bank v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1082, 282 Cal. Rptr. 841, 811 P.2d 1025 , the California Supreme Court held that under the National Bank Act, which gives banks the power to appoint and dismiss at pleasure a "president, vice president, cashier, and other officers" [12 U.S.C. § 24, para. 5 (emphasis added)], a national bank's assistant vice president and branch manager had no state law cause of action for breach of the employment contract (53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1094) . The Court declared that within the meaning of the National Bank Act, a bank "officer" has the following attributes: (1) he or she holds an office created by the board of directors and listed in the bank's bylaws; (2) he or she is appointed by the board of directors, either directly or pursuant to a delegation of board authority set forth in the bylaws; (3) he or she has the express legal authority to bind the bank in its transactions with borrowers, depositors, customers, or other third parties by executing contracts, or other legalinstruments on the bank's behalf; and (4) his or her decisionmaking authority, however it might be limited by bank rule or policy, relates to fundamental banking operations in such a manner as to affect potentially the public's trust in the banking institution (53 Cal. 3d 1082, 1091) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.70

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.70 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Action Preempted by Statute Providing Exclusive Remedy--Workers' Compensation Act Provides Exclusive Remedy for Injury Caused by Termination [Lab. Code §§ 3600, 3602]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR PERSONAL INJURY CAUSED BY TERMINATION IS PREEMPTED BY THE WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT WHICH PROVIDES THE EXCLUSIVE REMEDY FOR INJURY CAUSED BY TERMINATION UNLESS THE INJURY IS THE RESULT OF CONDUCT THAT DOES NOT COME WITHIN THE COMPENSATION BARGAIN.

Exclusive Remedy for Personal Injury Caused by Discharge. The Workers' Compensation Act provides the exclusive remedy for personal injury caused by termination, unless the injury is the result of conduct that does not reasonably come within the compensation bargain (Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 876, 902, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 ; Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 17-20, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 ; see Lab. Code §§ 3600, 3602).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a defendant employer's contention that plaintiff's claim for personal injury resulting from wrongful discharge is preempted, based on the argument that the Workers' Compensation Act (Labor Code §§ 3600, 3602) provides the exclusive remedy for such claims.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff's claim for personal injuries arising out of his or her discharge is preempted by the Workers' Compensation Act, for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. This form also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

For additional form pertaining to the exclusive remedy doctrine generally, see Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy Doctrine .

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that plaintiff is claiming damages for personal injury, such as physical disability or emotional distress, and that such damages arose out of the discharge. Counsel also should set forth facts indicating that the employer's conduct in discharging plaintiff comes within the compensation bargain in that it neither contravened a fundamental public policy (such as the public policy against certain types of discrimination) nor exceeded the risks inherent in the employment relationship. This argument may be combined with arguments from Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy Doctrine, §§ 239.20, 239.21, 239.23, as applicable.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the form in § 100.77 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form for a demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form for notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exclusive Remedy for Personal Injury Caused by Discharge

In Miklosy v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (2008)44 Cal. 4th 876, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690, 188 P.3d 629 , the plaintiffs were former employees of the University of California who sued the university and their former supervisors. The plaintiffs alleged that the defendants had retaliated against the plaintiffs in violation of theWhistleblower Act, which provides that state employees should be free to report waste, fraud, abuse of authority, violation of law, or threat to public health without fear of retribution [Gov. Code § 8547.1].

Among the claims asserted by theplaintiffs was a claim that the defendants had committed thecommon law tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress. The California Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal of the claim, concluding that the exclusive-remedy provision of the Workers' Compensation Act [Lab. Code § 3602] barred the plaintiffs' claim (44 Cal. 4th 876, 902-903) .

The Court reaffirmed its decision and reasoning in Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 , discussed below, another case that involved the termination of a whistleblower employee. The Court repeated that the kinds of conduct at issue in these cases (e.g., discipline or criticism) are a normal part of the employment relationship, and even if such conduct may be characterized as intentional, unfair or outrageous, it is nevertheless covered by the workers' compensation exclusivity provisions. Specifically, the Court reaffirmed that whistleblower retaliation is a risk inherent in the employment relationship. Accordingly, the Court concluded that the plaintiffs' exclusive remedy for their claims of intentional infliction of emotional distress were under the Workers'

Compensation Act (44 Cal. 4th 876, 902-903) .

In Shoemaker v. Myers (1990) 52 Cal. 3d 1, 276 Cal. Rptr. 303, 801 P.2d 1054 , plaintiff had been an investigator for the Department of HealthServices (DHS) for 22 years. The DHS fired the plaintiff after he filed a report concluding that high DHS officials knowingly sanctioned illegal activity. The DHS purportedly fired plaintiff for insubordination, after he asserted his right to representation under the Public Safety Officers Procedural Bill of Rights [Gov. Code § 3300 et seq.] when the DHS subjected him to interrogations and written questions. After appealing to the State Personnel Board, the plaintiff was reinstated. Thereafter, he filed a civil action against the DHS and his supervisors alleging that he was terminated in retaliation for his report, and that the pretextual reason for his firing (i.e., insubordination) was improper. The plaintiff's complaint included causes of action for wrongful termination and unlawful retaliatory termination in violation of former Gov. Code § 19683, a "whistleblower" statute that provided that a state employee could not use or threaten to use his or her authority to discourage the reporting of violations of the law, and alleged physical injury resulting from the DHS's actions. The trial court sustained DHS's demurrer on the ground that the plaintiff's physical injury allegations were barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act (WCA) [Lab. Code § 3200 et seq.]. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that notwithstanding former Gov. Code § 19683, the WCA provided the plaintiff with his exclusive remedy (citing Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743). The plaintiff sought and received review by the California Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court affirmed with respect to the wrongful termination causes of action, holding that physical or mental disabling injuries arising from termination of employment are generally within the WCA's coverage and are subject to its exclusive remedy provisions, unless the discharge comes within an express or implied statutory exception or it results from risks reasonably deemed not to be within the "compensation bargain" (52 Cal. 3d 1, 7) . Analyzing the case under the WCA as it existed before it was amended in 1982, the Court explained that employer liability for WCA compensation, "in lieu of any other liability ..., []" exists for any employee injury "arising out of and in the course of ... employment" [see former Lab. Code § 3600]. The Court added that according to the former provisions, WCA compensation is the exclusive remedy for such injuries [see former Lab. Code § 3601] (52 Cal. 3d 1, 13-14) . The Court reviewed the principles it had developed in Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 159-160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743 , in which it held that a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on disabilities compensable under the WCA was preempted by the WCA's exclusive remedy provisions. According to the Court, the exclusive remedy provisions apply if an employee sustains an injury that arises out of and in the the course of employment, notwithstanding that it resulted from intentional, even egregious, employer conduct. The Court explained that these provisions give efficacy to the WCA's "compensation bargain," whereby employers assume liability for industrial injuries or death without regard to fault in exchange for limitations on the amount of that liability (52 Cal. 3d 1, 15-16) .

Applying these principles, the Court determined that a nonconsensual termination is a normal part of the employment relationship, indistinguishable from other employment actions such as demotions, transfers, and discipline, all of which are included in the WCA's ambit because they involve risks that are encompassed within the compensation bargain [see Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743 ; see also Traub v. Board of Retirement (1983) 34 Cal. 3d 793, 801 (construing similar language in Gov. Code § 31720, which governs disability retirement, as covering injuries arising from erroneous discharge)] (52 Cal. 3d 1, 18) . The Court added that furthermore, since courts have interpreted Lab. Code § 3202, which provides that the WCA must be liberally construed, to extend the WCA's protections to posttermination injuries [see, e.g., Mitchell v. Hizer (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 499, 140 Cal. Rptr. 790 ; Argonaut Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acci. Com. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 140] , both the act of termination and the acts leading up to it necessarily arise out of and occur during the course of employment (52 Cal. 3d 1, 19) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exclusive Remedy for Injury Caused by Discharge

In Livitsanos v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 744, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808, 828 P.2d 1195 , plaintiff sued the defendants for breach of contract, defamation, and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants had engaged in a campaign of harassment resulting in the wrongful termination of his employment, including falsely claiming that he had embezzled money from the company and tried to sabotage the company's product, compelling him to sell his independent distribution company which had distributed the company's product, demanding possession of his company's books and records, and forcing him to sign a promissory note for a debt owed to his company under threat of retaliation if he refused. The trial court sustained the employer's demurrers to the causes of action for defamation and negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, without leave to amend, based on the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation act. Subsequently, the court of appeal, citing Cole, discussed above, summarily denied plaintiff's petition for a writ of mandate.

In considering plaintiff's contention on appeal that his claims of intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, without accompanying physical injury, were not barred by the exclusive remedy rule based on the decision of Renteria v. County of Orange (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 833, 147 Cal. Rptr. 447 , the California Supreme Court held that the Renteria court "plainly erred in suggesting that emotional injury which results in an industrial disability is not compensable under the Workers' Compensation Act" (2 Cal. 4th 744, 754) . The Court concluded that so long as the basic conditions of compensation are otherwise satisfied, and the employer's conduct neither contravenes a fundamental public policy nor exceeds the risks inherent in the employment relationship, an employee's emotional distress injuries, whether or not accompanied by physical disability, are within the exclusive remedy provisions of workers' compensation (2 Cal. 4th 744, 754) . The Court noted that for such an injury to be compensable under the workers' compensation system, however, it must result in an industrial disability or need for medical treatment (2 Cal. 4th 744, 754) . Thus, the Court observed that it is theoretically possible for an employee to incur a work-related emotional injury that results in no compensable industrial disability, but that the existence of such a noncompensable injury does not abrogate the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation act (2 Cal. 4th 744, 754-755) . The Supreme Court remanded the case to the court of appeal for a determination of whether the defendants' conduct exceeded the normal risks of the employment relationship.

Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Protection Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743 , was an action by a firefighter against his employer, a fire protection district, and a fellow employee, the district's assistant fire chief, for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress and by the firefighter's wife for intentional infliction of emotional distress and for loss of consortium. The complaint alleged the firefighter's employment history with the district and that the assistant fire chief had subjected him to a deliberate campaign of harassment, which included the unjustified institution of disciplinary proceedings, procuring his temporary demotion, and attempting to force his retirement, as a result of which he suffered a severe and totally disabling stroke. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend on the ground plaintiffs' claims were within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board. The court of appeal affirmed as to eight of the ten causes of action alleged but reversed with directions to permit amendment of the complaint as to causes of action for defamation and for false light invasion of privacy. The Supreme Court granted review. There was no challenge to the court of appeal's holding that the causes of action for defamation and privacy were not barred by the exclusive remedy provisions of the Labor Code.

In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal, the Supreme Court held the action for intentional infliction of emotional distress was barred by the exclusivity provisions of the workers' compensation law (Lab. Code §§ 3600, 3601, 4553) as they read prior to their 1982 amendment, because the claim was based on conduct normally occurring in the workplace, and that, because the employee's action was barred, his spouse's actions for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress and loss of consortium were likewise barred (43 Cal. 3d 148, 151, 162) . The Court said that in order properly to manage its business, every employer must on occasion review, criticize, demote, transfer, and discipline employees, that employers are necessarily aware that their employees will feel distressed by adverse personnel decisions, that employees may consider any such adverse action to be improper and outrageous, and that it would, indeed, be unusual for an employee not to suffer emotional distress as a result of an unfavorable decision by the employer (43 Cal. 3d 148, 160) . The Court concluded that when the misconduct attributed to the employer is actions that are a normal part of the employment relationship, such as demotions, promotions, criticism of work practices, and frictions in negotiations as to grievances, an employee suffering emotional distress causing disability may not avoid the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation law by characterizing the employer's decisions as manifestly unfair, outrageous, harassment, or intended to cause emotional disturbance resulting in disability (43 Cal. 3d 148, 160) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.71

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.71 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Action--Labor Management Relations Act Does Not Preempt Action--Action Based on Right Independent of Collective Bargaining Agreement [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S STATE-LAW CLAIM CAN BE RESOLVED WITHOUT INTERPRETING THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT AND, THEREFORE, IS NOT PREEMPTED BY SECTION 301 OF THE LABOR MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT.

No Federal Preemption of Independent State-Law Claim. Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) does not preempt application of state law to a wrongful discharge claim brought by an employee whose terms and conditions of employment are covered by a collective bargaining agreement unless such application requires the interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement (Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 413, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff's wrongful discharge cause of action is preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act, because the claim is based on state-law grounds independent of an applicable collective bargaining agreement. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.65.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge cause of action is not preempted by the Labor

Management Relations Act, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the resolution of plaintiff's state-law claim does not depend on an interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement applicable to plaintiff's employment. For example, counsel could discuss facts indicating that plaintiff's state-law claim is for discriminatory discharge [see Cook v. Lindsay Olive Growers (9th Cir. 1990) 911 F.2d 233, 237-238 (discussed in § 100.65)] or retaliatory discharge for plaintiff's complaints about health and safety violations (see Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 863 (discussed in § 100.73)], neither of which require interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Federal Preemption of Independent State--Law Claim

The factual and procedural background of Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 , are discussed in § 100.65[3][a]. The U.S. Supreme Court declared its agreement with Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 , which held that a state-law claim is preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) if its resolution depends on the meaning of a collective bargaining agreement, because state-law interpretations of collective bargaining agreements could be inconsistent with each other (486 U.S. 399, 405-406) . The Court stated, however, that if the state-law claim can be resolved without interpreting the collective bargaining agreement, the claim is independent and will not be preempted (486 U.S. 399, 407-410) . The Court emphasized that collective bargaining agreements should be interpreted by arbitrators as generally provided by the agreements, but that judges can determine state-law questions involving labor-management relations if they do not require construing the labor contracts (486 U.S. 399, 411) . The Court held that an application of state law is preempted under Section 301 only if the application requires the interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement (486 U.S. 399, 413) . The Court stated, however, that in the case before it, the claim of retaliatory discharge simply required the employer's factual showing of a nonretaliatory reason for the discharge and did not require an inquiry into the meaning of any provision of the collective bargaining agreement (486 U.S. 399, 407) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Federal Preemption of Independent State-Law Claim

In Garibaldi v. Lucky Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 726 F.2d 1367 , a truck driver who was covered by a collective bargaining agreement brought a grievance against his employer, who allegedly harassed and eventually fired the driver for reporting to the health authorities that the employer had directed him to deliver spoiled milk. After an arbitrator found he was discharged for cause, plaintiff filed an action for wrongful discharge in violation of state public policy, as well as for intentional infliction of emotional distress, in state court. Defendant removed the case to federal court, and plaintiff moved to remand. The district court held that it had removal jurisdiction over the wrongful discharge claim under Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) and subsequently granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, holding thatplaintiff's action was an untimely appeal from the labor arbitrator's award. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment on the ground that the action was improperly removed and instructed the district court to remand the case to the state court (726 F.2d 1367, 1376) . The court reasoned that the sale or delivery of adulterated milk was prohibited by California law and that plaintiff's "whistleblowing" was exactly the type of conduct that the California Supreme Court protected in Tameny v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 167, 164 Cal. Rptr. 839, 610 P.2d 1330 (discussed in § 100.42[3][a]), which recognized an action for wrongful termination based on violation of public policy. The court held that a claim grounded in state law for wrongful termination for public policy reasons is not preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (726 F.2d 1367, 1374-1376) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.72

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.72 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Action--National Labor Relations Act Does Not Preempt Action--Unrelated Causes of Action Not Preempted by National Labor Relations Act [29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT (NLRA) DOES NOT PREEMPT PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL DISCHARGE ACTION BECAUSE AN UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE SUBJECT TO PREEMPTION BY THE NLRA WAS NOT THE ONLY MOTIVATION ALLEGED FOR THE DISCHARGE, AND THE OTHER ALLEGATIONS OF WRONGFUL DISCHARGE ARE NOT RELATED TO UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES.

Claims Unrelated to Unfair Labor Practices Not Preempted. When plaintiff alleges that an employer's wrongful discharge was motivated by impermissible considerations other than solely a desire or plan to commit an unfair labor practice, the action is not preempted by the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.) (Balog v. LRJV, Inc. (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1295, 1304).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff's wrongful discharge action is preempted by the National Labor Relations Act, based on the argument that the complaint alleges that plaintiff was terminated for reasons not solely related to federal labor law. In an appropriate case, This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention set out in § 100.64.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the National Labor Relations Act does not preempt plaintiff's wrongful discharge action, for example in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the circumstances of plaintiff's dismissal show that the employer was motivated by reasons other than an intent to commit an unfair labor practice, such as in retaliation for plaintiff's exercise conduct protected by a state public policy [see Balog v. LRJV, Inc. (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1295] . Counsel should argue that causes of action based on these other motivations are not preempted by the National Labor Relations Act. For examples of arguments regarding wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, see §§ 100.41 -100.47.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims Unrelated to Unfair Labor Practices Not Preempted

In Balog v. LRJV, Inc. (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1295 , a former supervisor brought a wrongful termination action against his employer, a facility that cleaned and repaired railroad cars used for transporting hazardous materials. The complaint alleged plaintiff was discharged for complaining about the employer's failure to comply with minimum safety standards, refusing to assign workers to jobs that exposed them to hazardous conditions in violation of state health and safety regulations, refusing to falsify accident investigation reports, and also refusing to violate state public policy and the workers' collective bargaining agreement by discharging probationary employees for pretextual reasons to prevent them from joining a union. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff had estimated in deposition testimony that "60 percent of [the employer's] decision to discharge him was because of his refusal to perform hazardous work and 40 percent was because of his refusal to terminate a [probationary employee]" and, therefore, the action was preempted by the National Labor Relations Act (NLRA) (29 U.S.C. §§ 151-169). The trial court denied the summary judgment motion on the ground that plaintiff's estimate was still a disputed fact. The employer then moved for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the wrongs alleged arguably constituted unfair labor practices and that, therefore, the action was preempted by the NLRA as a matter of law. The trial court granted the motion and entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that judgment on the pleadings is improper when the complaint states a cause of action that is not preempted by the NLRA (204 Cal. App. 3d 1295, 1310) . The court recognized that state court actions premised on activities that "arguably" constitute unfair labor practices are preempted under the NLRA. The rationale for preemption is to have a uniform national policy related to collective bargaining and negotiation and to avoid diverse and conflicting state adjudications (204 Cal. App. 3d 1295, 1303) . Plaintiff, the court observed, alleged he was fired for five distinct reasons, four of which were not even "arguably" unfair labor practices because they in no way implicated collective bargaining or unionization. The preemption rationale, the court concluded, does not require that a plaintiff's state-law cause of action be dismissed merely because one of the employer's motives for termination may have been, or was, his refusal to commit an unfair labor practice. So long as defendant's intentional wrongful conduct was motivated by impermissible considerations other than solely a desire or plan to interfere with collective bargaining or unionization, the employer may be held liable under state law (204 Cal. App. 3d 1295, 1304) . The court distinguished Bassett v. Attebery (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 288, 225 Cal. Rptr. 399 (discussed in § 100.64[3][a]), on the ground that, although the plaintiff in Bassett alleged violations of state and federal labor laws, there were no allegations that plaintiff was terminated for nonunion-related but illegal reasons. In addition, the court stated that if the trier of fact were to determine that the unfair labor practices-related reason was the only cause for plaintiff's discharge, the action would be preempted and the court could not proceed any further (204 Cal. App. 3d 1295, 1307, 1309) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.73

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.73 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Cause of Action--Action Based on Conduct Not Exclusively Regulated by National Labor Relations Act [29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT BECAUSE THE CLAIM AFFECTS AN AREA THAT IS NOT EXCLUSIVELY REGULATED BY THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT AND IS WITHIN THE STATE'S POLICE POWERS TO REGULATE.

NLRA Does Not Exclusively Regulate All Areas Concerned With Labor Standards. The National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.) regulates areas concerned with self-organization and bargaining, but it does not preempt state regulation in areas involving minimum labor standards pertaining to interests that are deeply rooted in local feeling and responsibility, such as the health and safety of workers (Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 863-865 ; Inter-Modal Rail Employees Ass'n v. Burlington N. & Santa Fe Ry. Co. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 924-928, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that plaintiff's wrongful discharge cause of action is preempted by the National Labor Relations Act, based on the argument that the action is one that is not preempted by the National Labor Relations Act and iswithin the state's power to regulate. In an appropriate case, This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.64.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge cause of action is not preempted by the National Labor Relations Act, for example in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts indicating that the conduct addressed by plaintiff's state-law claim is not preempted by the National Labor Relations Act, such as conduct violating state legislation regarding health and safety [Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857, 865] . Counsel also should argue that the state law does not interfere with the collective bargaining process.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 360, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline, and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] NLRA Does Not Exclusively Regulate All Areas Concerned With Labor Standards

In Paige v. Henry J. Kaiser (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 857 , former employees brought an action in state court for wrongful discharge, claiming that they were fired because they refused to undertake job duties that were unsafe and illegally hazardous. Two claims for wrongful discharge were removed to federal court on the basis that they were preempted by federal law and were dismissed as being barred by the statute of limitations.

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit addressed the issue of whether preemption was proper. The court discussed the propriety of preemption under the NLRA and under another federal law (Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act). In discussing preemption under the NLRA, the court stated that there are state laws which concern conduct that Congress intended to be unregulated by the NLRA (826 F.2d 857, 862) . The court stated that Congress's main goal in enacting the NLRA was to establish an equitable uniform bargaining process and that state laws that set minimum work safety standards do not interfere with the bargaining process (826 F.2d 857, 863-864) . The court held that since it is uniquely within the state's police powers to legislate for the health and safety of their citizens, and such regulation does not interfere with the NLRA's goals, the NLRA does not preempt a wrongful discharge action based on violation of work safety laws (826 F.2d 857, 865) .

In Inter-Modal Rail Emples. Assn. v. Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60 , a group of about 200 employees formed an association to complain to government agencies about hazardous conditions at their place of employment. When their employer discharged them en masse, their association sued the employer, alleging, among other things, retaliatory discharge in violation of the California Occupational Safety and Health Act (Lab. Code § 6300 et seq.). The employer moved for judgment on the pleadings, characterizing the gravamen of the association's retaliatory discharge claim as a complaint about being fired for banding together to complain about safety concerns. Therefore, argued the employer, the association's claim was essentially that the employer had committed an unfair labor practice by discharging the employees engaging in "protected concerted activity" under the National Labor Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.). Since the National Labor Relations Board (NLRB) has exclusive jurisdiction over the adjudication of unfair labor practices, the employer contended that the trial court had no jurisdiction over the association's claim. The trial court agreed and dismissed the complaint.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that there is an exception to the NLRB's exclusive jurisdiction for certain matters of local concern. This exception applies to matters that touch interests that are so deeply rooted in local feeling and responsibility, that the courts will not find that the NLRB has exclusive jurisdiction in the absence of a plain expression of congressional intent to preempt state regulation. One such area is the regulation of occupational health and safety (73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 924-928) . Therefore, the association's wrongful discharge claims were not preempted (73 Cal. App. 4th 918, 925-929) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.74

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.74 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Federal Labor Laws Do Not Preempt Action--Labor Management Relations Act Does Not Preempt Action--Plaintiff Not Covered by Collective Bargaining Agreement Action [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SECTION 301 OF THE LABOR MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT DOES NOT PREEMPT PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL DISCHARGE ACTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS NOT COVERED BY THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING AGREEMENT IN THAT_____ [specify, e.g., PLAINTIFF RESIGNED HIS/HER UNION MEMBERSHIP WHEN HE/SHE ACCEPTED PROMOTION TO THE MANAGEMENT POSITION FROM WHICH HE/SHE WAS FIRED].

Employee Not Covered by Labor Agreement. Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act (29 U.S.C. § 185(a)) does not preempt a wrongful discharge action by an employee who is not covered by a collective bargaining agreement (Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 1514-1515, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that plaintiff's wrongful discharge cause of action is preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act, based on the argument that plaintiff is not covered by a collective bargaining agreement. In an appropriate case, This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.65.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge cause of action is not preempted by the Labor

Management Relations Act, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that plaintiff was not covered by the collective bargaining agreement at the time of the dismissal. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that plaintiff had resigned from the union, that plaintiff was not employed in a union position (for example, that plaintiff was a supervisory employee and such employees were not union members), and that the union refused to assist plaintiff with a grievance relating to the discharge [see Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890] . Counsel should also argue that section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act does not preempt plaintiff's claim merely because resolution of plaintiff's status as a union member entails scrutiny of the agreement [Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employee Not Covered by Labor Agreement

Wanland v. Los Gatos Lodge, Inc. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 281 Cal. Rptr. 890 , involved a plaintiff employee who, when she was promoted to a management position, refused to quit her union. The employer removed her from the position and attempted to reassign her with no loss of salary or benefits. The plaintiff refused the reassignment and quit. She sued the employer for intentional interference with contractual relations and wrongful constructive discharge. The trial court refused to dismiss the action as preempted by the Labor Management Relations Act, Section 301 [29 U.S.C. § 185(a)], and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court concluded that the collective bargaining agreement did not cover the plaintiff, noting that the agreement gave the employer the right to require that its supervisory employees not be union members, andexplaining that this was inconsistent with an intent that such employees be covered under the agreement. The court also observed that the use of the term "managers" in a wage scale provision did not mean that the agreement applied to plaintiff, since she was salaried and the wage scale did not apply to her (230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 1515) . Finally, the court declared that § 301 did not preempt the plaintiff's claim merely because the resolution of the issue of whether she was covered by the collective bargaining agreement entailed judicial scrutiny of the agreement's provision (230 Cal. App. 3d 1507, 1517) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.75

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.75 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Preempted--ERISA Does Not Preempt Action--State-Law Claim Not Preempted by ERISA if Claim Only Tenuously Related to Administration of Benefit Plan

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE COMPLAINT'S ALLEGING_____ [specify allegations claimed by defendant to bring action within ERISA, e.g., that a result of the discharge was a loss of retirement benefits] DOES NOT BRING IT WITHIN THE SPHERE CONGRESS INTENDED TO REGULATE IN ERISA.

A. ERISA Preempts Only State Law That Covers the Same Subject or That Prevents an Interstate Benefit Plan From Having Uniformity in Its Benefits Structure and Administration. The United States Supreme Court has emphasized that, despite broad language in its earlier decisions: (1) it will presume that Congress did not intend ERISA to supersede historic police powers of the states, absent evidence of a contrary intention in a particular sphere of regulation; (2) important factors to consider are the actual concerns of ERISA (reporting, disclosure, fiduciary responsibility and the like) and the purpose of its preemption clause (allowing a benefit plan to operate interstate with uniformity in benefit structures and administrative practices); and (3) state law's merely having an effect on the economic environment in which a plan operates is too tenuous a relation to make it "related to" a plan under ERISA (Cal. Div. of Lab. Stds. v. Dillingham (1997) 519 U.S. 316, 117 S. Ct. 832, 136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 802-805 (no preemption of scheme penalizing ERISA-covered apprenticeship program for not meeting state standards)).

[Optional] B. ERISA Does Not Preempt State-Law Claim for Recovery of Lost Benefits as Consequence of Wrongful Discharge. ERISA preemption is inapplicable in a state-law action alleging that the plaintiff has lost benefits as a consequence of his or her wrongful discharge but not that denial of benefits was a motivating factor of the discharge (Campbell v. Aerospace Corp. (9th Cir. 1997) 123 F.3d 1308, 1311-1314 ; Ethridge v. Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d 1389, 1404-1405) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a wrongful discharge claim is preempted by ERISA because the action relates to loss of benefits or otherwise invokes state law that has some connection with an ERISA-covered benefit plan, on the ground that the connection is too tenuous to fall within the sphere occupied by ERISA. Use the optional paragraph if the preemption argument is based on plaintiff's allegation that damages include loss of employee benefits. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.67.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a wrongful discharge action is not preempted by ERISA because the claim does not relate to a benefit plan, for example in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should show how the California rule of law sought to be applied only tangentially affects employee benefit plans and does so in an area beyond the scope of Congress' concerns in enacting ERISA. If the particular issue is that the plaintiff has alleged loss of benefits, counsel should demonstrate that plaintiff has not alleged that the employer's motivation for the termination was to deprive plaintiff of employee benefits, but has alleged merely that loss of benefits was part of the injury suffered by plaintiff as a consequenceof termination or make up a portion of the damages that plaintiff seeks to recover.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] ERISA Preempts Only State Law That Covers the Same Subject or That Prevents an Interstate Benefit Plan From Having Uniformity in Its Benefits Structure and Administration

In Cal. Div. of Lab. Stds. v. Dillingham (1997) 519 U.S. 316, 117 S. Ct. 832, 136 L. Ed. 2d 791 , a unanimous Supreme Court implicitly refined its analysis of when state law is "related to" an employee benefit plan and thus preempted by ERISA (per 29 U.S.C. § 1002(1)). The state had blocked certain payments to a contractor for using apprentices at other than the local prevailing journeyman wage. The prevailing wage must be paid on public construction projects unless the contractor employs apprentices who are participating in a state-approved program. The particular form of the apprenticeship program was one in which expenses were defrayed by monies placed by employers and unions into a separate fund, making it an "employee welfare benefit plan" for purposes of ERISA (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 796-798, 800) . The employer filed a federal suit to prevent the state from interfering with its payments and lost in the district court, but the Ninth Circuit reversed on the ground that the state law related to an ERISA-covered benefit plan and was preempted (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 798) .

The Supreme Court noted its own considerable history of settling disputes over the "unhelpful text" of ERISA's preemption provision and repeated that a law "relates to" a covered plan if it (1) has a connection with or (2) has reference to such a plan. Where a state's law acts immediately and exclusively upon such plans, or where their existence is essential to the law's operation, there is a "reference" triggering preemption (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 799) . The Court noted that it had recently recognized that "uncritical literalism" in applying the other standard ("connection with") was not useful in determining how far Congress intended preemption to go (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 799-800 , citing New York State Conference of Blue Cross & Blue Shield Plans v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1995) 514 U.S. 645, 656, 115 S. Ct. 1671, 131 L. Ed. 2d 695). Rather, the Court looks both to the objectives of ERISA as a guide to the scope of the state law that Congress understood would survive, as well as to the nature of the effect of the challenged state law on ERISA plans (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 800) . The Court acknowledged both that ERISA's preemption provision is "clearly expansive" (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 799) , and, on the other hand, that it had traditionally assumed that "the historic police powers of the States were not to be superseded by ... [federal law] unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress" (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 800) .

The Court disposed of a contention that the California framework makes "reference to" ERISA plans by noting that the state-regulated apprenticeship programs may or may not be funded in a way that brings them under ERISA. Since it functions irrespective of the existence of an ERISA plan, it cannot be said to make reference to such plans (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 800-801) .

The Court then reviewed some of its cases under the "connected-with" prong of the "related-to" test. Examples of when a preemption-triggering connection were found had to do with statutes that mandated something about the benefits structure or administration of benefit plans. New York State Conference of Blue Cross & Blue Shield Plans v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1995) 514 U.S. 645, 115 S. Ct. 1671, 131 L. Ed. 2d 695 was cited as a counter-example. In Travelers, the Dillingham Court explained, New York law provided economic incentives for purchasers of health insurance, including ERISA plans (which predominated among such purchasers) to purchase Blue Cross/Blue Shield plans rather than commercial ones. The Court had upheld the challenged statute because (1) it did not bind plan administrators to a particular choice nor preclude uniform interstate benefits packages or administrative practices, and (2) if any state action that could increase costs of providing health benefits were preempted, ERISA's reach would be virtually unlimited (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 802) .

The Court found California's apprenticeship program to be indistinguishable from the New York health-insurance program, in all relevant respects. The area was one long subject to state regulation; it was very remote from the express concerns of ERISA ("reporting, disclosure, fiduciary responsibility, and the like") and from the Act's substantive coverage; neither the Act nor its legislative history provided--in the areas of state apprenticeship training standards or prevailing wage laws that incorporate them--any basis for countering the assumption that historic state police powers were not intended to be preempted; and the California scheme altered the economic incentives facing plan administrators who have certain decisions to make without dictating their choices, like "myriad state laws in areas traditionally subject to local regulation, which Congresscould not possibly have intended to eliminate" (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 803-805) .

The factual context of Dillingham could not be farther from the typical wrongful-discharge case. The reason it may be useful for a plaintiff is that defendants may persuasively cite earlier preemption cases for their broad language about the sweep of ERISA's preemption in order to defeat actions that "relate to" ERISA-covered plans in the most peripheral of ways. A powerful argument can be made that Dillingham demonstrates what only Justices Scalia and Ginsburg were willing to say explicitly: "the criteria set forth in some of ...[the earlier cases] have in effect been abandoned" and that the Court is now applying traditional preemption analysis (136 L. Ed. 2d 791, 806 (concurring opinion)).

[b] ERISA Does Not Preempt State-Law Claim for Recovery of Lost Wages and Benefits as Consequence of Wrongful Discharge

In Campbell v. The Aerospace Corporation (9th Cir. 1997) 123 F.3d 1308, 1311 , plaintiff alleged he was terminated for blowing the whistle on his employer's illegal conduct. In an allegation supporting a punitive-damages prayer, he stated that the employer knew that a consequence of his termination would be to deprive him of retirement benefits and make it difficult for him to acquire them elsewhere. The case was removed to federal district court because of that allegation, on an ERISA preemption theory. Plaintiff lost a tortious discharge claim at the summary-judgment stage and claims for breaches of implied contract and the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing before a jury. He appealed, challenging the district court's subject-matter jurisdiction on the basis that ERISA did not preempt the claim (123 F.3d 1308, 1311) .

The court of appeal reviewed the "broad but not limitless scope of ERISA preemption" in general, then its own and other precedents concerning the issue in a wrongful-termination context, including Ethridge v. Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d 1389 , discussed immediately below (123 F.3d 1308, 1311-1314) . The court reaffirmed its Ethridge holding that the issue is whether a plaintiff alleges that denial of benefits was a motivator or a consequence of the termination, and that ERISA preempts only in the former circumstance. Analyzing whether the allegation of knowledge of the benefits loss made Ethridge distinguishable, the court concluded that the allegation still did not make it a case where the employer's motivation was the denial of benefits (123 F.3d 1308, 1313) . The court also noted that its holding was consistent with congressional intent: preempting state law that made no attempt to regulate pension plans, such as wrongful-termination law not involving benefits-motivated discharges, would not promote uniformity of the legal environment in which benefit plans operate (123 F.3d 1308, 1314) .

The court also rejected an attempt to find federal-question jurisdiction in the federal False Claims Act, one of the statutes cited by plaintiff as a basis for a claim of tortious discharge in violation of public policy. The court held that, since the procedural requirements for a claim under that act were not met, the federal interest is in not providing a federal forum for a "backdoor FCA state claim" (123 F.3d 1308, 1314-1315) . Reversing, the court remanded with instructions to remand to California Superior Court.

In Ethridge v. Harbor House Restaurant (9th Cir. 1988) 861 F.2d 1389 , a former employee brought an action for wrongful discharge against his former employer. Although his first complaint was removed to federal court and dismissed, the employee brought a second complaint, which also was removed and dismissed. One basis for removal alleged by the employer was ERISA preemption based on a paragraph in the complaint stating that the discharge had caused damage and injury to the employee, including loss of employment and benefits. The district court denied preemption and removal on this ground and removed the case on other grounds. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals determined that the district court did not have jurisdiction of the case on the other ground and examined the issue of ERISA preemption, among other issues, to determine whether the federal court had jurisdiction on any other basis.

The Ninth Circuit determined that ERISA preemption did not provide a basis for jurisdiction of the cause of action. The court stated that if a cause of action relates to an employee benefit plan, ERISA preemption applies (861 F.2d 1389, 1404) . However, the court stated that some laws affect employee benefit plans too tenuously to be characterized fairly as relating to the benefit plan, and consequently, ERISA preempts only state-law claims that arise out of the administration of a covered plan (861 F.2d 1389, 1404) . The court stated that it agreed with other courts that have held that no ERISA action lies when the loss of pension benefits is a mere consequence of, but not a motivating factor behind, the termination of benefits (861 F.2d 1389, 1405) . The court, giving the phrase "relates to" its common-sense construction, held that the claim for wrongful discharge was not preempted by ERISA simply because the employee sought to recover lost salary and benefits (861 F.2d 1389, 1405) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.76

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.76 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Preempted--ERISA Does Not Preempt Action--ERISA Does Not Preempt State Claims That Are Independent of ERISA-Related Claims

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S WRONGFUL-DISCHARGE ACTION IS NOT COMPLETELY PREEMPTED BY ERISA WHEN THERE ARE SOME CLAIMS INDEPENDENT OF ERISA CLAIMS INCLUDED WITH ERISA CLAIMS.

Allegations Independent of Benefit Plan Are Not Preempted. When a cause of action mixes allegations including those that relate to the administration of a benefit plan and those that do not, the allegations that do not relate to such a plan are not preempted by ERISA Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 799 ; Barnick v. Longs Drug Stores, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 377, 383-384, 250 Cal. Rptr. 10).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a wrongful discharge action is preempted by ERISA, on the ground that ERISA does not preempt claims that are independent of ERISA-related claims. In an appropriate case, This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.67.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that ERISA does not preempt a state-law claim that is independent of ERISA-related claims, for example, in opposition to a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that the complaint contains allegations that are unrelated to the administration of a benefit plan. For example, counsel could discuss facts indicating that plaintiff also has alleged that the discharge breached the employment contract [see Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 800] , or that the discharge violated public policy [see Barnick v. Longs Drug Stores, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 377, 383, 250 Cal. Rptr. 10] . For examples of arguments relating to breach of the employment contract, see §§ 100.20, 100.21, 100.27. For examples of arguments relating to wrongful termination in violation of public policy, see §§ 100.41 -100.47.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegations Independent of Benefit Plan Are Not Preempted

The facts and procedural background of Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794 , are discussed in § 100.67[3][b]. Although part of the employee's case was preempted by ERISA, the court held that the lawsuit was not completely preempted. To the extent that the complaint contained allegations of breach of contract or wrongful termination unrelated to the benefit plan, certain claims were not preempted (826 F.2d 794, 800) .

In Barnick v. Longs Drug Stores, Inc. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 377, 250 Cal. Rptr. 10 , a former employee brought an action for wrongful termination, breach of contract, and other causes of action. During discovery, the employee contended that the employer had fired him to prevent his pension profit-sharing plan benefits from fully vesting. The employer moved for summary judgment based on ERISA preemption. The trial court granted summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed, because the first two causes of action for breach of employment contract and wrongful termination included more than one theory of liability and damages, some of which were unrelated to the pension profit-sharing plan (203 Cal. App. 3d 377, 383) . For example, under one theory, the employee alleged that he was fired because he refused to violate certain state statutes, and under another theory he alleged that the employer violated its employment policies and procedures in the way in which it fired him (203 Cal. App. 3d 377, 383) . The court stated that it was guided by the language in Sorosky v. Burroughs Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 826 F.2d 794, 800 , discussed above, which allowed partial preemption of other parts of a cause of action that were unrelated to a pension plan (203 Cal. App. 3d 377, 383-384) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.77

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.77 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Action Not Preempted by Statute Providing Exclusive Remedy--Workers' Compensation Act Does Not Provide Exclusive Remedy for Discharge in Violation of Public Policy

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE EXCLUSIVE REMEDY PROVISIONS OF THE WORKERS' COMPENSATION ACT DO NOT APPLY TO PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED THAT DEFENDANT DISCHARGED PLAINTIFF FOR_____ [specify public policy that was violated], WHICH IS A VIOLATION OF THE PUBLIC POLICY OF THIS STATE AS SET FORTH IN_____ [specify statute or constitutional provision violated].

A. Exception to Exclusive Remedy Provisions. The exclusive remedy provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act (see Lab. Code § 3600) do not apply if the employer discharges the employee in violation of a fundamental public policy (Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1101, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680).

[Optional] B. Workers' Compensation Remedy for Retaliatory Discharge Is Not Exclusive. The remedy provided by the Workers' Compensation Act against an employer that retaliates against an employee who obtains or seeks workers' compensation (see Lab. Code § 132a) is not exclusive. The employee is not precluded from pursuing a remedy for wrongful discharge under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) or under common law (City of Moorpark v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1148, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's contention that the Workers' Compensation Act preempts plaintiff's wrongful discharge claim, on the ground that the Act does not preempt claims for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 100.70.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue the a claim for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy is not preempted by the Workers' Compensation Act, for example in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

For additional points and authorities pertaining to the exclusive remedy doctrine generally, see Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy Doctrine .

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employer violated a public policy, specifying the statutory or constitutional provision in which the policy is delineated. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that plaintiff was discharged in retaliation for supporting a coworker's sexual harassment claim [Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1101, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680] or for protesting hazardous working conditions [cf. Jenkins v. Family Health Program (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 440, 262 Cal. Rptr. 798 , discussed in § 100.45]. For examples of other arguments relating to wrongful termination in violation of public policy, see §§ 100.41 -100.47.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment . For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts , Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , and Ch. 250, Employment Law: Wage and Hour Disputes .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exception to Exclusive Remedy Provisions

In Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 874, 824 P.2d 680 , the California Supreme Court held that an employeemay state a cause of action for tortious discharge in violation of public policy against his or her employer, and that the exclusive remedy provisions of the Workers' Compensation Act do not preempt such an action (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1101) . In Gantt, the employee was allegedly discharged for testifying truthfully before the Department of Fair Employment and Housing in support of a coworker's claim of sexual harassment. The public policy allegedly violated by the employer was the prohibition set forth in Gov. Code § 12975 against any interference in an official investigation of a sexual harassment claim (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1096-1097) . The Court noted that when an employer's decision to discharge an employee results from an animus that violates the fundamental public policy of this state proscribing any interference in the official investigation of sexual harassment, this misconduct cannot, under any reasonable viewpoint, be considered a normal part of the employment relationship or a risk reasonably encompassed within the compensation bargain (1 Cal. 4th 1083, 1100) . The factual and procedural background of Gantt is discussed in § 100.41[3][a].

[b] Workers' Compensation Remedy for Retaliatory Discharge Is Not Exclusive

In City of Moorpark v. Superior Court (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 1143, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 445, 959 P.2d 752 , the Supreme Court disapproved a line of cases that had held that Labor Code Section 132a provides an exclusive remedy for an employee who suffers any employment discrimination as a result of an industrial injury. That statute provides civil remedies and criminal penalties against an employer that retaliates against an employee who seeks workers' compensation benefits, and a line of cases had construed the statute as providing the exclusive remedy for all forms of employment discrimination based on job-related disability. In Moorpark, the Supreme Court pointed out that the terms of the statute do not purport to make its remedy exclusive; moreover, the plain language of the workers' compensation exclusive-remedy provision, Labor Code Section 3600, indicates that it does not apply to Section 132a. The Court found that, like sexual and racial discrimination, a Section 132a violation violates substantial and fundamental public policy, and therefore it may be the basis for a wrongful-discharge action under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) or under common law (18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1148, 1154-1158) . However, the Court noted that not every instance of disability discrimination in violation of Section 132a gives rise to a valid FEHA claim (18 Cal. 4th 1143, 1158) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exception to Exclusive Remedy Provisions

In Lenk v. Total-Western, Inc. (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , the plaintiff was discharged after six months of employment. The plaintiff sued the employer for fraud in inducing the plaintiff to leave his former employer; the relief sought by the plaintiff included damages for emotional distress. After the plaintiff obtained a judgment, the employer appealed, contending that the plaintiff's emotional-distress damages were barred by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule (see Lab. Code § 3602). The court of appeal rejected the employer's contention, holding that the exclusivity-of-remedy rule of the workers' compensation applies only if the conditions for workers' compensation exist. Those conditions include a requirement that the injury arise from, or be a normal risk of, the employment relationship (see Lab. Code § 3600(a)). In this particular case, the court of appeal found that the conditions of workers' compensation did not exist, because the injury was not part of the normal risk of employment. Specifically, the employer's false statements about the company's financial stability, future plans, and the plaintiff's prospects for promotion--all designed to induce the plaintiff to accept employment--were not a normal part of the employment relationship or a risk reasonably encompassed within the compensation bargain. Therefore, the plaintiff's fraud cause of action seeking emotional distress damages for such false statements was not barred by the workers' compensation exclusivity rule (89 Cal. App. 4th 959, 970-973) .

In Murray v. Oceanside Unified Sch. Dist. (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 28 , the plaintiff brought suit against her employer for workplace harassment and retaliation against her based on her sexual orientation. The plaintiff's complaint included a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on abuse of authority and outrageous conduct. The court of appeal held that when a plaintiff can allege emotional distress resulting from a pattern of continuing violations of harassment based on sexual orientation, a cause of action for infliction of emotional distress will not be barred by the exclusivity provisions of workers' compensation law. Such a pattern of continuing violations of the public policy against workplace harassment on the basis of sexual orientation is outside the normal part of the employment environment. Therefore, a cause of action for emotional distress caused by such violations is not barred by the workers' compensation law (79 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1362-1363) .

In Kovatch v. California Casualty Management Co. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 217 , the plaintiff asserted a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress in connection with his claim of wrongful constructive discharge. The complaint alleged that the plaintiff's emotional injuries, as well as the conditions leading to his constructive discharge, resulted from harassment on the basis of perceived sexual orientation, in violation of an express statutory prohibition against such discriminatory conduct (see former Lab. Code § 1102.1; now see Gov. Code § 12940(a)-(d), (j)(1)). The court held that the workers' compensation lawdid not bar the plaintiff's claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress, since it arose out of conduct that was also the basis for a claim of wrongful termination in violation of public policy (65 Cal. App. 4th 1256, 1277) .

In Phillips v. Gemini Moving Specialists (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 563, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 29 , the plaintiff brought an action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, asserting that his discharge was in retaliation for his attempt to protect his statutory rights to employment compensation. He alleged that the setoff of debts from his paycheck was illegal under applicable statutes. The trial court granted the defendant's demurrer and dismissed the claim, ruling among other things that the plaintiff's claim for emotional distress was barred by the exclusivity of workers' compensation. The court of appeal reversed. The court acknowledged that emotional distress from employment is ordinarily a normal part of employment and is covered by workers' compensation. However, an employee can recover damages for emotional distress in the context of a tort action for wrongful termination in violation of public policy, which is not barred by the workers' compensation exclusive-remedy rule, because the emotional-distress damages are simply a component of the plaintiff's compensatory tort damages (63 Cal. App. 4th 563, 577) .

In Accardi v. Superior Court (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 341, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 292 , a former police officer brought an action against a city and several individuals alleging causes of action for sexual harassment in violation of FEHA (Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.), constructive discharge, intentional interference with business relationship, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend as to the causes of sexual harassment and emotional distress, ruling among other things that the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress was barred by the exclusive remedy rule (17 Cal. App. 4th 341, 345-346) . The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to set aside its order sustaining the demurrers and enter a new order overruling the demurrers. Citing Gantt v. Sentry Insurance (1992) 1 Cal. 4th 1083 , and distinguishing Davaris v. Cubaleski (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 , the court held that the exclusive remedy rule does not bar the plaintiff's action under FEHA against the employer for emotional distress arising out of sexual harassment at work because sexual harassment violates public policy and is not a normal part of employment (17 Cal. App. 4th 341, 352-353) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.78

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.78 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--National Bank Act [12 U.S.C. § 24] Does Not Preempt FEHA Claims Not in Conflict With Federal Antidiscrimination Laws

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IN VIOLATION OF THE FAIR EMPLOYMENT AND HOUSING ACT (FEHA) IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE NATIONAL BANK ACT, BECAUSE THE CLAIM DOES NOT CONFLICT WITH FEDERAL ANTIDISCRIMINATION LAWS.

Preemption by National Bank Act Is Limited. Section 24 of the National Bank Act (12 U.S.C. § 24, P 5, providing that national banks have the power to dismiss bank officers "at pleasure") preempts most state-law causes of action. However, it does not preempt a claim brought under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA, Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), if the basis of the claim is discrimination on the grounds of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age, since those grounds of discrimination are prohibited by federal law (Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 167-176, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539 ; see 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq. [Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967]; 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. [Title VII of Civil Rights Act of 1964]; see also Kroske v. US Bank Corp. (9th Cir. 2005) 432 F.3d 976, 981-989) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a terminated bank officer's wrongful discharge claim is preempted by the National Bank Act, if the claim is based on alleged discrimination that violated federal law as well as the California FEHA. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set forth in § 100.69.

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff's claim is not preempted, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points andauthorities may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should, therefore, establish that the plaintiff's FEHA claim is based on discrimination that is also prohibited by Title VII or the ADEA, such as a discharge on the grounds of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age [Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 167-176, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in that publication. For discussion and forms relating to wrongful discharge, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption by National Bank Act Is Limited

In Peatros v. Bank of America (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 147, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 659, 990 P.2d 539 , the plaintiff had been employed as an officer of a national bank. After she was demoted and then discharged by the bank's board of directors, the plaintiff sued the bank, alleging that the grounds for her termination were her race (African-American) and her age (45 years at the time of the demotion and 47 years at the time of discharge). The complaint asserted five causes of action: (1) breach of implied contract of employment, (2) violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA, Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.), (3) wrongful discharge in violation of public policy as declared in FEHA, (4) breach of a covenant of good faith and fair dealing that was part of the implicit contract of employment, and (5) misrepresentation and deceit. The bank filed a motion for summary judgment, contending that it was entitled to judgment as a matter of law because Section 8 of the National Bank Act of 1864 (now codified as 12 U.S.C. § 24, P 5) preempts all state-law causes of action arising from the dismissal of a bank officer. The superior court granted the bank's motion, and the court of appeal affirmed. The California Supreme Court granted review on the sole issue of whether 12 U.S.C. § 24, P 5 preempts FEHA (22 Cal. 4th 147, 154-156) .

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal, finding that the plaintiff's FEHA claims of racial and age discrimination were not preempted by the federal statute (22 Cal. 4th 147, 179) . The Court held that 12 U.S.C. § 24, P 5 does indeed preempt FEHA to the extent the two laws are in conflict. However, the Court also held that the actual scope of the National Bank Act provision has been limited since its original enactment in 1864. Reading federal law as a whole, the Court found that the National Bank Act has been impliedly amended by subsequently enacted federal civil-rights laws, specifically Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.) and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 (ADEA, 29 U.S.C. § 621 et seq.). Thus, as impliedly amended by Title VII and the ADEA, the National Bank Act provision actually grants a national bank only a limited power to dismiss its officers; he power does not extend to dismissal on the grounds of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or age. As so amended, the National Bank Act provision preempts FEHA, but only to the extent that FEHA confers on officers of a national bank a right against dismissal on grounds not mentioned in Title VII or the ADEA (for example, physical disability, mental disability, medical condition, marital status, or sexual orientation; see Gov. Code § 12940(a)) (22 Cal. 4th 147, 167-176) . Presumably, the Court's reasoning would also apply to prevent preemption of a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, if the public policy is embodied in a provision of FEHA that is not preempted by the National Bank Act.

Kroske v. US Bank Corp. (9th Cir. 2005) 432 F.3d 976 was an age-discrimination suit brought by a former employee of a national bank in the State of Washington. The plaintiff claimed that her employment as a bank officer had been terminated on the basis of age in violation of Washington's law against age discrimination; she did not assert any claims under federal law. The trial court granted the defendant bank's motion for summary judgment, holding that the National Bank Act preempted the plaintiff's state-law claim of age discrimination. Specifically, the court held that the Act's provision empowering national banks to dismiss their officers "at pleasure" (12 U.S.C. § 24, P 5) preempted any state law regulating the defendant bank's employment practices (432 F.3d 976, 979) .

The Ninth Circuit reversed, holding that under the circumstances of this case, the state's age-discrimination law was not preempted. The court of appeals explained that federal law may preempt state law in three ways. First, Congress may state its intent through an express preemption statutory provision. Second, in the absence of such an express statutory preemption provision, state law may be preempted in a field that Congress intended federal law to occupy exclusively. Finally, state law that actually conflicts with federal law is preempted. Further, in a field of traditional state regulation, courts will assume that the historic police powers of the states were not to be superseded by a federal act unless that was the clear and manifest purpose of Congress. This presumption of non-preemption does not apply, however, in an area where there has been a history of significant federal presence (432 F.3d 976, 981) .

In this case, the trial court's decision was based on the second method of preemption: that the dismiss-at-pleasure provision of the National Bank Act preempted the entire field of employment law. In reviewing that decision, the Ninth Circuit recognized that there is a significant federal presence in the regulation of national banks, but the court of appeals also emphasized that the state's age-discrimination law was enacted pursuant to the state's historic police powers to prohibit discrimination on specified grounds. Thus, the court started with the presumption that Congress did not intend the National Bank Act to preempt the state's age-discrimination law (432 F.3d 976, 981) .

Turning to the dismiss-at-pleasure provision of the National Bank Act, the Ninth Circuit found that in light of the historic dual regulation of banks by state and federal law, the trial court had erred in determining that the provision preempts the entire field of law governing national banks' employment practices. Rather, that one undefined clause does not reflect that Congress's clear and manifest purpose was preemption of the entire field of state law (432 F.3d 976, 982-983) . Therefore, it was necessary for the court of appeals to consider, in light of the intended purpose and scope of the dismiss-at-pleasure provision, whether the state law conflicted with that provision.

The Ninth Circuit noted that the original congressional intent behind the dismiss-at-pleasure provision was to ensure the financial stability of the banks by affording a bank the means to discharge employees who were felt to compromise an institution's integrity. Thus, the provision has been interpreted as creating an at-will employment relationship, and the Ninth Circuit has applied the provision to bar contract claims challenging a bank officer's dismissal and to bar state common-law wrongful-discharge claims (432 F.3d 976, 983-985) . In contrast, however, state anti-discrimination statutes enacted under a state's police powers are not preempted by the banking laws simply because they are part of a general category of state-created employment rights. Unlike cases involving state common-law claims, the present case involved a state statute prohibiting discrimination, which was modeled after and incorporated into the federal anti-discrimination laws (432 F.3d 976, 984-986) . The federal Age Discrimination in Employment Act (ADEA) disclaims any preemptive effect on state laws and incorporates consistent state anti-discrimination laws (29 U.S.C. §§ 626(d)(2), 633(a), (b)). Moreover, national banks are not exempt from federal anti-discrimination laws (432 F.3d 976, 986) .

The Ninth Circuit went on to observe that the anti-discrimination provisions of the ADEA conflict with banks' authority to dismiss officers "at pleasure." As a result, the court found it necessary to give effect to the congressional intent expressed in the ADEA by limiting the power granted to banks through the dismiss-at-pleasure provision. Because the two acts are in irreconcilable conflict, the court found that the ADEA (which was enacted after the National Bank Act) effected an implied repeal of the National Bank Act to the extent necessary to give effect to the ADEA. Accordingly, the authority to dismiss officers "at pleasure" does not encompass the right to terminate an officer in a manner that violates the prohibitions against discrimination enumerated in the ADEA (432 F.3d 976, 986-987) .

The Ninth Circuit then concluded that, given the ADEA's implied partial repeal of the dismiss-at-pleasure provision of the National Bank Act, there was no conflict between that provision and a state-law prohibition of age discrimination that substantively mirrors the ADEA. Therefore, the plaintiff's state-law claim of age discrimination in this case was not preempted (432 F.3d 976, 987-989) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.79

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.79 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Discharge Cause of Action Is Preempted--Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Does Not Preempt Wrongful Discharge Claims Based on Public Policy Against Discrimination

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR WRONGFUL DISCHARGE IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE LABOR-MANAGEMENT REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE ACT, BECAUSE THE CLAIM IS BASED ON A VIOLATION OF PUBLIC POLICY AGAINST_____ [specify, e.g., AGE or DISABILITY] DISCRIMINATION.

Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Does Not Preempt Wrongful Discharge Claims Based on Public Policy Against Discrimination. The federal Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.) does not preemptclaims of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy against discrimination based on characteristics such as sex, race, age, disability, and religion (Smith v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1637, 1648-1654).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to oppose a contention that a wrongful discharge claim against a labor organization by a former policy-making or confidential employee is preempted by the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities in § 100.66.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law

stated. Thus, counsel should establish that the plaintiff's claim meets the elements of a claim of wrongful discharge in violation of public policy (see Stevenson v. Superior Court (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 880, 889-894, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888, 941 P.2d 1157 ; see also § 100.41 et seq.).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background and forms for asserting claims of wrongful termination in violation of public policy, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act Does Not Preempt Wrongful Discharge Claims Based on Public Policy Against Discrimination

In Smith v. International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1637 , the plaintiff was a union organizer who brought suit against the union after he was discharged. The complaint included claims of wrongful termination in violation of the public policies against age discrimination and disability discrimination. The trial court dismissed those claims, holding that they were preempted by the federal Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act (LMRDA) (29 U.S.C. § 401 et seq.), because the plaintiff was a policy-making employee of the union.

The court of appeal reversed. To protect the prerogative of elected union officials to choose staff members with views comparable to their own and in whom they have confidence, the LMRDA generally preempts tort claims based on "patronage" discharges of policy-making or confidential union employees. However, the court of appeal rejected a contention that LMRDA preemption extends to claims of employment discrimination based on characteristics such as sex, race, age, disability, and religion. If the LMRDA were allowed to preempt a union employee's cause of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy, the deterrent effect of such a suit would be lost, and abuses of power by union leadership would receive protection. The court explained that the plaintiff's causes of action for wrongful discharge in violation of public policy in this case fell outside the class of actions preempted by the LMRDA. Generally speaking, California law imposes a responsibility on employers, including unions, to refrain from discharging an employee on the basis of physical disability or age over 40, and to provide reasonable accommodation for a disabled employee [Gov. Code § 12940(a), (m)]. Because the LMRDA does not explicitly provide to the contrary, those responsibilities (and the state's means of enforcing them) are not reduced or limited by the LMRDA. Therefore, the court concluded that the LMRDA does not preempt an action against a union by a union employee arising out of job discrimination based on age or disability (109 Cal. App. 4th 1637, 1648-1654) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.80

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.80 Supporting Contention That Wrongful Termination Cause of Action Is Barred by After-Acquired Evidence Justifying Termination

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT MAINTAIN A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL TERMINATION BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAS ACQUIRED EVIDENCE THAT PLAINTIFF_____ [specify misconduct, e.g., falsified resume or job application or committed post-hire misconduct], WHICH, IF DISCOVERED DURING THE COURSE OF PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT, WOULD HAVE JUSTIFIED TERMINATION.

A. After-Acquired Evidence Doctrine. The after-acquired evidence doctrine bars an action for wrongful termination, or limits the relief available to a discharged employee, when, after the termination, the employer learns for the first time about employee misconduct that would have led to discharge, or the employee not beinghired, had the misconduct been discovered during the employment (see Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 632, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329).

B. Misconduct Relating to Heart of Employment Relationship Bars Wrongful Termination Action. Misconduct by an employee that renders the employee legally unqualified for the job and that has a potential detrimental impact on the employer goes to the heart of the employment relationship. Under these circumstances, the employee is not entitled to recourse for alleged wrongful termination of his or her employment (Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 636-639, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329).

[Optional] C. After-Acquired Evidence Admissible to Support Employer's Originally Proffered Reason for Termination. Although under some circumstances an employer may not rely on previously unknown wrongdoing of the employee to justify an allegedly wrongful termination, after-acquired evidence is clearly admissible if offered to support the employer's originally proffered reason for termination (Finegan v. County of Los Angeles (2001) 91 Cal.

App. 4th 1, 10-13, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant-employer's contention that plaintiff's wrongful termination action is barred based on after-acquired evidence of misconduct justifying termination [see Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329] .

This form may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that after-acquired evidence of misconduct bars plaintiff's cause of action for wrongful termination, for example, in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the above form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should discuss evidence of the misconduct, such as facts indicating that plaintiff falsified his or her resume or job application, or that plaintiff committed post-hire misconduct. Counsel should also show that plaintiff would have been fired for such misconduct, or not hired in the first place, had the misconduct been discovered earlier. In addition, counsel should argue that the misconduct renders plaintiff legally unqualified for the position and that it was potentially harmful to defendant. For example, in an appropriate case, counsel could set forth facts indicating that there was a legal requirement regarding qualifications for the position, plaintiff misrepresented those qualifications, and that such misrepresentations could have subjected defendant to potential civil or criminal prosecution.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 100.81 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.09[9] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] After-Acquired Evidence Doctrine

In Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Camp, were convicted of a felony and served time in prison. In 1989, the defendant law firm hired Mr. Camp as a legal secretary, and in 1990 it hired Mrs. Camp. The Camps, however, lied on their job applications when asked whether they had ever been convicted of a felony, and omitted reference to the convictions on their resumes. In 1990, defendant became a contractor for the federal Resolution Trust Corporation, and was required by law to certify that none of its employees had ever been convicted of a felony. To comply, defendant had new employees, including Mrs.

Camp, complete a form stating that they had not been convicted of a felony. Then, in 1991, Mrs. Camp was fired, allegedly because of typing errors. Mr. Camp was also fired, allegedly for attending to personal matters on company time. The Camps, however, claimed that they were terminated because Mrs. Camp had recently reported to defendant's director of human resources that a partner in the law firm was involved in insider trading. The Camps sueddefendant alleging breach of an implied-in-fact contract, breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, wrongful termination in violation of public policy, and misrepresentation. During discovery, defendant learned for the first time that the Camps had been convicted of a felony. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, finding that the Camps' at will status barred their contract and misrepresentation claims and that the after-acquired evidence doctrine barred their public policy claims. The Camps appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the after-acquired evidence issue, the court explained that the after-acquired evidence doctrine shields an employer from liability, or limits the relief available to a plaintiff, where, after a termination, the employer discovers for the first time employee misconduct that would have lead to discharge in any event. According to the court, such misconduct usually involves misrepresentations on a resume or job application or posthire, on-the-job misconduct (35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 632) . The court distinguished Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (discussed in § 100.81[3][a]), and McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publ. Co. (1995) 513 U.S. 352, 115 S. Ct. 879, 130 L. Ed. 2d 852 , both of which found that after-acquired evidence of misconduct did not bar the employees' actions [see Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 (holding that resume fraud did not bar age discrimination and breach of contract claims); McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publ. Co. (1995) 513 U.S. 352, 115 S. Ct. 879, 130 L. Ed. 2d 852 (holding that after-acquired evidence did not bar age discrimination claim)] on the grounds that the misconduct in those cases involved violating the employers' internal, voluntarily-adopted policies, whereas the Camps misrepresented a job qualification imposed by the government such that they were not lawfully qualified for the job (35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 636) . The Camp court also noted that Cooper left open the possibility that after-acquired evidence might bar or limit recovery in some cases, but declined to adopt a blanket rule that material falsification of an employment application is a complete defense to wrongful termination claim (35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 633 ; citing Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642).

The court also explained that the doctrine of unclean hands compelled the result that the Camps not have legal recourse for their termination. According to the court, the doctrine bars relief where the misconduct relates directly to the transaction concerning which the complaint is made. The court concluded that the Camps' misrepresentations related directly to their wrongful termination claims, and since they were not lawfully qualified for their jobs, they cannot be heard to complain that they improperly lost them (35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 637-639) .

[b] Misconduct Relating to Heart of Employment Relationship Bars Wrongful Termination Action

Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , is discussed under § 100.80[3][a].

[c] After-Acquired Evidence Admissible to Support Employer's Originally Proffered Reason for Termination

In Finegan v. County of Los Angeles (2001) 91 Cal. App. 4th 1, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , the plaintiff asserted a claim under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.), alleging that he had been discriminated against on the basis of a physical disability. The employer contended that the plaintiff was removed from his position not because of a disability, but rather because he was not qualified for the job. This contention, if established, would negate one of the elements of the plaintiff's cause of action. In support of its contention, the employer offered at trial the expert testimony of a physician who had examined the plaintiff after his termination. The plaintiff objected to this testimony on the ground that it was "after-acquired evidence." The trial court overruled the objection and admitted the expert testimony. After a judgment in favor of the employer, the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the after-acquired evidence doctrine is inapplicable to exclude evidence offered in support of the employer's originally proffered reason for the adverse employment action. Generally, the after-acquired evidence doctrine limits an employer's ability to rely on previously unknown wrongdoing of an employee to justify the employer's unlawful discrimination against the employee. The rationale for the doctrine does not apply, however, when the employer disputes one of the elements of the employee's claim and offers later-acquired medical evidence to show that the element is missing (91 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-13) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.81

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.81 Opposing Contention That Wrongful Termination Cause of Action Is Barred by After-Acquired Evidence Justifying Termination

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR WRONGFUL TERMINATION IS NOT BARRED BY AFTER-ACQUIRED EVIDENCE OF MISCONDUCT THAT PLAINTIFF_____ [specify misconduct, e.g., falsified resume or job application], BECAUSE DEFENDANT TERMINATED PLAINTIFF IN VIOLATION OF PLAINTIFF'S LEGAL RIGHTS UNDER _____ [specify source of legal rights, e.g., employment contract or statute] [if appropriate, add:, AND BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE DOES NOT ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT ACTUALLY WOULD HAVE TERMINATED PLAINTIFF BASED ON THE MISCONDUCT].

A. After-Acquired Evidence Does Not Defeat Wrongful Termination Action. There is no blanket rule that material falsification of an employment application or other misconduct is a complete defense to a claim that the employer, while still unaware of the falsification, terminated the employment in violation of the employee's legal rights. Neither public policy nor contract principles dictate that an employee who was fired without cause in violation of the employment contract or a statute should forfeit all legal remedies merely because of earlier misrepresentations on an employment application that did not concern a legal disqualification from holding the employment (Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617-619, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 ; Murillo v. Rite Stuff Foods, Inc. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 833, 842-845, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12).

[Optional] B. After-Acquired Evidence Does Not Bar or Limit Employee's Action Unless It Would Actually Have Resulted in Termination. Even if an employer presents after-acquired evidence that would have justified termination of the employee, it remains a question of fact whether the employer would have actually terminated the employee on the basis of the after-acquired evidence. Thus, depending on the circumstances of the particular case, the trier of fact might reasonably find that the employee would have been subjected to less-harsh disciplinary action, or to no adverse action at all. In such a case the court would be justified in refusing to bar or reduce the employee's recovery of damages for wrongful termination (Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1172-1174, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95).

[Optional] C. After-Acquired Evidence Pertaining to Plaintiff's Immigration Status Does Not Bar Wrongful Termination Action. The Legislature has declared that all protections, rights, and remedies available under state law, except any reinstatement remedy prohibited by federal law, are available to all individuals who are or who have been employed in California, regardless of immigration status (Civ. Code § 3339(a); Gov. Code § 7285(a); Lab. Code § 1171.5(a)). Accordingly, for purposes of enforcing California labor, employment, and civil-rights laws, the plaintiff's immigration status is irrelevant to the issue of liability (Civ. Code § 3339(b); Gov. Code § 7285(b); Lab. Code § 1171.5(b); see Incalza v. Fendi N. Am., Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 479 F.3d 1005, 1010-1013) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a defendant-employer's contention that plaintiff's wrongful termination action is barred based on after-acquired evidence of misconduct justifying termination (see Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617-619, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642).

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the form presented in § 100.80.

This form may be combined with memoranda pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that after-acquired evidence of misconduct does not bar an action for wrongful termination, for example, in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment or in support of a motion in limine to exclude such evidence from consideration by the jury. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the above form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should discuss evidence that defendant terminated plaintiff in violation of his or her legal rights under either an employment contract or statute. Counsel also should set forth facts indicating that the alleged misconduct was perpetrated long before plaintiff's termination, and that defendant was unaware of the alleged misconduct at the time of the discharge. If appropriate, counsel should also point out that, even though the alleged misconduct might have justified termination, there is insufficient evidence that the defendant would actually have terminated the plaintiff had the misconduct been known. Also, if appropriate, counsel should stress that the after-acquired evidence pertains to the plaintiff's immigration status.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to wrongful demotion, see Ch. 249, Employment Law: Termination and Discipline , in that publication.

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 60, § 60.09[9] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] After-Acquired Evidence Does Not Defeat Wrongful Termination Action

In Cooper v. Rykoff-Sexton, Inc. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 642 , the plaintiff was fired, after 10 years of satisfactory job performance, for violating the defendant-employer's unwritten policy requiring advance authorization for overtime and rules requiring accurate recordkeeping. Plaintiff sued for wrongful termination in violation of his employment contract and for age discrimination. During discovery, defendant's counsel found that plaintiff had made two falsifications on his original application for employment with defendant by not disclosing that he had been fired from two prior jobs. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff could not complain that his firingwas unlawful because plaintiff had made material omissions from his employment application 10 years earlier. The motion was supported by a declaration from one of defendant's managers claiming that if he had known about the omissions, he would not have hired plaintiff, and that if the omissions had become known to him while plaintiff was employed, plaintiff would have been discharged for falsifying his employment application. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court reviewed two conflicting lines of authority in federal court decisions applying the after-acquired evidence doctrine. The court rejected the line of cases that followed the reasoning of Summers v. State Farm Mutual Auto Insurance Co. (10th Cir. 1988) 864 F.2d 700 , in which the Tenth Circuit held that after-acquired evidence of employment application or resume falsification completely bars plaintiff from obtaining recovery for wrongful termination (24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 616-617) . The court of appeal then noted that the Eleventh and Seventh Circuits have rejected the resume-falsification defense as a complete bar to relief, although recognizing that the measure of damages can be affected if the employer can prove it would eventually have discovered the falsification even in the absence of the litigation (24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617 ; see also McKennon v. Nashville Banner Publishing Co. (1995) 513 U.S. 352, 356-363, 115 S. Ct. 879, 130 L. Ed. 2d 852 (rejecting Summers line of authority and holding that after-acquired evidence does not completely bar relief in action under Age Discrimination in Employment Act, 29 U.S.C. 621 et seq.; such evidence is relevant to scope of relief, such that it will generally preclude reinstatement or front pay, as well as limit plaintiff's back pay). The court in Cooper concluded that it would not adopt a blanket rule that material falsification of an employment application is a complete defense to a claim that the employer, while still unaware of the misrepresentation, discharged the employee in violation of the employee's legal rights (24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 617-618) . While there were no prior California decisions on point, neither public policy nor contract law dictate that an employee who is fired without cause in violation of his employment contract or because of his age should forfeit all resulting remedies against the employer because of the earlier falsifications. The court recognized that resume fraud is a serious social problem, but noted that wrongful termination also is a problem, so automatic forfeiture of all employment rights, regardless of the circumstances, can be too harsh a penalty in many cases. According to the court, when a termination violates the statutory ban on discrimination in the workplace, the purpose of the antidiscrimination statutes would be undermined by a principle allowing a fact that played no part in the discharge to bar recovery. Thus, the court declined to allow plaintiff's earlier falsifications to defeat his claims that he was fired in breach of contract and because of his age (24 Cal. App. 4th 614, 618-619) .

Murillo v. Rite Stuff Foods, Inc. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 833, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 12 , held that if after-acquired evidence establishes that the employee had made a misrepresentation that went to the heart of the employment relationship and related directly to the employee's wrongful discharge claim, the unclean-hands doctrine will bar that claim. Thus, if an employee who is disqualified from employment by government-imposed requirements nevertheless obtains a job by misrepresenting the pertinent qualifications, the employee will have no recourse for an alleged wrongful termination of employment. For example, because federal law prohibits employers from knowingly hiring or continuing to employ unauthorized aliens (see 8 U.S.C. § 1324a(a), (b), (e), (f)--Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986), an employee's misrepresentation of his or her entitlement to work in the United States goes to the heart of the employment relationship and deprives the employee of any right to complain about termination (65 Cal. App. 4th 833, 845) . Even in such a case, however, neither the after-acquired evidence doctrine nor the unclean-hands doctrine will completely bar the employee's discrimination or harassment claims for acts occurring during employment. Although the employee cannot complain of having lost a job that he or she was never entitled to in the first place, the employee nonetheless was employed by the employer. The employee's misrepresentation did not void the employment contract; it merely rendered it voidable should the employer seek to rescind it. While employed, the employee was entitled to all the protections available under employment law. Barring the employee's claim for sexual harassment occurring during the employment relationship would not serve the primary purpose of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) and Title VII of the Federal Civil Rights Act (see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.), which is to end employment discrimination. In such a case, the equities between employer and employee can be balanced by barring all portions of the employment discrimination claim that are tied to the employee's discharge. Thus, the employer will not be permitted to escape the consequences of discriminatory conduct that was not caused or justified by the employee's misrepresentation (65 Cal. App. 4th 833, 842) .

The Murillo court cited with approval the Cooper holding that after-acquired evidence of employee misconduct does not necessarily bar all relief. Therefore, Murillo can be read as holding that after-acquired evidence will bar a wrongful termination action only if it discloses that the employee procured the job through misrepresentation or misconduct that went to the heart of the employment relationship, such as the employee's concealment of the fact that he or she is legally disqualified from employment (65 Cal. App. 4th 833, 845) . This interpretation is in conformity with the Murillo court's earlier opinion in Camp v. Jeffer, Mangels, Butler & Marmaro (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 620, 636-638, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , which made a distinction between misrepresentations that violate an employer's internal policies and misrepresentations that conceal the fact that an employee is not lawfully qualified for employment. The Camp case is discussed in detail in § 100.80[3][a].

NOTE:

Subsequent to the Murillo decision, the Legislature enacted statutory provisions declaring that all protections, rights, and remedies available under California law, except any reinstatement remedy prohibited by federal law, are available to all individuals regardless of immigration status who are or have been employed in California [Civ. Code § 3339(a); Gov. Code § 7285(a); Lab. Code § 1171.5(a)]. Thus, for purposes of enforcing California labor, employment, and civil-rights laws, a person's immigration status is irrelevant to the issue of liability, although as noted in Murillo, the remedy of reinstatement will not be available to an unauthorized alien [Civ. Code § 3339(b); Gov. Code § 7285(b); Lab. Code § 1171.5(b)]. Further, in proceedings or discovery undertaken to enforce California labor, employment, and civil-rights laws no inquiry may be made into a person's immigration status unless the person seeking to make the inquiry has shown by clear and convincing evidence that the inquiry is necessary in order to comply with federal immigration law [Civ. Code § 3339(b); Gov. Code § 7285(b); Lab. Code § 1171.5(b)]. Accordingly, after-acquired evidence of the employee's immigration status will be of limited value in an action to enforce employment rights.

[b] After-Acquired Evidence Does Not Bar or Limit Employee's Action Unless It Would Actually Have Resulted in Termination

In Thompson v. Tracor Flight Sys., Inc. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 , the plaintiff resigned from her job as human resources director and then sued her former employer for wrongful termination, alleging that she had been constructively discharged in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (see Gov. Code § 12940). The jury found that the plaintiff had been constructively discharged and that she had not engaged in "wrongdoing prior to or at the time of her resignation which would have given defendant grounds to terminate her had it known of her misconduct at the time of her resignation." Based on this finding, the trial court held that the after-acquired evidence did not entitle the employer to an equitable reduction of the damages awarded by the jury.

The court of appeal affirmed, noting that there was conflicting evidence concerning the employee's actions, her motivations, and the possible consequences of her actions within the employer's disciplinary system. After reviewing the record, the court of appeal found that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's conclusion that the employee's wrongdoing, if any, and even if known to the employer, would not have resulted in the employee's termination. In general, though an employer may present after-acquired evidence that would have justified termination of the employee, it remains a question of fact whether the employer would have actually terminated the employee on the basis of the after-acquired evidence. Thus, depending on the circumstances of the particular case, a jury might reasonably find that the employee would have been subjected to less harsh disciplinary action, or to no adverse action at all. In such a case the trial court would be justified in refusing to bar or reduce the plaintiff's recovery of damages for the wrongful termination (86 Cal. App. 4th 1156, 1172-1174) .

[c] After-Acquired Evidence Pertaining to Plaintiff's Immigration Status Does Not Bar Wrongful Termination Action

The plaintiff in Incalza v. Fendi N. Am., Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 479 F.3d 1005 , was a native and citizen of Italy who sued his former employer in a California superior court. The plaintiff claimed that he had been wrongfully terminated (1) in violation of an implied contract that he would not be fired without good cause; and (2) because of his Italian heritage, in violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (see Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The plaintiff had been working in the United States under a visa obtained by the defendant corporation. However, when the ownership of the defendant changed hands, the visa became invalid. The defendant then terminated the plaintiff, falsely saying that nothing could be done to remedy the visa problem (the defendant did obtain a new visa for another employee). The defendant also refused to allow the plaintiff to take an unpaid leave of absence until the visa problem could be resolved (the plaintiff was one month away from marrying his fiancee, an American citizen, which would have made him eligible for a green card).

The defendant removed the action to federal district court on the basis of diversity of citizenship. In district court, the defendant moved for summary judgment, contending that it had been compelled by the federal Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986 (IRCA) to terminate the plaintiff, since his visa had expired. The district court denied the motion, and at trial the jury found for the plaintiff in the amount of more than $1 million. The defendant appealed.

The Ninth Circuit affirmed. The court of appeals first considered the defendant's argument that the IRCA preempted California law. The Court observed that California provides remedies for workers who are discharged in violation of an express or implied contract that they will not be discharged without good cause. Moreover, those remedies are available to illegal immigrants as well as other employees. The California Legislature has declared that all protections, rights, and remedies available under state law, except any reinstatement remedy prohibited by federal law, are available to all individuals regardless of immigration status who have applied for employment, or who are or who have been employed, in California (Civ. Code § 3339(a); Gov. Code § 7285(a); Lab. Code § 1171.5(a)). Accordingly, for purposes of enforcing state labor, employment, and civil rights laws, a person's immigration status is irrelevant to the issue of liability; in proceedings or discovery undertaken to enforce those state laws, no inquiry may be made into a person's immigration status unless the person seeking to make the inquiry has shown by clear and convincing evidence that the inquiry is necessary in order to comply with federal immigration law (Civ. Code § 3339(b); Gov. Code§ 7285(b); Lab. Code § 1171.5(b)) (479 F.3d 1005, 1009) .

The Ninth Circuit concluded that in this case, these provisions of California law were not preempted by the IRCA provision forbidding employers from knowingly employing unauthorized aliens (see 8 U.S.C. § 1324a(a)(2)). The defendant in this case could lawfully have taken action other than discharging the plaintiff: it could have granted the plaintiff's request for unpaid leave so that he could resolve his work authorization problems. The IRCA and its implementing regulations do not bar an employer from suspending an employee or placing him or her on unpaid leave for a reasonable time to remedy the deficiency in his or her immigration status. Thus, because the defendant was not required by the IRCA to terminate the plaintiff, there was no conflict between the IRCA and California law, which provided the plaintiff a remedy for wrongful termination (479 F.3d 1005, 1010-1013) .

The Ninth Circuit also pointed out that there is clearly no conflict between California law and the IRC--and therefore no preemption--when an employer is required to terminate an employee by IRCA and does so in order to comply with that statute. Under those circumstances, the employer can obey both laws because compliance with IRCA provides good cause, as defined by California law, for terminating unauthorized aliens (479 F.3d 1005, 1010) . It remains an open question, however, whether California law and the IRCA conflict when an employer that is required by federal law to terminate an unlawful alien does so, but for reasons that are unlawful under California law (479 F.3d 1005, 1010) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.82

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.82 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff's Alleged Damages Were Avoidable--Affirmative Defense to Hostile Environment Sexual Harassment Claim

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum supporting or opposing a motion, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

EVEN IF PLAINTIFF WAS SUBJECTED TO SEXUAL HARASSMENT IN THE WORKPLACE, RESULTING IN A HOSTILE OR ABUSIVE WORK ENVIRONMENT, PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER DAMAGES FOR HARM THAT COULD HAVE BEEN AVOIDED WITH REASONABLE EFFORTS.

Employer Not Liable for Avoidable Consequences of Alleged Sexual Harassment. Under the "avoidable consequences" defense to a claim of workplace sexual harassment, an employer is not liable for harm that the employee could have avoided with reasonable effort. The employer may establish this defense by showing (1) that the employer took reasonable steps to prevent and correct workplace sexual harassment, (2) that the employee unreasonably failed to use the preventive and corrective measures that the employer provided, and (3) that reasonable use of the employer's procedures would have prevented at least some of the harm that the employee suffered (State Dep't of Health Servs. v. Superior Court (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1042-1048, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441, 79 P.3d 556).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be used to support a contention that an employee alleging workplace sexual harassment may not recover damages for harm that he or she could have avoided with reasonable effort. In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in §§ 100.31, 100.41 -100.43.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should establish that the defendant had adopted appropriate antiharassment policies and had communicated essential information about the policies and the implementing procedures to its employees, that the plaintiff failed to use those procedures, and that using those procedures would have prevented at least some of the harm claimed by the plaintiff (see State Dep't of Health Servs. v. Superior Court (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1042-1048, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441, 79 P.3d 556).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For related legal background, research guides, and forms for defending against claims of workplace sexual harassment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 115, Civil Rights: Employment Discrimination (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Not Liable for Avoidable Consequences of Alleged Sexual Harassment

State Dep't of Health Servs. v. Superior Court (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1026, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 441, 79 P.3d 556 , was a workplace sexual-harassment and sex discrimination action brought under the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12940 et seq.). FEHA prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace and provides the basis for a cause of action for hostile-environment sexual harassment (Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)). Under FEHA, the employer is liable for harassment by a nonsupervisory employee only if the employer was negligent, that is, if the employer knew or should have known of the harassing conduct and failed to take immediate and appropriate corrective action (Gov.Code § 12940(j)(1)). In this case, the California Supreme Court held that if the harassment is committed by a supervisory employee, the employer is liable without negligence (31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1040-1042) .

The Court went on to hold that this "strict" liability does not preclude the defense of "avoidable consequences." To establish this defense, the employer must prove (1) that the employer took reasonable steps to prevent and correct workplace sexual harassment, (2) that the employee unreasonably failed to use the preventive and corrective measures that the employer provided, and (3) that reasonable use of the employer's procedures would have prevented at least some of the harm that the employee suffered (31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1042-1048) .

The Court explained that the avoidable consequences defense affects damages, not liability. Thus, an employer that has exercised reasonable care nevertheless remains liable for sexual harassment damages caused by a supervisory employee that the harassed employee could not have avoided through the exercise of reasonable care (31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1045) .

The Court stated that to take advantage of the avoidable consequences defense, the employer ordinarily should be prepared to show that it has adopted appropriate antiharassment policies and has communicated essential information about the policies and the implementing procedures to its employees. In a particular case, the trier of fact may appropriately consider whether the employer prohibited retaliation for reporting violations, whether the employer's reporting and enforcement procedures protect employee confidentiality to the extent practical, and whether the employer consistently and firmly enforced the policy. Evidence potentially relevant to the avoidable consequences defense includes anything tending to show that the employer took effective steps to encourage victims to come forward with complaints of unwelcome sexual conduct and to respond effectively to their complaints (31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1045-1046) .

The Court also pointed out that in the context of the avoidable consequences defense, the employee's conduct is judged against a standard of reasonableness. Thus, an employee's failure to report harassing conduct immediately to the employer might not reduce the employee's recoverable damages if the employer lacked an adequate antiharassment policy or adequate procedures to enforce it, if the employer did not communicate the policy or procedures to the victimized employee, or if the employee reasonably feared reprisal by the harassing supervisor or other employees.

Moreover, in some cases an employee's natural feelings of embarrassment, humiliation, and shame may provide a sufficient excuse for delay in reporting acts of sexual harassment by a supervisor (31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1045) .

Although the Supreme Court did not directly address the question, it appears that the "avoidable consequences" defense, which is sometimes called the "mitigation of damages" defense, is also applicable to hostile environment sexual harassment claims based on harassment by non-supervisory employees. Moreover, the Court pointed out that the avoidable consequences defense has wide application in civil cases generally and has been applied to workplace torts (31 Cal. 4th 1026, 1042-1043) . For example, the United States Supreme Court has recognized the defense in actions seeking damages for workplace sexual harassment under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Burlington Industries v. Ellerth (1998) 524 U.S. 742, 765, 118 S. Ct. 2257, 141 L. Ed. 2d 633 ; Faragher v. City of Boca Raton (1998) 524 U.S. 775, 807, 118 S. Ct. 2275, 141 L. Ed. 2d 662 ; see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.).

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100 EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: WRONGFUL TERMINATION AND DISCIPLINE
PART II. FORMS

10-100 California Points & Authorities § 100.83

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100.83 Opposing Contention That Plaintiff Was Subjected to Hostile Environmental Sexual Harassment--Alleged Conduct Not Hostile or Abusive to Employees Because of Their Sex

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION FOR SEXUAL HARASSMENT CANNOT BE MAINTAINED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S ALLEGATIONS DO NOT ESTABLISH SEX-BASED HARASSMENT THAT WAS SEVERE ENOUGH OR SUFFICIENTLY PERVASIVE TO ALTER THE CONDITIONS OF THE PLAINTIFF'S EMPLOYMENT.

A. Plaintiff Must Establish Sex-Based Harassment That Alters Conditions of Employment. A hostile work environment sexual harassment claim requires the plaintiff to show that he or she was subjected to unwelcome sexual advances, conduct, or comments that constitute discrimination because of sex. Such a claim is not established, for example, where a supervisor or coworker simply uses crude or inappropriate language in front of employees, makes lewd gestures, or draws a vulgar picture, without directing sexual innuendos or gender-related language toward the plaintiff or toward one sex in general (Lyle v. Warner Bros. Television Prods. (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 264, 279-282, 286-288, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2, 132 P.3d 211). Even as to conduct directed at specific persons, whether the alleged harassment is sufficiently severe and pervasive to alter the conditions of employment should be judged from the perspective of a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position, considering all the circumstances. For example, occasional graphic sexual comments made by coworkers about employees other than the plaintiff, in the context of a creative workplace focused on generating scripts for an adult-oriented television comedy show featuring sexual themes, would not support a finding that those comments permeated the plaintiff's direct work environment or were pervasive and destructive of that environment so as to constitute an actionable hostile work environment (Lyle v. Warner Bros. Television Prods. (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 264, 283-285, 289-292, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2, 132 P.3d 211).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention that the plaintiff was subjected to a hostile work environment caused by sexual harassment, for example, in an action brought under the Fair Employment and Housing Act [see, e.g., Gov. Code § 12940(j)] or Title VII [see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1)]. In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities in § 100.32.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should explain the social context in which the allegedly harassing conduct occurred and, if possible, demonstrate that the conduct the plaintiff complains of was not directed toward the plaintiff or any coworkers.

[c] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 41, § 41.81.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Establish Sex-Based Harassment That Alters Conditions of Employment

In Lyle v. Warner Bros. Television Prods. (2006) 38 Cal. 4th 264, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 2, 132 P.3d 211 , the plaintiff had been employed as a writers' assistant on the production of an adult-oriented television comedy show featuring sexual themes. Before she was hired, the plaintiff was forewarned that the show dealt with sexual matters and that, as an assistant to the comedy writers, she would be listening to their sexual jokes and discussions about sex and transcribing the jokes and dialogue most likely to be used for scripts. After four months of employment, she was fired because of problems with her typing and transcription. She then filed this action against three of the male comedy writers and others, asserting that the defendants' use of sexually coarse and vulgar language and conduct, including the recounting of their own sexual experiences, constituted harassment based on sex, within the meaning of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA), Gov. Code, § 12900 et seq.

The trial court order granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the sexual harassment claim; the court of appeal reversed. The California Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal, finding that no reasonable trier of fact could conclude that the language and conduct alleged by the plaintiff constituted harassment directed at the plaintiff because of her sex. The Court also found that to the extent that some of the alleged comments had been made about women other than the plaintiff, no reasonable trier of fact could conclude that those particular comments were severe enough or sufficiently pervasive to create a work environment that was hostile or abusive to the plaintiff in violation of the FEHA (38 Cal. 4th 264, 271-272) .

The Supreme Court, taking guidance from the United States Supreme Court's decisions construing Title VII, observed that an employee claiming harassment based on a hostile work environment must demonstrate that the conduct complained of was severe enough or sufficiently pervasive to alter the conditions of employment and create a work environment that qualifies as hostile or abusive to employees because of their sex. Under both Title VII and the FEHA, a hostile work environment sexual harassment claim requires a plaintiff employee to show she was subjected to sexual advances, conduct, or comments that were (1) unwelcome; (2) because of sex; and (3) sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of her employment and create an abusive work environment. In addition, she must establish (4) that the offending conduct was imputable to her employer (38 Cal. 4th 264, 278-279) . In this case, the first and fourth elements were not in dispute, and the Court focused its analysis on the second and third elements.

Regarding the second element--whether the allegedly harassment was because of sex--the Supreme Court emphasized that it is the disparate treatment of an employee on the basis of sex, not the mere discussion of sex or use of vulgar language, that is the essence of a sexual harassment claim. While the use of vulgar or sexually disparaging language may be relevant to show such discrimination, it is not necessarily sufficient, by itself, to establish actionable conduct. Thus, a hostile work environment sexual harassment claim is not established simply because a supervisor or coworker uses crude or inappropriate language in front of employees or draws a vulgar picture, without directing sexual innuendos or gender-related language toward a plaintiff or toward women in general (38 Cal. 4th 264, 279-282) .

As to sexual language or conduct directed at specific persons in the workplace, the Supreme Court pointed out that such conduct does not result in an actionable hostile work environment unless it is sufficiently severe or pervasive to alter the conditions of the plaintiff's employment and create a hostile or abusive work environment. In determining the severity of harassment, the evidence should be judged objectively, from the perspective of a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position, considering all the circumstances. That inquiry requires careful consideration of the social context in which particular behavior occurs and is experienced by its target. The Court noted that "[t]he real social impact of workplace behavior often depends on a constellation of surrounding circumstances, expectations, and relationships which are not fully captured by a simple recitation of the words used or the physical acts performed. Common sense, and an appropriate sensibility to social context, will enable courts and juries to distinguish between simple teasing or roughhousing ... and conduct which a reasonable person in the plaintiff's position would find severely hostile or abusive" (38 Cal. 4th 264, 283 , quoting Oncale v. Sundowner Offshore Servs., Inc. (1998) 523 U.S. 75, 81-82, 118 S. Ct. 998, 140 L. Ed. 2d 201). When the harassing conduct is not severe in the extreme, more than a few isolated incidents must have occurred to prove a claim based on working conditions. Moreover, when the plaintiff cannot point to a loss of tangible job benefits, and is not herself the target of the alleged behavior, the plaintiff must make a commensurately higher showing that the conduct alleged was pervasive and destructive of the working environment. To be actionable, a sexually objectionable environment must be both objectively and subjectively offensive, one that a reasonable person would find hostile or abusive, and one that the plaintiff in fact did perceive to be so. To meet this burden, the plaintiff generally must show that the harassment directed at others was in her immediate work environment, and that she personally witnessed it (38 Cal. 4th 264, 283-285) .

The Court remarked that the circumstance that this case involved--a creative workplace focused on generating scripts for an adult-oriented comedy show featuring sexual themes--was significant in assessing the existence of triable issues of facts regarding whether the writers' sexual antics and coarse sexual talk were aimed at the plaintiff or at women in general, whether the plaintiff and other women were singled out to see and hear what happened, and whether the conduct was otherwise motivated by the plaintiff's gender (38 Cal. 4th 264, 286-287) .

Turning to the specific conduct involved in this case, the Supreme Court found that most of the conduct alleged by the plaintiff did not present a triable issue whether the writers had engaged in harassment because of sex. Most of the conduct alleged by the plaintiff (including the writers' graphic discussions of their sexual experiences, pantomiming of sexual activity, and drawings) was "nondirected," that is, not aimed at the plaintiff or any other female employee. There was no evidence that this nondirected conduct affected the plaintiff and her male counterparts in a disparate manner, or that it exposed employees of one sex to disadvantageous terms or conditions of employment to which members of the other sex were not exposed. Thus, there was no evidence that the writers' nondirected talk and sexual antics contributed to an environment in which men and women were treated disparately, and there was nothing to suggest that the writers engaged in the nondirected conduct to make the plaintiff uncomfortable or to intimidate her (38 Cal. 4th 264, 286-288) .

Aside from the writers' nondirected conduct, the plaintiff alleged some instances of sexual comments and jokes about (but not in the presence of) certain cast members on the show. Although this "directed" conduct was "because of sex," thus satisfying the second element of a hostile work environment claim, the Court found that the conduct was not frequent or severe enough to meet the third element. The plaintiff had conceded in her evidentiary submissions that some of the more graphic comments were made only once or twice. The Court concluded that without more, a reasonable trier of fact could not conclude that these reported comments concerning the cast members permeated the plaintiff's direct work environment, or that they were pervasive and destructive of that environment so as to allow recovery despite the fact that the plaintiff was not personally subjected to offensive remarks or touchings and did not suffer a tangible job detriment (38 Cal. 4th 264, 289-292) .

Accordingly, the Court concluded that the trial court had properly granted the defendants' summary-judgment motion (38 Cal. 4th 264, 293-295) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR

10-100A California Points & Authorities 100A.syn

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.syn Synopsis to Chapter 100A: EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR

§ 100A.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 100A.02 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 100A.03 Related California Torts Chapters

§§ 100A.04-100A.19 [Reserved]

§ 100A.20 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employee Acted Under Employer's Express Direction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employee Acting Under Direction of Employer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employee Acting Under Direction of Employer

§ 100A.21 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employer Ratified Employee's Conduct

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ratification of Employee's Conduct

[b] Employer's Conduct or Knowledge as Evidence of Ratification

§ 100A.22 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employer Negligently Hired or Retained Employee

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Memoranda

[c] Argument

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Hiring or Retention

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Hiring or Retention

§ 100A.23 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employer Did Not Negligently Hire or Retain Employee

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Must Have Knowledge of Employee's Unsuitable Characteristics

[b] Employer Must Have Knowledge That Hiring Employee Created Particular Risk

[c] Employer Must Have Knowledge That Employee Is Unfit for Specific Tasks

[d] Employer Must Owe Legal Duty to Seek Knowledge

[e] Employer Not Liable for Injury Caused by Former Employee

§ 100A.24 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable In Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Hiring and Retention of Employee Did Not Proximately Cause Tort

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unforeseeable Private Act of Employee Breaks Chain of Proximate Cause Connecting Employer to Tort

§ 100A.25 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Tortfeasor Was Employee

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Doctrine of Respondeat Superior

[b] Employer/Employee Relationship

[c] Monetary Compensation Not Required

[d] Right of Control

[e] Characterization of Relationship Not Determinative

[f] Balance of Factors Supports Finding of Employment Relationship

§ 100A.26 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

[b] Tests to Determine Whether Conduct Is Within Scope of Employment

[c] Conduct Was Foreseeable

[d] Sufficient Nexus Between Conduct and Duties of Employment

[e] Duties and Purpose of Employment Broadly Construed

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

[b] Sufficient Nexus Between Conduct and Duties of Employment

§ 100A.27 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Conduct Violative of Employer Rules or Instructions Still Within Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Employee Violation of Employer's Rules or Instructions

§ 100A.28 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Special Errand Exception to Going and Coming Rule Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Errand Exception

[b] Effect of Partial Abandonment of Employer's Business

[c] Out-of-Town Business Travel May Constitute Special Errand

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Special Errand Exception

§ 100A.29 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Special Risk Exception Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Risk Exception

§ 100A.30 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Travel Inherent in Employee's Job Duties

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Travel Inherent in Employee's Job Duties

§ 100A.31 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Employer Paid for Employee's Commute Time

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Employer Paying for Employee's Commute Period

§ 100A.32 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Employer Required Use of Employee Vehicle

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Employer Requiring Employee to Use Employee's Vehicle

[b] Frequency of Use of Vehicle for Employer Business Does Not Defeat Application of Required-Vehicle Exception

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect of Employer Requiring Employee to Use Employee's Vehicle

§ 100A.33 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Liability Based on Employee's Intentional Tort

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Liability for Employee's Intentional Torts

[b] Job Duties Involve Use of Force

[c] Conduct Arose Out of Work-Related Dispute

[d] Employer Liability for Employee's Fraud and Misrepresentation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employer Liability For Employee's Fraud and Misrepresentation

§ 100A.34 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on

Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Tortfeasor Not an Employee

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Doctrine of Respondeat Superior

[b] Employer/Employee Relationship

[c] Effect of Lack of Control

[d] Workers' Compensation Precedent Not Controlling

[e] Balance of Factors Supports Finding of Independent Contractor Rather Than Employee Relationship

[f] Student Trainee Not Employee

§ 100A.35 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee's Conduct Was Outside Scope of Employment--Conduct Was Outside Duties of Employment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

[b] Test for Determining Whether Act Within Scope of Employment

[c] Employee's Actions Were Neither Required Nor Incident to Duties

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

[b] Test for Determining Whether Act Within Scope of Employment

[c] Employee's Actions Were Neither Required Nor Incident to Duties

§ 100A.36 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee's Conduct Outside Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Applies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Going and Coming Rule

[b] Effect of Abandonment of Employer's Business

[c] Attendance at Social Event Not Within Scope of Employment

[d] Payment of Travel Expenses Does Not Defeat Going and Coming Rule

[e] "Commercial Traveler Rule" Inapplicable to Respondeat Superior Cases

[f] "Premises Line" Rule Inapplicable to Respondeat Superior Cases

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Going and Coming Rule

§ 100A.37 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee's Tortious Conduct Outside Scope of Employment--Employee Pursuing Purely Personal Objective Although On-Duty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pursuit of Purely Personal Objectives While on Duty Takes Conduct Outside Scope of Employment

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Pursuit of Purely Personal Objectives While on Duty Takes Conduct Outside Scope of Employment

§ 100A.38 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Intentional Torts of Employee--Conduct of Employee Motivated by Personal Malice

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability Where Conduct Based on Personal Malice

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability Where Conduct Based on Personal Malice

§ 100A.39 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Harassment of One Employee by Another--Alleged Harasser Was Not Supervisory Employee, and Employer Complied With Requirements of California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) Does Not Subject Employer to Liability for Harassment Committed by Nonsupervisory Employee Unless Employer Knew or Should Have Known of Harassment and Failed to Take Immediate and Appropriate Corrective Action

§ 100A.40 Opposing Contention That Employer May Be Vicariously Liable for Wrongful Conduct of Employee--Statute of Limitations Bars Action Against Employer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations Applies Separately to Employer

[b] Claim May Not Be Pursued Against Bankrupt Employee

§ 100A.41 Supporting Contention That Hirer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Work Involved Peculiar Risk

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[b] Definition of Peculiar Risk

[c] Factors in Determining Whether Danger Is a Peculiar Risk

[d] Employer's Lack of Knowledge Regarding Special Precautions

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

§ 100A.42 Supporting Contention That Hirer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Work Involved Nondelegable Duty

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nondelegable Duty Doctrine

[b] Sources of Nondelegable Duty

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sources of Nondelegable Duties

§ 100A.43 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Independent Contractor's Conduct Involved Collateral Negligence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Collateral Negligence Doctrine

§ 100A.44 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule of Nonliability

[b] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[c] Work Did Not Involve Peculiar Risk

[d] Routine Negligence Does Not Provide Basis for Liability Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

§ 100A.45 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Employees of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable to Injured Employee of Independent Contractor

[b] Privette Applicable Despite Express Indemnity Agreement

[c] Privette Is Retroactive

[d] "Hirer" May Be Owner, Lessee or General Contractor

[e] Privette Bars Recovery by Employee Whether Hirer Provided for Special Precautions or Not

[f] Hirer Not Liable for Injury to Contractor's Employee for Failing to Exercise General Supervisory Power Over Safety

[g] Privette Bars Recovery by Injured Employee for Negligent Hiring of Contractor

[h] Contractor's Employee Cannot Sue Hirer Even If Contractor Fails to Provide Workers' Compensation Coverage

[i] Hirer's Violation of Nondelegable Duty Must Affirmatively Contribute to Employee's Injury

[j] Agent of Hirer Protected to Same Extent as Hirer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable to Injured Employee of Independent Contractor

[b] Hirer Not Liable for Injury to Contractor's Employee for Failing to Exercise General Supervisory Power Over Safety

[c] Contractor's Employee Cannot Sue Hirer Even if Contractor Fails to Provide Workers' Compensation Coverage

§ 100A.45A Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Independent Contractor Hired by Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privette Doctrine Applicable to Injured Party Who Is Independent Contractor Rather Than Employee

§ 100A.46 Supporting Contention That Hirer of Independent Contractor Is Directly Liable to Employee of Independent Contractor for Hirer's Own Independent Fault

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Hirer Exercising Retained Control Liable for Affirmatively Contributing to Employee's Injury

[b] Hirer Who Provides Unsafe Equipment May Be Liable

[c] Hirer May Be Liable For Failure to Warn of Hazardous Condition

[d] Breach of Regulatory Duty May Support Liability

[e] Public Entity Hirer of Independent Contractor May Be Liable for Exercise of Retained Control

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Hirer Exercising Retained Control Liable for Affirmatively Contributing to Employee's Injury

[b] Breach of Regulatory Duty May Support Liability

§ 100A.47 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employer Employed Tortfeasor With Conscious Disregard of Others' Safety [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages for Employing Tortfeasor With Conscious Disregard for Rights or Safety of Others

§ 100A.48 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employer Authorized or Ratified Tortfeasor's Conduct [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Form of Authorization

[b] Form of Ratification

§ 100A.49 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employer's Own Conduct Constituted Oppression, Fraud, or Malice

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages Based on Employer's Own Oppression, Fraud or Malice

§ 100A.50 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Corporate Employer--Wrongful Conduct Was Performed, Authorized, or Ratified by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent of Corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Related Memoranda

[f] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Corporate Employer for Punitive Damages

[b] Employee Who Exercises Policy-making Authority Is Managing Agent of Corporate Employer

§ 100A.51 Opposing Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Corporate Employer Based on Acts of Employee--Wrongful Conduct Was Not Performed, Authorized, or Ratified by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent of Corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Involvement by Any Corporate Officer, Director, or Managing Agent

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Involvement by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent

§ 100A.52 Opposing Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--No Employer Authorization, Ratification, Advance Knowledge of Employee Unfitness, or Personal Oppression, Fraud or Malice [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Evidence of Employer Ratification of Employee Misconduct

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Evidence of Employer Ratification of Employee Misconduct

§ 100A.53 Opposing Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employee Misconduct Was Personal and Not Within Scope of Employment [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

[e] Related California Employment Law References

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Acts Must Be Within Scope of Employment

Carolyn Rashby n*

FOOTNOTES:
(n12)Footnote *. Carolyn Rashby is an attorney and freelance writer, specializing in labor and employment law.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.01

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda that may be submitted in actions asserting that an employer is liable based on the wrongful conduct of an employee. It includes memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 100A.20 -100A.22] and opposing [see §§ 100A.23 -100A.24] contentions regarding the employer's liability based on its own wrongdoing; supporting [see §§ 100A.25 -100A.33] and opposing [see §§ 100A.34 -100A.39] contentions that the employer is vicariously liable for the employee's wrongful conduct. It also includes memoranda supporting [see §§ 100A.41 and 100A.42] and opposing [see §§ 100A.43 -100A.45] the contention that an employer is liable for the wrongful conduct of an independent contractor; and memoranda supporting [see §§ 100A.46 -100A.50] and opposing [see §§ 100A.51 -100A.53] contentions that an employer is liable for punitive damages.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsDuties & LiabilitiesAuthorized Acts of AgentsLiability of PrincipalCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaTortsBusiness TortsNegligent Hiring & SupervisionGeneral OverviewTortsVicarious LiabilityEmployersGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.02

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.02 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to respondeat superior liability of employers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsDuties & LiabilitiesAuthorized Acts of AgentsLiability of PrincipalCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewTortsVicarious LiabilityEmployersGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.03

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.03 Related California Torts Chapters

For discussion relating to respondeat superior liability generally, see Levy, Golden, & Sacks, California Torts, Chs. 8 and 74 (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsDuties & LiabilitiesAuthorized Acts of AgentsLiability of PrincipalTortsVicarious LiabilityEmployersGeneral Overview

82 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-100A California Points & Authorities §§ 100A.04-100A.19

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

[Reserved]

§§ 100A.04[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.20

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.20 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employee Acted Under Employer's Express Direction

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT BASED ON DEFENDANT'S OWN CONDUCT, RATHER THAN BASED ON THE CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE, BECAUSE THE EMPLOYEE ACTED AT THE EXPRESS DIRECTION OF DEFENDANT.

Employee Acting Under Direction of Employer. If an employee acts under the direction of his or her employer, the employer participates in the act, and the employer's liability is based on the employer's own fault, rather than on respondeat superior or vicarious liability (Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 67, 70, 276 P.2d 703).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable in tort to the plaintiff based on the defendant's own conduct, rather than on the conduct of the defendant's employee, because the employee acted under the defendant's direction.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable based on the defendant's own conduct and not on the conduct of the defendant's employee, because the employee acted under the defendant's direction--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the defendant's employee tortiously injured the plaintiff, and that the employee's misconduct was at the direction of the defendant. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the defendant directed the employee to drive at an excessive speed or otherwise controlled the speed of the employee's vehicle [see Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 67, 70-71, 276 P.2d 703] , or facts showing that the defendant authorized a coemployee's acts of discrimination against the plaintiff [see Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800-802, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For discussion and forms relating to wrongful termination, see Ch. 100, Employer and Employee: Wrongful Termination and Discipline .

For discussion and forms relating to workers' compensation, see Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedies Doctrine .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.02[1][a] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employee Acting Under Direction of Employer

Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 67, 276 P.2d 703 , involved a negligence action by a widow and her children against the defendant for the death of her husband. Her husband was hit by one of the defendant's trains while he was driving a truck across railroad tracks. On appeal by the defendant following a judgment for the plaintiff, the defendant argued that verdicts in favor of the train engineer, conductor, and foreman, all of whom were employees of the defendant, exonerated the defendant from liability based on negligent operation of the train.

The court of appeal rejected this contention. The court stated that if the defendant's liability rested solely on respondeat superior, then exoneration of the employees would have exonerated the plaintiff. However, the plaintiff pleaded concurrent liability on the part of the defendant and its employees, thus presenting the possibility of a finding of independent negligence by the defendant. The court discussed Benson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1918) 177 Cal. 777, 778-779 , in which the complaint alleged negligence based on respondeat superior, but also alleged that the defendants were negligent in operating a train at an excessive speed in a crowded thoroughfare. The Benson court found that the defendant could be liable only under respondeat superior if the employee had done this without the express direction of the employer; but if the negligent speed was maintained by the express direction of the employer, the employer would be independently negligent.

In the case at hand, the court cited evidence that the defendant, and not the employees, directed and controlled the speed of trains at crossings. Thus, there was a basis for a finding of negligence on the part of the defendant based on the defendant's own conduct and not on respondeat superior (129 Cal. App. 2d 67, 70-71) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employee Acting Under Direction of Employer

Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Ca. App. 3d 793, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139 , was a suit by a discharged employee against his employer and certain supervisory coemployees for wrongful termination in violation of the public policy against racial discrimination. The court of appeal found that the jury could properly assess greater damages against employer than against the supervisory employees because the evidence supported a finding that the employer participated in the discriminatory conduct through its ratification of its employees' conduct (224 Ca. App. 3d 793, 800-802) . The court cited Jensen v. Southern Pac. Co. (1954) 129 Cal. App. 2d 67, 70, 276 P.2d 703 [see § 100A.20[3][a]], for the principle that if an employee acts under the direction of his or her employer, the employer participates in the act, and the employer's liability is based on the employer's own fault.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.21

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.21 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employer Ratified Employee's Conduct

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT BASED ON DEFENDANT'S OWN CONDUCT, RATHER THAN ON THE CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE, BECAUSE DEFENDANT RATIFIED THE EMPLOYEE'S MISCONDUCT THAT INJURED PLAINTIFF.

A. Ratification of Employee's Conduct. Where an employer ratifies his or her employee's negligent or intentional tort, the employer is subject to direct liability. By ratifying the employee's tortious conduct, the employer makes the conduct his or her own (Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 651-652, 71 P.2d 937).

B. Employer's Conduct or Knowledge as Evidence of Ratification. An employer's conduct with respect to his or her employee's tortious act, or the employer's knowledge of the tortious act, can support a finding that the employer ratified the tortious conduct (Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 651-652, 71 P.2d 937 ; Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913-915, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is directly liable for his or her employee's tortious conduct based on the defendant's ratification of the tortious conduct.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is directly liable for the tortious act of the defendant's employee because the defendant ratified such conduct, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the defendant's employee tortiously injured the plaintiff, and that the defendant ratified the employee's misconduct by indicating an intent to adopt or approve such conduct. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the defendant knew of the employee's misconduct but failed to express disapproval, or that the defendant continued to employ the employee with full knowledge of the misconduct [see Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 651-652, 71 P.2d 937 ; Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913-914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.02[1][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ratification of Employee's Conduct

In Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 71 P.2d 937 , the plaintiff sued an employee and his employer to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in an assault and battery committed by the employee. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the employer appealed on the grounds that the tortfeasor was not an employee and on the grounds that, assuming the tortfeasor was an employee, the evidence was insufficient to support a finding that the tort was committed in the course of the tortfeasor's employment.

The court of appeal first found that there was sufficient evidence to support the trial court's finding that the tortfeasor was an employee of the employer (22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 648) . The court also found that the employer had by its conduct and knowledge ratified the act that produced the plaintiff's injuries. Specifically, on the day following the assault, the employer discussed the matter with the employee but did not express any disapproval of the act. Also, the employer continued to employ the employee following the assault. The court stated that it is settled law that approval and ratification by the employer with full knowledge of the surrounding circumstances may fix liability on the employer for an act of the servant that was outside the scope of employment (22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 651-652) .

[b] Employer's Conduct or Knowledge as Evidence of Ratification

Jameson v. Gavett (1937) 22 Cal. App. 2d 646, 71 P.2d 937 , is discussed in § 100A.21[3][a].

In Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 , the plaintiff, a union member, sued hisunion and two union employees who had attacked him during arguments concerning union policies. The day after the employees attacked the plaintiff, the plaintiff advised the union president, business manager, and secretary of the attack. The union investigated and while a union officer concluded that it was just a personal matter between the plaintiff and the employees, the union president wanted to fire the employees. However, the union continued to employ the employees. The plaintiff subsequently began experiencing difficulties with the union in his treatment at meetings and at work. For the first time in his 12 years of union membership, he failed to receive enough hours of work to qualify for health and welfare benefits. After the plaintiff filed his lawsuit, one of his witnesses was attacked by someone who worked for the union and was subsequently expelled from the union. Further, the plaintiff had difficulty obtaining job referrals through the union hiring hall. The union appealed from jury verdicts in favor of the plaintiff.

The court of appeal held that by retaining the tortfeasors in service with full knowledge of the employees' wrongful conduct, the union ratified their torts. Further, the union's inactive pursuit of the plaintiff's grievance, reduced job referrals to the plaintiff, and the assault and expulsion of the plaintiff's witness, were further evidence of ratification. The court stated that an employer is responsible for the torts of an employee that the employer has ratified. Failure to discharge an employee who has committed a tort toward a patron of the employer is evidence of ratification (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913-914) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.22

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.22 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employer Negligently Hired or Retained Employee

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF, A THIRD PARTY INJURED BY DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE, FOR NEGLIGENTLY _____ [insert either HIRING or RETAINING] THE EMPLOYEE BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD REASON TO BELIEVE PRIOR TO THE _____ [HIRING or RETENTION] THAT AN UNDUE RISK OF HARM TO OTHERS WOULD EXIST BECAUSE OF THE EMPLOYMENT.

Liability for Negligent Hiring or Retention. An employer can be directly liable in tort to a third party if the employer was negligent in hiring or in retaining an employee who is incompetent or unfit and who injures the third party, if the employer prior to the hiring (or retention) had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm to others would exist because of the employment (Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 69, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for injuries caused by the defendant's employee, on the grounds that the defendant negligently hired or retained the employee.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable in tort to the plaintiff for injuries caused by the defendant's employee because the defendant negligently hired or retained the employee, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 100A.23 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

[c] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the defendant's employee tortiously injured the plaintiff, and that the injury was the proximate result of the employee's unfitness for the employment. Counsel also should demonstrate that prior to hiring or retaining the employee, the defendant had reason to believe that there was a risk that the employee would harm third parties. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the defendant learned prior to hiring the employee that the employee had violent propensities or that the employee had tortiously injured a third party while working at a prior job.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.02[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Hiring or Retention

In Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Purdie (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 193 Cal. Rptr. 248 , following a verbal argument, a liquor store clerk shot a third party who was making a delivery to the liquor store. The third party sued the defendant, the clerk's employer, on a negligent hiring/negligent supervision theory, alleging, among other things, that the defendant knew before hiring the employee that the employee was hostile, violent, vicious in character, and unfit for employment in a position requiring constant contact with the public. The defendant's insurer sought declaratory relief that it had no duty to defend or indemnify the defendant or the employee in the third-party suit. The trial court declared that there was no coverage on the ground that the insurance policy contained a firearm exclusion.

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the firearm exclusion did not preclude coverage because the defendant's liability arose from two independent negligent acts, one that was gun-related and the other that was caused by negligent hiring of a person known to be violent, which concurred to produce one injury. When two independent, negligent acts concur to produce one injury, each act should be viewed separately to determine policy coverage (145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 68) . The court then considered whether negligent hiring was an independent cause of the injury. Citing Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213, the court explained that the rule in California is that an employer may be liable to a third person for the employer's negligence in hiring or retaining an employee who is incompetent or unfit. Comment d to § 213 further provides that an agent may be incompetent because the agent has a reckless or vicious disposition, and if a principal, without exercising due care in hiring, employs the agent to do an act that necessarily brings the agent into contact with others, the principal is liable for harm caused by the vicious propensity. The liability results not because of the employer/employee relationship, but because the employer antecedently had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm would exist because of the employment. The court of appeal concluded that the third party had stated a negligent hiring cause of action against the defendant that was covered by the insurance policy (145 Cal. App. 3d 57, 69) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Hiring or Retention

In Hawkins v. Wilton (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 936, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , plaintiff, the tenant at an apartment complex, was shot by the apartment manager, who also served as a nighttime security guard at the complex. Plaintiff sued the owners of the complex, alleging that they were negligent in allowing the manager to carry firearms even though they knew that he was a convicted violent felon, that he abused methamphetamine, and that he had previously threatened other tenants. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal noted that the defendants' summary judgment motion, which focused on the plaintiff's voluntary association with the shooter, did not address plaintiff's claim that defendants were negligent in hiring or retaining the shooter. The court recognized that the employer of a security guard may be liable for the guard's assaults, if the employer negligently hired the guard or negligently placed the guard in a position to commit foreseeable harmful acts. The court concluded that plaintiff's allegations, if proven, could support the imposition of liability on the owners. Because the summary judgment motion failed to show that plaintiff could not prove that theory at trial, summary judgment should not have been granted (144 Cal. App. 4th 936, 943-944) .

86 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.23

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.23 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable in Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Employer Did Not Negligently Hire or Retain Employee

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR NEGLIGENTLY _____ [insert either HIRING or RETAINING] DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THERE IS NO EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT KNEW OR SHOULD HAVE KNOWN OF THE EMPLOYEE'S UNSUITABLE CHARACTERISTICS BEFORE THE EMPLOYEE INJURED PLAINTIFF.

A. Employer Must Have Knowledge of Employee's Unsuitable Characteristics. While an employer can be liable to a third party for the employer's negligence in hiring or retaining an employee who is incompetent or unfit if the employee tortiously injures the third party, to prevail on a such a claim the third party must establish that the employer knew or should have known of the employee's unsuitable characteristics before the employee injured the third party (Roman Catholic Bishop v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 1565, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 954, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95).

B. Employer Must Have Knowledge That Hiring Employee Created Particular Risk. In order to prevail on a claim for negligent hiring, a plaintiffmust allege facts showing that the employer knew or should have known that an employee would act in a certain way and that the employee did act in that way (Doe v. Capital Cities (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1055, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122).

C. Employer Must Have Knowledge That Employee Is Unfit for Specific Tasks. Liability for negligent hiring can be imposed only when an employer knows or should know that the employee, because of past behavior or other factors, is unfit for the specific tasks to be performed [Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1215, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370] .

D. Employer Must Owe Legal Duty to Seek Knowledge. An employer who lacks actual knowledge of an employee's unfitness cannot be held liable for negligent hiring or retention of that employee unless the employer was under a legal duty to undertake a search that would have uncovered facts demonstrating that the employee was unfit for the employment (Flores v. AutoZone West, Inc. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 373, 384, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178).

[Optional] E. Employer Not Liable for Injury Caused by Former Employee. Because the employer-employee relationship ends on the termination of employment, an employer cannot be held liable for the negligent hiring and retention of an unfit employee for harm inflicted by the employee after his or her employment has been terminated, even if the former employee initially met the plaintiff while working for the employer (Phillips v. TLC Plumbing, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1144-1145, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 864).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for injuries caused by the defendant's employee because the defendant negligently hired or retained the employee, based on the argument that the plaintiff has failed to show that the defendant knew or should have known of the employee's unsuitable characteristics before the injury occurred. In an appropriate case, these points (combined with those in § 100A.24, if appropriate) may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points in § 100A.22.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff has failed to establish a cause of action for negligent hiring, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that prior to the incident in which the plaintiff was tortiously injured by the defendant's employee, the defendant had no reason to know whether there was a risk that the employee would harm third parties. For example, if applicable, counsel could demonstrate that evidence of the employee's unsuitable characteristics for the job did not surface during the reference and background checks made by the defendant prior to hiring the employee, and that while employed by the defendant, the employee did not demonstrate any violent propensities prior to the incident at issue [see Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 954, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.02[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Must Have Knowledge of Employee's Unsuitable Characteristics

In Roman Catholic Bishop v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 , a minor plaintiff claimed she was sexually abused by her parish priest, and brought an action against the church for negligent hiring. The church claimed that it had no prior knowledge or reason to know that the priest was a risk to engage in a sexual relationship with a minor. However, the trial court denied the church's motion for summary judgment, concluding that a triable issue existed whether the church breached its duty of care to discover the priest's unfitness as an employee. The court of appeal disagreed, citing the rule of direct employer liability under Restatement (Second) of Agency § 213. The court emphasized comment d, which states in part that employer liability results because the employer antecedently had reason to believe that an undue risk of harm would exist because of the employment. In this case, no facts in the record indicated that the priest had a criminal history or had been previously implicated in sexual abuse of a minor. Furthermore, the plaintiff did not dispute that the church had no actual knowledge of the priest's sexual activity with her or with anyone else until her mother reported suspicions (42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 1565) .

The plaintiff also contended that the church was negligent in failing to ask the priest if he had problems with his vows of celibacy. However, the court held that the duty the plaintiff sought to impose on the church as an employer would violate the employee's privacy rights explicitly guaranteed under the California constitution. Stating that the right to privacy encompasses privacy in one's sexual matters and is not limited to the marital relationship, the court also held that there was no compelling state interest to require the employer to investigate the sexual practices of its employee (42 Cal. App. 4th 1556, 1567) . Concluding that the church was entitled to summary judgment, the court issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to enter a new order granting the motion.

In Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 , the plaintiff sued the defendant for negligent employment and under the doctrine of respondeat superior for injuries caused when the defendant's employee assaulted the plaintiff in a fight outside a bar. The employee had gone to the bar after finishing work while on location for the day in Palm Springs to set up the staging for a telecast of a professional baseball game. The plaintiff alleged that the employee had violent propensities, of which the defendant was aware. The defendant filed a motionfor summary judgment and, in support of the motion, submitted declarations from the employee's supervisor stating that the employee was efficient and hardworking and had never demonstrated a propensity toward fighting or excessive drinking. The plaintiff's opposition did not refute this evidence. The defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate after the trial court denied the motion.

The appeals court let the writ issue. Although the plaintiff abandoned the negligent hiring theory on appeal, the court indicated that allegations based on the plaintiff's own experience with the tortfeasor will not establish the employer's knowledge, which is a prerequisite to liability based on negligent hiring. The declaration of the defendant's supervisor that he had no knowledge of the employee's alleged propensities for drinking and violence was sufficient to establish that no one connected with the defendant had such knowledge (114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 954) .

[b] Employer Must Have Knowledge That Hiring Employee Created Particular Risk

In Doe v. Capital Cities (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 122 , the plaintiff was an aspiring actor who was drugged and gang-raped by a casting director and four other men at the casting director's home. The actor sued the casting director's employer, a broadcasting company, for negligent hiring, training and/or supervision. The trial court ruled against the plaintiff, sustaining the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court began its analysis by stating the prerequisites to liability in negligent hiring cases, as in Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 . Liability is based on the facts that the employer knew or should have known that hiring the employee created a particular risk or hazard and that particular harm materialized. In this case, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant knew or should have known that the casting director engaged in the purchase and use of serious, mind-altering drugs, that he used his position to gain sexual favors, and that use of a "casting couch" was common within the entertainment industry. The court ruled that given the severity of the harm the plaintiff suffered, the allegations were insufficient to allege a cause of action against the defendant (50 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1055) . Specifically, the court found that the defendant's knowledge that the casting director personally used "serious, mind-altering drugs" did not equate with knowledge that he would surreptitiously use drugs to place a prospective employee into a situation of helplessness before violently assaulting him. According to the court, the "casting couch" allegation suffered from the same infirmity; that is, knowledge that the director used his position of authority to extract or coerce sexual favors is not knowledge that he would first drug and then attack a potential employee (50 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1054-1055) .

[c] Employer Must Have Knowledge That Employee Is Unfit for Specific Tasks

In Federico v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370 , a plaintiff who was sexually molested by the defendant's employee sued the defendant on the theory of negligent hiring. The plaintiff alleged that the defendant knew, or should have known that his employee had suffered prior convictions for sexually molesting juvenile males and was negligent in hiring him to manage and supervise the training of students at his hairstyling college. The defendant sought a writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant its motion for summary judgment. The court of appeal concluded that the defendant was entitled to prevail and issued a peremptory writ of mandate.

According to the court, even if the defendant was aware of the employee's prior convictions for sexually molesting juvenile males, and could have foreseen that the employee's duties at the hair-styling school would entail some degree of contact with young males, the employer's actions in hiring the employee to manage and supervise the training of hair-styling students was not unreasonable. It reasoned that the employee's position required him only to supervise adult students and perform administrative tasks for the hair-styling college; his prior convictions did not involve students or customers of the hairdressing establishments in which he was employed at the time the offenses were committed; there was no connection between the employee's abnormal sexual interest in children and his profession, and nothing in the employee's history would have indicated to the employer that the employee posed a threat of harm to minors he might encounter in the course of his work (59 Cal. App. 4th 1207, 1215) .

[d] Employer Must Owe Legal Duty to Seek Knowledge

In Flores v. AutoZone West, Inc. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 373, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178 , plaintiff was hit in the head with a metal pipe wielded by the employee of an auto parts store. Plaintiff had gone into the store for a case of motor oil and had apparently whistled to get the employee's attention, an act which annoyed the employee. Plaintiff then asked for the price of a case of oil, and the employee, still annoyed, pointed to the posted price and asked if plaintiff was "too stupid" to read the prices on the shelves. Plaintiff responded that if the employee did not want to work, he should not have come into work, and the employee responded by striking plaintiff in the head with a piece of metal pipe that he had been holding. Plaintiff sued the employee and the employer, but the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer on the grounds that the employee's conduct was not foreseeable enough to place it within the course of employment and the employer did not breach any independent duty owed to plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. The court first held that the trial court erred in granting summary judgment on the basis that the assault did not take place within the course of the employee's employment with defendant. The court concluded that the evidence was sufficient to support a jury finding that the assault arose when the employee was assisting plaintiff in buying motor oil and was within the course of employment. Thus, summary judgment on plaintiff's theory of respondeat superior was improperly granted (161 Cal. App. 4th 373, 379-384) . However, the court also held that the employer could not be directly liable for negligent hiring or retention of the employee who committed the assault. Plaintiff had argued that the employer could have discovered the employee's prior juvenile delinquency record, or otherwise determined that the employee had "dangerous propensities," if the employerhad made a better effort to investigate the employee's past or subject him to personality screening. The court rejected this argument, noting that liability could not be imposed on the employer merely because the employer could have discovered such information, if the employer did not have a legal duty to do so. The court held that plaintiff had not identified any legal duty on the part of the employer to conduct a background check so thorough that it would have identified the employee's past juvenile records, which, as the court noted, are made confidential by statute. The court also concluded that one prior incidence of discipline imposed on the employee three years earlier for having a "loud and inappropriate" conversation with another customer was insufficient to support a finding that the employer had been negligent in retaining the employee. Because the employer was not otherwise on notice of the employee's propensity for violence, the claim for negligent hiring or retention failed (161 Cal. App. 4th 373, 384-385) .

[e] Employer Not Liable for Injury Caused by Former Employee

In Phillips v. TLC Plumbing, Inc. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 91 Cal. Rptr. 3d 864 , plaintiff was the daughter of a woman who was shot and killed by the defendant's former employee. The shooter was a former parolee who had been hired by defendant as a plumbing service repairman. While so employed, he was twice sent on service calls to the house of plaintiff's mother. The following month, defendant terminated the employment of this repairman for misuse of a company vehicle, drug and alcohol use, and threatening a coworker. Based on the repairman's service call meetings with plaintiff's mother, however, the two had begun a long-term personal relationship, which ended two years later when the former repairman shot and killed plaintiff's mother. Plaintiff sued defendant on the theory that it had negligently hired and retained the repairman. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. As an issue of first impression in California, the court held that because the employer-employee relationship ends on the termination of employment, an employer cannot be held liable for the negligent hiring and retention of an unfit employee for harm inflicted by the employee after his or her employment has been terminated. The court noted that in the instant case, even though the former employee initially met the plaintiff's mother while working for the defendant, the injury was inflicted two years after the employment relationship had been terminated by defendant. Under those circumstances, defendant owed plaintiff no duty of care and could not be liable under a theory of negligent hiring and retention (172 Cal. App. 4th 1133, 1144-1145) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.24

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.24 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Directly Liable In Tort to Third Party Based on Employer's Own Conduct--Hiring and Retention of Employee Did Not Proximately Cause Tort

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR NEGLIGENTLY _____ [HIRING or RETAINING] DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE, BECAUSE _____ [HIRING or RETAINING] THE EMPLOYEE WAS NOT A PROXIMATE CAUSE OF THE TORT. THE EMPLOYEE'S TORTIOUS ACT WAS UNRELATED TO _____ [HIS or HER] JOB DUTIES, AND THERE IS NOEVIDENCE THAT _____ [NOT HIRING or FIRING] THE EMPLOYEE WOULD HAVE LESSENED THE RISK THAT THE TORT WOULD HAVE OCCURRED.

Unforeseeable Private Act of Employee Breaks Chain of Proximate Cause Connecting Employer to Tort. When an employee commits a tort that was not reasonably foreseeable by the employer and that was not related to the employee's job, the employer cannot be held liable for the tort, because any negligence of the employer in hiring or retaining the employee was not a proximate cause of the tort [Mendoza v. City of Los Angeles (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1342, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a contention that the defendant is liable to the plaintiff for injuries caused by the defendant's employee because the defendant negligently hired or retained the employee, based on the argument that any negligence in hiring or retaining the employee was not a proximate cause of the plaintiff's injuries. This form (combined with those in § 100A.23, if appropriate) may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points in § 100A.22.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff has failed to establish proximate cause, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should, therefore, establish that the employee's tortious conduct was unforeseeable by the employer, that it was not related to the employee's job duties, and that the fact of employment did not make the tort more likely to occur (see Mendoza v. City of Los Angeles (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1342, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For a further discussion, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.02[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unforeseeable Private Act of Employee Breaks Chain of Proximate Cause Connecting Employer to Tort

In Mendoza v. City of Los Angeles (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1342, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 525 , an off-duty police officer who had been drinking shot and killed his fiancee with his own gun during a domestic argument. The ensuing wrongful-death action included a claim against the city that employed the officer, on the theory that the city had negligently hired and supervised the officer and negligently entrusted him to carry a concealed firearm while off duty. After a jury trial, the trial court entered judgment against the city.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court had erred in allowing the case to go to the jury. The court found that there was insufficient evidence to establish that the city owed a duty of care to the victim and the plaintiffs in connection with its hiring and supervision of the officer: the shooting did not occur in the workplace, and the contact between the officer and the victim had not been generated by the officer's employment relationship with the city. The city did not require the officer to carry a firearm while off duty; moreover, the weapon used in the shooting was not his service revolver, but rather his own gun, which he could have obtained regardless of his employment. Additionally, there was no evidence of past violence by the officer that would have made his criminal attack in this case foreseeable. Since the city had no duty to the plaintiffs in connection with its hiring of the officer, it could not be found negligent (66 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1339-1341) .

Further, the court held that, even if the city had been negligent in hiring and supervising the officer, there was insufficient evidence to establish that the negligence was a proximate cause of the victim's death. Neither rejecting the officer nor firing him would have eliminated his access to a gun. The shooting occurred while the officer was off duty, during a domestic dispute, and it had no connection to his official duties. Finally, the officer's lack of a prior history of violence or excessive use of force made his act of domestic violence unforeseeable (66 Cal. App. 4th 1333, 1342) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.25

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.25 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Tortfeasor Was Employee

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE TORTFEASOR WAS DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE.

A. Doctrine of Respondeat Superior. The doctrine of respondeat superior provides that an employer or principal is vicariously liable for the wrongful conduct of his or her employees or agents committed within the scope of the employment or agency (Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 967, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676).

B. Employer/Employee Relationship. An employee is one who is subject to his or her employer's right of control with respect to any act, labor, or work to be done in the course and scope of the employment. If a person is performing work and labor for another, a prima facie showing of an employer/employee relationship is established, and the person is presumed to be an employee in the absence of contrary evidence (Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 ; Pierson v. Holly Sugar Corp. (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 298, 301, 237 P.2d 28).

[Optional] C. Monetary Compensation Not Required. Monetary compensation is not a necessary element of an employer/employee relationship (Eye v. Kafer (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 449, 453, 20 Cal. Rptr. 841).

D. Right of Control. The key factor in determining whether an employer/employee relationship exists rather than an independent contractor relationship is whether the employer has the right to exercise control over the employee with respect to the means and manner of the performance of the work, regardless of whether or not that potential control is actually exercised with respect to all of the employee's duties. The fact that there is a certain amount of freedom inherent in the nature of the employee's work does not mean that an employment relationship does not exist (City of Los Angeles v. Vaughn (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 198, 201, 10 Cal. Rptr. 457, 358 P.2d 913 ; Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 458, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102 ; Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578).

[Optional] E. Characterization of Relationship Not Determinative. The fact that the defendant and tortfeasor characterized their relationship as that of independent contractor is not controlling. That characterization will be ignored if they, by their conduct, act like employee and employer (Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 877, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647).

F. Balance of Factors Supports Finding of Employment Relationship. In addition to the right of control, there are a number of other factors to be taken into consideration in determining whether one is an employee or an independent contractor. Where the preponderance of the factors suggests an employment relationship, the tortfeasor will be considered an employee (Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 614-615, 617, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578 ; Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 874, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior because the tortfeasor was the defendant's employee. Optional Paragraph C is for use if there is evidence that the employee was not paid wages for his or her work. Optional Paragraph E is for use if there is evidence that the employer and employee characterized the relationship as that of independent contractor. In an appropriate case, these points should be combined with the points in § 100A.26.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should demonstrate that an employment relationship existed between the defendant and the tortfeasor, including evidence that the defendant had the right to control both the means and manner of the tortfeasor's work. Counsel also should discuss evidence of other factors tending to indicate the existence of an employment relationship, such as facts showing thatthe tortfeasor's work was of the type normally performed under the direction of an employer; the work did not require special skills; the defendant supplied the tools and place of work; the tortfeasor worked for the defendant for an extended period of time; the tortfeasor was paid a salary or by the hour; the work was part of the defendant's regular business; the tortfeasor and the defendant believed that they had an employment relationship; and the defendant had the right to discharge the tortfeasor at will [see Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615-618, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578 ; Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 874, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647] . If the issue of whether the tortfeasor acted within the scope of the employment is also contested, counsel should combine these points with arguments from §§ 100A.26-100A.32, as appropriate, establishing that the tortfeasor acted within the scope of his or her employment.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 100A.34 may be used to oppose the contention supported by this form.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior because the tortfeasor was the defendant's employee, for example in opposition to a demurrer or in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For forms relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Doctrine of Respondeat Superior

In Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 , the defendant's employee told the plaintiff to ride with him and he would teach the plaintiff how to drive while he (the employee) performed his job for the defendant of driving a tractor. The plaintiff had to ride on the top of a toolbox because the tractor had only one seat. Company rules stated that only the driver could ride on the tractor because of the potential danger. After the plaintiff lost part of one leg and the use of one arm when he was knocked off the tractor by a low-hanging branch, he sued the defendant under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The trial court refused to give an instruction requested by the plaintiff that the employee was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident as a matter of law, and instead submitted the issue to the jury as a factual question. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The issue on appeal was whether acceptance of an unauthorized passenger took the employee's acts out of the scope of his employment because such an act is not a risk arising out of the employment. The court of appeal stated that under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is vicariously liable for torts committed by his or her employees in the scope of their employment. The rationale underlying respondeat superior is an allocation of risk; that is, losses caused by the torts of employees are certain to occur in the conduct of an employer's business, and such losses are best placed on the business itself, as a cost of doing business. A risk arises out of employment when an employee's conduct is not so unusual that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from the risk among the other costs of the employer's business. Thus, an employer's liability extends beyond the employer's actual or possible control of the employee to include risks inherent in or created by the enterprise (41 Cal. 3d 962, 967-968) .

To recover under respondeat superior, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the employee's tort was committed in the scope of employment. When the facts are undisputed, the issue becomes a question of law. In this case, the plaintiff requested an instruction that as a matter of law the employee was acting within the scope of his employment. The defendant objected to the instruction on the ground that the employee violated company rules by having an unauthorized passenger and that his conduct benefited only him and not the defendant. However, because the facts were uncontroverted that the employee was performing an assigned task during working hours at the time of the accident, the court found that the trial court erred in refusing the plaintiff's instruction. The fact that the employee had an unauthorized passenger was immaterial so long as he was performing hiswork. Further, there is no requirement that an employee's act benefit the employer for respondeat superior to apply. In fact, an employer can be liable for an employee's intentional torts committed within the scope of employment, even though such torts do not benefit the employer. The court also found that the fact that the employee may have been combining his personal business with his work was not relevant, because the employee clearly was still performing an assigned task. The court stated that the defendant anticipated the risk of injury inherent in carrying a passenger on a tractor and sought to minimize the risk with its no passenger rule. However, an employer cannot escape liability just by ordering employees to act carefully; if they could, few employers would ever be held liable. The court concluded that, as a matter of law, the employee was acting within the scope of his employment (41 Cal. 3d 962, 969-970) .

[b] Employer/Employee Relationship

In Pierson v. Holly Sugar Corp. (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 298, 237 P.2d 28 , the plaintiff, a salesman who was making a delivery to the defendant, was injured when the "manlift" he was riding in on the defendant's premises plummeted to the ground. Even though the manlift had a sign stating that it was for "Employees Only," an employee of the defendant told the plaintiff that the plaintiff could use the manlift. The plaintiff testified that on two occasions prior to the accident he had ridden the manlift, and that a man on the defendant's premises showed him how to operate it. After a jury verdict in the plaintiff's favor, the defendant appealed, asserting as grounds for reversal that the trial court erred in permitting the introduction of certain testimony and in the giving of instructions.

The court of appeal considered the defendant's contention that the trial court erred in admitting the plaintiff's testimony about the man who showed him how to operate the manlift because the plaintiff failed to establish that the man was the defendant's employee and acting within the scope of his employment. The court stated that, under the circumstances, the jury was entitled to infer that the man was an employee. Where one is performing work and labor for another, prima facie evidence of employment is shown and that person is presumed to be an employee in the absence of evidence to the contrary (107 Cal. App. 2d 298, 301) .

In Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 , an ambulance carrying a pregnant woman on her way to deliver at the hospital, collided with a car. The child was born 40 minutes later and immediately showed signs of brain damage. The driver of the car, a real estate salesman, and the defendant had entered into a contract that stated that the driver would pay the defendant certain profits from his real estate activities in exchange for office space. The agreement also provided that he was not an employee of the defendant, and that the defendant did not control or have any right of control over his activities. Further, the agreement stated that salesmen could be terminated on 30-days' notice. In an attachment to the agreement, there was a reference that all "employees" had to show proof of automobile insurance. All real estate transactions entered into by the driver were made in the defendant's name because the driver was not licensed as a broker. The child's parents sued the defendant as the alleged employer of the driver. The trial court instructed the jury as to the meanings of "independent contractor" and "agent." The court also told the jury that the contract between the driver and the defendant was prima facie evidence of their relationship and was the controlling factor, in the absence of other evidence, in determining whether the driver was an independent contractor. However, the court said that the jury "may" take into account other evidence in determining who had the right to control the driver's work. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed, in part on the grounds that the trial court's instruction regarding the weight of the agreement between the defendant and the driver was prejudicial error.

The court of appeal found that it was error to have given any instruction on the effect of the contract because the driver was an agent of the defendant as a matter of law. Under real estate law, a real estate salesman is strictly the agent of the broker and referred to the relationship between a broker and a salesman as that of employer/employee [Grand v. Griesinger (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d, 397, 405-406 , 325 P.2d 475] . The court stated that an "employee" is one who is subject to the absolute control and direction of his or her employer in regard to any act, labor, or work to be done in the course and scope of the employment. And while an individual can be both an employee and an agent, the two terms are not synonymous. The distinguishing factor of an employment relationship is that the employee is entirely under the control and direction of the employer, which presupposes the right to direct the method and mode of the work. The distinguishing features of an agency relationship, on the other hand, is its representative character and its derivative authority. The court stated that it may be a question of fact as to whether in each case a salesman is an employee, but a salesman is an agent as a matter of law. Further, it is contrary to the provisions of real estate law to change the relationship between a salesman and a broker from that of an agent to independent contractor. Thus, the trial court's instruction that the agreement was prima facie evidence of the relationship between the defendant and the driver was prejudicial error (215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205-208) .

[c] Monetary Compensation Not Required

In Eye v. Kafer (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 449, 20 Cal. Rptr. 841 , the plaintiff was beaten up in the restroom of a bar. The tortfeasor had been serving drinks and collecting money at the bar on the night of the incident,but the defendant, the bar owner, testified that he had not left the tortfeasor in charge of the bar. The tortfeasor had been an employee at some time during the month the incident occurred, and the defendant told a police officer that the tortfeasor was employed by the bar at the time of the incident to work off a tab owed for food and drink. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed on the grounds that the tortfeasor was not an employee.

The court stated that although there was evidence to suggest that the tortfeasor was not an employee, the jury obviously did not believe the defendant's witnesses, and it is not the responsibility of the court to determine the credibility of the witnesses. An inference that the tortfeasor was an employee could be drawn from the defendant's statement to the police officer. The court stated that one of the tests for determining whether an employment relationship exists is the right of control. The court further stated that the test is whether an employee is subject to control and not whether control is being exercised at any particular moment. Furthermore, the control must be complete, extending not only to the employment, but to all of its details or the means by which the work is to be accomplished. The existence of the right of control can be tested by determining whether instructions would have to be obeyed. The court stated, however, that it was not necessary for the plaintiff to establish that the tortfeasor received payment in dollars for his services. The evidence indicated that he served drinks and collected money, and whether it was for a stated sum is not crucial to a determination of whether he was an employee of the defendant [Bonetti v. Double Play Tavern (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 848 , 274 P.2d 751 ; Lab. Code § 350] (202 Cal. App. 2d 449, 453) .

[d] Right of Control

In Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578 , the plaintiff sued the public defender and deputy public defender of Monterey County for malpractice. The defendants' demurrers and motions for judgment on the pleadings were granted without leave to amend. On appeal, the issue was whether the plaintiff was required to have filed a claim against the county under the California Tort Claims Act; if the defendants were public employees acting in the scope of their employment, he was so required; if the defendants were independent contractors, he was not required to file such a claim. The court of appeal concluded that salaried full-time public defenders representing assigned clients are public employees acting in the scope of their employment, and thus, the trial court's order had to be affirmed. The court stated that the plaintiff's assertion that the employment relationship requires complete or absolute control was far too rigid; just because there is a certain amount of freedom inherent in the nature of the work, does not necessarily mean that one becomes an independent contractor. The court explained that the while the right to control the means by which the work is accomplished is the most significant test of whether an employment relationship exists, other factors should also be considered [Tieberg v. Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 943, 950, 88 Cal. Rptr. 175] . The Restatement (Second) of Agency, § 220, defines a "servant" (a term that is synonymous with "employee") as a person who is "employed to perform services in the affairs of another and who with respect to the physical conduct in the performance of the services is subject to the other's control or right of control." The Restatement further provides that the following factors must be considered in determining whether one is an employee or independent contractor: (1) the extent of control that the master may exercise over the details of the work; (2) whether or not the one employed is engaged in a distinct occupation or business; (3) whether the kind of occupation is normally performed under the direction of an employer or by a specialist without supervision; (4) the skill required in the occupation; (5) whether the worker or the master supplies the tools and place of work; (6) the length of time for which the person is employed; (7) the method of payment, whether by time or by the job; (8) whether the work is part of the regular business of the master; (9) whether the parties believe they are creating an employment relationship; and (10) whether the principal is or is not in business. Applying these factors to the case at hand, the court concluded that the preponderance of the factors suggested an employment relationship (230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615-618) .

In Societa per Azioni de Navigazione Italia v. City of Los Angeles (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 446, 183 Cal. Rptr. 51, 645 P.2d 102 , the plaintiff was the owner of a merchant vessel and customarily used local pilots to guide its ships within the Los Angeles Harbor. The defendant maintained a staff of local pilots, who were civil service employees, and on request would furnish one of the pilots to a ship for a fee. While one of these pilots was navigating the plaintiff's ship, the ship struck and damaged a wharf owned by the defendant and dock facilities owned by an oil company. A dispute arose over who was to bear financial responsibility for the damages. The trial court found that both the pilot and the ship's crew were negligent. One of the issues on appeal was whether the defendant or the plaintiff was vicariously liable for the pilot's negligence.

The court stated that in determining whether an employment relationship exists, the most important factor is the right to control the manner and means by which the work is to be performed. But if control may be exercised only as to the result of the work and not as to the means by which it is accomplished, an independent contractor relationship is established. The broad authority that a pilot has over navigation, however, would ordinarily weigh against finding the pilot to be an employee. Nonetheless, federal courts have concluded that sufficient indicia of a master-servant relationship are present to hold the shipowner the pilot's employer: theoccupation is one that is ordinarily considered an incident of the shipowner's business, and that the shipowner, through ship's master, has the capacity to exercise some limited control over the pilot. Moreover, the ship's master has some control over the pilot's actual performance of the pilot's task, may advise the pilot, can interfere in cases of danger, and can remove the pilot just as the ship's master can remove any other member of the crew. The court concluded that the facts of the case established that the plaintiff, through its shipmaster, had a sufficient degree of control to render an employment relationship with the pilot (31 Cal. 3d 446, 457-459) .

The court also stated, however, that the conclusion that an employment relationship existed between the plaintiff and the pilot did not necessarily mean that the respondeat superior nexus between the defendant and the pilot ceased to exist, based on the possibility of dual employment. The court then found that the pilot simultaneously served two employers, the defendant and the plaintiff, and that both the defendant and the plaintiff were therefore jointly and severally liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the damages caused by the pilot's negligence (31 Cal. 3d 446, 460-461) .

[e] Characterization of Relationship Not Determinative

In Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647 , the plaintiff's vehicle collided with a pizza delivery vehicle. The plaintiff sued the driver, the owner of the pizza franchise, and Toyota. She alleged that the franchise owner was liable under respondeat superior as the employer of the driver. She further alleged that Toyota had defectively designed the seatbelt in her car, thus contributing to her injuries. The plaintiff made a demand of $500,000 from the defendants to settle the entire case. Subsequently, she settled with the driver for $100,000, and Toyota did not object to the court's good faith determination as to this settlement. However, she also entered into a separate settlement with the franchise owner for $15,000, and, over Toyota's objection, the trial court found this settlement to be in good faith and dismissed Toyota's cross-complaint against the franchise owner for comparative equitable indemnity. Toyota filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

The appeals court let the writ issue. The court stated that the trial court's good faith determination of the settlement was based on a determination that the driver was not an employee of the franchise owner, but an independent contractor. Under that assumption, the franchise owner would not have any liability to the plaintiff because the plaintiff only asserted respondeat superior liability as to the franchise owner and there was no claim that the owner was independently negligent. On the other hand, if the driver was an employee, then the franchise owner might be exposed to unlimited liability, and the trial court's good faith determination would be questionable. The most significant factor in determining whether an employment relationship exists is the right to control the manner and means of accomplishing the result of the work. A number of other factors also are to be considered [Restatement (Second) of Agency, § 220], but such factors are secondary to the right of control. In addition, courts also have looked at the unlimited right to discharge at will and without cause as a strong factor indicating employment [Riskin v. Industrial Accident Comm'n (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 248, 255, 144 P.2d 16 ; Empire Star Mines Co., Ltd. v. California Employment Comm'n (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 33, 43, 168 P.2d 686 ; Malloy v. Fong (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 356, 370 ; City of Los Angeles v. Vaughn (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 198, 201, 10 Cal. Rptr. 457, 358 P.2d 913] .

In this case, the court found that the owner controlled and directed the number, nature and type of pizzas to be delivered, the time of such deliveries, the location of the deliveries, and price to be collected for each delivery. The only portion of the driver's work that arguably was left to the driver's control was the route or how fast he would drive. And the only evidence offered in support of the fact that he was an independent contractor, that he provided his own car, expenses and insurance, were circumstances constituting merely secondary factors and worthy of little weight. Further, the driver could not be characterized as an independent route driver or salesman because the owner had total control as to all aspects of the job, including when he reported to work, how long he worked, and when and to whom he made deliveries. The driver was at no risk with respect to the business (except his commission was subject to a charge for any shortages). Also, the owner had the right to terminate the relationship at will.

The court stated that some of the facts asserted by the franchise owner in support of the conclusion that the driver was an independent contractor were irrelevant. In particular, the fact that there was an agreement characterizing the relationship as one of "client-independent contractor" will be ignored when the parties, by their conduct, act like employer and employee. Attempts to conceal employment by formal documents purporting to create other relationships are disregarded when the conduct and declarations of the parties are inconsistent with the documents (220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 878) . In addition, the fact that the driver had to pay his own payroll and income taxes and provide his own workers' compensation insurance were viewed by the court merely as legal consequences of an independent contractor relationship, and not as a means of proving such a relationship. An employer cannot change the status of an employee to one of independent contractor by illegally requiring the employee to assume burdens that the law imposes directly on the employer. Based on a review of the factors, the court found that there was no substantial evidence to support the trial court's determination that the driver was an independent contractor. And,therefore, the trial court's good faith determination as to the plaintiff's settlement with the franchise owner was an abuse of discretion (220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 878) .

[f] Balance of Factors Supports Finding of Employment Relationship

Toyota Motor Sales U.S.A., Inc. v. Superior Court (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 864, 269 Cal. Rptr. 647 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][e].

Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][d].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.26

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.26 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE ACTS WERE COMMITTED WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE EMPLOYMENT.

A. Scope of Employment. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is vicariously liable for the torts committed by his or her employees, provided that the torts are committed within the scope of the employment (Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 701, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424).

B. Tests to Determine Whether Conduct Is Within Scope of Employment. Specific conduct by an employee is considered to be within the scope of his or her employment if either: (1) the employee's act or conduct was "foreseeable;" or (2) the employee's act or conduct was required by or incident to his or her duties, regardless of whether it could be foreseen by the employer (Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141-142, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956-957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95).

C. Conduct Was Foreseeable. An employee's conduct is foreseeable if the conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from such conduct among the other costs of the employer's business (Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 968, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141-142, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956-957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95).

D. Sufficient Nexus Between Conduct and Duties of Employment. Regardless of whether the employee's conduct was foreseeable, the conduct will be found to be within the scope of employment if there is a sufficient nexus between the conduct and the duties of his or her employment (Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 701, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 956, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-141, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287).

E. Duties and Purpose of Employment Broadly Construed. In determining whether an employee's tort was incidental to his or her job duties, an employee's duties and the purpose of his or her employment are broadly construed (Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior because the defendant's employee committed a tort in the scope of his or her employment that injured the plaintiff.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior because the defendant's employee committed a tort within the scope of employment, for example in a motion for summary judgment.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the risk of the employee's conduct was typical of or incidental to the defendant's business, and that the conduct was foreseeable in light of the duties the employee was hired to perform. Counsel should argue that the precise circumstances giving rise to the injury need not be anticipated so long as the risk is reasonably foreseeable. If appropriate, counsel also should set forth facts indicating that the conduct was required by or incidental to the employee's job duties. Further, counsel should argue that occupational duties are defined broadly, and, if applicable, that the fact that the employee was not engaged in the ultimate object of the employment at the time of the wrongful conduct does not preclude respondeat superior liability [Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 138-139, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in §§ 100A.35 -100A.37 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

In Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 , the plaintiff was struck by a vehicle driven by the defendant's employee. The employee's duties at the defendant's hardware store were limited to operating a cash register and marking and pricing inventory. She never made any deliveries, nor used her car in connection with her work. On the day of the accident, a Friday, she had driven to the defendant's store to pick up her paycheck, but she was not scheduled to work that day. Payday was always the Friday following the work week that ended the previous Sunday. After picking up her paycheck, she walked to a nearby bank, but the bank was busy. She got back in her car, drove one block, and then hit the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the defendant alleging that the employee was acting within the scope of her employment. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and the plaintiff appealed.

The appeals court stated that under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is liable for the torts of his or her employees committed within the scope of employment, but the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish that the act was within the scope of employment. The court rejected the plaintiff's reliance on workers compensation cases to establish that activities incident to collecting wages arise out of in the course of employment. According to the court, workers compensation cases, while helpful, are not instructive in determining respondeat superior liability, mainly because the two areas of law serve different purposes: while workers' compensation is a shield for the injured worker, the imposition of vicarious liability is a sword. This difference is underscored by the fact that an injured worker need not prove fault as a condition precedent to workers' compensation recovery, but the plaintiff in a respondeat superior case has to prove fault by a preponderance of the evidence. The court concluded that an employee can suffer an injury that is compensable under the workers' compensation laws and at the same time not be within the scope of employment under the doctrine of respondeat superior (136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 702-703) .

The court also rejected the plaintiff's assertion that the defendant was liable under the special errand exception to the going and coming rule, which provides that if the employee is engaged in a special errand, either as part of the employee's regular duties or at the specific order or request of the employer, the employee is considered to be within the scope of employment from the time the employee commences the errand until the employee returns, or until the employee deviates from his or her special errand for personal reasons. The court found that the availability of the plaintiff's paycheck on the day of the accident did not convert that circumstance into an invitation to engage in a special errand for the benefit of the employer. At most, it was an option available at the election of the employee, and solely for the benefit of the employee (136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 704) .

Finally, the court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that the going and coming rule did not apply because going to pick up her paycheck was a risk that was created by the defendant's enterprise and was foreseeable. The court cited Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 618-619, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143 [see § 100A.33[3][c]], for the proposition that the employer's liability should extend beyond actual or possible control over employees to include risks inherent in or created by the enterprise because the employer is better able than the injured party to spread the risk through prices, rates, or liability insurance. One way to determine whether a risk should be borne by the enterprise is to ask whether the actual occurrence was a foreseeable consequence of the activity. Foreseeability as a test for respondeat superior means that in the context of the enterprise, an employee's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business. The court stated that, in the case before it, there was no inherent risk to the employment that would have made the accident foreseeable. The employee was a cashier who was not required to use her car for work and there was no evidence that the defendant had any knowledge that the employee would use her car to go to the store on her day off to get her paycheck. Further, there was nothing unusual in having a fixed pay day and having a short time lag between the pay day and the last day worked, and thus, the plaintiff's argument that the defendant created the risk by holding on the money was too attenuated. The court stated that if the employee had been working on the day of the accident and had picked up her paycheck during the day, there is no question that the going and coming rule would bar any claim against the defendant for torts committed by the employee while driving her car from home to work. The fact that she voluntarily chose to come into work on her day off should not produce a different result (136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 705-706) .

[b] Tests to Determine Whether Conduct Is Within Scope of Employment

In Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 , Ernest Schwobeda was a member of the Central Baptist Church and a Sunday school teacher. He also participated in the Church's organized evening program of visitation to homes that was designed to enlarge the Church's membership. He was not compensated for any of these activities. The plaintiff was in Schwobeda's second grade Sunday school class, and, shortly thereafter, Schwobeda began picking up the plaintiff at his home on Thursday evenings to bring him along on the visitations. He also had the plaintiff help him with yardwork or other errands on Saturdays. The Saturday outings were unrelated to Church activities. This relationship lasted two years. Schwobeda was charged with child molestation involving the plaintiff and others. The plaintiff sued the Church, and the Church moved for summary judgment claiming that Schwobeda's actions were not foreseeable, that Schwobeda had no authority or agency to commit the acts, and that the acts were unrelated to Schwobeda's duties as a Church member or Sunday school teacher. The trial court granted the motion.

The appeals court explained that an employer is liable for the torts of his or her employees committed within the scope of employment. The determination of whether the tort was within the scope of employment turns on whether either the act performed was required or incident to the employee's duties, or on whether the misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by the employer in any event. Examining the evidence, the court found that the acts of molestation were not within the scope of employment. Schwobeda was not employed to molest young boys, and there was no evidence that the acts occurred during Sunday school or during a visitation period. Further, the acts were not actuated by a purpose to serve the Church, but rather were self-serving acts unrelated to Church activities. Thus, the acts were neither required, incidental to his duties, nor foreseeable (197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722) .

In Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , the plaintiff, an 11-year-old, was sexually molested by a school custodian. The molestation occurred on school premises on a Friday afternoon in the custodian's office. The plaintiff, through her mother as guardian ad litem, filed an amended complaint alleging liability of the school district on the basis of respondeat superior. The trial court dismissed the complaint on the basis of failure to state a cause of action.

On appeal the issue was whether a school district may be liable for a sexual assault committed by an employee. The court noted that the case was governed by Gov. Code § 815.2, which provides that a government employer is vicariously liable for the tort of an employee if the employee acted in the scope of his or her employment. However, the general rule for respondeat superior for nongovernmental employers is the same. Thus, in determining whether the custodian acted within the scope of his employment, the court looked to common law under the doctrine of respondeat superior.

A two-part test for determining whether an employee's wrongful act fell within the scope of employment was articulated in Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 520, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 : (1) whether the act performed was either required or incident to the employee's duties; and (2) whether, in any event, the employee's misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by the employer. If an employee's activities falls within the range of actions covered by either part of the test, the employer will be liable for the wrong, even if the employee acted maliciously and intentionally. Further, in assessing whether an employee's wrongful act was required by or incidental to the employee's duties, the law defines occupational duties broadly, and the fact that an employee was not engaged in the ultimate object of his or her employment at the time of his or her wrongful act does not preclude liability on the part of the employer (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 138-139) .

In the case before it, the court concluded that the connection between the employee's duties and the wrongful acts became so attenuated that the law could not hold the employer vicariously liable. Specifically, sexual molestation is in no way related to mopping floors, or any of the other duties of a custodian. Thus, the custodian's acts were not required by or incidental to his work duties. The fact that the custodian used school facilities to commit the offense did not change the result. If an employee pursues the employee's own ends, the use of property or facilities entrusted to the employee by the employer is an inadequate basis for imputing liability to the employer. Nor did the fact that the offense occurred during working hours make the actions incidental to the employment. If a tort is personal in nature to the employee, mere presence at the site of employment and attendance to occupational duties prior to or subsequent to the offense does not give rise to a cause of action against the employer under respondeat superior (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-140) .

With respect to whether the conduct was foreseeable in any event, the court stated that the question should be whether the risk was one that may fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer. The court concluded that it defies notions of fairness to say that rape is characteristic of a school district's activities. The court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that the fact that the legislature anticipated molestation by enacting Education Code §§ 44425 and 45123, which attempt to safeguard the school against those with sexual offense histories, made the conduct foreseeable. Efforts by the legislature to guard against such conduct do not prove that the legislature believed molestation to be characteristic of public school employees. The test is not whether it is foreseeable that one or more employees might at some time act in such a way as to give rise to civil liability, but whether the employee's act is foreseeable in light of the duties the employee was hired to perform. There is no aspect of a janitor's duties that would make sexual assault anything other than highly unusual and very startling. In conclusion, the court stated that the facts, construed most favorably for the plaintiff, admitted no inference other than that in his rape of the plaintiff, the custodian stepped outside of the scope of his employment (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141-144) .

The factual and procedural background of Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 , is discussed in § 100A.23[3][a]. The court stated that liability under respondeat superior attaches only to torts committed by an employee within the scope of his or her employment. One test for determining whether conduct was within the scope of employment is to ask whether it was foreseeable. Foreseeability in this context means that the conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business. The court held that if a tort is committed for the employee's own purposes, or as the result of a personal quarrel, the employer need not be liable even though the employee is engaged in the employer's service at the time. The court found that, as matter of law, the beating was not inflicted within the scope of employment. In the view of the court, it is specious to argue that the employment of a television technician whose duties are to set up telecasts of events creates an inherent risk of the type involved in the case at hand. The employment at no time contemplated contacts with the public, and there is no inherent risk incidental to this type of employment importing foreseeability (114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957-958) .

[c] Conduct Was Foreseeable

Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 , involved an action against a city brought by a woman who was raped by one of the city's on-duty police officers after he stopped her for erratic driving. The plaintiff pleaded with the officer not to take her to jail because she had been drinking. He drove her to her home and told her that he expected payment for taking her home instead of to jail. He raped her, and then left her house and radioed to the police station that he was returning from a lunch break. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff after a jury verdict in her favor and a special jury finding that the officer acted within the scope of his employment. The court of appeal reversed.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded to the court of appeal. The Court first discussed the principles underlying respondeat superior. For the doctrine to apply, the plaintiff must prove that the employee's tortious conduct was committed within the scope of employment. An act will be found to be within the scope of employment when the conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business. In other words, the act will be within the scope of employment if it was foreseeable. Tortious conduct that violates an employee's official duties or disregards an employer's express orders may nonetheless be within the scope of employment, as may acts that do not benefit the employer or that are willful or malicious in nature. Further, respondeat superior applies to both public and private employers (54 Cal. 3d 202, 208-209) .

In its determination of whether the conduct was foreseeable, the Court reviewed the three policy objectives underlying respondeat superior. The first policy objective is imposing liability on the employer may prevent recurrence of the tortious conduct because it creates a strong incentive for the employer to guard against such conduct. In this case, there was little risk that preventive measures would significantly interfere with the ability of police departments to enforce the law and protect society from criminal acts. Thus, the first policy basis for respondeat superior supported the jury's verdict against the city. The second policy objective is togive greater assurance of compensation to the victim. Prior decisions recognized that vicarious liability is an appropriate method to ensure that victims of police misconduct are compensated [City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 778, 782, 109 Cal. Rptr. 365 ; Larson v. City of Oakland (1971) 17 Cal. App. 3d 91, 98, 94 Cal. Rptr. 466 ; Scruggs v. Haynes (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 256, 268, 60 Cal. Rptr. 355 ; Griffith v. City of Monrovia (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 6]]. The third policy consideration, the appropriateness of spreading the risk of loss among the beneficiaries of the enterprise, also supported the jury verdict against the city. Society has granted police officers extraordinary power and authority over citizens, and inherent in this power is the potential for abuse. The cost resulting from such abuse should be borne by the community because of the substantial benefits that the community derives from the lawful exercise of police power (54 Cal. 3d 202, 213-217) .

The Court rejected the city's argument that the rape was so unusual or startling that it could not fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the task of law enforcement. In view of the considerable power and authority that police officers possess, it is neither startling or unexpected that on occasion an officer will misuse that authority by engaging in assaultive conduct. The precise circumstances of the assault need not be anticipated, so long as the risk is one that is reasonably foreseeable. The Court also rejected the city's assertion that the officer was primarily pursuing his own interests, explaining that the case did not fall within one of the few exceptions to liability for instances in which the employee substantially deviated from the employee's duties for personal purposes. The officer was acting in the scope of his employment when he stopped the plaintiff for erratic driving and ordered her to get out of her car to perform a field sobriety test and when he ordered her to get in his car. He was misusing his authority when he drove her home and raped her. Cases relied on by the city involving private security guards were distinguishable because such persons do not act as official representatives of the state and any authority they have is different from and less that that conferred on a law officer. The Court held that if a police officer on duty misuses his official authority by raping a woman whom he has detained, the public entity that employs him can be held vicariously liable, although it is a question of fact for the jury (54 Cal. 3d 202, 217-221) .

Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b].

Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b].

Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][a]. The court stated that under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is vicariously liable for torts committed by his or her employees in the scope of their employment. The rationale underlying respondeat superior is an allocation of risk; that is, losses caused by the torts of employees are certain to occur in the conduct of an employer's business, and such losses are best placed on the business itself, as a cost of doing business. A risk arises out of employment when an employee's conduct is not so unusual that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from the risk among the other costs of the employer's business. Thus, an employer's liability extends beyond the employer's actual or possible control of the employee to include risks inherent in or created by the enterprise (41 Cal. 3d 962, 967-968) .

[d] Sufficient Nexus Between Conduct and Duties of Employment

Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b].

Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][a].

Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b].

Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b].

[e] Duties and Purpose of Employment Broadly Construed

Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

In PCO, Inc. v. Christensen, Miller, Fink, Jacobs, Glaser, Weil & Shapiro, LLP (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 384, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516 , plaintiff corporations, through their receiver, sued a law partner and his firm. Plaintiffs alleged that the attorney, while providing criminal defense services for a client accused of fraudulently soliciting investment loans, sent persons to the client's residence to retrieve several duffel bags filled with money that was obtained by the client illegally, and that the money properly belonged to the receivership. Plaintiffs alleged causes of action for conversion, breach of fiduciary duty, money had and received, and related claims, brought against both the individual attorney and the firm. The trial court granted summary judgment for the firm, concluding that the firm could not be held vicariously liable for the law partner's conduct, but the court of appeal held that triable issues existed and reversed. The court of appeal held that a reasonable jury could conclude that the partner acted within the scope of his authority with the law partnership when he had the money removed from theclient's residence. The partner's conduct was taken in an effort to secure funds to post the client's bail and ensure that the firm's fees were paid. The court concluded that both of these activities were "typical of or broadly incidental" to the practice of law by a white-collar criminal defense attorney and therefore sufficient to hold the firm liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior (150 Cal. App. 4th 384, 390-394) .

[b] Sufficient Nexus Between Conduct and Duties of Employment

In Fowler v. Howell (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 1746, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 484 , a public employee who had been accused of sexual harassment by a coworker brought an action against his accuser for malicious prosecution after most of her accusations were found to be not proven. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings in the malicious prosecution action based on the plaintiff's failure to file a claim under the California Tort Claims Act. The plaintiff appealed, contending that the defendant was not acting within the scope of her employment as a public official when she made her accusations of sexual harassment. The plaintiff relied on Davaris v. Cubaleski (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1583, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 [see Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy Doctrine, § 239.38[3][a]], which held that defamatory statements are notpart of the employment relationship or a risk of employment. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court, noting that the fact that an employee is not engaged in the ultimate object of employment at the time of a wrongful act does not necessarily mean that the employee acted outside the scope of employment. The court held as a matter of law that an employee who has been encouraged to complain and provided a procedure to complain of sexual harassment by a coworker acts within the scope of employment by making such a complaint (42 Cal. App. 4th 1746, 1751) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.27

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.27 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Conduct Violative of Employer Rules or Instructions Still Within Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF THE DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE ACTS, EVEN THOUGH VIOLATIVE OF THE DEFENDANT'S _____ [insert either RULES or INSTRUCTIONS] WERE COMMITTED WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE EMPLOYMENT.

Effect of Employee Violation of Employer's Rules or Instructions. Liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior does not depend on the employee having specific authority from the employer to perform the act that results in injury to a third party; even in the absence of such authority, the employer is liable to the third party if the act was within the scope of the employment. And even if the employee's conduct is contrary to his or her employer's instructions, this alone will not take the conduct outside the scope of employment (Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 968-971, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for the wrongful acts of the defendant's employee committed within the scope of employment even though such acts were contrary to the rules or instructions of the defendant.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is vicariously liable for the wrongful acts of his or her employee committed within the scope of employment even though such acts were contrary to the defendant's rules or instructions--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts indicating that the employee's acts were committed within the scope of the employment [see § 100A.26 for an example of this argument]. Counsel should argue that so long as the conduct was within the scope of employment, the fact that the employee may have acted contrary to the defendant's instructions or that the defendant did not authorize the conduct does not defeat respondeat superior liability [Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 209, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 ; Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 968-969, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For forms relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05[6] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Employee Violation of Employer's Rules or Instructions

The factual and procedural background of Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][c]. In discussing the principles of respondeat superior, the Court explained that tortious conduct that violates an employee's official duties or disregards the employer's express orders may nonetheless be within the scope of employment (54 Cal. 3d 202, 209) . The Court concluded that when an on-duty police officer misuses his official authority to rape a woman whom he detained, the public entity that employs him can be held vicariously liable (54 Cal. 3d 202, 221) .

The factual and procedural background of Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][a]. The defendant had argued that because the employee had violated a company rule against taking passengers, that the employee's conduct benefited only him and not the defendant, and, therefore, that his conduct was outside the scope of employment. The Court rejected this contention, stating that as long as it is clear that at the time of injury the employee was engaged in his work, the fact that he was not authorized to take a passenger is immaterial. Proof of an employer's authorization of the act is not necessary to show that the act is within the scope of employment (41 Cal. 3d 962, 968-969) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.28

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.28 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Special Errand Exception to Going and Coming Rule Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE ACTS, EVEN THOUGH COMMITTED DURING _____ [insert, e.g., THE EMPLOYEE'S COMMUTE or THE EMPLOYEE'S MEAL PERIOD], WERE WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE EMPLOYMENT BECAUSE THE SPECIAL ERRAND EXCEPTION TO THE GOING AND COMING RULE APPLIES.

A. Special Errand Exception. When an employee pursues his or her employer's business during the commute time or a meal period, the going and coming rule does not apply and the employee will be within the scope of employment for the entire period. The "special errand rule" applies both to employees who regularly or only occasionally perform work for their employer during commute or meal periods (Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 209-210, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 ; Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 789, 294 P.2d 733).

[Optional] B. Effect of Partial Abandonment of Employer's Business. Although an employee may be found to be outside the scope of employment if, while on a special errand, the employee completely abandons the employer's business for personal reasons, the employee will still be found to be acting in the scope of employment if such deviation is not substantial and complete. A mere deviation for personal reasons is insufficient, and an employee who is pursuing a business errand and a personal objective simultaneously is still acting within the scope of employment (Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 932, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718 ; O'Connor v. McDonald's Rests. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 30, 269 Cal. Rptr. 101 ; Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-467, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890).

[Optional] C. Out-of-Town Business Travel May Constitute Special Errand. An employee's attendance at an out-of-town business conference authorized and paid for by the employer can be a special errand for the benefit of the employer under the special errand rule, and in such cases, the employee is in the course and scope of employment until the trip is completed (Jeewarat v. Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 427, 436, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for the wrongful acts of his or her employee on the grounds that the special errand exception to the going and coming rule applies. Optional Paragraph B is for use if the defendant contends that the employee abandoned the employer's business while on the special errand. Optional Paragraph C is for use if the special errand takes the form of an out-of-town business trip.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the special errand exception to the going and coming rule applies such that the employee's acts were within the scope of employment, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that although the employee was commuting or was on a meal period when the plaintiff was injured, the employee was attending to the defendant's business at the time. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the plaintiff was injured while the employee was on his or her way home after having performed an errand at the request of the defendant [see Gipson v. Davis Realty (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 209-210, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253] . If the defendant contends that the employee abandoned the errand in pursuit of personal objectives, counsel should discuss facts showing that the deviation was slight and immaterial, such as facts that the employee had made only a brief stop for personal reasons while on the errand but the main purpose of his or her activity remained attending to the defendant's business [see Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-465, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890] . For an example of an argument that the employee's conduct was within the scope of the employment generally, see § 100A.26.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 100A.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For forms relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05[4][a][ii] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Errand Exception

The factual and procedural background of Gipson v. Davis Realty (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][b]. The facts were undisputed that on the morning of the auto accident that injured the plaintiff, the employee left work to obtain a real-estate listing on behalf of the employer. While driving to the property, he decided to go home for lunch. On his way home, his car collided with the ambulance that was carrying the plaintiff. The court explained that an employer is not liable for the acts of his or her employee while the employee is pursuing the employee's own ends. Thus, the general rule is that an employee on his or her way to lunch, even if the employee is driving the employer's vehicle, is not engaged in furthering any end of the employer, and therefore, is not within the scope of employment. However, if an employee is combining his or her own business with that of the employer, or attending to both at substantially the same time, no inquiry will be made as to which business the employee was actually engaged in when the third party was injured, and the employer will be held responsible. The inquiry is not which purpose was dominant. The court stated further that the applicable rule is that one does not cease to be within the scope of employment just because one's pursuit of one's employer's business is subject to necessary, usual, or incidental personal acts, or even because of slight and immaterial delays or deflections from the most direct route for a personal or private purposes, so long as the employer's continues to be the controlling purpose. Such acts are to be reasonably expected, and the employer's assent may be fairly assumed. In this case, there was no evidence to show that the employee was engaged in an act done for his own personal convenience and related to his own personal ends. Instead, initially his sole intent was to attend to the employer's business, but en route he decided to combine his own business with that of his employer (215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 208-213) .

In Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 294 P.2d 733 , the plaintiff was struck by a car driven by the defendant's employee, who was on his way home from a banquet given by the defendant. The trial court denied the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and the defendant appealed on the grounds that it could not be liable under respondeat superior because the employee was not acting within the scope of his employment because he was returning home from the banquet, which was a social affair.

The appeals court discussed the special errand exception to the going and coming rules. If an employee is not simply on his or her way from home to the employee's place of work or vice versa, but is coming home or returning to it on a special errand either as part of the employee's duties or at a specific order or request of the employer, the employee is within the scope of employment from the time the employee starts on the errand until the employee has returned or deviates from it for personal reasons. The court explained that attendance at a social function may come under the special errand exception if the function or attendance was connected with the employment and, for a material part, intended to benefit theemployer who requested or expected the employee to attend (139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 789) . In the case before the court, the evidence established that the banquet was offered to employees who had worked for at least five years for the defendant. Also in attendance were representatives of firms whose products the defendant sold. Employees' families were not invited, and the dinner was paid for by the defendant. At the end of the dinner, pins were presented to the employees. Although there was testimony that the banquet was purely social, this evidence was open to the inference that it was an official company function closely related to the company's sales program and intended to benefit the company by increase in the continuity of employment, and attendance was expected from the employees. Thus, the court concluded that the issue of whether the driver's attendance was within the scope of his employment was correctly left to the jury, and the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was correctly denied (139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 790-791) .

[b] Effect of Partial Abandonment of Employer's Business

In Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718 , the plaintiff was hit by a car driven by the defendant's employee. On the day of the accident, the defendant directed the employee to deliver some mail to the post office on his way home. He drove to the post office, delivered the mail, and then drove back past his employer's business on his way to his parents house when he struck the plaintiff. He testified that he had intended to go to his parents' house for dinner after work, and had he not been directed to go to the post office, he would driven straight to his parents' house, although he would have taken a different route. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the employee was not acting in the scope of his employment once he left the post office and had gone beyond the employer's place of business.

The appeals court affirmed. The court explained that even if the special errand exception to the going and coming rule is applicable, an employee may still have been outside the scope of employment if at the time of the accident the employee had completely abandoned his or her employer's business for personal reasons. To constitute an abandonment, the deviation must be substantial and complete, and if the employee is pursuing a business errand and a personal objective simultaneously, the employee will still be found within the scope of employment. In determining whether abandonment has occurred, a variety of factors should be considered, including the intent of the employee, the nature, time and place of the employee's conduct, the work the employee was hired to do, the incidental acts the employer should reasonably have expected the employee to do, the amount of freedom allowed the employee in performing his or her duties, and the amount of time consumed in the personal activity (192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 931-933) .

In this case, it was conceded that the employee had been sent on a special errand and would have been acting in the scope of his employment during the portion of his journey between the place of employment and the post office, as well as the portion of his journey between the post office and his home, had he gone directly home. But his clear intent to go directly to his parents' home constituted a complete abandonment of his employer's business. Once he delivered the mail and left the post office intending to drive directly to his parents' home, he completed his parents' business and was pursuing a personal objective, regardless of the fact that he would have taken a different route to his parents' house had he gone their directly from work. Thus, the court found that the employee was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident (192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 933-934) .

In O'Connor v. McDonald's Rests. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 269 Cal. Rptr. 101 , several of the defendant's employees had taken part in cleaning up one of the defendant's restaurants to prepare the restaurant for inspection as part of a competition. The employees worked without pay. After the cleanup, they went to the house of one of the employees where they talked shop and socialized for a few hours. As one of the employees left the house to drive home, he was in an auto accident with the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the defendant for negligence based on respondeat superior and the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

The court explained that the special errand exception to the going and coming rule does not apply when the employee completely departs from a special errand for his or her employer. The court listed the various factors that should be considered in determining whether an employee has completely abandoned a business errand for pursuit of a personal objective, including the intent of the employee, the nature, time and place of the employee's conduct, the work the employee was hired to do, the incidental acts the employer should reasonably have expected the employee to do, the amount of freedom allowed the employee in performing his or her duties, and the amount of time consumed in the personal activity (220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 30) . Applying these factors to the case at hand, the court concluded that the employee did not completely abandon his special errand when he stopped at the other employee's house following the cleanup at the restaurant (220 Cal. App. 3d 25, 30-33) .

In Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890 , the defendant's employee finished work and left the premises in one of the defendant's trucks. He planned to stop at a store and then go home. Before reaching the store, he struck the plaintiff's car. The employee took the company truck home on a daily basis so that he could carrytools that he sometimes needed after hours because he was constantly on-call as a troubleshooter for the defendant. After the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, the trial court reduced the verdict on the defendant's motion. The trial court then granted the plaintiff's motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial on the grounds that the jury should have been instructed that the employee was acting in the scope of his employment as a matter of law.

The appeals court affirmed. An exception to the going and coming rule exists if the employee's trip to or from work involves an incidental benefit to the employer, not common to commute trips made by ordinary members of the workforce. Thus, the going and coming rule does not apply if the employer compensates an employee for his or her travel time, or if an employee is required to drive to and from work in order to have his or her vehicles available for company business. In this case, the employer derived a special benefit from the employee's commute, because the commute was made in the company's vehicle so that the employee could use it for after hours repair calls. Thus, the employee was acting in the scope of his employment and the going and coming rule was inapplicable (148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-463) .

An additional issue, however, was whether the employee's decision to stop at a store before going home, especially considering that the store was located in an opposite direction from his home, changed the result. The court stated that the issue turned on foreseeability of the accident. Minor deviations from the employer's business are deemed foreseeable and remain within the scope of employment, and substantial departures from the employer's business are deemed unforeseeable and take the employee outside the scope of employment. Acts necessary to the comfort, convenience, health and welfare of the employee, though strictly personal to the employee and not acts of service, do not take the employee outside the scope of his or her employment if the main purpose of the employee's activity is still the employer's business (148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-465) . The court found that the employee's deviation was minor, because he only intended a brief stop, and it would be unreasonable to conclude that he should have had to drive home, get his own car, and then go back out to the store. The deviation also was foreseeable, because an employee's stopping to purchase a few items on the way home is predictable conduct. The court stated that if the trip home is made for the benefit of the employer, in the employer's vehicle, accidents occurring during such minor and foreseeable deviations become part of the inevitable toll of a lawful enterprise. Finally, the court stated that the fact that the store was located in a direction opposite from the employee's home was irrelevant because an employer's liability should not turn on the point of a compass (148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 465-466) .

[c] Out-of-Town Business Travel May Constitute Special Errand

In Jeewarat v. Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 427, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 837 , plaintiffs were pedestrians who were injured when two vehicles travelling on the road near them collided and one or both of the vehicles struck plaintiffs. Plaintiffs sued both of the drivers and added as a defendant the employer of one of the drivers. At the time of the accident, that driver was returning home from an out of-town business conference authorized and paid for by the employer and was en route from the airport to his residence. Plaintiffs argued that the business trip was a special errand for the employer, and as such, that driver was in the course of his employment until he arrived at his home and the employer was vicariously liable for the driver's negligence under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer, however, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court agreed with plaintiffs that an employee's attendance at an out-of-town business conference authorized and paid for by the employer can be a special errand for the benefit of the employer under the special errand exception to the going-and-coming rule. As such, because the driver intended to return home after leaving the airport, in the absence of any intervening personal deviations, the driver was in the course and scope of employment until the business trip was completed upon his arrival at home (177 Cal. App. 4th 427, 436-437) . The fact that the employee may have coincidentally passed his place of employment, without stopping, on the way home from the airport, and continued on from there by way of his normal commute path, did not change the result that the employee was considered in the course of employment until arriving at his residence (177 Cal. App. 4th 427, 438) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Special Errand Exception

In Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 , the defendant's employee was driving himself and a coworker home from work when his car collided with the plaintiff's car. The employee was receiving per diem travel expenses from the defendant pursuant to a union contract. The court held that the payment of a travel allowance pursuant to a union contract does not alter the general rule that an employee is not acting within the scope of employment during his or her commute to and from work because the employer did not enjoy a substantial benefit from providing the allowance. Further, the employee's informal arrangement to drive his coworker home did not constitute a special errand for the defendant (14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 258-262) .

In Blackman v. Great Am. First Sav. Bank (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 284 Cal. Rptr. 491 , after the plaintiff was injured in an automobile collision with the defendant's employee, he sued the defendant under the theory of respondeat superior. At the time of the accident, the employee was leaving work to go to a university class that she was taking under the defendant's educational assistance program. The court of appeals affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendant. The court found that the going and coming rule precluded liability because there was no significant benefit to the defendant from the employee's attendance at the class. Further, the special errand exception to the going and coming rule was inapplicable because the commute was not at the defendant's order or request (233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 603-605) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.29

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.29 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Special Risk Exception Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF THE DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE ACTS, EVEN THOUGH COMMITTED DURING THE EMPLOYEE'S COMMUTE, WERE WITHIN THE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENTAS ACTS ARISING FROM A SPECIAL RISK CREATED BY THE EMPLOYMENT.

Special Risk Exception. An employer may be liable for an employee's torts that occur while the employee is commuting from work if the employee has endangered others with a risk arising from or related to the employment and if the risk created by the employee was a generally foreseeable consequence of the employee's work activity (Bussard v. Minimed, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 804, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 675).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for an employee's wrongful acts, even though those acts occurred during the employee's commute, on the grounds that the employment created a special risk of danger that led to the injury sustained.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the going-and-coming rule does not apply. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing the special risk created by the employee's work and argue that it was foreseeable that this risk could lead to the type of injury sustained by the plaintiff.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 100A.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Special Risk Exception

In Bussard v. Minimed, Inc. (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 675 , the plaintiff was involved in a car accident caused by an employee of the defendant while the employee was driving home from work. The employee had left work complaining of illness after exposure to pesticide fumes for several hours in the workplace. The employee reported to the police officer on the scene that she was feeling dizzy and lightheaded at the time of the accident because of the pesticide exposure. The plaintiff argued that the defendant was liable for the injuries under the doctrine of respondeat superior, but the trial court granted summary judgment to the defendant under the going-and-coming rule.

The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal recognized that an exception to the going-and-coming rule applies if an employee endangers others due to a risk arising from or related to work, so long as the danger was foreseeable (105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 804-805) . The court concluded that the work site pesticide exposure caused a special risk of danger, it was foreseeable that an employee might not be fit to drive after such exposure, and the occurrence of a car accident under those circumstances was not so startling or unusual as to be unforeseeable. The fact that the defendant had inquired about whether the employee was able to drive safely was not relevant to the imposition of liability under a theory of respondeat superior, because foreseeability of risk arising from or connected to work requires no more than a causal connection between a work-related event and the employee's subsequent injury-causing act (105 Cal. App. 4th 798, 806) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.30

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.30 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Travel Inherent in Employee's Job Duties

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF THE DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE ACTS, EVEN THOUGH COMMITTED DURING THE EMPLOYEE'S COMMUTE, WERE WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE EMPLOYMENT BECAUSE TRAVEL WAS INHERENT IN THE EMPLOYEE'S JOB DUTIES.

Travel Inherent in Job Duties. Because the going and coming rule is primarily intended to apply to employees with a single, fixed work location, whose job duties do not include driving, an employeewhose regular job duties require frequent travel is not subject to automatic application of the going and coming rule (Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 460-461, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for his or her employee's wrongful acts, even though such acts occurred during the employee's commute time, on the grounds that travel was inherent in the employee's job duties.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the going and coming rule does not apply because travel was inherent in the employee's job duties--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that travel was included in the employee's job duties, such as facts that the employee frequently had to do field work or travel between various business locations of the defendant. Counsel should argue that although the plaintiff was injured while the employee was on his or her way to or from work, the defendant derived a special benefit from the commute, and the going and coming rule does not apply if the commute involves an incidental benefit to the employer. For an example of an argument that the employee's conduct was within the scope of the employment generally, see § 100A.26.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.39 may be used to oppose the contention supported by This form.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05[4][a][iii] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Travel Inherent in Employee's Job Duties

The factual and procedural background of Lazar v. Thermal Equip. Corp. (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 195 Cal. Rptr. 890 , is discussed in § 100A.28[3][b]. The court stated that an exception to the going and coming rule exists if the employee's trip to or from work involves an incidental benefit to the employer, not common to commute trips made by ordinary members of the workforce. Thus, the going and coming rule does not apply if the employer compensates an employee for the employee's travel time, or if an employee is required to drive to and from work in order to have the employee's vehicle available for company business. In this case, the employer derived a special benefit from the employee's commute, because the commute was made in the company's vehicle so that the employee could use it for after hours repair calls. Thus, the employee was acting in the scope of his employment and the going and coming rule was inapplicable (148 Cal. App. 3d 458, 462-463) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.31

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.31 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Employer Paid for Employee's Commute Time

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF THE DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE ACTS, EVEN THOUGH COMMITTED DURING THE EMPLOYEE'S COMMUTE, WERE WITHIN THE SCOPEOF THE EMPLOYMENT BECAUSE DEFENDANT PAID FOR THE EMPLOYEE'S COMMUTE TIME.

Effect of Employer Paying for Employee's Commute Time. When an employer makes his or her employee's commute period part of the employee's paid work time, the employee remains within the scope of employment during such periods, and the employer is therefore liable for its employee's torts so long as the employee is using the commute period for its designated purpose (Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 962, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for his or her employee's wrongful acts committed during the employee's commute time, on the grounds that the defendant paid for the employee's commute period.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the going and coming rule does not apply because the defendant paid for the employee's commute period, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth facts indicating that the plaintiff was injured during the employee's commute, and that the defendant had agreed to pay the employee for his or her commute period. For example, counsel could discuss evidence of a union contract or other employment contract containing such a payment provision [see Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 961-962, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988] . For an example of an argument that the employee's conduct was within the scope of the employment generally, see § 100A.26.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05[4][a][iv] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Employer Paying for Employee's Commute Period

In Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988 , the defendant's employee was driving home from work from a job site when he struck the plaintiff. The union contracts under which the employee worked provided for the payment of carfare and travel time, but the defendant had no control over the method or route of transportation used by the employee. The plaintiff appealed from a judgment for the defendant entered after a jury verdict and from an order denying the plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal reversed. Under the going and coming rule, an employee going to and from work is ordinarily considered outside the scope of employment so that the employer is not liable for the employee's torts. The idea behind the rule is that the employment relationship is suspended from the time the employee leaves until the employee returns, or that in commuting the employee is not rendering services to the employer. However, exceptions will be made to the rule if the commute trip involves an incidental benefit to the employer, not common to commute trips made by ordinary members of work force. But there is a substantial benefit to an employer in one area to be permitted to reach out to a broader labor market by providing travel expenses and payment for travel time. This reaching out also increases the risk of injury in transportation, and the employer should be required to pay for this risk. The court concluded that if the employer and employee make travel time part of the work day by their contract, the employer should be treated as the employer during the travel time. And, so long as the employee is using the travel time for the designated purpose of commuting, the doctrine of respondeat superior is applicable (2 Cal. 3d 956, 961-962) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.32

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.32 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee Acted Within Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Does Not Apply--Employer Required Use of Employee Vehicle

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER FOR THE WRONGFUL ACTS OF THE DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE ACTS, EVEN THOUGH COMMITTED DURING THE EMPLOYEE'S COMMUTE, WERE WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THE EMPLOYMENT BECAUSE DEFENDANT REQUIRED EMPLOYEE TO DRIVE HIS/HER VEHICLE TO WORK SO THAT THE VEHICLE WOULD BE AVAILABLE FOR THE EMPLOYER'S BUSINESS DURING THE WORKDAY.

A. Effect of Employer Requiring Employee to Use Employee's Vehicle. When an employer requires an employee to drive his or her own vehicle to work so that the vehicle will be available for the employer's business use during the workday, motor vehicle accidents that occur on the employee's way to or from work are within the scope of employment (Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666).

[Optional] B. Frequency of Use of Vehicle for Employer Business Does Not Defeat Application of Required-Vehicle Exception. If an employer requires or reasonably relies upon the employee to make his or her personal vehicle available for use for the employer's benefit, the fact that the employer only rarely makes use of the employee's personal vehicle should not, in and of itself, defeat application of the required-vehicle exception (Lobo v. Tamco (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 303, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 718).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for injuries to the plaintiff sustained in an automobile accident caused by the defendant's employee during the employee's commute time, on the grounds that the defendant required the employee to drive the vehicle to work.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the going and coming rule does not apply because the defendant required the employee to drive his or her vehicle to work so that the vehicle would be available for the employer's business use during the workday--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employee injured the plaintiff while the employee was commuting to or from work, and that the employee was required to use the employee's own vehicle as an integral part of the job. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the employee was required to use the vehicle during the work day to run errands for the defendant [see Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666] . Counsel should argue that the going and coming rule is inapplicable to take the employee's conduct outside the scope of employment because the employee's trip to or from the office, as applicable, involved a benefit to the defendant not common to commute trips made by employees who are not required to use their vehicles on the job. For an example of an argument that the employee's conduct was within the scope of the employment generally, see § 100A.26.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.36 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05[4][a][v] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect of Employer Requiring Employee to Use Employee's Vehicle

In Huntsinger v. Glass Containers Corp. (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 99 Cal. Rptr. 666 , the defendant's employee was required to drive extensively in carrying out his employment duties, which included many field trips. He drove his own truck, and the defendant reimbursed for mileage except when driving to and from work. On his way home from the office, he struck and killed a motorcycle driver. Earlier that day, the employee had used his truck to drive from the company office to a plant, but had returned to the office before going home. The survivors and administratix of the estate of the motorcycle driver sued the defendant for wrongful death on the theory of respondeat superior. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for nonsuit, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The appeals court reversed. The court discussed Smith v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 814, 816-820, 73 Cal. Rptr. 253, 447 P.2d 365 , in which it was held that in the workers' compensation field, when the employer requires an employee to furnish a vehicle on the job, the going and coming rule is inapplicable, at least if there is no evidence that at the time of the accident the employee was not driving directly to or from work. The court found that Smith was applicable despite the fact that it was a workers' compensation case because the philosophies underlying the application of the going and coming rule and its exceptions in tort law are substantially similar to those underlying workers' compensation law. In any event, the court also found Richards v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. (1941) 19 Cal. 2d 236, 241-244, 120 P.2d 650 , a tort case, to be instructive. In Richards, the employee was an insurance salesman whose duties included both office and field work and who was not required to report to the office before commencing work if he had field work in the morning. He was not compensated for using his car. On the morning of the accident, he was on his way directly to work from home, and the court found that the trier of fact could find that he was within the scope of his employment. The circumstances of Richards have come to constitute a recognized exception to the going and coming rule. Further, the court in Harris v. Oro-Dam Constructors (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 911, 916-917, 75 Cal. Rptr. 544 , observed that the going and coming rule has particular application to vehicle accidents of employees whose jobs do not require driving. The court of appeal observed that the facts in the case before it were substantially similar to the facts of Richards, and that under Richards, it was immaterial that on the specific occasion of the accident the employee in this case was going directly home from the office and not making a customer call (22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 807-810) .

The court also found that, pursuant to Hinman v. Westinghouse Elec. Co. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 956, 962, 88 Cal. Rptr. 188, 471 P.2d 988 [see § 100A.31[3][a]], the employee's trip from the office to his home during which the accident occurred did involve an incidental benefit to the defendant not common to commute trips made by ordinary members of the work force. When an employer requires an employee to drive to and from work in order to have the employee's vehicle available for company business during the day, accidents on the way to or from the office are statistically certain to occur, and the business enterprise should bear the risk (22 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810) .

[b] Frequency of Use of Vehicle for Employer Business Does Not Defeat Application of Required-Vehicle Exception

In Lobo v. Tamco (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 718 , plaintiffs were the surviving family member of a police officer who was killed when the employee of defendant, a steel beam manufacturer, drove his vehicle out of defendant's parking lot into traffic and struck decedent's motorcycle. In trying to establish the defendant's vicarious liability, plaintiffs argued that while the employee was driving his own vehicle and was on his way home at the time of the accident, the employee was nonetheless in the course and scope of his employment at the time. The trial court disagreed and granted summary judgment in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a jury could find under the facts that defendant's employee was acting in the course and scope of employment at the time of the accident pursuant to the required-vehicle exception to the coming-and-going rule. The court noted evidence establishing that the employee, a quality control manager who was required at times to visit customer construction sites to deal with customer complaints, sometimes used his personal vehicle to make such trips, although he usually rode with another employee. Nonetheless, the employee estimated that he had used his personal vehicle for such travel up to ten times during his 16-year employment, his employer required him to have his personal vehicle available if the need to visit a costumer site arose, and he was reimbursed for his mileage when his personal vehicle was used. The court concluded that if an employer requires or reasonably relies upon an employee to make his or her personal vehicle available for use for the employer's benefit, the fact that the employer only rarely makes use of the employee's personal vehicle should not, in and of itself, defeat application of the required-vehicle exception (182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 303) . The court also noted that the fact that the personal vehicle was needed only rarely when the employee performed his work duties was one of the reasons that the employer required the employee to use his own car and a company car was not provided (182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 303) . In holding that the infrequent use of the vehicle did not defeat application of the required-vehicle exception, the court rejected a contrary suggestion made in dicta in Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1481-1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114 , which had suggested that the required-vehicle exception to the coming-and-going rule applies only if the employer requires the use of a vehicle as an integral part of performing the job at disparate locations throughout the course of work hours (182 Cal. App. 4th 297, 303) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect of Employer Requiring Employee to Use Employee's Vehicle

In Singh v. Board of Ret. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 220 , the issue of the application of the "going-and-coming" rule arose in the context of an employee's application for a work-connected disability. The plaintiff was employed by the county as a health department inspector. His job required him to perform inspections at a variety of locations, and he used his private truck in the conduct of this business. The truck was equipped with a county radio and a county-supplied toolbox. As a regular part of the plaintiff's duties, he was required to proceed directly from his home to a work site. The plaintiff was injured in a morning traffic accident, while on his way to his office. The local Board of Retirement denied the plaintiff's application for disability on the basis that the accident was not in the course of employment. The plaintiff sought review in superior court, which overturned the denial of disability retirement benefits. The court of appeal reviewed the case law on the going and coming rule, stating that generally an employee does not pursue the course of his or her employment when the employee is on the way to or from work, but that an exception arises if the use of the car gives some incidental benefit to the employer (41 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1186-1187) . The court emphasized that the key inquiry in the exception to the coming and going rule is whether there is an incidental benefit derived by the employer. The court concluded that the trial court correctly applied the law in finding that the plaintiff's injury arose out of the course of his employment (41 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1188) . The court thus affirmed the judgment granting benefits to the plaintiff.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.33

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.33 Supporting Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Liability Based on Employee's Intentional Tort

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF MAY RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT EMPLOYER FOR THE WRONGFUL INTENTIONAL TORT OF THE DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE EMPLOYEE'S CONDUCT AROSE OUT OF _____ [insert either DUTIES OF THE EMPLOYEE WHICH INCLUDED THE USE OF FORCE or A WORK-RELATED DISPUTE or THE MISUSE OF AUTHORITY INHERENT IN THE EMPLOYEE'S POSITION].

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A. Employer Liability for Employee's Intentional Torts. Generally, an employer will be held vicariously liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the intentional torts of his or her employee committed within the scope of employment (Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 654, 171 P.2d 5).

[Optional] B. Job Duties Involve Use of Force. If the employee's job duties involve the possibility of force being used against others, the employer may be held vicariously liable for the employee's wrongful or excessive use of force in carrying out his or her duties (Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 624, 337 P.2d 861 ; Haworth v. Elliott (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 77, 81, 153 P.2d 804).

[Optional] C. Conduct Arose Out of Work-Related Dispute. An employer may be held vicariously liable for his or her employee's intentional tort if the tort arose out of a dispute that was work-related (Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 657, 171 P.2d 5 ; Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 621-624, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143).

[Optional] D. Employer Liability for Employee's Fraud and Misrepresentation. Vicarious liability based on the doctrine of respondeat superior extends to the torts of fraud and misrepresentation committed by employees within the scope of their employment, even if the employee acts in excess of authority or contrary to the employer's instructions (Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 375-376, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for the intentional torts of the defendant's employee, on the grounds that those torts arose out of duties of the employee that included the use of force, a work-related dispute, or the misuse of authority inherent in the employee's position. Depending on the facts of the particular case, counsel should insert either Optional Paragraph B, C, or D.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is vicariously liable for the intentional torts of the defendant's employee--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the employee's misconduct that injured the plaintiff and should discuss evidence either that the conduct arose out of job duties that included the use of force (for example, that the assault was connected with the employee's duties as a bartender/bouncer [see Haworth v. Elliott (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 77, 81-83, 153 P.2d 804]), out of a work-related dispute [Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 619-624, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143] , or from the employee's misuse of authority inherent in the employee's job position [Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 375-376, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449] . If the plaintiff contends that the injury was inflicted out of personal malice, counsel should set forth facts indicating that the employee's conduct was engendered by and connected to the employment and did not arise out of a personal matter [Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 657, 171 P.2d 5 ; Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 623-624, 337 P.2d 861] . For an example of an argument that the employee's conduct was within the scope of the employment generally, see § 100A.26.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.38 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.06 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Employer Liability for Employee's Intentional Torts

In Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 171 P.2d 5 , one of the defendant's employees got into an argument with the plaintiff, a subcontractor's employee, over how to perform a certain construction task. He threw a hammer at the plaintiff, seriously injuring him. The plaintiff appealed from a directed verdict in favor of the defendant.

The court of appeal stated that an employer is liable for willful and malicious torts of his or her employee committed in the scope of employment. Further, if the injury resulted from a dispute arising out of the employment, it is not necessary that the assault further the interests of the employer. In this case, the defendant's enterprise required that its employee associate with third parties, which carried the risk that a third party might be injured. The fact that the employee did no further work immediately after the incident was irrelevant because he threw the hammer while still engaged in his work and as an immediate outgrowth of the work. The court also stated that if an employee inflicts an injury out of personal malice, not engendered by employment, the employer is not liable, but such facts were not present in the case before it (28 Cal. 2d 652, 654-657) .

[b] Job Duties Involve Use of Force

In Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 337 P.2d 861 , the plaintiff sued for injuries he sustained when the defendant's bartender hit him in the jaw. The incident occurred as the bartender grabbed a woman, his common-law wife, and began to eject her from the bar. The plaintiff commented that it was an awful way to treat a woman, and the bartender swung around and hit the plaintiff, stating that he was running the bar and would do it to suit himself. The bartender's wife testified that prior the incident, her husband had told her that she should go home because she had enough to drink, and that the matter was personal between herself and her husband. The jury returned a verdict in the defendant's favor, and the plaintiff appealed.

The appeals court affirmed. An employer is liable for the intentional torts of his or her employee committed in the scope of employment, but if an employee inflicts an injury out of personal malice not engendered by the employment, the employer will not be vicariously liable. In this case, an inference could be drawn that the bartender's ejection of his wife was a personal matter and not connected with the maintenance of order in the bar, and the attack on the plaintiff arose out of this incident. Thus, the question was properly left to the jury since the assault may not have been within the scope of employment (169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 623-624) .

Further, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the trial court erred in instructing the jury. The jury was told clearly that if the assault by the bartender was done as part of a transaction of the defendant's business, then the verdict should be in favor of the plaintiff. The jury also was told that if the defendant through negligence employed someone whom the defendant should have known was likely to commit an assault on persons entering the bar, they should render a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. Thus, the jury must have concluded that the assault was a personal altercation between the plaintiff and the bartender not in the course of the bartender's employment, and that the defendant did not negligently employ the bartender (169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 627-628) .

In Haworth v. Elliott (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 77, 153 P.2d 804 , the plaintiff was in a bar operated by the defendant when he became involved in an argument with another bar patron. Two bartenders employed by the defendant injured the plaintiff while ejecting him from the bar. The defendant appealed from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

The appeals court affirmed. The court stated that the assault was committed within the scope of the bartender's employment. The defendanthad testified that the bartenders were in charge of the bar at the time of the incident, and that they were authorized to maintain order, quell disturbances, and protect the property; if necessary, they had the authority to eject anyone creating a disturbance. The court noted that it was immaterial whether the assault occurred in the bar or on the sidewalk, because they were acting within the course of their duty to eject someone whom they believed was creating a disturbance. In order to establish the liability of the employer, it is sufficient to prove that excessive force was applied and that the employee was acting in the scope of employment. The court explained that liability of the employer in this case was established by the fact that the assault grew immediately out of the performance of duties owed to the defendant. Further, excessive force was used by the bartenders because they could have removed the plaintiff from the bar without injuring him (67 Cal. App. 2d 77, 81-83) .

[c] Conduct Arose Out of Work-Related Dispute

Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 171 P.2d 5 , is discussed in § 100A.33[3][a].

In Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143 , at the site of a construction project, two employees of a subcontractor got into a fight with and assaulted two employees of a general contractor when one of the general contractor's employees refused to give the subcontractor's employee a lift on a vehicle he was driving. The subcontractor's employees were off duty at the time of the assault and had just had three or four beers in a trailer provided by the subcontractor so that employees could shower and change clothes. The jury returned a general verdict finding the subcontractor and its employees liable.

The appeals court affirmed. Under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is liable for the torts of his or her employees committed within the scope of their employment. The rationale is that the employer's liability should extend beyond the employer's actual or possible control to include risks inherent in the enterprise because the employer is best able to spread the risk. The court explained that one way to determine whether a risk is inherent in or created by an enterprise is to ask whether the actual occurrence was a foreseeable consequence of the activity. Foreseeability means that in the context of the particular enterprise, an employee's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business. In other words, the inquiry should be whether the risk was one that could fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer (50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 617-619) .

The court rejected the subcontractor's contention that respondeat superior liability was not established because the assault occurred after its employees had finished work and the assault was the result of personal malice unrelated to work. First, the court found that the subcontractor customarily allowed employees to remain on the premises long after their work shift had ended, and that when the subcontractor needed additional employees for later shifts, it frequently contacted employees who had stuck around. Under workers' compensation law, employees can be held to be acting within the scope of employment even though they are off duty. For example, in McCarty v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 677, 681-683, 117 Cal. Rptr. 65, 527 P.2d 617 , the Supreme Court held that if social or recreational pursuits on the employer's premises after hours are endorsed by the permission of the employer and are of some conceivable benefit to the employer or, even in the absence of a benefit, the activities have become a customary incident of the employment relationship, an employee engaged in such activities after hours will be considered to be acting within the scope of employment. In this case, it was not unusual for the subcontractor's employees to be on the job site after hours, their presence was conceivably of some benefit to the subcontractor, and the subcontractor had given express or implied permission for them to remain. The court also concluded that the evidence did not establish, as a matter of law, that the assault was the result of personal malice unconnected with the employment relationship. Respondeat superior liability includes liability for intentional torts, and if the tort is motivated by personal malice not engendered by the employment, the employer is not vicariously liable. The court found substantial evidence that the assault was work related, because the jury could permissibly infer that the employee of the subcontractor only asked for a ride because he believed his status as the subcontractor's employee carried with it the fringe benefit of free rides on the general contractor's equipment. Finally, the incident was one that might normally be expected to occur during the course of a major construction job (50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 619-624) .

[d] Employer Liability for Employee's Fraud and Misrepresentation

In Garton v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449 , the plaintiffs were purchasers of real property who sued a title insurer under respondeat superior for misrepresentations of their real estate salesperson, an agent of the title insurer. The plaintiffs appealed from an order sustaining a demurrer to the plaintiffs' complaint without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that the doctrine of respondeat superior imposes liability on an innocent principal or employer for the torts of his or her agent or employee committed within the scope of employment, regardless of whether the agent or employee acted in excess of his or her authority or contrary to his or her instructions. Further, a principal can be liable for the fraud and misrepresentation of an agent oremployee. The court rejected the title insurer's argument that the causes of action for respondeat superior were insufficient because no agency relationship existed between it and the salesperson. The court held that the respondeat superior causes of action were not precluded merely because the salesperson was employed by a real estate firm. The fact that the salesperson was employed by a real estate firm and her status as the plaintiffs' salesperson did not preclude the possibility that, for the particular transaction at issue, the salesperson also acted as an agent or employee of the title insurer (106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 375-376) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Employer Liability For Employee's Fraud and Misrepresentation

In Inter Mountain Mortgage, Inc. v. Sulimen (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 1434 , the plaintiff was a mortgage loan brokerage company that processed a fraudulent loan submitted by a licensed real estate agent employed by the defendant. The alleged fraud arose by virtue of the fact that the loan application stated a property purchase price of $800,000, although the true value of the property was $480,000. After settling a claim brought against it by the company that funded the loan, the plaintiff brought suit against the defendant for fraud, negligence, and equitable indemnity. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the fraud cause of action, concluding that the fraudulent party was not acting as an agent for the defendant at the time of the transaction. The court of appeal reversed. The court stated the applicable rule that an employer is vicariously liable for the torts of its employees committed within the scope of employment, even if the torts are intentional, are not authorized by the employer, and provide no benefit to the employer (78 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1440) . Therefore, the defendant could be vicariously liable for the real estate agent's fraud if the fraud was perpetrated within the scope of his employment with the defendant. The court then held that there was an abundance of evidence creating at least a triable issue of fact as to whether the real estate agent was acting within the scope of employment when submitting the fraudulent loan transaction to the mortgage loan broker. The real estate agent's licensing information showed that he was employed by the defendant on the dates of the alleged fraudulent transaction, that he represented to the plaintiff's representative that he was a representative and real estate agent of the defendant, and that he submitted a property appraisal originally made for the defendant (78 Cal. App. 4th 1434, 1441-1442) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.34

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.34 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Tortfeasor Not an Employee

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE AN EMPLOYER/EMPLOYEE RELATIONSHIP DID NOT EXIST BETWEEN THE DEFENDANT AND THE TORTFEASOR.

A. Doctrine of Respondeat Superior. The doctrine of respondeat superior provides that an employer or principal is vicariously liable for the wrongful conduct of his or her employees or agents committed within the scope of the employment or agency (Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 967, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676).

B. Employer/Employee Relationship. An employee is one who is subject to his or her employer's right of control with respect to any act, labor, or work to be done in the course and scope of the employment (Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205 30 Cal. Rptr. 253).

C. Effect of Lack of Control. The control must encompass both the means and manner of performance of the work. If control pertains only to the result of the work and not to the means by which it is accomplished, the relationship is one of independent contractor rather than employee and vicarious liability under the doctrine of respondeat superior will not attach (Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 431, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807).

[Optional] D. Workers' Compensation Precedent Not Controlling. Standards under workers' compensation cases for determining employment status are not controlling in determining the tortfeasor's employment status in a third-party claim lodged against the tortfeasor's alleged employer (Fleming v. Foothill-Montrose Ledger (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 681, 688-689, 139 Cal. Rptr. 579).

E. Balance of Factors Supports Finding of Independent Contractor Rather Than Employee Relationship. There are a number of factors other than the right of control that can be taken intoaccount in determining whether the tortfeasor is an employee or an independent contractor. When the balance of the factors support that the relationship is one of independent contractor, liability will not attach under the doctrine of respondeat superior (Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 431, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807).

[Optional] F. Student Trainee Not Employee. A student trainee, on a scholarship from a Saudi Arabian airlines training program to study aircraft maintenance and English in the United States, was not an employee of the airline at the time he caused a motor vehicle accident; therefore, the airline was not vicariously liable under the theory of respondeat superior (Randolph v. Budget Rent-A-Car (9th Cir. 1996) 97 F.3d 319, 326) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior, based on the argument that the tortfeasor was not an employee of the defendant. Optional Paragraph D should be used if the plaintiff asserts that workers' compensation case precedent supports a finding of an employment relationship. In an appropriate case, This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 100A.25.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not vicariously liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior because the tortfeasor was not an employee of the defendant--for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that an employment relationship did not exist between the defendant and the tortfeasor. In particular, counsel should set forth facts indicating that the defendant lacked the right to control and direct the work activities of the tortfeasor--for example, that the defendant did not instruct the tortfeasor how to do the job but only dictated the required result of the work. Counsel also should discuss other evidence that the tortfeasor was not an employee, such as facts showing that the tortfeasor's work was not of the type normally performed under the direction of an employer; the work required special skills; the tortfeasor supplied his or her own tools and place of work; the tortfeasor worked for the defendant only briefly or intermittently; the tortfeasor was paid by the job and not hourly; the work was not part of the defendant's regular business; the tortfeasor and the defendant operated on the understanding that the tortfeasor was an independent contractor; and the defendant did not have the right to discharge the tortfeasor at will [see Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 431-433, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807 ; Briggs v. Lawrence (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 605, 615-618, 281 Cal. Rptr. 578 (discussed in § 100A.25)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.04 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Doctrine of Respondeat Superior

Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106, 719 P.2d 676 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][a]. The court of appeal stated that under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is vicariously liable for torts committed by his or her employees in the scope of their employment. The rationale underlying respondeat superior is an allocation of risk; that is, losses caused by the torts of employees are certain to occur in the conduct of an employer's business, and such losses are best placed on the business itself, as a cost of doing business. A risk arises out of employment when an employee's conduct is not so unusual that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from the risk among the other costs of the employer's business. Thus, an employer's liabilityextends beyond the employer's actual or possible control of the employee to include risks inherent in or created by the enterprise (41 Cal. 3d 962, 967-968) .

[b] Employer/Employee Relationship

The factual and procedural background of Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 30 Cal. Rptr. 253 , is discussed in § 100A.25[3][b]. The court stated that an "employee" is one who is subject to the absolute control and direction of his or her employer in regard to any act, labor, or work to be done in the course and scope of the employment. And while an individual can be both an employee and an agent, the two terms are not synonymous. The distinguishing factor of an employment relationship is that the employee is entirely under the control and direction of the employer, which presupposes the right to direct the method and mode of the work. The distinguishing features of an agency relationship, on the other hand, is its representative character and its derivative authority (215 Cal. App. 2d 190, 205) .

[c] Effect of Lack of Control

In Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807 , the plaintiff, who was injured in an automobile collision, sued the other driver, the express company for whom the driver was delivering parcels, and the larger express corporation that had contracted with the company for work done by the driver. The trial court granted summary judgment for both the corporation and the company.

With respect to whether the company was liable under respondeat superior, the court of appeal affirmed, stating the general rule that the hirer of an independent contractor is not liable to third parties for the contractor's negligence. Whether a person is an employee or an independent contractor is a question of fact, except that when only one inference may be drawn from all the facts, it becomes a matter of law. The most significant factor in determining the existence of an employer/independent contract relationship is the right control the manner and means by which the work is to be done. If control can only be exercised as to the result of the work, rather than as to the means by which the work is accomplished, an independent contractor relationship, and not an employee relationship, is established (227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 430-431) .

In the case before it, the court reviewed the facts to determine whether the driver was an employee or an independent contractor. The company paid the driver to deliver packages to customers, and they operated on the understanding that the driver was an independent contractor. Further, the driver used his own car for deliveries, furnished his own gas, oil, insurance, and car repairs. He was paid a lump sum based on the distance traveled to deliver packages, rather than on an hourly basis, he would be called if there were packages to deliver, or he would stop by to see if anything was available, and he did not receive any employee benefits or tax withholdings. He submitted invoices at his convenience and was compensated on the invoices he submitted at any given time. The company did not instruct him how to make deliveries or how to drive his car, other than to tell him to be careful, to give him directions to a particular location, or to tell him to deliver packages in the order received. He was required to return a signed confirmation of delivery to the company, and the company gave him a guide and list of prices so that he could answer customer questions (227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 431) .

The court of appeal found that the facts that the company instructed him to be careful or required him to return signed confirmation of delivery forms did not indicate that the company exercised the type of control over the driver so as to make him an employee. Further, none of the other facts raised a triable issue as to whether the driver was anything but an independent contractor compensated on a piecemeal basis. In a footnote, the court discussed that the power to terminate employment at any time is a strong indication of an employer/employee relationship. In this case, however, the significance of this factor was minimal because although the driver had an ongoing relationship with the company, each time he picked up packages operated as a new contract; the company could choose not to continue the relationship, but that choice would be more of a determination not to hire than a determination to fire. The court also found that the fact that the company exercised some control over the driver did not subject the company to respondeat superior liability, because even one who is interested primarily in the result of the work is still permitted to retain some interest in how the work is done without subjecting himself or herself to the liabilities imposed by law on an employer (227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 431-433) .

[d] Workers' Compensation Precedent Not Controlling

Fleming v. Foothill-Montrose Ledger (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 681, 139 Cal. Rptr. 579 , the plaintiff sued a newspaper company when she was struck by the automobile driven by the father of a newspaper boy. At the time of the accident, the father was driving his son for purposes of making newspaper deliveries. The trial court granted the newspaper's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the boy was an independent contractor as a matter of law.

The appeals court affirmed. In discussing the plaintiff's argument that the boy was an employee under the definition of employee in Lab. Code § 3352(b), the court said that such definition was intended for purposes of workers' compensation law. According to the court, the broad application of workers' compensation laws cannot be used to define and expandthe scope of liability to a third person for the acts of another, because even though the two fields of law overlap, in each context the determination of whether there is an employment relationship has to depend on the purpose for which the determination is being made. Further, for purposes of unemployment insurance the definition of employee would exclude the possibility that the boy was an employee. The court stated that the plaintiff would not likely contend that the workers' compensation definition should apply but the unemployment insurance definition should not. The court concluded that neither definition should apply because they were not designed for the situation in this case (71 Cal. App. 3d 681, 688-689) .

[e] Balance of Factors Supports Finding of Independent Contractor Rather Than Employee Relationship

Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807 , is discussed in § 100A.34[3][c].

[f] Student Trainee Not Employee

In Randolph v. Budget Rent-A-Car (9th Cir. 1996) 97 F.3d 319 , the plaintiffs sued a foreign student trainee and the airline that provided the student's training. The trainee held a scholarship from a Saudi Arabian airlines training program to study English and aircraft maintenance in the United States. The plaintiff sustained damages when the trainee negligently crashed his rental car into the plaintiff's motorcycle. The airlines, a corporation owned by the Saudi Arabian government, removed the action to federal district court and asserted the Foreign Sovereign Immunities Act as a defense. The district court granted the plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, ruling as a matter of law that the trainee was an airline employee acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. After a bench trial on damages, the district court entered judgment against the airlines and the airlines appealed.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed, holding that under California law, the trainee was not an airline employee at the time of the accident. In so holding the court found the following facts compelling: at the time of the accident the trainee had lived in the United States for over two and one-half years taking classes to develop the general skills needed to work in aircraft maintenance; the airlines paid his tuition, provided a living allowance as well as money for books, clothing, tools, medical and dental insurance; the trainee received bonuses and penalties based on his academic performance; before he could even be considered for future employment with the airlines, the trainee had to return to Saudi Arabia and successfully complete additional training; the initiation of the trainee's relationship with the airlines did not displace work from existing airline employees, nor did his activities in the United States aid the airlines in its daily operations or confer an immediate benefit on the airlines; and there was no evidence that the airlines had guaranteed to hire him after his training or that the trainee was obligated to accept such a job offer if tendered. The court first considered each of these facts and determined that the trainee was not engaged "to do something for the benefit of" the airlines, within the meaning of Lab. Code § 2750, but rather was learning for his own benefit. The court then acknowledged decisions holding that student trainees were not employees under the Fair Labor Standards Act. Finally, the court acknowledged the control exercised by the scholarship sponsor over the trainee (termination of the scholarship if the student's grades fell below a designated level) and concluded that the imposition of scholarship conditions was far from the direction and supervision necessary to hold scholarship sponsors vicariously liable for the torts of their beneficiaries (97 F.3d 319, 326) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.35

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.35 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee's Conduct Was Outside Scope of Employment--Conduct Was Outside Duties of Employment

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR BECAUSE THE TORTIOUS ACT BY DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE WAS COMMITTED OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT IN THAT THE ACT WAS NEITHER REQUIRED BY NOR INCIDENTAL TO THE EMPLOYEE'S DUTIES, NOR WAS THE RISK INVOLVED ONE THAT MAY FAIRLY BE REGARDED AS TYPICAL OF OR BROADLY INCIDENTAL TO THE EMPLOYER'S ENTERPRISE.

A. Scope of Employment. An employer is not liable under respondeat superior for the torts of an employee unless the employee was acting within the scope of employment. At a minimum, this means that liability may not be imposed unless there is a nexus between the employment and the tortious act (Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287).

B. Test for Determining Whether Act Within Scope of Employment. An act is not within the scope of employment unless eitherthe act was either required or incidental to an employee's duties, regardless of whether the conduct could be reasonably foreseen by the employer, or the risk involved was one that may fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer (Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 298, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510 ; Maria D. v. Westec Residential Sec., Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146-149, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 ; Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 721-722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287).

[Optional] C. Employee's Actions Were Neither Required Nor Incident to Duties. Respondeat superior liability demands a nexus between the employee's tort and the employment to ensure that liability is properly placed on the employer (Bailey v. Filco, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1552, 1560, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for the torts of its employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior, on the grounds that the tortious act was not committed in the scope of employment. In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points in § 100A.26.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior because the tortious act was not committed within the scope of employment--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that there was no connection between the employment and the tortious act, including evidence that the act was not required by or incidental to the employee's job duties or evidence that the employee's act did not involve a risk that was typical of or incidental to the defendant's business. For example, in a case involving sexual molestation, counsel could argue, if appropriate, that such misconduct was personal to the employee, that the employee was not motivated by a purpose to serve the defendant, and that the act was not foreseeable in light of the employee's job duties [Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128] . If the plaintiff contends that the act was within the scope of employment because it occurred on the defendant's premises or during working hours, counsel should argue that if an act is personal to the employee, mere presence at the employment site and performance of job duties before or after the act does not give rise to respondeat superior liability [Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-140, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

The factual and procedural background of Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b]. On appeal the issue was whether a school district may be liable for a sexual assault committed by an employee. The two-part test for determining whether an employee's wrongful act fell within the scope of employment is: (1) whether the act performed was either required or incident to the employee's duties; and (2) whether, in any event, the employee's misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by the employer. If an employee's activities falls within the range of actions covered by either part of the test, the employer will be liable for the wrong, even if the employee acted maliciously and intentionally. Further, in assessing whether an employee's wrongful act was required by or incidental to the employee's duties, the law defines occupational duties broadly, and the fact that an employee was not engaged in the ultimate object of his or heremployment at the time of the employee's wrongful act does not preclude liability on the part of the employer (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 138-139) .

In the case before it, the court concluded that the connection between the employee's duties and the wrongful acts became so attenuated that the law could not hold the employer vicariously liable. Specifically, sexual molestation is in no way related to mopping floors, or any of the other duties of a custodian. Thus, the custodian's acts were not required by or incidental to his work duties. The fact that the custodian used school facilities to commit the offense did not change the result. Where an employee pursues the employee's own ends, the use of property or facilities entrusted to the employee by the employer is an inadequate basis for imputing liability to the employer. Nor did the fact that the offense occurred during working hours make the actions incidental to the employment. If a tort is personal in nature to the employee, mere presence at the site of employment and attendance to occupational duties prior to or subsequent to the offense does not give rise to a cause of action against the employer under respondeat superior (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-140) .

With respect to whether the conduct was foreseeable in any event, the court stated that the question should be whether the risk was one that may fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer. The court concluded that it defies notions of fairness to say that rape is characteristic of a school district's activities. The court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that the fact that the legislature anticipated molestation by enacting Education Code §§ 44425 and 45123, which attempt to safeguard the school against those with sexual offense histories, made the conduct foreseeable. Efforts by the legislature to guard against such conduct do not prove that the Legislature believed molestation to be characteristic of public school employees. The test is not whether it is foreseeable that one or more employees might at some time act in such a way as to give rise to civil liability, but whether the employee's act is foreseeable in light of the duties the employee was hired to perform. There is no aspect of a janitor's duties that would make sexual assault anything other than highly unusual and very startling. In conclusion, the court stated that the facts, construed most favorably for the plaintiff, admitted no inference other than that in his rape of the plaintiff, the custodian stepped outside of the scope of his employment (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 141-144) .

[b] Test for Determining Whether Act Within Scope of Employment

In Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510 , the plaintiff sued a hospital under the doctrine of respondeat superior after she was sexually assaulted by a technician under the pretense of conducting an ultrasound imaging examination on her. The trial court granted a motion by the hospital for summary judgment. The court of appeal reversed on the respondeat superior issue, and the Supreme Court granted review.

The court stated the established rule that an employee's willful, malicious and even criminal torts may fall within the scope of his or her employment for purposes of respondeat superior, even though the employer has not authorized the employee to commit crimes or intentional torts. The requirement for respondeat superior liability in this situation is for the tort to be engendered by or arise from the work. This is more than a form of "but for" causation, meaning that the incident leading to the injury must be an outgrowth or the employment or be inherent in the working environment (12 Cal. 4th 291, 298) . The court thus stated that a sexual tort will not be considered engendered by the employment unless its motivating emotions were fairly attributable to work-related events or conditions, and concluded that the technician's decision to exploit the plaintiff did not arise out of the performance of the examination (12 Cal. 4th 291, 301) . The plaintiff argued that the technician's misconduct was generally foreseeable given the physically intimate nature of the work he was employed to perform. However, the court held that a job involving physical contact is not, by itself, a sufficient basis on which to impose vicarious liability for a sexual assault (12 Cal. 4th 291, 302) . The court thus reversed the court of appeal judgment on the issue of respondeat superior, and remanded the matter to the court of appeal to consider whether the summary judgment was supportable on other grounds.

In Maria D. v. Westec Residential Sec., Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 , the plaintiff sued a private security service. The complaint sought, among other things, to impose vicarious liability on the defendant based on the plaintiff's rape by an on-duty security guard employed by the defendant. According to the plaintiff, the security guard had detained the plaintiff on a public highway (not on any property of a client of the defendant) by shining a light from his patrol car into her vehicle; he then took her to another location, where he raped her. At the time, the guard was on duty, was wearing a uniform, was driving the defendant's patrol car equipped with a spotlight, and had a gun and handcuffs on his belt. The plaintiff testified that she thought the guard was a police officer. Evidence in the case included the defendant's patrol manual, which severely limits its guards' authority to stop or detain persons in public areas and specifically stated that guards were not authorized to make traffic stops. The manual also required guards to do nothing to imply that they are police officers. The evidence in the case also established that it was against the defendant's policy for a security guard to follow a vehicle for any reason or to use a spotlight on a moving vehicle.

The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendant on the causes of action alleging vicarious liability, holding as a matter of law that the security guard's actions had been outside the scope of his employment when he detained and raped the plaintiff. The court of appealaffirmed, holding that the security guard had completely violated the defendant's policies and substantially deviated from his employment duties in coming into contact with the plaintiff and in performing the alleged misconduct. The court therefore found that the misconduct was not foreseeable from the nature of his duties for purposes of respondeat superior liability (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146-147) . In this connection, the court found it significant that (1) the security guard was not acting as an official representative of a public entity, and (2) the guard's actual power and authority were significantly less in degree and kind than those of a police officer. Because the guard in this case was not actually authorized to stop or detain the plaintiff, the court reasoned that the guard's misconduct was not fairly attributable to any aspect of the defendant's operations. The court thus distinguished this case from a situation in which vicarious liability may be imposed on a public entity that employs a police officer who misuses official authority by raping a detainee [see Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 208-211, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 (discussed in § 100A.26[3][c])] (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146-149) . Finally, the court of appeal noted that it was not dealing with a situation in which a securities service provider had no policies, or had policies that did not address the manner in which an employee would come into contact with a sexual assault victim; in such a case, different respondeat superior considerations might be presented (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 150) .

The factual and procedural background of Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b]. The court explained that the determination of whether a tort was committed within the scope of employment turns on whether either the act performed was required or incident to the employee's duties, or on whether the misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by the employer in any event. Examining the evidence in the case before it, the court found that the acts of molestation were not within the scope of employment. The employee was not employed to molest young boys, and there was no evidence that the acts occurred during Sunday school or during a visitation period. Further, the acts were not actuated by a purpose to serve the church, but rather were self-serving acts unrelated to church activities. Thus, the acts were neither required, incidental to his duties, nor foreseeable (197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722) .

The factual and procedural background of Golden W. Broadcasters, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 171 Cal. Rptr. 95 , is discussed in § 100A.23[3][a]. The court stated that liability under respondeat superior attaches only to torts committed by an employee within the scope of his or her employment. One test for determining whether conduct was within the scope of employment is to ask whether it was foreseeable. Foreseeability in this context means that the conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business. The court held that if a tort is committed for the employee's own purposes, or as the result of a personal quarrel, the employer need not be liable even though the employee is engaged in his or her employer's service at the time. The court found that, as matter of law, the beating was not inflicted within the scope of employment. In the view of the court, it is specious to argue that the employment of a television technician whose duties are to set up telecasts of events creates an inherent risk of the type involved in the case at hand. The employment at no time contemplated contacts with the public, and there is no inherent risk incidental to this type of employment importing foreseeability (114 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957-958) .

Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , is discussed in § 100A.35[3][a].

[c] Employee's Actions Were Neither Required Nor Incident to Duties

In Bailey v. Filco, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 1552, 56 Cal. Rptr. 2d 333 , the plaintiff brought an action under the theory of respondeat superior after he was injured in an automobile accident caused by the defendant's employee. At the time of the accident, the employee was on a paid break and was driving to obtain some cookies to eat back at work. A jury found that the employee was not engaged within the scope of her employment at the time of the accident, and the court entered judgment in favor of the defendant.

The court of appeal reviewed the law regarding respondeat superior, and noted that in Perez v. Van Groningen & Sons, Inc. (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 962, 227 Cal. Rptr. 106 , the California Supreme Court adopted a foreseeability-based explanation of respondeat superior, holding that the test for vicarious liability is whether the risk is one that was typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer. Building from this foreseeability premise, some courts have employed a two-prong test, asking if the employee's action is (1) either required or incident to the employee's duties, or (2) could be reasonably foreseen by the employer in any event. The plaintiff contended that the first prong of this test does not require a nexus between the employee's tort and the employee's duties, so long as the employee engages in an act of comfort and convenience while on a paid break. However, this argument would make respondeat superior liability synonymous with strict liability (48 Cal. App. 4th 1552, 1561) . Noting that the defendant did not instruct the employee to use her car to run errands for the defendant or to buy cookies, and that the employee did not receive money from the defendant for the cookies she bought, the court concluded that the employee was not in an act of comfort and convenience that had a nexus to her employment (48 Cal. App. 4th 1552, 1565) .Since the employee was outside of her employment at the time of the accident, the court affirmed the judgment for the defendant.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Scope of Employment

In Miller v. American Greetings Corp. (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 74 Cal. Rptr. 3d 776 , plaintiff was standing next to her car on the side of the road when she was struck by a vehicle owned and driven by defendant's employee. Plaintiff alleged that the driver, who regularly used his own vehicle and cell phone to conduct business for his employer, was within the course and scope of employment at the time of the accident because cell phone records showed that the employee on that day had made a one-minute work-related call at 9:26 a.m. However, 9-1-1 records and the police report indicated that the accident occurred at 9:35 a.m. Moreover, the driver's uncontradicted testimony was that he was on his way to see an attorney for personal reasons at the time of the accident and was distracted when he looked down to find the attorney's address. Recognizing that under the appropriate circumstances an employee may be in the course and scope of employment while making a business call on his or her cell phone while driving his or her personal vehicle, the court of appeal held as a matter of law that this employee was not in the course and scope of employment at the time of the accident. According to the court, the mere fact that the employee had made a brief work-related phone call from the vehicle approximately eight minutes earlier while driving on what was otherwise a personal trip was an insufficient basis upon which to impose respondeat superior liability on the employer (161 Cal. App. 4th 1055, 1062-1063) .

[b] Test for Determining Whether Act Within Scope of Employment

In Hoblitzell v. City of Ione (2003) 110 Cal. App. 4th 675, 2 Cal. Rptr. 3d 8 , the plaintiff was a construction contractor who brought suit against a city, based on the conduct of two city employees that took place at a construction site outside the city's jurisdictional limits. The plaintiff alleged that one of the city's building inspectors, as well as an off-duty city police officer posing as a building inspector, came to the plaintiff's construction site with a disgruntled former employee of the plaintiff and harassed the plaintiff, telling him that the construction site should be shut down because it did not have the necessary permits and generally disparaging the quality of the construction. As a result, work at the site was halted for three days before county inspectors came to assure the property owner that no permits were required. The trial court granted the city's motion for summary judgment, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the city was not liable on a theory of respondeat superior because the building inspector and the off-duty police officer were not acting within the scope of employment at the time of the incident. The court noted that an employer is not liable for an employee's malicious or tortious conduct if the employee substantially deviates from his or her employment duties for personal reasons. The two city employees had gone to the site in an unmarked car, wearing civilian clothing, and the plaintiff knew that the site was outside the city's jurisdiction. Although the two employees identified themselves as building inspectors, they never said that they were there on official city business. Moreover, their motivation was personal and unrelated to their employment with the city. Under those facts, the court held that the conduct of the two city employees could not be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the city's business, and as such, the city was not liable under a theory of respondeat superior (110 Cal. App. 4th 675, 680-684) .

In Doe 1 v. City of Murrieta (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 213 , the plaintiffs were two minor females who were participants in a program sponsored by a city police department and designed to encourage teenagers to consider careers in law enforcement. While on patrol with a police officer as part of this program, the plaintiffs engaged in consensual sexual activities with the officer. The plaintiffs then brought suit based on sexual abuse against the city and the police department, alleging causes of action based on vicarious liability, breach of contract, and negligent supervision. After the trial court granted demurrers and summary judgment in favor of the defendants on all causes of action, the court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. As to the cause of action alleging that the city and the police department were vicariously liable for the officer's conduct, however, the court of appeal agreed with the trial court that there was no vicarious liability under the facts. The court concluded that because the officer was engaged in supervising and training the plaintiffs when the sexual conduct occurred, making the relationship akin to that of supervisor and employee, because the officer did not exert police authority over the plaintiffs to coerce them to take part in the sexual conduct, and because the infatuated plaintiffs actually pursued the officer, the conduct could not be deemed to be within the course of the officer's employment, and the defendants were not vicariously liable (102 Cal. App. 4th 899, 906-910) .

In John Y. v. Chaparral Treatment Ctr., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 565, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 , the plaintiff was an 11-year-old boy who was sexually molested by a counselor while a resident at a group residential facility for seriously emotionally disturbed children. The counselor who assaulted the plaintiff was employed to aid in teaching academic and behavioral skills, although he had no training in psychology or prior experience working with disturbed children. His basic duties included ensuring that residents such as the plaintiff got dressed, maintained proper hygiene, did their homework, ate properly, took their medications, followed the rules, and acted properly, as well as working as a teacher's aide at the affiliated school. At trial, during which the facility was found liable for its own negligence and for violations of certain regulatory duties, the court refused to instruct the jury on the issue of the employer's vicarious liability for the counselor's acts. The court of appeal affirmed this ruling. The court of appeal noted that an employer is not liable for an assault or other intentional tort that does not have a causal nexus to the employee's work. Liability requires that the incident leading to the injury must be an outgrowth of the employment--that is, the risk of injury must be inherent in the working environment or typical of or broadly incidental to the employer's enterprise. Although sexual assaults are not per se beyond the scope of employment, such conduct is not considered to be engendered by the employment unless its motivating emotions were fairly attributable to work-related events or conditions (101 Cal. App. 4th 565, 575) . The court concluded that theauthority conferred on the residential counselor, and the abuse of that authority to indulge in personal sexual wrongdoing, was too attenuated to permit a trier of fact to view the sexual assaults as being within the risks properly allocated to the employer (101 Cal. App. 4th 565, 576) .

In Saks v. Charity Mission Baptist Church (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 45 , the plaintiff was a doctor who had engaged in a series of business transactions with a developer and a church pastor. In the course of those transactions, the plaintiff had loaned $810,000 to purchase property in the church's name, with the understanding that the pastor or the church would repay the amount. Use of the church's name to purchase the property was necessary to obtain a public loan or grant, the proceeds from which would be used to repay the plaintiff. The plaintiff knew when he made the payments that use of the church's name was only necessary to obtain the public funds, and that after the funds were obtained, title to the property would be transferred to a partnership owned by the plaintiff, the developer, and possibly the pastor. Eventually, the public funding did not materialize, the transactions fell apart, and the plaintiff did not recover the money he had paid. The plaintiff sued, seeking in part to hold the church liable for the notes signed by the pastor on theories of breach of contract and fraud. After a jury verdict for the plaintiff, the court of appeal reversed. On the fraud cause of action, the court noted that to apply the respondeat superior doctrine to hold an employer liable for an employee's torts, the tort must foreseeably arise from the employee's duties for the employer. The plaintiff knew that the pastor was using the church's name only to secure public funding for the project, after which title for the purchased property would be transferred to the private partnership. With this knowledge, and in the absence of evidence that the church regularly engaged in real estate development transactions, the plaintiff had to know that the pastor's actions did not arise from the pastor's normal duties on behalf of the church and could not be deemed to be foreseeable by the church (90 Cal. App. 4th 1116, 1139) .

In Maria D. v. Westec Residential Sec., Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 , the plaintiff was allegedly raped by a privately employed, on-duty, uniformed, and armed security guard after the guard pulled the plaintiff over while she was driving down the highway. The plaintiff sued the security guard's employer on the theory that the employer was vicariously liable for the guard's sexual assault. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer on the vicarious liability claims, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal concluded that, although the assault may not have occurred but for the employment, the guard's decision to assault the victim was strictly personal and did not arise out of the guard's duties with the employer (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146-147) . The court of appeal also concluded that for purposes of potential respondeat superior liability, the guard's misconduct was not foreseeable from the nature of the guard's duties. Unlike a public law enforcement officer, the privately employed security guard was not vested with considerable authority and control over citizens, nor was he authorized to pull over the plaintiff, conduct field sobriety tests as he did on the plaintiff, or order her into his vehicle as he did. Therefore, the sexual assault could not fairly be attributed to any peculiar aspect of the employer's business operations (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 147) .

[c] Employee's Actions Were Neither Required Nor Incident to Duties

In M.P. v. City of Sacramento (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 121, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 812 , a photographer was sexually assaulted by two firefighters employed by the city of Sacramento while the parties were attending a costume ball. The firefighters, one of whom was on duty at the time, had invited plaintiff to photograph them on their fire truck, and the assault occurred when she was inside the truck taking pictures with them. Plaintiff sued the city for the sexual assault committed by the firefighters. The trial court entered judgment for the city on summary adjudication, finding in part that the sexual assault was not within the scope of the firefighters' employment. The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the relevant case law on holding public entity employers liable for sexual assaults committed by employees, including the California Supreme Court's holding in Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 , that a public entity could be liable for a sexual assault committed by an on-duty police officer against a woman that he had detained while on duty. Questioning whether the Mary M. holding would still receive the support of a majority of the Supreme Court, the court of appeal rejected an attempt to extend that holding to a sexual assault committed by firefighters, even if the firefighters were on duty at the time of the assault. The court noted that the firefighters had no coercive authority over the victim and did not purport to detain the victim in the course of any investigation or even while performing any official duties, the assault was motivated for strictly personal reasons, and the harm was not a risk that may fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the operations of a firefighter (177 Cal. App. 4th 121, 130-133) .

In Baptist v. Robinson (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 151, 49 Cal. Rptr. 3d 153 , plaintiffs brought suit against a winery and its employee for injuries one plaintiff sustained when his motorcycle collided with a bin the winery used to haul crushed grapes. The bin fell out of the back of the winery employee's pickup truck onto the highway while the employee was traveling to pick up grapes from a vineyard in another town. Significantly, the employee intended to use the grapes to make wine for his own personal use. The employee was not on duty when the accident occurred, and no one at the winery had authorized or permitted the employee to use the bin for his own personal winemaking. When previously informed that the employee was using winery facilities to produce and store small amounts of his own wine, the employer's principals told the employee's supervisor to tell the employee not to do so, although the supervisor had failed to convey this instruction to the employee. Concluding that the employee's conduct did not fall within the course of his employment, the court of appeal upheld summary judgment for the winery. The court stressed that no one at the winery had prior knowledge that the employee was planning to or had taken a bin to transport grapes for his own personal use. In addition, the employee had chosen the wrong type of bin to transport the grapes, as the bin he took was designed only to transport crushed grapes on winery premises (143 Cal. App. 4th 151, 164) . The court also rejected the argument that the employee's conduct provided a benefit to his employer because the employee's personal winemaking enhanced his winemaking skills and made him a better employee. The court concluded that this type of incidental benefit to an employer was not the type of tangible benefit that could support the imposition of vicarious liability (143 Cal. App. 4th 151, 164-166) .

In K. G. v. County of Riverside (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 762 , the plaintiff, a minor, brought an action against a county for sexual assaults she suffered over the span of several years at the hands of her stepfather, who was employed as a deputy sheriff for the county at the time of the assaults. The plaintiff alleged that the county was vicariously liable for the assaults because her stepfather controlled and intimidated her in part by threatening to use his authority as an officer against her if she reported the assaults. The court of appeal held that this was an insufficient nexus between the assaults and the stepfather's employment to hold the county vicariously liable. Instead, the assaults took place within the course of the stepfather's personal, family life and were not, as a matter of law, related in any way to law enforcement, despite the fact that some of the assaults may have occurred while the stepfather was on duty or in his patrol car (106 Cal. App. 4th 1374, 1382-1383) .

In Tognazzini v. San Luis Coastal Unified Sch. Dist. (2001) 86 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , the plaintiff was injured in a motorcycle accident and brought suit against the school district that employed the driver of the car that hit him. The plaintiff argued that the school district was vicariously liable because the employee was returning from being fingerprinted, a requirement of employment, when the accident occurred. At trial, the jury by special verdict decided that the employee was not acting in the scope of employment at the time of the accident, and the court of appeal held that sufficient evidence supported the jury verdict. The fingerprinting wasrequired by the state, not the school district, although the district had informed the employee that she needed to comply with the state mandate. However, the employee had the discretion to decide when, where, and how to fulfill the requirement, and the employee performed the task on her day off at a location chosen by the employee. The employee was not required to drive as part of her duties with the school, and no other job-related activities were involved. Therefore, the relationship between employment by the district and the accident was too attenuated to require the employer to bear responsibility for the injury (86 Cal. App. 4th 1053, 1059-1060) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.36

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.36 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee's Conduct Outside Scope of Employment--Going and Coming Rule Applies

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT UNDER THE DOCTRINE OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY A TORT COMMITTED BY DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE GOING AND COMING RULE APPLIES TO TAKE THE EMPLOYEE'S CONDUCT OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF HIS OR HER EMPLOYMENT.

A. Going and Coming Rule. The going and coming rule is applied to determine whether torts committed while an employee is commuting or traveling constitute conduct within the scope of employment. Under the rule, an employee is outside the scope of employment while commuting to and from work or while traveling to or from a meal period. Thus, an employer will generally not be liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for torts committed while an employee is doing such commuting or traveling (Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 703, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 ; Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 722-723, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755 ; Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1482, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114).

[Optional] B. Effect of Abandonment of Employer's Business. Even if the special errand exception to the going and coming rule is found to be applicable, the employee will still be found to be acting outside the scope of employment if the employee completely abandoned the employer's business for personal reasons (Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 932, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718).

[Optional] C. Attendance at Social Event Not Within Scope of Employment. When an employee is involved in tortious activity while going to, attending, or commuting home from a social event, the activity will not be within the scope of employment if the social event is not related to the employment or did not provide an intended direct or indirect benefit to the employer (Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 494, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184).

[Optional] D. Payment of Travel Expenses Does Not Defeat Going and Coming Rule. An employer's payment of an employee's commute travel expenses is insufficient to impose vicarious liability under respondeat superior law (Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534).

[Optional] E. "Commercial Traveler Rule" Inapplicable to Respondeat Superior Cases. The "commercial traveler rule," under which a workers' compensation claimant can be acting in the course and scope of employment during the entire period of travel on an employer's business, does not apply in a respondeat superior case (Sunderland v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautical Sys. Support Co. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1, 10-12, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 665).

[Optional] F. "Premises Line" Rule Inapplicable to Respondeat Superior Cases. The "premises line rule," under which a workers' compensation claimant may be acting in the course and scope of employment when entering the employer's premises even if the claimant has not yet begun work, does not apply in a respondeat superior case (Hartline v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 458, 469-470, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 713).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior, on the grounds that the going and coming rule applies to take the employee's conduct outside the scope of employment. Optional Paragraph B is for use if the plaintiff contends the special errand exception to the going and coming rule applies. Optional Paragraph C should be used if the tortious act occurred while the employee was attending a social event. Optional Paragraph D should be used if the plaintiff contends that the going and coming rule does not apply because the employer paid the employee's travel expenses. Optional Paragraph E should be used if the plaintiff contends that the coming and going rule does not apply because the employee was away from home on a business trip at the time of the tort. Optional Paragraph F should be used if the plaintiff contends that the coming and going rule does not apply because the employee had entered or was about to enter onto the employer's premises at the time of the tort.

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 100A.26, 100A.28.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not liable under the doctrine of respondeat superior for the tortious act of his or her employee because the going and coming rule applies to take the act outside the scope of employment--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that at the time the plaintiff was injured by the defendant's employee, the employee was commuting to or from work or was on a meal period. Counsel also should demonstrate that the employee was not on a business errand for the defendant at the time of the accident or, if appropriate, counsel should set forth facts indicating that the employee had abandoned the errand for personal reasons by the time of the accident [see Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 933-934, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718] . If the accident occurred while the employee was going to or returning from a business social function, counsel should discuss evidence that the function was not connected with the employment or that the employee's attendance was not intended to directly or indirectly benefit the defendant, such as facts indicating that the social function was for the enjoyment of employees and that attendance was entirely voluntary [see Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 493-496, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, §§ 30.05[4][a], 30.05[4][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Going and Coming Rule

Munyon v. Ole's, Inc. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 186 Cal. Rptr. 424 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][a]. The appeals court stated that under the doctrine of respondeat superior, an employer is liable for the torts of his or her employees committed within the scope of employment, but the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish that the act was within the scope of employment. The court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that the going and coming rule did not apply because going to pick up her paycheck was a risk that was created by the defendant's enterprise and was foreseeable. The court cited Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 618-619, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143 [see § 100A.33[3][c]], for the proposition that the employer's liability should extend beyond actual or possible control over employees to include risks inherent in or created by the enterprise because the employer is better able than the injured party to spread the risk through prices, rates, or liability insurance. One way to determine whether a risk should be borne by the enterprise is to ask whether the actual occurrence was a foreseeable consequence of the activity. Foreseeability as a test for respondeat superior means that in the context of the enterprise, an employee's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business. The court stated that, in the case before it, there was no inherent risk to the employment that would have made the accident foreseeable. The employee was a cashier who was not required to use her car for work and there was no evidence that the defendant had any knowledge that the employee would use her car to go to the store on her day off to get her paycheck. Further, there was nothing unusual in having a fixed pay day and having a short time lag between the pay day and the last day worked, and thus, the plaintiff's argument that the defendant created the risk by holding on the money was too attenuated. The court stated that if the employee had been working on the day of the accident and had picked up her paycheck during the day, there is no question that the going and coming rule would bar any claim against the defendant for torts committed by the employee while driving her car from home to work. The fact that she voluntarily chose to come into work on her day off should not produce different result (136 Cal. App. 3d 697, 705-706) .

Ducey v. Argo Sales Co. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 707, 159 Cal. Rptr. 835, 602 P.2d 755 , involved an action for personal injuries sustained by the plaintiffs when their car collided with a vehicle driven by the defendant's employee. The employee was employed to clean the defendant's model homes at various locations, and she regularly drove up to 45 miles from her home to the model homes several days a week. The accident occurred when she was returning home after performing her job. The jury returned a verdict absolving the defendant of liability, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Under the going and coming rule, an employee is not considered to be acting within the scope of employment while going to or coming from the employee's place of work. Courts have recognized several exceptions to the rule, including if the employer compensates the employee for travel time or if the employee was engaged in a special errand for the employer. But neither of these circumstances were present in this case. In addition, the going and coming rule is inapplicable if the employer requires an employee to furnish his or her own vehicle on the job. Again, however, this exception was inapplicable in this case. The job was not one that embraced driving and the employee was not required to use her vehicle for work. Although she occasionally did errands for the employer, these errands were not shown to be a condition of her employment, and she was not engaged in such an errand at the time of the accident. Further, while she transported cleaning materials in her car, the evidence did not establish that she was required to do so, especially in light of the fact that the defendant provided ample storage space at each model home tract where such equipment could have been stored. Thus, the jury could have found that taking equipment home was for the employee's own personal benefit and merely incidental to her employment (25 Cal. 3d 707, 721-723) .

In Tryer v. Ojai Valley Sch. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 114 , survivors of a man killed in an automobile accident sued the driver of the truck that struck his automobile and the driver's employer, a school. The driver had been employed to feed the school's horses at two different locations each day. When the accident occurred she had been on her way to her afternoon shift after eating lunch at home. The trial court granted the school's motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the driver was not within the course and scope of her employment at the time of the accident.

The court of appeal found that the case turned on application of the lunch break rule, which states that an employee, while taking time away from work for meals, is not in the service of his or her employer and that the employer therefore is not responsible for the negligence of the employee during such periods of absence from work. The court rejected the plaintiffs' contention that the driver was not on a lunch break when the accident occurred. The driver left her first shift for the school at nine in the morning on the day of the accident, and went to ride her own horse and eat lunch off campus at a ranch. The accident occurred when she was returning to the school for her afternoon shift (9 Cal. App. 4th 1476, 1482-1483) .

[b] Effect of Abandonment of Employer's Business

The factual and procedural background of Felix v. Asai (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 237 Cal. Rptr. 718 , is discussed in § 100A.28[3][b]. The court explained that even if the special errand exception to the going and coming rule is applicable, the employee may still be found to have been outside the scope of employment if at the time of the accident the employee had completely abandoned his or her employer's business for personal reasons. To constitute an abandonment, the deviation must be substantial and complete, and if the employee is pursuing a business errand and a personal objective simultaneously, the employee will still be found within the scope of employment. In determining whether abandonment has occurred, a variety of factors should be considered, including the intent of the employee, the nature, time and place of the employee's conduct, the work the employee was hired to do, the incidental acts the employer should reasonably have expected the employee to do, the amount of freedom allowed the employee in performing his or her duties, and the amount of time consumed in the personal activity (192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 931-933) .

In this case, it was conceded that the employee had been sent on a special errand and would have been acting in the scope of his employment during the portion of his journey between the place of employment and the post office, as well as the portion of his journey between the post office and his home, had he gone directly home. But his clear intent to go directly to his parents' home constituted a complete abandonment of his employer's business. Once he delivered the mail and left the post office intending to drive directly to his parents' home, he completed his parents' business and was pursuing a personal objective, regardless of the fact that he would have taken a different route to his parents' house had he gone their directly from work. Thus, the court found that the employee was not acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident (192 Cal. App. 3d 926, 933-934) .

[c] Attendance at Social Event Not Within Scope of Employment

In Robbins v. Hewlett-Packard Corp. (1972) 26 Ca. App. 3d 489, 103 Cal. Rptr. 184 , involved an automobile accident that occurred when an employee was on his way home from a company picnic. The company sponsored a yearly summer picnic for employees and their families. All levels of employees were invited, but they were not required to check in or out of the picnic grounds. No seminars were conducted at the picnic, and no speeches or honorary awards were bestowed. Employees were asked to volunteer to work at the picnic, but received no compensation for the work. No one was compelled to attend the picnic, and attendance or volunteering to help at the picnic was not considered in an employee's evaluation. The picnic was held on a Saturday, which was not a regular work day, and employees provided and paid for their own transportation to and from the picnic. The plaintiffs contended that the employee was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The trial court entered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Generally, an employee is not acting within the scope of his or her employment when traveling between home and work. However, if an employee is traveling from his or her home or returning to it as part of the employee's usual duties or at the specific request or order of his or her employer, the employee is considered to be on a special errand for the employer and acting within the scope of employment. Attendance at a social function will not come under the special errand rule unless the function or attendance at it was connected with the employment and for a material part intended to benefit the employer who requested or expected the employee to attend [Boynton v. McKales (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 777, 789, 294 P.2d 733 (discussed in § 100A.28[3][a])]. In this case, the court found that the employee was not on a special errand at the time of the accident. The picnic was primarily for the enjoyment of employees and only incidentally benefited the employer by contributing to morale. Although the employee had volunteered to work at the picnic for one hour, he still was not obligated to attend the picnic. Further, the employee attended the picnic to have a good time, there were no speeches, awards, or seminars, whether or not an employee attended or volunteered was not considered in evaluations, a volunteer could withdraw at any time, the company did not provide transportation or travel expenses, nor did it prescribe which route to take to get to the picnic, and the company did not have control over when an employee arrived at or left the picnic (26 Cal. App. 3d 489, 493-496) .

[d] Payment of Travel Expenses Does Not Defeat Going and Coming Rule

In Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 , the plaintiff was injured in an automobile accident. The driver of the other car was going home from work at the time of the accident and was receiving per diem travel expenses from his employer pursuant to a union contract. The plaintiff sued the employer under the doctrine of respondeat superior, and the trial court granted the employer's motion for summary judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that the employee was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident because he was receiving travel expenses. The going and coming rules has several exceptions, and generally an exception will be found when the employer derives some incidental benefit from the employee's trip, such as when the employer pays for the employee's travel time. While acknowledging that workers' compensation decisions had recognized an exception to the going and coming rule if an employer defrayed its employee's commute expenses [see Zenith Nat'l Ins. Co. v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 944, 948-949, 59 Cal. Rptr. 622, 428 P.2d 606] , the court stated that under respondeat superior law, this exception has been rejected [Caldwell v. A.R.B., Inc. (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 1028, 222 Cal. Rptr. 494 ; Harris v. Oro-Dam Constructors (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 911, 75 Cal. Rptr. 544] . Workers' compensation decisions can be helpful in determining whether an employer should be vicariously liable, but they are not controlling precedent (14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 258-259) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's assertion that the employee was engaged in a special errand for the employer because he was driving a coworker home at the time of the accident. Although the employer allegedly encouraged carpooling, the court stated that there is a considerable difference between encouraging socially beneficial conduct and requiring certain activities as part of one's job (14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 262) . Finally, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the travel expense was also intended to compensate the employee for his commute time. The employee was paid an hourly wage for an eight-hour shift, and there was no evidence that he was paid for travel time (14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 262-263) .

[e] "Commercial Traveler Rule" Inapplicable to Respondeat Superior Cases

In Sunderland v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautical Sys. Support Co. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 665 , the plaintiff's car was struck while she was waiting in the drive-through line at a fast food restaurant. The plaintiff sued the driver of the other car, as well as his employer, arguing that the other driver was acting within the scope of his employment at the time of the accident. The other driver was a field service representative for an airplane manufacturer and was only in that particular city because he had been assigned there temporarily by his employer. However, he had stopped working for the day about eight hours earlier. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer on the grounds that the accident did not occur within the scope of employment. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court rejected the plaintiff's argument that the "commercial traveler rule," under which a workers' compensation claimant can be acting in the course and scope of employment during the entire period of travel on an employer's business, should be applied to this respondeat superior case. The court reiterated the established rule that in the respondeat superior context, the determining factor in ascertaining whether an employee's act is within the scope of employment is whether the risk of the activity is typical of or broadly incidental to the employer's enterprise. However, the test for determining whether an employee was acting in the course and scope of employment for workers' compensation purposes is different and is broadly construed to effectuate the statutory goal of providing workers' compensation to injured employees (130 Cal. App. 4th 1, 9-10) . Because the commercial traveler rule results from the liberal construction given to the workers' compensation laws, the court ofappeal refused to apply it in the context of a respondeat superior action to impose vicarious liability on an employer. Applying the normal rule applicable in respondeat superior cases, the court concluded that the activity of getting dinner at a restaurant was purely personal in nature and did not create a risk typical of or broadly incidental to the employee's employment. The fact that the employee was paid per diem while in the city, and that he was technically on call 24 hours a day, did not change the result (130 Cal. App. 4th 1, 11-12) .

[f] "Premises Line" Rule Inapplicable to Respondeat Superior Cases

In Hartline v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 458, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 713 , the plaintiff and his dog were struck by an automobile driven by a physical therapist employed by a hospital. The accident occurred while the driver was turning off the street and into her employer's parking lot on her way to work. In addition to suing the driver for negligence, the plaintiff sued the employer for premises liability and for negligence on a vicarious liability theory. Although the plaintiff argued that there was a triable issue of fact concerning whether the driver was acting in the scope of her employment at the time of the accident, the trial court granted summary adjudication in favor of the employer on the vicarious liability claim. The remaining claim against the employer was eventually dismissed, and the plaintiff appealed the trial court's adjudication of the vicarious liability claim.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting the plaintiff's contention that the "premises line" rule as developed in workers' compensation cases could be applied in the respondeat superior context. The court noted that under the premises line rule as applied in workers' compensation cases, the employment relationship begins when the employee enters the employer's premises, and injuries sustained in close proximity to the employer's premises may arise out of the employment if sustained in a parking lot used by employees or on public property immediately adjacent to the workplace (132 Cal. App. 4th 458, 467) . In rejecting application of the rule to respondeat superior cases, the court concluded that absent application of existing exceptions to the "coming and going rule," it would be an arbitrary expansion of employer liability to impose vicarious liability for events that happen to occur in public areas on or near an employer's premises if those events were neither typical of nor broadly incidental to the employer's particular enterprise. The court concluded that the risks associated with an employee's commute to and from work are not generally inherent in, typical of, or created by the employee's work, and certainly not typical of this employee's work as a physical therapist. Therefore, it would be inappropriate to hold the employer liable just because the employee was in a car accident as she was turning into the employer's parking lot (132 Cal. App. 4th 458, 469-470) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Going and Coming Rule

In Depew v. Crocodile Enters., Inc. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 480, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 673 , the plaintiffs were the heirs of a driver who was killed when the defendant's employee fell asleep at the wheel while driving home from work. They brought an action against the employer based on respondeat superior. At the time of the accident, the employee had one hour earlier completed a six-hour evening shift, although on the prior day the employee had worked a double shift. The employee had sixteen hours off work in between the double shift and the six-hour shift. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for the employer based on the going-and-coming rule. The plaintiffs argued that the "special risk" exception to the going-and-coming rule justified holding the employer liable. That exception, which originated as an exception to the going-and-coming rule in the workers' compensation context, would hold an employer liable for injuries caused from a special risk related to the employment, if the employee would not have been at the scene of the injury but for the employment and the risk is distinctive in nature or quantitatively greater than risks common to the general public. The court noted that the exception had never specifically been held to apply to the doctrine of respondeat superior, but that even assuming it could apply, there was an insufficient nexus between the injury and the employment under the facts of the case. The court concluded that the employee's work schedule, with the sixteen hours off in between the double shift and the six-hour shift, was not the type of excessive work load that would justify holding the employer liable (63 Cal. App. 4th 480, 487-490) .

The factual and procedural background of Anderson v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 254, 259, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 534 , is discussed in § 100A.36[3][d]. The court found that the fact that the driver of the car that injured the plaintiff was driving a coworker home did not invoke the special errand exception to the going and coming rule. Even though the employer encouraged carpooling, the court held that there is a considerable difference between encouraging socially beneficial conduct and requiring certain activities as part of one's job.

In Blackman v. Great Am. First Sav. Bank (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 284 Cal. Rptr. 491 , after the plaintiff was injured in an automobile collision with the defendant's employee, he sued the defendant under the theory of respondeat superior. At the time of the accident, the employee was leaving work to go to a university class that she was taking under the defendant's educational assistance program. The court of appeals affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment in favor of the defendant. The court found that the going and coming rule precluded liability because there was no significant benefit to the defendant from the employee'sattendance at the class. Further, the special errand exception to the going and coming rule was inapplicable because the commute was not at the defendant's order or request (233 Cal. App. 3d 598, 603-605) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.37

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.37 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Employee's Wrongful Conduct Based on Doctrine of Respondeat Superior--Employee's Tortious Conduct Outside Scope of Employment--Employee Pursuing Purely Personal Objective Although On-Duty

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY THE TORTIOUS ACT OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE EVEN THOUGH THE EMPLOYEE WAS ON DUTY AT THE TIME OF THE ACT, THE EMPLOYEE IN COMMITTING THE ACT WAS PURSUING PURELY PERSONAL OBJECTIVES.

Pursuit of Purely Personal Objectives While on Duty Takes Conduct Outside Scope of Employment. An on-duty employee who is pursuing purely personal objectives in the commission of a tort that did not have a causal nexus to the employee's work will generally be found to have departed from the scope of employment (Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 297-298, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P.2d 358 ; Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 721, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 140, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; see Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 992, 1006, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for the tortious acts of his or her employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior, based on the argument that even though the employee was on duty, the employee was pursuing purely personal objectives in the commission of the tort. In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 100A.26

.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not vicariously liable for the torts of his or her employee because the employee was pursuing purely personal objectives at the time of the tortious act even though on duty, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that at the time of the tortious conduct that injured the plaintiff, the employee was pursuing purely personal objectives and was not engaged in activities of service to the defendant. For example, in a case involving molestation, counsel could argue that the employee's acts were self-serving and were not required by, or incidental to, his or her job duties [Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 299-301, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P.2d 358 ; Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 ; Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-140, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287] . For an example of an argument that the tortious acts were outside the scope of employment generally, see § 100A.35.

[c] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.05[5] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Pursuit of Purely Personal Objectives While on Duty Takes Conduct Outside Scope of Employment

In Lisa M. v. Henry Mayo Newhall Mem'l Hosp. (1995) 12 Cal. 4th 291, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510, 907 P.2d 358 , the plaintiff, a 19-year-old pregnantwoman, was injured in a fall and sought treatment at a hospital. An ultrasound technician conducted an examination as directed by the examining physicians, and then sexually molested the plaintiff under the guise of performing further, medically necessary procedures. The plaintiff sued to recover damages for professional negligence, battery, and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and named as the defendants the technician, the hospital, and others. The trial court granted the hospital's summary judgment motion, on the ground that the technician's conduct was not within the scope of his employment, precluding a finding that Hospital could be held vicariously liable for the technician's conduct. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed; the California Supreme Court granted review, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeal.

The Court set out the basic rules regarding vicarious liability: that an employer is vicariously liable for the torts of its employees committed within the scope of the employment, and that even an employee's willful, malicious, criminal torts may fall within the scope of his or her employment for purposes of respondeat superior liability, even though the employer has not authorized the employee to commit crimes or intentional torts (12 Cal. 4th 291, 296-297) . The Court noted that California does not follow the traditional rule under which conduct was in the scope of employment only if motivated (in whole or in part) by a desire to serve the employer's interests, but stated that, under the developed case law, the employer will not be held liable for an assault or other intentional tort that did not have a causal nexus to the employee's work (12 Cal. 4th 291, 297) . "But for" causation is insufficient; that the employment brought tortfeasor and victim together is not enough. Instead, courts have used varied language to describe the requisite link: the incident leading to injury must be an "outgrowth" of the employment, the risk of injury must be "inherent in the working environment," or "typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise [the employer] has undertaken" (12 Cal. 4th 291, 298) .

In applying these rules to the case before it, the Court found that the requisite link between the employment and the tortious conduct did not exist. The Court noted that vicarious liability has been considered inappropriate when the conduct was motivated by a personal dispute or a personal compulsion, and that the technician here acted out of motivations that were not caused by his employment, but were caused instead only by "propinquity and lust" (12 Cal. 4th 291, 301-303) .

Jeffrey E. v. Central Baptist Church (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 243 Cal. Rptr. 128 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b]. The court found that the employee's acts of molestation were not intended to serve the employer, a church, but rather were self-serving acts unrelated to church activities. Based on this and other evidence, the court held that the acts were not required, incidental to his duties, or foreseeable (197 Cal. App. 3d 718, 722) .

The factual and procedural background of Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , is discussed in § 100A.26[3][b]. In determining whether the school district was liable for a sexual assault committed by an employee-custodian, the court found that the connection between the employee's duties and the wrongful acts became so attenuated that the law could not hold the employer vicariously liable. Specifically, sexual molestation is in no way related to mopping floors, or any of the other duties of a custodian. Thus, the custodian's acts were not required by or incidental to his work duties. The fact that the custodian used school facilities to commit the offense did not change the result. Where an employee pursues his or her own ends, the use of property or facilities entrusted to the employee by the employer is an inadequate basis for imputing liability to the employer. Nor did the fact that the offense occur during working hours make the actions incidental to the employment. If a tort is personal in nature to the employee, mere presence at the site of employment and attendance to occupational duties prior to or subsequent to the offense does not give rise to a cause of action against the employer under respondeat superior (123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-140) .

Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 992, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440 , raised the issue of employer liability for sexual harassment by an employee. The California Supreme Court once again found that sexual harassment was a purely personal objective that could not be imputed to the employer for the purposes of respondeat superior (11 Cal. App. 4th 976) .

In this case, a county had promulgated in 1980 a policy prohibiting sexual harassment in the workplace, which policy was in effect while one deputy sheriff admittedly harassed other deputies. The deputies who had been harassed sued the harasser and the county in federal court, alleging violations of federal and state law covering sexual harassment in the workplace [see 42 U.S.C.S. § 2000e-2; see also Gov. Code § 12940(j)]. The county refused to defend and indemnify the accused deputy under Gov. Code §§ 825 and 995, on the ground that the harassing conduct was outside the scope of employment. The accused deputy's defense was assumed by his homeowner's insurance carrier, and on the date set for trial, the deputy settled and was dismissed from the action. The trial court found that the settlement was in good faith [see Code Civ. Proc. § 877.6], and the carrier paid the settlement. The carrier sued the county after its claims were rejected, seeking indemnity for the settlement amount and the costs of defense of the federal action. The parties filed cross motions for summary judgment, directed primarily to the issue of whether the harassment was undertaken in the scope of the deputy's employment. The trial court granted the county's motion, finding that the conduct was outside the scope of the accused deputy's employment, and entered judgment for the county. The court of appeal reversed, on the ground that the conductwas in fact committed in the scope of employment, and was not so unusual or startling that it would be unfair to include as a cost of the employer's business. The Supreme Court granted review, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeal.

The Court noted that under Gov. Code § 825(a), the scope of employment issue is decided under the general principles used by California courts in the respondeat superior context (11 Cal. 4th 992, 1003) . These general principles, although interpreted broadly, do not make an employer strictly liable for all actions of its employees during working hours; specifically, employers are not held vicariously liable for an employee's malicious or tortious conduct if the employee substantially deviates from the employment duties for personal purposes (11 Cal. 4th 992, 1004) . The Court distinguished cases in which the employee's conduct had in some way been related to the employee's duties, and vicarious liability had been found, with cases denying vicarious liability on the ground that the conduct arose from events unrelated to the employment, such as personal disputes or compulsions of the employee (11 Cal. 4th 992, 1006) .

The Court was persuaded by opinions that had held that except in the cases involving sexual misconduct of on-duty police officers against members of the public, employers are not liable for their employees' sexual misconduct because it could not be demonstrated that the misconduct arose from the employers' enterprises (11 Cal. 4th 992, 1006-1007) . If the conduct is motivated by strictly personal reasons of the employee, unrelated to the performance of the employee's job duties, vicarious liability cannot be imposed (11 Cal. 4th 992, 1007) . The Court distinguished Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 [see § 100A.26[3][c]], on the ground that the official authority of a police officer over members of the public is different in kind from that of an employee (even a supervisor) over another employee. The Court declined to read Mary M. to permit vicarious liability based solely on the abuse of job-created authority over others for purely personal reasons (11 Cal. 4th 992, 1012-1013) .

The plaintiffs, female deputy sheriffs, settled with the harassing male coemployee and his homeowner's insurance carrier, and also recovered a judgment against the county under the FEHA. The issue decided was whether the county was also obligated to indemnify the harasser under Gov. Code § 825.2, which requires indemnity for liability incurred for acts within the scope of employment.

The California Supreme Court affirmed that the test under the statute was the same as the common law test for scope of employment generally (11 Cal. App. 4th 976) . In holding that the conduct was outside of the scope of employment, the Court appears effectively to have insulated employers from vicarious liability for sexual harassment under the common-law respondeat superior doctrine; employers can apparently only be held "directly" liable for harassment to the extent provided by the FEHA. For example, there is no FEHA employer liability for a nonsupervisory employee's sexual harassment of a fellow employee if the employer had no knowledge or reason to know of the harassment [Gov. Code § 12940(j); Carrisales v. Department of Corr. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1132, 1136-1137, 1140, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804, 988 P.2d 1083 (sexual harassment by nonsupervisory fellow employee does not constitute unlawful employment practice under FEHA unless employer knows or should know of it and fails to take immediate and appropriate corrective action)]. And although Civ. Code § 51.9 imposes liability for sexual harassment in a business, service, or professional relationship, it would appear that under the rationale of this case, liability would be confined to the individual harasser unless the individual's employer somehow participated in the harassment (see also Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1), (3)), no vicarious liability would be imposed on the employer under the respondeat superior doctrine.

NOTE:

Three justices of the Court would have overruled Mary M. and held that sexual misconduct even by on-duty police officers is outside the scope of employment [see Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 992, 1020-1023, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478, 906 P.2d 440 (concurring opinion of George, J.)].

NOTE:

The Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) provides for direct employer liability for harassment of one employee by another, other than an agent or supervisor, if the employer, or its agents or supervisors, knows or should have known of the conduct and fails to take immediate and appropriate corrective action [Gov. Code § 12940(j)]. This language has been construed as providing for strict employer liability for the conduct of an agent or supervisor [Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 414-417, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Pursuit of Purely Personal Objectives While on Duty Takes Conduct Outside Scope of Employment

In Van Ort v. Estate of Stanewich (9th Cir. 1996) 92 F.3d 831 , the plaintiffs, who were the victims of an assault and attempted robbery by an undercover narcotics officer, sued the county and the Sheriff's Department who employed the officer, for negligence. The district court ruledagainst them as a matter of law, and the plaintiffs appealed. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal ruled that the county was not vicariously liable under Gov. Code § 815.2(a) because the officer was not acting within the scope of employment. In its ruling, the court relied on the holding of Farmers Ins. Group v. County of Santa Clara (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 992, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478 [see § 100A.37[3][a]], which provided that an employer will not be held vicariously liable for an employee's malicious or tortious conduct if the employee substantially deviates from the employment duties for personal purposes. The court found that the free-lance criminal exploits of a law enforcement officer fell within the California Supreme Court's language in Farmers (92 F.3d 831, 840) .

John Y. v. Chaparral Treatment Ctr., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 565, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 , is discussed in § 100A.35[4][a].

In Maria D. v. Westec Residential Sec., Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 326 , the plaintiff was allegedly raped by a privately employed, on-duty, uniformed, and armed security guard after the guard pulled the plaintiff over while she was driving down the highway. The plaintiff sued the security guard's employer on the theory that the employer was vicariously liable for the guard's sexual assault. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer on the vicarious liability claims, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal concluded that, although the assault may not have occurred but for the employment, the guard's decision to assault the victim was strictly personal and did not arise out of the guard's duties with the employer (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146-147) . The court ruled that the Supreme Court's decision in Mary M. v. City of Los Angeles (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 202, 285 Cal. Rptr. 99, 814 P.2d 1341 [see § 100A.26[3][c]], did not support a finding of vicarious liability, because the assault on the plaintiff by the private security guard did not arise from the misuse of authority uniquely conferred on a public law enforcement officer, and because the security guard was not acting as an official representative of the state at the time of the assault (85 Cal. App. 4th 125, 146) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.38

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.38 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Intentional Torts of Employee--Conduct of Employee Motivated by Personal Malice

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY A TORT COMMITTED BY DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE EMPLOYEE'S CONDUCT WAS MOTIVATED BY PERSONAL MALICE NOT ENGENDERED BY HIS/HER EMPLOYMENT.

No Liability Where Conduct Based on Personal Malice. An employer will not be held vicariously liable for a tort committed by his or her employee if the employee in committing the tort was motivated by personal malice not engendered by his or her employment (Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 656, 171 P.2d 5 ; Martinez v. Hagopian (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1227-1229, 227 Cal. Rptr. 763 ; Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 624, 337 P.2d 861).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for the intentional torts of his or her employee, based on the argument that the employee's conduct in committing the tort was based on his or her personal malice. In an appropriate case, This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 100A.33.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not vicariously liable for the torts of his or her employee because such torts were based on the employee's personal malice--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employee inflicted injury on the plaintiff out of personal malice that was not engendered by the employment. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the employee and the plaintiff became embroiled in a dispute that lead to the injury, and such dispute was not an outgrowth of the employment and had no connection to the employee's job duties [see Martinez v. Hagopian (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1227-1230, 227 Cal. Rptr. 763] . For an example of an argument that the tortious acts were outside the scope of employment generally, see § 100A.35.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the vicarious liability of a principal for the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.06[2][a] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability Where Conduct Based on Personal Malice

The factual and procedural background of Carr v. Wm. C. Crowell Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 652, 171 P.2d 5 , is discussed in § 100A.33[3][a]. The court stated that if an employee inflicts an injury out of personal malice, not engendered by employment, the employer is not liable, but such facts were not present in the case before it (28 Cal. 2d 652, 654-657) .

The factual and procedural background of Monty v. Orlandi (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 337 P.2d 861 , is discussed in § 100A.33[3][b]. The court stated that an employer is liable for the intentional torts of his or her employee committed in the scope of employment, but if an employee inflicts an injury out of personal malice not engendered by the employment, the employer will not be vicariously liable. In this case, an inference could be drawn that the bartender's ejection of his wife was a personal matter and not connected with the maintenance of order in the bar, and the attack on the plaintiff arose out of this incident. Thus, the question was properly left to the jury since the assault may not have been within the scope of employment (169 Cal. App. 2d 620, 623-624) .

In Martinez v. Hagopian (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 227 Cal. Rptr. 763 , the plaintiffs sued the defendant, a grape grower, under respondeat superior after their husband and father was fatally knifed by the defendant's employee, a farm worker. The incident occurred after hours at a social gathering of relatives at a labor camp maintained by the defendant. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The appeals court affirmed. The court stated that under respondeat superior, an employer will be liable for the torts, including intentional torts, of an employee committed within the scope of her employment. However, if the employee inflicts an injury out of personal malice, not engendered by the employment, the employer is not liable. The determination as to whether a tort was committed within the scope of employment turns on whether the act was either required or incident to the employee's duties or whether the misconduct could be reasonably foreseen by the employer in any event. The court discussed the test set forth in Rodgers v. Kemper Constr. Co. (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 608, 618-619, 124 Cal. Rptr. 143 [see § 100A.33[3][c]], for determining foreseeability. In Rodgers, the court held that foreseeability means that in the context of the employer's particular enterprise, an employee's conduct is not so unusual or startling that it would seem unfair to include the loss resulting from it among other costs of the employer's business, or whether the risk was one that may fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the enterprise undertaken by the employer.

In this case, the court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the incident was foreseeable. The dispute leading to the assault was not an outgrowth of the employment relationship. The court stated that liability will attach only if there is a nexus between the employment and the activity that results in an injury that is foreseeable. The test is not whether it is foreseeable that employees might act in such a way as to give rise to civil liability, but whether the employee's act is foreseeable in light of the duties the employee was hired to perform. The court stated that the assault arose out of an argument between visitors to the labor camp and workers concerning one worker's treatment of a visitor's wife. Thus, the dispute did not have any connection to harvesting grapes. The fact that both the victim and the assailant had been drinking, even though such drinking is common among farm workers during their after hours socials and drinking often leads to quarrels and violence, did not provide a sufficient link to the employment to impose vicarious liability on the defendant. The court concluded that the assault could not fairly be regarded as typical of or broadly incidental to the farming activities involved (182 Cal. App. 3d 1223, 1227-1230) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability Where Conduct Based on Personal Malice

In Kephart v. Genuity, Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 280, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 845 , the defendant's employee was involved in an accident with the plaintiffs, all members of the same family. Witnesses testified that the employee, driving his own car, intentionally pursued the plaintiffs' vehicle in an act of "road rage" and forced their vehicle off the highway, causing the vehicle to overturn. The plaintiffs settled with the employee and sued the defendant, arguing that the employee was acting within the scope of employment at the time of the accident because he had left his house and was making preparations to begin a business trip later that evening. However, the jury found that the employee was not acting in the scope of employment, and the court of appeal affirmed. Although the employee had left home and would eventually travel to the airport to catch a flight for a business trip, he was not due at the airport for at least five hours and would be taking care of personal business in the interim. In addition, the employee's injury-causing conduct was intentional and egregious and was motivated solely by personal malice and in no way designed or intended to further the defendant's interests. Under those circumstances, the court concluded that sufficient evidence supported the jury's finding that the employee was not acting in the scope of employment at the time of the accident (136 Cal. App. 4th 280, 294-295) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.39

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.39 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable for Harassment of One Employee by Another--Alleged Harasser Was Not Supervisory Employee, and Employer Complied With Requirements of California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) [Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR HARASSMENT COMMITTED BY PLAINTIFF'S FELLOW EMPLOYEE, BECAUSE THE HARASSMENT WAS NOT COMMITTED BY A SUPERVISORY EMPLOYEE, AND DEFENDANT _____ [HAD NO KNOWLEDGE OR REASON TO KNOW OF THE HARASSMENT or TOOK IMMEDIATE AND APPROPRIATE CORRECTIVE ACTION ON LEARNING OF THE HARASSMENT].

California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) Does Not Subject Employer to Liability for Harassment Committed by Nonsupervisory Employee Unless Employer Knew or Should Have Known of Harassment and Failed to Take Immediate and Appropriate Corrective Action. The FEHA imposes liability on employers only for unlawful employment practices (see Gov. Code § 12940). Harassment of one employee by another employee who is not an agent or supervisor of the employer does not constitute an unlawful employment practice unless the employer knows or should know of it and fails to take immediate and appropriate corrective action (Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)). Thus, if the employer has no reason to know of the harassment, or if the employer takes immediate and appropriate corrective action when it becomes or reasonably should become aware of the harassment (for example, when the victim or someone else informs the employer) there simply is no "unlawful employment practice" or employer liability under the FEHA (Carrisales v. Department of Corr. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1132, 1136-1137, 1140, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804, 988 P.2d 1083).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a contention that the defendant is liable under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.) for harassment committed by an employee against another employee, a job applicant, or a person providing services under contract to the employer [see Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. The argument should, therefore, establish that the employee who allegedly committed harassment was not an agent of the employer or a supervisor of the plaintiff (see Gov. Code § 12926(r)), and either (1) the employer had no knowledge or reason to know of the harassment, or (2) the employer took immediate and appropriate corrective action on learning of the harassment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) Does Not Subject Employer to Liability for Harassment Committed by Nonsupervisory Employee Unless Employer Knew or Should Have Known of Harassment and Failed to Take Immediate and Appropriate Corrective Action

In Carrisales v. Department of Corr. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 1132, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 804, 988 P.2d 1083 , an employee of the Department of Corrections sued the Department, two of her supervisors, and a coworker for sexual harassment in violation of the California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). She alleged that her coworker had repeatedly sexually harassed her, and that the defendant supervisors knew of the sexual harassment but failed to take immediate and appropriate corrective action.

The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of each defendant. The court of appeal reversed the grant of summary judgment as to the Department, finding a triable issue of fact regarding whether the Department and the defendant supervisors took immediate and appropriate corrective action. The court of appeal affirmed the grant of summary judgment as to the supervisors and as to the coworker. The Supreme Court granted the plaintiff's petition for review, which raised only the issue of the liability of the coworker for harassment under the FEHA. On that issue, the Supreme Court held that under the pertinent FEHA provision as it existed at the relevant time [see former Gov. Code § 12940(h)(1); now see Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)], the co-worker was not personally liable for harassment of the plaintiff, although the coworker could be liable under other statutes or tort theories (21 Cal. 4th 1132, 1136) .

In the course of its discussion, the Supreme Court clarified the circumstances under which an employer can be held liable for harassment under the FEHA. The FEHA makes an employer strictly liable for harassment by an agent or supervisor. However, an employer cannot be liable for harassing conduct by a nonsupervisory employee unless the employer (or its agent or a supervisor) knows or should know of the conduct and fails to take immediate and appropriate corrective action [see Gov. Code § 12940(j)(1)]. So long as the employer has no reason to know of the harassment, or takes immediate and appropriate corrective action when the harassment is or should be known, there is simply no "unlawful employment practice" that would subject the employer to liability under the FEHA (21 Cal. 4th 1132, 1136-1137, 1140) .

NOTE:

After the Supreme Court's decision, the FEHA was amended to provide specifically that any employee of an employer subject to the FEHA is personally liable for any harassment that the employee perpetrates [see Gov. Code § 12940(j)(3), effective January 1, 2001].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.40

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.40 Opposing Contention That Employer May Be Vicariously Liable for Wrongful Conduct of Employee--Statute of Limitations Bars Action Against Employer

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER AGAINST THE DEFENDANT EMPLOYER UNDER A THEORY OF RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR FOR THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT OF AN EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF FAILED TO NAME THAT EMPLOYER AS A DEFENDANT PRIOR TO EXPIRATION OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Statute of Limitations. An action for an injury to an individual caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another must be commenced within two years of accrual of the cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1).

B. Statute of Limitations Applies Separately to Employer. A plaintiff seeking to hold an employer liable for the torts of an employee must name the employer as a defendant prior to the running of the applicable statute of limitations, even if the claim against the employee is not barred by limitations (Boyer v. Jensen (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 70-71, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 124).

[Optional] C. Claim May Not Be Pursued Against Bankrupt Employee. If the employee's debts have been discharged by bankruptcy, shielding the employee from suit, and the plaintiff failed to name the employer as a defendant prior to expiration of the statute of limitations, the plaintiff may not pursue the action against the employee to obtain a judgment that might be enforced against the employer (Boyer v. Jensen (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 77-78, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 124).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in defense to a plaintiff's action against an employer for the wrongful acts of an employee under the doctrine of respondeat superior. The grounds for the defense are that the plaintiff failed to name the employer as a defendant prior to expiration of the statute of limitations.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as in a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing when the cause of action accrued and when the employer was named as a defendant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations Applies Separately to Employer

In Boyer v. Jensen (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 124 , one of the drivers involved in a car accident that occurred in October 2000 filed a negligence lawsuit in September 2001 against the driver of the other car. In February 2002, the other driver countered with a cross-complaint for negligence against the plaintiff. During discovery, the cross-complainant learned that the plaintiff might have been engaged in job-related travel at the time of the accident. Subsequently, in August 2002, the cross-complainant amended her cross-complaint to add the plaintiff's employer as a defendant. Because the cross-complaint was responding to a timely lawsuit filed by the plaintiff, the cross-complaint against the plaintiff was not barred by the one-year statute of limitations then applicable to personal injury actions [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations)]. However, the amendment adding the plaintiff's employer was not filed within the limitations period. The employer answered the cross-complaint and raised the statute of limitations as an affirmative defense. Judgment on the pleadings was eventually granted in favor of the employer, and the cross-complainant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the cross-complainant was required to add the employer as a named cross-defendant before expiration of the statute of limitations in October 2001. The court rejectedthe argument of the cross-complainant that because the employer was potentially liable under principles of respondeat superior for the wrongful conduct of its employee, then the employer's statute of limitations defense should be tied to the employee's statute of limitations defense. According to the cross-complainant, because the plaintiff had waived the statute of limitations defense by filing suit first against the cross-complainant, the employer that is potentially vicariously liable should not be able to assert a statute of limitations defense. The court disagreed, finding no authority to support that argument. The court also rejected the equitable argument that the employer was not prejudiced because it should have foreseen a potential respondeat superior claim, noting that application of a statute of limitations requires no showing of prejudice. Because the employer was not sued within the applicable limitations period, and no relevant exceptions had been identified, the action against the employer was time-barred (129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 69-71) .

[b] Claim May Not Be Pursued Against Bankrupt Employee

The factual and procedural background of Boyer v. Jensen (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 124 , is discussed in § 100A.40[3][a]. While trial on the complaint and cross-complaint was pending, the plaintiff filed for bankruptcy protection and received an automatic stay. In late 2003, the plaintiff's debts were discharged by the bankruptcy court, and the plaintiff filed a motion to dismiss the tort litigation. The cross-complainant opposed this motion to dismiss, arguing that she was seeking a judgment against the plaintiff to proceed against the plaintiff's employer, the employer's insurer, or both. The trial court granted the plaintiff's motion to dismiss the action, and the cross-complainant appealed this judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted the court-fashioned rule under bankruptcy law that although a plaintiff or other creditor may not seek to hold a debtor personally liable after discharge in bankruptcy, the plaintiff or creditor may proceed against the debtor to attain a judgment enforceable against a codebtor or a surety that guaranteed payment of that debt. However, the court also recognized that this rule was fashioned in the context of trying to recover from an insurer of the debtor, and insurance law requires two separate suits under those circumstances--one suit against the insured and then a second against the insurer (129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 72) . Moreover, the court was persuaded by case law that a suit should not be allowed against a discharged debtor unless the debtor's presence in the action was truly essential (129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 75-77) . Because holding an employer liable under a theory of respondeat superior does not require a prior judgment against the employee, and in fact the employee need not be sued at all, the employee is not a necessary party, and there is no reason to allow suit to proceed against a bankrupt employee to try to attain a judgment enforceable against the employer. The fact that the cross-complainant was barred by the statute of limitations from suing the employer directly in this particular case did not alter this outcome (129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 77-78) . Finally, the court recognized that even if the cross-complainant were allowed to proceed to judgment against the employee, that judgment could not be transformed into a judgment against the employer or its insurer, who would not be parties to the action (129 Cal. App. 4th 62, 78-79) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.41

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.41 Supporting Contention That Hirer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Work Involved Peculiar Risk

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY A TORT COMMITTED BY AN INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR HIRED BY DEFENDANT BECAUSE THE WORK FOR WHICH THE INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR WAS HIRED INVOLVED A PECULIAR RISK OF PHYSICAL HARM TO OTHERS UNLESS SPECIAL PRECAUTIONS WERE TAKEN, AND THE CONTRACTOR FAILED TO EXERCISE SUCH PRECAUTIONS.

A. Peculiar Risk Doctrine. One who employs an independent contractor to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused by the failure of the independent contractor to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions, even though the employer has provided for such precautions in the contract or otherwise (Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416; Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747).

B. Definition of Peculiar Risk. A peculiar risk is a risk that is peculiar to the work to be done that arises from the character of the work or from the place where the work is to be done, against which a reasonable person would recognize the necessity of taking special precautions. A peculiar risk does not mean that the riskmust be one that is abnormal to the type of work done, or that it is an abnormally great risk, but rather refers to a special recognizable danger arising out of the work itself (Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 ; Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 915-916, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875).

C. Factors in Determining Whether Danger Is a Peculiar Risk. Facts that are important in determining whether a particular danger is a "special danger" include: (1) the foreseeability of the specific risk or set of risks arising in connection with the work as planned; (2) whether the risk is intimately connected with the work; (3) the degree of risk; and (4) the possibility of anticipating and prescribing definite precautions to avert the anticipated risk or risks (Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 916-917, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875).

[Optional] D. Employer's Lack of Knowledge Regarding Special Precautions. The fact that the employer does not know, or that a reasonable person would not know, that the independent contractor has not taken special precautions or is not planning to take them does not preclude liability under the peculiar risk doctrine (McDonald v. City of Oakland (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 816, 823, 63 Cal. Rptr. 593).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for the torts of his or her independent contractor because the work the independent contractor was hired to do involved a peculiar risk and the contractor failed to take special precautions to prevent harm to others. Optional Paragraph D is for use if the defendant asserts that he or she did not know that the contractor did not take or did not plan to take special precautions.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable for the torts of his or her independent contractor because a peculiar risk existed for which the contractor failed to take special precautions, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the work that the defendant hired the tortfeasor-contractor to perform involved a peculiar risk and that the contractor failed to take special precautions to prevent the risk from harming others. In establishing that the work involved a peculiar risk, counsel should set forth facts indicating that the risk was foreseeable and intimately connected with the work, the degree of risk was high, and that it was possible to anticipate and guard against the risk [Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 916-917, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875] . If the defendant contends that he or she did not know that the contractor did not plan to or failed to take special precautions, counsel should argue that such lack of knowledge does not preclude respondeat superior liability [McDonald v. City of Oakland (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 816, 823, 63 Cal. Rptr. 593] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.45 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.10[2][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

In Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , the plaintiff was an insulator who fell from scaffolding at an oil refinery. He was employed by an insulation company that was assisting in the refitting of a steamline at the refinery. Another contractor was responsible for erecting the scaffoldings that were required for the refitting project. The plaintiff sued the oil refinery for, among other things, the employment of a contractor for work involving a peculiar risk of bodily harm. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

The appeals court reversed. The court stated the general rule that an employer of an independent contractor is not liable for the negligence of the contractor or its employees. However, exceptions to the rule have become so numerous that the rule is applied only if there is no good reason to depart from it. One such exception is the peculiar risk doctrine. California courts have adopted the peculiar risk doctrine as stated in § 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts that "one who employs an independent contractor to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused to them by the failure of the contractor to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions, even though the employer has provided for such precautions in the contract or otherwise." Comment b to § 413 states that the doctrine applies to "special risks, peculiar to the work to be done, and arising out of its character, or out of the place where it is to be done, against which a reasonable [person] would recognize the necessity of taking special precautions. The situation is one in which a risk is created that is a normal, routine matter of customary human activity, such as driving an automobile, but is rather a special danger to those in the vicinity, arising out of the particular situation created, and calling for special precautions. 'Peculiar' ... has reference only to a special recognizable danger arising out of the work itself." Comment b further provides that "[i]t is obvious that an employer of an independent contractor may always anticipate that if the contractor is in any way negligent toward third persons, some harm to such persons may result ... . [The doctrine] has no reference to such a general anticipation of the possibility that the contractor may in some way be negligent. It is not concerned with the taking of routine precautions, of a kind that any careful contractor could reasonably be expected to take, against all of the ordinary and customary dangers that may arise in the course of the contemplated work." The court stated that a contractor's use of defective equipment, which the employer had no part in selecting, does not bring the contractor's conduct within the peculiar risk doctrine, nor does the contractor's misuse of equipment, whether or not defective, give rise to the doctrine (1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 131-133) .

In this case, the court found that the use of the particular type of scaffolding did not present a peculiar risk; it was of a standard type commonly used in the construction industry, the required fittings alleged by the plaintiff to be missing were ordinary elements of the scaffold rather than special precautions directed against unusual hazards, and the installation of the scaffolding by specially trained personnel was a routine precaution found in most phases of construction work. Further, the plaintiff's injury resulted from the provision of a defective piece of scaffolding and the negligent use of the equipment. Both of these elements of negligence, according to the court, lay outside the peculiar risk doctrine (1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 133-134) .

[b] Definition of Peculiar Risk

Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , is discussed in § 100A.41[3][a].

In Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 , the plaintiff, a property owner, sued an adjacent property owner who had hired an independent roofing contractor whose tar kettle had erupted into flames setting fire to the plaintiff's building. At the conclusion of the plaintiff's case at trial, the trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of the defendant.

The court of appeal reversed the nonsuit, stating that while it is the general rule that there is no vicarious liability on an employer for the torts of an independent contractor, a well-recognized exception to this rule applies if the contractor is engaged in the performance of inherently dangerous work. This exception, which is known as the peculiar risk doctrine, is contained in §§ 413 and 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts. It is not necessary that the work be of a kind that cannot be done without a risk of harm to others; rather, application of the rule is predicated on the negligent failure to either the employer or the contractor to take appropriate special precautions (120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 910-913) .

The court determined that the normal operation of tar kettles in roofing work presented a significant, recognizable danger of fire. Specifically, there was abundant testimony that explosions or "flashes" were common and unavoidable in the operation of tar kettles, and the defendant admitted that he knew before the fire that the use of hot tar and a tar kettle presented a fire hazard. Further, the negligence of the roofing contractor in maintaining the tar kettle, amounted to the kind of failure to take special precautions against a risk for which an employer is held responsible (120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 914-915) .

Comment b to § 413 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts states that doctrine is concerned with risks that are "peculiar to the work to be done, and arising out of its character, or out of the place where it is to be done, against which a reasonable [person] would recognize the necessity of taking special precautions. The situation is one in which a risk is created [that] is not a normal, routine matter of customary human activity, such as driving an automobile, but is rather a special danger to those in the vicinity, arising out of the particular situation created, and calling for special precautions. 'Peculiar' does not mean that the risk must be one [that] is abnormal to the type of work to be done, or that it must be an abnormally great risk. It has reference only to a special, recognizable danger arising out of the work itself." The court stated that there are four factors that are recognized as important determinants of the dangers' character: (1) the foreseeability of the specific risk or set of risks arising in connection with the work as planned; (2) whether the risk is intimately connected with thework or accidental; (3) the degree of risk; and (4) the possibility of anticipating and prescribing definite precautions to avert the anticipated risk or risks (120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 915-917) .

In this case, there was substantial evidence that the risk of fire presented by an inadequately tended tar kettle was anticipated by both the contractor and employer, that the use of the tar kettle was indispensable to the roofing job, that the risk was very great, and that it was commonly known by roofers that the hazard could be avoided by taking certain precautions (120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 917) .

[c] Factors in Determining Whether Danger Is a Peculiar Risk

Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 , is discussed in § 100A.41[3][b].

[d] Employer's Lack of Knowledge Regarding Special Precautions

In McDonald v. City of Oakland (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 816, 63 Cal. Rptr. 593 , an industrial painter was killed in an explosion that occurred inside a water tank he was painting pursuant to a written contract between his employer and the city. The paint manufacturer's instructions stated that when the paint was used in a confined area, it was necessary to use an exhaust fan of sufficient capacity to keep vapors below an explosive limit. The instructions further warned that the solvents in the product were volatile and flammable, that containers should be kept away from heat, open flames or sparks, and that certain precautions should be taken when using the product in tanks or other confined areas. The contractor testified that he was familiar with the use of the product and special precautions that needed to be taken. However, the explosion was caused because an inadequate ventilation system was in use. The plaintiffs appealed from a judgment in favor of the city.

The appeals court reversed. The issue on appeal was whether, for liability to attach under § 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, the employer not only must recognize that the work being performed by the contractor necessarily involves peculiar risks of harm unless special precautions are taken, but must also know, or as a reasonable man should know, that the contractor has not taken or planned to take such precautions. The court concluded that such knowledge is not required. Under § 416, liability attaches when the employer knows or should know that the risks described in the section are involved in a contemplated project and neither the contractor nor employer exercised reasonable care to see that the requisite precautions are taken. The rationale behind imposition of liability on the employer is that the nature of the risk makes it imperative that the most responsible party involved in the transaction, the party for whose benefit the work is being done, should be charged with the ultimate protection of those who are performing the work or who are likely to be injured during its progress. A requirement that the employer must know, or as a reasonable man should know, that the contractor is not taking the requisite precautions would contravene this rationale (255 Cal. App. 2d 816, 822-823) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

In Torres v. Reardon (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 831, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 52 , clients of a self-employed gardener hired the gardener to trim a tree. A neighbor who was concerned that a branch would fall on his house pulled on a rope attached to the branch that the gardener was cutting. The gardener fell from the tree and sustained serious injuries. The gardener sued the clients. The court of appeal held that the gardener was an independent contractor, but that the peculiar risk doctrine did not apply to impose vicarious liability on a hirer for injuries sustained by an independent contractor as a result of the contractor's own negligence. In discussing the peculiar risk doctrine, the court of appeal stated that the doctrine is an exception to the general rule that one who employs an independent contractor is not liable for injuries resulting from the contractor's negligence. The doctrine imposes liability on a principal or hirer only for harm to "others," and not for harm to the contractor himself or herself (3 Cal. App. 4th 831, 839-841) .

The factual and procedural background of Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , is discussed in § 100A.45[3][a]. The Supreme Court found that liability under the peculiar risk doctrine does not extend to the contractor's employees. The Court reasoned that when an employee of an independent contractor that is hired to do dangerous work suffers a work-related injury, the employee can recover under the workers' compensation system. That system provides compensation regardless of fault and advances the same policies that underlie the peculiar risk doctrine. Thus, when the contractor fails to provide safe working conditions, and such failure results in injuries to the contractor's employee, additional recovery from the hirer of the contractor, who was not negligent, does not advance any societal interest not already served by workers' compensation (5 Cal. 4th 689, 693-702) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.42

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.42 Supporting Contention That Hirer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Work Involved Nondelegable Duty

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY THE MISCONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR IN REGARD TO _____ [specify duty] BECAUSE THE DUTY WAS NONDELEGABLE.

A. Nondelegable Duty Doctrine. A person who hires an independent contractor is liable for the misconduct of the contractor in regard to a duty of the hirer that is deemed nondelegable. Thus, if the law imposes a definite affirmative duty on one by reason of his her relationship with others, whether as an owner or proprietor of land or chattels or in some other capacity, the person cannot escape liability for a failure to perform the duty by entrusting it to an independent contractor (Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 251, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508).

B. Sources of Nondelegable Duty. A nondelegable duty may be imposed by statute, charter, common law, or contract (Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 251, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 ; Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 433, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for the misconduct of his or her independent contractor in regard to a duty because the duty was deemed nondelegable.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable for the misconduct of his or her independent contractor in regard to a duty of the defendant because the duty was nondelegable--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the defendant had a legal duty, including the source of the duty, and that the injury to the plaintiff arose out of the failure of the defendant and the defendant's contractor to perform such duty. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the plaintiff's injury arose out of an automobile accident due to faulty brakes on the defendant's vehicle, and that despite the defendant's argument that a mechanic failed to properly fix the brakes, the vehicle code imposes a nondelegable obligation on the owner of a vehicle to keep that vehicle in safe working condition [see Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 442, 446-448, 71 Cal. Rptr. 897, 445 P.2d 513] .

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.45 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.10[2][d] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nondelegable Duty Doctrine

In Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , the plaintiff was struck by an automobile as he was performing road work under a contract between his employer and the city. There was evidence that at the time of the accident, there was no flagman to warn motorists of the road work, the plaintiff was not wearing the required red or orange clothing, and that the plaintiff was working beyond the traffic barricades. The jury found that the city was not negligent, that the plaintiff was not contributorily negligent, and that the plaintiff's employer was negligent. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment in favor of the city.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that Gov. Code § 815.4 provides that a "public entity is liable for injury proximately caused by a tortious act or omission of an independent contractor of the public entityto the same extent that the public entity would be subject to such liability if it were a private person." Thus, the court had to determine whether a private person engaged in the undertaking that the city was engaged in would have been liable for the tortious acts and omissions of an independent contractor (68 Cal. 2d 245, 249) . In Snyder v. Southern Cal. Edison (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 793, 799-801, 285 P.2d 912 , the Court recognized an exception to the general rule that a hirer of an independent contractor is not liable for the torts of the contractor, in the case of a nondelegable duty: "Where the law imposes a definite, affirmative duty [on] one by reason of [his or her] relationship with others, whether as an owner or proprietor of land or chattels or in some other capacity, such persons cannot escape liability for a failure to perform the duty thus imposed by entrusting it to an independent contractor ... . It is immaterial whether the duty thus regarded as 'nondelegable' be imposed by statute, charter or by common law." A further exception to the general rule of nonliability exists for the misconduct of the independent contractor in the performance of intrinsically dangerous work. With respect to both of these types of exceptions, however, there is the limitation that the employer's liability for the contractor's acts extends only to negligence in failing to take necessary precautions, failing to adopt a reasonably safe method, or in failing to produce a result that it is the duty of the employer to have attained. Such liability, however, does not extend to "collateral" or "casual" negligence on the part of the contractor or the contractor's employees in the performance of the operative detail of the work. Rather, the negligence for which the employer is liable must be intimately connected with the work authorized and such as is reasonably likely from its nature.

The Court stated that this case fell within an exception to the general rule of nonliability for torts of independent contractors as stated in § 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts: "One who employs an independent contractor to do work [that] the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused to them by the failure of the contractor to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions, even though the employer has provided for such precautions in the contract or otherwise." The Court then proceeded to find that § 416 imposed a nondelegable duty and, in this case, the conditions precedent to that duty appeared as a matter of law. Specifically, absent special precautions to keep traffic from going into the lanes on which the plaintiff was working, the work was highly dangerous. The necessity for such precautions was inherent in the work and was obvious before the work commenced. While the contract of the city provided for such special precautions, this did not satisfy its duty under the language of § 416. Thus, the city had a nondelegable duty to exercise due care and that the city could not avoid that duty by hiring an independent contractor (68 Cal. 2d 245, 253-255) .

NOTE:

The Court's holding that an employee of the independent contractor could recover for a breach of a nondelegable duty was overturned in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 [see § 100A.45 [3][a]].

[b] Sources of Nondelegable Duty

Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , is discussed in § 100A.42[3][a].

The factual and procedural background of Millsap v. Federal Express Corp. (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 277 Cal. Rptr. 807 , is discussed in § 100A.34[3][c]. The court discussed the liability of an express delivery company for personal injuries to the plaintiff caused in an automobile accident with a delivery person who, according to the court, was an independent contractor. The court stated that the general rule of nonliability of an employer for an independent contractor's negligence is subject to exceptions of such magnitude that they leave only a small area in which the general rule operates. In Capitol Chevrolet Co. v. Lawrence Warehouse Co. (9th Cir. 1955) 227 F.2d 169 , it was held that the rule of nonliability does not apply if a person assumes the contractual duty to perform a service for another. This rule is based on contractual relationships; that is, one who contracts to perform an undertaking is liable to his or her promisee for the negligence of an independent contractor to whom he or she delegates actual performance. Application of this rule in this case, however, would cause the express company to be liable for its independent contractor's torts to the corporation with whom it had contracted to deliver packages, but would not cause the company to be liable for such torts to third parties like the plaintiff. The plaintiff also argued that the liability resulting from the independent contractor's delivery of packages was nondelegable because the operation was regulated by a public agency. The court stated that this rule applies if a public service corporation attempts to delegate its duty to an independent contractor, or if an employer is subject to regulations enacted for the protection of the public. In this case, however, the court found that the express company was not subject to obligations or liabilities imposed by the public authority. Thus, the court concluded that the company was not precluded from delegating t the driver the responsibility of delivering packages without incurring any liability resulting therefrom (227 Cal. App. 3d 425, 433-435) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sources of Nondelegable Duties

In Maloney v. Rath (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 442, 71 Cal. Rptr. 897, 445 P.2d 513 , the plaintiff sued for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident caused by faulty brakes on the defendant's vehicle. The defendant had had the brakes completely overhauled by a mechanic about three months prior to the accident and had no reason to know they were defective until they failed. The court found that certain statutory safety provisions, such as those found in the Vehicle Code, create duties that may not be delegated. Thus, the owner of a vehicle is liable for harm caused by the negligence of his or her mechanic in servicing a vehicle even though the mechanic is an independent contractor (69 Cal. 2d 442, 446-448) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.43

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.43 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Independent Contractor's Conduct Involved Collateral Negligence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR THE MISCONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR BECAUSE SUCH MISCONDUCT WAS COLLATERAL NEGLIGENCE IN THAT THE CONTRACTOR'S NEGLIGENCE CONSISTS SOLELY OF THE IMPROPER MANNER IN WHICH HE/SHE PERFORMED THE WORK, THE NEGLIGENCE CREATED A RISK OF HARM NOT INHERENT IN OR NORMAL TO THE WORK, AND THERE IS NO EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT HAD ANY REASON TO CONTEMPLATE THE CONTRACTOR'S NEGLIGENCE WHEN THE CONTRACT WAS MADE OR THAT DEFENDANT WAS OTHERWISE NEGLIGENT.

Collateral Negligence Doctrine. Under the doctrine of collateral negligence, an employer is not liable for the acts of his or her independent contractor or the independent contractor's employees if those acts are deemed collateral. Thus, an employer is not liable for harm caused by the contractor if (1) the contractor's negligence consists solely of the improper manner in which he or she does the work, (2) the negligence creates a risk of harm that is not inherent in or normal to the work, and (3) the employer had no reason to contemplate the contractor's negligence when the contract was made and the employer was not otherwise negligent (Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 252, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 ; LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 754, 764-765, 145 Cal. Rptr. 244 ; Smith v. Lucky Stores (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 826, 829-831, 132 Cal. Rptr. 628).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for the torts of his or her independent contractor, based on the argument that the independent contractor's conduct involved collateral negligence.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not liable for the torts of his or her independent contractor because the contractor's conduct involved collateral negligence--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the injury to the plaintiff arose out of the contractor's negligence. Counsel also should set forth facts tending to show that the negligence consisted solely of the improper manner in which the contractor did the work, that the risk created by the negligence was not inherent in or normal to the work the contractor was hired to perform, that the defendant had no reason to contemplate the negligence, and that the defendant was not otherwise negligent [see LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 754, 764-765, 145 Cal. Rptr. 244 ; Smith v. Lucky Stores (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 826, 829-831, 132 Cal. Rptr. 628] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.10[4] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Collateral Negligence Doctrine

Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 245, 66 Cal. Rptr. 20, 437 P.2d 508 , is discussed in § 100A.42[3][a].

In LaCount v. Hensel Phelps Constr. Co. (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 754, 145 Cal. Rptr. 244 , an independent contractor's employee brought a personal injury action against the general contractor in charge of a rapid transit district construction project. The independent contractor was to fabricate several concrete girders on the general contractor's premises. Each girder weighed about 100 tons, and the independent contractor then had to transfer them to the construction site by river barges, which had to be trimmed by the use of ballast loaded into them from the trolley slung under a crane. The load capacity of the trolley was not correctly marked, and the employee was injured when a 16-ton load of ballast, which the foreman thought was only 10 tons, tore the trolley from the crane and knocked the employee into the water. The general contractor appealed after the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff.

The appeals court affirmed. The court discussed the defendant's contention that the peculiar risk doctrine had no application to this case because the plaintiff's injuries resulted from the collateral negligence of the independent contractor. The peculiar risk doctrine, as contained in §§ 413 and 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, presents an exception to the general rule that an employer of an independent contractor is not liable for physical harm caused to another by an act or omission of the contractor or the contractor's employees. § 427 of the Restatement provides a further exception in the case of inherently dangerous work. Despite these exceptions, the employer of an independent contractor is not liable for the "collateral" or "casual" negligence by an employee the independent contractor. § 426 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts states the collateral negligence rule as follows: "[A]n employer of an independent contractor, unless [the employer] is [himself or herself] negligent, is not liable for physical harm caused by any negligence of the contractor if (a) the contractor's negligence consists solely in the improper manner in which [the contractor] does the work, and (b) it creates a risk of such harm [that] is not inherent in or normal to the work, and (c) the employer had no reason to contemplate the contractor's negligence when the contract was made." The comment to this section states that the distinction between negligence of the independent contractor and collateral negligence is "one of negligence [that] is unusual or abnormal, or foreign to the normal or contemplated risks of doing the work, as distinguished from negligence [that] creates only the normal or contemplated risk." In this case, the court found that the independent contractor's conduct did not involve collateral negligence. The contractor was hired to move girders from the construction yard where they were fabricated to the barges on which they were to be transported to the place of installation. The defendant knew that the loading operations would involve the lifting of aerial girders and the ballast girders. A major inherent risk in any crane operation is the overloading of the crane. Since it was necessary to use the ballast to balance the barges, the use of the ballast was an integral part of the loading procedure. Thus, there was a direct causal relationship between the peculiar risk inherent in the work of loading for proper transportation 100-ton girders and the material necessary to balance the load, and the plaintiff's injuries, which were sustained when a crane that was being used to load the ballasts was overloaded (79 Cal. App. 3d 754, 764-766) .

NOTE:

Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 [see § 100A.45[3][a]], overrules this case to the extent it holds that employees of an independent contractor can sue the contractor's employer under the peculiar risk doctrine.

In Smith v. Lucky Stores (1976) 61 Cal. App. 3d 826, 132 Cal. Rptr. 628 , the plaintiff sued a supermarket corporation for personal injuries sustained when a large letter from a sign that had just been removed from the defendant's building fell on her. The defendant had hired an independent contractor to remove the sign from the building. After the contractor had lowered the sign to the sidewalk and leaned it against its truck, the worker holding it negligently let go and a gust of wind blew it over onto the plaintiff. The trial court entered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the defendant would have been liable for the negligence of its contractor had the plaintiff been injured while the sign was being lowered to the ground; but once the letter had reached the pavement, the defendant's responsibility for the contractor's negligence ceased. The trouble with the plaintiff's case, according to the court, it that it was a textbook example of "collateral" or "casual" negligence by an employee ofan independent contractor for which the employer of the contractor is held not to be responsible. The premise of the doctrine is that if harm results from a risk other than the one that makes the employer liable for the negligence of the independent contractor, the reason for imposing such liability no longer applies. There must be a relationshipbetween the particular act of negligence of the contractor and the peculiar risk involved in the work in order to justify a departure from the general rule of nonliability. In this case, the manner in which the independent contractor's worker held onto the letter after it reached the ground was totally unrelated to any aspect of the contractor's work that would have justified a departure from the general rule of nonliability (61 Cal. App. 3d 826, 829-831) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.44

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.44 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR THE TORTS OF DEFENDANT'S INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR BECAUSE THE GENERAL RULE IS THAT AN EMPLOYER IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE TORTS OF HIS OR HER INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR AND THE WORK DID NOT INVOLVE A PECULIAR RISK.

A. General Rule of Nonliability. The general rule is that an employer of an independent contractor is not liable for the torts of the contractor or the contractor's employees (Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 131, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747).

B. Peculiar Risk Doctrine. Under the peculiar risk doctrine, one who employs an independent contractor to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused to them by the failure of the contractors to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions, even though the employer has provided for such precautions in the contract or otherwise (Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416; Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747).

C. Work Did Not Involve Peculiar Risk. A peculiar risk is something other than the ordinary and customary dangers that may arise in the course of the work or of normal human activity. A risk is not a peculiar risk unless it is peculiar to the work to be done that arises from the character of the work or from the place where the work is to be done, against which a reasonable person would recognize the necessity of taking special precautions (Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747).

D. Routine Negligence Does Not Provide Basis for Liability Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine. Routine negligence does not provide a basis for liability under the peculiar risk doctrine. Thus, a contractor's use of defective equipment or misuse of equipment is not within the doctrine (Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 133, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 ; Stark v. Weeks Real Estate (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 972, 156 Cal. Rptr. 701).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable for the torts of his or her independent contractor, on the grounds that the peculiar risk doctrine does not apply. In an appropriate case, This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 100A.41.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the peculiar risk doctrine is not applicable--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the work the contractor was hired to perform did not involve a peculiar risk, including facts indicating that the risk was not foreseeable nor intimately connected with the work, there was not a high degree of risk, and that a reasonable person would not have recognized that it was necessary to take precautions to guard against the risk [Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 132, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 ; Henderson Bros. Stores, Inc. v. Smiley (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 903, 916-917, 174 Cal. Rptr. 875 , discussed in § 100A.41]. If the work did involve a peculiar risk, counsel should demonstrate that the injury to the plaintiff arose out of a risk unconnected to the work itself, such as the contractor's misuse of equipment or use of defective equipment, and should argue that such routine negligence does not provide the basis forliability under the peculiar risk doctrine [Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 131-133, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, §§ 30.10[1], 30.10[2][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule of Nonliability

The factual and procedural background of Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , is discussed in § 100A.41[3][a]. The court stated the general rule that an employer of an independent contractor is not liable for the negligence of the contractor or its employees. However, exceptions to the rule have become so numerous that the rule is applied only if there is no good reason to depart from it. One such exception is the peculiar risk doctrine. California courts have adopted the peculiar risk doctrine as stated in § 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts that "one who employs an independent contractor to do work that the employer should recognize as likely to create during its progress a peculiar risk of physical harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for physical harm caused to them by the failure of the contractor to exercise reasonable care to take such precautions, even though the employer has provided for such precautions in the contract or otherwise." Comment b to § 413 states that the doctrine applies to "special risks, peculiar to the work to be done, and arising out of its character, or out of the place where it is to be done, against which a reasonable [person] would recognize the necessity of taking special precautions. The situation is one in which a risk is created that is not a normal, routine matter of customary human activity, such as driving an automobile, but is rather a special danger to those in the vicinity, arising out of the particular situation created, and calling for special precautions. 'Peculiar' ... has reference only to a special recognizable danger arising out of the work itself." Comment b further provides that "[i]t is obvious that an employer of an independent contractor may always anticipate that if the contractor is in any way negligent toward third persons, some harm to such persons may result ... . [The doctrine] has no reference to such a general anticipation of the possibility that the contractor may in some way be negligent. It is not concerned with the taking of routine precautions, of a kind [that] any careful contractor could reasonably be expected to take, against all of the ordinary and customary dangers which may arise in the course of the contemplated work." The court stated that a contractor's use of defective equipment, which the employer had no part in selecting, does not bring the contractor's conduct within the peculiar risk doctrine, nor does the contractor's misuse of equipment, whether or not defective, give rise to the doctrine (1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 131-133) .

In this case, the court found that the use of the particular type of scaffolding did not present a peculiar risk; it was of a standard type commonly used in the construction industry, the required fittings alleged by the plaintiff to be missing were ordinary elements of the scaffold rather than special precautions directed against unusual hazards, and the installation of the scaffolding by specially trained personnel was a routine precaution found in most phases of construction work. Further, the plaintiff's injury resulted from the provision of a defective piece of scaffolding and the negligent use of the equipment. Both of these elements of negligence, according to the court, lay outside the peculiar risk doctrine (1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 133-134) .

[b] Peculiar Risk Doctrine

Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , is discussed in § 100A.44[3][a].

[c] Work Did Not Involve Peculiar Risk

Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , is discussed in § 100A.44[3][a].

[d] Routine Negligence Does Not Provide Basis for Liability Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

Johnson v. Tosco Corp. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 123, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , is discussed in § 100A.44[3][a].

In Stark v. Weeks Real Estate (1979) 94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 156 Cal. Rptr. 701 , a carpenter who was employed by an independent contractor building homes on property owned by the defendant, who hired the contractor, sustained injuries while using a power saw. The trial court entered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the issue for appeal was whether an employee of an independent contractor could maintain a suit against the hirer under the peculiar risk exception to the general rule that one who employs an independent contractor is not liable for injuries caused by the negligence of the contractor. After discussing the circumstances under which the peculiar risk doctrine is applicable, the courtnoted that comments to §§ 413 and 416 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts refines the application of the doctrine by removing from its ambit certain routine types of negligent conduct. Comment b to § 413 provides that an employer of an independent contractor may always anticipate that if the contractor is in any way negligent, harm to third persons may result. Thus, one who hires a trucker to transport his or her goods must realize that if the truck is driven too fast or with defective breaks, some harm to others on the highway is likely to occur. The peculiar risk rule has no reference to such a general anticipation of the possibility that the contractor may be negligent. The doctrine is not concerned with the taking of routine precautions that any careful contractor could reasonably be expected to take against all of the ordinary and customary dangers that may arise in the course of the contemplated work. Comment d to § 416 provides that a peculiar risk must involve a special hazard resulting from the nature of the work, which calls for special precautions. Thus, if a contractor is hired to transport the employer's goods by truck, the employer is not liable for the contractor's failure to inspect the brakes on the contractor's truck or for driving too fast, because the risk is not peculiar, and only an ordinary precaution is called for. But if the contractor is hired to transport giant logs weighing several tons over the highway, the employer will be subject to liability for the contractor's failure to take special precautions to anchor them on the contractor's truck (94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 971-972) .

The court stated that it had found no case in which the peculiar risk doctrine had been extended to injuries caused by the negligent use or misuse of hand tools by the independent contractor or its employees, and that it did not believe that the risk involved from that type of activity is the type of risk the doctrine is intended to cover. It is obvious that every owner who employs an independent contractor can anticipate that employees of the contractor may misuse hand tools, thus endangering themselves and third parties. This risk is always present, and there is nothing peculiar about it; it is a usual, common and anticipatable danger in the routine performance of the work, against which the owner is not required to take special precautions. The court concluded that if this type of risk were to be considered within the peculiar risk doctrine, it would be hard to imagine any type of negligence of the contractor or the contractor's employees for which the hirer could not be held liable (94 Cal. App. 3d 965, 972) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.45

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.45 Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Employees of Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT FOR THE MISCONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS AN EMPLOYEE OF THE INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR AT THE TIME OF THE INCIDENT AND WORKERS' COMPENSATION IS HIS/HER SOLE REMEDY.

A. Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable to Injured Employee of Independent Contractor. Employees of an independent contractor who are injured by the fault of the contractor cannot sue the hirer of the contractor based on the peculiar risk doctrine. Workers' compensation is the sole remedy for such employees (Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 696-702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721).

B. Privette Applicable Despite Express Indemnity Agreement. The Privette holding, that a person who hires an independent contractor may not be held vicariously liable under the doctrine of peculiar risk for an on-the-job injury to an employee of that contractor, applies even if there is an express indemnity agreement between the independent contractor and the person who hired the contractor [Redfeather v. Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 705, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159] .

C. Privette Is Retroactive. The Privette holding, that a person who hires an independent contractor may not be held vicariously liable under the doctrine of peculiar risk for an on-the-job injury to an employee of that contractor, is retroactive [Redfeather v. Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 707, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159] .

D. "Hirer" May Be Owner, Lessee or General Contractor. The doctrine of peculiar risk shields the person who hired an independent contractor from peculiar risk liability and "the person who hired the contractor" can be an owner, a lessee or a generalcontractor (Lopez v. University Partners (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1123, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359).

E. Privette Bars Recovery by Employee Whether Hirer Provided for Special Precautions or Not. The Privette holding, that a person who hires an independent contractor may not be held liable under the doctrine of peculiar risk for an on-the-job injury to an employee of that contractor, bars employees of a hired contractor who are injured by the contractor's negligence from seeking recovery against the hiring person, irrespective of whether recovery is sought under the theory of peculiar risk set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts Section 413 or 416 (Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253, 267 ; Restatement (Second) of Torts §§ 413, 416).

F. Hirer Not Liable for Injury to Contractor's Employee for Failing to Exercise General Supervisory Power Over Safety. The hirer of an independent contractor is not liable for an injury to an employee of that independent contractor merely because the hirer retained control over safety conditions at a work site, if the hirer's exercise of retained control over safety did not affirmatively contribute to the employee's injury (Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 202, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 ; Kinney v. CSB Constr., Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 28, 36, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594).

G. Privette Bars Recovery by Injured Employee for Negligent Hiring of Contractor. An employee of an independent contractor who is injured on the job cannot sue the hirer of the contractor for negligence in hiring the contractor (Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1244-1245, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096).

H. Contractor's Employee Cannot Sue Hirer Even If Contractor Fails to Provide Workers' Compensation Coverage. An injured employee of an independent contractor cannot sue the hirer of the contractor even if the contractor fails to provide workers' compensation coverage (Lopez v. C.G.M. Dev., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 444-445, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227).

[Optional] I. Hirer's Violation of Nondelegable Duty Must Affirmatively Contribute to Employee's Injury. Under the rule of Privette v. Superior Court and its progeny, even if a nondelegable duty exists, a hirer is not liable to an injured employee of an independent contractor unless the hirer's conduct affirmatively contributed to the employee's injury (Park v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 595, 610-611, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 757).

[Optional] J. Agent of Hirer Protected to Same Extent as Hirer. The principles governing the liability of a hirer apply equally to a claim against an agent of the hirer who has been delegated the responsibility to oversee safety for the hirer (Ruiz v. Herman Weissker, Inc. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 61-62, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 641).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a contention that the defendant is vicariously liable under the peculiar risk doctrine for harm caused to his or her independent contractor's employees, on the grounds that the peculiar risk doctrine is not applicable to such employees. In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 100A.41.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the peculiar risk doctrine is not applicable to injured employees of an independent contractor--for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the plaintiff was an employee of the independent contractor hired by the defendant, and that the injury to the plaintiff arose out of the negligence of the independent contractor. Counsel should argue that even if the work that the contractor was hired to perform did involve a peculiar risk, such doctrine is inapplicable to impose liability on a hirer for injuries to a contractor's employees, and workers' compensation is the plaintiff's sole remedy [Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 695-696, 700-702, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Formsof Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.10[2][b] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable to Injured Employee of Independent Contractor

In Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , an employee of a roofing company that had been hired to install a new roof on a duplex was injured while attempting to carry a bucket of hot tar up a ladder to the roof. He sued the duplex owner under the peculiar risk doctrine, and the trial court denied the duplex owner's motion for summary judgment. After the court of appeal summarily denied the duplex owner's petition for a writ of mandate, the Supreme Court reversed, with directions to grant the petition for a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to enter judgment for the duplex owner.

The issue before the Supreme Court was whether employees of an independent contractor who is hired to perform inherently dangerous work can sue the contractor's hirer under the peculiar risk doctrine when the contractor's negligent performance of the work injures them. The Court noted that at common law, a person who hired an independent contractor generally was not liable to third parties for injuries caused by the contractor's negligence. The reasoning behind this rule was that the work performed was the enterprise of the contractor who would be better able than the hirer to absorb accident losses incurred in the course of the work, such as by including the cost of safety precautions and insurance coverage in the contract price. Over time, however, courts created numerous exceptions to the rule of nonliability, one such exception being the doctrine of peculiar risk. The doctrine was adopted originally to ensure that innocent third parties injured by the negligence of an independent contractor hired by a landowner to do inherently dangerous work on the land would not have to depend on the contractor's solvency in order to receive compensation for their injuries. Gradually, the doctrine was expanded to allow the hired contractor's employees to seek recovery from the nonnegligent properly owner for injuries caused by the negligent contractor. California is among a minority of jurisdictions that adopted this view. In Woolen v. Aerojet Gen. Corp. (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 407, 20 Cal. Rptr. 12, 369 P.2d 708 , the Supreme Court first adhered to the view that an employee an independent contractor could seek tort damages from the hirer of the contractor under the peculiar risk doctrine. Since that decision, the Court did not have occasion to reconcile it with the workers' compensation scheme (5 Cal. 4th 689, 693-694, 696) .

According to the Court, a person held liable under the peculiar risk doctrine is entitled to equitable indemnity from the independent contractor at fault. The Court also discussed the nature of peculiar risk, stating that it is a special, recognizable danger arising out of the work itself, and does not mean a risk that is abnormal to the type of work done, nor a risk that is abnormally great. But even if the work involves a peculiar risk, the hirer will not be liable if the injury results from the contractor's casual or collateral negligence (5 Cal. 4th 689, 695-696) .

The Court also discussed the purpose of the workers' compensation scheme in California. Under the workers' compensation act, when the conditions of compensation exist, workers' compensation is the exclusive remedy against an employer for the injury or death of the employee, regardless of fault. In S.G. Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 341, 354, 256 Cal. Rptr. 543, 769 P.2d 399 , the Court articulated four objectives of the workers' compensation act: "(1) to ensure that the cost of industrial injuries will be part of the cost of goods rather than a burden on society, (2) to guarantee prompt, limited compensation for an employee's work injures, regardless of fault, as an inevitable costs of production, (3) to spur increased industrial safety, and (4) in return, to insulate the employer from tort liability for [his or her] employee's injuries."

When an independent contractor causes injury to the contractor's own employee, the workers' compensation exclusive remedy provisions shield the contractor from further liability for the injury. Yet under the peculiar risk doctrine, the person who hired the independent contractor can be held liable in tort for the same injury-causing conduct of the contractor. The Court noted that this anomalous result has been widely criticized. Moreover, a majority of courts that have considered the issue have refused to extend the peculiar risk doctrine to allow such an employee to recover tort damages from the hirer of the contractor, reasoning that a principal who hires a contractor should be subject to no greater liability than the contractor whose exposure is limited to providing workers' compensation insurance, or that the workers' compensation exclusivity rule should equally protect the hirer because the hirer is indirectly paying for the cost of workers' compensation insurance coverage (5 Cal. 4th 689, 697-699) .

Further, courts and legal commentators have expressed concern that to allow a contractor's employees who incur work-related injuries compensable under the workers' compensation system to also seek damages fromthe person who hired the contractor would give the employees an unwarranted windfall. Permitting such recovery would allow these employees something that is denied to other workers: the right to recover tort damages for injuries caused by their employer's failure to maintain a safe work environment. In addition, to impose vicarious liability for tort damages on a person who hires an independent contractor for specialized work would penalize such persons who hire experts to perform dangerous work, rather than assigning such activity to their own inexperienced employees (5 Cal. 4th 689, 699-700) .

The Court discussed the fact that equitable indemnity against the independent contractor is available to the contractor's hirer who is held liable under the peculiar risk doctrine for injuries to a third party. But such indemnity is not available against a contractor who is shielded from liability under the workers' compensation system. The availability of equitable indemnity is one of the policy reasons underlying the peculiar risk doctrine. Additionally, the doctrine seeks to ensure that injuries caused by contracted work will not go uncompensated, that the risk of loss is spread to the person who contracted for and primarily benefited from the work, that adequate safety measures are taken to prevent injuries resulting from the work. But in the case of an injury to an employee of the independent contractor, the workers' compensation system regardless of fault achieves the identical purposes. Thus, considered in light of the goals of the workers' compensation scheme, the Court concluded that its decision in Woolen that peculiar risk liability should extend to employees the independent contractor did not withstand scrutiny (5 Cal. 4th 689, 700-702) .

[b] Privette Applicable Despite Express Indemnity Agreement

In Redfeather v. Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 , the defendant contracted with a company to close down an oil well. The contract contained an express indemnity agreement requiring the independent contractor to indemnify the defendant against all liability for injury to an employee of the contractor. The plaintiff, an employee of the independent contractor, was injured when well pipe and down hole equipment fell on him after coming loose from a hoisting mechanism.

The plaintiff sued the defendant. A jury trial took place that resulted in a special verdict in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff requested that the judgment be set aside, arguing that under the peculiar risk doctrine, the defendant was vicariously liable for the independent contractor's failure to take reasonable precautions. The judge heard the plaintiff's request, determined that the defendant should be liable and ordered a new trial. Before the new trial was held, the Supreme Court handed down its decision in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 692, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , holding that the application of liability under the peculiar risk doctrine to a person who hires an independent contractor for the injuries of that contractor's employees conflicts with the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation laws. The plaintiff moved for an order declaring that the rule in Privette not be held retroactive. The trial court determined that Privette was to be applied retroactively, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

On appeal, the plaintiff contended that the rule in Privette should not apply if the party who hires an independent contractor has an express indemnity agreement with that contractor, even though the sole basis of liability against the hiring party is the peculiar risk doctrine. The court of appeal disagreed, stating that just because the hiring party may obtain indemnity from the independent contractor is no reason to carve out an exception to Privette. According to the court, the unfairness of imposing peculiar risk liability if indemnity was not available was only one reason behind the Privette decision. The overarching principle in Privette was whether liability advanced any societal interest that was not already served by the workers' compensation system. On that score, the presence of an express indemnity agreement made no difference (57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 705) . The court reasoned that holding otherwise would: (1) make both the hirer and the independent contractor pay for the same risk twice in the form of workers' compensation and liability insurance; (2) denude subcontractors of the protection of the exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation laws; (3) result in an unwarranted windfall to employees who work for independent contractors and also are entitled to a workers' compensation recovery; and (4) penalize persons who hire experts to perform dangerous work rather than assigning this activity to their own inexperienced employees (57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 707) .

[c] Privette Is Retroactive

The facts and procedural background of Redfeather v. Chevron USA, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 , are discussed in § 100A.45[3][b]. The plaintiff argued on appeal that Privette, even if otherwise applicable, should not be held retroactive. The court of appeal disagreed and held that Privette was retroactive, that it merely conformed the law to the standard assumption that on-the-job injuries are a matter for the workers' compensation system (57 Cal. App. 4th 702, 708) .

[d] "Hirer" May Be Owner, Lessee or General Contractor

In Lopez v. University Partners (1997) 54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 63 Cal. Rptr. 2d 359 , a property owner leased a property, and the lessee contracted with an excavating company to excavate and remove underground storage tanks on the leased premises. The plaintiff was working for his employer in an excavation pit when the walls of the pit collapsed. The plaintiff suedthe property owner as well as the lessee for personal injuries he sustained as a result of the collapse. The trial court concluded that both defendants were not liable to the plaintiff because under Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , an owner who hires an independent contractor cannot be held vicariously liable under the peculiar risk doctrine for injuries suffered on the job by the contractor's employees. The issue on appeal was whether Privette applied in an action against a lessee rather than an owner of the construction site where the lessee was acting as a general contractor at the site.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that because the plaintiff was unable to show the existence of a triable issue of fact as to the applicability of Privette, the plaintiff could not recover under the peculiar risk doctrine as a matter of law (54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1125) . The plaintiff argued that Privette did not bar his action against lessee because it did not hire the excavation company as an "owner" of the construction site, but rather as a general contractor. The court ruled that the holding in Privette was not limited to owners. Rather, the holding excludes from peculiar risk liability "the person who hired the contractor but did not cause the injuries." "The person who hired the contractor" could be an owner, a lessee or a general contractor. The court then stated that it need not decide whether Privette shields general contractors from liability for injuries to employees of subcontractors any less than owners, because in this case there was no admissible evidence in the record that lessee was acting as a general contractor when it hired the excavation company (54 Cal. App. 4th 1117, 1123) .

[e] Privette Bars Recovery by Employee Whether Hirer Provided for Special Precautions or Not

In Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253 , the plaintiff was working for a framing subcontractor at a housing development under construction. He was injured when a large and heavy framed wall, which he and other employees were raising, fell on him. The plaintiff sought recovery from his employer under the Workers' Compensation Act. He also sued the defendant, the project's owner and general contractor, alleging that raising the wall created a peculiar risk of injury for which the defendant should have required the subcontractor to take special precautions. The defendant moved for summary judgment, asserting that the plaintiff's action was barred under the Supreme Court's decision in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , holding that a person who hires an independent contractor may not be held liable under the doctrine of peculiar risk for an on-the-job injury to an employee of that contractor. For discussion of Privette, see § 100A.45[3][a]. The trial court entered summary judgment for the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed.

The plaintiff argued that Privette had eliminated peculiar risk liability for employees of independent contractors only in actions based on Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416, but that Privette had no effect on an action such as his, which was brought under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 413. The plaintiff's argument rested on the distinction some courts and commentators have drawn between these two Restatement sections, characterizing the liability under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 413 as "direct" liability, while describing the liability under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416 as "vicarious" liability. The Supreme Court found that this distinction was misleading, for liability under these sections was neither purely direct nor purely vicarious (18 Cal. 4th 253, 264) . Under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416, a person who hires a contractor to do inherently dangerous work is subject to liability for harm caused by a contractor's failure to take special precautions, even though the hirer has provided for such precautions in the contract or otherwise. Because the hirer's liability under this section flows from the independent contractor's negligent failure to take special precautions in performing the inherently dangerous work, the hirer's liability is sometimes referred to as "vicarious liability." Under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 413, a person who hires a contractor to do work that imposes a peculiar unreasonable risk of harm to others unless special precautions are taken, is subject to liability for harm caused by the absence of such precautions. Because this section rests the liability of the hirer on his or her omission to provide for special precautions in the contract or in some other manner, it is sometimes described as a rule of "direct" liability.

Ultimately, the Supreme Court held that contrary to the plaintiff's assertion, its decision in Privette barred employees of a hired contractor who are injured by the contractor's negligence from seeking recovery against the hiring person, irrespective of whether recovery was sought under the theory of peculiar risk set forth in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416 or 413 (18 Cal. 4th 253, 267) . In so holding, the Court disapproved an earlier court of appeals case, Owens v. Giannetta-Heinrich Constr. Co. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1662 , which had incorrectly interpreted its decision in Privette, as applying only to the theory of peculiar risk described in Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416 (18 Cal. 4th 253, 270 fn. 5).

The Court's decision was premised on the policy considerations stated in Privette; that it was illogical and unfair that a landowner or other person who hired an independent contractor should have greater liability for the independent contractor's negligence towards the contractor's employees than the independent contractor whose liability was limited to providing workers' compensation coverage. Imposing on the hirer a liability greater than that incurred by the independent contractor (the party with the greatest and most direct fault) was, in the opinion of the Court, equallyunfair and illogical whether the hirer's liability was premised on the theory of Restatement (Second) of Torts § 416 or 413 (18

Cal. 4th 253, 270) .

[f] Hirer Not Liable for Injury to Contractor's Employee for Failing to Exercise General Supervisory Power Over Safety

In Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 , the plaintiff was the widow of the decedent, who was working as the employee of an independent contractor hired by the California Department of Transportation (Caltrans) to construct an overpass. The decedent was killed when he attempted to swing the boom on the crane he was operating without having the outriggers extended. He had retracted the outriggers to allow other vehicles to pass, and the weight of the boom caused the crane to topple when the decedent tried to swing it without re-extending the outriggers. The plaintiff sued Caltrans on the theory that it had negligently exercised the authority to control safety at the construction site that it had retained when it hired the contractor. Caltrans successfully moved for summary judgment on the grounds that a suit against the hirer of an independent contractor by an employee of the contractor for negligent exercise of retained control was barred by the California Supreme Court's decisions in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 [see § 100A.45[3][a]], and Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253 [see § 100A.45[3][g]]. The plaintiff appealed, the court of appeal reversed, and the defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal, holding that the hirer of an independent contractor is not liable to the employee of a contractor merely because the hirer retained control over safety conditions at a work site. Instead, liability may only be imposed if a hirer's exercise of retained control affirmatively contributes to the employee's injuries (27 Cal. 4th 198, 202) . The Court first reviewed its prior decisions in Privette, Toland, and Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096 [see § 100A.45[3][g]]. The Court then reviewed the approaches taken by courts in other jurisdictions to the question of whether § 414 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts, which formed the basis for the plaintiff's theory of liability based on failure to use reasonable care in exercising control over work site safety, applies if the injured party is an employee of an independent contractor. Although the Court noted that the California court of appeal had taken different approaches in separate decisions, it agreed with the approach taken in Kinney v. CSB Constr., Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 28, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594 . The Court concluded that imposing tort liability on the hirer of an independent contractor only if the hirer's conduct has affirmatively contributed to the injuries of the contractor's employee is consistent with the rationale of its earlier decisions, because the liability of the hirer in such a case is not vicarious or derivative in the sense that it derives from the act or omission of the hired contractor. Instead, the liability of the hirer is direct in a much stronger sense of that term (27 Cal. 4th 198, 211-212) . Applying this rule to the facts before it, the Court concluded that summary judgment for the defendant was proper. Although Caltrans may have permitted traffic to use the overpass while the crane was being operated, Caltrans did not direct the crane operator to retract his outriggers to permit traffic to pass. Therefore, even if Caltrans may have been aware of the decedent's unsafe practice, this did not constitute the type of affirmative contribution that could support liability (27 Cal. 4th 198, 214-215) .

In Kinney v. CSB Constr., Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 28, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594 , the plaintiff was a construction worker who fell from scaffolding at a construction site. He received workers' compensation benefits from his employer, and then brought suit against the general contractor of the project, alleging that the general contractor negligently failed to require the plaintiff's employer, a subcontractor on the project, to provide adequate protection against falls. The contract between the general contractor and the property owner had imposed on the general contractor the sole and complete responsibility for working conditions and safety on the project. However, the subcontract between the general contractor and the plaintiff's employer required the subcontractor to perform all obligations owed by the general contractor to the owner to the extent that such obligations applied to the subcontractor's work, and that contract also required the subcontractor to furnish workers' compensation coverage. The parties agreed for purposes of the defendant's summary judgment motion that the general contractor had the right to order any safety means or measures it considered appropriate at the site, although the site superintendent did not recall ever actually directing the plaintiff's employer or any other subcontractors on that particular building site to alleviate an unsafe condition. The trial court granted summary judgment for the general contractor, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court recognized that under Restatement (Second) of Torts § 414, a hirer of an independent contractor may be liable for injury to another if the hirer retains control over any part of the work and fails to exercise that control with reasonable care. The court also recognized that there would be at least a triable issue of fact as to whether the defendant's conduct triggered application of that rule if the injured party had been a stranger to the construction work, rather than an employee of a subcontractor (87 Cal. App. 4th 28, 33) . However, after reviewing the holdings and rationales of the California Supreme Court in Privette and Toland, the court of appeal concluded that the plaintiff, the employee of a subcontractor who provided workers' compensation benefits, could not sue the hirer (in this case, the general contractor) under the facts of this case. The court held that a general contractor is not liable for aninjury to the employee of a hired subcontractor if the sole factual basis for the claim is that the general contractor failed to exercise a general supervisory power to require the subcontractor to correct an unsafe procedure or condition of the subcontractor's own making, at least in the absence of evidence that the contractor's own conduct contributed in any way to the subcontractor's negligent performance, such as through direction, induced reliance, or other affirmative conduct. The court noted that the fairness rationale at the core of those Supreme Court decisions applied equally to preclude the imposition of liability on a hirer for the mere failure to exercise a general supervisory power to prevent the creation or continuation of a hazardous practice, if that liability would exceed the liability imposed on the party who created the hazard, the injured plaintiff's immediate employer (87 Cal. App. 4th 28, 36) .

[g] Privette Bars Recovery by Injured Employee for Negligent Hiring of Contractor

In Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096 , the plaintiffs were the surviving wife and children of the decedent, who was an employee of an independent contractor. The decedent was killed on the job when his tractor rolled over as he was driving over a large mound of manure in a corral owned by the defendants, who had hired the contractor to haul away the manure. The plaintiffs sued the defendants, alleging in part that they were negligent in hiring the contractor without determining whether the decedent was qualified to operate the tractor safely. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment. The plaintiffs appealed, limiting their appeal to the issue of negligent hiring. The court of appeal reversed the trial court, and the defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and held that an employee of an independent contractor who is injured on the job cannot sue the hirer of the contractor for negligence in hiring the contractor. After reviewing the Court's earlier rulings in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 , and Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253 , the Court reviewed the language of § 411 of Restatement (Second) of Torts, which articulates the general rule imposing liability on an employer for physical harm to third persons caused by the negligent hiring of a contractor who is not competent or careful. The Court concluded that the reference in § 411 to third persons did not include employees of the independent contractor. None of the illustrations supporting the section involve injuries to an employee of the contractor, and a tentative draft of the Restatement specifically stated that reference to "third persons" did not include employees of the contractor (25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1241) . The Court then concluded that, although in some sense the employer is being sued for the employer's own negligence, imposing liability under those circumstances would really be a form of vicarious liability, because the injury to the employee is actually caused by the negligent act or omission of the contractor primarily responsible for the details of the employee's work. Because the contractor would be shielded from tort liability by the exclusivity of workers' compensation, the hirer of the contractor should not be exposed to any greater liability (25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1244) . Moreover, allowing the injured employee to recover tort damages for what is essentially the failure to provide a safe workplace would provide a windfall to the employees of an independent contractor that is unavailable to the injured employees of other types of employers (25 Cal. 4th 1235, 1245) .

[h] Contractor's Employee Cannot Sue Hirer Even If Contractor Fails to Provide Workers' Compensation Coverage

In Lopez v. C.G.M. Dev., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 , the plaintiff was injured while working on a commercial construction project as an employee of an independent contractor hired by the general contractor to frame a roof. Despite a legal obligation to do so, the independent contractor failed to provide workers' compensation insurance for its employees, including the plaintiff. The plaintiff sued the property owner for negligence, alleging that the owner maintained dangerous working conditions at the site and failed to provide safety equipment. The owner successfully moved for summary judgment and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After reviewing the relevant California Supreme Court rulings governing the application of the peculiar risk doctrine if the injured party is an employee of an independent contractor, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that he could sue the owner because his employer failed to provide workers' compensation coverage. The court noted that although the employee could file suit against his employer, because the employer did not provide coverage, the principles of equity and public policy that underlie the peculiar risk doctrine would not be served by allowing the plaintiff to sue the property owner, because this would penalize the owner for the subcontractor's wrongdoing (101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 444-445) . The court also noted that the property owner was under no obligation to ascertain whether or not the subcontractor provided workers' compensation coverage (101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 445) . Finally, the court held that the plaintiff was in error in arguing that he was not covered by workers' compensation, because the Uninsured Employers Fund provides coverage to employees if the employer fails to do so (101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 445) .

[i] Hirer's Violation of Nondelegable Duty Must Affirmatively Contribute to Employee's Injury

In Park v. Burlington N. Santa Fe Ry. Co. (2003) 108 Cal. App. 4th 595, 133 Cal. Rptr. 2d 757 , the plaintiff was the employee of a hazardous waste disposal company who was injured when a sealed drum of batteries exploded. The batteries had been picked up by the disposal company several days earlier from a railroad company, which had an ongoing contract with the disposal company to dispose of the batteries. Although the railroad company left the batteries for pickup packed in plastic totes, the disposal company employee in charge of the pickup repacked the batteries into 55-gallon drums. Although the battery leads would normally have been removed prior to packing the batteries into sealed drums, the leads were not removed because the employee in charge of pickup was in a hurry on that particular day. This employee then signed a hazardous waste manifest on behalf of the railroad company, as he was authorized to do, certifying that the batteries were safe for transport. Several days later, because the leads were not removed before the batteries were packed into sealed drums, one of the drums exploded, injuring the plaintiff. The plaintiff collected workers' compensation benefits from his employer, but brought suit against the railroad company. At trial, the jury apportioned 33 percent of the fault to the railroad company and 67 percent to the plaintiff's employer, and it awarded the plaintiff $1.7 million in damages. Because the plaintiff's employer was not liable for damages due to the exclusive remedy doctrine of the workers' compensation law, the railroad company was liable for the entire damages award. The railroad company appealed, arguing that under the doctrine of Privette v. Superior Court and its progeny, it was not liable to the injured employee of an independent contractor that it had hired.

The court of appeal agreed and reversed the judgment. The court first held that under the relevant federal statutes and rules governing hazardous waste disposal, the railroad had a nondelegable duty to see that the hazardous waste that it generated was disposed of properly (108 Cal. App. 4th 595). According to the court, however, that conclusion did not end the inquiry. Under the holding of Hooker v. Department of Transportation [see § 100A.45[3][f]], the plaintiff was still required to prove that the railroad company's conduct affirmatively contributed to the plaintiff's injuries. The court held that the plaintiff had failed to do so. The undisputed evidence showed that the railroad company had packed the batteries into plastic totes, which posed no danger of explosion even with the battery leads attached, and that an employee of the disposal company created the danger by packing the batteries into sealed drums without removing the leads. It was this conduct by the plaintiff's own employer that violated federal regulations and was the clear cause of the plaintiff's injuries. Therefore, the court held that the jury's finding that the railroad was a legal cause of the plaintiff's injuries was not supported by the evidence (108 Cal. App. 4th 595, 610-611) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that liability could be imposed on the railroad company under an agency theory. The plaintiff argued that because the railroad company had authorized the disposal company employee to sign the manifest certifying the batteries safe for transport, the disposal company was acting as an agent of the railroad company when it picked up the batteries. The court concluded that any agency, if it existed under the facts, extended only to the signing of the manifesto, not to the negligent packing of the drums. Because the negligent packing was the cause of the injuries, the plaintiff still failed to satisfy the Hooker requirement that the hirer's conduct affirmatively contribute to the plaintiff's injuries (108 Cal. App. 4th 595, 611-614) .

[j] Agent of Hirer Protected to Same Extent as Hirer

In Ruiz v. Herman Weissker, Inc. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 641 , the plaintiffs were the survivors of a man who was electrocuted while working for an independent contractor to replace insulators on a utility company's power line, apparently because he removed his grounding cable before completing his work. Although the contract between the utility company and the decedent's employer placed on the decedent's employer the responsibility for work details and the safety of the workers, the utility company also had hired a contract administrator with responsibility for overseeing safety and contract compliance. The plaintiffs sued the utility company and the contract administrator. The trial court granted summary judgment for the contract administrator, finding no evidence that this defendant had done anything to affirmatively contribute to the decedent's death. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court agreed that although the plaintiffs were trying to hold an agent of the hirer liable, and the Supreme Court's earlier cases dealt with the liability of the hirer itself, this distinction was insignificant and the logic of those earlier cases still applied. Therefore, to hold the contract administrator liable, the plaintiffs would have to show that the contract administrator took actions that affirmatively contributed to the decedent's death. Mere retention of control over safety is insufficient, unless the defendant promised to take specific safety measures and failed to do so (130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 61-62) . The plaintiffs also argued that the agent could be held liable because the hirer had a nondelegable duty to provide a safe workplace, but the court rejected this argument, given the absence of authority for imposing liability on an agent if the nondelegable duty is imposed on the principal (130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 64) . Finally, the court held that the evidence could not support a finding that the agent was directly liable either because it exercised its retained control over safety or because it failed to undertake adequate rescue operations (130 Cal. App. 4th 52, 66-67) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Peculiar Risk Doctrine Not Applicable to Injured Employee of Independent Contractor

In Zamudio v. City & County of San Francisco (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 445, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 664 , the plaintiff was the employee of a concrete subcontractor injured while working at a construction site when he fell while walking on a plywood plank resting between two concrete pouring forms. The plaintiff received workers' compensation benefits from his employer for the injury. He subsequently brought suit against the owner of the project site, the construction manager, and his employer. Summary judgment was granted for all defendants. The court of appeal affirmed. As to the claims against the owner of the site and the construction manager, the court held that, after the Supreme Court's decisions in Privette and Toland, the plaintiff had no basis for holding the owner and construction manager vicariously liable for the negligence of the plaintiff's employer (70 Cal. App. 4th 445, 450) . The court also rejected arguments that those the defendants could be held directly liable for their own negligence under the facts of the case. Assuming without directly deciding that direct liability could be imposed on the hirer of an independent contractor for an injury to an employee of the independent contractor based on the breach of a duty of care owed by the hirer by virtue of the hirer having retained control over operative details of the work being done, the court found that such control was missing in this case. Neither the fact that employees of those defendants may have participated in general workplace safety discussions, nor the fact that the site owner retained the right to inspect the work to ensure quality control, constituted sufficient control to support direct liability (70 Cal. App. 4th 445, 452-453) .

In Yanez v. United States (9th Cir. 1995) 63 F.3d 870 , the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals (construing California law) found that allegations that the contractor negligently supervised its employees (thereby causing injury to one of them) was within the exception to the peculiar risk doctrine recognized in Privette. The hirer of the contractor could not be held liable for injuries to the contractor's employee, whether the allegations were characterized as a theory of direct liability or of vicarious liability (63 F.3d 870, 872-873) . However, the court did allow the case to proceed under the exception to the peculiar risk doctrine for retention of sufficient control over the contractor [see Restatement (Second) of Torts § 414] (63 F.3d 870, 874-875) .

In Sheeler v. Greystone Homes, Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 908, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 , the plaintiffs, a masonry tile worker and his wife, brought suit against the general contractor on a home building project for an injury sustained by the worker when he slipped and fell while carrying a tile saw up a flight of stairs at a construction site. Although he could not see his feet while carrying the saw, the worker believed that he slipped on a piece of wood left on a stair by a sweeper that he saw on the site immediately before the accident. The sweeper was not identified, and there was no evidence of who employed the sweeper. The worker received workers' compensation benefits for the injury. The project superintendent overseeing the construction submitted deposition testimony that one of his general duties was to oversee safety at the construction sites. Although the superintendent testified that no one was responsible to ensure on a daily basis that the sites were safe for the next subcontractor, he abated hazards of which he was aware. He also testified that although the building was swept twice in the days before the accident, the purpose for sweeping was to facilitate painting, and not necessarily to ensure safety. The trial court granted summary judgment for the general contractor, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court first rejected the plaintiffs' argument that Privette and its progeny did not apply because the plaintiff's immediate employer was not negligent. The court noted that the plaintiff's supervisor was at the scene of the accident and allowed the plaintiff to carry the saw up the stairs unassisted, even though the saw obstructed the plaintiff's view of his feet. Moreover, the court noted that actual negligence by the plaintiff's own employer is not necessary to apply the Privette line of cases (113 Cal. App. 4th 908, 918-919) . The court then concluded that the general contractor could not be liable for the negligent exercise of retained control over safety. The on-site cleaning was done primarily to facilitate painting, not to ensure safety, and the general contractor never promised to clean up to protect safety or established a practice of doing so. In the absence of any evidence that the general contractor contributed affirmatively to the injury, that the general contractor had any knowledge of the debris that allegedly caused the injury, or that the sweeper was even employed by the general contractor, the general contractor could not be liable for the injury (113 Cal. App. 4th 908, 919-921) .

[b] Hirer Not Liable for Injury to Contractor's Employee for Failing to Exercise General Supervisory Power Over Safety

In Padilla v. Pomona College (2008) 166 Cal. App. 4th 661, 82 Cal. Rptr. 3d 869 , plaintiff was injured while employed by a subcontractor hired on a college dormitory remodeling project to demolish old cast-iron water pipes. Plaintiff had been standing on a ladder in order to demolish one old, non-pressurized pipe when a portion of the pipe came loose and fell, breaking a pressurized PVC pipe that spewed a gusher of water that knocked plaintiff off of his ladder, causing his injuries. He sued the general contractor and the premises owner, alleging negligence and premises liability based on a failure to ensure that there was no water pressure in the pipes in the area in which plaintiff was working. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants and the court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that prior to beginning work on the project, the general contractor explained to plaintiff's employer the scope of the demolition and which pipes would remain pressurized throughout in order to supply water for work purposes. The court also noted that at the time of the accident, plaintiff was using his employer's equipment and being directed in his work by his own supervisor, who apparently had earlier indicated to plaintiff that the PVC pipe that broke was one of the pipes that had been left pressurized. Moreover, the evidence indicated that plaintiff was not using the proper, standard procedures when demolishing the old pipe. The court concluded that plaintiff could not show that defendants' general retention of control over the work area, including the pressurized PVC pipe, affirmatively contributed to his injuries. Thus, under the Supreme Court's analysis in Hooker v. Department of Transportation, discussed in [3][f], above, defendants could not be held liable (166 Cal. App. 4th 661, 670-671) . The court also rejected plaintiff's argument that liability could be premised on a violation of a nondelegable duty created by 8 Cal. Code Regs. § 1735(a), which provides that utility companies must be notified and utility services controlled before starting demolition, unless it is necessary to use such services, in which case services are to be relocated or rearranged as necessary. The court held that the regulation, by its very language, did not impose a duty on any particular party, and thus could not be considered to be nondelegable. In addition, even if the regulation created a nondelegable duty, plaintiff still failed to provide evidence showing that anything defendants did that might arguably have been in violation of the regulation affirmatively contributed to plaintiff's injury (166 Cal. App. 4th 661, 673-674) .

In Madden v. Summit View, Inc. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 81 Cal. Rptr. 3d 601 , the employee of an electrical subcontractor on a residential construction project was injured when he fell off of an elevated patio that had no railing. The employee sued the general contractor for premises liability for failing to place a railing on the patio during construction. The trial court granted summary judgment for the general contractor and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that under the Supreme Court's analysis in Hooker v. Department of Transportation, discussed in [3][f], above, plaintiff was required not merely to prove that the general contractor retained control over safety at the site, but that the general contractor affirmatively contributed to the plaintiff's injury. The court noted that the general contractor had no control over the methods by which the electrical subcontractor performed its work and supplied none of the materials. Even if a jury could find that the general contractor retained control over safety conditions, the court concluded that there was no triable issue of fact as to whether the general contractor affirmatively contributed to plaintiff's injury. There was no evidence that the general contractor or its agents directed that no guardrail be placed along the open side of the patio or that it acted to prevent such a railing. Moreover, the absence of a guardrail was open and obvious to all of the subcontractors and it was established that all of the workers had been using the patio as a walkway and platform, including plaintiff. Finally, it was undisputed that plaintiff made his own decisions as to how to perform his work and no one else was present at the time of plaintiff's accident (165 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1276-1278) . Although plaintiff also argued that the general contractor could be liable for failing to provide a railing under 8 Cal. Code Regs. § 1621, the court noted that the regulation only requires railings on surfaces that are at least 7 and one-half feet or more above the ground. While the patio ranged from 2 to 8 feet in height above the ground, plaintiff admitted that he did not know the height of the patio at the point he fell. Thus, the court concluded that plaintiff could not prove that any violation of that regulation caused his injury (165 Cal. App. 4th 1267, 1280-1281) .

In Millard v. Biosources, Inc. (2007) 156 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 177 , plaintiff was injured when he fell through the ceiling while working in an attic for a heating and air conditioning subcontractor. Alleging that he fell after losing his balance when the lights in the attic went out, plaintiff sued the general contractor because the contractor retained control of the work project and failed to exercise control over safety at the site. The court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment granted in favor of the general contractor. The court held that plaintiff failed to create a triable issue of fact as to whether the general contractor affirmatively contributed to plaintiff's injuries. The evidence established that the general contractor did not control the means and methods of plaintiff's work and no personnel of the general contractor were present at the work site when the accident occurred. While an agent of the general contractor had tripped a circuit breaker earlier in the day that had caused the attic lights to go out briefly, there was no evidence tying the earlier incident to the plaintiff's accident (156 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1348-1349) . The court also rejected plaintiff's argument that liability could be imposed on the general contractor for violating OSHA regulations. The court concluded that under Lab. Code § 6304.5, safety regulations may be admissible in actions brought by employees of subcontractors against general contractors that retain control of safety conditions only if the general contractor affirmatively contributed to the employee's injuries. Because the court had already concluded that there was no evidence that the general contractor affirmatively contributed to the injuries, there was no basis for imposing liability. The court also noted in any event that plaintiff had failed to plead negligence per se, thus precluding him from relying on the violation of OSHA regulations to establish that the generalcontractor had breached a duty of care owed to plaintiff (156 Cal. App. 4th 1338, 1352-1353) .

In Tilley v. CZ Master Ass'n (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 464 , the plaintiff was employed as a security guard by a security firm that was hired by a homeowners' association to provide security for a gated residential community. After the plaintiff was attacked by two youths who were attending a residential party, the plaintiff sued the association for failing to take steps to prevent the assault by controlling youth parties within the community. The trial court granted summary judgment for the association, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that the undisputed evidence demonstrated that the security firm was hired largely to control access to the community and to observe and reportproblems. The association neither required nor expected its unarmed security personnel to confront potentially violent persons, and thus it could not be liable for injuries sustained when the plaintiff decided to go beyond the scope of his duties. Although the homeowners' association retained control over certain aspects of the work site--specifically, the association's residential property--the security firm controlled the details of the plaintiff's work, and the plaintiff answered to and took orders from his employer, not from the association. Moreover, even assuming that the association retained control over certain aspects of the plaintiff's work site, nothing that the homeowners' association did affirmatively contributed to the plaintiff's injuries. The association did not have advance notice of when parties would be held, and the mere failure to limit residential parties was an insufficient basis to hold the association liable (131 Cal. App. 4th 464, 484-486) .

[c] Contractor's Employee Cannot Sue Hirer Even if Contractor Fails to Provide Workers' Compensation Coverage

In Bell v. Greg Agee Constr., Inc. (2004) 125 Cal. App. 4th 453, 23 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33 , a gust of wind caused a framed wall to fall on the plaintiff, a construction worker. The plaintiff's employer, a roofing subcontractor, admitted that the wall was not properly braced. In addition to suing his employer, who did not provide workers' compensation coverage on the date of the injury, the plaintiff also sued the general contractor for the project, seeking to impose liability on the basis of the peculiar risk doctrine. The trial court granted summary judgment for the general contractor and the court of appeal affirmed. The sole issue on appeal was whether, under Privette and its progeny, the general contractor could be liable under the peculiar risk doctrine because the injured worker's employer did not provide workers' compensation coverage, even if the general contractor did not affirmatively contribute to causing the injury. The court of appeal, agreeing with the reasoning of Lopez v. C.G.M. Dev., Inc. (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 430, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 227 [see § 100A.45[3][h]], held that the general contractor could not be liable. The court noted that the plaintiff was not prevented from seeking compensation from the Uninsured Employers Fund, and that the plaintiff had in fact filed a claim with the Fund. Because this compensation was available for the injury, the court saw no social utility in imposing liability on the non-negligent general contractor (125 Cal. App. 4th 453, 466) . The court also pointed to support in language from Privette and subsequent Supreme Court opinions suggesting that the ability to recover from the Fund if an employer is uninsured or insolvent was sufficient to preclude application of the peculiar risk doctrine (125 Cal. App. 4th 453, 466-467) . The court also rejected various policy arguments advanced by the plaintiff, including the argument that the peculiar risk doctrine should be applied to the general contractor because the general contractor had the right to seek indemnity from the plaintiff's employer. The court noted that the plaintiff also had the right to seek recovery directly from his uninsured employer (125 Cal. App. 4th 453, 467) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.45A

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.45A Opposing Contention That Employer Is Vicariously Liable to Third Party Based on Torts of Independent Contractor--Independent Contractor Hired by Independent Contractor Cannot Recover Under Peculiar Risk Doctrine

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT, WHO HIRED THE INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR WHO HIRED THE PLAINTIFF, FOR THE BREACH OF A DUTY OF CARE OWED BY THE PLAINTIFF'S HIRER, EVEN THOUGH THE PLAINTIFF WAS HIRED AS AN INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR RATHER THAN AS AN EMPLOYEE.

Privette* Doctrine Applicable to Injured Party Who Is Independent Contractor Rather Than Employee. The Privette doctrine, which precludes application of the peculiar risk doctrine to an injury sustained by the employee of an independent contractor, applies even if the injured party is an independent contractor, rather than actually an employee, of another contractor (Michael v. Denbeste Transp., Inc. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1093, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is vicariously liable under the peculiar risk doctrine for an injury sustained by an independent contractor who was hired by an independent contractor that was hired by the defendant. The basis for the opposition is that the Privette doctrine, discussed in § 100A.45, applies equally if the injured worker is hired as an independent contractor, rather than as an actual employee.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise this substantive issue. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the injured party was injured as a result of the negligence of his or her hirer, and not as a result of the affirmative negligence of the defendant.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privette Doctrine Applicable to Injured Party Who Is Independent Contractor Rather Than Employee

In Michael v. Denbeste Transp., Inc. (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777 , the plaintiff, a self-employed truck driver, was hired as an independent contractor by a hazardous waste hauler subcontractor who had been hired to help remove hazardous waste from a work site. The plaintiff fell 10 feet from a trailer while trying to install a tarp over the load that he was towing. This trailer was owned by the hazardous waste hauler subcontractor who hired the plaintiff, and although the subcontractor provided brief instructions to the plaintiff on using the trailer, the subcontractor did not discuss the intricacies of unrolling the tarp over the trailer load. The plaintiff sued the subcontractor, as well as the decontamination general contractor and the transportation contractor that hired the hazardous waste hauler subcontractor who had hired the plaintiff. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the general contractor and the transportation contractor on the grounds that, regardless of whether the plaintiff was an employee of the hazardous waste hauler subcontractor or an independent contractor, the Privette doctrine applied to preclude liability under the peculiar risk doctrine. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment as to those defendants. Under the Privette doctrine [see § 100A.45], the hirer of an independent contractor is not generally liable for an injury to an employee of the independent contractor unless the hirer's own conduct affirmatively contributes to the injury. The court of appeal agreed that the Privette doctrine applies even if the injured party is an independent contractor, rather than actually an employee, of another contractor (137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1093) . The court, concluding that this result was consistent with the policy concerns underlying the Privette doctrine, noted that the lack of workers' compensation coverage for independent contractors was not dispositive and recognized that it was reasonable for hirers to anticipate that an independent contractor would insure against the risk of injury associated with the work and factor the cost of this insurance into the price of the hiring contract. In fact, the contract under which the plaintiff was hired specifically provided that the plaintiff was required to carry personal injury liability insurance and workers' compensation insurance (137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1094-1095) . The court noted that the decontamination general contractor and the transportation contractor had delegated responsibility to the hazardous waste hauler subcontractor for the safety of that subcontractor's personnel. The court concluded that the liability of a hirer of an independent contractor for an injury sustained by a person hired by the independent contractor should not depend on whether the injured person was hired as an actual employee or hired as an independent contractor (137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1095-1096) . Then, applying the Privette doctrine to the facts of the case, the court held that neither the decontamination general contractor nor the transportation contractor took any action that affirmatively contributed to the plaintiff's injury. Any mere failure to intervene in the procedures or practices of the hazardous waste hauler subcontractor was an insufficient basis for imposing liability. Therefore, these two defendants could not be held liable (137 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1096-1097) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.46

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.46 Supporting Contention That Hirer of Independent Contractor Is Directly Liable to Employee of Independent Contractor for Hirer's Own Independent Fault

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S INJURIES WERE THE RESULT OF DEFENDANT'S OWN NEGLIGENT CONDUCT.

A. Hirer Exercising Retained Control Liable for Affirmatively Contributing to Employee's Injury. Liability may be imposed on the hirer of an independent contractor who retains control over safety at a work site if the hirer's exercise of retained control affirmatively contributes to the injuries of an employee of the independent contractor (Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 202, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081).

B. Hirer Who Provides Unsafe Equipment May Be Liable. The hirer of an independent contractor may be liable for an injury to an employee of the contractor if the hirer's negligent provision of unsafe equipment to the contractor affirmatively contributes to the injury (McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 219, 222, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094).

C. Hirer May Be Liable For Failure to Warn of Hazardous Condition. A landowner or occupier of land who hires an independent contractor may be liable for an injury suffered by the contractor's employee if: (1) the hirer knew, or should have known, of a latent or concealed preexisting hazardous condition on the property; (2) the contractor did not know of, and could not reasonably have discovered, the hazardous condition; and (3) the hirer failed to warn the contractor of the hazardous condition [Kinsman v. Unocal Corp. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 659, 673-674, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495, 123 P.3d 931] .

[Optional] D. Breach of Regulatory Duty May Support Liability. A hirer may be held liable to an employee of an independent contractor if the hirer breaches a duty imposed on the hirer by regulation and the breach affirmatively contributes to the employee's injury (Barclay v. Jesse M. Lange Distrib., Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 298-301, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242).

[Optional] E. Public Entity Hirer of Independent Contractor May Be Liable for Exercise of Retained Control. Under Government Code Section 815.4, a public entity hirer of an independent contractor can be held liable for an injury to an employee of that independent contractor if the employee's injury was proximately caused by a tortious act or omission of the independent contractor and the public entity's negligent exercise of retained control over safety affirmatively contributed to the injury (McCarty v. Department of Transportation (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 977-979, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the hirer of an independent contractor may be liable for injuries to an employee of the independent contractor for the hirer's own negligence. Depending on the nature of the hirer's negligence, the applicable paragraph should be used to support the contention that the hirer is liable.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise this issue. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the plaintiff was an employee of the independent contractor hired by the defendant and that the injury to the plaintiff arose out of the defendant's negligence.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of the topic covered by these points, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 248, Employer's Liability for Employee's Torts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda opposing the contention that the hirer of an independent contractor is vicariously liable to an employee of the contractor based on the negligence of the contractor, see § 100A.45.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Hirer Exercising Retained Control Liable for Affirmatively Contributing to Employee's Injury

Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 , is discussed in § 100A.45[3][f].

[b] Hirer Who Provides Unsafe Equipment May Be Liable

In McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 219, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094 , the plaintiff was an employee of an independent contractor hired to install sound systems in the stores of a large national chain. The plaintiff was working on a platform being lifted by a forklift when the platform hit a ceiling pipe, causing the platform to disengage from the forklift and fall to the floor. The forklift, which was provided by the defendant, which asked that the contractor use the defendant's forklifts whenever possible, was supposed to have been equipped with a chain to secure the platform to the forklift, but it was not. The plaintiff's action against the defendant went to a jury, who allocated 55 percent of the fault to the contractor, 23 percent to the defendant, 15 percent to the manufacturer of the equipment, and 7 percent to the plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, and the defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the hirer of an independent contractor may be liable for an injury to an employee of the contractor, if the hirer's negligent provision of unsafe equipment to the contractor affirmatively contributes to the injury (27 Cal. 4th 219, 222) . The Court briefly reviewed its prior decisions in Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 [see § 100A.45[3][a]], Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253 [see § 100A.45[3][e]], and Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096 [see § 100A.45[3][g]]. The Court then briefly summarized its opinion in the companion case of Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 [see § 100A.45[3][f]]. Noting its conclusion in Hooker that a hirer who retains control over safety at a work site may be liable if the hirer's exercise of retained control affirmatively contributes to the employee's injuries, the Court held that the same principle applied to the case before it. If the hirer of an independent contractor negligently furnishes unsafe equipment to the contractor, which then affirmatively contributes to an injury to an employee of that contractor, the hirer may be liable for the consequences of the hirer's own negligence (27 Cal. App. 4th 218, 225) . The Court then affirmed the judgment in the case, concluding that the jury was entitled to apportion a share of liability to the defendant under the facts. The defendant did not actually require that the contractor use the defendant's forklifts, but given the economic importance to the contractor of the defendant's business and the practical difficulty of getting a replacement forklift during the night when the injury occurred, the contractor had little real choice but to use the defendant's forklift (27 Cal. 4th 219, 225-226) .

[c] Hirer May Be Liable For Failure to Warn of Hazardous Condition

The plaintiff in Kinsman v. Unocal Corp. (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 659, 36 Cal. Rptr. 3d 495, 123 P.3d 931 , was exposed to airborne asbestos in the 1950s while working at an oil refinery owned by the defendant. The plaintiff was working there as an employee of an independent contractor hired by the defendant to build and dismantle scaffolding used by other trades. Years later, the plaintiff developed mesothelioma, an asbestos-induced malignant cancer of the lungs. The plaintiff sued the defendant as well as an array of manufacturers and distributors of asbestos-containing products. Ultimately, however, the case went to trial against the defendant alone, and the jury found the defendant liable on a premises liability theory, concluding that the defendant had been negligent in managing the areas where the plaintiff had worked. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the verdict, holding that the defendant could not be liable for an injury suffered by an independent contractor's employee unless it had affirmatively contributed to the injury. The California Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court began its analysis with a review of the evolution of the Privette doctrine, which deals with the liability of a hirer of an independent contractor for injuries suffered by the contractor's employees [see Privette v. Superior Court (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 689, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72, 854 P.2d 721 (discussed in § 100A.45[3][a]); see also McKown v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 219, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 868, 38 P.3d 1094 (discussed in § 100A.46[3][b]); Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 (discussed in § 100A.45[3][f]); Camargo v. Tjaarda Dairy (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 1235, 108 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 25 P.3d 1096 (discussed in § 100A.45[3][g]); Toland v. Sunland Hous. Group, Inc. (1998) 18 Cal. 4th 253 (discussed in § 100A.45[3][e])]. The Court suggested that a useful way to view these cases is in terms of delegation. At common law, if a hirer delegated a task to an independent contractor, the hirer effectively delegated responsibility for performing that task safely, and liability for a breach of that responsibility was therefore assigned to the contractor. For various policy reasons, courts have severely limited the hirer's ability to delegate responsibility and escape liability. However, in Privette and its progeny, the Supreme Court held that, principally because of the availability of workers' compensation, the policy reasons for limiting delegation do not apply to the hirer's ability to delegate to an independent contractor the duty to provide the contractor's employees with a safe working environment. Nonetheless, if the hirer does not fully delegate the task of providing a safe working environment, but in some manner actively participates in how the job is done, and if that participation affirmatively contributes to the employee's injury, the hirer may be liable in tort to the employee (37 Cal. 4th. 659, 667-672) .

Under general principles of premises liability, if the occupier of land is aware of a concealed condition that, in the absence of precautions, involves an unreasonable risk of harm to those coming in contact with it, and is aware that a person on the premises is about to come in contact with it, a trier of fact can reasonably conclude that a failure to warn or to repair the condition constitutes negligence [see Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 119, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561] . In this case, the Supreme Court used its "delegation" analysis to explain how these general principles apply if a landowner hires an independent contractor whose employee is injured by a hazardous condition on the premises.

Generally, the hirer delegates to the contractor responsibility for supervising the job, including responsibility for looking after employee safety. If there is a known safety hazard on a hirer's premises that can be addressed through reasonable safety precautions by the independent contractor, the hirer generally delegates the responsibility to take those precautions to the contractor and is not liable to the contractor's employee if the contractor fails to do so. However, if the hazard is concealed from the contractor, but known to the hirer, a different rule must apply. A hirer cannot effectively delegate to the contractor responsibility for the safety of the contractor's employees if the hirer fails to disclose critical information needed to fulfill that responsibility. In such a case, the hirer would be liable to the contractor's employee if the employee's injury is attributable to an undisclosed hazard. The hirer's liability in these circumstances would be derived from the hirer's own negligence. In other words, because the landowner/hirer delegates the responsibility of employee safety to the contractor, the teaching of Privette and its progeny is that a hirer has no duty to act to protect the employee. If the contractor fails in that responsibility, the landowner/hirer is not liable, because this liability would essentially be derivative or vicarious. However, if the landowner/hirer knows or should know of a concealed hazard on its premises, then under ordinary premises liability principles, the landowner/hirer may be liable for a resultant injury to those employees (37 Cal. 4th, 659, 673-674) .

The Court concluded, therefore, that a hirer of an independent contractor may be liable under a premises liability theory for an injury suffered by the contractor's employee if: (1) the hirer knew, or should have known, of a latent or concealed preexisting hazardous condition on the hirer's property; (2) the contractor did not know of, and could not reasonably have discovered, the condition; and (3) the hirer failed to warn the contractor of the condition (37 Cal. 4th 659, 675) .

The Court noted that its holding does not apply to a hazard created by the independent contractor, which that contractor necessarily is or should be aware of. Also, the Court expressly left open the question of landowner liability if the employee is on the premises but not working--for example, if the employee is on a part of the premises other than the job site (37 Cal. 4th 659, 674-675 ns. 2, 3).

The jury in this case had not been properly instructed that the hirer would not be liable if the hazardous condition was reasonably discoverable by the independent contractor. Accordingly, the Supreme Court remanded the case for a new trial on the question of whether the plaintiff's employer knew or should have known of the hazard posed by the airborne asbestos (37 Cal. 4th 659, 683) .

[d] Breach of Regulatory Duty May Support Liability

In Barclay v. Jesse M. Lange Distrib., Inc. (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 242 , the plaintiff suffered serious burns in a fuel tank explosion while working for his employer, which had been hired to clean and remove fuel tanks at a gasoline bulk plant facility. The trial court granted summary judgment for the facility on the grounds that it could not be liable for injuries to an employee of an independent contractor hired to perform hazardous work on the property. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment. The court noted that the Supreme Court's analysis in Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 [see § 100A.45[3][f]], did not preclude imposing direct liability on a hirer on a theory other than the retained control theory discussed in that case (129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 294) . The court then noted that § 424 of the Restatement (Second) of Torts provided that if specific precautions are required by statute or regulation for the safety of others, the party on whom that duty is imposed may be liable for injuries to those other persons if the party breaches that duty (129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 295) . Consistent with the conclusion in Hooker that a hirer may be directly liable if that hirer affirmatively contributes to the injuries to an employee of an independent contractor, the court held that a hirer may be liable if the hirer breaches a duty imposed on the hirer by regulation and if that breach affirmatively contributes to the employee's injury. The court agreed with the plaintiff that a state regulation, 24 Cal. Code Regs. § 7904.4.9.2, specifically imposed a duty on petroleum bulk plant facilities to provide fire extinguishers within 75 feet of likely fire areas. The plaintiff had presented evidence at the summary judgment stage that no fire extinguishers were seen in the area of the fire that injured the plaintiff, requiring a coworker to go 50 yards to get the nearest extinguisher. A doctor provided a declaration that the injuries to the plaintiff would have been less severe if the fire engulfing him had been put out sooner. Because the plant facility challenged the conclusion that the plaintiff's evidence conclusively established that there were no fire extinguishers within 75 feet, and also challenged whether that was an area where a fire was likely to occur, the court concluded that there were triable issues of fact on the plaintiff's claim that the facility breached the duty imposed by the regulation, making summary judgment inappropriate (129 Cal. App. 4th 281, 298-301) .

[e] Public Entity Hirer of Independent Contractor May Be Liable for Exercise of Retained Control

In McCarty v. Department of Transportation (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 777 , plaintiff was severely injured while employed as a heavy equipment operator for a general contractor hired by Caltrans to build a freeway extension. At the time of injury, plaintiff was using an excavator to remove a utility pole from the freeway right-of-way when the pole fell on the roof of his excavator. The freeway right-of-way belonged to Caltrans, although the pole belonged to a utility company, which was responsible for removing the poles. While the general contractor was in control of the workplace, Caltrans had the authority to order the contractor to stop if Caltrans knew it was doing something unsafe. However, Caltrans did not order the general contractor to stop in its attempt to remove the pole that injured plaintiff, even though Caltrans knew that the utility company had its own contractor with special equipment for removing the utility poles that the general contractor did not have. After settling with other defendants, plaintiff went to trial against Caltrans. The trial judge granted a nonsuit in favor of defendant on plaintiff's cause of action for respondeat superior liability, and the jury found in favor of defendant on plaintiff's theory that defendant was liable for maintaining a dangerous condition of public property. However, the jury found in favor of plaintiff on his theory that defendant was liable for its exercise of retained control over safety at the workplace. The trial court denied defendant's motion for JNOV, although it granted a partial new trial on the basis that the jury had not been properly instructed on the retained control theory. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendant's appeal was based on the argument that as a public entity, it could not be held liable for negligently exercising retained control over safety at the work site absent a statutory basis for imposing liability. While agreeing that a public entity cannot be held liable under general negligence principles without a statutory basis, the court of appeal held that Gov. Code § 815.4 provided that a statutory basis for imposing liability on the public entity hirer of an independent contractor. Under Gov. Code § 815.4, a public entity is liable for an injury proximately caused by the tortious act or omission of an independent contractor to the same extent that the public entity would be subject to such liability if it were a private person. Thus, according to the court, if the employee's injury was proximately caused by a tortious act or omission of the independent contractor, and, as with a private person hirer, the public entity's negligent exercise of retained control over safety affirmatively contributed to the injury, defendant could be held liable under that statute. The court found that that statutory prerequisite of tortious conduct by the contractor was present, as the jury had allocated 42 percent of the fault to the general contractor. Thus, the court concluded that the jury could have imposed liability under Gov. Code § 815.4, even if no particular public employee was liable (164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 977-979) . However, the court affirmed the partial new trial on the retained control theory, agreeing that the trial court provided erroneous instructions to the jury. As given, the instructions allowed the jury to impose liability under a theory of retained control if Caltrans, through its actions or failure to take required actions, "contributed" to plaintiff's injury. The instructions failed to specify that liability could only be imposed on this theory if Caltrans negligently exercised its retained control so as to affirmatively contribute to plaintiff's injury (164 Cal. App. 4th 955, 984-986) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Hirer Exercising Retained Control Liable for Affirmatively Contributing to Employee's Injury

In Browne v. Turner Constr. Co. (2005) 127 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 433 , the plaintiff was an employee of a subcontractor on a building construction project. The subcontractor had been hired to install a fire sprinkler system, and the plaintiff fell nine feet from a ladder while he was attempting to install overhead sprinkler pipe. The plaintiff sued the building owner and the general contractor, alleging that they had provided hydraulic lifts and other safety equipment for use by the workers on the site, but had removed the safety equipment prior to the plaintiff's fall, causing him to resort to unsafe methods to finish his job. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants after concluding that the defendants did not affirmatively contribute to the plaintiff's injury. The court of appeal reversed. The court reasoned that a fact-finder could conclude that the defendants' act of providing safety equipment constituted a voluntary undertaking, the abrupt removal of that equipment before completion of the project constituted negligence in the performance of that undertaking, and this negligence affirmatively contributed to the plaintiff's injury. Under the Supreme Court's analysis in Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 [see § 100A.45[3][f]], this affirmative conduct could have been sufficient to impose liability on the hirer and general contractor (127 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 1345-1347) . Moreover, the court noted that the concern in Hooker and related cases was to ensure that a nonnegligent hirer was not held liable for the negligence of an independent contractor when an employee of the independent contractor was injured. In this case, there was no evidence yet on the record that any negligence on the part of the plaintiff's own employer had contributed to the injury, and there was no reason not to hold hirers liable under those circumstances for the results of their own negligence (127 Cal. App. 4th 1334, 1345-1346) .

In Ray v. Silverado Constructors (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251 , the employee of an independent contractor on a highway construction project was killed when he was struck in the head with construction materials that blew off a bridge during high winds. At the time he was struck, the decedent had stopped his vehicle to assist other employees of the independent contractor in securing other materials that had blown off the bridge. The decedent's widow filed suit against the owners of the project and the general contractor, asserting that they failed to carry out their duties of care for the work site. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, but the court of appeal reversed. After reviewing the relevant case law, including the Supreme Court's decision in Hooker v. Department of Transp. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 198, 115Cal. Rptr. 2d 853, 38 P.3d 1081 [see § 100A.45[3][f]], the court of appeal concluded that a triable issue existed as to whether the failure of the owners and the general contractor to prevent traffic from using the road under the bridge was sufficient to impose liability. The plaintiff had alleged that the defendants had been actively negligent in failing to blockade the road during the high wind conditions to prevent injuries to members of the public using it. She provided evidence that contractual provisions made the defendants responsible for traffic control, and in fact prevented the independent contractor from closing roadways without the prior written approval of the general contractor, and she also pointed to statutes that arguably supported imposing a duty of care over traffic control as well (98 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 1131-1136) . Noting triable issues with respect to breach of duty and causation, the court concluded that summary judgment was inappropriate (98 Cal. App. 4th 1120, 1136-1139) .

[b] Breach of Regulatory Duty May Support Liability

In Evard v. Southern California Edison (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 137, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 479 , plaintiff was the employee of a tree service company that was hired by the owner of a billboard to work on the billboard. While plaintiff understood that company policy required him to hook his harness at all times while he was on the billboard, he failed to do so. Plaintiff was injured when a metal pole he was using made contact with an electrical line, causing plaintiff to fall and hit the ground. Plaintiff received workers' compensation benefits, but sued the billboard owner, the power company, and other parties for his injuries. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the billboard owner, but the court of appeal reversed. The court held that the billboard owner owed a regulatory duty imposed by 8 Cal. Code Reg. § 3416(a), which generally required billboard owners to provide either guardrails or a safety line on platforms over 7 and a half feet above the ground, and that this duty was nondelegable (153 Cal. App. 4th 137, 147) . The court then concluded that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether the billboard owner breached this nondelegable regulatory duty, and if so, whether such breach affirmatively contributed to the injury to plaintiff (153 Cal. App. 4th 137, 147-148) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.47

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.47 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employer Employed Tortfeasor With Conscious Disregard of Others' Safety [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(b) BASED ON THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD ADVANCE KNOWLEDGE OF THE UNFITNESS OF THE EMPLOYEE AND EMPLOYED HIM/HER WITH A CONSCIOUS DISREGARD FOR THE RIGHTS OR SAFETY OF OTHERS.

A. Punitive Damages Standard. Punitive damages may be recovered for the sake of example and by way of punishing a defendant if the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(a)).

B. Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages for Employing Tortfeasor With Conscious Disregard for Rights and Safety of Others. An employer is liable for punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(a) based on the acts of his or her employee if the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others (Civ. Code § 3294(b); Weeks v. Baker & McKenzie (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1159-1160, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510 ; Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 915-916, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for punitive damages based on the conduct of the defendant's employee, on the grounds that the defendant had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard for the rights or safety of others.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable for punitive damages based on the conduct of his or her employee because the defendant had knowledge of the employee's unfitness and employed him or her with a conscious disregard for the rights or safety of others--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employee's conduct was oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious [Civ. Code § 3294(a); oppression, fraud, or malice must be shown by clear and convincing evidence], and that the employee was acting in a corporate or employment capacity in connection with the misconduct [College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 723-724, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 , discussed in § 100A.53]. Counsel also should demonstrate that the defendant knew of the employee's unfitness for the work but nonetheless employed or continued to employ him or her. For example, counsel could set forth facts indicating that the defendant hired the employee into a job position in which the employee necessarily would come into contact with third parties, even though the defendant knew that the employee previously had assaulted third parties [see Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 915-916, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639] . If the defendant is a corporate employer, the advance knowledge and conscious disregard must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [Civ. Code§ 3294(b)]. For an example of an argument that punitive damages may be imposed on a corporate employer, see § 100A.50.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.07[1] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages for Employing Tortfeasor With Conscious Disregard for Rights or Safety of Others

In Weeks v. Baker & McKenzie (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 510 , the plaintiff was a legal secretary who brought a sexual harassment action under Gov. Code § 12940 of the Fair Employment and Housing Act against a partner in her former law firm and against the firm itself. At trial, the jury found that the partner had sexually harassed the plaintiff and awarded compensatory damages from both the partner and the firm, as well as punitive damages of $225,000 from the partner and $6.9 million from the firm, which was reduced by the trial court to $3.5 million. In addition to other issues raised on appeal by the partner and the law firm, the firm appealed the award of punitive damages assessed against it.

The court of appeal affirmed the punitive damages award against the law firm. After reviewing the provisions and legislative history of Civ. Code § 3294(b), the court held that a finding that the employer was guilty of malice, oppression, or fraud is not required in order to justify an award of punitive damages when either the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee but employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, or the employer authorized or ratified the employee's wrongful conduct (63 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1153-1154) . The court further rejected the firm's argument that its liability for punitive damages was only vicarious, and as such the punitive damages assessed against the firm could be no greater than the punitive damages assessed against the liable employee. Since an employer's liability under Civ. Code § 3294(b) is for the employer's own wrongful conduct, the punitive damage award assessed against the employer may be greater than the award assessed against the liable employee (63 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1154-1156) . Additionally, the court rejected the firm's argument that, since the statutory liability of an employer for punitive damages based on the knowing employment of an unfit employee with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others imposes a duty on the employer to fire an unfit employee to avoid liability for punitive damages, the offending employee's conduct must rise to a level sufficient to justify termination of the employee before the employer may be liable for punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294(b). The court explained that an employer is not necessarily required to terminate the offending employee in order to escape liability for punitive damages, and in the context of the case at issue, the employer's duty was to take reasonable measures to prevent a known harasser from committing future acts of harassment (63 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1157) . Finally, the court held that there was substantial evidence to support the jury finding that the firm or a managing agent of the firm had advance knowledge that the partner was likely to sexually harass employees such as the plaintiff, and that the firm exhibited conscious disregard for the rights and safety of others by failing to take reasonable steps to prevent the partner's misconduct. The court noted that the evidence suggested that, several years before the plaintiff was assigned to work with the offending partner, it was common knowledge among members of the firm that the offending partner regularly harassed female employees, and that although the partner was occasionally warned about the misconduct, the firm allowed the misconduct to continue (63 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1159-1160) .

The factual and procedural background of Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 , is discussed in § 100A.21[3][b]. In discussing whether the defendant, a union, was liable for punitive damages based on the conduct of its employees, the court stated that while maintaining a wrongdoer in the service of the employer does not, standing alone, make the employer liable, it indicates the employer's approval of the employee's course and with other acts will make the employer liable for punitive damages. The court held that the knowledge that the defendant had of the tendencies of the employees and the fact that they had on a prior occasion beaten up another union member, the fact that even with such knowledge the defendant continued to employ them, and the oppression of the defendant with respect to the plaintiff and another union member by not dispatching them for jobs,allowed the trier of fact to assess punitive damages against the defendant (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 915-916) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.48

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.48 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employer Authorized or Ratified Tortfeasor's Conduct [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(b) BASED ON THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE DEFENDANT [AUTHORIZED or RATIFIED] THE EMPLOYEE'S WRONGFUL CONDUCT.

A. Punitive Damages Standard. Punitive damages may be recovered for the sake of example and by way of punishing a defendant if the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(a)).

B. Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages for Authorizing Employee's Conduct. An employer is liable for punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(a) based on the acts of his or her employee if the employer authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which the punitive damages are awarded (Civ. Code § 3294(b)).

[Optional] C. Form of Authorization. Authorization of an employee's tortious conduct can be shown by proof that the employee was acting within the course and scope of his or her employment and with the permission and consent of the employer (Kiseskey v. Carpenters' Trust for S. Cal. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 222, 234-235, 192 Cal. Rptr. 492 ; Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 690, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146).

[Optional] D. Form of Ratification. Ratification can be established by showing that the employer knew of the employee's tortious conduct, and implicitly or expressly approved of the conduct with such knowledge (Alhino v. Starr (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 173-174, 169 Cal. Rptr. 136 ; Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691-692, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800-802, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139).

[Optional] E. Retention of Tortfeasor May Establish Ratification. An employer's retention of the tortfeasor in employment, after the employer is advised of the employee's wrongful conduct, can establish ratification of such wrongful conduct (Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185 (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 914, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for punitive damages based on the conduct of the defendant's employee, on the grounds that the defendant authorized or ratified the conduct.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable for punitive damages based on the conduct of his or her employee because the defendant authorized or ratified the conduct--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employee's conduct was oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious [Civ. Code § 3294(a); oppression, fraud, or malice must be shown by clear and convincing evidence], and that the employee was acting in a corporate or employment capacity in connection with the misconduct [College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 723-724, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 , discussed in § 100A.53]. Counsel also should demonstrate that the defendant authorized or ratified such conduct. For example counsel could set forth facts indicating that the defendant either orally or in writing encouraged or consented to the conduct, or that the defendant knew about the wrongful conduct and expressed implicit or express approval of it after the fact, such as by failing to fully investigate the incident and failing to punish the employee [see Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801-802, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139] . If the defendant is a corporate employer, the authorization or ratification must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. For an exampleof an argument that punitive damages may be imposed on a corporate employer, see § 100A.50.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, §§ 30.07[1], 30.07[3] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Form of Authorization

In Kiseskey v. Carpenters' Trust for S. Cal. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 222, 192 Cal. Rptr. 492 , a husband and wife brought suit against a union and certain of its agents and employees for compensatory and punitive damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress after the husband suffered a heart attack following a series of telephone calls from union agents and employees threatening the husband and his family with bodily harm if he did not sign another agreement with the union. The trial court dismissed the action after sustaining the defendants' general demurrer without leave to amend on the basis of the statute of limitations. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court reviewed the sufficiency of the allegations by which the plaintiff sought to recover punitive damages against the union for the conduct of its agents and employees. The complaint alleged that the persons making the threatening phone calls were the agents and/or employees of the union and were acting in the course and scope of their agency and with the permission and consent of the union. The court examined whether the words "permission" and "consent" constituted a sufficient allegation that the union had authorized or approved the acts. Webster's dictionary defines "permission" as "the act of permitting," "formal consent," and "authorization." It defines "consent" as "compliance or approval esp. of what is done or proposed by another," "acquiescence," "permission," "capable, deliberate, and voluntary agreement to or concurrence in some act or purpose implying physical and mental power and free action." Further, it defines the word "authorize" as "to endorse, empower, justify, or permit by or as if some recognized or proper authority: sanction." The court concluded that the words "permission and consent," coupled with the factual allegations in the complaint, constituted a sufficient allegation, if proven, on which punitive damages could be assessed against the union (144 Cal. App. 3d 222, 234-235) .

In Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , the plaintiff sued an insurer and its employees Pensasa and Lawrence for bad faith refusal to pay medical benefits under his automobile insurance policy. The plaintiff alleged that after paying initial medical bills submitted from a doctor, the defendants refused to pay additional bills when the plaintiff sought treatment from a specialist. The defendants claimed that they had not received bills from the plaintiff and had no medical report in their files relating to the accident. Less than one year after the accident, the defendants closed the plaintiff's file and opened a regional file, which was the usual practice when no bills were unpaid at the end of a year following the filing of a claim; but no evidence was introduced to show why the plaintiff's claim was closed and transferred less than one year after it was opened and while it contained unpaid medical bills. Although the cooperation clause in the plaintiff's policy merely specified that he was to file his claim and authorize inspection of all medical expenses and reports, Pensasa stated that the policy authorized him to request the plaintiff to furnish the medical reports. Further, although there was no evidence in the file to indicate that the plaintiff's injury for which he sought treatment was not related to the automobile accident, the defendants took no action to obtain a medical report until over one year after the plaintiff first filed his claim. The jury returned verdicts against the defendants, including punitive damages assessments against the insurer and separately against the employees. The trial court granted a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a motion for a new trial as to the punitive damage award against the insurer, but denied the motions as to the punitive damage awards against the employees.

The appeals court considered the plaintiff's contention that the trial court erred in granting the insurer a judgment notwithstanding the verdict assessing punitive damages against it. The court first stated that denying the motion as to the punitive damage awards against the employees reflected the trial court's concurrence in the jury verdict finding that the employs were guilty of oppression or malice. Thus, whether granting the motion as to their employer, the insurer, was appropriate had to beresolved by determining whether there was substantial evidence to sustain a finding of knowledge, authorization, or ratification on the part of the insurer for the acts of the employees. The court explained that while an employer may be liable for an employee's tort under respondeat superior, the employer is not responsible for punitive damages if the employer did not direct or ratify the act (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 689-690) .

In this case, the testimony was that Pensasa was the claims supervisor in charge of the office where the plaintiff filed his claim, and was responsible for assigning the handling of claims in the geographical area of the office. He was the person who approved paying the plaintiff's initial medical bills, he supervised all medical claims in the office, and had full authority to determine whether payment should be authorized or withheld. Both Pensasa and Lawrence testified that they were merely following the insurer's usual policy in processing the plaintiff's claim. The court stated that such usual and authorized procedure could have been viewed by the jury as including the practice of making unauthorized and oppressive demands on the insured to himself furnish medical reports when the policy required only that he execute the necessary consents so that the company could procure the reports it desired. Thus, the jury could have determined that by following the insurer's usual procedures in processing claims, all of the acts and conduct of the individual defendants were known and directed by the insurer, since such usual procedures had to be known and authorized by those who dictated company policy (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691) .

The court further explained that ratification is a question of fact and the burden of proving it is on the party asserting its existence. Ratification may be proved by circumstantial as well as direct evidence, and anything that convincingly shows the intention of the principal to adopt or approve the act in question is sufficient. Pensasa had testified that claims files were sent to the regional office at the end of one year following the filing of a claim if no bills remained unpaid, and at that time, it could be reviewed by other personnel of the insurer. The plaintiff's file was forwarded in the usual manner. Even though Pensasa did not know whether the plaintiff's file was every reviewed, the jury could have inferred that it was, and that all of the conduct of the individual defendants became known to the corporation through such examination. Therefore, nonpayment of the plaintiff's claim could be found to mean that the insurer had adopted and approved of Pensasa's decision not to pay the plaintiff's claim, and that the insurer thus ratified his conduct. The court thus reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 691-692) .

[b] Form of Ratification

In Alhino v. Starr (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 169 Cal. Rptr. 136 , the plaintiff sued a real estate brokerage company and its employee, a real estate agent, for fraudulent misrepresentation as to the security and assets of the buyer of real estate her husband had sold. The jury returned a verdict against the defendants for general and punitive damages. The trial court conditionally granted the defendants a new trial on damages if the plaintiff did not agree to a reduction of the punitives to $25,000, among other things. The defendants appealed, and the plaintiff cross-appealed on the conditional order granting new trial.

The defendants argued on appeal, among other things, that there was insufficient evidence of fraud, both with respect to the real estate agent's acts and the company's ratification of such acts, to support the punitive damages award. The court reviewed the facts of the case, stating that the issue turned on whether the agent was the plaintiff's husband's agent or the buyer's agent in the real estate transaction. The agent had encouraged the plaintiff's husband to accept an unsecured note from the buyer, despite his knowledge that some of the representations in the buyer's financial statement were false, and knew that the buyer wanted omissions in the note so that he could default with impunity. In addition, the agent failed to disclose to the plaintiff's husband that the buyer was borrowing 100 percent of the downpayment, despite the fact that a real estate agent is obligated to disclose this fact to the agent's principal. Based on such evidence, the court found that there was ample evidence that the agent violated his fiduciary duties toward the plaintiff's husband. Further, there was substantial evidence that the company ratified the agent's conduct, based on the facts that the agent informed his supervisor of the details of the real estate transaction, including the unsecured note and the downpayment loan, and that prior to trial, the agent was reemployed by the company and defended at trial by its attorney. The court stated that the assertion of defense alone demonstrates ratification of the employee's conduct. The court concluded that all of the agent's acts were either approved or subsequently ratified by the company, and that such ratification supported the award of punitive damages (112 Cal. App. 3d 158, 173-174) .

Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , is discussed in § 100A.48[3][a].

In Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139 , a discharged employee sued his employer and individual supervisory employees for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, breach of contract, and retaliatory discharge. The plaintiff complained to his supervisors about being racially harassed by other employees and about not receiving pay raises and chances for promotion. The incidents of harassment escalated after his complaints, and after he began to complain, his performance reviews deteriorated and he was eventually fired. The jury found that the termination was racially motivated in violation of public policy, and awarded punitive damages against the employer only. After the trial court denied the employer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial, the employerappealed, in part on the grounds that punitive damages against it could be no greater than those assessed against the individual employees.

The court rejected the employer's argument that its liability was merely derivative and therefore it could not be liable for greater damages than its individual employees. The court stated that that rule is inapplicable if the company was aware of the employee's complaints and sanctioned the conduct of its employees and managing agent. The court reviewed the punitive damages standard under Civ. Code § 3294 and found that the evidence supported a finding that the employer participated in the discriminatory conduct, based on a manager's testimony that in order to fire someone, he had to have support from the company's industrial relations department. Responding to the employer's argument that evidence of ratification was merely circumstantial, the court stated that ratification may be established by circumstantial or direct evidence that demonstrates adoption or approval of the employee's actions by a corporate agent. Ratification also may be inferred from the fact that an employer, after being informed of the employee's actions, does not fully investigate and fails to repudiate the employee's conduct by redressing the harm done and punishing or discharging the employee (224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800-801) . Finally, the court rejected the employer's argument that the jury could not assess punitive damages against it without similarly assessing such damages against the individual employees. Punitive damages may be apportioned among joint tortfeasors in various amounts according to their individual culpability. The jury found that all of the defendants acted with malice. Also, the jury could have found that the corporate consciousness of the employer fostered tolerance of discrimination and that the employer's ratification of the supervisors', managing agents', and employees' actions merited the imposition of punitive damages (224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801-802) .

The factual and procedural background of Coats v. Construction & Gen. Laborers Local No. 185, (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 93 Cal. Rptr. 639 , is discussed in § 100A.21[3][b]. In finding that the defendant ratified the conduct of its agents and employees, the court placed particular reliance on the defendant's failure to discharge the agents and employees who assaulted the plaintiff after the defendant received knowledge of the assault (15 Cal. App. 3d 908, 913-914) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.49

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.49 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employer's Own Conduct Constituted Oppression, Fraud, or Malice

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(b) BASED UPON THE ACTS OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS PERSONALLY GUILTY OF OPPRESSION, FRAUD OR MALICE.

A. Punitive Damages Standard. Punitive damages may be recovered for the sake of example and by way of punishing a defendant if the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(a)).

B. Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages for Employer's Own Oppression Fraud or Malice. An employer will be held liable for punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(a) based on the acts of his or her employee if the employer was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(b); Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801-802, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant is liable for punitive damages because he or she was personally guilty of oppression, fraud or malice.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable for punitive damages because he or she personally was guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counselshould discuss evidence that the defendant's own conduct in connection with the plaintiff's injury was oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious [Civ. Code § 3294(a); oppression, fraud, or malice must be shown by clear and convincing evidence], such as facts indicating that the defendant knowingly participated in its employee's harassing and discriminatory acts toward the plaintiff [see Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801-802, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139] . If the defendant is a corporate employer, the oppression, fraud, or malice must be on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]. For an example of an argument that punitive damages may be imposed on a corporate employer, see § 100A.50.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.07[1] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Employer for Punitive Damages Based on Employer's Own Oppression, Fraud or Malice

The factual and procedural background of Roberts v. Ford Aerospace & Commc'ns Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 274 Cal. Rptr. 139 , is discussed in § 100A.48[3][b]. The court rejected the employer's argument that its liability was merely derivative and therefore it could not be liable for greater damages than its individual employees. The court stated that that rule is inapplicable if the company was aware of the employee's complaints and sanctioned the conduct of its employees and managing agent. The court reviewed the punitive damages standard under Civ. Code § 3294 and found that the evidence supported a finding that the employer participated in the discriminatory conduct, based on a manager's testimony that in order to fire someone, he had to have support from the company's industrial relations department. Responding to the employer's argument that evidence of ratification was merely circumstantial, the court stated that ratification may be established by circumstantial or direct evidence that demonstrates adoption or approval of the employee's actions by a corporate agent. Ratification also may be inferred from the fact that an employer, after being informed of the employee's actions, does not fully investigate and fails to repudiate the employee's conduct by redressing the harm done and punishing or discharging the employee (224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 800-801) . Finally, the court rejected the employer's argument that the jury could not assess punitive damages against it without similarly assessing such damages against the individual employees. Punitive damages may be apportioned among joint tortfeasors in various amounts according to their individual culpability. The jury found that all of the defendants acted with malice. Also, the jury could have found that the corporate consciousness of the employer fostered tolerance of discrimination and that the employer's ratification of the supervisors', managing agents', and employees' actions merited the imposition of punitive damages (224 Cal. App. 3d 793, 801-802) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.50

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.50 Supporting Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Corporate Employer--Wrongful Conduct Was Performed, Authorized, or Ratified by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent of Corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CAN RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT, A CORPORATE EMPLOYER, PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(b) BASED ON THE ACTS OF DEFENDANT'S EMPLOYEE BECAUSE THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT WAS _____ [PERFORMED or AUTHORIZED or RATIFIED] BY _____ [AN OFFICER or A DIRECTOR or A MANAGING AGENT] OF DEFENDANT.

A. Punitive Damages Standard. Punitive damages may be recovered for the sake of example and by way of punishing a defendant if the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(a)).

B. Liability of Corporate Employer for Punitive Damages. A corporate employer can be held liable for punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(a) based on the acts of its employee if the employee was an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation, or if the corporation authorized or ratified the employee's wrongful conduct and such authorization or ratification was on the part of an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation (Civ. Code § 3294(b); Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452).

C. Employee Who Exercises Policy-making Authority Is Managing Agent of Corporate Employer. For purposes of imposing liability for punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294(b), a "managing agent" is a corporate employee who exercises substantial independent authority and judgment in making decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy (White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the defendant, a corporate employer, is liable for punitive damages because an officer, director, or managing agent of the defendant committed, authorized, or ratified the wrongful conduct on which the punitive damages are based.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is liable for punitive damages because an officer, director, or managing agent of the defendant committed the wrongful conduct or authorized or ratified another employee's wrongful conduct--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the defendant is a corporate employer, that the tortious conduct of the defendant's employee was oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious [Civ. Code § 3294(a) (oppression, fraud, or malice must be shown by clear and convincing evidence)], that the employee was acting in a corporate or employment capacity in connection with the misconduct [College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 723-724, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 (discussed in § 100A.53)], and that the employee was an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation, or that an officer, director, or managing agent authorized or ratified such conduct. In an appropriate case, counsel should discuss evidence that the managing agent who authorized or ratified the tortious conduct exercised substantial independent authority and judgment in his or her corporate decisionmaking such that the decisions ultimately determined corporate policy [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 ; see Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452] . For an example of an argument that the defendant authorized or ratified the employee's conduct, see § 100A.48.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 100A.52 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[f] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, §§ 30.07[1], 30.07[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability of Corporate Employer for Punitive Damages

Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 157 Cal. Rptr. 482, 598 P.2d 452 , was an action against a corporate defendant and its agents who handled the plaintiff's claim, seeking compensatory and punitive damages for the bad faith breach of a health and disability insurance policy. The trial court directed a verdict for the plaintiff on the ground that the failure to have the plaintiff examined by a doctor of the defendant's choice or to consult with the plaintiff's treating physicians before denyingthe plaintiff's claims for benefits under the policy constituted a breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing. The jury awarded the plaintiff compensatory and punitive damages, and the defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the award of punitive damages against the defendant as a principal, holding that California follows the rule of Restatement (Second) of Torts § 909 regarding an assessment of punitive damages against a principal. The Court noted that § 909 permits an award of punitive damages if (but only if): (1) the principal authorized the doing and the manner of the act; (2) the agent was unfit, and the principal was reckless in employing him or her; (3) the agent was employed in a managerial capacity and was acting in the scope of employment; and (4) the principal or a managerial agent of the principal ratified or approved the act (24 Cal. 3d 809, 822) . In response to the defendant's argument that neither of the employee defendants were managerial employees because neither was involved in high-level policymaking, the court stated that the determination of whether an employee acts in a managerial capacity does not necessarily hinge on his or her level of corporate hierarchy. Rather, the critical inquiry is the degree of discretion the employee possesses in making decisions that will ultimately determine corporate policy. The court concluded that when an employee disposes of insureds' claims with little if any supervision, they possess sufficient discretion for the law to impute their actions concerning those claims to the corporation (24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823) . The Court also noted that managerial capacity is not determined by title, and that an employer cannot insulate itself from punitive damage liability by giving an employee a nonmanagerial title while permitting that employee to make crucial policy decisions (24 Cal. 3d 809, 823) .

[b] Employee Who Exercises Policy-making Authority Is Managing Agent of Corporate Employer

White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 , the plaintiff sought punitive damages against his former employer based on the conduct of his supervisor in firing him. The trial court entered a judgment on a jury verdict that awarded punitive damages. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the supervisor's power to fire the plaintiff was sufficient to make her a "managing agent" of the corporation for purposes of holding the corporation liable for punitive damages under Civ. Code § 3294(b).

The Supreme Court rejected the reasoning of the court of appeal and held that in enacting Civ. Code § 3294(b) to provide for corporate punitive-damages liability based on the conduct of managing agents, the legislature intended to refer to those employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 573) . The Court expressly rejected a rule defining the term "managing agent" as any supervisor with authority to hire and fire employees; such a rule would effectively allow punitive damage liability in most employment cases (21 Cal. 4th 563, 575) . In so holding, the Court reaffirmed the reasoning of Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809 [see § 100A.50[3][a]], which prior to the enactment of Civ. Code § 3294(b) had held that a corporate employer's liability for punitive damages based on an employee's conduct does not depend on the employee's official title, but rather on whether the employee exercises discretionary authority to decide corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 570-571, 576-577) . Accordingly, the determination of managing-agent status is a factual determination that must be made on a case-by-case basis (21 Cal. 4th 563, 567) . To demonstrate that an employee is a managing agent under Civ. Code § 3294(b), a plaintiff seeking punitive damages would have to show that the employee exercised substantial discretionary authority over significant aspects of the corporation's business. The mere ability to hire and fire employees would not be a sufficient showing of such authority (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577) .

In this case, the Supreme Court held that--contrary to the ruling of the court of appeal--the employee's supervision of the plaintiff and her authority to fire him were not sufficient to make the employee a managing agent for the corporate employer. However, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment awarding punitive damages, because other circumstances in the case established that the employee was indeed a managing agent with substantial discretionary authority over vital aspects of the defendant's business and company policy. For example, the employee was a zone manager for the defendant, with primary responsibility for managing eight stores and at least 65 employees. Under the circumstances of the case, the fact that the employee had consulted with the corporate human resources department before firing the plaintiff did not detract from her ability to act independently in making the firing decision (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.51

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.51 Opposing Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Corporate Employer Based on Acts of Employee--Wrongful Conduct Was Not Performed, Authorized, or Ratified by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent of Corporation [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT, A CORPORATE EMPLOYER, PURSUANT TO CIVILCODE SECTION 3294(b) BECAUSE, DESPITE EVIDENCE OF WRONGFUL CONDUCT BY AN EMPLOYEE OF DEFENDANT, THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT WAS NOT PERFORMED, AUTHORIZED, OR RATIFIED BY AN OFFICER, DIRECTOR, OR MANAGING AGENT OF DEFENDANT.

No Involvement by Any Corporate Officer, Director, or Managing Agent. A corporate employer will not be held liable for punitive damages based on the act of its employee unless the act was performed, authorized, or ratified by a director, officer, or managing agent of the corporation (Civ. Code § 3294(a), (b); White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 ; see Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for punitive damages because of the wrongful conduct of its employee, based on the argument that the wrongful conduct was not performed, authorized, or ratified by a director, officer, or managing agent of the corporation. In an appropriate case, This form can be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in § 100A.50.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that a corporate defendant is not liable for punitive damages because its employee's wrongful conduct was not performed, authorized, or ratified by an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation--for example, in a demurrer or motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the individual alleged to have committed the tortious act, or to have authorized or ratified it, was not an officer, director, or managing agent. If the plaintiff contends that such individual was a managing agent, counsel should set forth facts indicating that such individual did not exercise substantial independent authority and judgment in his or her corporate decisionmaking such that the decisions ultimately determined corporate policy [White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 573-577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 ; see Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823 .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general form of demurrer to a complaint based on the failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 206.122 (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, §§ 30.07[1], 30.07[2] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Involvement by Any Corporate Officer, Director, or Managing Agent

The facts and procedural background of White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 , are discussed in § 100A.50[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that "managing agents" under Civ. Code § 3294(b) are those employees who exercise substantial independent authority and judgment over decisions that ultimately determine corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 573) . The Court expressly rejected a rule defining the term "managing agent" as any supervisor with authority to hire and fire employees; such a rule would effectively allow punitive damages liability in most employment cases (21 Cal. 4th 563, 575) . In so holding, the Court reaffirmed the reasoning of Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809 , which prior to the enactment of Civ. Code § 3294(b) had held that a corporate employer's liability for punitive damages based on an employee's conduct does not depend on the employee's official title, but rather on whether the employee exercises discretionary authority to decide corporate policy (21 Cal. 4th 563, 570-571, 576-577) . The Court also cited with approval Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 [see § 100A.51[4][a]], which held that an employee is not a managing agent unless he or she is engaged in policy making (21 Cal. 4th 563, 573-574) .

The Court noted that the determination of managing-agent status is a factual determination that must be made on a case-by-case basis (21 Cal. 4th 563, 567) . To demonstrate that an employee is a managing agent under Civ. Code §

3294(b), a plaintiff seeking punitive damages would have to show that the employee exercised substantial discretionary authority over significant aspects of the corporation's business. The mere ability to hire and fire employees would not be a sufficient showing of such authority (21 Cal. 4th 563, 577) .

The factual and procedural background of Egan v. Mutual of Omaha Ins. Co. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823, 598 P.2d 452 , is discussed in § 100A.50[3][a]. In response to the defendant's argument that neither of the employee defendants were managerial employees because neither was involved in high-level policymaking, the Court stated that the determination of whether an employee acts in a managerial capacity does not necessarily hinge on his or her level of corporate hierarchy. Rather, the critical inquiry is the degree of discretion the employee possesses in making decisions that will ultimately determine corporate policy. The court concluded that when an employees dispose of insureds' claims with little if any supervision, they possess sufficient discretion for the law to impute their actions concerning those claims to the corporation (24 Cal. 3d 809, 822-823) . The Court also noted that managerial capacity is not determined by title, and that an employer cannot insulate itself from punitive damage liability by giving an employee a nonmanagerial title while permitting that employee to make crucial policy decisions (24 Cal. 3d 809, 823) .

Egan was decided before the enactment of Civ. Code § 3294(b) and did not construe the language of that statutory provision. The Supreme Court provided the exact standard for defining a "managing agent" under Civ. Code § 3294(b) in White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 566-567, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944 [see § 100A.50[3][b]]. However, the Supreme Court's opinion in White cited the discussion in Egan favorably [see White v. Ultramar, Inc. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 563, 571-576, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 981 P.2d 944] , and the discussion in Egan concerning those actions that may make a corporation liable for punitive damages for the actions of a "managerial agent" should remain instructive.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Involvement by Officer, Director, or Managing Agent

In Cruz v. HomeBase (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 , the plaintiff sued a chain store company, a security guard at one of its stores, and the guard's supervisor, based on an incident at the store during which the plaintiff was accused of stealing, handcuffed, physically and verbally attacked, and sent to jail. The plaintiff sought compensatory and punitive damages for battery, false imprisonment, and malicious prosecution. After prevailing on the battery cause of action in the first trial, the trial court declared a mistrial as to the other actions, which were subsequently retried. At retrial, the plaintiff prevailed and was awarded both compensatory and punitive damages. The court of appeal affirmed the compensatory damages award but reversed the award of punitive damages that had been rendered against the chain store company. The court of appeal concluded, first, that the security guard's supervisor was not a managing agent, because he was supervisor of only one aspect of the operations of a single store in a chain of stores (83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 168) . The court also rejected the argument that by not firing employees after receiving reports casting doubt on their fitness, the corporation effectively ratified their misconduct. The court noted that a punitive damages award based on ratification by a corporate employer requires that the corporate employer have actual knowledge of the misconduct. Because the internal corporate reports of the incident submitted by the guard and his supervisor did not mention the misconduct alleged by the plaintiff, there was no evidence that an officer, director, or managing agent of the corporation during the relevant time period had actual knowledge of the misconduct alleged by the plaintiff (83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 168) .

In Kelly-Zurian v. Wohl Shoe Co. (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , an employee brought a sexual harassment action against her supervisor and employer. On the plaintiff's appeal following the trial court's refusal to proceed with the punitive damage phase of trial against the employer, the appeals court stated that Cal. Civil Code § 3294(b) provides the standard for assessing punitive damages against an employer, and that Restatement (Second) of Torts § 909, which California has adopted, provides the standard for assessing punitive damages against a principal for an act by an agent. The court found that the plaintiff had failed to establish that her supervisor, the tortfeasor, was a managing agent because there was no evidence that he was in a policymaking position. Instead, the evidence established that he did not have authority to change or establish business policy, and could not even set the plaintiff's salary or give her a raise without corporate authorization (22 Cal. App. 4th 397, 419-420) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.52

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.52 Opposing Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--No Employer Authorization, Ratification, Advance Knowledge of Employee Unfitness, or Personal Oppression, Fraud or Malice [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(b) BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO PROVE THAT DEFENDANT EITHER HAD ADVANCE KNOWLEDGE OF THE UNFITNESS OF THE EMPLOYEE EMPLOYING HIM OR HER WITH A CONSCIOUS DISREGARD FOR THE RIGHTS OR SAFETY OF OTHERS, THAT DEFENDANT AUTHORIZED OR RATIFIED THE WRONGFUL CONDUCT, OR THAT DEFENDANT IS PERSONALLY GUILTY OF OPPRESSION, FRAUD OR MALICE.

A. No Employer Liability for Punitive Damages. An employer shall not be liable for punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(a) for the wrongful acts of its employee unless the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, or authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which punitive damages are awarded, or was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(b)).

[Optional] B. No Evidence of Employer Ratification of Employee's Misconduct. Punitive damages will be assessed against an employer based on the ratification of his or her employee's misconduct only if there is evidence that, under the particular circumstances, the employer demonstrated an intent to adopt or approve oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious behavior by the employee in the performance of the employee's job duties (College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 726, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for punitive damages because the plaintiff has failed to prove such liability under Civ. Code § 3294(b). Optional Paragraph B is for use if the plaintiff contends that the defendant ratified the misconduct of the employee. In an appropriate case, This form can be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities in §§ 100A.47 -100A.50.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not liable for punitive damages--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence tending to show that the defendant did not authorize or ratify the employee's misconduct, that the defendant was not personally guilty of oppression, fraud or malice, and that the defendant had no advance knowledge of the employee's unfitness and did not employ him or her with a conscious disregard for the rights and safety of others. For example, counsel could set forth facts showing that the defendant had no knowledge of any prior misconduct by the employee, that the defendant did not participate in the alleged tortious conduct, and that the defendant conducted an immediate and thorough investigation of the alleged incident and imposed appropriate punishment on the employee.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.07[1] (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Evidence of Employer Ratification of Employee Misconduct

College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 , is discussed in § 100A.53[3][a]. The Court stated that for purposes of determining an employer's liability under Civ. Code § 3294(b), ratification occurs when the employer demonstrates an intent to adopt or approve oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious behavior by an employee in the performance of his or her job duties. The issue of ratification often arises, according to the Court, if the employer or its managing agent failed to intercede in a known pattern of workplace abuse, or failed to investigate or discipline the employee once such conduct became known. In this case, the Court found that by cautioning its employee against personal involvement with patients, the employer attempted to repudiate, and not ratify, such conduct on the hospital's behalf. Further, there was no evidence that the hospital knew of the sexual or harmful relationship between the employee and patient. The employee had denied contact with the patient, and there is no indication that the hospital's chief administrator had any personal knowledge to the contrary (8 Cal. 4th 704, 726-727) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Evidence of Employer Ratification of Employee Misconduct

In Plancarte v. Guardsmark (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 640, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 315 , the plaintiff, a janitor, brought suit against a security service company for an alleged sexual assault committed by a security guard while the plaintiff was cleaning a men's room in the building. The trial court granted summary judgment for the security service company and denied the plaintiff's motion for a new trial. In seeking a new trial, the plaintiff argued that subsequent to the granting of summary judgment, the plaintiff learned that the security service company was paying the attorney's fees for the security guard and that this constituted newly-discovered evidence of employer ratification of the employee's wrongful conduct. The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion for a new trial. The court held that the mere act of providing a defense for the employee at trial, through the payment of the employee's attorney's fees, was not a ratification of the employee's allegedly tortious conduct. An employer has an interest in protecting itself from vicarious liability by providing its employee with the best possible defense against claims that he or she committed tortious acts (118 Cal. App. 4th 640, 647) . The court also noted that Lab. Code § 2802 obligates an employer to pay any judgment against an employee for conduct arising out of the employment and to provide a defense against charges brought by a third party against an employee for that conduct (118 Cal. App. 4th 640, 647-648) . In addition, the fact that the security guard had denied any wrongful acts to his employer, that the security guard had pleaded nolo contendere to criminal charges, and that the employer suspended the security guard immediately after the incident and terminated his employment after his criminal conviction, militated against a finding that the security service company had ratified the security guard's conduct (118 Cal. App. 4th 640, 650) .

Cruz v. HomeBase (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 160, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 435 , is discussed in § 100A.51[4][a].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 100A EMPLOYER AND EMPLOYEE: RESPONDEAT SUPERIOR
PART II. FORMS

10-100A California Points & Authorities § 100A.53

AUTHOR: Carolyn Rashby

§ 100A.53 Opposing Contention That Punitive Damages Can Be Recovered From Employer--Employee Misconduct Was Personal and Not Within Scope of Employment [Civ. Code § 3294(b)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF CANNOT RECOVER PUNITIVE DAMAGES FROM DEFENDANT PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294(b) BECAUSE THE EMPLOYEE'S ACTS ON WHICH PUNITIVE DAMAGES WOULD BE BASED WERE PERSONAL AND FOR THE EMPLOYEE'S OWN PRIVATE BENEFIT, AND THEREFORE, NOT WITHIN THE SCOPE OF HIS/HER EMPLOYMENT.

A. No Employer Liability for Punitive Damages. An employer shall not be liable for punitive damages pursuant to Civil Code Section 3294(a) for the wrongful acts of its employee unless the employer had advance knowledge of the unfitness of the employee and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, or authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct for which punitive damages are awarded, or was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice (Civ. Code § 3294(b)).

B. Acts Must Be Within Scope of Employment. An employer will not be held liable for punitive damages based on the misconduct of its employee if the employee was not acting in either a corporate or employment capacity when performing, ratifying, or approving the misconduct (College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 723, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to the contention that the defendant is liable for punitive damages because the plaintiff has failed to prove such liability under Civ. Code § 3294(b). In an appropriate case, This form can be combined with the points and authorities in §§ 100A.51, 100A.52. This form can be submitted in opposition to the contentions supported by the points and authorities in §§ 100A.47 -100A.50.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not liable for punitive damages--for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the employee's tortious conduct was unrelated to the defendant's business and the employee's duties, and that the conduct was performed for the employee's own personal benefit.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For points relating to the recovery of punitive damages from a principal based on the acts of its agent, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Related California Employment Law References

For further discussion of this issue, see Wilcox, California Employment Law, Ch. 30, § 30.07 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Acts Must Be Within Scope of Employment

In College Hosp., Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 704, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 898, 882 P.2d 894 , the plaintiff was an outpatient obtaining psychological therapy at a hospital. She became involved in an extramarital affair with Berry, the head of the hospital's cardiopulmonary unit. The plaintiff later claimed that Berry exploited her and manipulated her into giving him sex, money, and gifts, and that when he ended their relationship after six months, she suffered a breakdown. The plaintiff also alleged that the hospital knew that Berry had had a prior sexual relationship with another patient, that it knew of his relationship with the plaintiff, and that it should have known that she would suffer mental injury because of it. The plaintiff and her husband sued the hospital and Berry alleging professional negligence and infliction of emotional distress. The defendants moved to strike the punitive damages allegations on the grounds that the plaintiffs had not complied with Code Civ. Proc. § 425.13(a), which bars inclusion of a punitive damages claim in certain actions against health care providers unless the plaintiff first can demonstrate a substantial probability that he or she will prevail on the claim. The trial court allowed the plaintiffs to amend the complaint, and the court of appeal summarily denied the hospital's petition for relief. The Supreme Court granted the hospital's petition for review and transferred the matter to the court of appeal with directions to issue an alternative writ. The court of appeal then concluded that a complaint governed by § 425.13 cannot be amended to seek punitive damages unless there is a competent prima facie showing of a viable punitive damages claim. The court then found that the plaintiffs had satisfied that requirement and denied the defendant's petition for relief. The Supreme Court granted review and reversed.

After tracing the history of the punitive damages scheme and the requirements of § 425.13, the Court analyzed whether the plaintiffs had met the requirements of Civ. Code § 3294 in order to determine whether the plaintiff had stated a triable claim for punitive damages. When a plaintiff attempts to hold an employer liable for punitive damages based on the acts of its employee, there must be evidence that the employer (1) had advance knowledge of the employee's unfitness and employed him or her with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others, (2) authorized or ratified the wrongful conduct, or (3) was personally guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice. When the employer is a corporation, the conduct must have been on the part of an officer, director or managing agent of the corporation. The Court stated that the issue of whether Berry was a "managing agent" was irrelevant because in any event the plaintiffs had failed to state a claim for punitive damages. According to the Court, an employer will not be held liable for punitive damages based on its employee's conduct if such conduct is wholly unrelated to its business or the employee's duties. The Court found that the scope of employment issue was missing from plaintiffs' case because Berry's acts were not performed in the course of his employment, but rather, were personal acts of exploitation for his own private benefit (8 Cal. 4th 704, 723-724) . The Court also found that the actions of Westbrook, the hospital's chief administrator,could not be the basis for punitive damages liability, because his conduct in failing to follow up on Berry's misconduct could not be characterized as malice (8 Cal. 4th 704, 724-725) .

Further, the Court found that Westbrook had not ratified Berry's conduct within the meaning of Civ. Code § 3294(b). The Court stated that for purposes of determining an employer's liability under Civil Code § 3294(b), ratification occurs when the employer demonstrates an intent to adopt or approve oppressive, fraudulent, or malicious behavior by an employee in the performance of his or her job duties. The issue of ratification often arises, according to the Court, if the employer or its managing agent fail to intercede in a known pattern of workplace abuse, or fail to investigate or discipline the employee once such conduct became known. In this case, the Court found that by cautioning Berry against personal involvement with patients, Westbrook attempted to repudiate, and not ratify, such conduct on the hospital's behalf. Further, there was no evidence that the hospital knew of the sexual or harmful relationship between Berry and the plaintiff. Berry had denied contact with the plaintiff, and there was no indication that Westbrook had any personal knowledge to the contrary (8 Cal. 4th 704, 726-727) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS

10-101 California Points & Authorities 101.syn

§ 101.syn Synopsis to Chapter 101: ESCROWS

§ 101.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 101.02 Governing Law

§ 101.02A Internet and Electronic Escrow Transactions

§ 101.03 Terminology

§ 101.04 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 101.05 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[2] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Other Related Matthew Bender Publications

§§ 101.06-101.09 [Reserved]

§ 101.10 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations for Oral Escrow Contract [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 339(1), 430.10(e)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Objection by Demurrer

[b] Failure to State Cause of Action

[c] Period of Limitation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

§ 101.11 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations for Oral Escrow Contract [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 339(1), 430.10(e)]--Agreement Between Buyer and Seller Not Sufficient to Invoke Four-Year Statute of Limitations for Written Contract [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement Between Buyer and Seller Not Sufficient Writing to Invoke Four-Year Statute of Limitations

§§ 101.12-101.14 [Reserved]

§ 101.15 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Four-Year Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)] for Actions on Written Contract Applicable--Written Escrow Instructions Need Not Be Signed by Escrow Holder

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Written Contract Statute of Limitations Applicable

[b] Writing Need Not Be Signed by Party to Be Charged

[c] Period of Limitation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Written Contract Statute of Limitations Applicable

§ 101.16 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations--Statute of Limitations Does Not Begin to Run Until Breach Is Discovered

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Begins to Run When Breach Discovered

§§ 101.17-101.19 [Reserved]

§ 101.20 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Escrow Holder

[b] No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

§ 101.21 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Duty to Disclose

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Disclose

§ 101.22 Supporting Contention That Exculpatory Clause in Escrow Contract Invalid as Against Public Policy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exculpatory Clause Invalid

§ 101.23 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Negligently Carrying Out Its Instructions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Escrow Holder

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Escrow Holder

§§ 101.24-101.29 [Reserved]

§ 101.30 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions--Escrow Holder Liable for Closing Escrow After Notice of Possible Material Error in Instructions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Closing After Notice of Mistake

§ 101.31 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Duty to Disclose--Escrow Holder Liable for Negligent Failure to Disclose

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Failure to Disclose

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Failure to Disclose

§§ 101.32-101.39 [Reserved]

§ 101.40 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Failure to Comply With Instructions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Breach of Instructions

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Breach of Instructions

§ 101.41 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Release of Buyer's Funds Before Conditions Being Met

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Escrow Agent Liable for Releasing Funds Prematurely

§§ 101.42-101.44 [Reserved]

§ 101.45 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Failure to Comply With Escrow Instructions--Breach Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Loss

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability If Breach Is Not Proximate Cause of Loss

§ 101.46 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Delivery of Invalid Deed--Appropriate Action by Seller Is Quiet Title or Rescission Action

[1] Form

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quiet Title or Rescission Appropriate Remedy

§ 101.47 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duty--Failure to Obtain Reliable Evidence That Broker Is Licensed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Jury Instructions

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Breach of Fiduciary Duty for Failure to Obtain Reliable Evidence That Broker Is Licensed

§§ 101.48-101.49 [Reserved]

§ 101.50 Supporting Contention in Action for Rescission or to Quiet Title--Delivery of Deed Invalid if Buyer Did Not Satisfy All Conditions of Escrow

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quiet Title or Rescission Should Be Granted When Delivery of Deed Invalid

§ 101.51 Supporting Contention in Action for Rescission or to Quiet Title--Delivery of Deed Was Valid--Plaintiff Waived Conditions to Closing of Escrow

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Condition

§§ 101.52-101.54 [Reserved]

§ 101.55 Opposing Contention That Buyer Forfeited Deposit--Seller Waived "Time Is of the Essence" Clause

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of "Time Is of the Essence" Clause

§ 101.56 Opposing Contention That Buyer May Recover Deposit From Seller--Proper Action Is Against Escrow Holder

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Not Recover Deposit From Defendant

§§ 101.57-101.59 [Reserved]

§ 101.60 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract With Third Party

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Escrow Holder's Liability to Third Party

§§ 101.61-101.64 [Reserved]

§ 101.65 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Interference With Brokerage Contract--No Liability When There Is No Knowledge of Contract or Assignment of Sale Proceeds

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[d] Related Points and Authorities

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Interference With Brokerage Contract

§ 101.66 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Payment to Assignor Rather than Assignee of Beneficial Interest in Deed of Trust--Escrow Holder Owes No Duty to Stranger to Escrow

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty Owed to Nonparties to the Escrow

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.01

§ 101.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains the following points and authorities relating to escrows:

- Points and authorities for use in supporting (see §§ 101.10 -101.11) and opposing (see §§ 101.15 -101.16) a demurrer to a complaint in actions based on an escrow contract.

- Points and authorities in support of (see §§ 101.20 -101.23) and in opposition to (see §§ 101.30-101.31) contentions based on the negligence of an escrow holder.

- Points and authorities in support of (see §§ 101.40 -101.41) and in opposition to (see §§ 101.45 -101.47) contentions based on a breach of contract by the escrow holder.

- Points and authorities in support of (see §§ 101.50 -101.51) and in opposition to (see §§ 101.55 -101.56) contentions involving actions between buyers and sellers pertaining to escrows.

- Points and authorities in support of (see § 101.60) and in opposition to (see § 101.65) contentions based on an escrow holder's liability to third parties.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsAgents DistinguishedSpecial AgentsContracts LawBreachCauses of ActionGeneral OverviewReal Property LawPurchase & SaleContracts of SaleGeneral OverviewReal Property LawPurchase & SaleEscrowTortsNegligenceDutyAffirmative Duty to ActVoluntary Assumption of Duty

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.02

§ 101.02 Governing Law

Escrow matters are governed by Civ. Code § 1057 et seq. The regulation of escrow agents is governed by Civ. Code § 1057.5 and Fin. Code § 17000 et seq. Other statutes that pertain to specific types of escrows or regulations include:

- Alcoholic Beverage Escrows [Bus. & Prof. Code § 24074 et seq.];
- Escrows Involving Real Estate Developers [Civ. Code § 2995];
- Title Insurance Matters [Ins. Code § 12340 et seq.];
- Closing Statements [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10141]; and
- Deposit of Funds [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10145].

In addition, the Commissioner of Real Estate must notify the Insurance Commissioner and the Commissioner of Corporations concerning any final enforcement or disciplinary action against a licensed escrow holder that is related to escrow services provided pursuant to Fin. Code § 17006(a)(4), and the other Commissioners are required to provide information to the Department of Real Estate and the other departments concerning persons who have been subject to enforcement or disciplinary action for malfeasance or misconduct related to theescrow industry [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176.1(a)(1); see Fin. Code § 17423.1; Ins. Code § 12414.31]. In addition to the notification, the Commissioner must also provide the other Commissioners with a copy of the written accusation, a statement of issues, or the order issued or filed in the matter, as well as additional requested materials concerning the relevant facts of the enforcement or disciplinary action [Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176.1(a)(2), (b); see Bus. & Prof. Code § 10176.1(c) (no liability for release of false information unless done with knowledge and malice)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsAgents DistinguishedSpecial AgentsGovernmentsState & Territorial

GovernmentsLicensesReal Property LawPurchase & SaleEscrow

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.02A

§ 101.02A Internet and Electronic Escrow Transactions

All records required under the escrow laws may be retained by an Internet escrow agent and provided to the Commissioner in electronic format [Fin. Code § 17403.5(a)]. All transfers by an Internet escrow agent between trust accounts and interest-bearing accounts, and between escrow accounts, may be made electronically [Fin. Code § 17403.5(b)]. In addition, a statement of account may be delivered by an Internet escrow agent to a customer by electronic mail or via the Internet, unless otherwise requested by the customer [Fin. Code § 17403.5(c)]. With regard to Internet escrow companies, transfers to trust accounts by commercial banks, and transfers from operating accounts to cover losses, may be made through wire transfers. Receipts for these transactions may be maintained in electronic form [Fin. Code § 17409.01(b)]. Internet escrow agents, as well as all other escrow agents, must comply with, at a minimum, the specified procedures for wire transfers, which are also known as "electronic fund transfers" [see 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1738(b)].

Internet escrow agents may accept escrow instructions that are created, generated, sent, communicated, received, or stored by electronic means provided that the principals to the transaction agree to conduct the transaction electronically [10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1738.6(a)]. The Internet escrow agent must require that the principals to the transaction acknowledge that they are able to electronically receive the escrow instructions, download the escrow instructions, and print the escrow instructions [10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1738.6(b)]. If a principal to the transaction is not able to receive the escrow instructions electronically, download the escrow instructions, and print the escrow instructions, the Internet escrow agent must mail a true and correct copy of the instructions to the person within 24 hours of executing the document. The Internet escrow agent must maintain a record of the principal's acknowledgment, and a record of each mailing [10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1738.6(b)]. The principals to the transaction may execute the escrow instructions and other escrow documents with an electronic signature that complies with the federal Electronic Signatures in Global and National Commerce Act (The E-Sign Act) [10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1738.6(c); see 15 U.S.C. § 7001 et seq.].

An Internet escrow agent must issue consecutively numbered receipts for all escrow money or checks deposited with or mailed to the Internet escrow agent [10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1741.1(b)]. An Internet escrow agent may deliver the receipts electronically over the Internet to the person depositing the funds into escrow. If a person is not able to electronically receive the receipt, the Internet escrow agent must mail a true and correct copy of the receipt within 24 hours of execution, and may retain the receipt electronically [10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1741.1(b); see 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1737.3

(electronic receipts)].

Additional provisions apply to Internet escrow agent special accounts [see 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1737.1]. Special provisions also apply to Internet escrow agents and customer contact centers [see 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1709.1]. For additional discussion, see California Real Estate Law and Practice, Ch. 91, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Banking LawBank ActivitiesElectronic BankingFund TransfersBusiness & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsAgents DistinguishedSpecial AgentsComputer & Internet LawInternet BusinessContractsDigital SignaturesReal Property LawPurchase & SaleEscrow

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.03

§ 101.03 Terminology

Both the case opinions and the discussions included in this chapter refer to the terms "escrow contract" and "escrow instructions." These are interchangeable for purposes of this chapter. Likewise, the terms, "escrow holder," "escrow officer," and "escrow agent" are all synonymous terms for purposes of this chapter.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsAgents DistinguishedSpecial AgentsReal Property LawPurchase & SaleEscrow

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.04

§ 101.04 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in summary judgment or summary adjudication proceedings. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. A party must apply to the court for permission to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, seealso Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProceduresSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionCivil ProceduresSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.05

§ 101.05 Related Discussion and Forms

[1] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For discussion and forms for use in actions involving escrows, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms relating to escrows, see the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender):

- Ch. 7, Accounting, Action for.
- Ch. 18, Alcoholic Beverage Licenses.
- Ch. 26, Answers.
- Ch. 103, Brokers.
- Ch. 140, Contracts.
- Ch. 184, Deeds.
- Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings.
- Ch. 314, Interpleader.
- Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions.
- Ch. 348, Lis Pendens.

- Ch. 361, Mechanics' Liens.
- Ch. 375, Motions to Strike..
- Ch. 389, Nonsuit and Motions for Judgment.
- Ch. 427, Principal and Agent.
- Ch. 482, Quieting Title.
- Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution.
- Ch. 537, Summary Judgment.
- Ch. 569, Vendor and Purchaser.

[2] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities that are generally most closely related to those set out in this chapter, see the following chapters:

- Ch. 50, Contracts.
- Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings.
- Ch. 123, Interpleader.
- Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions.
- Ch. 165, Negligence.
- Ch. 182, Principal and Agent.
- Ch. 198, Quieting Title.
- Ch. 221, Summary Judgments.

[3] Other Related Matthew Bender Publications

- For a general discussion of the law pertaining to escrows, see Ch. 91, Escrow , in California Real Estate Law and Practice(Matthew Bender).
- For coverage of escrows with a transactional focus (for example, drafting, interpreting, and executing escrow instructions), see Ch. 26, Real Property Escrows , in California Legal Forms(Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsAgents DistinguishedSpecial AgentsCivil ProcedurePleading &

PracticeGeneral OverviewReal Property LawPurchase & SaleEscrow

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
I. INTRODUCTION

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.06-101.09

[Reserved]

§§ 101.06[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
A. Statute of Limitations

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.10

§ 101.10 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations for Oral Escrow Contract [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 339(1), 430.10(e)]

[1] FORM Supporting Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations for Oral Escrow Contract [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 339(1), 430.10(e)]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)
vs.	)	NO. _____ MEMORANDUM OF
_____ [name], Defendant.	)	POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF )	DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT
	)

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST THE ESCROW HOLDER IN THAT IT REVEALS ON ITS FACE THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE IT IS BASED ON AN ORAL ESCROW CONTRACT AND THE COMPLAINT WAS FILED MORE THAN TWO YEARS FROM THE ALLEGED BREACH.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)). When any ground for objection to a complaint appears on the face of the complaint (or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice), the objection on that ground may be taken by a demurrer to the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Failure to State Cause of Action. The objection that an action is barred by a statute of limitations may be made by demurrer (Basin Construction Corp. v. Department of Water & Power (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 819, 823, 245 Cal. Rptr. 178) notwithstanding the fact that Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10 does not specifically list the statute of limitations as an objection permitted to be raised by demurrer. An objection based on the statute of limitations is deemed to be included in the ground of demurrer that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e) (Bank of America Etc. Assn. v. Ames (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 311, 313-314) .

C. Period of Limitation. An action based on a contract not in writing must be commenced within two years of the alleged breach or negligent act or omission (Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1)).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of an escrow holder's general demurrer to a complaint filed by a party to an escrow when the complaint reveals that the escrow contract was not written and two years expired before the complaint was filed.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations in the complaint that establish that the escrow contract in question was not in writing, and that the alleged breach of the escrow contract occurred more than two years before the complaint's filing. Counsel can then argue the complaint is subject to demurrer based on the authorities set forth above.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of demurrer for use in asserting the bar of the statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities for use in supporting demurrers based on the statute of limitations, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions . For points and authorities supporting demurrers generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . In particular, for points and authorities supporting a demurrer based on the contention that it cannot be ascertained from the complaint whether the escrow contract is written, oral, or implied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g)], see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , § 71.72.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.15 (when the complaint shows that the written escrow instructions were in fact "accepted" by the escrow holder, even though not signed by the escrow holder) or § 101.16

(when the complaint shows that the discovery of the alleged breach occurred after the breach thereby tolling the statute of limitations until the subsequent discovery) may be used to oppose a demurrer supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Objection by Demurrer

The party against whom a complaint or cross-complaint has been filed may object, by demurrer, to the pleading on the ground that the pleading does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g)]. When any ground for objection to a complaint, cross-complaint, or answer appears on the face of the complaint, cross-complaint, or answer, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, the objection on that ground may be taken by a demurrer to the complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)].

[b] Failure to State Cause of Action

In Basin Construction Corp. v. Department of Water & Power (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 819, 245 Cal. Rptr. 178 , the owners of a property filed a complaint in intervention in another property owner's action against the City of Los Angeles for damages to property arising out of a fire caused by malfunctioning city electrical equipment. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend based on the applicable five year statute of limitations. The court of appeal affirmed, stating, "a complaint showing on its face the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations is subject to general demurrer" (199 Cal. App. 3d 819, 823) .

An explanation for the ruling in the above case was found in Bank of American Etc. Assn. v. Ames (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 311 . In this action for money due under a contract, the trial court overruled the defendant's demurrer, which was based on the bar of the statute of limitations. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff and the defendant appealed, in part on the theory that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the demurrer had been properly overruled because, under any theory, a part of the claim was good (18 Cal. App. 2d 311, 315) . The court did acknowledge that Code Civ. Proc. § 430 does not expressly authorize the common practice of raising the statute of limitations bar by way of demurrer. However, citing California Safe etc. Co. v. Sierra etc. Co. (1910) 158 Cal. 690, 112 P. 274 , the court concluded that the only ground under which the statute of limitations could be brought is the ground of failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (18 Cal. App. 2d 311, 314) .

[c] Period of Limitation

An action on a contract, obligation, or liability not founded on a written instrument must be commenced within two years [Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

Bell v. Bank of California (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P 889 involved an action for the recovery of shares of stock. The defendant asserted in a general demurrer that the action was barred by a statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. The plaintiff appealed. The method of asserting the defense of the bar of a statute of limitations apparently was not an issue either in the trial court or on appeal. However, the California Supreme Court held in dictum that while the bar of the statute of limitations is not specified as a ground of demurrer in the code, this objection to a complaint must be deemed to be included within the ground of want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (153 Cal. 234, 245) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
A. Statute of Limitations

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.11

§ 101.11 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations for Oral Escrow Contract [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 339(1), 430.10(e)]--Agreement Between Buyer and Seller Not Sufficient to Invoke Four-Year Statute of Limitations for Written Contract [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)]

[1] FORM Supporting Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations for Oral Escrow Contract [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 339(1), 430.10(e)]--Agreement Between Buyer and Seller Not Sufficient to Invoke Four-Year Statute of Limitations for Written Contract [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)]

[Caption. See § 101.10[1].]

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST THE ESCROW HOLDER IN THAT IT REVEALS ON ITS FACE THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE IT IS BASED ON AN ORAL ESCROW CONTRACT AND THE COMPLAINT WAS FILED MORE THAN TWO YEARS FROM THE ALLEGED BREACH.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 101.10[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Failure to State a Cause of Action. [See § 101.10[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Period of Limitation. [See § 101.10[1], Paragraph C.]

D. Agreement Between Buyer and Seller Not Sufficient Writing to Invoke Four-Year Statute of Limitations. When the agreement with the escrow holder is oral, the fact that there is a separate written agreement of sale between buyer and seller is not a sufficient basis to invoke the four-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1) in an action against the escrow holder because the escrow holder is not a party to the written sales contract. Therefore, the two-year statute of limitations for oral contracts set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) is applicable in this action (Roberts v. Carter & Portruch (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 370, 372-373, 295 P.2d 515).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of an escrow holder's general demurrer to a complaint filed by a party to an escrow when the complaint reveals that the escrow contract was not in writing (notwithstanding the fact that there is a written sales agreement between buyer and seller) and the complaint was filed more than two years after the alleged breach.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should point out any allegations in the complaint that refers to the agreement between the buyer and seller and argue that the agreement does not invoke the four-year statute of limitations in an action against the escrow holder based on the above authorities. Counsel should also point out that no where in the complaint is there an allegation that the escrow instructions are in writing. If there is a specific allegation affirmatively establishing the fact that the escrow contract was based on an oral agreement, counsel should point that out. Once counsel has established that the escrow contract was oral, he or she can then refer to the date of the breach, as alleged in the complaint, and the date the complaint was filed and argue that the complaint's filing occurred more than two years after the alleged breach.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of demurrer for use in asserting the bar of the statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities for use in supporting demurrers based on the statute of limitations, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions . For points and authorities supporting demurrers generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For points and authorities supporting a demurrer based on the contention that it cannot be ascertained from the complaint whether the escrow contract is written, oral, or implied [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g)], see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , § 71.72.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.15 (when complaint shows that written escrow contract was in fact "accepted" by escrow holder, even if it was not signed by escrow holder) and § 101.16 (when complaint shows that discovery of alleged breach occurred after breach thereby tolling statute of limitations until subsequent discovery) may be used to oppose a demurrer supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Agreement Between Buyer and Seller Not Sufficient Writing to Invoke Four-Year Statute of Limitations

In Roberts v. Carter & Portruch (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 370, 295 P.2d 515 , the plaintiff entered into a written contract to sell its wrecking yard with some of the payments deferred. The defendant attorneys orally agreed to be the escrow holder and transferred the title and a note to the respective parties. The complaint alleged that the defendants then received some of the deferred payments and failed to pay them to the plaintiff. However, the complaint was filed more than two years after the alleged failure to pay. A demurrer was sustained by the trial court, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the two-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) for actions on oral contracts was applicable. The fact that there was a written contract of sale was not sufficient to invoke the four-year statute of limitations for written contracts (Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)) in an action against the escrow holder because the escrow holder was not a party to the contract of sale and was a stranger to the sales transaction (140 Cal. App. 2d 370, 372-373) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
A. Statute of Limitations

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.12-101.14

[Reserved]

§§ 101.12[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
A. Statute of Limitations

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.15

§ 101.15 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Four-Year Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)] for Actions on Written Contract Applicable--Written Escrow Instructions Need Not Be Signed by Escrow Holder

[1] FORM Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Four-Year Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)] for Actions on Written Contract Applicable--Written Escrow Instructions Need Not Be Signed by Escrow Holder

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)
vs.	)	NO. _____ MEMORANDUM OF
_____ [name], Defendant.	)	POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN OPPOSITION TO )	DEMURRER TO COMPLAINT
	)

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE FOUR-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR ACTIONS ON WRITTEN CONTRACTS IS APPLICABLE, NOTWITHSTANDING THE FACT THAT THE WRITTEN ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS WERE NOT SIGNED BY THE ESCROW HOLDER, AND THE COMPLAINT WAS FILED WITHIN FOURS YEARS OF THE ALLEGED BREACH.

A. Written Contract Statute of Limitations Applicable. If the escrow instructions are in writing and the escrow holder accepts them or if the escrow holder prepares the instructions, offers to perform them, and the buyer and seller accept the escrow holder's offer, an action for failure to comply with the instructions is based on a written contract for statute of limitations purposes (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 532, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33).

B. Writing Need Not Be Signed by Party to Be Charged. The four-year statute of limitations, unlike the statute of frauds, does not require that the writing be signed by the party to be charged. The contract is deemed to be "in writing" even though it was accepted orally or by an act other than signing (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 532-533, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33).

C. Period of Limitation. An action based on a written contract must be commenced within four years of the alleged breach or negligent act or omission (Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint against an escrow holder that asserts that the action is barred by the two-year statute of limitations for oral contracts when the plaintiff has alleged sufficient facts to show that the escrow instructions were in writing and accepted by the escrow holder, notwithstanding the fact that the escrow holder did not actually sign the instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations in the complaint that establish that some form of writing establishing the duties of the escrow holder exists and that the escrow holder did in fact agree to undertake the escrow agency. Counsel can then refer to the dates of the alleged breach and the filing of the complaint to argue that the complaint was filed timely within the applicable four-year statute of limitations for written contracts.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms and discussion relating to demurrers, see Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to the statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities for use in opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For points and authorities relating to the defense of the statute of limitations, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.10 or § 101.11.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Written Contract Statute of Limitations Applicable

In Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , the complaint alleged that the defendant escrow holder failed to comply with the escrow instruction to pay any debts over $10,000 out of the sale proceeds or inform the plaintiff buyer of potential liability for sales taxes in the purchase of a tavern after the escrow holder received notice from the state of the potential liability. The plaintiff alleged further that because of this failure, the plaintiff was liable for the seller's unpaid sales taxes. The complaint was filed more than two years after the alleged failure. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, apparently on the ground that the two-year statute of limitations set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) for actions on an oral contract was applicable and barred the action.

The plaintiff appealed and the California Supreme Court reversed. It held that the contract between the buyer and the seller in the form of escrow instructions to the defendant escrow holder, which instructions the defendant drafted and agreed to perform, was a sufficient writing to make applicable the four-year statute of limitations for actions on a written contract of Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1). The Court noted that the instructions included a statement that they were accepted by the escrow holder subject to the terms and conditions in the instructions. If the escrow instructions are in writing and the escrow holder accepts them, or if the escrow holder prepares the instructions, offers to perform them, and the buyer and seller accept the offer, the contract is in writing even though the escrow holder accepts orally or by an act other than writing (58 Cal. 2d 528, 532) .

Note that the Amen case can be distinguished from the ruling in Roberts v. Carter & Portruch (1956) 140 Cal. App. 2d 370, 295 P.2d 515 , discussed in § 101.11[3][a], which held that a written contract between the buyer and seller was not sufficient to invoke the four-year statute of limitations for written contracts. In Amen, the sales contract and escrow instructions were drafted by the escrow holder as one document and contained a clear statement that the escrow holder accepted the instructions whereas there was no evidence of any knowledge of the contract or acceptance by the escrow holder in Roberts.

[b] Writing Need Not Be Signed by Party to Be Charged

Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 is discussed in § 101.15[3][a].

[c] Period of Limitation

An action on a contract, obligation, or liability founded on a written instrument must be commenced within four years [Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Written Contract Statute of Limitations Applicable

In Bruckman v. Parliament Escrow Corp. (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 235 Cal. Rptr. 813 , the complaint was based on the negligent failure to follow written escrow instructions. The court held that the four-year statute of limitations was applicable because the action was based on breach of a written contract (190 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1058-1059) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
A. Statute of Limitations

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.16

§ 101.16 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations--Statute of Limitations Does Not Begin to Run Until Breach Is Discovered

[1] FORM Opposing Demurrer to Complaint--Action Barred by Statute of Limitations--Statute of Limitations Does Not Begin to Run Until Breach Is Discovered

[Caption. See § 101.15[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE ALLEGATIONS OF THE COMPLAINT SHOW THAT THE COMPLAINT WAS TIMELY FILED IN THAT THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DID NOT BEGIN TO RUN UNTIL PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED THE BREACH BY THE ESCROW HOLDER.

Statute Begins to Run When Breach Discovered. The statute of limitations on a cause of action for breach of contract by an escrow holder does not begin to run until plaintiff knew, or should have known, the facts that constituted the breach of contract (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 534, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 ; Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 259 Cal. Rptr. 117).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer based on the statute of limitations when the action was timely filed, taking into consideration the applicable statute of limitations calculated from the date the plaintiff discovered the breach. The delayed discovery rule can apply to a case involving fraud by the escrow holder, or, as explained below, to a case involving a breach of contract by the escrow holder, since this breach also constitutes a breach of fiduciary duty [see § 101.16[3][a]]. This form can be used when opposing a demurrer based on either a two-year statute of limitations for oral contracts or a four-year statute of limitations for written contracts.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations in the complaint that establish the date plaintiff discovered the breach and argue facts that support the reasonableness of the delay in discovery. Counsel can then refer to the date of the complaint's filing to establish that it was filed within the applicable two-year or four-year time periods from the date of discovery.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms and discussion relating to demurrers, see Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to the statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For points and authorities for use in opposing demurrers, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings . For points and authorities relating to the defense of the statute of limitations, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.10 or § 101.11.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute Begins to Run When Breach Discovered

The facts of Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , are discussed in § 101.15[3][a]. The court held that even if the escrow instructions had not been in writing, the action was still filed in time because it was brought within two years of the date that the plaintiff discovered the breach, which was the date the plaintiff was notified by the state of her obligation for the unpaid sales taxes. The court found that the plaintiff's ignorance of the defendant's breach before this notification was justifiable (58 Cal. 2d 528, 534) .

In Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 259 Cal. Rptr. 117 , the plaintiff buyer filed an action against the escrow holder for fraud, breach of contract, negligence, conversion, and civil conspiracy for releasing funds to the sellers during the escrow. The escrow holder did so based on instructions containing the forged signature of the buyer. The plaintiff's complaint was filed more than five years after the last distribution of funds to the sellers. The defendant escrow holder demurred to the complaint based on the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that in a case involving fraud, the cause of action does not accrue until discovery of facts constituting fraud (citing former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(4); now see Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d)) (210

Cal. App. 3d 915, 920) . Once the plaintiff becomes aware of facts that would make a reasonably prudent person suspicious, the duty to investigate arises, and he or she may then be charged with knowledge that would be discovered by such investigation (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 921) . In this case, the plaintiff alleged that the fraud was not discovered until a few months before the action was filed. The court found that the delayed discovery by the plaintiff was reasonable in that the plaintiff was regularly informed, and might reasonably believe, that the delay in closing escrow was due to the complex nature of this transaction involving a subdivision.

Regarding the breach of contract cause of action, the court held that since the alleged breach also constituted a breach of fiduciary duty and the existence of the fiduciary relationship tolls the statute of limitations until actual discovery of the breach, the delayed discovery rule would apply to this cause of action as well (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 922-923) .

131 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
A. Statute of Limitations

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.17-101.19

[Reserved]

§§ 101.17[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.20

§ 101.20 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR THE FAILURE COMPLAINED OF BY PLAINTIFF BECAUSE THE FAILURE WAS BASED ON SOMETHING THAT WAS NOT A PART OF THE ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS.

A. Duty of Escrow Holder. The agency created by escrow instructions is limited, rather than general, and the escrow holder's obligations are to strictly comply with its instructions (Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 1128, 260 Cal. Rptr. 21 ; Schaefer v. Manufacturers Bank (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 77, 163 Cal. Rptr. 402).

B. No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions. An escrow holder will not be liable for failing to do something that is not required by the terms of the escrow instructions (Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 1127-1128, 260 Cal. Rptr. 21 ; Schaefer v. Manufacturers Bank (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 77-78, 163 Cal. Rptr. 402).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of defendant escrow holder's contention that it is not liable for the failure to do that complained of in the complaint, because the action was not required by the terms of the escrow instructions.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is not liable for failing to do something not required by the terms of the escrow instructions, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that establish the terms of the escrow instructions and argue that the instructions do not require the escrow holder to do the act that is the basis of the plaintiff's complaint.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.30 or § 101.31 may be used to oppose a contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Escrow Holder

In Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 260 Cal. Rptr. 21 , the plaintiff filed a complaint against the escrow holder based on the latter's failure to deposit funds into an interest bearing account during the escrow. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. The court acknowledged that an escrow agent has an obligation to strictly comply with its instructions and will be liable for any negligence in so doing, and further, that it has a fiduciary relationship with the parties to the escrow. However, the escrow holder does not have a general duty to police the affairs of its depositors and will not be liable for failing to do something that is not required by the instructions (211 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 1127-1128) . In this case, the escrow holder was not liable for not depositing the funds into an interest bearing account because the escrow instructions did not require it.

In Schaefer v. Manufacturers Bank (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 163 Cal. Rptr. 402 , an escrow holder was sued in an action involving a real estate transaction, only a part of which was handled through the defendant. The plaintiffs sold their property for some worthless deeds of trust. However, the transfer of these deeds of trust were not part of the escrow processed by the defendant escrow holder. The defendant escrow company moved for summary judgment. Its declarations established that it had strictly followed its escrow instructions and were essentially uncontradicted by the plaintiffs' attorney's declaration. The summary judgment was granted and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It stated that escrow holders were the agents of both parties but that the agency was limited to following the instructions of the parties. It then held that the uncontradicted showing was that the escrow had nothing to do with the part of the transaction causing the plaintiffs' loss, and that the escrow holder had carried out its instructions, complying strictly with the instructions as was its duty and thus was not liable for the plaintiffs' loss (104

Cal. App. 3d 70, 77-78) .

[b] No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 1122, 260 Cal. Rptr. 21 , and Schaefer v. Manufacturers Bank (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 70, 163 Cal. Rptr. 402 , are discussed in § 101.20[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions

In Axley v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1978) 88 Cal. App. 3d 1, 151 Cal. Rptr. 570 , the defendant escrow company was sued on the basis of a real estate transaction in which the plaintiff sold property and received, among other considerations, a fourth deed of trust that turned out to be worthless. The original contract called for the plaintiff 's security to be a second deed of trust but this was later amended by the parties to provide for a fourth deed of trust. The defendant escrow company moved for and was granted a summary judgment. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that the escrow holder was negligent in failing to call to the plaintiff's attention the apparent diminution of security in substituting a fourth deed of trust for a second deed of trust.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the agency created by an escrow is limited, rather than general, and that the duty of the escrow holder is to obey its instructions (88 Cal. App. 3d 1, 8) . The court further held that no liability attaches to the escrow holder for failure to do something not required by the terms of the escrow instructions (88 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9) . The court rejected the plaintiff's argument of negligence, distinguishing cases cited by the plaintiff in which negligence was found in searching a title record [see Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 536, 115 Cal. Rptr. 257 ; see also § 101.23[4][a] for a detailed discussion of Contini] and in recording second deeds of trust instead of a first deed of trust [Ruth v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Assn. (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 831, 72 Cal. Rptr. 521] . The court distinguished the instant case by pointing out the absence of an essential element, namely failure to follow the escrow instructions or negligence in carrying out the escrow instructions. The court noted that the instructions signed by the plaintiff indicated that part of the security would be a fourth deed of trust. Therefore, the defendant escrow holder was not liable because it had done no more than carry out its instructions (88 Cal. App. 3d 1, 8-10) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.21

§ 101.21 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Duty to Disclose

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Duty to Disclose

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT HAS NO DUTY TO DISCLOSE TO PLAINTIFF INFORMATION OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF THE ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS.

A. Duty of Escrow Holder. [See § 101.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. No Duty to Disclose. An escrow holder is a limited agent only and does not have a duty to disclose to its principals matters that are not required to be disclosed by its escrow instructions (Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 162-164, 70 Cal. Rptr. 378 ; Blackburn v. McCoy (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 648, 37 P.2d 153).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a defendant escrow holder in support of its contention that it is not liable for failing to disclose matters that were outside the scope of the escrow instructions.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder had no duty to disclose matters outside the scope of the escrow instructions, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that establish that the escrow instructions did not include any duty or obligation to disclose information that is the basis of the plaintiff's complaint. Counsel can then argue that, absent specific requirements, the escrow holder had no duty to disclose the information.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments ,.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.31 may be used to oppose a contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty to Disclose

In Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 70 Cal. Rptr. 378 , the cause of action against the escrow holder was based on allegations that it had failed to disclose to the plaintiff that it knew that the other party to the transaction was defrauding the plaintiff. A demurrer was sustained to the cause of action and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court defined the issue as whether an escrow agent is under a fiduciary duty to go beyond the escrow instructions and notify each party of any suspicious fact or circumstance that has come to his or her attention even though the fact or circumstance is not related to his or her specific instructions. The court responded in the negative. It held that an escrow agent was only a limited agent; its obligations were defined by the escrow instructions, and its duty was to obey the instructions (264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 162-163) . The court pointed out that a rule requiring disclosure of these matters beyond the scope of its instructions would force the escrow holder to make an independent judgment as to the accuracy of the information and to risk liability for either the failure to disclose or for making the disclosure, should the escrow holder's judgment be incorrect. Such a rule would discourage a reasonable and prudent person from acting as an escrow holder (264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 163) .

Blackburn v. McCoy (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 648, 37 P.2d 153 , involved a double escrow in which the holder of an option bought real property at one price and immediately sold an interest in it to the plaintiff at a higher price. The cause of action against the escrow holder was based on the latter's failure to disclose to the plaintiff the lower purchase price. A judgment was entered in the escrow holder's favor and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the escrow transaction created an agency that was limited to following escrow instructions (1 Cal. App. 2d 648, 654-655) . It then held that the escrow holder had followed the instructions, and, since there was no instruction by the plaintiff to tell her the original purchase price, it had no duty to make such a disclosure (1 Cal. App. 2d 648, 655) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.22

§ 101.22 Supporting Contention That Exculpatory Clause in Escrow Contract Invalid as Against Public Policy

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Exculpatory Clause in Escrow Contract Invalid as Against Public Policy

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

JUDGMENT SHOULD BE ENTERED FOR PLAINTIFF BECAUSE THE EXCULPATORY CLAUSE IN THE ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS ATTEMPTING TO LIMIT THE LIABILITY OF THE ESCROW HOLDER IS INVALID AS AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

Exculpatory Clause Invalid. A clause in a contract by which an escrow holder intends to exculpate itself from liability for its own mistakes and ordinary negligence is unenforceable as against public policy when the clause is in a standardized contract written by the escrow company with a decisive advantage in bargaining strength (Akin v. Business Title Corp. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 153, 156-159, 70 Cal. Rptr. 287).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that an exculpatory clause is contained in an adhesion contract and thus is invalid because it is against public policy.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the exculpatory clause in the escrow contract is invalid as against public policy, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the exculpatory language of the escrow contract, attaching affidavits or declarations, as appropriate. Counsel should argue that the escrow contract is a standardized form that is presented to the parties with the understanding that there is very little, if any, room for negotiating the language of the contract. Counsel can then argue that the escrow holder's uncontested negligence did not absolve the escrow holder of liability by means of the exculpatory clause.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities relating to negligence generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exculpatory Clause Invalid

Akin v. Business Title Corp. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 153, 70 Cal. Rptr. 287 , involved the sale of a bar and restaurant business in Orange County. The escrow holder recorded a chattel mortgage with the seller as beneficiary in Los Angeles County instead of Orange County. The buyer went bankrupt. The seller's mortgage was unenforceable because it had been recorded in the wrong county. The escrow agreement contained an exculpatory clause that provided that the escrow holder would not be liable for its ordinary negligence or mistakes. After a verdict for the plaintiff seller, the defendant escrow holder appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the clause was unenforceable as against public policy, relying on Tunkl v. Regents of University of California (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 92, 98-101, 32 Cal. Rptr. 33, 383 P.2d 441 , in which the California Supreme Court held that an exculpatory clause in a hospital form was unenforceable. The court of appeal held that the six factors relied on in Tunkl were present in the instant case, making the clause invalid as affecting the public interest. These six factors were as follows (264 Cal. App. 2d 153, 155-158) :

- The escrow business is publicly regulated;
- The escrow company performed an important public service;
- The escrow company held itself out as ready to perform its services for any member of the public;
- The escrow company has a decisive advantage in bargaining strength;
- The escrow business presents the public with a standardized adhesion contract of exculpation without a provision allowing the other party to pay for more protection; and
- The parties to the contract were placed under the escrow company's control and were subject to the risk of its carelessness.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.23

§ 101.23 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Negligently Carrying Out Its Instructions

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Negligently Carrying Out Its Instructions

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR FAILING TO EXERCISE ORDINARY SKILL AND DILIGENCE IN CARRYING OUT ITS ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS.

Duty of Escrow Holder. It is the escrow holder's duty to exercise ordinary skill and diligence in his or her employment and if an escrow holder acts negligently, he or she is liable for any loss proximately occasioned by the negligence (Common Wealth Insurance Systems, Inc. v. Kersten (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 1014, 1030, 115 Cal. Rptr. 653).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the escrow holder is liable for its negligent acts or omissions in carrying out the escrow instructions.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is liable for its negligence, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss the specific instructions involved, with an accompanying affidavit or declaration incorporating the exact language of the instructions. Counsel can then summarize the acts or omissions of the escrow holder and argue that these actions or omissions demonstrated a failure to exercise ordinary skill and diligence in carrying out the instructions.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities relating to negligence generally, see Ch. 165, Negligence .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Escrow Holder

Common Wealth Insurance Systems, Inc. v. Kersten (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 1014, 115 Cal. Rptr. 653 , was a consolidated action, a part of which involved a declaratory relief action for indemnity against the escrow holder by signers of a certain note. The escrow instructions called for the deposit of the affidavit of a third party company showing that 2/3 of its stock was owned by co-signers of the note. The document that was submitted as the "affidavit," apart from being a forgery, was not a true affidavit, in that it was simply an unsworn statement, not a written declaration signed under oath. The trial court found that the escrow holder was negligent, but that the negligence was not the proximate cause of the plaintiffs' loss. Judgment was entered in the escrow company's favor, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. It concurred with the trial court's finding of negligence by the escrow holder (40 Cal. App. 3d 1014, 1031) , and further held that the fact that the loss was uncertain at this time (until a possible future foreclosure sale) did not deprive the plaintiffs of a favorable decree of a declaratory judgment (40 Cal. App. 3d 1014, 1032) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Escrow Holder

Wasmann v. Seidenberg (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 752, 248 Cal. Rptr. 744 involved a marital dissolution. After the parties reached agreement on the property settlement portion of the dissolution, the plaintiff's attorney forwarded to the then ex-wife's attorney the final draft of the settlement agreement along with a grant deed conveying certain property to the ex-wife and with a letter authorizing the ex-wife's attorney to record the deed only on obtaining $70,000 in cash or a promissory note from the ex-wife. In some manner not explicitly stated in the opinion, the ex-wife obtained the grant deed and recorded it without providing the required funds or note. The ex-wife's attorney did not respond to repeated inquiries from the plaintiff's attorney regarding the status of the settlement agreement and payment. The husband sued the ex-wife's attorney and the trial court sustained a general demurrer in the attorney's favor. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that although the ex-wife's attorney owned plaintiff no professional duty, his acceptance of the deed imposed on him fiduciary duties as an escrow holder (202 Cal. App. 3d 752, 755) . The court then held that plaintiff had pled sufficient facts to state a cause of action for negligence by the attorney as escrow holder by alleging that the attorney allowed the deed to be recorded without payment and that the attorney failed to disclose the fact that the deed was recorded (202 Cal. App. 3d 752, 755-758) .

In Contini v. Western Title Insurance Co. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 536, 115 Cal. Rptr. 257 , one title company provided title insurance and another title company acted as escrow holder. The escrow holder failed to discover and communicate to the purchaser a notice of lis pendens and unrecorded judgment on the property. The effect of the judgment was to reduce the acreage and market value of the property. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff but the trial court granted a motion for judgment notwithstanding the escrow holder's favor.

The court affirmed the judgment as to the title company providing the insurance, but reversed the judgment as to the title company acting as escrow holder. It held that the escrow holder, who was to perform an abstract search, was negligent in searching the public records and in reporting the state of title in the abstract of title (40 Cal. App. 3d 536, 545) . It also held that "an escrow holder is a fiduciary and like any other fiduciary is under a duty to communicate to his principal knowledge acquired in the course of his agency with respect to material facts which might affect the principal's decision as to a pending transaction, particularly where, as here, he knows the principal is looking to him for protection as to those very facts of which he has knowledge (citations omitted)" (40 Cal. App. 3d 536, 547) .

For further cases and discussion on an escrow holder's duty to disclose information to his or her principal, see § 101.31[3], [4].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.24-101.29

[Reserved]

§§ 101.24[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.30

§ 101.30 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions--Escrow Holder Liable for Closing Escrow After Notice of Possible Material Error in Instructions

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Liability for Failure to Do Something Not Included in Instructions--Escrow Holder Liable for Closing Escrow After Notice of Possible Material Error in Instructions

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR CLOSING ESCROW BECAUSE IT RECEIVED NOTICE OF POSSIBLE MATERIAL ERROR IN INSTRUCTIONS AND PROCEEDED TO CLOSE ESCROW WITHOUT FURTHER INQUIRY.

Liability for Closing After Notice of Mistake. When a party to an escrow has notified the escrow holder that there was a material mistake in the instructions, the escrow holder is liable if it closes the escrow without further inquiry as to the correctness of the instructions (Diaz v. United Cal. Bank (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 161, 170-172, 139 Cal. Rptr. 314).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention by the escrow holder that it has no liability because it simply followed the escrow instructions and had no duty to do something that is not required by the escrow instructions [see § 101.20]. This form illustrates an exception to this general rule, that is, if the escrow holder receives notice from one or more parties to the escrow that there is a material error in the instructions, the escrow holder must inquire further to resolve the matter before closing escrow.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is liable for closing escrow after receiving notice of a material error in the instructions, for example in opposing a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that establish the date and substance of the notice provided to the escrow holder regarding the error in the instructions. Counsel should argue that the escrow holder proceeded to close escrow without further inquiry and/or resolving the issue and is therefore liable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Closing After Notice of Mistake

Diaz v. United Cal. Bank (1977) 71 Cal. App. 3d 161, 139 Cal. Rptr. 314 , involved the sale of a restaurant. The parties executed escrow instructions providing for a note in the seller's favor for $7,000. After execution of the instructions, the attorney for the seller sent a notice to the escrow holder that the instructions were in error and the note should be for $19,000. Attached was a copy of the agreement for sale that showed that the price was $19,000. Disregarding the notice, the escrow holder closed the escrow with a $7,000 note. The seller filed an action against the escrow holder, and a general demurrer was sustained without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed. Quoting extensively from Spaziani v. Millar (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 667, 30 Cal. Rptr. 658 [see § 101.31[4][a] for a complete discussion of this case], the court held that the escrow holder's failure to heed the notice of a possible error was a breach of its duty of skill and ordinary diligence in the conduct of the escrow (71 Cal. App. 3d 161, 167-171) . It noted that the escrow holder was not required to accept unilateral changes in the instructions but held that the escrow holder had the right under the instructions to hold up the closing when there were conflicting demands. Therefore, it should have held up the closing while it made an effort to discover whether its instructions were correct (71 Cal. App. 3d 161, 170-171) . It also held that a provision giving the escrow holder an election not to close the escrow in a case of conflicting demands conversely did not give the escrow holder the right to proceed to close in the face of these demands (71 Cal. App. 3d 161, 171) . The court held that such an interpretation would be in the nature of an exculpatory clause, and would be unenforceable as against public policy under the doctrine set forth in Akin v. Business Title Corp. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 153, 70 Cal. Rptr. 287 (71 Cal. App. 3d 161, 171) [see § 101.22[3][a] for a discussion of the Akin case].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.31

§ 101.31 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Duty to Disclose--Escrow Holder Liable for Negligent Failure to Disclose

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Has No Duty to Disclose--Escrow Holder Liable for Negligent Failure to Disclose

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR ITS NEGLIGENT FAILURE TO DISCLOSE TO PLAINTIFF MATERIAL FACTS ABOUT THE TRANSACTION.

Liability for Negligent Failure to Disclose. An escrow holder is liable if it negligently fails to exercise reasonable skill and ordinary diligence by failing to disclose material facts to the plaintiff concerning aspects of its escrow instructions (Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 65, 227 Cal. Rptr. 785 ; Wade v. Lake County Title Co. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 824, 828-829, 86 Cal. Rptr. 182).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that the escrow holder has no duty to disclose information to the parties or to support a contention that the escrow holder is liable for its negligent failure to disclose material information to the parties of an escrow.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an escrow holder is liable for the negligent failure to disclose material facts, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss facts that establish that the escrow holder withheld certain material information from the plaintiff, including dates and the substance of the information. Counsel should argue the materiality of the information and the fact that the information was specifically related to the escrow instructions. Counsel can then conclude that the escrow holder is liable to the plaintiff.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment , in (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows , (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Failure to Disclose

In Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 227 Cal. Rptr. 785 , the plaintiff was the assignee of the beneficial interest under a note and second deed of trust. The defendant escrow company made payment to the assignor of the note even though the final title policy referred to the recordation of the assignment of the note and deed of trust. At trial, the escrow holder claimed that the policy was only cursorily reviewed before it was forwarded to the buyers and that it was unrealistic and unfair to charge it with knowledge of its contents. The trial court entered a judgment for the plaintiff and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that it was incumbent on an escrow holder to review any documents related to the escrow to discover any potential risks to its principals (183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 65) . The escrow holder had the duty to inform the principals of any facts that materially affected their interest in the property or the escrow funds (183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 65) . The court found that the escrow holder's receipt of notice of the assignment in the final title policy was equivalent to receiving new instructions regarding the party to be paid. These "new" instructions conflicted with the buyer's verbal instructions to pay the assignor of the note. The escrow holder then had the duty to delay payment until the proper payee was identified (183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 65-66) .

It should be noted that in Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 705, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541, 41 P.3d 548 , the California Supreme Court disapproved of Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 227 Cal. Rptr. 785 to the extent Kirby held that an escrow holder can be liable to strangers to the escrow for injuries allegedly caused by the escrow holder following its principals' instructions. Kirby relied on Builders' Control Service of No. Cal., Inc. v. North American Title Guar. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 68, 22 Cal. Rptr. 712 to hold that an escrow holder owes the same obligations to nonparties as it does to parties to the escrow. The Supreme Court found that the result in Kirby rested on Kirby's erroneous reading of Builders' Control Service as holding that (1) knowledge of an escrow holder that a nonparty distributee of funds from the escrow has made an assignment of the right to receive those funds is deemed an amendment to the escrow instructions by the parties to the escrow, and (2) an escrow holder who follows the parties' instructions rather than the "deemed amended" instructions is exposed to liability even though its principals suffer no injury from the fact the escrow holder followed its principals' instructions. The Court stated that Kirby improperly transformed Builders' Control Service's holding that an agent has an obligation to honor an assignment by its principal into a duty owed to honor contracts made by creditors of the principal even though the escrow holder had no agency relationship with the creditor (27 Cal. 4th 705, 712-714) . For further discussion of Summit Financial Holdings, see § 101.66.

In Wade v. Lake County Title Co. (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 824, 86 Cal. Rptr. 182 , the complaint against the escrow holder was based on (1) its failure to disclose to the plaintiff-seller the fact that the deposit check from the buyer had not been cashed as per its private instructions to the escrow holder and (2) its holding on to the check for months without checking to see whether there were sufficient funds to cover it. After four to five months in escrow, the real estate transaction fell through and the plaintiff was unable to obtain specific performance against the buyer because of its bankruptcy. The complaint alleged that the failure to inform the plaintiff that the check had not been cashed and the failure to cash the check caused the plaintiff to lose a source of recovery for its damages for the buyer's breach of contract. After judgment for the defendant escrow holder, the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that an escrow holder has the duty to exercise reasonable skill and ordinary diligence in its employment and that if the escrow holder acts negligently, it is ordinarily liable for any loss occasioned by its breach of duty (6 Cal. App. 3d 824, 828) . It held that there was ample evidence to support the trial court's finding that the escrow company was negligent in not cashing the deposit check or informing the plaintiff that the check had not been cashed, stating that an escrow agent in the exercise of ordinary diligence would not have taken this course of action (6 Cal. App. 3d 824, 828-829) . The case was remanded with directions to determine the amount of the plaintiff's damages. The court stated that the escrow holder would be liable for the plaintiff's damages up to the amount of the check (6 Cal. App. 3d 824, 830-831) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Negligent Failure to Disclose

In Spaziani v. Millar (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 667, 30 Cal. Rptr. 658 , the escrow instructions provided that the property the plaintiff was selling was to be encumbered first by an unspecified construction loan and then by a second deed of trust securing the buyer's obligation to the plaintiff. Without seeking clarification on the terms of the construction loan and without disclosing to the plaintiff the fact that the first deed of trust was not a construction loan, the escrow holder closed the transaction, encumbering the property with a first deed of trust that it knew was not a construction loan and the second deed of trust securing the note held by the plaintiff. After default in the payment of the note secured by the second deed of trust, the plaintiff sued the buyers, the lending institution, and the escrow holder. The trial court granted the escrow holder's motion for nonsuit and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in the escrow holder's favor. It held that the escrow company would be liable if it failed to exercise ordinary skill and diligence with regard to the escrow. The court found that an escrow holder has the duty to exercise ordinary care to communicate to its principal knowledge acquired in the ordinary course of employment with regard to matters pertaining thereto, and this duty must be viewed in the light of the fiduciary relationship between the escrow holder and the parties to the escrow (215 Cal. App. 2d 667, 684) . The court found that there was evidence from which the trial court could have found that the escrow holder was negligent in closing the escrow without seeking further instructions from the plaintiff as to the terms of the first deed of trust. It also found that there was evidence from which the trial court could have found that the escrow company was negligent in not informing the plaintiff that the first deed of trust was not a construction loan and did not conform to the provisions of the deposit receipt. The court concluded that the issue of negligence is a question of fact and should not have been determined as a matter of law on a motion for nonsuit (215 Cal. App. 2d 667, 684) .

In Zang v. Northwestern Title Co. (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 159, 185 Cal. Rptr. 176 , the plaintiff was to pay off a deed of trust for a property owner plus provide funds for additional liens and in turn receive a deed of trust on the property. Plaintiff paid off the deed of trust outside of escrow but with the escrow holder's knowledge, and the beneficiary of the deed of trust forwarded a reconveyance deed directly to the escrow holder. The escrow holder recorded the reconveyance deed without recording the deed of trust in favor of plaintiff and without notice to plaintiff or his attorney that this was being done. Also, the escrow holder had knowledge that the owner intended to defraud the plaintiff by obtaining a loan from another lender and recording a deed of trust in favor of that lender, thereby depriving plaintiff of his security interest. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff and the escrow holder appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It found that the escrow holder was negligent in its affirmative act of recording the reconveyance deed without notifying the plaintiff or his attorney and in allowing fraud to be perpetrated by the owner (135 Cal. App. 3d 159, 168) .

The holding in Zang should be evaluated carefully in light of the ruling in Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 160, 70 Cal. Rptr. 378 , discussed in § 101.21[3][a], with regard to the issue of escrow holder liability for failure to disclose knowledge of an underlying fraud. In Lee, the court reached the opposite conclusion of the Zang court and held that the escrow holder was not liable for failing to disclose an underlying fraud. However, Zang can be distinguished because the underlying fraud prevented the escrow holder from complying with the plaintiff's instructions whereas this was not the case in Lee.

It is also important to distinguish the cases discussed above with the case law supporting the contention that the escrow holder has no duty to disclose [see § 101.21[3][a]]. It is clear from the above cases than an escrow holder is required to disclose material information to the parties relating to the matters involved in the escrow, for example, title issues, deposits made by the parties, and payments made to the beneficiaries under encumbrances recorded against the property. However, an escrow holder is not required to disclose information not directly pertaining to matters involving the escrow, for example, issues relating to underlying fraud in the purchase transaction (not affecting the matters involved in the escrow) or information concerning the price the seller paid for the property [see § 101.21[3][a]].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
B Negligence of Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.32-101.39

[Reserved]

§§ 101.32[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.40

§ 101.40 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Failure to Comply With Instructions

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Failure to Comply With Instructions

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT FAILED TO COMPLY WITH ITS INSTRUCTIONS AND IS THEREFORE LIABLE FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Liability for Breach of Instructions. When an escrow holder breaches an instruction that it has contracted to perform, or an implied promise arising out of the agreement with buyer or seller, the injured party acquires a cause of action for breach of contract (Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 532, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 ; Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 616, 621-623, 122 Cal. Rptr. 150).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a motion for summary judgment based on the contention that the escrow holder carried out its instructions if there is a triable issue of fact as to whether or not the escrow holder breached its instructions.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is liable for breach of contract, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that oppose a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c], which sets forth facts showing a breach of the instructions by the escrow holder.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to contract actions generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities relating to contract actions generally, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.45 or § 101.46 may be used to oppose a contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Breach of Instructions

The facts and procedural background of Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 528, 25 Cal. Rptr. 65, 375 P.2d 33 , are discussed in § 101.15[3][a]. The California Supreme Court held that when an escrow holder breaches an instruction that it has contracted to perform or an implied promise arising out of the agreement with buyer or seller, the injured party acquires a cause of action for breach of contract (58 Cal. 2d 528, 532) .

In Gordon v. D & G Escrow Corp. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 616, 122 Cal. Rptr. 150 , the plaintiff and his estranged wife opened an escrow to sell their house. Although the record title to the property was in the wife's name only, both spouses signed the instructions and the parties viewed the plaintiff as the seller. The title company closed the escrow and disbursed all the proceeds to the wife. The plaintiff sued the escrow company and after the trial court entered a verdict for the defendant, plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that the escrow company had a duty to obey its instructions and was liable for the breach of that duty (48 Cal. App. 3d 616, 621) . It then held that the instructions, impliedly, if not expressly, called for the proceeds to be paid to both sellers, not just to one seller (48 Cal. App. 3d 616, 622-623) . The court found that the trial court had erred in not admitting certain evidence as to whether the plaintiff had any interest in the property, which error required reversal of the trial court's finding that the plaintiff had no interest in the property and therefore was not damaged by the payment to the wife (48 Cal. App. 3d 616, 623-626) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Breach of Instructions

In Garton v. Title Insurance & Trust Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 165 Cal. Rptr. 449 , a purchaser filed a complaint against a title company, as escrow holder, and others, in part for breach of contract and negligent performance of duties as escrow holder. The preliminary title report provided to the purchaser did not mention the reservation of oil, gas, and mineral rights, nor did the deed of trust executed by the plaintiff refer to this reservation. On discovering the error, the escrow holder altered the deed of trust to reflect the reservation and accepted a false acknowledgment of the plaintiff's signature on the document, without plaintiff's knowledge or consent. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. It held that the facts alleged in the complaint did state a cause of action for breach of contract and it was error to sustain the demurrer (106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 381) . The court further held that the facts also stated a cause of action for negligence against the escrow holder (106 Cal. App. 3d 365, 381-382) [see § 101.23[3], [4] for additional cases involving negligence by an escrow holder.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.41

§ 101.41 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Release of Buyer's Funds Before Conditions Being Met

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Release of Buyer's Funds Before Conditions Being Met

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT IN RELEASING THE BUYER'S FUNDS BEFORE REQUIRED CONDITIONS WERE MET.

A. Liability for Breach of Instructions. [See § 101.40[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Escrow Agent Liable for Releasing Funds Prematurely. When a party deposits funds into escrow, and those funds are disposed of without complying with the escrow instructions, the party is entitled to recover damages from the escrow holder (Kelly v. Steinberg (1957) 148 Cal. App. 2d 211, 217, 306 P.2d 955).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the escrow holder is liable for the depositor's funds because the escrow holder released the funds before the required conditions of escrow were met.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is liable for releasing a depositor's funds, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the specific escrow instructions that require the escrow holder to hold the funds in question until the specified conditions are met. An accompanying affidavit or declaration setting forth the exact language of the instructions in question should be attached. Counsel can then recite the facts relating to the escrow holder's release of the funds and the facts supporting the contention that the conditions of escrow had not been met at the time of the release. Counsel can then argue that the release of funds was a breach of the instructions and the escrow holder is liable.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities relating to contract actions generally, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.45 may be used to oppose a contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Escrow Agent Liable for Releasing Funds Prematurely

In Kelly v. Steinberg (1957) 148 Cal. App. 2d 211, 306 P.2d 955 , a purchaser deposited funds with an attorney who was to act as an escrow agent for the sales transaction. Unknown to the plaintiff, the attorney cashed the check and converted it to his personal use. The sales transaction was later mutually rescinded by the seller and buyer. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff against the attorney escrow agent. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that title to funds deposited into escrow remains in the depositor until the conditions have been met and it is returnable to the buyer if the seller doesn't comply with the conditions (148 Cal. App. 2d 211, 217-218) . The court also held that if the escrow agent violates the instructions or acts negligently in retaining a check in its files, it would ordinarily be liable for any loss occasioned by the breach (148 Cal. App. 2d 211, 217) . In this case there was a clear breach by the attorney escrow agent when he converted the buyer's deposit funds to his own use.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.42-101.44

[Reserved]

§§ 101.42[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.45

§ 101.45 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Failure to Comply With Escrow Instructions--Breach Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Loss

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Failure to Comply With Escrow Instructions--Breach Was Not Proximate Cause of Plaintiff's Loss

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH THE ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS BECAUSE THE ALLEGED BREACH WAS NOT THE PROXIMATE CAUSE OF PLAINTIFF'S LOSS.

No Liability If Breach Is Not Proximate Cause of Loss. When the escrow holder breaches the escrow instructions, but the breach is not the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss, plaintiff is entitled to nominal damages only (Capell Associates, Inc. v. Central Valley Security Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 773, 779-785, 67 Cal. Rptr. 463 ; see Civ. Code § 3360).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that the escrow holder is liable for damages to plaintiff when plaintiff's losses were not caused by the escrow holder's breach of the instructions.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder's breach was not the proximate cause of plaintiff's loss, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the alleged breach by the escrow holder and discuss the facts that led to the plaintiff's loss. Counsel can then argue that the escrow holder's breach was not the proximate cause of the plaintiff's loss and therefore the escrow holder is not liable to the plaintiff.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities relating to contract actions generally, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.40 or § 101.41.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability If Breach Is Not Proximate Cause of Loss

Civ. Code § 3360 provides that when a breach of duty has caused no appreciable detriment to the party affected, that party may recover nominal damages.

In Capell Associates, Inc. v. Central Valley Security Co. (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 773, 67 Cal. Rptr. 463 , the escrow holder recorded a purchase money trust deed inadvertently containing a provision violating the seller's instructions. This resulted in an automatic subordination of the seller's trust deed to subsequently recorded blanket construction loans, as to one half of the property in question. The seller's instructions provided that its lien be subordinate only to separate loans for each lot in the subdivision. The developer was unable to sell the improved lots and defaulted on the blanket construction loans, resulting in a loss to the seller on the trust deed. Judgment was entered for the seller and the escrow holder appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The escrow holder admitted a negligent breach of the escrow instructions, but argued that the breach was not the proximate cause of the seller's loss. Had separate loans for each lot been recorded, instead of a blanket loan, the result would have been the same, that is, the lots would have been foreclosed on and the seller would still suffer a loss (260 Cal. App. 2d 773, 779-780) . The court concluded that the depressed real estate market was the sole proximate cause of the seller's loss (260 Cal. App. 2d 773, 782) . Since there was a breach but no actual damages, the seller was entitled to nominal damages only (260 Cal. App. 2d 773, 785) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.46

§ 101.46 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Delivery of Invalid Deed--Appropriate Action by Seller Is Quiet Title or Rescission Action

[1] Form Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract--Delivery of Invalid Deed--Appropriate Action by Seller Is Quiet Title or Rescission Action

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR DAMAGES FOR DELIVERY OF AN INVALID DEED; THE APPROPRIATE ACTION FOR PLAINTIFF IS ONE TO QUIET TITLE OR AN ACTION FOR RESCISSION.

Quiet Title or Rescission Appropriate Remedy. When an invalid deed is delivered to the buyer by the escrow holder in violation of the escrow instructions, the appropriate action by the seller is one to quiet title or an action for rescission (Montgomery v. Bank of America (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 559, 564-565, 193 P.2d 475).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that the escrow holder is liable for damages for delivering an invalid deed to the buyer in violation of seller's instructions.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is not liable for damages for delivery of an invalid deed, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the alleged breach by the escrow holder in delivering an invalid deed to the buyer and argue that since the deed did not convey title, seller has suffered no damages, and seller's sole remedy is to quiet his or her title or seek rescission of the sale.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to quieting title, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 482, Quieting Title , (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to rescission actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.40.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quiet Title or Rescission Appropriate Remedy

In Montgomery v. Bank of America (1948) 85 Cal. App. 2d 559, 193 P.2d 475 , the escrow agent altered the legal description of the grant deed after it was signed and delivered into escrow by the seller. The result was to include more land than what was intended. The vendor sued the escrow agent for damages and judgment was entered for the defendant escrow holder.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It held that the delivery of such a deed, contrary to the vendor's instructions, conveys no title and the deed was void (85 Cal. App. 2d 559, 563-564) . It also held that the proper action for the vendor is one to quiet title or an action for rescission (85 Cal. App. 2d 559, 564-565) . An escrow agent will be liable only for the costs and expenses incurred in recovering title (85 Cal. App. 2d 559, 565) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.47

§ 101.47 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duty--Failure to Obtain Reliable Evidence That Broker Is Licensed

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Fiduciary Duty--Failure to Obtain Reliable Evidence That Broker Is Licensed

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT FAILED TO OBTAIN RELIABLE EVIDENCE THAT THE BROKER TO WHOM IT PAID A COMMISSION WAS LICENSED AND THEREFORE IS LIABLE FOR BREACH OF FIDUCIARY DUTY.

Liability for Breach of Fiduciary Duty for Failure to Obtain Reliable Evidence That Broker Is Licensed. Escrow holders have a fiduciary duty to the parties in escrow to obtain reliable evidence that a real estate broker is regularly licensed before paying the broker a commission, and to communicate facts concerning the broker's license to the parties in escrow (Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 1179, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff to oppose a contention that the escrow holder has no duty to disclose information to the parties regarding the licensing of brokers or to support a contention that the escrow holder is liable for breach of fiduciary duty.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is liable for breach of contract, for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss facts that establish that the escrow holder failed to obtain evidence that a broker to whom it paid a commission was licensed and withheld information concerning the broker's lack of a license from the plaintiff. Counsel should argue the materiality of the information and the fact that the information was specifically related to the escrow contract. Counsel can then conclude that the escrow holder is liable to the plaintiff.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Jury Instructions

For a jury instruction on breach of fiduciary duty by an escrow holder, see Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions, CACI No. 4104, Duties of Escrow Holder (LexisNexis Matthew Bender, Official Publisher), also available in LexisNexis Automated Judicial Council of California Civil Jury Instructions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Breach of Fiduciary Duty for Failure to Obtain Reliable Evidence That Broker Is Licensed

In Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co. (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 754 , the purchaser prevailed against the escrow agent and holder on a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty based on allegations that the purchaser's real estate agent, real estate broker, and loan broker were not properly licensed and the defendants violated Bus. & Prof. Code § 10137 by transacting business through unlicensed persons or entities and by paying them commissions. In holding that the purchaser could recover attorneys' fees under the escrow contract pursuant to Civ. Code § 1717, the court of appeal concluded that the defendants' fiduciary duties arose out of and were not outside the contract (128 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 1179) [see also Fairchild v. Park (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 919, 925-926, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 442 (breach of fiduciary duty may be both a breach of contract and a tort)]. The duty of an escrow holder to obtain evidence that a real estate broker is regularly licensed before delivering compensation arises from Bus. & Prof. Code § 10138, and the defendants assumed that duty only by entering the contract to execute the escrow for plaintiff purchaser and the seller. Furthermore, the defendants' duty to communicate facts learned about the broker's licenses arose only because of the duty to obtain such evidence. Since the duty to obtain such evidence was not outside the contract, the duty to communicate those findings also was not outside the contract. Finally, the defendants' obligation to exercise reasonable skill and diligence in carrying out the escrow instructions, and to comply strictly with the depositor's written instructions, were within the duties undertaken in the contract (128 Cal. App. 4th 1174, 1179) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
C. Breach of Contract by Escrow Holder

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.48-101.49

[Reserved]

§§ 101.48[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
D. Actions Between Buyer and Seller

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.50

§ 101.50 Supporting Contention in Action for Rescission or to Quiet Title--Delivery of Deed Invalid if Buyer Did Not Satisfy All Conditions of Escrow

[1] FORM Supporting Contention in Action for Rescission or to Quiet Title--Delivery of Deed Invalid if Buyer Did Not Satisfy All Conditions of Escrow

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

JUDGMENT SHOULD BE ENTERED FOR THE PLAINTIFF IN _____ [A QUIET TITLE ACTION or AN ACTION FOR RESCISSION] BECAUSE DELIVERY OF THE DEED WAS INVALID IN THAT DEFENDANT DID NOT SATISFY ALL CONDITIONS TO CLOSING OF ESCROW.

Quiet Title or Rescission Should Be Granted When Delivery of Deed Invalid. When a deed is placed in escrow with instructions that it should only be delivered to the buyer when the buyer has complied with certain conditions, delivery of the deed before all the conditions have been met is invalid and does not pass title to the buyer (Promis v. Duke (1929) 208 Cal. 420, 425, 281 P 613 ; Todd v. Vestermark (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 374, 377, 302 P.2d 347).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a plaintiff in support of a contention that a judgment to quiet title or for rescission of a contract should be entered because delivery of the deed to the defendant buyer was invalid in that the defendant failed to comply with all of the conditions of the escrow.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the deed delivered to the buyer was invalid, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that set forth the conditions of the escrow that the defendant buyer failed to meet. Counsel should set out the dates and facts substantiating the defendant's failure to satisfy specific conditions and argue that the judgment sought is appropriate.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to quieting title, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 482, Quieting Title (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to rescission actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to the transfer of deeds see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 184, Deeds (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities for use in quiet title actions, see Ch. 198, Quieting Title .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quiet Title or Rescission Should Be Granted When Delivery of Deed Invalid

Promis v. Duke (1929) 208 Cal. 420, 281 P. 613 , involved a real estate transaction in which the plaintiff agreed to sell certain property to the defendant. The consideration was to be cash and a note secured by a first deed of trust on certain other property. The defendant had agreed to pay off a note secured by a lien on the other property to give the plaintiff's note priority. The plaintiff placed a deed to the property in escrow and the terms of the sale were set out in the escrow instructions. Without performing the conditions of escrow, the defendant obtained the deed (in a manner not discussed in the court's opinion) and recorded it. The plaintiff sued to rescind and to obtain a reconveyance. The trial court entered a judgment for the plaintiff and the defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. It held that when a deed is placed in the hands of an escrow holder, with an agreement between the grantor and grantee that the deed must not be delivered to the grantee until certain conditions are met, the grantee does not acquire any title to the land, nor is he or she entitled to a delivery of the deed unless the conditions are complied with. Since the defendant had not complied with the conditions when he received the deed, title to the property did not pass and vest in the defendant by virtue of the improper delivery (208 Cal. 420, 425) .

In Todd v. Vestermark (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 374, 302 P.2d 347 , an escrow holder embezzled certain funds which it held. The seller brought an action to quiet title to the property that had been transferred by the escrow holder and obtained a judgment quieting his title. The buyer appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. It stated that the case revolved around whose money had been embezzled. It held that when all the conditions of the escrow have been met, title passes to the buyer but that delivery of the deed before all the conditions are met is a nullity and does not pass title (145 Cal. App. 2d 374, 377) . In this case, all of the conditions had not been met at the time the deed was delivered; specifically, the condition of obtaining title insurance had not been met. Therefore, title to the property did not pass to the buyer with delivery of the deed and the buyer still had title to the money in escrow at the time of the embezzlement. The court held that it was proper to quiet title in the seller who had not been paid (145 Cal. App. 2d 374, 378-380) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
D. Actions Between Buyer and Seller

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.51

§ 101.51 Supporting Contention in Action for Rescission or to Quiet Title--Delivery of Deed Was Valid--Plaintiff Waived Conditions to Closing of Escrow

[1] FORM Supporting Contention in Action for Rescission or to Quiet Title--Delivery of Deed Was Valid--Plaintiff Waived Conditions to Closing of Escrow

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

JUDGMENT _____ [TO QUIET TITLE or FOR RESCISSION] IS PROPER WHEN PLAINTIFF WAIVED CONDITIONS TO CLOSING OF ESCROW AND, THEREFORE, DELIVERY OF THE DEED WAS VALID.

Waiver of Condition. When a condition to the closing of escrow was inserted for one party's benefit, that party's waiver of the condition precludes the other party from contending that the delivery of the deed was invalid because the condition was not fulfilled (Kish v. Bay Counties Title Guar. Co. (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 725, 728-729, 62 Cal. Rptr. 494).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to support a contention that title should be quieted because delivery of the deed was valid notwithstanding the fact that conditions to escrow were not met. This form may be used in a factual situation in which the party seeking to quiet title is the party who waived the conditions that were inserted into the escrow instructions for his or her own benefit.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the party seeking to quiet title waived the conditions inserted for his or her benefit, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the language of the condition or conditions that were not met, attaching affidavits and declarations when appropriate. Counsel should point out that the condition or conditions in question were for the benefit of the party seeking to quiet title and that party waived those conditions. Counsel can then conclude that delivery of the deed was in fact valid.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice of a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to quieting title, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 482, Quieting Title (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to rescission actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 490, Rescission and Restitution (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to the transfer of deeds see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 184, Deeds (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities for use in quiet title actions, see Ch. 198, Quieting Title .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Condition

Kish v. Bay Counties Title Guar. Co. (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 725, 62 Cal. Rptr. 494 , arose out of a complicated real estate transaction, in which a broker loaned his commission to a buyer as a part of the down payment for the purchase of a motel and also purchased the buyer's house. The escrow holder was instructed to prepare a note and security interest to evidence and secure the commission's loan. This was not done. After a trial between all parties to the transaction, the broker's title to the house was quieted. The seller of the house appealed, contending that title to the house did not pass to the broker because a condition to the escrow did not happen in that the security instrument was not prepared or executed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment quieting the broker's title. It noted that no title passes when the escrow holder delivers and records a deed before full performance of the escrow's terms (254 Cal. App. 2d 725, 728) . However, it pointed out that the seller was complaining that the security instrument condition was not performed, but that condition was for the benefit of the broker, not the seller. The court then held that the broker must have waived the performance of the condition of the security instrument's execution (254 Cal. App. 2d 725, 728-729) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
D. Actions Between Buyer and Seller

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.52-101.54

[Reserved]

§§ 101.52[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
D. Actions Between Buyer and Seller

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.55

§ 101.55 Opposing Contention That Buyer Forfeited Deposit--Seller Waived "Time Is of the Essence" Clause

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Buyer Forfeited Deposit--Seller Waived "Time Is of the Essence" Clause

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT ENTITLED TO PLAINTIFF'S DEPOSIT WHEN DEFENDANT WAIVED A CONDITION OF ESCROW THAT PAYMENTS BY PLAINTIFF BE MADE WITHIN TIME LIMITS SET FORTH IN THE ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS.

Waiver of "Time Is of the Essence" Clause. When the escrow instructions contain a time limit for performance and a "time is of the essence" clause, a plaintiff waives the right to claim that the defendant's performance was not timely if plaintiff indicated that it would accept performance after the time limit and did not thereafter give notice that performance would be required by a certain date (Chan v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 253, 258-259, 246 P.2d 632 ; Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1331, 1342-1343, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178 ; Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1134, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 891).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that the buyer is not entitled to the return of his or her deposit for failing to make deposits by the dates specified in the escrow instructions, and the escrow instructions contained a "time is of the essence" clause. This form may be used in those factual situations when the buyer can show that the seller waived the timely performance of the buyer.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the seller waived any rights it had to demand timely deposits by the buyer, for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the relevant language from the escrow instructions relating to the deposits or other performance by the buyer, attaching affidavits or declarations when appropriate. Counsel should summarize the facts relating to the buyer's performance and the actions by the seller that indicate a waiver, for example, the seller's continued interest in proceeding with the transaction long after the buyer failed to meet a deadline. Counsel can then conclude that the buyer did not forfeit his or her deposit.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.50.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of "Time Is of the Essence" Clause

In Chan v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1952) 39 Cal. 2d 253, 246 P.2d 632 , the plaintiffs brought an action seeking a judgment that the defendants, who had contracted to buy property from the plaintiffs, had forfeited money deposited in escrow for failure to make certain deposits in escrow on time. The defendants cross complained for return of the deposit in escrow. After a judgment for the defendants and cross complainants, the plaintiffs and cross defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. It held that it was clear that the plaintiffs had waived the "time is of the essence" clause with regard to the defendants' deposits in escrow because, with the plaintiffs' approval, the transaction was still pending after the dates for making the deposit. Thus, if the plaintiffs wanted to reinstate any right of forfeiture that they may have had, they had to give notice to the defendants that performance had to be made by a certain date. Since the evidence was conflicting as to whether such a notice had been given, the finding of the trial court in favor of the defendants had to be upheld (39 Cal. 2d 253, 258-259) .

In Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1331, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178 , an agreement for the purchase and sale of property was not automatically discharged when neither party performed concurrent obligations by the date specified in the escrow instructions, even though the sales agreement provided that time was of the essence. The seller waived the time provisions by continuing to deal with the buyer after the date specified in the contract, and the buyer was prevented from tendering the loan funds by the seller's failure to provide a termite report as required by the agreement (113 Cal. App. 4th 1331, 1342-1343) .

In Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1134, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 891 , a buyer was entitled to specific performance of two purchase and sales contracts when it was ready, willing, and able to perform the transactions and the seller prevented the buyer from performing by failing to comply with its escrow obligations, even though the escrow instructions contained "time is of the essence" clauses (113 Cal. App. 4th 1118, 1134) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
D. Actions Between Buyer and Seller

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.56

§ 101.56 Opposing Contention That Buyer May Recover Deposit From Seller--Proper Action Is Against Escrow Holder

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Buyer May Recover Deposit From Seller--Proper Action Is Against Escrow Holder

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER A DEPOSIT FROM DEFENDANT BECAUSE TITLE TO FUNDS IS STILL IN PLAINTIFF AND THEREFORE THE PROPER ACTION IS ONE AGAINST THE ESCROW HOLDER, NOT THE SELLER.

Plaintiff May Not Recover Deposit From Defendant. When an escrow does not close because there had not been full performance of the escrow terms, title to the deposit funds remains in the buyer; therefore the buyer may not recover the deposit from the seller but must file an action against the escrow holder (Love v. White (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 192, 194).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that the buyer is entitled to recover the amount of his or her deposit from the seller in an escrow that failed to close.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the buyer is not entitled to recover the amount of his or her deposit from the seller, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the facts relating to the terms of the escrow and how and why it did not close. Counsel should argue that title to the deposit funds remained with the buyer at the time the escrow was terminated. Counsel should also argue that the buyer is not entitled to recover the deposit from the seller, but must instead file an action against the escrow holder for the return of his or her deposit.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff May Not Recover Deposit From Defendant

In Love v. White (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 192, 14 Cal. Rptr. 442, 363 P.2d 482 , the defendant buyer placed money in escrow to pay part of the purchase price for a cafe business and took possession under a lease. Before the escrow closed, a dispute arose over certain repairs. The plaintiff seller filed an action and recovered possession. The defendant counterclaimed against the plaintiff for the amount of the deposit and received a judgment for that amount and for conversion of bar fixtures that remained in the bar when the plaintiff recovered possession.

The plaintiff appealed and the California Supreme Court reversed. It held that title to the money in escrow remained in the defendant because there had not been full performance of the escrow and the defendant could recover the money from the escrow holder. Therefore, the defendant was not entitled to a judgment against the plaintiff for the deposit funds (56 Cal. 2d 192, 194) . The court also reversed the judgment with regard to conversion of the fixtures because the defendant never had title to the fixtures since all the conditions of the escrow had not been performed (56 Cal. 2d 192, 195) .

The ruling of this case should be viewed carefully in light of Civ. Code § 1057.3, enacted in 1990. This statute provides that it should be the obligation of a buyer and seller to ensure that all funds deposited into escrow are returned to the person who is entitled to the funds if the purchase is not completed [Civ. Code § 1057.3(a)]. Any party who fails to execute any document required by the escrow holder to release funds on deposit within 30 days of demand will be liable to the party making the deposit [Civ. Code § 1057.3(b)], unless the funds are withheld to resolve a good faith dispute between the buyer and seller [Civ. Code § 1057.3(c)]. This statute presumably would restrict the ruling of Love v. White to situations in which no demand is made of a seller to release the buyer's deposit, or in which the seller has executed a release but for some reason the escrow holder fails to release the funds to the buyer.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
D. Actions Between Buyer and Seller

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.57-101.59

[Reserved]

§§ 101.57[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
E. Escrow Holder Liability to Third Parties

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.60

§ 101.60 Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract With Third Party

[1] FORM Supporting Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Breach of Contract With Third Party

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS LIABLE TO PLAINTIFF FOR FAILING TO COMPLY WITH AN AGREEMENT VOLUNTARILY UNDERTAKEN BY DEFENDANT.

Escrow Holder's Liability to Third Party. When an escrow agent intentionally makes himself or herself a party to a contract with a third party to the original escrow, recovery can be had against the escrow agent for failing to comply with the terms of the contract (Warrington Lumber Co. v. Fullerton Mortg. & Escrow Co. (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 706, 710, 35 Cal. Rptr. 423).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that the escrow holder is liable for breach of contract with a third party when the escrow holder voluntarily entered into an agreement with the third party and then failed to comply with the agreement's terms.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is liable for breach of contract with a third party, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the facts relating to the formation of the contract between the escrow holder and the third party and attach an affidavit or declaration that sets forth the contract's exact language. Counsel should also discuss the facts that constitute the breach of the contract and argue that the escrow holder is liable for damages resulting from that breach.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to contract actions generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 140, Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments . For points and authorities related to contract actions generally, see Ch. 50, Contracts . For points and authorities related to agency, see Ch. 182, Principal and Agent .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 101.45 may be used to oppose a contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Escrow Holder's Liability to Third Party

In Warington Lumber Co. v. Fullerton Mortgage & Escrow Co. (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 706, 35 Cal. Rptr. 423 , the escrow holder was a disbursing agent on a construction loan. In a letter to a building materials dealer, the defendant escrow holder agreed to withhold sums distributed to the developer and make payments totaling approximately $120,000 directly to the plaintiff. These payments were authorized by the developer. Three payments were made by the escrow holder. The developer then advised the escrow holder that the plaintiff had been paid in full. Without seeking verification from the plaintiff, the escrow holder distributed the balance of the funds to the developer. The plaintiff sued and judgment was entered against the escrow holder. The escrow holder appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that the letter from the escrow holder to the plaintiff constituted a valid contract, and that this resulted in the escrow holder no longer being just a disbursing agent for the loan, but now was also a principal under an agreement with the plaintiff (222 Cal. App. 2d 706, 710) . The court held that when an agent intentionally makes himself or herself a party to a contract, recovery can be had against the agent for breach of contract (222 Cal. App. 2d 706, 710) . The court explained that the escrow holder should not have accepted the unilateral statement from the developer that the plaintiff was paid in full; neither the escrow holder nor the developer could unilaterally terminate the agreement between the escrow holder and the plaintiff (222 Cal. App. 2d 706, 711) .

154 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
E. Escrow Holder Liability to Third Parties

10-101 California Points & Authorities §§ 101.61-101.64

[Reserved]

§§ 101.61[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
E. Escrow Holder Liability to Third Parties

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.65

§ 101.65 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Interference With Brokerage Contract--No Liability When There Is No Knowledge of Contract or Assignment of Sale Proceeds

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Interference With Brokerage Contract--No Liability When There Is No Knowledge of Contract or Assignment of Sale Proceeds

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT IS NOT LIABLE FOR INTERFERENCE WITH A BROKERAGE CONTRACT BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD NO KNOWLEDGE OF THE AGREEMENT PROVIDING FOR A BROKERAGE FEE, NOR WAS THERE AN ASSIGNMENT OF SALE PROCEEDS TO THE BROKER.

A. Duty of Escrow Holder. [See § 101.20[1], Paragraph A.]

B. No Liability for Interference With Brokerage Contract. An escrow holder will not be liable for a broker's commission when there was no assignment of sale proceeds or knowledge by the escrow holder of an agreement providing for a brokerage commission (Contemporary Investments, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1003-1005, 193 Cal. Rptr. 822).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted by a defendant in opposition to a contention that the escrow holder is liable for interference with a brokerage contract when the facts show that the escrow holder had no knowledge of the brokerage contract, nor was there an assignment of sale proceeds to the broker.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the escrow holder is not liable for interference with a brokerage contract, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should set forth the facts, and attach affidavits or declarations when appropriate, to establish that the escrow instructions did not provide for a payment to the broker (or if they did, the instructions were revoked), that the escrow holder had no knowledge of an agreement to pay a brokerage fee, and that there was not an assignment of sale proceeds for the broker's benefit. Counsel can then argue that the escrow holder has no liability to the broker.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form opposing a motion for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to brokers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 103, Brokers (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in opposing motions for summary judgments, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 101.60.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Interference With Brokerage Contract

In Contemporary Investments, Inc. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 999, 193 Cal. Rptr. 822 , a broker filed an action against the seller, buyer, and escrow holder for recovery of its commission. The broker's action against the escrow holder was based on the latter's alleged interference with the sales contract providing for a payment to the broker. The seller and buyer instructed the escrow holder to make the payment to the broker and later revoked the instruction. The trial court entered a judgment against the defendant escrow holder, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court recited the required elements to establish a case based on interference with a contract, including the requirement that the defendant had knowledge of a contract and intended to induce a breach (145 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1002) . It then held that there was no evidence that the escrow holder had received a copy of the sales contract or had knowledge of the provision providing for a payment to the broker (145 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1003) . Additionally, the broker neither argued nor proved that there was an assignment of sale proceeds to the broker for the commission (145 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1004-1005) . Furthermore, there was no argument or proof that there was any direct contract between the broker and the escrow holder (145 Cal. App. 3d 999, 1004) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 101 ESCROWS
II. FORMS
E. Escrow Holder Liability to Third Parties

10-101 California Points & Authorities § 101.66

§ 101.66 Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Payment to Assignor Rather than Assignee of Beneficial Interest in Deed of Trust--Escrow Holder Owes No Duty to Stranger to Escrow

[1] FORM Opposing Contention That Escrow Holder Is Liable for Payment to Assignor Rather than Assignee of Beneficial Interest in Deed of Trust--Escrow Holder Owes No Duty to Stranger to Escrow

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

DEFENDANT CANNOT BE HELD LIABLE TO A NONPARTY TO THE ESCROW BASED ON AN ASSIGNMENT TO THAT NONPARTY BY ANOTHER NONPARTY TO THE ESCROW.

No Duty Owed to Nonparties to the Escrow. An escrow holder owes neither a fiduciary duty nor a general tort duty to a nonparty to the escrow. Therefore, an escrow holder cannot be held liable to a nonparty assignee of the beneficial interest in a deed of trust for payment on the note to the nonparty assignor of that interest. Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 705, 711-716, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541, 41 P.3d 548 .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted to oppose a contention that the escrow holder has a duty to third parties who are strangers to the escrow and therefore may be held liable for payment to the nonparty assignor of the beneficial interest in a deed of trust rather than to the nonparty assignee of that interest.

This form of points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that an escrow holder may not be held liable to a stranger to the escrow, for example, in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should discuss facts that establish that the assignor and assignee were nonparties to the escrow. Counsel can then conclude that the escrow holder cannot be held liable to the plaintiff.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of notice for summary judgment and related discussion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 537, Summary Judgment (Matthew Bender). For forms and discussion relating to escrows generally, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 253, Escrows (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Duty Owed to Nonparties to the Escrow

In Summit Financial Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 Cal. 4th 705, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 541, 41 P.3d 548 , a purchaser of real property borrowed $425,000 from Talbert. The note, made payable to Talbert, was secured by the deed of trust on the property. At the same time the deed of trust was recorded, a document entitled "Assignment of Deed of Trust" was recorded that assigned the beneficial interest under the note and deed of trust from Talbert to Summit. However, neither Talbert nor Summit gave the borrower notice of the assignment. The borrower subsequently obtained a new loan from Dundrel that was used in part to pay the first note. The refinancing transaction was handled by BHE and CLTC acted as an escrow holder in connection with issuing the title insurance for the new deed of trust securing the new note. CLTC prepared a preliminary title report noting that the property was encumbered by a deed of trust securing the Talbert note, and that an assignment of the note and deed of trust from Talbert to Summit had been recorded. BHE thereafter obtained a note payoff demand from Talbert specifying the outstanding balance to be paid to Talbert. BHE forwarded Talbert's payoff demand to CLTC. On close of the refinancing transaction, CLTC paid Talbert in accordance with the payoff demand and BHE's instructions. Summit did not receive the funds from Talbert.

The borrower filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code. The bankruptcy court entered an order for sale of the property free and clear of all liens. The order directed that the proceeds of the sale be used to pay the amounts owed Dundrel as the holder of the first trust deed and amounts owed to another secured creditor, and that any purported liens on the property held by other parties, including Summit, would attach to the remaining proceeds of the sale. The borrower moved in the bankruptcy court for an order disallowing Summit's lien claim on the ground the amount paid to Talbert in the refinance transaction fully extinguished the borrower's obligations under the note. The bankruptcy court concluded that the borrower was not given the required notice of the assignment and the payment to Talbert extinguished the note under Civ. Code § 2937(f) (debtor's payment to the prior note holder before receiving notice of the assignment pro tanto extinguishes the underlying obligation). It therefore disallowed Summit's lien claim.

Summit then brought an action seeking recovery from CLTC of the note payment CLTC made to Talbert. In affirming the court of appeal's judgment for CLTC, the California Supreme Court held that an escrow holder owes a duty only to parties and participants in the escrow, and may not be held liable to a stranger to the escrow such as Summit (27 Cal. 4th 705, 708) . Thus, CLTC, who paid the note as instructed by issuing a check to the assignor of the note rather than the assignee, neither of whom were parties to the escrow, could not be held liable for breach of fiduciary duty (27 Cal. 4th 705, 714) . In addition, CLTC could not be held liable to the assignee on a general negligence theory (27 Cal. 4th 705, 715) [see also Biakanja v. Irving (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 647, 650, 320 P.2d 16 (factors to apply in determining whether duty of care exists to a third party not in privity)]. In Summit (1) the transaction undertaken by the escrow holder was not intended to affect or benefit the assignee; (2) the harm was not foreseeable because the escrow holder could not have foreseen that the assignor would default on its obligation to disburse the funds to the assignee; and (3) there was no moral blame connected with the act of paying the assignor rather than the assignee because that act fulfilled the escrow holder's duty to perform the instructions given to it by the parties to the escrow and was authorized by statute (27 Cal. 4th 705, 715-716) [see also Civ. Code § 2937(d), (f)]. In addition, there was not a sufficiently close connection between the payment to the assignor and the injury suffered by the assignee to warrant imposition of a duty of care on the escrow holder. Although the payment extinguished the borrower's obligation under the note, the assignee's injury was caused by its own noncompliance with its statutory obligation to give notice of the assignment [Civ. Code § 2937(d)] and because the assignor breached its contractual obligation to the assignee (27 Cal. 4th 705, 716) .

It should be noted that the Supreme Court disapproved of Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 57, 227 Cal. Rptr. 785 to the extent Kirby held that an escrow holder can be liable to strangers to the escrow for injuries allegedly caused by the escrow holder following its principals' instructions. Kirby relied on Builders' Control Service of No. Cal., Inc. v. North American Title Guar. Co. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 68, 22 Cal. Rptr. 712 to hold that an escrow holder owes the same obligations to nonparties as it does to parties to the escrow. The Supreme Court found that the result in Kirby rested on Kirby's erroneous reading of Builders' Control Service as holding that (1) knowledge of an escrow holder that a nonparty distributee of funds from the escrow has made an assignment of the right to receive those funds is deemed an amendment to the escrow instructions by the parties to the escrow, and (2) an escrow holder who follows the parties' instructions rather than the "deemed amended" instructions is exposed to liability even though its principals suffer no injury from the fact the escrow holder followed its principals' instructions. The Court stated that Kirby improperly transformed Builders' Control Service's holding that an agent has an obligation to honor an assignment by its principal into a duty owed to honor contracts made by creditors of the principal even though the escrow holder had no agency relationship with the creditor (27 Cal. 4th 705, 712-714) . For discussion of Kirby, see § 101.31.

157 of 157 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
Chapter 102 RESERVED

10-102 California Points & Authorities Chapter 102

RESERVED

Chapter 102RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT

10-103 California Points & Authorities 103.syn

§ 103.syn Synopsis to Chapter 103: FALSE IMPRISONMENT

§ 103.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 103.02 Governing Statutes

§ 103.03 Page Limits on Points and Authorities

§ 103.04 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 103.05 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 103.06-103.19 [Reserved]

§ 103.20 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

[b] Plaintiff's Ignorance of Illegality of Imprisonment

[c] Fraud as Not Presumed

[d] Running of Statute Not Barred by Pendency of Criminal Proceeding in Action Against Private Defendant

[e] Plaintiff's Release on Bail

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

§ 103.21 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant Public Entity or Employee--In Action for False Imprisonment--Failure to File Claim With Public Entity Within Statutory Time Limit After Accrual of Cause of Action [Gov. Code § 911.2] or to Seek Leave to File Late Claim [Gov. Code §§ 911.4, 946.6]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Comply With Claim Procedure Bars Action

§§ 103.22-103.39 [Reserved]

§ 103.40 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest Property Owner Justified in Detaining Suspected Thief or Vandal for Reasonable Investigation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Property Owner's Right to Detain for Investigation

[b] Probable Cause as Question of Law

[c] Outcome of Criminal Charges Immaterial

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Probable Cause as Question of Law

§ 103.41 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant Merchant, Library Employee, or Theater Owner--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Defendant Justified in Detaining Suspected Thief for Reasonable Investigation [Penal Code § 490.5(f)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Merchant's Right to Detain for Investigation

[b] Library Employee's Right to Detain for Investigation

[c] Theater Owner's Right to Detain for Investigation

§ 103.42 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Reasonableness of Manner or Length of Time of Investigative Detention as Question of Fact

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonableness of Length and Manner of Detention as Question of Fact

§ 103.43 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Probable Cause as Not Justifying Detention for Purpose Other Than Investigation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable Cause No Defense

[b] Detention to Secure Confession

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Probable Cause No Defense

§ 103.44 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Awareness of Confinement Not an Essential Element

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Awareness of Confinement Not Required for Recovery

§§ 103.45-103.59 [Reserved]

§ 103.60 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Not Liable for Report to Authorities Resulting in Warrantless Arrest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statements Made to Police Reporting Potential Criminal Conduct Absolutely Privileged

§ 103.61 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Not Liable Where Acting Pursuant to Request and Instructions of Peace Officer in Making Arrest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Use of Form

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arrest Pursuant to Police Instructions

§ 103.62 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Justified in Arresting Plaintiff for Public Offense Committed or Attempted in His/Her Presence [Penal Code § 837(1)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

§ 103.63 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Felony Had Been Committed and Defendant Citizen Had Reasonable Cause to Believe Plaintiff Committed It [Penal Code § 837(3)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonable Cause as Question of Law

[b] Determination of Reasonable Cause

§ 103.64 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Arrest Justified Because Plaintiff Had Committed a Felony [Penal Code §§ 836(a)(2), 837(2)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

§ 103.65 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Peace Officer Had Probable Cause to Believe Person Arrested Had Committed Public Offense in His/Her Presence [Penal Code § 836(a)(1)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Related Points and Authorities

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable Cause as Question of Law

[b] Determination of Probable Cause

[c] Effect of Subsequent Decision Not to Prosecute

§ 103.66 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Defendant Peace Officer Had Probable Cause to Believe Plaintiff Had Committed Felony [Penal Code § 836(a)(3)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable Cause as Question of Law

[b] Determination of Probable Cause

[c] Information From Victim of Felony

[d] Information Transmitted Through Official Channels

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Determination of Probable Cause

[b] Information From Victim of Felony

§ 103.67 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Peace Officer Not Liable for Receiving Custody of Person Arrested in Citizen's Arrest [Penal Code §§ 142, 847]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Peace Officer

§ 103.68 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest by Peace Officer--Supervisor Not Liable for False Imprisonment by Subordinates [Gov. Code § 820.8]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supervisor Not Liable for Acts of Subordinates

§ 103.69 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Magistrate Immune From Liability Based on Oral Order to Arrest [Penal Code § 838]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Magistrate

§ 103.70 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Public Authorities Not Liable for Taking Child Into Custody and Filing Petition for Dependency of Child [Gov. Code §§ 815.2(b), 821.6; Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 305]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No False Imprisonment for Taking Dependent Child Into Custody Under Legal Authority

§ 103.71 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Liable for Procuring Unlawful Arrest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Procurement of Unlawful Arrest

[b] Absolute Privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) Inapplicable to Act of Making Citizen's Arrest

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Procurement of Unlawful Arrest

[b] Absolute Privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) Inapplicable to Act of Making Citizen's Arrest

§ 103.72 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Citizen's Arrest--Triable Issue of Fact Existing as to Whether Offense Committed in Presence of Private Citizen Accomplishing Citizen's Arrest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Triable Issue of Fact as to Legality of Arrest

§ 103.73 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Warrantless Felony Arrest Not Justified Where Offense Committed as Result of Entrapment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entrapment as Vitiating Justification

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Test of Entrapment

§ 103.74 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Information From Untested Informer as Not Providing Reasonable Cause for Warrantless

Arrest Absent Showing Justifying Reliance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Information From Untested Informer

§ 103.75 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Finding at Preliminary Hearing in Criminal Proceeding as Not Estopping Plaintiff From Litigating Issue of Probable Cause for Arrest

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Not Estopped From Litigating Probable Cause for Underlying Criminal Arrest

§ 103.76 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Complaint Does Not Allege Facts Showing Probable Cause for Warrantless Arrest as Matter of Law [Penal Code §§ 836(a)(1), (3), 837(3)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sustaining Demurrer as Improper

[b] Statements Regarding Plaintiff's Criminal Conduct as Not Establishing Reasonable Cause

[c] Fact of Plaintiff's Guilt as Not Establishing Reasonable Cause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sustaining Demurrer as Improper

§ 103.77 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Allegation of Unlawfulness of Arrest Not Required Where Arrest Made Without Warrant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Unlawfulness Unnecessary

[b] Defendant Has Burden of Proving Justification for Arrest

§§ 103.78-103.89 [Reserved]

§ 103.90 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Judge Immune From Liability for Defective Issuance of Arrest Warrant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Immunity

[b] Error in Determination of Jurisdiction

[c] Issuance of Warrant of Insufficient Complaint

[d] Lack of Statutory Compliance

[e] Inferior Court Judges Immune

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judicial Immunity

§ 103.91 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Detention of Juvenile--Juvenile Court Judge Immune From Liability for Detention of Minor

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Juvenile Court Judges

[b] Effect of Procedural Irregularities

[c] Effect of Habeas Corpus Release

§ 103.92 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Private Citizen Not Liable for Providing Information in Good Faith Leading to Issuance of Arrest Warrant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Private Citizen

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Immunity of Private Citizen

§ 103.93 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Failure to Allege Facts Showing Warrant Invalid on Its Face

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Necessary Allegations Where Arrest Pursuant to Warrant

[b] Insufficient Allegations

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Necessary Allegations Where Arrest Pursuant to Warrant

§ 103.94 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Peace Officer and Public Entity Employing Him/Her Immune From Liability for Execution of Facially Valid Arrest Warrant or Other Process [Civ. Code § 43.55; Code Civ. Proc. § 262.1]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Peace Officer

[b] Facial Regularity of Process

[c] Determination of Facial Regularity

[d] Defects in Issuance Proceeding

[e] Knowledge of Officer

[f] Determination of Invalidity on Habeas Corpus

[g] Malice of Officer

[h] Jurisdiction of Person

[i] Immunity of Public Entity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Immunity of Peace Officer

§ 103.95 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Judicial Immunity Does Not Protect Judge Acting in Complete Absence of Jurisdiction to Issue Arrest Warrant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inapplicability of Judicial Immunity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inapplicability of Judicial Immunity

§ 103.96 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e) for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Bench Warrant--Bench Warrant for Civil Contempt Not Regular on Its Face [Civ. Code § 43.55; Code Civ. Proc. § 1213]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Civil Contempt Bench Warrant Not Regular on Its Face

§ 103.97 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Bench Warrant--Bench Warrant to Compel Attendance of Witness Not Regular on Its Face [Civ. Code § 43.55; Code Civ. Proc. § 1994]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bench Warrant to Compel Attendance of Witness Not Regular on Its Face

§ 103.98 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Arrest Unlawful Where Peace Officer Failed to Use Reasonable Prudence to Determine That Person Arrested Was Person Named in Warrant or Acted With Malice [Civ. Code § 43.55]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Arrest of Wrong Person

[b] Liability for Arrest Made With Malice

[c] Prima Facie Showing of Unlawfulness

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Arrest of Wrong Person

[b] Liability for Arrest Made With Malice

§§ 103.99-103.109 [Reserved]

§ 103.110 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Detention After Arrest--Failure to Allege Facts Showing Delay Unnecessary or Unreasonable [Penal Code §§ 825, 847, 849(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Unnecessary Delay

§ 103.111 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant Peace Officer--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention After Arrest--Delay in Taking Arrestee Before Magistrate Not Unreasonable Where Arrestee Assented to Delay [Penal Code §§ 825, 849(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay Not Unreasonable Where Arrestee Assents

§ 103.112 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Detention After Arrest--Delay in Taking Arrested Person Before Magistrate [Penal Code §§ 825, 849]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action for Unreasonable Delay

[b] Lawful Arrest as Not Excusing Subsequent Unreasonable Detention

[c] Delay of Less Than Two Days Not Reasonable as Matter of Law

§ 103.113 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Detention After Arrest--Cause of Action Stated Based on Failure of Public Entity to Perform Mandatory Duty [Gov. Code § 815.6]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Release After Dismissal of Criminal Charges

[b] Failure to Make Record Entries of Dismissal of Criminal Charges

[c] Failure to Release on Posting of Bail

[d] Liability Not Barred by Section 844.6(a)(2) of Government Code

[e] Liability Not Barred by Section 821.6 of Government Code

§ 103.114 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention After Arrest--Unreasonableness of Delay in Taking Defendant Before Magistrate Is Question of Fact

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unreasonableness of Delay as Question of Fact

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.01

§ 103.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting and opposing demurrers and motions for summary judgment in actions for damages for false imprisonment. Part II.A contains memoranda supporting a demurrer and a motion for summary judgment based on expiration of limitations periods [see §§ 103.20, 103.21]. Part II.B contains memoranda supporting [see §§ 103.40, 103.41] and opposing [see §§ 103.42, 103.43] motions for summary judgments in actions for false imprisonment based on detention of the plaintiff without actual arrest. Part II.C contains memoranda supporting [see §§ 103.60 -103.70] and opposing [see §§ 103.71 -103.77] motions for summary judgment and demurrers in actions for false imprisonment based on the warrantless arrest of the plaintiff, by either a private person or a peace officer. Part II.D contains memoranda supporting [see §§ 103.90 -103.94] and opposing [see §§ 103.95 -103.98] demurrers to complaints in actions for false imprisonment based on an arrest of the plaintiff pursuant to warrant. Part II.E contains memoranda supporting [see §§ 103.110, 103.111] and opposing [see §§ 103.112 -103.114] demurrers and motions for summary judgment in actions for false imprisonment based on the wrongful detention of the plaintiff after a lawful arrest.

For a discussion and sample forms showing how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a complete memorandum of points and authorities or brief, and for further discussion of law and motion procedure and strategy, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionCivil ProceduresSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentDefensesGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.02

§ 103.02 Governing Statutes

Several different codes contain statutes relevant to civil actions for false imprisonment. Relevant provisions of the Civil Code include: Civ. Code §§ 43 (right of protection from bodily restraint or harm) and 43.55 (limits on liability of peace officer executing arrest warrant regular on its face). Pertinent provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure include: Code Civ. Proc. §§ 262.1 (sheriffs and others justified in executing all regular process, regardless of defects in issuance) and 340(c) (one-year statute of limitations for false imprisonment actions). Related sections of the Penal Code include: Penal Code §§ 9 (civil damages for criminal acts); 142 (penalties for peace officer's failure to take custody of person arrested in citizen's arrest); 145 (penalties for failure to take arrested person before magistrate); 146 (penalties for arrest without legal authority); 182 (penalties for conspiring to wrongfully procure the arrest of another); 210.5 (increased penalties for false imprisonment committed for purposes of protection from arrest or to use person as shield); 236 (false imprisonment defined); 237 (penalties for crime of false imprisonment); 490.5(f) (merchant's privilege to detain suspected thief for investigation); 825(a) (duty to take arrested person before magistrate within specified time limit); 836 (warrantless arrests by peace officers); 837 (warrantless arrests by private persons); 838 (warrantless arrests ordered by magistrates); 847 (duty of person making citizen's arrest to turn arrested person over to peace officer or magistrate; immunity of peace officer in various arrest situations); 849 (duty to take person arrested without warrant before magistrate).

Provisions relating to release on bail are found in Penal Code §§ 1268-1298 and 1384. Provisions of the Government Code relevant to the liability of public employees and public entities for false imprisonment include Gov. Code §§ 815.2, 815.6, 820, 820.4, 820.8, and 821.6. Claims against public entities are generally governed by Gov. Code §§ 900-935.6, with Gov. Code §§ 911.2 and 945.3 governing specific situations applicable to false imprisonment actions. Other codes, such as the Business and Professions Code, the Food and Agriculture Code, and the Health and Safety Code contain provisions relating to arrests by persons under their governance.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentDefensesStatutes of LimitationsTortsIntentional TortsFalse

ImprisonmentRemediesTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentWarrants

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.03

§ 103.03 Page Limits on Points and Authorities

Generally, a supporting or opposing memorandum of points and authorities must not exceed 15 pages, or in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 pages. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. For further discussion of the page limitations under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113, and of other basic format requirements of memoranda of points and authorities, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentOppositionMemoranda in OppositionCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentSupporting MaterialsMemoranda of LawGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.04

§ 103.04 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a discussion and forms of complaints, allegations, and affirmative defenses in actions for damages for false imprisonment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

For a discussion and forms for use in filing claims and bringing tort actions against public entities and their employees, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 480, Public Entities and Officers .

For discussion and forms for use in tort actions to protect interests similar to the interest in freedom from unlawful violation of personal liberty protected by false imprisonment actions, see the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender):

- Ch. 58, Assault and Battery.
- Ch. 112, Civil Rights.
- Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process.
- Ch. 362, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress.
- Ch. 429, Privacy.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentGeneral OverviewTortsPublic Entity LiabilityLiabilityGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.05

§ 103.05 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

Related memoranda of points and authorities that may be useful in particular false imprisonment cases may be found in the following chapters:

- Ch. 64, Damages: Tort.
- Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings.
- Ch. 90, Dismissal.
- Ch. 104, Fictitiously Named Defendants (DOES).
- Ch. 117, Insane and Incompetent Persons: Actions Involving Mental Patients.
- Ch. 160, Motions to Strike.
- Ch. 182, Principal and Agent.
- Ch. 221, Summary Judgments.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Business & Corporate LawAgency RelationshipsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureDismissalsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureSummary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsDamagesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsFalse ImprisonmentGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART I. INTRODUCTION

10-103 California Points & Authorities §§ 103.06-103.19

[Reserved]

§§ 103.06[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
A. Limitation of Actions

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.20

§ 103.20 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-Plaintiff,	)	IES IN SUPPORT OF DEMURRER TO COM-
vs.	)	PLAINT
_____ [name],	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT APPEARS ON THE FACE OF THE COMPLAINT THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action where such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)).

B. One-Year Limitations Period. The statute of limitations for a false imprisonment action is one year (Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)).

C. Accrual of Cause of Action. A cause of action for false imprisonment accrues upon termination of the wrongful imprisonment (Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 454-455, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586).

[Optional] D. Plaintiff's Ignorance of Illegality of Imprisonment. The fact that plaintiff did not know that his/her imprisonment was illegal does not bar the running of the statute, unless his/her ignorance was induced by defendant's fraud (Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 455, 458, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586).

[Optional] E. Fraud as Not Presumed. Fraud will not be presumed, and the facts constituting fraud must be specifically pleaded (Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 627, 636, 75 Cal. Rptr. 766, 451 P.2d 406).

[Optional] F. Running of Statute Not Barred by Pendency of Criminal Proceeding in Action Against Private Defendant. The running of the statute of limitations is not barred in an action against a private defendant by the pendency against plaintiff of a criminal proceeding related to the false imprisonment (Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 455, 458, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586).

[Optional] G. Plaintiff's Release on Bail. False imprisonment does not continue while plaintiff is released on bail (Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 455, 458, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for false imprisonment where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that the bar of the statute of limitations appears on the face of the complaint.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

The authority in optional Paragraph F, Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 , is no longer valid law in false arrest suits against public entities or peace officers. Under Gov. Code § 945.3, a person charged with a criminal offense is prohibited from bringing a false arrest action against a public entity or peace officer based on the acts of the officer in arresting or detaining that person as long as the criminal action is pending. The statute of limitations is tolled during the period that the criminal action is pending.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

For a memorandum of points and authorities supporting a demurrer to a complaint against a public entity or public employee for false imprisonment on the ground that failure to file a claim appears on the face of the complaint, see § 103.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

In Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 , plaintiffs sued the County of Los Angeles for damages for false arrest and imprisonment by two deputy sheriffs. The trial court sustained defendant county's demurrer to the second amended complaint without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal as to the county. The court of appeal affirmed. The complaint alleged plaintiffs' warrantless arrest and imprisonment on June 3, 1963, and the filing of a claim for damages with the County of Los Angeles on December 27, 1963. The complaint further alleged that the discovery of the illegality of plaintiffs' arrest did not occur until plaintiffs' trial in October of 1963, and that the claim with Los Angeles County had been filed within 100 days from the discovery of the unlawfulness of the arrest. Plaintiffs were released on bail on June 3, 1963, and the complaint did not allege further imprisonment after that date. The court of appeal held that a cause of action for false imprisonment accrues on the date of termination of the imprisonment, not on the date when the illegality of the imprisonment is discovered. The fact that plaintiff does not know his or her imprisonment was illegal does not bar the running of the statute, unless plaintiff's ignorance of his or her cause of action is induced by defendant's fraud. The court of appeal rejected plaintiffs' contention that for purposes of determining the date of accrual of their cause of action for false imprisonment, they should have been considered to have been "imprisoned" or "detained" during the period when they were released on bail and until the criminal proceedings against them were dismissed. The court held that for purposes of accrual of a cause of action for false imprisonment, the imprisonment terminates when plaintiff is released on bail, provided that during the period of release on bail plaintiff is not personally restrained of his or her liberty, or confined, or compelled to stay or to go somewhere against his or her will. If the imprisonment has been terminated, the running of the statute of limitations is not barred by the continued pendency of the criminal proceedings in connection with which plaintiff was imprisoned.

Because plaintiffs' cause of action against the county accrued on June 3, 1963, their failure to file a claim pursuant to former Gov. Code § 715 [now see Gov. Code § 911.2], within 100 days after the accrual of their cause of action, barred their action against the county.

[b] Plaintiff's Ignorance of Illegality of Imprisonment

Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 , is discussed in § 103.20[3][a].

[c] Fraud as Not Presumed

Cooper v. Leslie Salt Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 627, 75 Cal. Rptr. 766, 451 P.2d 406 , was a taxpayer action attacking the manner in which the defendants caused municipal improvements and services to be financed by a municipal improvement district. The trial court entered a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of general demurrers without leave to amend. The Supreme Court affirmed. Among other holdings, the court stated that it was possible that the plaintiff-appellant intended to allege fraudulent misappropriations of district funds, but failed to do so adequately. With respect to allegations of fraud, the court explained that fraud is never presumed, and the facts constituting fraud must be specifically pleaded in order to withstand a general demurrer.

[d] Running of Statute Not Barred by Pendency of Criminal Proceeding in Action Against Private Defendant

Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 , is discussed in § 103.20[3][a].

[e] Plaintiff's Release on Bail

Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 is discussed in § 103.20[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accrual of Cause of Action

In Scannell v. County of Riverside (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 199 Cal. Rptr. 644 , plaintiff sued a county, certain of its employees, and a private defendant attempting to state causes of action for false imprisonment. The trial court sustained a general demurrer to these causes of action without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed the ensuing judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed regarding these causes of action, and as one ground for such affirmance held that they were barred regarding the public defendants by Gov. Code § 911.2 and regarding the private defendant by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)]. In so holding the court stated that a cause of action for false imprisonment accrues, and triggers the statute of limitations, when the imprisonment terminates and the plaintiff is released from confinement (152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 606, 615) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
A. Limitation of Actions

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.21

§ 103.21 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant Public Entity or Employee--In Action for False Imprisonment--Failure to File Claim With Public Entity Within Statutory Time Limit After Accrual of Cause of Action [Gov. Code § 911.2] or to Seek Leave to File Late Claim [Gov. Code §§ 911.4, 946.6]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____ _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
_____ [name],	)	IES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SUMMARY
Plaintiff,	)	JUDGMENT
vs.	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]
		[Attached Documents: _____]

_____

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF FAILED TO FILE A CLAIM WITH _____ [specify appropriate public entity] WITHIN THE STATUTORY TIME LIMIT AFTER

THE ACCRUAL OF HIS/HER CAUSE OF ACTION AND FAILED TO SEEK LEAVE TO FILE A LATE CLAIM.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Failure to Comply With Claim Procedure Bars Action. A plaintiff seeking damages from a _____ [public entity or public employee] for false imprisonment must file a claim with the entity not later than six months after the accrual of the cause of action, and failure to file a claim within the six-month claim period or to follow statutory procedures for relief to persons who have failed to file claims within the six-month period as provided in Sections 911.4 and 946.6 of the Government Code bars the action (Gov. Code §§ 911.2, 945.3, 945.4, 950.2, 950.6; see Ridley v. City & County of San Francisco (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 290, 292, 77 Cal. Rptr. 199).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in an action for false imprisonment against a public entity or employee when the motion asserts that the cause of action is barred because the plaintiff failed to file a claim with the public entity within six months of the accrual of the cause of action and failed to follow statutory procedures for leave to file a late claim. For actions based on acts or omissions occurring before January 1, 1988, the time period for presenting claims was 100 days.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion, as well as a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to the complaint, where plaintiff's failure to file a claim in a timely fashion appears on the face of the complaint [see Scannell v. County of Riverside (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 199 Cal. Rptr. 644 ; Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 ; see also § 103.20[4][a]].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of claims against public entities and forms of allegations regarding the filing and rejection of claims, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 464, Public Entities and Officers: California Tort Claims Act .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Comply With Claim Procedure Bars Action

In Ridley v. City & County of San Francisco (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 290, 77 Cal. Rptr. 199 (decided under Gov. Code § 911.2 before January 1, 1988 amendment, when claim presentation period was 100 days), minor plaintiffs sued the City and County of San Francisco claiming assault, battery, and false imprisonment by city police officers. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that no claim had been filed with the city within the time limits set forth in Gov. Code §§ 911.2 and 911.4. The court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant. The court of appeal affirmed. The complaint alleged timely filing of a claim with the City and County of San Francisco. However, it developed on motion for summary judgment that plaintiffs' allegations regarding compliance with the claims statutes were false. The court of appeal held that compliance with the applicable claims statutes is a jurisdictional prerequisite to the filing of a suit against a public entity. If a claim is not filed within 100 days of the accrual of a cause of action for false arrest and false imprisonment, relief must be sought by application to the public entity for leave to file a late claim [see Gov. Code § 911.4]. If no claim is filed and no application for leave to file a late claim is made, the suit is barred. This rule applies to minor, as well as to adult, plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs argued that making an application to file a late claim would have been an "idle act" because relief would certainly have been granted. Plaintiffs further contended that their "substantial rights" were being denied for failure to perform an idle act. The court of appeal rejected this argument. It stated that the right to sue a public entity for the torts of its employees is a creature of statute, and that the power of the plaintiff to enforce that right is measured by his or her substantial compliance with the governing statutes.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
A. Limitation of Actions

10-103 California Points & Authorities §§ 103.22-103.39

[Reserved]

§§ 103.22[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
B. Detention Without Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.40

§ 103.40 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest Property Owner Justified in Detaining Suspected Thief or Vandal for Reasonable Investigation

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS JUSTIFIED IN DETAINING PLAINTIFF FOR INVESTIGATION BASED ON PROBABLE CAUSE TO BELIEVE THAT PLAINTIFF WAS _____ [STEALING or DAMAGING] DEFENDANT'S PROPERTY.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Property Owner's Right to Detain for Investigation. Where a person has probable cause to believe that another is _____ [stealing or damaging] his/her property, he/she is justified in detaining the suspect for a reasonable period of time for the purpose of investigation in a reasonable manner (Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 180, 54 P.2d 20).

C. Probable Cause as Question of Law. Whether or not probable cause existed to detain a suspected _____ [thief or vandal] for investigation is a question of law for the court (Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 181, 54 P.2d 20).

[Optional] D. Outcome of Criminal Charges Immaterial. The determination of whether or not probable cause existed for the detention for investigation of one suspected of _____ [stealing or vandalism] is to be determined without regard to the ultimate outcome of criminal charges made against the person in question (Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 181, 54 P.2d 20).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by defendant in an action for false imprisonment based on detention without arrest where the motion asserts that the action is without merit because the defendant was justified in detaining the plaintiff for investigation based on probable cause to believe that the plaintiff was stealing or damaging the defendant's property. Such a motion would probably be granted only where the complaint failed to allege that the detention was for an unreasonable time or in an unreasonable manner, or where the plaintiff's declaration in opposition to the motion failed to raise a triable issue of fact with regard to the reasonableness of the detention. This is because the question of the reasonableness of the length of time and the manner of the detention (as opposed to probable cause for the detention) is a question of fact [see Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 735, 738, 218 P.2d 802 ; see also § 103.42].

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Property Owner's Right to Detain for Investigation

In Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 54 P.2d 20 , the plaintiff sued a store and others for damages for false imprisonment arising from his detention as a suspected shoplifter. The jury in the trial court awarded the plaintiff damages for false imprisonment in the amount of $3,500. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment. The plaintiff had been observed putting merchandise into his pockets without paying for it. He was intercepted at the main exit of the store, just as he was leaving, by the store detective and her assistants, who escorted him back into the store to a room on the second floor for the purpose of investigating the matter. The testimony conflicted as to what happened in the room. The detention lasted approximately 20 minutes, during which time the store employees accused the plaintiff of pilfering and requested that he sign a statement that he had taken the articles without paying for them. Plaintiff denied any wrongdoing. Some force was involved when the store detective attempted to remove the articles from the plaintiff's pockets and the plaintiff tried to prevent her from doing so. Plaintiff was then turned over to the police. He was tried for petty theft and acquitted.

The Supreme Court held that when a person has reasonable ground to believe that another is stealing his or her property, he or she is justified in detaining the suspect for a reasonable length of time for the purpose of investigation in a reasonable manner. Further, determination of probable cause for detention is a question of law for the court, to be decided in accordance with the circumstances as they appeared at the time of the detention. The outcome of any charges against the defendant is irrelevant to the question of the lawfulness of the detention. Finally, a property owner is entitled to use reasonable force to detain a suspected thief or vandal for the purpose of investigation. In this case, the evidence showed that the amount of force involved was not unreasonable.

[b] Probable Cause as Question of Law

Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 54 P.2d 20 , is discussed in § 103.40[3][a].

[c] Outcome of Criminal Charges Immaterial

Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 54 P.2d 20 , is discussed in § 103.40[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Probable Cause as Question of Law

Roberson v. J.C. Penney Co. (1955) 136 Cal. App. 2d 1, 288 P.2d 275 , was an action for false imprisonment brought against a store and its employee by a 12-year-old girl who had been detained without arrest for suspected shoplifting. The jury rendered its verdict for the defendants, and the trial court granted the plaintiff's motion for a new trial. The court of appeal affirmed. First, the court of appeal held that the trial court had correctly concluded that its instructions to the jury regarding probable cause to detain the child were erroneous. The court had instructed the jury that probable cause was a question of fact. The correct instruction should have followed the rule that probable cause is a matter of law for determination by the trial court. Where there is a conflict in the evidence relating to probable cause, the jury must be told that if they find certain facts to be true, then such facts do or do not amount to probable cause [see BAJI 6.86]. The appellant store argued that it was error to grant the plaintiff's motion for a new trial, because the evidence showed as a matter of law that there was probable cause to detain for investigation. Reviewing the evidence presented at the trial, namely that the child had been standing at the scarf counter, went to a mirror, and came back wearing a new scarf, which resembled the store's scarves only in size and shape, the court of appeal concluded that probable cause for the detention of the child was not established as a matter of law.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
B. Detention Without Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.41

§ 103.41 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant Merchant, Library Employee, or Theater Owner--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Defendant Justified in Detaining Suspected Thief for Reasonable Investigation [Penal Code § 490.5(f)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT, AS A _____ [MERCHANT or PERSON EMPLOYED BY A LIBRARY FACILITY or THEATER OWNER], WAS JUSTIFIED IN DETAINING PLAINTIFF FOR INVESTIGATION BASED ON PROBABLE CAUSE TO BELIEVE THAT PLAINTIFF _____ [WAS ATTEMPTING TO UNLAWFULLY TAKE, OR HAD UNLAWFULLY TAKEN, ANY ITEM FROM THE PREMISES or WAS ATTEMPTING TO OPERATE A VIDEO RECORDING DEVICE WITHIN THE PREMISES OF A MOTION PICTURE THEATER WITHOUT THE AUTHORITY OF THE OWNER OF THE THEATER].

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

[EITHER, if defendant is a merchant]

B. Merchant's Right to Detain for Investigation. A merchant may detain a person for a reasonable time for the purpose of conducting an investigation in a reasonable manner whenever the merchant has probable cause to believe the person to be detained _____ [is attempting unlawfully to take or has unlawfully taken] merchandise from the merchant's premises (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(1)).

C. Probable Cause Is Defense. In any civil action brought by any person resulting from a detention or arrest by a merchant, it is a defense to that action that the merchant detaining or arresting the person had probable cause to believe that the person had stolen or attempted to steal merchandise and that the merchant acted reasonably under all the circumstances (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(7)).

[OR, if defendant is a library employee]

B. Library Employee's Right to Detain for Investigation. A person employed by a library facility may detain a person for a reasonable time for the purpose of conducting an investigation in a reasonable manner whenever the person employed by a library facility has probable cause to believe the person to be detained _____ [is attempting unlawfully to remove or has unlawfully removed] books or library materials from the premises of the library facility (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(1)).

C. Probable Cause Is Defense. In any civil action brought by any person resulting from a detention or arrest by a person employed by a library facility, it is a defense to that action that the person employed by a library facility detaining or arresting the person had probable cause to believe that the person had stolen or attempted to steal books or library materials and that the person employed by a library facility acted reasonably under all the circumstances (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(7)).

[OR, if defendant is a theater owner]

B. Theater Owner's Right to Detain for Investigation. A theater owner may detain a person for a reasonable time for the purpose of conducting an investigation in a reasonable manner whenever the theater owner has probable cause to believe the person to be detained is attempting to operate a video recording device within the premises of a motion picture theater without the authority of the owner of the theater (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(1)).

C. Probable Cause Is Defense. In any civil action brought by any person resulting from a detention or arrest by a theater owner, it is a defense to that action that the theater owner detaining or arresting the person had probable cause to believe that the person was attempting to operate a video recording device within the premises of a motion picture theater without the authority of the owner of the theater and that the theater owner acted reasonably under all the circumstances (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(7)).

[CONTINUE]

D. Probable Cause Is Question of Law. [See § 103.40, Paragraph C.]

[Optional] E. Outcome of Criminal Charge Immaterial. [See § 103.40, Paragraph D.]

[Optional] F. Use of Reasonable Force. In making the detention a _____ [merchant or person employed by a library facility or theater owner] may use a reasonable amount of nondeadly force necessary to protect himself or herself and to prevent escape of the person detained or the loss of the tangible or intangible property (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(2)).

[Optional] G. Examination of Items in Plain View. During the period of detention any item that a _____[merchant or person employed by a library facility or theater owner] has probable cause to believe is _____ [unlawfully taken from the premises of the _____ (merchant or library) facility or recorded on theater premises] and that is in plain view may be examined by the _____ [merchant or person employed by a library facility or theater owner] for the purposes of ascertaining the ownership of the item (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(3)).

[Optional] H. Reasonable Search of Limited Items. During the period of detention, the _____ [merchant or person employed by a library facility or theater owner], or his or her agent, may conduct a limited and reasonable search of packages, shopping bags, handbags, or other property in the immediate possession of the person detained, after the person detained has refused a request to surrender the recording or item voluntarily (Penal Code § 490.5(f)(4)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by a defendant merchant, library employee, or theater owner in an action for false imprisonment based on detention without arrest. The defendant asserts that he or she was justified in detaining the plaintiff for investigation based on probable cause to believe that the plaintiff was attempting unlawfully to take, or had unlawfully taken, merchandise or books or other library materials from the premises of the merchant or library facility, or had attempted to operate a video recording device within the premises of a motion picture theater without the authority of the owner of the theater [Penal Code § 490.5(f)].

The motion would probably be granted only when the complaint failed to allege that the detention was for an unreasonable time, or in an unreasonable manner, or when the plaintiff's declaration in opposition to the motion failed to raise a triable issue of fact with regard to the reasonableness of the detention. This is because the question of the reasonableness of the length of time and manner of the detention, as opposed to probable cause for the detention, is a question of fact [see Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 735, 738, 218 P.2d 802 ; see also § 103.42].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint in an action for false imprisonment by a store customer accused of shoplifting against the store, store owner or manager, and others, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Merchant's Right to Detain for Investigation

Penal Code § 490.5(f) provides a merchant with a defense to an action for false imprisonment, if he or she had probable cause to believe a person was unlawfully taking, or had unlawfully taken, merchandise from the premises of the merchant, and detained the suspect for a reasonable period of time for the purpose of investigation in a reasonable manner.

It is clear, however, that probable cause and reasonable behavior as a defense to an action for false imprisonment based on a detention of a suspected thief for investigation is not limited solely to the case of merchants whose merchandise is being stolen. The case of Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 180, 54 P.2d 20 , although involving the detention of a suspected thief by a merchant, makes it clear that such a defense is available to any property owner who has probable cause to believe that the person detained is stealing or damaging his or her property, and who detains the suspect for a reasonable period of time for investigation in a reasonable manner [see § 103.40].

[b] Library Employee's Right to Detain for Investigation

Penal Code § 490.5(f) provides an employee of a library facility with a defense to a false imprisonment action, if he or she had probable cause to believe that a person had stolen or attempted to steal books or library materials, detained the suspect for a reasonable time, and the person employed by the library facility acted reasonably under all the circumstances.

[c] Theater Owner's Right to Detain for Investigation

Penal Code § 490.5(f) provides a theater owner with a defense to a false imprisonment action, if he or she had probable cause to believe that a person had attempted to operate a video recording device within the premises of a motion picture theater without the authority of the owner of the theater, and detained the suspect for a reasonable time.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
B. Detention Without Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.42

§ 103.42 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Reasonableness of Manner or Length of Time of Investigative Detention as Question of Fact

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____ _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
_____ [name],	)	IES IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION FOR SUM-Defendant.	)	MARY JUDGMENT
	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]
	)

_____

WHETHER OR NOT THE MANNER AND LENGTH OF TIME OF AN INVESTIGATIVE DETENTION WITHOUT ARREST BY A _____ [MERCHANT or PROPERTY OWNER] WERE REASONABLE IS A QUESTION OF FACT FOR THE TRIER OF FACT.

Reasonableness of Length and Manner of Detention as Question of Fact. When a property owner detains a person suspected of interfering with or injuring his/her property for the purpose of investigation, whether or not length of time of the detention and the manner of detention were reasonable is a question of fact for the trier of fact (Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 735, 738, 218 P.2d 802).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment based on defendant's detention of plaintiff without arrest for investigation of plaintiff's suspected interference with, or injury to, defendant's property where the motion asserts that defendant had probable cause as a matter of law to detain plaintiff, but the pleadings and the declarations in opposition to the motion raise a triable issue of fact as to the reasonableness of the length of time and manner of the detention. Probable cause for a property owner to detain a person suspected of stealing or otherwise interfering with his or her property may be found by the court as a matter of law where the surrounding facts are without significant conflict [Collyer v. S.H. Kress & Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 175, 181, 54 P.2d 20 ; see § 103.40]. However, it would ordinarily appear to be improper for the court to determine as a matter of law that the length of time and manner of the detention were reasonable [see Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 735, 738, 218 P.2d 802] . Thus, where the pleadings and the declarations in opposition to the motion for summary judgment raise the issue of the reasonableness of the detention itself, as opposed to probable cause to initiate the detention, it would appear improper for the court to grant a summary judgment for the defendant.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint in an action for false imprisonment by a store customer accused of shoplifting, against the store, store owner or manager, and others, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonableness of Length and Manner of Detention as Question of Fact

In Alterauge v. Los Angeles Turf Club (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 735, 218 P.2d 802 , the plaintiff brought an action for false imprisonment against a corporation operating a racetrack and a security company and its employees who were hired to police the racetrack grounds. The jury awarded the plaintiff $300 compensatory damages against all defendants, $2,000 exemplary damages against the corporation, and $750 exemplary damages against the security company and its employees. The defendants appealed. The court of appeal modified the judgment as to the amount of exemplary damages and otherwise affirmed. The plaintiff, known to be a person with a criminal record, was sitting in an automobile in the racetrack parking lot. Two security guards demanded to know the name of the owner of the automobile, and when plaintiff refused to tell them, pulled him from the car and forced him to accompany them to the clubhouse office where he was searched for evidence of bookmaking, questioned by employees of the security service, detained for 15 minutes, and then released with instructions never to return to the track. In this case, by implication, both the question of probable cause to detain the plaintiff and the reasonableness of the manner of his detention were resolved against the defendants. The court of appeal held that based on the evidence presented at the trial, the jury was justified in deciding that the manner of the detention and investigation were unreasonable. The court of appeal reversed the award of $2,000 punitive damages against the corporation because there was no proof that it authorized or ratified the wrongful detention accomplished by its agents.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
B. Detention Without Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.43

§ 103.43 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Probable Cause as Not Justifying Detention for Purpose Other Than Investigation

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.42.]

PROBABLE CAUSE IS NOT A DEFENSE TO AN ACTION FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT BASED ON THE DETENTION OF THE PLAINTIFF WITHOUT ARREST WHERE THE DETENTION IS IN CONNECTION WITH AN OFFENSE WHICH HAS PREVIOUSLY BEEN COMPLETED AND IS FOR A PURPOSE OTHER THAN INVESTIGATION.

A. Probable Cause No Defense. Probable cause is not a defense to an action for false imprisonment based on the detention of plaintiff without arrest where the detention is in connection with an offense which has previously been completed and is for a purpose other than investigation (Moffatt v. Buffums' Inc. (1937) 21 Cal. App. 2d 371, 375, 69 P.2d 424).

[Optional] B. Detention to Secure Confession. There is no right for a private citizen to detain another without arrest for the purpose of securing a confession of a crime allegedly committed previously (Moffatt v. Buffums' Inc. (1937) 21 Cal. App. 2d 371, 375, 69 P.2d 424).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment based on the detention of the plaintiff without arrest where the motion asserts that the action is without merit because, as a matter of law, the defendant property owner had probable cause to detain the plaintiff whom he or she suspected of stealing, or otherwise injuring, his or her property. The memorandum may be used where the detention was not for the purposes of investigating a contemporaneous offense, which would be privileged if reasonable, but was in connection with an offense allegedly previously completed.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for false imprisonment based on the detention of an employee for questioning by his or her employer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable Cause No Defense

In Moffatt v. Buffums' Inc. (1937) 21 Cal. App. 2d 371, 69 P.2d 424 , the plaintiff sued the corporation by which she was employed, and certain of its agents, for false imprisonment. The defendants moved for a nonsuit which was granted. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal, and the court of appeal reversed. The plaintiff had been summoned to the office of Galbreth, the treasurer and secretary of the corporation, and there Watson, an employee of the defendant corporation, detained her against her will for five hours, attempting to get her to sign a confession of having stolen money belonging to the corporation. He threatened to make her stay until she signed the confession, which she ultimately did.

The court of appeal held that her complaint and the evidence presented in support of it made out a prima facie case of false imprisonment, noting that any unlawful exercise of force, or express or implied threat of force, by which any person is deprived of his or her liberty and compelled to remain where he or she does not wish to remain is a false imprisonment. The defendants contended on appeal that they were justified in detaining the plaintiff because they had probable cause to believe that she had stolen the money. The court of appeal held that probable cause for detention is a defense to an action for false imprisonment only where the defendant has reasonable grounds to believe that another is stealing his or her property, as distinguished from where the offense has been completed previously. In this case, the plaintiff was not detained for the purpose of investigating a crime which she was in the act of committing, but for the purpose of obtaining a confession to a crime she had allegedly committed some time previously. Furthermore, the manner of detention was unreasonable. In response to the defendants' contention that neither the corporation nor Galbreth were responsible for the false imprisonment, the court of appeal held that the facts and circumstances in evidence were such that the inference might reasonably be drawn that the false imprisonment was under the active supervision and direction of Galbreth and the corporation.

[b] Detention to Secure Confession

Moffatt v. Buffums' Inc. (1937) 21 Cal. App. 2d 371, 69 P.2d 424 , is discussed in § 103.43[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Probable Cause No Defense

In Parrott v. Bank of Am. (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 14, 217 P.2d 89 , the plaintiff sued the Bank of America and certain of its agents for false arrest, imprisonment, malicious and oppressive conduct, wrongful discharge, and slander. The jury found for the plaintiff in the sum of $30,000. Defendants' motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for new trial were denied, and defendants appealed from the judgment in favor of plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff was a teller for the bank. A long-standing customer of the bank reported that she had made a deposit which was not credited to her account. The plaintiff was the teller to whom the customer allegedly gave the deposit. Based on this information and a brief investigation of plaintiff's employment history with the bank, bank officials detained the plaintiff for questioning for two hours and threatened her with prosecution unless she signed a confession and returned the amount of the deposit. The customer later discovered that she had not made a deposit and had erred in her accusations regarding the plaintiff. On appeal the defendants attempted to avoid liability on the ground that they had probable cause to believe the plaintiff had appropriated the deposit, and that they conducted their investigation in a reasonable manner. The court of appeal rejected this contention, stating that the evidence in the case clearly disclosed that the plaintiff was not detained for the purpose of investigating a crime in progress, but was detained for the purposes of securing a confession to the theft of money at a prior time and obtaining restitution of the money from the plaintiff. In such a case, impliedly, probable cause was not a justification for the detention.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
B. Detention Without Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.44

§ 103.44 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Detention Without Arrest--Awareness of Confinement Not an Essential Element

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

CONTEMPORANEOUS AWARENESS OF UNLAWFUL RESTRAINT OR CONFINEMENT BY PLAINTIFF IS NOT AN ESSENTIAL ELEMENT OF AN ACTION FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

Awareness of Confinement Not Required for Recovery. Contemporaneous awareness of false imprisonment is not an essential element of a cause of action for false imprisonment because harm may result even if the victim does not learn until afterward of the confinement or its wrongfulness (Scofield v. Critical Air Med., Inc. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1005, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 915).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment based on the detention of the plaintiff without arrest where the motion assets that the action is without merit because the plaintiff was not aware of the confinement.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that awareness of confinement is not an essential element of the tort of false imprisonment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the false imprisonment or detention, and should argue that the fact that plaintiff was not aware of the false imprisonment or detention at the time is not essential to establishment of the tort, and that harm resulted when the plaintiff later learned of the false imprisonment or detention.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Awareness of Confinement Not Required for Recovery

In Scofield v. Critical Air Med., Inc. (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 990, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 915 , two minor children brought an action for false imprisonment against an air transport company which flew them from Mexico to the United States without authorization. The children had been injured in a vehicle accident in Mexico in which their mother had been killed. The children's father, who was in the United States, made arrangements to have the children flown to the United States by an air transport company. However, another air transport company learned of the situation and managed to get its plane to the Mexican site before the authorized company. The children knew their father had sent a plane for them, but did not know that the one they boarded was not the one authorized by their father, and would not have boarded it if they had known it was not the one their father had sent. The children were awarded damages by a jury verdict. Defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and appealed the denial of its motion, contending that the trial court erred in giving a jury instruction which made no reference to force or the threat of force in relation to false imprisonment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for the children, ultimately concluding that a contemporaneous awareness is not an essential element of false imprisonment. The court began by deciding that because the crime of false imprisonment and the tort are defined identically, the Penal Code may be used to determine the means by which the tort may be brought about. Through that analysis, it is clear that force or the threat of force is not the only means by which the tort of false imprisonment can be achieved, since there are alternative methods such as fraud or deceit or any unreasonable duress (45 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1001-1002) . The court then considered the state of mind of the victim of the tort, noting that a victim may be entirely unaware of confinement and still suffer harm as a result of the false imprisonment. The court concluded that contemporaneous awareness is not an essential element of false imprisonment, but that the relevant factor is whether the unlawful restraint or confinement results in harm (45 Cal. App. 4th 990, 1006-1007) . Since the evidence established that the children suffered actual harm as a result of the false imprisonment, the court affirmed the judgment in their favor.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
B. Detention Without Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities §§ 103.45-103.59

[Reserved]

§§ 103.45[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.60

§ 103.60 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Not Liable for Report to Authorities Resulting in Warrantless Arrest

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT ONLY GAVE INFORMATION TO THE POLICE.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Statements Made to Police Reporting Potential Criminal Conduct Absolutely Privileged. Unless the elements of malicious prosecution can be proven, statements made to the police regarding potential criminal activity are protected from civil liability by an absolute privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b), and this absolute privilege extends to a cause of action for false imprisonment (Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 350, 355, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 81 P.3d 244 ; see also Mulder v. Pilot Air Freight (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 384, 387, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828, 81 P.3d 264).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest where the motion asserts that the defendant private citizen is not liable for false imprisonment as a matter of law because his or her sole connection with the arrest of the plaintiff was the giving of information to the police.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense that the defendant, a private citizen, made an honest mistake in identifying the plaintiff to police, and for a form of affirmative defense that the defendant, a private citizen, gave information to the police, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statements Made to Police Reporting Potential Criminal Conduct Absolutely Privileged

In Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 350, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 81 P.3d 244 , the plaintiff was a woman of Hispanic descent who attempted to cash a check at a bank. Prompted by seeming irregularities with the printed check, the bank teller consulted with her supervisor about the possibility that the check might be counterfeit. The supervisor called the alleged issuer of the check, who told her that the check was not a valid check. The supervisor then called the police to report that she had a customer attempting to cash an apparent counterfeit check. While the supervisor was speaking with the police dispatcher, the bank's regional security manager again phoned the alleged issuer of the check, who this time informed the bank that the check was in fact valid. This information was relayed to the supervisor, but by then the police had arrived on the scene. The supervisor tried to stop the police before they approached the plaintiff, but she was unsuccessful. The police proceeded to detain the plaintiff. They questioned her, searched her, handcuffed her, and, after about twenty minutes, released her. The plaintiff sued the bank for various causes of action, including slander, false arrest and imprisonment, and civil rights violations. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the grounds that the statements to the police were absolutely privileged pursuant to Civ. Code § 47(b), and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, and the plaintiff again appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The Court agreed with the majority of court of appeal cases that had addressed the issue that statements to the police reporting suspected criminal conduct were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (32 Cal. 4th 350, 355) . The Court noted the established rule that statements made in preparation for an official proceeding, or intended to prompt an official investigation, were covered by the absolute privilege, and need not have been made during an actual proceeding (32 Cal. 4th 350, 361-364) . According to the Court, applying the absolute privilege to statements to police, which are generally made in preparation for or intended to prompt investigation that could result in an official proceeding, serves the important public interest of securing open channels of communication between citizens and law enforcement personnel (32 Cal. 4th 350, 368-372) . The Court, recognizing an established exception to the absolute privilege for a cause of action for malicious prosecution (32 Cal. 4th 350, 361) , refused to create another exception for the tort of false imprisonment, and expressly disapproved of language in earlier cases that had suggested that statements to the police were only protected from potential liability for false imprisonment if made in bad faith (32 Cal. 4th 350, 373-375 & n.8).

Mulder v. Pilot Air Freight (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 384, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828, 81 P.3d 264 , was a companion case to Hagberg. In Mulder, the plaintiff was a commercial dealer in salvage material who was arrested after an employee of a company contacted the police department to report that the plaintiff was in possession of a flight recorder that had been stolen from the company. The plaintiff alleged that this employee knew, or should have known, that the plaintiff had acquired the recorder legitimately from another employee of the company, but that the employee failed to report this information to the police, who arrested the plaintiff for having possession of the recorder. The plaintiff sued the company and the employee who made the report to the police for false imprisonment and intentional infliction of emotional distress, alleging that the report had been motivated by malice on the part of the employee. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in favor of the defendants, the court of appeal affirmed, and the California Supreme Court affirmed. For the reasons given in Hagberg, the Court held that the report to the police was absolutely privileged pursuant to Civ. Code § 47(b), and that there was no compelling reason to create an exception for a cause of action for false imprisonment (32 Cal. 4th 384, 387) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.61

§ 103.61 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Not Liable Where Acting Pursuant to Request and Instructions of Peace Officer in Making Arrest

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT ACTED PURSUANT TO REQUEST AND INSTRUCTIONS OF A PEACE OFFICER IN MAKING THE ARREST.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Arrest Pursuant to Police Instructions. A private citizen who assists in the making of an arrest pursuant to the request or instructions of a peace officer is not liable for false imprisonment (Peterson v. Robison (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 690, 697, 277 P.2d 19).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment against a private citizen where the motion asserts that the defendant is not liable for false imprisonment as a matter of law because he or she assisted in the making of an arrest pursuant to the request or instructions of a peace officer.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Use of Form

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint for damages for false imprisonment where the fact that the private citizen assisted in the making of the arrest pursuant to the request or instructions of a police officer appears on the face of the complaint.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense that the defendant private citizen acted pursuant to the request and instructions of a peace officer in making the arrest, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arrest Pursuant to Police Instructions

In Peterson v. Robison (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 690, 277 P.2d 19 , plaintiff sued a private citizen for false arrest and imprisonment. The case was tried by the court without a jury and judgment was entered for the plaintiff. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment. The defendant had seen the plaintiff drive his car into defendant's car with such force that it broke a parking meter. The defendant called the Burlingame police and identified the plaintiff, who was subsequently arrested in South San Francisco pursuant to the "all points bulletin" issued by the Burlingame police. Although the plaintiff had been driving erratically and appeared intoxicated when arrested, the South San Francisco police did not file any charges but delivered him to Burlingame. There, a police officer induced the defendant to make a citizen's arrest of the plaintiff. The officer assured defendant that the police would handle everything thereafter. Plaintiff was ultimately released from jail, and the defendant refused to file a complaint against him. The Supreme Court found that no liability could be predicated on the defendant's report to the police of the facts concerning the damages to his car and the parking meter. A private person does not become liable for false imprisonment for giving information in good faith to the police, even if it is mistaken information, and even though such information may be the principal cause of the plaintiff's imprisonment. However, in this case, defendant had gone further and had made a citizen's arrest of the plaintiff. The court held that citizen's arrest could not be justified on the ground that there was uncontradicted evidence that the plaintiff was committing a public offense in the defendant's presence at the time the citizen's arrest was accomplished. However, the defendant was not liable for the arrest under the rule that a private citizen who assists in the making of an arrest pursuant to the request or persuasion of a police officer is not liable for false imprisonment. The court pointed out that the uncontradicted evidence showed that all the defendant's actions in connection with the citizen's arrest were done, not of defendant's own initiative, but at the request and pursuant to the direction of the police officer. This being the case, he could not be held liable for false imprisonment.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.62

§ 103.62 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Justified in Arresting Plaintiff for Public Offense Committed or Attempted in His/Her Presence [Penal Code § 837(1)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT, A PRIVATE CITIZEN, WAS JUSTIFIED IN ARRESTING PLAINTIFF WHO WAS _____ [COMMITTING OR ATTEMPTING TO COMMIT] A PUBLIC OFFENSE IN DEFENDANT'S PRESENCE.

A. Summary Judgment.[See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Warrantless Arrest by Private Person. A private person may arrest another for a public offense _____ [committed or attempted] in his/her presence (Penal Code § 837(1)).

C. Public Offense Defined. A public offense is an act committed or omitted in violation of a law forbidding or commending it, and to which is annexed, upon conviction, either of the following punishments: death; imprisonment; fine; removal from office; or disqualification to hold and enjoy any office of honor, trust, or profit in this state. Public offenses include felonies, misdemeanors, and infractions (Penal Code §§ 15, 16).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action for damages for false imprisonment where the motion asserts that the warrantless arrest of plaintiff by defendant private citizen was lawful because the plaintiff committed or attempted to commit a public offense in the presence of the defendant.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a defendant's demurrer to the complaint.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.63

§ 103.63 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Felony Had Been Committed and Defendant Citizen Had Reasonable Cause to Believe Plaintiff Committed It [Penal Code § 837(3)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE A FELONY HAD BEEN COMMITTED, DEFENDANT HAD REASONABLE CAUSE FOR BELIEVING PLAINTIFF TO HAVE COMMITTED IT, AND THEREFORE DEFENDANT'S ARREST OF PLAINTIFF WAS JUSTIFIED.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Warrantless Arrest by Private Person. A private person may arrest another when a felony has been in fact committed and he/she has reasonable cause for believing the person arrested to have committed it (Penal Code § 837(3)).

C. Reasonable Cause as Question of Law. The question of whether or not reasonable cause existed for believing that the arrested person had committed a felony is a question of law for the court if the underlying facts are without substantial conflict (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 316, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525).

D. Determination of Reasonable Cause. Reasonable or probable cause for making a warrantless arrest for a felony exists when the facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the person making the arrest at the moment of the arrest are sufficient to warrant a prudent person in believing that the arrested person had committed a felony (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant private citizen in an action for false imprisonment based on a warrantless citizen's arrest where the motion asserts that the defendant is not liable because a felony had in fact been committed, and the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the plaintiff committed it.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations in support of this form [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonable Cause as Question of Law

Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b].

[b] Determination of Reasonable Cause

Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.64

§ 103.64 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Arrest Justified Because Plaintiff Had Committed a Felony [Penal Code §§ 836(a)(2), 837(2)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT WAS JUSTIFIED IN ARRESTING PLAINTIFF AS A PERSON WHO HAD COMMITTED A FELONY, ALTHOUGH NOT IN HIS/HER PRESENCE.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

[EITHER]

B. Arrest by Private Person. A private person may arrest another when the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in his/her presence (Penal Code § 837(2)).

[OR]

B. Arrest by Peace Officer. A warrantless arrest by a peace officer is justified and lawful if the person arrested has committed a felony, although not in the officer's presence (Penal Code § 836(a)(2)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in an action against either a private citizen of a peace officer for damages for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest where the motion asserts that the defendant was justified in arresting the plaintiff as a person who had committed a felony, although not in his or her presence.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations in support of the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.65

§ 103.65 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Peace Officer Had Probable Cause to Believe Person Arrested Had Committed Public Offense in His/Her Presence [Penal Code § 836(a)(1)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD PROBABLE CAUSE TO BELIEVE THAT PLAINTIFF HAD COMMITTED A PUBLIC OFFENSE IN HIS/HER PRESENCE, AND THEREFORE DEFENDANT'S ARREST OF PLAINTIFF WAS JUSTIFIED.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Immunity of Peace Officer. There is no civil liability on the part of, and no cause of action shall arise against, any police officer, acting within the scope of his/her authority, for false arrest or false imprisonment arising out of any arrest when the arrest was lawful, or when the peace officer, at the time of the arrest, had reasonable cause to believe the arrest was lawful (Penal Code § 847(b)(1)).

C. Lawfulness of Arrest. A warrantless arrest by a peace officer is justified and lawful if the officer had probable cause to believe that the person to be arrested had committed a public offense in his/her presence (Penal Code § 836(a)(1)).

D. Probable Cause as Question of Law. In an action for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest, for an offense committed in the presence of the arresting officer, when the facts are admitted or are beyond controversy, the question of whether the arresting officer had probable cause to make the arrest is a question of law for the court (Whaley v. Jansen (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 222, 227, 25 Cal. Rptr. 184).

E. Determination of Probable Cause. A peace officer has probable cause to make an arrest for acts done within his/her presence if the acts done would cause a reasonable person to conclude that a public offense is being committed by the person who is arrested (Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 321, 239 P.2d 876).

[Optional] F. Apparent Commission of Misdemeanor. The justification of probable cause for making a warrantless arrest applies as much in the case of the apparent commission of a misdemeanor as in the case of the apparent commission of a felony (Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 320-321, 239 P.2d 876).

[Optional] G. Effect of Subsequent Acquittal of Plaintiff. The subsequent acquittal of the plaintiff on the criminal charge for which he/she was arrested does not destroy the justification of probable cause for the original arrest, and does not render the arresting officer liable for damages for false imprisonment (Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 319, 239 P.2d 876).

[Optional] H. Effect of Subsequent Decision Not to Prosecute. A subsequent decision not to prosecute made by prosecutors does not vitiate probable cause to arrest [Johnson v. Lewis (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 443, 456, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 507] .

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in an action against a peace officer for damages for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest where the motion asserts that the peace officer had probable cause to believe that a public offense was being committed in his or her presence, and that the arrest was therefore justified under Penal Code § 836(a)(1).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to the complaint where it is clear from the facts alleged in the complaint that there was probable cause for the arresting officer to believe that a public offense was being committed in his or her presence [see Whaley v. Jansen (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 222, 227-228, 25 Cal. Rptr. 184 [see § 103.65[3][a]].

[c] Related Points and Authorities

For a form of points and authorities supporting a demurrer to a complaint for false imprisonment where the complaint shows the existence of probable cause to detain a person as mentally disordered, see Ch. 117, Insane and Incompetent

Persons: Actions Involving Mental Patients .

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense that the defendant has reasonable cause to believe that the plaintiff had committed a misdemeanor in his or her presence, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable Cause as Question of Law

In Whaley v. Jansen (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 222, 25 Cal. Rptr. 184 , plaintiff brought an action for false imprisonment against certain police officers and others based on his arrest and detention pursuant to former Welf. & Inst. Code § 5050.3, which provided that when any person becomes so mentally ill as to be likely to cause injury to himself or others and requires immediate care, treatment, or restraint, a peace officer who has reasonable cause to believe that such is the case may take the person into custody [see Welf. & Inst. Code § 5150]. Plaintiff's complaint alleged the facts of his detention, including the fact that he carried a letter from house to house which alleged wrongdoing in government and listed his grievances against various officials. The complaint also alleged that the defendant police officers arrested the plaintiff for vagrancy and took him to the county psychiatric unit, and that plaintiff was released from custody without being charged with a crime or with mental illness. Although plaintiff alleged that there was no probable cause for the detention, defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that its allegations showed probable cause for the arrest and detention of the plaintiff. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and rendered a judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the question of probable cause for a warrantless arrest for a misdemeanor is a question of law where the facts are admitted or beyond controversy (208 Cal. App. 2d 222, 227) . Where the issue is raised on a demurrer, the whole complaint is subject to review on the question. The court of appeal then applied these rules to a warrantless arrest for psychiatric detention. Basing its determination on the facts alleged in the complaint, the court of appeal held that the defendant police officers had probable cause as a matter of law to arrest and detain plaintiff pursuant to former Welf. & Inst. Code § 5050.3. The court also noted that the plaintiff's account of his detention clearly indicated hat the officers had reasonable cause to believe that a misdemeanor was being committed. Therefore, the complaint failed to state a cause of action for false imprisonment.

[b] Determination of Probable Cause

Coverstone v. Davies (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 315, 239 P.2d 876 , was an action for damages alleging, among other torts, false imprisonment. At the close of the plaintiffs' case, the defendants moved for, and were granted, nonsuits. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment. The action arose out of the warrantless arrests of the plaintiffs for commission of the misdemeanor of unlawful assembly. At subsequent trial on the misdemeanor charge, the plaintiffs were acquitted. The facts showed that the arresting officers had come upon a group of students assembled to watch an illegal "hot-rod" race. They arrested the plaintiffs as among those apparently taking part in the illegal act. The Supreme Court held that the evidence established as a matter of law that the arresting officers had probable cause to believe that an illegal act was taking place, and were entitled, in making their arrests, to act on reasonable appearances in determining who were parties to the offense. The arrests were made for acts done in the officers' presence, which acts would cause a reasonable person to conclude that a public offense was being committed by the persons who were arrested. Therefore, the arrests were lawful. The justification of probable cause for making a warrantless arrest applies as much in the case of the apparent commission of a misdemeanor, as well as the apparent commission of a felony. The fact of the subsequent acquittal of plaintiffs on the criminal charge did not destroy the justification of probable cause for the original arrest and did not render the arresting officers liable for damages for false imprisonment (38 Cal. 2d 315, 319-321) .

[c] Effect of Subsequent Decision Not to Prosecute

In Johnson v. Lewis (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 443, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 507 , an off-duty arson investigator arrested the plaintiff for reckless driving, temporarily handcuffed the plaintiff, issued her a citation, and released her. The investigator, who had statutory police officer authority, observed the plaintiff driving her vehicle at a high rate of speed on a public highway, cutting across multiple lanes of traffic without signaling, and causing other drivers to brake to avoid collisions. When the investigator approached the plaintiff's vehicle from the rear and turned on his red light and siren, the plaintiff led the investigator on a high speed chase for five or ten minutes before deciding to pull over. Because the county fire district had a policy against its arson investigators making off-duty misdemeanor traffic arrests, even though the investigators had the statutory authority to do so, the county fire marshal convinced the prosecutor to dismiss the traffic citation. The plaintiff then sued the investigator and the county for false imprisonment and other related causes of action. The trial court granted summary judgment for all defendants. The plaintiff appealed, then stipulated to dismiss the appeal and pay specified costs to the defendants. The court of appeal agreed to dismiss the appeal on the condition that the plaintiff's counsel appear at oral argument and show cause why sanctions for a frivolous appeal should not also be paid to the appellate court. The plaintiff's counsel agreed to appear at oral argument.

The court of appeal held that the investigator had probable cause to make the arrest and imposed sanctions on the plaintiff's attorney for filing a frivolous appeal. Given that the plaintiff admitted that she was speeding and had led the investigator on a high-speed case, the court concluded that the investigator had a reasonable suspicion that the plaintiff was engaging in reckless driving that posed a danger to persons and property and had probable cause to make the arrest. The investigator had the statutory authority to make the arrest, and the fact that the arrest was not supported by local policy did not abrogate that authority. Moreover, the plaintiff's attempts to explain her conduct were irrelevant, because the issue was the investigator's probable cause to arrest, which was determined by reference to the facts known by the investigator at the time of making the arrest (120 Cal. App. 4th 443, 453-456) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's claim that the decision of the prosecutor not to prosecute collaterally estopped defendants from arguing that probable cause to arrest existed. The court noted again that probable cause is determined with reference to the facts known to the officer at the time of the arrest, and is unhampered by the outcome of the charges, including a subsequent decision not to prosecute made by prosecutors (120 Cal. App. 4th 443, 456) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.66

§ 103.66 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Defendant Peace Officer Had Probable Cause to Believe Plaintiff Had Committed Felony [Penal Code § 836(a)(3)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.21.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT PEACE OFFICER IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT HAD PROBABLE CAUSE TO BELIEVE THAT PLAINTIFF HAD COMMITTED A FELONY AND THEREFORE DEFENDANT'S ARREST OF PLAINTIFF WAS JUSTIFIED.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 103.21, Paragraph A.]

B. Immunity of Peace Officer. [See § 103.65, Paragraph B.]

C. Lawfulness of Arrest. A warrantless arrest by a peace officer is justified and lawful if the arresting officer has probable cause to believe that the person to be arrested has committed a felony, whether or not a felony has in fact been committed (Penal Code § 836(a)(3)).

D. Probable Cause as Question of Law. The question of whether or not a police officer was justified in making a warrantless arrest based on probable cause for believing that the arrested person had committed a felony is a question of law for the court if the underlying facts are without substantial conflict (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 316, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975).

E. Determination of Probable Cause. Probable cause for making a warrantless arrest for a felony exists when the facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the arresting officer at the moment of the arrest are sufficient to warrant a prudent person in believing that the arrested person had committed a felony (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975).

[Optional] F. Information From Victim of Felony. Information given to a peace officer by a citizen who purports to be the victim of a felony is sufficient to justify a warrantless arrest by a peace officer, even though the reliability of the victim has not been previously tested (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975).

[Optional] G. Information Transmitted Through Official Channels. Reliable information furnishing reasonable cause for a warrantless felony arrest does not lose its reliability when it is transmitted through official channels to arresting officers, and the latter may rely on it when making an arrest (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 315, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in an action for false imprisonment against a peace officer based on a warrantless arrest where the demurrer asserts that the arrest was justified because the peace officer had probable cause to believe that the plaintiff had committed a felony.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations in support of this form [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense that the defendant had reasonable cause to believe that the plaintiff had committed a felony, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable Cause as Question of Law

The factual background of Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b]. With regard to sheriffs' deputies who made the warrantless arrest, the court of appeal held that determination of probable cause to make a warrantless arrest is a question of law where the facts are without substantial conflict. The identification made and the circumstances of the case were sufficient to cause the officers to entertain a strong suspicion that the plaintiffs were the guilty parties. This being the case, the trial court did not err in determining as a matter of law that the arresting officers had probable cause for a warrantless arrest (21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 316) .

[b] Determination of Probable Cause

The factual background of Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b]. The court of appeal held that reasonable cause for making a warrantless felony arrest exists when the facts and circumstances within the knowledge of the arresting officer at the moment of the arrest are sufficient to warrant a prudent person in believing that the arrested person had committed a felony. In Wilson, the arresting officers had an identification of the arrestees by the victim of the crime, and information from other informants, tending to create a strong suspicion that the plaintiffs were guilty of tool embezzlement (21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314) .

[c] Information From Victim of Felony

The factual background of Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b]. The court of appeal held that information given to a peace officer by a citizen who purports to be the victim of a felony is sufficient to justify a warrantless arrest by a peace officer, even though the reliability of the victim has not been previously tested (21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314) .

[d] Information Transmitted Through Official Channels

The factual background of Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b]. The court of appeal held that reliable information furnishing probable cause for a warrantless felony arrest does not lose its reliability when it is transmitted through official channels to arresting officers, and the latter may rely on it when making an arrest (21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 316) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Determination of Probable Cause

In Levin v. United Air Lines, Inc. (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 535 , plaintiff was arrested at Los Angeles International Airport when, in frustration after missing her flight and the perceived lack of assistance given her earlier by airport and airline personnel, she sarcastically stated that she had a bomb in her luggage. Plaintiff was taken to jail and released later that night. She sued the airline, the city, and several individuals for false arrest. At trial, a jury concluded that defendants were not liable. Plaintiff appealed, arguing that the trial court erred in instructing the jury that they must find probable cause to arrest if they found that plaintiff falsely stated to police officers or to airport of airline employees that a bomb was placed in a public or private place, without regard to whether plaintiff made such statements sarcastically and the persons hearing the statements believed that she was being sarcastic. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendants. The court noted that the criminal statute plaintiff was arrested for violating, Pen. Code § 148.1, had two basic elements: that the arrestee "report" to any peace officer or airline or airport employee that a bomb has been or will be placed in a public or private place, and that the arrestee know that the report was false. Therefore, the court concluded that the trial court, when instructing the jury, did not err in omitting any reference to plaintiff's alleged sarcasm or the officers' perception or knowledge of such sarcasm, as the statute did not require any showing as to plaintiff's intent when making the statements or the effect of such statements on the persons who heard them. Under the statute, it was sufficient that plaintiff made the statements knowing they were false (158 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 1020-1025) .

[b] Information From Victim of Felony

The factual background of Gorlack v. Ferrari (1960) 184 Cal. App. 2d 702, 7 Cal. Rptr. 699 , is discussed in § 103.111[3][a]. The court of appeal held that in determining whether or not a police officer making an arrest without a warrant had reasonable cause to believe the person arrested had committed a felony, the courts will look to the facts and circumstances known to the officer when the arrest was made. There is no exact formula for determining the reasonableness of an arrest, and each case must be decided on its own facts and circumstances. However, where the victim of a felony relates the circumstances of the offense and identifies the perpetrator, his or her arrest by officers acting on this information is lawful. In this case, the victim of the theft reported to the police that her ring, valued at $1,000, had been stolen by the plaintiff, and acting on this information and circumstances found by them at the plaintiff's home, the officers arrested the plaintiff. The trial court's finding that the plaintiff's arrest by the officers was based on reasonable or probable cause was therefore supported by substantial evidence.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.67

§ 103.67 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Peace Officer Not Liable for Receiving Custody of Person Arrested in Citizen's Arrest [Penal Code §§ 142, 847]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT DEFENDANT PEACE OFFICER RECEIVED CUSTODY OF PLAINTIFF AFTER A CITIZEN'S ARREST.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 103.20, Paragraph A.].

B. Immunity of Peace Officer. A peace officer is not liable for false arrest or false imprisonment when he/she takes custody of a person arrested by a private citizen in a citizen's arrest (Penal Code §§ 142, 847; Kinney v. County of Contra Costa (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 761, 767, 87 Cal. Rptr. 638).

[Optional] C. No Duty to Determine Probable Cause. A peace officer does not have the duty to determine reasonable or probable cause before accepting custody of a citizen arrested by another and is not required at his/her peril to correctly adjudge whether the citizen had probable cause to make a citizen's arrest (Kinney v. County of Contra Costa (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 761, 768, 87 Cal. Rptr. 638).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to the complaint in an action for false imprisonment against a peace officer to whom custody of a person arrested in a citizen's arrest is delivered, where the demurrer asserts that the peace officer is immune from liability for false imprisonment under such circumstances.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Peace Officer

In Kinney v. County of Contra Costa (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 761, 87 Cal. Rptr. 638 , Mr. and Mrs. Kinney sued a private citizen, a sheriff's deputy, and Contra Costa County for damages for false imprisonment. At the close of the plaintiffs' case, the trial court granted the motions of the county and the deputy for nonsuit. The jury subsequently returned its verdict awarding the plaintiffs damages against the private citizen. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of nonsuit in favor of the county and deputy. Mrs. Kinney had engaged in an argument with the private citizen (Vallentyne) who owned a vacuum cleaner repair shop. After some heated words were exchanged in the shop, Vallentyne locked Mrs. Kinney in the store and called the police. The sheriff's deputy (Wallis) arrived on the scene, and Vallentyne told him that he had made a citizen's arrest of Mrs. Kinney. Wallis asked Vallentyne if that was what he really wanted to do, and Vallentyne said yes. Wallis had Vallentyne make a citizen's arrest in front of him and then took Mrs. Kinney to the county jail. She was released between four and five hours later. The court of appeal pointed out that under Penal Code § 142, every peace officer who willfully refuses to receive a person charged with a criminal offense, including a person arrested under a citizen's arrest, is himself or herself subject to criminal penalties. Further, when a peace officer receives a person arrested under a citizen's arrest under his or her statutory duty to accept custody of one arrested by a citizen, Penal Code § 847(c) expressly exempts the officer from liability for false arrest and false imprisonment based on the receipt of custody. The court rejected Mrs. Kinney's contention that the *Fourth Amendment of the United States Constitution*requires a peace officer to determine reasonable or probable cause before accepting custody of a citizen arrested by another. The court noted that, were this required, the means of information would ordinarily be scant, and any error on the officer's part would be costly; should he or she incorrectly find no probable cause and refuse custody he or she would face criminal sanctions (Penal Code § 142), while a faulty contrary decision would subject him or her to civil liability to the person arrested (8 Cal. App. 3d 761, 768) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.68

§ 103.68 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest by Peace Officer--Supervisor Not Liable for False Imprisonment by Subordinates [Gov. Code § 820.8]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT _____ [specify, e.g., CHIEF OF POLICE] BECAUSE A PUBLIC EMPLOYEE IN A SUPERVISORIAL POSITION IS NOT LIABLE IN DAMAGES FOR THE UNLAWFUL ACTS OR OMISSIONS OF HIS/HER SUBORDINATES UNLESS HE/SHE HAS DIRECTED SUCH ACTS OR PERSONALLY COOPERATED IN THEM.

A. Obligation by Demurrer. [See § 103.20, Paragraph A.]

B. No Liability for Act of Another. Except as provided by statute, a public employee is not liable for an injury caused by the act or omission of another person (Gov. Code § 820.8).

C. Supervisor Not Liable for Acts of Subordinates. A public employee in a supervisorial position is not liable in damages for false imprisonment committed by his/her subordinates, unless he/she directed their acts or personally participated in them (Oppenheimer v. Los Angeles (1951) 104 Cal. App. 2d 545, 549, 232 P.2d 26).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to the complaint in an action for false imprisonment against a public employee in a supervisorial position based on acts allegedly committed by his or her subordinates, where the demurrer asserts that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the supervisor in that it does not allege that he or she directed the acts or personally participated in them.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Supervisor Not Liable for Acts of Subordinates

In Oppenheimer v. Los Angeles (1951) 104 Cal. App. 2d 545, 232 P.2d 26 , the plaintiff sued certain police officers, their police chief, and the City of Los Angeles for damages for false imprisonment for a warrantless arrest, allegedly unlawful because made for a misdemeanor not committed in the arresting officers' presence. At that time, Penal Code § 836 prohibited such a warrantless arrest. Present Penal Code § 836(a)(1) allows a warrantless arrest for a misdemeanor by a police officer if the officer has probable cause to believe the arrestee is committing a misdemeanor in his or her presence. The trial court sustained all the defendants' demurrers and entered a judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal sustained the judgment as to the city and as to the police chief, but held that the complaint stated a cause of action against the police officers for false imprisonment. The grounds on which the city's demurrer was sustained are no longer valid since the enactment of the California Tort Claims Act, which makes municipalities liable for the torts of their employees committed within the scope of their employment [see Gov. Code § 815.2]. However, the grounds on which the demurrer of the chief of police was sustained remain valid. The court of appeal held that a chief of police is not liable in damages for the unlawful acts and omissions of his or her subordinates unless he or she has directed such acts or personally cooperated in them. Because the complaint merely alleged that the chief of police "in effect ratified, condoned and abetted the cruel and lawless actions" of the defendant police officers "and has never repudiated them," the complaint failed to state a cause of action against the police chief. This rule of immunity of a public employee for acts of his or her subordinates, unless he or her personally participates in, or directs, the wrongful acts is now embodied in Gov. Code § 820.8, set forth in Paragraph B of this form.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.69

§ 103.69 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Magistrate Immune From Liability Based on Oral Order to Arrest [Penal Code § 838]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE A MAGISTRATE IS IMMUNE FROM LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT BASED ON AN ORAL ORDER TO A PEACE OFFICER OR PRIVATE PERSON TO ARREST ONE COMMITTING OR ATTEMPTING TO COMMIT A PUBLIC OFFENSE IN THE PRESENCE OF SUCH MAGISTRATE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 103.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Authority to Order Arrest. A magistrate may orally order a peace officer or private person to arrest anyone committing or attempting to commit a public offense in the presence of such magistrate (Penal Code § 838).

C. Immunity of Magistrate. A magistrate ordering an arrest pursuant to Section 838 of the Penal Code is exercising a judicial power vested in him/her and is therefore protected by judicial immunity from civil liability for damages for false imprisonment based on the arrest, even if it is alleged that he/she acted on insufficient evidence and with a malicious desire to injure the person arrested (Frazier v. Moffatt (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 379, 387, 239 P.2d 123).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for damages for false arrest and imprisonment where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that the defendant is a magistrate who is protected from liability for false imprisonment, based on an arrest pursuant to Penal Code § 838, by the doctrine of judicial immunity.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Magistrate

In Frazier v. Moffatt (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 379, 239 P.2d 123 , the plaintiff brought an action against a justice of the peace for false arrest and false imprisonment. The case was tried before a court and judgment was entered for the plaintiff. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal reversed the judgment on the ground of judicial immunity. The plaintiff and defendant had been eating in the same restaurant. The plaintiff's loud laughter annoyed the justice of the peace who called the police and ordered them to arrest the plaintiff on a charge of violating Penal Code § 415 (disturbing the peace). The plaintiff was subsequently tried and acquitted.

Penal Code § 838 authorizes a magistrate to order a peace officer or private person to arrest anyone committing or attempting to commit a public offense in the present of the magistrate. The defendant justice of the peace was a magistrate under the provision of Penal Code § 808. The question presented on appeal was whether a magistrate could be held liable for civil damages for ordering an arrest pursuant to Penal Code § 838 when he acted on insufficient evidence and with an alleged malicious desire to injure the person arrested. The court of appeal held that the doctrine of judicial immunity protects a magistrate from civil liability for false imprisonment if he or she orders an arrest pursuant to Penal Code § 838. The court pointed out, first, that judicial officers are not liable for the erroneous exercise of judicial powers vested in them. The court then concluded that an arrest ordered by a magistrate under Penal Code § 838 is a judicial or quasi-judicial act. Because the defendant magistrate was acting within the general scope of his judicial powers when he ordered the arrest, he was protected from civil liability and not amenable to any civil action for damages.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.70

§ 103.70 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Public Authorities Not Liable for Taking Child Into Custody and Filing Petition for Dependency of Child [Gov. Code §§ 815.2(b), 821.6; Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 305]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE UNDER WELFARE AND INSTITUTIONS CODE SECTIONS 300, 305 PUBLIC AUTHORITIES MAY TAKE A CHILD INTO CUSTODY WITHOUT A WARRANT WHEN THEY HAVE REASONABLE CAUSE TO BELIEVE THAT THE CHILD IS A DEPENDENT CHILD, SO LONG AS THEY FILE THE PROPER PETITION FOR DEPENDENCY PROCEEDINGS THEREAFTER, AND PUBLIC EMPLOYEES AND ENTITIES ARE IMMUNE FROM PROSECUTION FOR THE INSTITUTION OF ACTIONS WITHIN THE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT AND UNDER LEGAL AUTHORITY.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 103.20, Paragraph A.]

B. No False Imprisonment for Taking Dependent Child Into Custody Under Legal Authority. Public authorities are not liable for false imprisonment for taking a child into custody under legal authority of the child dependency statutes (Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 305; Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645).

C. Immunity for Institution or Prosecution of Action. Public employees and entities are immune from prosecution for instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of the employee's employment, even if the employee acts maliciously and without probable cause (Gov. Code §§ 815.2(b), 821.6; Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 283-285, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for damages for false imprisonment when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action because the defendant public authorities took a child into custody under legal authority based on the child's appearance of being a dependent child and when the authorities complied with the statutory dependency requirements [Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 305; Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No False Imprisonment for Taking Dependent Child Into Custody Under Legal Authority

In Jenkins v. County of Orange (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 260 Cal. Rptr. 645 , a mother sued a social worker and county for false imprisonment for, among other things, taking her son away from her and keeping him in custody for six weeks on the basis of a report made by her ex-husband that the child was being abused by his maternal grandfather, who did not live with the mother and son. The social worker and public authorities complied with all statutory requirements of the dependency statutes (see Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 300, 305). An application for petition to declare the child a dependent child was initiated. At the hearing at which the child was taken into custody, the court found that there was substantial danger to his health, that there was no reasonable means by which his health could be protected other than by removing him from his parent's physical custody, and that he would remain in custody until the next hearing date, some six weeks later. The mother claimed that defendants failed to use due care by failing to investigate the claims thoroughly, which she stated were false. The court entered a judgment of dismissal after granting a demurrer without leave to amend. The mother and the grandparents appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that an employee has immunity for instituting an action within the scope of employment even if it was done negligently or maliciously. Additionally, a public entity is immune for an employee's acts if the employee is immune (212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 283-284) . The court also stated that there could be no false imprisonment, because the child was detained under color of legal authority through defendants' compliance with the dependency statutes (212 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.71

§ 103.71 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Private Citizen Liable for Procuring Unlawful Arrest

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.42.]

A PRIVATE CITIZEN WHO CAUSES, PROCURES, INSTIGATES, OR ACTIVELY PARTICIPATES IN AN UNLAWFUL ARREST OR IMPRISONMENT IS LIABLE FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT.

A. Procurement of Unlawful Arrest. A private citizen who authorizes, encourages, directs, or assists a peace officer to do an unlawful act, or procures an unlawful arrest without process, or actively participates in an unlawful arrest or imprisonment is liable for false imprisonment (Kaufman v. Brown (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 508, 515, 209 P.2d 156 , disapproved on other grounds, Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 289 P.2d 428).

[Optional] B. Absolute Privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) Inapplicable to Act of Making Citizen's Arrest. A defendant sued for false imprisonment based on the act of making a citizen's arrest cannot defend the action on the grounds that the conduct was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1136-1137, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment against a private citizen who procured, instigated, or actively participated in plaintiff's false arrest, where the motion asserts that the defendant is not liable because he or she merely gave information to the police in good faith, but where a triable issue of fact exists as to whether the defendant actually actively participated in the wrongful arrest.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Procurement of Unlawful Arrest

In Kaufman v. Brown (1949) 93 Cal. App. 2d 508, 209 P.2d 156 , the plaintiff sued a labor union, certain of its officers and agents, and two police officers for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest. Both general and special demurrers to plaintiff's original complaint, the amended and the second amended complaints were sustained with leave to amend. Plaintiff declined to plead further. Judgment for the defendants was rendered and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff's second amended complaint stated facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendants. Plaintiff alleged that the police officers and the officers and agents of the union, acting in its behalf and with its knowledge, consent, and advice, maliciously, wrongfully, and unlawfully, and without an order, warrant, or process of any court authorizing them to do so, forcibly arrested and imprisoned the plaintiff for 24 hours in the city jail without taking the plaintiff before a magistrate or advising him of the charges against him. In addition to holding that the complaint stated a prima facie cause of action for false imprisonment (namely, arrest without warrant, imprisonment, and damages), the court of appeal also stated that a party who authorizes, encourages, directs, or assists an officer to do an unlawful act, or procures an unlawful arrest without process, or participates in the unlawful arrest or imprisonment is liable for false imprisonment.

NOTE:

Language in Kaufman v. Brown to the effect that, when there is an unreasonable delay in taking a person before a magistrate after a lawful arrest, the false imprisonment dates from the time of the arrest was disapproved in Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 473, 289 P.2d 428 . In Dragna, the Supreme Court stated that, where the arrest is lawful, a subsequent, unreasonable delay in taking a person before a magistrate will not affect the legality of the arrest, although it will subject the offending person to liability for so much of the imprisonment as occurs after the period of necessary or reasonable delay.

The California Supreme Court has subsequently held that unless the elements of malicious prosecution can be proven, statements made to the police regarding potential criminal activity are protected from civil liability by an absolute privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b). Therefore, even if the information is false or given in bad faith, a person is immune from liability for merely giving information to the police leading to a false arrest or imprisonment [Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 350, 355, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 81 P.3d 244 ; Mulder v. Pilot Air Freight (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 384, 387, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828, 81 P.3d 264 ; see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. However, the privilege only applies to communications to the police or other officials and does not apply to noncommunicative conduct [see Mulder v. Pilot Air Freight (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 384, 387, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828, 81 P.3d 264] . For points and authorities relating to this privilege as it applies to statements to the police, see § 103.60.

[b] Absolute Privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) Inapplicable to Act of Making Citizen's Arrest

In Kesmodel v. Rand (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 118 , another tenant in the plaintiff's apartment building placed the plaintiff under citizen's arrest, in the presence of police officers, based on allegations by the other tenant and his mother that the plaintiff had been "peeping" into the mother's apartment window while she was undressed. By law, the police were required to take the plaintiff into custody, where he was kept for 12 hours before being released. Because the incident was the latest in a series of confrontations between the parties, the plaintiff and his wife had been videotaping the incident, and the tape clearly showed that the plaintiff had not been "peeping" into the neighbor's window, but had merely been watering some plants and cleaning off the sidewalk. The district attorney declined to prosecute the plaintiff, and the plaintiff filed a civil action for false imprisonment against the other tenant and his mother. The jury found for the plaintiff, awarded damages against the other tenant for false imprisonment, and awarded damages against the mother for conspiracy for her role in prompting her son to make the false arrest. The compensatory damages awarded consisted of $3,500 in economic damages and $27,000 in noneconomic damages, for which the defendants were held jointly and severally liable. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, rejecting the defendants' contention that their conduct in making a citizen's arrest was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The court recognized that in Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank FSB (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 350, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 81 P.3d 244 , the California Supreme Court had held that a citizen was absolutely privileged under that statute for making reports of possible criminal activity to the police. The court of appeal noted, however, that the Supreme Court specifically distinguished the situation in which a citizen merely gives information to the police from the situation in which the citizen intentionally and actively assists in making a false arrest (119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1136) . In this particular case, the defendants had done more than merely provide information to the police. When the police indicated that they would not make an arrest, the defendants took the affirmative conduct of effecting a citizen's arrest. This affirmative conduct was not privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b), which only protects communications or broadcasts (119 Cal. App. 4th 1128, 1137-1138) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Procurement of Unlawful Arrest

In Collins v. Owens (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 713, 176 P.2d 372 , plaintiff sued a private citizen who allegedly instigated his warrantless arrest by a police officer for intoxication. The court of appeal sustained a general demurrer with leave to amend. The plaintiff failed to amend, and a judgment of dismissal was entered against him. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiff's complaint stated a cause of action for false imprisonment. The complaint alleged the fact of plaintiff's warrantless arrest, his incarceration, and damages, sufficient allegations to state a cause of action as against a general demurrer. The court of appeal also held that the fact that the complaint alleged that the defendant did not directly make the arrest, but that the arrest was made by an officer at the instance and instigation or direction of the defendant, did not relieve the defendant from legal responsibility if the arrest was in fact unlawful.

[b] Absolute Privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) Inapplicable to Act of Making Citizen's Arrest

In Buchanan v. Maxfield Enters., Inc. (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 418, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 909 , the plaintiff sued a clothing store following a citizen's arrest made by the head of the store's security team. The arrest was made after the plaintiff refused a request to leave the store, a request that was made because two celebrities were shopping in the store at the time and (although the evidence was not yet developed on this issue) the plaintiff may have been targeted as a potential stalker. Police, who were already on the scene at the time, took immediate custody of the plaintiff, placed him in handcuffs, and "paraded" him through the store parking lot, which was filled with media reporters and film crews because of the presence of the celebrities. A manager from the store then informed the police that the store did not want the plaintiff arrested after all, and he was released. In his complaint, the plaintiff alleged causes of action for false imprisonment and invasion of privacy. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer on the grounds that the defendant's conduct was privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b), but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal noted that the conduct forming the basis of the operative complaint was that store personnel effected a citizen's arrest and, accompanied by police, paraded plaintiff in handcuffs around the parking lot in full view of the assembled media hordes. Although store personnel may have communicated to police that they wanted the plaintiff out of the store, the police did not arrest the plaintiff themselves because of any communication made to them by store personnel. Instead, the police only took the plaintiff into custody because they were required to do so after the citizen's arrest was made. Therefore, the court concluded that the essential conduct underlying the complaint, the arrest and subsequent detaining, was not communicative in nature and was not protected by the privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) (130 Cal. App. 4th 418, 424-426) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.72

§ 103.72 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Citizen's Arrest--Triable Issue of Fact Existing as to Whether Offense Committed in Presence of Private Citizen Accomplishing Citizen's Arrest

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.42.]

A SUMMARY JUDGMENT IS IMPROPER WHERE THE COMPLAINT AND SUPPORTING AFFIDAVITS PRESENT A TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT WHETHER OR NOT AN OFFENSE WAS ATTEMPTED OR COMMITTED IN THE PRESENCE OF A PRIVATE CITIZEN MAKING A CITIZEN'S ARREST FOR A MISDEMEANOR.

A. Citizen's Arrest for Misdemeanor. A private citizen may arrest another person for a misdemeanor only if the offense was committed or attempted in his/her presence (Penal Code §§ 16, 837(1)).

B. Triable Issue of Fact as to Legality of Arrest. It is improper to grant a summary judgment in an action for false arrest and imprisonment based on a citizen's arrest of plaintiff for a misdemeanor where the pleadings and _____ [affidavits or declarations] raise a triable issue of fact as to whether or not the offense was committed or attempted in the arresting party's presence and thus as to whether or not the citizen's arrest was legal (Hamburg v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 497, 512, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 568 ; Leggett v. De Giorgio Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 306, 312, 80 Cal. Rptr. 697).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment against a private citizen who arrested the plaintiff for a misdemeanor in a citizen's arrest, where the motion asserts that there is no triable issue of fact as to the lawfulness of the arrest, but where a triable issue of fact exists as to whether or not the plaintiff committed or attempted an offense in the presence of the defendant.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Triable Issue of Fact as to Legality of Arrest

In Hamburg v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 497, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 568 , the plaintiffs were in front of a store, attempting to collect signatures for a voter initiative to legalize marijuana use and simultaneously protesting the store's decision to have a man arrested days earlier for similarly collecting signatures on store property. The store had a policy establishing restrictions on the use of store property for public demonstrations, with which the plaintiffs were admittedly not in compliance. After receiving several complaints from customers, who apparently found the activities distasteful, the police were called to the scene. The police consulted with the store manager about his options, but after observing the plaintiffs, the police decided not to make any arrests. The police informed the manager, however, about the provisions of Pen. Code § 602.1(a), under which it is a misdemeanor trespass to intentionally interfere with a store's business by obstructing or intimidating customers. After asking the protestors to leave or face arrest, the manager made a citizen's arrest of those who chose to stay. The police took the plaintiffs into custody and removed them to the police department, where they were booked and released without charges being filed. The plaintiffs sued the store and the manager for false arrest and civil rights violations. The defendants moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion on the grounds that the store had in place reasonable and constitutional "time, place, and manner" restrictions for governing expressive activity such as the plaintiffs', and that the plaintiffs' failure to comply with these restrictions was a complete defense to their claims. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the plaintiffs' failure to abide by the store's "time, place, and manner" restrictions did not establish that they had violated Pen. Code § 602.1(a), which formed the basis for the manager's citizen's arrest (116 Cal. App. 4th 497, 509) . For summary judgment to be proper, the defendants were required to provide evidence proving that the protestors were in fact in violation of Pen. Code § 602.1(a), and that the violation took place in the presence of the store manager, as required to justify his citizen's arrest under Pen. Code § 837(1). The defendants' evidence did not establish these facts as a matter of law. Three written statements by store customers showed only that these customers were offended by the plaintiffs' conduct, not that the plaintiffs were in fact intimidating or obstructing customers. Moreover, there was no evidence in the record that the store manager ever actually observed any such conduct before making the citizen's arrest. Conversely, the plaintiffs submitted declarations refuting the claim that their protest was anything but peaceful and denying that they obstructed, intimidated, or otherwise interfered with the store's customers. Under that state of the evidence, summary judgment for the defendants was improper (116 Cal. App. 4th 497, 510-512) .

In Leggett v. De Giorgio Corp. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 306, 80 Cal. Rptr. 697 , plaintiff sued a corporation and its attorney for false arrest and imprisonment based on a citizen's arrest by the attorney at a picketing site. The trial court granted a summary judgment for the defendants, finding that the defendants' declaration showed that the action had no merit and that the plaintiff's declaration in opposition raised no triable issue of fact. The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment. Plaintiff was arrested for engaging in picketing in deliberate violation of a temporary restraining order, a misdemeanor under Penal Code § 166. Defendants conceded that when the corporate attorney arrested plaintiff, he was acting pursuant to Penal Code § 837(1) which authorizes a private citizen to arrest for a public offense committed or attempted in his or her presence. In his declaration, plaintiff denied that he continued picketing after he had been read portions of the restraining order. He further stated that between the time he was approached by the corporate agent and the time of his arrest, he did nothing but argue the legality of the restraining order, ask to read the order in its entirety, and announce his intention to continue picketing. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff's right to recover depended solely on a showing that his arrest and imprisonment were unlawful, and that the provocation, motive, and good faith of the defendants were immaterial, except on the issue of punitive damages. Noting that the alleged offense was a misdemeanor and that an arrest for the offense by a private citizen would have been lawful only if the offense were attempted or committed in the presence of the arresting citizen, the court held that a triable issue of fact was raised as to whether the offense for which plaintiff was arrested was in fact committed or attempted in the presence of the arresting attorney.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.73

§ 103.73 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Warrantless Felony Arrest Not Justified Where Offense Committed as Result of Entrapment

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.42.]

A WARRANTLESS ARREST BY PEACE OFFICERS IS NOT JUSTIFIED WHERE THE OFFENSE FOR WHICH THE ARREST WAS MADE WAS THE RESULT OF AN ENTRAPMENT.

Entrapment as Vitiating Justification. Although a peace officer may be justified in making a warrantless arrest without probable cause where the person arrested has in fact committed a felony (Penal Code § 836(a)(2)), if the felony was committed as the result of an entrapment, the warrantless arrest is not justified, and the arresting officer is liable for false imprisonment (Beauregard v. Wingard (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 760, 765, 47 Cal. Rptr. 279).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment where the motion asserts that the arrest was justified in that the person arrested had in fact committed a felony, although not in the presence of the arresting officer [Penal Code § 836(a)(2)], but where the pleadings and declarations aver facts which show that the offense for which the plaintiff was arrested was committed because of entrapment by the arresting, or other, peace officer.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations in support of the form [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entrapment as Vitiating Justification

In Beauregard v. Wingard (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 760, 47 Cal. Rptr. 279 , the plaintiff sued a chief of police and certain of his deputies for false arrest. The defendants moved for nonsuit, and judgment was entered in their favor. The plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal reversed. The plaintiff, a businessman in the City of Oceanside, was about to go to the racetrack, when a plainclothes policeman entered his shop, representing himself as a friend and employee of an acquaintance of the plaintiff. He asked the plaintiff to place a $10 bet for him at the racetrack, after declining plaintiff's invitation to accompany him to the track. Plaintiff agreed. As plaintiff was leaving his shop, another police officer, stationed behind his shop and not present during the transaction inside the shop, arrested the plaintiff for bookmaking. At the time of the arrest, he remarked to the plaintiff that the police chief had told him to arrest the plaintiff. It appeared that the police chief had planned the arrest to discredit the plaintiff who was an opponent of the chief's in city politics. Prior to the arrest, none of the officers or the chief had any information to connect the plaintiff with any criminal activity. The court of appeal found that the warrantless arrest could not be justified under either former Penal Code § 836(1) [now see Penal Code § 836(a)(1) (arrest for public offense committed in officer's presence)] or under former Penal Code § 836(3) [now see Penal Code § 836(a)(3) (arrest based on reasonable cause to believe arrestee has committed felony)], because the arresting officer had not been present during the betting transaction and had no communication with the plainclothes officer prior to the arrest. The only possible justification was former Penal Code § 836(2) [now see Penal Code § 836(a)(2)], which justifies a warrantless arrest by a peace officer when the arrestee has in fact committed a felony, although not in the arresting officer' s presence The court of appeal expressly declined to decide whether reasonable or probable cause is required to justify an arrest under former Penal Code § 836(2) [now see Penal Code § 836(a)(2)]. Instead, the court held that an act committed as the result of an entrapment cannot serve to justify and make lawful a warrantless arrest under former Penal Code § 836(2) [now see Penal Code § 836(a)(2)] (237 Cal. App. 2d 760, 765) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Test of Entrapment

In People v. Barraza (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 675, 153 Cal. Rptr. 459, 591 P.2d 947 , the Supreme Court held that the proper test of entrapment in California is whether the conduct of a law enforcement agent was likely to induce a normally law-abiding person in the plaintiff's position to commit the offense for which the plaintiff was arrested. Official conduct amounting to no more than offering an opportunity to commit a crime is permissible, but overbearing conduct such as badgering, cajoling, or importuning the plaintiff to commit a crime is not permissible.

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.74

§ 103.74 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Information From Untested Informer as Not Providing Reasonable Cause for Warrantless Arrest Absent Showing Justifying Reliance

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.42.]

INFORMATION PROVIDED BY AN _____ [UNTESTED or ANONYMOUS] INFORMER IS NOT, WITHOUT SOME SHOWING JUSTIFYING RELIANCE, SUFFICIENT TO PROVIDE REASONABLE CAUSE FOR A WARRANTLESS ARREST.

Information From Untested or Anonymous Informer. Information from an _____ [untested or anonymous] informer is not, without some showing justifying reliance, sufficient to establish reasonable cause for a warrantless arrest (Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment based on the warrantless arrest of the plaintiff by a peace officer where the motion asserts that the action is without merit because the defendant had reasonable or probable cause to arrest plaintiff, but where the basis of the reasonable cause was information from an anonymous or untested informer.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations in support of the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for false imprisonment based on an arrest by a peace officer without a warrant, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Information From Untested Informer

Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525 , disapproved on other grounds, Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , is discussed in § 103.77[3][b]. The court in Wilson found that the police officers making a warrantless arrest had reasonable cause as a matter of law, based on information given them by the victim of a felony. However, the court stated that where information relied on by the police is from an untested or anonymous informer, this is not enough to establish reasonable cause for a warrantless arrest, without some showing justifying reliance on the informer's information (21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 314) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.75

§ 103.75 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action for False Imprisonment Based on Warrantless Arrest--Finding at Preliminary Hearing in Criminal Proceeding as Not Estopping Plaintiff From Litigating Issue of Probable Cause for Arrest

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.42.]

A FINDING AT AN EARLIER PRELIMINARY HEARING IN A CRIMINAL PROCEEDING THAT THE EVIDENCE WAS SUFFICIENT TO REQUIRE THE PLAINTIFF TO STAND TRIAL DOES NOT PRECLUDE THE PLAINTIFF FROM LITIGATING IN A SUBSEQUENT CIVIL TRIAL THE ISSUE OF WHETHER PROBABLE CAUSE FOR THE ARREST EXISTED, IF THE EVIDENCE PRESENTED AT THE PRELIMINARY HEARING INCLUDED EVIDENCE NOT AVAILABLE TO THE ARRESTING OFFICER AT THE TIME OF ARREST.

Plaintiff Not Estopped From Litigating Probable Cause for Underlying Criminal Arrest. A finding at an earlier preliminary hearing in a criminal proceeding that the evidence was sufficient to require the plaintiff to stand trial does not preclude the plaintiff from litigating in a subsequent civil action the issue of whether probable cause for the arrest existed, if the evidence presented at the preliminary hearing included evidence not available to the arresting officer at the time of arrest (McCutchen v. City of Montclair (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1147-1148, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action for false imprisonment or false arrest based on the warrantless arrest of the plaintiff by a police officer, if the motion asserts that a finding at the preliminary hearing in the criminal proceeding that the evidence was sufficient to require the plaintiff to stand trial estops the plaintiff from relitigating the issue of the existence of probable cause for the plaintiff's arrest. The basis for the opposition is that the evidence at the preliminary hearing included evidence that was not available to the arresting officer at the time of arrest.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should show that the evidence at the preliminary hearing supporting the decision to require the plaintiff to stand trial included evidence that was not available to the arresting officer at the time of arrest.

This form can be modified to conform to the specific procedural context in which the issue of collateral estoppel is raised.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for false imprisonment based on an arrest by a peace officer without a warrant, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice , Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Not Estopped From Litigating Probable Cause for Underlying Criminal Arrest

In McCutchen v. City of Montclair (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 , the plaintiff was arrested and spent four months in jail on a charge of rape, although the charges were eventually dismissed by the prosecution before the case went to trial. Prior to dismissal of the criminal charges, the court had ruled in a preliminary hearing that there was probable cause to bring the plaintiff to trial on the rape charge. Included in evidence at the preliminary hearing were identifications by the complaining witness made at live lineups after the plaintiff had been arrested. The plaintiff brought a civil suit asserting various causes of action, including a false arrest claim, against the arresting officer, the complaining witness, the city, and the county. The defendants filed a motion for judgment on the pleadings, contending that a finding of probable cause to try the plaintiff on the rape charge collaterally estopped the plaintiff's civil suit. The trial court denied this motion, although the court did grant a motion for summary judgment in favor of the defendants on other grounds. The plaintiff appealed the summary judgment disposition, and the defendants appealed the denial of the motion for judgment on the pleadings.

The court of appeal affirmed. Addressing the trial court's denial of the motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court of appeal held that in conformity with the rule applied by the Ninth Circuit, a prior judicial determination at a criminal preliminary hearing that there was sufficient evidence to hold the plaintiff over for trial may, under some circumstances, preclude that plaintiff from relitigating the issue of probable cause to arrest in a subsequent civil suit. The court concluded that, absent a showing that evidence not available to the arresting officer at the time of arrest was presented at the preliminary hearing, a finding at the preliminary hearing that there was sufficient evidence to require a criminal defendant to stand trial is a finding of probable cause to arrest that may be given collateral estoppel effect (73 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1145-1148) . However, the court held that in this case, the finding at the preliminary hearing was not entitled to collateral estoppel effect, because the evidence presented at the preliminary hearing was not limited to the evidence available to the officer at the time of the plaintiff's arrest. Therefore, the finding at the preliminary hearing did not address the issue that the plaintiff sought to litigate, whether there was probable cause at the time of arrest, but instead was a finding that there was sufficient evidence at the time of the hearing to hold the plaintiff over for trial (73 Cal. App. 4th 1138, 1147-1148) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.76

§ 103.76 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Complaint Does Not Allege Facts Showing Probable Cause for Warrantless Arrest as Matter of Law [Penal Code §§ 836(a)(1), (3), 837(3)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
_____ [name],	)	IES IN OPPOSITION TO DEMURRER TO COM-
Defendant.	)	PLAINT
	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]
	)

_____

SUSTAINING DEFENDANTS DEMURRER WOULD BE IMPROPER BECAUSE THE ALLEGATIONS IN PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT DO NOT ESTABLISH AS A MATTER OF LAW THAT DEFENDANT HAD PROBABLE CAUSE FOR THE WARRANTLESS ARREST.

A. Sustaining Demurrer as Improper. It is improper to sustain a demurrer to a complaint for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest where the complaint states a prima facie cause of action and the allegations of the complaint do not establish as a matter of law that defendant had reasonable cause for the arrest (Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 471-472, 289 P.2d 428).

[Optional] B. Statements Regarding Plaintiff's Criminal Conduct as Not Establishing Reasonable Cause. Allegations in the complaint regarding defendant's statements about plaintiff's alleged criminal conduct at the time of the warrantless arrest do not establish as a matter of law that defendant had probable cause to arrest plaintiff. The complaint does not allege that the statements made by defendant were true, or that defendant believed them to be true or had reasonable cause for such belief (Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 472, 289 P.2d 428).

[Optional] C. Fact of Plaintiff's Guilt as Not Establishing Probable Cause. An allegation in the complaint that plaintiff pleaded guilty to, or was found guilty of, the charge for which he/she was arrested does not establish as a matter of law that defendant had probable cause for a warrantless arrest, nor does it establish a defense or justification as a matter of law to a cause of action for false imprisonment (Collins v. Owens (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 713, 717, 176 P.2d 372).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint in an action for false imprisonment where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it appears on the face of the complaint that the defendant had reasonable or probable cause for the warrantless arrest of plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for false imprisonment based on a citizen's arrest, and a form of complaint for false imprisonment based on an arrest by a peace officer without a warrant, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sustaining Demurrer as Improper

In Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 289 P.2d 428 , the Supreme Court reversed a judgment on the pleadings in favor of three police officer defendants who were sued for false arrest and false imprisonment. The Supreme Court held that granting judgment on the pleadings was improper because the complaint stated a cause of action for false imprisonment based on either of two separate theories. First, it alleged an arrest without process, followed by imprisonment and damages, sufficient for a prima facie case of false imprisonment, shifting the burden to the defendants to plead and prove justification for the arrest. Secondly, it alleged an unnecessary delay in taking the arrested plaintiff before a magistrate. With regard to the first theory, the Court held that the fact that the complaint alleged certain statements made by the defendants to the press regarding the cause for the arrest did not establish reasonable cause as a matter of law. The complaint did not allege that the statements were true, that the defendants believed them to be true, or that the defendants had reasonable cause for such belief (45 Cal. 2d 469, 471-472) .

[b] Statements Regarding Plaintiff's Criminal Conduct as Not Establishing Reasonable Cause

Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 289 P.2d 428 , is discussed in § 103.76[3][a].

[c] Fact of Plaintiff's Guilt as Not Establishing Reasonable Cause

In Collins v. Owens (1947) 77 Cal. App. 2d 713, 176 P.2d 372 , plaintiff sued a private citizen who allegedly instigated a warrantless arrest by a police officer for intoxication. The trial court sustained a general demurrer with leave to amend. The plaintiff failed to amend, and a judgment of dismissal was entered against him. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiff's complaint stated a cause for false imprisonment. The complaint alleged the fact of plaintiff's warrantless arrest, his incarceration, and release on bail. It also alleged that a misdemeanor charge was laid against the plaintiff, and that he did not appear on the charge and his bail money was forfeited. The court of appeal held that although the complaint did not state a cause of action for malicious prosecution, because it did not allege want of probable cause, or the favorable termination of the proceedings against the plaintiff, it did state a cause of action for false imprisonment sufficient against a general demurrer. When an arrest is made without a warrant, the complaint states a cause of action for false imprisonment by alleging the arrest without process, the imprisonment, and the damages. Allegations that the arrest was unlawful or without probable cause are unnecessary, because in the warrantless arrest situation, the burden is on the defendant to prove justification. Further, the court of appeal held that although the facts alleged in the complaint regarding the forfeiture of bail might be construed as an allegation that the plaintiff had pleaded guilty to an intoxication charge, this did not constitute a defense or justification, as a matter of law, to his cause of action for false arrest. The court stated that a person may be guilty of an offense and may plead guilty thereto, but the arrest without a warrant may still be illegal. The court of appeal also held that the fact that the complaint alleged that the defendant did not directly make the arrest, but that the arrest was made by an officer at the instance and instigation, or direction, of the defendant did not relieve the defendant from legal responsibility if the arrest was in fact unlawful (77 Cal. App. 2d 713, 717) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Sustaining Demurrer as Improper

In White v. County of Orange (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 566, 212 Cal. Rptr. 493 , the court of appeal held that a county was subject to liability for false imprisonment, assault, and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of its employee's wrongful detention of a motorist. Because no supporting affidavits were filed, contrary to Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b), the court treated the county's motion, filed as a motion for summary judgment, as one for judgment on the pleadings, which performs the same function as a general demurrer (166 Cal. App. 3d 566, 569-570) . The plaintiff alleged that she was improperly stopped by the defendant's employee, a sheriff's deputy, detained by him for several hours in his patrol vehicle, and threatened with murder and rape until she promised to go out with him, as well as being later stopped by him for a "goodnight kiss." There existed only a question of law--namely, whether the county was liable under Gov. Code § 815.2(a) for an action by its employee within the scope of his employment. Under Alma W. v. Oakland Unified Sch. Dist. (1981) 123 Cal. App. 3d 133, 139-140, 176 Cal. Rptr. 287 , whether a tort is committed within the scope of employment depends on whether the act performed was required or incident to the employee's duties or whether the employer could have reasonably foreseen the employee's conduct in any event. In this case, the deputy's wrongful acts flowed from the entrustment to him of authority to ensure immediate compliance with his directions by members of the public and were an incidental and integral part of his duties. Therefore, the plaintiff stated a valid cause of action for vicarious liability against the county, requiring adjudication on the merits (166 Cal. App. 3d 566, 570-572) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.77

§ 103.77 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Warrantless Arrest--Allegation of Unlawfulness of Arrest Not Required Where Arrest Made Without Warrant

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.74.]

UNLAWFULNESS OF THE ARREST IS NOT AN ESSENTIAL ALLEGATION WHERE THE ARREST WAS MADE WITHOUT A WARRANT.

A. Allegation of Unlawfulness Unnecessary. Where an action for false imprisonment is based on an arrest without a warrant, all that need be alleged is the arrest without process, the imprisonment, and the damages, and it is not necessary to allege that the arrest was unlawful (Muller v. Reagh (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 831, 836, 30 Cal. Rptr. 633).

[Optional] B. Defendant Has Burden of Proving Justification for Arrest. On proof of the facts that there was an arrest without process, followed by imprisonment and damages, the burden is on defendant to prove justification for the arrest (Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 592, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for false imprisonment based on a warrantless arrest where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it fails to allege facts showing that the arrest of the plaintiff was unlawful, but where an allegation of unlawfulness of the arrest is unnecessary because the arrest was made without a warrant.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for damages for false imprisonment based on an arrest by a peace officer without a warrant, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 257, False Imprisonment (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Unlawfulness Unnecessary

In Muller v. Reagh (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 831, 30 Cal. Rptr. 633 , the plaintiff sued 63 defendants, including the City and County of San Francisco, the sheriff, various jail personnel, and his former wife's attorney (Reagh) for false imprisonment, based on his arrest on an allegedly invalid warrant of attachment issued after plaintiff failed to appear at a show cause hearing. The trial court sustained Reagh's demurrer to plaintiff's amended complaint without leave to amend. The court of appeal affirmed. The gist of plaintiff's allegations concerned the invalidity of the warrant under which he was arrested. The court of appeal found that plaintiff did not sufficiently allege facts to show that the arrest was unlawful, a necessary allegation where the arrest is pursuant to warrant. In so holding, the court of appeal contrasted the pleading requirements for a cause of action for false imprisonment where the arrest was pursuant to warrant and one where the arrest is without a warrant. In the latter case, the court stated, it is not necessary to allege facts showing the unlawfulness of the arrest.

NOTE:

The overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that where arrest is without a warrant or other court process, such as an order of commitment, plaintiff need only plead and prove that the arrest was without process. The burden is then on defendant to prove the existence of reasonable cause to arrest [see Dragna v. White (1955) 45 Cal. 2d 469, 471, 289 P.2d 428 ; Collins v. Los Angeles County (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 451, 456, 50 Cal. Rptr. 586 ; Muller v. Reagh (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 831, 836, 30 Cal. Rptr. 633] . Although one case does state that the burden is on the plaintiff to show lack of reasonable cause, this statement may be regarded as dictum, because in that case reasonable cause to make the warrantless arrest appeared as a matter of law [see Wilson v. Los Angeles County (1971) 21 Cal. App. 3d 308, 315, 98 Cal. Rptr. 525] .

[b] Defendant Has Burden of Proving Justification for Arrest

In Cervantez v. J. C. Penney Co., Inc. (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 579, 156 Cal. Rptr. 198, 595 P.2d 975 , plaintiff sued defendant department store in part for false arrest and imprisonment. The jury returned a verdict for defendants. On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the jury verdict. The Court noted that a cause of action for false imprisonment is stated where it is alleged that there was an arrest without process, followed by imprisonment and damages. On proof of those facts, according to the Court, the burden is on defendant to prove justification for the arrest. The Court stated that considerations of both a practical and policy nature underlie this rule. The existence of justification is a matter which ordinarily lies peculiarly within defendant's knowledge and plaintiff would encounter almost insurmountable practical problems in attempting to prove the negative proposition of the nonexistence of any justification. The Court further noted that the rule serves to assure that official intermeddling is justified, as it is a serious matter to accuse someone of committing a crime and to arrest him or her without the protection of the warrant process (24 Cal. 3d 579, 592) .

35 of 195 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
C. Warrantless Arrest

10-103 California Points & Authorities §§ 103.78-103.89

[Reserved]

§§ 103.78[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 10 Chapters 100-109 EMPLOYER & EMPLOYEE---to---GUARDIANSHIP
CHAPTER 103 FALSE IMPRISONMENT
PART II. FORMS
D. Arrest Pursuant to Warrant

10-103 California Points & Authorities § 103.90

§ 103.90 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for False Imprisonment--Action Based on Arrest Pursuant to Warrant--Judge Immune From Liability for Defective Issuance of Arrest Warrant

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 103.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE DEFENDANT JUDGE IS IMMUNE FROM LIABILITY FOR FALSE IMPRISONMENT IN CONNECTION WITH THE ISSUANCE OF AN ARREST WARRANT, EVEN IF DEFENDANT ACTED IN EXCESS OF HIS/HER JURISDICTION [AND IS ALLEGED TO HAVE ACTED MALICIOUSLY AND CORRUPTLY].

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 103.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Judicial Immunity. A judge is immune from liability for damages for false arrest and imprisonment for the issuance of an arrest warrant, even if he/she acted in excess of jurisdiction [and even if he/she is accused of acting maliciously or corruptly]. Judicial immunity for the acts of a judge in his/her official capacity applies unless the judge in question acts in the clear absence of all jurisdiction over the subject matter (Paddleford v. Biscay (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 139, 143, 99 Cal. Rptr. 220).

[Optional] C. Error in Determination of Jurisdiction. A judge is immune from liability for false imprisonment for the issuance of an arrest warrant, notwithstanding an error in the judge's determination of his/her jurisdiction to issue the warrant. Determination of jurisdiction is a judicial duty, and error in such determination is itself within the rule of judicial immunity. If a reasonable, although erroneous, ground for the assumption of jurisdiction appears, the immunity applies (Taliaferro v. Contra Costa County (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 587, 593, 6 Cal. Rptr. 231).

[Optional] D. Issuance of Warrant on Insufficient Complaint. A judge is not liable for damages for false imprisonment for issuing an arrest warrant based on a complaint wholly insufficient to charge the crime intended to be charged, where his/her action was based on an erroneous determination as to the sufficiency of the complaint (Platz v. Marion (1917) 35 Cal. App 241, 243, 169 P. 697).

[Optional] E. Lack of Statutory Compliance. A judge is not liable for false imprisonment for issuance of an arrest warrant in a manner not complying with the statutes governing its issuance, provided the judge has subject matter jurisdiction to issue the warrant [even if he/she acts maliciously or corruptly] (Paddleford v. Biscay (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 139, 143-144, 99 Cal. Rptr. 220).

[Optional] F. Inferior Court Judges Immune. The rule of judicial immunity is the same whether the acts of a judge of an inferior court or one of general jurisdiction are involved (Taliaferro v. Contra Costa County (1960) 182 Cal. App. 2d 587, 592, 6 Cal. Rptr. 231).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

