In Sammons Enterprises, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 1427, 253 Cal. Rptr. 261 , the court of appeal, in directing issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its decision denying the motion to quash service of summons on the foreign parent corporation of a California subsidiary corporation and to enter an order granting the motion, said that, under the due process clause of the federal constitution, the basic prerequisite for personal jurisdiction is that the defendant have such minimum contacts with the forum state that maintenance of the suit would not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (205 Cal. App. 3d 1427, 1432) .

Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363 , was an action by a Canadian life insurance corporation against another Canadian corporation for breach of contract, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and statutory duties in connection with a bond issued by the defendant insuring plaintiff for losses occurring at its offices in Canada. The defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction was granted, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that a court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant so long as the defendant has certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 205) .

The facts and procedural background of J. M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co., Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4 , are discussed in § 132.73[4][a]. In affirming the order quashing service of summons on a Japanese company, the court of appeal said that under the due process clause of the federal constitution, the basic prerequisite for personal jurisdiction is that the defendant have such "minimum contacts" with the forum state that maintenance of the suit does not offend "traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice" (197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 542) .

In E.I.C., Inc. v. Bank of Virginia (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 166 Cal. Rptr. 317 , the cross complainant (E.I.C.), a California corporation, in an action against it by a New York corporation to enforce a deficiency judgment obtained in Kentucky, appealed from two superior court orders quashing service of process on two cross defendants, in part, on the basis that there were insufficient contacts with California to permit the trial court to exercise a limited personal jurisdiction over the two nonresidents. Personal jurisdiction was asserted over one cross defendant, a Virginia bank, based, in part, on the bank's issuance of a letter of credit in favor of E.I.C. to secure a Virginia corporation's (PN's) performance of certain terms and conditions under a contract by the terms of which cross complainant purchased certain Kentucky property from PN. E.I.C. executed a promissory note in favor of PN secured by a mortgage on property. The contacts alleged to be sufficient to assert personal jurisdiction over the individual cross defendant (Carlton) was his guarantee of a promissory note, executed in favor of a New York bank and secured by a second mortgage on the Kentucky property. The cross complaint alleged a conspiracy among cross defendants to defraud E.I.C. by overstating the value of the Kentucky property, by concealing the assignment of the mortgage, which secured the purchase of the property, to the Virginia bank, and by including terms not agreed to by E.I.C. in the deed conveying the property. In affirming the orders quashing service on the grounds that, with respect to the bank, no connection existed between the delivery of the letter of credit in California and E.I.C.'s causes of action (108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 153-154) , and that, with respect to Carlton, his personal guarantee had no relationship to any event taking place in California and was irrelevant to the cross action (108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 155) , the court of appeal said that the due process clause, which protects a nonresident against inconvenient litigation in a distant forum, requires that a nonresident have at least minimum contacts with the forum state (108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 152) .

In Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , the court of appeal, in affirming an order quashing the service of summons on nonresident defendants in an action arising out of allegedly fraudulent land transactions, the court of appeal said that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment operates as a limitation on the jurisdiction of state courts to enter judgments affecting rights or interests of nonresident defendants, and that in order for a state to exercise personal jurisdiction over a defendant, the defendant must have certain minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit there does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 899-900) .

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed under § 132.70[3][a]. In granting the petition for writ of mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulling the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the nonresident father, the court of appeal said that due process requires only that, in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam if he or she be not present within the territory of the forum, he or she have certain minimum contacts with it such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 800) .

[d] Minimum Contacts Requirement Applies to Both Individual and Corporate Defendants

An additional case involving nonresident individual defendants lacking sufficient contacts or having no contacts with the forum state is Shaffer v. Heitner (1977) 433 U.S. 186, 97 S. Ct. 2569, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683 , discussed under § 132.70[3][e].

[e] Minimum Contacts Lacking When Defendant Has No Contacts With State

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. Although the United States Supreme Court held that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, it said that the due process clause protects an individual's liberty interest in not being subject to the binding judgments of a forum with which he or she has established no meaningful contacts, ties, or relations (471 U.S. 462, 471-472) .

In Thomson v. Anderson (2004) 113 Cal. App. 4th 258, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 262 , a franchisee contended that franchisors, who were directors of a Texas corporation, made false representations and that they failed to refund his investment as promised. The franchisors moved to quash service of summons on the ground that they were not subject to personal jurisdiction in California. The franchisors presented evidence that they had never lived in California and had never conducted business in California on behalf of the corporation. The court granted the motion, holding that Cal. Corp. Code § 31420, a service of process statute, did not create an independent basis for personal jurisdiction for claims arising under the California Franchise Investment Law (113 Cal. App. 4th 258, 270) . Notwithstanding § 31420, there must be grounds for exercising personal jurisdiction, pursuant to Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, over a nonresident defendant that are consistent with the U.S. Constitution. Ownership of vacation property in California and occasional travel to the state on vacation or on business unrelated to the corporation did not give rise to personal jurisdiction (113 Cal. App. 4th 258, 270-271) .

In Muckle v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 218, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303 , Andrew Muckle was a resident of California from January 1998 through December 1998. While living in California and married to Cassandra Muckle, he purchased property in Georgia, which he took title to in his name alone. Since December 1998, Andrew was a resident of Georgia. In January 2001, Cassandra served dissolution papers on Andrew in Georgia by substituted service. Andrew made a special appearance to contest jurisdiction, moving to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. Among other things, Andrew argued he had insufficient minimum contacts with California for the trial court to establish personal jurisdiction over him. Although acknowledging that California has a manifest interest in providing effective means of redress for its residents, the court declined to find that such interest coupled with the mere fact of past residency, during which a party while married purchased out of state property, is sufficient contacts of such nature and quality to entertain even "special" personal jurisdiction over Andrew consistent with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (102 Cal. App. 4th 218, 225-231) .

In Benefit Assn. Internat., Inc. v. Superior Court (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 827, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 165 , an action for breach of contract and fraud, the primary issue concerned what minimum contacts are needed for in personam jurisdiction over an insurer who sells medical benefits policies to foreigners traveling in California. The plaintiff was a citizen of Venezuela and the defendant insurance company was located in Mississippi. The litigation was connected to California because the plaintiff suffered a stroke and was hospitalized in California and incurred bills the defendant refused to pay. The court of appeal concluded that the trial court erred in taking jurisdiction over the insurance company. There was nothing in the record that suggested that the defendant advertised or otherwise marketed its policy in settings that targeted California travelers. The only connection with California was that the plaintiff said that when he purchased the policy the agent told him that the policy would cover any medical costs he might incur while in California. However, plaintiff presented no evidence that defendant had ever before insured a person traveling to California, paid a California medical bill, or otherwise participated in commerce in California (46 Cal. App. 4th 827, 833-834) . The court thus issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying defendant's motion to quash and to enter a new order granting the motion.

In In re Marriage of Martin (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 255 Cal. Rptr. 720 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order quashing service of summons on a nonresident insurer and dismissing a joinder proceeding brought against it following a dissolution of marriage proceeding. The judgment granting dissolution required the husband to provide dental insurance for the two minor children of the marriage and to keep in force hospital, medical, and dental insurance coverage for the minor children through the husband's employment, so long as it was available to the husband. The husband was a resident of Michigan, and, through his employer, he and his dependents were entitled to certain dental insurance coverage under a program administered by the insurer, which was a nonprofit Michigan corporation with its principal place of business in Michigan, was not licensed to do business in any other state, and, pursuant to its enabling act, was not required to pay non-Michigan dentists for services performed for its subscribers and their dependents. The children, California residents, had dental work done in California and the mother caused a claim to be filed with the insurer, which sent the reimbursement check to the father in accordance with the terms of the policy, but the father did not reimburse the mother, and the mother sought recovery from the insurer. The court explained that for a California court to secure jurisdiction over the insurer, the insurer had to have certain minimum contacts with California (207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 1435-1437) , and in the case before it, the insurer had none; it had never advertised nor solicited business in California; it had never filed any action in a California court or otherwise sought the assistance of the courts of this state (207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 1430) ; there was no showing that an insurance policy was delivered to the mother in California; that subscribers were solicited by the insurer in California; that premiums were received by the insurer from California; that the insurer engage in "economic activity" in California; or that it purposefully conducted activities invoking the benefits and protections of California law or did anything which would have provided notice it would be "haled" into court in California (207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 1437) .

The facts and procedural background of E.I.C., Inc. v. Bank of Virginia (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 166 Cal. Rptr. 317 , are discussed under § 132.70[4][c]. In affirming the orders quashing service of summons on the cross defendants, the court of appeal said that although the limits imposed by the due process clause on a state's exercise of jurisdiction have been substantially relaxed as a result of the increasing nationalization of commerce, state lines are not irrelevant for jurisdictional purposes, and a state may not make binding a judgment in personam against an individual or corporate defendant with which the state has no contacts, ties, or relations (108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 152) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.70), or with a memorandum submitted in reply to a plaintiff's opposition to a motion to quash service]

THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT LACKS SUFFICIENT CONTACTS WITH CALIFORNIA TO SUPPORT THE EXERCISE BY CALIFORNIA OF GENERAL JURISDICTION IN THAT THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT CEASED DOING BUSINESS IN CALIFORNIA BEFORE SERVICE OF PROCES.

A. General Jurisdiction Terminates When Nonresident Ceases to Do Business in State. General jurisdiction in the case of a nonresident corporation is viewed analogously to the presence of a natural person. A nonresident corporation which is doing business of a sufficiently substantial and continuous nature is treated as if it had a physical presence in the forum, placing it within the jurisdiction of the state as to causes of action independent from that business. When the corporation ceases to do business in the state, however, there is no longer any general jurisdiction, that is, jurisdiction as to causes of action independent of that business (Serafini v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 79-80, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159). The same rule presumably applies to nonresident individuals (see Serafini v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 79-80, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Judicial Counsel Comment, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals, (7) Doing Business in State; Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws, § 35 (1971)).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising general jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant, because the nonresident defendant ceased doing business in the forum before service of process.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.70], or with a memorandum of points and authorities submitted in reply to the plaintiff's papers opposing the motion to quash. It may also be included in a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For additional points and authorities supporting a motion to quash for lack of an adequate basis of jurisdiction in particular situations, see §§ 132.72 -132.88.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Jurisdiction Terminates When Nonresident Ceases to Do Business in State

Serafini v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 , involved an action against plaintiff's former employer, its parent corporation, and others for wrongful termination and related causes of action. It included two counts naming defendant Serafini, an officer and director of the parent corporation, one based on intentional infliction of emotional distress and one based on violation of civil rights and discrimination. Defendant made a special appearance to move for an order quashing service of summons on defendant on the ground the court lacked jurisdiction. Defendant's supporting declaration stated that: (1) he was a resident of Pennsylvania, (2) he had resigned as an officer and director of the out-of-state parent corporation before service of the complaint, (3) during his tenure he maintained his residence, office and domicile in Pennsylvania, (4) he visited the parent corporation's California office only once, for two hours while on a family vacation, (5) his only activity on that occasion was meeting the employees, including, for 10 minutes, plaintiff, (6) other than that meeting, his communications with plaintiff were monthly telephone calls usually initiated by plaintiff concerning routine personnel issues, (7) he had no knowledge concerning when or if plaintiff's employment was terminated, (8) he was not part of any decision regarding plaintiff's termination from employment, and did not discuss plaintiff's employment status with two other individual defendants or make or participate in any decisions about plaintiff's compensation or treatment, and (9) he denied all the complaint's allegations concerning mistreatment of or discrimination against plaintiff insofar as directed to himself. Plaintiff filed a declaration opposing the motion. When the matter came on for hearing the trial court continued it and in the interim authorized plaintiff to take defendant's deposition in Pennsylvania. The deposition was taken in Florida, but defendant took the position that the questioning was limited to facts having a direct bearing on jurisdiction as to the counts of the complaint in which defendant was named as a defendant, and defendant's counsel instructed defendant not to answer the questions that went beyond this. Plaintiff took the position that there was no limitation on the scope of the deposition. Ultimately, when the matter came up for hearing, the trial court denied defendant's motion to quash and defendant sought writ review (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 74-77) .

The court of appeal granted a preemptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its ruling denying the motion and to determine whether to continue the motion until resolution of the discovery dispute or grant the motion, applying the legal rules and guidelines set forth in the opinion (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 82) . After first discussing the burden of proof on a motion to quash service of a summons (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 77) , the court discussed the rules concerning general jurisdiction. General jurisdiction turns on the substantiality of the party's contacts with the forum state. Personal jurisdiction may be either general or specific. A nonresident defendant may be subject to the general jurisdiction of the forum if his or her contacts in the forum are substantial, continuous and systematic. In such a case it is not necessary that the specific cause of action alleged be connected with the defendant's business relationship to the forum. Such a defendant's contacts with the forum are so wide-ranging that they take the place of physical presence in the forum as a basis for jurisdiction (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 78) . General jurisdiction in the case of a nonresident corporation is viewed analogously to the presence of a natural person (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 79) . Thus, a nonresident corporation that is doing business of a sufficiently substantial and continuous nature is treated as if it had a physical presence in the forum, placing it within the jurisdiction of the state as to causes of action independent from that business. When the corporation ceases to do business in the state, however, there is no longer any general jurisdiction, i.e., jurisdiction as to causes of action independent of that business (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80) . Even assuming that defendant Serafini's contacts with California in "doing business" as an agent of the corporation could be ascribed to him as a person (which the court did not decide), when defendant ceased that activity, he absented himself and terminated any general jurisdiction of California over him (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 79-80) . This relegated plaintiff to a claim of specific jurisdiction over defendant Serafini, the resolution of which turned on whether plaintiff tendered evidence that showed that defendant caused a tort to be committed against plaintiff in California for which defendant would be personally liable. The court concluded that under the facts there was no basis for the exercise of specific jurisdiction against Serafini (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80-82) .

Note that under both Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Judicial Council Comment, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals, (7) Doing Business in State and the Restatement (Second) of Conflict of Laws, § 35 (1971), a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who has done business in the state, but has ceased to do business there at the time when the action is brought (rather than before service of process as specified in Serafini, above), with respect to causes of action arising from business done in the state.

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.70), or with a memorandum submitted in reply to a plaintiff's opposition to a motion to quash service.]

THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE FACT THAT THE BURDEN TO THE DEFENDANT OF DEFENDING IN THE FORUM MAY BE MINIMAL IS IRRELEVANT TO THE ISSUE OF JURISDICTION WHEN THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT LACKS SUFFICIENT CONTACTS WITH CALIFORNIA TO SUPPORT THE EXERCISE BY CALIFORNIA OF IN PERSONAM JURISDICTION.

A. Fact That Burden of Defending Is Minimal Is Irrelevant When Minimum Contacts Requirement Is Not Satisfied. However minimal the burden of defending in a foreign tribunal, a defendant may not be called on to do so unless he or she has had the minimal contacts with the state that are a prerequisite to the state's exercise of power over him or her (*In re Marriage of Martin (1989) 207 Cal. [a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that, when minimal contacts are lacking, it is irrelevant that the defendant's burden of defending the action in a California court would be minimal.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.70], or with a memorandum of points and authorities submitted in reply to the plaintiff's papers opposing the motion to quash. It may also be included in a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [*see Code Civ. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fact That Burden of Defending Is Minimal Is Irrelevant When Minimum Contacts Requirement Is Not Satisfied

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Martin (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 255 Cal. Rptr. 720 , are discussed in § 132.70[4][e]. In affirming the order quashing service of summons and dismissing the joinder proceeding, the court of appeal, in reply to the mother's argument that the burden on the insurer of defending in California was minimal, said however minimal the burden of defending in a foreign tribunal, a defendant may not be called on to do so unless he or she has had the minimal contacts with the state that are a prerequisite to the state's exercise of power over him or her (207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 1438) .

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][g]. In reversing the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court on the ground the defendants had no contacts, ties, or relations with the State of Oklahoma, and hence the Oklahoma courts had no jurisdiction over them (444 U.S. 286, 299) , the United States Supreme Court said that the due process clause, acting as an instrument of interstate federalism, may sometimes act to divest the state of its power to render a valid judgment, despite the facts that the defendant would suffer minimal or no inconvenience from being forced to litigate before the tribunals of another state, that the forum state has a strong interest in applying its law to the controversy, and that the forum state is the most convenient location for litigation (444 U.S. 286, 294) .

THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE UNILATERAL ACTIVITY OF THIRD PARTIES CLAIMING SOME RELATIONSHIP TO THE DEFENDANT DOES NOT SUPPORT THE IMPOSITION OF IN PERSONAM JURISDICTION OVER THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT.

Unilateral Activity of Third Parties. The mere unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact by the defendant with the forum state (*World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unilateral Activity of Third Parties

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][g]. In reversing the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court ruling that the two New York corporations were subject to the state's in personam jurisdiction in the underlying products liability action, the United States Supreme Court said that although it was foreseeable to the defendant that purchasers of automobiles sold by the defendant in New York may take them to Oklahoma, the mere unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state (444 U.S. 286, 298) .

Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 , arose out of a controversy concerning the right to a portion of the corpus of a trust established in Delaware by a settlor who was at the time domiciled in Pennsylvania and, a few years later, became domiciled in Florida, where she executed her will and a power of appointment of the trust assets, and subsequently died. One group of claimants contended that the property passed under the residuary clause of the settlor's will, which was admitted to probate in Florida. Other claimants contended that the property passed pursuant to the settlor's exercise of the inter vivos power of appointment created in the deed of trust. The defendant trustee had no office in Florida and transacted no business there, and none of the trust assets had ever been held or administered in Florida. The trustee solicited no business in Florida in person or by mail. The Florida court ruled that the trust was invalid as a testamentary trust and that the trust assets passed under the will, but that it lacked jurisdiction over nonresidents, including the trustee, who were constructively served but did not appear. The Supreme Court of Florida reversed that part of the judgment ruling that the court lacked jurisdiction over the nonresident defendants. In a separate action in Delaware brought by the executrix, the court ruled that both the trust and power of appointment were valid, that the trust assets passed under their terms, and that the Florida judgment was not entitled to full faith and credit because the Florida court had acquired no jurisdiction either over the Delaware trustee, who under Florida law was an indispensable party, or over the trust res.

In affirming the judgment of the Delaware Supreme Court and reversing the judgment of the Florida Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court held there was no basis for jurisdiction over the trustee in Florida because it had no contacts with that state. With respect to the execution in Florida of the powers of appointment under which the beneficiaries and appointees claimed, the Court said that this did not give Florida a substantial connection with the contract on which the suit was based because it is the validity of the trust agreement, not the appointment, that was in issue (357 U.S. 235, 253) . For the purpose of applying its rule that the validity of the trust is determined by the law of the state of its creation, Florida ruled that the appointment amounted to a republication of the original trust instrument in Florida. The Supreme Court said that, although for choice-of-law purposes, such a ruling might be justified, it was an insubstantial connection with the trust agreement for purposes of determining the question of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, and added that the unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state (357 U.S. 235, 253) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Unilateral Activity of Third Parties

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][b]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court, quoting Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 (discussed under § 132.73[3][a]), said that the unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state (471 U.S. 462, 474) .

The facts and procedural background of Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In holding that the denial of the motion to quash was error and reversing the judgment of the California Supreme Court, the Supreme Court of the United States said the unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state (436 U.S. 84, 93-94) .

The facts and procedural background of Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , are discussed in § 132.89[3][a]. In issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new and different order granting the motion to quash service of summons, the court of appeal noted that the unilateral activity of those who claim some relationship with a nonresident defendant cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state. The application of that rule will vary with the quality and nature of the defendant's activity, but it is essential in each case that there be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and procedures of its laws (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1056) .

In Mansour v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1750, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191 , plaintiff, the president and principal stockholder of a California corporation, sued various defendants for defamation, alleging that they had conspired to oust the director of a Delaware corporation and that pursuant to the conspiracy they prepared a report indicating that the individual they were targeting had engaged in unethical and illegal business conduct with the plaintiff. Two of the defendants, an Ohio resident and attorney, and the Ohio law firm to which he belonged, moved to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The Ohio defendants claimed that California lacked personal jurisdiction over them because they did not publish or cause the publication of any statements about plaintiff in California. The plaintiff contended that these defendants can be sued in California because they belonged to a conspiracy and the forum-related acts of the coconspirators are imputable to them. The superior court denied the motion to quash service. The court of appeal reversed, rejecting the claim that jurisdiction could be exercised by attributing forum-related activities of other coconspirators to the defendants for two reasons. First, the court concluded that the plaintiff failed to provide evidence supporting use of a conspiracy theory. Second, the court held that even if evidence of a conspiracy had been presented the plaintiff could not prevail because California does not recognize conspiracy as a basis for acquiring personal jurisdiction over a party (38 Cal. App. 4th 1750, 1760) . The court thus issued a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order denying the motion to quash, and to enter a new order granting the motion and dismissing the action as to the Ohio defendants.

Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363 , was an action by a Canadian life-insurance corporation against another Canadian corporation for breach of contract, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and statutory duties in connection with a bond issued by the defendant insuring plaintiff for losses occurring at its offices in Canada. The defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction was granted, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that unilateral activity on the part of the plaintiff cannot satisfy the requirement of contact with the forum state (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 205) .

In J.M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co., Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4 , plaintiff sued a California corporation and its Japanese parent. The Japanese corporation manufactured acoustical guitars, which were imported by the California corporation. The California corporation, which was the United States importer and master distributor of the guitars, terminated plaintiff's distributorship. Plaintiff sued for damages for wrongful termination of the distributorship and for conspiracy by both defendants to interfere with the advantageous relationships between plaintiff and its customers. Service of summons was effected on the Japanese corporation by mail in Japan. The trial court granted the Japanese corporation's motion to quash service of summons, and plaintiff appealed, asserting among other things that the Japanese corporation had forum-related contacts related to the claim consisting of electronic correspondence between it and the California corporation preceding the latter's decision to terminate existing distributorships. In finding that the forum and claim-related contacts of the Japanese corporation with California identified by the plaintiff were insufficient to warrant personal jurisdiction over that defendant, and affirming the judgment, the court of appeal, in answer to the plaintiff's contention, pointed out that all but two of those communications were sent by the California corporation to the Japanese corporation and said that the unilateral activity of another party or a third person is not an appropriate consideration when determining whether a defendant has sufficient contacts with a forum state to justify an assertion of jurisdiction (197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 544-545) .

Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 174 Cal. Rptr. 885 , was a proceeding in mandate arising out of an action by California residents against a Nevada hotel corporation for negligence proximately resulting in the theft or mysterious disappearance of plaintiffs' personal property from a Las Vegas, Nevada hotel. The defendant's only contacts with California were substantial and regular advertising in a California newspaper and the maintenance of an "800" telephone number which readers of the advertising could use without cost to themselves to call the hotel and make reservations. The defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of in personam jurisdiction was denied, and the defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate or prohibition. In issuing the writ of mandate directing the trial court to quash service of summons, the court of appeal said that it is only the defendant's activities within the forum state which are significant in deciding the question of jurisdiction and not the activities of the plaintiffs (120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 562) . In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 461, 464, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , the California Supreme Court rejected the "proximate cause" test used by Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. as being inconsistent with the rationale underlying specific jurisdiction in the context of ongoing franchise relationships and disapproved the reasoning Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. to the extent it is inconsistent with the Vons Companies, Inc. opinion. For discussion of Vons Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.70), or with a memorandum submitted in reply to a plaintiff's opposition to a motion to quash service.]

THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE "FORESEEABILITY" CRITICAL TO THE DUE PROCESS ANALYSIS IN THIS ACTION BASED ON AN ALLEGED DEFECT IN A PRODUCT _____ [SOLD or DISTRIBUTED or MANUFACTURED] BY DEFENDANT IS WHETHER DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT AND CONNECTION WITH THE FORUM STATE ARE SUCH THAT HE/SHE/IT SHOULD REASONABLY ANTICIPATE BEING HALED INTO A COURT OF THIS STATE.

"Foreseeability" Element of Due Process Analysis in Action Based on Defective Product. The foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis in an action for damages based on an alleged defect in a product is not the mere likelihood that a nonresident defendant's product will find its way into the forum state, but, rather, whether the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum state are such that he or she should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there (World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 ; Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 113, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670).

The form in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. §

418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that, in an action based for damages against a nonresident defendant based on an alleged defect in a product, the only "foreseeability" relevant to a due process analysis of the court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendant is whether the defendant, because of its activities or conduct with respect to the forum state, should have reasonably foreseen that it was subject to suit in the forum state as a result of those activities.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.70], or with a memorandum of points and authorities submitted in reply to the plaintiff's papers opposing the motion to quash. It may also be included in a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities supporting a motion to quash for lack of an adequate basis of jurisdiction in particular situations, see §§ 132.72, 132.73, 132.75 -132.90.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Foreseeability" Element of Due Process Analysis in Action Based on Defective Product

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][g]. In reversing the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court ruling that the two New York corporations were subject to the state's in personam jurisdiction in the underlying products liability action, the United States Supreme Court, in rejecting the contention that jurisdiction was proper because a car is mobile and it was foreseeable to the New York corporations that the car would cause injury in Oklahoma, the Supreme Court said that if foreseeability were the criterion, a local California tire retailer could be forced to defend in Pennsylvania when a blowout occurs there, or a Wisconsin seller of a defective automobile jack could be haled before a distant court for damage caused in New Jersey, or a Florida soft-drink concessionaire could be summoned to Alaska to account for injuries happening there, and that every seller of chattels would in effect appoint the chattel his or her agent for service of process, and his or her amenability to suit would travel with the chattel (444 U.S. 286, 296) . The Court added that this was not to say that foreseeability is wholly irrelevant. The Court said the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis, however, is not the mere likelihood that a product will find its way into the forum state. Rather, it is that the defendant's conduct in connection with the forum state are such that he or she should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there (444 U.S. 286, 297) . The Court explained that the due process clause, by ensuring the orderly administration of the laws, gives a degree of predictability to the legal system that allows potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit (444 U.S. 286, 297) .

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court of appeal, quoting World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (discussed above), said that the foreseeability that is critical to due process analysis is not the mere likelihood that a product will find its way into the forum state. Rather, it is that the defendant's conduct and connection with the forum state are such that he or she should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 113) .

[a] Use of Form

The form of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that, on a motion to quash by the defendant, the plaintiff must demonstrate by a preponderance of evidence that a proper basis for personal jurisdiction exists.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.70], or with a memorandum of points and authorities submitted in reply to the plaintiff's papers opposing the motion to quash. It may also be included in a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Burden of Showing Proper Basis for Personal Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , are discussed in § 132.107[3][g]. The trial court granted defendants' motion to quash for lack of personal jurisdiction, and the court of appeal affirmed. In reversing the court of appeal, the Supreme Court stated that when a defendant moves to quash service of process on jurisdictional grounds, the plaintiff has the initial burden of demonstrating facts justifying the exercise of jurisdiction (14 Cal. 4th 434, 449) .

In Carretti v. Italpast (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126 , a pasta machine distributor with an office in California argued that the manufacturer, which sold products to him in Italy, had the requisite minimum contacts to support jurisdiction in California. In rejecting this argument, the court noted that the manufacturer did not promote the sale of its goods in California at all; it simply sold goods to a buyer who showed up on its doorstep in Italy, willing to pay the price. The minimal resales of the product in California by the distributor, standing alone, do not amount to the substantial continuous and systematic contacts with the forum state necessary for the exercise of general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation doing business in its home country (101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 1245-1246) .

Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 , was an action by a California corporation against a Japanese corporation and its alleged agent (a former employee of the plaintiff) for alleged misappropriation of trade secrets. The trial court granted the defendant corporation's motion to quash service of summons, and plaintiff appealed.

In reversing the order, on the ground that the minimum contacts test sufficient to support limited jurisdiction (see discussion in § 132.76[2][b]) had been satisfied, the appellate court relied on the following rules: (1) when jurisdiction is challenged by a nonresident defendant, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to demonstrate that minimum contacts exist between defendant and the forum state to justify imposition of personal jurisdiction, and plaintiff has the right to conduct discovery with regard to the issue of jurisdiction to develop the facts necessary to sustain this burden; and (2) the plaintiff does not have to prove the truth of the allegations constituting the causes of action in order to justify the exercise of jurisdiction over the nonresident parties, but he or she must present facts demonstrating that the conduct of defendants related to the pleaded causes is such as to constitute constitutionally cognizable minimum contacts. Thus, in reviewing the trial court order pertaining to a motion to quash, the court is guided by the following principles: (1) when a defendant properly moves to quash out-of-state service of process for lack of jurisdiction, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence; (2) evidence of those facts or their absence may be in the form of declarations; and (3) when there is a conflict in the declarations, resolution of the conflict by the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal if the determination of that court is supported by substantial evidence (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 533) . The appellate court added that substantial evidence is not synonymous with any evidence, but rather is evidence of ponderable legal significance, that is, evidence which is reasonable in nature, credible, and of solid value (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 533) . The appellate court may not consider evidence not properly before the trial court (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 533-534) .

Ziller Electronics Lab GmbH v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 254 Cal. Rptr. 410), was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to quash a second service of process on defendant, a West Germany corporation, in an action for breach of contract after it had denied the motion on the ground the issue had been determined adversely to the defendant on its prior successful motion to quash the first service. The defendant had originally been served in Germany by mail and moved to quash service on the ground (1) defendant lacked sufficient minimum contacts with California; and (2) service was ineffective because it did not comply with the Hague Convention on Service of Process Abroad. The trial court found in its tentative ruling that minimum contacts existed, but granted the motion for ineffective service of process. The defendant was served again in Germany in accordance with the Hague Convention, and moved to quash service on the ground of lack of minimum contacts. A different judge than the one who had determined the first motion heard the second and denied it on the ground minimum contacts had been determined to exist by the judge on the prior motion.

In granting the writ with directions to the trial court to vacate its order denying the second motion to quash and to reconsider and determine the issue of minimum contacts on the merits, the court of appeal said that personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant depends on the existence of essentially two criteria: (1) a basis for jurisdiction must exist due to defendant's minimum contacts with the forum state; and (2) given that basis for jurisdiction, jurisdiction must be acquired by service of process in strict compliance with the requirements of our service statutes (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412.10-417.40). The court said that, on a challenge by a specially appearing nonresident defendant pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10, plaintiff must establish that both criteria are met (206 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1229) .

[a] Burden of Showing Proper Basis for Personal Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , are discussed in § 132.89[3][a]. In issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new and different order granting the motion to quash service of summons, the court of appeal noted that when a nonresident defendant challenges personal jurisdiction the burden shifts to the plaintiff to demonstrate by a preponderance of the evidence that all the necessary jurisdictional criteria are met. This burden must be met by competent evidence in affidavits and authenticated documentary evidence. An unverified complaint cannot be considered as an affidavit supplying necessary facts. Declarations are insufficient to support the assertions for which they are offered if they consist primarily of vague assertions of ultimate facts rather then specific evidentiary facts permitting a court to form an independent conclusion on the issue (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1054-1055) .

The facts and procedural background of Serafini v. Superior Court (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 159 , are discussed in § 132.71[3][a]. The court, in reversing the denial of defendant's motion to quash, stated that when a defendant moves to quash service of process on jurisdictional grounds, the plaintiff has the initial burden of demonstrating facts justifying the exercise of jurisdiction (68 Cal. App. 4th 70, 77) .

In Floveyor Internat., Ltd. v. Superior Court (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 789, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 457 , the issue before the court of appeal was who had the burden of proof on the issues of the validity of the service of process and the sufficiency of minimum contacts with the State of California to support jurisdiction over a cross-defendant who was a British corporation. The trial court imposed the burden of proof on the cross-defendant to show some defect in the service of process and that California did not have jurisdiction and denied the cross-defendant's motion to quash. The court of appeal, in granting the cross-defendant's petition for a writ of mandate, held that the plaintiff bears the burden of proof on the validity of service and the court's jurisdiction over the defendant (59 Cal. App. 4th 789, 793) . Until the plaintiff makes at least a prima facie showing of the validity of service and sufficient contacts with the State of California, the defendant may stand mute (59 Cal. App. 4th 789, 794) . Although the cross-complainant made a prima facie showing that service of the summons and cross-complaint in England was in accordance with the Hague Convention and thus was valid (59 Cal. App. 4th 789, 794-796) , the record before the court was devoid of any evidence that the cross-defendant had any contacts with the state of California. Thus, the court was compelled to find that the trial court abused its discretion in denying the cross-defendant's motion to quash (59 Cal. App. 4th 789, 797) .

In Wolfe v. City of Alexandria (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 265 Cal. Rptr. 881 , plaintiffs, a brother and an elderly sister, who was unable to care for herself adequately, sued a city in a sister state and public and private community services organizations operating in that city and certain of their employees, none of whom resided, did business, or was present in California, for injuries allegedly sustained as a result of defendants having caused the sister to be transported from Virginia to San Francisco and there "dumped" on her brother who was unable to care for her. Defendants' motions to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction over them were granted, and plaintiffs appealed.

In affirming, the court of appeal, said that it was well settled that the plaintiff bears the burden of proof to establish the facts of jurisdiction, and that the trial court, in ruling on the motion, considers evidence relevant to that issue which may be set forth in declarations, treating a verified complaint as a declaration; the court concluded that plaintiffs had failed to carry their burden of establishing otherwise (217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 546-547) . The court further held that the mere causing of an effect in California, without more, is not, in and of itself, sufficient to sustain jurisdiction (217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 548) [see § 132.88].

In Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , the court of appeal, in affirming an order quashing service of summons on a nonresident defendant, said that the plaintiff has the burden of demonstrating by a preponderance of the evidence that all jurisdictional criteria are met (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 110) . With respect to other nonresident defendants who had been properly served, the court of appeal said that when jurisdiction is challenged by a nonresident defendant, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to demonstrate that sufficient minimum contacts exist between the defendant and the forum state to justify imposition of personal jurisdiction (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 112) .

Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , was a products liability action brought by a California resident (who died during the pendency of the appeal and whose personal representative was substituted in as plaintiff) against a German corporation, and others, including a foreign car manufacturer and its American importer, for injuries sustained by the resident when, while riding as a passenger, he was thrown from an automobile during a collision allegedly due to a design defect in a door latch assembly, which had been designed and manufactured by the German corporation and used by the foreign car manufacturer in its vehicles. The German corporation appeared specially and moved to quash service of summons on the ground that it lacked the requisite minimum contacts with California to justify California's assertion of personal jurisdiction over it. The trial court granted the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

In affirming the judgment of dismissal, the court of appeal said it has long been settled that when a defendant properly moves to quash out-of-state service of process for lack of jurisdiction, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 110) .

Sklar v. Princess Properties International, Ltd. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1202, 240 Cal. Rptr. 102 , was an action by a California resident against a Bermuda hotel owner, which had been served with summons in Bermuda, for injuries sustained on defendant's hotel premises in Bermuda. Defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction was granted, and plaintiff appealed. In affirming, the court of appeal said that where a defendant properly moves to quash out-of-state service for lack of jurisdiction, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence, and that on review of an order granting a motion to quash, the facts must be viewed most favorably to the defendant (194 Cal. App. 3d 1202, 1208-1209) . In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 461, 464, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , the California Supreme Court rejected the "proximate cause" test used by Sklar as being inconsistent with the rationale underlying specific jurisdiction in the context of ongoing franchise relationships and disapproved the reasoning Sklar to the extent it is inconsistent with the Vons Companies, Inc. opinion. For discussion of Vons Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

Kroopf v. Guffey (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 228 Cal. Rptr. 807 , was an action by a California resident against a Connecticut resident, who formerly lived in California with plaintiff, for declaratory relief and for damages for breach of contract, fraud, and infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed. In reversing the order, the court of appeal stated the rules set forth in Arnesen v. Raymond Lee Organization, Inc. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 991, 994-995, 107 Cal. Rptr. 744 (discussed below) (183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1356) .

In Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 , in holding that the burden of proof was sustained and denying the peremptory writ of mandate sought to compel the trial court to quash service of summons after it had denied motions to do so, the court of appeal said that (1) when jurisdiction is challenged by a nonresident defendant, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to demonstrate that minimum contacts exist between defendant and the forum state to justify imposition of personal jurisdiction, and the plaintiff has the right to conduct discovery with regard to the issue of jurisdiction to develop the facts necessary to sustain this burden; (2) an unverified complaint has no evidentiary value in the determination of personal jurisdiction, but it has limited cognizable significance as a material fact, in that it defines the cause of action, the nature of which has some bearing on the decision whether it is fair and reasonable to require the nonresident parties to appear and defend in this state; but the pleader has no burden of proving the truth of the allegations constituting the causes of action in order to justify the exercise of jurisdiction over nonresident parties; the plaintiff need only present facts demonstrating that the conduct of defendants related to the pleaded causes is such as to constitute constitutionally cognizable minimum contacts; (3) the explicit and implicit resolution by the trial court of any conflict between the declarations of the parties may not be reevaluated on appellate review, and the appellate court is not permitted to consider evidence that was not before the trial court (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 710) .

University Financing Consultants, Inc. v. Barouche (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 196 Cal. Rptr. 484 , was a breach of contract action by a California mortgage brokerage association against Hawaiian condominium developers who were never physically present in California and had obtained the plaintiff's brokerage services via contracts made with a Hawaiian mortgage broker. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed. In reversing the order, the court of appeal said that when a defendant moves to quash out-of-state service for lack of jurisdiction, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence (148 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1168) .

In Thomas J. Palmer, Inc. v. Turkiye Is Bankasi A.S. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 135, 164 Cal. Rptr. 181 , in affirming the trial court's order quashing out-of-state service of summons on a Turkish national bank, the court of appeal, citing Arnesen v. Raymond Lee Organization, Inc. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 991, 995, 107 Cal. Rptr. 744 (discussed below), said that where a defendant properly moves to quash out-of-state service for lack of jurisdiction, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence (105 Cal. App. 3d 135, 146) .

In Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , in affirming an order quashing service of summons and dismissing the action as to nonresident defendants, the court of appeal said that the defendants properly moved to quash out-of-state service of process for lack of personal jurisdiction, and that the burden of proof therefore was on the plaintiffs to establish the fact of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 904)

Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on nonresidents who were directors and the sole stockholders of an out-of-state corporation that was doing interstate business with California residents. In issuing the writ, the court of appeal said that, although jurisdiction over the corporation will support jurisdiction over the stockholders when a corporation is the alter ego of the stockholders so as to justify disregard of the corporate entity, (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 210) , the plaintiff had failed to allege facts sufficient to justify application of the alter ego doctrine and had failed to prove facts requisite to an effective service on the individuals (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 211-212) . The court said that when a defendant properly moves to quash service of summons the burden is on the plaintiff to prove facts requisite to the effective service (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 211) .

In Arnesen v. Raymond Lee Organization, Inc. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 991, 107 Cal. Rptr. 744 , the court of appeal, in affirming an order quashing service of summons on nonresident individual defendants served outside California, said that the propriety of the order would be tested by the following four principles: (1) when a defendant properly moves to quash out-of-state service of process for lack of jurisdiction, the burden is on the plaintiff to establish the facts of jurisdiction by a preponderance of the evidence; (2) evidence of those facts or their absence may be in the form of declarations with the verified complaint being treated as a declaration for that purpose; (3) when there is a conflict in the declarations, resolution of the conflict by the trial court will not be disturbed on appeal if the determination of that court is supported by substantial evidence; and (4) the appellate court is not permitted on appeal to consider evidence not before the trial court (31 Cal. App. 3d 991, 995) .

In General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 81, 93 Cal. Rptr. 148 , in granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the foreign corporation's motion to quash service of summons and to grant the motion on the ground plaintiff had failed to establish on the motion to quash that the person served with process was the general manager of the corporation [see § 132.60], the court of appeal said that when the validity of service of process on a foreign corporation is challenged by a motion to quash, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove the validity of the service, which burden extends to establishing the fact of compliance with California's statutory provisions for acquiring jurisdiction (15 Cal. App. 3d 81, 85-86) .

In Wilson v. Eddy (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 613, 82 Cal. Rptr. 826 (decided before enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10), affirming an order quashing service of summons on an attorney for nonresidents and holding that there was insufficient evidence that the attorney had been appointed an agent of the nonresidents to receive service of process, the court said that when a defendant properly moves to quash service of summons, the burden is on the plaintiff to prove facts requisite to the effective service (2 Cal. App. 3d 613, 616-617) .

13-132 California Points & Authorities § 132.76

§ 132.76 Supporting Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1)] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Nonresident Defendant Lacks Minimal Contacts With California--Exercise of Limited Jurisdiction Is Improper--General Requirements of Purposeful Availment by Defendant and Relationship Among Defendant, Forum, and Cause of Action

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.70), or with a memorandum submitted in reply to a plaintiff's opposition to a motion to quash service.]

THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE GRANTED IF THERE IS NOT A SUFFICIENT RELATIONSHIP AMONG THE DEFENDANT, THE FORUM, AND THE LITIGATION TO SUPPORT THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT.

A. Quality and Nature of Defendant's Activity. Whether a state court's exercise of jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant satisfies due process depends on the quality and nature of the defendant's activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the law which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure (International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 319, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95).

B. Assessment of Relationship Among Defendant, Forum, and Litigation. When a controversy is related to or arises out of a nonresident defendant's contacts with the forum, a relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation is the essential foundation of in personam jurisdiction (Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall (1984) 466 U.S. 408, 414, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 ; Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 204-205, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363 ; J. M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co. Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 542, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4).

C. Test for Limited Jurisdiction; Purposeful Availment. The requirements for the exercise of limited personal jurisdiction are as follows: (1) the nonresident defendant must perform some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act constituting a purposeful availment of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the cause of action must arise out of or result from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable (Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 471-478, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 ; Hunt v. Erie Ins. Group (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2d 1244, 1247 ; see also World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 ; Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 94, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132 ; Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283).

D. Effect of Purposeful Availment Requirement. The "purposeful availment" requirement ensures that a defendant will not be haled into a jurisdiction solely as a result of random, fortuitous, or attenuated contacts, or of the unilateral activity of another party or a third person (Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 475, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528).

[In an appropriate case, add additional points and authorities set out in §§ 132.77 -132.88, supporting the argument that the exercise of limited jurisdiction would be improper under the particular facts of the case.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that, in order for the court to exercise limited personal jurisdiction [see discussion under § 132.76[2][b]], there must be a sufficient relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.70], or with a memorandum of points and authorities submitted in reply to the plaintiff's papers opposing the motion to quash. It may also be included in a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

This form should be augmented, when appropriate, by the additional points and authorities set out in § 132.77 -132.90, which support the argument that the exercise of limited jurisdiction would be improper under the particular facts of the case.

For additional points and authorities supporting a motion to quash for lack of an adequate basis of jurisdiction in particular situations, see §§ 132.72 -132.75.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.70[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] General and Limited Jurisdiction

It is said that personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant may be either "general" or "limited," depending on the nature of the minimum contacts with California [see Hirsch v. Blue Cross, Blue Shield of Kansas City (9th Cir. 1986)

800 F.2d 1474, 1477 ; Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 147-148, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264] . General jurisdiction arises when the defendant's contacts are so extensive that it is not unreasonable to exercise jurisdiction even when the cause of action is not specifically related to those contacts [Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 147, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264] . Limited, or specific, jurisdiction arises when the defendant's contacts are not so extensive as to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction, but they nonetheless constitute a purposeful availment of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws, when the cause of action arise out of or results from these activities, and when the exercise of jurisdiction is otherwise reasonable [see Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 472, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 ; Hunt v. Erie Ins. Group (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2d 1244, 1247 ; Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 446, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 (nonresident defendant may be subject to specific jurisdiction if defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of forum benefits, and controversy is related to or arises out of a defendant's contact with forum); Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 149, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264] . For further discussion, see particularly the discussion of Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 and Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 in § 132.100[3][g].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda of points and authorities that may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to the foregoing memorandum, see §§ 132.100, 132.104, 132.107 -132.115.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quality and Nature of Defendant's Activity

The facts and procedural background of International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][d]. In affirming the judgment of the Washington Supreme Court, holding the corporation amenable to suit in Washington in the state's suit to collect unemployment insurance taxes, the Supreme Court, after noting various criteria to be considered in determining whether a nonresident defendant is amenable to suit, said that it was evident that the criteria by which it marked the boundary line between those activities which justify the subjection of a corporation to suit, and those which do not, cannot be simply mechanical or quantitative. The test is not merely whether the activity, which the corporation has seen fit to procure through its agents in another state, is a little more or a little less. Rather, whether due process has been satisfied must depend on the quality and nature of the activity in relation to the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure (326 U.S. 310, 319) . The Court concluded that because the activities carried on in behalf of the corporation in Washington were neither irregular nor casual, but, rather, systematic and continuous throughout the years involved and resulted in a large volume of interstate business in the course of which the corporation received the benefits and protection of the laws of the state, including the right to resort to the courts for the enforcement of its rights, and because the obligation sued on arose out of those very activities, the Washington courts had personal jurisdiction over it (326 U.S. 310, 320-321) .

[b] Assessment of Relationship Among Defendant, Forum, and Litigation

In Helicopteros Nacionales de Colombia v. Hall (1984) 466 U.S. 408, 104 S. Ct. 1868, 80 L. Ed. 2d 404 , a Colombian corporation, whose principal place of business was in Bogota, Colombia, and which had no place of business in Texas and had never been licensed to do business in that state, was engaged in the business of providing helicopter transportation for oil and construction companies in South America. It had contracted to provide helicopter transportation to a consortium, which was the alter ego of a joint venture headquartered in Houston, Texas. One of its helicopters crashed in Peru and among those who lost their lives were four U.S. citizens employed by the consortium who were working on a pipeline in Peru for a Peruvian state-owned oil company. The decedents' survivors and representatives, none of whom was domiciled in Texas, sued the Colombian corporation and others in Texas. The corporation's only contacts with Texas were as follows: (1) it sent its chief executive officer to Houston for contract negotiations; (2) it accepted into its New York bank account checks drawn by the consortium on a Texas bank; and (3) it purchased helicopters, spare parts and accessories, and training services from a Texas manufacturer and sent its personnel and prospective pilots to that manufacturer's facilities for training and to ferry the aircraft to South America. Although the Texas Court of Civil Appeals reversed the trial court's denial of the corporation's motion to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court of Texas reversed the Court of Civil Appeals.

The Supreme Court of the United States in effect agreed with the Texas Court of Civil Appeals and held that the corporation's contacts with Texas were insufficient to satisfy the requirement of the *due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment*and reversed the judgment of the Supreme Court of Texas. The Court said that when a controversy is related to or arises out of a defendant's contacts with the forum, a relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation is the essential foundation of in personam jurisdiction (466 U.S. 408, 414) .

Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363 , was an action by a Canadian life-insurance corporation against another Canadian corporation for breach of contract, the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and statutory duties in connection with a bond issued by the defendant insuring plaintiff for losses occurring at its offices in Canada. The defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that, in determining whether a particular exercise of limited personal jurisdiction is consistent with due process, the inquiry must focus on the relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 204-205) .

The facts and procedural background of J. M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co. Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4 , are discussed in § 132.73[4][a]. In affirming the order quashing service of summons on a Japanese company, the court of appeal said that if a defendant has sufficiently extensive "contacts" with the forum state, it may be subject to suit there on all claims wherever they arise, but in other cases the jurisdictional sufficiency of the defendant's contacts depends on an assessment of the relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation (197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 542) .

[c] Test for Limited Jurisdiction; Purposeful Availment

In Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , a Florida corporation, which had its principal offices in Miami and which conducted most of its restaurant business through a franchise operation, sued two of its Michigan franchisees in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida for breach of contract and for continued withholding of the premises and conducting business under the name Burger King after Burger King had terminated the contract for failure of the franchisees to make required payments. The contract provided that the franchise relationship was established in Miami and governed by Florida law.

The District Court denied the defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of in personam jurisdiction, ruling that pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute, a nonresident franchisee was subject to in personam jurisdiction in Florida in actions arising out of the franchise agreement. Florida's long-arm statute extended jurisdiction to any person, whether or not a citizen or resident of Florida, who, among other things, breached a contract in Florida by failing to perform acts required by the contract to be performed in Florida, so long as the cause of action arose from the alleged contractual breach. The defendants then filed an answer and a counterclaim seeking damages for alleged violations by Burger King of Michigan's Franchise Investment Law. The court found that the counterclaims were not proved and entered judgment for Burger King. One of the nonresident franchisees appealed to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eleventh Circuit, which reversed, holding that the District Court could not properly exercise personal jurisdiction pursuant to Florida's long-arm statute, because the circumstances of the franchise and the negotiations that led to it left the defendant bereft of reasonable notice and financially unprepared for the prospect of franchise litigation in Florida, and, accordingly, that the exercise of jurisdiction under these circumstances would offend the fundamental fairness which is the touchstone of due process.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court reversed the Court of Appeals. The Court stated that, when a forum seeks to assert specific (that is, limited) jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, due process requires that the defendant must have purposefully directed activities at residents of the forum, and the litigation must result from alleged injuries that arise out of or relate to those activities (471 U.S. 462, 471-473) . The constitutional touchstone remains whether the defendants purposefully established minimum contacts in the forum state; it is essential that there be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails himself, herself, or itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws (471 U.S. 462, 474-475) . Finally, once these minimum contacts are shown, they must be examined with other factors to determine whether the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable, such that it would comport with fair play and substantial justice (471 U.S. 462, 476-478) . It held that the exercise of in personam jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees by the Florida court did not violate the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment because the franchisee had established a substantial and continuing relationship with the plaintiff's headquarters in Florida and received fair notice from the contract documents and the course of dealing that he might be subject to suit in that state (471 U.S. 462, 478, 487) .

The facts and procedural background of Hunt v. Erie Ins. Group (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2d 1244 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][f]. In affirming the judgment of the federal district court dismissing the action for lack of personal jurisdiction, the United States Court of Appeals said the requirements for the exercise of limited personal jurisdiction are as follows: (1) the nonresident defendant must perform some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act constituting a purposeful availment of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the cause of action must arise out of or result from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable (728 F.2d 1244, 1247) .

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][g]. In reversing the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court on the ground the defendants had no contacts, ties, or relations with the State of Oklahoma (444 U.S. 286, 299) , the United States Supreme Court said that the due process clause, by ensuring the orderly administration of the laws, gives a degree of predictability to the legal system that allows potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit (444 U.S. 286, 297) . The Court explained that when a corporation purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, it has clear notice that it is subject to suit there. Hence if the sale of a product of a manufacturer or distributor such as Audi or Volkswagen is not simply an isolated occurrence, but arises from the efforts of the manufacturer or distributor to serve, directly or indirectly, the market for its product in other states, it is not unreasonable to subject it to suit in one of those states if its allegedly defective merchandise has there been the source of injury to its owner or to others (444 U.S. 286, 297) .

The facts and procedural background of Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In reversing the judgment of the California Supreme Court upholding state court jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, and quoting Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 253, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 , the United States Supreme Court said that it is essential in each case that there be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails himself or herself of the privilege of conducting activities with the forum state (436 U.S. 84, 93-94) . The Court further held that the action did not arise out of any act performed or transaction consummated by the defendant in California (436 U.S. 84, 96-97) .

[d] Effect of Purposeful Availment Requirement

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 are discussed under § 132.76[3][c]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court said that the "purposeful availment" requirement ensures that a defendant will not be haled into a jurisdiction solely as a result of random, fortuitous, or attenuated contacts, or of the unilateral activity of another party or a third person (471 U.S. 462, 475) .

[a] Assessment of Relationship Among Defendant, Forum, and Litigation

The procedural background of Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 , aff'g Jones v. Calder (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 128, 187 Cal. Rptr. 825 , is discussed in § 132.100[3][p]. In holding that the nonresident defendants were subject to the jurisdiction of the California courts in a libel action, the United States Supreme Court said that in judging minimum contacts, a court properly focuses on the relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation (465 U.S. 783, 788) .

The facts and procedural background of Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc. (1984) 465 U.S. 770, 104 S. Ct. 1473, 79 L. Ed. 2d 790 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][p]. In holding that the United States District Court in New Hampshire had personal jurisdiction over the defendant corporation and reversing the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, the United States Supreme Court said that in judging minimum contacts, a court properly focuses on the relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation (465 U.S. 770, 775) .

The facts and procedural background of Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][h]. Although it denied the petition for writ of mandate seeking to have the service of summons on a foreign corporation quashed, the Supreme Court said that in determining whether a particular exercise of state-court jurisdiction is consistent with due process, the inquiry must focus on the relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation (33 Cal. 3d 664, 668) .

In Daar & Newman v. VRL Int'l (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 482, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 566 , appellant law firm previously represented respondent in a personal injury action. Because respondent had insufficient contacts with California for it to assert jurisdiction over it, appellant successfully moved to quash service of process and obtained respondent's dismissal from the action. Appellant also successfully defended the trial court's ruling on appeal to this court. Contending that it was not paid in full for the services it rendered on behalf of respondent in the prior action, appellant filed an action for recovery of fees. Respondent filed a motion to quash contending it had no sufficient contacts with this state upon which jurisdiction may be based. The trial court granted the motion to quash and dismissed respondent from the action. The court of appeal reversed, finding that the operative facts and law relating to the attorney fee action were different from the prior action. The plaintiff in the prior action attempted to assert jurisdiction over respondent for injuries which occurred in connection with a personal watercraft accident in Nassau, the Bahamas. Here, appellant asserts jurisdiction to recover fees directly related to appellant's retention and representation of respondent in California. Because the claim arises directly from services rendered by appellant for respondent in California, limited jurisdiction existed for resolution of the claim.

In Nam Tai Electronics, Inc. v. Titzer (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 769 , the court considered whether specific jurisdiction should be extended over a non-resident defendant who posted allegedly defamatory messages on Yahoo!, a California-based Internet message board. In order to avail himself of the opportunity to post on a Yahoo! message board, the defendant was required to register a nickname or alias known as a Yahoo! ID, and agree to Yahoo!'s terms of service; among other things, those terms include a promise not to post any content that is unlawful, defamatory, libelous, or otherwise objectionable, and that the relationship between the person registering and Yahoo! shall be governed by the laws of the State of California, and that both agree to submit to the personal and exclusive jurisdiction of the California courts. The plaintiff in this matter was not Yahoo!, however, it was the party about whom the allegedly defamatory messages were about.

Plaintiff initially contended that defendant made himself subject to jurisdiction in California by posting several messages on Yahoo!'s California-maintained web site. In rejecting this argument, the court stated that the issue is not whether the company that makes the web sites available is incorporated or based in California. Instead, the determinative question is whether the web sites themselves are of particular significance to California or Californians such that the user has reason to know the posting of a message will have a significant impact in this state (93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 1312) .

Plaintiff further argued that the defendant's voluntary agreement to Yahoo!'s terms of service subject him to jurisdiction in this state. In rejecting this argument, the court pointed out that the language on which plaintiff seeks to rely appears on its face to govern litigation between registered users and Yahoo!--not registered users and third parties. Thus, that agreement, by itself, cannot justify subjecting defendant to California jurisdiction for purposes of the instant lawsuit (93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 1313) .

In Wolfe v. City of Alexandria (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 265 Cal. Rptr. 881 , plaintiffs, an elderly sister, who was unable to care for herself adequately, and brother, sued a city in a sister state and public and private community services organizations operating in the city and certain of their employees, none of whom resided, did business, or was present in California, for injuries allegedly sustained as a result of defendants having caused the sister to be transported from Virginia to San Francisco and there "dumped" on her brother who was unable to care for her. Defendants' motions to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction were granted, and plaintiffs appealed. In affirming the orders on the ground there was no basis for exercising jurisdiction over the defendants, the court of appeal, after pointing out that Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 manifests an intent to exercise the broadest possible jurisdiction, limited only by constitutional considerations, said that these considerations include the following: a defendant not literally present in the forum state may not be required to defend itself in that state's tribunals unless the quality and nature of the defendant's activity in relation to the particular cause of action makes it fair to do so (217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 545) . The court pointed out that while the effect of physical and psychological trauma claimed by plaintiffs occurred in California, the acts or omissions that allegedly led to that effect were nothing more than providing the sister with temporary housing, obtaining an airplane ticket for her, and driving her to the airport without ensuring the truth of her claims that her brother had agreed to take care of her, and that even if these acts and omissions were wrongful, and even if they were done fraudulently, they simply were not such as would permit a California court to exercise jurisdiction over nonresident defendants (217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 548-549) .

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court of appeal said that in determining whether a particular exercise of jurisdiction is consistent with due process, the inquiry must focus on the relationship among the defendant, the forum, and the litigation (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 111) .

[b] Test for Limited Jurisdiction; Purposeful Availment

The facts and procedural background of Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , are discussed in § 132.77[3][d]. In reversing the California Supreme Court, which had upheld the jurisdiction of the California Superior court over a Japanese company, the United States Supreme Court said the minimum contacts by which jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant is sought to be established must have a basis in some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws (480 U.S. 102, 109) .

In Elkman v. National States Ins. Co. (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 1305, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 768 , an insurer issued a long term care insurance policy to the insured, which was delivered to her Florida residence. The insured subsequently relocated to California. The court found no basis to justify the imposition of either general or specific jurisdiction over the insurer in California. The insurer did not subject itself to either general or specific jurisdiction in the state merely by accepting premium payments from California and by processing and paying claims submitted by its California insureds for services rendered in California. The insurer did not solicit any business in California, nor could it do so, because it was not licensed or authorized to do business in the state. It was the unilateral decision of the insured and other insureds to relocate to California that caused the insurer to accept payments from California and to process and pay claims for services rendered in California. Those circumstances did not support a finding the insurer purposefully availed itself of forum benefits so as to make it subject to specific jurisdiction in California (173 Cal. App. 4th 1305, 1318) .

In Roman v. Liberty University, Inc. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 670, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828 , the only contact a Virginia university had with California was the university's recruiting coordinator visit to plaintiff in California to recruit him to play football for the university, and the execution of a scholarship agreement by plaintiff in California. The court found that the university had not purposely availed itself of the benefits of doing business in California such that it could expect to be subject to the jurisdiction of California courts. The nexus between the university's activities in California and the injury plaintiff suffered in Virginia was so attenuated as to be virtually nonexistent (162 Cal. App. 4th 670, 680) .

In Healthmarkets, Inc. v. Superior Court (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 1160, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 527 , plaintiff sued a nonresident holding company, alleging that he was the victim of a fraudulent health insurance sales scheme perpetrated by the holding company. The holding company was incorporated in Delaware, with its principal place of business in Texas. It had no contacts with California. The trial court denied the holding company's motion to quash service of summons based on lack of personal jurisdiction. The trial court concluded that the contacts with the state by the holding company's subsidiary should be attributed to the holding company for purposes of specific personal jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the holding company's motion to quash service of summons and rule on plaintiff's request for a continuance to conduct discovery. The court concluded that plaintiff failed to establish purposeful availment and therefore failed to establish a basis for personal jurisdiction over the holding company. The holding company's mere ownership of the subsidiary did not constitute purposeful availment. Plaintiff did not show that the holding company purposefully directed its activities at California, either directly or through its subsidiary or any other person or entity. Absent evidence that the holding company purposefully directed the activities of the subsidiary toward the state, there was no basis for personal jurisdiction over the holding company. Because plaintiff failed to establish purposeful availment, the trial court erred in denying the holding company's motion to quash (171 Cal. App. 4th 1160, 1168-1174) .

In Aquila, Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 556, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803 , a group of independent plaintiffs sued a publicly regulated utility, alleging the utility participated in manipulating the price of natural gas in California by falsely reporting natural gas trades to price indices and engaging in wash trades. The utility, which was headquartered in Missouri, moved to quash service of summons, challenging the trial court's exercise of jurisdiction over it for lack of sufficient ties to California. The utility asserted that all the alleged minimum contacts claimed by plaintiffs were actually carried out by its independent subsidiary companies. The trial court denied the motion, finding a sufficient basis for specific jurisdiction under the theory the utility had purposefully availed itself of opportunities in California. The Court of Appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the trial court to vacate its order denying the utility's motion to quash service of summons and to enter a new order granting the motion. The court concluded that the exercise of specific jurisdiction over the utility was improper because plaintiffs did not bear their burden of demonstrating the existence of sufficient minimum contacts between the utility and the state. A weather derivative contract that obligated the utility and its subsidiary to pay money to a utilities district if rainfall levels were low and impeded hydroelectrical generators from operating properly did not adequately show that the utility purposefully availed itself of the benefits of forum contacts with the state so as to justify specific jurisdiction over the utility. The utility's purchase of an insurance policy for itself and its subsidiaries for several real properties, one of which was in California, did not demonstrate its own purposeful availment of forum benefits. The court also concluded that the record did not support the application of the representative services doctrine. The utility's purchase of the property insurance policy did not establish the pervasive control required for the representative services doctrine to apply. A guarantee the utility provided for its subsidiary's financial obligations under the weather derivative contract did not destroy the separateness of the parent and subsidiary so as to justify application of the representative services doctrine. Therefore, the utility's motion to quash service of summons should have been granted.

In Archdiocese of Milwaukee v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 423, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 , plaintiff alleged and declared under oath that when he was a boy, a Roman Catholic priest molested him; the priest was working at a parish in Orange County when the alleged molestation occurred. The plaintiff sued the Milwaukee Archdiocese, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Orange (the Orange Diocese), and the priest. Among other things, plaintiff alleged the Milwaukee Archdiocese engaged in a cover-up of the priest's prior misconduct, which included a conviction in Wisconsin for sexual perversion against a boy, and arranged for the priest to move to California in 1973. The evidence showed the Milwaukee Archdiocese sought to rid itself of the priest by sending him into California knowing he was a pedophile and had been convicted in Wisconsin of sexual perversion against a boy. The court held that plaintiff met his burden of proving, for purposes of establishing specific personal jurisdiction, the Milwaukee Archdiocese engaged in intentional conduct expressly aimed at California and knew its conduct would cause harm in this state. Thus, under the "effects" test for determining purposeful availment in personal jurisdiction analysis, a defendant might be subject to jurisdiction in the forum state if the defendant engaged in intentional conduct expressly aimed at or targeting the forum state, and the defendant knew the intentional conduct would cause harm in the future (112 Cal. App. 4th 423, 438-442) .

Tri-West Ins. Services, Inc. v. Seguros Monterrey Aetna, S.A. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 672, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 78 , involved a Mexican insurance company (SMA) that issued a policy to plaintiff, a manufacturer maintaining factories in Mexico, of transit insurance to cover goods being transported to and from Mexico. The plaintiff had made premium payments through brokers. When plaintiff made a claim based on a loss in Mexico, SMA informed plaintiff that it had never received any premium payments and that the policy had long been cancelled. Plaintiff sued its insurance broker for negligence, breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraud, and the broker filed a cross complaint against SMA equitable indemnity, fraud, conversion, and other causes of action. The trial court found that SMA did not have the requisite minimum contacts with California for the assertion of jurisdiction and quashed service of process dismissing the action with prejudice.

In affirming, the court of appeal stated that a nonresident defendant may be subject to the specific jurisdiction of the forum if the defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of forum benefits and the controversy is related to or arises out of the defendant's contacts with the forum. Specific jurisdiction arises when a nonresident defendant has purposefully directed his or her activities at forum residents, or has purposefully derived benefits from forum activities, or has purposefully availed himself or herself of privilege of conducting activities within the forum, or has deliberately engaged in significant activities with a state or has created continuing obligations between himself or herself and residents of the forum. In such cases it is presumptively not unreasonable to require the defendant to submit to the burdens of litigation in the forum (78 Cal. App. 4th 672, 677) . The issuance of the transit policy was not a sufficient contact for the exercise of jurisdiction (78 Cal. App. 4th 672, 677-678) . There was no evidence that SMA insured other California business entities, or insured anyone for losses in California, except plaintiff, or was otherwise engaged in commerce in California (78 Cal. App. 4th 672, 680) . Moreover, SMA issued a property policy, which included no liability insurance. SMA did not volunteer to litigate in California, but merely to pay claims to its insured for property loss (78 Cal. App. 4th 672, 679) .

Stone v. State of Texas (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 657 , involved an action brought by plaintiff against Texas and the University of Texas Health Center at Tyler (together Health Center) for breach of contract, breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and violation of Lab. Code § 970. Plaintiff, a doctor with a practice in San Diego, was solicited by a search firm located in Texas for employment by the Health Center. Over two years after plaintiff started working for the Health Center, he resigned because a college expense benefit for his children, which was an important factor in his taking the position, was substantially reduced. Plaintiff, however, continued to reside and practice in Texas. The trial court granted Health Center's motion for an order quashing service of the summons and plaintiff appealed (76 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1046-1047) .

In affirming, the court of appeal noted that a nonresident defendant may be subject to specific jurisdiction of the forum, if the defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of the forum benefits, and the controversy is related to or arises out of a defendant's contacts with the forum (76 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1047-1048) . The court concluded that plaintiff failed to meet the purposeful availment prong of the minimum contacts test (76 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1048) . "Purposeful availment" requires that the defendant have performed some types of affirmative conduct that allows or promotes the transaction of business within the forum state. A contract with an out-of-state party does not automatically establish purposeful availment in the other party's home forum. Rather, a court must evaluate the contract terms and the surrounding circumstances to determine whether the defendant purposefully established minimum contacts with the forum. Relevant factors include prior negotiations, contemplated future consequences, the parties course of dealings, and contract's choice of law provision (76 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1048) . The court further noted that with respect to interstate contractual obligations, parties who reach out beyond one state and create continuing relationships and obligations with citizens of another state are subject to sanctions in the other state for consequences of their activities. Due process requires a substantial connection between the contract at issue and the forum state (76 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1048-1049) .

The facts and procedural background of Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , are discussed in § 132.89[3][a]. In issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new and different order granting the motion to quash service of summons, the court of appeal noted that specific jurisdiction is determined under a three-part test: (1) the nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act by which he or she purposefully avails himself or herself of privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the claim must be one that arises out of or results from the defendant's forum related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1054) .

Goehring v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 105 , involved plaintiffs who purchased telephone units as investments from a California corporation. After the California corporation filed bankruptcy, plaintiffs filed a class action alleging the investment scheme was fraudulent and violated several California statutes. Plaintiffs named numerous defendants, including two Texas residents who were general partners of a Texas partnership that sold the pay telephone units to the California corporation. The two general partners moved to dismiss for lack of jurisdiction. The trial court denied the motion relying on four sets of documents relating to the sale, i.e., (1) a written sales agreement, (2) the related promissory notes and collection and escrow agreement, (3) a security agreement, and (4) a California UCC-1 financing statement. Defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate challenging the trial court's order (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 899-903) .

The court of appeal granted the writ ordering the trial court to vacate its denial of the dismissal motion, but also directed that the trial court be provided the opportunity to exercise its discretion to determine whether jurisdictional discovery that plaintiffs requested pertaining to the defendants, would be appropriate in the case (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 899, 911) . In reaching its conclusion, the court noted that when general jurisdiction over a defendant cannot be established, a court may assume specific jurisdiction over a defendant in a particular case if the plaintiff shows that (1) the defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of the forum benefits, (2) the controversy is related to or arises out of the defendant's contacts with the forum, and (3) the assertion of jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 904) . A contract with an out-of-state party does not automatically establish purposeful availment in the other party's home forum. Rather, the court must evaluate the contract terms and surrounding circumstances to determine whether the defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum. "Purposeful availment" requires that the defendant have performed some type of affirmative conduct that allows or promotes the transaction of business within the forum state (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907) . The defendants did not purposefully avail themselves of California benefits by executing the sales, security, and escrow agreements so as to give rise to sufficient minimum contacts with the forum to confer jurisdiction over them when the (1) contract negotiations occurred in Texas, (2) sales, security agreements and promissory notes were governed by Texas law, (3) transaction documents were prepared by a Texas law firm, (4) transactions closed in Texas, (5) documents were executed in Texas and payments necessary to close the transaction were provided to a bank in Texas, and (6) sales and security agreements concerned only Texas-based pay telephones that were required to remain in Texas. Thus, all future consequences were in Texas (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907) . Similarly, the filing of a single California UCC-1 financial statement in California Secretary of State's office, signed by a partner, considered alone or in connection with the sales and security agreements, did not demonstrate purposeful availment. The filing of financing statements is not akin to soliciting business in the forum, introducing products into the forum, or signing and performing a contract in the forum (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907-908) . Moreover, jurisdiction could not be based on out-of-state conduct causing an effect in California, i.e., injury to the plaintiffs. The mere causing of an effect is not necessarily sufficient to afford a constitutional basis for jurisdiction. Jurisdiction may be invoked only if the actor committed an out-of-state act intending to cause effects in California or reasonably expecting that effects in California would result (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 908 -909).

Pennsylvania Life & Health Ins. Guaranty Assn. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 477, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 507 , was an action brought by a widow against a Pennsylvania insurance guaranty association, in which she sought to recover as beneficiary of her husband's life insurance policy issued by a Pennsylvania insurance company that later became insolvent. The trial court denied the guaranty association's motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction and the guaranty association sought a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, directing the trial court to vacate its order. It held that the guaranty association's contacts to California were insufficient to establish jurisdiction when its only contacts were sending two letters to the deceased insured in California as part of its effort to wind up the affairs of the insolvent Pennsylvania insurance company and thus the association did not direct its activities toward a specific California resident or "purposefully avail" itself of the benefits and protections of California. The court further stated that the guaranty association did not impliedly consent to be sued in California since it stood in the shoes of the insolvent Pennsylvania insurer only for some limited purposes, the extent of its liability was limited to statutorily defined claims, and it was not in the business of insurance for profit (22 Cal. App. 4th 477, 483) .

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court of appeal said that in instances where jurisdiction is based on the defendant's occasional activities within the forum state, the United States Supreme Court has made it clear that there must be some act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 112) .

PART II. FORMS
C. Bases of Jurisdiction

13-132 California Points & Authorities § 132.77

§ 132.77 Supporting Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1)] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Nonresident Defendant Lacks Minimal Contacts With California--Exercise of Limited Jurisdiction Is Improper--Exercise of Jurisdiction Must Be Reasonable and Fair

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

DEFENDANT'S CONTACTS WITH THE FORUM STATE ARE NOT SUCH THAT IT IS REASONABLE AND FAIR FOR THE COURT TO EXERCISE LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT.

A. Reasonableness and Fairness Requirement. The protection against inconvenient litigation is described in terms of "reasonableness" and "fairness"; the nonresident defendant's contacts with the forum state must be such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice; thus, the relationship between the defendant and the forum must be such that it is reasonable to require the defendant to defend the particular suit which is brought there (World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 292, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 ; see also Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 147, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264).

B. Relevant Factors. Implicit in the emphasis on reasonableness is the understanding that the burden on the nonresident defendant, while always a primary concern, will in an appropriate case be considered in light of other relevant factors, including: (1) the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute; (2) the plaintiff's interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief, at least when that interest is not adequately protected by the plaintiff's power to choose the forum; (3) the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies; and (4) the shared interest of the several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 292, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 ; see also Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 113, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 ; Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191, 1198-1199) .

C. Balancing of Conveniences for Exercise of Limited Jurisdiction. Once it is established that the defendant has engaged in activity of the requisite quality and nature in the forum state and that the cause of action is sufficiently connected with this activity, the propriety of an assumption of jurisdiction depends on a balancing of the inconvenience to the defendant in having to defend itself in the forum state against both the interest of the plaintiff in suing locally and the interrelated interest of the state in assuming jurisdiction (Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 899, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 ; see also Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 150-151, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 ; Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 539, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 ; Belmont Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 281, 286, 107 Cal. Rptr. 237).

[Optional] D. When Defendant Is Foreign National. In every case, the substantive interests of other nations, as well as the federal interest in its foreign relations policies, are best served by a careful inquiry into the reasonableness of the assertion of jurisdiction in the particular case, and an unwillingness to find the serious burdens on an alien defendant outweighed by minimal interests on the part of the plaintiff or the forum state; great care and reserve should be exercised when extending our notions of personal jurisdiction into the international field (Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 115, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 ; J. M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co., Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 546, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant must be reasonable and fair in light of the circumstances of the case.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in specific fact situations [see §§ 132.78 -132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Evaluation of Factors

Consideration of the factors set forth in Paragraphs B and C of the foregoing form overlap to some extent with the factors considered on a motion to stay or dismiss an action or proceeding for inconvenient forum [see § 132.130 et seq.].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda of points and authorities that may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to the foregoing memorandum, see §§ 132.100, 132.104, 132.107 -132.115.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonableness and Fairness Requirement

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct.

559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][g]. In holding that the Oklahoma courts did not have in personam jurisdiction over the New York corporations and reversing the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court said that the protection against inconvenient litigation is typically described in terms of "reasonableness" or "fairness," that the defendant's contacts with the forum state must be such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice, and that the relationship between the defendant and the forum must be such that it is "reasonable" to require the corporation to defend the particular suit which is brought there (444 U.S. 286, 292) .

The facts and procedural background of Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][g]. Although the California Supreme Court reversed the judgment of dismissal following the granting of a motion to quash out-of-state service of summons by mail on the ground that the court could exercise limited jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant, the Court said that, in a significant line of cases beginning with International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (discussed in § 132.70[3][d]), the United States Supreme Court has defined the parameters of the powers of states to compel nonresidents to defend suits brought against them in the state's courts, and that the general rule is that the forum state may not exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident unless his or her relationship to the state is such as to make the exercise of such jurisdiction reasonable (16 Cal. 3d 143, 147) .

[b] Relevant Factors

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][d]. Holding that the Oklahoma courts did not have in personam jurisdiction over the New York corporations and reversing the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court said that the burden on the defendant, while always a primary concern, will in an appropriate case be considered in light of other relevant factors, including the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute, the plaintiff's interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief, at least when that interest is not adequately protected by the plaintiff's power to choose the forum, the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies, and the shared interest of the several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (444 U.S. 286, 292) . The Court further pointed out that the reasonableness of asserting jurisdiction over the defendant must be assessed in the context of our federal system of government and that the due process clause ensures not only fairness, but also the orderly administration of the laws (444 U.S. 286, 293-294) .

The facts and procedural background of Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , are discussed under § 132.77[3][d]. In reversing the California Supreme Court, which had upheld the jurisdiction of the California superior court over a Japanese company, the United States Supreme Court, citing World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (discussed above), said that it had previously explained that the determination of the reasonableness of the exercise of jurisdiction in each case will depend on an evaluation of several factors, that the court must consider the burden on the defendant, the interests of the forum state, and the plaintiff's interest in obtaining relief, and it must also weigh in its determination the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies, and the shared interest of the several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (480 U.S. 102, 113) .

The procedural background of Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191 , is discussed in § 132.100[4][d]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the United States Court of Appeals said that reasonableness is considered as a separate factor in determining the existence of limited personal jurisdiction, that once it has been shown that the defendant purposefully availed himself or herself of the forum's benefits, the burden shifts to the defendant to overcome the presumption that the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable, and that in determining reasonableness the court would examine the following seven factors: (1) the extent of defendant's purposeful interjection (which is analogous to the purposeful direction analysis [see § 132.100]); (2) the burden on the defendant in defending in the forum in light of the corresponding burden on the plaintiff in litigating in the foreign jurisdiction; (3) the extent of any conflict with the sovereignty of the defendant's state; (4) the forum state's interest in adjudicating the suit; (5) the most efficient judicial resolution of the dispute; (6) the convenience and effectiveness of relief for the plaintiff; and (7) the existence of an alternative forum (854 F.2d 1191, 1198-1199) . The court said that the application of these seven factors is not mechanical, but rather, in determining whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction is reasonable, the court must balance them (854 F.2d 1191, 1199) . The court then separately analyzed the seven factors and concluded that, after balancing the relative significance of each factor, the district court's exercise of jurisdiction over the Swiss clinic was reasonable (854 F.2d 1191, 1199-1201) .

[c] Balancing of Conveniences for Exercise of Limited Jurisdiction

Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action by a California worker for damages for personal injuries sustained when a pressure tank, which was manufactured some seven years earlier by the defendant, an Ohio corporation, but not sold by it to plaintiff's employer, was being used in connection with a system for the spraying of liquid under air pressure. The defendant manufactured pressure vessels having numerous and varied uses; sales were solicited outside Ohio in interstate commerce both directly and through independent manufacturers' representatives who sold the defendant's products on a commission basis in a number of states, but not California. The defendant's only contact with California was its sales of pressure tanks (of a kind not involved in the action) to an Ohio corporation which maintained a manufacturing plant in California, and the shipment of tanks directly to the California plant. Defendant's motion to quash service of summons was denied and the defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant its motion.

In denying the peremptory writ, the California Supreme Court first pointed out that former Code Civ. Proc. § 411(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10] authorized service of process on foreign corporations doing business in California, and that this section exerted the full power of the state, consistent with the due process clause, to subject foreign corporations to the jurisdiction of California courts (71 Cal. 2d 893, 898) . The Court said that (1) a defendant not literally present in the forum state may not be required to defend itself in that state's tribunals unless the quality and nature of the defendant's activity in relation to the particular cause of action makes it fair to do so; (2) such a defendant's activity must consist of an act performed or transaction consummated in the forum state or some other act by which the defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; and (3) furthermore, unless the defendant's forum-related activity reaches such extensive or wide-ranging proportions as to make the defendant sufficiently present in the forum state to support jurisdiction over it concerning causes of action which are unrelated to that activity, the particular cause of action must arise out of or be connected with the defendant's forum-related activity (71 Cal. 2d 893, 898-899) . The Court said that once it is established that the defendant has engaged in activity of the requisite quality and nature in the forum state and that the cause of action is sufficiently connected with this activity, the propriety of an assumption of jurisdiction depends on a balancing of the inconvenience to the defendant in having to defend itself in the forum state against both the interest of the plaintiff in suing locally and the interrelated interest of the state in assuming jurisdiction. In other words, once the threshold of sufficient activity by the defendant has been passed, the question of the propriety of subjecting the defendant to the jurisdiction of the forum involves both a consideration of fairness to the plaintiff and a determination of whether, from a standpoint of the logical and orderly distribution of interstate litigation, the forum state is a "forum conveniens" (71 Cal. 2d 893, 899) .

The facts and procedural background of Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][g]. Although the California Supreme Court reversed the dismissal of the action following the granting of the nonresident's motion to quash service of summons, the Court said that it next considered whether it would be fair and reasonable to subject defendant to the jurisdiction of California in light of the inconvenience to him in defending an action in this state, when balanced against the interests of plaintiff in suing locally and of the state in assuming jurisdiction (16 Cal. 3d 143, 150) . In reply to plaintiff's assertion that the Court was precluded from considering the balance of these conveniences because defendant did not move to dismiss the action on the ground of inconvenient forum, the Court said that in situations where justification for the exercise of jurisdiction is not obvious, the convenience of the parties is a factor to be considered in determining whether it would be fair to exercise jurisdiction over a defendant who resides in another state (16 Cal. 3d 143, 150-151) . The Court said that the following are some of the considerations involved in this balance: (1) the relative availability of evidence and the burden of defense and prosecution in one place rather than another; (2) the interest of a state in providing a forum for its residents or regulating the business involved; (3) the ease of access to an alternative forum; (4) the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits and conflicting adjudications; and (5) the extent to which the cause of action arose out of defendant's local activities (16 Cal. 3d 143, 151) . After weighing the relevant considerations, the Court concluded that it would not offend due process to subject the defendant to the jurisdiction of the California courts (16 Cal. 3d 143, 151-152) .

The procedural background of Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 , is discussed in § 132.75[3][a]. In reversing the order quashing service of summons on the Japanese corporation in an action for alleged misappropriation of trade secrets, the court of appeal, quoting Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 899, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 (discussed above), said once it is established that the defendant has engaged in activity of the requisite quality and nature in the forum state and that the cause of action is sufficiently connected with this activity, the propriety of an assumption of jurisdiction depends on a balancing of the inconvenience to the defendant in having to defend itself in the forum state against both the interest of the plaintiff in suing locally and the interrelated interest of the state in assuming jurisdiction. The court said that the considerations pertaining to the convenient forum include, inter alia, the interest of the state in providing a forum to its residents; the choice of law; the relative availability of evidence; the ease of access to an alternative forum; the avoidance of the multiplicity of suits and conflicting adjudications; and inconvenience to the defendant to defend himself or herself in the local forum. The court concluded that each of these factors militated toward California as the appropriate forum (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 539) .

Belmont Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 281, 107 Cal. Rptr. 237 , was a proceeding in mandate seeking to compel the trial court to enter its order quashing service of summons on the defendant for lack of jurisdiction in an action by a California corporation against a foreign corporation to recover on a contract for services rendered. The defendant's only contact with California was the negotiation through interstate communications of the contract, executed by a purchase order in Pennsylvania. In granting the writ, the court of appeal said that in deciding whether jurisdiction reasonably may be assumed it had to analyze the nature and quality of the foreign corporation's activities in relation to California, and that this required a consideration of the following criteria: (1) the state's interest in providing a forum for its resident and in regulating the business involved; (2) the relative availability of evidence and the burden of defense and prosecution in one place rather than another; (3) the ease of access to an alternative forum; (4) the avoidance of multiplicity of suits and conflicting adjudications; and (5) the extent to which the cause of action arose out of defendant's activities in California (31 Cal. App. 3d 281, 286) . The court concluded that the evaluation of these considerations weighed against the assumption of jurisdiction by the California court. The court added that another compelling reason against the assumption of jurisdiction by California under the circumstances of the case was the adverse effect it would have on interstate commerce, that to hold that a foreign buyer had subjected itself to the judicial jurisdiction of California by the simple act of purchasing services from a California resident would hinder interstate business contrary to the best economic interest of California (31 Cal. App. 3d 281, 289) .

[d] When Defendant Is Foreign National

Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , was a proceeding in certiorari brought by a Japanese manufacturer of tire valve assemblies which it sold to various tire manufacturers, including a Taiwanese company. The sales took place in Taiwan. The Taiwanese company incorporated the assemblies into its finished tires which it sold throughout the world, including California in which about 20 percent of its U.S. sales were made. The proceeding arose out of a products liability action against the Taiwanese company for personal injuries and wrongful death sustained in California when one of the company's tires installed on a motorcycle suddenly lost air and exploded, causing the driver to lose control and the motorcycle to crash into a tractor, resulting in serious injuries to the motorcycle driver and the death of his passenger-wife. The complaint alleged that the tire, tube, and sealant were defective. The Taiwanese company filed a cross complaint for indemnity against the Japanese company. The main damages suit was eventually settled and dismissed, but the California superior court denied the Japanese company's motion to quash service of the summons issued against it.

The California court of appeal ordered that the service be quashed, but the California Supreme Court reversed. Although the Court observed that the Japanese company had no offices, property, or agents in California, solicited no business in California, made no direct sales in California, and did not design or control the system of distribution that carried its valve assemblies into California, it nonetheless held that the Japanese company's intentional act of placing its assemblies into the stream of commerce by delivering them in Taiwan to the Taiwanese company, coupled with its awareness that some of them would eventually reach California, were sufficient to support state court jurisdiction under the due process clause.

On certiorari, the United States Supreme Court pointed out that World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (discussed in § 132.77[3][a]) admonished courts to take into consideration the interests of the several states, in addition to the forum state, in the efficient judicial resolution of a dispute and the advancement of substantive policies and added that this advice called for the Court to consider in the case before it the procedural and substantive policies of other nations whose interests are affected by the assertion of jurisdiction by the California court (480 U.S. 102, 115) . The Court said that the procedural and substantive interests of other nations in a state court's assertion of jurisdiction over an alien defendant will differ from case to case, but that, in every case, those interests, as well as the federal interest in its foreign relations policies, will be best served by a careful inquiry into the reasonableness of the assertion of jurisdiction in the particular case, and an unwillingness to find the serious burdens on an alien defendant outweighed by minimal interests on the part of the plaintiff or the forum state (480 U.S. 102, 115) . The Court cautioned that great care and reserve should be exercised when extending our notions of personal jurisdiction into the international field (480 U.S. 102, 115) , and concluded that, considering the international context, the heavy burden on the alien defendant, and the slight interests of the plaintiff and the forum state, the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the Japanese company would be unreasonable and unfair (480 U.S. 102, 116) . Because it found that the facts of the case did not establish minimum contacts such that the exercise of jurisdiction would be consistent with fair play and substantial justice, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the California Supreme Court and remanded the case for further proceedings not inconsistent with its opinion (480 U.S. 102, 116) .

The facts and procedural background of J.M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co., Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4 , are discussed in § 132.73[4][a]. In affirming the order quashing service of summons on a Japanese corporation, the court of appeal, quoting Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 115, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , said that, in every case, the interests of other nations as well as the federal interest in its foreign relations policies, will be best served by a careful inquiry into the reasonableness of the assertion of jurisdiction in the particular case, and of an unwillingness to find the serious burdens on an alien defendant outweighed by minimal interests on the part of the plaintiff or the forum state, and that great care and reserve should be exercised when extending our notions of personal jurisdiction into the international field (197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 546) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reasonableness and Fairness Requirement

The facts and procedural background of Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In holding that the denial of the motion to quash was error and reversing the judgment of the California Supreme Court, the Supreme Court of the United States said that while the interests of the forum state and of the plaintiff in proceeding with the cause in the plaintiff's forum of choice are to be considered, an essential criterion in all cases is whether the quality and nature of the defendant's activity is such that it is reasonable and fair to require him or her to conduct his or defense in that state (436 U.S. 84, 92) .

In Muckle v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 218, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 303 , Andrew Muckle was a resident of California from January 1998 through December 1998. While living in California and married to Cassandra Muckle, he purchased property in Georgia, which he took title to in his name alone. Since December 1998, Andrew was a resident of Georgia. In January 2001, Cassandra served dissolution papers on Andrew in Georgia by substituted service. Andrew made a special appearance to contest jurisdiction, moving to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. Among other things, Andrew argued he had insufficient minimum contacts with California for the trial court to establish personal jurisdiction over him. Although acknowledging that California has a manifest interest in providing effective means of redress for its residents, the court declined to find that such interest coupled with the mere fact of past residency, during which a party while married purchased out of state property, is sufficient contacts of such nature and quality to entertain even "special" personal jurisdiction over Andrew consistent with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (102 Cal. App. 4th 218, 225-231) .

In Yu v. Signet Bank/Virginia (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1385, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304 , plaintiffs filed an action individually and on behalf of others similarly situated against defendants challenging their debt collection practices with respect to credit cards they issued to California residents. Defendants had a program for dealing with out-of-state-debtors who defaulted on their credit cards and during the proposed class period had obtained many judgments in Virginia courts against California residents. Prior to the action, defendants had obtained a default judgment in Virginia against plaintiffs and garnished the salary of one of the plaintiffs (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1381-1384) . In reversing summary judgment in favor of the defendants on plaintiffs' abuse of process and unlawful business practice claims, and affirming the judgment as to the other causes of action (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1381, 1398) , the court of appeal addressed the issue of the jurisdiction of the Virginia state court concerning the default judgment. The court noted that a judgment of a court lacking personal jurisdiction is a violation of due process, and is null and void everywhere, including the state in which it is rendered (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1385) . After rejecting defendants' argument that any inquiry into the Virginia court's jurisdiction would be improper (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1385-1386) , the court concluded that the Virginia judgments against defendants' distant out-of-state cardholders were in excess of jurisdiction (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1388) . The court noted that as a matter of due process, personal jurisdiction over a defendant who is outside the forum requires that he or she have certain minimum contacts with it such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice. It must appear that the defendant purposefully directed his or her activities at residents of the forum such that he or she should reasonably anticipate being haled into court there. With respect to interstate contracts, parties who reach out beyond one state and create continuing relationships and obligations with citizens of another state are subject to the latter state's jurisdiction. However, a contract with an out-of-state party does not alone automatically confer jurisdiction on the other party's home forum. Fortuitous, or attenuated contacts with the forum are insufficient, and jurisdictional rules may not be employed in such a way as to make litigation so gravely difficult and inconvenient that a party unfairly is at severe disadvantage in comparison to his or her opponent. Jurisdiction may not be grounded on a contract whose application would render litigation so gravely difficult and inconvenient that a party will for all practical purposes be deprived of his or her day in court. Jurisdictional rules may not be employed against small consumers to cripple their defense. Insofar as appeared from the record, the plaintiffs were merely unsophisticated California consumers who, pursuant to a credit card solicitation, signed up for the card, used the card and made payments on the card. In so doing, they neither deliberately affiliated themselves with Virginia in any meaningful sense, nor would they have foreseen the need to go there to defend themselves in any dispute arising from the credit agreement. They had no relationship with Virginia other than their card and it was fundamentally unfair to expect them to travel thousand of miles to litigate matters concerning their account (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1386-1388) .

In Wolfe v. City of Alexandria (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 265 Cal. Rptr. 881 , the court of appeal affirmed orders quashing service of summons on the defendants, a city in a sister state and public and private community services organizations operating in that state and certain of their employees, none of whom resided, did business, or was present in California, in an action by an elderly sister, who was unable to adequately care for herself, and brother for injuries allegedly sustained as a result of defendants having caused the sister to be transported from Virginia to San Francisco and there "dumped" on her brother who was unable to care for her. The court quoted the statements from Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 898-899, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 , set out under § 132.77[3][c], but concluded that because plaintiffs had not passed the threshold test (sufficient activity by the defendants with respect to the forum state), it need not and would not consider the issues of convenience of forum (217 Cal. App. 3d 541, 545) .

In Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 , although the court of appeal denied a peremptory writ of mandate sought to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on foreign defendants, the court, quoting Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 147-148, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 , discussed under § 132.77[3][a], said that the general rule is that the forum state may not exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident unless his or her relationship with the state is such as to make the exercise of such jurisdiction reasonable (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 710) .

In E.I.C., Inc. v. Bank of Virginia (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 166 Cal. Rptr. 317 , the court of appeal, in affirming orders quashing service of summons on cross defendants, a Virginia bank and a resident of Virginia, in an action by a New York corporation against a California corporation to enforce a deficiency judgment obtained in Kentucky, the court of appeal said that the general rule is that a forum court may not assume personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant unless his or her relationship with the state is such as to make the exercise of jurisdiction reasonable in the context of our federal system (108 Cal. App. 3d 148, 152-153) .

In Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , the court of appeal, in affirming an order quashing the service of summons on nonresident defendants in an action arising out of allegedly fraudulent land transactions, the court of appeal said that, generally, a state may not exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident unless the relationship of the nonresident to the state is such as to make the exercise of jurisdiction reasonable (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 899-900) .

In Boaz v. Boyle & Co. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 700, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , grandchildren of mothers who had ingested a certain drug while pregnant sought to sue the manufacturers of the drug for injuries that the grandchildren received when they were born. The original drug ingestion occurred in New York, and actions were originally pursued in New York, but New York State declined to recognize the preconception tort relied on by plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then sought relief in California. One of the defendants, a New York corporation, raised the issue of jurisdiction by a motion to quash the return of service. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The defendant had never been licensed to do business in California, and has never had salespersons or offices in California. The defendant had conducted advertising on a national scale, but the court concluded that this did not justify the assertion of general jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (40 Cal. App. 4th 700, 717) . The court reasoned that a common factor in cases applying the doctrine of minimum contacts to support personal jurisdiction which was lacking in this case was that the nonresident defendant's acts must have caused the forum-related injury (40 Cal. App. 4th 700, 718) . Plaintiffs argued that modern litigation requires a relaxed approach to the limits of state jurisdiction, and that the key factors should be the concentration of expertise and experience in a handful of attorneys, an accumulated library of discovery and legal materials, and the availability of experts. However, the court held that even though improvements in transportation and communication have made it less burdensome for a party to defend itself in a state in which it engages in economic activity, the restrictions on the personal jurisdiction of state courts are important to the territorial limitations on the power of the states (40 Cal. App. 4th 700, 720) .

[b] Relevant Factors

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. The United States Supreme Court stated that, once it has been decided that a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum state, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice (471 U.S. 462, 476) . The Court said that, thus, courts in appropriate cases may evaluate the burden on the defendant, the forum state's interest in adjudicating the dispute, the plaintiff's interest in obtaining convenient and effective relief, the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies, and the shared interest of the several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies, and that these considerations sometimes serve to establish the reasonableness of jurisdiction on a lesser showing of minimum contacts than would otherwise be required (471 U.S. 462, 476-477) . The Court added that where a defendant who purposefully has directed his or her activities at forum residents seeks to defeat jurisdiction, he or she must present a compelling case that the presence of some other considerations would render jurisdiction unreasonable (471 U.S. 462, 477) .

In Fisher Governor Co. v. Superior Court (1959) 53 Cal. 2d 222, 1 Cal. Rptr. 1, 347 P.2d 1 , after holding that the activities of independent nonexclusive sales representatives of a foreign corporation in California were insufficient to give the California courts general jurisdiction over actions for wrongful death and personal injuries occurring in Idaho, the California Supreme Court said that it had to look beyond defendant's sales activities in this state to determine whether jurisdiction could constitutionally be assumed (53 Cal. 2d 222, 225) . The Court listed the following as factors to be considered: (1) the interest of the state in providing a forum for its residents or in regulating the business involved; (2) the relative availability of evidence and the burden of defense and prosecution in one place rather than another; (3) the ease of access to an alternative forum; (4) the avoidance of multiplicity of suits and conflicting adjudications; and (5) the extent to which the cause of action arose out of defendant's local activities (53 Cal. 2d 222, 225-226) . The Court concluded that none of these considerations supported the assumption of jurisdiction and granted the peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to quash service of summons (53 Cal. 2d 222, 226) .

The facts and procedural background of Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , are discussed in § 132.89[3][a]. In issuing a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new and different order granting the motion to quash service of summons, the court of appeal noted that if the nonresident defendant does not have substantial and systematic contacts in the forum sufficient to establish general jurisdiction, he or she may still be subject to the specific jurisdiction of the forum if the defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of forum benefits and the controversy is related to or arises out of a defendant's contacts with the forum. In analyzing the exercise of specific jurisdiction, once it has been decided that a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum state, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine if assertion of personal jurisdiction comports with fair play and substantial justice. Courts may evaluate the burden on the defendant of appearing in the forum, the forum state's interest in adjudicating the claim, the plaintiff's interest in convenient and effective relief within the forum, judicial economy, and the shared interest of the several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1054) .

In Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363 , in affirming an order quashing service of summons for lack of jurisdiction and dismissing the action by a Canadian insurance company against a Canadian bond company for breach of contract, the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and statutory duties on the ground the defendant did not possess sufficient minimum contacts with California for an assertion of jurisdiction, the court of appeal said that even if it were to conclude that the defendant did possess such minimum contacts, several other considerations would come into play (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 209) . Quoting Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 476-477, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (discussed above), the court said once it has been decided that a defendant purposefully established minimum contacts with the forum state, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine whether the assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice, and that, if it is established that a defendant purposefully has directed his or her activities at forum residents, the burden shifts to him or her to present a compelling case that the presence of some other considerations would render jurisdiction unreasonable (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 209) . The court said that the determination of the reasonableness of jurisdiction in each case depends on an evaluation of several factors, and, quoting Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 113, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 (discussed under § 132.77[3][d]), said that a court must consider the burden on the defendant, the interests of the forum state, and the plaintiff's interest in obtaining relief, and that it must also weigh in its determination the interstate judicial system's interest in obtaining the most efficient resolution of controversies and the shared interest of the several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 209) . Applying these factors, the court said that the burden imposed on the defendant were it required to defend a contractual claim in the California courts clearly would be substantial, that California has little interest in adjudicating a contractual dispute between two Canadian insurance companies, neither of which is a resident of California, where the underlying claims of the California residents already had been disposed of and would not be affected by the litigation, and that it was doubtful that our choice of law rules would dictate that California law be applied (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 209) .

[c] Balancing of Conveniences for Exercise of Limited Jurisdiction

County of Humboldt v. Harris (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 254 Cal. Rptr. 49 , was an action against a nonresident defendant to establish paternity and secure child support. The court of appeal said that the requirement of minimum contacts is met by the performing of an act in the state provided (1) the cause of action alleged arises from the act performed and (2) in light of the circumstances the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable (206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860) . The court said that, in determining reasonableness, a number of factors are to be considered: the nature and quality of the act, the extent of the relationship of the state to the defendant and the plaintiff, and the degree of inconvenience to the defendant if forced to defend in the state (206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860) .

[d] When Defendant Is Foreign National

Core-Vent Corp. v. Nobel Industries AB (9th Cir. 1993) 11 F.3d 1482 , involved an action brought by a California corporation against three Swedish doctors and a Swedish corporation for antitrust violations and libel based on articles published in international medical journals. The trial court granted defendants' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction and the California corporation appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that the burden to the Swedish doctors to defend themselves in this country was particularly great since they had no ongoing connection to or relationship with the United States. It also noted that the defendants' purposeful interjection into California by virtue of the published articles was attenuated and that only one individual defendant had visited the United States five times in four years. The court concluded that jurisdiction over the defendants would not comport with the notions of fair play and substantial justice (11 F.3d 1482, 1490) .

Doe v. Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cashel & Emly (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 209, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 158 , which involved allegations of child molestation by a priest, defendant was an archdiocese located in Ireland. Substantial evidence showed that defendant did no more than accept tuition money and related expenses from a California diocese for the priest's seminary training, much the same as any other school that is a passive recipient of a student's tuition from a nonprofit scholarship fund. There was also substantial evidence to support findings that the priest was not an agent or employee of defendant, that defendant did not know the priest had a propensity to molest children, and that it did not assign or send him to the California diocese. The priest's alleged acts of molestation were very much attenuated from defendant's extremely limited contacts with California. Accordingly, the California court did not have specific personal jurisdiction over defendant.

[The following should be combined with general memoranda concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

DEFENDANT'S ONLY CONTACTS WITH CALIFORNIA ARE TOO INCIDENTAL AND UNRELATED TO THE LITIGATION TO SUPPORT THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Defendant Corporation's Contacts Too Insubstantial. The exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant corporation when it has only marginal contact with the forum state that is unrelated to the litigation (see Szabo v. Medical Information Bureau (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 51, 53-57, 179 Cal. Rptr. 368).

This form is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of limited jurisdiction is improper when the defendant's contacts with California are too incidental or insubstantial.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77, 132.79 -132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

For memoranda that may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to the foregoing memorandum, see §§ 132.100, 132.104, 132.108 -132.115.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Corporation's Contacts Too Insubstantial

In Szabo v. Medical Information Bureau (1981) 127 Cal. App. 3d 51, 179 Cal. Rptr. 368 , the court of appeal affirmed an order quashing service of summons on a nonresident corporation for lack of personal jurisdiction. The corporation was composed of several hundred life insurance companies and had a principal office located in Boston. The court noted that the cause of action alleged did not arise from activities of the corporation within California and that the corporation had no offices, property, bank accounts, employees, or directors located in California. The only contact that the corporation had with California was that some of its member life insurance companies were located in the state and that a consultant spent 100 hours per year in the state. The court concluded that these were insufficient contacts to support jurisdiction (127 Cal. App. 3d 51, 53-57) .

THE FACT THAT THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT HAS DESIGNATED AN AGENT FOR SERVICE OF PROCESS UNDER SECTION 2105 OF THE CORPORATIONS CODE IS NOT, WITHOUT MORE, SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

A. Designation of Agent for Service of Process Insufficient by Itself. A nonresident defendant's designation of an agent for service of process under Section 2105 of the Corporations Code is not sufficient, by itself, to justify exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant (Gray Line Tours v. Reynolds Electrical & Engineering Co. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 190, 193-195, 238 Cal. Rptr. 419).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Designation of Agent for Service of Process Insufficient by Itself

In Gray Line Tours v. Reynolds Electrical & Engineering Co. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 190, 238 Cal. Rptr. 419 , plaintiff appealed from the trial court's order quashing service of summons on defendant, a Texas corporation, whose principal place of business was in Nevada.

The court of appeal affirmed the order. Noting that defendant's contacts with California were limited and that the facts giving rise to plaintiff's cause of action arose exclusively in Nevada and were completely unrelated to defendant's forum-related contacts, the court found that there was no justification for exercising even limited jurisdiction over defendant corporation (193 Cal. App. 3d 190, 193) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that defendant's designation of an agent for service of process under Corp. Code § 2105 was sufficient to permit an exercise of jurisdiction (193 Cal. App. 3d 190, 193-195) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

THE FACT THAT THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT HAS PROPERTY IN THIS STATE IS, BY ITSELF, INSUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION WHEN THE PROPERTY IS UNRELATED TO THE LITIGATION.

A. Assertion of Jurisdiction Based Solely on Presence of Property Unrelated to Action. The mere presence in the forum state of the property of a nonresident does not, in the absence of the existence of other ties among the nonresident defendant, the state, and the litigation, support the assertion of in personam jurisdiction over the nonresident in an action unrelated to the property (Shaffer v. Heitner (1977) 433 U.S. 186, 213, 97 S. Ct. 2569, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683).

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. [a] Assertion of Jurisdiction Based Solely on Presence of Property Unrelated to Action

The facts and procedural background of Shaffer v. Heitner (1977) 433 U.S. 186, 97 S. Ct. 2569, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][e]. In holding that the individual defendants did not have sufficient contacts with Delaware to support in personam jurisdiction, the Supreme Court pointed out that the Delaware courts based their assertion of jurisdiction solely on the statutory presence in Delaware of the individual defendants' property (stock, options, and warrants), but that that property was not the subject matter of the litigation, and the underlying action did not relate to that property. Hence the Court concluded that if jurisdiction existed at all it had to have some other foundation (433 U.S. 186, 213) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

DEFENDANT IS MERELY AN OUT-OF-STATE CUSTOMER OF PLAINTIFF, AND THIS FACT, WITHOUT MORE, IS INSUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Out-of-State Customers. A California business that seeks out customers in other states only through out-of-state agents or through interstate mail and telephone is not entitled to force such an out-of-state customer to come to California to defend a contract action when the customer is not "present" in California for general purposes (Interdyne Co. v. SYS Computer Corp. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 508, 511-512, 107 Cal. Rptr. 499).

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of limited jurisdiction is improper when it is based solely on the fact that the defendant is an out-of-state customer of the plaintiff.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77 -132.80, 132.82 -132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Out-of-State Customers

Interdyne Co. v. SYS Computer Corp. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 508, 107 Cal. Rptr. 499 , was an action by a California corporation against an out-of-state corporation based on a contract for the purchase by the out-of-state corporation of computer parts manufactured by the California corporation.

In affirming the trial court's order quashing service of summons on the out-of-state corporation, the appellate court said that a California business that seeks out purchasers in other states who are not "present" in California for general purposes, and deals with them only by out-of-state agents or by interstate mail and telephone, is not entitled to force the customer to come to California to defend an action on the contract, and that Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 (long-arm statute) is not long enough to reach buyers who have only such minimal contact with California (31 Cal. App. 3d 508, 511-512) [compare Interdyne Co. with Hall v. LaRonde (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1346-1347, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 , discussed in § 132.100[3][n]].

[a] Out-of-State Customers

Hunt v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 901, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 215 , involved an action for breach of an equipment financing lease agreement and guaranty. The only California connection to the transaction was that plaintiff, who had financed the transaction, had an office in California and processed and managed the financing lease at that office. The equipment was never delivered. Plaintiff's telephone call to the defendant lessee in Maryland to demand payment was that defendant's first contact with plaintiff. The defendant lessee told plaintiff that defendant would not pay for equipment never received. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate overturning the trial court's denial of defendants' motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. In so doing, the court noted that when an out-of-state resident's only contact with California is a single purchase from a California vendor of goods for delivery out of state, there are insufficient minimum contacts to establish personal jurisdiction even though the California vendor supplies financing to the buyer (81 Cal. App. 4th 901, 906) .

Spirits, Inc. v. Superior Court (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 918, 164 Cal. Rptr. 101 , arose out of an action for personal injury against an Arizona liquor store, which did no business in California, but which was located near the California border. Plaintiff had been injured in Arizona when a bottle sold by defendant exploded in her hand. The trial court denied defendant's motion to quash service of summons, and the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, ordering the trial court to vacate its order denying defendant's motion. The court held that where an injury occurs outside the state, then a nonresident defendant's activities within the state must have been substantial and closely linked to the injury in order for California courts to have personal jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant (104 Cal. App. 3d 918, 924-926) . Therefore, there was no jurisdiction over defendant in that its activity in California (taking advantage of trade with California residents) did not constitute sufficient California business activity to overcome the fact that the injury occurred outside the state (104 Cal. App. 3d 918, 924) .

In Cornell University Medical College v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 311, 113 Cal. Rptr. 291 , a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on a foreign educational corporation named as a cross defendant by an insurance carrier in an action to recover for damage in transit sustained by a piece of equipment purchased by the foreign corporation from a California manufacturer, where all negotiations for the purchase had been conducted by mail, the appellate court, in granting the writ, stated that it could find no authority for permitting a California court to take jurisdiction of a foreign corporation on the basis of the facts of the case (38 Cal. App. 3d 311, 316-318) .

Belmont Industries, Inc. v. Superior Court (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 281, 107 Cal. Rptr. 237 , was a proceeding in mandate seeking to compel the trial court to enter its order quashing service of summons on the defendant, a Pennsylvania corporation, for lack of jurisdiction in an action by a California drafting corporation to recover on a contract for services rendered. The defendant's only contact with California was the negotiation of the contract through interstate communications and the contract was executed by a purchase order in Pennsylvania. In granting the writ, the court of appeal said that although the contract sued on undoubtedly contemplated that the drafting firm would perform its obligations in California, that was not required by the contract, and that such performance would not give a California court jurisdiction of the Pennsylvania corporation, since it would be the Pennsylvania corporation's activity in California that must provide the basis, if any, for jurisdiction. The court found no purposeful activity by the Pennsylvania corporation in California from which it could be inferred that the Pennsylvania corporation intended to do business in California (31 Cal. App. 3d 281, 286-288) .

In Tiffany Records, Inc. v. M. B. Krupp Distributors, Inc. (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 610, 81 Cal. Rptr. 320 , the court of appeal affirmed an order granting a motion to quash service of summons on nonresident purchasers of phonograph records from a California manufacturer in an action to recover the price. The court stated that the purchasers' activities were out of the state and, at most, consisted of the out-of-state placement or receipt of telephone calls and the mailing of orders; moreover, although this activity was frequent in some cases, it was nevertheless outside the state and did not constitute the quality and nature of activity that would make it fair to require any of them to defend a lawsuit in California (276 Cal. App. 2d 610, 619) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

DEFENDANT _____[name] IS MERELY A STOCKHOLDER AND _____ [OFFICER or DIRECTOR] OF DEFENDANT FOREIGN CORPORATION, AND THIS FACT ALONE IS NOT SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER DEFENDANT _____ [name] IN AN ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT FOREIGN CORPORATION.

Officer or Director and Stockholder of Foreign Corporation. The mere fact that a nonresident is an officer or director and stockholder of an out-of-state corporation transacting interstate business with California residents does not make the nonresident subject to the in personam jurisdiction of a California court in an action against the corporation (see Lundgren v. Superior Court (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 477, 486-487, 168 Cal. Rptr. 717 ; Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 211-212, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of limited jurisdiction is improper when it is based solely on the fact that an individual defendant is an officer or director and stockholder of a foreign corporation against which the action is being prosecuted.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77 -132.81, 132.83 -132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.100, 132.107, 132.110, 132.114 and 132.115 may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Officer or Director and Stockholder of Foreign Corporation

In Lundgren v. Superior Court (1980) 111 Cal. App. 3d 477, 168 Cal. Rptr. 717 , an Oregon accounting corporation and its officer-shareholder were served with a California cross complaint. The California action arose from a stock transfer transaction. The plaintiff was a broker in the transaction and sued all the parties to it to recover fees for brokerage services. The defendants cross complained against several parties, including the Oregon accounting firm, and its sole shareholder, for furnishing false information to the cross complainants to induce them to complete the transaction. After being served by mail in Oregon, these cross defendants moved to quash service of summons. The trial court denied the motion, and they petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion.

In denying the writ with respect to the corporation on the ground that the corporation had sufficient contacts with California to be subject to its jurisdiction because of a different officer's activities in California which had been essential to the subject transaction (111 Cal. App. 3d 477, 484) and granting the writ with respect to the officer-shareholder because he had no contact with California, other than as an officer and shareholder of the corporation, did not personally participate in the subject transaction in any way, and Oregon law would not have imputed to him any legal responsibility for the conduct of another corporate officer in these circumstances, the court of appeal held that in these circumstances there was no basis on which California court could assert jurisdiction over him (111 Cal. App. 3d 477, 486-487) .

Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on nonresidents who were directors and owners, in varying specified proportions of all the issued and outstanding stock of the named defendant, an out-of-state corporation that was doing business in interstate commerce with California residents. In issuing the writ, the court of appeal said that, although jurisdiction over the corporation will support jurisdiction over the stockholders when a corporation is the alter ego of the stockholders so as to justify disregard of the corporate entity, (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 210) , the plaintiff had failed to allege facts sufficient to justify application of the alter ego doctrine and had failed to prove facts requisite to an effective service on the individuals (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 211-212) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Officer or Director and Stockholder of Foreign Corporation

In Arnesen v. Raymond Lee Organization, Inc. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 991, 107 Cal. Rptr. 744 , in affirming the order quashing service of summons on three nonresident individual defendants who were officers of the defendant foreign corporation and were served outside California, the court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contentions that jurisdiction by the California court existed because (1) the separate identity of the corporation should be disregarded thereby rendering the individual defendants subject to personal jurisdiction in California (no factual basis for this contention was established) and (2) jurisdiction should be taken to prevent a failure of justice if the individual defendants were not required to appear (a contention contrary to the basic principle that jurisdiction is a constitutional concept dependent on a rule of law rather some vague concept of equity) (31 Cal. App. 3d 991, 998) .

THE FACT THAT DEFENDANT ENGAGED INDEPENDENT CONTRACTORS TO ADVERTISE IN CALIFORNIA IS NOT, BY ITSELF, SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Advertising in California. Sales and sales promotion by nonexclusive agents or independent contractors in the forum state do not constitute "doing business" so as to extend jurisdiction to a foreign corporation which retained the services of nonexclusive agents or independent contractors for these purposes in the forum state; hence, merely advertising in the forum state, together with maintaining an "800" telephone number there, confers no general in personam jurisdiction on the forum state to try the culpability of the advertiser's allegedly tortious conduct occurring elsewhere (Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 567, 174 Cal. Rptr. 885 , disapproved to the extent it is inconsistent with the opinion in Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 440, 461, 464, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Advertising in California

The procedural background of Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 174 Cal. Rptr. 885 , are discussed in § 132.73[4][a]. In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to quash service of summons on the foreign corporation, the court of appeal said that in California sales and sales promotion by nonexclusive agents or independent contractors in the forum state have not been characterized as "doing business" so as to extend jurisdiction to a foreign corporation which retained the services of the nonexclusive agents or independent contractors for these purposes in the forum state, and that it logically follows, therefore, that merely advertising in the forum state, together with maintaining an "800" telephone number there, confers no general in personam jurisdiction on the forum state to try the culpability of the advertiser's allegedly tortious conduct occurring elsewhere (120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 567) . In summary, the court said that sales and travel promotion activities within California, either through agents or by advertising, including use of an "800" telephone number, do not, without more, operate to confer in personam jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant instituting such activities, where the plaintiff seeks to recover from such defendant for a grievance occurring in the course of recreational activities wholly outside the forum state, even though the plaintiff's sojourn outside the forum state was in response to such promotional activities (120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 572) . In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 461, 464, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 the California Supreme Court rejected the "proximate cause" test used by Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. as being inconsistent with the rationale underlying specific jurisdiction in the context of ongoing franchise relationships and disapproved the reasoning Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. to the extent it is inconsistent with the Vons Companies, Inc. opinion. For discussion of Vons Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

[4] Additional Authorities

In Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 , the California Supreme Court held that the assertion of specific jurisdiction was fair where a hotel advertised heavily in California, obtained a significant percentage of its business from California residents, and maintained an Internet Web site and toll-free phone number where visitors or callers could obtain room quotes and make reservations. The hotel purposefully availed itself of the privilege of doing business in California. The guest's causes of action were premised on alleged omissions during the hotel's consummation of transactions with California residents and in its California advertisements. Because the harm alleged by the guest related directly to the content of the hotel's promotional activities in California, an inherent relationship between the guest's claims and the hotel's contacts with California existed. By purposefully and successfully soliciting the business of California residents, the hotels could reasonably anticipate being subject to litigation in California in the event their solicitations caused an injury to a California resident (35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1065) .

THE FACT THAT DEFENDANT FOREIGN CORPORATION IS THE OWNER OF A CALIFORNIA CORPORATION IS NOT, BY ITSELF, SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Foreign Corporation Is Parent of California Subsidiary. Mere ownership by a foreign corporation of a California incorporated subsidiary does not warrant the exercise of jurisdiction over the foreign corporation (J. M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co., Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreign Corporation Is Parent of California Subsidiary

The facts and procedural background of J. M. Sahlein Music Co. v. Nippon Gakki Co., Ltd. (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 243 Cal. Rptr. 4 , are discussed in § 132.73[4][a]. In affirming the order quashing service of summons on the defendant Japanese Corporation, the court of appeal said that ownership of a California incorporated subsidiary does not warrant the exercise of jurisdiction over the foreign corporation unless the foreign parent manipulates the subsidiary to the detriment of creditors or the subsidiary is the alter ego of the parent (197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543) . The court pointed out that no such showing was attempted and plaintiff appeared to concede that the parent-subsidiary relationship was not sufficient to subject the Japanese parent corporation to the jurisdiction of the California court (197 Cal. App. 3d 539, 543) .

[4] Additional Authorities

In Aquila, Inc. v. Superior Court (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 556, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803 , a group of independent plaintiffs sued a publicly regulated utility, alleging the utility participated in manipulating the price of natural gas in California by falsely reporting natural gas trades to price indices and engaging in wash trades. The utility, which was headquartered in Missouri, moved to quash service of summons, challenging the trial court's exercise of jurisdiction over it for lack of sufficient ties to California. The utility asserted that all the alleged minimum contacts claimed by plaintiffs were actually carried out by its independent subsidiary companies. The trial court denied the motion, finding a sufficient basis for specific jurisdiction under the theory the utility had purposefully availed itself of opportunities in California. The Court of Appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate requiring the trial court to vacate its order denying the utility's motion to quash service of summons and to enter a new order granting the motion. The court concluded that the exercise of specific jurisdiction over the utility was improper because plaintiffs did not bear their burden of demonstrating the existence of sufficient minimum contacts between the utility and the state. A weather derivative contract that obligated the utility and its subsidiary to pay money to a utilities district if rainfall levels were low and impeded hydroelectrical generators from operating properly did not adequately show that the utility purposefully availed itself of the benefits of forum contacts with the state so as to justify specific jurisdiction over the utility. The utility's purchase of an insurance policy for itself and its subsidiaries for several real properties, one of which was in California, did not demonstrate its own purposeful availment of forum benefits. The court also concluded that the record did not support the application of the representative services doctrine. The utility's purchase of the property insurance policy did not establish the pervasive control required for the representative services doctrine to apply. A guarantee the utility provided for its subsidiary's financial obligations under the weather derivative contract did not destroy the separateness of the parent and subsidiary so as to justify application of the representative services doctrine. Therefore, the utility's motion to quash service of summons should have been granted.

In DVI, Inc. v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , citing with approval Sonora Diamond Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 523, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 824 , the court held that a parent company's ownership or control of a subsidiary corporation does not, without more, subject the parent corporation to the jurisdiction of the state where the subsidiary does business. A parent holding company may be subject to general jurisdiction only under limited circumstances. Those circumstances permitting the exercise of general jurisdiction include an alter ego relationship or the parent's exercise of such a degree of control of the subsidiary as to reflect the parent's purposeful disregard of the subsidiary's independent corporate existence (104 Cal. App. 4th 1080, 1087) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contracting With Out-of-State Party

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court said that an plaintiff's contract with an out-of-state party cannot alone automatically establish sufficient minimum contacts in the plaintiff's home forum for the purpose of assertion of in personam jurisdiction, that the Court had long ago rejected the notion that personal jurisdiction might turn on mechanical tests, and that, in determining whether the defendant has purposely established minimum contacts with the forum, prior negotiations and contemplated future consequences, along with the terms of the contract and the parties' actual course of dealing, must be evaluated (471 U.S. 462, 478-479) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contracting With Out-of-State Party

See Hunt v. Superior Court (2000) 81 Cal. App. 4th 901, 97 Cal. Rptr. 2d 215 , discussed in § 132.81[4][a].

The facts and procedural background of Goehring v. Superior Court (1998) 62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 105 , are discussed in § 132.76[4][b]. In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying petitioners' motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction, the court noted that a contract with an out-of-state party does not automatically establish purposeful availment in the other party's home forum. Rather, the court must evaluate the contract terms and surrounding circumstances to determine whether the defendant purposefully established minimum contacts within the forum. Purposeful availment requires that the defendant have performed some type of affirmative conduct that allows or promotes the transaction of business within the forum state (62 Cal. App. 4th 894, 907) .

A. Mere Placement of Product in Stream of Commerce. The mere placement of a product in the stream of commerce is insufficient of itself to support jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of limited jurisdiction is improper when it is based solely on the fact that defendant placed the alleged defective product in the stream of commerce.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77 -132.85, 132.87, 132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.100, 132.108, 132.110, 132.113 may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Placing Product Into Stream of Commerce

The facts and procedural background of Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , are discussed in § 132.77[3][d]. In reversing the California Supreme Court, which had upheld the jurisdiction of the California Superior court over a Japanese company, the United States Supreme Court said that the placement of a product into the stream of commerce, without more, is not an act of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum state. Additional conduct of the defendant may indicate an intent or purpose to serve the market in the forum state, for example, designing the product for the market in the forum state, advertising in the forum state, establishing channels for providing regular advice to customers in the forum state, or marketing the product through a distributor who has agreed to serve as the sales agent in the forum state. But a defendant's awareness that the stream of commerce may or will sweep the product into the foreign state does not convert the mere act of placing the product into the stream into an act purposefully directed toward the forum state (480 U.S. 102, 112) . The Court said that assuming, arguendo, that the Japanese company's awareness that some of the valves sold to the Taiwanese company would be incorporated into tire tubes sold in California had been established, this did not demonstrate any action by the Japanese company to purposefully avail itself of the California market; it does not do business in California, it has no office, agents, employees, or property in California, it does not advertise or otherwise solicit business in California, it did not create, control, or employ the distribution system that brought its valves into California, and there was no evidence that it designed its product in anticipation of sales in California (480 U.S. 102, 112-113) . The Court held that, on the basis of these facts, the exertion of personal jurisdiction over the Japanese company by the superior court of California exceeded the limits of due process (480 U.S. 102, 113) .

In Carretti v. Italpast (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126 , a pasta machine distributor with an office in California argued that the manufacturer, which sold products to him in Italy, had the requisite minimum contacts to support jurisdiction in California. In rejecting this argument, the court noted that the manufacturer did not promote the sale of its goods in California at all; it simply sold goods to a buyer who showed up on its doorstep in Italy, willing to pay the price. The minimal resales of the product in California by the distributor, standing alone, do not amount to the substantial continuous and systematic contacts with the forum state necessary for the exercise of general jurisdiction over a foreign corporation doing business in its home country. Further, the court held that random sales in Italy to a distributor who happens to have an office in California but may resell its products anywhere are not tantamount to an effort to serve the market in this state (101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 1245-1246) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

THE ACTIVITIES OF AN INDEPENDENT NONEXCLUSIVE SALES REPRESENTATIVE ENGAGED BY DEFENDANT ARE NOT ALONE SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Activities of Independent Nonexclusive Sales Representatives. The use by a foreign corporation of independent nonexclusive sales representatives does not by itself constitute a sufficient contact with the forum to justify the assertion of personal jurisdiction in a cause of action unrelated to these activities (see Fisher Governor Co. v. Superior Court (1959) 53 Cal. 2d 222, 225, 1 Cal. Rptr. 1, 347 P.2d 1).

[a] Use of Form

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of limited jurisdiction is improper when it is based solely on the activities of independent nonexclusive sales representatives engaged by the defendant.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77 -132.86, 132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.100, 132.110, and 132.111 may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Activities of Independent Nonexclusive Sales Representatives

In Fisher Governor Co. v. Superior Court (1959) 53 Cal. 2d 222, 1 Cal. Rptr. 1, 347 P.2d 1 , petitioner, an Iowa corporation, sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to quash service of summons following the corporation's special appearance in three actions for damages for wrongful death and personal injuries occurring in Idaho when a gas meter and pressure reducing station exploded, allegedly owing to defective equipment manufactured by petitioner. Petitioner had no officers, plants, employees, or property in California. Its only contacts with California consisted of independent nonexclusive agents who received commissions on sales of petitioner's products.

In holding that the petitioner was not doing business in the state within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 411(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10], and granting the writ, the Supreme Court stated that, although a foreign corporation may have sufficient contacts with a state to justify an assumption of jurisdiction over it to enforce causes of action having no relation to its activities in that state, more contacts are required for the assumption of such extensive jurisdiction than sales and sales promotion within the state by independent nonexclusive sales representatives. To hold otherwise would subject any corporation that promotes the sales of its goods on a nationwide basis to suit anywhere in the United States without regard to other considerations bearing on the fair and orderly administration of the laws which it was the purpose of the due process clause to insure (53 Cal. 2d 222, 225) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76)].

DEFENDANT'S ALLEGED CONDUCT OCCURRED OUTSIDE THIS FORUM AND THE ALLEGED EFFECT CAUSED IN THIS FORUM IS INSUFFICIENT BY ITSELF TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Defendant Did Not Intend to Cause Effect in California and Effect in California Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable. When the defendant's act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and when the defendant had no reason to suppose that his or her acts outside the state would result in effects within the state, the state will not generally have jurisdiction over the defendant unless both the plaintiff and the defendant have an extensive relationship to the state (*Titus v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Did Not Intend to Cause Effect in California and Effect in California Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In granting the petition for writ of mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulling the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal said that in the situation when the act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and when the defendant had no reason to suppose that his or her acts outside the state would result in effects within the state, the state will not generally have jurisdiction over the defendant unless both the plaintiff and the defendant have an extensive relationship to the state (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 802) .

[b] Assertion of Jurisdiction Based on Defendant's Out-of-State Act Would Be Unreasonable

In Farris v. Capt. J. B. Fronapfel Co. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 982, 227 Cal. Rptr. 619 , plaintiff, a California resident, purchased a yacht in Florida. One of the brokers in the sale arranged for the defendant, a Florida resident, to survey the vessel and issue a written report stating its value and condition. The report stated that the vessel was in good condition and worth approximately $250,000, and plaintiff, relying on the report, purchased the boat. Although the broker paid defendant for the report, defendant knew that the report was for the benefit of the plaintiff and that the vessel would be taken to California. After plaintiff purchased the yacht and it was transported to California, he learned that the survey was false and that the vessel had major structural damage. Plaintiff then brought an action for deceit against the defendant, among others, in California. The trial court granted defendant's motion to quash service of summons on the ground the court lacked personal jurisdiction, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal initially noted that while an act that intentionally causes an effect in California may be grounds for personal jurisdiction, merely causing an effect in California is not in and of itself sufficient if the nature and effect of defendant's relationship to California makes the exercise of jurisdiction unreasonable (182 Cal. App. 3d 982, 989) . The court then held that the fact that plaintiff foreseeably lost money on a transaction as a result of defendant's tortious act was not sufficient to confer personal jurisdiction on the theory that the defendant's act produced an effect in California (182 Cal. App. 3d 982, 990) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Did Not Intend to Cause Effect in California and Effect in California Was Not Reasonably Foreseeable

Edmunds v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 221, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 281 , was an action by a California limited partnership against a Hawaii attorney not admitted to practice law in California for professional negligence arising out of legal representation defendant provided to the partnership in Hawaii litigation. The trial court denied defendant's motion to quash service of summons and complaint on the ground of lack of personal jurisdiction. Defendant then petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ of mandate, directing the trial court to vacate its order and to grant defendant's motion. The court noted that defendant's representation of the partnership was confined to the litigation in the Hawaii action which extended after settlement only as to limited assistance in the sale of real property in Hawaii. The defendant did not author or cause to be sent documents constituting the alleged breach of fiduciary duty and defendant's comments on them were de minimis in the context of the entire transaction. The court concluded that there was no substantial evidence of defendant's tortious conduct in California or any nexus between the causes of action alleged and defendant's activities causing effect in California (24 Cal. App. 4th 221, 232-236) .

[b] Assertion of Jurisdiction Based on Defendant's Out-of-State Act Would Be Unreasonable

See Prince v. Urban (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 181 , discussed under § 132.70[4][c].

In Beckman v. Thompson (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 481, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 60 , plaintiff sued a Tennessee resident for breach of a contract to be performed in Tennessee and a Delaware corporation for inducing its codefendant to repudiate the contract. The trial court granted the corporation's motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction (4 Cal. App. 4th 481, 484) . The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the only effect in California of the corporation's alleged inducement of breach of contract is that a California resident was deprived of the benefit of a contract to be performed in Tennessee. The nature of the effects and the corporation's otherwise minimal or nonexistent contacts with California make the exercise of jurisdiction unreasonable (4 Cal. App. 4th 481, 486) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

DEFENDANT'S CREATING ON THE INTERNET A PASSIVE WEB SITE IN THE STATE OF _____ [specify location outside of California, e.g., New York], WITHOUT MORE, IS INSUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF SPECIFIC JURISDICTION.

Creating Passive Website, by Itself, Insufficient to Confer Specific Jurisdiction. Under the rules for ascertaining the existence of specific jurisdiction, the defendant's conduct of contracting, via an out of state computer, with Internet service providers who happen to be located in California, so as to permit them to operate a passive Web site from their residence out of state, without more, is an insufficient basis for the exercise of specific jurisdiction. Such conduct of contracting, via computer, with Internet service providers, which may be California corporations, or which may maintain officers or databases in California, is insufficient to constitute "purposeful availment" and does not satisfy the first prong of the three-prong test for specific jurisdiction (Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1057-1062, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611).

The form in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of specific jurisdiction is improper when it is based solely on a defendant having contracted via an out of state computer with an internet provider so as to permit them to operate a passive Web site from their residence out of state. This form uses the term "specific jurisdiction" because that is the term used in the cited case. Cases have frequently also used the term "limited jurisdiction" to refer to this type of jurisdiction. For further discussion, see generally California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 323, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances .

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited (i.e., specific) jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited (i.e., specific) jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77 -132.87].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.100 and 132.108 may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Creating Passive Website, by Itself, Insufficient to Confer Specific Jurisdiction

In Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , plaintiff in October, 1997, brought an action for defamation and related causes of action against the Jewish Defense Organization, Inc. (hereafter JDO) and its individual founder based on defendants having posted a World Wide Web page containing some alleged defamatory statements. The individual defendant had lived in California from 1982 to 1984 while attending college. In the early 1980's he was associated with the Los Angeles chapter of the Jewish Defense League, but after having been kicked out, or having voluntarily left the organization in 1981, he formed his own group known as the JDO. After he left Los Angeles in 1984, there was no longer any presence of the JDO in Los Angeles. When the defendants left California, JDO no longer maintained any California telephone number or post office box. There is currently no California chapter of the JDO. The individual defendant has been a resident of New York City since about 1985 and earns his living as an accountant. He conducted no commercial activities in California and owns no property in California. Between 1984 and 1989 he would come to California from time to time to make public speeches. He incorporated the JDO in New York in 1989. The JDO maintains a World Wide Web site for the dissemination of information to anyone in the world where the Internet is available. The Web site is passive in that the JDO does not seek to attract readers or others to the site and does not capture or receive any information from those who hit the Web site. The Web site merely provides information for those who seek access to it. Prior to this suit, plaintiff had filed in California a similar defamation suit against other defendants arising out of an allegedly defamatory Web page. During the discovery stage of that lawsuit, after the instant lawsuit was filed, the individual defendant sent some documents by mail to an individual in California that were passed on to one of the defendants for use in the defense of that lawsuit. Also, after the instant suit was filed, defamatory information about plaintiff similar to that on the JDO Web sites allegedly appeared on several mirror Web pages served by providers located in California. The mirror Web sites, however, are maintained by someone who the individual defendant asserted was not an employee, officer or agent of the JDO and was not authorized to speak on JDO's behalf. Defendants moved to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction over them, or in the alternative, to stay or dismiss the action on the grounds of forum non conveniens. The trial court denied the motions and the defendants filed a timely petition for writ of mandate (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1049-1053) .

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order and to enter a new and different order granting the motion to quash service of summons (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1049-1053) . In reaching this conclusion, the court discussed the rules that apply concerning a state court's assertion of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant. With regard to general jurisdiction, the court noted that a nonresident may be subject to the general jurisdiction of the forum if his or her contacts in the forum state are substantial, continuous and systematic and that in such a case the specific cause of action alleged need not be connected with the defendant's business relationship to the forum (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1054) . The defendants only contacts with California after 1989 consisted of (1) the use of the mail to mail some documents to an individual in California in connection with another libel lawsuit by the plaintiff against different defendants, and (2) contracting with one or more Internet service providers who happen to be located in California, so as to permit them to operate a passive Web site from their residence in New York. The plaintiff did not contend that this conduct alone is sufficient to provide a basis for the assertion of general jurisdiction over the defendants in California and the court concluded that such conduct was an insufficient basis for the assertion of general jurisdiction (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1057) .

With regard to specific jurisdiction, the court noted that specific jurisdiction is determined under a three-part test: (1) the nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction with the forum or perform some act by which he or she purposefully avails himself or herself of privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the claim must be one that arises out of or results from the defendant's forum related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1054) . In tort cases, the "purposeful availment" requirement can be satisfied by the "effects test" set out in Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 . The court first addressed the issue of specific jurisdiction in the context of the case law that has developed in defamation cases. Under Calder, personal jurisdiction can be based on (1) intentional actions, (2) expressly aimed at the forum state (3) causing harm, the brunt of which is suffered, and which defendant knows is likely to be suffered, in the forum state (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1057) . The court concluded there was insufficient evidence showing defendants' minimum contacts with California under the analysis set out in cases dealing with defamation by nonresidents. Plaintiff failed to provide sufficient evidence to establish that it was foreseeable that a risk of injury by defamation would arise in California. Plaintiff did not even establish that his residence or principal place of business was in California, so that the "purposeful availment" prong of the special jurisdiction issue was not satisfied on that ground (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1057, 1057 n.3). In reaching its conclusion, the court distinguished Panavision Intern, L.P. v. Toeppen (9th Cir. 1998) 141 F.3d 1316, 1322 , which involved registering plaintiff's trademarks as defendant's domain names and posting a WEB site on the Internet for the purpose of extorting money, in which the "purposeful availment" requirement for specific jurisdiction was satisfied under the "effects test" (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1057) .

The court next analyzed specific jurisdiction in the context of cases dealing with use of the internet. Quoting from Zippo Mfg. Co. v. Zippo Dot Com (W.D. Pa. 1997) 952 F. Supp. 1119, 1123-1124) , the court noted three level of internet use for the purpose of determining jurisdiction. Exercising personal jurisdiction is proper when a defendant has entered into contracts with nonresidents that involves knowing and repeated transmission of computer files on the Internet, but is improper when a passive Web site is involved that does little more than makes information available to those interested in it. When an interactive Web site is involved that permits exchange of information between user and host computer, the exercise of jurisdiction is determined by examining the level of interactivity and commercial use of the exchange of information that occurs on the Web site (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1060) . In the instant case defendants' conduct in registering plaintiff's name as a domain name and posting passive Web sites on the Internet is not sufficient to subject defendants to jurisdiction in California. Creating a site, like placing a product into the stream of commerce, may be felt nationwide, or even worldwide, but, without more, it is not an act purposefully directed toward the forum state (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1060) . The court, quoting from Pres-Kap v. System One, Direct Access (Fla. Dist. Ct. App. 1994) 636 So. 2d 1351, 1353 , noted that in every state across the nation customers of on-line information networks have contractual relationships with out-of-state supplier companies. To permit users of such on-line services to be haled into court in a state in which the suppliers billing office and database happens to be located, even if such users are solicited, engaged, and serviced entirely instate by the supplier's local representatives would be wildly beyond the reasonable expectations of such computer-information users and accordingly that result would offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1061) . In the instant case defendants were consumers of Internet service providers who happen to maintain offices and databases in California. Such providers were engaged by the JDO from its computer in New York. As in Pres-Kap, the court concluded that defendants' conduct of contracting, via computer, with Internet service providers, which may be California corporations or which may maintain offices or databases in California, was insufficient to constitute "purposeful availment" and did not satisfy the first prong of the three-part test for specific jurisdiction (72 Cal. App. 4th 1045, 1061-1062) .

In Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the California Supreme Court considered for the first time the scope of personal jurisdiction based solely on Internet use, and concluded that a California court improperly exercised personal jurisdiction over a defendant based on a posting on an Internet website. This case involved a defendant whose sole contact with California was the posting of source code on his Internet website, accessible to any person with Internet access; the source code allowed users to decrypt data contained on DVDs and enable the placement of the decrypted data onto computer hard drives or other storage media. The defendant owned no property, had no telephone listing, and conducted no business in California. The website merely posted information and had no interactive features. Because of the defendant's apparent lack of minimum contacts with California, the court reduced the matter to the consideration of one question: whether the defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm certain industries centered in California (the motion picture, computer, and consumer electronics industries) is sufficient to establish express aiming at California. Although the record lacked any indication that the defendant knew that California residents would be detrimentally affected by his actions, plaintiffs suggested that jurisdiction exists solely because the defendant's tortious conduct had a foreseeable effect in California. The court rejected this argument, finding that mere foreseeability is not enough for jurisdiction: "Because finding jurisdiction in this case would effectively subject all intentional tortfeasors whose conduct may harm industries in California to jurisdiction in California, we decline to do so" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) . The court further held that Nam Tai Electronics, Inc. v. Titzer (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 769 , discussed below, is disapproved to the extent it is contrary to the holding in Pavlovich (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) .

In Shisler v. Sanfer Sports Cars, Inc. (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1254, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 335 , the trial court granted a seller's motion to quash service of summons in a dispute concerning the purchase of a used car. The seller was located in Florida and maintained a web site in Florida. The buyer, a California resident, wrote to and telephoned the seller to inquire about a vehicle advertised on the web site. The buyer purchased the vehicle but was dissatisfied with its condition when it arrived in California and, after efforts to negotiate failed, brought suit against the seller. The seller moved to quash service of the summons on the grounds that the seller lacked minimum contacts with California. The seller presented evidence that it had never owned or leased property in California, had never directly advertised in the state, had never intentionally targeted any California resident as a prospective customer, and had sold only 10 vehicles to California residents out of a total of more than 40,000 vehicles sold. The Court of Appeal affirmed, concluding that there was no evidence of continuous and systematic contact with California and that the seller's maintenance of the web site alone was insufficient to establish personal jurisdiction. Purposeful availment was not shown because the web site did not target California residents and because there was no ongoing business relationship between the parties.

In Nam Tai Electronics, Inc. v. Titzer (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 769 , the court considered whether specific jurisdiction should be extended over a non-resident defendant who posted allegedly defamatory messages on Yahoo!, a California-based Internet message board. In order to avail himself of the opportunity to post on a Yahoo! message board, the defendant was required to register a nickname or alias known as a Yahoo! ID, and agree to Yahoo!'s terms of service; among other things, those terms include a promise not to post any content that is unlawful, defamatory, libelous, or otherwise objectionable, and that the relationship between the person registering and Yahoo! shall be governed by the laws of the State of California, and that both agree to submit to the personal and exclusive jurisdiction of the California courts. The plaintiff in this matter was not Yahoo!, however, it was the party about whom the allegedly defamatory messages were about.

Plaintiff initially contended that defendant made himself subject to jurisdiction in California by posting several messages on Yahoo!'s California-maintained web site. In rejecting this argument, the court stated that the issue is not whether the company that makes the web sites available is incorporated or based in California. Instead, the determinative question is whether the web sites themselves are of particular significance to California or Californians such that the user has reason to know the posting of a message will have a significant impact in this state (93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 1312) .

Plaintiff further argued that the defendant's voluntary agreement to Yahoo!'s terms of service subject him to jurisdiction in this state. In rejecting this argument, the court pointed out that the language on which plaintiff seeks to rely appears on its face to govern litigation between registered users and Yahoo!--not registered users and third parties. Thus, that agreement, by itself, cannot justify subjecting defendant to California jurisdiction for purposes of the instant lawsuit (93 Cal. App. 4th 1301, 1313) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the exercise of limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant (see § 132.76).]

DEFENDANT'S PROVIDING OF FOLLOW-UP CARE TO PLAINTIFF BY _____ [e.g., MAIL AND TELEPHONE] AFTER PLAINTIFF SOUGHT OUT MEDICAL TREATMENT FROM DEFENDANT IN _____ [specify location outside California, e.g., ILLINOIS], IS INSUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THIS COURT'S EXERCISE OF LIMITED PERSONAL JURISDICTION.

Provision of Follow-up Care by Out-of-State Health Care Provider. An out-of-state physician's follow-up care of a patient by telephone, even when the home state patient pays for it, is not a sufficient basis for personal jurisdiction (Prince v. Urban (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 181). Three factors that indicate no jurisdiction include the following (Prince v. Urban (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1063-1064, 49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1064, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 181):

1. The doctor-patient relationship was not the result of any systematic or continuing effort to provide services to be "felt" in California.

2. The services rendered were not grounded in any relationship with California.

3. The interest of California as a state in insuring the availability of medical care for its citizens dominates over its interest in protecting its citizens from injury by out-of-state doctors, to ensure that Californians will be able to secure adequate medical services wherever they may go.

These elements weigh against jurisdiction in this case. As to the first element, _____ [tie in facts showing that health care provider did not market itself in California or otherwise seek out California patients].

As to the second element, _____ [tie in facts showing that health care provider's relationship with the California plaintiff was initiated by plaintiff who went to the health care provider's out-of-state locale for treatment].

As to the third element, _____ [describe circumstances under which California plaintiff sought out defendant's services and nature of the follow-up care that was provided].

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in support of a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant, because the defendant is a nonresident individual or legal entity who lacks the minimal contacts with California that are necessary under constitutional due process limitations to support the court's exercise of such jurisdiction. The point of law stated is that the court's exercise of limited jurisdiction is improper when it is based solely on a health care provider having provided follow-up care to a California resident after having treated the California resident outside of California. Use of the form would not be appropriate if the health care provider marketed its services to California residents or engaged in a basically mail-order relationship [see Prince v. Urban (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1060-1064, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 181] .

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the proper exercise of limited jurisdiction [see § 132.76], and, when appropriate, with points and authorities relating to the exercise of limited jurisdiction in other specific fact situations [see §§ 132.77 -132.88].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.100 and 132.108 may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Provision of Follow-up Care by Out-of-State Health Care Provider

In Prince v. Urban (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 181 , a California doctor referred plaintiff, a California migraine sufferer, to an Illinois headache specialist. The plaintiff went to Illinois for treatment and was seen by the headache specialist and an associate. Plaintiff returned to California after the headaches subsided with a 30-day supply of various prescription medications. After the plaintiff's return to California the plaintiff had numerous telephone conferences with the Illinois headache specialist for which the plaintiff was billed. When the plaintiff's medication ran out, the Illinois doctors arranged to have additional medication mailed to the plaintiff and on other occasions called prescriptions directly to California pharmacies near the plaintiff's home. Because of the medication prescribed by the Illinois doctors, the plaintiff became confused and disoriented resulting in plaintiff becoming dysfunctional. After hospitalization at a California detoxification facility, plaintiff filed a medical malpractice action. The trial court quashed service of the summons based on lack of personal jurisdiction over the Illinois physicians.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that in the typical scenario when a patient travels out of state to a doctor and there receives allegedly negligent treatment, courts consistently hold the patient's home state cannot exercise personal jurisdiction over the physician even though the effects of the doctor's negligence are felt in the patient's home state (49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1058) . The more difficult cases are those where some aspect of the relationship crosses state lines. Just because there must be communications across state lines between doctor and patient, however, does not mean the prerequisite minimum contacts necessary for personal jurisdiction are present. The court held that follow-up consultation ancillary to examination and treatment made by the out-of-state doctor, telephone calls about the patient's status, or arrangements for a patient to continue with medication that the doctor prescribed do not meet the minimum contacts necessary to satisfy due process (49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1061) . Thus, an out-of-state physician's follow-up care of patient by telephone, even when the home state patient pays for it, is not a sufficient basis for personal jurisdiction (49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1067) . The court looked to three factors listed in the form, above, in determining the reasonableness of exercising personal jurisdiction. One factor the court especially pointed to was that the interest of California in insuring the availability of medical care for its citizens dominates over the state's interest in protecting its citizens from injury by out-of-state doctors. The court found this factor particularly important where California citizens must travel out of state to find specialized medical treatment (49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1064, 1066-1067) . The court, however, distinguished cases in which minimum contacts were found sufficient for the exercise of personal jurisdiction because an interstate marketing scheme was involved, or the doctor's services were fundamentally interstate in nature from the inception of relationship (49 Cal. App. 4th 1056, 1060-1061) .

THE MOTION TO QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE COURT HAS A SUFFICIENT BASIS TO EXERCISE PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT IN THAT _____ [specify basis of jurisdiction].

A. Scope of Court's Personal Jurisdiction. A court of this state may exercise jurisdiction on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10; see Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 111, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 ; Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 302, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548).

B. Minimum Contacts Requirement. A court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant consistently with the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment so long as the defendant has certain minimum contacts with the forum state such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95).

C. "Contacts" Means "Basis of Jurisdiction." The term "contacts" in International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 is synonymous with the term "basis of jurisdiction" (In re Marriage of Smith (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 543, 553, 185 Cal. Rptr. 411).

[EITHER]

D. Bases of Jurisdiction Over Individual Defendant. The following are recognized bases for exercising personal jurisdiction over an individual defendant: (1) presence; (2) domicil; (3) residence; (4) nationality or citizenship; (5) consent; (6) appearance in the action; (7) doing business in the state; (8) an act done in the state; (9) causing an effect in the state by an act done elsewhere; (10) ownership, use, or possession of a thing in the state; and (11) other relationships to the state that make the exercise of judicial jurisdiction reasonable (Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see also Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 302-303, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 ; Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 799, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477).

[OR]

D. Basis of Jurisdiction Over Domestic Corporation. The basis of judicial jurisdiction over a domestic corporation, that is, a corporation formed under the laws of California, is its incorporation in the state (Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[OR]

D. Bases of Jurisdiction Over Foreign Corporation. The bases of judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation, that is, a corporation formed under the laws of another state or of foreign country, are: (1) consent; (2) appointment of agent for service of process; (3) appearance; (4) doing business in the state; (5) doing an act in the state; (6) causing effects in the state by an act done elsewhere; (7) ownership, use, or possession of a thing in the state; and (8) other relationships to the state that make the exercise of judicial jurisdiction reasonable (Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[OR]

D. Bases of Jurisdiction Over Partnerships and Other Unincorporated Associations. In California a partnership or other unincorporated association is subject to suit in the firm or common name (see Code Civ. Proc. § 369.5), and thus the court may exercise judicial jurisdiction over the partnership or association if under the circumstances it could exercise judicial jurisdiction over a corporation on a similar basis of jurisdiction (Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Partnerships or Other Unincorporated Associations).

[CONTINUE]

E. General and Limited Personal Jurisdiction. In personam jurisdiction is of two types, general and limited also referred to as specific (Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 445, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 ; Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 204, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363).

[EITHER, if court has sufficient basis for exercising general jurisdiction over defendant]

F. When Court May Exercise General Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant. General jurisdiction arises when a nonresident defendant's activities in the forum are so extensive that due process does not require a connection between the cause of action pleaded and the nature of the defendant's activities in the state (Hunt v. Erie Ins. Group (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2d 1244, 1246) . Thus, a court may exercise general jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant when the defendant's activities within the state are extensive or wide-ranging, or substantial, continuous, and systematic, and there is no requirement that the cause of action alleged be connected with defendant's forum-related activities (Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Min. Co. (1952) 342 U.S. 437, 446, 72 S. Ct. 413, 96 L. Ed. 485, 63 Ohio Law Abs. 146 ; Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 147, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 ; Henderson v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 590, 142 Cal. Rptr. 478).

[OR, if court has sufficient basis for exercising limited jurisdiction over defendant]

F. When Court May Exercise Limited Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant. Specific jurisdiction arises when a nonresident defendant's activities within the forum state are not so pervasive as to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction, but defendant has nevertheless purposefully availed himself or herself of the forum benefits, when the controversy arises out of or is related to, i.e., bears a substantial connection or nexus to, the defendant's forum contacts, and when the exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with fair play and substantial justice (Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 446-447, 452-454, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085); Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 148, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 ; Cassiar Mining Corp. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555-558, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167). Thus, a claim need not arise directly from the defendant's forum contacts to warrant the exercise of limited jurisdiction as long as there is substantial connection or nexus between the defendant's forum contacts and the litigation. The defendant's forum activities need not be directed to the plaintiff to give rise to limited jurisdiction. The nexus required to establish limited jurisdiction is between the defendant, the forum, and the litigation, not between the plaintiff and defendant (Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 452-458, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 ; Cassiar Mining Corp. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555-558, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167). In determining whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction comports with fair play and substantial justice, the court may evaluate defendant's burden in appearing in the forum, the forum state's interest in adjudicating the claim, the plaintiff's interest in convenience and effective relief within the forum, judicial economy, and the shared interest of several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 447-448, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] G. Defendant's Economic Activity in Forum. With regard to corporate manufacturers of allegedly defective products, California has equated engaging in economic activity within this state as a matter of commercial actuality with the requirement of purposeful activity within the state (Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1065, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 ; Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 669, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 ; Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 902, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57).

[Optional] H. Defendant's Purposeful Direction of Act Having Effect in Forum. The purposeful availment requirement has been modified to allow the exercise of jurisdiction over a defendant whose only contact with the forum is the purposeful direction of a foreign act having an effect in the forum state (see Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 109, 112, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 ; Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 477-478, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 ; Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 789, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 ; Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191, 1195) .

[Optional] I. Defendant's Purposeful Interjection Into Forum. In determining the reasonableness of the assumption of jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, the court examines the extent of the defendant's purposeful interjection into the forum, which is analogous to the purposeful direction analysis (Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191, 1198, 1199).

[Optional] J. Effect of Contractual Choice of Law Provision. A choice of law provision should not be ignored in considering whether a defendant has purposefully invoked the benefits and protections of a state's laws for jurisdictional purposes; although such a provision standing alone would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction, it may, when considered with other factors, reinforce the defendant's deliberate affiliation with the forum state and the reasonable foreseeability of possible litigation there, and a nonresident might purposefully avail himself or herself of the forum state's laws by entering into contracts expressly providing that those laws could govern disputes under the contract (Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 482, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528).

[Optional] K. Effect of Defendant's Purposeful Availment of Privilege of Conducting Activities in Forum. When a nonresident defendant purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, it has clear notice that it is subject to suit there and can act to alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation by procuring insurance, passing the expected costs on to its customers, or, if the risks are too great, severing its connection with the state (World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 297, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 ; St. Joe Paper Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 999, 175 Cal. Rptr. 94).

[Optional] L. Contacts Resulting From Defendant's Own Actions. Jurisdiction is proper when the defendant's contacts with the forum state result from actions of the defendant that create a substantial connection with the forum state (Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 109, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 ; Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 475, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528).

[Optional] M. Requisite Minimum Contacts Can Be Electronic. Use of electronic mail and the telephone by a party in another state may establish sufficient minimum contacts with California to support personal jurisdiction (Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1065, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 ; Hall v. LaRonde (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1344, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399).

[Optional] N. Defendant's Burden of Proof After Plaintiff Has Established Basis for Jurisdiction. Once plaintiff establishes the existence of defendant's minimum contacts with the forum state, a rebuttable presumption arises that the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable, and the defendant therefore bears the burden of ultimately proving that the exercise of jurisdiction is unreasonable [Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 477, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 ; Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191, 1195 ; Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 449, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085] .

[Optional] O. Plaintiff's Lack of Contacts Irrelevant. So long as minimum contacts exist between a nonresident defendant and the forum state, the fact that the plaintiff lacks contacts with the forum state does not defeat otherwise proper jurisdiction (Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 788, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 ; Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc. (1984) 465 U.S. 770, 779-781, 104 S. Ct. 1473, 79 L. Ed. 2d 790).

[In an appropriate case, add additional points and authorities set out in §§ 132.101 -132.115, supporting the argument that the exercise of jurisdiction would be proper under the particular facts of the case.]

[a] Use of Form

The form of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. Because a motion to quash services of summons will in most cases involve a nonresident defendant, the memorandum sets out general points of law regarding the requirement, imposed by constitutional due process considerations, that a nonresident defendant have certain minimum contacts with the forum state before the court may exercise personal jurisdiction over the defendant [see Paragraphs A, B, C, E].

Alternative Paragraphs D set out the bases for a court to exercise personal jurisdiction over an individual defendant, a domestic corporate defendant, a foreign corporate defendant, and a defendant that is a partnership or unincorporated association, respectively. Alternative Paragraphs F set out the requirements that must be satisfied for the court to exercise either general or limited jurisdiction over a defendant. For discussion regarding the distinction between general and limited jurisdiction, see § 132.76[2][b].

Optional Paragraphs G through M set out various points of law supporting the argument that a defendant's particular type of forum-related activity constitutes sufficient minimum contacts to support the court's exercise of limited personal jurisdiction. Optional Paragraph N states the point of law regarding the plaintiff's burden of proof once the defendant has established the existence of sufficient minimum contacts, while Optional Paragraph O relates to the fact that plaintiff's contacts with the forum state, as distinguished from the defendant's, are irrelevant.

The form should be augmented, when appropriate, with additional points and authorities set out in §§ 132.101 -132.115, which support the argument that the court has a sufficient basis to exercise general or limited personal jurisdiction in particular situations.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.70 -132.90.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to oppose a motion by a third-party cross defendant to quash service of the summons on a cross complaint [see Code Civ. Proc. § 428.60(1)] for lack of in personam jurisdiction, or to oppose a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant a motion to quash after it has declined to do so (Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)). They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[c] Bases for Jurisdiction

[i] Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10

Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 is California's "long-arm" statute [see, e.g., Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 106, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92] , providing state courts with the broadest possible exercise of jurisdiction, limited only by constitutional considerations of due process as defined by the U.S. Supreme Court [see Pacific Atlantic Trading Co. v. M/V Main Exp. (9th Cir. 1985) 758 F.2d 1325, 1327 ; Sibley v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 442, 445, 128 Cal. Rptr. 34, 546 P.2d 322] . The Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, entitled generally "Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction," outlines the various bases of jurisdiction that are consistent with due process limitations, and this comment is therefore cited extensively in the foregoing form [see Alternative Paragraphs D] as well as in succeeding comments to this form, and in succeeding forms in this subpart [see, e.g., §§ 132.101 -132.110]. The text of the Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 is set out in West's Annot. Code Civ. Proc. (1973 ed.), following § 410.10 [see also Li, Attorney's Guide to California Jurisdiction and Process, Part I, Jurisdiction and Service of Process (Cal. C.E.B. 1970); Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, §§ 27-52].

The Judicial Council has pointed out that, in addition to the specifically enumerated bases of jurisdiction, other bases of jurisdiction may be developed in the future that satisfy the basic requirement of reasonableness, and those bases are also included under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 [see Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, under Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction over Individuals].

Moreover, the Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 refer to nonenumerated "other relationships" to the state that make the exercise of personal jurisdiction over an individual nonresident defendant or a foreign corporate defendant reasonable under the circumstance [see first and third Alternative Paragraphs D]. With respect to individuals, these situations include those in which the defendant is an executor, administrator, guardian, receiver, conservator, trustee, or other legal representative who is appointed or qualified pursuant to the laws of this state, or has consented to the exercise of such jurisdiction, or has engaged in conduct specifically enumerated as a basis for jurisdiction [see Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, under Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals]. With respect to foreign corporations, these situations include corporations ceasing to do business in the state or surviving after merger in the state [see Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, under Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction over Corporations].

[ii] Jurisdiction Over Plaintiff

A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who brings an action as plaintiff [see Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, under Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals], as well as a plaintiff who is a corporation [see Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, under Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations].

[iii] Jurisdiction Over Party Who Intrudes Voluntarily Into Lawsuit

In addition to the bases of jurisdiction discussed under Bases for Jurisdiction-Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 410.10 and 132.100[3][c][ii], above , a party not named in a lawsuit who voluntarily intrudes into it thereby submits itself to the in personam jurisdiction of the court and is bound by any adjudication made in the case [California Concrete Co. v. Beverly Hills Savings & Loan Assn. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 260, 267-268, 261 Cal. Rptr. 484] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Scope of Court's Personal Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court, after quoting the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, said the statute manifests an intent to exercise the broadest possible jurisdiction, limited only by constitutional considerations (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 111) .

The facts and procedural background of Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 are more fully discussed in § 132.108[3][a]. In that case the trial court denied a Pennsylvania resident's motion to quash service of summons made on him by mail in an action by a California corporation alleging a conspiracy among the nonresident defendant and others to defraud plaintiff by submitting to it falsified financial records relating to the operations of its foreign based subsidiary. The nonresident petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion. In denying the petition, the court of appeal, after quoting the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, said that by imposing no limitation except those imposed by constitutional considerations, this section authorizes the broadest possible exercise of judicial jurisdiction (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 302) .

[b] Minimum Contacts Requirement

The facts and procedural background of International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][d]. In upholding the jurisdiction of the Washington courts, the Supreme Court of the United States said that due process requires only that in order to subject a defendant to a judgment in personam, if he or she be not present within the territory or forum, he or she must have certain minimum contacts with it such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (326 U.S. 310, 316) .

[c] "Contacts" Means "Basis of Jurisdiction"

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Smith (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 543, 185 Cal. Rptr. 411 , are discussed in § 132.40[3][f]. On appeal from the order quashing the service of summons on the husband because of defective service and setting aside the interlocutory and final judgments of dissolution, the wife contended that under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 the court had, notwithstanding the defective service of summons, acquired jurisdiction over the respondent as a result of his alleged general appearance in the proceeding that, she argued, constituted a consent to jurisdiction or a waiver of any objection to jurisdiction.

In rejecting this contention and affirming the order, the appellate court explained that the word "basis" has several uses, and that, although one common use refers to relationships between things or individuals, this is not the use that lawyers, judges, teachers, and legislators have made of "basis" in reference to the jurisdiction of courts. In this context "basis" refers to the relationship between a court and persons, entities, or things a court may seek to bring before it (135 Cal. App. 3d 543, 552-553) . Thus, if a "basis of jurisdiction" exists between a court and a defendant, the court may bring that defendant within its authority and thereafter make orders binding on the defendant.

The term "contacts" is used in International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (discussed in § 132.70[3][d]) synonymously with "basis of jurisdiction" (135 Cal. App. 3d 543, 553) . The court said that due process requirements of notice and opportunity to be heard should be carefully distinguished from due process requirements of basis of jurisdiction. If there is no constitutionally adequate basis of jurisdiction for a court to grant a plaintiff the specific judgment he or she seeks against the defendant, it will make no difference that the defendant has been given notice and opportunity to be heard (135 Cal. App. 3d 543, 553) .

[d] Bases of Jurisdiction Over Individual Defendant

For discussion of the Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction over Individuals, see the Comments under Bases for Jurisdiction-Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10.

The procedural background of Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 , is discussed under § 132.100[3][a]. In denying the petition for writ of mandate, the court of appeal said that in its 1969 Annual Report to the Governor and the Legislature, the Judicial Council of California commented at length on the effect of Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, and said that all the recognized bases of judicial jurisdiction are included and that, in the case of natural persons, such bases currently include: (1) presence; (2) domicile; (3) residence; (4) nationality or citizenship; (5) consent; (6) appearance in the action; (7) doing business in the state; (8) an act done in the state; (9) causing an effect in the state by an act done elsewhere; (10) ownership, use, or possession of a thing in the state; and (11) other relationships to the state that make the exercise of judicial jurisdiction reasonable (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 302, 303) .

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. Although the court granted the writ insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support and annulling the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal said that the bases of judicial jurisdiction are those listed in Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 27, as follows: (a) presence; (b) domicile; (c) residence; (d) nationality or citizenship; (e) consent; (f) appearance in an action; (g) doing business in the state; (h) an act done in the state; (i) causing an effect in the state by an act done elsewhere; (j) ownership, use, or possession of a thing in the state; and (k) other relationships to the state that make the exercise of jurisdiction reasonable (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 799) .

[e] General and Limited Personal Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][g]. The court noted in its opinion that personal jurisdiction may be either general or specific (14 Cal. 4th 434, 445) .

Great-West Life Assurance Co. v. Guarantee Co. of North America (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 252 Cal. Rptr. 363 was an action by a Canadian insurance company against a Canadian bond company for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and breach of statutory duties. The court of appeal affirmed the order quashing service of summons for lack of jurisdiction and dismissing the action on the ground that the defendant did not possess sufficient minimum contacts with California for an assertion of jurisdiction, stating that in personam jurisdiction is of two types, general and limited (205 Cal. App. 3d 199, 204) .

[f] When Court May Exercise General Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant

In Hunt v. Erie Ins. Group (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2d 1244 , plaintiff, while on a summer break from college was en route to visit her mother in California when, while passing through Colorado, the car in which she was riding rear-ended a truck, as a result of which plaintiff was rendered a quadriplegic. While she was hospitalized in Colorado, a dispute broke out between the plaintiff and the defendant, which insured the car driver under a no-fault policy, with respect to the amount of coverage afforded plaintiff by the policy. Plaintiff was unable to afford the only rehabilitative treatment available in Colorado, and her mother arranged to have her transferred to a rehabilitation center in California. Unable to resolve the dispute with the insurance company, plaintiff sued the insurer in a California state court. The insurer had the case transferred to the federal court, where its motion to dismiss for lack of personal jurisdiction was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

Although it affirmed the dismissal on the ground that no basis for jurisdiction existed, the U.S. Court of Appeals said that general jurisdiction arises when a nonresident defendant's activities in the forum are so substantial and continuous that due process does not require a connection between the cause of action pleaded and the nature of the defendant's activities in the state (728 F.2d 1244, 1246)

In Perkins v. Benguet Consol. Min. Co. (1952) 342 U.S. 437, 72 S. Ct. 413, 96 L. Ed. 485, 63 Ohio Law Abs. 146 , the Supreme Court of Ohio affirmed the judgments of the lower courts quashing service of summons on a Philippine corporation in two transitory actions against it, neither of which arose in Ohio nor was connected with the corporation's Ohio activities, by a nonresident stockholder seeking to recover (1) dividends claimed to be due, and (2) damages for the corporation's failure to issue stock certificates to her. The Court ruled that the exercise of in personam jurisdiction over the corporation would violate due process. In holding that the exercise of jurisdiction would not offend the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, and vacating the judgment of the Ohio Supreme Court, the United States Supreme Court pointed out that the corporation's mining properties were in the Philippine Islands, that the mining operations were completely halted during the Japanese occupation of the Islands during World War II, and that, during that interim, the president, who was also the general manager and principal stockholder of the company, returned to his home in Ohio, and there maintained an office in which he conducted company matters and in which he kept the company's office files. The Court also pointed out that in this office he (1) carried on correspondence relating to company business and to its employees; (2) drew and distributed salary checks to himself as president and to two company secretaries who worked with him; (3) used local banks for carrying company funds and as transfer agents of company stock; (4) held directors' meetings in his home; (5) from his home supervised policies dealing with the rehabilitation of the corporation's properties in the Philippines and dispatched funds to cover purchases of machinery for the rehabilitation; and that he, thus, carried on in Ohio a continuous and systematic supervision of the necessarily limited wartime activities of the company and there discharged his duties as president and general manager, both during the occupation and immediately thereafter (342 U.S. 437, 447-448, 63 Ohio Law Abs. 146) .

Under these circumstances, the Court found no requirement of federal due process that either prohibited Ohio from opening its courts to the causes of action or compelled it to do so (342 U.S. 437, 446, 448, 63 Ohio Law Abs. 146) , and vacated the judgment of the Ohio court. Quoting International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 318, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (discussed in § 132.70[3][d]), the Court nevertheless pointed out that there have been instances in which the continuous corporate operations within a state were thought so substantial and of such a nature as to justify suit against it on causes of action arising from dealings entirely distinct from those activities (342 U.S. 437, 446, 63 Ohio Law Abs. 146) .

The facts and procedural background of Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][g]. In reversing the judgment of dismissal following the granting of a motion to quash out-of-state service of summons by mail on the ground that the court could exercise limited jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant, the California Supreme Court said that if a nonresident defendant's activities can be described as extensive or wide-ranging, or substantial, continuous, and systematic, there is a constitutionally sufficient relationship to warrant jurisdiction for all causes of action asserted against the nonresident, and, in such circumstances, it is not necessary that the specific cause of action alleged be connected with the defendant's business relationship to the forum (16 Cal. 3d 143, 147) .

In Henderson v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 142 Cal. Rptr. 478 , although holding that the California court had neither general nor limited jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant on a claim relating to an agreement made, activities performed, obligations incurred, and services rendered as companion and homemaker during an extramarital and nonmarital relationship that took place in Florida, the court of appeal said that general jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant exists when his or her activities within California are extensive, wide-ranging, substantial, continuous, and systematic (77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 590) .

[g] When Court May Exercise Limited Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant

In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , customers of franchise restaurants in several states, including Washington, suffered from exposure to E. coli bacteria traced to hamburgers sold at the restaurants. Eighty-five franchisees from California and other states, whose customers were not injured, brought suit San Diego superior court against the franchisor, a Delaware corporation with its principal place of business in San Diego, and other defendants stating causes of action for negligence, breach of implied warranty, breach of contract and other claims, and seeking damages for loss of business caused by the adverse publicity that followed the E. coli outbreak. One of the defendants (Vons), a meat supplier, cross-complained against several of the defendants, including owners of franchises in Washington State at which E. coli contamination had injured or killed customers, alleging, among other things, that the injuries caused by the E. coli contamination would have been avoided had the franchisor and its franchisees cooked the hamburgers at the proper temperature. Vons asserted causes of action against the Washington franchisees for negligence and intentional interference with economic advantage, and comparative and equitable indemnity. Vons sought damages for its own loss of business, indemnification for any liability that might be imposed on it for injury to franchisee customers in other actions and for liability that might be imposed on it for claims of franchisees in the current action. The Washington cross defendants appeared specially and moved to quash service of process based on lack of personal jurisdiction. The trial court granted the motion, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court held that the franchisees had sufficient contacts with California through their relationship with their California franchisor, and that the tort claims alleged against the franchisees in a cross-complaint filed in a California action stemming from food poisoning incidents were sufficiently related to the franchisees' contacts in California, to justify California's exercise of jurisdiction of the franchisees (14 Cal. 4th 434, 440) . The Court noted that if a nonresident defendant does not have substantial and systematic contacts in the forum sufficient to establish general jurisdiction, the nonresident defendant may be subject to specific jurisdiction of the forum if the defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of the forum benefits and the controversy is related to or arises out of the defendant's contacts with the forum. The United States Supreme Court has described the forum contacts necessary to establish specific jurisdiction as involving variously a nonresident who has purposely directed his or her activities at forum residents, purposefully derived benefit from forum activities, or purposefully availed himself or herself of privilege of conducting activities in forum state, thus invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. The United States Supreme Court has also referred to the requisite forum contacts as involving a nonresident defendant who deliberately has engaged in significant activities within a state, or created continuing obligations between himself or herself and residents of the forum, concluding that in such cases the defendant manifestly has availed himself or herself of the privilege of conducting business in the forum, and because his or her activities are shielded by the benefits and protections' of the forum's laws it is not unreasonable to require him or her to also submit to burdens of litigation in that forum. It is fair to subject defendants to specific jurisdiction because their forum activities should put them on notice that they will be subject to litigation in that forum (14 Cal. 4th 434, 446) . Once it is decided defendant purposefully established minimum contacts in the forum state, these contacts may be considered in light of other factors to determine if assertion of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice (14 Cal. 4th 434, 447) . Courts may evaluate the burden on the defendant in appearing in the forum, the forum state's interest in adjudicating the claim, the plaintiff's interest in convenience and effective relief within the forum, judicial economy, and shared interest of several states in furthering fundamental substantive social policies (14 Cal. 4th 434, 448) . Quoting from Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 148, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 , the court noted that as the relationship of the defendant with the state seeking to exercise jurisdiction over the defendant grows more tenuous, the scope of jurisdiction also retracts, and fairness is assured by limiting the circumstances under which the plaintiff can compel the defendant to appear and defend (14 Cal. 4th 434, 448, 452) .

The Court further noted that a claim need not arise directly from the defendant's forum contacts in order to be sufficiently related to the contact to warrant the exercise of specific jurisdiction. Rather, as long as the claim bears a substantial connection to the nonresident's forum contacts, the exercise of specific jurisdiction is appropriate (14 Cal. 4th 434, 452) . The United States Supreme Court has not provided precise criteria regarding the necessary relationship between the plaintiff's cause of action and the defendant's contacts in the forum. Rather, the Court has stated the applicable standard in broader terms requiring only that plaintiff's cause of action be related to or arise out of the defendant's contacts with the forum (14 Cal. 4th 434, 453) . Thus, a state may exercise specific jurisdiction if there is a substantial connection or nexus between forum contacts and the litigation (14 Cal. 4th 434, 454) . The defendant's forum activities need not be directed to the plaintiff to give rise to specific jurisdiction (14 Cal. 4th 434, 454, 457) . Accordingly, a nonresident defendant may be subject to California specific jurisdiction if the defendant purposefully has availed itself of forum benefits through an ongoing franchise agreement and there is a substantial nexus or connection between the defendant's forum activities and the plaintiff's claim even though the plaintiff is not a party to the franchise contract (14 Cal. 4th 434, 456-457) . The nexus required to establish specific jurisdiction is between the defendant, the forum, and the litigation, not between the plaintiff and defendant. In deciding whether a defendant has minimum contacts or purposefully has availed itself of forum benefits, the relevant contacts are said to be with the forum, because it is the defendant's choice to take advantage of opportunities that exist in the forum that subjects it to jurisdiction (14 Cal. 4th 434, 458) .

In reaching its conclusion that there were sufficient forum contacts to justify California's exercise of jurisdiction over the franchisees, the Court in the context of ongoing franchise relationships rejected the "proximate cause" test applied in Sklar v. Princess Properties International, Ltd. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1202, 1208, 240 Cal. Rptr. 102 and Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 569, 174 Cal. Rptr. 885 , as too narrow and disapproved the reasoning of those cases to the extent they are inconsistent with the opinion (14 Cal. 4th 434, 461-464, 475) . The proximate cause test applied by those cases is inconsistent with rationale underlying specific jurisdiction in context of ongoing franchise relationship (14 Cal. 4th 434, 464) . Similarly, in the context of ongoing franchise relationships, the Court rejected the "but for" test applied in State of Oregon v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1550, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 and Dialysis at Sea, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 265 Cal. Rptr. 71 , as too broad and amorphous and did not follow those cases (14 Cal. 4th 434, 465-467, 474) . The Court was not persuaded that it is productive to focus on whether inquiry would have occurred "but for" the forum contacts, at least when an ongoing franchise relationship is the forum contact (14 Cal. 4th 434, 467) . Additionally, in the context of ongoing franchise relationships, the Court rejected the "substantive relevance" test (14 Cal. 4th 434, 469-475) . In rejecting these tests, the Court noted that the United States Supreme Court has rejected the use of "talismanic jurisdictional formulas," and has stated that the facts of each case must always be weighed in determining whether personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice (14 Cal. 4th 434, 460, 463) .

Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 , was a wrongful death action, arising out of a vehicular accident that occurred in Nevada near the California border. The action was brought by a California resident against a resident and domiciliary of Nebraska, who for seven years preceding the accident had been engaged in the business of hauling goods by truck in interstate commerce, made about 20 trips a year to California in the operation of his business, and, at the time of the accident, was hauling goods to a manufacturer in California, where he intended to obtain cargo for a return shipment to an undesignated destination. He was licensed to haul freight in California, as well as several other states, and acted as an independent contractor for several brokerage companies engaged in shipping, one of which was in California. His average cargo in any single trip to California had a value of about $20,000. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to quash the out-of-state mail service of summons on him, and dismissed the action for lack of jurisdiction over the defendant. Plaintiff appealed.

In reversing the judgment on the ground that sufficient minimal contacts existed to support limited jurisdiction, the California Supreme Court said that "[i]f the defendant's activities in the forum are not so pervasive as to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction over him, then jurisdiction depends on the quality and nature of his activity in the forum in relation to the particular cause of action. In such a situation, the cause of action must arise out of an act done or transaction consummated in the forum, or the defendant must perform some other act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. Thus, as the relationship of the defendant with the state seeking to exercise jurisdiction over him grows more tenuous, the scope of jurisdiction also retracts, and fairness is assured by limiting the circumstances under which the plaintiff can compel him to appear and defend. The crucial inquiry concerns the character of defendant's activity in the forum, whether the cause of action arises out of or has a substantial connection with that activity, and upon the balancing of the convenience of the parties and the interest of the state in assuming jurisdiction" (16 Cal. 3d 143, 147-148) .

The language quoted above from the decision in Cornelison has been widely quoted in other California courts in deciding whether the exercise of limited jurisdiction is warranted in a particular case [see, e.g., Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 534, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 ; Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 711, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 (both cases discussed under § 132.100[4] [d])]. Although extensively quoted, one portion of this language is somewhat misleading, particularly if read out of context of the remaining language. This is the Court's statement that "the cause of action must arise out of an act done or transaction consummated in the forum, or the defendant must perform some other act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws." This statement should not be read to suggest that limited jurisdiction may be based either on some act or transaction that occurs in the forum or on an act that constitutes purposeful availment. To justify the exercise of limited jurisdiction, there must always some act of purposeful availment by the defendant sufficient to invoke the benefit and protection of the laws of the forum state and the cause of action must be sufficiently related to that activity, whether or not it is based on an act or transaction that occurred in the forum state [see Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 474-475, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 ; Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191, 1195 (discussed under § 132.100[4] [d])]. This statement should, therefore, be read to suggest that the essential requirement f purposeful availment can be satisfied by the fact that the defendant's act giving rise to the cause of action occurred in he forum state, or it can be satisfied by "some other act" sufficient to constitute purposeful availment, to which the cause of action is related.

Cassiar Mining Corp. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 , involved a Canadian company that for some 40 years admittedly sold thousands of tons of raw asbestos to California manufacturers who incorporated the asbestos into finished products. The company had been incorporated in Canada in 1951, but ceased its operation in 1992, when it went bankrupt and subsequently dissolved. Suit was brought by 10 California workers who allegedly sustained asbestos-related lung injuries as a result of inhaling asbestos during the course of their employment. They claimed they were injured when they inhaled asbestos supplied by the defendant company to various manufacturers. None of the plaintiffs, however, worked in plants where the defendant company shipped asbestos. The plaintiffs claimed that defendant failed to adequately warn of the health risks. Defendant appeared specially and moved to quash service of summons. While conceding it sold asbestos fiber to certain discrete locations in California between 1953 and 1991, defendant declared that no sales of asbestos were made at any time to any jobsite where any plaintiff alleged occupational exposure to asbestos. Plaintiffs counterdeclarations did not establish any casual link between their injuries and defendant's California sales. The trial court denied defendant's motion to quash and defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 552-554, 557) .

The court of appeal denied the petition. The court applied Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , to find sufficient contacts to justify the exercise of specific jurisdiction. The instant litigation results from injuries related to defendant's forum activities of selling asbestos to certain companies located in California and it is manifestly fair to require that defendant account in California for the consequences of its activities within the state (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 553) . Even if defendant had severed any California connections long before the time of suit, it still may be subject to the state's specific jurisdiction if it has (1) purposefully derived benefits from California activities, and (2) the subject lawsuit is related to or arises out of California contacts (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555) . Merely knowing the product will enter California, however, does not comply with the constitutional minimum contacts requirements. Instead the foreign defendant must have some control over the ultimate destination. Defendant sold thousands of tons of raw asbestos fiber directly to California locations. Far from fortuitous or random connections, the record shows defendant purposefully directed raw asbestos to these sites in California (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 555) . It is equally foreseeable that asbestos fiber which was directed by defendant to California would be used in California and could give rise to tort litigation in California. Defendant knowingly availed itself of the benefits accruing from its activities in California. Thus, the court concluded that defendant intended to serve the California market, thereby becoming subject to its specific jurisdiction for lawsuits having a substantial connection with its forum activities. As long as the claim bears a substantial connection to the nonresident's forum contacts, the exercise of specific jurisdiction is appropriate (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 556) .

With regard to defendant's attack on plaintiffs' showing of a substantial connection between the California asbestos sales and plaintiffs' injuries, the court rejected defendant's argument that you can only have specific jurisdiction if the cause of action arises out of those contacts with the state. Vons, the leading California authority, expressly rejected similar efforts to impose such strict requirements in specific jurisdiction cases. In its place the Supreme Court chose a relaxed, flexible standard, rather than one requiring that the plaintiff's claims arise out of the forum contact in any narrow sense. According to the Supreme Court, the nexus required to establish specific jurisdiction is between the defendant, the forum, and the litigation, not between the plaintiff and defendant. The relevant contacts are said to be with the forum, because it is the defendant's choice to take advantage of opportunities that exist in the forum that subjects it to jurisdiction (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 557) . Additionally, the Supreme Court rejected a mechanical proximate cause test for evaluating the connection between a nonresident defendant's forum activities and a plaintiff's cause of action. The relevant standard was painted in relative broad terms and formulated in the disjunctive; the cause of action either must arise out of or be related to the defendant's forum activity in order to warrant the exercise of specific jurisdiction. Instead of a bright-line rule, the Supreme Court chose the amorphous goal of fairness. There is a sliding scale or continuum between the defendant's contacts and the plaintiff's claim so that the greater the intensity of forum activity, the lesser the relationship required between the contact and the claim (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 557-558) . The connection between plaintiffs' complaint and defendant's forum-based activities met the Vons relatedness test. Plaintiffs who were exposed to asbestos fibers in California are suing defendant only because it purposefully sold asbestos fiber in the state. Defendant's obligation, if any, to plaintiffs are connected to its California-based activities. The goal of fairness to defendants is met by extending the burdens of California jurisdiction over a defendant who purposefully availed itself of the benefits of selling asbestos fibers within the state. Since plaintiffs were harmed while engaged in activities integral to the relationship defendant sought to establish, the nexus between the contacts and the cause of action is sufficiently strong to survive the due process inquiry at least at the relatedness stage (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 557-558) .

[h] Defendant's Economic Activity in Forum

In Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 , plaintiff hotel guest, a California resident, filed a class action against defendant Nevada hotels for failing to provide notice of an energy surcharge imposed on hotel guests. The trial court granted the hotels' motion to quash the summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The appellate court reversed and the action was appealed to the Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court reviewed the federal cases addressing internet web sites and their impact on personal jurisdiction, but has not adopted a particular approach whether a web site available in California by itself is "doing business" in the state (35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064) . However, the Court did find that a Nevada hotel chain web site, by any standard, established purposeful availment by touting the proximity of their hotels to California, providing driving directions from California to their hotels, specifically targeting residents of California, many of their patrons come from California and that some of these patrons undoubtedly made reservations using their Web site. As such, the hotel purposefully derived a benefit from their internet activities in California (35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1065) .

The California Supreme Court further held that the assertion of specific jurisdiction was fair where a hotel advertised heavily in California, obtained a significant percentage of its business from California residents, and maintained an interactive Internet Web site for conducting business and toll-free phone number where visitors or callers could obtain room quotes and make reservations. The hotel purposefully availed itself of the privilege of doing business in California. The guest's causes of action were premised on alleged omissions during the hotel's consummation of transactions with California residents and in its California advertisements. Because the harm alleged by the guest related directly to the content of the hotel's promotional activities in California, an inherent relationship between the guest's claims and the hotel's contacts with California existed. By purposefully and successfully soliciting the business of California residents, the hotels could reasonably anticipate being subject to litigation in California in the event their solicitations caused an injury to a California resident.

Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 , arose out of a products liability action by a worker to recover damages for injuries sustained as a result of using a leveling machine manufactured outside California by the defendant, a Delaware corporation, and sold by it to plaintiff's employer, which took delivery in Virginia. Prior to traveling east to purchase the machine, one of the employer's employees had viewed two or three leveling machines manufactured by the defendant in operation at another company in Alameda, California. The employer's acceptance of the machine was conditional on its satisfactory performance at the employer's California plant, and the defendant sent an employee to California who spent two days assisting the employer in installing the machine. In addition, the employer consulted the defendant about proper maintenance of the machine and occasionally ordered spare parts from the defendant. When considering adapting the machine to accommodate a "slitter" (a device which trims metal sheets to a specified width) manufactured by another company, the employer asked for and received from the defendant drawings of possible adaptations. The defendant twice sent the employer circulars advertising special sale prices of certain of its products, and on six occasions in 1981 the defendant placed advertisements in a national trade publication which was distributed in California. However, the defendant did not regularly maintain any offices, or have any agents, representatives, employees, or property in California and had never applied for authorization to do business in California. The defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction was denied, and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

In denying the writ, the California Supreme Court concluded that the trial court could properly exercise jurisdiction over the defendant for the limited purpose of the lawsuit (33 Cal. 3d 664, 667) . Citing Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 902, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 (discussed below), the Court said that with regard to corporate manufacturers of allegedly defective products the Court had equated engaging in economic activity within this state as a matter of commercial actuality with the requirement stated in Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283) regarding purposeful activity within the state. The Court added that in Buckeye Boiler it explained that whenever the purchase or use of its product within the state generates gross income for the manufacturer and is not so fortuitous or unforeseeable as to negative the existence of an intent on the manufacturer's part to bring about this result the manufacturer has engaged in economic activity within the state as a matter of commercial actuality (33 Cal. 3d 664, 669) .

The facts and procedural background of Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 , are discussed in § 132.77[3][c]. In denying the peremptory writ of mandate, the California Supreme Court said that an enterprise obtains the benefits and protection of our laws if, as a matter of commercial actuality, it has engaged in economic activity within this state. The requirement that the defendant engage in purposeful activity within the forum state is designed to demonstrate that the defendant has invoked such benefits and protection and is therefore amenable to jurisdiction in at least some cases. Thus, the California Supreme Court had equated engaging in economic activity within this state as a matter of commercial actuality with the requirement in Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 , regarding purposeful activity within the state (71 Cal. 2d 893, 901-902) . The Court explained that a manufacturer engages in economic activity within a state as a matter of commercial actuality whenever the purchase or use of its product within the state generates gross income for the manufacturer and is not so fortuitous or unforeseeable as to negative the existence of an intent on the manufacturer's part to bring about this result (71 Cal. 2d 893, 902) .

The facts and procedural background of Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , are discussed in § 132.77[3][d]. In reversing the California Supreme Court, which had upheld the jurisdiction of the California superior court over a Japanese company, the United States Supreme Court pointed out that in World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (discussed in § 132.70[3][g]), the Court had said that the forum state does not exceed its powers under the due process clause if it asserts personal jurisdiction over a corporation that delivers its products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased by consumers in the forum state, and that, applying this statement, two lines of cases had developed: (1) those courts holding that placing a product into the stream of commerce was sufficient to support jurisdiction over a nonresident even though the defendant did nothing else purposefully to avail itself of the market of the forum state; and (2) those cases holding that the action of the nonresident must be more purposefully directed at the forum state than the mere act of placing a product in the stream of commerce. The reasoning of the California Supreme Court illustrated the former interpretation (480 U.S. 102, 110) . The United States Supreme Court rejected the former line of cases and found the second line of cases to be consonant with the requirements of due process. The Court said that the "substantial connection" between the defendant and the forum state necessary for a finding of minimum contacts must come about by an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum state (480 U.S. 102, 112) . The Court added, however, that the placement of a product into the stream of commerce, without more, is not an act of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum state (480 U.S. 102, 112) .

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court said that, by requiring that individuals have fair warning that a particular activity may subject them to the jurisdiction of a foreign sovereign, the due process clause gives a degree of predictability to the legal system that allows potential defendants to structure their primary conduct with some minimum assurance as to where that conduct will and will not render them liable to suit (471 U.S. 462, 472) . Where a forum seeks to assert specific jurisdiction over an out-of-state defendant who has not consented to suit there, the fair warning requirement is satisfied if the defendant has purposefully directed his or her activities at residents of the forum, and the litigation results from alleged injuries that arise out of or relate to those activities (471 U.S. 462, 472) . By way of example, the Court said that thus, the forum state does not exceed its powers under the due process clause if it asserts personal jurisdiction over a corporation that delivers products into the stream of commerce with the expectation that they will be purchased by consumers in the forum state and those products subsequently injure forum consumers. Similarly, a publisher who distributes magazines in a distant state may fairly be held accountable in that forum for damages resulting there from an alleged defamatory story. With respect to contractual relations, parties who reach out beyond one state and create continuing relationships and obligations with citizens of another state are subject to regulation and sanctions in the other state for the consequences of their activities (471 U.S. 462, 473) .

The Court explained that the reason a forum may legitimately exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident who purposefully directs his or her activities toward forum residents is that the state generally has a manifest interest in providing its residents with a convenient forum for redressing injuries inflicted by out-of-state actors (471 U.S. 462, 473) . Moreover, when individuals purposefully derive benefit from their interstate activities, it may well be unfair to allow them to escape having to account in other states for consequences that arise proximately from such activities; the due process clause may not readily be wielded as a territorial shield to avoid interstate obligations that have been voluntarily assumed (471 U.S. 462, 473-474) . The Court added that jurisdiction may not be avoided merely because the defendant did not physically enter the forum state (471 U.S. 462, 476) .

The procedural background of Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 , aff'g Jones v. Calder (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 128, 187 Cal. Rptr. 825 , is discussed under § 132.100[3][p]. In holding that the nonresident defendants were subject to the jurisdiction of the California courts in a libel action, the United States Supreme Court said that the intentional, and allegedly tortious actions of the individual defendants were aimed at California (465 U.S. 783, 789) .

The facts and procedural background of Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][g]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff, the United States Court of Appeals said that it had interpreted the holdings of Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 (discussed above) and Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 (discussed above) as modifying the purposeful availment rubric to allow the exercise of jurisdiction over a defendant whose only contact with the forum was the purposeful direction of a foreign act having effect in the forum state (854 F.2d 1191, 1195) .

[j] Defendant's Purposeful Interjection into Forum

The facts and procedural background of Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191 , are discussed under § 132.100[4][d]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff the United States Court of Appeals, in listing the factors to be considered in determining whether it is reasonable for the court to assert jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, said that the court should examine seven factors (set out in case discussions in § 132.77[3][b]), including the extent of defendant's purposeful interjection, which is analogous to the purposeful direction analysis (854 F.2d 1191, 1198-1199) . The Court added, however, that the Ninth Circuit cases give the purposeful interjectment factor no weight once it is shown that the defendant purposefully directed its activities to the forum state, and that the case before it was such a case (854 F.2d 1191, 1199) .

[k] Effect of Contractual Choice of Law Provision

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court, after pointing out that the Florida Court of Appeals reasoned that choice of law provisions were irrelevant to the question of personal jurisdiction, said a choice of law provision should not be ignored in considering whether a defendant has purposefully invoked the benefits and protections of a state's laws for jurisdictional purposes, that, although such a provision standing alone would be insufficient to confer jurisdiction, it may, when considered with other factors, reinforce the defendant's deliberate affiliation with the forum state and the reasonable foreseeability of possible litigation there, and that a nonresident might purposefully avail himself or herself of the forum state's laws by entering into contracts expressly providing that those laws could govern disputes under the contract (471 U.S. 462, 482) .

The facts and procedural background of World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][g]. Although it reversed the judgment of the Oklahoma Supreme Court on the ground the defendants had no contacts, ties, or relations with the State of Oklahoma (444 U.S. 286, 299) , the United States Supreme Court said that when a corporation purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, it has clear notice that it is subject to suit there, and can act to alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation by procuring insurance, passing the expected costs on to its customers, or, if the risks are too great, severing its connection with the state (444 U.S. 286, 297) .

St. Joe Paper Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 175 Cal. Rptr. 94 , was a mandate proceeding by two nonresident defendant corporations seeking review of the superior court's denial of their motions to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction in a class action under the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof. Code § 16720 et seq.) The action was brought by a California corporation against 34 foreign corporate defendants, alleging a national conspiracy to fix the prices of corrugated containers purchased by plaintiff from out-of-state wholesalers or distributors and delivered in California. The only contacts one of the paper companies (Consolidated Packaging Co., a Michigan corporation) had with California were: (1) its sale of corrugated containers to a California resident, other than plaintiff, for $29,412.90 pursuant to an unsolicited telephone order; (2) its sale in Michigan of corrugated materials to the United States Government General Services Administration that shipped some of the materials into California; and (3) its sale of corrugated cartons to another California corporation. The other nonresident defendant corporation (St. Joe Paper Co., a Florida corporation), three or four times a year, sent two of its salesmen to California to call on national companies that do business in other states in addition to California. The calls did not result in any sales in California, as all of the resulting orders were for corrugated containers to be purchased from St. Joe's plant where they were produced and used locally. One of the direct purchasers, however, shipped corrugated containers from a St. Joe plant in Memphis, Tennessee to California. This purchaser was headquartered in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; its orders for containers originated in Philadelphia, and all of its payments to St. Joe were made from there. It took title to the goods at the plant and directed destination and shipment by common carrier; these shipments could go to any of 16 state, including California. St. Joe regularly sold boxes to this purchaser with the knowledge that they would be used in California. Plaintiff alleged that over an 11-year period each of the paper companies was engaged in an out-of-state price-fixing conspiracy to injure California consumers, in violation of the Cartwright Act, and reaped unusually high profits as a result of its unlawful activity. The paper companies contended that the plaintiff had not met its burden of proving jurisdiction [see § 132.75], and that the defendant's allegations of nationwide conspiracy and their activities in California were not sufficient minimum contacts to provide a basis for in personam jurisdiction under California's long-arm statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10.

Rejecting this contention and denying the writs on the ground that a basis for jurisdiction existed, the court of appeal, quoting World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (discussed above), said that when a corporation purposefully avails itself of the privilege of conducting activities within the forum state, it has clear notice that it is subject to suit there, and can act to alleviate the risk of burdensome litigation by procuring insurance, passing the expected costs on to customers, or, if the risks are too great, severing its connection with the state (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 999) .

[m] Contacts Resulting From Defendant's Own Actions

The facts and procedural background of Asahi Metal Industry Co. v. Superior Court (1987) 480 U.S. 102, 107 S. Ct. 1026, 94 L. Ed. 2d 92 , are discussed in § 132.77[3][d]. Although it reversed the California Supreme Court, which had upheld the jurisdiction of the California superior court over a Japanese company, the United States Supreme Court said that when the contacts that create a substantial connection with the forum state proximately result from the defendant's own actions, jurisdiction is proper (480 U.S. 102, 109) .

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court said that jurisdiction is proper when the contacts with the forum state result from the actions of the defendant itself that create a substantial connection with the forum state (471 U.S. 462, 475) .

[n] Requisite Minimum Contacts Can Be Electronic

In Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 , plaintiff hotel guest, a California resident, filed a class action against defendant Nevada hotels for failing to provide notice of an energy surcharge imposed on hotel guests. The trial court granted the hotels' motion to quash the summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The appellate court reversed and the action was appealed to the Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court held that the assertion of specific jurisdiction was fair where a hotel advertised heavily in California, obtained a significant percentage of its business from California residents, and maintained an interactive Internet Web site for conducting business and toll-free phone number where visitors or callers could obtain room quotes and make reservations. The hotel purposefully availed itself of the privilege of doing business in California. The guest's causes of action were premised on alleged omissions during the hotel's consummation of transactions with California residents and in its California advertisements. Because the harm alleged by the guest related directly to the content of the hotel's promotional activities in California, an inherent relationship between the guest's claims and the hotel's contacts with California existed. By purposefully and successfully soliciting the business of California residents, the hotels could reasonably anticipate being subject to litigation in California in the event their solicitations caused an injury to a California resident (35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1066) .

In Hall v. LaRonde (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 399 , plaintiff's complaint alleged plaintiff and defendant had entered into a contract whereby defendant was authorized to sell licenses for use of a computer software application to the general public and defendant would pay plaintiff $1 for every license sold. Plaintiff's principal place of business was in California; defendant's was in New York. Plaintiff received payments for sales through September of 1995, but although defendant continued to market the application, plaintiff received no further payments. Defendant moved to quash service of the summons on the grounds that the California courts had no jurisdiction, claiming that sufficient minimum contacts with California were lacking (56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1344) . Plaintiff submitted an affidavit in opposition to the motion which stated that plaintiff originally contacted defendant by electronic mail concerning a software module plaintiff had written. Defendant responded with the idea of integrating plaintiff's module into defendant's software package. Defendant suggested various modifications. Plaintiff made the modifications and the module was incorporated into defendant's retail product. After plaintiff finished the module, plaintiff continued to assist defendant in upgrading its application to new and existing software. Plaintiff performed all the work on the module in California. All negotiations were conducted by electronic mail and telephone. Plaintiff had no other business or personal connections with New York. Defendant did not contradict the statement made by the plaintiff. The court granted defendant's motion to quash and ordered the case dismissed (56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1345) .

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that specific (i.e., limited) jurisdiction may be asserted when a defendant has purposefully availed himself or herself of forum benefits and the controversy is related to or arises out of the defendant's contacts with the forum. Sufficient minimum contacts for specific jurisdiction exist when a nonresident deliberately has engaged in significant activities within a state, or has created continuing obligations between himself or herself and residents of the forum. The court distinguished Interdyne Co. v. SYS Computer Corp. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 508, 511-512, 107 Cal. Rptr. 499 (which is discussed under § 132.81[3][a]). Unlike in Interdyne, the court did not believe that the physical presence of a representative of the defendant in California should be determinative on the question of the sufficiency of the minimum contacts requirement. Much has happened in the role that electronic communications plays in business transactions since Interdyne was decided more than 20 years ago. The speed and ease of electronic communications have increased the number of transactions that are consummated without either party leaving the office. There is no reason why the requisite minimum contacts cannot be electronic (56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1347) . Accordingly, use of electronic mail and the telephone by a party in another state may establish sufficient minimum contacts with California to support personal jurisdiction (56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1344) . In the instant case, the evidence established sufficient minimum contacts for specific jurisdiction. It is uncontroverted that plaintiff reached out to New York in search of business and defendant reached back to California. The record showed that defendant's contacts with California consisted of more than simply purchasing a software module from the plaintiff. Rather, defendant worked with plaintiff to integrate the module into defendant's software package. Even after the initial adaption was finished, defendant continued to work with plaintiff to modify the module for new and existing software. In addition, the contract contemplated that defendant would make continuing royalty payments to plaintiff. Thus, defendant created a continuing obligation between himself and a resident of California. Defendant contacts with California were more than random, fortuitous, or attenuated. Defendant purposefully derived a benefit from interstate activities. It is fair to require that defendant account in California for the consequences that arise from such activities (56 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1347) .

[o] Defendant's Burden of Proof After Plaintiff Has Established Basis for Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Burger King Corp. v. Rudzewicz (1985) 471 U.S. 462, 105 S. Ct. 2174, 85 L. Ed. 2d 528 , are discussed in § 132.76[3][c]. In holding that the Florida federal court had jurisdiction over the nonresident franchisees, the United States Supreme Court said that when a defendant who purposefully has directed his or her activities at forum residents seeks to defeat jurisdiction, he or she must present a compelling case that the presence of some other considerations would render jurisdiction unreasonable (471 U.S. 462, 477) .

The facts and procedural background of Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191 , are discussed under § 132.100[4][d]. In affirming the judgment for plaintiff the United States Court of Appeals said that once minimum contacts is shown, a rebuttable presumption arises that the exercise of jurisdiction is reasonable, and the defendant bears the burden of ultimately proving that the exercise of jurisdiction is unreasonable (854 F.2d 1191,

The facts and procedural background of Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][g]. The trial court granted defendants' motion to quash for lack of personal jurisdiction, and the court of appeal affirmed. In reversing the court of appeal, the Supreme Court stated that once facts showing minimum contacts with the forum state are established, it becomes the defendant's burden to demonstrate that the exercise of jurisdiction would be unreasonable (14 Cal. 4th 434, 449) .

[p] Plaintiff's Lack of Contacts Irrelevant

Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 , aff'g Jones v. Calder (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 128, 187 Cal. Rptr. 825 , arose out of an action by a famous entertainer, who worked and lived in California, for libel, invasion of privacy, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The action was against a newspaper reporter and editor, who were residents of Florida, for an article written and edited by them and published by their employer, a national magazine in Florida with a large circulation in California. The trial court granted the defendants' motion to quash service of summons on the ground that First Amendment concerns weighed against an assertion of jurisdiction otherwise proper under due process. The California court of appeal reversed, rejecting the contention that First Amendment considerations enter into the jurisdictional analysis.

In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal, the United States Supreme Court said that the plaintiff's lack of contacts [with the forum state] will not defeat otherwise proper jurisdiction, although they may be so manifold as to permit jurisdiction when it would not exist in their absence (465 U.S. 783, 788) .

Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc. (1984) 465 U.S. 770, 104 S. Ct. 1473, 79 L. Ed. 2d 790 , was a libel action brought in the United States District Court for the District of New Hampshire by a New York resident against, among others, an Ohio corporation that published a nationally circulated magazine. The plaintiff's only connection with New Hampshire was the circulation there of copies of a magazine she had assisted in producing, and which bore her name in several places, crediting her with editorial and other work. Defendant corporation's only contacts with New Hampshire was its monthly sales there of some 10,000 to 15,000 copies of its magazine. The plaintiff claimed to have been libeled in five separate issues of the magazine published between September 1975 and May 1976. The action was filed only after plaintiff's similar action in Ohio had been dismissed on the ground that it was barred by the Ohio statute of limitations.

The district court dismissed the action, believing that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment forbade the application of New Hampshire's long-arm statute in order to acquire jurisdiction over the defendant corporation. The United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit affirmed, holding that plaintiff's lack of contacts with New Hampshire rendered the state's interest in redressing the tort of libel to plaintiff too attenuated for an assertion of personal jurisdiction over the defendant corporation, and concluding that, because plaintiff could recover damages caused in all states by the libel even though the action was barred by the statute of limitations in all states other than New Hampshire, it would be unfair to assert jurisdiction over the corporation.

The United States Supreme Court reversed on the ground that the defendant's regular circulation of magazines in New Hampshire was sufficient to support an assertion of jurisdiction in a libel action based on the contents of the magazine (465 U.S. 770, 773-774) and the fact that the statute of limitations on libel had run in all other states presented a choice of law question and not a jurisdictional issue (465 U.S. 770, 778-779) . The Court said that the three concerns advanced by the court of appeals, whether considered singly or together, were not sufficiently weighty to merit a different result, that the "single publication rule," New Hampshire's unusually long statute of limitations, and plaintiff's lack of contacts with the forum do not defeat jurisdiction otherwise deemed proper under both New Hampshire law and the due process clause (465 U.S. 770, 775) . With respect to plaintiff's limited contacts with New Hampshire, the Court said it had not yet required a plaintiff to have minimum contacts with the forum state before permitting that state to assert personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant, and that, on the contrary, it has upheld the assertion of jurisdiction where such contacts were entirely lacking (465 U.S. 770, 779) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Scope of Court's Personal Jurisdiction

In Threlkeld v. Tucker (9th Cir. 1974) 496 F.2d 1101 , affirming a judgment for the plaintiff in an action (invoking diversity jurisdiction in the United States District Court) to enforce a California judgment against a Connecticut resident, the United States Court of Appeals held that the federal court could exercise the same jurisdiction over a defendant as could be exercised by the state courts in the state where the federal court is located. It quoted Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 and stated that the jurisdiction of the California courts is coextensive under that statute with the outer limits of due process under the state and federal Constitutions as those limits have been defined by the United States Supreme Court. The court added that the boundaries of personal jurisdiction under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 appear to have been held by the California courts as defined by the minimum contacts test of International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (discussed under § 132.100[3][b]) (496 F.2d 1101, 1103 n.2).

In The Cadle Co. II v. Fiscus (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1240, 78 Cal. Rptr. 3d 238 , the court of appeal held that there is nothing unreasonable about subjecting a defendant to the jurisdiction of California courts in an independent action to renew a 1992 judgment. Defendant had entered into a contract in California (a promissory note) that was to be performed in California (i.e., payment of the debt), which he breached when he failed to repay the debt. An action on the note was filed in California and defendant submitted himself to the jurisdiction of the California court when he appeared in the action. A money judgment was entered against defendant in California, and he has failed to pay his obligations. The passage of time between the original California litigation and the revival action, during which defendant has had no additional contacts with California, does not defeat personal jurisdiction as concerns the enforcement of the 1992 judgment. Such a conclusion could encourage judgment debtors to evade legal obligations imposed by a judgment of this state's courts by simply packing up their assets and leaving the jurisdiction (163 Cal. App. 4th 1232, 1240) .

In Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , the court of appeal, in setting forth the rules applicable to the exercise of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident, said that under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 California courts may exercise jurisdiction over nonresidents on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States, and that the statute manifests an intent to exercise the broadest possible jurisdiction, limited only by constitutional considerations (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 112) .

The procedural background of Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 , aff'g Jones v. Calder (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 128, 187 Cal. Rptr. 825 , is discussed under § 132.100[3][p]. In holding that the nonresident defendants were subject to the jurisdiction of the California courts in a libel action, the United States Supreme Court said that the due process clause of the Fourteenth Amendment permits personal jurisdiction over a defendant in any state with which the defendant has certain minimum contacts such that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (465 U.S. 783, 788) .

In State of Oregon v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1550, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 , the court of appeal denied a writ of mandate by which defendants State of Oregon and two state universities sought to compel the trial court to quash service of summons in a wrongful death action arising out of allegedly negligent medical care of a California resident who died from a stroke while on the basketball team of one of the Oregon state universities. The court first noted the fair play and substantial justice rule of International Shoe (24 Cal. App. 4th 1550, 1556) . The court then held that the university's recruitment of the deceased in California and re-recruitment in California after his first stroke with assurances of proper medical care, which lead the deceased to accept the medical treatment and advice from the defendants that formed the basis of the wrongful death action, established the nexus necessary to establish minimum contacts with California (24 Cal. App. 4th 1550, 1558-1559) . In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 465 n.8, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , in the context of ongoing franchise relationships, the court rejected the "but for" test of State of Oregon as too broad and amorphous and, stating that the Court was not persuaded that the "but for" test provides an appropriate general standard, disapproved State of Oregon to the extent it is inconsistent with the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion. For discussion of Vons Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

In Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , the court of appeal, in setting forth the rules applicable to the exercise of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident, said that a state may constitutionally exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident as long as he or she has minimum contacts with that forum such that maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 112) .

In Shoei Kako Co. v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 808, 109 Cal. Rptr. 402 , the court of appeal denied a writ of mandate by which a Japanese corporation sought to compel the trial court to quash service of summons in a personal injury action. The court said that Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 provides that a court of this state may exercise jurisdiction on any basis not inconsistent with the Constitution of this state or of the United States; that the basic underlying rule is found in International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 (discussed under § 132.100[3][b]), wherein the court referred to sufficient contacts or ties with the state of the forum to make it reasonable and just, according to our traditional conception of fair play and substantial justice, to permit the state to enforce the obligations that the nonresident has incurred there (33 Cal. App. 3d 808, 811) .

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court said that as a general constitutional principle, a court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant as long as the defendant has such minimum contacts with the forum that the maintenance of the suit does not offend traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 111) .

[c] When Court May Exercise General Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant

In Hirsch v. Blue Cross, Blue Shield of Kansas City (9th Cir. 1986) 800 F.2d 1474 , in reversing a judgment of dismissal granted for lack of jurisdiction on the ground the trial court had limited jurisdiction over the defendant, the United States Court of Appeals said that if the nonresident defendant's activities in the state are continuous and systematic, or substantial, the court may assert general jurisdiction over a cause of action, even if it is unrelated to the defendant's forum activities (800 F.2d 1474, 1477) .

The facts and procedural background of Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][h]. Although it denied the petition for writ of mandate seeking to have quashed the service of summons on a foreign corporation on the ground that sufficient contacts existed to support limited jurisdiction, the Supreme Court said that where a corporation's activities have been extensive or wide ranging, or substantial, continuous, and systematic, they may justify jurisdiction for all causes of action asserted against the corporation (33 Cal. 3d 664, 669) .

The facts and procedural background of Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 , are discussed in § 132.75[3][a]. In reversing the order quashing service of summons on a Japanese corporation in an action for alleged misappropriation of trade secrets, the court of appeal, holding that the trial court had limited jurisdiction, said that if a nonresident defendant's activities in the forum state may be described as extensive or wide-ranging, or substantial, continuous, and systematic, there is a constitutionally sufficient relationship to warrant jurisdiction for all causes of action asserted against him or her (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 534) .

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Martin (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 255 Cal. Rptr. 720 , are discussed in § 132.70[4][e]. Although it affirmed the order quashing service of summons and dismissing the joinder proceeding, the court of appeal said that if a defendant has sufficient extensive "contacts" with the forum state, it may be subject to suit there on all claims wherever they arise (207 Cal. App. 3d 1426, 1434) .

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court said that if a nonresident corporation's activities are sufficiently wide-ranging, systematic and continuous, it may be subject to jurisdiction within the state on all causes of action asserted against it, and that, in such circumstances, the specific cause of action need not be related to the defendant's business activities within the state (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 111-112) .

In Koninklijke L.M. v. Superior Court (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 495, 237 P.2d 297 , the court of appeal denied a writ of prohibition seeking to restrain the trial court from taking any further proceedings in wrongful death actions against a Netherlands corporation following the denial of its motion to quash service of summons. The defendant operated an intercontinental commercial airline, and the death actions arose from the crash of a plane on taking off from a London, England airfield. The corporation had never qualified to do business in California, but it had purchased from California manufacturers airplanes in excess of $1 million a year, the contracts for which were executed in The Netherlands, and accepted delivery of the airplanes in California. It maintained a technical office in Los Angeles where 24 persons were employed to administer its contracts for the purchase of airplanes and airplane parts; the corporation also maintained a bank account in California, and owned four automobiles in this state. The office was listed in the building directory, and rent was paid locally on a month to month basis. Defendant also maintained in Los Angeles a ticket office, employing three or four persons whose duties were to sell tickets on defendant's intercontinental flights. In denying the writ, the court of appeal held that the corporation's activities in this state were sufficient to render it amenable to suit and said that when a corporation is here, not occasionally or casually, but with a fair measure of permanence and continuity, then, whether its business is interstate or local, it is within the jurisdiction of the California courts (107 Cal. App. 2d 495, 500) .

[d] When Court May Exercise Limited Personal Jurisdiction Over Defendant

Sinatra v. National Enquirer, Inc. (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1191 , was an action in a United States District Court in California for misappropriation of name, likeness, and photograph, brought by a nationally famous entertainer against a Swiss clinic and a national tabloid resulting from false statements made by the clinic's employees, as part of the clinic's continuing effort to solicit California clients, and published in the national tabloid, which was widely circulated in California. The case was originally filed in a California superior court and removed to the federal district court on the ground of diversity. The Swiss clinic's special appearance to challenge the district court's in personam jurisdiction over it was unsuccessful. Judgment was for the plaintiff, and the Swiss clinic appealed, renewing its jurisdictional challenge.

In affirming the judgment on the ground that the district court had limited in personam jurisdiction over the defendant, the United States Court of Appeals, after pointing out that the clinic did not have substantial or continuous and systematic contacts with California to support the exercise of general jurisdiction (854 F.2d 1191, 1194) , said that the issue was whether the district court properly asserted "limited" or "specific" jurisdiction for a cause of action arising out of the clinic's forum-related activities (854 F.2d 1191, 1195) . The court said that, in evaluating whether a court may exercise specific jurisdiction, it applied a three-part test: (1) the nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate come transaction with the forum or perform some act by which he or she purposefully avails himself or herself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the claim must be one that arises out of or results from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable (854 F.2d 1191, 1195) .

The facts and procedural background of Hunt v. Erie Ins. Group (9th Cir. 1984) 728 F.2d 1244, 1246 are discussed under § 132.100[3][f]. In affirming dismissal on the ground that no basis for jurisdiction existed, the U.S. Court of Appeals nevertheless said that the requirements for the exercise of limited personal jurisdiction are as follows: (1) the nonresident defendant must do some act or consummate some transaction within the forum or perform some act constituting a purposeful availment of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws; (2) the cause of action must arise out of or result from the defendant's forum-related activities; and (3) the exercise of jurisdiction must be reasonable (728 F.2d 1244, 1247) .

The facts and procedural background of Dialysis at Sea, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 265 Cal. Rptr. 71 , are more fully discussed in § 132.107[3][d]. In denying the petition for writ of mandate, the court of appeal, quoting Walter v. Superior Court (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 677, 680, 224 Cal. Rptr. 41 , said that when the nonresident's activities are less extensive (than those required to support general jurisdiction), the cause of action must arise out of or be connected with the defendant's forum-related activity (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 792) . In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 465 n.8, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , in the context of ongoing franchise relationships, the Court rejected the "but for" test of used by the court in Dialysis at Sea as too broad and amorphous and, stating that the Court was not persuaded that the "but for" test provides an appropriate general standard, disapproved Dialysis at Sea to the extent it is inconsistent with the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion. For discussion of Vons Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

The facts and procedural background of Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 , are discussed in § 132.75[3][a]. In reversing the order quashing service of summons on a Japanese corporation in an action for alleged misappropriation of trade secrets on the ground the defendant's contacts with California were sufficient to permit the exercise of limited jurisdiction over it, the court of appeal, quoting Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 711, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 (discussed below), said that if the defendant's activities in the forum are not so pervasive as to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction, then jurisdiction depends on the quality and nature of the defendant's activity in the forum in relation to the particular cause of action. In such a situation, the cause of action must arise out of an act done or transaction consummated in the forum, or the defendant must perform some other act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. Thus, as the relationship of the defendant with the state seeking to exercise jurisdiction over him grows more tenuous, the scope of jurisdiction also retracts, and fairness is assured by limiting the circumstances under which the plaintiff can compel him to appear and defend. The crucial inquiry concerns the character of defendant's activity in the forum, whether the cause of action arises out of or has a substantial connection with that activity, and upon the balancing of the convenience of the parties and the interest of the state in assuming jurisdiction (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 534) .

In Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 , the court of appeal, in denying a peremptory writ of mandate sought to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on foreign defendants. The court of appeal quoted the statement from Cornelison v. Chaney (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 143, 147-148, 127 Cal. Rptr. 352, 545 P.2d 264 (discussed in § 132.100[3][g]), that, if the defendant's activities in the forum are not so pervasive as to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction over him or her, then jurisdiction depends on the quality and nature of the defendant's activity in the forum in relation to the particular cause of action. In such a situation, the cause of action must arise out of an act done or transaction consummated in the forum, or the defendant must perform some other act by which he purposefully avails himself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws. Thus, as the relationship of the defendant with the state seeking to exercise jurisdiction over him grows more tenuous, the scope of jurisdiction also retracts, and fairness is assured by limiting the circumstances under which the plaintiff can compel him to appear and defend. The crucial inquiry concerns the character of defendant's activity in the forum, whether the cause of action arises out of or has a substantial connection with that activity, and upon the balancing of the convenience of the parties and the interest of the state in assuming jurisdiction (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 710-711) .

[e] Defendant's Economic Activity in Forum

In Luberski, Inc. v. Oleificio F.LLI Amato S.R.L. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 409, 89 Cal. Rptr. 3d 774 , a purchaser of olive oil sued the seller, an Italian company, for breach of a contract for the sale of 12,000 cases of olive oil. As an Italian olive oil company with limited sales to California customers, defendant Amato averred its contacts with California were insufficient to justify the exercise of personal jurisdiction as a matter of constitutional due process. In support of Amato's motion to quash the summons and complaint, its president attested to the following facts: Amato is a corporation formed under the laws of Italy and located in Partanna, Italy; Amato is in the business of producing olive oil and related products which it sells on a wholesale and retail basis in Italy and to a lesser extent internationally; Amato has sold "some" olive oil to California customers over the years, mainly to two buyers (not including Luberski); Amato provides no services in California; Amato's California sales consist of accepting purchase orders, preparing an invoice, and shipping the products to the closest harbor (either Long Beach or Oakland); Amato has no employees, assets, bank accounts, or offices in California; Amato is a "small company" for which defense of a California action would impose a material burden; Amato "shipped the requested oil over eighteen months ago"; and this order was the first for Luberski, which was introduced to Amato by an existing California buyer. Luberski countered by submitting a declaration which verified the facts alleged in the complaint. The trial court granted defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The Court of Appeal reversed the order quashing service of summons. The court found that, under the long-arm statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10), the California court had specific jurisdiction because the subject of the dispute was the seller's alleged nondelivery of $406,000 worth of olive oil to the purchaser in California. The seller purposefully availed itself of the California forum. The negotiations were conducted and completed in Italy and California via long-distance communications with the implicit understanding that the goods were only useful to the buyer if they were delivered to California, and the seller maintained responsibility for the goods until they arrived in California. Thus, the seller had the expectation that the goods it was placing in interstate commerce would be utilized in California. Furthermore, the size of the contemplated transaction--more than $ 400,000 for the first shipment and another similarly sized shipment contemplated--was substantial by almost any definition pertaining to a contract for the sale of goods. With those same facts in mind, it was only fair to provide the buyer with the opportunity to prove its allegations in the forum where it alleged the goods were not delivered (and where the seller claimed they were delivered) (171 Cal. App. 4th 409, 413-420) .

Neadeau v. Foster (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 234, 180 Cal. Rptr. 806 , involved the breach of a contract signed in California in which a nonresident defendant appealed from a default judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant contended in part that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion to quash service of process for lack of in personam jurisdiction. The court of appeal found that even though he had no business office, agents, or sales personnel in California, defendant did extensive business in California and engaged in economic activity within the state that would justify the exercise of jurisdiction (129 Cal. App. 3d 234, 239-240) .

The facts and procedural background of St. Joe Paper Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 175 Cal. Rptr. 94 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][l]. In denying the writs of mandate sought to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on nonresident defendant corporations, the court of appeal said that the deliveries made by the corporations met the alternate test of economic activity in this state. In evaluating their activities, it focused on the economic reality rather than any mechanical checklist (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 999) . The court, citing Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 901, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 (discussed under § 132.100[3][h]), said that an enterprise obtains the benefits and protection of our laws if as a matter of commercial actuality it has engaged in economic activity within this state. A manufacturer engages in economic activity within this state as a matter of commercial actuality whenever the purchase or use of its product within the state generates gross income for the manufacturer and is not so fortuitous or unforeseeable as to negative the existence of an intent on the manufacturer's part to bring about this result (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 999-1000) . That the manufacturer deals with the residents of the state indirectly, rather than directly, or requires orders to be accepted at the home office, is not determinative. Thus, an analysis of the nonresident manufacturer's activities must focus on the actual economic benefit derived from such activities. Where the manufacturer sells its products in circumstances such that it knows or should reasonably anticipate that its products will ultimately be resold in a particular state, it should be held to have purposefully availed itself of the market for its products in that state (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1000) . The court said that when the cause of action arises out of the forum-related economic activity, the forum state will entertain jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1000) . The court added that an isolated act of economic activity, such as the making and performance of a contract in the forum state, may be sufficient to accord the forum state jurisdiction over the defendant when the cause of action is related to that isolated act of economic activity (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1000) .

Martin v. Detroit Lions, Inc. (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 472, 108 Cal. Rptr. 23 , was an action against the Michigan corporate owner of a professional football team by a player to recover under his contract salary for a season when he did not play due to injuries received in Detroit, Michigan in the performance of his duties. The defendant did not maintain an agent, officer, or other person in California on whom service of summons could be made, and service was therefore made on defendant by serving the summons and a copy of the complaint on the California Secretary of State. The defendant's motion to quash service of process was granted, and plaintiff appealed. Though defendant, in support of its motion to quash, alleged that it owned no property in California and did not and had never transacted any business in California, it was undisputed that (1) plaintiff had been scouted and recruited in California and his contract had been signed in California; (2) the team played regularly in California with the corporation receiving a portion of the gate receipts; (3) the team had played in the state during the season in question; and (4) during that season defendant had employed a professional scout who maintained a residence in the state and scouted and recruited football players in California for the defendant. In reversing the order, the court of appeal said that, while it has been said that minimum contact requires more than a mere "foot-fall on the state's soil," where the cause of action arises out of economic activity within the state, the contacts need not consist of repeated or continuous business transactions, that an isolated transaction, such as the breach of a contract made and to be performed in the state, may be sufficient (32 Cal. App. 3d 472, 475) .

Note that the court further rejected the defendant's argument that its motion should be treated as a motion to dismiss for inconvenient forum on the ground that it had made a vague reference to that doctrine when citing the jurisdictional factors (32 Cal. App. 3d 472, 476-477) . The court pointed out that the trial court's order was based solely on lack of jurisdiction and that the doctrine of forum non convenience, as such, was not presented. The Court said that the doctrine of forum non conveniens is an extremely limited one and cannot be applied by a court to dismiss an action over which it otherwise has jurisdiction unless all pertinent factors are weighed and considered (32 Cal. App. 3d 472, 477) [see also Part II, D, § 132.130 et seq.].

In Archdiocese of Milwaukee v. Superior Court (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 423, 5 Cal. Rptr. 3d 154 , plaintiff alleged and declared under oath that when he was a boy, a Roman Catholic priest molested him; the priest was working at a parish in Orange County when the alleged molestation occurred. The plaintiff sued the Milwaukee Archdiocese, the Roman Catholic Bishop of Orange (the Orange Diocese), and the priest. Among other things, plaintiff alleged the Milwaukee Archdiocese engaged in a cover-up of the priest's prior misconduct, which included a conviction in Wisconsin for sexual perversion against a boy, and arranged for the priest to move to California in 1973. The evidence showed the Milwaukee Archdiocese sought to rid itself of the priest by sending him into California knowing he was a pedophile and had been convicted in Wisconsin of sexual perversion against a boy. The court held that plaintiff met his burden of proving, for purposes of establishing specific personal jurisdiction, the Milwaukee Archdiocese engaged in intentional conduct expressly aimed at California and knew its conduct would cause harm in this state. Thus, under the "effects" test for determining purposeful availment in personal jurisdiction analysis, a defendant might be subject to jurisdiction in the forum state if the defendant engaged in intentional conduct expressly aimed at or targeting the forum state, and the defendant knew the intentional conduct would cause harm in the future (112 Cal. App. 4th 423, 438-442) .

In Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , the court of appeal, in setting forth the rules applicable to the exercise of personal jurisdiction over a nonresident, said that the substantial connection between the defendant and the forum state necessary for a finding of minimum contacts must come about by an action of the defendant purposefully directed toward the forum state (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 112) .

[g] Defendant's Burden of Proof After Plaintiff Has Established Basis for Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural history of Cassiar Mining Corp. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][g]. The court of appeal in denying a defendant's petition for writ of mandate noted that when, as in the case before it, the plaintiffs have established sufficient minimum contacts to pass constitutional muster, the burden shifts to the defendant to make a compelling case as to why jurisdiction is unreasonable (66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 559) .

The facts and procedural background of Dialysis at Sea, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 265 Cal. Rptr. 71 , are discussed in § 132.107[3][d]. In denying the petition for writ of mandate, the court of appeal said that when a defendant properly files a motion to quash service of summons due to lack of personal jurisdiction the initial burden is on the plaintiff to establish the prima facie facts entitling the court to assume jurisdiction. Once a plaintiff has established that a defendant has purposefully directed his or her activity at forum residents, the burden then shifts to the defendant to supply facts demonstrating that the assumption of jurisdiction would be unreasonable (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 793) [for a form of points and authorities the defendant might use on the issue of reasonableness, see § 132.77]. In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 465 n.8, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , in the context of ongoing franchise relationships, the Court rejected the "but for" test of Dialysis at Sea as too broad and amorphous and, stating that the Court was not persuaded that the "but for" test provides an appropriate general standard, disapproved Dialysis at Sea to the extent it is inconsistent with the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion. For discussion of Vons Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

§ 132.101 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant Was Present in California When Served

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

SERVICE OF SUMMONS ON THE NONRESIDENT DEFENDANT WHILE IN CALIFORNIA IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER HIM/HER.

A. Defendant's Presence In California Is Basis of Personal Jurisdiction. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who is physically present within its territory, whether permanently or temporarily, if at that time he or she is properly served with process (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see Burnham v. Superior Court of Cal. (1990) 495 U.S. 604, 610-611, 110 S. Ct. 2105, 109 L. Ed. 2d 631 ; Silverman v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 145, 150, 249 Cal. Rptr. 724).

B. Type of Action in Which Presence Is Basis for Jurisdiction. Defendant's presence in California when served with summons gives the state a basis for the exercise of jurisdiction over the individual in any action that may be there brought against him or her (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see Burnham v. Superior Court of Cal. (1990) 495 U.S. 604, 610-611, 110 S. Ct. 2105, 109 L. Ed. 2d 631).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. §

418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant was present in California when he or she was served with the summons, and that this in itself is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its jurisdiction over defendant.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.102 -132.115.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments to a general form.

[b] Presence as Basis of Jurisdiction

The California Judicial Council has pointed out that physical presence is the most common and least frequently challenged basis of jurisdiction, but that such presence must usually be voluntary, that the court may decline to exercise its jurisdiction if force or fraud was used to effect such presence, and that various persons are immune to service of process or suit [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals]. For memoranda of points and authorities relating to persons immune to suit or process, see § 132.20 et seq.

The American Law Institute has pointed out that physical presence in the state was the traditional basis of judicial jurisdiction at common law, that it is immaterial that the individual is only temporarily in the state, that the individual's presence in the state even for an instant gives the state judicial jurisdiction over him or her, and that if at that time exercise of this jurisdiction is initiated by proper service of process, and, if the individual is afforded a reasonable opportunity to be heard, a valid judgment may be entered against the individual even though he or she leaves the state immediately after the service of process [Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 28, Comment a].

The Institute has acknowledged that the rule may result at times in a defendant's being compelled to stand suit in a state to which he or she has no relationship other than the fact that he or she was served with process while passing through that state's territory, and that it can also be contended that the rule is inconsistent with the basic principle of reasonableness which underlies the field of judicial jurisdiction, but that the rule's potentialities for hardship are mitigated by the fact that the court may refuse to exercise its jurisdiction when a defendant's presence was obtained by fraud or unlawful force over the defendant or the defendant's property, when the defendant is immune to suit (see Subpart A, § 132.20 et seq.), and when the forum is a seriously inconvenient forum (see Subpart D, § 132.130 et seq.) [Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 28, Comment a].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Presence in California Is Basis of Personal Jurisdiction

In Burnham v. Superior Court of Cal. (1990) 495 U.S. 604, 110 S. Ct. 2105, 109 L. Ed. 2d 631 , the parties were married in West Virginia in 1976, moved to New Jersey in 1977, where their two children were born, and separated in July 1987, agreeing that the wife, who intended to move to California, would take custody of the children and that she would file for divorce there on the ground of irreconcilable differences. Instead, the husband in 1987 filed for divorce in a New Jersey state court on the ground of desertion, did not obtain issuance of a summons, and did not attempt to serve his wife with process. In January 1988, the wife filed for dissolution of marriage in California. Later that month the husband visited southern California on business, after which he visited with his children in the San Francisco Bay area. He took the older child to San Francisco for the weekend and on their return, he was served with summons in the wife's dissolution of marriage proceeding. Later that year, he appeared specially and moved to quash service of summons on the ground of insufficient contacts with California. The superior court denied the motion, and the California court of appeal denied the husband's petition for a writ of mandate on the ground the defendant's presence in California at the time of service was a sufficient basis for in personam jurisdiction over him. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

In unanimously affirming the judgment, the United States Supreme Court nevertheless was divided on the proper basis for the affirmance. One opinion, subscribed by four justices, stated that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment does not deny a state court's jurisdiction over a nonresident who is personally served with process while temporarily in the state, in a suit unrelated to his activities in the state (495 U.S. 604 , 610). After tracing the historical precedent for the rule, the opinion stated that jurisdiction based on physical presence alone constitutes due process because it is one of the continuing traditions of our legal system that define the due process standard of traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice, that that standard was developed by analogy to physical presence, and that it would be perverse to say that the standard could now be turned against that touchstone of jurisdiction (495 U.S. 604, 619) . The opinion distinguished Shaffer v. Heitner (1977) 433 U.S. 186, 97 S. Ct. 2569, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683 , which was a shareholder's derivative suit against a corporation's directors and involved quasi in rem jurisdiction by a Delaware state court over the nonresident defendants by the sequestration of their stock in the company, the situs of which was Delaware under Delaware law. The opinion acknowledged that in Shaffer the Court had said that all assertions of state-court jurisdiction must be evaluated according to the standards set forth in International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 316, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 and its progeny. However, this statement stands for nothing more than the proposition that, when the minimum contact that is a substitute for physical presence consists of property ownership, it must, like other minimum contacts, be related to the litigation (495 U.S. 604, 620 ; plurality opinion of Scalia, J.).

Another opinion, also subscribed by four justices, agreed that the Due Process Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment generally permits a state court to exercise jurisdiction over a defendant if he or she is served with process while voluntarily present in the forum state (495 U.S. 604, 628-629) . However, all rules of jurisdiction, even ancient ones, must, in keeping with the critical insight of Shaffer v. Heitner (1977) 433 U.S. 186, 97 S. Ct. 2569, 53 L. Ed. 2d 683 , satisfy contemporary notions of due process, and factors other than mere presence should be considered in determining whether the exercise of jurisdiction comported with traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice (495 U.S. 604, 628-632) . This opinion stated the belief that the Court should therefore undertake an independent inquiry into the fairness of the prevailing in-state service, or transient jurisdiction, rule, and concluded that the exercise of jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant in this case met the requirements of the fairness standard (495 U.S. 604, 636-639 ; plurality opinion by Brennan, J.).

The ninth justice concurred in the judgment, finding both views to be persuasive (495 U.S. 604, 640) .

The facts and procedural background of Silverman v. Superior Court (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 145, 249 Cal. Rptr. 724 , are discussed in § 132.30[3][b]. In denying a writ of mandate sought to compel the trial court to grant a nonresident defendant's motion to quash service of summons, the court of appeal pointed out that it was undisputed that defendant was served in California and that his presence in California when service of process was effected meets the jurisdictional requirement that there be a proper basis for jurisdiction under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 (203 Cal. App. 3d 145, 150) .

[b] Type of Action in Which Presence Is Basis for Jurisdiction

See discussion of Burnham v. Superior Court of Cal. (1990) 495 U.S. 604, 110 S. Ct. 2105, 109 L. Ed. 2d 631 , under § 132.101[3][a].

13-132 California Points & Authorities § 132.102

§ 132.102 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Individual Defendant Is Citizen or Resident of or Has Domicile in California

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

THE _____ [DOMICILE and/or RESIDENCE and/or CITIZENSHIP] OF THE DEFENDANT IN CALIFORNIA IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER HIM/HER.

[EITHER, if jurisdiction is based on domicile]

A. Domicile. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who is domiciled in, but may be absent from the state. A person's domicile is usually the place where the person has his or her home and, at least for the same purpose, no person has more than one domicile at a time (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see also Milliken v. Meyer (1940) 311 U.S. 457, 462-463, 61 S. Ct. 339, 85 L. Ed. 278 ; Allen v. Superior Court (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 306, 310-311, 259 P.2d 905).

[Optional] B. Domicile in California When Cause of Action Arose. Domicile at the time the cause of action arose, in addition to allegations that the action is based on the defendant's activities within the forum state, afford the state a constitutional basis for jurisdiction (Kroopf v. Guffey (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1358, 228 Cal. Rptr. 807).

[AND/OR, if jurisdiction is based on residence]

A. Residence. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who is a resident of the state unless the individual's relationship to the state is so attenuated as to make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals).

[AND/OR, if jurisdiction is based on citizenship]

A. Citizenship. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who is a citizen of the state unless the nature of the individual's relationship to the state makes the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals).

B. Citizenship Defined. All persons born or naturalized in the United States, and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and the state wherein they reside (United States Constitution, Amendment XIV).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant is an individual who is a citizen or resident of, or has a domicile in, California, and that this is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its jurisdiction over defendant.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.101, 132.103 -132.115.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments to a general form.

[b] Individual Defendant

[i] Domicile

A person's domicile is his or her home. It is the place where the person dwells and which is the center of the person's domestic, social, and civil life. It assures the existence of a place in which a person is continuously amenable to suit. The person may be served with process personally, or by a method of substituted service, either within or outside California as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 413.10. Every person has a domicile at all times, even though the person may have left such home for the purpose of establishing a home elsewhere [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

[ii] Residence

A person's residence is the place where he or she has an abode or where he or she has settled down to live for a period of time, but not necessarily with the intention of making a home there so as to create a domicile. Service of process may be effected on a resident within or outside California as provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 413.10[Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals)].

Establishment of a residence does not require the existence of an attitude of mind similar to that required for the acquisition of a domicile. On the other hand, it is necessary that the individual have a sufficiently close relationship to the state to make reasonable the exercise by the state of judicial jurisdiction over him or her. Among the factors to be considered are (1) the amount of time the individual spends in the state; (2) the nature of his or her place of abode in the state; (3) his or her objective attitude of mind toward the state, as for example, whether he or she regards it with affection and as a place to which he or she likes to go whenever possible; and (4) the things he or she does in the state. For a state to have judicial jurisdiction over an individual on the basis of residence, it is necessary, at least, that the person spend a considerable portion of his or her time there. The nature of his or her place of abode, if any, in the state is important. The person is more likely to have the required relationship to a state where he or she has a fixed dwelling place than in one where he or she lives only in hotels or boarding houses. The person is also more likely to have the required relationship to the state if the state is one to which he or she goes of his or her own free choice and not on account of economic or other necessity. What the individual does in the state is significant. The greater his or her activity in the state, the closer is his or her relationship to the state and therefore the better the reason for holding that the state has judicial jurisdiction over him or her [Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 30, Comment a; see also Judicial Council Comments to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

Federal statutes rarely use the word domicile but use residence instead. This is also true in California. Hence, it has been pointed out that the word "residence" (and its variants) is ambiguous and that each time it is used in a legal phrase its meaning must be determined; that it is frequently used in a sense equivalent to domicile, and on occasion to mean something more than domicile, namely, a domicile at which a person actually dwells; that, on the other hand, it may mean something less than domicile, namely, a place where the individual has an abode or where the person has settled down to live for a period of time, but not necessarily with such an intention of making a home there as to create a domicile; and finally that the phrase "legal residence" is sometimes used as the equivalent of domicile [Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 11, Comment k].

[iii] Citizenship

Because all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction are citizens of the United States and the state in which they reside, a person may, in appropriate instances, be subject to the judicial jurisdiction of the state on the ground both of domicile and citizenship. The factors to be considered in determining whether judicial jurisdiction based on citizenship exists are generally the same as in the case of jurisdiction based on residence (discussed under § 132.102[2][b][ii]) [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Domicile

In Milliken v. Meyer (1940) 311 U.S. 457, 61 S. Ct. 339, 85 L. Ed. 278 , the Colorado Supreme Court held null and void a judgment of the Wyoming court against the claim of the plaintiff in the Wyoming action that the Wyoming judgment was entitled to full faith and credit under the federal constitution. In the Wyoming action, the Wyoming domiciliary had been personally served with summons in Colorado pursuant to Wyoming law, but had thereafter failed to appear in the Wyoming action.

In reversing the judgment, the Supreme Court of the United States said that domicile in the state is alone sufficient to bring an absent defendant within the reach of the state's jurisdiction for purposes of a personal judgment by means of appropriate substituted service, and that substituted service in such cases has been quite uniformly upheld where the absent defendant was served at his or her usual place of abode in the state, as well as where he or she was personally served without the state, so long as the form of substituted service employed is reasonably calculated to give the defendant actual notice of the proceedings and an opportunity to be heard, and if it is, the traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice implicit in due process are satisfied (311 U.S. 457, 462-463) .

Allen v. Superior Court (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 306, 259 P.2d 905 , was a prohibition proceeding arising out of an automobile accident case in which the defendant sought to restrain the trial court from taking any further proceedings against him and to compel it to quash the order for publication of the summons on the ground it was in excess of the court's power, and to quash the service of summons and complaint. The accident occurred in California where the defendant was a resident (domiciliary) but from which he moved approximately five years later to Oregon. Service was made by publication and by personally delivering a copy of the summons and complaint to the defendant in Oregon. Thus, the defendant was a resident (domiciliary) of California at the time of the accident and when the complaint was filed.

In the course of denying the writ, the Supreme Court, quoted the statements, among others, from Milliken v. Meyer (1940) 311 U.S. 457, 462-463, 61 S. Ct. 339, 85 L. Ed. 278 , set forth above (41 Cal. 2d 306, 310-311) .

[b] Domicile in California When Cause of Action Arose

Kroopf v. Guffey (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 228 Cal. Rptr. 807 , was an action by a California resident against a Connecticut resident, who formerly lived in California with plaintiff, for declaratory relief and for damages for breach of contract, fraud, and infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed.

In reversing the order, the court of appeal said that domicile at the time the cause of action arose, in addition to allegations that the action is based on the defendant's activities within the forum state, afford the state a constitutional basis for personal jurisdiction, and that, thus, a state may exercise jurisdiction over a defendant domciled in the state at the time the cause of action arose, but who left the forum before commencement of the action or service of process (183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1358) .

See also Allen v. Superior Court (1953) 41 Cal. 2d 306, 310-311, 259 P.2d 905 , discussed under § 132.102[3][b][i].

§ 132.103 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant Domestic Corporation or Other Entity Was Incorporated or Formed in California

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

THE _____[INCORPORATION or FORMATION] OF THE DEFENDANT IN CALIFORNIA IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER IT.

A. Domestic Corporation. A state has plenary power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a domestic corporation. That is, a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a corporation incorporated in the state even though it does no business there. Incorporation in the state gives the state a basis for exercising juridical jurisdiction over the corporation in any action that may there be brought against it (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

B. Domestic Corporation Defined. A "domestic corporation" is a corporation formed under the laws of California (Corp. Code § 167).

[ADD, if defendant is unincorporated association or partnership]

C. Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association. A state in which a partnership or other unincorporated association is subject to suit in the firm or common name has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over the partnership or association if under the circumstances it could exercise judicial jurisdiction over a corporation on a similar basis of jurisdiction (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction over Partnerships or Other Unincorporated Associations).

D. Authority to Sue Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association in Common Name. Any partnership or other unincorporated association, whether organized for profit or not, may sue and be sued in the name which it has assumed or by which it is known (Code Civ. Proc. § 369.5(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant is a domestic corporation, partnership, or unincorporated association, and that this is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its jurisdiction over defendant.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.101, 132.102, 132.104 -132.115.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Domestic Corporations

Judicial Council Comment (1) to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations provides as follows: a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a corporation incorporated in the state even though it does no business there, and incorporation in the state gives the state a basis for exercising juridical jurisdiction over the corporation in any action that may there be brought against it. It further provides that service of process is effected on an officer, employee, designated agent, or public official, either within or outside California, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 416.10 or 416.20, but that, like an individual and a foreign corporation, a domestic corporation may waive the requirement of notice by its consent or by making a general appearance [see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.50(a); see also §§ 132.105, 132.106].

Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 41, Comment, provides as follows: (a) A corporation's incorporation in a state provides a fair and reasonable basis on which to base amenability to suit there. This basis of jurisdiction assures the existence of a place at which a corporation is continuously amenable to suit; and (b) incorporation in the state gives the state a basis for the exercise of personal jurisdiction over the corporation in any action that may there be brought against it.

[c] Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association

As pointed out in Paragraph C, the Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Partnerships or Other Unincorporated Associations, provides that a state in which a partnership or other unincorporated association is subject to suit in the firm or common name (which includes California [see Code

Civ. Proc. § 369.5(a)]) has power to exercise jurisdiction over the partnership or association if under similar circumstances it could exercise judicial jurisdiction over a corporation on a similar basis of jurisdiction. The Comment further states that for purposes of suit, California treats partnerships or associations as corporations and that the type of actions that may be brought against a partnership or association is the same as against a corporation, and adds that by permitting a partnership or association to sue and be sued in its firm or common name, that a state creates an entity status for the partnership or association.

Thus, because California courts may exercise judicial jurisdiction over a domestic corporation, even one that does no business in the state, they may also exercise judicial jurisdiction on the same basis over a partnership or other unincorporated association formed under the laws of California.

The American Law Institute has taken a somewhat different position. Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 40(1), provides that a state in which a partnership or unincorporated association is subject to suit in the firm or common name has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over the partnership or association if under the circumstances it could exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual on one or more of the bases set forth in Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, §§ 32-l39 [see §§ 132.104 -132.110].

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

DELIVERY OF A COPY OF THE SUMMONS AND COMPLAINT TO THE AGENT DESIGNATED BY DEFENDANT FOR RECEIPT OF SERVICE OF PROCESS IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT.

A. Service on Agent Designated by Defendant Foreign Corporation. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation that has authorized an agent or a public official to accept service of process in actions brought against the corporation in the state as to all causes of action to which the authority of the agent or official to accept service extends (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[Optional] B. Service on Nonqualified Foreign Corporation. Any foreign corporation that transacts intrastate business and that does not hold a valid certificate of qualification from the Secretary of State pursuant to Section 2105 of the Corporations Code is, by transacting such unauthorized intrastate business, deemed to consent to the jurisdiction of the courts of California in any civil action arising in California in which the corporation is named a party defendant and is deemed to have designated the Secretary of State as the agent on whom process directed to the corporation may be served within California (Corp. Code § 2203(a); Cannon v. American Hydrocarbon Corp. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 639, 84 Cal. Rptr. 575). A foreign corporation is considered to be transacting intrastate business if it enters into repeated and successive transactions of its business in California, other than interstate or foreign commerce (Corp. Code § 191(a); see Neogard Corp. v. Malott & Peterson-Grundy (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 213, 226-227, 164 Cal. Rptr. 813

[Optional] C. Foreign Corporation Defined. Except in certain situations involving corporations or associations chartered under the laws of the United States, "foreign corporation" means any corporation other than a domestic corporation (Corp. Code § 171).

[ADD, if defendant is partnership or other unincorporated association]

D. Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association. [See § 132.103, Paragraph C].

E. Authority to Sue Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association in Common Name. [See § 132.103, Paragraph D].

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant is a foreign corporation or a partnership or unincorporated association that was served in the action through an agent designated to receive service of process, and that this is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its jurisdiction over defendant. Although the Judicial Council Comment Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations, cited in Paragraph A is limited to foreign corporations, the same rule would apply in the case of a domestic corporations or partnership or unincorporated association [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 415.50(a), 416.10(a), 416.30, 416.40(a)].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.101 -132.103, 132.105 -132.115.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 132.79.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Other Minimum Contacts May Be Required

At least one court has held that the designation of an agent for service of process of under Corp. Code § 2105 was an insufficient minimum contact, by itself, to justify the trial court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over a foreign corporation in a cause of action that arose out of state and had no relationship to the defendant's activities in California [see Gray Line Tours v. Reynolds Electrical & Engineering Co. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 190, 238 Cal. Rptr. 419

(discussed in § 132.79[3][a])].

[c] Designation of Agent and Service of Process

Neither a domestic nor a foreign corporation can successfully secrete itself to avoid the jurisdiction of the court; the Corporations Code provides for an effective mode of obtaining personal service on the corporation whose officers and agents cannot be found after due diligence by providing for service on the Secretary of State [Coates Capitol Corp. v. Superior Court (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 125, 128-129, 59 Cal. Rptr. 231] .

For the designation by a domestic corporation of an agent for service of process and for when service of process may be made on a domestic corporation by delivery to the corporation's appointed agent, see Code Civ. Proc. § 416.10(a); Corp. Code §§ 202(c), 1502(b), 1504, 1505, 1701. For when service may be made by delivery of the process to the secretary of state, see Corp. Code § 1702.

For the designation by a foreign corporation of an agent for service of process and for when service of process may be made on a foreign corporation by delivery to the corporation's designated agent, see Code Civ. Proc. § 416.10(a); and Corp. Code §§ 2102, 2105(a)(4), (5), 2107(b), (d), 2110, 2117(b), 2203.

For when service may be made by delivery of the process to the Secretary of State, see Corp. Code §§ 2105(a)(5), 2111, 2114.

For the designation of an agent for service of process on a partnership, other than a foreign limited partnership, see Corp. Code §§ 15800 and 24003. For when service may be made by delivery of process to the Secretary of State, see Corp. Code § 15800.

For the designation of an agent for service of process and for when service of process may be made on an unincorporated association by delivery to the association's appointed agent, see Code Civ. Proc. § 416.40(a), (b); and Corp. Code §§ 24003, 24005. For when service may be made by delivery of process to a member of the association, see Corp. Code § 24007.

For further discussion of service of process on corporations and associations, and on public officials on behalf of corporations or associations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Service on Nonqualified Foreign Corporation

Cannon v. American Hydrocarbon Corp. (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 639, 84 Cal. Rptr. 575 , involved the interpretation of former Corp. Code § 6408 [now see Corp. Code § 2203(a)]. Defendant foreign corporation sought to have default judgments against it set aside, in part, on the ground that service on it pursuant to former Corp. Code § 6408, by service on the Secretary of State, could be made only by first obtaining a court order. The trial court disagreed, and the court of appeal affirmed (4 Cal. App. 3d 639, 647-649) .

Defendant had transacted business in California, which business gave rise to plaintiff's cause of action, but it had not qualified under former Corp. Code § 6403 [now see Corp. Code § 2105] to conduct such business. Plaintiff, therefore, served defendant in accordance with the provisions of former Corp. Code § 6408 [now see Corp. Code § 2203(a)] by personal delivery of the process to a deputy Secretary of State in Sacramento. In doing so, plaintiff obtained no order permitting such service from the superior court. Defendant maintained that plaintiff was required to do so, because under former Code Civ. Proc. § 411 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 416.10], service of process could only be made in the manner provided in former Corp. Code §§ 6500-6504, which provided, in pertinent part, that substituted service on the Secretary of State could be made only by first obtaining a court order. The court of appeal held that former Corp. Code § 6408 did not require substituted service on the Secretary of State to be preceded by first obtaining a court order (4 Cal. App. 3d 639, 647-649) .

Although under the present statutory scheme, this conflict is no longer explicit, it should be noted that the present statutory provisions for service on corporations contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 416.10 do not make reference to the right to serve a corporation which is transacting unauthorized intrastate business by serving process on the Secretary of State; nor do those provisions provide the manner in which such service may be made. It would appear, thus, that reference may still be made to the Cannon decision for authority for the manner in which service may be made on a corporation transacting unauthorized intrastate business. Neogard Corp. v. Malott & Peterson-Grundy (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 213, 164 Cal. Rptr. 813 is discussed in § 132.105[3][c].

§ 132.105 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant Has Consented to Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

THE CONSENT OF THE DEFENDANT TO THIS COURT'S JURISDICTION IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER HIM/HER/IT.

[EITHER, if defendant is an individual]

A. Consent to Jurisdiction by Competent Individual. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a competent individual who has consented to the exercise of such jurisdiction (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see also National Equipment Rental v. Szukhent (1964) 375 U.S. 311, 316-317, 84 S. Ct. 411, 11 L. Ed. 2d 354).

[OR, if defendant is a foreign corporation]

A. Consent to Jurisdiction by Foreign Corporation. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation which has consented to the exercise of such jurisdiction (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations; see Atkins, Kroll & Co. v. Broadway Lbr. Co. (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 646, 650, 653, 656, 35 Cal. Rptr. 385).

[Optional] B. Consent by Foreign Corporation Transacting Unauthorized Intrastate Business. Any foreign corporation that transacts intrastate business and that does not hold a valid certificate of qualification from the Secretary of State pursuant to Section 2105 of the Corporations Code is, by transacting such unauthorized intrastate business, deemed to consent to the jurisdiction of the courts of California in any civil action arising in California in which the corporation is named a party defendant and is deemed to have designated the Secretary of State as the agent on whom process directed to the corporation may be served within California (*Corp. [Optional] C. Transaction of Intrastate Business. [See § 132.100, Paragraph D].

[Optional] D. Foreign Corporation Defined. [See § 132.104, Paragraph B].

[ADD, if defendant is a foreign partnership or other unincorporated association]

E. Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association. [See § 132.103, Paragraph C].

F. Authority to Sue Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association in Common Name. [See § 132.103, Paragraph D].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant has effectively consented to the jurisdiction of the court, and that this is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its jurisdiction over defendant. For an example of a California statute providing for jurisdiction over a foreign corporation or nonresident person based on consent to jurisdiction as expressed in specified contracts, see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.40.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.101 -132.104, 132.106 -132.115.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Effect of Consent

Although the consent of a party is effective to give a state jurisdiction over his or her person, it cannot enlarge the competency of the court to include a type of case which a court has not been authorized to hear by the state or a case involving either a greater or lesser amount in controversy [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals]. That is, while a party can consent to jurisdiction over his or her person, the party cannot, by agreement or otherwise, enlarge the subject matter jurisdiction of the court.

[c] Sufficiency of Consent

Actual consent to the exercise of jurisdiction is required, but such consent may be expressed by words or by conduct, and must be given by a person who is under no legal disability. Consent may be given with respect to a particular action either before the action is brought or afterwards, or it may be given generally with respect to actions which may thereafter be brought. Consent may be given by a contractual provision either waiving service of process or authorizing extraterritorial service of process; by a power of attorney to confess judgment, unless such confessions are illegal in the state; by a contractual provision for arbitration by a state arbitration board; by an acknowledgment of "due service"; or by the designation of an agent to receive process [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

For a form relating to designation of an agent to receive process, see § 132.104. For discussion of confessions of judgment in California, see Ch. 318, Judgments , Pt. I, in California Forms of Pleading and Practice. For discussion of the statutes governing the appointment of a California state official, such as the Secretary of State, to receive service of summons on certain nonresidents as a result of some activity by them in California, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consent to Jurisdiction by Competent Individual

National Equipment Rental v. Szukhent (1964) 375 U.S. 311, 84 S. Ct. 411, 11 L. Ed. 2d 354 , was an action in a New York federal district court by the corporate lessor of farm equipment, with its principal place of business in New York City, against the lessees, a father and son farming in Michigan, for alleged default in payments due under the lease. The lease provided that the lessees designated a named individual (with whom the lessees were not acquainted) as their agent for the purpose of accepting any process in the State of New York. The purpose of this provision was to assure that any litigation under the lease would be conducted in New York. Two copies of the summons and complaint were delivered to the designated agent who the same day sent the summons and complaint to the lessees in Michigan by certified mail, with a letter stating that the documents had been served on her as their agent in accordance with the lease agreement. The federal court quashed service of the summons and complaint and the United States Court of Appeals affirmed.

In reversing the judgment, the United States Supreme Court, in upholding, under federal rules, the validity of the service on the agent, said that it was settled that parties to a contract may agree in advance to submit to the jurisdiction of a given court, to permit notice to be served by the opposing party, or even to waive notice altogether (375 U.S. 311, 316-317) .

[b] Consent to Jurisdiction by Foreign Corporation

In Atkins, Kroll & Co. v. Broadway Lbr. Co. (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 646, 35 Cal. Rptr. 385 , in reversing an order of the superior court quashing service of process and dismissing a proceeding to confirm an arbitration award, the California court of appeal held that by contractually agreeing that all matters relating to the performance of the contract were to be governed by California laws and agreeing to submit to arbitration under the laws of California any dispute arising under the contract, the foreign corporation agreed to submit to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state, and that this included not only the enforcement of arbitration agreements and the conduct of arbitration proceedings, but the enforcement of the award resulting from such arbitration in the manner provided by California law (222 Cal. App. 2d 646, 650, 653, 656) .

[c] Consent by Foreign Corporation Transacting Unauthorized Intrastate Business

Plaintiff Neogard Corp. v. Malott & Peterson-Grundy (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 213, 164 Cal. Rptr. 813 , had transacted business in California for nine years. Nevertheless, it had not obtained a certificate of qualification under Corp. Code § 2105 and, on this basis, the trial court dismissed its breach of contract action against a local firm.

The court of appeal upheld the dismissal, finding that plaintiff's activities enumerated above constituted intrastate business, when taken together, despite the fact that plaintiff maintained no payrolled office in California (106 Cal. App. 3d 213, 226) . Plaintiff established relations with and paid commissions to manufacturer's representatives residing in California. It sent sales representatives intrastate to induce construction contracts between California project designers and California waterproofing subcontractors. It assisted the waterproofing subcontractors in obtaining those contracts. It entered into contracts with subcontractors and utilized this fact to induce contracts between interstate parties. It supervised the physical in-state application of its waterproofing system. It signed contracts in-state to guarantee those projects and provided in-state supervision when defects appears. This, the court said, amounted to more than entry into California merely to contribute to or to conclude a unitary interstate transaction (106 Cal. App. 3d 213, 226) . Plaintiff also contended that the cause of action related to purely interstate contracts involving defendant's obligation to pay for product received and thus, could not be dismissed under Corp. Code § 2203(c) or the commerce clause. The court of appeal disagreed, concluding that the fact that the contract sued on is part and parcel of a course of business they deemed "intrastate" for purposes of Corp. Code § 2105 renders that contract action one on intrastate business for purposes of Corp. Code § 2203(c) (106 Cal. App. 3d 213, 227) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Consent to Jurisdiction by Competent Individual

In Szynalski v. Superior Court (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 , the trial court denied a motion brought by a nonresident who had signed a settlement agreement in a California class action to quash service of a summons and complaint in a suit brought by the settlement administrator for payment of its fees. The nonresident agreed to pay the administrator's fees and agreed that the trial court would retain jurisdiction over the settlement agreement, including disputes relating to the administrator. The settlement agreement described the nonresident's participation as a special appearance and stated that he did not submit to the trial court's jurisdiction. The trial court, in approving the settlement, expressly retained jurisdiction over all matters relating to its administration. The Court of Appeal denied the nonresident's petition for writ of mandate. The court held that the trial court had personal jurisdiction over the nonresident in accordance with Code Civ. Proc., § 410.10, because he consented to that court's jurisdiction and had the required minimum contacts with California. Although his mere presence in California to negotiate and sign the settlement agreement might not have been sufficient to confer personal jurisdiction over him, he also obtained the trial court's approval of the settlement while understanding that the trial court would retain jurisdiction, accepted the benefits of the administrator's services, and agreed to pay the administrator's fees. His attempt by reservation to restrict the trial court's jurisdiction over him was ineffective (172 Cal. App. 4th 1, 7-12) .

§ 132.106 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant Has Made General Appearance in Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

THE GENERAL APPEARANCE OF THE DEFENDANT IN THIS CASE IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER HIM/HER/IT.

A. General Appearance Is Equivalent to Valid Service. Except as otherwise provided by statute, the court in which an action is pending has jurisdiction over a party from the time the summons is served on him, her, or it as provided by Code of Civil Procedure Section 413.10 et seq.; a general appearance by a party is equivalent to personal service of summons on that party (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.50(a); Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147-1149, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 ; Harrington v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 185, 189, 228 P. 15 ; Neihaus v. Superior Court (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 340, 345, 137 Cal. Rptr. 905).

[EITHER, if defendant is an individual]

B. General Appearance by Individual. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who enters an appearance as a defendant in the action (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals).

[OR, if defendant is foreign a corporation]

B. General Appearance by Foreign Corporation. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation which enters an appearance as defendant in an action in the state (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[Optional] C. Foreign Corporation Defined. [See § 132.104, Paragraph B.]

[ADD, if defendant is a foreign partnership or other unincorporated association]

D. Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association. [See § 132.103, Paragraph C].

E. Authority to Sue Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association in Common Name. [See § 132.103, Paragraph D].

F. General Appearance Made By Recognizing Court's Authority to Proceed. The statutory list contained in Code of Civil Procedure Section 1014 of what constitutes an appearance is not exclusive. A general appearance occurs when the defendant takes part in the action or in some manner recognizes the authority of the court to proceed (Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147-1149, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 ; Dial 800 v. Fesbinder (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 32, 52, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 711).

G. General Appearance Made By Actions Undertaken by the Defendant While a Motion to Quash or Writ of Mandate Was Pending Which Recognized the Trial Court's Jurisdiction. Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)(1) provides that a defendant or cross-defendant may make a motion to quash and simultaneously answer, demur, or move to strike the complaint or cross-complaint, and these acts do no constitute an appearance unless the court denies the motion, and the party is not deemed to have generally appeared until entry of the order denying the motion. If the order is denied and the defendant or cross-defendant petitions for a writ of mandate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c), the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until the proceedings on the writ petition have finally concluded (Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)(2)). However, subdivision (e) does not change the essential rule that "[a] defendant submits to the court's jurisdiction by making a general appearance in an action" by "participat[ing] in the action in a manner which recognizes the court's jurisdiction." (State Farm General Ins. Co. v. JT's Frames, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 429, 441, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 573). It merely delays the effect of such actions until the motion to quash is denied or, if the defendant seeks writ review, until proceedings on the writ have concluded. Once the motion is denied or writ proceedings have concluded, the actions undertaken by the defendant while the motion or writ was pending which recognized the trial court's jurisdiction will be "deemed" to constitute a general appearance, and no further objection to jurisdiction will be permitted. If the defendant or cross-defendant have freely chosen to become involved in the merits of the action and participated fully in resolving the merits of the litigation while the writ was pending such as conducting discovery or moving for summary judgment, that party has submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the court and waived any further right to contest personal jurisdiction (State Farm General Ins. Co. v. JT's Frames, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 429, 441-444, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 573).

[2] Comments

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant has made a general appearance in the action or proceeding, and that this is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its jurisdiction over defendant.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.101 -132.105, 132.107 -132.115.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Effect of General Appearance

A party, even one who has no minimum contacts with this state, may consent to a court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over him or her in a particular case [see § 132.105]. A general appearance is a form of consent by conduct. Thus, when a party takes part in an action or proceeding, for example, by pleading or participating in the trial, the party has made a general appearance in the action and has consented, or submitted, to the court's jurisdiction over his or her person [Estate of Heil (1989) 259 Cal. Rptr. 28 (State of Nevada, which had been designated in holographic will by testator, who died in California, as the trustee of a charitable trust for the preservation of wild horses in Nevada, held subject to jurisdiction of probate court in California in proceedings to revoke probate of will and to remove Nevada as trustee when Nevada made a general appearance, thereby consenting to jurisdiction, by answering petition to revoke probate of will and by actively participating in discovery and settlement of proceeding)].

By the same token, a general appearance in effect supersedes the service of any defective summons or defective service, or no service of summons at all, although the defendant must be given a reasonable opportunity to be heard and proper notice of any proceeding following the general appearance [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals]. Note, however, that a general appearance after a default judgment does not operate to waive prior defects in services [see In re Marriage of Smith (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 543, 545, 547-552, 185 Cal. Rptr. 411 , discussed in § 132.40[3][f]].

Although the Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations, is limited to foreign corporations, the same rule would apply in the case of a domestic corporation or association [see Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50(a)].

[c] Special and General Appearances Distinguished

Although the Judicial Council's official comment, in its statement of the rule, uses the word "appearance" without qualification, its further comments indicate that it means a general appearance. With respect to the Restatement rule, the American Law Institute explained that states do not usually choose to exercise judicial jurisdiction on the basis of an appearance which is not general [Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 33, Comment c]. Thus, an appearance does not give a state the power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual unless that appearance is a general appearance, that is, one in which the individual takes part in the action or proceeding by pleading or participating in the trial [Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 800, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477] .

A "special" appearance is one in which a defendant or cross defendant appears only to challenge the in personam jurisdiction of the court over his or her person [Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 801, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477] . All other appearances are either "general," which constitutes a submission to the in personam jurisdiction of the court, or "not general," that is, they do not constitute a submission to the in personam jurisdiction of the court. Various acts are declared by statute or case law not to be general appearances [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(d) (no Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 motion to quash service, to stay or dismiss for inconvenient forum, or to dismiss for delay in prosecution, and no Code Civ. Proc. § 473 or 473.5 motion, when joined with a § 418.10 motion, and no application or stipulation to extend time to plead is to be deemed a general appearance by defendant); Code Civ. Proc. § 481.11 (appearance at hearing at which ex parte relief is sought, or appearance at hearing for which ex parte application for provisional remedy is made is not a general appearance); Josephson v. Superior Court (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 354, 358, 362, 33 Cal. Rptr. 196 (motion to reconsider denial of motion to quash service of summons on cross complaint does not constitute a general appearance if it is limited to same grounds as original motion)].

*Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)*provides that a defendant or cross-defendant may make a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 and simultaneously answer, demur, or move to strike the complaint or cross-complaint. Notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 1014, no act by a party who makes a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10, including filing an answer, demurrer, or motion to strike constitutes an appearance, unless the court denies the motion made under this section. If the court denies the motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10, the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until entry of the order denying the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)(1)]. If the motion made under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 is denied and the defendant or cross-defendant petitions for a writ of mandate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c), the defendant or cross-defendant is not deemed to have generally appeared until the proceedings on the writ petition have finally concluded [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)(2)]. Failure to make a motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 at the time of filing a demurrer or motion to strike constitutes a waiver of the issues of lack of personal jurisdiction, inadequacy of process, inadequacy of service of process, inconvenient forum, and delay in prosecution [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e)(3)].

The word "appearance," standing alone, usually means a general and not a special appearance [O'Keefe v. Miller (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 920, 927, 42 Cal. Rptr. 343] . Thus, the word "appearance" in Code Civ. Proc. § 1014 means a general and not a special appearance. That statute provides that a defendant appears in an action when he answers, demurs, files a notice of motion to strike, files a notice of motion to transfer pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 396b, moves for reclassification pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 403.040, gives the plaintiff written notice of appearance, or when an attorney gives written notice of appearance for the defendant. However, this list is not exclusive. In Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 , the California Supreme Court noted that the term "general appearance" may apply to various acts which, under all of the circumstances, are deemed to confer jurisdiction of the person. What is determinative is whether defendant participates in the particular action which in some manner recognizes the court's authority to proceed [see also O'Keefe v. Miller (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 920, 921, 42 Cal. Rptr. 343 (general appearance is not necessarily formal, technical step or act; term applied to various acts which under established principles of procedure are deemed to confer jurisdiction of person)]. Similarly, in Davenport v. Superior Court (1920) 183 Cal. 506, 511, 191 P. 911 , the Supreme Court, although holding that the act in that case did not constitute an appearance, stated: "An act of a defendant by which he intentionally submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in that action for the purpose of obtaining any ruling or order of the court going to the merits of the case, ... which may reasonably be construed to imply that the court has, in that action, acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant, will be equivalent to an appearance, although not strictly in accordance with the terms of [Code Civ. Proc. section 1014]" [see also Creed v. Schultz (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 733, 739-740, 196 Cal. Rptr. 252 ; Palmer v. Superior Court (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 302, 306-307, 13 Cal. Rptr. 301 ; Brown v. Douglas Aircraft Co. (1958) 166 Cal. App. 2d 232, 238, 333 P.2d 59 (an unusual and anomalous case since it was plaintiff who unsuccessfully attempted to show that the corporate defendant's appearance in the action was special and not general); Braden Copper Co. v. Industrial Acci. Com. (1956) 147 Cal. App. 2d 205, 210, 305 P.2d 222] .

For further discussion of special appearances, general appearances, and acts not constituting a general appearance, see Ch. 323, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, (Matthew Bender).

[d] Continuation of Jurisdiction

Once acquired, jurisdiction of the court over the parties continues throughout subsequent proceedings in the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 410.50(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Appearance Is Equivalent to Valid Service

Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 , involved two actions brought by plaintiff's decedent (plaintiff). Plaintiff initially brought an action to recover compensatory and punitive damages for asbestosis. Before trial began, plaintiff was diagnosed with a malignant peritoneal mesothelioma, a fatal cancer primarily triggered by exposure to asbestos, and within a month thereafter, plaintiff filed a second action seeking to recover compensatory and punitive damages for mesothelioma. The actions were consolidated. After trial, judgment was entered in the plaintiff's favor. Defendant appealed. The court of appeal reversed the judgment in its entirety. As to the first action, the court held that the trial court lacked personal jurisdiction over defendant because defendant had not been served in that action. The court found that defendant had not made a general appearance in that action sufficient to constitute the equivalent of personal service. The California Supreme Court granted review (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1132-1137) .

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal with directions to resolve certain remaining issues in that court (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1150) . After holding that both actions were timely under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1137-1147), the court held that the trial court did not lack jurisdiction over defendant in plaintiff's first action. Citing Code Civ. Proc. § 410.50(a), the court noted that a general appearance by a party is equivalent to personal service of summons on that party. The court then noted that the statutory list of acts constituting an appearance specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1014 is not exclusive. Rather, the term may apply to various acts which, under all of the circumstances, are deemed to confer jurisdiction of the person. What is determinative is whether defendant participates in the particular action which in some manner recognizes the authority of the court to proceed (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147) . The trial court had ordered plaintiff's two actions consolidated for all purposes and defendant fully participated without objection in the consolidated action. Defendant thereby made a general appearance (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147-1149) .

Harrington v. Superior Court (1924) 194 Cal. 185, 228 P. 15 , was a proceeding in prohibition to restrain the superior court from proceeding further in a condemnation proceeding in which the defendant filed a general appearance and thereafter a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled, and plaintiff was given immediate possession of the property. Subsequently, the defendant moved to vacate and set aside all proceedings on the ground no summons had been served and, hence, the court had no jurisdiction over the defendant's person or the subject matter.

In denying the writ, the Supreme Court said that process is waived by a general appearance in person or by attorney, entered in the action, or by some act equivalent thereto, such as the filing of a pleading in the case or by otherwise recognizing the authority of the court to proceed with the action. The Court explained that a defendant has a right to demand that process be issued against him or her in the manner provided by law, but if process is not so issued and he or she appears generally without making objection, such appearance, being the purpose of the process, confers jurisdiction of the person and the court is empowered to act in the premises (194 Cal. 185, 189) .

Neihaus v. Superior Court (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 340, 137 Cal. Rptr. 905 , was a personal injury action arising out of an automobile accident in Nevada against, among others, a Nevada resident, who was served with summons in Nevada and who moved to quash service of summons on the ground of lack of personal jurisdiction. The motion was granted. Plaintiff then had the court issue a writ of attachment which was levied on the Nevada resident's right under a liability insurance policy to have the insurer defend and indemnify him on the claim. The trial court denied the Nevada resident's motion to quash the levy of the writ. Defendant's counsel then filed an answer containing affirmative defenses and stating that the defendant was not thereby subjecting his person to the jurisdiction of the court. Later, the California Supreme Court ruled that an insurer's obligation to defend was not subject to attachment as the basis of quasi in rem jurisdiction, and the defendant again moved to quash, and again the motion was denied. The defendant then petitioned the court of appeal for an order restraining the trial court from proceeding with the case on the ground the superior court had neither personal nor quasi in rem jurisdiction over him.

In denying the writ, the court of appeal said that ordinarily no in personam jurisdiction is conferred by service on a defendant in another state when there is neither presence, domicile, nor any act of the defendant within California, but that if the defendant appears by formally answering a complaint, such an appearance is a general appearance and confers jurisdiction on the court when none existed before (69 Cal. App. 3d 340, 345) . The court said that the defendant's argument that the disclaimer clause contained in his filed answer had the effect of somehow transforming the answer into a special appearance for the limited purpose of challenging jurisdiction was without merit, and that it has been long established by decisions of the courts of this state that where a defendant makes a general appearance by the filing of an answer, demurrer, or certain motions, he submits himself or herself to the jurisdiction of the court irrespective of an attempt in the pleading to disclaim such submission or limit the appearance (69 Cal. App. 3d 340, 345) .

[b] General Appearance Made By Recognizing Court's Authority to Proceed

The facts of Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 are discussed in [a], above.

In determining whether a general or special appearance has been made, the appellate court held that the issue is fact-specific, and in the case at bar two paramount facts supported a general appearance: the trial court ordered the plaintiff's two actions to be consolidated for all purposes, and the defendant fully participated without objection in the consolidated action. The defendant thereby made a general appearance (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147) .

In Dial 800 v. Fesbinder (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 32, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 711 , the plaintiff corporations challenged a decision of the trial court which dismissed the corporations' interpleader action filed pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 386. The corporations filed this interpleader complaint and alleged that it held and was required to distribute a particular sum to the correct party. That amount was deposited with the clerk of court. The trial court dismissed the corporations' interpleader action sua sponte based on a private agreement by the company, its owner, and individuals to arbitrate, in Israel, their dispute over the ownership of the shares in the corporations. The trial court found that the arbitration clause deprived the trial court of jurisdiction to resolve the issues raised in the interpleader action.

On appeal, the court reversed. Because the corporations alleged that multiple claims were made against them concerning certain funds, and the funds were tendered to the trial court, the trial court had the power under Code Civ. Proc. § 386 to adjudicate the issues raised by the interpleader action. Because the matter had been submitted to private arbitration by the company, its owner, and individuals, but not the corporations, the trial court did not lose subject matter jurisdiction, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1281.4. A general appearance occurs when the defendant takes part in the action or in some manner recognizes the authority of the court to proceed. If the defendant confines its participation in the action to objecting to lack of jurisdiction over the person, there is no general appearance. However, a party who seeks relief on any basis other than a motion to quash for lack of personal jurisdiction will be deemed to have made a general appearance and waived all objections to defects in service, process, or personal jurisdiction. A general appearance occurs where a party, either directly or through counsel, participates in an action in some manner which recognizes the authority of the court to proceed. It does not require any formal or technical act. Thus, if a defendant seeks any affirmative relief on the merits, the application may be deemed a general appearance. California courts have found that parties have generally appeared under varying circumstances in which the defendants sought affirmative relief. A court is thus required to analyze the defendant's papers to determine if any affirmative relief could be granted on the merits, which is a general appearance. This is distinguished from a mere request for a dismissal based on a statutory provision, which is not a general appearance (118 Cal. App. 4th 32, 52-54) .

[c] General Appearance Made By Actions Undertaken by the Defendant While a Motion to Quash or Writ of Mandate Was Pending Which Recognized the Trial Court's Jurisdiction

In State Farm General Ins. Co. v. JT's Frames, Inc. (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 429, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 573 , appellant JT's Frames, Inc. (JT's), obtained, in a prior Illinois lawsuit, a settlement on behalf of itself and a class of similarly situated entities based on defendant's transmission of over 74,000 unsolicited faxes to class members. In the underlying lawsuit, respondent State Farm General Insurance Company (State Farm) sought a declaration that JT's claims were not covered as "advertising injury" or "property damage" under policies State Farm allegedly issued to the Illinois defendant. JT's moved to quash service of State Farm's complaint on the ground JT's was not subject to personal jurisdiction in California. The trial court denied the motion to quash, and JT's sought a writ in the court of appeal. While the writ petition was pending, the parties moved forward with the litigation, and the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of State Farm shortly before the writ was summarily denied. JT's appealed both the judgment entered and the order denying its motion to quash.

In concluding that the order denying the motion to quash is not appealable where, as here, the party contesting jurisdiction entered a general appearance and litigated the merits, the court of appeal explained that Code of Civ. Proc. § 418.10(e) prevents the inadvertent waiver of objections to jurisdiction by delaying recognition of the party's general participation in the litigation until after the jurisdictional issue is finally resolved. However, Section 418.10(e) does not change the essential rule that a defendant submits to the court's jurisdiction by making a general appearance in an action by participating in the action in a manner which recognizes the court's jurisdiction. It merely delays the effect of such actions until the motion to quash is denied or, if the defendant seeks writ review, until proceedings on the writ have concluded. JT's, having participated fully in resolving the merits of the litigation while the writ was pending, submitted itself to the jurisdiction of the court and waived any further right to contest personal jurisdiction [181 Cal. App. 4th 429, 441-444] .

[a] General Appearance Is Equivalent to Valid Service

In People v. Ciancio (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 175, 192, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 531 , appellant Department of Mental Health (DMH) claimed that the trial court lacked personal jurisdiction over it in a commitment proceeding conducted pursuant to the Sexually Violent Predators Act (SVPA) [Welf. & Inst. Code § 6600 et seq.]. Although DMH had filed documents in the proceeding, responding to an order to show cause (OSC), it claimed that it had made a special appearance and had not waived jurisdiction.

The appellate court initially explained that an SVPA commitment proceeding is a special proceeding of a civil nature, because it is neither an action at law nor a suit in equity, but instead is a civil commitment proceeding commenced by petition independently of a pending action. Accordingly, unless otherwise indicated on the face of the statute, rules of civil procedure will operate (109 Cal. App. 4th 175, 192) .

The court further noted that a general appearance occurs where a party, either directly or through counsel, participates in an action in some manner which recognizes the authority of the court to proceed. It does not require any formal or technical act. The statutory list of acts constituting an appearance, such as filing an answer, demurrer or motion to strike, is not exclusive; rather, the term may apply to various acts which, under all of the circumstances, are deemed to confer jurisdiction of the person. If a defendant raises any issue other than jurisdiction or asks for any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, his appearance is general. A party's statement that its appearance is special is not necessarily conclusive. Thus, opposing a motion on other than jurisdictional grounds has been held to constitute a general appearance. Because DMH filed a response to the OSC in which it argued the merits of the motions, challenged the relief sought by the alleged sexually violent predators, and expressly requested that the motions be denied on their merits, the court concluded that it had made a general appearance in the matter, whether or not it was a the real party in interest or otherwise a party to the proceedings (109 Cal. App. 4th 175, 192-193) .

In Mansour v. Superior Court (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 1750, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 191 , plaintiff, the president and principal stockholder of a California corporation, sued various defendants for defamation, alleging that they had conspired to oust the director of a Delaware corporation and that pursuant to the conspiracy they prepared a report indicating that the individual they were targeting had engaged in unethical and illegal business conduct with the plaintiff. Defendants from Arizona and Arkansas moved to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The plaintiff contended that these defendants could not challenge California's jurisdiction because their attorneys entered general appearances for them by assisting in the preparation of a joint case management statement and appearing at an evaluation hearing. The superior court denied the motion.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that a general appearance occurs where a party, either directly or through counsel, participates in an action in some manner which recognizes the authority of the court to proceed. A general appearance does not require any formal or technical act. The court then discussed the case management evaluation procedure, in which both parties' attorneys had participated, and described this process as being premised on the trial court having jurisdiction over the parties participating in it (38 Cal. App. 4th 1750, 1757) . The court concluded that these defendants had waived their right to challenge the superior court's denial of their motions to quash service by making general appearances in the action.

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. Although the court of appeal granted the writ the mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulled the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal said that where a person makes a general appearance that appearance operates as a consent to jurisdiction over his or her person (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 800-801) .

[2] Comments

CAUTION:

Paragraph E of this form, Tort Action Arose From Contract Executed in California, is based on Dialysis at Sea, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 265 Cal. Rptr. 71 . In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , the California Supreme Court rejected the "but for" test of Dialysis at Sea as too broad and amorphous and, stating that the Court was not persuaded that the "but for" test provides an appropriate general standard, disapproved Dialysis at Sea to the extent it is inconsistent with the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion. The Dialysis at Sea case may still be useful outside the context of ongoing franchise relationships, which was the situation before the Court in the Von's Companies, Inc. case. However, the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion cautioned that mechanical tests are inconsistent with a court's basic task of determining whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice [Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 465 n.8, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 ; see also Cassiar Mining Corp. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 550, 557, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 167 (following Vons Companies, Inc., in an action brought by workers who allegedly sustained asbestos related lung injuries as a result of inhaling asbestos, and noting that Supreme Court rejected mechanical proximate cause test for evaluating connection between nonresident defendant's forum activities and plaintiff's cause of action)]. Therefore, extreme caution should be exercised in engaging in "but for" analysis of the issue. Both Von's Companies, Inc. and Cassiar Mining Corp. are discussed in *§ 132.100[3]*g].

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant performed an act in California giving rise to a cause of action in tort, and that this is sufficient to justify the court's exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over the defendant. An alternative ground for opposition is that the defendant performed an act in California giving rise to a cause of action other than in tort that, combined with other factors, is sufficient to justify the court's exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over the defendant. For discussion concerning limited jurisdiction, see § 132.76[2][b].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.102 -132.106, 132.108 -132.115.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] State's Interest in Torts

A state has a special interest in exercising judicial jurisdiction over those who commit torts within its territory because torts involve wrongful conduct which a state seeks to deter, and against which it attempts to afford protection, by providing that a tortfeasor shall be liable for damages which are the proximate result of the tort. Furthermore, witnesses in a tort action will usually reside in the state where the complained of act took place. Hence, it is reasonable that a state should exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who has done, or has caused to be done, in the state what is claimed to be a tortious act [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

The rule has its most obvious application to torts which involve acts or omissions that are dangerous to life or to tangible things, such as shooting a gun or driving an automobile within the state. But it is not essential that the act or omission should actually constitute a tort or dangerous act, or that the injury be to persons or tangible things; it is enough that the complaint states a cause of action in tort based on such act or omission, and the action may be based on injury to intangible interests, as, for example, one's reputation. Nor is it essential that the injury occur within California. The cause of action may be based on damage or injury outside the state caused by an act or omission within the state if there is a sufficient relationship existing between the individual and the state [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

[c] Nontort Action

A state will usually have judicial jurisdiction over an individual who does, or causes to be done, in the state an act, even though it is not tortious, as to causes of action arising from the act, for the reason, among others, that a heavy burden may be imposed on a local inhabitant if he or she is compelled to litigate outside the state a claim based on an act performed within the state [Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 36, Comment e on Subsection (2)]. Whether it is reasonable for a state to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual on the basis of an act or omission not claimed to be tortious depends on the facts of the case. The principal factors are: (1) the nature and quality of the act or omission; (2) the extent of the relationship of the state to the defendant and to the plaintiff; and (3) the degree of inconvenience which would result to the defendant by being forced to stand suit in the state on the particular cause of action [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see also County of Humboldt v. Harris (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860, 254 Cal. Rptr. 49 ; see § 132.107[3][b]].

It is also settled that the state's jurisdiction is likely to be upheld when it is based on a particular statute or regulation or when the isolated act has injurious consequences in the state. As stated in the Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 36, Comment e on Subsection (2), it is reasonable that a state should exercise judicial jurisdiction over the defendant as to causes of action arising from an act performed, or caused to be performed, by him or her in the state which the state subjects to special regulation or when the act performed by him or her has substantial consequences there even though the act is an isolated act not constituting the doing of business in the state [County of Humboldt v. Harris (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860-861, 254 Cal. Rptr. 49] .

Conversely, although minimal contacts with this state essential to the exercise of jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant may be grounded in doing an act in this state, this state does not have jurisdiction if the maintenance of the suit offends traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice and the nature of the act performed in this state and the nature of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable [Floyd J. Harkness Co. v. Amezcua (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 687, 691, 131 Cal. Rptr. 667] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tort Action Against Nonresident Individual

In Rosenblatt v. American Cyanamid Co. (1965) 86 S. Ct. 1, 15 L. Ed. 2d 39 , a United States citizen was sued in a New York state court for injunctive relief and damages in connection with an alleged conspiracy to convert trade secrets, and he was served in Rome, Italy, under New York's long arm statute, which provided for in personam jurisdiction on the basis of the commission of a tortious act in the state. The plaintiff alleged that pursuant to a conspiracy to purchase biological cultures and confidential documents which had been stolen from plaintiff by one of its employees at its New York plant, and which were to be used by an Italian company in the production of antibiotics in competition with those of plaintiff, the defendant had flown to New York where he had inspected and purchased the stolen material and had paid part of the purchase price, and then returned with the material to Italy. Defendant's motion to dismiss the complaint for lack of personal jurisdiction over him was denied in the trial court, affirmed in the appellate department, and unanimously affirmed by the New York Court of Appeals. Pending appeal to the United States Supreme Court, the defendant applied for a stay of judgment.

In denying the stay on the ground that defendant's constitutional argument (that New York's long arm statute, as applied to him under the circumstances of the case, was unconstitutional under the Fourteenth Amendment) was insubstantial and that plenary review by the Court was unlikely, Justice Goldberg, in a chambers opinion, said that the logic of the Court's decisions in International Shoe Co. v. Washington (1945) 326 U.S. 310, 66 S. Ct. 154, 90 L. Ed. 95 , and McGee v. International Life Ins. Co. (1957) 355 U.S. 220, 78 S. Ct. 199, 2 L. Ed. 2d 223 , supports the validity of state long arm statutes such as the one involved which bases in personam jurisdiction on commission of a tortious act in the forum state, that since those decisions a large number of states have enacted similar statutes, and that, in cases under the statutes in state and federal courts, jurisdiction on the basis of a single tort has been uniformly upheld. Justice Goldberg said that the situation is exactly that of the nonresident motorist statutes, which were long ago upheld, except that the highways are not directly involved, and that it is now clear, if it was ever in doubt, that the nonresident motorist cases were not really based on consent but on the interest of the forum state and the fairness of trial there to the defendant [15 L. Ed. 2d 39, 43] .

[b] Nontort Action Against Nonresident Individual

County of Humboldt v. Harris (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 254 Cal. Rptr. 49 , was an action against a Nevada resident by a county on behalf of a minor child to establish paternity, set child support, and recover funds expended for the support of the child pursuant to aid to families with dependent children. The defendant moved to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction. The child was conceived in October 1984. The defendant admitted the sexual intercourse but claimed to have had virtually no contact with California since 1982. The trial court granted the motion, and the county appealed, contending that personal jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant was specifically authorized by former Civ. Code § 7007 [now see Fam. Code § 7620], providing in part that a person who has sexual intercourse in California thereby submits to the jurisdiction of California courts as to an action brought under the Uniform Parentage Act, former Civ. Code § 7000 et seq. [now see Fam. Code § 7600 et seq.] with respect to a child who may have been conceived by that act of intercourse.

The court of appeal agreed, and reversed the order. The court said that the requirement of minimum contacts is satisfied not only by doing business or owning property in the forum state, but also by doing an act provided (1) the cause of action alleged arises from the act performed in the state; and (2) in light of the circumstances the exercise of the jurisdiction is reasonable (206 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860) .

Floyd J. Harkness Co. v. Amezcua (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 687, 131 Cal. Rptr. 667 , was an action by a California corporation based on promissory notes given by citizen of Mexico in connection with contracts to grow vegetables in Mexico for consignment to plaintiff. The trial court granted defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction and the plaintiff appealed. Although it affirmed the order on the ground the defendant's contacts with California were too tenuous to support jurisdiction, the court of appeal nevertheless said that minimal contacts with this state essential to the exercise of jurisdiction over a nonresident may be grounded in doing an act in this state (60 Cal.

App. 3d 687, 691) .

[c] Tort Action Against Foreign Corporation

The facts and procedural background of Keeton v. Hustler Magazine, Inc. (1984) 465 U.S. 770, 104 S. Ct. 1473, 79 L. Ed. 2d 790 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][p]. In holding that the United States District Court in New Hampshire had personal jurisdiction over the defendant corporation and reversing the judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, the United States Supreme Court held: (1) a state has an especial interest in exercising judicial jurisdiction over those who commit torts within its territory, that this is because torts involve wrongful conduct which a state seeks to deter, and against which it attempts to afford protection, by providing that a tortfeasor shall be liable for damages which are the proximate result of his or her tort (quoting New Hampshire case which was quoting Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 36, Comment c.); (2) this interest extends to libel actions brought by nonresidents; (3) false statements of fact harm both the subject of the falsehood and the readers of the statement; (4) New Hampshire may rightly employ its libel laws to discourage the deception of its own citizens; (5) there is no constitutional value in false statements of fact; (6) New Hampshire may also extend its concern to the injury that in-state libel causes within New Hampshire to a nonresident (465 U.S. 770, 776) ; and (7) the tort of libel is generally held to occur wherever the offending material is circulated (citing Restatement (Second), Torts, § 577A, Comment a. (1977)) (465 U.S. 770, 777) .

The facts and procedural background of Magnecomp Corp. v. Athene Co. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 257 Cal. Rptr. 278 , are discussed in § 132.75[3][a]. In reversing the order quashing service of summons on a Japanese corporation in an action for alleged misappropriation of trade secrets on the ground the defendant's contacts with California were sufficient to permit the exercise of limited jurisdiction over it, the court of appeal, citing authorities, said that (1) the allegations of misappropriation of Magnecomp's gimbal assemblies within California alone satisfy the minimum contacts requirement; (2) a state has a special interest in exercising jurisdiction over those who commit tortious acts within its territory and it is, therefore, reasonable that a state should exercise jurisdiction over those who commit or cause to be committed in the state what is claimed to be a tortious act; (3) California may properly exercise jurisdiction over an individual whose tortious conduct it seeks to deter; (4) under California's long arm statute and federal due process, a tortious act, standing alone, is sufficient to find personal jurisdiction if that act is aimed at a resident of the state or has effects in the state; (5) a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who has performed, or has caused to be performed, an act in the state with respect to any cause of action in tort arising from the act; and (6) a court may exercise personal jurisdiction over a person, who acts directly or by agent, as to a cause of action or claim for relief arising from the person's causing tortious injury by an act or omission in this state (209 Cal. App. 3d 526, 535-536) .

[d] Tort Action Arose From Contract Executed in California

Dialysis at Sea, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 265 Cal. Rptr. 71 , arose out of an action for medical malpractice against, among others, a foreign corporation (DAS), which provided medical service to travelers. Plaintiff alleged that she and her husband went on a cruise arranged by DAS during which hemodialysis was provided to her husband under the supervision of a qualified physician, and that defendants negligently rendered that medical treatment resulting in permanent injury to her husband, which was in turn a factor contributing to his death. DAS moved to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction on the ground it was a Massachusetts corporation with its sole office in Boston, that it never had any offices in California, had never sought to qualify to do business in California or been authorized to do business in California, had never appointed an agent in California for service of process, had never owned property, appointed agents, had telephone listings or bank accounts in California, and had never paid any taxes to the State of California, that its only communications with individuals in California had been by telephone or through correspondence, and that every activity or occurrence alleged in the complaint transpired on a foreign commercial vessel which had traveled in and around the Mediterranean Sea, and which had not at any time relevant to the action any connection or contact with the State of California. Plaintiff did not dispute that DAS's contacts with California were insufficient to subject it to general jurisdiction, but that the contacts subjected DAS to limited jurisdiction with respect to the action sued on. The motion was denied, and DAS petitioned for a writ of mandate.

In denying the writ the court of appeal pointed out that in her verified complaint, plaintiff alleged that the contract leading to the cruise on which medical services would be provided was negotiated and entered into in Whittier, California, and that DAS argued the allegation was factually incorrect, relying on the statement in the declaration in support of its motion to quash that the only communication with individuals in California had been by telephone and through correspondence. The court said that the absence of physical travel to California does not, however, negate the possibility that the contract was entered into in this state for purposes of assuming jurisdiction, and that accordingly, consistent with the rules for reviewing factual determinations by the trial court, it assumed that the contract was entered into in this state. DAS also admitted that it had conducted several limited mailings, approximately twice a year, of its brochures to kidney centers in California (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 793-794) .

Distinguishing Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 174 Cal. Rptr. 885 (discussed in § 132.73[4][a]) and Sklar v. Princess Properties International, Ltd. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1202, 240 Cal. Rptr. 102 (discussed in § 132.75[4][a]), and declining to follow the broad language of those cases, the court, quoting Prejean v. Sonatrach, Inc. (5th Cir. 1981) 652 F.2d 1260, 1270 n.21 , said that, logically, there is no reason why a tort cannot grow out of a contractual contact. In a case like this, the contractual contact is a "but for" causative factor for the tort since it brought the parties within tortious striking distance of each other, and that while the relationship between a tort suit and contractual contact is certainly more tenuous than when a tort suit arises from a tort contact, that only goes to whether the contact is by itself sufficient for due process, not whether the suit arises from the contact (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 795) . The court concluded under this reasoning that plaintiff's causes of action were sufficiently related to the contract consummated in California to satisfy the "arising out of" prong of the standard (that is, the cause of action must arise out of an act performed or transaction consummated in the forum, or defendant must perform some other act by which he or she purposefully avails himself or herself of the privilege of conducting activities in the forum, thereby invoking the benefits and protections of its laws) (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 795) .

The court said that the plaintiff's causes of action were grounded on the allegedly negligent medical treatment rendered to her deceased husband while they were passengers on a cruise arranged by DAS, that under the contract entered into in California, DAS agreed to provide medical care and treatment for the decedent during the cruise, and that absent that contract DAS would not have been in striking distance of the decedent. In other words, "but for" the contract plaintiff and decedent would not have been on the cruise and the decedent would not have been subjected to DAS's allegedly negligent medical treatment (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 795) . The court further held that the exercise of jurisdiction under the circumstances would be reasonable (216 Cal. App. 3d 788, 796) .

In Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085 , the California Supreme Court rejected the "but for" test of Dialysis at Sea as too broad and amorphous and, stating that the Court was not persuaded that the "but for" test provides an appropriate general standard, disapproved Dialysis at Sea to the extent it is inconsistent with the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion. The Dialysis at Sea case may still be useful outside the context of ongoing franchise relationships, which was the situation before the Court in the Von's Companies, Inc. case. However, the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion cautioned that mechanical tests are inconsistent with a court's basic task of determining whether the exercise of personal jurisdiction would comport with fair play and substantial justice [Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 465 n.8, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085] . Therefore, extreme caution should be exercised in engaging in "but for" analysis of the issue.

Moreover, Von's Companies, Inc. rejected the "proximate cause" test applied by Sklar v. Princess Properties International, Ltd. (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 1202, 240 Cal. Rptr. 102 and Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 546, 174 Cal. Rptr. 885 because it is inconsistent with the rationale underlying specific jurisdiction in the context of an ongoing franchise relationship and disapproved both Circus Circus Hotels, Inc. and Sklar to the extent they are inconsistent with the opinion in Vons Companies, Inc. [Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest

Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 461, 464, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085] . For discussion of Von's Companies, Inc., see § 132.100[3][g].

[e] Tortious Act of Corporate Officer or Director

Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , was an action by the former owner of a California corporation against six nonresident corporate officers and directors and a nonresident corporation for breach of contract, fraud, breach of a written employment contract, breach of an agreement to convey stock, conspiracy to defraud, conspiracy to induce a breach of contract, and fraudulent transfer of securities. Although plaintiff's complaint alleged that at all times the individual defendants were acting within the course and scope of their agency and employment by the out-of-state corporation, she sought jurisdiction over each based on their individual tortious conduct toward her. The individual defendants' motion to quash service of summons on the ground that their activities within and other contacts with California were in performance of their duties as corporate officers or directors was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to two of the defendants, one of whom had committed tortious acts toward the plaintiff in California (fraudulent misrepresentations and nondisclosure) and the other of whom had committed tortious acts (fraudulent misrepresentations and nondisclosure) in New York which was purposefully directed at plaintiff in California and had a tortious effect here, and that, with respect to both, sufficient minimum contacts had been established for personal jurisdiction (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 114) . The court said personal jurisdiction may be exercised over a defendant who has caused an effect in the forum state by an act or omission occurring elsewhere (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 112) , and that, although corporate officers and directors cannot ordinarily be held personally liable for the acts or obligations of their corporation, they may become liable if they directly authorize or actively participate in wrongful or tortious conduct. The court further pointed out that plaintiff further contended that defendants were individually liable under Corp. Code §§ 25401, 25504, and 25504.1 for the fraudulent acquisition of securities in California, and that the intentional misrepresentations and nondisclosure by the defendants induced her to sell her stock in her California corporation as part of the buy-sell agreement between her and the foreign corporation (217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 113) .

[f] Tortious Act of Counsel for Foreign Corporation

The facts and procedural background of Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 , are discussed in § 132.115[3][a]. Although the corporate counsel, in her affidavit in support of her motion to quash service of summons, in effect denied any meaningful contact with California and averred that her California contacts made in connection with the prior action against the corporation was in her role as corporate officer and counsel and the work incidental thereto, she conceded that she participated in the settlement negotiations in the prior lawsuit on behalf of her corporate client, by acts and correspondence from outside California, which she intended (or reasonably should have known) would effect a settlement of that action, without knowledge of or authorization of the corporation's California attorney of record and without payment of the attorney's fee her client had agreed to pay.

In denying the peremptory writ of mandate as to both defendants, the court of appeal, with respect to corporate counsel, said that for jurisdictional purposes the acts of corporate officers and directors, in their official capacities, are acts exclusively of the corporation and are thus not material for purposes of establishing minimum contacts as to individuals, and that implicit in this principle is the consideration that corporations are separate legal entities that cannot speak or act without their designated officers and directors. Accordingly, acts performed by individuals in such official capacities may not reasonably be attributed to them as individual acts creating personal jurisdiction (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 713) . The court further explained that California case law concerning personal jurisdiction over employees of foreign corporations does not expressly state the rule that employees are to be treated differently than officers and directors, but it is clear that employees have not received the same "official capacity" immunity that officers and directors receive. The implicit basis for different treatment is that employees are not necessary in order for the corporation to act; they merely perform services for the corporation (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 713) . After discussing several cases (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 713-715) , the court concluded that corporate counsel is not entitled to the same "official capacity" shield from personal jurisdiction as are corporate officers and directors, that counsel merely provides legal counsel and services and does not speak for or act as the corporation in the same manner that officers and directors do, and that corporate counsel should be treated for purposes of personal jurisdiction in the same manner as employees or independent contractors for the corporation rather than as officers of directors (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 715-716) . The court said that an intentionally tortious act of the corporation would confer personal jurisdiction over participating corporate counsel when knowledge of the wrongful nature of the corporation's acts is alleged (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 716) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Tort Action Against Nonresident Individual

In Threlkeld v. Tucker (9th Cir. 1974) 496 F.2d 1101 , where the defendant was a Connecticut resident and had brought more than 30 lawsuits in California courts in the period of six years, the court of appeals stated in dictum that because the defendant's deliberate and repeated use of the California courts amounted to his purposefully availing himself of the privilege of conducting activities within the state, the defendant became subject to future long-arm jurisdiction in the California courts in an action (in this case, malicious prosecution) arising out of such conduct (496 F.2d 1101, 1103) .

See also Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 114, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , discussed in § 132.107[3][e].

[b] Tort Action Arose From Contract Executed in California

The facts and procedural background of State of Oregon v. Superior Court (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1550, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 909 , are discussed under § 132.100[4][b]. In denying defendants' petition for a writ of mandate seeking to compel the trial court to quash service of the summons and complaint, the court stated that the defendants' recruitment activities directed at the deceased were contractual contacts which brought the deceased within tortious striking distance of defendant medical practitioners (24 Cal. App. 4th 1550, 1557-1561) [but see Vons Companies, Inc. v. Seabest Foods, Inc. (1996) 14 Cal. 4th 434, 465-468, 475, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 899, 926 P.2d 1085] , in the context of ongoing franchise relationships, the Court rejected the "but for" test of State of Oregon as too broad and amorphous and, stating that the Court was not persuaded that the "but for" test provides an appropriate general standard, disapproved State of Oregon to the extent it is inconsistent with the Von's Companies, Inc. opinion.

[c] Tortious Act of Corporate Officer or Director

Seagate Technology v. A.J. Kogyo Co. (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 268 Cal. Rptr. 586 , was an action against, among others, a Japanese corporation and a Japanese citizen, who was the president of both the Japanese corporation and a California corporation and who had caused the Japanese corporation to issue a guaranty of the California corporation's business transactions with plaintiff, brought by a California manufacturer to recover the loss it sustained when the California corporation declared bankruptcy. The trial court granted the president's motion to quash service of summons, and plaintiff appealed. In reversing the order, the court explained that for purposes of liability, the acts of the corporation may or may not be the acts of the individual, that it is well settled that corporate directors cannot be held vicariously liable for the corporation's torts in which they do not participate, that their liability, if any, stems from their own tortious conduct, not from their status as directors or officers of the enterprise, that an officer or director will not be liable for torts in which he or she does not personally participate, of which he or she has no knowledge, or to which he or she has not consented, and that while the corporation itself may be liable for such acts, the individual officer or director will be immune unless he or she authorizes, directs, or in some meaningful sense actively participates in the wrongful conduct (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 701) . The court said that directors are jointly liable with the corporation and may be joined as defendants if they personally directed or participated in the tortious conduct (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 701-702) . The court explained that the rule has its roots in the law of agency, that directors are said to be agents of their corporate principal, and that the true rule is that the agent is liable for his or her own acts, regardless of whether the principal is liable or amenable to judicial action (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 702) . The court concluded that some acts taken by a corporate officer are not only the acts of the corporation, but the acts of the individual, and that where an act of this type creates contact with the forum state, that contact may be the contact of the individual as well as the contact of the corporation and, therefore, should be considered in determining if the forum state has personal jurisdiction over the individual (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 702) . The court said the basis for the exercise of jurisdiction over the individual was his causing an effect in the forum state, that is, his causing plaintiff to extend credit to the California corporation because of the guaranty he issued as president of both corporations (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 702, 704-705) . The court pointed out that a proper basis of judicial jurisdiction is the doing of an act elsewhere with the intention of causing effects in the state, and that it follows that if a corporate officer may be held personally responsible for causing the corporation to act, that act may be imputed to the officer for purposes of establishing personal jurisdiction over him or her (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 703) .

Note that the court pointed out, however, that the reversal did not end the matter, that on remand jurisdiction might be defeated by a finding that the individual did not personally cause the Japanese corporation to issue the guaranty, the letter (of guaranty) as written by the individual (as opposed to the translation) was not in fact a guarantee to make good the debts at issue, or by a finding that there was no misrepresentation by him, that the letter was written with the intention of performing, although the promise stated was later breached (219 Cal. App. 3d 696, 706) .

§ 132.108 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant's Out-of-State Act Caused Effect in California and Exercise of Jurisdiction Is Otherwise Reasonable

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

DEFENDANT'S CAUSING AN EFFECT IN THIS STATE BY AN ACT DONE ELSEWHERE IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER HIM/HER/IT WHEN THE CAUSE OF ACTION ARISES OUT OF THE EFFECT AND THE EXERCISE OF JURISDICTION IS NOT OTHERWISE UNREASONABLE IN THAT _____ [specify, e.g., DEFENDANT INTENDED TO CAUSE THE EFFECT].

[EITHER, if defendant is an individual]

A. Effect Caused in California by Individual. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who causes effects in the state by an act performed elsewhere with respect to any cause of action arising from these effects unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 788-790, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 , aff'g Jones v. Calder (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 128, 187 Cal. Rptr. 825 ; Sibley v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 442, 446, 128 Cal. Rptr. 34, 546 P.2d 322 ; Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 306, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548).

[OR, if defendant is a foreign corporation]

A. Effect Caused in California by Foreign Corporation. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation which causes effects in the state by an act performed elsewhere with respect to any cause of action arising from these effects unless the nature of these effects and of the corporation's relationship to the state makes the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations; see Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 669, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 ; United California Bank v. First Bank of Oak Park (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 443, 159 Cal. Rptr. 607). The rule relating to foreign corporations is the same as in the case of a natural person (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[CONTINUE]

B. Purpose of Rule. The intent of the rule, by which a court may exercise personal jurisdiction in actions based on effects caused in California by acts occurring elsewhere, is to reach wrongful activity outside the state causing injury within the state (Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 96, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132).

C. Types of Effects Caused in California by Acts Done Elsewhere. There are three possible situations in which an act performed elsewhere may cause an effect in this state: (1) the act was performed with the intention of causing effects in the state; (2) the act, although not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state, could reasonably have been expected to do so; and (3) the act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and could not reasonably have been expected to do so (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 304, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548).

[EITHER]

D. Act Done With Intention of Causing Effect in California. In the case of an act performed outside a state with the intention of causing effects in the state, the state may exercise the same judicial jurisdiction over the defendant as to any cause of action arising from the effects as it could have exercised had these effects resulted from an act performed within its territory (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1065, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 ; Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 278, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 ; United California Bank v. First Bank of Oak Park (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 443, 159 Cal. Rptr. 607 ; Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 304, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548). It is reasonable to exercise jurisdiction on the basis of the defendant intentionally causing effects in the state by an omission or act done elsewhere whenever (a) the effects are of a nature that the state treats as exceptional and subjects to special regulation or (b) the defendant has, in connection with causing such effects in the forum state, invoked the benefits and protections of its laws (Jamshid-Negad v. Kessler (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1708, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 621).

[OR]

D. Act Done With Reasonable Foreseeability That It Would Cause Effect in California. Whether the forum state may exercise personal jurisdiction over the defendant for the effects of an act not performed with the intention of causing effects in California, but which could reasonably have been expected to do so, depends on a variety of factors, including the extent of the relationship of the state to the defendant and to the plaintiff, the nature and quality of the effects resulting from the act, and the degree of inconvenience which would result to the defendant from being forced to stand suit in the state on the particular cause of action (Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 278, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 ; Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 902-903, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 ; Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see also St. Joe Paper Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 997, 175 Cal. Rptr. 94).

[OR]

D. Act Done Without Intent to Cause Effect and Without Reasonable Foreseeability That It Would Cause Effect in California. Although the state may not constitutionally exercise jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant whose act outside California caused effects in California when the defendant did not intend to cause effects in California and could not reasonably have been expected to do so, the defendant is subject to jurisdiction in California for the effect of the act when both the plaintiff and the defendant have an extensive relationship with the state (see Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 278, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 ; Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 904, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 ; Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 802, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477).

[2] Comments

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant did some act outside California that caused an effect in California giving rise to the cause of action, and the court's exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over the defendant is reasonable under the circumstances, such as when the defendant intended to cause the effect or reasonably could have foreseen that the effect would result. For discussion regarding limited personal jurisdiction, see § 132.76[2][b].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.102 -132.107, 132.109 -132.115.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 132.88.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Reasonableness of Jurisdiction

Although the minimal contacts with this state essential to the exercise of jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant may be grounded in causing an effect in this state by an act or omission which occurs elsewhere, this state does not have jurisdiction if the maintenance of the suit offends traditional notions of fair play and substantial justice and the nature of the effect of the act performed elsewhere and the nature of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable [Sibley v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 442, 445-446, 128 Cal. Rptr. 34, 546 P.2d 322 ; Floyd J. Harkness Co. v. Amezcua (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 687, 691, 131 Cal. Rptr. 667 ; see also Farris v. Capt. J. B. Fronapfel Co. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 982, 988-989, 227 Cal. Rptr. 619 (discussed in § 132.88[3] [b]; see also § 132.86].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Effect Caused in California by Individual

The facts and procedural background of Calder v. Jones (1984) 465 U.S. 783, 104 S. Ct. 1482, 79 L. Ed. 2d 804 , aff'g Jones v. Calder (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 128, 187 Cal. Rptr. 825 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][p]. In holding that California had personal jurisdiction over the nonresident defendants in the action for libel on the ground that defendants' intentional conduct in Florida was calculated to cause injury to plaintiff in California (465 U.S. 783, 791) , the Court explained that the allegedly libelous story concerned the California activities of a California resident, that it impugned the professionalism of an entertainer whose television career was centered in California, that the article was drawn from California sources, that the brunt of the harm, in terms both of plaintiff's emotional distress and the injury to her professional reputation, was suffered in California, and that, in sum, California was the focal point both of the story and of the harm suffered. The Court held that jurisdiction over the defendants was therefore proper in California based on the "effects" in California of their Florida conduct (465 U.S. 783, 788-789) . Rejecting the defendants' argument that they were not responsible for the circulation of the article in California, the Court said that their intentional, and allegedly tortious, actions were expressly aimed at California, that one defendant wrote and the other edited an article that they knew would have a potentially devastating impact on plaintiff, and that that injury would be felt in California where plaintiff lived and worked and in which the magazine had its largest circulation (465 U.S. 783, 789-790) . The Court said that under the circumstances, the defendants had to "reasonably anticipate being haled into court" in California to answer for the truth of the statements made in their article (465 U.S. 783, 790) and that they were primary participants in alleged wrongdoing intentionally directed at a California resident (465 U.S. 783, 790) .

Sibley v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 442, 128 Cal. Rptr. 34, 546 P.2d 322 , was a proceeding in mandate to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on a nonresident guarantor after the trial court had denied the nonresident's motion to do so. The underlying action was by a California limited partnership against the nonresident and others, alleging breach of a California limited partnership agreement and breach of a guaranty of the performance of the general partner, a Georgia corporation. The guarantor was the nonresident defendant, who was a resident of Florida.

The Supreme Court pointed out that one of the recognized bases for jurisdiction in California arises when the defendant has caused an "effect" in the state by an act or omission which occurs elsewhere (16 Cal. 3d 442, 445) . The Court said that this ground for assertion of jurisdiction is discussed by the Judicial Council in its comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10 as follows: a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who causes effects in the state by an omission or act performed elsewhere with respect to causes of action arising from these effects, unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable, and that when jurisdiction over an individual is based solely on such act or omission, only a claim for relief arising from such act or omission may be asserted against the individual (16 Cal. 3d 442, 446) . The Court, however, found that the exercise of jurisdiction on the facts before it would be unreasonable (16 Cal. 3d 442, 448) and granted the writ of mandate.

Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 , was a mandate proceeding which arose out of an action for damages and other relief by a California corporation with its principal office in Los Angeles against a Pennsylvania resident, three other defendants, and numerous Does for defrauding the plaintiff by submitting to it falsified financial records relating to the operations of plaintiff's Pennsylvania-based subsidiary. The subsidiary had been acquired by plaintiff under an acquisition agreement and reorganization plan. The acquisition agreement provided for exchange of the subsidiary's shares for shares of plaintiff issued for that purpose under either of two options at the election of the subsidiary's shareholders. One option, under which 12.1 shares of the subsidiary were exchanged for one share of plaintiff, included participation in a reserve stock "A" performance program under which additional shares of plaintiff's stock would be issued by plaintiff, based on the profit performance of the subsidiary during a two-year period following closing. Fraudulent financial records of the subsidiary's operations allegedly supplied to plaintiff by the conspirators caused it to issue 18,607 shares of its common stock in 1969 which were not properly issuable in view of the true profit of the subsidiary. Other injury allegedly incurred by plaintiff as a result of the conspiracy and continued submission of false financial information through 1972 included that resulting from the contribution of additional capital based on the assumed earning capacity and the loss of a beneficial contract to sell the subsidiary when the true facts were discovered, bringing the total damages alleged to $11 million. The Pennsylvania resident moved to quash service of summons supported by a declaration averring in effect that he had no contacts at all with California. Plaintiff submitted opposing declarations averring that the nonresident as the controller of te subsidiary, by his own uncontadicted admission, had prepared the false financial reports and had benefitted from the fraud by receiving more of plaintiff's shares in exchange for his shares of the subsidiary than that to which he was entitled. The trial court denied the motion, and the nonresident petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

In denying the writ, the court of appeal, after listing the bases of judicial jurisdiction over individuals (set out in § 132.100), said that the only basis that applied to the nonresident was causing an effect in the state by an act or omission elsewhere (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 303) . The court pointed out that the Judicial Council's comment concerning this basis stated that a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who causes effects in the state by an omission or act performed elsewhere with respect to causes of action arising from these effects, unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable, and that when jurisdiction over an individual is based solely on such act or omission, only a claim for relief arising from the act or omission may be asserted against the individual (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 303) . The court held that jurisdiction was proper based on the nonresident's performing an act outside California with the intention of causing an effect in California, the effect being the issuance of securities by plaintiff in violation of former Corp. Code § 26104, a regulation designed in part to protect shareholders of California corporations (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 304-308) .

[b] Effect Caused in California by Foreign Corporation

Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior CourtSecrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of a products liability action by a California resident against a foreign corporation for injuries sustained as a result of using a machine manufactured by the defendant and sold to plaintiff's employer. Defendant's motion to quash service of summons was denied, and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

In denying the writ on the ground the defendant had sufficient minimum contacts with California to support the trial court's assertion of jurisdiction over it in the case, the Supreme Court said that California has recognized that a state may exercise jurisdiction over one who causes effects in the state by an act or omission performed elsewhere with respect to causes of action arising from the effects, and that this was so unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state made the exercise of jurisdiction unreasonable (33 Cal. 3d 664, 669) .

Note that the Court in Secrest stated the rule set out in the first Alternative Paragraph A was applicable to individual defendants, but the Court applied the rule to a foreign corporation; the case would therefore support the rule set forth in the second Alternative Paragraph A, which is identical in all respects except that it refers to a foreign corporation rather than an individual.

United California Bank v. First Bank of Oak Park (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 159 Cal. Rptr. 607 , was a declaratory relief action against an Illinois bank by a California bank that had participated in a loan secured by a certificate of deposit issued by an Illinois bank after the borrower filed for bankruptcy and defendant cancelled the certificate of deposit. The Illinois bank had issued the certificate of deposit knowing that the depositor, who was heavily indebted to it, intended to use the certificate in California to secure a loan and that the security would be worthless because it would be subject to the Illinois bank's right of offset against the depositor's indebtedness to it. The certificate was so used as security for a substantial loan made to the depositor by the California bank. Thereafter, the Illinois bank exercised its right of offset by canceling the certificate of deposit. The depositor defaulted on the California loan and subsequently filed for bankruptcy.

In reversing the order quashing service of summons, the court of appeal, quoting the Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, said that a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who causes effects in the state by an omission or act performed elsewhere, with respect to causes of action arising from those effects, unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of jurisdiction unreasonable (98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 443) .

[c] Purpose of Rule

The facts and procedural background of Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. Although the United States Supreme Court held that the denial of the motion to quash was error and reversed the judgment of the California Supreme Court, it said that the effects test, set forth in Restatement (Second), Conflicts of Law, § 37 (1971), which provides that a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who causes effects in the state by an act performed elsewhere with respect to any cause of action arising from these effects unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable, although not binding on the Supreme Court, was intended to reach wrongful activity outside of the state causing injury within the state, such as shooting a bullet from one state into another state, or commercial activity affecting state residents (436 U.S. 84, 96) . The Court added, however, that even in such situations the Restatement recognizes that there might be circumstances that would render unreasonable the assertion of jurisdiction over the nonresident defendant, and held that such was so in the case before it (436 U.S. 84, 96) .

[d] Types of Effects Caused in California by Acts Done Elsewhere

The facts and procedural background of Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 , are discussed under § 132.108[3][a], above. In denying the writ of mandate, the court of appeal, quoting Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 37, Comment a, said that there are three possible situations: (1) the act was performed with the intention of causing effects in this state; (2) the act, although not performed with the intention of causing effects in this state, could reasonably have been expected to do so; and (3) the act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and could not reasonably have been expected to do so (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 304) .

[e] Act Done With Intention of Causing Effect in California

In Snowney v. Harrah's Entertainment, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 1054, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 33, 112 P.3d 28 , plaintiff hotel guest, a California resident, filed a class action against defendant Nevada hotels for failing to provide notice of an energy surcharge imposed on hotel guests. The trial court granted the hotels' motion to quash the summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The appellate court reversed and the action was appealed to the Supreme Court.

The California Supreme Court reviewed the federal cases addressing internet web sites and their impact on personal jurisdiction, but has not adopted a particular approach whether a web site available in California by itself is "doing business" in the state (35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064) . However, the Court did find that a Nevada hotel chain web site, by any standard, established purposeful availment by touting the proximity of their hotels to California, providing driving directions from California to their hotels, specifically targeting residents of California, many of their patrons come from California and that some of these patrons undoubtedly made reservations using their Web site. As such, the hotel purposefully derived a benefit from their internet activities in California (35 Cal. 4th 1054, 1064-1065) .

The California Supreme Court further held that the assertion of specific jurisdiction was fair where a hotel advertised heavily in California, obtained a significant percentage of its business from California residents, and maintained an Internet website and toll-free phone number where visitors or callers could obtain room quotes and make reservations. The hotel purposefully availed itself of the privilege of doing business in California. The guest's causes of action were premised on alleged omissions during the hotel's consummation of transactions with California residents and in its California advertisements. Because the harm alleged by the guest related directly to the content of the hotel's promotional activities in California, an inherent relationship between the guest's claims and the hotel's contacts with California existed. By purposefully and successfully soliciting the business of California residents, the hotels could reasonably anticipate being subject to litigation in California in the event their solicitations caused an injury to a California resident.

In Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the California Supreme Court considered for the first time the scope of personal jurisdiction based solely on Internet use, and concluded that a California court improperly exercised personal jurisdiction over a defendant based on a posting on an Internet website. This case involved a defendant whose sole contact with California was the posting of source code on his Internet website, accessible to any person with Internet access; the source code allowed users to decrypt data contained on DVDs and enable the placement of the decrypted data onto computer hard drives or other storage media. The defendant owned no property, had no telephone listing, and conducted no business in California. The website merely posted information and had no interactive features. Because of the defendant's apparent lack of minimum contacts with California, the court reduced the matter to the consideration of one question: whether the defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm certain industries centered in California (the motion picture, computer, and consumer electronics industries) is sufficient to establish express aiming at California. Although the record lacked any indication that the defendant knew that California residents would be detrimentally affected by his actions, plaintiffs suggested that jurisdiction exists solely because the defendant's tortious conduct had a foreseeable effect in California. The court rejected this argument, finding that mere foreseeability is not enough for jurisdiction: "Because finding jurisdiction in this case would effectively subject all intentional tortfeasors whose conduct may harm industries in California to jurisdiction in California, we decline to do so" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) . However, the court specifically emphasized the narrowness of its holding and stated: "A defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm industries centered in California is undoubtedly relevant to any determination of personal jurisdiction and may support a finding of jurisdiction. We merely hold that this knowledge alone is insufficient to establish express aiming at the forum state as required by the effects test" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) .

The facts and procedural background of United California Bank v. First Bank of Oak Park (1979) 98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 159 Cal. Rptr. 607 , are discussed under § 132.100[3][b]. In reversing the order quashing service of summons, the court of appeal agreed with plaintiff's argument that consistent with the effects test of jurisdiction, the exercise of jurisdiction over the Illinois bank was proper because the bank did an intentional act knowing that it would cause effects in California, the nature of which California deems to be exceptional and subject to special regulation, and the Illinois bank anticipated an economic benefit from its act which caused the effect in this state (98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 443) . Holding that Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 (discussed below), was controlling, the court concluded that it was reasonable to exercise jurisdiction on the basis of the defendant's having intentionally caused effects in the state by an omission or act performed elsewhere, the effects being of a nature that the state treats as exceptional and subject to special regulation (98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 443) . The court pointed out that California deems chartered banks exceptional and subject to special regulation (98 Cal. App. 3d 439, 444) .

The facts and procedural background of Quattrone v. Superior Court (1975) 44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 118 Cal. Rptr. 548 , are discussed under § 132.108[3][a]. In denying the writ of mandate, the court of appeal, quoting Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 37, Comment a, said that if the act was performed with the intention of causing effects in the state, the state may exercise the same judicial jurisdiction over the actor, or over the one who caused the act to be performed, as to causes of action arising from these effects as it could have exercised if these effects had resulted from an act performed within its territory, so that one who intentionally shoots a bullet into a state is as subject to the judicial jurisdiction of the state as to causes of action arising from the effects of the shot as if he or she had actually fired the bullet in this state, and that, similarly, an insurance company which solicits through the mails the purchase of an insurance policy and thereafter mails the insured premium notices and the like is as subject to the judicial jurisdiction of the state as to causes of action arising from the policy as if it had sent an agent into the state to solicit the policy and to present the premium notices to the insured (44 Cal. App. 3d 296, 304) .

In Jamshid-Negad v. Kessler (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 621 , plaintiffs brought suit against the out-of-state parents of a University of California student who attempted to break into plaintiff's apartment while intoxicated. The action against the parents was based on negligent supervision and imputed negligence liability under Civ. Code § 1714.1. The trial court granted the parents' motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction.

The court of appeal remanded the matter with directions to vacate the order granting the motion to quash. The asserted basis of jurisdiction was limited to the parents having caused an effect in the state by an act or omission which occurred elsewhere (15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1708) . Recognizing that intentionally causing an effect justifies jurisdiction unless the nature and effects of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable, the court addressed the test for reasonableness when a defendant has intentionally caused an effect in the state by an act or omission elsewhere. The court, quoting Quattrone, above, concluded that the exercise of jurisdiction in this situation is reasonable whenever (a) the effects are of a nature that the state treats as exceptional and subjects to special regulation or (b) the defendant has, in connection with causing such effects in the forum state, invoked the benefits and protections of its laws (15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1708) . The court identified the out-of-state acts in this case as being the parents acquiescing in the minor's decision to attend the University of California and providing him with full financial support. The only effect intentionally caused in California was the minor's unsupervised presence in the state (15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1708-1709) . The court held that this was a sufficient basis for jurisdiction because negligent failure to supervise a minor is the subject of special regulations, most particularly the liability imposed by Civ. Code § 1714.1, and because the parents had invoked the benefits and protections of California law by taking advantage of the California's public higher education (15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1709) . Having found sufficient contacts with California, the court also held that the plaintiff's interest in obtaining relief and the state's interest in adjudicating the dispute outweighed the inconvenience to the parents in having to litigate in California (15 Cal. App. 4th 1704, 1710) .

[f] Act Done With Reasonable Foreseeability That It Would Cause Effect in California

In Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the California Supreme Court considered for the first time the scope of personal jurisdiction based solely on Internet use, and concluded that a California court improperly exercised personal jurisdiction over a defendant based on a posting on an Internet website. This case involved a defendant whose sole contact with California was the posting of source code on his Internet website, accessible to any person with Internet access; the source code allowed users to decrypt data contained on DVDs and enable the placement of the decrypted data onto computer hard drives or other storage media. The defendant owned no property, had no telephone listing, and conducted no business in California. The website merely posted information and had no interactive features. Because of the defendant's apparent lack of minimum contacts with California, the court reduced the matter to the consideration of one question: whether the defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm certain industries centered in California (the motion picture, computer, and consumer electronics industries) is sufficient to establish express aiming at California. Although the record lacked any indication that the defendant knew that California residents would be detrimentally affected by his actions, plaintiffs suggested that jurisdiction exists solely because the defendant's tortious conduct had a foreseeable effect in California. The court rejected this argument, finding that mere foreseeability is not enough for jurisdiction: "Because finding jurisdiction in this case would effectively subject all intentional tortfeasors whose conduct may harm industries in California to jurisdiction in California, we decline to do so" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) . However, the court specifically emphasized the narrowness of its holding and stated: "A defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm industries centered in California is undoubtedly relevant to any determination of personal jurisdiction and may support a finding of jurisdiction. We merely hold that this knowledge alone is insufficient to establish express aiming at the forum state as required by the effects test" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) .

Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , was an action arising out of allegedly fraudulent land transactions. Although it affirmed the order quashing service of summons, the court of appeal said if a nonresident defendant commits an act or omission outside the forum state that could reasonably be expected to cause effects within the forum state, whether the forum state may exercise personal jurisdiction over the defendant depends on several factors. The mere causing of an "effect" in the forum is not sufficient without more to afford a constitutional basis for jurisdiction (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 902) . The court cited the Judicial Council comment as follows: the act may not have been performed with the intention of causing effects in the state, but could reasonably have been expected to do so. Whether the state may exercise judicial jurisdiction in such a situation depends on a variety of factors, including the extent of the relationship of the state to the defendant and to the plaintiff, the nature and quality of the effects resulting from the act, and the degree of inconvenience which would result to the defendant from being forced to stand suit in the state on a particular cause of action. The greater the defendant's relationship to the state, the greater the likelihood that the state may exercise judicial jurisdiction over him or her as to causes of action arising from the effects of the act in the state. So if the defendant does business in the state, or solicits business extensively in the state, or if a substantial quantity of goods manufactured by him or her are sold in the state, there is a greater likelihood that the state may exercise judicial jurisdiction over him or her as to causes of action arising from the effects in the state of an act performed by him or her outside the state than if the defendant did not have this relationship to the state. This is so even though the defendant's relationship to the state is not related in any way to he act or to such of its effects in the state as are involved in the suit. The plaintiff's relationship to the state is also material. The greater the extent of this relationship, the greater is the interest of the state in the plaintiff and consequently the more appropriate it will be that the state should be in the position to try the case in its courts. On the other hand, if the plaintiff has little or no relationship to the state, the defendant's relationship to the state must be correspondingly greater to give the state a sufficient interest to justify trial of the case in its courts. Another factor of significance is the nature and quality of the effects which occur in the state. The state may exercise judicial jurisdiction over the defendant if the effects which could have been anticipated and which actually occurred are of a sort highly dangerous to persons or to things (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 902-903) .

The facts and procedural background of St. Joe Paper Co. v. Superior Court (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 175 Cal. Rptr. 94 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][l]. In denying the writs of mandate sought by the nonresident defendant corporations to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on them, the court of appeal said that the minimum contacts of a defendant with a state need not arise from actual physical activity of the defendant in the forum state, that activities taking place in other states which entail foreseeable effects in a forum state may be sufficient to satisfy the minimum contacts requirement (120 Cal. App. 3d 991, 997) .

[g] Act Done Without Intent to Cause Effect and Without Reasonable Foreseeability That It Would Cause Effect in California

In Pavlovich v. Superior Court (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 262, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 329 , the California Supreme Court considered for the first time the scope of personal jurisdiction based solely on Internet use, and concluded that a California court improperly exercised personal jurisdiction over a defendant based on a posting on an Internet website. This case involved a defendant whose sole contact with California was the posting of source code on his Internet website, accessible to any person with Internet access; the source code allowed users to decrypt data contained on DVDs and enable the placement of the decrypted data onto computer hard drives or other storage media. The defendant owned no property, had no telephone listing, and conducted no business in California. The website merely posted information and had no interactive features. Because of the defendant's apparent lack of minimum contacts with California, the court reduced the matter to the consideration of one question: whether the defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm certain industries centered in California (the motion picture, computer, and consumer electronics industries) is sufficient to establish express aiming at California. Although the record lacked any indication that the defendant knew that California residents would be detrimentally affected by his actions, plaintiffs suggested that jurisdiction exists solely because the defendant's tortious conduct had a foreseeable effect in California. The court rejected this argument, finding that mere foreseeability is not enough for jurisdiction: "Because finding jurisdiction in this case would effectively subject all intentional tortfeasors whose conduct may harm industries in California to jurisdiction in California, we decline to do so" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) . However, the court specifically emphasized the narrowness of its holding and stated: "A defendant's knowledge that his tortious conduct may harm industries centered in California is undoubtedly relevant to any determination of personal jurisdiction and may support a finding of jurisdiction. We merely hold that this knowledge alone is insufficient to establish express aiming at the forum state as required by the effects test" (29 Cal. 4th 262, 278) .

The facts and procedural background of Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , are discussed under § 132.108[3][d]. Although it affirmed the order quashing service of summons, the court of appeal said if a defendant commits an act outside the state, and the act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and could not reasonably have been expected to cause any effects in the state, the state may not constitutionally exercise jurisdiction over the defendant, unless the defendant is found to have an extensive relationship with the state (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 904) .

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In granting the petition for writ of mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulling the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal, citing Restatement (Second), Conflicts of Law, § 37, Comment a, said that finally, in the situation where the act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and where the defendant had no reason to suppose that his or her acts outside the state would result in effects within the state, the state will not generally have jurisdiction over the defendant unless both the plaintiff and the defendant have an extensive relationship to the state (23 Cal. App. 778, 802) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect Caused in California by Individual

Brown v. Watson (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1306, 255 Cal. Rptr. 507 , was a legal malpractice action against a group of California attorneys, who had been employed by California plaintiffs to represent them in personal injury and wrongful death actions arising out of an automobile accident in Texas, and a group of Texas attorneys, with whom the California attorneys had associated themselves, based on the alleged negligence of the Texas attorneys in failing to timely serve and file the summons and complaint within the period provided by Texas law. In reversing the trial court's order quashing service of summons on the Texas attorneys, the court of appeal pointed out that (1) the requisite minimum contacts of a defendant with the forum state need not arise from his or her physical activity in that state; (2) a person need not be physically present within the forum state in order to transact business there, and that contact with the forum state by telephone or mail may furnish the necessary minimum contacts essential for the exercise of jurisdiction under the transaction-of-business standards (207 Cal. App. 3d 1306, 1313) ; (3) one of the recognized bases for jurisdiction in California arises when the defendant has caused an effect in the state by an act or omission that occurs elsewhere (207 Cal. App. 3d 1306, 1314) ; and (4) the complaint alleged that the Texas attorneys' negligence in failing timely to serve the summons and complaint, which omission occurred in Texas, resulted in dismissal of plaintiffs' Texas action, thereby causing damage to plaintiffs in California (207 Cal. App. 3d 1306, 1315) . The court pointed out that the Texas attorneys were retained by plaintiffs in California, through their California attorneys, to file and prosecute an action in Texas, that material and information necessary for prosecution of the action were in California and were furnished to the Texas attorneys by the California attorneys, that the Texas attorneys telephoned and corresponded with plaintiffs and the California attorneys regarding the Texas lawsuit, that their fee was to be paid through a fee-splitting arrangement with the California attorneys, and that the Texas attorneys consequently had substantial contacts with California (207 Cal. App. 3d 1306, 1314-1315) . Having concluded that the Texas attorneys had the required minimum contacts with California, the court further held that a balancing of the relative interests of the parties in California favored the exercise of jurisdiction over the Texas attorneys (207 Cal. App. 3d 1306, 1315-1316) .

In Rollins Burdick Hunter of So. Cal., Inc. v. Alexander & Alexander Services, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 253 Cal. Rptr. 338 , the court of appeal, although it affirmed the order quashing service of summons on a nonresident defendant on the ground that whatever he did, it was done after the alleged breach complained of, said that a state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who causes effects in the state by an omission or act performed elsewhere with respect to causes of action arising from these effects, unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of jurisdiction unreasonable (206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 8-9) .

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. Although the California Supreme Court granted the petition for writ of mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulled the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal, citing Restatement (Second), Conflicts of Law, § 37, Caveat, said that the basis of jurisdiction set forth in the first alternative Paragraph A does not arise if the exercise of jurisdiction is not fair to the nonresident defendant and is unreasonable from the standpoint of the international and interstate systems (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 802-803) . The court apprehended that it would be unfair and unreasonable to hold that a nonresident parent has submitted him or herself to the jurisdiction of another state merely by the act of sending his or her children to that state temporarily for the purpose of visiting with the other parent, and that a contrary rule would thwart the strong policy of the law to encourage the visitation of children with their parents (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 803) .

See also Taylor-Rush v. Multitech Corp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 103, 112, 114, 265 Cal. Rptr. 672 , discussed in § 132.107[3][e].

[b] Effect Caused in California by Foreign Corporation

The facts and procedural background of Felix v. Bomoro Kommanditgesellschaft (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 241 Cal. Rptr. 670 , are discussed in § 132.75[4][a]. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion to quash service of summons was granted, the court of appeal said that California recognizes that a state may exercise jurisdiction over one who causes effects in the state by an act or omission performed elsewhere with respect to causes of action arising from the effects, and that this is so unless the nature of the effects and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of jurisdiction unreasonable (196 Cal. App. 3d 106, 112) .

Note that the court in Felix, citing Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 669, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 (discussed under § 132.108[3][b]), and Sibley v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 442, 446, 128 Cal. Rptr. 34, 546 P.2d 322 (discussed under § 132.108[3][a]), stated the rule set out in the first Alternative Paragraph A, relating to individual defendants, but then applied this rule to a foreign corporation. The case would therefore support the rule set out in the second Alternative paragraph A, which is identical in all respects except that it refers to a foreign corporation rather than an individual.

Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , was an action arising out of allegedly fraudulent land transactions. Although the court of appeal affirmed the order quashing service of summons on out-of-state defendants on the ground the allegedly tortious acts committed in California by the resident co-conspirators could not be imputed to the nonresident defendants for purposes of establishing personal jurisdiction, the court said that every state has a natural interest in effects occurring within its territory, even if the act causing those effects was committed elsewhere, and, quoting both Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 37, Comment a, and Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Jurisdiction Over Individuals, said that there are three possible situations; (1) the act was performed with the intention of causing effects in the state; (2) the act, although not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state, could reasonably have been expected to do so; and (3) the act was not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state and could not reasonably have been expected to do so (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 902) .

[c] Act Done With Intention of Causing Effect in California

In Heilig v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 978, 197 Cal. Rptr. 371 , jurisdiction over nonresident defendants in a defamation action was upheld. Defendants had signed letters that they knew were to be mailed and received in California for the express purpose of defaming and defeating a political candidate. The court of appeal held that defendants' intentional out-of-state activities clearly resulted in tortious conduct in California, and that, under the circumstances, it was fair and reasonable to subject them to the jurisdiction of the California courts (149 Cal. App. 3d 978, 984-985) .

The facts and procedural background of Kaiser Aetna v. Deal (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 150 Cal. Rptr. 615 , are discussed under § 132.108[d]. Although it affirmed the order quashing service of summons, the court of appeal said that if a defendant commits an act or omission outside the forum with the intent to cause a tortious effect within the state, the state may exercise jurisdiction over the defendant as to any cause of action arising from the effects. The intent to cause tortious injury within the state when the tort actually occurs is generally a sufficient basis, without more, for the exercise of in personam jurisdiction. Quoting Restatement (Second), Conflict of Laws, § 37, Comment a, the court added that the act may have been performed with the intention of causing effects in the state. If so, the state may exercise the same judicial jurisdiction over the actor, or over the one who caused the act to be performed, as to causes of action arising from these effects as it could have exercised if these effects had resulted from an act performed within its territory (86 Cal. App. 3d 896, 902) .

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In holding that the nonresident father did not send his children to California with the intent of causing effects in California which would give rise to a cause of action for custody and support of the children, but that his intent was clearly and undisputably for the purpose of having them visit their mother during the summer with the understanding that they would return to the father at the end of summer, and granting the petition for writ of mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulling the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal, citing Restatement (Second), Conflicts of Law, § 37, Comment a, said that in situations where the act is performed with the intention of causing effects in the state, the state in which these effects are caused will have judicial jurisdiction over the actor or the one who caused the act to be performed as to causes of action arising from these effects (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 802) .

[d] Act Done With Reasonable Foreseeability That It Would Cause Effect in California

The facts and procedural background of Titus v. Superior Court (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 100 Cal. Rptr. 477 , are discussed in § 132.70[3][a]. In holding that, even if it could be said that although the father did not intend to cause effects in California by sending his children to California but could reasonably be expected to do so, the relationship between the father and California was not close enough to give California jurisdiction, and granting the petition for writ of mandate insofar as the order to show cause purported to give the trial court personal jurisdiction over the husband for purposes of child support, and annulling the child support order because there was no basis for in personam jurisdiction over the father, the court of appeal, citing Restatement (Second), Conflicts of Law, § 37, Comment a, said that when the act is not performed with the intention of causing effects in the state but could reasonably have been expected to do so, the state's power to exercise judicial "discretion" [sic, jurisdiction] depends on a variety of factors, including the extent of the relationship of the state to the defendant and to the plaintiff, the nature and quality of the effects resulting from the act, and the degree of inconvenience which would result to the defendant from being forced to stand suit in the state on the particular cause of action, and that in this situation an important indicia is the defendant's closeness to the state, that the more closely the defendant is related to the state, the more convenient it will probably be for him or her to stand suit in the state (23 Cal. App. 3d 792, 802) .

§ 132.109 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Cause of Action Is Related to Thing Located in California That Is Owned, Used, or Possessed by Defendant

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

DEFENDANT OWNS, USES, OR POSSESSES A THING LOCATED IN THIS STATE, AND THIS IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT IN AN ACTION ARISING OUT OF THAT OWNERSHIP, USE, OR POSSESSION.

[EITHER, if defendant is an individual]

A. Individual's Ownership, Use, or Possession of Thing Located in California. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who has owned, used, or possessed (1) an immovable thing in the state with respect to any cause of action arising from the thing while it was owned, used, or possessed by the individual, or (2) a chattel in the state with respect to any cause of action arising from the chattel while it was in the state and was so owned, used, or possessed unless the nature of the chattel and of the individual's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, under Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals; see Indiana Insurance Co. v. Pettigrew (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 862, 864-868, 171 Cal. Rptr. 770).

[OR, if defendant is a foreign corporation]

A. Foreign Corporation's Ownership, Use, or Possession of Thing Located in California. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation which has owned, used, or possessed (1) an immovable thing in the state with respect to any cause of action arising from the thing while it was owned, used, or possessed by the corporation, or (2) a chattel in the state with respect to any cause of action arising from the chattel while it was in the state and was so owned, used, or possessed by the corporation or arising from the chattel while it was in the state and was so owned, used, or possessed unless the nature of the chattel and of the corporation's relationship to the state make the exercise of such jurisdiction unreasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant owns, uses, or possesses and thing that is located in California and is related to the cause of action, and that under these circumstances the court is justified in exercising limited personal jurisdiction over the defendant. This rule applies equally to nonresident individuals and to foreign corporations [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations]. For discussion concerning limited jurisdiction, see § 132.76[2][b].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.102 -132.108, 132.110 -132.115.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 132.80.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Immovable Things

Immovable things include land and things that are so attached to the land as to be legally regarded a part of it [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

[c] Chattels

A chattel, which is a tangible movable thing, may be moved from state to state, and, for this reason, the rules of judicial jurisdiction relating to the ownership, use, or possession of chattels are somewhat different from those involving immovable things [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals]. A state may usually exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual as to causes of action arising from his or her use or possession of a chattel in the state. By such use or possession, the individual creates a relationship to the state that will usually provide a reasonable basis for the exercise of jurisdiction by the state. Judicial jurisdiction may be exercised over an individual as to causes of action arising from his or use or possession of a chattel in the state that is dangerous to life or to tangible things. By using or possessing the chattel in the state, the individual endangers the interests of other persons in the state and can fairly be required to stand suit in the state for any injury that may result. The chattel need not be peculiarly dangerous, as is a bomb or other explosive. It need only be of a sort from which liability in tort for personal injury is not unlikely to arise, as is true, for example, of most kinds of mechanized equipment. When the chattel is not of a kind dangerous to life or property, the state must have a closer relationship to either the defendant or the plaintiff than would otherwise be necessary to permit it to exercise judicial jurisdiction over the defendant as to causes of action arising from his or her use of the chattel [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

The mere ownership of a chattel in the state, as distinguished from its use or possession, creates more difficult problems. A state may not exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual by reason of his or her mere ownership of a chattel in the state unless he or she may be deemed responsible for the presence of the chattel in the state. So a state may not exercise jurisdiction over the owner of a stolen chattel which is brought into the state without the knowledge or consent of the owner until at least such time as the owner has learned of the presence of the chattel in the state and has had a reasonable opportunity to reclaim it. Whether judicial jurisdiction may be exercised over the owner in other situations may depend on whether he or she has directed or consented that the chattel should be taken into the state or at least had reason to foresee that it would be taken there. Likewise, it is more probable that the state may exercise judicial jurisdiction over the owner if he or she has other relationships to the state apart from his or her ownership of the chattel, or if the chattel is of a sort dangerous to life or to tangible property, or if the plaintiff is closely related to the state [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Individual's Ownership, Use, or Possession of Thing Located in California

In Indiana Insurance Co. v. Pettigrew (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 862, 171 Cal. Rptr. 770 , the defendant's minor son was involved in a multiple car collision in Indiana while driving a car owned by defendant. After settling the claims of its insureds involved in the accident, the insurance company, under the subrogation provisions of the insurance agreement, instituted in Indiana an action against the defendant's minor son for negligence and against the defendant by reason of the fact that the son was a minor under the age of 18 years at the time of the accident and the father was responsible for the operation of the car by the son. At all relevant times both the defendant and his son were California residents. Both the father and son were served in California by certified mail, but defaulted in the Indiana action. The insurer secured a default judgment and attempted to enforce it in California under the Sister State Money Judgments Act [Code Civ. Proc. § 1710.10 et seq.]. The defendant claimed the Indiana judgment was void for lack of personal jurisdiction over him. The trial court denied recognition of the Indiana judgment and quashed a previously issued writ of execution against the property of the judgment debtor (the defendant), and the insurance company appealed.

In reversing the order denying entry of the Indiana judgment and quashing the previously issued writ of execution, the court of appeal first pointed out that Indiana has a nonresident motorist statute which provides for jurisdiction only over the nonresident operator or his or her duly authorized agent, whereas California has provided for extension of jurisdiction over the owner who merely extends permission to another driver to operate his or her vehicle in this state (115 Cal. App. 3d 862, 865) . The court held that although the language of the Indiana statute contained some limitations, jurisdiction was properly extended by the nonresident statute over defendant, as more than his mere ownership or permission to operate was involved; he was the signatory on his minor son's license, as required by Veh. Code § 17707, and this statute by creating a vicarious liability sufficed to create a limited type of "agency" to satisfy the extension of jurisdiction over defendant pursuant to the Indiana nonresident motorist law (115 Cal. App. 3d 862, 865-866) . The court further held the minimum contacts test was satisfied; the collision occurred in Indiana; defendant permitted a car owned by him to be driven in Indiana by his uninsured son and agreed to a statutory vicarious liability for damage caused by the minor while operating a motor vehicle; in engaging in these activities, defendant vicariously participated in the operation of his automobile by his son in Indiana; and jurisdiction was properly asserted under the general Indiana long-arm statute (115 Cal. App. 3d 862, 867) . The court said that although the defendant argued that giving his son permission to drive his car was an act which occurred in California and not in Indiana, and should be limited to acts occurring in California, a fair interpretation of the Indiana statute required its extension to this case; the collision occurred in Indiana; defendant owned the car and agreed to be responsible for the acts of his minor son (Veh. Code § 17707), and permitted it to be taken to Indiana by his so. These acts suffice as an act causing personal injury and property damage within Indiana (115 Cal. App. 3d 862, 868) .

§ 132.110 Opposing Motion to Quash Service of Summons [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant's Business Activity in California--General Form

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons on the ground that the court lacks a sufficient basis for exercising personal jurisdiction (see, e.g., § 132.100).]

DOING BUSINESS IN CALIFORNIA IS A PROPER BASIS FOR THE EXERCISE OF PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT.

[EITHER, if defendant is an individual and cause of action is related to business activity in California]

A. Cause of Action Against Natural Person Arose From Business Done in California. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who does business in the state with respect to causes of action arising out of that business (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals).

[OR, if defendant is an individual and cause of action is related to former business activity in California]

A. Cause of Action Against Natural Person Arose From Former Business Done in California. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who has done business in the state, but has ceased to do business there at the time when the action is brought, with respect to causes of action arising from the business done in the state (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals).

[OR, if defendant is an individual doing continuous and substantial business in state]

A. Defendant Natural Person Conducts Continuous and Substantial Business in California and Exercise of Jurisdiction Is Reasonable. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over an individual who does business in the state, with respect to causes of action that do not arise from the business done in the state, if this business is so continuous and substantial as to make exercise of such jurisdiction reasonable (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals).

[OR, if defendant is a foreign corporation and cause of action is related to business activity in California]

A. Cause of Action Against Foreign Corporation Arose From Business Done in California. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation which does business in the state with respect to causes of action arising from the business done in this state (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[OR, if defendant is a foreign corporation and cause of action is related to former business activity in California]

A. Cause of Action Against Foreign Corporation Arose From Former Business Done in California. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation which has done business in the state, but has ceased to do business there at the time the action is commenced, with respect to causes of action arising out of that business (Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[OR, if defendant is a foreign corporation doing continuous and substantial business in California]

A. Defendant Foreign Corporation Conducts Continuous and Substantial Business in California and Exercise of Jurisdiction Is Reasonable. A state has power to exercise judicial jurisdiction over a foreign corporation that does business in the state, with respect to causes of action that do not arise from the business done in the state, if this business is so continuous and substantial as to make it reasonable for the state to exercise such jurisdiction (Hesse v. Best Western Internat., Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 404, 408-410, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 74 ; Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations).

[Optional] B. Foreign Corporation Defined. [See § 132.104, Paragraph B].

[ADD, if defendant is a foreign partnership or other unincorporated association]

C. Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association. [see § 132.103, Paragraph C].

D. Authority to Sue Partnership or Other Unincorporated Association in Common Name. [See § 132.103, Paragraph D].

[In an appropriate case, add additional points and authorities set out in §§ 132.111 -132.115, supporting the argument that the defendant conducted business activities in California sufficient to support the court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over the defendant in particular fact situations.]

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant is or has conducted business activity in California, and either the cause of action is related to this activity, such that the court is justified in exercising limited personal jurisdiction over the defendant, or the activity is so extensive that the court is justified in exercising general personal jurisdiction over any cause of action. For discussion concerning general and limited jurisdiction, see § 132.76[2][b].

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons [see, e.g., § 132.100]. It may also be included in a memorandum of points and authorities opposing a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion to quash after it has declined to do so [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)], or it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

For additional points and authorities opposing a motion to quash on other grounds, see §§ 132.102 -132.109. For points and authorities that may be combined with the foregoing form in specific facts situations, see §§ 132.111 -132.115.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.70, 132.74, 132.76 -132.78, and 132.83 -132.90.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

See also § 132.100[2] for comments on a general form.

[b] Doing Business

Doing business is doing a series of similar acts for the purpose of thereby realizing pecuniary profit, or otherwise accomplishing an object, or doing a single act for such purpose with the intention of thereby initiating a series of such acts [Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Individuals, and Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10, Bases of Judicial Jurisdiction Over Corporations].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Foreign Corporation Conducts Continuous and Substantial Business in California and Exercise of Jurisdiction is Reasonable

Hesse v. Best Western Internat., Inc. (1995) 32 Cal. App. 4th 404, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 74 , involved an action for personal injuries sustained by a guest in a hotel in Mexico brought against a membership organization to which the hotel belonged. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order of dismissal following its order granting defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction. The court found that the evidence established that defendant had continuous and purposeful transactions with California for purposes of general jurisdiction because defendant was authorized to do business in California with a designated agent for service of process, maintained a business office in California from which it solicited guests for affiliate members and advertised collectively for affiliate members in California (32 Cal. App. 4th 404, 408-410) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Against Foreign Defendants Arose From Business Done in California

Epic Communications, Inc. v. Richwave Technolgy, Inc. (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 314, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 572 was an action by a Taiwanese corporation and its California subsidiary seeking damages for an alleged misappropriation of intellectual property originally transferred by their predecessor in interest, a California corporation, to a corporation in Taiwan. The transfer took place pursuant to a joint development agreement negotiated in substantial part by a Taiwanese engineer then employed by the transferee corporation. The three defendants are the transferee corporation, the engineer who negotiated the development agreement, and a second Taiwanese corporation formed by her as a "spin-off" of the transferee. The trial court granted a motion by the engineer and the "spin-off" corporation to quash service of process, reasoning that even if those defendants had sufficient contact with California to otherwise be subject to the jurisdiction of its courts, the Taiwanese residence of the principal plaintiff corporation made it unreasonable to exercise jurisdiction in California. In rejecting that conclusion, the court of appeal explained that a refusal by California courts to exercise jurisdiction cannot be justified by the mere fact that a claim arising from California contacts is prosecuted by a nonresident. While the foreign status of an assignee might in some cases reduce the state's interest in adjudicating a dispute, that is at most a subsidiary consideration which cannot by itself justify a denial of access to our courts. The principal inquiry remains whether subjecting the defendants to local jurisdiction comports with fair play and substantial justice. The residence of the current owner of the claim has little if any bearing on that inquiry. Here the two Taiwan defendants engaged in conduct in California, and caused effects in California, that made it readily foreseeable that they would be haled into court here in the event of a dispute of the present type. The defendants dealt directly with a California corporation at the time of the contacts giving rise to jurisdiction; their dealings involved services to be performed entirely in California, in the sense that the work was done here, the workers resided here, and the compensation would be received here; and none of the defendants had any reason to anticipate that a dispute under the agreement would be adjudicated anywhere but in California. Further, defendants have no reason to anticipate that the plaintiff in any such controversy would be anybody other than the California enterprise with which they dealt. The later transfer of that entity's rights to a Taiwan corporation could have no bearing on the foreseeability, at the time of the conduct giving rise to the suit, of their being haled into court. So far as they knew, it was entirely predictable that if the agreement were not performed, or a dispute arose over the disposition of its fruits, they would be haled into court--or at least into arbitration--in California. That the plaintiff who eventually sued them was itself a Taiwan corporation was, from their perspective, a pure fortuity. That fact does not furnish a compelling basis for holding California jurisdiction unreasonable.

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for the court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over defendant (see § 132.110).]

IN AN ACTION FOR BREACH OF CONTRACT AGAINST THE DEFENDANT, THE FACT THAT THE CONTRACT WAS MADE AND TO BE PERFORMED IN CALIFORNIA IS A SUFFICIENT BASIS FOR THIS COURT TO EXERCISE ITS PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE DEFENDANT.

A. Contract Made and to Be Performed in California. It is well settled that personal jurisdiction attaches when a cause of action arises out of the breach of a contract made and to be performed in this state (Kroopf v. Guffey (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1358, 228 Cal. Rptr. 807 ; University Financing Consultants, Inc. v. Barouche (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1170, 196 Cal. Rptr. 484).

[Optional] B. Recovery of Attorney Fees for Service Performed in California. A contract for the performance of attorney services in California by an out of state defendant supports personal jurisdiction over a party for the recovery of attorney's fees, even if the defendant previously succeeding in quashing service of summons for insufficient contacts with California California (Daar & Newman v. VRL International (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 482, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 566).

The form of points and authorities in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that, in an action for breach of contract, the fact that the contract was made and was to be performed in California is a sufficient basis for the court to exercise its personal jurisdiction over the defendant.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for exercising personal jurisdiction [see § 132.110].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.81, 132.83, 132.85, and 132.87.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contract Made and to Be Performed in California

The facts and procedural background of Kroopf v. Guffey (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 228 Cal. Rptr. 807 , are discussed in *§ 132.102[3]*b]. In reversing the order granting the motion to quash service of summons, the court of appeal said it is well settled that personal jurisdiction attaches when a cause of action arises out of the breach of a contract made and to be performed in this state (183 Cal. App. 3d 1351, 1358) .

University Financing Consultants, Inc. v. Barouche (1983) 148 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 196 Cal. Rptr. 484 , was a breach of contract action by a California mortgage brokerage association against Hawaiian condominium developers whose single connection with California was the engagement of brokerage services from plaintiff. Defendants were never physically present in California and had obtained the plaintiff's brokerage services via contracts made with a Hawaiian mortgage broker. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction, and plaintiff appealed. In reversing the order, the court of appeal said that jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant can be maintained on the basis of a single contract with the forum state (148 Cal. App. 3d 1165, 1170) .

[b] Recovery of Attorney Fees for Service Performed in California

In Daar & Newman v. VRL Int'l (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 482, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 566 , appellant law firm previously represented respondent in a personal injury action. Because respondent had insufficient contacts with California for it to assert jurisdiction over it, appellant successfully moved to quash service of process and obtained respondent's dismissal from the action. Appellant also successfully defended the trial court's ruling on appeal to this court. Contending that it was not paid in full for the services it rendered on behalf of respondent in the prior action, appellant filed an action for recovery of fees. Respondent filed a motion to quash contending it had no sufficient contacts with this state upon which jurisdiction may be based. The trial court granted the motion to quash and dismissed respondent from the action. The court of appeal reversed, finding that the operative facts and law relating to the attorney fee action were different from the prior action. The plaintiff in the prior action attempted to assert jurisdiction over respondent for injuries which occurred in connection with a personal watercraft accident in Nassau, the Bahamas. Here, appellant asserts jurisdiction to recover fees directly related to appellant's retention and representation of respondent in California. Because the claim arises directly from services rendered by appellant for respondent in California, limited jurisdiction existed for resolution of the claim.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Contract Made and to Be Performed in California

Neadeau v. Foster (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 234, 180 Cal. Rptr. 806 , involved the breach of a contract signed in California in which a nonresident defendant appealed from a default judgment in favor of plaintiff. Defendant contended in part that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion to quash service of process for lack of in personam jurisdiction. The court of appeal found that even though he had no business office, agents, or sales personnel in California, defendant did extensive business in California. The court said that even if the defendant's activities in the forum were not so pervasive as to justify the exercise of general jurisdiction, the breach of contract action was directly related to defendant's business activities within the state. Quoting Martin v. Detroit Lions, Inc. (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 472, 108 Cal. Rptr. 23 (discussed in § 132.100[4][e]), the court stated that when the cause of action arises out of economic activity within the state, the contacts need not consist of repeated or continuous business transactions; an isolated transaction, such as the breach of a contract made and to be performed in the state may be sufficient (129 Cal. App. 3d 234, 240) .

Life Insurance Contract. A state court has authority to render a judgment in personam against a nonresident in an action based on a contract which has substantial connection with the state; and such substantial connection exists in the case of an action based on a life insurance contract if the contract was delivered in the state, the premiums were mailed from the state, and the insured was a resident of the state when the contractual obligation sought to be enforced became due (*McGee v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Life Insurance Contract

McGee v. International Life Ins. Co. (1957) 355 U.S. 220, 78 S. Ct. 199, 2 L. Ed. 2d 223 , involved a judgment by a California court against a Texas insurance company. In holding the judgment valid and entitled to full faith and credit in the courts of Texas, the U.S. Supreme Court stated: "Turning to this case we think it apparent that the Due Process Clause did not preclude the California court from entering a judgment binding on respondent. It is sufficient for purposes of due process that the suit was based on a contract which had substantial connection with that state. The contract was delivered in California, the premiums were mailed from there and the insured was a resident of that State when he died" (355 U.S. 220, 223) .

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for the court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over defendant (see § 132.110).]

IN AN ACTION FOR INJURIES RESULTING FROM A DEFECTIVE PRODUCT, THIS COURT MAY EXERCISE PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER DEFENDANT MANUFACTURER WHEN THE SALE OF THE DEFECTIVE PRODUCT WAS NOT AN ISOLATED EVENT BUT AROSE FROM DEFENDANT'S EFFORT TO SERVE THE MARKET FOR ITS PRODUCT IN THIS STATE.

Defective Product Sold in State. A court of this state has authority to render a judgment in personam against a nonresident in an action arising out of injuries caused by the use in the state of a defective product manufactured by the nonresident and sold in this state if the sale was not simply an isolated occurrence, but arose from the efforts of the manufacturer to serve, directly or indirectly, the market for its product in this state (Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 670, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 ; see also Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 902-903, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57).

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that, in an action for damages based on an alleged defective product, the court may exercise personal jurisdiction on the nonresident manufacturer when the sale of the product in the state was not an isolated event but arose as a part of the defendant's effort to service the market for its products in the state.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for exercising personal jurisdiction [see § 132.110]. Note also that this type of action, based on the sale or introduction in this state of a defective product manufactured, distributed, or sold by a foreign corporation or nonresident individual, is one of the more common situations in which a court of this state is called on to determine whether it may properly exercise personal jurisdiction over the foreign corporation or nonresident individual. Thus, additional points and authorities relating to this type of action may also be found in § 132.100, the general form of memorandum opposing a motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.74 and 132.86.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defective Product Sold in State

The facts and procedural background of Secrest Machine Corp. v. Superior Court (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 664, 190 Cal. Rptr. 175, 660 P.2d 399 , are discussed in § 132.100[3][e]. In denying the writ of mandate, the California Supreme Court, quoting World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 297-298, 100 S. Ct. 559, 62 L. Ed. 2d 490 (discussed in § 132.70[3][g]), said that if the sale of a product of a manufacturer or distributor is not simply an isolated occurrence, but arises from the efforts of the manufacturer or distributor to serve, directly or indirectly, the market for its product in other states, it is not unreasonable to subject it to suit in one of those states if its allegedly defective merchandise has there been the source of injury to its owner or to others (33 Cal. 3d 664, 670) . The Court pointed out that the defendant (Secrest) had engaged in a number of acts in connection with the sale of the leveling machine to the plaintiff's employer (F&S), that some of these acts, such as the initial negotiations, took place outside California, that others, such as sending an employee to assist F&S with installation of the machine, involved the physical presence of a Secrest employee in California, and that still others involved communication by mail and phone between Secrest's Virginia office and F&S's California office, and the sending of drawings on spare parts for the machine to F&S (33 Cal. 3d 664, 670-671) . The Court said that all of these acts were designed to consummate a business arrangement in which Secrest would profit financially by selling its product in California, and that, although F&S initially approached Secrest, the sale was a deliberate act by Secrest which generated substantial gross income and constituted economic activity within California as a matter of commercial actuality. From the nature of the machine and the business of F&S it was evident that Secrest knew the product would, and intended that it should, enter California and here be used by F&S, and that the real party's cause of action arose directly from the intended effect (33 Cal. 3d 664, 671) .

The facts and procedural background of Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 , are discussed in § 132.77[3][c]. In denying the peremptory writ of mandate, the California Supreme Court first pointed out that former Code Civ. Proc. § 411(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10] authorized service of process on foreign corporations doing business in California, and that this section exerted the full power of the state, consistent with the due process clause, to subject foreign corporations to the jurisdiction of California courts (71 Cal. 2d 893, 898) . The Court said that a manufacturer whose products pass through the hands of one or more middlemen before reaching their ultimate users cannot disclaim responsibility for the total distribution pattern of the products. If the manufacturer sells its products in circumstances that it knows or should reasonably anticipate that they will ultimately be resold in a particular state, it should be held to have purposefully availed itself of the market for its products in that state (71 Cal. 2d 893, 902) .

[a] Defective Product Sold in State

Rowe v. Dorrough (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 901, 198 Cal. Rptr. 131 , involved an appeal from the trial court's order quashing service on a foreign corporation whose products had allegedly caused personal injury to plaintiffs as a result of a defect. Defendant was a Japanese corporation that sold its products to a California corporation, which in turn resold the products in California and other states. Defendant had no contacts with California other than sale of its products here. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order to quash. In reaching its conclusion that defendant had sufficient minimum contacts with the state to establish personal jurisdiction, the court extensively reviewed prior case law regarding jurisdiction. The court cited Buckeye Boiler Co. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 893, 80 Cal. Rptr. 113, 458 P.2d 57 (discussed under § 132.113[3][a]), for the rules that a state's jurisdiction over a manufacturer does not depend on whether the manufacturer deals directly with residents of the state or through a middleperson, and that there is personal jurisdiction when the manufacturer sells its products in circumstances such that it knows or should reasonably anticipate that they will ultimately be resold in the state (150 Cal. App. 3d 901, 907) . The court acknowledged that the United States Supreme Court had set out a limit to the extension of jurisdiction in World-Wide Volkswagen Corp. v. Woodson (1980) 444 U.S. 286, 100 S. Ct. 559 (discussed in § 132.70[3][g]). However, the court cited language from World-Wide stating that if the sale of a product of a manufacture is not simply an isolated occurrence, but arises from the efforts of the manufacturer to directly or indirectly serve the market for its product in other states, jurisdiction may be exercised (150 Cal. App. 3d 901, 907-908) .

Proc. § 418.10] on Ground That Court Lacks Personal Jurisdiction--Sufficient Basis for Jurisdiction Exists--Defendant's Business Activity in California--Foreign Parent Corporation or Nonresident Stockholder and Director Is Alter Ego of Corporation Subject to Court's Jurisdiction

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for the court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over defendant (see § 132.110).]

WHEN A CORPORATE DEFENDANT SUBJECT TO THE JURISDICTION OF THIS COURT IS IN EFFECT A MERE ALTER EGO OF _____ [A FOREIGN PARENT CORPORATION or NONRESIDENT STOCKHOLDER(S)], THE COURT MAY PROPERLY EXERCISE ITS PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER THE _____ [FOREIGN CORPORATION or STOCKHOLDER(S)] AS WELL.

[EITHER]

A. Corporate Defendant Is Alter Ego of Foreign Parent Corporation. Jurisdiction over a foreign parent corporation for the defalcations of its wholly owned California subsidiary is proper when the subsidiary is the alter ego of the foreign parent or when the foreign parent manipulates the affairs of the subsidiary to the detriment of the subsidiary's creditors (Empire Steel Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 823, 831, 17 Cal. Rptr. 150, 366 P.2d 502 ; Rollins Burdick Hunter of So. Cal., Inc. v. Alexander & Alexander Services, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9, 253 Cal. Rptr. 338 ; see also Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 210, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743).

B. Alter Ego Test Applies to Determine Issue of Control. The basic test in determining whether the foreign parent dominates and controls the domestic subsidiary is whether one corporation is the alter ego of the other (Rollins Burdick Hunter of So. Cal., Inc. v. Alexander & Alexander Services, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9, 253 Cal. Rptr. 338).

[OR]

Corporate Defendant Is Alter Ego of Nonresident Stockholders. When a corporation is the alter ego of nonresident stockholders so as to justify disregard of the corporate entity, jurisdiction over the corporation will support jurisdiction over the stockholders (Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 210, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that, in an action in which the court has proper personal jurisdiction over a corporate defendant, it may also exercise personal jurisdiction over that corporation's foreign parent corporation or nonresident stockholders when the corporation is merely the alter ego of the foreign parent or the stockholders.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for exercising personal jurisdiction [see § 132.110].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 132.82 and 132.84.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Corporate Defendant Is Alter Ego of Foreign Parent Corporation

Empire Steel Corp. v. Superior Court (1961) 56 Cal. 2d 823, 17 Cal. Rptr. 150, 366 P.2d 502 , was a proceeding in prohibition arising out of an action by a California corporation, Associated Metals and Minerals Corporation (Associated), against the defendant, Empire Steel Corporation of Texas, Inc. (Empire), for damages for alleged breach of contract by Empire's wholly owned California subsidiary, Gachman Steel Corporation of California (Gachman), which was in bankruptcy. Associated alleged that Gachman operated in California as Empire's alter ego and that Empire's conduct with respect to Gachman was fraudulent as to those firms doing business with Gachman. Empire's motion to quash service of process for lack of minimum contacts with California was denied, and Empire petitioned for a writ of prohibition to prevent the trial court from continuing with the action.

In denying the peremptory writ, the California Supreme Court held that Empire's contacts with California (56 Cal. 2d 823, 831-833) were sufficient to constitute the doing of business in this state within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 411(2) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.10] (56 Cal. 2d 823, 833, 835) , and that even though all of Empire's relevant activities were technically carried out in Texas, their alleged consequences within California would be sufficient to sustain jurisdiction over Empire in connection with plaintiff's action (56 Cal. 2d 823, 832) . The Court nevertheless said that jurisdiction over a foreign parent association has been sustained when the local subsidiary was found to be the alter ego of the sales department of a foreign corporation and when the foreign parent manipulated the affairs of the subsidiary to the detriment of creditors of the subsidiary, and pointed out that Associated had alleged that Empire manipulated the affairs of Gachman to the detriment of third parties dealing with the subsidiary (56 Cal. 2d 823, 831) . The Court also pointed out that Empire had engaged in activities creating substantial contacts with California in relation to the claim asserted, that there appeared to have been ample evidence in the record before the trial court from which the inference could have been drawn that Empire knowingly caused its California subsidiary to make the contracts in suit while Gachman was in fact insolvent but had the appearance of financial responsibility, and that Empire's activities in keeping Gachman in business beyond a period safe for persons dealing with Gachman was manifestly related to plaintiff's cause of action for breach of contract, since in all probability plaintiff would not have contracted to sell steel to an obviously insolvent or defunct Gachman corporation (56 Cal. 2d 823, 832) .

Rollins Burdick Hunter of So. Cal., Inc. v. Alexander & Alexander Services, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 253 Cal. Rptr. 338 , arose out of an action by a California corporation against, among others, another California corporation, its foreign parent corporation, its foreign grandparent corporation, and the chairman of the grandparent corporation's board of directors, among others, for damages for breach of an agreement authorized by statute, interference with contractual relations, unfair competition, breach of fiduciary duty, and fraudulent conversion. The crux of the complaint was as follows: (1) defendant foreign corporation (the grandparent corporation) was the sole shareholder of another defendant foreign corporation (the parent corporation) which in turn was the sole shareholder of the California corporation: (2) an individual defendant (the seller) had sold his insurance business, including its goodwill, to plaintiffs and executed a covenant not to compete; (3) following execution of the purchase and sale contract and the seller's covenant not to compete, the seller became plaintiffs' president and a member of its board of directors; (4) subsequently, unknown to plaintiffs, the defendant grandparent, parent, and California corporations agreed to aid the seller in breaching his covenant not to compete with plaintiffs; and (5) pursuant to the agreement, the seller terminated his employment with plaintiffs, became an employee of the defendant California corporation, and diverted from plaintiffs for the benefit of the defendants certain insurance contracts which he had sold to plaintiffs. The motion of the grandparent corporation and its board chairman to quash service of summons for lack of personal jurisdiction was granted, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order as to the board chairman, but reversed the order as to the grandparent corporation. The court said that judicial jurisdiction over a subsidiary corporation will give the state judicial jurisdiction over the parent corporation if the parent so controls and dominates the subsidiary as in effect to disregard the latter's independent and corporate existence (206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9) .

Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on nonresidents who were directors and the sole stockholders of an out-of-state corporation that was doing interstate business with California residents. Although the court granted the writ on the ground the plaintiff had failed to prove facts requisite to an effective service on the individuals (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 211-212) , the court of appeal said that it has been held in this state that if a subsidiary corporation acts as an agent of the parent corporation or is so controlled by the parent as to justify disregard of the separate entity, jurisdiction over the subsidiary will support jurisdiction over the parent (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 210) .

[b] Alter Ego Test Applies to Determine Issue of Control

The procedural background of Rollins Burdick Hunter of So. Cal., Inc. v. Alexander & Alexander Services, Inc. (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 253 Cal. Rptr. 338 , is discussed under § 132.114[3][a]. In reversing the order quashing service on the grandparent corporation, the court said that ownership of all the stock of the subsidiary and the existence of common directors does not in itself provide the requisite domination and control over the subsidiary by the parent for purposes of jurisdiction, that the basic test is whether one corporation is the alter ego of the other. In other words, what is required is something more than that amount of control of one corporation over another which mere common ownership and directorship would indicate (206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9) . In opposition to the motion to quash, plaintiffs had submitted evidence showing: (1) the grandparent approved the California corporation's major budgets, including hiring and compensation, real estate purchases or leases, and purchases and sales of insurance businesses, provided the California corporation with guidelines by which to invest nonfiduciary funds, selected the California corporation's public accountants and controlled all routine and spot audits of the California corporation, determined the compensation of all executives of the California corporation, and treated the employees of the California corporation as its own; (2) the California corporation's employees were paid from outside California under a system set up by the grandparent; (3) the California corporation's board of directors was made up entirely of employees of the grandparent or parent corporation, received no compensation, and never held a meeting; (4) the chairman of the grandparent's board of directors came to California at least once a year where he met with the California corporation's employees, and, to further the California corporation's business, met with senior executives of major corporations which either laced at least some of their insurance business with the California corporation or did not do business with the California corporation in order to solicit insurance business for the California corporation (206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 11) . The court said that the grandparent was a separate corporate entity only in name and form, that every facet of the California corporation's business, from broad policy decisions to routine matters of day-to-day operation, appeared to have been dictated by the grandparent, and that, under these circumstances, a valid basis existed for California's exercise of personal jurisdiction over the grandparent corporation (206 Cal. App. 3d 1, 11) .

[c] Corporate Defendant Is Alter Ego of Nonresident Stockholders

Sheard v. Superior Court (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 114 Cal. Rptr. 743 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the trial court to quash service of summons on nonresidents who were directors and the sole stockholders of an out-of-state corporation that was doing interstate business with California residents. The court of appeal granted the writ on the ground the plaintiff had failed to prove facts requisite to an effective service on the individuals (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 211-212) . It stated that, in this state, jurisdiction over a subsidiary corporation will support jurisdiction over the parent when the subsidiary corporation acts as an agent of the parent corporation or is so controlled by the parent as to justify disregard of the subsidiary's separate entity. The court concluded that it was persuaded that, when a corporation is the alter ego of the stockholders so as to justify disregard of the corporate entity, jurisdiction over the corporation will support jurisdiction over the stockholders (40 Cal. App. 3d 207, 210) .

[The following should be combined with general points and authorities concerning the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for the court's exercise of personal jurisdiction over defendant (see § 132.110).]

THIS COURT MAY PROPERLY EXERCISE ITS PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER _____ [name] ON THE BASIS OF HIS/HER CONTACTS WITH THIS STATE IN HIS/HER CAPACITY AS AN INDIVIDUAL, NOTWITHSTANDING THE FACT THAT HE/SHE IS ALSO _____ [AN OFFICER and/or DIRECTOR and/or STOCKHOLDER] OF [DEFENDANT] _____ [name of corporation].

Defendant Is Doing Business in California in Capacity as Individual as Well as in Representative Capacity. An officer of a foreign corporation is subject to the jurisdiction of the California courts when he or she engaged in business in California in his or her individual capacity, as well as on behalf of the corporation, or benefited individually from the protection of the laws of California, and the cause of action arises out of his or her conduct (Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 711, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442).

The form in [1], above, is for use in opposing a motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1), on the ground that the court has no proper basis for exercising personal jurisdiction over the defendant. The ground for opposition is that the defendant, while acting in a representative capacity for a foreign corporation, also acted in an individual capacity sufficient to justify the court's exercise of limited personal jurisdiction over him or her.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for exercising personal jurisdiction [see § 132.110].

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 132.82.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Is Doing Business in California in Capacity as Individual as Well as in Representative Capacity

Mihlon v. Superior Court (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 215 Cal. Rptr. 442 , was a proceeding in mandate arising out of an action by a California attorney against the president of a foreign corporation and the corporation's attorney for conspiracy to induce the foreign corporation to dismiss plaintiff as corporate counsel in a prior California action against the corporation. Plaintiff had been retained to represent the corporation in the California action, which had been settled without advising plaintiff, who was the attorney of record, and without paying him his contingency fee, which he claimed amounted to $700,000. The plaintiff further alleged that the corporation, which was in bankruptcy in Maryland, was the defendant's under-capitalized alter ego. The defendants moved for an order quashing service of summons on the ground that all their alleged wrongful conduct relative to the underlying action was in their official capacities as either officers or corporate counsel of the foreign corporation and such conduct could not be the basis for imposition of jurisdiction over them individually. In his affidavit in support of the motion, the corporate president averred that he was a resident of Maryland, owned no California property, had no personal business here, and had never entered an appearance in any judicial proceeding in California in his individual capacity as either a plaintiff or defendant, that he was a 51-percent shareholder, president, and a director of the corporation, and that the corporation was formed in 1980 with $10,000 initial capital contribution. However, he acknowledged that at an unspecified time he came to California and engaged in negotiations with prospective producers concerning the sale of a movie script owned by the corporation, the resulting contract for which was executed in Maryland, that plaintiff sent him letters soliciting legal representation of the corporation in the California action, that he executed the enclosed retainer agreements (one of which was in his individual capacity and two on behalf of the corporation as president), and that he returned them to plaintiff by mail. In his counterdeclaration, plaintiff stated he was approached in California to represent the president and the corporation in a contract dispute with CBS, Inc., in California, and that he was the only attorney of record for the president and corporation in the prior California action. The corporate president's motion to quash was denied.

In denying the peremptory writ of mandate, the court of appeal said that the evidence showed that the president acted in his capacity as president and director of the corporation and that he acted in his capacity as an individual with the intent to do business and litigate in California state courts and to benefit generally from the protection of the laws of California, and that the act of the president in retaining plaintiff to represent him as an individual in California concerning the same contractual dispute as that of the corporation with CBS, Inc., in furtherance of his interests as an individual, constituted sufficient purposeful availment of the protection of California law and California activity related to plaintiff's underlying causes of action to render limited jurisdiction over the president reasonable (169 Cal. App. 3d 703, 711) .

THIS COURT MAY PROPERLY EXERCISE ITS PERSONAL JURISDICTION OVER DEFENDANT LAW FIRM ON THE BASIS THAT IT PRACTICED LAW IN CALIFORNIA BY ITS EMPLOYMENT OF AN ATTORNEY LICENSED TO PRACTICE IN CALIFORNIA WHO PROVIDED LEGAL SERVICES UNDER CALIFORNIA LAW TO CALIFORNIA RESIDENTS.

A. Defendant Is Doing Business in California. California may properly exercise personal jurisdiction over an out-of-state law firm which practiced law in California when it employed an attorney licensed to practice law only in California who performed legal services governed by California law for California residents seeking recourse before California courts (Simons v. Steverson (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 693, 697, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 193).

[2] Comments

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion to quash service of summons under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10, on the ground that the court lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant, an out-of-state law firm.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with general points and authorities relating to the defendant's business activity in California as a basis for exercising personal jurisdiction [see § 132.110]. Counsel should insert argument in the showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For discussion of the recovery of attorney's fees by an attorney hired to perform services in California against an out-of-state defendant, even if the defendant previously succeeding in quashing service of summons for insufficient contacts with California, see § 132.111.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Out-of-state Law Firm Was Doing Business in California

In Simons v. Steverson (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 693, 106 Cal. Rptr. 2d 193 , the defendant New York law firm was sued by California residents for, among other things, malpractice. The plaintiffs had retained an attorney, licensed to practice only in California, who was an associate for the firm in New York. The attorney provided legal services under California law to the plaintiffs. The firm moved to quash service of summons and the court granted the motion. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the firm's practice of law in California was sufficient to justify the exercise of personal jurisdiction over it. The court concluded the undisputed jurisdictional facts established ample contacts to warrant specific jurisdiction over the firm (88 Cal. App. 4th 693, 712) . The court pointed out that the attorney's physical presence in California, or his absence, was not determinative because the practice of law in California can occur although the attorney is not physically present in California by the attorney's advising a California client on California law in connection with a California legal dispute by telephone, fax, computer, or other modern technological means (88 Cal. App. 4th 693, 713) . The court stated that the crucial fact was that the firm in employing the attorney, licensed to practice law only in California, and not in New York, to represent California residents, concerning contracts to be governed by California law and involving other California residents, clearly sought to obtain benefits and exercise privileges which are peculiarly specific to California (88 Cal. App. 4th 693, 713-714) . The court also concluded that the firm failed to proffer any compelling circumstances which would render the exercise of personal jurisdiction over it unreasonable (88 Cal. App. 4th 693, 714) .

THE COURT SHOULD AUTHORIZE SERVICE OF THE SUMMONS ON DEFENDANT BY PUBLICATION PURSUANT TO SECTION 415.50 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT CANNOT WITH REASONABLE DILIGENCE BE SERVED IN ANOTHER MANNER.

A. Defendant Cannot With Reasonable Diligence Be Served in Another Manner. The court may allow plaintiff to serve a summons by publication on defendant when plaintiff has exercised reasonable diligence and has been unable to locate defendant (Code Civ. Proc § 415.50(a), (e)). Plaintiff has exercised reasonable diligence when, in good faith, a thorough, systematic investigation and inquiry to determine the defendant's whereabouts has been conducted and plaintiff has been unable to locate defendant (see Vorburg v. Vorburg (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 794, 797, 117 P.2d 875).

[EITHER]

B. A Cause of Action Exists Against Defendant. The court may authorize service by publication if it appears to the court's satisfaction that a cause of action exists against the defendant (Code Civ. Proc § 415.50(a)(1); see Harris v. Cavasso (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 723, 725-726, 137 Cal. Rptr. 410).

[OR]

C. Defendant Is Necessary or Proper Party to Action. The court may authorize service by publication if it appears to the court's satisfaction that defendant is a necessary or proper party to the action (Code Civ. Proc § 415.50(a)(1); see Harris v. Cavasso (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 723, 725, 137 Cal. Rptr. 410 .

[OR]

D. Defendant _____ [Has or Claims] Interest in Property in California. The court may authorize service by publication if it appears to the court's satisfaction that defendant _____ [has or claims] an interest in property in California (Code Civ. Proc § 415.50(a)(2)).

[OR]

E. Relief Demanded in Action Consists Wholly or Partially in Excluding Defendant From Any Interest in Property in California. The court may authorize service by publication if it appears to the court's satisfaction that the relief demanded consists wholly or partially in excluding defendant from any interest in property in California (Code Civ. Proc § 415.50(a)(2)).

[a] Use of Form

The form of points and authorities in [1], above, may be submitted in support of an ex parte application for order for publication of summons pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50. Counsel must show that the plaintiff has exercised reasonable diligence in an attempt to serve the defendant in another manner and that either (1) a cause of action exists against the defendant; (2) defendant is a necessary or proper party to the action; (3) defendant has or claims an interest in property in California; or (4) the relief demanded in the action consists wholly or partially in excluding the defendant from any interest in the property in California [Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50(a)].

These points and authorities may be combined, if appropriate, with forms of points and authorities relating to the specific cause of action alleged against the defendant [see particular chapters throughout this publication, such as Ch.

50, Contracts and Ch. 165, Negligence] or to the joinder of necessary parties [see Ch. 168, Parties].

As an ex parte application, the application for order for publication of summons will not be directly opposed. If the court grants the application, however, the propriety of service by publication may be challenged by a later motion to quash or to set aside a default judgment. For points and authorities relating to statutory relief from void judgments or orders, see Ch. 70, Defaults, Default Judgments, and Relief From Judgments and Orders , Pt. II. For points and authorities relating to supporting or opposing motions to quash service of summons, see Subpart B of this chapter, above.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should outline the search made for the defendant and identify the defendant's connection with the case, citing to the supporting affidavit or declaration.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Cannot With Reasonable Diligence Be Served in Another Manner

Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50(a) provides that a summons may be served by publication if upon affidavit it appears to the satisfaction of the court in which the action is pending that the party to be served cannot with reasonable diligence be served in another manner and that (1) a cause of action exists against the party upon whom service is to be made or he or she is a necessary or proper party to the action; or (2) the party to be served has or claims an interest in real or personal property in California that is subject to the jurisdiction of the court or the relief demanded in the action consists wholly or in part in excluding the party from any interest in the property.

Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50(e) provides that as a condition of establishing that the party to be served cannot with reasonable diligence be served in another manner specified in this article, the court may not require that a search be conducted of public databases where access by a registered process server to residential addresses is prohibited by law or by published policy of the agency providing the database, including, but not limited to, voter registration rolls and records of the Department of Motor Vehicles.

In Vorburg v. Vorburg (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 794, 117 P.2d 875 , plaintiff obtained an order for publication of summons in a divorce action. After defendant failed to answer, a final decree of divorce was entered in favor of plaintiff. Fourteen years later, plaintiff moved to set aside the final decree of divorce on the ground that due diligence was not exercised to locate the defendant. The trial court denied the motion.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's order denying plaintiff's motion, holding that the plaintiff presented sufficient facts to the trial court to demonstrate that due diligence was exercised pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412, 413 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50(a)]. The question of whether due diligence was exercised is a factual one for the trial court and, if the facts set forth in the affidavit have a legal tendency to show that plaintiff exercised diligence in seeking to locate the defendant, the trial court's ruling will be regarded as having the same effect as the court's decision upon any other matter of fact. Despite the plaintiff's failure to affirmatively disclose that a search had been made of telephone directories in the affidavit for publication of summons, the Supreme Court held that the trial court properly ruled that the plaintiff exercised due diligence to attempt to locate the defendant (18 Cal. 2d 794, 796-797) .

[b] A Cause of Action Exists Against Defendant/Defendant Is Necessary or Proper Party to Action

In Harris v. Cavasso (1977) 68 Cal. App. 3d 723, 137 Cal. Rptr. 410 , plaintiff obtained an order for publication of summons in an action for breach of contract. A default judgment was entered against defendant and defendant moved to set aside the judgment based on the insufficiency of plaintiff's affidavit for service by publication. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that for service by publication pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50 there must be an affidavit containing a statement of some fact or facts tending to show the existence of a cause of action. Plaintiff's affidavit was devoid of any facts from which the court could conclude that a cause of action existed against the defendant, and therefore, the court properly denied the motion to set aside the judgment (68 Cal. App. 3d 723, 726) .

[a] Defendant Cannot With Reasonable Diligence Be Served in Another Manner

Transamerica Title Ins. Co. v. Hendrix (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 740, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 614 , on an appeal from a default judgment, the court of appeal held that service by publication under Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50 was defective when the plaintiff had been aware that the defendant was receiving mail at a post office box. A post office box is a sufficient address for Code Civ. Proc. § 415.30 service by mail, so that plaintiff's failure to attempt such service invalidated plaintiff's application for service by publication (34 Cal. App. 4th 740, 746) . The court therefore reversed, and directed the trial court to vacate the default and default judgment and to permit the defendant to file an answer.

In Donel, Inc. v. Badalian (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 327, 150 Cal. Rptr. 855 , the court of appeal discussed the comparable reasonable diligence requirements for service by publication under both Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50 and Hawaii Rev. Stat. § 634-23. The court held that plaintiff failed to exercise reasonable diligence required by the Hawaii statute in attempting to locate defendant because plaintiff's diligence consisted of the single act of searching telephone directories. The court noted that other avenues must be searched as well, including city directories and tax rolls. The court also noted that plaintiff most significantly failed to inquire of the attorney who had answered previous correspondence in defendant's behalf, an inquiry which patently appeared to hold the most promise for locating defendant (87 Cal. App. 3d 327, 332-334) .

In Slusher v. Durrer (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 747, 138 Cal. Rptr. 265 , the court of appeal discussed, in dictum, the requirement under Code Civ. Proc. § 415.50(a) that the plaintiff must exercise reasonable diligence in an attempt to locate the defendant to be served by publication. The court noted that the Judicial Council Comment to Section 415.50 that discusses the requirement of reasonable diligence indicates that a "thorough, systematic investigation and inquiry" be conducted in good faith (69 Cal. App. 3d 747, 756) .

THE MOTION TO STAY OR DISMISS THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING] ON THE GROUND THAT CALIFORNIA IS AN INCONVENIENT FORUM FOR TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE A CONSIDERATION OF THE PRIMARY FACTORS INVOLVED IN THIS CASE DEMAND THAT THE CASE BE TRIED IN _____ [specify alternative forum].

[EITHER, if defendant has not made a general appearance]

A. Motion to Stay or Dismiss for Inconvenient Forum. On or before the last day of his or her time to plead or within any further time that the court may for good cause allow, a defendant may serve and file a notice of motion to stay or dismiss the action on the ground of inconvenient forum (Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(2)).

[OR, if defendant has made a general appearance]

A. Motion to Stay or Dismiss for Inconvenient Forum. When a court on motion of a party finds that in the interest of substantial justice an action should be heard in a forum outside this state, the court shall stay or dismiss the action in whole or in part on any conditions that may be just (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(a)).

[CONTINUE]

B. Considerations of Court. In making its determination to stay or dismiss an action, the court may take into account any consideration which legitimately bears on the relative suitability or convenience of the alternative forums (Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 (disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14)).

C. Factors to Be Considered And Balancing of Factors. The factors, which have been characterized as involving either the private interests of the parties or the public's interest in the litigation, are numerous. Basically, the court looks to the relative convenience and fairness to the parties and witnesses in favoring one forum over another, which forum will best serve the interests of judicial efficiency, which forum is most able to obtain jurisdiction over the parties and compel witnesses to testify, and the relative interest of each state in adjudicating the issue (Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173-174, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 (disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14)). The doctrine of forum non conveniens requires a balancing of the factors considered rather than placing undue influence on a single factor (Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 1465, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301).

D. Specific Factors Enumerated. Specific factors that have been recognized by courts as proper considerations in determining whether to stay or dismiss an action or proceeding for inconvenient forum include the following: (1) the amenability of the defendant to personal jurisdiction in the alternative forum; (2) the relative convenience to the parties and witnesses of trial in the alternative forum; (3) the choice of law (that is, the differences between conflict of law rules applicable in California and those applicable in the alternative forum); (4) the defendant's principal place of business, and the inconvenience to the defendant to defend himself or herself in the local forum; (5) the extent to which the situation, transaction, or events out of which the action arose exists, occurred in, or had a substantial relationship to this state (or, conversely, the absence of a substantial relationship to this state of the situation, transaction, or events out of which the action arose); (6) whether any party would be substantially disadvantaged by having to try the action either in California or in the forum suggested by the moving party; (7) the relative enforceability of judgments rendered in California and in the alternative forum; (8) whether witnesses would be inconvenienced if the action were prosecuted in either this state or in the forum in which the moving party asserts it ought to be tried; (9) the relative expense to the parties of proceeding in California or in the alternative forum; (10) whether a view of the premises by the trier of fact will or might be necessary or helpful in deciding the case; (11) whether prosecution of the action in California will or may place a burden on the state judicial resources which is unfair, inequitable, or disproportionate to the relationship of the parties or cause of action to California; (12) whether the parties participating in the action have a relationship to this state which imposes on them an obligation to participate in judicial proceedings in the courts of this state; (13) the interest of California in providing a forum for some or all of the parties to the action; (14) the interest, if any, of this state in regulating the situation or conduct involved; (15) the avoidance of a multiplicity of suits and inconsistent adjudications; (16) the relative availability and access to sources of evidence, which would include relative ease of access to sources of proof; (17) the availability of compulsory process to secure the attendance of witnesses in California as contrasted with such availability in the alternative forum; (18) the relative advantages and obstacles to a fair trial in California and in the alternative forum; (19) the California public interest in the case; (20) whether administrative difficulties and other inconveniences from crowded calendars and congested courts are more probable in California as opposed to the alternative forum; (21) whether imposition of jury duty is imposed on a community having no relation to the litigation; (22) the injustice to and burden on local courts and taxpayers; (23) the difficulties and inconvenience to the moving party, to the court, and to the jurors hearing the case, attending presentation of evidence by deposition; (24) the availability of the suggested alternative forum; and (25) the other practical considerations that make trial of a case convenient, expeditious, and inexpensive (see Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 174 n.2, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 (disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14); Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1180 ; Appalachian Ins. Company v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 435-436 n.2, 208 Cal. Rptr. 627 ; Hemmelgarn v. Boeing Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 576, 584-585, 165 Cal. Rptr. 190 (disapproved on another ground in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14); Jagger v. Superior Court (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 579, 585-586, 158 Cal. Rptr. 163 ; Henderson v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 595-597, 142 Cal. Rptr. 478 ; Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 105, 112-115, 90 Cal. Rptr. 461).

[Optional] E. Relative Financial Condition of Parties. In addition, the relative financial condition of the parties is a factor which every court must necessarily take into account to some degree in determining the convenience or inconvenience of the forum (Allison v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 993, 1001, 160 Cal. Rptr. 309).

[Optional] F. Neutral Factors. Factors, pro and con, in any given case may be neutral in that they cancel each other out (see Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 174-175, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 (disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14)).

[Optional] G. Other Factors. While some courts have delineated specific facts to consider in ruling on a motion to stay or dismiss an action for forum non conveniens, courts are not limited to these factors. In ruling on a forum non conveniens motion, courts examine all of the circumstances, balance the private and public interests, and look to the relative convenience and fairness of the parties, the witnesses, and the courts (Delfosse v. C.A.C.I., Inc.-Federal (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 683, 687-688, 267 Cal. Rptr. 224).

The form in [1], above, is for use by a resident or nonresident defendant in support of a motion stay or dismiss the action or proceeding on the ground that California is an inconvenient forum and that the case should be tried in another forum.

The first alternative Paragraph A should be used if the motion is made by a defendant who has not made a general appearance in the action; if the defendant has made a general appearance, the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 do not apply and the motion must be made under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(a), as set out in the second alternative Paragraph A [see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(b)]. Note that, if the defendant has not made a general appearance, the motion under Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 may be combined with a motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a) and §§ 132.20-132.22, 132.40, 132.70].

The additional memoranda set out in §§ 132.150 -132.154 should be combined, when appropriate, with the points and authorities set out in this form.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should enumerate the particular facts that, in light of the enumerated specific factors, weigh in favor of a stay or dismissal of the case.

[b] Weight of Factors

The factors listed in Paragraph D do not bear equal weight. For example, one factor that is given considerable weight is the plaintiff's status as resident of California. For further discussion of this factor, see § 132.12 [see also § 132.150].

[c] Additional Factors in Action Against California Manufacturer by Foreign Plaintiff

In an action against a California manufacturer by a foreign plaintiff for an injury sustained outside the country, two other factors to be considered are (1) the competitive disadvantage to California business that would result if California manufacturers were called on to defend lawsuits involving extraterritorial injuries; and (2) the interests and policy concerns in the litigation of the country of residence of the foreign plaintiff [Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 760, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14] .

[d] Relationship of Personal Jurisdiction and Inconvenient Forum on Jurisdiction

In ruling that California is an inconvenient forum, a trial court necessarily implies that California has jurisdiction over the defendant. A motion to dismiss on the ground of forum non conveniens is inconsistent with and necessarily phrased in the alternative to a motion to quash service for lack of jurisdiction. This is because a court, in dismissing a suit on the grounds of forum non conveniens, relinquishes jurisdiction it already has over the action, whereas a court, in quashing service, determines that it never had jurisdiction over the parties and the cause. Once jurisdiction is established, the court, in its discretion, can stay or dismiss an action if it finds that in the interest of substantial justice the case should be heard in another forum [Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v. Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1430-1431 n.8, 249 Cal. Rptr. 559] .

The U.S. Supreme Court holds that a district court has discretion to respond at once to a defendant's forum non conveniens plea, and need not take up first any other threshold objection. In particular, a court need not resolve whether it has authority to adjudicate the cause (subject matter jurisdiction) or personal jurisdiction over the defendant if it determines that, in any event, a foreign tribunal is the more suitable arbiter of the merits of the case [Sinochem Int'l Co. Ltd v. Malaysia Int'l Shipping Corp. (2007) ___ U.S. ___, 127 S. Ct. 1184, 167 L. Ed. 2d 15] .

Although a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum concedes in personam jurisdiction, many of the factors that are a proper consideration on a motion to stay or dismiss for inconvenient forum [see § 132.130] overlap the factors considered by the court in determining whether it has limited jurisdiction over a nonresident defendant [see § 132.70].

[e] Related Uses

This memorandum may be adapted for use in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to stay or dismiss the action or proceeding after it has declined to do so. They may also be used in a trial or appellate brief.

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum, and related papers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 323, Jurisdiction: Personal Jurisdiction, Inconvenient Forum, and Appearances .

[g] Opposing Memoranda

For a memorandum of points and authorities that may, in an appropriate case, be used in opposition to the foregoing memorandum, see § 132.140.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Considerations of Court

Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed, 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) , was a wrongful death action brought by Australian residents for the death of their decedent, a citizen and resident of Australia, against a California corporation that had manufactured a heart valve prosthesis that allegedly fragmented after implantation in plaintiffs' decedent by Australian doctors in an Australian hospital. Several of the components of the valve allegedly fragmented and separated from the valve entering the decedent's circulatory system. A resulting blockage allegedly caused cardiac arrest from which she could not be resuscitated. The complaint alleged products liability negligence, strict liability, and breach of express and implied warranties. The defendant answered the complaint without alleging third-party negligence, and subsequently moved to dismiss the action on the grounds California was an inconvenient forum and Australia was the proper alternative forum. The trial court denied the motion to dismiss, but, finding that the prejudice to defendant was greater if the action remained in California than that to plaintiffs if it were brought in Australia, stayed the action pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a) so that it might be brought in Australia. Plaintiffs appealed.

In reversing the order, the court of appeal, after pointing out that one of the appropriate forums in which an action against a corporate defendant may be brought is the state of its incorporation or principal place of business (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173, n.1), said that, in making its determination to stay or dismiss, the trial court may take into account any consideration which legitimately bears on the relative suitability or convenience of the alternative forums (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173) .

Note that Corrigan was disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 .

[b] Factors to Be Considered And Balancing of Factors

The facts and procedural background of Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed, 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) , are discussed under § 132.130[3][a]. In reversing the order staying the action, the court of appeal said that the remaining factors, aside from the plaintiff's choice of the forum and the lack of a suitable alternative forum [see § 132.140], have been characterized as involving either the private interests of the parties or the public's interest in the litigation, and are numerous. Basically, the court looks to the relative convenience and fairness to the parties and witnesses in favoring one forum over another, which forum will best serve the interests of judicial efficiency, which forum is most able to obtain jurisdiction over the parties and compel witnesses to testify, and the relative interest of each state in adjudicating the issue (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173-174) .

Note that Corrigan was disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1

Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 .

In Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 , the trial court granted manufacturer's motion to stay a California survival and wrongful death action brought against them by Texas residents, a decedent's widow and two children, under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. The decedent was alleged to have suffered some injury from exposure to chemicals in California (the forum selected by plaintiffs) and subsequently experienced exposure to chemicals for almost two decades in Texas (the forum preferred by defendants). Most of the defendant's employment, and all of his medical treatment, occurred in Texas.

The Court of Appeal affirmed the order, holding that Texas was a suitable alternative forum and that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that California was a seriously inconvenient forum for the trial of the action. The vast majority of the defendant's coworkers had been identified in the lawsuit were Texas residents who worked with the defendant in Texas from 1983 to 2001. Furthermore, all of the decedent's medical care was administered in Texas and the approximately 100 medical provider witnesses were located in Texas. By contrast, only the decedent's employers from 1976 to 1982 were in California, and they were out of business. Thus, the private interest factors of ease of access to prove the cause of obtaining witnesses weighed heavily in favor of Texas as a forum. All defendants agreed to consent to jurisdiction in Texas and stated that they would not assert the statute of limitations as a defense in Texas. Therefore, there was no bar to proceeding in Texas. California had little interest in that litigation given the decedent's lengthy work history in Texas, and the relative insignificance played by California corporations among the defendants. Thus, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in finding that the public interest factors weighed in favor of litigating the matter in Texas (144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 1466).

In so ruling, the court explained that a trial court must be flexible in its weighing of the Stangvik factors. Private and public interest factors must be applied flexibly without giving undue emphasis to any one element. The doctrine of forum non conveniens cannot be based on the identification of a single factor rather than the balancing of several factors. An undue emphasis on a single factor is especially threatening to a balanced analysis because some of the matter to be weighed will by their nature point to a grant or denial of the motion. For example, the jurisdiction's interest in deterring future wrongful conduct of the defendants will usually favor retention of the action if the defendant is a resident of the forum, whereas the court's congestion factor will weigh in favor of trial in the alternate jurisdiction. The court must consider the public policy consideration, such as California's interest in deciding actions against resident corporations whose conduct in the state causes injury to persons in other jurisdictions (144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 1468) .

[c] Specific Factors Enumerated

The facts and procedural background of Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed, 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) , are discussed under § 132.130[3][a]. In reversing the order staying the action, the court of appeal, quoting Hemmelgarn v. Boeing Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 576, 584-585, 165 Cal. Rptr. 190 (discussed below), said that the numerous factors to be considered include the following: (1) the amenability of the parties to personal jurisdiction in this state and in the alternative forum; (2) the relative convenience to the parties and trial witnesses of the competing forums; (3) the differences in the conflict of law rules applicable in the competing forums; (4) the selection of a convenient, reasonable, and fair place of trial; (5) defendant's principal place of business; (6) the extent to which the cause of action arose out of events related to this state; (7) the extent to which any party will be substantially disadvantaged by a trial in either forum; (8) the relative enforceability of judgments rendered in this state or the alternative forum; (9) the relative inconvenience to witnesses and relative expense to parties of proceeding in this state or the alternative forum; (10) the significance and necessity of a view by the trier of fact of physical evidence not conveniently movable from the alternative forum; (11) the extent to which prosecution of the action in this state would place a burden on this state's judicial resources equitably disproportionate to the relationship of the parties or cause of action to this state; (12) the extent to which the relationship of the moving party to this state obligates him or her to participate in judicial proceedings here; (13) this state's interest in providing a forum for some or all of the parties; (14) this state's public interest in the litigation; (15) the avoidance of multiplicity of actions and inconsistent adjudications; (16) the relative ease of access to sources of proof; (17) the availability of compulsory process for attendance of witnesses; (18) the relative advantages and obstacles to a fair trial; (19) the burden on jurors, local court, and taxpayers of a jurisdiction having a minimal relation to the subject of the litigation; (20) the difficulties and inconveniences to defendant, the court, and jurors incident to the presentation of evidence by deposition; and (21) the availability of the suggested forum (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 174, n.2). The court added that a court may not consider, however, the probability, if such exists, that a California jury may be more generous in its award than the proper forum (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 174, n.2).

Note that Corrigan was disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 . For further discussion regarding factors (1) (the amenability of the parties to personal jurisdiction in this state and in the alternative forum) and (21) (the availability of the suggested forum), see Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , discussed in § 132.140[3][a]. For further discussion regarding factor (3) (the differences in the conflict of law rules applicable in the competing forums), see Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 753-754, n.5, 763-764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , discussed in § 132.141[3][a].

Appalachian Ins. Company v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 208 Cal. Rptr. 627 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action by an insured, a New York corporation which had its principal place of business in Connecticut and did business in California, against its Rhode Island insurer, respecting a New York claim. The insurance contract between the parties contained a "service of suit" clause by which the defendant agreed to submit to the jurisdiction of any court of competent jurisdiction which the plaintiff requested. The defendant's motion to dismiss on the ground of forum non conveniens was denied, and it petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal, in considering when the doctrine of forum non conveniens applies and quoting Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert (1947) 330 U.S. 501, 507, 67 S. Ct. 839, 91 L. Ed. 1055 , said that an interest to be considered, and the one likely to be most pressed, is the private interest of the litigant. Important considerations are the relative ease of access to sources of proof; availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling, and the cost of obtaining attendance of willing, witnesses; possibility of view of premises, if view would be appropriate to the action; and all other practical problems that make trial of a case easy, expeditious, and inexpensive. There may also be questions as to the enforceability of a judgment if one is obtained. The court will weigh the relative advantages and obstacles to fair trial. It is often said that the plaintiff may not, by choice of an inconvenient forum, vex, harass, or oppress the defendant by inflicting on him or her expense or trouble not necessary to plaintiff's own right to pursue his or her remedy. But unless the balance is strongly in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff's choice of forum should rarely be disturbed. Factors of public interest also have a place in applying the doctrine. Administrative difficulties follow for courts when litigation is piled up in congested centers instead of being handled at its origin. Jury duty is a burden that ought not to be imposed on the people of a community which has no relation to the litigation. In cases which touch the affairs of many persons, there is reason for holding the trial in their view and reach rather than in remote parts of the country where they can learn of it by report only. There is a local interest in having localized controversies decided at home. There is an appropriateness, too, in having the trial of a diversity case in a forum that is at home with the state law that must govern the case, rather than having a court in some other forum untangle problems in conflict of laws, and in law foreign to itself (162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 433-434) .

After pointing out that the doctrine of forum non conveniens is codified in California in Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(a), the court of appeal said that the applicable criteria for ruling on a motion to dismiss or stay on the ground of forum non conveniens are set forth in Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 105, 112-115, 90 Cal. Rptr. 461 (discussed below), which listed 25 legitimate factors to be considered in determining the applicability of the doctrine, as follows: (1) the amenability of the defendant to personal jurisdiction in the alternative forum; (2) the relative convenience to the parties and witnesses of trial in the alternative forum; (3) the differences in conflict of law rules applicable in this state and in the alternative forum; (4) the defendant's principal place of business; (5) whether the situation, transaction, or events out of which the action arose exists, occurred in, or had a substantial relationship with this state; (6) whether any party would be substantially disadvantaged in having to try the action (a) in this state or (b) in the forum in which the moving party asserts it ought to be tried; (7) whether any judgment entered in the action would be enforceable by process issued or other enforcement proceedings undertaken in this state; (8) whether witnesses would be inconvenienced if the action were prosecuted (a) in this state or (b) in the forum in which the moving party asserts it ought to be prosecuted; (9) the relative expense to the parties of maintaining the action (a) in this state and (b) in the state in which the moving party asserts the action ought to be tried; (10) whether a view of the premises by the trier of fact will or might be necessary or helpful in deciding the case; (11) whether prosecution of the action will or may place a burden on the courts of this state which is unfair, inequitable or disproportionate in view of the relationship of the parties or of the cause of action to this state; (12) whether the parties participating in the action have a relationship to this state which imposes on them an obligation to participate in judicial proceedings in the courts of this state; (13) the interest, if any, of this state in providing a forum for some or all of the parties to the action; (14) the interest, if any, of this state in regulating the situation or conduct involved; (15) the avoidance of multiplicity of actions and inconsistent adjudications; (16) the relative ease of access to sources of proof; (17) the availability of compulsory process for attendance of witnesses; (18) the relative advantages and obstacles to a fair trial; (19) the public interest in the case; (20) whether administrative difficulties and other inconveniences from crowded calendars and congested courts are more probable in the jurisdiction chosen by the plaintiff; (21) whether imposition of jury duty is imposed on a community having no relation to the litigation; (22) the injustice to, and burden on, local courts and taxpayers; (23) the difficulties and inconvenience to defendant, to the court, and to jurors hearing the case, attending presentation of testimony by depositions; (24) availability of the forum claimed to be more appropriate; and (25) the other practical considerations that make trial of a case convenient, expeditious and inexpensive (162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 434, 435-436, n.2). The court pointed out that, applying the above criteria to the case, 22 of the 25 criteria favored dismissal of the action (162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 436) , and held that the service of suit clause in the contract did not prevent application of the doctrine (162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 437-439) , and granted the writ.

Note that, with respect to the service of suit clause, the court stressed the critical distinction between this case and cases which have enforced contractual clauses which achieve certainty and predictability by providing for a specific forum (162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 439) . For further discussion regarding factors (1) (the amenability of the defendant to personal jurisdiction in the alternative forum) and (24) (availability of the forum claimed to be more appropriate), see Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , discussed in § 132.140[3][a]. For further discussion regarding factor (3) (the differences in conflict of law rules applicable in this state and in the alternative forum) see Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 753-754, n.5, 763-764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , discussed in § 132.141[3][a].

Hemmelgarn v. Boeing Co. (1980) 106 Cal. App. 3d 576, 165 Cal. Rptr. 190 , arose out of the crash of a Pacific Western Airlines (PWA) Boeing 737 aircraft in British Columbia, Canada, in which 43 people were killed. Numerous wrongful death actions were filed in Canada and in both federal and state courts in California. The present case concerned three such actions filed in the San Diego County Superior Court against Rohr Industries, Inc. (Rohr), a manufacturer of component parts and a California resident, the Boeing Company (Boeing), a Washington corporation and manufacturer of the aircraft, and PWA, which, however, was never served. All other defendants who were potentially liable for damages were residents of Canada. The liability of Rohr and Boeing was predicated on negligence and defective design, instruction, and warning regarding the thrust reverser and associated systems of the aircraft. Their motions to dismiss for forum non conveniens were granted on condition that they submit to the jurisdiction of the British Columbia courts, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal held that the plaintiffs choice of forum had to be subordinated to the cumulative weight of other important considerations bearing on the trial court's exercise of discretion, which factors included, but were not limited to, the furtherance of California's interest in assuring to one of its residents (Rohr), in a single proceeding in Canada in which all defendants were before the court, the complete apportionment of damages among those responsible for the accident (106 Cal. App. 3d 576, 581) , and affirmed the judgment. In reaching this conclusion, the court said that the primary factors which must be weighed by the trial court in ruling on the motion are firmly established and have been articulated in a number of decisions applying the doctrine (106 Cal. App. 3d 576, 584) . The court then listed the factors (106 Cal. App. 3d 576, 584-585) which are set forth in Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 (discussed above).

Note that Hemmelgarn was disapproved on another ground in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 .

Jagger v. Superior Court (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 579, 158 Cal. Rptr. 163 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of a legal separation and marriage dissolution proceeding brought by the wife. The husband was an internationally known rock singer and musician, was English by birth, and was traveling on a British passport. The wife was also a British subject and had also filed a divorce proceeding in England. The English court had ruled that both parties were subject to the English forum. The parties had executed a premarital agreement in France where they were married and where they subsequently lived together until shortly before the birth of their only child when they returned to England. The husband owned a home in England, maintained an unused apartment in France, rented an apartment in New York City, and owned property in the West Indies, on which he had commenced construction of a large house. His visits to California were infrequent and in connection with furthering his career. He owned no property in California and had recorded no albums or made any films in California since 1971. His motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction and to dismiss the action for inconvenient forum were denied, but the court granted a stay to permit the English court to proceed with due diligence.

In granting a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its order denying the motion to quash, granting a stay, and denying the motion to dismiss, and to enter an order denying the motion to quash and granting a stay of the proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens, the court of appeal listed the primary factors which must be weighed by the court ruling on a forum non conveniens motion, which factors are substantially identical to those set forth in Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 (discussed above) (96 Cal. App. 3d 579, 585-586) .

In Henderson v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 142 Cal. Rptr. 478 , the court of appeal granted a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its orders denying a motion to quash service of summons and to dismiss for inconvenient forum and to grant both motions in an action by a woman to enforce a nonmarital claim against the defendant, a nonresident defendant served in Florida, which related in its entirety to an agreement made, activities performed, obligations incurred, and services rendered as companion and homemaker during an extramarital and nonmarital relationship that took place in Florida. After holding that the nature and quality of the defendant's activity in California (his horses handled by plaintiff, a horse trainer, had raced at several meets in California) subjected him to neither the general nor limited jurisdiction of the California courts (77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 594) , the court held that even if jurisdiction did exist, plaintiff's attempt to litigate her claim in this state would falter on the ground of inconvenient forum (77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 594) , and that dismissal of the action was the appropriate remedy (77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 598) . In reaching this conclusion, the court adopted, and set forth, the itemization of factors used to determine convenience of forum in Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 105, 113-115 (discussed below), and concluded that almost all of them affirmatively favored a Florida forum (77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 595-597) . The factors listed by the court are those set forth in Appalachian Ins. Company v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 435-436 n.2, 208 Cal. Rptr. 627 (discussed above).

Great Northern Ry. Co. v. Superior Court (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 105, 90 Cal. Rptr. 461 , cert. denied sub nom. Curtin v. Superior Court of California, 401 U.S. 1013, 91 S. Ct. 1254, 28 L. Ed. 2d 550 (1971) , was a mandate proceeding arising out of a wrongful death action under the Federal Employers Liability Act brought by the widow and heir of a brakeman killed in Washington in the performance of his duties with defendant railroad. Both the widow and her husband had been residents of Washington, and the widow still resided there. The widow employed a California law firm to sue the railroad, and that firm secured the appointment of its employee as California administratrix of the brakeman's estate. The railroad's principal place of business was in Minnesota. It had general offices in Washington, and operated 1,310 miles of trackage there. In California it had about 63 miles of single track over which it carried freight only, and it maintained "off-line" offices in California for solicitation of business. The trial court denied the railroad's motion to dismiss the action for inconvenient forum.

In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to dismiss the action, the court of appeal listed 25 factors, which are set forth in Appalachian Ins. Company v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 427, 435-436 n.2, 208 Cal. Rptr. 627 (discussed above) (12 Cal. App. 3d 105, 112-115) .

[d] Relative Financial Condition of Parties

Allison v. Superior Court (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 993, 160 Cal. Rptr. 309 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of proceedings concerning the custody of children. The marriage of the parties, both California residents, had been dissolved in 1974 and the wife was awarded custody of the children with visitation rights to the father. On stipulation of the parties, custody was later awarded to the father, with right of visitation in the mother. The father, with the children, then moved to Texas. The children visited the mother in 1977 in California, but a second visit scheduled for later the same year was cancelled by the father. In 1978 the mother secured issuance of an order to show cause re contempt, alleging that the father had denied her rights of visitation, and a hearing on the show-cause order was scheduled. The father then filed a proceeding re the parent-child relationship in Texas, a hearing which was scheduled four days before the hearing on the mother's order to show cause. On the basis of the father's testimony, the Texas court entered an order purporting to terminate the mother's visitation rights. The mother then petitioned the California court to modify custody. The father's motion to dismiss this proceeding under the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act was denied, and he petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal ruled that the Texas court had not complied with the act, but added that even though the Texas court didn't exercise jurisdiction in compliance with the act, perhaps not even in compliance with due process, Texas still retained the potential for a valid exercise of jurisdiction, but the question remained whether California should defer the exercise of its jurisdiction to a Texas court (99 Cal. App. 3d 993, 1000) . In holding that California was a convenient forum and denying the writ, the court considered four factors to be determinative, among which was the financial burden on the parties (99 Cal. App. 3d 993, 1000-1001) . The court said that the father was better able, financially, to present his case in California than it was for the mother to present hers in Texas. The father, a successful physician in California, presumably continued to enjoy the income of a successful physician in Texas, whereas the mother was poor. The court said that even though the relative financial condition of the parties is not a factor specifically enumerated in the Uniform Child Custody Jurisdiction Act, it was one which every court must necessarily take into account to some degree in determining convenience or inconvenience of forum under Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30 (99 Cal. App. 3d 993, 1001) .

The facts and procedural background of Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) , are discussed under § 132.130[3][a]. In reversing the order staying the action, the court of appeal first disposed of the factors which were basically neutral. The court said: (1) the Australian plaintiffs were willing to come to California in the prosecution of their action and to submit to this state's jurisdiction, whereas the defendant stipulated to submit to jurisdiction and pay any judgment that might be rendered in Australia, and, hence, this factor was neutral in its weighing process; (2) the California action was commenced well within California's statute of limitations; the applicable statute of limitations in Australia is six years (expiring some two years later) and that alternative forum was available-another basically neutral factor; and (3) as to the relative convenience to parties and witnesses of trial in Australia, both sides were willing to shoulder the burden of trial in the forum which was less convenient from the perspective of their respective residences, and neither forum was more convenient from the standpoint of all the witnesses; therefore, this factor was essentially neutral; and (4) each party was also willing to assume the expense of trial in the less convenient forum, so this factor was also neutral (182 Cal. App. 3d 166,

174-175) . The court said that further, the relative ease of access of the parties to sources of proof would be about equally enhanced were trial to commence in their respective preferred forums; any judgment rendered in either forum would be enforceable; the difficulty to the moving party, court, and jurors created by the necessity of employing deposition testimony was not oppressive; and finally, the case does not turn on a view by the trier of fact of physical evidence which cannot be moved from the site of the accident (182 Cal. App. 3d 166) .

Note that Corrigan was disapproved on another ground in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 .

[f] Other Factors

Delfosse v. C.A.C.I., Inc.-Federal (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 683, 267 Cal. Rptr. 224 , was an appeal from an order dismissing, on the ground of inconvenient forum, an action for wrongful discharge arising out of an employment contract made in California but allegedly breached in Virginia, where the plaintiff employee had been transferred and where he had worked for over 10 years. The court of appeal stated that, while some courts have delineated specific facts to consider in ruling on a motion to stay or dismiss an action for forum non conveniens, courts are not limited to these factors. In ruling on a forum non conveniens motion, courts examine all of the circumstances, balance the private and public interests, and look to the relative convenience and fairness of the parties, the witnesses, and the courts (218 Cal. App. 3d 683, 687-688) . Neither the California nor the Virginia statute of limitations had run when the California action was filed, but the Virginia statute did run before the trial court dismissed the action.

After noting that the employer's counsel had never directly responded to the trial court's inquiry as to whether a waiver would be acceptable and should be given an opportunity to do so (218 Cal. App. 3d 683, 691) , the court reversed the dismissal with detailed directions, including the direction that if the trial court, after reconsideration, granted the motion, the order be conditioned on the defendant's written agreement filed with the court that defendant would accept service in Virginia and would waive the Virginia statute of limitations (218 Cal. App. 3d 683, 690-692) .

The court further held that the California action was not barred under California's borrowing statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 361), providing that a cause of action arising in another state or country that, by the laws of that other jurisdiction, is barred by lapse of time is also barred in California (218 Cal. App. 3d 683, 691) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factors to Be Considered

Intershop Communications v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 191, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 847 involved the enforcement of a forum selection clause. In commanding the trial court to enforce the forum selection clause, the court explained that, under a traditional forum non conveniens analysis, the trial court makes its determination on a motion to stay the action after balancing various factors related to the parties' private interests as well as the interests of the public in retaining the action for trial in California. The defendant, as the moving party, has the burden of proof. In contrast, in cases with a contractual forum selection clause, the burden of proof is on the plaintiff, the party resisting the motion. The various factors involved in the traditional forum non conveniens analysis do not control. Instead, the forum selection clause is presumed valid and will be enforced unless the plaintiff shows that enforcement of the clause would be unreasonable under the circumstances of the case (104 Cal. App. 4th 191, 198-200) .

The facts and procedural background of Chong v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , are discussed in § 132.140[4][a]. The court in Chong stated that if (an alternate) forum is suitable, the court where the motion is pending must then balance the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action in California. The private interest factors are those that make trial and enforceability of the ensuing judgment expeditious and relatively inexpensive, such as ease of access to sources of proof, cost of obtaining attendance of witnesses, and availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses. The public interest factors include avoidance of overburdening local courts with congested calendars, protecting the interests of potential jurors so that they are not called on to decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and weighing the competing interests of California and the alternate jurisdiction in litigation. No single factor is predominant. Instead, all factors should be weighed together (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1037) . The court concluded that the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public overwhelming favored a Hong Kong forum. The evidence related to the case was located in Hong Kong. If any witnesses were required to testify, they too would be located in Hong Kong. California courts do not have jurisdiction over nonparty witnesses located in Hong Kong. Moreover, the public interests also weighed in favor of Hong Kong. Plaintiff was a Hong Kong Corporation, and defendants were Hong Kong citizens, although at least one resided in California. The letters of guarantee were negotiated and signed in Hong Kong, and the case would be decided under Hong Kong law. California's only interest in the litigation is that goods were shipped to California. However, the goods were shipped to a business that is not a party to the litigation. Jurors should not be required to decide a case based on Hong Kong law with which they have little or no concern, and California courts should not be burdened with litigation that may have been previously adjudicated in Hong Kong. Finally, Hong Kong's interest in applying its law and ensuring that its financial institutions are compensated for breach of contract claims far outweighs California's interest in providing a forum for companies that finance a shipment of goods into California (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1039) .

In Boaz v. Boyle & Co. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 700, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888 , grandchildren of mothers who had ingested a certain drug while pregnant sought to sue the manufacturers of the drug for injuries that the grandchildren received when they were born. All but one of the grandchildren was a resident of New York or New Jersey, the original drug ingestion occurred in New York, but all of the defendants did business in California. Actions were originally pursued in New York, but New York State declined to recognize the preconception tort relied on by plaintiffs. The plaintiffs then sought relief in California. The trial court dismissed the actions of the nonresident plaintiffs under the doctrine of forum non conveniens. The court of appeal concluded that the trial court acted within the proper scope of its discretion, and discussed three of the factors guiding judicial discretion in forum non conveniens cases. First, the plaintiff's choice is to be accorded substantial weight. However, the court stated that this factor derives most of its meaning from cases in which the plaintiff is a resident of the forum state. Second, the desire of the forum state to deter the tortious activity is significant. However, the court noted that this factor was of minor application in this matter. Third, the choice of law problems are to be considered. The court reasoned that the circumstances of this situation, including the site of the tortious acts and their manifestation, and the lack of a California connection to these events, suggests that a California court would look to the substantive law of New York (40 Cal. App. 4th 700, 713) . Concluding that there was no reason for California to handle the litigation, the court affirmed the dismissal of the nonresidents actions.

[b] Specific Factors Enumerated

In Net2Phone, Inc. v. Superior Court (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 583, 135 Cal. Rptr. 2d 149 , a forum selection clause was enforced against a plaintiff who was not a party to the contract in question, based on a finding that the plaintiff was closely related to the contractual relationship. The plaintiff challenging the forum selection clause has the burden of showing, in response to a defendant's motion to stay or dismiss, that enforcement of the clause would be unreasonable under the circumstances. Where an entity that is not itself a party to a contract sues in a representative capacity challenging certain contractual terms, it purports to assert the rights of those who are parties to the contract, and is thus "closely related" to the contractual relationship (109 Cal. App. 4th 583, 588-589) .

Chong v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , is discussed under § 132.130[4][a].

In Rinauro v. Honda Motor Co. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 506, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 181 , the court of appeal upheld the trial court's order granting defendants' motion to dismiss based on forum non conveniens in a products liability action arising from an automobile accident brought by residents of Nevada against a foreign vehicle manufacturer and its wholly owned subsidiaries, which were California corporations. The court stated that the trial court correctly applied the factors enumerated by the California Supreme Court in Stangvik v. Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , in determining whether the action should be dismissed on grounds of forum non conveniens (31 Cal. App. 4th 506, 509) .

It found that substantial evidence supported the trial court's implied finding that Nevada was a "suitable" alternate forum since the action could be filed in Nevada under its statute of limitations, the plaintiffs resided in Nevada, the accident occurred there, and many if not most of the witnesses resided there (31 Cal. App. 4th 506, 509) . The court then considered the private interests of the litigants, such as the ease of access to sources of proof, the cost of obtaining attendance of witnesses and the availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses, and the interests of the public in retaining the action for trial in California, such as avoidance of overburdening local courts with congested calendars, protecting the interests of potential jurors so that they are not called upon to decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and weighing the competing interests of California and the alternate jurisdiction in the litigation (31 Cal. App. 4th 506, 510) .

The court of appeal concluded by finding the following factors supported the trial court's order: (1) plaintiffs were residents of Nevada; (2) the vehicle was purchased in Nevada from a Nevada resident; (3) the accident occurred in Nevada; (4) many witnesses resided in Nevada who declared extreme inconvenience by a California trial; (5) other witnesses resided in Idaho who also declared extreme inconvenience by a California trial; (6) the California corporations did not manufacture or design the vehicle; and (7) the lawsuit would burden the California courts (31 Cal. App. 4th 506, 510) .

THE MOTION TO STAY OR DISMISS THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING] ON THE GROUND THAT CALIFORNIA IS AN INCONVENIENT FORUM FOR TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [THE PROPOSED ALTERNATIVE FORUM IS NOT SUITABLE and/or A CONSIDERATION OF THE PRIMARY FACTORS INVOLVED IN THIS WEIGH IN FAVOR OF THIS COURT RETAINING THE CASE].

A. Motion to Stay or Dismiss for Inconvenient Forum. A court shall stay or dismiss the action in whole or in part on any conditions that may be just only when it finds that it would be in the interest of substantial justice that the action should be heard in a forum outside this state (see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(a)).

[EITHER]

B. Suitable Alternative Forum Is Not Available. The action will not be dismissed unless a suitable alternative forum is available to the plaintiff. Whether the alternative forum is suitable is a threshold inquiry that does not depend on the factors relevant to the convenience of the parties and the interests of the public, but on whether an action may be commenced in the alternative jurisdiction and a valid judgment obtained there against the defendant (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752, 752 n.3, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 ; American Cemwood Corp. v. American Home Assurance Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670). Because of this factor, the suit will be entertained, no matter how inappropriate the forum may be, if the defendant cannot be subjected to jurisdiction in other states. The same is true if the plaintiff's cause of action would elsewhere be barred by the statute of limitations, unless the court is willing to accept the defendant's stipulation that he or she will not raise this defense in the second state (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14).

C. When Weighing of Private and Public Interest Factors Is Proper; Burden of Proof. It is only when the alternate forum is a suitable place for trial that the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action for trial in California are considered, and the defendant, as the moving party, bears the burden of proof (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 ; Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 1466, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 ; *Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. [a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, is for use by a plaintiff in opposing a motion stay or dismiss the action or proceeding on the ground that California is an inconvenient forum and that the case should be tried in another forum.

The additional points and authorities set out in §§ 132.150 -132.153 should be combined, when appropriate, with the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in the foregoing form may be used to oppose a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 132.130.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, the plaintiff should set forth in his or her counter declaration the facts establishing those factors set forth in § 132.130 that favor the court's retention of jurisdiction [see, e.g., Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. Co. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173-174, 174 n.2, 176, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) (disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14)]. In the memorandum, counsel should enumerate those particular factors that weigh against the stay or dismissal of the case.

See also § 132.130[2] for comments on factors weighing in favor of stay or dismissal.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Suitable Alternative Forum Is Not Available

In Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 751, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , plaintiffs, members of two families, one residing in Norway and the other in Sweden, were the wives and children of two men who received heart valve implants in the countries of their residence. The valves were designed and manufactured in California by defendant. The valves allegedly failed and the two men died. Plaintiffs sued defendant and its Delaware parent in California alleging that the heart valves were defective. They sought damages based on theories of negligence, strict liability, breach of warranty, fraud, and loss of consortium. Defendants' motion to dismiss or stay the actions on the ground of forum non conveniens was granted, subject to seven conditions to which defendants agreed. The court retained jurisdiction to make such further orders as might become appropriate. Plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed.

Although the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal on the ground, among others, that the courts of Norway and Sweden presented suitable forums for trial of the actions, the Court said that in determining whether to grant a motion based on forum non conveniens, a court must first determine whether the alternate forum is a "suitable" place for trial (54 Cal. 3d 744, 751) . Rejecting Holmes v. Syntex Laboratories, Inc. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 372, 202 Cal. Rptr. 773 , which the Court said appears to consider the "suitability" of the alternative forum not as a threshold inquiry, but as part of the discretionary determination of the balance of conveniences, the Court said that the Judicial Council Comment to Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30 makes it clear that the question of a suitable alternative forum depends not on the factors relevant to the convenience of the parties and the interests of the public, but on whether an action may be commenced in the alternative jurisdiction and a valid judgment obtained there against the defendant (54 Cal. 3d 744, 752 n.3). Quoting the Judicial Council Comment, the Court said the action will not be dismissed unless a suitable alternative forum is available to the plaintiff, and that, because of this factor, the suit will be entertained, no matter how inappropriate the forum may be, if the defendant cannot be subjected to jurisdiction in other states. The same will be true if the plaintiff's cause of action would elsewhere be barred by the statute of limitations, unless the court is willing to accept the defendant's stipulation that he or she will not raise this defense in the second state (54 Cal. 3d 744, 752) . The Court said that the defendants stipulated that they would submit to jurisdiction in Sweden or Norway, respectively, as well as to the tolling of the statute of limitations during the pendency of the actions in California, and that, thus, the courts of Sweden and Norway presented suitable forums for trial of the actions (54 Cal. 3d 744, 752) .

American Cemwood Corp. v. American Home Assurance Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670 , involved an insurance dispute relating to defective roofing tiles. The manufacturer and related companies (the insured) filed suit in California against five insurers to obtain a declaration of the insurers' obligations with respect to claims against the manufacturer, and as to some defendants, damages for breach of the duties to defend and indemnify and of the implied covenant of good faith. Two of the insurers brought an action in British Columbia against the insured for declaratory relief as to their indemnity and defense obligations. The other insurers involved in the California action were not joined in the British Columbia action. In the California action, the insurers who brought the action in British Columbia moved to dismiss or to stay the California action in favor of the British Columbia action under a theory of forum non conveniens. The trial court stayed the action, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court first noted that the availability of a suitable alternative forum is critical because the doctrine presupposes at least two forums in which the defendant is amenable to process and provides the criteria for choosing between them (87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 435) . The court then rejected the defendant's contention that the granting or denial of a forum non conveniens motion is entirely discretionary. Rather, the court must first make a nondiscretionary determination whether the alternative forum is a suitable place for trial. Only if the court finds the alternative forum suitable does the court proceed to the discretionary balancing of the litigant's private interests and the interests of the public in retaining the action in California (87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 436) . The court then proceeded to find that British Columbia was not a suitable alternative forum because the moving defendants did not establish that all of the defendants in the California action were subject to the jurisdiction of British Columbia (87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 437-440) .

[b] When Weighing of Private and Public Interest Factors Is Proper; Burden of Proof

The procedural background of Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , is discussed under § 132.140[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal affirming the trial court's order that conditionally granted the inconvenient forum motion and stayed the action, the Supreme Court said that if the alternate forum is a suitable place for trial, the next step is to consider the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action for trial in California. The private interest factors are those that make trial and the enforceability of the ensuing judgment expeditious and relatively inexpensive, such as the ease of access to sources of proof, the cost of obtaining attendance of witnesses, and the availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses. The public interest factors include avoidance of overburdening local courts with congested calendars, protecting the interests of potential jurors so that they are not called on to decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and weighing the competing interests of California and the alternate jurisdiction in the litigation (54 Cal. 3d 744, 751 , citing Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 259-261, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 and Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert (1947) 330 U.S. 501, 507-509, 67 S. Ct. 839, 91 L. Ed. 1055). The Court added that, on a motion for forum non conveniens, defendant, as the moving party, bears the burden of proof (54 Cal. 3d 744, 751) .

The procedural background of Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 is discussed in § 132.130[3][b]. In its ruling, the court explained that a trial court must be flexible in its weighing of the Stangvik factors. Private and public interest factors must be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element. The doctrine of forum non conveniens may not be base on identification of a single factor rather than the balancing of several factors. An undue emphasis on a single factor is especially threatening to a balanced analysis because some of the matters to be weighed will by their nature point to a grant or denial of the motion. For example, the jurisdiction's interest in deterring future wrongful conduct of the defendant will usually favor retention of the action if the defendant is a resident of the forum, whereas the congestion factor will usually weigh in favor of trial in the alternate jurisdiction. The court must consider the public policy considerations, such as California's interest in deciding actions against resident corporation whose conduce in the state causes injury to persons in other jurisdictions.

In Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 877 , plaintiff was a resident of Switzerland. While visiting California, he purchased a Cannondale bicycle from Two Wheels One Planet, a retail bicycle shop located in Artesia. After returning to Switzerland, Roulier was seriously injured while riding the bicycle. He subsequently filed a complaint in Los Angeles Superior Court, alleging causes of action for strict product liability, negligent product liability, and breach of warranty, against Two Wheels One Planet and Cannondale, a Delaware-incorporated business that designs and manufactures bicycles; Cannondale's principle place of business is in Connecticut. Defendants filed a motion to stay or dismiss the action on the grounds of forum non conveniens, and the trial court found that Switzerland would be a suitable forum and dismissed the suit.

While the appellate court also found that Switzerland was a suitable alternative forum because an action could be commenced and a valid judgment obtained there against the defendant, the court reversed the trial court and found a strong interest in maintaining the action in California. The fact that an alternative jurisdiction's law was less favorable to a litigant than the law of the forum could not be accorded any weight in deciding a motion for forum non conveniens provided that some remedy was afforded. Once a suitable alternative forum is found, the next step is to consider the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action for trial in California. The private interest factors are those that make trial and the enforceability of the ensuing judgment expeditious and relatively inexpensive, such as the ease of access to sources of proof, the cost of obtaining attendance of witnesses, and the availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses. The public interest factors include avoidance of overburdening local courts with congested calendars, protecting the interests of potential jurors so that they are not called upon to decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and weighing the competing interests of California and the alternate jurisdiction in the litigation. These factors are to be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element. There were relevant witnesses and documents available in both Switzerland and California. The consumer provided defendants his medical records, made himself available for medical examination in California, and has stipulated to video depositions of any medical witnesses in Switzerland. Little or no impact on court congestion would be expected to result from a trial in California. Switzerland had little interest in the case, whereas California had a strong interest in preventing the production and sale of defective products in the state (101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1187-1193) .

The procedural background of Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 is discussed under § 132.140[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal affirming the trial court's order that conditionally granted the inconvenient forum motion and stayed the action, the Supreme Court said many cases hold that a plaintiff's choice of a forum should rarely be disturbed unless the balance is strongly in favor of the defendant, but that the reasons advanced for this frequently reiterated rule apply only to residents of the forum state, namely: (1) if the plaintiff is a resident of the jurisdiction in which the suit is filed, the plaintiff's choice of forum is presumed to be convenient (citing Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 255-256, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 ; Thomson v. Continental Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 738, 744-745, 59 Cal. Rptr. 101, 427 P.2d 765); and (2) a state has a strong interest in assuring its own residents an adequate forum for the redress of grievances (citing Archibald v. Cinerama Hotels (1976) 15 Cal. 3d 853, 859, 126 Cal. Rptr. 811, 544 P.2d 947) (54 Cal. 3d 744, 754-755) . The Court said it is difficult to justify giving preferential status to a plaintiff's choice of forum if the plaintiff is not a resident. Since the preference is based on factors which apply only to residents, it would appear that the underlying justification for the preference does not apply to nonresidents. The Court acknowledged, however, that the defendants did not make this argument, and that this view is admittedly contrary to Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 255, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 , which states that there is ordinarily a strong presumption in favor of the plaintiff's choice of forum (54 Cal. 3d 744, 755 n.7).

Note, however, with respect to plaintiffs who are citizens of foreign countries, the Court said that the Supreme Court of the United States, in Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 255, 259-261, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 , held that where the plaintiff resides in a foreign country the plaintiff's choice of forum is much less reasonable and is not entitled to the same preference as a resident of the state where the action is filed. The Court held that, under the rule laid down in Piper, the fact that plaintiffs in the cases before it chose to file their complaint in California was not a substantial factor in favor of retaining jurisdiction here (54 Cal. 3d 744, 755 n.7). The Court expressly disapproved the ruling in Holmes v. Syntex Laboratories, Inc. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 372, 202 Cal. Rptr. 773 , that substantial deference is accorded even a foreign plaintiff's choice of forum (54 Cal. 3d 744, 755 n.7).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Suitable Alternative Forum Is Not Available

In Chong v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , plaintiff was a registered deposit taking institution authorized to do business under Hong Kong law and conducted its business in Hong Kong. Plaintiff extended credit to another Hong Kong business. The credit was for goods shipped to that business's California company. Defendants signed letters of guarantee personally guaranteeing credit for debt incurred by that business. The letters of guarantee were negotiated and executed in Hong Kong, but defendants claimed they were deceived into signing the guarantees. Plaintiff obtained judgments in Hong Kong against the Hong Kong business and one of the defendants on the guarantee. Plaintiff also filed in California against the defendants. Defendants petitioned for dismissal or a stay based on forum non conveniens grounds. Defendants agreed to stipulate to jurisdiction in Hong Kong as well as to the tolling of any statute of limitations during the pendency of the suit in California. Defendants were Hong Kong citizens although one of them had a primary residence in California. The trial court denied defendants' motion to stay or dismiss the action. The court was concerned that the transfer of Hong Kong from British to Chinese control would destroy plaintiff's opportunity to receive a fair trial. The court also found that the public and private interests did not weigh in favor of granting the motion. Defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1035-1036) .

The court of appeal issued the writ of mandate directing the trial court to stay the proceedings during the pendency of the proceedings in Hong Kong. The court stated that in determining whether to grant a motion based on forum non conveniens, a court must make a threshold determination whether the alternate forum is a suitable place for trial. A forum is suitable if there is jurisdiction and no statute of limitations bar to hearing the case on the merits. A forum is suitable where an action can be brought, although not necessarily won. In rare circumstances, however, a forum may not be suitable even when the defendant is amenable to process and there is no procedural bar to hearing the issues on the merits. This exception has been applied in cases where the proposed alternative forum is in a foreign country that lacks an independent judiciary (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1036-1037) . The issue before the court was whether Hong Kong courts presented a rare circumstance where a forum is not suitable even when the jurisdictional and procedural requirements are satisfied. The defendants argued that because it is well known that Chinese courts do not provide due process, the court should infer Hong Kong courts would not provide due process after Hong Kong came under Chinese control. Defendants, however, provided no evidence to support this inference. Moreover, there was evidence that Hong Kong courts would remain independent following the Chinese takeover. China promised by international treaty that the Hong Kong judiciary would remain independent. This is distinguishable from those cases that found Iran, Ecuador, and Chile did not constitute suitable forums because there was evidence that the judiciary would not provide due process. No such evidence was presented in this case. Because there was evidence that Hong Kong will continue to provide due process, Hong Kong remained a suitable alternate forum (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1037) .

[b] Specific Factors Enumerated

are discussed under § 132.140[4][a]. Although the court of appeal in Chong issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to stay the proceedings during the pendency of the proceedings in Hong Kong, the court stated that if an alternate forum is suitable, the court where the motion is pending must then balance the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action in California. The private interest factors are those that make trial and enforceability of the ensuing judgment expeditious and relatively inexpensive such as ease of access to sources of proof, cost of obtaining attendance of witnesses, and availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses. The public interest factors include avoidance of overburdening local courts with congested calendars, protecting the interests of potential jurors so that they are not called on to decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and weighing the competing interests of California and the alternate jurisdiction in litigation. No single factor is predominant. Instead, all factors should be weighed together (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1037) .

The court of appeal in Ford Motor Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 604, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342 , held the trial court abused its discretion in granting a motion to dismiss on grounds of inconvenient forum in an action brought by an automobile company against numerous insurance companies to establish rights to insurance coverage for liabilities arising from environmental contamination of its various plant sites in different states, including California. The court stated that in exercising its discretion, the trial court must rely on evidence and not merely bald assertions that California is an inconvenient forum (35 Cal. App. 4th 604, 610) . The court cited numerous factors in determining that California was a suitable forum, including that the insurance policies at issue contained "service of suit" clauses, California bore a substantial interest in regulating the conduct at issue since environmental cleanup issues were at stake as well as the fact that some of the key witnesses resided in California, the California courts had a superior ability to decide the case expeditiously given the trial court delay reduction procedures, the absence of any disproportionate burden on the state's courts, the absence of unfairness in imposing jury duty on a community unrelated to the action, the lack of any possibility of needless multiplicitous actions and inconsistent adjudication, and the defendants' failure to establish party and witness inconvenience (35 Cal. App. 4th 604, 611-618) .

The facts and procedural background of Chong v. Superior Court (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 427 , are discussed under § 132.140[4][a]. Although the court of appeal in Chong issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to stay the proceedings during the pendency of the proceedings in Hong Kong, the court stated that when a plaintiff is a resident of the forum state, plaintiff's choice of forum in that state is afforded substantial weight. A nonresident plaintiff's choice of forum is entitled to less deference (58 Cal. App. 4th 1032, 1038) .

The facts and procedural background of Ford Motor Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America (1995) 35 Cal. App. 4th 604, 41 Cal. Rptr. 2d 342 , are discussed under § 132.140[4][b]. In holding that the trial court abused its discretion by dismissing the case based on forum non conveniens, the court stated that the plaintiff's choice of forum is entitled to great weight even though the plaintiff is a nonresident, citing, among other cases, Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert (1947) 330 U.S. 501, 508-509, 67 S. Ct. 839, 91 L. Ed. 1055 (35 Cal. App. 4th 604, 610-611) . The court acknowledged dicta in Stangvik v. Shiley, Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , that questioned affording great deference to a nonresident plaintiff's choice of forum, but noted that the Stangvik court declined to state a different rule because to do so would be inconsistent with United States Supreme Court cases. The only pertinent holding in Stangvik on this issue is that a foreign, noncitizen plaintiff's choice of forum is entitled to less deference. Thus, the defendants bore the burden of producing sufficient evidence to overcome the strong presumption of appropriateness attending plaintiff's choice of forum, and unless that burden was met, the trial court abused its discretion in granting the motion (35 Cal. App. 4th 604, 610-611) .

§ 132.141 Opposing Motion to Stay or Dismiss Action or Proceeding for Inconvenient Forum [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 410.30(a), 418.10(a)(2)]--Law of Alternative Forum Less Favorable to Plaintiff Than Law of California

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum (see, e.g., §§ 132.140).]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION TO _____ [STAY or DISMISS] THE ACTION FOR INCONVENIENT FORUM BECAUSE THE LAW OF _____ [specify alternative jurisdiction] DOES SUPPLY A REMEDY AND THE FACT THAT THE LAW OF _____ [specify alternative jurisdiction] IS LESS FAVORABLE TO _____ [specify moving party] THAN IS THE LAW OF CALIFORNIA IS NOT TO BE ACCORDED ANY WEIGHT IN DECIDING THE MOTION.

Law of Alternative Forum Provides Remedy Less Favorable to Plaintiff Than That of Forum. The fact that an alternative jurisdiction's law is less favorable to a litigant than the law of the forum should not be accorded any weight in deciding a motion for forum non conveniens provided, however, that some remedy is afforded (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 754 n.5, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, states the rule that the alternative jurisdiction's less favorable law to plaintiff is not a factor to be considered unless the alternative jurisdiction affords no remedy at all. The form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Law of Alternative Forum Provides Remedy Less Favorable to Plaintiff Than That of Forum

The procedural background of Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 is discussed in § 132.140[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal affirming the trial court's order that conditionally granted the inconvenient forum motion and stayed the action, the Supreme Court discussed Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 252, 254, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 , which, at p. 248, n.13, noted that the law of California relating to forum non conveniens is virtually identical to federal law (54 Cal. 3d 744, 754, n.6). The Court said that the high court discussed in some detail the significance to be accorded to the fact that the law of the forum state is more favorable to the plaintiff than that of the alternate jurisdiction, and that, in this connection, it observed the laws of the United States in product liability actions favor plaintiffs in several respects: the law of strict liability, which exists in almost all 50 states but only a handful of foreign countries; the existence of jury trials in such actions, resulting in sometimes generous awards; contingent attorney fee arrangements; and more liberal rules of discovery. The Court said the high court held that if substantial weight is given to the circumstance that the law in the forum state is more favorable to the plaintiff than the one in the alternate jurisdiction, the American courts, which are already extremely attractive to foreign plaintiffs, would become even more attractive, that the flow of litigation into the United States would increase and further congest already crowded courts, and that, thus, the possibility of an unfavorable change in the law is a relevant consideration only if the remedy in the alternative forum is so clearly inadequate or unsatisfactory that it is no remedy at all (54 Cal. 3d 744, 753) .

The Court said it is not entirely clear from the language of Piper whether an unfavorable change of law should be given no consideration whatsoever in the forum non conveniens balance or only slight consideration (54 Cal. 3d 744, 753-754 n.5). The Court said that, in its view, the fact that an alternative jurisdiction's law is less favorable to a litigant than the law of the forum should not be accorded any weight in deciding a motion for forum non conveniens, provided, however, that some remedy is afforded. One basis underlying the doctrine, as Piper and other cases hold, is to avoid burdening the trial court by requiring it to interpret the law of foreign jurisdictions, which compels it to conduct complex exercises in comparative law. To impose such a burden on the trial court for the purpose of facilitating its consideration of a factor of only slight significance in the forum non conveniens balance would be unwarranted (54 Cal. 3d 744, 754 n.5). The Court disapproved Holmes v. Syntex Laboratories, Inc. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 372, 202 Cal. Rptr. 773 , to the extent it held that California attaches far greater significance to the possibility of an unfavorable change in applicable law in the alternative forum than the federal courts and that a factor of fundamental importance in favor of denial of the motion for forum non conveniens was that the plaintiffs would be substantially disadvantaged if the case were tried in Britain because that country did not afford recovery on the basis of strict liability (54 Cal. 3d 744, 763-764) . The Court said that, as Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 , points out, if substantial weight is given to the fact that the law in the forum state is more favorable to a plaintiff than in the foreign jurisdiction, the balance will ordinarily favor denial of the motion, and substantial weight should be given to this factor only if the alternative forum provides no remedy at all (54 Cal. 3d 744, 764) .

Note that it would appear that if the alternative forum provided no remedy at all, it would not be a suitable forum for trial of the action, and the argument opposing the motion to stay or dismiss would be based on that ground. That is, absence of a suitable alternative forum is not a factor to be weighed against other factors in determining whether or not to stay or dismiss the action, but is a threshold question to be answered; if the answer is in the negative, the motion should be denied and the court never reaches the stage of balancing factors [see Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , and discussion in § 132.140[3][a]].

§ 132.150 Supporting or Opposing Motion to Stay or Dismiss Action or Proceeding for Inconvenient Forum [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 410.30(a), 418.10(a)(2)]--Application of Factors to Be Considered

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum (see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140).]

A BALANCED ANALYSIS OF THE FACTORS IS REQUIRED.

Balanced Analysis of Factors to Be Considered Is Required. The private and public interest factors must be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element. An undue emphasis on a single factor is especially threatening to a balanced analysis because some of the matters to be weighed will by their nature point to a grant or denial of the motion (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 753, n.4, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 ; Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 1466, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 ; Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1187-1193, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 877).

[2] Comments

The points and authorities in [1], above, state the rule that, in a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum, a balanced analysis of the factors to be considered is required.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum [see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140]. For other related uses, see § 132.130[2].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Balanced Analysis of Factors Is Required

The procedural background of Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , is discussed in § 132.140[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal affirming the trial court's order that conditionally granted the inconvenient forum motion and stayed the action, the Supreme Court, discussing Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 249-250, 252, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 , said that the high court, in its analysis of the doctrine of forum non conveniens, reiterated long-standing principles, first clearly enunciated by it in Gulf Oil Corp. v. Gilbert (1947) 330 U.S. 501, 501, 67 S. Ct. 839, 91 L. Ed. 1055), and later applied in California in Price v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 577, 268 P.2d 457 , and warned that the private and public interest factors must be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element. A court should not decide that there are circumstances in which the doctrine will apply or never apply. Otherwise, the flexibility of the doctrine would be threatened, and its application would be based on identification of a single factor rather than the balancing of several (54 Cal. 3d 744, 753) . The Court noted that an undue emphasis on a single factor is especially threatening to a balanced analysis because some of the matters to be weighed will by their nature point to a grant or denial of the motion. For example, the jurisdiction's interest in deterring future wrongful conduct of the defendant will usually favor retention of the action if the defendant is a resident of the forum, whereas the court congestion factor will usually weigh in favor of trial in the alternate jurisdiction (54 Cal. 3d 744, 753 n.3).

The procedural background of Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 is discussed in § 132.130[3][b]. In its ruling, the court explained that a trial court must be flexible in its weighing of the Stangvik factors. Private and public interest factors must be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element. The doctrine of forum non conveniens may not be base on identification of a single factor rather than the balancing of several factors. An undue emphasis on a single factor is especially threatening to a balanced analysis because some of the matters to be weighed will by their nature point to a grant or denial of the motion. For example, the jurisdiction's interest in deterring future wrongful conduct of the defendant will usually favor retention of the action if the defendant is a resident of the forum, whereas the congestion factor will usually weigh in favor of trial in the alternate jurisdiction. The court must consider the public policy considerations, such as California's interest in deciding actions against resident corporation whose conduce in the state causes injury to persons in other jurisdictions.

The facts and procedural background of Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 877 are discussed in § 132.140(3)(b). The court relied on Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556 in considering the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action for trial in California. The private interest factors are those that make trial and the enforceability of the ensuing judgment expeditious and relatively inexpensive, such as the ease of access to sources of proof, the cost of obtaining attendance of witnesses, and the availability of compulsory process for attendance of unwilling witnesses. The public interest factors include avoidance of overburdening local courts with congested calendars, protecting the interests of potential jurors so that they are not called upon to decide cases in which the local community has little concern, and weighing the competing interests of California and the alternate jurisdiction in the litigation. These factors are to be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element (101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1187-1188) . The court found that Switzerland had little interest in the case, whereas California had a strong interest in preventing the production and sale of defective products in the state.

[4] Additional Authorities

In Roman v. Liberty University, Inc. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 670, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 828 , plaintiff challenged the trial court's granting of a motion based on forum non conveniens, arguing that no suitable alternative forum is available because Virginia applies contributory, rather than comparative, negligence principles, and plaintiff's own negligence or assumption of the risk would completely bar his recovery under Virginia law. As a general rule, comparative law questions are irrelevant to a forum non conveniens analysis, except when the alternate forum provides no remedy at all. Accordingly, the court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff has identified no bar to filing a negligence action in Virginia. If he proves his case, and proves that he was not contributorily negligent, he will be entitled to recover damages under Virginia law; a forum is suitable where an action can be brought, although not necessarily won (162 Cal. App. 4th 670, 683).

§ 132.151 Supporting or Opposing Motion to Stay or Dismiss Action or Proceeding for Inconvenient Forum [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 410.30(a), 418.10(a)(2)]--Ruling on Motion Is in Court's Discretion

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum (see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140).]

OTHER THAN THE NONDISCRETIONARY THRESHOLD DETERMINATION THAT THE ALTERNATIVE FORUM IS A SUITABLE PLACE FOR TRIAL, THE APPLICATION OF THE DOCTRINE OF FORUM NON CONVENIENS IN A GIVEN CASE IS WITHIN THE DISCRETION OF THE TRIAL COURT.

A. Discretion of Court. The threshold determination of whether the proposed alternative forum is a suitable place for trial is a nondiscretionary determination (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 752 n.3, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 ; Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 1466, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 ; American Cemwood Corp. v. American Home Assurance Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 436, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670). If the court finds the alternative forum suitable, the court proceeds to a discretionary exercise of balancing the private interests of the litigants and the interests of the public in retaining the action in California. In this respect, the granting or denial of the motion is within the trial court's discretion and substantial deference is accorded its determination in this regard (Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 751, 752 n.3, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 ; American Cemwood Corp. v. American Home Assurance Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 436, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670 ; Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1188, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 877).

B. Discretion Not Arbitrary. The trial court's discretion may not, however, be arbitrary, but must be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve and not impede the ends of substantial justice (Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v. Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1436, 249 Cal. Rptr. 559 ; Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247).

[2] Comments

The form in [1], above, states the rule that, in a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum, the court has discretion in ruling on the motion.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum [see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140], or adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief. For other related uses, see § 132.130[2].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discretion of Court

The procedural background of Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , is discussed in § 132.140[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of the court of appeal affirming the trial court's order that conditionally granted the inconvenient forum motion and stayed the action, the Supreme Court, citing Piper Aircraft Co. v. Reyno (1981) 454 U.S. 235, 257, 102 S. Ct. 252, 70 L. Ed. 2d 419 , and Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V., above, said that the granting or denying of a forum non conveniens motion is within the trial court's discretion, and substantial deference is accorded its determination in this regard (54 Cal. 3d 744, 751) .

The court also noted that the question of the suitability of the alternative forum was a threshold inquiry, and not part of the discretionary balancing of conveniences (54 Cal. 3d 744, 752 n.3).

The procedural background of Morris v. AGFA Corp. (2006) 144 Cal. App. 4th 1452, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 301 is discussed in § 132.130[3][b]. In its ruling, the court explained that a trial court must be flexible in its weighing of the Stangvik factors. Private and public interest factors must be applied flexibly, without giving undue emphasis to any one element. The doctrine of forum non conveniens may not be base on identification of a single factor rather than the balancing of several factors. An undue emphasis on a single factor is especially threatening to a balanced analysis because some of the matters to be weighed will by their nature point to a grant or denial of the motion. For example, the jurisdiction's interest in deterring future wrongful conduct of the defendant will usually favor retention of the action if the defendant is a resident of the forum, whereas the congestion factor will usually weigh in favor of trial in the alternate jurisdiction. The court must consider the public policy considerations, such as California's interest in deciding actions against resident corporation whose conduce in the state causes injury to persons in other jurisdictions.

The facts and procedural background of American Cemwood Corp. v. American Home Assurance Co. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670 , are discussed in § 132.140[3][a].

In reversing the order staying the action, the court of appeal noted that the threshold question of whether the alternative forum is a suitable place for trial is a threshold determination and is not a discretionary determination. In assessing suitability there is no balancing of interests and no discretion to be exercised. Only after the alternative forum is determined to be suitable does the court proceed to the discretionary balance of public and private interests (87 Cal. App. 4th 431, 436) .

The facts and procedural background of Roulier v. Cannondale (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 877 are discussed in § 132.140[3][b]. The Roulier court reiterated the rule that the rule on forum non conveniens is an equitable doctrine invoking the discretionary power of a court to decline to exercise the jurisdiction it has over a transitory cause of action when it believes that the action may be more appropriately and justly tried elsewhere, and the trial court's balancing of these factors is entitled to substantial deference (101 Cal. App. 4th 1180, 1188) .

[b] Discretion Not Arbitrary

In Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v. Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 249 Cal. Rptr. 559 , a Netherlands bank sued an English lawyer and his law firm and a California law firm for legal malpractice, based on a loan transaction involving security interests in California in which the California law firm represented the bank on behalf of the English law firm, and the California law firm cross complained against the English lawyer for indemnification. The trial court granted the motion of the English lawyer and his law firm to dismiss the action as to them on the ground of forum non conveniens, and the court of appeal affirmed. In affirming the order dismissing the action as to two defendants, the court of appeal said that the act of staying or dismissing an action on the ground of forum non conveniens is an act of discretion which may not be arbitrary; it must be exercised in conformity with the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve and not impede the ends of substantial justice, and that when the court has abused its discretion, the stay or dismissal must be lifted (202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1436) .

The facts and procedural background of Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) , are discussed in § 132.130[3][a]. In reversing the order staying the action, the court of appeal said that the act of staying an action is an action of discretion which may not be arbitrary; it must be exercised within the spirit of the law and in a manner to subserve and not impede the ends of substantial justice, and that where the court has abused its discretion, the stay must be lifted (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173) .

Note that Corrigan was disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discretion of Court

The facts and procedural background of Campbell v. Parker-Hannifin Corp. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 202 , are discussed in § 132.154[3][a]. In finding that the trial court had not abused its discretion by staying the action against two defendants based on the doctrine of forum non conveniens, the court of appeal, citing Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 751, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , noted that on a motion for forum non conveniens, the granting or denial of such a motion is within the trial court's discretion, and substantial deference is accorded its determination in this regard (69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1538, 1541) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum (see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140).]

THE _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING] SHOULD [NOT] BE DISMISSED FOR THE REASON THAT _____ [specify].

A. Stay Versus Dismissal. Once the court determines that in the interest of substantial justice a forum other than California would be more convenient, the court may either dismiss or stay the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(a)).

B. Dismissal Is Exceptional Remedy. Ordinarily, dismissal is an exceptional remedy and a stay is the usual one, so that if obstacles to litigation develop in the convenient forum, the parties may resume litigation in California (Jagger v. Superior Court (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 579, 589, 158 Cal. Rptr. 163 ; Henderson v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 597-598, 142 Cal. Rptr. 478).

[Optional] C. Dismissal Required. When the balance of factors to be considered does weigh heavily in a defendant's favor for dismissal, it becomes the trial court's duty to apply the doctrine and dismiss the action or proceeding (Outboard Marine Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 434, 439, 130 Cal. Rptr. 642).

[Optional] D. Conditions on Dismissal or Stay. The court may dismiss or stay the action in whole or in part on any conditions that may be just (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(a)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, sets out various factors for the court's consideration, in ruling on a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum, in determining whether a stay or dismissal is the more appropriate remedy.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum [see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140]. For other related uses, see § 132.130[2].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Dismissal Is Exceptional Remedy

The facts and procedural background of Jagger v. Superior Court (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 579, 158 Cal. Rptr. 163 , are discussed in § 132.130[3][c]. In granting a writ of mandate directing the trial court to stay the proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens, the court of appeal said that ordinarily, dismissal is an exceptional remedy and a stay is the usual one, so that if obstacles to litigation develop in the convenient forum the parties may resume litigation in California (96 Cal. App. 3d 579, 589) .

The procedural background of Henderson v. Superior Court (1978) 77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 142 Cal. Rptr. 478 , is discussed in § 132.130[3][c], Specific Factors Enumerated. In granting the writ directing the trial court to grant the motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction and to dismiss the action for inconvenient forum, the court of appeal said ordinarily, dismissal is the exceptional remedy and stay the usual remedy, so that if obstacles develop to litigation in the convenient forum the litigant may resume litigation in the California forum (77 Cal. App. 3d 583, 597-598) .

[b] Dismissal Required

Outboard Marine Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 434, 130 Cal. Rptr. 642 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action against a Delaware corporation, which did business in all 50 states and had a resident agent for service of process in California, and an individual named as a nominal defendant because of his California residence, for the wrongful death of one of the Delaware corporation's California division's dealers who had been killed in Wyoming while operating a trackster manufactured by the corporation in Nebraska or Wisconsin. The decedent's widow and heirs were residents of Wyoming. Defendants' motions for dismissal for forum non conveniens were denied, and they petitioned for a writ of mandate.

In granting the writ, the court of appeal said that when the balance of factors weighs heavily in a defendant's favor, it becomes the trial court's duty to apply the doctrine and dismiss the case; after weighing the relevant factors, the court concluded that the trial court's failure to apply the doctrine was an abuse of discretion (59 Cal. App. 3d 434, 439, 442) .

[a] Dismissal Is Exceptional Remedy

In Century Indemnity Co. v. Bank of America (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 408, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 132 , plaintiffs appealed from an order staying on the basis of forum non conveniens their declaratory relief action brought against defendant bank. The defendant had brought an earlier action in Hawaii state court naming the plaintiffs and others as defendants in that action. In affirming the trial court's order, the court of appeal stated that because dismissal of action results in California's loss of jurisdiction over the matter, it has long been the rule that an action brought by a California resident may not be dismissed on grounds of forum non conveniens except in extraordinary circumstances. The trial court, however, has considerably wider discretion to grant stays because under a stay California retains jurisdiction. Even an action brought by a California resident is subject to a stay. In deciding whether to issue a stay, a trial court should consider the importance of discouraging multiple litigation designed solely to harass an adverse party, and of avoiding unseemly conflicts with the courts of other jurisdictions as well as whether the rights of the parties can best be determined by the court of the other jurisdiction because of the nature of the subject matter, the availability of witnesses, or the stage to which the proceedings in the other court have already advanced. A trial court can take into account any consideration that bears on the relative suitability or convenience of the two forums (58 Cal. App. 4th 408, 411-412) .

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum (see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140).]

THE INCONVENIENT FORUM DOCTRINE IS A DRASTIC REMEDY TO BE USED CAUTIOUSLY.

Doctrine Is Drastic Remedy. The doctrine of inconvenient forum is regarded as a drastic remedy and must be exercised with caution and restraint (Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v. Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1436, 249 Cal. Rptr. 559 ; *Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173, 227 Cal. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The points and authorities in [1], above, state the rule that the doctrine of inconvenient forum is a drastic remedy that should be used cautiously.

This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum [see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132. 140]. For other related uses, see § 132.130[2].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authority

[a] Doctrine Is Drastic Remedy

The facts and procedural background of Credit Lyonnais Bank Nederland, N.V. v. Manatt, Phelps, Rothenberg & Tunney (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 249 Cal. Rptr. 559 , are discussed in § 132.151[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of dismissal on the ground of forum non conveniens, the court of appeal nevertheless pointed out that forum non conveniens is a drastic remedy to be exercised with caution and restraint (202 Cal. App. 3d 1424, 1436) .

The facts and procedural background of Corrigan v. Bjork Shiley Corp. Co. (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 227 Cal. Rptr. 247 , appeal dismissed, 479 U.S. 1049 (1987) , are discussed in § 132.130[3][a]. In reversing the order staying the proceedings on the ground of forum non conveniens, the court of appeal said that the doctrine of inconvenient forum is regarded as a drastic remedy and must be exercised with caution and restraint (182 Cal. App. 3d 166, 173) .

Note that Corrigan was disapproved on other grounds in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 761, 764, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 .

§ 132.154 Supporting or Opposing Motion to Stay or Dismiss Action or Proceeding for Inconvenient Forum [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 410.30(a), 418.10(a)(2)]--Evidentiary Showing Concerning Alternative Forum

[1] FORM

[The following may be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum (see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140).]

AN EVIDENTIARY SHOWING THAT TRIAL MAY BE HAD IN THE ALTERNATIVE FORUM AND SOME FORM OF RELIEF MAY BE GRANTED IS REQUIRED.

Evidentiary Showing Concerning Alternative Forum Required. The principal evidentiary showing required by Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 , is that trial may be had in the alternative forum and that some form of relief may be granted. Examination of the private and public interests at stake involve more general considerations (Campbell v. Parker-Hannifin Corp. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1542, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 202).

[2] Comments

The form of points and authorities in [1], above, states the required evidentiary showing concerning availability of the alternative forum. This form does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting or opposing a motion to stay or dismiss an action for inconvenient forum [see, e.g., §§ 132.130, 132.140], or adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief. For other related uses, see § 132.130[2].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In particular, counsel arguing in favor of the motion should identify the specific alternative forum and show that some form of relief would be available in that forum. Opposing counsel will want to show that the allegedly available alternative forum in fact is not available or that no relief would be available in that forum [see also § 132.141].

In either case, therefore, counsel may need to arrange for judicial notice to be taken of the law of the other forum [see Evid. Code §§ 452, 453; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1113(k), 3.1306(c); for discussion and forms for invoking judicial notice, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 321, Judicial Notice].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidentiary Showing Concerning Alternative Forum Required

In Campbell v. Parker-Hannifin Corp. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 202 , plaintiff and other heirs of victims of a fatal airline crash in Australia appealed from the trial court's ruling granting summary judgment in favor of one of the defendant's and staying the action as to two other defendants on the grounds of forum non conveniens. Plaintiffs contended that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the forum non conveniens motion, and erred in granting summary judgment. The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment and also found there was no abuse of discretion in the trial court's ruling staying the action as to the two remaining defendants based on the doctrine of forum non conveniens (69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1537-1540) . One argument raised by the plaintiffs was that the defendants failed to present any evidence to support their assertion that California was inconvenient. The court rejected this argument noting that the argument ignored much of the analytical framework set forth in Stangvik v. Shiley Inc. (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 744, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556, 819 P.2d 14 . Stangvik did not require an extensive evidentiary showing. The principal evidentiary Stangvik requires is that trial may be had in the alternative forum and that some form of relief may be granted. Defendants met that burden. Examination of the private and public interests at stake involve more general considerations. There is no requirement that the trial court make any express ruling on a motion to stay/dismiss (69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1542) . The court also rejected plaintiffs' argument that the defendants failed to show that California was an inconvenient forum. Defendants asserted in their briefs and during argument before the trial court that since the accident occurred in Australia, California would be an inconvenient forum. They indicated they would contest causation and would want to call Australian witnesses regarding the maintenance and operation of the plane in Australia and the training and proficiency of the pilot. Defendant further indicated they would want to call as witnesses persons mentioned in the coroner's report who heard or observed the crash. Thus, plaintiffs were incorrect in asserting defendants made no showing that California would be an inconvenient forum (69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1543) . Moreover, the court noted that it reiterated the Stangvik court's observation that the scales are not usually tipped on the basis of this factor in any event (69 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1543) .

CHAPTER 133 JURISDICTION: SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

13-133 California Points & Authorities § 133.01

§ 133.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter discusses and includes points and authorities relating to the subject matter jurisdiction of California courts.

Subpart A includes points and authorities for use in supporting a motion to dismiss an action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction when there is no California state court having jurisdiction [§§ 133.20, 133.21].

Subpart B includes points and authorities for use in supporting [§ 133.30] and opposing [§ 133.40] a petition for writ of prohibition to restrain a court from proceeding with a case on the ground that another court of concurrent jurisdiction has already acquired jurisdiction, and points and authorities supporting [§ 133.31] a motion to stay an action on the ground that another court has exclusive concurrent jurisdiction.

Subpart C includes points and authorities for use in supporting [§ 133.50] and opposing [§ 133.60] a motion to dismiss an action on the ground the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of the subject matter, as well as points and authorities for use in supporting a motion to vacate a default judgment entered after remand from the federal court on the ground the entry of default was unauthorized and is void [§ 133.52].

Subpart D includes points and authorities for use in supporting or opposing reclassification of limited civil case to an unlimited civil case [§§ 133.70-133.90], or supporting or opposing reclassification from an unlimited civil case to a limited civil case [§§ 133.110-133.131].

CHAPTER 133 JURISDICTION: SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

13-133 California Points & Authorities § 133.02

§ 133.02 Governing Law

Subject matter jurisdiction is conferred by Cal. Const., art. VI, §§ 10 and 11, and by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85-86.1 (limited civil cases), and Code Civ. Proc. § 116.220 (small-claims division). Parties cannot confer subject matter jurisdiction upon the court by consent, waiver, or estoppel [Housing Group v. United Nat'l Ins. Co. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497] .

The transfer of an action or proceeding from a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction to one having such jurisdiction is governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 396 and 399.

Reclassification of a case filed in superior court as either a limited civil case or unlimited civil case is governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 403.010-403.090.

Review of any superior court order granting or denying a motion to change the place of trial is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 400, whereas review of a superior court order granting or denying a motion to reclassify an action or proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 403.040 is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 403.080.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 133.03 Lack of Jurisdiction

Lack of jurisdiction in its strict sense means an entire absence of power to hear or determine a case, an absence of authority over the subject matter [see Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 287-288, 109 P.2d 942 ; Schwenke v. J & P Scott, Inc. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 71, 76, 252 Cal. Rptr. 91] .

The judgment of a court lacking jurisdiction over the subject matter is void [see Kulko v. California Superior Court (1978) 436 U.S. 84, 91, 98 S. Ct. 1690, 56 L. Ed. 2d 132, 141 ; Hanson v. Denckla (1958) 357 U.S. 235, 250, 78 S. Ct. 1228, 2 L. Ed. 2d 1283 ; County of Ventura v. Tillett (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 105, 110, 183 Cal. Rptr. 741 , cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1051 (1983) (disapproved on another point in County of Los Angeles v. Soto (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 483, 492 n.4, 198 Cal. Rptr. 779, 674 P.2d 750)].

Parties cannot confer subject matter jurisdiction upon the court by consent, waiver, or estoppel [Housing Group v. United Nat'l Ins. Co. (2001) 90 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113, 109 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497] , nor can they expand a court's jurisdiction by contract to include a review of an arbitration award on the merits [Crowell v. Downey Community Hospital Foundation (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 730, 739, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810] .

A court's lack of subject matter jurisdiction is never waived and can be raised for the first time on appeal [Miranda v. 21st Century Insurance Co. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 913, 920, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 159 ; Parrott v. Mooring Townhomes Assn. (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 873, 876, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116] .

A judgment void on its face--because rendered when the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction or exceeded its jurisdiction in granting relief--is subject to collateral attack at any time [Sindler v. Brennan (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 1350, 1353, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 888] .

CHAPTER 133 JURISDICTION: SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

13-133 California Points & Authorities § 133.04

§ 133.04 Excess of Jurisdiction

In some instances a court may have proper jurisdiction over the subject matter but it may nonetheless be limited in the exercise of that jurisdiction. It may, for example, have jurisdiction or power to act only in a particular manner, to grant only certain kinds of relief, or to act only on the occurrence of certain procedural prerequisites [Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 288, 109 P.2d 942 ; see also Crittenden v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 565, 567, 39 Cal. Rptr. 380, 393 P.2d 692 ; Schwenke v. J & P Scott, Inc. (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 71, 76, 252 Cal. Rptr. 91] . Strictly speaking, a court having fundamental jurisdiction, but acting beyond the limits of its authority, is acting in excess of its jurisdiction; although the phrase "lack of jurisdiction" is sometimes used to refer to such acts, they should be distinguished from acts undertaken with a lack of fundamental jurisdiction [see Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 290, 109 P.2d 942 ; Jones v. World Life Research Institute (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 836, 846, 131 Cal. Rptr. 674 ; see also discussion under § 133.03].

Judicial acts in excess of jurisdiction may be challenged by petition for writ of prohibition or review [see Crittenden v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 565, 567, 39 Cal. Rptr. 380, 393 P.2d 692 (writ of prohibition granted); Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 450, 454-455, 20 Cal. Rptr. 321, 369 P.2d 937 (writ of certiorari); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a), (b) (petition for writ of administrative mandate to review certain quasi-judicial acts of administrative agencies)]. These acts generally include any acts that exceed the power of a court as defined by constitutional provision, express statutory declaration, or rules developed by the courts and followed under the doctrine of stare decisis [see Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 287-288, 109 P.2d 942] . Moreover, the judgment of a court that exceeds its jurisdiction by granting relief that it has no power to grant is void [County of Ventura v. Tillett (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 105, 110, 183 Cal. Rptr. 741 , cert. denied, 460 U.S. 1051 (1983) (disapproved on another point in County of Los Angeles v. Soto (1984) 35 Cal. 3d 483, 492 n.4, 198 Cal. Rptr. 779, 674 P.2d 750); but see People v. Malveaux (1997) 50 Cal. App. 4th 1425, 1434, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 371 (judgment void rather than voidable only if trial court lacked subject matter jurisdiction; since juvenile court's judgment was in excess of jurisdiction, judgment was only voidable and not void; consequently, court lost jurisdiction over own judgment after notice of appeal filed; trial court loses jurisdiction to vacate its own judgment once party files notice of appeal, thus shifting jurisdiction over cause to court of appeal, except that trial court is allowed to vacate void but not voidable judgment; trial court may also enter orders that only determine ancillary or collateral matters)].

CHAPTER 133 JURISDICTION: SUBJECT MATTER JURISDICTION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

13-133 California Points & Authorities § 133.05

§ 133.05 Jurisdiction to Determine Jurisdiction

Although a court may not act in a matter over which it has no jurisdiction, it has the initial power, or jurisdiction, to determine whether or not it has jurisdiction to act [Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 302-303, 109 P.2d 942 ; Ziller Electronics Lab GMBH v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1222, 1228, 254 Cal. Rptr. 410] . Thus, a court has inherent power to inquire into its jurisdiction of a matter on its own motion, regardless of whether the issue is raised by the litigants [Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 267, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 ; Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 302, 109 P.2d 942 ; In re Corienna G. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 73, 77, 261 Cal. Rptr. 462] . The power of inquiry rests partially on the theory that until the court determines that it has jurisdiction and does some act in consequence, there can be no injury to the party who denies its jurisdiction. The exercise of jurisdiction to determine jurisdiction is a preliminary step, not a final one, and no interference in the tribunal's inquiry is permitted. However, once a court decides that it has jurisdiction, then any subsequent act is always subject to inquiry by a higher court [Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 302-303, 109 P.2d 942] . That is, once the determination is made, the question is no longer one of jurisdiction to determine jurisdiction, but, rather, one of jurisdiction to act, and if the court acts, its action is subject to review by a higher court [Harden v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 630, 634, 284 P.2d 9 ; Housing Authority v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 550, 557, 219 P.2d 457 ; see also discussion in § 133.30[2][b]].

Where the evidence is not in dispute, a determination of subject matter jurisdiction is a legal question subject to de novo review [Dial 800 v. Fesbinder (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 32, 42, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 711 ; Warburton/Buttner v. Superior Court (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 1170, 1180, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706] .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to dismiss an action on the ground the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the action for damages to, or relating to title of, real property situated in another state, and there is no court in California having such jurisdiction.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to the complaint on the ground the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)], or to support of a petition for writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from continuing with the action after it has improperly denied a motion to dismiss or overruled a demurrer on jurisdictional grounds. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of motion for an order dismissing an action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction when there is no court in California having such jurisdiction, and for related forms, see, California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 324, Jurisdiction: Subject Matter Jurisdiction (Matthew Bender). For a form of demurrer to the complaint or cross complaint on the ground that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the action, see Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a form of petition for writ of prohibition and related forms, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in that publication.

[d] Related Points and Authorities

For memoranda of points and authorities generally supporting and opposing demurrers to a complaint on the ground of lack of subject matter jurisdiction, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings, § 71.20 et seq., in this publication. For memoranda of points and authorities generally supporting and opposing a petition for writ of prohibition, see Ch. 150, Mandate and Prohibition in this publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Local Action Arising in Another State

Ophir Silver Min. Co. v. Superior Court (1905) 147 Cal. 467, 82 P. 70 , was a proceeding in prohibition arising out of an action in which both the plaintiff mining company and the defendants, a mining company and a bank, were California corporations having their offices and principal places of business in San Francisco and which involved mining property owned by the plaintiff and situated in Nevada. Plaintiff sought damages for defendants' alleged trespass on its mining property and removing ore from it, for both a preliminary and a permanent injunction to restrain their continuing to do so, and for an accounting. Plaintiff alleged that defendants had sold the ore and converted the proceeds to their own use, that Ophir Silver Mining Co. had brought about $95,000 of the proceeds into California and deposited it with defendant bank. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint on the ground of lack of jurisdiction were overruled, and defendant Ophir Silver Mining Co. petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from continuing with the case. Ophir claimed that the action was for trespass quare clausum fregit, and therefore local, and that jurisdiction was exclusively in the Nevada courts where the mine was situated; plaintiff contended that the action was to recover the value of personal property for a trespass de bonis asportatis, or trover (conversion), and that it was therefore transitory and the California court had jurisdiction.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that by seeking damages for injury to the real property and for injunctive relief to prevent continuing trespasses, the action was local and that the superior court was without jurisdiction (147 Cal. 467, 473-476) . The Court explained that there was no doubt that the owner of land, if he or she chose to waive all claim for damages to the freehold, could maintain a personal action for the value of the timber or ores removed from the land by a naked trespasser, and the mere fact that in such action he or she may be compelled to allege, and, if denied, to prove, ownership of the land from which the timber was cut or the ore extracted does not make the action local. There is little doubt that when the whole or any part of the damages claimed is for injury to the freehold, the action is local and not transitory (147 Cal. 467, 473) . Because land can be injured only where it is situated, damages for such injuries can only be recovered where it is situated, but since timber or ores, when severed from the land by the act of a trespasser, remain the personal property of the owner and are capable of being converted by any person anywhere, an action to recover only the value of the ore or timber after severance is transitory and may be maintained wherever the trespasser can be served with summons (147 Cal. 467, 473-474) . The Court said that with respect to territorial jurisdiction there can be no difference between a suit in equity to restrain future trespasses on real property and an action at law for past trespasses on it. If one is local the other is necessarily local and for the reason that forms the basis of the distinction between local and transitory actions, that is, that the injury to be redressed in one case, or prevented in the other, can only take place where the land or mine is situated (147 Cal. 467, 476) .

[b] Action to Determine Title to Real Property in Another State

The procedural background of Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 , is discussed in § 133.70[3][a]. In issuing the writ of prohibition to restrain the court of appeal from taking any steps toward enforcing its writ of mandate and temporary restraining order against the California Employment Commission (now Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board), the Supreme Court, in giving examples of lack of jurisdiction in its most fundamental or strict sense, said that a state court has no jurisdiction to determine title to land located outside its territorial borders, for the subject matter is entirely beyond its authority or power (17 Cal. 2d 280, 288) .

Taylor v. Taylor (1923) 192 Cal. 71, 218 P. 756 , was an action by a former wife against a former husband brought approximately four years after they had been divorced by a Nevada judgment to enforce an interest in real property situated in California. Judgment was for the defendant, and plaintiff appealed, claiming that the real property had not been divided by the Nevada court, which had no jurisdiction to affect its title, and that the parties therefore became tenants in common of it.

The Supreme Court agreed, and reversed the judgment. The Court said that it is unquestionably the law that the courts of one state cannot make a decree that will operate to change or directly affect the title to real property beyond the territorial limits of its jurisdiction (192 Cal. 71, 76) . The reason for the rule is that jurisdiction to affect the title to real estate by a judgment in rem, or directly against the thing itself, exists only in the court of the state in which the land is situated, and that no principle is more fundamental or thoroughly settled than that the local sovereignty, by itself or its judicial agencies, can alone adjudicate on and determine the status of lands and immovable property within its borders, including their title and its incidents and the mode in which they may be charged or conveyed, that neither the laws of another sovereignty, nor the judicial proceedings, decrees, and judgments of its courts can in the least degree affect such lands and immovable property (192 Cal. 71, 76) .

Note that the Court also pointed out that by means of its power over the person of the parties before it, a court of equity could in proper cases compel the parties to act in relation to the property not within the jurisdiction, but that its decrees do not operate directly on the property or affect title (192 Cal. 71, 76) . Thus, a court with personal jurisdiction over the parties can compel them to execute a conveyance in the form required by the law of the situs [see, e.g., Phelps v. Kozakar (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 1078, 1084, 194 Cal. Rptr. 872 ; see also In re Marriage of Fink (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 877, 883-887, 884 n.5, 160 Cal. Rptr. 516, 603 P.2d 881 (distribution of out-of-state property in marriage dissolution proceeding)].

River Farms, Inc. v. Superior Court (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 604, 60 Cal. Rptr. 665 , arose out of an action against an Arizona corporation to quiet title to land alleged to be situated in California. Defendant's demurrer to the original complaint was sustained and an amended complaint filed. Between the time the original complaint was filed and the amended complaint was filed, the land became a part of the state of Arizona pursuant to an Interstate Compact between California and Arizona, consented to by Congress and approved by the President of the United States, by the provisions of which California divested itself of sovereignty over the land and reserved no territorial jurisdiction in the California courts. Defendant's motion to strike the complaint and amended complaint on the ground, among others, of lack of jurisdiction, was denied, and defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of prohibition.

In granting the writ, the court held that the court's jurisdiction over the property terminated when California divested itself of sovereignty over the property (252 Cal. App. 2d 604, 609) . The court said that trial of an action that involves determination of title to real property in another state is beyond the jurisdiction of the superior court of this state, and prohibition will lie to prevent the trial (252 Cal. App. 2d 604, 609) .

THE MOTION TO DISMISS THIS ACTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE NEITHER THIS COURT NOR ANY OTHER COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO ENTERTAIN A DECLARATORY RELIEF ACTION BY A DEBTOR AGAINST A CREDITOR ON A MATURED CLAIM.

B. Action for Declaratory Relief by Debtor on Fully Matured Claim. The rule that a superior court does not have jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory relief action by a creditor when the issue relates solely to a fully matured claim for money in an amount within the jurisdiction of the municipal court, when nothing remains to be done but the payment of money, and when no declaration of future rights and obligations is sought, or necessary, or proper, applies also to actions by debtors (Watson v. Sansone (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4, 96 Cal. Rptr. 387).

C. Absence of California Court Having Subject Matter Jurisdiction. No California court has jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory relief action by a debtor on a matured claim, and any such action must, therefore, be dismissed (Watson v. Sansone (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4, 96 Cal. Rptr. 387).

[a] Use of Form

The memorandum in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to dismiss a declaratory relief action by a debtor against a creditor on a matured claim.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to the complaint on the ground the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the cause of action alleged [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)], or to support a petition for writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from continuing with the action after it has improperly denied a motion to dismiss or overruled a demurrer on jurisdictional grounds. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action for Declaratory Relief by Debtor on Fully Matured Claim

Watson v. Sansone (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 96 Cal. Rptr. 387 , was an action for declaratory relief by an attorney against a physician who had examined a personal injury client of the plaintiff. Plaintiff attorney wrote the doctor requesting a written report concerning the medical status and prognosis of his client. The defendant doctor sent him a registered package, together with his bill for $514. Considering the bill excessive, plaintiff returned the package unopened and sent the defendant a letter of protest. Defendant's attorney wrote plaintiff threatening to sue him if he did not pay the bill. Plaintiff sought a declaration of the rights of the parties. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint was sustained with leave to amend, and on plaintiff's failure to amend, the complaint was dismissed. On plaintiff's motion, the dismissal was set aside. The doctor appealed from the order setting the dismissal aside, and plaintiff appealed from the dismissal.

In affirming the dismissal and reversing the order setting the dismissal aside, the court of appeal said it was settled law that the superior court does not have jurisdiction to entertain a declaratory relief action when the issue relates solely to a fully matured claim for money in an amount within the jurisdiction of the municipal court, when nothing remains to be done but the payment of money, and when no declaration of future rights and obligations is sought, or necessary, or proper (19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4) . The court said that while the rule had been applied in situations in which the purported creditor requested a declaratory judgment, the rule was no different when the debtor did so (19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4) .

[b] Absence of California Court Having Subject Matter Jurisdiction

The facts and procedural background of Watson v. Sansone (1971) 19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 96 Cal. Rptr. 387 , are discussed under § 133.21[3][a]. In reversing the order setting aside the judgment of dismissal and affirming the judgment of dismissal of a declaratory relief action by a debtor on a matured claim, the court of appeal said that the superior court never had jurisdiction over the inadequate declaratory relief action, and that having no jurisdiction, the court's only power was to dismiss the action (19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4) . The court said that had the action been brought by the creditor, it could have ordered the action transferred to an inferior court having jurisdiction over the claim, but that plaintiff had not stated a cause of action entertainable by any court of this state (19 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4-5) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

Crowell v. Downey Community Hospital Foundation (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 730, 115 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810 was an action for declaratory relief seeking a judicial determination that an arbitration agreement was "valid and enforceable" and that the parties were "obligated, forthwith, to arbitrate in accordance with their agreement." The arbitration agreement in question included a provision stating that the decision of the arbitrator was to be final and binding except that upon the petition of any party to the arbitration, a court shall have the authority to review the transcript of the arbitration proceedings and the arbitrator's award and shall have the authority to vacate the arbitrator's award, in whole or in part, on the basis that the award is not supported by substantial evidence or is based upon an error of law. The plaintiff contended that binding arbitration is essentially a matter of contract between the parties, and that while Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1286.2 and 1286.6 specify grounds on which a court may vacate or correct an arbitration award, these are merely default provisions which control when the parties do not agree otherwise. The defendant contended that the arbitration agreement is void and unenforceable as a matter of law because jurisdiction to review arbitration awards is conferred by the California Arbitration Act which provides the exclusive grounds on which courts are authorized to vacate or correct an award, and the parties cannot broaden review by agreement.

In affirming the dismissal of the complaint, the court of appeal held that none of the specified grounds for vacating or correcting an award suggest that a court can review the merits of an award for errors of law or lack of adequate supporting evidence. Because the Legislature clearly set forth the trial court's jurisdiction to review arbitration awards, parties cannot expand that jurisdiction by contract to include a review on the merits. (95 Cal. App. 4th 730, 739) .

THE PETITION FOR A WRIT OF PROHIBITION TO RESTRAIN THE _____ COURT OF _____ FROM EXERCISING JURISDICTION OVER THIS ACTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE JURISDICTION OVER THE THIS ACTION WAS FIRST ACQUIRED BY THE _____ COURT OF _____ ON THE PRIOR AND PROPER SERVICE OF SUMMONS.

A. Acquisition of Jurisdiction Over Party. The court in which an action is pending has jurisdiction over a party from the time the summons is served on him or her (Code Civ. Proc. § 410.50(a)).

B. Priority of Jurisdiction. When two or more courts or tribunals in California have concurrent jurisdiction, the tribunal first assuming it, as a general rule, retains it to the exclusion of all other tribunals in which the action might have been initiated [Advanced Bionics Corp. v. Medtronic, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 697, 707, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 172 (first filed rule was never meant to apply where the two courts involved are not courts of the same sovereignty); Mission Imports, Inc. v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 921, 926 n.3, 184 Cal. Rptr. 296, 647 P.2d 1075 ; In re Marriage of Hanley (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1115, 245 Cal. Rptr. 441 , disapproved on other grounds by Leadford v. Leadford (1992) 6 Cal. App. 4th 571, 575 n.5, 8 Cal. Rptr. 2d 9 ; Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285 . (Similarly, when a proceeding has been assigned to one department of a superior court, it is beyond the jurisdictional authority of another department of the same court) People v. Madrigal (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 791, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 498] .

C. Test of Priority. Ordinarily, service of the summons and complaint is the test of priority of jurisdiction when there are actions pending in two courts dealing with the same subject matter (In re Marriage of Hanley (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1116, 245 Cal. Rptr. 441 ; Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285).

D. Restraint by Prohibition. Should another tribunal attempt to assume jurisdiction after one tribunal has already done so, it may be restrained from proceeding with the case by a writ of prohibition issued, on proper application, from a higher court (Taylor v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 148, 149, 301 P.2d 866 ; Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a petition for a writ of prohibition to restrain a court from proceeding to hear a case when another court of concurrent jurisdiction has already acquired jurisdiction over it.

The bracketed optional phrase at the end of Paragraph B may be used when the competing courts are actually different departments of a multi-department court.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Precedential Jurisdiction

There are two types of jurisdiction concerning subject matter between a court and an administrative agency: (1) exclusive subject matter jurisdiction; and (2) precedential jurisdiction, or the jurisdiction to determine subject matter jurisdiction [Yavitch v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 64, 69-70, 190 Cal. Rptr. 793] . Unlike subject matter jurisdiction, precedential jurisdiction may be waived and a litigant may be estopped to assert lack of jurisdiction [see Yavitch v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 64, 69-70, 190 Cal. Rptr. 793 ; Sea World Corp. v. Superior Court (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 494, 501-503, 110 Cal. Rptr. 232 ; San Martin v. Superior Court (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 14, 17-18, 336 P.2d 618] .

For example, the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board and the superior court have concurrent precedential jurisdiction to determine the threshold question of subject matter jurisdiction, namely, whether a cause of action comes within the workers' compensation laws and thus within the exclusive jurisdiction of the appeals board [Yavitch v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 64, 69-70, 190 Cal. Rptr. 793] . In such case, the tribunal first assuming jurisdiction retains it to the exclusion of the other; once that decision has been made, jurisdiction becomes exclusive, and the final determination in regard to jurisdiction is res judicata before the other tribunal between the same parties and those privy to them. Moreover, a party may obtain an order preventing the second tribunal from acting pending determination by the first tribunal of the jurisdictional question. But the court need not on its own motion await the first tribunal's action [Busick v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 967, 976, 104 Cal. Rptr. 42, 500 P.2d 1386 ; see also Yavitch v. Workers' Comp. Appeals Bd. (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 64, 70, 190 Cal. Rptr. 793 ; Taylor v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 148, 149, 301 P.2d 866 (discussed under § 133.30[3][c])].

[c] Effect of Final Judgment in Second Action

When an action is prosecuted to final judgment, priority of jurisdiction between courts or a court and administrative tribunal loses its significance; it is not the final judgment of the court or tribunal first assuming jurisdiction that matters, but rather the first final judgment, although it may be rendered by the court or tribunal subsequently assuming jurisdiction, that renders the issue res judicata on the other [see Busick v. Workmen's Comp. Appeals Bd. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 967, 977, 104 Cal. Rptr. 42, 500 P.2d 1386 ; Browne v. Superior Court (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 593, 597, 107 P.2d 1 ; Magliulo v. Superior Court (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 760, 780-781, 121 Cal. Rptr. 621 ; see also In re Marriage of Hanley (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1117-1118, 245 Cal. Rptr. 441 (discussed under § 133.30[3][a])].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Priority of Jurisdiction

In Advanced Bionics Corp. v. Medtronic, Inc. (2002) 29 Cal. 4th 697, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 172 , a Delaware company, headquartered in California, hired an employee who had signed a non-compete agreement that included a choice of state law provision with his former employer. The employee and his new employer sued petitioner in a California trial court for declaratory relief alleging that the Minnesota company's covenant not to compete and choice-of-law provisions violated California's law and public policy and were void. Subsequently, the California corporation and the employee applied for a temporary restraining order (TRO) enjoining the Minnesota company from filing an action in Minnesota. When the Minnesota company brought suit in Minnesota, the California trial court issued a TRO as to the Minnesota action. On review, the appellate court affirmed the stay. The Supreme Court of California reviewed the matter and found the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction in issuing the TRO. A California court could not enjoin a party subject to parallel jurisdiction in another state from commencing litigation over a noncompetition agreement in another state.

The California Supreme Court clarified that the first filed rule in California means that when two courts of the same sovereignty have concurrent jurisdiction, the first to assume jurisdiction over a particular subject matter of a particular controversy takes it exclusively, and the second court should not thereafter assert control over that subject matter. The first filed rule was never meant to apply where the two courts involved are not courts of the same sovereignty. Restraining a party from pursuing an action in a court of foreign jurisdiction involves delicate questions of comity and therefore requires that such action be taken only with care and great restraint (citing Compagnie des Bauxites de Guinea v. Ins. Co. of N. Am. (3rd Cir. 1981) 651 F.2d 877) (29 Cal. 4th 697, 707) .

Mission Imports, Inc. v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 921, 184 Cal. Rptr. 296, 647 P.2d 1075 , was a proceeding in mandate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 400], arising out of an action between an importer of alcoholic beverages, whose principal place of business was in San Bernardino County, and its corporate distributor, whose principal place of business was in Los Angeles County. The importer sued the distributor and its attorney for declaratory and injunctive relief in the San Francisco Superior Court. The attorney moved for change of venue to Los Angeles County; the same day, the importer amended its complaint, and dropped the attorney as a party defendant, but added an unfair competition claim and a claim for damages against the distributor, and subsequently formally dismissed with prejudice its claims against the attorney. Meanwhile, the distributor had filed suit against the importer in the Los Angeles Superior Court, which, because of the attorney's change of venue motion in the San Francisco action, concluded that it need not abate the Los Angeles action immediately, and it set a hearing on the distributor's request for a preliminary injunction against the importer. The distributor then filed a motion in the San Francisco court for change of venue. The Los Angeles court heard the motion for a preliminary injunction on the date scheduled and granted it. The San Francisco court denied the distributor's motion for change of venue, and the distributor petitioned for a writ of mandate.

In holding that venue was properly laid in San Francisco under Code Civ. Proc. § 395.5 (31 Cal. 3d 921, 927-931) , the Supreme Court denied the writ, in the course of which it said that when two courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties and subject matter, the tribunal which first acquires jurisdiction of the parties is entitled to retain it exclusively, and that ordinarily, the other court must abate its proceedings on demand. The Court explained that the timely filing of a motion to change venue on the ground that the action has been brought in the wrong court [former Code Civ. Proc. § 397(1); now see Code Civ. Proc. § 397(a)] suspends a court's jurisdiction to take any action in the case other than hearing and deciding the venue motion and that it was apparently for this reason that the Los Angeles court determined that it need not abate its proceedings immediately (31 Cal. 3d 921, 926 n.3).

In In re Marriage of Hanley (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 245 Cal. Rptr. 441 , the husband filed a petition for dissolution of marriage in the Sonoma County Superior Court; thereafter, his wife filed a petition for dissolution in the state of Washington and the summons in her action was served first. The husband participated in this latter action, but after obtaining an interlocutory judgment in his California action on the wife's default, in which the family residence in Sonoma County was awarded to him and he was ordered to pay $100 per month per child for each of the parties' two children, his attorney notified the Washington court that no further appearance would be made on the husband's behalf. The Washington court shortly thereafter entered a judgment of dissolution awarding the wife $500 attorney's fees, $10,000 to equalize the property division at six percent interest, and child support of $150 per month per child. The husband for a number of years made the support payments as provided in his interlocutory judgment, although the total amount paid was $11,625 less than that awarded in the Washington judgment. Eventually, in attempting to sell the residence, he filed a motion to compel satisfaction of the California support judgment, which was denied. The former wife then moved in the Sonoma County Superior Court for determination of which of the divorce decrees was controlling and to establish the amount of arrearages. After trial, the court ruled that the Washington decree was controlling (199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1114) .

The court of appeal affirmed. Citing Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285 (discussed below), and Mission Imports, Inc. v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 921, 926 n.3, 184 Cal. Rptr. 296, 647 P.2d 1075 (discussed above), the court said that when two courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties and subject matter, the tribunal which first acquires jurisdiction of the parties is entitled to retain it exclusively, and, ordinarily, the other court must abate its proceedings on demand (199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1115-1116) . The court found that the general rule in Washington is the same, that is, when the jurisdiction of two courts is invoked concerning the same subject of controversy, the court first obtaining jurisdiction has power to determine the controversy to the exclusion of the other court (199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1116) , and that, notwithstanding a peculiar twist in the Washington statute that made it difficult to determine when jurisdiction was acquired by the superior court, the Washington court first obtained jurisdiction and the right to proceed with the action to the exclusion of the California court (199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1116) .

Note that the court further held that the Washington judgment also prevailed under the rule that when in two actions inconsistent judgments are rendered, the later judgment prevails. The court said (1) a judgment rendered in a state of the United States will not be recognized and enforced in sister states if an inconsistent, but valid, judgment is subsequently rendered in another action between the parties and if the earlier judgment is superseded by the later judgment under the local law of the state where the latter judgment was rendered; (2) when in two actions inconsistent final judgments are rendered, it is the later, not the earlier, judgment that is accorded conclusive effect in a third action under the rules of res judicata; and (3) this is the case even when the court that rendered the later judgment denied full faith and credit to the first judgment or made other errors of fact or law (199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1117-1118) .

Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285 , was a proceeding in prohibition, arising out of two actions. One was by a wife against her husband for separate maintenance, which was filed in the Los Angeles County Superior Court on October 18, 1963, on which date an order to show cause in re pendente lite relief was issued, and in which the summons and complaint were served on October 31, 1963. The other was by the husband for divorce, filed in the Kern County Superior Court on October 24, 1963, and in which the summons and complaint were served the same day. The husband's demurrer on the ground of another action pending was overruled, and he petitioned for a writ of prohibition to stop further proceedings in the Los Angeles action. In ordering the writ issued, the court, after pointing out that the demurrer on the ground of another action pending was not applicable, taking the provision in former Code Civ. Proc. § 430(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(c)] literally, said that when two tribunals of this state have concurrent jurisdiction over the same parties and subject matter, the tribunal that first acquires jurisdiction of the parties is entitled to retain it exclusively, and the other must respect the priority of the first and must desist from further proceedings so long as the matter is pending before the first (225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283) .

In People v. Madrigal (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 791, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 498 , a criminal defendant who was already on probation from another matter pleaded guilty in a new matter pursuant to a plea agreement under which he would be on probation in both cases, through revoking the original probation and reinstating it with no additional time. At the sentencing hearing, the file for the probation violation from the original probation was not before the judge. The judge explained his intention to reinstate the probation on the same terms and conditions, and the defendant waived his right to be present when the judge would find him in violation of the probation then reinstate it on the same terms. Subsequently, the prosecution filed a motion with a different judge to revoke the original probation based on the new conviction. The defendant sought to have his plea agreement enforced, and further maintained that the probation violation had already been handled so that the new judge was estopped from proceeding further. Nevertheless, the new judge found defendant in violation of the original probation and sentenced him to state prison.

The court of appeal reversed. The court recognized that the jurisdiction of a multi-judge, multi-department superior court is vested in the court as a whole and if one department exercises authority in a matter which might properly be heard in another such action it does not amount to a defect of jurisdiction. However, while one department is exercising jurisdiction in a matter, the other departments are as distinct from that department as other superior courts (37 Cal. App. 4th 791, 795-796) . In this situation, although the original sentencing judge could not find the file for the probation violation, he obtained defendant's permission to revoke the probation and reinstate it under the same terms in defendant's absence. While the case file did not indicate that the judge actually revoked and reinstated the probation as agreed, he retained jurisdiction to do so. The new judge could thus not order the probation violation be heard by him (37 Cal. App. 4th 791, 797) . The order revoking the defendant's probation and sentencing him to prison was vacated, and the superior court was directed to enter a new order revoking the probation and reinstating it on the same terms.

[b] Test of Priority

The facts and procedural background of In re Marriage of Hanley (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 245 Cal. Rptr. 441 , are discussed under § 133.30[3][a]. In affirming the judgment determining that the Washington decree was controlling, the court of appeal, citing Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285 (discussed below), said that in applying the foregoing rule regarding priority of jurisdiction, it is the tribunal in which process is served first which has priority, regardless of which action was filed first (199 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1116) .

The facts and procedural background of Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285 , are discussed under § 133.03[3][a]. In ordering issuance of a writ of prohibition, the court said that in applying the rule regarding priority of jurisdiction, it is the tribunal in which process is served first which has priority, regardless of which action was filed first (225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283) .

[c] Restraint by Prohibition

Taylor v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 148, 301 P.2d 866 , was a proceeding in prohibition to halt proceedings in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County for damages for injuries sustained by a worker who had previously invoked the jurisdiction of the Industrial Accident Commission (the predecessor to the Workers' Compensation Appeals Board) to adjudicate his claim regarding the same injuries. Determination of the question of which tribunal had jurisdiction depended on whether the worker was injured in an employment relationship with his employer.

In granting the writ to restrain the court from proceeding until the commission had determined whether it or the court had jurisdiction to proceed, the Supreme Court said that when two tribunals in this state have concurrent jurisdiction to determine jurisdiction, the question of which shall have exclusive jurisdiction shall be determined by the tribunal whose jurisdiction was first invoked, and proceedings in the tribunal whose jurisdiction was subsequently sought will, if not voluntarily stayed, be halted by prohibition until final determination of the jurisdictional question by the tribunal where jurisdiction was first laid (47 Cal. 2d 148, 149) .

The facts and procedural background of Mungia v. Superior Court (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 37 Cal. Rptr. 285 , are discussed under § 133.30[3][a]. In ordering issuance of a writ of prohibition, the court said that if the court not having priority of jurisdiction refuses to abate its proceedings on demand, the remedy is by writ of prohibition (225 Cal. App. 2d 280, 283) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Priority of Jurisdiction

California Union Ins. Co. v. Trinity River Land Co. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 104, 163 Cal. Rptr. 802 , was a declaratory relief action against a corporation and its sole shareholder filed in the Superior Court of Trinity County by insurers seeking a declaration of nonliability or limited liability for defendants' insured building, which was destroyed by fire, on the ground the individual defendant was responsible for the fire. Personal service was made on the shareholder individually and on behalf of the corporation. Subsequently, defendants filed a complaint in the Superior Court of Shasta County claiming (1) a loss of $430,000 under the policy issued by defendants through their Redding agent, (2) a wrongful refusal to pay the claim, (3) negligence by the agent in failing to provide $50,000 worth of insurance, and (4) misrepresentation, unfair claim practices, and defamation by the insurers. The agent was named a defendant in the Shasta County suit, as were the plaintiffs in the Trinity County suit. A day later, the defendants filed a demurrer and motion to change venue in the Trinity County action. The court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend on the grounds the complaint failed to state a cause of action and another action was pending, and plaintiffs appealed from the subsequent judgment.

Holding that sustaining the demurrer on the ground of another action pending was error (and that even if correct, the action should have been abated, not dismissed), the court of appeal, in reversing the judgment with directions to overrule the demurrer, pointed out that the parties were not identical in both actions, and that the controlling rule was that the pendency of another action growing out of the same transaction (here, the insurance contracts and the fire) is a ground for abatement of the second action but never for abatement of the first (105 Cal. App. 3d 104, 108-109) . The court said that the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction provides that when two superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved in litigation, the first to assume jurisdiction has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved until such time as all necessarily related matters have been resolved (105 Cal. App. 3d 104, 109) .

In Halpin v. Superior Court (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 530, 545, 92 Cal. Rptr. 329 , the court of appeal said that when two courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the subject matter and parties involved in the litigation, the first court to assume jurisdiction has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved in the litigation until such time as all matters necessarily related to the litigation have been resolved, and held that when a tort action was still pending in Shasta County, one of the defendants could not bring a second action in Sacramento County for specific enforcement of a settlement agreement of the tort action allegedly made with him by the plaintiff in the Shasta County tort action (14 Cal. App. 3d 530, 545) .

[b] Test of Priority

The facts and procedural background of California Union Ins. Co. v. Trinity River Land Co. (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 104, 163 Cal. Rptr. 802 , are discussed under § 133.30[4][a]. In reversing the judgment, the court said that priority of jurisdiction resides in the tribunal where process is first served, and that in the case before it the proof of service attached to plaintiffs' complaint shows it was filed before the defendants' filing suit in Shasta County (105 Cal. App. 3d 104, 109) .

THE MOTION TO STAY THIS ACTION PENDING CONCLUSION OF ANOTHER PRIOR PENDING ACTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE BOTH ACTIONS ARISE OUT OF THE SAME TRANSACTION, ALL PARTIES NECESSARY TO A DETERMINATION OF THE OTHER ACTION _____ [ARE or MAY BE MADE] PARTIES TO THAT ACTION, AND THAT COURT HAS JURISDICTION TO LITIGATE ALL THE ISSUES AND GRANT ALL THE RELIEF TO WHICH ANY OF THE PARTIES MIGHT BE ENTITLED UNDER THE PLEADINGS. HENCE, UNDER THE RULE OF EXCLUSIVE CONCURRENT JURISDICTION, THE FIRST COURT TO ASSUME JURISDICTION HAS EXCLUSIVE AND CONTINUING JURISDICTION UNTIL SUCH TIME AS ALL NECESSARILY RELATED MATTERS HAVE BEEN RESOLVED.

A. Rule of Exclusive Concurrent Jurisdiction. Under the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction, when two superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved in litigation, the first to assume jurisdiction has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved until such time as all necessarily related matters have been resolved (Plant Insulation Co. v. Fibreboard Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 786-787, 792, 274 Cal. Rptr. 147).

B. Abatement Required When Conditions for Its Issuance Exist. Under the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction, an order of abatement issues as a matter of right, not as a matter of discretion, when the conditions for its issuance exist (Plant Insulation Co. v. Fibreboard Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 787, 274 Cal. Rptr. 147).

C. Absolute Identity of Parties, Causes of Action, or Remedies Sought Is Not Required. The rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction, unlike the statutory plea of abatement on the ground of another action pending, does not require absolute identity of parties, causes of action, or remedies sought in the initial and subsequent actions; all that is required is that the court exercising original jurisdiction have the power to bring before it all necessary parties and the power to litigate all the issues and grant all the relief to which any of the parties might be entitled under the pleadings, and that both actions arise from the same transaction (Plant Insulation Co. v. Fibreboard Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 788, 274 Cal. Rptr. 147).

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to stay the pending action on the ground that another California state court has already assumed jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved in the litigation and that the other court has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the subject matter and parties until all necessarily related matters have been resolved.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to support a petition for writ of prohibition and mandate to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the second action and to require it to grant a stay after it has denied a motion to do so.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rule of Exclusive Concurrent Jurisdiction

Plant Insulation Co. v. Fibreboard Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 274 Cal. Rptr. 147 , was an action in the Marin County Superior Court by an industrial insulation contractor, which installed and distributed defendant's insulation products. The action was for breach of contract, express contractual indemnity, and declaratory and injunctive relief, to prevent defendant from pursuing good-faith settlements with claimants in multiple pending asbestos suits, in which plaintiff and defendant were codefendants, that would preclude plaintiff's right to indemnity from defendant. Since 1948, plaintiff had been the exclusive distributor in certain areas of California and Nevada of asbestos products manufactured by defendant. Since the 1970's, asbestos claimants had sued plaintiff and defendant in approximately 4,000 suits alleging bodily injury and death from asbestos exposure. Defendant obtained good-faith determinations [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 877-877.6] of its settlements with asbestos plaintiffs in several actions, thus barring cross complaints for indemnity filed against it therein by plaintiff. At the time, over 1,000 of plaintiff's cross complaints against defendant were pending in asbestos suits in various Bay Area counties. However, to avoid a demurrer on the ground of another action pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(c)], plaintiff dismissed without prejudice all of its indemnity cross complaints against defendant in the pending asbestos suits, after which defendant filed in those suits cross complaints against plaintiff for indemnity and declaratory relief. Defendant moved for (1) abatement or dismissal of plaintiff's complaint on the ground of other actions pending in California courts that have exclusive prior jurisdiction, and (2) a stay of the complaint with respect to asbestos cases in other states and federal courts. At the hearing on the motion, the trial court dismissed the complaint without prejudice with respect to the asbestos suits pending in other California courts on the basis of its determination that the doctrine of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction applied because the subject matter arose out of the same transaction, there were no issues presented that could not be determined in the pending asbestos suits, and all parties were already before the court in those suits. The court stayed the action with respect to asbestos suits pending in other states and federal courts. With respect to asbestos suits pending in Marin County, the action was dismissed without prejudice and plaintiff was granted leave to file it as a cross complaint in those suits. Plaintiff appealed, contending inter alia that exclusive concurrent jurisdiction did not exist, because it and defendant were not adverse parties in the pending asbestos claims, but codefendants, and that application of both the plea in abatement on the ground of another action pending [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(c)] and the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction requires a prior pending action between adverse parties.

The court of appeal disagreed. In reversing the order of dismissal with directions to grant a stay instead, the court said that under the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction, when two superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved in litigation, the first to assume jurisdiction has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction over the subject matter and all parties involved until such time as all necessarily related matters have been resolved (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 786-787, 792) . The court explained that the rule is based on the public policies of avoiding conflicts that might arise between courts if they were free to make contradictory decisions or awards relating to the same controversy, and preventing vexatious litigation and multiplicity of suits, and that the rule was established and is enforced not so much to protect the rights of parties as to protect the rights of courts of coordinate jurisdiction to avoid conflict of jurisdiction, confusion, and delay in the administration of justice (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 787) .

[b] Abatement Required When Conditions for Its Issuance Exist

The facts and procedural background of Plant Insulation Co. v. Fibreboard Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 274 Cal. Rptr. 147 , are discussed under § 133.31[3][a]. In reversing the dismissal with directions to grant a stay instead, the court of appeal, acknowledging that abatement is not appropriate when the first action cannot afford the relief sought in the second, said the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction may constitute a ground for abatement of the subsequent action, and an order of abatement issues as a matter of right, not as a matter of discretion, when the conditions for its issuance exist (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 787) .

[c] Absolute Identity of Parties, Causes of Action, or Remedies Sought Is Not Required

The facts and procedural background of Plant Insulation Co. v. Fibreboard Corp. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 274 Cal. Rptr. 147 , are discussed under § 133.31[3][a]. In reversing the dismissal with directions to grant a stay instead, the court of appeal said that a plea in abatement pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(c) may be made by demurrer or answer when there is another action pending between the same parties on the same cause. The court pointed out that in determining whether the causes of action are the same for purposes of pleas in abatement, the rule is that such a plea may be maintained only when a judgment in the first action would be a complete bar to the second action. Further, when a demurrer is sustained on the ground of another action pending, the proper order is not a dismissal, but abatement of further proceedings pending termination of the first action (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 787-788) .

The court explained that the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction, although similar in effect to the statutory plea in abatement, may apply when the requisite grounds for a statutory plea of abatement due to another action pending do not exist. Unlike the statutory plea of abatement, the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction does not require absolute identity of parties, causes of action, or remedies sought in the initial and subsequent actions. After acknowledging that abatement is not appropriate when the first action cannot afford the relief sought in the second (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 787) , the court of appeal said that, if the court exercising original jurisdiction has the power to bring before it all the necessary parties, then the fact that the parties in the second action are not identical does not preclude application of the rule, and, moreover, the remedies sought in the separate actions need not be precisely the same so long as the court exercising original jurisdiction has the power to litigate all the issues and grant all the relief to which any of the parties might be entitled under the pleadings (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 788) . Plaintiff, citing Stearns v. Los Angeles City School Dist. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 696, 714, 53 Cal. Rptr. 482 (which held that the true test for applying the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction is whether or not the determination of the first suit would be res judicata in the second suit), argued that the pending asbestos suits, which were personal injury actions, did not involve the same subject matter as the instant action, which involved contract principles, and that therefore the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction did not apply because a judgment in the asbestos suits would not bar the instant action. The court said that no case since Stearns has required a res judicata test for application of the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction. The court agreed with subsequent cases holding that the res judicata test is not required, and adopted the more expansive subject matter test applied in the recent cases and by the trial court, which considers whether the first and second actions arise from the same transaction (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 789) . The court concluded that the relative liability of the parties to the asbestos claimants arose out of the same transaction, and the subject matter was the same for purposes of applying the rule of exclusive concurrent jurisdiction (224 Cal. App. 3d 781, 789) .

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, may be submitted in opposition to a petition for a writ of prohibition to restrain a court from proceeding to hear a case, or a petition for writ of mandate to compel a trial court to stay the proceeding, when another court of concurrent jurisdiction has acquired jurisdiction over the case by virtue of the prior service of summons, but has declined to exercise its jurisdiction, and no injustice to the parties will result by trying the action in the second court.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court in Which Summons Was Served First Has Yielded Its Jurisdiction to Second Court

De Brincat v. Mogan (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 7, 36 P.2d 245 , was a proceeding in mandate arising out of actions by two residents of the City and County of San Francisco against each other for damages resulting from an automobile collision between them in San Mateo County. The first case was filed by one party in the San Francisco Superior Court and the second by the other party in the San Mateo Superior Court. In the San Mateo action, summons was served on the day the action was filed. Summons in the San Francisco case was not served until four days later. Defendant's motion to stay the San Francisco action, on the ground the San Mateo court had exclusive jurisdiction because summons was served first in that action, was denied. The subsequent motion by the defendant in the San Mateo action to stay that action was granted. The San Francisco defendant then petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the San Francisco court to stay the action.

The court of appeal pointed out that the concurrent jurisdiction of the two courts in the first instance was conceded (1 Cal. App. 2d 7, 9) . The court said that by the terms of former Code Civ. Proc. § 416 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 410.50(a)], a court is deemed to have acquired jurisdiction of the parties from the time the summons and a copy of the complaint are served; that both courts had jurisdiction by virtue of the service of process; and that priority of jurisdiction is determined by the date the process is served (1 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10) . The court said that it does not follow, however, from this that the writ of mandate should issue, and that the writ is ordinarily one of discretion and does not issue as a matter of absolute right when not necessary to prevent an injustice to the parties (1 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10) . The court said that (1) both parties resided in San Francisco; (2) only four days elapsed between the service of process in both cases; (3) no proceedings detrimental to the petitioner have been taken in either case; (4) the entire controversy may be determined in the San Francisco court without prejudice to either side; (5) though the San Mateo court had full power to assume jurisdiction over the whole controversy, it did not, under the circumstances, abuse its discretion in refusing to do so; and (6) until full jurisdiction was assumed by the San Mateo court, the San Francisco court had jurisdiction to proceed with the trial (1 Cal. App. 2d 7, 10-11) .

Note that the court of appeal, on the basis of the foregoing decision, denied a writ of mandate sought to compel the San Mateo Court to vacate its order staying proceedings in the action pending before it [see De Brincat v. Swart (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 756, 36 P.2d 247] .

[EITHER]

Controversies Between States. The Supreme Court of the United States has original and exclusive jurisdiction of all controversies between two or more states (28 U.S.C. § 1251(a)).

[OR]

Maritime Cases. The United States District Courts have original jurisdiction, exclusive of the courts of the states of (1) any civil case of admiralty or maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in all cases all other remedies to which they are otherwise entitled; and (2) any prize brought into the United States and all proceedings for the condemnation of property taken as prize (28 U.S.C. § 1333).

[OR]

A. Death on the High Seas Act. Exclusive jurisdiction of actions under the federal Death on the High Seas Act (46 U.S.C. §§ 761-767) is in the federal courts (46 U.S.C. § 761; Cairl v. Boeing Co. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 137, 139, 113 Cal. Rptr. 925 ; Gordon v. Reynolds (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 472, 477-478, 10 Cal. Rptr. 73). The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to dismiss a state court action on the ground the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of the action. The points and authorities set forth are illustrative only and not exhaustive of federal statutes vesting exclusive jurisdiction in the federal courts [see discussion under § 133.50[3][c]].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to the complaint on the ground the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the action alleged [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)], or a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. With appropriate modifications, they may also be used in support of a petition for writ of prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103] to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the case and a writ of mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] to compel the trial court to dismiss it. They may also be adapted for use in an appellate brief.

[c] When Issue of Preemption Arises

In the field of preemption of state law, questions of subject matter jurisdiction arise in those categories of cases over which the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction, such as bankruptcy, patent and copyright law, penalties and forfeitures under the law of the United States, and some types of cases within the area of admiralty and maritime law [Hughes v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 832, 849, 263 Cal. Rptr. 850] . As in the field of admiralty and maritime law, federal preemption under the Employees' Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) sometimes affects subject matter jurisdiction and sometimes it does not (see 29 U.S.C. § 1132(a)(1)(B), (e)(1)) [Hughes v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 832, 849, 263 Cal. Rptr. 850] . Under the Federal Tort Claims Act (28 U.S.C. §§ 1291, 1346, 1402, 1504, 2110, 2401, 2411, 2412, 2671-2680), federal district courts have exclusive jurisdiction over claims against the United States for torts committed by its employees within the scope of their employment, when the United States would be liable under applicable law if it were a private person [28 U.S.C. § 1346(b)].

State courts are not authorized to determine whether a person's claim for relief under a federal law, in a federal court, and within that court's exclusive jurisdiction, is an appropriate one. The fact that Congress' grant to the federal courts of exclusive jurisdiction over bankruptcy petitions precludes collateral attacks on such petitions in state courts is supported by the fact that remedies are available in the federal courts to creditors who believe that a filing is frivolous [Choy v. Redland Insurance Company (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 789, 798, 127 Cal. Rptr. 2d 94] .

In addition, the National Labor Relations Board has exclusive jurisdiction over causes of action in a collective bargaining context [see 29 U.S.C. § 151 et seq.; Machinists Automotive Trades Dist. Lodge v. Peterbilt Motors Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1402, 1407-1412, 269 Cal. Rptr. 911] .

[d] Conflict Between Federal and State Statutes

Even when Congress has not completely displaced state regulation in a specific area, state law is nullified to the extent it actually conflicts with federal law. Such a conflict arises when compliance with both federal and state regulations is a physical impossibility, or when the state law stands as an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution of the full purposes and objectives of Congress [Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 686, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 (quoting Fidelity Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta (1982) 458 U.S. 141)]. The controlling principle then is that any state legislation that frustrates the full effectiveness of federal law is rendered invalid by the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution (U.S. Const., art. VI, cl. 2) [Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 688, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 (quoting Perez v. Campbell (1971) 402 U.S. 637)]. For example, an action by the former cashier of a chartered national bank with fewer than 20 employees against the bank and its officers for age discrimination under former Gov. Code § 12941(a) (providing that employer may not discharge or dismiss any individual over age of 40 on ground of age, except in cases where law compels or provides for such action; section repealed as of January 1, 2003) and for violation of employment covenants under California law is preempted by § 24 of the National Bank Act [12 U.S.C. § 24], providing in part that, under the act, a national banking association shall have power to elect or appoint directors, and by its board of directors to appoint a president, vice-president, cashier, and other officers, define their duties, dismiss such officers or any of them at pleasure, and appoint others to fill their places [Aalgaard v. Merchants Nat. Bank, Inc. (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 674, 677, 686-695, 274 Cal. Rptr. 81 (affirming summary judgment for defendant)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Death on the High Seas Act

46 U.S.C. § 761 provides that whenever the death of a person shall be caused by wrongful act, neglect, or default occurring on the high seas beyond a marine league from the shore of any state, or the District of Columbia, or the Territories or dependencies of the United States, the personal representative of the decedent may maintain a suit for damages in the United States District Courts, in admiralty, for the exclusive benefit of the decedent's wife, husband, parent, child, or dependent relative against the vessel, person, or corporation that would have been liable if death had not ensued.

Cairl v. Boeing Co. (1974) 39 Cal. App. 3d 137, 113 Cal. Rptr. 925 , was an action in the Los Angeles County Superior Court for wrongful death resulting from decedent's fall from a B-52 aircraft alleged to have been negligently and defectively designed and manufactured, and warranted by the defendant, and alleged to have occurred at a point 60 miles northwest of Thule Air Base Greenland, a point located on the high seas beyond a marine league from the shore of any state, or the District of Columbia, or the Territories or dependencies of the United States. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint for lack of subject matter jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)] was sustained, and the action was dismissed. Plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal said that cases interpreting 46 U.S.C. § 761 uniformly have held that state courts are not granted jurisdiction over deaths occurring on the high seas as defined, and, since the suit must be brought in admiralty, United States courts have exclusive jurisdiction, and that the place of accident, that is, locale, determines the exercise of admiralty jurisdiction. Quoting Wilson v. Transocean Airlines (N.D. Cal. 1954) 121 F. Supp. 85, 92 , the court said that in applying the locality test for admiralty jurisdiction, the tort is deemed to occur not where the wrongful act or omission has its inception, but where the impact of the act or omission produces such injury as to give rise to a cause of action (39 Cal. App. 3d 137, 139) . The court said that Gordon v. Reynolds (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 472, 10 Cal. Rptr. 73 (discussed below), specifically held that state courts have no jurisdiction over the subject matter of an action brought under the federal Death on the High Seas Act and that federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction, and that the case has been cited approvingly a number of times (39 Cal. App. 3d 137, 139) . The court also said that airplane accidents are included within the meaning of the Death on the High Seas Act (39 Cal. App. 3d 137, 139) .

Gordon v. Reynolds (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 472, 10 Cal. Rptr. 73 , was an action for, among other things, the wrongful death of a passenger aboard an aircraft, owned by the defendant, that was ditched in the Pacific Ocean approximately seven miles southwest of Cape San Martin Light in Monterey County, resulting in the drowning deaths of the pilot, his wife, and plaintiff's husband. Plaintiff was the sole survivor of the crash. The defense of lack of subject matter jurisdiction was tried first and resulted in a judgment that the court had no jurisdiction of the wrongful death action.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court said that the federal Death on the High Seas Act [46 U.S.C. §§ 761-768] created, in the exercise of the plenary powers of Congress, a new substantive cause of action for death on the high seas, and that jurisdiction of the federal court over the federal cause of action is exclusive (187 Cal. App. 2d 472, 478) . Quoting Wilson v. Transocean Airlines (N.D. Cal. 1954) 121 F. Supp. 85, 92 , the court further pointed out that the tort is deemed to occur not where the wrongful act or omission has its inception, but where the impact of the act or omission produces such injury as to give rise to a cause of action (187 Cal. App. 2d 472, 479) .

[b] Federal Patent Law

In Lockwood v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 675, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 220), plaintiff inventor sued defendant law firm after the firm requested reexamination of two of the inventor's patents. Subsequently, the inventor filed an amended complaint. The trial court granted the firm's special motions to strike the inventor's original and amended complaints pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and entered judgment in favor of the firm. On appeal, the court concluded that the inventor's complaints arose under federal patent laws and therefore were subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal courts under 28 U.S.C. § 1338. Although the United States Patent and Trademark Office (USPTO) found that the prior art failed to disclose, teach, or suggest the invention described by the inventor's patents, this determination was not particularly instructive as to whether the requests for reexamination would have been granted absent the firm's alleged misrepresentations. Thus, the USPTO's decision confirming the inventor's patents did not obviate the substantial questions of federal patent law involved in determining whether the prior art would be considered important in deciding the patentability of the inventor's patent claims (173 Cal. App. 4th 675, 687) .

In Landmark Screens, LLC v. Morgan, Lewis & Bockius, LLP (2009) 183 Cal. App. 4th 238, 107 Cal. Rptr. 3d 373 , plaintiff client sued defendants, an attorney and his law firm, for legal malpractice in a patent prosecution. The client alleged that defendants engaged in a deceptive course of action by actively concealing from it the negligent filing of a divisional application. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer for lack of subject matter jurisdiction. On appeal, the court concluded that this action should have been adjudicated in federal court because of the substantial patent questions presented in the elements of causation and damages. The showing required of the client went beyond the question of whether defendants' alleged concealment and deception amounted to malpractice. To recover from defendants, the client needed to prove that but for their failure to disclose (or intentional concealment of) the attorney's negligence in filing the application, it would not have lost valuable and pioneering patent rights. The client's success would have derived from demonstrating that defendants' concealment closed the door on its opportunity to pursue patent rights for its invention. The nature and extent of these rights presented a substantial issue of federal patent law that was properly adjudicated in federal court (183 Cal. App. 4th 238, 251). Although the client argued that affirmance of the judgment would leave it without a remedy, at the time it filed this action there was sufficient authority suggesting that federal court was the proper forum for resolution of the issues raised. The client was not deprived of its ability to file a timely action in federal court (183 Cal. App. 4th 238, 252).

PART II. FORMS
C. Federal-State Jurisdiction

13-133 California Points & Authorities § 133.51

§ 133.51 Supporting Motion to Quash Service of Summons and to Dismiss Action for Lack of Jurisdiction--Jurisdiction of Disputes Involving Ownership or Right to Possession of Indian Land Held in Trust by United States or Interest Therein Is Vested Exclusively in Federal Courts [28 U.S.C. § 1360(b)]

[Caption. See § 133.50.]

THE MOTION TO [QUASH SERVICE OF SUMMONS AND] DISMISS THIS ACTION SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THIS COURT DOES NOT HAVE JURISDICTION OVER [THE DEFENDANTS OR] THE SUBJECT OF THE ACTION FOR THE REASON THAT THIS CASE INVOLVES A DISPUTE CONCERNING THE _____ [OWNERSHIP or RIGHT TO POSSESSION or specify other interest in the property] OF INDIAN LAND, JURISDICTION OF WHICH IS IN THE FEDERAL COURTS.

A. Limitation on State Court Jurisdiction. Although 28 U.S.C. § 1360(a) gives California jurisdiction over civil disputes that involve Indians and arise in Indian country, that jurisdiction is limited by 28 U.S.C. § 1360(b), which provides in part that the general grant of civil jurisdiction does not confer jurisdiction on the state to adjudicate the ownership or right to possession of Indian property that is held in trust by the United States or is subject to a restriction against alienation imposed by the United States or any interest in it (28 U.S.C. § 1360; see Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1146, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305)

B. Action Is Completely Preempted by Federal Law and Dismissal Is Required. An action involving the ownership or right to possession of Indian trust property or any interest in it is completely preempted under federal law and the state court action must be dismissed Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1156, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305

[Optional] C. Hybrid Motion to Quash/Dismiss Is Proper. Although a motion to quash service of summons is normally directed at defects in personal, as opposed to subject matter jurisdiction, the hybrid motion to quash/dismiss is a proper means of challenging the court's authority without making a general appearance. This is consistent with the general rule that subject matter jurisdiction can be challenged at any time during the course of an action (Boisclair v.

Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1144 n.1, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305).

[Optional] D. Indian Defendants Acting Within Their Authority Are Immune From Liability. The rule that if actions of an officer do not conflict with the terms of his or her valid statutory authority, they are the actions of the sovereign, whether or not they are tortious under general law, applies to Indian tribal officers (Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1144 n.1, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, may be used by the defense in an action against an Indian tribe, band, or community, and/or tribal officers when the action involves the ownership or right to possession of Indian land held in trust by the United States. The memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to dismiss the action for lack of subject matter jurisdiction, or a hybrid motion to quash service of summons [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a)(1)] for lack of personal jurisdiction on the ground the tribal officers are immune to suit and to dismiss the action for lack of jurisdiction, on the ground the dispute involves a federal claim, jurisdiction of which is exclusively in the federal courts [see 28 U.S.C. § 1360(b); Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1146, 1156, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305 (both discussed under § 133.51[3][a])]. Optional Paragraphs C and D should be included when the points and authorities are submitted in support of a hybrid motion by individual tribal officers named as defendants who claim that they are immune to suit under the doctrine of sovereign immunity. Paragraph D may also be used by itself in a separate memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion by Indian tribal officers to quash service of summons in an action against them for an act which is tortious under general law but to which the doctrine of sovereign immunity applies.

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, Paragraphs A and B of the foregoing points and authorities may be used in support of a demurrer to the complaint on the ground the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject of the action alleged [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(a)], or a motion for separate trial of the affirmative defense that the court lacks jurisdiction of the subject matter [see Code Civ. Proc. § 597]. With appropriate modifications, all or any of the paragraphs may be used in support of a petition for writ of prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103] to restrain the trial court from proceeding with the case and a writ of mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] to compel the trial court to (quash service of summons and) dismiss the case. They may also be adapted for use in an appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation on State Court Jurisdiction

28 U.S.C. § 1360(a) provides:

> Each of the States listed in the following table shall have jurisdiction over civil causes of action between Indians or to which Indians are parties which arise in the areas of Indian country listed opposite the name of the State to the same extent that such State has jurisdiction over other civil causes of action, and those civil laws of such State that are of general application to private persons or private property shall have the same force and effect within such Indians country as they have elsewhere within the State: [specifying states, including California, and Indian country affected, which in California is all Indian country within the state].
> (b) Nothing in this section shall authorize the alienation, encumbrance, or taxation of any real or personal property, including water rights, belonging to any Indian or any Indian tribe, band, or community that is held in trust by the United States or is subject to a restriction against alienation imposed by the United States; or shall authorize the regulation of the use of such property in a manner inconsistent with any Federal treaty, agreement, or statute or any other regulation made pursuant thereto; or shall confer jurisdiction upon the State to adjudicate, in probate proceedings or otherwise, the ownership or right to possession of such property or any interest therein.
> (c) Any tribal ordinance or custom heretofore or hereafter adopted by an Indian tribe, band, or community in the exercise of any authority which it may possess shall, if not inconsistent with any applicable civil law of the State, be given full force and effect in the determination of civil causes of action pursuant to this section.

Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action by a granite company for declaratory and injunctive relief against both Indian defendants (tribal officers) and non-Indian defendants (who were not parties to the writ proceeding) with respect to the use of a road which crossed four parcels of land. Parcel 1 was leased by its Indian owner's family to the granite company in 1981 for the purpose of mining granite; parcel 3 was non-Indian land; parcels 2 and 4 were held in trust by the United States for the Pala Band of Mission Indians, a recognized Indian tribe organized under the Indian Reorganization Act (25 U.S.C. § 476). The dispute began when the non-Indian defendants welded shut a gate that extended across the road on their property, thereby denying the company its sole means of egress. The Indian defendants were charged with having conspired with the non-Indian defendants to shut the gate. The company claimed the defendants were committing trespass and/or nuisance by interfering with their use of the road, which they contended was either a public road open to all or a road over which parcel 1 had easement rights. The Indian tribe claimed the road was part of Indian trust land and that it was free to deny the company access over it. The Indian defendants appeared specially and moved to quash service of summons on the ground they enjoyed sovereign immunity from liability and to dismiss the action on the ground the trial court lacked jurisdiction of the subject matter. The motion was denied, and the Indians petitioned for a writ of mandate or prohibition. The court of appeal denied the petition. In partly affirming and partly reversing the judgment of the court of appeal, the Supreme Court said that the proper construction of 28 U.S.C. § 1360 was the center of the jurisdictional issue and of the case. The Court explained that, after granting California jurisdiction in 28 U.S.C. § 136(a) over civil disputes involving Indians and arising in Indian country was the limitation in 28 U.S.C. § 1360(b) that the general grant of civil jurisdiction does not confer jurisdiction on the state to adjudicate, in probate proceedings or otherwise, the ownership or right to possession of Indian property or any interest in it (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1146-1147) .

After discussing the historical relationship between the federal government, state government, and Indian tribes, related federal statutes, and the legislative history and intent of 28 U.S.C. § 1360 (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1147-1151) , the Court held that the limitation precludes states from asserting jurisdiction over disputes concerning Indian land, including disputes in which one party claims the disputed property is non-Indian, and that if one possible outcome of the litigation is the determination that the disputed property is in fact Indian trust land, then a state court is barred from assuming jurisdiction over the case (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1152-1153) . The Court said that it makes no difference whether a plaintiff claims that the land is owned by himself, by the state, or is under state jurisdiction by virtue of federal government action, that as long as the Indian party to the litigation claims that the property is Indian trust or allotted land, the dispute may be characterized as one concerning ownership and possession of Indian land, and is therefor barred from state court jurisdiction (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1154) .

[b] Action Is Completely Preempted by Federal Law and Dismissal Is Required

The facts and procedural background of Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305 , are discussed under § 133.51[3][a]. The Supreme Court said that, although, as a general rule, subject matter jurisdiction is determined from the face of a well-pleaded complaint, when a complaint is in an area completely preempted by federal law, the well-pleaded complaint rule is supplemented, with regard to federal-question jurisdiction, by the "complete preemption doctrine." Under this doctrine, once an area of state law has been completely preempted, any claim purportedly based on that preempted state law is considered, from its inception, a federal claim, and therefore arises under federal law. Indian property law is an area in which the complete preemption doctrine applies (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1156) . The Court said that it is incumbent on the state court, whenever a party claims that the state court has no subject matter jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1360(b), as in the case of areas of law completely preempted, to look beyond the face of the complaint in order to determine from the totality of the pleadings whether the case before it is a dispute over the ownership or right to possession of Indian land or any interest in it. If it appears from the pleading that the case may be so characterized, and that one possible outcome of the case may be a finding that the property in dispute is Indian trust land, the court must dismiss the case for want of subject matter jurisdiction (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1156) . Applying the standard, the Court found it evident from the pleadings that at least a part of the dispute was about the ownership or right of possession of Indian land, as well as a dispute about interests in the land, that the facts alleged in the complaint and in the motion to dismiss, i.e., that the road runs through what both sides concede to be Indian land and there is a factual dispute about whether the road is public, make it clear that the dispute concerns Indian property rights. The Court held that that part of the complaint asking for an adjudication of rights to purportedly Indian land cannot be adjudicated by a court of this state (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1156) . The Court held that the trial court should have granted the Indian defendants' motion to dismiss all claims of the company's rights in that portion of the road that runs through parcels 2 and 4, which are Indian trust territory (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1158) , and reversed that part of the Court of Appeal judgment denying relief with directions to partially grant the petition for writ of mandate (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1159) .

[c] Hybrid Motion to Quash/Dismiss Is Proper

The facts and procedural background of Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305 , are discussed under § 133.51[3][a]. In partly affirming and partly reversing the judgment of the court of appeal, the Supreme Court made the statement set out in Paragraph C of the foregoing form (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1144 n.1).

[d] Indian Defendants Acting Within Their Authority Are Immune From Liability

The facts and procedural background of Boisclair v. Superior Court (1990) 51 Cal. 3d 1140, 276 Cal. Rptr. 62, 801 P.2d 305 , are discussed under § 133.51[3][a]. The company alleged that the Indian defendants acted in concert with the non-Indian defendants to obstruct the portion of the road running through the non-Indian owners' parcel. The Court said that the question whether the Indian defendants acted tortiously on concededly non-Indian land does not require a determination of Indian property rights, and that, therefore, the damage claim against the Indian defendants for actions taken outside the reservation was not barred by 28 U.S.C. § 1360(b), but that whether it was barred by the sovereign immunity of the Indian defendants as officers of a recognized Indian tribe, as they contended, was a separate question, and that, although Indian tribes enjoy broad sovereign immunity from lawsuits, the immunity of Indian tribal officers is more limited (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1157) .

Although it concluded that determination of the sovereign immunity issue required a greater elaboration of the facts that underlay the company's allegations in further proceedings at the trial court (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1158) , the Supreme Court nevertheless discussed the applicable principles. It said that: (1) in general, the agent of a sovereign may be held liable when he or she acts in excess of his or her authority or under an authority not validly conferred; (2) the commission of a tortious act is not per se exempt from immunity; (3) if the actions of an officer do not conflict with the terms of his or her valid statutory authority, then they are actions of the sovereign, whether or not they are tortious under general law; (4) this general principle of sovereign immunity has been applied to Indian sovereign immunity (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1157) ; (5) the authority of a tribal government to act beyond the confines of its own territory is severely circumscribed; (6) exercise of tribal power beyond what is necessary to protect tribal self-government or to control internal relations is inconsistent with the dependent status of the tribes, and so cannot survive without express congressional delegation; and (7) the sovereign power of Indian tribes to act on land that is neither tribal land nor within the confines of the reservation is minimal (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1157-1158) .

The Court added that Indian tribes may exercise sovereign power over non-Indians who enter their land, that they may exercise control of their boundaries and exclude those seeking access, but that this power to exclude does not extend to actions taken beyond the confines of the reservation (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1158) . The Court, however, was unable to determine from the record whether the alleged tortious or conspiratorial acts by the Indian defendant's were beyond the scope of tribal self-government. The Court said that, if their acts were nothing more than those appropriate for excluding the company from tribal territory and were taken within tribal boundaries, the Indian defendants acted within the scope of their sovereign immunity, but that if they committed or conspired to commit tortious acts the primary situs of which was outside Indian territorial boundaries, they acted beyond their sovereign authority and are not protected by sovereign immunity (51 Cal. 3d 1140, 1158) .

[a] Limitation on State Court Jurisdiction

Friends of East Willits Valley v. County of Mendocino (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 191 involved a challenge to the Mendocino County Board of Supervisors' decision to grant a Native American tribe's request for cancellation of certain agricultural use restrictions on land the tribe sought to develop. Among other things, the tribe argued that even if the restrictions were to remain in place, they would be unenforceable in the future because 28 U.S.C. § 1360 precludes jurisdiction over the tribe. In rejecting this argument, the court acknowledged that the tribe enjoys sovereign immunity from suit in state court. However, Congressional authorization and tribal consent are separate and independent bases for jurisdiction. If a tribe elects to waive sovereign immunity and submit itself to state court jurisdiction, nothing in the language of 28 U.S.C. § 1360 stands as a bar to assumption of that jurisdiction (101 Cal. App. 4th 191, 202) .

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO VACATE THE DEFAULT ENTERED BY THE COURT CLERK ON REMAND OF THIS CASE FROM THE FEDERAL COURT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE JURISDICTION OF THIS COURT WAS SUSPENDED DURING THE PERIOD OF REMOVAL, AND THE DEFAULT IS VOID BECAUSE _____ [IT WAS ENTERED BEFORE THE EXPIRATION OF DEFENDANT'S TIME TO FILE A RESPONSIVE PLEADING, EXCLUDING THE TIME THE CASE WAS IN THE FEDERAL COURT or DEFENDANT HAD TIMELY FILED A RESPONSIVE PLEADING IN THE FEDERAL COURT].

A. Motion to Set Aside. The court may, on the motion of either party after notice to the other party, set aside any void judgment or order (Code Civ. Proc. § 473(d)).

B. Time to File Responsive Pleading. A defendant has 30 days after the summons is served on him or her in which to file a responsive pleading to the complaint, and no default can properly be entered before expiration of that period (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 412.20(a)(3), (4), 585).

C. Statutory Effect of Removal of Case to Federal Court. Promptly after the filing of a petition for removal of a civil action and bond, the defendant must give written notice thereof to all adverse parties and file a copy of the petition with the clerk of the state court, which effects the removal, and the state court shall proceed no further unless and until the case is remanded (28 U.S.C. § 1446(d)).

D. Removal of Action Suspends State Court's Jurisdiction. Once a case is removed from a state to a federal court, the jurisdiction of the state court to proceed with the case is suspended until the case is remanded to it by the federal court (Laguna Village, Inc. v. Laborers' Internat. Union of North America (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 174, 180, 197 Cal. Rptr. 99, 672 P.2d 882 ; Dauenhauer v. Superior Court (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 25, 307 P.2d 724).

[EITHER]

E. Effect of Removal and Remand on Time to Plead. On remand from the federal court, the state court resumes jurisdiction of the case, but the period during which the case was removed is not counted and the parties are entitled to any period in which an act is required to be taken to the extent that the period had not expired when the case was removed (Dauenhauer v. Superior Court (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 26, 307 P.2d 724).

[OR]

E. Responsive Pleading Filed in Federal Court. The filing of a motion to dismiss by the defendant in the federal court to which a case has been removed, which is sufficiently similar to a demurrer in state court to constitute a responsive pleading, prevents the entry of defendant's default after the case is remanded to the state court (Laguna Village, Inc. v. Laborers' Internat. Union of North America (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 174, 176, 179-182, 197 Cal. Rptr. 99, 672 P.2d 882).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, may be used in support of a motion to vacate the defendant's default entered by the clerk after remand of the case by the federal court to the state court. The ground of the motion is that the entry of default is void, either because a responsive pleading or its equivalent was timely filed in the federal court or because the default was entered before the time in which a responsive pleading had to be filed in the state court.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Removal and Remand

Federal removal jurisdiction is derivative; only cases properly within the jurisdiction of the state court are subject to removal [Hughes v. Blue Cross of Northern California (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 832, 850, 263 Cal. Rptr. 850] .

Unless it is reversed on appeal by an appropriate federal court, the order of remand is conclusive regarding the question of jurisdiction and not subject to review by a California appellate court [see Delpit v. U.S. Shipping Board E. F. Corp. (1931) 115 Cal. App. 85, 86, 300 P. 990] .

[c] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may also be used in support of a petition for writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate the entry of default when the remedy by appeal is inadequate [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or a petition for writ of prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103] should the state court attempt to exercise jurisdiction over the case while it is in the federal court. They may also be adapted for use in an appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Removal of Action Suspends State Court's Jurisdiction

Laguna Village, Inc. v. Laborers' Internat. Union of North America (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 174, 197 Cal. Rptr. 99, 672 P.2d 882 , arose out of an action by a land developer against a labor union for damages for trespass. The union had the case removed to the federal court, which thereafter remanded it to the state court. Plaintiff then had defendant's default entered after defendant failed to file an answer within the extended period granted by plaintiff to do so.

In holding that the trial court erred in denying relief from default, the Court, citing Dauenhauer v. Superior Court (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 307 P.2d 724 (discussed below), said that under modern practice the state court's jurisdiction is suspended from the moment of removal until the case is remanded to it by the federal court (35 Cal. 3d 174, 180) .

Dauenhauer v. Superior Court (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 307 P.2d 724 , was a mandate proceeding, arising out of an action for damages for breach of a farm machine lease, in which defendants filed an answer and a cross complaint. Plaintiff's demurrers were sustained with leave to amend, amended pleadings were filed, and the court extended plaintiff's time to plead to them. During the period of plaintiff's extended leave to plead, a party who had been joined in the action by the cross complaint filed in a federal court a petition for removal. The federal court remanded the cause to the state court and, within the unexpired time of the extended time to plead, not counting the interim of federal control, plaintiff demurred specially and generally to the amended answer and cross complaint and moved to strike both. When he filed these papers he was unaware that the day following remand, his default had been entered. When the matter came on for hearing, the cross complainant objected on the ground plaintiff's default had been entered. The objection was sustained, although the court, after hearing argument on the merits, overruled the general demurrers on the ground that the objection of failure to state a cause of action could be raised at any time [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80], and denied the motions to strike the entire pleadings; it denied the motions to strike portions of the pleadings and the special demurrers on the ground they were not timely, and plaintiff had no standing because his default had been entered.

In issuing a writ of mandate directing the trial court to rule on the merits of the special demurrers and special motions to strike, the court of appeal held that a case is removed from the jurisdiction of the state court on the filing of the petition for removal and that the jurisdiction of the state court is suspended until the case is remanded to it by the federal court, at which time the state court resumes jurisdiction (149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 25) .

[b] Effect of Removal and Remand on Time to Plead

The facts and procedural background of Dauenhauer v. Superior Court (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 307 P.2d 724 , are discussed under § 133.52[3][a]. In directing issuance of a writ of mandate, the court held that when the cause was remanded to the superior court by the federal court, the state of suspension theretofore existing terminated, and plaintiff had the unexpired time within which to file his demurrers and motions to strike; that since all this appeared on the court's record, the clerk was without authority to enter the default; that his attempt to do so was a nullity; and that since the act of entering default was void, the demurrers and motions to strike were properly filed by the clerk and it was the duty of the court to hear them and decide them on the merits (149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 26) .

[c] Responsive Pleading Filed in Federal Court

The facts and procedural background of Laguna Village, Inc. v. Laborers' Internat. Union of North America (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 174, 197 Cal. Rptr. 99, 672 P.2d 882 , are discussed under § 133.52[3][a]. While the case was in the federal court, the defendant filed a motion to dismiss pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P., Rule 12(b)(1), (6) (providing that every defense to a claim for relief in any pleading shall be asserted in the responsive pleading thereto if one is required, except that certain defenses may at the option of the pleader be made by motion, including lack of jurisdiction over the subject matter and failure to state a claim on which relief can be granted). Plaintiff filed a brief in opposition to the motion and moved to remand the case to the state court. The federal court granted the motion and, in light of the remand, declined to consider the motion to dismiss. In reversing the order denying relief from default under former Code Civ. Proc. § 473, fourth paragraph [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 473(d)], the court held that the motion to dismiss in federal court was sufficiently similar to a demurrer to constitute a responsive pleading for the purpose of avoiding entry of default (35 Cal. 3d 174, 176, 179, 182) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Removal of Action Suspends State Court's Jurisdiction

In People v. Bogart (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 257, 86 Cal. Rptr. 737 , a criminal prosecution on multiple felony counts, in which a removal petition had been filed and denied by the federal court and the case remanded to the state court, the appellate court, holding that an appeal from an order of remand did not deprive the state court of jurisdiction to proceed with the case, and citing, among other cases, Dauenhauer v. Superior Court (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 22, 24-26, 307

P.2d 724 (discussed under § 133.52[3][a]), said that it is clear that a removal petition deprives the state court of jurisdiction as soon as it is filed and served on the state court, but that jurisdiction returns to the state court when a remand order is filed and served on the state court, unless that order is stayed (7 Cal. App. 3d 257, 264) .

THE MOTION OF DEFENDANT FOR AN ORDER DISMISSING THIS ACTION FOR LACK OF JURISDICTION SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE FEDERAL COURTS AND THE STATE COURTS HAVE CONCURRENT JURISDICTION OVER THE ACTION.

[EITHER]

Applicable Federal Statute Creating Right of Action Provides for Concurrent Jurisdiction. This right of action is authorized by _____ [specify federal statute, e.g., 28 U.S.C. § 1352 (action on bond executed under law of United States)], which expressly provides that jurisdiction between the United States District Courts and state courts is concurrent.

[OR]

A. Presumption of Concurrent Jurisdiction. State courts have inherent authority, and are thus presumptively competent to adjudicate claims arising under the laws of the United States. To give federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over a federal cause of action, Congress must, in an exercise of its powers under the Supremacy Clause, affirmatively divest state courts of their presumptively concurrent jurisdiction (Yellow Freight Sys., Inc. v. Donnelly (1990) 494 U.S. 820 ; Garofalo v. Princess Cruises, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1080, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754). This presumption can be overcome only by explicit statutory directive, by unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state court jurisdiction and federal interests (Tafflin v. Levitt (1990) 493 U.S. 455, 460, 110 S. Ct. 792, 107 L. Ed. 2d 887 ; Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp. (1981) 453 U.S. 473, 101 S. Ct. 2870, 69 L. Ed. 2d 784).

[Optional] B. Effect of Grant of Jurisdiction to Federal Courts. The mere grant of jurisdiction to a federal court does not operate to oust a state court from concurrent jurisdiction over the cause of action (Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp. (1981) 453 U.S. 473, 479, 101 S. Ct. 2870, 69 L. Ed. 2d 784).

The memorandum of points and authorities in [1], above, may be submitted in opposition to a motion to dismiss a state court action on the ground the federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of the subject matter. The basis of opposition is that (1) the federal statute creating the right (which may or may not be the statute relied on by the party seeking dismissal) either expressly provides for concurrent jurisdiction between the federal and state courts or is silent on the question; (2) there is no disabling incompatibility between federal and state court jurisdiction; and (3) therefore, the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction prevails. The points and authorities set forth are illustrative only and not exhaustive of federal statutes providing either for concurrent jurisdiction or which are silent on the question. For example, state courts enjoy concurrent jurisdiction over causes of action brought under the federal civil rights statute providing that all persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same legal rights as enjoyed by white citizens (42 U.S.C. § 1981(a)) [DeHorney v. Bank of America Nat. Trust and Sav. (9th Cir. 1989) 879 F.2d 459, 463] . Paragraph B should be included if the applicable federal statute expressly provides that federal courts have jurisdiction to enforce the right granted.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Removal of Action

Notwithstanding the rule of concurrent jurisdiction, a defendant may in certain cases of concurrent jurisdiction between state and federal courts have an action removed from the state to the federal courts under 28 U.S.C. §§ 1441-1452. For the cases that may be removed and those that may not and a discussion of the procedure for removal, see Ch. 265, Federal Courts: Jurisdiction and Removal , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Presumption of Concurrent Jurisdiction

After the plaintiff in Yellow Freight System, Inc. v. Donnelly (1990) 494 U.S. 820, 110 S. Ct. 1566, 108 L. Ed. 2d 834 , received a "Notice of Right to Sue" from the Equal Employment Rights Opportunity Commission, she filed suit within the 90-day limitation period in Illinois state court, alleging discrimination in hiring based on plaintiff's sex in violation of the Illinois Human Rights Act. In response to a motion to dismiss, the plaintiff moved to amend her complaint to allege violation of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The motion was made after the 90-day period had expired. The defendant removed the case to federal court and moved to dismiss on the ground that the action was not timely because the state court did not have jurisdiction over the Title VII claim. The trial court denied the motion. The plaintiff prevailed after a trial on the merits, the court of appeals affirmed, and the defendant petitioned for certiorari.

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve a split in the courts of appeal, some of which had held that federal courts have exclusive jurisdiction of Title VII claims. The Court first noted that under the system of dual sovereignty the Court has consistently held that state courts have inherent authority, and are presumptively competent, to adjudicate claims arising under the laws of the United States. The Court continued, stating that to give federal courts exclusive jurisdiction over a federal cause of action, Congress must, in an exercise of its powers under the Supremacy Clause, affirmatively divest state courts of their presumptively concurrent jurisdiction (494 U.S. 820, 823) . Looking to the statute, the Court found that although it affirmatively conferred jurisdiction on the federal courts, it did not expressly confine jurisdiction to the federal courts or oust state courts of their presumptive jurisdiction. The Court noted that this omission was strong, and arguably sufficient, evidence that Congress did not intend federal courts to have exclusive jurisdiction. Reviewing the legislative history of Title VII, the Court found it silent on whether jurisdiction was to be exclusive in federal courts, and noted that at any rate that history would not be an adequate substitute for a legislative decision to overcome the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction (494 U.S. 820, 824-825) . Nor could the Court find any incompatibility between the Title VII procedures and state court jurisdiction (494 U.S. 820, 825-826) . Finally, the Court, without disagreeing that most legislators, judges, and administrators who had been involved in the enactment, amendment, enforcement, and interpretation of Title VII expected that Title VII matters would be heard exclusively in federal court, concluded that that anticipation did not overcome the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction (494 U.S. 820, 826) .

In Garofalo v. Princess Cruises, Inc. (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 102 Cal. Rptr. 2d 754 , Ms. Garofalo was entitled to lifetime medical care under a worker's compensation award. Later, she was allegedly injured in a shipboard fire while on a cruise, and among other litigation, the employer sought to recover the costs of medical care provided to her as a result of that event under the employer's subrogation rights under the California worker's compensation law. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the Death on the High Seas Act (DOSHA) preempted the action and that the court lacked subject matter jurisdiction. The employer appealed from the judgment dismissing the action.

The court of appeal affirmed in part and reversed in part. First, the court held that DOHSA preempted the employer's state law claim in subrogation to recover the costs of medical care (85 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1072-1079) . The court then held that California courts have concurrent jurisdiction with the federal courts over DOHSA (46 Appen. U.S.C. § 761 et seq.) claims. Disagreeing with the contrary result in Chromy v. Lawrance (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1521, 285 Cal. Rptr. 400 , and relying on Offshore Logistics, Inc. v. Tallentire (1986) 477 U.S. 207, 212, 106 S. Ct. 2485, 91 L. Ed. 2d 174 , the court found it clear that state courts have concurrent jurisdiction over DOHSA claims (85 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1079-1085) . In its analysis, the court quoted Yellow Freight System for on the inherent authority of state courts to adjudicate claims arising under the laws of the United States (85 Cal. App. 4th 1060, 1080) .

Tafflin v. Levitt (1990) 493 U.S. 455, 460, 110 S. Ct. 792, 107 L. Ed. 2d 887 involved an action raising a number of causes of action under Maryland law and also under the federal Securities Exchange Act of 1934 and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. (RICO). The trial court dismissed action, finding that plaintiffs failed to state a cause of action under the Securities Exchange Act and that because the state courts had concurrent jurisdiction over the RICO claims, federal abstention was appropriate for the other causes of action because they had been raised in pending litigation in state court. The court of appeals affirmed.

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to resolve a conflict among the federal appellate courts and state supreme courts on the issue of concurrent jurisdiction over civil RICO claims. The Court affirmed, finding concurrent jurisdiction. In doing so, the court applied the presumption in favor of concurrent jurisdiction (493 U.S. 455, 458-459) . Evaluating RICO, the court found that the grant of jurisdiction to federal courts was permissive, not mandatory (as the defendants conceded) (493 U.S. 455, 460-461) , that the legislative history did not even show that Congress considered the issue of exclusive jurisdiction (493 U.S. 455, 461-463) , and that state court jurisdiction over civil RICO claims was not imcompatible with federal interests (493 U.S. 455, 464-467) .

The concurring opinion of Justice Scalia, joined by Justice Kennedy, criticizes as dicta the implication that meeting any one of the three tests for excluding state court jurisdiction would suffice to establish exclusive jurisdiction in federal court. The concurring opinion particularly questioned whether "unmistakable implication from legislative history" could ever defeat concurrent jurisdiction and also questioned whether the inconsistency ground could ever be sufficient.

In Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp. (1981) 453 U.S. 473, 101 S. Ct. 2870, 69 L. Ed. 2d 784 , Mobil had contracted with Gulf for the latter to perform operations on oil drilling platforms offshore of Louisiana, and as part of the agreement, Gulf promised to indemnify Mobil for all claims resulting directly or indirectly from the work. While the work was in progress, a hurricane required that workers be evacuated from the oil platforms. One of Gulf's employees was taken aboard a boat chartered by Mobil and, subsequently, sustained injury while assisting crewmen evacuating other workers from the platforms. He sued Mobil and the boatowner in a Texas state court for negligence; Mobil cross complained against Gulf for indemnification. Gulf answered, raising the objection that Mobil's cause of action arose under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act [43 U.S.C. § 1331 et seq.], which, it was argued, vested exclusive subject matter jurisdiction in the federal district courts. The Texas court rejected the argument. The jury awarded the worker $900,000 and found the claim was subject to the indemnification contract. Hence, judgment was entered in favor of the worker against Gulf for $900,000. The judgment was affirmed by the Texas Court of Civil Appeals.

The U.S. Supreme Court granted Gulf's petition for a writ of certiorari to, among other things, resolve a conflict over whether federal courts have exclusive subject matter jurisdiction over suits arising under the act. In holding that they do not, the Supreme Court said that in considering the propriety of state court jurisdiction over any particular federal claim, the Court begins with the presumption that state courts enjoy concurrent jurisdiction (453 U.S. 473, 478) . The Court added that Congress may confine jurisdiction to the federal courts either explicitly or implicitly, and that the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction can, therefore, be rebutted by explicit statutory directive, by an unmistakable implication from legislative history, or by a clear incompatibility between state court jurisdiction and federal interests (453 U.S. 473, 478) .

[b] Effect of Grant of Jurisdiction to Federal Court

The facts and procedural background of Gulf Offshore Co. v. Mobil Oil Corp. (1981) 453 U.S. 473, 101 S. Ct. 2870, 69 L. Ed. 2d 784 , are discussed under § 133.60[3][b]. In holding that federal courts do not have exclusive subject matter jurisdiction over suits arising under the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act [43 U.S.C. § 1331 et seq.], the Court noted that Congress did grant United States district courts original jurisdiction of cases and controversies arising out of or in connection with any operations conducted on the outer Continental Shelf [see 43 U.S.C. § 1349(b)], but that it was black-letter law that the mere grant of jurisdiction to a federal court does not operate to oust a state court from concurrent jurisdiction over the cause of action (453 U.S. 473, 479) .

The Court pointed out that all law applicable to the Outer Continental Shelf is federal law, but that to fill the substantial gaps in the coverage of federal law, the act borrows the applicable and not inconsistent laws of the adjacent states as surrogate federal law [see 43 U.S.C. § 1333(a)(2)]; and that, thus, a personal injury action involving events occurring on the shelf is governed by federal law, the content of which is borrowed from the law of the adjacent state, here Louisiana (453 U.S. 473, 480-481). The Court said that the operation of the act would not be frustrated by state court jurisdiction over personal injury actions (453 U.S. 473, 483) . The Court pointed out that the factors generally recommending exclusive federal court jurisdiction over an area of federal law include the desirability of uniform interpretation, the expertise of federal judges in federal law, and the assumed greater hospitality of federal courts to peculiarly federal claims, but that these factors cannot support exclusive federal jurisdiction over claims whose governing rules are borrowed from state law, because there is no need for uniform interpretation of laws that vary from state to state (453 U.S. 473, 483 484). The Court explained that allowing personal injury and contract actions in state courts will advance interests identified by Congress in enacting the act, that a recurring consideration in the deliberations leading to enactment was the special relationship between the men working on the platforms and the adjacent shore to which they commute to visit their families. Allowing state court jurisdiction over these cases will allow these workers, and their lawyers, to pursue individual claims in familiar, convenient, and possibly less expensive for a (453 U.S. 473, 484) . The Court concluded, in summary, that nothing in the language, structure, legislative history, or underlying policies of the act suggests that Congress intended federal courts to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over personal injury actions arising under the act and that the Texas courts had jurisdiction over the case (453 U.S. 473, 484) .

Kingston Constructors, Inc. v. Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (1997) 14 Cal. 4th 939, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 866, 928 P.2d 581 , involved the issue of whether the courts of the State of California have jurisdiction over actions brought by or against the Washington Metropolitan Area Transit Authority (transit authority). The transit authority was established by a compact initiated and consummated by Congress for federal purposes entered into between the District of Columbia, Maryland and Virginia. The compact provided that original jurisdiction vested with the United States district courts, concurrent with the courts of Maryland and Virginia concerning actions brought by or against the transit authority. A California corporation and the transit authority had been sued in a California superior court. The transit authority did not enter an appearance, and a default was entered. The corporate defendant settled, and as part of the settlement the plaintiff assigned its claims against the transit authority to the settling defendant. Thereafter, the superior court rendered judgment on default in favor of the settling defendant, as assignee, against the transit authority. On the transit authority's motion, however, the superior court concluded that under the compact it did not have jurisdiction of the action, and issued an order vacating the judgment as void. An appeal followed.

The court of appeal affirmed the superior court's order, and the California Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Supreme Court held that the compact grants original jurisdiction to the United States district courts, and concurrently grants original jurisdiction to the courts of Maryland and Virginia (14 Cal. 4th 939, 945-946) . Moreover, the compact impliedly denies jurisdiction of transit authority actions to the courts of states other than Maryland and Virginia--more precisely, it impliedly denies them original jurisdiction. It explicitly includes Maryland and Virginia courts, and thereby implicitly excludes the remaining states, including California. Thus, California courts do not have jurisdiction over transit authority actions (14 Cal. 4th 939, 946-947) . In reaching its conclusion, however, the Supreme Court recognized the rule that the presumption of concurrent jurisdiction between federal courts and state courts arises when the jurisdictional provision in question is silent as to the jurisdiction of state courts. That, however, was not the case before the court (14 Cal. 4th 939, 948) .

S.P. Growers Asso. v. Rodriguez (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 719, 131 Cal. Rptr. 761, 552 P.2d 721 , was an unlawful detainer proceeding by a corporate agricultural employer against several of its nonunion workers. Earlier, the workers had walked off their jobs in a dispute over implementation of a previous agreement with plaintiff, and three weeks later had filed suit against plaintiff in federal district court charging violation of the former Farm Labor Contractor Registration Act (former 7 U.S.C. § 2041 et seq. [now see 29 U.S.C. § 1801 et seq.]), which, among other things, authorized a private civil remedy for violation of the act (former 7 U.S.C. § 2050a [now see 29 U.S.C. § 1854]) and prohibited discrimination against a worker in retaliation for filing suit under the act (former 7 U.S.C. § 2050b [now see 29 U.S.C. § 1855]). Immediately, plaintiff served the workers with notices of eviction from company-owned housing and, when they failed to leave, sued for unlawful detainer. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to exclude evidence regarding defendant's affirmative defenses of retaliatory eviction (1) for the strike and (2) for filing the federal action, and entered judgment against the workers.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that evidence of the affirmative defense of retaliatory eviction for striking was properly excluded, but that evidence of retaliatory eviction for filing the federal action should have been admitted. The Court said that allowing the defense to be raised in an unlawful detainer proceeding was necessary to prevent emasculation of the federal act (17 Cal. 3d 719, 725) . The Court acknowledged the well-established rule that a state court has concurrent jurisdiction to enforce a right created by federal law unless the law excludes concurrent jurisdiction or is incompatible with such jurisdiction (17 Cal. 3d 719, 726) , and pointed out that the federal act neither expressly nor impliedly excludes a state court from enforcing its provisions, and that there was nothing inherent in the nature of the act, such as a comprehensive federal administrative scheme, which militates against concurrent jurisdiction (17 Cal. 3d 719, 726) . The Court nevertheless added that, more relevantly, no state court in the proceeding was being called on to interpret or enforce federal law, that the defendants were merely asking that state law be construed so as not to thwart the express purposes of the remedial federal legislation, and that the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution [U.S. Const., art. VI, cl. 2] commanded no less (17 Cal. 3d 719, 726) .

Robbins v. Foothill Nissan (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1769, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 190 , involved an action brought by purchasers of an automobile who alleged that they were overcharged. The action, against the automobile dealer and the financing bank, asserted causes of action for fraud, conspiracy, violations of the Rees-Levering Motor Vehicle Sales and Finance Act, Civil Code § 2981 et seq., the Federal Truth in Lending Act, 15 U.S.C. § 1601 et seq., and the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act, 18 U.S.C. § 1961 et seq. After the action was filed, the bank became insolvent and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was appointed as its receiver under the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989, 12 U.S.C. § 1811 et seq. Pursuant to this act, the plaintiffs were required to submit their claim to the FDIC, but the claim was not processed within the required time period. The FDIC moved to dismiss the action on the grounds that the state court lacked subject matter jurisdiction because the federal judiciary was vested with exclusive jurisdiction. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal reversed. It held that the trial court continued to have jurisdiction over the claim after the claims period expired since the act allowed the claimant to continue any action filed before the appointment of the receiver. The court further held that the legislative history of the act did not indicate an intent by Congress to deprive state courts of jurisdiction over actions filed before receivership by the FDIC (22 Cal. App. 4th 1769, 1780-1786) .

Teamsters Agricultural Workers Union v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters (1983) 140 Cal. App. 3d 547, 189 Cal. Rptr. 627 , was an action brought by a local union of agricultural workers under the Labor-Management Reporting and Disclosure Act of 1959 [29 U.S.C. §§ 401-531] to enjoin continuation of a trusteeship imposed by the international union, which cross complained against individuals who had been elected officers of the local for conversion and an accounting of funds collected by them. The trial court found for the international union and other defendants on the complaint and for the international union and against the individuals on the cross complaint. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal noted the well-established rule that a state court has concurrent jurisdiction to enforce a right created by federal law unless the law excludes concurrent jurisdiction or is incompatible with it, and held that federal-state jurisdiction is concurrent with respect to suits brought under the act because the jurisdictional provision [29 U.S.C. § 464(a)] neither expressly nor impliedly precluded state court jurisdiction, and there appeared no reason why state courts are any less competent than federal courts to resolve trustee disputes (140 Cal. App. 3d 547, 550, n.2).

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE MOTION FOR RECLASSIFICATION OF THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING or CASE] FROM A LIMITED CIVIL CASE TO AN UNLIMITED CIVIL CASE BECAUSE THE _____ [COMPLAINT or CROSS COMPLAINT] SEEKS RELIEF IN EXCESS OF $25,000.

A. The Amount in Controversy of an Unlimited Civil Cases Exceeds $25,000. To be treated as a limited civil case, the amount in controversy in an action or special proceeding cannot exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 85(a)). "Amount in controversy" means the amount of the demand, or the recovery sought, or the value of the property, or the amount of the lien, that is in controversy in the action, exclusive of attorney's fees, interest, and costs (Code Civ. Proc. § 85(a)).

[EITHER]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include cases at law in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of property in controversy amounts to $25,000 or less (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(1)). Cases at law with demands in excess of $25,000 are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is for dissolution of partnership with assets exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions for dissolution of a partnership where the total assets do not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(2)). Where the total assets exceed $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, in case of interpleader when amount demanded or value of property exceeds $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions of interpleader, and the _____ [amount of money or the value of the property] involved does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(2)). Where the _____ [amount of money or the value of the property] exceeds $25,000, these actions are an unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, in case of action demanding or seeking recovery of property valued in excess of $25,000 and for cancellation or rescission of contract under which amount was paid or property was delivered]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to _____ [cancel or rescind] a contract in an action to recover _____ [money or property of a value] not in excess of $25,000 _____ [paid or delivered] _____ [under or in consideration of] the contract (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(3)). Where the _____ [money or property of a value] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is for unlawful detainer, forcible entry, or forcible detainer and amount claimed is in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions in _____ [forcible entry or forcible detainer or unlawful detainer] in which the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(4)). Where the amount of damages exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action to enforce and foreclose a lien on personal property exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose a lien on personal property that do not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(5)). Where the lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action to enforce and foreclose a mechanic's lien exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose, or is a petition to release, a mechanic's lien (Civ. Code § 3109 et seq.) not exceeding $25,000 (see Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(6)). Where the amount of the mechanics lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one to enforce and foreclose an assessment lien exceeding $25,000 on a common-interest development]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose an assessment lien not exceeding $25,000 on a common-interest development as defined in Civil Code Section 1351 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(6)). Where the assessment lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one for declaratory relief]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions for declaratory relief when brought pursuant to _____ [a cross-complaint as to a right of indemnity with respect to the relief demanded in the complaint or a cross-complaint in an action or proceeding that is otherwise a limited civil case or conduct a trial after a nonbinding fee arbitration between an attorney and client pursuant to Business and Professions Code § 6200 et seq. where the amount in controversy does not exceed $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(7)). Where the amount in controversy exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one by a judgment creditor to recover interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor and the property claimed or debt denied exceeds $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action that is one by a judgment creditor under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 708.210-708.290 to _____ [recover an interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor] and the _____ [interest claimed adversely is of a value not exceeding $25,000 or debt denied not exceeding $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(9)). Where the _____ [interest claimed adversely or debt denied] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action in equity to try title to personal property in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action in equity to try title to personal property, and the amount involved does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(b)(1)). Where the amount involved exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[CONTINUE]

[EITHER, if plaintiff, cross-complainant, or petitioner filing motion within time to amend initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Mandatory If Case Incorrectly Classified and Motion Filed Before Time to Amend Initial Pleading. A plaintiff, cross-complainant or petitioner may file a motion for reclassification within the time allowed for that party to amend the initial pleading; and the court must grant a motion to reclassify and enter an order for reclassification regardless of any fault or lack of fault if the case has been classified in an incorrect jurisdictional classification (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)).

[OR, if defendant or cross-defendant filing motion within time to respond to initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Mandatory If Case Incorrectly Classified and Motion Filed Before Time to Amend Initial Pleading. A defendant or cross-defendant may file a motion for reclassification within the time allowed for that party to respond to the initial pleading; and the court must grant a motion to reclassify and enter an order for reclassification regardless of any fault or lack of fault if the case has been classified in an incorrect jurisdictional classification (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)).

[OR, if party files a motion after time for party to amend party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Mandatory Even If Motion Is Filed After Time Allowed to Amend Initial Pleading or Respond to Complaint, Cross-Complaint, or Other Initial Pleading If the Case Is Incorrectly Classified and Good Cause Exists for Not Seeking Reclassification Earlier. If a party files a motion for reclassification after that time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading, the court must grant the motion and enter an order for reclassification if both the case is incorrectly classified and good cause exists for the moving party not to have sought reclassification earlier (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(b)).

D. The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case. Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85(a), 86(a)(1), 403.010 et seq.), the statutory changes have not altered substantive and procedural law governing how a trial court values a case to determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy, and the Walker test (Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418) continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

[Optional] E. Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate. While a trial court has authority to conduct a pretrial hearing to obtain information about whether the amount of the judgment will require reclassification, whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why reclassification should or should not be ordered, and even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 230-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

[2] Comments

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to reclassify an action from a limited civil case to an unlimited civil case when the complaint or cross complaint seeks relief beyond the monetary jurisdiction of a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

Paragraph A sets out the general proposition that the amount in controversy of a limited civil case cannot exceed $25,000, whereas Paragraph B sets out the various types of monetary limits to the limited civil case under different types of actions [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

The first alternative Paragraph C should be used by a plaintiff, cross-complainant, or petitioner who files the motion within the time allowed for that party to amend the initial pleading. The second alternative Paragraph C should be used by a defendant or cross-defendant who files the motion within the time allowed to respond to the initial pleading. The third alternative Paragraph C should be used by a party that files the motion after the time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should describe the type of action at issue and the facts supporting the type of action, the amounts demanded, and the filing dates of the initial and responsive pleadings. Additionally, if the movant files the motion after the time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading, facts should be argued in support of showing why good cause exists for not seeking reclassification earlier.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case

In Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 , the appellate court reviewed the effect of the statutory unification of municipal courts and superior courts into only superior courts and the application of prior case for interpreting jurisdictional classification, where the jurisdictional amount for "transfer" of a case between courts under the prior statutory scheme and "classification" of a case under the present scheme remains the same, i.e., $25,000. In Stern, the plaintiff asserted a violation of the accounting licensing statutes and that one of the accountants was not properly licensed at the time he performed services for the clients. At the initial status conference, the trial court observed that the action had not been certified a class action. Plaintiffs' attorney conceded it was not certified. Without giving the plaintiffs notice or an opportunity to present evidence, the trial court found that the matter was not a class action and ordered the matter reclassified as a limited civil case because plaintiffs had not shown they could recover more than the $25,000 jurisdictional limit. Plaintiffs filed an appeal (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 228-229) .

The appellate court found that formerly a case whose amount in controversy did not meet the jurisdictional minimum was subject to a transfer of jurisdiction from the superior court to the municipal court, but now there are no municipal courts and a "transfer" of jurisdiction from one court to another no longer takes place. The superior court has original jurisdiction in a limited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. § 85.1]. The statutory scheme now authorizes "reclassification" of a case that is erroneously classified [Code Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)]. Notwithstanding the changes in court organization, procedure, and nomenclature reflected in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85(a), 86(a)(1), 403.010-403.090, the amount in controversy continues to provide a ground for reclassifying an action. A "limited civil case" includes, inter alia, a case at law "in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy amounts to twenty-five thousand dollars ($25,000) or less" [Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(1)]. "A civil action or proceeding other than a limited civil case may be referred to as an unlimited civil case" [Code Civ. Proc. § 88]. The statutory changes have not altered substantive and procedural law governing how a trial court values a case to determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy when ruling on a motion for reclassification (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 228-230) .

Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification. Thus the test in Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 231) . The trial court reviews the record to determine whether the result is obtainable. Simply stated, the trial court looks to the possibility of a jurisdictionally appropriate verdict, not to its probability. The prayer or "demand" for relief in the complaint is relevant to valuation of the amount in controversy. Other evidence can take the form of arbitration awards, or the amount of a settlement recommendation resulting from court-ordered settlement negotiations. The lack of notice to the parties that the court would order reclassification prevented the parties from providing evidence of the value of the verdict other than the Stern complaint itself. The second amended complaint sought restitution of fees that plaintiffs paid defendants, and the class action causes of action seek restitution of accountancy fees paid by an unknown number of class members. Without further evidence as to the value of the case, the allegations of the complaint preclude a finding that the verdict will "necessarily" fall short of the $25,001 jurisdictional requirement. Therefore, the reclassification order was an abuse of discretion (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 233) .

[b] Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). The Stern court holds that Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the procedural and substantive requirements for a reclassification order, and that (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-230) :

- A party moving for reclassification should make a noticed motion.

- A court contemplating ordering reclassification on its own motion must also provide notice to the parties.

- Whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why [reclassification] should or should not be ordered.

- Even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification.

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT THE MOTION FOR RECLASSIFICATION OF THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING or CASE] FROM A LIMITED CIVIL CASE TO AN UNLIMITED CIVIL CASE BECAUSE THE _____ [COMPLAINT or CROSS COMPLAINT] SEEKS RELIEF OF A TYPE NOT GRANTED IN LIMITED CIVIL CASES.

A. Unlimited Civil Cases May Involve Amounts in Controversy Not Exceeding $25,000 If the Relief Sought Is a Type Not Granted in Limited Civil Cases. To be treated as a limited civil case, the action or special proceeding must satisfy all three of the following conditions: (1) the amount in controversy does not exceed $25,000, (2) the relief sought is a type that may be granted in a limited civil case, and (3) the relief sought, whether in a complaint or cross-complaint, is exclusively of a type described in one or more statutes that classify an action or special proceeding as a limited civil case (Code Civ. Proc. § 85).

[Optional] B. Permanent Injunctive Relief. The court in a limited civil case may not grant a permanent injunction, except as otherwise authorized by statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 580(b)(2)].

[Optional] C. Determining Title to Real Property. The court in a limited civil case may not grant as relief a determination of the title to real property [Code Civ. Proc. § 580(b)(3)].

[Optional] D. Declaratory Relief. The court may not grant declaratory relief in a limited civil case, except as authorized by Code of Civil Procedure Section 86 (Code Civ. Proc. § 580(b)(4); see Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(7)).

E. The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case. Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85(a), 86(a)(1), 403.010 et seq.), the statutory changes have not altered substantive and procedural law governing how a trial court values a case to determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy, and the Walker test (Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418) continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

[a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to reclassify an action from a limited civil case to an unlimited civil case when the complaint or cross complaint seeks relief of the type not available in a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

Paragraph A sets out the statutory requirements of limited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. § 85].

Alternative Paragraphs B through E provide the statutory list of types of relief that are not available in a limited civil action that are not dependent on the amount in controversy [Code Civ. Proc. § 580].

If the amount in controversy also exceeds $25,000, this memorandum of points and authority may be combined with the form in § 133.70.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should describe the type of action at issue and the facts supporting the type of action, and the type of relief plead.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of notice of motion and an order relative to reclassifying a case, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 324, Jurisdiction: Subject Matter Jurisdiction, §§ 324.120-324.124 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification. Thus the test in Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 231) . The trial court reviews the record to determine whether the result is obtainable. Simply stated, the trial court looks to the possibility of a jurisdictionally appropriate verdict, not to its probability. The prayer or "demand" for relief in the complaint is relevant to valuation of the amount in controversy. Other evidence can take the form of arbitration awards, or the amount of a settlement recommendation resulting from court-ordered settlement negotiations. The lack of notice to the parties that the court would order reclassification prevented the parties from providing evidence of the value of the verdict other than the Stern complaint itself. The second amended complaint sought restitution of fees that plaintiffs paid defendants, and the class action causes of action seek restitution of accountancy fees paid by an unknown number of class members. Without further evidence as to the value of the case, the allegations of the complaint preclude a finding that the verdict will "necessarily" fall short of the $25,001 jurisdictional requirement. Therefore, the reclassification order was an abuse of discretion (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 233) .

[b] Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). The Stern court holds that Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the procedural and substantive requirements for a reclassification order, and that (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-230) :

- A party moving for reclassification should make a noticed motion.

- A court contemplating ordering reclassification on its own motion must also provide notice to the parties.

- Whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why [reclassification] should or should not be ordered.

- Even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification.

[OR, if action is for dissolution of partnership with assets exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions for dissolution of a partnership where the total assets do not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(2)). Where the total assets exceed $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, in case of interpleader when amount demanded or value of property exceeds $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions of interpleader, and the _____ [amount of money or the value of the property] involved does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(2)). Where the _____ [amount of money or the value of the property] exceeds $25,000, these actions are an unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, in case of action demanding or seeking recovery of property valued in excess of $25,000 and for cancellation or rescission of contract under which amount was paid or property was delivered]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to _____ [cancel or rescind] a contract in an action to recover _____ [money or property of a value] not in excess of $25,000 _____ [paid or delivered] _____ [under or in consideration of] the contract (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(3)). Where the _____ [money or property of a value] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is for unlawful detainer, forcible entry, or forcible detainer and amount claimed is in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions in _____ [forcible entry or forcible detainer or unlawful detainer] in which the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(4)). Where the amount of damages exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action to enforce and foreclose a lien on personal property exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose a lien on personal property that do not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(5)). Where the lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action to enforce and foreclose a mechanic's lien exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose, or is a petition to release, a mechanic's lien (Civ. Code § 3109 et seq.) not exceeding $25,000 (see Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(6)). Where the amount of the mechanics lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one to enforce and foreclose an assessment lien exceeding $25,000 on a common-interest development]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose an assessment lien not exceeding $25,000 on a common-interest development as defined in Civil Code Section 1351 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(6)). Where the assessment lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one for declaratory relief]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions for declaratory relief when brought pursuant to _____ [a cross-complaint as to a right of indemnity with respect to the relief demanded in the complaint or a cross-complaint in an action or proceeding that is otherwise a limited civil case or conduct a trial after a nonbinding fee arbitration between an attorney and client pursuant to Business and Professions Code § 6200 et seq. where the amount in controversy does not exceed $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(7)). Where the amount in controversy exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one by a judgment creditor to recover interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor and the property claimed or debt denied exceeds $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action that is one by a judgment creditor under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 708.210-708.290 to _____ [recover an interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor] and the _____ [interest claimed adversely is of a value not exceeding $25,000 or debt denied not exceeding $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(9)). Where the _____ [interest claimed adversely or debt denied] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action in equity to try title to personal property in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action in equity to try title to personal property, and the amount involved does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(b)(1)). Where the amount involved exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[CONTINUE]

[EITHER, if plaintiff, cross-complainant, or petitioner filing motion within time to amend initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Not Mandatory If Case Is Correctly Classified Even If Motion Filed Before Time to Amend Initial Pleading. A plaintiff, cross-complainant or petitioner may file a motion for reclassification within the time allowed for that party to amend the initial pleading; however, the court may deny the motion if the case has the correct jurisdictional classification (see Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)).

[OR, if defendant or cross-defendant filing motion within time to respond to initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Not Mandatory If Case Is Correctly Classified Even If Motion Filed Before Time to Amend Initial Pleading. A defendant or cross-defendant may file a motion for reclassification within the time allowed for that party to respond to the initial pleading; however, the court may deny the motion if the case has the correct jurisdictional classification (see Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)).

[OR, if party files a motion after time for party to amend party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading]

D. Reclassification Requires Showing of Good Cause for Not Seeking Reclassification Earlier If Motion Made After Time Allowed to Amend Initial Pleading or Respond to Complaint, Cross-Complaint, or Other Initial Pleading. If a party files a motion for reclassification after that time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading, the court may deny the motion even if the case is incorrectly classified if the moving party fails to show good cause for not seeking reclassification earlier (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(b)).

E. The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case. Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85(a), 86(a)(1), 403.010 et seq.), the statutory changes have not altered substantive and procedural law governing how a trial court values a case to determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy, and the Walker test (Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418) continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

[Optional] F. Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate. While a trial court has authority to conduct a pretrial hearing to obtain information about whether the amount of the judgment will require reclassification, whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why reclassification should or should not be ordered, and even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification (*Stern v. [a] Use of Form

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in opposition to a motion to reclassify an action from a limited civil case to an unlimited civil case when the complaint or cross complaint does not seek relief beyond the monetary jurisdiction of a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

Paragraph A sets out the general proposition that the amount in controversy of a limited civil case cannot exceed $25,000, whereas Paragraph B sets out the various types of monetary limits to the limited civil case under different types of actions [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

The first alternative Paragraph C should be used by a plaintiff, cross-complainant, or petitioner who files the motion within the time allowed for that party to amend the initial pleading. The second alternative Paragraph C should be used by a defendant or cross-defendant who files the motion within the time allowed to respond to the initial pleading. The third alternative Paragraph C should be used when the movant files the motion after the time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should describe the type of action at issue and the facts supporting the type of action, the amounts demanded, and the filing dates of the initial and responsive pleadings. Additionally, counsel should add argument to support the assertion that good cause does not exist to show why the movant did not seek reclassification earlier.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification. Thus the test in Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 231) . The trial court reviews the record to determine whether the result is obtainable. Simply stated, the trial court looks to the possibility of a jurisdictionally appropriate verdict, not to its probability. The prayer or "demand" for relief in the complaint is relevant to valuation of the amount in controversy. Other evidence can take the form of arbitration awards, or the amount of a settlement recommendation resulting from court-ordered settlement negotiations. The lack of notice to the parties that the court would order reclassification prevented the parties from providing evidence of the value of the verdict other than the Stern complaint itself. The second amended complaint sought restitution of fees that plaintiffs paid defendants, and the class action causes of action seek restitution of accountancy fees paid by an unknown number of class members. Without further evidence as to the value of the case, the allegations of the complaint preclude a finding that the verdict will "necessarily" fall short of the $25,001 jurisdictional requirement. Therefore, the reclassification order was an abuse of discretion (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 233) .

[b] Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). The Stern court holds that Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the procedural and substantive requirements for a reclassification order, and that (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-230) :

- A party moving for reclassification should make a noticed motion.

- A court contemplating ordering reclassification on its own motion must also provide notice to the parties.

- Whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why [reclassification] should or should not be ordered.

- Even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification.

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action that is one by a judgment creditor under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 708.210-708.290 to _____ [recover an interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor] and the _____ [interest claimed adversely is of a value not exceeding $25,000 or debt denied not exceeding $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(9)). Where the _____ [interest claimed adversely or debt denied] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action in equity to try title to personal property in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action in equity to try title to personal property, and the amount involved does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(b)(1)). Where the amount involved exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[CONTINUE]

[EITHER, if plaintiff, cross-complainant, or petitioner filing motion within time to amend initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Mandatory If Case Incorrectly Classified and Motion Filed Before Time to Amend Initial Pleading. A plaintiff, cross-complainant or petitioner may file a motion for reclassification within the time allowed for that party to amend the initial pleading; and the court must grant a motion to reclassify and enter an order for reclassification regardless of any fault or lack of fault if the case has been classified in an incorrect jurisdictional classification (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)).

[OR, if defendant or cross-defendant filing motion within time to respond to initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Mandatory If Case Incorrectly Classified and Motion Filed Before Time to Amend Initial Pleading. A defendant or cross-defendant may file a motion for reclassification within the time allowed for that party to respond to the initial pleading; and the court must grant a motion to reclassify and enter an order for reclassification regardless of any fault or lack of fault if the case has been classified in an incorrect jurisdictional classification (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(a)).

[OR, if party files a motion after time for party to amend party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading]

C. Reclassification Is Mandatory Even If Motion Is Filed After Time Allowed to Amend Initial Pleading or Respond to Complaint, Cross-Complaint, or Other Initial Pleading If the Case Is Incorrectly Classified and Good Cause Exists for Not Seeking Reclassification Earlier. If a party files a motion for reclassification after that time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading, the court must grant the motion and enter an order for reclassification if both the case is incorrectly classified and good cause exists for the moving party not to have sought reclassification earlier (Code of Civ. Proc. § 403.040(b)).

D. The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case. Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85(a), 86(a)(1), 403.010 et seq.), the statutory changes have not altered substantive and procedural law governing how a trial court values a case to determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy, and the Walker test (Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418) continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

[Optional] E. Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate. While a trial court has authority to conduct a pretrial hearing to obtain information about whether the amount of the judgment will require reclassification, whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why reclassification should or should not be ordered, and even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 230-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in support of a motion to reclassify an action from an unlimited civil case to a limited civil case when the complaint or cross complaint does not seek relief beyond the monetary jurisdiction of a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

Paragraph A sets out the general proposition that the amount in controversy of a limited civil case cannot exceed $25,000, whereas Paragraph B sets out the various types of monetary limits to the limited civil case under different types of actions [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

The first alternative Paragraph C should be used by a plaintiff, cross-complainant, or petitioner who files the motion within the time allowed for that party to amend the initial pleading. The second alternative Paragraph C should be used by a defendant or cross-defendant who files the motion within the time allowed to respond to the initial pleading. The third alternative Paragraph C should be used when the movant files the motion after the time for that party to amend that party's initial pleading or to respond to a complaint, cross-complaint, or other initial pleading.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should describe the type of action at issue and the facts supporting the type of action, the amounts demanded, and the filing dates of the initial and responsive pleadings. Additionally, counsel should add argument to support the assertion that good cause does not exist to show why the movant did not seek reclassification earlier.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of notice of motion and an order relative to reclassifying a case, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 324, Jurisdiction: Subject Matter Jurisdiction, §§ 324.120-324.124 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification. Thus the test in Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 231) . The trial court reviews the record to determine whether the result is obtainable. Simply stated, the trial court looks to the possibility of a jurisdictionally appropriate verdict, not to its probability. The prayer or "demand" for relief in the complaint is relevant to valuation of the amount in controversy. Other evidence can take the form of arbitration awards, or the amount of a settlement recommendation resulting from court-ordered settlement negotiations. The lack of notice to the parties that the court would order reclassification prevented the parties from providing evidence of the value of the verdict other than the Stern complaint itself. The second amended complaint sought restitution of fees that plaintiffs paid defendants, and the class action causes of action seek restitution of accountancy fees paid by an unknown number of class members. Without further evidence as to the value of the case, the allegations of the complaint preclude a finding that the verdict will "necessarily" fall short of the $25,001 jurisdictional requirement. Therefore, the reclassification order was an abuse of discretion (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 233) .

[b] Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). The Stern court holds that Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the procedural and substantive requirements for a reclassification order, and that (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-230) :

- A party moving for reclassification should make a noticed motion.

- A court contemplating ordering reclassification on its own motion must also provide notice to the parties.

- Whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why [reclassification] should or should not be ordered.

- Even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification.

Proc. § 86(a)(3)*). Where the _____ [amount of money or property of a value] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is for unlawful detainer, forcible entry, or forcible detainer and amount claimed is in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions in _____ [forcible entry or forcible detainer or unlawful detainer] in which the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(4)). Where the amount of damages exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action to enforce and foreclose a lien on personal property exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose a lien on personal property that do not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(5)). Where the lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action to enforce and foreclose a mechanic's lien exceeding $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose, or is a petition to release, a mechanic's lien (Civ. Code § 3109 et seq.) not exceeding $25,000 (see Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(6)). Where the amount of the mechanics lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one to enforce and foreclose an assessment lien exceeding $25,000 on a common-interest development]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions to enforce and foreclose an assessment lien not exceeding $25,000 on a common-interest development as defined in Civil Code Section 1351 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(6)). Where the assessment lien exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one for declaratory relief]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include actions for declaratory relief when brought pursuant to _____ [a cross-complaint as to a right of indemnity with respect to the relief demanded in the complaint or a cross-complaint in an action or proceeding that is otherwise a limited civil case or conduct a trial after a nonbinding fee arbitration between an attorney and client pursuant to Business and Professions Code § 6200 et seq. where the amount in controversy does not exceed $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(7)). Where the amount in controversy exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action is one by a judgment creditor to recover interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor and the property claimed or debt denied exceeds $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action that is one by a judgment creditor under Code of Civil Procedure Sections 708.210-708.290 to _____ [recover an interest in personal property or enforce the liability of a debtor of a judgment debtor] and the _____ [interest claimed adversely is of a value not exceeding $25,000 or debt denied not exceeding $25,000] (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(9)). Where the _____ [interest claimed adversely or debt denied] exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[OR, if action in equity to try title to personal property in excess of $25,000]

B. Jurisdictional Classification. Limited civil cases include an action in equity to try title to personal property, and the amount involved does not exceed $25,000 (Code Civ. Proc. § 86(b)(1)). Where the amount involved exceeds $25,000, these actions are unlimited civil cases (see Code Civ. Proc. § 88).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification. Thus the test in Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (*105 Cal. Therefore, the reclassification order was an abuse of discretion (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 233) .

[b] Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). The Stern court holds that Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the procedural and substantive requirements for a reclassification order, and that (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-230) :

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION FOR RECLASSIFICATION OF THIS _____ [ACTION or PROCEEDING or CASE] FROM AN UNLIMITED CIVIL CASE TO A LIMITED CIVIL CASE BECAUSE THE _____ [COMPLAINT or CROSS COMPLAINT] SEEKS RELIEF OF A TYPE NOT GRANTED IN LIMITED CIVIL CASES.

A. Unlimited Civil Cases May Involve Amounts in Controversy Not Exceeding $25,000 If the Relief Sought Is a Type Not Granted in Limited Civil Cases. To be treated as a limited civil case, the action or special proceeding must satisfy all three of the following conditions: (1) the amount in controversy does not exceed $25,000, (2) the relief sought is a type that may be granted in a limited civil case, and (3) the relief sought, whether in a complaint or cross-complaint, is exclusively of a type described in one or more statutes that classify an action or special proceeding as a limited civil case (Code Civ. Proc. § 85).

[Optional] B. Permanent Injunctive Relief. The court in a limited civil case may not grant a permanent injunction, except as otherwise authorized by statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 580(b)(2)].

[Optional] C. Determining Title to Real Property. The court in a limited civil case may not grant as relief a determination of the title to real property [Code Civ. Proc. § 580(b)(3)].

[Optional] D. Declaratory Relief. The court may not grant declaratory relief in a limited civil case, except as authorized by Code of Civil Procedure Section 86 (Code Civ. Proc. § 580(b)(4); see Code Civ. Proc. § 86(a)(7)).

E. The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case. Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85(a), 86(a)(1), 403.010 et seq.), the statutory changes have not altered substantive and procedural law governing how a trial court values a case to determine the jurisdictional amount in controversy, and the Walker test (Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418) continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

[Optional] F. Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate. While a trial court has authority to conduct a pretrial hearing to obtain information about whether the amount of the judgment will require reclassification, whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why reclassification should or should not be ordered, and even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification (Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 230-231, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275).

The form in [1], above, may be submitted in opposition to a motion to reclassify an action from a limited civil case to an unlimited civil case when the complaint or cross complaint seeks relief of the type not available in a limited civil case [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 85, 86].

Paragraph A sets out the statutory requirements of limited civil case [Code Civ. Proc. § 85].

Alternative Paragraphs B through E provide the statutory list of types of relief that are not available in a limited civil action that are not dependent on the amount in controversy [Code Civ. Proc. § 580].

If the amount in controversy also exceeds $25,000, this points and authority may be combined with the form in § 133.130.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should describe the type of action at issue and the facts supporting the type of action, and the type of relief plead.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of notice of motion and an order relative to reclassifying a case, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 324, Jurisdiction: Subject Matter Jurisdiction, §§ 324.120-324.124 (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] The Walker Test Continues to Govern the Determination of the Jurisdictional Amount in Controversy for Reclassification of a Case

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). Although the reclassification statutes have made numerous changes, the jurisdictional amount in controversy has not changed and continues to provide a basis for reclassification. Thus the test in Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the determination of the jurisdictional amount in controversy for reclassification as a limited civil case, i.e., that the matter will "necessarily" result in a verdict below the jurisdictional amount (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 231) . The trial court reviews the record to determine whether the result is obtainable. Simply stated, the trial court looks to the possibility of a jurisdictionally appropriate verdict, not to its probability. The prayer or "demand" for relief in the complaint is relevant to valuation of the amount in controversy. Other evidence can take the form of arbitration awards, or the amount of a settlement recommendation resulting from court-ordered settlement negotiations. The lack of notice to the parties that the court would order reclassification prevented the parties from providing evidence of the value of the verdict other than the Stern complaint itself. The second amended complaint sought restitution of fees that plaintiffs paid defendants, and the class action causes of action seek restitution of accountancy fees paid by an unknown number of class members. Without further evidence as to the value of the case, the allegations of the complaint preclude a finding that the verdict will "necessarily" fall short of the $25,001 jurisdictional requirement. Therefore, the reclassification order was an abuse of discretion (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 233) .

[b] Each Party Must Be Afforded the Opportunity to Respond and Offer Reasons Why Reclassification Is or Is Not Appropriate

The facts and procedural background of Stern v. Superior Court (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 129 Cal. Rptr. 2d 275 are discussed under § 133.70(3)(a). The Stern court holds that Walker v. Superior Court (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 257, 262, 279 Cal. Rptr. 576, 807 P.2d 418 continues to govern the procedural and substantive requirements for a reclassification order, and that (105 Cal. App. 4th 223, 229-230) :

- A party moving for reclassification should make a noticed motion.

- A court contemplating ordering reclassification on its own motion must also provide notice to the parties.

- Whether a party makes a motion or the court raises the jurisdictional issue on its own motion, the court must provide sufficient opportunity to respond and offer reasons why [reclassification] should or should not be ordered.

- Even if no hearing is held, before ordering reclassification the court must afford the parties an opportunity to contest reclassification.

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 141.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains memoranda of points and authorities for use in supporting [see §§ 141.20-141.25] and opposing [see §§ 141.26-141.32] a landlord's contentions concerning the proper measure of damages recoverable from a tenant who has breached a lease and abandoned the leased premises; supporting [see §§ 141.33, 141.34] and opposing [see § 141.35] the contention that a lease should be rescinded; and supporting [see § 141.36] and opposing [see § 141.37] a contention that a commercial landlord has breached a covenant not to lease to a competitor of his or her tenant.

The chapter also includes forms of memoranda supporting [see §§ 141.38, 141.39] and opposing [see §§ 141.40-141.45] contentions that rent control ordinances are unconstitutional, supporting [see §§ 141.46, 141.47] and opposing [see §§ 141.48-141.52] contentions that a tenant is entitled to relief under typical rent control provisions, supporting the contention that a tenant is entitled to relief for wrongful eviction based on a landlord's fraudulent conduct [see § 141.53], supporting the contention that a landlord who in good faith failed to return a security deposit and to provide the tenant a written accounting of deductions in a timely manner may recover amounts for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning as damages in a judicial proceeding [see § 141.54], and opposing the contention that a landlord who failed to return a security deposit and to provide a written accounting of deductions from the deposit in a timely manner is entitled to recover unpaid rent and costs of repairs and cleaning as damages [see § 141.55].

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in unlawful detainer actions, see Ch. 236, Unlawful Detainer . For points and authorities relating to a landlord's liability for injuries resulting from defects in the premises, see Ch. 178, Premises Liability .

§ 141.20 Supporting Contention That Landlord Is Entitled to Damages From Tenant Who Breached Lease and Abandoned Premises--Unpaid Rent Earned Before Termination, and Rental Value of Premises Minus Avoidable Amount of Loss After Termination Is Proper Amount of Damages

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT TENANT'S BREACH OF THE LEASE AND ABANDONMENT OF THE PREMISES ENTITLES PLAINTIFF LANDLORD TO RECOVER AS DAMAGES THE PRESENT WORTH OF UNPAID RENT TO THE TIME OF TERMINATION OF THE LEASE, AND RENTAL VALUE DAMAGES AFTER THE TERMINATION OF THE LEASE, PURSUANT TO CIVIL CODE SECTION 1951.2.

A. Termination of Lease. A lease is terminated if the tenant breaches the lease and abandons the property before the end of the lease term, or if the tenant's right to possession is terminated by the lessor because of a breach of the lease (Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)).

B. Damages for Period Prior to Termination. On termination of a lease, a landlord is entitled to recover from the tenant the worth at the time of the award of the unpaid rent that had been earned at the time of termination (Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(1), (b)).

C. Damages for Period From Termination to Time of Award. On termination of a lease, a landlord is entitled to recover from the tenant the worth at the time of the award of the amount by which the unpaid rent that would have been earned after termination until the time of the award, exceeds the amount of that rental loss that the tenant proves could have been reasonably avoided (Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(2), (b); California Safety Center, Inc. v. Jax Car Sales (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 992, 996-997, 211 Cal. Rptr. 39).

D. Damages for Period From Time of Award to Expiration of Lease Term. On termination of a lease, a landlord is entitled to recover from the tenant the worth at the time of the award of the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term after the time of the award, exceeds the amount of such rental loss that the tenant proves could have been reasonably avoided, but only if the lease so provides or if the landlord shows that he acted reasonably and in a good faith effort to mitigate his damages (Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(3), (b), (c); Willis v. Soda Shoppes of California, Inc. (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 899, 903-905, 184 Cal. Rptr. 761).

E. Other Damages. On termination of a lease, a landlord is entitled to recover from the tenant any other amount necessary to compensate the landlord for all the detriment proximately caused by the tenant's failure to perform the obligations under the lease, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result from the tenant's failure to perform (Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(4)).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a landlord that he is entitled to damages both prior and subsequent to the termination of a lease.

Counsel should insert argument in the above form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may insert facts showing when a termination of the lease occurred, and the amounts owing to the landlord both before and after the lease's termination.

NOTE:
Civ. Code § 1951.2 does not apply to leases executed before July 1, 1971.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of complaint for damages based on a tenant's breach of a lease and abandonment of the premises, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 332, Landlord and Tenant: The Tenancy , and Ch. 334, Landlord and Tenant: Claims for Damages (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Termination of Lease

Civ. Code § 1951.2(a) provides that, except as otherwise provided in Civ. Code § 1951.4, if a tenant breaches a lease and abandons the property before the end of the lease term, or if a tenant's right to possession is terminated by the lessor because of a breach of the lease, the lease is terminated, and the landlord is entitled to recovery of damages as set forth in Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(1)-(4), (b), and (c).

[b] Damages for Period Prior to Termination

Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(1) entitles a landlord to recover from a tenant who has breached the lease and is no longer in possession of the premises the worth, at the time of the award, of the unpaid rent that had been earned up to the time the lease was terminated. Civ. Code § 1951.2(b) provides that the "worth at the time of award" is computed by allowing interest at a lawful rate as provided in the lease, or at the legal rate if none is specified, from the time it becomes due until the award.

[c] Damages for Period From Termination to Time of Award

Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(2) entitles a landlord to recover from a tenant who has breached the lease and is no longer in possession of the premises the worth, at the time of the award, of the amount by which the unpaid rent that would have been earned after termination until the time of the award, exceeds the amount of that rental loss that the tenant proves could have been reasonably avoided. Civ. Code § 1951.2(b) provides that the "worth at the time of award" is computed by allowing interest at a lawful rate as provided in the lease, or at the legal rate if none is specified, from the time it becomes due until the award.

In California Safety Center, Inc. v. Jax Car Sales (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 992, 211 Cal. Rptr. 39 , the landlord prevailed in an unlawful detainer action, and then brought an action to recover damages covering the remainder of the term up until the time the premises were relet. The trial court originally awarded damages that included rent from the time of the unlawful detainer action until the time the premises were relet, but granted the lessee's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and awarded as damages only the amounts incurred in reletting the premises, based on its interpretation of the phrase "at the time of the award" in Civ. Code § 1951.2 to mean the time of the award in the unlawful detainer action. The landlord appealed, and the court of appeal reversed.

The court of appeal held that the statutory language was intended to refer to the date of the award in the action for damages, not the time that the landlord prevailed in an unlawful detainer action. The court based its interpretation both on the language of the statute, which it found would be meaningless if it permitted damages only from the time a lease is terminated by an unlawful detainer judgment, to the time of the unlawful detainer award, as well as the legislative purpose described in Sanders Construction Co. v. San Joaquin First Fed. Sav. & Loan Assn. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 387, 398-399, 186 Cal. Rptr. 218 , as the abrogation of the common-law rule that the lessee's obligation to pay rent depends on the continued existence of the term (164 Cal. App. 3d 992, 996-999) . The court concluded that, in enacting Civ. Code § 1951.2, the Legislature intended that alandlord's right to recover damages for loss of the benefits of the lease should be independent of the right to bring an unlawful detainer action to recover possession, as expressly provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 1174.5 (164 Cal. App. 3d 992, 997) .

[d] Damages for Period After Termination Up to Expiration of Lease Term

Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(3) entitles a landlord to recover the worth, at the time of the award, of the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term after the time of the award exceeds the amount of the rental loss that the tenant proves could have been reasonably avoided. However, Civ. Code § 1951.2(c)(1) and (2) state that a landlord may recover for this period of time only if the lease specifically provides for such a recovery, or if the landlord shows that he or she acted reasonably and in a good faith effort to mitigate damages. Instead of entitlement to interest at a lawful interest rate provided in the lease, or at the legal rate, Civ. Code § 1951.2(b) provides that "the worth at the time of award" for a recovery under Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(3) is computed by discounting the amount at the discount rate of the Federal Reserve Bank of San Francisco at the time of the award plus 1 percent. The Law Revision Commission Comment to Civ. Code § 1951.2 states that the discounted rate is to reflect prepayment.

Willis v. Soda Shoppes of California, Inc. (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 899, 184 Cal. Rptr. 761 , was an action by landlords to recover accrued rent and consequential damages after the tenant's abandonment of commercial premises. After the abandonment, the landlords relet the property with an increase in rent. The trial court held that the lessors were entitled to recover damages from the lessee, but were required to offset the increased rental received and promised under the new lease against the amounts owing by the original tenant for the balance of the lease term. The lessor appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the offset was proper under Civ. Code § 1951.2(a) (134 Cal. App. 3d 899, 904-905) . However, the court stated that if the excess rent received exceeds the landlord's damages, the tenant cannot profit from his own wrong and recover the amount of the excess from the landlord; in reality, the "offset" is merely the manner of computing the detriment suffered by the plaintiff, and if the lessor has received an amount greater than the amount that would have been due under the lease, the lessor has not been damaged and cannot recover any amount from the lessee (134 Cal. App. 3d 899, 905) .

For points and authorities concerning "the amount of such rental loss that the (tenant) proves could be reasonably avoided" [Civil Code § 1951.2(a)(3), (c)(2)], and concerning whether the landlord "acted reasonably and in a good-faith effort to mitigate his damages" [Civil Code § 1951.2(a)(3), (c)(1)], see § 141.21.

[e] Other Damages

Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(4) provides that, on termination of a lease, a landlord is entitled to recover from the tenant any other amount necessary to compensate the landlord for all the detriment proximately caused by the tenant's failure to perform its obligations under the lease, or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Termination of Lease

Adler v. Elphick (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 642, 649, 229 Cal. Rptr. 254 , involved a property owner's action for unlawful detainer against a tenant who refused to vacate her apartment after the building was sold and the owner served an eviction notice. After the trial court ruled that the tenant's attempt to raise an affirmative defense could not prevent the eviction under the circumstances, the tenant objected to the trial court's jury instruction that did not limit the damages for withholding possession of the property to the rent established by the applicable rent control ordinance. The court of appeal held that the instruction was proper, because losses sustained after termination of the tenancy are considered to be damages (in the amount of the reasonable value of the use of the premises) rather than rent; therefore, the rent limits are not applicable to those damages (184 Cal. App. 3d 642, 649-650) .

[b] Other Damages

In Worthington v. Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, Inc. (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 435, 87 Cal. Rptr. 272 , the lease required the tenant to return the premises to their pre-lease condition at the end of the lease term. When the tenant vacated the premises, the landlord was required to spend three months to restore the premises. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's award of damages in the amount of the rental value during those three months, in addition to the expenses of the restoration itself (8 Cal. App. 3d 435, 442) .

In Lu v. Grewal (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 841, 30 Cal. Rptr. 3d 623 , after defendant tenants abandoned a gas station leased from the plaintiff, the plaintiff operated the business and turned a profit. The plaintiff attempted to lease or sell the property, but was unsuccessful. Plaintiff sued the tenants for unpaid rent and other damages as a result of their breach of the lease. The trial court entered judgment for the defendants, finding that plaintiff suffered no damages because she and her husband occupied the premises, managed to run the business at a profit, and mitigated damages well above the amount of damages owed by the defendants. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the proper measure of mitigation credit was the fair market rental value of the property (130 Cal. App. 4th 841, 849-850) . It reasoned that, just as a landlord, after the enactment of Civ. Code 1951.2, has no obligation to re-lease the property for the benefit of the tenant to recover lost rent, that landlord has no obligation to run the business on the property for the tenant's benefit (130 Cal. App. 4th 841, 850) .

14-141 California Points & Authorities § 141.21

§ 141.21 Supporting Contention That Landlord Is Entitled to Damages From Tenant Who Breached Lease and Abandoned Premises--Landlord's Efforts to Mitigate Damages Were Sufficient

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE LANDLORD'S EFFORTS TO MITIGATE THE DAMAGES RESULTING FROM THE TENANT'S BREACH WERE PROPER AND SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT THE LANDLORD'S RECOVERY OF DAMAGES

A. Tenant Has Burden of Proving That Landlord's Mitigation Efforts Were Insufficient. The burden of proof is on a tenant to show that the landlord has failed to make sufficient efforts to mitigate rental loss damages, by showing that landlord's alleged rental losses could have been reasonably avoided (Civ. Code § 1951.2(a)(2), (a)(3), (c)(1); Sebastian International, Inc. v. Peck (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810-811, 240 Cal. Rptr. 911).

B. Reasonable Mitigation Efforts. A landlord injured by a tenant's breach of contract is required to do everything reasonably possible to minimize his or her loss, in reduction of the damages to which the tenant has become liable. It is sufficient if the landlord acts reasonably, and with due diligence, in good faith (Brandon & Tibbs v. George Kevorkian Accountancy Corp. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 460, 277 Cal. Rptr. 40 ; Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396-397, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 ; Legislative Committee Comment, Civ. Code § 1951.2).

[Optional] C. Alternative Means of Mitigating Damages Acceptable. The fact that reasonable measures other than those taken by a landlord would have further reduced or avoided landlord's damage, is not, in and of itself, proof of the fact that the measures taken, though unsuccessful, were unreasonable. If a choice of two reasonable courses of action present themselves, the tenant whose wrong forced the choice cannot complain that one measure rather than the other is chosen (Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396-397, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 ; Legislative Committee Comment, Civ. Code § 1951.2).

[Optional] D. Landlord's Efforts to Mitigate Damages Do Not Waive Rights to Recover Statutory Damages. Efforts by a landlord to mitigate damages caused by a tenant's breach of lease do not waive a landlord's right to recover damages under Civil Code Section 1951.2 (Civ. Code § 1951.2(d)).

[Optional] E. Landlord Not Required to Negotiate Another Lease With Defaulting Tenant. A landlord's obligation to make sufficient efforts to mitigate damages does not require a landlord to mitigate damages by negotiating another lease, at a lesser rental, with a defaulting tenant (Zanker Development Co. v. Cogito Systems Corp. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1377, 1382, 264 Cal. Rptr. 76).

[Optional] F. Landlord Entitled to Recover Mitigation Costs. A party's expenses incurred in mitigation efforts may be recovered as damages (Brandon & Tibbs v. George Kevorkian Accountancy Corp. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 461, 277 Cal. Rptr. 40).

[Optional] G. Landlord Entitled to Recover Additional Losses Caused by Mitigation Efforts. An injured party may recover additional losses resulting from the party's reasonable efforts to mitigate damages (W.C. Cook & Co. v. White Truck etc. Co. (1932) 124 Cal. App. 721, 727, 13 P.2d 549).

[Optional] H. Landlord May Sell Property to Mitigate Losses. A landlord may sell the property following the tenant's abandonment to avoid further loss of rental revenue, and may recover rental loss accruing after the date of sale as well as the costs of selling the property (Millikan v. American Spectrum Real Estate Services California, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1100, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 459).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a landlord has made efforts to mitigate damages incurred due to a breach by the landlord's tenant that are sufficient to support an award of damages. Optional paragraphs C through H may be used as appropriate to respond to contentions by the tenant regarding the landlord's entitlement to a specific aspect of mitigation damages.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may discuss the nature of and the results from various efforts by the landlord tomitigate his or her damages, and should argue that the tenant has not proven that any of the landlord's losses could have been reasonably avoided.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tenant Has Burden of Proving That Landlord's Mitigation Efforts Were Insufficient

Sebastian International, Inc. v. Peck (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 240 Cal. Rptr. 911 , was an action in which a sublessor sued the personal guarantor of the defaulting subtenant for the damages caused by the subtenant's default. The evidence showed that the sublessor had attempted to sublease the premises again for the remainder of the lease term, but that the master landlord refused to consent to another sublease. The trial court granted the sublessor's motion for summary judgment over the defendant's objection that the sublessor had a duty to mitigate the damages, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The court stated that the defendant misconceived both the duty to mitigate, and the burden of proof relating to that duty. The court pointed out that Civ. Code § 1951.2 specifically places the burden of proving that damages are reasonably avoidable on the tenant, and the amount of those reasonably avoidable damages, before the tenant is entitled to have those amounts deducted from the damages award (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 810) . Because the defendant (who stood in the shoes of the tenant as a result of the guaranty agreement) did not submit any evidence that the sublessor's attempts to mitigate damages were unreasonable under the circumstances, the grant of the summary judgment was proper (195 Cal. App. 3d 803, 811) .

[b] Reasonable Mitigation Efforts

Brandon & Tibbs v. George Kevorkian Accountancy Corp. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 277 Cal. Rptr. 40 , was a breach of contract action brought by a purchaser of an accountancy practice against the seller. After the defendant refused to permit plaintiff to enter the premises, plaintiff opened another accountancy office in the same building as defendant's, and sought to recover as damages the losses incurred by that office as well as lost profits. The trial court awarded plaintiff these damages, and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the lost profits as established by the plaintiff were properly awarded, that the expenses plaintiff incurred in opening the new practice after defendant's breach were also recoverable, and rejected the defendant's contention that the plaintiff's efforts to mitigate its lost profits damages were unreasonable. The defendant had argued that plaintiff should have purchased an existing practice to mitigate its damages instead of opening its own practice, which was likely to lose money for a certain amount of time at the beginning of the practice. The court held that the trial court may well have considered the difficulty involved in negotiating the sale involved in the case before it in finding plaintiff's conduct reasonable, and that the conclusion that the plaintiff made sufficient reasonable efforts in mitigation was supported by the evidence (226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 460-461) .

In Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396-397, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 , an owner of ornamental nursery trees sought damages for crop loss caused by the defendant's destruction of an irrigation ditch. Although the plaintiff had taken steps to mitigate his damages, the trial court determined that the plaintiff could have avoided all crop losses, at a cost of not more than $600.00, by pursuing any one of five mitigation alternatives suggested by defendant.

The appellate court reversed the lower court ruling and held that, as a matter of law, the plaintiff met his duty of acting reasonably to mitigate his damages at the time the loss was threatened. The court found it irrelevant that in hindsight, the plaintiff could have taken alternative measures suggested by the defendant to further reduce the damages incurred. The court declared that if a choice of two reasonable courses of action presents itself, the party whose wrong forced the choice cannot complain that one rather than the other course is chosen. In addition, the injured party is not required to take measures that are impractical, or that would involve expenditures disproportionate to the loss sought to be avoided, or that may be beyond the party's financial means (261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396-398) .

[c] Landlord Not Required to Negotiate Another Lease With Defaulting Tenant

In Zanker Development Co. v. Cogito Systems Corp. (1985) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1377, 264 Cal. Rptr. 76 , a landlord brought a legal action against its tenant and tenant's guarantors for damages caused by defendant's breach of a lease. After the landlord had obtained an unlawful detainer judgment against the tenant and the tenant had vacated the premises, the tenant offered to reoccupy the premises under a new rental agreement "on other terms and conditions." The trial court granted the landlord's motion in limine excluding evidence of this offer, and awarded damages without considering the tenant's offer as evidence of mitigation of damages.

The appellate court affirmed the lower court ruling that evidence of offers by tenant to stay on all or part of the leased premises under different terms and conditions was irrelevant and inadmissible on the issue of mitigation. Relying on Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396-397, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 , theappellate court explained that the tenant and guarantors failed to offer any evidence that landlord's efforts to lease property to a new tenant were unreasonable, and that in light of the plaintiff's sufficient efforts to mitigate the damages there was no requirement that the landlord accept the evicted tenant's offer to relet the property on terms and condition different than those provided for by the original lease (215 Cal. App. 3d 1377, 1381-1382) .

[d] Landlord Entitled to Recover Mitigation Costs

The facts and procedural background of Brandon & Tibbs v. George Kevorkian Accountancy Corp. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 277 Cal. Rptr. 40 , are discussed in § 141.21[3][b]. In that case, the court ruled that reasonable expenses incurred in a good faith attempt to mitigate damages are recoverable even if the effort to mitigate fails (226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 461) .

[e] Landlord Entitled to Recover Additional Losses Caused by Mitigation Efforts

In W.C. Cook & Co. v. White Truck and Transfer Co. (1932) 124 Cal. App. 721, 13 P.2d 549 , plaintiff's shipment of dried figs and fig paste were damaged by rain during shipment by defendant. Plaintiff spent some $447 reconditioning a damaged portion of the shipment, and the trial court included this amount in the damages award. Defendant appealed, arguing that those expenses were an improper element of damages.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that, if in forestalling injury, the party against whom the breach is committed incurs expenses that he or she would not otherwise have incurred, and thereby succeeds in preventing a still greater loss, such expense, if made in good faith, becomes an item of damages that the injured party is entitled to recover (124 Cal. App. 721, 727) .

[f] Landlord May Sell Property to Mitigate Losses

In Millikan v. American Spectrum Real Estate Services California, Inc. (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 459 , the landlord was unable to re-lease commercial property following abandonment of the property by the tenant. The landlord sold the property, thereby incurring a prepayment penalty on the loan, a sales commission, and miscellaneous closing costs.

The court of appeal held that the trial court properly awarded selling expenses of $141,491 to the landlord as consequential damages in its breach of contract action against the tenant (117 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1105-1106) . The court held that following abandonment, the landlord's sale of the property does not constitute breach of the duty to mitigate provided the trier of fact finds a sale to be a reasonable means to avoid further loss of rental revenue. Accordingly, the landlord retains the right to claim rental loss accruing after the date of sale, except to the extent the breaching tenant can prove the rental loss was avoidable, together with consequential damages including the landlord's selling expenses (117 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1104) . The court held that the trial court had sufficient evidence from which it could find that sale of the building was a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the tenant's breach. The tenant was in the business of leasing, selling, and managing real estate, and it had leased the entire building. From this fact, and from the tenant's special training and experience in leasing, selling, and managing real estate, the trial court could reasonably infer that the tenant had reason to know that the landlord would not be able to bear the burden of a vacant building indefinitely, and that at some point it was reasonably probable the landlord would elect to sell the building to stem further losses (117 Cal. App. 4th 1094, 1105) .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a landlord that he or she is entitled to damages under a lease, after a tenant has breached the lease and abandoned the premises. The memorandum argues that the landlord was entitled to treat the lease as continuing, and therefore is entitled to recover rent as it becomes due, pursuant to Civ. Code § 1951.4.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the lease entitles the landlord to proceed pursuant to Civ. Code § 1951.4, including providing that the tenant may sublet the premises or assign the lease as required by the statute.

For related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 334, Landlord and Tenant: Claims for Damages (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lease Must Provide That Landlord May Maintain Lease in Effect

Civ. Code § 1951.4(a) provides that if a lease provides for this remedy, a landlord may elect, after a breach and abandonment by a tenant, to continue the lease in effect and to collect rental amounts as they become due under the lease. The primary effect of Civ. Code § 1951.4 is to require the tenant, rather than the landlord, to bear the burden of mitigating damages by subletting or assigning the lease [see Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Comment to Civ. Code § 1951.4].

The remedy of Civ. Code § 1951.4 is not available if the landlord evicts the tenant, thereby terminating the lease; in such a case, the landlord may only proceed under Civ. Code § 1951.2 [Cal. L. Revision Comm'n Comment to Civ. Code § 1951.4].

[b] Lease Must Provide That Tenant May Sublet or Assign Lease

The remedy under Civ. Code § 1951.4 may only be used if a lease permits a tenant to sublet the premises or to assign the lease in accordance with Civ. Code § 1951.4(b)(1), (b)(2), or (b)(3).

[c] Lease Permits Tenant to Sublet, Assign, or Both

Civ. Code § 1951.4(b)(1) provides that a landlord may elect the remedy of Civ. Code § 1951.4 to maintain a lease in effect, if the lease permits, or does not prohibit or otherwise restrict the right of a tenant to sublet the property, assign the lease, or both.

[d] Lease Permits Tenant to Sublet, Assign, or Both, Subject to Reasonable Standards or Conditions

Civ. Code § 1951.4(b)(2) provides that a landlord may elect the remedy of Civ. Code § 1951.4 to maintain a lease in effect, if the lease permits the tenant to sublet the premises, assign the lease, or both, subject to express standards or conditions, provided that they are reasonable as of the time the lease was executed, and provided that the landlord does not require compliance with any standard or condition that has become unreasonable at the time that the tenant seeks to sublet or assign. For purposes of this statute, an express standard or condition is presumed to be reasonable for burden of proof purposes.

[e] Lease Permits Tenant to Sublet, Assign, or Both, Subject to Consent Not to Be Unreasonably Withheld

Civ. Code § 1951.4(b)(3) provides that a landlord may elect the remedy of Civ. Code § 1951.4 to maintain a lease in effect, if the lease permits a tenant to sublet the premises, assign the lease, or both, subject to a landlord's consent not to be unreasonably withheld, or if the lease includes a standard implied in law that consent should not be unreasonably withheld.

Kendall v. Ernest Pantana, Inc. (1985) 40 Cal. 3d 488, 220 Cal. Rptr. 818, 709 P.2d 837 , was an action by a commercial tenant for declaratory and injunctiverelief and damages against a landlord who refused to consent to an assignment of the lease desired by the tenant. The lease merely provided that any sublease or assignment must have the landlord's consent. The trial court sustained the landlord's demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the complaint. The tenant appealed, and the California Supreme Court reversed.

The Court held that a landlord's refusal to consent to a sublease or assignment must have a commercially reasonable basis (40 Cal. 3d 488, 498) . The Court based this holding on the traditional legal hostility to restraint on alienation (40 Cal. 3d 488, 498-500) , and on the rule that every contract, including leases, includes an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (40 Cal. 3d 488, 500) . The Court gave the following examples of factors relevant to the determination whether a landlord's refusal to consent was reasonable: the financial responsibility of proposed assignees or subtenants, the suitability and legality of the prospective use for the particular property, the nature of the occupancy, and any need for alteration of the premises. The Court also stated that a refusal to consent based on personal taste or sensibilities were not commercially reasonable factors (40 Cal. 3d 488, 501) .

[a] Lease Permits Tenant to Sublet, Assign, or Both, Subject to Consent Not to Be Unreasonably Withheld

In Carma Developers (Cal.), Inc. v. Marathon Development California, Inc. (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 342, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 467, 826 P.2d 710 , the California Supreme Court considered a commercial lease provision that granted to the landlord the absolute right to terminate the lease on the tenant's request to sublet the premises. It was undisputed that the landlord exercised its right of termination in order to realize the appreciated market value. The Court held that the provision was enforceable, and was not subject to a reasonableness test (2 Cal. 4th 342, 351) . The Court based this conclusion in part on its conclusion that the policy against restraints on alienation is less applicable to leasehold interests than it is to fee interests, and that the termination clause before it was in any event a reasonable provision that precluded a tenant from profiting from increased rental values (2 Cal. 4th 342, 361-362) . The Court also noted that the termination provision did not affect the lease provision permitting the remedies provided by Civ. Code § 1951.4, because on termination of the lease the tenant is no longer under any obligations under the lease (2 Cal. 4th 342, 365-366) .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a provision for liquidated damages is enforceable under Civ. Code § 1671. The first alternate Paragraph B is for use if the lease is of real property for use as a dwelling by the party or by those dependent on the party for support; the second alternate Paragraph B is for use in cases involving other types of leases, in which only the reasonableness of the provision is considered.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel for a landlord seeking to recover liquidated damages based on a provision in a lease of real property for use as a dwelling by the party or by those dependent on the party for support should discuss facts showing that actual damages would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liquidated Damages Provision in Lease for Residential Dwelling Is Valid if Actual Damages Are Impracticable or Extremely Difficult to Determine

Civ. Code § 1671(d) provides that, in a case involving a party to a lease of real property for use as a dwelling by the party or by those dependent on the party for support, a provision in a contract liquidating damages for the breach of the contract is void except that the parties to such a contract may agree in the contract to an amount that shall be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach thereof, when, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage [see also Civ. Code § 1671(c)(2) (excepting residential lease contracts from more general rule of interpretation set forth in Civ. Code § 1671(b))].

[b] Liquidated Damages Provision Is Valid Unless Provision Was Unreasonable When Contract Was Made

Civ. Code § 1671(b) provides that, except as provided in Civ. Code § 1671(c) (discussed in § 141.23[3][a]), a provision in a contract liquidating the damages for the breach of the contract is valid unless the party seeking to invalidate the provision establishes that the provision was unreasonable under the circumstances existing at the time the contract was made.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a landlord's action for rent, if the tenant asserts that the landlord's breach of a covenant excused his or her payment of rent.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the covenants are independent, based on the lease's provisions and circumstances. If the tenant has asserted that the landlord has breached the covenant to maintain residential premises in a tenantable condition, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that any breach by the landlord did not render the premises untenantable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Covenants Are Presumed to Be Mutually Independent

In Goldsmith v. Tub-O-Wash (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 132, 18 Cal. Rptr. 446 , the landlord had leased to the tenants the entire ground floor of a building. Tenants wished to convert the premises to a self-service launderette and began remodeling. Subsequently, a building inspector found that certain work would have to be performed before a license for the operation of the business could be granted. Landlord had covenanted to make requisite repairs to the roof and exterior walls, and this was related to the corrections required by the building inspector. Landlord had indicated her willingness to perform the necessary repairs. However, defendants refused to continue their work of alteration and repair unless the landlord first performed all of the work called for in the agreement. Landlord agreed to do the work, provided that the tenants performed first, but the tenants instead abandoned the project entirely. The landlord sued for money due under the lease, for damages for breach of contract, and for declaratory relief. The tenant defendants answered denying liability and any breach of the lease, and cross complained for damages resulting from the landlord's alleged breach. The trial court denied the tenants' motion for a judgment on the pleadings, and after a trial without a jury, the court entered judgment for the landlord.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court in favor of the landlord. The court held that covenants in a lease are mutually independent unless the lease expressly or impliedly makes them conditional. There was nothing in the lease to indicate that the parties intended to make the landlord's covenant to repair the roof and exterior walls a condition precedent for the performance of the tenants' obligation to pay rent. Thus, the tenants were liable for breach of the agreement (199 Cal. App. 2d 132, 137-138) .

[b] Breach of Independent Covenant Does Not Justify Refusal to Pay Rent

Exchange Securities Co. v. Rossini (1919) 44 Cal. App. 583, 186 P. 828 , was an action by a landlord to recover rent due under a lease, with interest, less the amount for which the premises had been relet after the tenant vacated the premises. The lease contained a covenant requiring the landlord to give the tenants an option to purchase the leased property if the landlord received an offer for the purchase of the property and wished to sell. The tenants vacated the premises five months after the lessor sold the property without offering to tenants the option to buy as specified in the lease. The trial court found that landlord was entitled to nothing and entered judgment in favor of the tenants.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that the covenant to give an option to purchase was independent of the tenant's covenant to pay rent. The court held that the landlord's breach of its covenant to give the tenant an option to purchase is the basis for the tenant's action for breach of the covenant, but would justify the tenant's termination of the lease only if the lease so provided. Because the lease did not make payment of rent dependent on the landlord's performance of its covenants, and did not provide that the tenant could terminate the lease on such a breach by the landlord, the court concluded that the breach of the covenant did not warrant the tenants' terminating the lease and refusing to pay the rent (44 Cal. App. 583, 585-586) .

[c] Landlord's Covenant to Repair Normally Is Independent

In Hosang v. Minor (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 269, 22 Cal. Rptr. 794 , the plaintiff landlords brought an action for rent allegedly due under a lease and for damages for injury to the leased property. The landlords had covenanted to repair water pumping equipment if emergency repair became necessary. They failed to replace or repair the pumping equipment when it was destroyed by a fire, and thereafter the tenant paid no rent. The trial court entered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that a covenant to repair on the part of the lessor and a covenant to pay rent on the part of the lessee are usually considered as independent covenants, and that unless the covenant to repair is expressly or impliedly made a condition precedent to the covenant to pay rent, a breach of the former does not justify the refusal on the part of the tenant to perform the latter. The court determined that the covenant to repair did not run to the entire consideration of the lease and no justification existed for implying that the defendant's agreement to pay rent was dependent on repair or replacement of damaged equipment (205 Cal. App. 2d 269, 272-273) .

[d] In Order to Treat Covenant to Repair as Dependent With Covenant to Pay Rent, Tenant Must Meet the Statutory Standards of Civil Code Section 1942

Civil Code § 1942 permits a tenant the option of vacating the premises, and not paying any further rent if a landlord has received reasonable written or oral notice of dilapidations rendering the premises untenantable and if the landlord is obligated and fails to repair the condition. Under this statute, a tenant also possesses the option of spending up to one month's rent to repair the condition, and deducting the expenses of repair from the rent when due. However, the self-help remedy applies only if the dilapidations involved render the premises untenantable [Civ. Code § 1942(a)].

On and after July 1, 1988, the remedies available under Civ. Code § 1942 are also available against a landlord who violates statutory provisions that require landlords of buildings intended for human habitation to install and maintain operable deadbolts and other locking devices [see Civ. Code § 1941.3(c)].

A landlord may successfully oppose a residential tenant's right to vacate the premises or deduct costs of repair from his or her rent pursuant to Civ. Code § 1942 if the tenant is in substantial violation of any of the affirmative obligations listed in Civ. Code § 1941.2(a)(1)-(5), and the tenant's violation contributes substantially to the existence of the dilapidations or interferes substantially with the landlord's obligation to effect necessary repairs in order to make the premises tenantable for their intended purpose [Civ. Code § 1941.2(a); see Civ. Code §§ 1941, 1941.1].

Civ. Code § 1941.1 sets forth characteristics for deeming untenantable a premises intended for occupation of human beings pursuant to Civ. Code § 1941.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] In Order to Treat Covenant to Repair as Dependent With Covenant to Pay Rent, Tenant Must Meet the Statutory Standards of Civil Code Section 1942

In Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , the Supreme Court declared that the "repair and deduct" statutory remedy was intended to encompass relatively minor dilapidations, and that a tenant is not required to use the remedy as a prerequisite to asserting a landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability (10 Cal. 3d 616, 631-632) .

§ 141.25 Supporting Contention That Landlord Is Entitled to Damages From Tenant Who Breached Lease and Abandoned Premises--Tenant Was Not Constructively Evicted, So Is Liable for Rent for Entire Term of Lease

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE FACTS ALLEGED BY TENANT DO NOT CONSTITUTE A CONSTRUCTIVE EVICTION, AND THEREFORE DO NOT RELIEVE THE TENANT FROM LIABILITY FOR THE PAYMENT OF RENT FOR THE BALANCE OF THE LEASE TERM ON THAT BASIS.

A. Failure to Establish Constructive Eviction Precludes Finding That Tenant Was Relieved of Obligation to Pay Rent. A tenant's obligation to pay rent is not relieved during the period of time that no constructive eviction has been established (see Clark v. Spiegel (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 79-80, 99 Cal. Rptr. 86).

[Optional] B. Constructive Eviction Does Not Exist if Tenant Fails to Vacate Within a Reasonable Time. There can be no constructive eviction if the tenant fails to vacate the premises within a reasonable time after the inception of the alleged interference with the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the premises (Clark v. Spiegel (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 79-80, 99 Cal. Rptr. 86).

[Optional] C. No Constructive Eviction Because No Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability. If residential premises are habitable, a tenant cannot avoid liability for rental damages, based on an alleged constructive eviction caused by breach of the implied warranty of habitability (cf. Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 635, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168).

[Optional] D. No Constructive Eviction Because No Breach of Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment. If a tenant is not deprived of possession or beneficial enjoyment of the premises for the purposes contemplated by the tenancy, the tenant cannot avoid liability for rental damages based on an alleged constructive eviction caused by a breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment (Civ. Code § 1927; cf. Groh v. Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614, 34 Cal. Rptr. 637).

[Optional] E. No Constructive Eviction Because Commercial Lease Limited Tenant to Seeking Only Damages or Injunctive Relief for Landlord's Breach of Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment. If a commercial lease limits a tenant's remedies to damages or injunctive relief in the event of a breach of the covenant of quiet possession, the tenant is precluded from vacating the premises and asserting a constructive eviction defense (Lee v. Placer Title Co. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 503, 514, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 572).

[Optional] F. Trespass Alone Not Necessarily Constructive Eviction. Acts of a landlord, or his or her agent, that are no more serious than a trespass, do not constitute a sufficient basis for a constructive eviction (North Pac. S.S. Co. v. Terminal Inv. Co. (1919) 43 Cal. App. 182, 189, 185 P. 205).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a landlord that there was no constructive eviction precluding landlord's right to rental damages.

Counsel should insert argument in the above form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel may insert facts showing that there there was no breach of the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, or of the implied warranty of habitability, or that tenant did not vacate the premises within a reasonable period of time after the inception of the conditions complained about, or that landlord's acts only amounted to a trespass.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Establish Constructive Eviction Precludes Finding That Tenant Was Relieved of Obligation to Pay Rent

In Clark v. Spiegel (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 99 Cal. Rptr. 86 , plaintiffs brought an action for damages for constructive eviction from the premises on which they had operated a laundromat. The claim of constructive eviction was based partly on the failure of the defendants to maintain the lighting in a parking area in conformance with lease provisions; approximately 40 percent of the laundromat's business came at night, and the lack of lighting led to a loss of customers. The other basis for the claim was the closing of certain doors in the shopping mall in which the laundromat was located. The defendants had emphasized access through those doors as an inducement to plaintiffs while negotiating the lease. The trial court found for plaintiff, and awarded $65,000 in damages; defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for a new trial on the issue of damages. The court held that the trial court erred in instructing that interference with the doors could amount to a constructive eviction in this case. The plaintiffs remained on the premises almost four years after the first closing of the doors, and for approximately three years after the mall doors had been permanently locked. The court stated that there is a clear obligation incumbent on a tenant alleging an interference with the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, to vacate the premises within a reasonable time. Because the plaintiff continued to possess the premises, the court held that no constructive eviction was shown for that period, precluding a finding that no rent was due during that period (22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 79-80) .

[b] Constructive Eviction Does Not Exist if Tenant Fails to Vacate Within a Reasonable Time

The facts and procedural background of Clark v. Spiegel (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 99 Cal. Rptr. 86 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][a]. The court of appeal held that there is an obligation incumbent on a lessee alleging breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment to vacate the premises within a reasonable time (22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 79) . The court also held that there can be no constructive eviction of the tenant if the lessee continues in possession of the premises, and that the trial court's calculation of damages was erroneous because it was based on the premise that the plaintiff was constructively evicted beginning at the time the alleged breach occurred, rather than at the time the tenant vacated the premises (22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 80) .

[c] No Constructive Eviction Because No Breach of Implied Warranty of Habitability

Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , was an unlawful detainer action commenced by a landlord in small claims court, seeking possession of the leased premises and back rent. The tenant admitted nonpayment of rent but defended the action on the ground that the landlord had failed to maintain the leased premises in a habitable condition. The small claims court awarded possession of the premises to the landlord and entered a money judgment for $225 against the tenant.

The tenant then appealed to the San Francisco Superior Court where a de novo trial was held in accordance with former Code Civ. Proc. § 117j (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 116.770). Although the tenant submitted a copy of an inspection report of the Department of Public Works disclosing some 80 housing code violations in the building in question, and although he and his roommate detailed a long list of serious defects in the leased premises that the landlord had failed to repair after notice, the superior court agreed with the landlord's contention that the repair and deduct provisions of Civ. Code §§ 1941 and 1942 constituted thetenant's exclusive remedy. Again, the landlord was awarded $225 and possession of the premises. The tenant sought a writ, and the petition was eventually granted by the California Supreme Court.

In considering the general legal issues presented, the Supreme Court held that a warranty of habitability is implied by law in residential leases in California. Under this implied warranty, a residential landlord covenants that premises leased as living quarters will be maintained in a habitable state for the duration of the lease. It does not require that a landlord ensure that the leased premises are in perfect, aesthetically pleasing condition, but it does mean that "bare living requirements" must be maintained. In most cases substantial compliance with the applicable building and housing code standards that materially affect health and safety will suffice to meet the landlord's obligations under the implied warranty of habitability.

The Court stated that the tenant's duty to pay rent is mutually dependent on the landlord's fulfillment of the implied warranty of habitability. The old common-law treatment of the lease as a property conveyance, and the independent covenants rule that stems from this treatment have outlived their usefulness, at least in the case of a residential lease where the habitability of the dwelling unit has become the very essence of the lease. If the tenant can prove the landlord's breach of the warranty of habitability, he may demonstrate that his nonpayment of rent was justified and that no rent is in fact due and owing to the landlord (10 Cal. 3d 616, 635) .

Groh v. Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 34 Cal. Rptr. 637 , involved a lease of premises used as a cocktail lounge. The roof of the premises leaked to an extent that caused the tenant to lose customers, and the lessor did not repair the roof despite promises to do so. The tenant notified the lessor that it would terminate the lease if the condition was not remedied, and did so, suing to recover the security deposit held by the lessor. The trial court entered judgment for the tenant, and the lessor appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a constructive eviction occurs when the acts or omissions to act of a landlord, or any disturbance or interference with the tenant's possession by the landlord, renders the premises, or a substantial portion of the premises, unfit for the purposes for which they were leased, or has the effect of depriving the tenant for a substantial period of time of the beneficial enjoyment or use of the premises (221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614) . The court found that the leaky condition of the roof in the case before it could have constituted a constructive eviction, requiring affirmance of the trial court's factual determination (221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614) . The court also rejected the landlord's contention that its covenant to repair the roof was independent of the tenant's covenant to pay rent, because the covenant to repair went to the very root of the consideration for the lease (221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614) .

[e] No Constructive Eviction Because Commercial Lease Limited Tenant to Seeking Only Damages or Injunctive Relief for Landlord's Breach of Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment

In Lee v. Placer Title Co. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 503, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 572 , a commercial tenant stopped paying rent and vacated the premises, claiming fumes from an adjoining business made its office unusable. The landlord filed a complaint for rent owing on the remainder of the lease. The tenant asserted a constructive eviction defense based on the landlord's breach of the covenant of quiet possession. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's ruling that the tenant was precluded from vacating the premises and asserting a constructive eviction defense since, under the terms of the lease, the tenant was limited to seeking only damages or injunctive relief for any landlord breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment (28 Cal. App. 4th 503, 514) . The statutory prohibition against waiving the covenant (Civ. Code § 1953(a)) applies to dwellings and hence has no application to tenants in a commercial setting (28 Cal. App. 4th 503, 513) .

[f] Trespass Alone Not Necessarily Constructive Eviction

North Pac. S.S. Co. v. Terminal Inv. Co. (1919) 43 Cal. App. 182, 185 P. 205 , was an action brought by a tenant to have a lease declared rescinded. The tenant alleged that the tenant of the adjoining premises began hanging a sign obstructing a passageway that had advertising value for plaintiff. The landlord had no knowledge of the sign until the tenant first complained about the matter. The landlord at first declined to take any action, but 10 days after he learned of the sign he caused the adjoining tenants to remove the sign from the passageway. Plaintiff was informed of this but had already delivered its notice of rescission. Judgment was entered for the landlord.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and stated that if the interference with the tenant's possession was no more serious than the findings indicate, the act of defendant's other tenant could amount to no more than a mere trespass, and did not constitute a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment (43 Cal. App. 182, 189) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Constructive Eviction Does Not Exist if Tenant Fails to Vacate Within a Reasonable Time

In Petroleum Collections, Inc. v. Swords (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 122 Cal. Rptr. 114 , a case in a commercial context, the court explained the expansion of thetraditional covenant of quiet enjoyment, to protect a commercial tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the premises for the purposes contemplated by the tenancy. This led the court to find that the removal of a special sign, which had been present when the premises were leased, was removed, constituted a constructive eviction. Thus, when it was required by the city to be removed or rectified, and the landlord failed to comply with the city's required measures to retain the sign, this was deemed to constitute a constructive eviction. The court found that the mere removal of the sign that was present when the lease commenced, was mutually dependent with the covenant to pay rent, even though the sign was not addressed per se in the lease. Even though the parties negotiated for approximately eleven months before the tenant vacated the premises claiming a constructive eviction, the court found that this was not an unreasonable amount of time for the tenant to have vacated the premises, although the constructive eviction did not relieve the tenant of the obligation to pay rent until it vacated the premises (48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 848) .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a tenant that a landlord's complaint for rental damages is barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing when the applicable cause of action accrued, and when the statute of limitations period expired.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Four-Year Statute of Limitations for Written Leases

Code Civ. Proc. § 337.2 provides that the applicable statute of limitations for an action by a landlord for rental and related damages, pursuant to Civ. Code § 1951.2, based on a written lease is four years.

[b] Two-Year Statute of Limitations for Oral Leases

Code Civ. Proc. § 339.5 provides that the applicable statute of limitations foran action by a landlord for rental and related damages, pursuant to Civ. Code § 1951.2, based on an oral lease is two years.

[c] Accrual of Landlord's Cause of Action

Under both Code Civ. Proc. § 337.2 (written leases) and § 339.5 (oral leases), accrual of a landlord's cause of action for statute of limitations purposes, occurs at the time of "breach of the lease or abandonment of the property" by a tenant, or "the termination of the right of the [tenant] to possession of the property, whichever is the earlier time." The time of accrual of the landlord's cause of action pursuant to a written lease is the same, whether the landlord proceeds under Civ. Code § 1951.2, thereby terminating the lease, or the landlord has availed himself of the right to continue the lease in effect, pursuant to Civ. Code § 1951.4. Even though a tenant has breached a lease and abandoned the property, thereby triggering the running of the statute of limitations pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 337.2, Civ. Code § 1951.4 permits a landlord instead to continue the lease in effect and to collect the rent as it becomes due under the lease, rather than to recover damages based primarily on the loss of future rent as set forth in Civ. Code § 1951.2. For discussion of the provisions of Civ. Code § 1951.4, see § 141.22[2].

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a landlord is entitled to recover damages based on the tenant's breach of a rental agreement, based on the landlord's failure to make sufficient efforts to mitigate damages incurred due to the tenant's breach.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the landlord has failed to act reasonably, with due diligence, or in good faith, or that some or all of landlord's alleged damages could have been reasonably avoided.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Landlord Required to Do Everything Reasonably Possible to Minimize Loss

In Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 , an owner of ornamental nursery trees sought damages for crop loss sustained by reason of the defendant's destruction of an irrigation ditch. Although the plaintiff had taken steps to mitigate his damages, the trial court determined that the plaintiff could have avoided all crop losses at a cost of not more than $600.00, by pursuing any one of five mitigation alternatives suggested by defendant.

The appellate court reversed the lower court ruling and held that, as a matter oflaw, the plaintiff met his duty of acting reasonably to mitigate his damages at the time the loss was threatened. The court held that it was irrelevant that, in hindsight, the plaintiff could have taken alternative measures suggested by the defendant to further reduce the damages that the plaintiff incurred. The court declared that if a choice of two reasonable courses of action presents itself, the party whose wrong forced the choice cannot complain that one rather than the other is chosen. In addition, the injured party is not required to take measures that are impractical, or that would involve expenditures are disproportionate to the loss sought to be avoided, or that may be beyond the financial means of the party (261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396-397) .

[b] Landlord Must Act Reasonably, With Due Diligence, and in Good Faith

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 , are discussed in § 141.27[3][a]. In discussing the obligation to mitigate damages, the court stated that it was more accurate to say that the wrongdoer is not required to compensate the injured party for damages that are avoidable by reasonable effort on the latter's part (261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 396) . The court also stated that, although the standard of reasonableness is not as high as is required in other areas of the law, the party is required to act reasonably and with due diligence, in good faith (261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 397) .

[c] Reduction of Landlord's Recovery

The facts and procedural background of Brandon & Tibbs v. George Kevorkian Accountancy Corp. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 277 Cal. Rptr. 40 , are discussed in § 141.21[3][b]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment in part, in order to permit the trial court to determine the proper amount for the reduction of plaintiff's damages, based on the profit that the plaintiff made during the last two years of the five-year period that would have been covered by the agreement between the parties that was the subject of the breach of contract action (226 Cal. App. 3d 442, 460-461) .

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Smith (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 67 Cal. Rptr. 796 , are discussed in § 141.27[3][a]. Because the court concluded that the evidence did not support the trial court's findings that the plaintiff had not acted reasonably to mitigate damages, the court reversed the judgment (261 Cal. App. 2d 392, 398-399) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unreasonable Liquidated Damages Provision Is Invalid

Civ. Code § 1671(b) provides that a provision in a contract liquidating the damages for the breach of the contract is valid unless the party seeking to invalidate the provision establishes that the provision was unreasonable under the circumstances existing at the time the contract was made, thereby placing the burden of proof on the party challenging the provision's invalidity.

Civ. Code § 1671(b) appears applicable to commercial leases, because the two exceptions to this subsection only cover contracts for the retail purchase or rental of personal property or services, primarily for personal, family, or household purposes (Civ. Code § 1671(c)(1)), and leases of real property for use as a dwelling (Civ. Code § 1671(c)(2)). However, it is unclear how a real property lease for premises encompassing both commercial and residential dwelling purposes would be treated under the statute.

Moreover, as against a landlord of residential premises, it appears that Civ. Code § 1671(b) would normally be applicable, whereas as against a tenant of residential premises, the standard set forth in Civ. Code § 1671(c) and (d) would normally apply (Legislative Committee Comment, Civ. Code § 1671). For a memorandum of points and authorities for use if the standard set forth in Civ. Code § 1671(d) applies, see § 141.29.

In Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Assn. (1998) 17 Cal. 4th 970, 977, 73 Cal. Rptr. 2d 378, 953 P.2d 484 , the California Supreme Court held that a liquidated damages clause will generally be considered unreasonable, and hence unenforceable under § Civ. Code § 1671(b), if it bears no reasonable relationship to the range of actual damages that the parties could have anticipated would flow from a breach. The amount set as liquidated damages must represent the result of a reasonable endeavor by the parties to estimate a fair average compensation for any loss that may be sustained. In the absence of such relationship, a contractual clause purporting to predetermine damages must be construed as a penalty (17 Cal. 4th 970, 977) .

Ridgley involved a prepayment penalty on a loan, but its rationale was applied in the context of a commercial lease in Harbor Island Holdings, LLC v. Kim (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 790, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 406 . In Harbor Island, the court held that a provision in a commercial lease extension increasing the rent but providing that half of the increased rent would be conditionally "deferred" and ultimately forgiven if the tenants complied with all of their obligations under the lease was unenforceable as a penalty. The deferred rent had no reasonable relationship to the amount of actual damages caused by the tenants' breach of their obligation to maintain the premises (107 Cal. App. 4th 790, 796-797) .

§ 141.29 Opposing Contention That Landlord Is Entitled to Damages From Tenant Who Breached Lease and Abandoned Premises--Liquidated Provision in Residential Lease Is Invalid Because Nature of Case Did Not Make Actual Damages Impractical or Extremely Difficult to Fix

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE LIQUIDATED DAMAGES PROVISION INCLUDED IN THE RESIDENTIAL LEASE INVOLVED IN THIS CASE IS NOT ENFORCEABLE BECAUSE THE DAMAGES THAT WOULD BE SUSTAINED BY A BREACH WERE NOT, BASED ON THE NATURE OF THE CASE, IMPRACTICAL OR EXTREMELY DIFFICULT TO FIX.

A. Liquidated Damages Clauses in Leases Governed by Contract Law. [See § 141.28, Paragraph A.]

B. Liquidated Damages Clause Invalid, Except When Actual Damages Are Impracticable or Extremely Difficult to Determine. A provision in a residential lease liquidating damages for breach is void, except if the parties agree in the lease on an amount that will be presumed to be the amount of damage sustained by a breach because, from the nature of the case, it would be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damage (Civ. Code § 1671(c)(2), (d)).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a provision for liquidated damages is void or inapplicable under Civ. Code § 1671(d).

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the party from whom the liquidated damages are sought is a party to a lease of real property for use as a dwelling by the party or by those dependent on the party for their support [Civ. Code § 1671(c)(2)], and facts tending to show that the nature of the case did not make it impracticable orextremely difficult to fix the actual damage that would result from a breach of the lease.

§ 141.30 Opposing Contention That Landlord Is Entitled to Damages From Tenant Who Breached Lease and Abandoned Premises--Landlord's Breach of Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment Constituted Constructive Eviction of Tenant, Relieving Tenant of Obligation to Pay Rent

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE LANDLORD'S BREACH OF THE IMPLIED COVENANT OF QUIET ENJOYMENT CONSTITUTES A CONSTRUCTIVE EVICTION OF THE TENANT, WHICH RELIEVED THE TENANT FROM LIABILITY FOR FURTHER PAYMENT OF RENT.

A. Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment Implied in Every Lease. There is an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment in every lease, requiring that the tenant shall not be disturbed in his or her possession by the landlord (Civ. Code § 1927; Pierce v. Nash (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 606, 612, 272 P.2d 938).

B. Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment Is Mutual and Dependent With Tenant's Covenant to Pay Rent. The implied covenant of quiet enjoyment is mutual and dependent with the tenant's obligation to pay further rent, and a landlord's breach of that covenant constitutes a constructive eviction once the premises are vacated (Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 625 n.10, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168).

C. Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment Not Limited to Physical Possession. The implied covenant of quiet enjoyment has been expanded from the traditional right of physical possession of the premises, to a guarantee of the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the premises for the purposes contemplated by the tenancy (Petroleum Collections Inc. v. Swords (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 847-848, 122 Cal. Rptr. 114).

D. Constructive Eviction by Landlord. A constructive eviction occurs when the landlord by act or omission renders the premises unfit for the purposes for which they were leased, or deprives the tenant for a substantial period of time of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises (Groh v. Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614, 34 Cal. Rptr. 637).

E. Tenant Not Liable for Rent After Constructive Eviction. The tenant is not liable to pay rent for the portion of the lease term after the tenant vacates the premises as a result of a constructive eviction (Kulawitz v. Pacific etc. Paper Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 664, 670, 155 P.2d 24).

[Optional] F. Premises Were Vacated Within Reasonable Time. In order to constitute a constructive eviction, the tenant must vacate the premises within a reasonable time after the inception of the interference with the tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the premises (Petroleum Collections Inc. v. Swords (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 847-848, 122 Cal. Rptr. 114).

[Optional] G. Tenant's Statutory Right to Vacate. If within a reasonable time after written or oral notice to the landlord or his or her agent of dilapidations rendering the premises untenantable, which the landlord is obligated to repair, and the landlord neglects to do so, the tenant may vacate the premises; in which case the tenant is discharged from further payment of rent (Civ. Code §§ 1942(a), (d), 1941.2).

[Optional] H. Landlord's Harassment Can Constitute Constructive Eviction. Actions by a landlord designed to deprive a tenant of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises and causing abandonment amount to a constructive eviction (Aaker v. Smith (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 36, 45-46, 196 P.2d 150).

[Optional] I. Unsanitary Conditions on Premises Retained by Landlord. If the landlord leases part of a building and permits unsanitary conditions amounting to a nuisance to exist in the portion of the building remaining under his or her control, which operate to deprive the tenant of his or her beneficial enjoyment, the tenant may treat this as a constructive eviction (Johnson v. Snyder (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 86, 88, 221 P.2d 164).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention by a landlord that a tenant owes rent for the period after the tenant has vacated the premises. The opposition is based on the tenant's contention that he or she was constructively evicted from the premises, and therefore had no obligation to pay rent after vacating the premises.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts supporting the particular claim of constructive eviction. For example, counsel may discuss how the condition of the premises constituted a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment and a constructive eviction, and that the tenant vacated the premises within a reasonable time after the inception of the alleged breach.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment Implied in Every Lease

In Pierce v. Nash (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 606, 272 P.2d 938 , plaintiff was the assignee of the original lessee of a premises used as a pool hall. Plaintiff's complaint alleged that the defendant lessors had erected, over plaintiff's objection, supporting posts throughout the premises that had the effect of making the premises unsuitable for use as a pool hall. The evidence showed that the city had ordered that the defendants improve the support of the second floor of the structure, although an alternative plan (that would have strengthened the existing support, without adding additional beams) was also approved by the city but not implemented by defendants. The complaint alleged that plaintiff thereafter vacated the premises, and plaintiff sought damages on the ground that he was constructively evicted from the premises. The trial court originally found for plaintiff, finding that a constructive eviction occurred and awarding damages, but then granted defendants' motion for a new trial; plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that a lease includes, even in the absence of an expressed covenant for quiet enjoyment in the lease, an implied covenant binding on the landlords during the continuation of the term. Whether expressed or implied, this covenant means that a tenant shall not be wrongfully evicted or disturbed in his possession by the landlord (126 Cal. App. 2d 606, 612) . The court rejected the defendants' contention that damages based on a constructive eviction must be based on a showing that the landlord acted in bad faith, holding that the only requirement is that the landlord's conduct must be intentional, which the conduct in installing the posts was (126 Cal. App. 2d 606, 612-613) . The acts of the lessor in interfering with plaintiff's use and enjoyment of the premises by the installation of the wooden posts were substantial enough to constitute an invasion of the tenant's rights under the lease, and therefore constituted a constructive eviction (126 Cal. App. 2d 606, 619) .

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 625, n.10, 631-637, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][d]. The court noted that a landlord's actions in refusing to repair conditions that make the premises untenantable may be in breach of an implied covenant of quiet enjoyment, in that they may interfere with the right of the tenant to use and enjoy the premises for the purposes contemplated by the tenancy, but noted that to avail oneself of a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment a tenant must vacate the premises (10 Cal. 3d 616, 625 n.10).

[c] Implied Covenant of Quiet Enjoyment Not Limited to Physical Possession

Petroleum Collections Inc. v. Swords (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 122 Cal. Rptr. 114 , involved a commercial lease of a gas station along a highway. When the parties entered into the lease, the premises included a large illuminated sign, which was easily visible from the highway. However, the sign had been erected without a required permit and was determined to pose a fire danger, so the lessor had it removed and replaced with a nonilluminated sign that was not easily visible form the highway. The lessee insisted that the lessor furnish a sign comparable to the one that had originally been on the premises, and refused to pay rent when the lessor refused to do so. Plaintiff (a collection agent to whom the lessor assigned the cause of action) brought an action to recover the unpaid rent; the trial court entered a defense verdict on the ground that the refusal to replace the sign constituted a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment, which was mutually dependent with the lessee's obligation to pay rent. The plaintiff appealed, and the court of appeal reversed.

The court noted the expansion of the traditional covenant of quiet enjoyment, from its original purpose of protecting the tenant's physical possession of the premises against interference by the lessor, to the current view of the covenant as protection of a tenant's beneficial enjoyment of the premises for the purposes contemplated by the tenancy (48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 846) . The court held that the lessor's removal of the sign, which interfered with the purpose of the lease--to attract motorists from the nearby highway, without which the business could not be successful--could constitute a breach of the covenant, and therefore be a constructive eviction (48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 846) . However, because a constructive eviction requires that the tenant vacate the premises, which the tenant here did not do for 11 months after the sign was removed, the court reversed and remanded for a determination whether the tenant vacated within a reasonable time, with instructions that the damages be calculated from the time the tenant vacated the premises (48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 847-848) .

[d] Constructive Eviction by Landlord

The facts and procedural background of Groh v. Kover's Bull Pen, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 34 Cal. Rptr. 637 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][d]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in favor of the tenant, holding that the tenant was constructively evicted from the premises leased as a cocktail lounge,due to the lessors' failure to repair a leaking roof. The court held that a constructive eviction occurs when the acts or omission to act of a landlord, or any disturbance or interference with the tenant's possession by the landlord, renders the premises or a substantial portion thereof unfit for the purposes for which they were leased, or has the effect of depriving the tenant for a substantial period of time of the beneficial enjoyment or use of the premises. The leaky condition of the roof met this requirement (221 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614) .

[e] Premises Must Be Vacated Within a Reasonable Time

The facts and procedural background of Petroleum Collections Inc. v. Swords (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 847-848, 122 Cal. Rptr. 114 , are discussed in § 141.30[3][c]. In this case, the parties negotiated for approximately 11 months before the tenant vacated the premises based on an alleged constructive eviction; the court noted that the trial court had not made an express finding whether this was reasonable under the circumstances, and noted that in any event the obligation to pay rent is not extinguished until the tenant vacates the premises (48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 848) .

[f] Tenant Not Liable for Rent After Constructive Eviction

Kulawitz v. Pacific Woodenware & Paper Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 664, 155 P.2d 24 , was an action by a tenant to rescind a lease, and the landlord's cross complaint seeking recovery of unpaid rent. The landlord appealed from a judgment in its favor on the cross complaint which limited the recovery for unpaid rent to the period before the tenant vacated the premises. The lease contained a covenant not to lease any other space in the same building for the purposes of conducting a furniture store. The lessor let adjoining space for a business involving the sale of linoleum and kindred products. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, and concurred that there had been a constructive eviction; the Court held that, if the tenant elects to treat a landlord's interference with the substantial enjoyment of the premises as a constructive eviction and surrenders possession, the tenant is not liable to pay rent for the portion of the term following the eviction (25 Cal. 2d 664, 670) .

[g] Premises Were Vacated Within Reasonable Time

The facts and procedural background of Petroleum Collections Inc. v. Swords (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 847-848, 122 Cal. Rptr. 114 , are discussed in § 141.30[3][c]. The court remanded the case for determination whether the 11 months between the lessor's conduct that breached the covenant of quiet enjoyment, and the lessee's surrender of the premises, was reasonable under the circumstances (48 Cal. App. 3d 841, 848) .

[h] Landlord's Harassment Can Constitute Constructive Eviction

Aaker v. Smith (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 36, 196 P.2d 150 , was an action for damages for breach of an oral lease. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff in the amount of $4,500. Plaintiff was the tenant of restaurant premises and facilities located in the landlords' cocktail lounge. After four years of occupancy, the landlords embarked on a campaign to force tenant to abandon her restaurant business. They removed locks, took furniture and food, removed the sign advertising the restaurant, informed inquiring customers that the tenant was no longer in business, and shut off the gas. The court of appeal affirmed, modifying the amount of damages. The court stated that the trial court was justified in finding a constructive eviction. Any interference by the landlord by which the tenant is deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises amounts to a constructive eviction if the tenant so elects and surrenders possession (87 Cal. App. 2d 36, 45-46) .

[i] Unsanitary Conditions on Premises Retained by Landlord

In Johnson v. Snyder (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 86, 221 P.2d 164 , plaintiff sued for damages for constructive eviction. Plaintiff rented a stall in defendant's building and conducted a restaurant. When the other tenants of the building quit the building it was allowed to become dirty and unsanitary, and as a result, the city health inspector ordered plaintiff to close his restaurant business, which plaintiff did. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for plaintiff, holding that where the landlord leases part of a building and permits unsanitary conditions amounting to a nuisance to exist in the portion of the building remaining under his control which operate to deprive the tenant of his beneficial enjoyment, the tenant may treat this as a constructive eviction (99 Cal. App. 2d 86, 88-89) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Constructive Eviction by Landlord

Sierad v. Lilly (1962) 204 Cal. App. 2d 770, 22 Cal. Rptr. 580 , was an action for damages for constructive eviction from leased premises. Plaintiffs had leased the premises for use as a liquor store; parking space was available at the time of the lease but not specifically provided for in the lease. The defendant lessor sold the balance of his property without reserving parking space rights, leading to plaintiffs' loss of customers. The lessor also violated a lease provision requiring him to furnish extra storage space. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for plaintiffs and held that there had been a constructive eviction. There need not be actual dispossession of the tenant from the leased premises; any disturbance of a tenant's possession by a landlord or by someone acting under the landlord's authority, whereby the premises are rendered unfit for occupancy for the purpose for which they are demised or the tenant is deprived of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, amounts to a constructive eviction (204 Cal. App. 2d 770, 774-775) .

[b] Premises Must Be Vacated Within a Reasonable Time

The facts and procedural background of Clark v. Spiegel (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 99 Cal. Rptr. 86 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][a]. The court held that the trial court erred in instructing that interference with the doors could amount to a constructive eviction in this case, because of the four-year delay in vacating the premises after this interference. The court held that this delay did not meet the legal requirement that the tenant vacate the premises within a reasonable time, and therefore, no constructive eviction was established. There is a clear obligation incumbent on a lessee alleging an interference with the implied covenant of quiet enjoyment to vacate the premises within a reasonable time (22 Cal. App. 3d 74, 79-80) .

[c] Acts of Harassment by Landlord

In Sanders v. Allen (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 362, 188 P.2d 760 , a complaint for eviction by harassment alleged intentional breaking and blocking of windows, rapping on the apartment door without reason, frequent ringing of plaintiff's telephone, and an assault on plaintiff's husband. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint but the court of appeal reversed. The court stated that the cause of action was one for damages for constructive eviction. There was alleged a series of acts that were designed to and allegedly did operate to deprive the tenants of the beneficial enjoyment of the premises, causing them to abandon the premises (83 Cal. App. 2d 362, 366) .

§ 141.31 Opposing Contention That Landlord Is Entitled to Damages From Tenant Who Breached Lease and Abandoned Premises--Landlord's Breach of Implied Covenant of Habitability Relieved Residential Tenant of Obligation to Pay Rent

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

LANDLORD'S BREACH OF THE IMPLIED WARRANTY OF HABITABILITY RELIEVED THE TENANT OF THE DUTY TO PAY RENT UNDER THE RENTAL AGREEMENT, AND CONSTITUTED A CONSTRUCTIVE EVICTION FROM THE TIME THE TENANT VACATED THE PREMISES.

A. Implied Warranty of Habitability. A warranty of habitability is implied by law in residential leases in California (Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 631, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168).

B. Duty to Pay Rent Is Mutually Dependent. The tenant's duty to pay rent is mutually dependent on the landlord's fulfillment of the implied warranty of habitability (Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 635, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168).

C. Constructive Eviction. A breach by landlord of the implied warranty of habitability may be the basis of a constructive eviction, once tenant has vacated the premises (Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 629, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168).

[Optional] D. Using Statutory Repair Remedies Not a Prerequisite. A tenant possesses the option but is not required to use the statutory repair remedies set forth in Civil Code Section 1942, and it is not a prerequisite to using remedies of constructive eviction or seeking damages based on a breach of the implied warranty of habitability (Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 629-631, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168).

[Optional] E. Tenant Liable for Reasonable Rental Value Only. If the landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability, the tenant remains liable only for the reasonable rental value of the premises during the time the premises were in violation of the warranty (Hinson v. Delis (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 62, 70, 102 Cal. Rptr. 661).

[Optional] F. Separate Action by Tenant for Damages Is Permissible. Notwithstanding a tenant's defense of constructive eviction in an action for rent, the tenant may sue the landlord for damages in a separate action, or by cross complaint in a non-unlawful detainer action (Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 931-932, 162 Cal. Rptr. 194).

[Optional] G. Warranty May Not Be Waived. No circumstances, including the retention of possession of the premises by a tenant after he or she has knowledge of the conditions that are the subject of complaint, may constitute a waiver by tenant of the warranty (Knight v. Hallsthammar (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 46, 51-53, 171 Cal. Rptr. 707, 623 P.2d 268).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that the landlord is entitled to recover damages from a tenant, based onthe tenant's breach of a lease or rental agreement and abandonment of the premises. The ground of opposition is that the landlord has breached the implied warranty of habitability applicable to residential leases, that the breach constituted a constructive eviction terminating the tenant's obligation to pay rent as of the time the tenant vacated the premises, and that the tenant was liable only for the reasonable rental value of the premises during the time he or she was in possession. Optional paragraphs may be used to add additional grounds of opposition, if the landlord asserts that full rental damages are due up to the time the tenant surrendered possession of the premises, or if the landlord argues that the tenant is not entitled to seek damages from the landlord by cross complaint in a non-unlawful detainer action.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel for the tenant in an action to recover rent may discuss facts showing the breach of the implied warranty, the date the tenant vacated the premises, and the reasonable rental value of the premises before the tenant vacated the premises.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense to an action for recovery of rent based on the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability and the tenant's payment of the reasonable rental value of the premises, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 334, Landlord and Tenant: Claims for Damages (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Implied Warranty of Habitability

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][c]. The Court held that a warranty of habitability is implied by law in residential leases in California. Under this implied warranty, a residential landlord covenants that premises he or she leases for living quarters will be maintained in a habitable state for the duration of the lease. It does not require that a landlord ensure that the leased premises are in a perfect, aesthetically pleasing condition, but it does mean that "bare living requirements" must be maintained. In most cases substantial compliance with the applicable building and housing code standards that materially affect health and safety will suffice to meet the landlord's obligations under the implied warranty of habitability (10 Cal. 3d 616, 637) .

[b] Duty to Pay Rent as Mutually Dependent

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][c]. The Court stated that the tenant's duty to pay rent is mutually dependent on the landlord's fulfillment of his or her implied warranty of habitability. The old common-law treatment of the lease as a property conveyance, and the independent covenants rule that stems from this treatment, have outlived their usefulness, at least in the case of a residential lease in which the habitability of the dwelling unit has become the very essence of the lease. If the tenant can prove the landlord's breach of the warranty of habitability, he or she may demonstrate that the nonpayment of rent was justified and that no rent is in fact due and owing to the landlord (10 Cal. 3d 616, 635) .

[c] Constructive Eviction

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][c]. The Court noted that alternative theories, such as the breach of the warranty of quiet enjoyment, require the tenant to vacate the premises (and argue that a constructive eviction has occurred) in order to establish the defense (10 Cal. 3d 616, 625 n.10). Because the Court found that the landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability can be raised without having vacated the premises (10 Cal. 3d 616, 635) , it can be inferred that a tenant who did vacate the premises should be entitled to claim a constructive eviction as well.

[d] Utilizing Statutory Repair Remedies Not a Prerequisite

The facts and procedural background of Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , are discussed in § 141.25[3][c]. The Court examined the legislative history of the repair and deduct remedy of Civ. Code § 1942, and concluded that it had never been intended to displace the application of the common-law rules regarding constructive eviction (10 Cal. 3d 616, 629-630) .

[e] Tenant Liable for Reasonable Rental Value Only

In Hinson v. Delis (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 62, 102 Cal. Rptr. 661 , a tenant's apartment had a hole in the bathroom floor that caused several falls; the toilet leaked requiring tenant to continually mop the bathroom floor; the glass in the front door did not fit properly allowing a constant draft to enter the apartment; and the linoleum in the kitchen failed to provide a continuous water-repellent surface. The tenant informed the landlord's manager of the defective toilet and front door but nothing was done. Following a fall in the bathroom by her 10-year-old son, the tenant informed the manager that she would pay her rent only after the landlord made proper repairs. The tenant then filed an action in superior court seeking a declaratory judgment that the tenant was obliged to pay her full rent only after the landlord complied with his duty to substantially obey the housing codes, and requesting that the landlord be enjoined from filing any eviction action based on nonpayment of rent during the pendency of the action. Although finding that theaction was a proper case for declaratory relief, the trial court held that the lessee had no legal or equitable right to unilaterally withhold rent, and gave judgment for the landlord.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded for further proceedings. The court found an implied warranty of habitability in the lease agreement. In the event of breach, the tenant is not absolved from all liability for rent, but remains liable for the reasonable rental value of the premises, as determined for such time as the premises were in violation of the housing codes. In considering the materiality of an alleged breach, both the seriousness of the claimed defect and the length of time for which it persists are relevant factors. Minor housing code violations standing alone, which do not affect habitability, will not entitle the tenant to reduction in rent. Also, the violation must be relevant and affect the tenant's apartment or the common areas that he or she uses (26 Cal. App. 3d 62, 70-71) .

[f] Separate Action by Tenant for Damages Is Permissible

In Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 162 Cal. Rptr. 194 , the court held that a landlord could be sued by a present or former tenant for damages based on the reduction of rental value of premises that results from a breach of the implied warranty of habitability, and that the landlord also could be sued in tort for compensatory and punitive damages (101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 918-919) .

[g] Warranty May Not Be Waived by Tenant

Knight v. Hallsthammar (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 46, 171 Cal. Rptr. 707, 623 P.2d 268 , was a case in which tenants of a 30-unit apartment building, who were named as defendants in unlawful detainer actions, raised as a defense in those actions the landlord's alleged breach of the implied warranty of habitability. The landlord prevailed at trial after the court instructed the jury that a tenant may not defend an unlawful detainer action on the basis of a landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability, unless the defective condition was unknown to the tenant at the time of occupying the premises.

On appeal, the Supreme Court ruled that, as a matter of public policy, a landlord's breach of the implied warranty of habitability may not be waived by a tenant's taking possession of or continuing to live in the premises despite knowledge of the defective conditions. Likewise, the Court relieved tenants of any duty to ascertain conditions of a dwelling at the time of taking possession of the premises. In so ruling, the Court held that whether a tenant was aware of specific defects is not determinative of the duty of the landlord to maintain premises that are habitable. The Court further ruled that the implied warranty could not be waived by a tenant's failure to allow a landlord reasonable time to repair the defective conditions. The Court stated that any permissible waiver by a tenant would undermine the holding in Green v. Superior Court (1974) 10 Cal. 3d 616, 111 Cal. Rptr. 704, 517 P.2d 1168 , which held that the warranty could not be waived by a lease provision because it would allow landlords to circumvent the warranty through their superior bargaining power. The Court also refused to relieve the landlord of responsibility for conditions which first existed under a former owner of the property (29 Cal. 3d 46, 53-57) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Tenant Liable for Reasonable Rental Value Only

Quevedo v. Braga (1977) 72 Cal. App. 3d Supp 1, 140 Cal. Rptr. 143 , was a case in which the court defined the damages for breach of the implied warranty of habitability as limited to an amount reflecting the difference between the rent paid during the portion of the tenancy when the unfit condition was present, and the rent that would have been reasonable, taking into account the extent to which the rental value of the property was reduced as a result of the defective condition (72 Cal. App. 3d Supp 1, 8).

In Cazares v. Ortiz (1980) 109 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 23, 168 Cal. Rptr. 108 , the court ruled that to determine damages in that case, the agreed rent should be reduced by the percentage reduction of habitability owing to the ascertained defects, and then by multiplying the difference by the number of months during which the condition persisted (109 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 23, 29, 33).

TENANT HAS NO OBLIGATION TO CONTINUE TO PAY RENT, OR TO REBUILD, AFTER TOTAL OR SUBSTANTIAL DESTRUCTION OF PREMISES WITHOUT FAULT OF TENANT.

A. Termination of Lease by Destruction. A lease automatically terminates in the event the leased premises are destroyed, and the tenant is relieved of the obligation to pay rent (Civ. Code § 1933(4)).

B. Termination for Destruction of Greater Part of Premises. A tenant may terminate a lease before the end of the term agreed on if the greater part of the leased premises, or that part that was (and that the landlord had reason to believe at the time of the lease was) the material inducement to the tenant to enter into the contract, perishes from any cause other than the want of ordinary care of the tenant (*Civ. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a tenant's rent or other obligations are ended if the leased premises were completely or mostly destroyed.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show the extent to which the premises were destroyed, and the provisions of the lease affecting the rights and duties of the parties.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tenant's Covenant to Repair as Not Requiring Rebuilding

Dicker v. West (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 55, 330 P.2d 106 , was an action by a lessee to recover the balance of a deposit of $10,000 prepaid rent following destruction of the demised premises. The lessor by cross complaint sought to recover rent from and after the destruction of the premises to the end of the term provided in the lease and damages for breach of a covenant to deliver possession of the leased premises in the same condition as when they were received. Judgment in the amount of $3,971.26 was entered in favor of the lessees.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the deposit was security for the payment of rent, not advance rent. Therefore, the landlord was obligated to refund any unused portion thereof when no further rent could accrue due to the destruction of the premises. The court further held that the covenant to keep the premises in good condition and repair did not make the lessees the insurers of the leased property and the covenant did not include a covenant to pay for a structure wholly destroyed by fire without the fault of the lessee (164 Cal. App. 2d 55, 60-61) .

[b] Nondefaulting Tenant Entitled to Return of Deposit

In Warming v. Shapiro (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 72, 257 P.2d 74 , plaintiff, as assignee of a tenant under a lease, brought an action against the landlord to recover money paid by the tenant to the landlord at the time the lease was executed. Judgment was entered for the defendant landlord. The lease contained a condition prohibiting assignment by the tenant without the consent of the landlord. The tenant assigned without consent and the landlord brought an unlawful detainer action against the assignee, as a result of which the lease was terminated and the assignee was forced to quit the premises. The tenant assigned to the plaintiff all his rights in the money paid at the time of execution remaining in the hands of the landlord. The lease contained a recital that the payment was made as part consideration for the execution of the lease and as prepayment of part of the rent for the last year of the lease. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendant. The payment was made as advance payment of rent and as a bonus or consideration for the execution of the lease, and as such it could be retained by the landlord if the lease was terminated ( 118 Cal. App. 2d 72, 75-76) .

C.M. Staub Shoe Co. v. Byrne (1915) 169 Cal. 122, 145 P. 1032 , was an action to recover the value of a lease of premises damaged by fire and to recover the proportion of monthly rent representing that part of the month elapsing after the fire. The trial court entered judgment for the defendant lessor. Plaintiff leased the premises on January 1, and on February 16 the premises occupied by the plaintiff were damaged and injured by fire. A clause in the lease stated that if the building or premises were destroyed by fire, or partially destroyed so as to render the premises demised wholly unfit for occupancy, or so badly injured that they could not be repaired within 60 days after the injury, then the lease would cease. The clause also provided that the lessee would be required to pay rent within the term only to the time of such surrender. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the lease had terminated under the provision dealing with partial destruction rendering the premises wholly unfit for occupancy. It further held that a tenantwho has taken possession of leased premises and paid his rent, or a part of it, in advance as required by the terms of the lease cannot recover the rent so paid in case of the destruction of the premises in the absence of a covenant in the lease. The lessee was not entitled to repayment of a proportion of the February rent since the covenant in the lease was not a covenant to repay any installment of rent which had become due and been paid. It merely declared that the tenant would not be liable for any further rent after surrendering the premises (169 Cal. 122, 130-131) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a landlord that tenant is in material breach of an essential covenant in a lease, and that rescission or cancellation of the lease is the proper remedy because money damages would be an inadequate remedy.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show the essential nature of the lease provision, how the breach is material, and why an award of damages would be an inadequate remedy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Essential Covenant Entitles Lessor to Rescission or Cancellation

In Poundstone v. Gofoor (1930) 104 Cal. App. 212, 216, 285 P. 403 , a lease required the tenant to prepare land for planting of rice, and to plant the rice, with the work to start by a specified date. The lease also provided that the lessor could terminate the lease if the lessee defaulted in the performance required under the lease. The lessor brought an action to rescind the lease and evict the tenant when the tenant had not begun the work by the specified date, and the trial court entered judgment in favor of the lessor.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the tenant's failure to perform the covenant requiring preparation of the land and sowing of rice seed was deemed to be a material breach, for which damages would not be an adequate remedy, entitling landlord to terminate the lease (104 Cal. App. 212, 216) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a tenant that landlord is in material breach of an essential covenant in a lease, and that the landlord's breach entitles the tenant to rescission or cancellation of the lease.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the breached lease provision was essential, and that the breach was material.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Essential Covenant

In Kulawitz v. Pacific etc. Paper Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 664, 670, 155 P.2d 24 , the plaintiff leased store premises from a landlord for the purpose of conducting a furniture business. The lease provided that the landlord would not rent out or permit occupancy of any other space or storeroom in the same building for purposes of conducting a furniture store, a covenant which the landlord violated. The tenant tendered back the premises, and declared a constructive eviction and rescission of the lease. The court of appeal determined that performance of the restrictive covenant was essential to the beneficial enjoyment of the premises by the lessee for the purposes intended, that the covenant was dependent with the tenant's covenant to pay rent, that the breach amounted to a constructive eviction once tenant vacated the premises, and that the tenant was entitled to rescind the lease (25 Cal. 2d 664, 669-670).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Breach of Essential Covenant

In Medico-Dental Bldg. Co. v. Horton & Converse (1942) 21 Cal. 2d 411, 132 P.2d 457 , the plaintiff landlord brought a suit for rent alleged to be due under a lease, for the amount of an electricity charge against defendant during the last month of its occupancy, and for money expended for renovation following the defendant's removal. The trial court found that plaintiff's breach of a restrictive covenant in the lease not to rent to competing businesses prevented the maintenance of the action, except to recover the expenditure for electricity. Judgment was entered accordingly. The lease provided that the premises would be used by lessee as a drug store and for no other business. The lessor agreed not to lease or sublease any part of the building to any other person or firm for the purpose of maintaining a drug store or selling drugs or ampuls. Several years later, while this lease was still in effect, the plaintiff leased a floor of the building to a physician with the stipulation that he not maintain a drug store or compound or dispense drugs except in connection with the regular course of treatment of his own patients. The physician maintained a drug room where drugs were sold until he opened a drug store on his floor which was registered as a pharmacy and where drugs were sold and prescriptions were compounded and filled. When defendant learned of these facts it notified plaintiff in writing, expressly demanding that plaintiff take immediate steps to stop the objectionable operation and charging that such practice constituted a breach of its lease. Plaintiff later informed defendant that no arrangements could be made with the physician and plaintiff could not do anything with him. Defendant, through its president, replied that it was going to vacate the premises in order to avoid a waiver of its exclusive right to maintain a drug store in the building and the next day defendant closed its store.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment and held that those covenants that run to the entire consideration of a contract are mutual and dependent. Covenants and stipulations on the part of the lessor and lessee are construed to be dependent on each other or independent of each other, according to the intention of the parties and the good sense of the case. Here, the restrictive covenant in defendant's lease was undoubtedly of such a nature as to be mutual and dependent. The exclusive right to conduct a drug store in the building was vital to the defendant's successful operation of its business. Thus, the breach of the restrictive covenant relieved defendant of any duty to perform on his part the provisions of the contract, and he was not obliged to pay rent after surrendering possession of the premises.

In Fong v. Rossi (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 20, 195 P.2d 854 , the court found that rescission of a lease by the tenant was justified, where the lease stated that the principal income from the premises would be obtained by the sale of liquor under the license possessed by landlord. The landlord failed and refused to transfer the licenses unless the tenant agreed to buy a large stock of liquor from the landlord. The court implied from the lease's provisions that the landlord was obligated to transfer the licenses, even though the lease did not expressly state that they should be transferred (87 Cal. App. 2d 20, 22-23) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trivial Breach Does Not Entitle Party to Rescind

In Beckett v. City of Paris Dry Goods Co. (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 633, 96 P.2d 122 , an agreement between an owner of a commercial premises and an optometrist permitted the optometrist to conduct an optical department in the store, and required all money taken in by the optometrist to be deposited with the cashier of the store at the end of each business day. After three years, the store notified the optometrist that it was cancelling the agreement (which it characterized as a license) immediately, based on the failure to comply with the deposit requirement. The optometrist sued, and recovered damages for unlawful eviction, and the store appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the agreement in question was a lease of space, not a personal license agreement. Because the breach of the covenant involved was not sufficient to justify a forfeiture of the lease, the award of damages was held proper (14 Cal. 2d 633, 638) .

§ 141.36 Supporting Contention That Commercial Lessor Has Breached Covenant Not to Lease to Competing Business

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

LANDLORD HAS VIOLATED THE COVENANT NOT TO COMPETE CONTAINED IN TENANT'S LEASE, ENTITLING TENANT TO RELIEF.

A. Covenant May Be Express or Implied From Language of Lease. A covenant not to compete may be express, or reasonably implied, if the lease's language indicates that the parties intended such a restriction (Keating v. Preston (1940) 42 Cal. App. 2d 110, 122, 108 P.2d 479).

B. Covenant Not to Compete Not an Unreasonable Restraint of Trade. A covenant not to compete normally is valid and enforceable, and does not constitute an unreasonable restraint of trade (Martikian v. Hong (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 1133, 211 Cal. Rptr. 66).

C. Covenant Enforceable Against Landlord's Successor in Interest and Successor's Tenant With Notice. A tenant may enforce a covenant not to compete, against any successor of landlord, including another tenant of landlord or his or her successor, if the successor or tenant had actual or constructive notice of the covenant (Civil Code § 1469; Carter v. Adler (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 63, 69-70, 291 P.2d 111 ; Flagg v. Andrew Williams Stores, Inc. (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 165, 170, 273 P.2d 294).

D. Covenant Enforceable Against Activities of Landlord, Successor, or Tenant on Adjacent Property. An express covenant not to compete may carry with it an implied covenant that landlord will not lease, use, or convey landlord's adjacent property for a competing business (Civil Code §§ 1469, 1470; Edmond's of Fresno v. MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 598, 605, 217 Cal. Rptr. 375 ; Carter v. Adler (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 63, 69-70, 291 P.2d 111).

[EITHER]

E. Tenant Entitled to Injunctive Relief. A tenant is entitled to elect remedy of injunctive relief to enforce a covenant not to compete, against a landlord and landlord's successors, assignees, or other tenants (Edmond's of Fresno v. MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 598, 605, 217 Cal. Rptr. 375).

[OR]

E. Tenant Entitled to Recover Damages. A tenant entitled to enforce a covenant not to compete may elect recovery of damages amounting to lost profits (Hildebrand v. Stonecrest Corp. (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 158, 165-166, 344 P.2d 378).

[OR]

E. Tenant Entitled to Terminate or Rescind Lease. A tenant is entitled to treat a covenant not to compete as a dependent covenant with the covenant to pay rent, and to terminate or rescind the lease (Kulawitz v. Pacific etc. Paper Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 664, 670, 155 P.2d 24).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a tenant is entitled to relief based on the landlord's breach of a covenant not to compete.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing both the existence of a covenant not to compete and the landlord's breach of the covenant, as well as the factors supporting the relief plaintiff seeks as a result of the breach. Counsel should also be aware that an aggrieved tenant may be entitled to alternative remedies of damages, injunctive relief, and rescission, to the extent that they are not inconsistent.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Covenant May Be Express or Implied From Language of Lease

The case of Keating v. Preston (1940) 42 Cal. App. 2d 110, 108 P.2d 479 , involved a leasing of space in a small hotel for purposes of operating a restaurant business, and also of serving liquor in any part of the hotel. The language of the lease entitled the tenant to "(a)ll the space ...#x2026; necessary to do the restaurant business," together with the right to "serve ...#x2026; liquors not only on the leased premises but also in any part of the hotel." In a dispute with the tenant, purportedly because the tenant sometimes accepted money from customers to bet on horse races, the landlord closed and barred the door between the restaurant and hotel, and threatened to lease to other tenants another portion of the hotel to be operated as a hotel or cocktail room in competition with the tenant's business. Landlord then filed suit to rescind and gain forfeiture of the lease on the grounds of breach of a covenant not to use the property for a purpose other than that of maintaining a restaurant, and on grounds of an alleged violation of the Penal Code, in accepting wagers on horse races. At approximately the same time, the tenant filed suit to enjoin the landlord from leasing any portion of the hotel property to others for purposes of opening a restaurant in competition with the tenant's restaurant. The trial court held that the landlord was not entitled to a rescission or forfeiture of the lease, and that the tenant was entitled to exclusively operate his restaurant.

In upholding the ruling of the trial court, the court of appeal determined that a rescission by the landlord, based on the horse race wagers, was not permitted under the language of the lease. The court further concluded that, based on the language of the lease, it could reasonably be implied that it was the intention of the parties that the tenant was to have the exclusive right to operate a restaurant in the hotel building (42 Cal. App. 2d 110, 122) .

[b] Covenant Not to Compete Not an Unreasonable Restraint of Trade

In Martikian v. Hong (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 211 Cal. Rptr. 66 , landlord and tenant entered into a lease for tenant to operate a business in a small shopping center entitled Glendale House of Liquor and Deli. Another tenant already was operating a restaurant entitled Edna's Coffee Shop. Prior to signing a lease with the landlord, as part of the lease, the two tenants entered into an agreement that the Liquor and Deli would sell no middle eastern grocery items, and that the Coffee Shop would sell no beer or wine. After entering into the lease, the owner of the Liquor and Deli began to sell middle eastern products, and steadfastly refused to discontinue selling such items, even though the trial court granted and refused to dissolve a preliminary injunction against the owner of the Liquor and Deli, held the owner in contempt of court, and even though an arbitration of the matter resulted in a decision against the Liquor and Deli as well. The owner of the Liquor and Deli argued that the covenant not to compete constituted an unreasonable restraint of trade.

The court of appeal affirmed, and refused to hold that the covenant not to compete in the sale of middle eastern products constituted an illegal restraint of trade. The court of appeal's ruling was made on the grounds that there were no circumstances rendering the covenant "particularly pernicious," there was not an unduly or unreasonable interference with trade and commerce, the noncompetitive effect was trivial, the covenant was not illegal per se as a horizontal restraint, the public welfare was not involved, the covenant did not affect the public's right toacquire the products at competitive prices, and that the covenant was not even directed at price (164 Cal. App. 3d 1130, 1133-1134) .

In Carter v. Adler (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 63, 291 P.2d 111 , after entering into a covenant not to compete with a tenant of a shopping center, the landlord of a shopping center began to conduct a supermarket on an adjacent property. The trial court held that the language of the lease between the landlord and tenant containing a restrictive covenant against competition, applied to an adjacent property owned by the landlord, and applied to his successor.

The court of appeal affirmed, observing that the lease containing the covenant also gave the landlord a right to terminate the lease if tenant fell below a gross sales quota, and that a supermarket on the adjacent property would expectedly reduce the tenant's sales in derogation of the tenant's ability to meet the minimum sales level required by the lease and ability to enjoyment of the leased premises (138 Cal. App. 2d 63, 69-73) .

In Flagg v. Andrew Williams Stores, Inc. (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 165, 273 P.2d 294 , the owner of a shopping center leased a portion of that property to plaintiff; the lease included a provision that the lessor agreed not to operate a soda fountain on the lessor's remaining property. Lessor then sold the property and assigned its rights as lessor to a third party, and the third party installed facilities for a restaurant on the property. Plaintiff sued, seeking to enjoin defendants from operating a restaurant on the premises and seeking a declaration of their rights under the lease. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the covenant not to compete was enforceable not only against the original lessor, but also against successors in interest to the original lessor, whether to the entire parcel or any part of that parcel (127 Cal. App. 2d 165, 170) .

Edmond's of Fresno v. MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 598, 217 Cal. Rptr. 375 , was a case in which there was a covenant in a lease between a tenant's retail jewelry business and a landlord shopping mall, not to lease to any more than one other retail jeweler. The landlord expanded the mall to an adjacent property that it owned, and added another retail jeweler as a tenant. The trial court granted a permanent injunction against the addition of the new retail jeweler. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that although the covenant did not specifically mention expansion of the mall on the landlord's adjacent property, it was implied by the lease, and was a proper basis for a permanent injunction (171 Cal. App. 3d 598, 605) .

The facts and procedural background of Carter v. Adler (1955) 138 Cal. App. 2d 63, 291 P.2d 111 , are discussed in § 141.36[3][c]. The court held that a lessor's conduct that would derogate a covenant not to compete is breached if the lessor's conduct takes place on adjacent property owned by the lessor, even if the lease does not expressly so provide, as long as the intent of the provision indicates that such conduct was intended to be covered (138 Cal. App. 2d 63, 69-71) .

[e] Tenant Entitled to Injunctive Relief

The facts and procedural background of Edmond's of Fresno v. MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 598, 217 Cal. Rptr. 375 , are discussed in § 141.36[3][d]. After affirming the trial court's finding that the lessor breached the covenant, it also affirmed the trial court's grant of a permanent injunction (171 Cal. App. 3d 598, 605) .

[f] Tenant Entitled to Recover Damages

Hildebrand v. Stonecrest Corp. (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 158, 344 P.2d 378 , was a case in which a tenant pharmacy prevailed against its landlord and a competing supermarket, based on its allegation that the landlord breached a covenant not to compete with the drug store or the sale of drugs, medicines, or cosmetics. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiff was entitled to a recovery measured by the loss of profits resulting from the breach (174 Cal. App. 2d 158, 165-166) . Concerning the amount of damages awarded, the court explained that the findings of damages may not be rejected merely because there is evidence which might authorize a different result, and that one whose wrongful conduct has rendered difficult the ascertainment of damages cannot escape liability because the damages could not be measured with exactness (174 Cal. App. 2d 158, 167) .

[g] Tenant Entitled to Terminate or Rescind Lease

In Kulawitz v. Pacific etc. Paper Co. (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 664, 670, 155 P.2d 24 , the plaintiff leased store premises from a landlord for the purpose of conducting a furniture business. The lease provided that the landlord would not rent out or permit occupancy of any other space or storeroom in the same building for purposes of conducting a furniture store, a covenant that the landlord violated. The tenant tendered back the premises, and declared a constructive eviction and rescission of the lease.

The court of appeal determined that performance of the restrictive covenant was essential to the beneficial enjoyment of the premises by the lessee for the purposes intended, that the covenant was dependent with the tenant's covenant topay rent, that the breach amounted to a constructive eviction once tenant vacated the premises, and that the tenant was entitled to rescind the lease (25 Cal. 2d 664, 669-670) . The court further explained that a landlord may not regard a covenant not to compete and a covenant to pay rent as being dependent, unless the lease provides otherwise, and therefore, if a tenant defaults in the payment of rent, a landlord is not then permitted to breach the covenant not to compete, unless the lease is terminated (25 Cal. 2d 664, 670) .

LANDLORD['S SUCCESSOR IN INTEREST] HAS NOT VIOLATED ANY COVENANT NOT TO COMPETE CONTAINED IN LANDLORD'S LEASE WITH TENANT, BECAUSE SUCH A COVENANT IS NOT REASONABLY INFERABLE FROM THE LANGUAGE OF THE LEASE.

A. Covenant Must Be Reasonably Inferable From Language of Lease. For a tenant to obtain relief based on an implied covenant not to compete, the covenant must be reasonably implied directly from the language of the lease, rather than from alleged facts surrounding its execution (*Stockton Dry Goods v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a landlord or landlord's successor in interest has breached a covenant not to lease to a competing business. The basis for the opposition is that a covenant not to compete is not reasonably inferable from the language of the lease.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the provisions of the lease on which the alleged covenant is based, and discuss how no implied covenant not to compete should be reasonably implied from any of those provisions.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Covenant Must Be Reasonably Inferable From Language of Lease

In Stockton Dry Goods v. Girsh (1951) 36 Cal. 2d 677, 227 P.2d 1 , a tenant of a small portion of a department store who used that portion of the store for selling shoes, sought declaratory relief when the landlord asserted a right to set up one or more competing shoe departments in the store. The lease between the parties provided that the rental was a certain percentage of sales. The trial court ruled in the landlord's favor, and the appellate court affirmed, on the grounds that there was no language in the lease from which the tenant could infer any intention of a covenant not to compete. Accordingly, evidence offered by the tenant, of an alleged oral understanding of such a covenant between the parties before signing the lease, was held inadmissible (36 Cal. 2d 677, 681) .

[b] An Ambiguous Covenant Should Be Narrowly Construed as Against Successor of Landlord's Adjacent Property

In Carr v. King (1914) 24 Cal. App. 713, 142 P. 131 , plaintiff had leased two acres from the owner of a 1,000-acre plot along a river. Plaintiff operated a resort hotel on the land, and the lease provided that the lessor would not "demise or let" any other part of its property for use in a similar manner. The lessor subsequently sold two parcels of lands to persons who then established resort hotels on the land, and plaintiff sued, alleging breach of the lease covenant. The trial court granted the lessor's motion for nonsuit, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the clause at issue did not restrict the lessor's right to sell part of his property for any use, but only restricted the lessor's right to enter into lease agreements that would be in competition with plaintiff. The court held that the clause at issue did not clearly restrict the lessor's rights regarding the sale of fee interests in the property, and did not create a burden running with the land, so the court interpreted the clause narrowly (24 Cal. App. 713, 719-721) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE RENT CONTROL ORDINANCE AT ISSUE UNCONSTITUTIONALLY GRANTS JUDICIAL POWERS TO AN ADMINISTRATIVE BODY BY PERMITTING REMEDIES WITHOUT MEANINGFUL REVIEW BY COURTS.

A. Violation of Judicial Powers Clause of State Constitution. A rent control law that allows either a tenant or a rent control board to withhold rent, bar unlawful detainer actions based on rent withholding, award treble damages, or order that damages offset future rent payments, without court review or approval or any judicial involvement, violates the judicial powers clause of the Constitution of the State of California (Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1; McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Board (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 376-377, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 ; *Floystrup v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a rent control ordinance is constitutionally invalid, on the ground that the ordinance grants powers to an administrative body, or to a tenant, that are not subject to judicial review and therefore violates the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution [Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the specific provisions of the challenged ordinance, and the way in which the ordinance permits the administrative body to act without sufficient judicial review.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Violation of Judicial Powers Clause of State Constitution

In McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Board (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 , in response to an administrative complaint filed by two tenants asserting that their landlord had charged excessive rents, the board ruled that the tenants had been overcharged, and awarded restitution of excess rent and treble damages, and authorized one tenant to withhold future rents as credit against damages. On writ of mandate to the superior court, the court ruled in favor of the landlord, on the ground that the applicable rent control law was invalid insofar as it required the board to usurp judicial powers reserved to the courts under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1.

The Supreme Court reversed the superior court's ruling in part, holding that the law was not unconstitutional on its face, but held that the specific order of the board denied the landlord an opportunity for judicial review in violation of art. VI, § 1. In so ruling, the Court determined that the local ordinance enabled the board to validly exercise, with proper safeguards, the quasi-judicial power of determining whether a landlord has charged excessive rent over the rent level permitted under the ordinance. The Court held that an administrative board may constitutionally hold hearings, determine facts, apply the law to the facts, and order relief, including certain types of monetary relief, as long as reasonably necessary to effectuate the board's primary, legitimate legislative purposes, and as long as the courts maintained the power of judicial review of such administrative determinations (49 Cal. 3d 348, 372) .

However, the Court invalidated as an unconstitutional violation of the judicial powers clause of the state constitution, the board's authority to award treble damages for excessive rent charged, and to order that amounts awarded could be offset against future rent. In rendering its ruling, the court observed that the rent control law in issue produced a self-enforcing remedy prior to any effective judicial review of the decision, and that the law presented a significant risk of producing arbitrary outcomes (49 Cal. 3d 348, 378-379) .

In Floystrup v. City of Berkeley Rent Stabilization Board (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 268 Cal. Rptr. 898 , a landlord failed to register his apartment unitswith the Berkeley Rent Stabilization Board. The applicable ordinance provided that a failure to register allowed the Board to authorize tenants to withhold rents. Pursuant to the tenants' petition to the Board for permission to withhold rents, the Board ordered tenants to place their rents in escrow with the Board, and that if the landlord failed to register within 60 days, one-half of the escrowed rent would be distributed to the tenants and forfeited by the landlord.

The court of appeal held that this ordinance was unconstitutional in that it violated the judicial powers clause of the California Constitution [Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1], by allowing tenants or a rent control board to withhold rents, by barring any unlawful detainer action, and by authorizing the forfeiture of withheld rents, without any court review, approval, or any judicial involvement (219 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1314-1316) .

[b] Standing to Sue Without Exhausting Administrative Remedies

The facts and procedural background of Floystrup v. City of Berkeley Rent Stabilization Board (1990) 219 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 268 Cal. Rptr. 898 , are discussed in § 141.38[3][a]. The court relied on Ebel v. City of Garden Grove (1981) 120 Cal. App. 3d 399, 409, 176 Cal. Rptr. 312 , for the proposition that, if an ordinance or statute allegedly is unconstitutional on its face, a party has judicial standing to challenge its validity, without first exhausting the party's administrative remedies (219 Cal. App. 3d 1309, 1316-1317) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Violation of Takings Clause of State Constitution

In Fisher v. City of Berkeley (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 644, 209 Cal. Rptr. 682, 693 P.2d 261 , the Supreme Court reviewed a city rent control ordinance, which provided that a landlord was to receive a fair return on his or her investment, but did not base permissible rents on the value of the rental property. In rendering its ruling, the Court determined that the "fair return" standard permitted the Berkeley rent control board sufficient flexibility to avoid confiscatory results. The Court explained that it presumed that the board would exercise its powers in accordance with constitutional requirements, and that if the board acts unfairly, the fault lies with the board and not with the law creating the board. The Court further expressed that the rent control law would have been invalid on its face if it hadfailed to provide for an efficient administrative procedure allowing a landlord to receive sufficient rent increases to assure a fair, reasonable, and timely return on the landlord's investment, or if it had failed to permit those administering it to avoid confiscatory results in its application to the complaining parties. However, the Court cautioned that a police power regulation constitutes a confiscatory "taking," in violation of constitutional requirements, only if a landlord has been deprived of substantially all reasonable use of the property, even if there is a significant diminution in value of the property as a result of the amount of rent approved by the board (37 Cal. 3d 644, 687-691) .

Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001 , arose as a class action brought by landlords seeking to declare invalid a charter amendment adopted by initiative process in the city of Berkeley. The trial court declared the amendment void and enjoined the city from enforcing it, on the primary ground that the evidence showed that the city was not faced with a serious public emergency to warrant the imposition of rent controls under the city's police power [Cal. Const., art. XI, § 7]. The trial court also ruled that the law's requirement for a landlord to obtain a "certificate of eviction" from the city before an unlawful detainer action could be filed against a tenant, was invalid in that it conflicted with state law's summary eviction procedures pursuant to which landlords were entitled to act.

The Supreme Court reversed the lower court in part and affirmed in part. The Court ruled that the law violated constitutional limits on the exercise of police power, by withholding from the rent control board, powers by which it could adjust maximum rents without unreasonable delays. The rent control law required the board to follow an adjusted procedure for determining permissible rent increases which would make delays inevitable. The Court determined that the law's "inexcusably cumbersome rent adjustment procedures" were not reasonably related to the rent control law's stated purpose of preventing excessive rents, and deprive landlords of due process of law (17 Cal. 3d 129, 164-168) . However, the Court held that the existence of an emergency is not necessary for a rent control law to be enacted and enforced through the state's police powers, just as other forms of economic regulation are constitutional when reasonably related to the furtherance of a legitimate governmental purpose (17 Cal. 3d 129, 158-164) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Violation of Takings Clause of State Constitution

In Apartment Assn. of Greater L.A. v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1730, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228 , the court of appeal ruled that the trial court correctly stayed enforcement of a rent control provision that prohibited any landlord who purchased rental property after the effective date of the rent control ordinance from seeking an adjustment in base rents. The court reasoned that the ordinance was too broad because it did not allow any post-rent control purchaser to petition for a base rent increase on any ground. Accordingly, the regulation could have unconstitutional results in particular cases, and the trial court was correct in staying its enforcement. Rent control regulations can have a confiscatory effect if no rent adjustment mechanism is provided, and a regulation may be invalid on its face when its terms will not permit those who administer it to avoid confiscatory results in its application to the complaining parties (24 Cal. App. 4th 1730, 1738-1739) .

Kavanau v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 730, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 724 , involved a local rent control ordinance that limited rent increases to a maximum of 12 percent in any given year except under "extraordinary circumstances." Although the court ruled that the ordinance was not unconstitutional on its face, it held the ordinance unconstitutional on due process grounds, as applied to the landlord in that case, based on the municipality's interpretation of "extraordinary circumstances." Under that interpretation, the loss of the landlord's fair and reasonable return of his rental property was not viewed to be "extraordinary" so as to justify an exception to the 12 percent cap rule; the only qualifying circumstances referred to by the municipality on oral argument were the landlord's insolvency or a threatened act or an act of God (19 Cal. App. 4th 730, 735-736) .

In Kavanau v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1997) 16 Cal. 4th 761, 66 Cal. Rptr. 2d 672, 941 P.2d 851 , the same landlord in the Kavanau Court of Appeal case discussed above, argued that the rent regulation which deprived him of due process by depriving him of a fair return also constituted an unconstitutional taking. The California Supreme Court rejected the argument, holding that a remedy for the due process violation, if available and adequate, obviates a finding of a taking (16 Cal. 4th 761, 782) . According to the Court, the landlord's remedy for the due process violation was his continuing right to an adjustment of future rents under the rent control ordinance (16 Cal. 4th 761, 783, 786) .

In Galland v. City of Clovis (2001) 24 Cal. 4th 1003, 103 Cal. Rptr. 2d 711, 16 P.3d 130 , the California Supreme Court addressed the question left open in Kavanau, above: whether a future rent adjustment also forecloses a suit for damages for violation of a right to constitutional due process under 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (24 Cal. 4th 1003, 1008) . The Court concluded that it does. It held that to recover § 1983 damages for allegedly confiscatory rent regulation, landlords must show that a confiscatory rent ceiling or other rent regulation was imposed and that relief via a writ of mandate and a Kavanau adjustment is inadequate (24 Cal. 4th 1003, 1025) .

In Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. City of Carson (9th Cir. 2004) 353 F.3d 824 , the Ninth Circuit held that a mobilehome park's rent control takings claim was not ripe for litigation in federal court because the park failed to pursue a "Kavanauadjustment" of prospective rents that would compensate for past losses and failed to show that the "Kavanau adjustment" was an inadequate remedy (353 F.3d 824, 830) .

Similarly, in Hacienda Valley Mobile Estates v. City of Morgan Hill (9th Cir. 2003) 353 F.3d 651 , the Ninth Circuit held that although a mobilehome park owner's allegation that the city rent control ordinance allowed tenants to capture a "premium" on the sales price of mobilehomes alleged as-applied regulatory takings claim, that claim was not ripe because the owner failed to show that a "Kavanau adjustment" was an inadequate remedy (353 F.3d 651, 661) .

In Ventura Mobilehome Communities Owners Ass'n v. City of San Buenaventura (9th Cir. 2004) 371 F.3d 1046 , the Ninth Circuit, following Carson Harbor Village and Hacienda Valley, rejected a takings challenge to a mobilehome park ordinance that alleged the ordinance prevented owners of mobilehome parks from charging rents at market rates and conferred a premium on renters by artificially inflating the value of mobilehomes at the expense of park owners was not ripe for review in federal court, on the ground the plaintiff failed to show that it had exhausted available state remedies or that California's compensation procedures were futile or inadequate, so as to create an exemption from the exhaustion requirement (371 F.3d 1046, 1052-1054) .

In Levald, Inc. v. City of Palm Desert (9th Cir. 1993) 998 F.2d 680 , the United States Court of Appeals held that the district court properly dismissed a substantive due process claim challenging a city's mobilehome park rent control and vacancy control ordinance as taking without just compensation (998 F.2d. 680, 690) . However, the district court abused its discretion in failing to explain its reasons for denying leave to amend a complaint (when no reasons were apparent from record) (998 F.2d 680, 692) . Furthermore, the property owner's facial taking challenge to the local ordinance was ripe for judicial review even though the property owner did not first seek remedies in state court. It would have been futile to seek state court relief at the time the alleged taking occurred because California did not at that time recognize actions for inverse condemnation based on regulatory takings (998 F.2d 680, 686) .

THE RENT CONTROL ORDINANCE AT ISSUE DOES NOT UNCONSTITUTIONALLY GRANT JUDICIAL POWERS TO AN ADMINISTRATIVE BODY BECAUSE THE AUTHORITY GRANTED IS REASONABLY NECESSARY TO THE ORDINANCE'S LEGITIMATE PURPOSES, AND THE COURTS RETAIN POWER TO REVIEW THE BODY'S DECISIONS THROUGH JUDICIAL REVIEW.

Rent Control Law's Administrative Authority to Determine Whether Landlord Has Charged Excessive Rent Does Not Violate Judicial Powers Clause of State Constitution. It is permissible for a rent control board to be given the authority to determine claims against a landlord for charging excess rents, as long as this authority is reasonably necessary to serve the board's primary, legitimate, legislative purposes, and that the power to make binding judgments remains in the courts, through judicial review (*Cal. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention that a rent control ordinance is unconstitutional, when the basis of the claim of unconstitutionality is an alleged violation of the judicial powers clause. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in this form may be used to oppose the contention supported by § 141.38.

Counsel should insert argument in the above form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the provisions of the ordinance that permit meaningful judicial review of the determinations of the administrative body given authority under the ordinance.

[a] Rent Control Law's Administrative Authority to Determine Whether Landlord Has Charged Excessive Rent Does Not Violate Judicial Powers Clause of State Constitution

The facts and procedural background of McHugh v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 348, 261 Cal. Rptr. 318, 777 P.2d 91 , are discussedin § 141.38[3][a]. The Court held that the ordinance before it was not facially invalid, as the local ordinance enabled the board to validly exercise, with proper safeguards, the quasi-judicial power of determining whether a landlord has charged excessive rent over the rent level permitted under the ordinance. The Court held that an administrative board may constitutionally hold hearings, determine facts, apply the law to the facts, and order relief, including certain types of monetary relief, as long as reasonably necessary to effectuate the board's primary, legitimate legislative purposes, and as long as the courts maintained the power of judicial review of such administrative determinations (49 Cal. 3d 348, 372) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention that a rent control ordinance is unconstitutional, when the basis of the claim of unconstitutionality is a provision of the ordinance that permits an administrative body to consider a tenant's hardship in fixing reasonable rents.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the provisions of the ordinance that permit consideration of a tenant's hardship, in the context of other considerations that assure that the rents set do not deprive landlords of a fair and reasonable return on investment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rent Control Law Permitting Consideration of Tenant Hardship Is Facially Valid Under Constitutional Due Process, Equal Protection, and Takings Clauses

In Pennell v. City of San Jose (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 365, 228 Cal. Rptr. 726, 721 P.2d 1111 , aff'd, 485 U.S. 1, 108 S. Ct. 849, 99 L. Ed. 2d 1 , a group of landlords brought an action challenging the constitutionality of the city of San Jose's rent control ordinance, which provided that if a landlord raised the annual rent of a tenant by over eight percent, the tenant could object to the portion of the raise exceeding the eight-percent level, on the basis of hardship to the tenant. The ordinance required a hearing to determine whether the landlord's proposed increase was "reasonable under the circumstances," and the hearing officer was directed by the ordinance to consider specified factors, including the fairness of the return on the landlord's investment, and the hardship to the tenant. The superior court held that this provision was unconstitutional on its face under the due process and equal protection clauses. The court of appeal affirmed. The State Supreme Court reversed this portion of the case, holding that the tenant hardship provision was not unconstitutional on its face.

The United States Supreme Court affirmed and held that the tenant hardship provision of the ordinance was constitutionally valid on its face, in that it afforded constitutional due process of law and equal protection of the laws, and did not constitute a confiscatory law in violation of the takings clause. The Court determined that the ordinance carefully considered the circumstances of both the landlord and tenant in connection with approvals of rent increases, that the ordinance set forth a scheme "rationally related to a legitimate state interest," and that the ordinance was neither arbitrary nor discriminatory. However, the Court stated that it was premature to determine whether the application of the ordinance violated the takings clause prohibiting the taking of property without justcompensation, because an application of the ordinance was not before the court. The court observed that there was no evidence that any hearing officer had relied on the tenant hardship clause to reduce a rent below the figure that would have been set on the basis of the other factors for determining rent increases set forth in the ordinance (485 U.S. 1, 9-11) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE RENT CONTROL ORDINANCE BEFORE THE COURT IS CONSTITUTIONAL AS A VALID EXERCISE OF POLICE POWERS SERVING LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENTAL PURPOSE TO SET MAXIMUM PERMISSIBLE RENTS.

A. Rent Control Law's Exercise of Police Powers Is Valid in That it Serves Legitimate Governmental Purpose. The applicable rent control law's procedures constitute a valid exercise of the state's police powers, in that they are reasonably related to the furtherance of a legitimate governmental purpose (Cal. Const., art. XI, § 7; Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 158-164, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001 ; *Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v. B. Rent Control Law's Procedures for Determining Maximum Rents Constitute Valid Exercise of Police Powers. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be used to oppose a contention that a rent control ordinance is unconstitutional, when the basis of the claim of unconstitutionality is that the ordinance does not serve a valid governmental purpose.

Counsel should insert argument in the above form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the provisions of the ordinance that relate to the valid governmental purpose of stabilizing a rental market, even in the absence of any emergency.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001 , arose as a class action brought by landlords seeking to declare invalid a charter amendment adopted by initiative process in the City of Berkeley. The trial court declared the amendment void and enjoined the city from enforcing it, on the primary ground that the evidence showed that the city was not faced with a serious public emergency to warrant the imposition of rent controls under the city's police power [Cal. Const., art. XI, § 7]. The trial court also ruled that the law's requirement for a landlord to obtain a "certificate of eviction" from the city before an unlawful detainer action could be filed against a tenant, was invalid in that it conflicted with state law's summary eviction procedures pursuant to which landlords were entitled to act.

The Supreme Court reversed the lower court in part and affirmed in part. The Court reversed and held that the existence of an emergency is not necessary for a rent control law to be enacted and enforced through the state's police powers, just as other forms of economic regulation are constitutional when reasonably related to the furtherance of a legitimate governmental purpose (17 Cal. 3d 129, 158-164) . The Court further determined that the facts at trial did not support precluding the city from legislating on the subject of rent control, and held that state law does not exempt placing maximum limits on residential rents (17 Cal. 3d 129, 164-168) . The Court upheld as well a provision in the rent control law prohibiting a tenant who is in good standing at the expiration of his or her tenancy from being evicted, unless the premises are withdrawn from the rental housing market, or unless a landlord's offer of a renewal lease has been refused. The Court determined that this was a reasonable means of enforcing rent ceilings, by preventing landlords from evicting tenants who are unwilling to pay, or who oppose paying, increased rentals.

The Court affirmed the lower court's holding that the law violated constitutional limits on the exercise of police power, by withholding from the rent control board powers by which it could adjust maximum rents without unreasonable delays. The rent control law required the board to follow an adjusted procedure for determining permissible rent increases that would make delays inevitable. The Court determined that the law's "inexcusably cumbersome rent adjustment procedures" were not reasonably related to the rent control law's stated purpose of preventing excessive rents, and deprive landlords of due process of law (17 Cal. 3d 129, 164-168) . The Court also affirmed the lower court's rejection of the law's "certificate of eviction" requirement, because it supplanted the summary procedures provided by state statute, pursuant to which landlords were entitled to exercise their eviction rights (17 Cal. 3d 129, 151-153) .

In Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 952, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93, 968 P.2d 993 , plaintiff landlord filed a combined complaint for inverse condemnation and petition for writ of administrative mandate, contending that application of defendant city's rent control ordinance to its property constituted a taking because it did not "substantially advance" the ordinance's stated goals of providing affordable housing for the poor, the elderly, and young families. Specifically, plaintiff contended that the rent control law did not meet the "substantial advancement" test articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Nollan v. California Coastal Com. (1987) 483 U.S. 825, 836-837 (regulation of property effects a taking if it does not substantially advance legitimate state interests) and Dolan v. City of Tigard (1994) 512 U.S. 374, 391 114 S. Ct. 2309, 129 L. Ed. 2d 304 . The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to plaintiff's inverse condemnation claim. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the heightened standard of scrutiny applied and that if plaintiff's allegations were true, the ordinance did not substantially advance a legitimate governmental purpose. The California Supreme Court granted review, and reversed the court of appeal judgment.

The Supreme Court concluded that the heightened intermediate scrutiny standard articulated by the United States Supreme Court in Nollan and Dolan is inapplicable to takings claims based on the general application of rent control laws to an individual landlord. It stated that the standard of review for generally applicable rent control legislation must be at least as deferential as for generally applicable zoning legislation and other legislative land use controls, which means that a party challenging rent control on takings grounds must show that it is an "arbitrary regulation of property rights" (19 Cal. 4th 952, 967) . The Supreme Court concluded that even if the more stringent "substantial interest" test of Nollan and Dolan were applicable, the landlord in Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. failed to establish a taking claim. Even though the landlord alleged that the ordinance failed to advance its stated goals of providing affordable housing for the poor, the elderly, and young families, the landlord did not allege that the rent control ordinance failed to advance the purpose of preventing unreasonable and excessive rent increases, and therefore did not adequately allege that the ordinance failed to advance some legitimate state purpose (19 Cal. 4th 952, 971) . The Court reasoned that the prevention of "excessive and unreasonable rent increases" caused by the growing shortage of and increasing demand for housing in the city was a legitimate government interest whether or not that goal was precisely identified in the text of the ordinance and whether the primary beneficiaries of such protection were tenants with low or merely moderate income (19 Cal. 4th 952, 970) .

[b] Rent Control Law's Procedures for Determining Maximum Rents Constitute Valid Exercise of Police Powers

In Carson Mobilehome Park Owners' Ass'n v. City of Carson (1983) 35 Cal. 3d 184, 197 Cal. Rptr. 284, 672 P.2d 1297 , an association of mobilehome park owners brought an action challenging the City of Carson's rent control ordinance on various grounds, including whether the ordinance required excessive delays in obtaining decisions on applications for rent increases and is confiscatory under the constitutional takings clause. Under the ordinance, a review board was required to hold a hearing within 90 days of a landlord's application for a rent increase, and was required to render a decision within 15 days after the hearing. If no decision ensued within 105 days from the landlord's filing of his application, the rent increase was to take effect. The trial court ruled that the rent increase procedures were unconstitutional on its face. The Supreme Court reversed and held that the law's rent increase procedures were constitutional and met the standards set in Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 164-168, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001 for validity of such a rent control law, even though in that case, the rent increase procedures in issue were held to be unconstitutional. The Court held that the ordinance in question was not beyond the scope of the police powers that may be used for legitimate governmental objectives (35 Cal. 3d 184, 192) .

The facts and procedural background of Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001 , are discussed in § 141.42[3][a].

[a] Rent Control Law's Procedures for Determining Maximum Rentals Constitute Valid Exercise of Police Powers

In Oceanside Mobilehome Park Owners Association v. City of Oceanside (1984) 157 Cal. App. 3d 887, 204 Cal. Rptr. 239 , the court upheld a rent control law procedure pursuant to which a landlord was required to give a 60-day notice of rent increase to a tenant, and then to apply to the rent control board for approval of the discretionary rent increase. A hearing on the proposed increase was required to be held within 30 days of the landlord's application for the increase, and thedecision by the rent control board was required to be rendered within 14 days after the hearing. The court held reasonable and valid a delay of 110 days from the date of the notice to the tenant to the effective date of the rent increase (157 Cal. App. 3d 887, 901) .

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a rent control ordinance is unconstitutional if the asserted ground of unconstitutionality is that the ordinance is in conflict with the summary eviction procedures established by statute.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the factors showing that the provisions of the ordinance do not conflict with the statutory summary eviction procedures.

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention that a rent control ordinance is an unconstitutional violation of the*takings clause*, when that contention is based on a provision of the ordinance permitting rent levels to be set by reference to the landlord's investment in the rental property rather than to the current market value of the rental property.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the provisions of the ordinance that ensure that rents will permit landlords to receive a reasonable and fair rate of return on their investment in the rental property.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Fair Return Standard Constitutional

In Fisher v. City of Berkeley (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 644, 679, 209 Cal. Rptr. 682, 693 P.2d 261 , the Supreme Court reviewed a city rent control ordinance that provided that a landlord was to receive a fair return on his investment, rather than permissible rents being determined by the value of the landlord's property. In holding the ordinance constitutional, the Court determined that the "fair return" standard permitted the Berkeley rent control board sufficient flexibility to avoid confiscatory results. The Court explained that it was to be presumed that the board would exercise its powers in accordance with constitutional requirements, and that if the board acts unfairly, the fault lies with the board and not with the law creating the board. The Court further explained that a police power regulation constitutes a confiscatory "taking" in violation of constitutional requirements, only if a landlord has been deprived of substantially all reasonable use of the property, even if there is a significant diminution in value of the property as a result of the amount of rent approved by the board. The Court did express that the rent control law would have been invalid on its face if it had failed to provide for an efficient administrative procedure allowing a landlord to receive sufficient rent increases to assure a fair, reasonable, and timely return on the landlord's investment, or if it had failed to permit those administering it to avoid confiscatory results in its application to the complaining parties.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fair Return Standard Constitutional

In Apartment Assn. of Greater L.A. v. Santa Monica Rent Control Bd. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 1730, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 228 , the Court of Appeal ruled that the trial correctly stayed enforcement of a rent control provision that prohibited any landlord who purchased rental property after the effective date of the rent control ordinance from seeking an adjustment in base rents. The Court of Appeal reasoned that the ordinance was too broad because it did not allow any post-rent control purchaser to petition for a base rent increase on any ground. Accordingly, the regulation could have unconstitutional results in particular cases, and the trial court was correct in staying its enforcement. Rent control regulations can have a confiscatory effect if no rent adjustment mechanism is provided, and a regulation may be invalid on its face when its terms will not permit those who administer it to avoid confiscatory results in its application to the complaining parties (24 Cal. App. 4th 1730, 1738-1739) .

THE RENT CONTROL ORDINANCE BEFORE THE COURT IS NOT UNCONSTITUTIONAL BECAUSE IT SERVES THE LEGITIMATE GOVERNMENTAL PURPOSE OF PREVENTING UNREASONABLE AND EXCESSIVE RENT INCREASES.

A. Rent Control Law's Exercise of Police Powers Is Valid in That it Serves Legitimate Governmental Purpose. The applicable rent control law's procedures constitute a valid exercise of the state's police powers, in that they are reasonably related to the furtherance of a legitimate governmental purpose (Cal. Const., art. XI, § 7; Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 158-164, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001).

B. Preventing Unreasonable and Excessive Rent Increases Is a Legitimate Governmental Purpose. The rent control ordinance at issue serves to prevent unreasonable and excessive rent increases, which is a legitimate governmental purpose whether or not that goal is precisely identified in the rent control law and whether the primary beneficiaries of such protection are tenants with low or merely moderate income (Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 952, 970, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93, 968 P.2d 993).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rent Control Law's Exercise of Police Powers Is Valid in That it Serves Legitimate Governmental Purpose

The facts and procedural background of Birkenfeld v. City of Berkeley (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 129, 130 Cal. Rptr. 465, 550 P.2d 1001 are discussed in *§ 141.42[1]*A.

[b] Ordinance Serves Legitimate Governmental Purpose in Preventing Unreasonable and Excessive Rent Increases

In Santa Monica Beach, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 952, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 93, 968 P.2d 993 , plaintiff landlord brought an action contending that application of the city's rent control ordinance to plaintiff's property constituted a taking because the ordinance did not "substantially advance" its stated goals of providing affordable housing for the poor, the elderly, and young families. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to plaintiff's inverse condemnation claim. The court of appeal reversed, holding that if the allegations were true, the ordinance did not substantially advance a legitimate governmental purpose. The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal judgment. The Supreme Court acknowledged that plaintiff's claim resembled a facial challenge in a number of respects, because it sought to invalidate the rent control law, not merely its application against one landlord. Nevertheless, the Court rejected a statute of limitations defense and addressed the merits of the action. The Court held that the standard of review for generally applicable rent control legislation must be at least as deferential as for generally applicable zoning legislation and other legislative land use controls. Thus, a party challenging rent control on takings grounds must show that it is an "arbitrary regulation of property rights" (19 Cal. 4th 952, 967) . The Court then held that the landlord failed to establish a taking claim because, even though the landlord alleged that the ordinance failed to advance its stated goals of providing affordable housing for the poor, the elderly, and young families, the landlord did not allege that the rent control ordinance failed to advance the purpose of preventing unreasonable and excessive rent increases, and therefore did not adequately allege that the ordinance failed to advance some legitimate state purpose (19 Cal. 4th 952, 971) .

The Court stated that there is no constitutional requirement that the inquiry into whether the legislation substantially serves legitimate goals must be limited to stated goals, much less to only some of the stated goals. The Court concluded that the prevention of "excessive and unreasonable rent increases" caused by the "growing shortage of and increasing demand for housing" was a legitimate government interest whether or not that goal was precisely identified in the text of the rent control ordinance and whether the primary beneficiaries of such protection were tenants with low or merely moderate income (19 Cal. 4th 952, 970) . The Court stated that "the notion that a court may invalidate legislation that it finds, after a trial, to have failed to live up to expectations, is indeed novel. In our constitutional system, it is generally assumed that only the legislative body that enacted the statute may exercise a power of repeal if that statute fails to meet legislative expectations" (19 Cal. 4th 952, 963-964) .

[a] Ordinance Serves Legitimate Governmental Purpose in Preventing Unreasonable and Excessive Rent Increases

In Montclair Parkowners Assn. v. City of Montclair (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 784, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 598 , the court of appeal rejected a facial takings challenge to an ordinance amending the existing mobilehome rent control ordinance to include vacancy control provisions. The court held that the city could have reasonably concluded that limiting park owners' ability to raise the rent on the sale or transfer of mobilehomes would accomplish the ordinance's stated goal of protecting current mobilehome owners' equity in their homes and protecting prospective mobilehome owners from excessive rents, by making mobilehomes more attractive sale items and making mobilehome ownership more feasible for prospective buyers. Thus, the ordinance on its face was not an arbitrary regulation of the park owners' property rights (76 Cal. App. 4th 784, 795) .

[a] Use of Form

The form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a plaintiff seeking a refund for excess rent paid, is entitled to protection as a tenant under an applicable rent control law [Civ. Code § 1947.11]. The refund would be based on an argument that plaintiff had entered into a landlord/tenant relationship with the landlord, even though the formal agreement was with another who subsequently vacated the premises, and that therefore the landlord was not entitled to raise rents based on a vacancy decontrol provision. Counsel should base the argument on the language of the particular rent control law at issue.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel for the tenant should discuss facts showing that the landlord had knowledge that plaintiff resided at the premises and did not object to that residence. Evidence that the residence was relatively lengthy can be used in conjunction with Optional Paragraph C in support of the contention.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Formal Rental Agreement Not Necessary to Establish Tenancy

In Getz v. City of West Hollywood (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 284 Cal. Rptr. 631 , the plaintiff had lived with the prior tenant at the premises for six months, during which time the landlord knew of the plaintiff's presence, and had accepted rent checks from him. When the prior tenant vacated the premises, the landlord executed a new rental agreement with the plaintiff, which called for an increased amount of rent. When the plaintiff learned of the applicable rent control ordinance, he petitioned for a refund of excess amounts paid, and for a reduction in the permissible rent level for the remainder of the agreement period. The rent board granted the petition, and the landlord sought review of the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, holding that substantial evidence supported the factual finding that a landlord/tenant relationship was created by consent and acceptance of rent, even in the absence of a formal rental agreement. The court held that, because plaintiff had become a tenant before the other tenant vacated, no vacancy had occurred that would permit an increase in rent under the terms of the vacancy decontrol ordinance (233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 629-630) .

[b] Landlord's Knowledge Can Infer Consent to Create Tenancy

The facts and procedural background of Getz v. City of West Hollywood (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 284 Cal. Rptr. 631 , are discussed in § 141.46[3][a]. The court noted that the rent board had made factual findings that the landlord had known that plaintiff was living in the unit, and had accepted rent payments from him, and that those findings supported the conclusion that there was no "vacancy" when the original tenant terminated his tenancy. Because no vacancy occurred, the maximum rent was limited to a percentage increase of the rent charged the previous tenant, and the plaintiff was entitled to recover the payments made in excess of that maximum (233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 630) .

In Parkmerced Co. v. San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 263 Cal. Rptr. 617 , a woman was an occupant of anapartment for over four years along with her brother, who had entered into several successive written leases. The plaintiff's name had been included on her brother's application for a lease renewal, and she had paid rent by personal check bearing her name throughout the four-year period. When her brother terminated his agreement and plaintiff attempted to execute a lease in her own name, the landlord informed plaintiff that the rent would be $127 per month higher than would have been permitted by the applicable rent control ordinance under a continuous tenancy. Plaintiff executed a lease in the higher amount, and petitioned the rent board for relief. The board found that plaintiff was a tenant under the ordinance, making the vacancy decontrol provision inapplicable, and ordered a rent reduction. The landlord appealed to the full rent board, which affirmed the order, and then sought a writ of mandate from the superior court. The court granted the writ, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the ordinance protected those who legally occupied a rental unit, whatever the basis of that person's obligation to pay rent. The court found that the evidence supported the board's finding that plaintiff was a cotenant with her brother. In support of its ruling, the court cited the facts that she was listed as an occupant under her brother's successive lease applications, which were incorporated into her brother's leases, and that she paid rent with her personalized checks over the four-year period (215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 494) .

[c] Residence at Premises Was Sufficiently Lengthy to Infer Landlord's Consent to Tenancy

The facts and procedural background of Getz v. City of West Hollywood (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 284 Cal. Rptr. 631 , are discussed in § 141.46[3][a]. The court held that the landlord's acceptance of rent checks over a six-month period supported the rent board's factual finding that a tenancy existed, although it noted that a contrary finding might also be justified under the facts of the case (233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 630) .

The facts and procedural background of Parkmerced Co. v. San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 263 Cal. Rptr. 617 , are discussed in § 141.46[3][b]. The court noted that the length of time over which the landlord accepted plaintiff 's rent checks--four years--supported the factual finding that the landlord consented to plaintiff 's tenancy (215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 494) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF IS ENTITLED TO A JUDGMENT TREBLING THE AMOUNT OF EXCESS RENT THAT THE TENANT PAID TO LANDLORD, BECAUSE THE LANDLORD'S VIOLATION WAS WILLFUL OR INTENTIONAL.

Court Is Authorized to Award Treble Amount of Excess Rent Paid by Tenant if Landlord's Actions Are Willful or Intentional. If a landlord refuses to refund to a tenant rent paid by a tenant in excess of the certified rent ceiling, and the court determines that the landlord willfully or intentionally charged the tenant rent in excess of a certified, lawful rent control ceiling, the court may award treble damages (Civ. Code § 1947.11).

[2] Comments

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a plaintiff seeking a refund for excess rent paid, is entitled to treble damages under Civ. Code § 1947.11. Counsel is advised to tie the argument to language of the particular rent control law(s) in issue.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the landlord acted willfully and intentionally in charging and refusing to return excess rent.

Counsel should note that the statute provides that a finding that the violation was willful or intentional requires the court to award a judgment for the amount of excess rent charged, and permits the court to award treble that amount [Civ. Code § 1947.11]. Thus, it would appear that a court could require additional evidence of egregious conduct by the landlord to support an award of treble damages, so counsel should be prepared to argue that the court should exercise its discretion to award the additional amount, instead of arguing that the showing of intentional violation alone requires the additional award.

For coverage of the statute of limitations in an action on a liability created by statute, see § 141.52.

A. Landlord's Lack of Knowledge Precludes Finding of Consent to Landlord/Tenant Relationship. A landlord/tenant relationship may be deemed created and consented to only if the landlord had knowledge of plaintiff's residence at the premises when rent was accepted (*cf. Getz v. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a plaintiff bringing a legal action for damages for excess rent charged is not considered a tenant under the applicable rent control law. The contention is most likely to arise in the context of a rent control law that permits the landlord to raise rent levels to a greater extent when a rental becomes vacant, to counter an argument that the premises were never vacated because the tenant under the new agreement was in fact a tenant during the previous agreement. Counsel is advised to tie argument to language of the particular rent control law in issue.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the landlord had no knowledge that the plaintiff was a tenant during the course of the previous rental agreement, and did not consent to plaintiff being a tenant of the premises during that tenancy.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Landlord's Lack of Knowledge Precludes Finding of Consent to Landlord/Tenant Relationship

The facts and procedural background of Getz v. City of West Hollywood (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 284 Cal. Rptr. 631 , are discussed in § 141.46[3][a]. The court of appeal based its holding that the rent board's decision was based on substantial evidence on the landlord's apparent knowledge that plaintiff was a cotenant with the tenant who had signed the rental agreement, based on the landlord's acceptance of rent payments from plaintiff for six months. The court did state that, under the facts presented, a finding that no tenancy existed was also possible, and would be entitled to similar deference (233 Cal. App. 3d 625, 630) .

The facts and procedural background of Parkmerced Co. v. San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 263 Cal. Rptr. 617 , are discussed in § 141.46[3][b]. The court based its conclusion that the plaintiff (the sister of the previous tenant) was a cotenant during the previous tenancy on the evidence that she was listed as an occupant under her brother's successive lease applications, which were incorporated into her brother's leases, and that she paid rent with her personalized checks over the four-year period (215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 494) .

[b] Actions of Subterfuge by Alleged Tenant Are Probative of Lack of Knowledge and Consent

In Miller & Desatnik Management Co. v. Bullock (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 13, 270 Cal. Rptr. 600 , the tenant under a written month-to-month rentalagreement died, and for four years thereafter the tenant's mother stayed on the premises, paying the monthly rent with a money order naming the deceased daughter as payor. The landlord brought an unlawful detainer action after it learned of the tenant's death and plaintiff did not vacate after service of a 30-day notice to vacate; the trial court entered judgment in the mother's favor, on the ground that she was a tenant and the eviction was not for a cause that the rent control ordinance provided was proper. The landlord appealed, and the appellate department reversed.

The appellate department held that the daughter's rental agreement terminated as of the 30th day following her last payment before her death, pursuant to Civ. Code § 1934, that the mother was not entitled to the use and occupancy of the premises, that the mother's continued occupancy thereafter was a trespass, and that the mother was not a tenant under the applicable rent control law. The court relied on the facts that the landlord never had knowledge of the daughter's death until shortly before the landlord served the mother with a notice to vacate, as a result of the mother's subterfuge that the daughter was still alive, residing at the premises and paying the rent, and that the landlord therefore had never consented to the mother being a tenant. The court distinguished the case of Parkmerced Co. v. San Francisco Rent Stabilization and Arbitration Bd. (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 490, 263 Cal. Rptr. 617 , on the basis that in that case, the sister was listed as an occupant in her brother's four separate yearly applications for lease, the sister paid rent to the landlord openly for four years, and that as a result, the landlord had knowledge of her tenancy at the premises, and the landlord's consent could be inferred from the failure to object (221 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 13, 20).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention that a tenant's legal action for damages was filed after the expiration of the period of limitation applicable to an action seeking a mandatory penalty [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a) (one year)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the tenant is seeking a mandatory recovery of a penalty or forfeiture of money under the particular rent control law in issue, as well as facts showing that the tenant's cause of action accrued more than one year before the action before the court was filed. For general discussion of accrual of causes of actions and potential applicability of authorities on delayed discovery of causes of action, see Ch. 143,

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Seeking Mandatory Penalty or Forfeiture as Part of Tenant's Remedies Governed by One-Year Statute of Limitations

Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a) provides that an action on a statute for a penalty or forfeiture is governed by a one-year statute of limitations, unless the statute imposing it prescribes a different limitation.

In Menefee v. Ostawari (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 239, 278 Cal. Rptr. 805 , plaintiff sought damages for wrongful termination of a tenancy, based on a rent control ordinance that provided for three times the amount of damages to a prevailing plaintiff. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, because the action was filed more than one year after the landlord served the 30-day notice to vacate the premises. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the action was barred by former CodeCiv. Proc. § 340(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a)). The court held that, because the ordinance did not permit any lesser award, the penalty was mandatory, and therefore governed by former § 340(1) (now see § 340(a)). The court also held that the entire action was based on the ordinance (as a 30-day notice to vacate is otherwise permitted by state law, and no other independent wrong was alleged in the complaint), so the entire action was barred (228 Cal. App. 3d 239, 243-245) .

Note that Menefee (discussed above) was distinguished by the Superior Court Appellate Department in Mitchell v. Leslie (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 (discussed in § 141.52[3][a]), in which the tenants brought an action to recover excess rent under the Santa Monica rent control ordinance. The trial court ruled that the claim was subject to the three-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) applicable to "an action upon a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture." The Appellate Department affirmed. It held that the three-year period was applicable because restitution of excess rent is not a penalty, and because, unlike in Menefee, the award of treble damages was not mandatory on a finding that the landlord violated the ordinance, but rather lay within the trial court's discretion (39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7, 11-12).

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

LANDLORD IS EXEMPT FROM PENALTIES OR OTHER SANCTIONS UNDER THE APPLICABLE RENT CONTROL LAW, BECAUSE LANDLORD IS IN SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE WITH ITS REQUIREMENTS.

A. Good-Faith Attempt to Comply, and Cure of Defect, Constitutes Substantial Performance. If by a preponderance of the evidence, a landlord has made a good faith attempt to comply with a rent control law sufficient to reasonably carry out its intent and purpose, but is not in full compliance, and has, after receiving a notice of deficiency from a local agency, cured the defect in a timely manner, as reasonably determined by the local agency, that landlord is deemed to be in substantial compliance (Civ. Code § 1947.7(b)).

B. Landlord in Substantial Compliance May Only Be Assessed Tenant's Registration or Filing Fees, and Excess Rent Paid. A landlord who is in substantial compliance with a rent control law may not be assessed a penalty or other sanction for noncompliance, and may only be assessed for restitution of excess rent to the tenant, and payment of the tenant's registration or filing fees (Civ. Code § 1947.7(b)).

Civ. Code § 1947.7(b) provides that a landlord who is in substantial compliance with a rent control law may not be assessed a penalty or other sanction for noncompliance, and that restitution to the tenant, or recovery of the tenant's registration or filing fees, are the exclusive remedies that may be imposed against a landlord who is in "substantial compliance" with a rent control ordinance.

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

ONLY TENANT'S ACTUAL, OUT-OF-POCKET DAMAGES MAY BE TREBLED PURSUANT TO THE APPLICABLE RENT CONTROL LAW.

A. "Actual Damages" That May Be Trebled Are Limited to Out-of-Pocket Damages. An entitlement by a tenant under an applicable rent control law to recover treble the amount of "actual damages" suffered, is limited to treble the amount of tenant's out-of-pocket damages (Balmoral Hotel Tenants Assn. v. Lee (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 690-692, 276 Cal. Rptr. 640).

B. "Actual Damages" Do Not Include Damages for Mental Suffering. A tenant's entitlement under an applicable rent control law to recover treble the amount of "actual damages" suffered, does not permit a trebling of damages for mental suffering (Balmoral Hotel Tenants Assn. v. Lee (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 690-692, 276 Cal. Rptr. 640).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a contention by a tenant that the tenant is entitled, under a local rent control law, to trebling of all actual damages proven by the tenant in connection with an action under the rent control ordinance. Counsel is advised to tie argument to language and provisions of the particular rent control law in issue.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that specific items of damages alleged or proven by the tenant are not out-of-pocket damages, and are therefore not to be trebled.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Actual Damages" That May Be Trebled Are Limited to Out-of-Pocket Damages

Balmoral Hotel Tenants Assn. v. Lee (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 276 Cal. Rptr. 640 , was a case in which a group of tenants brought a legal action for wrongful eviction and damages, due to disruptive renovations engaged in by the landlord. The trial court awarded treble damages to the tenants, including trebling of damages for mental suffering, which the trial court determined was encompassed within the term "actual damages," entitled to trebling pursuant to Section 37.9 of the San Francisco Administrative Code.

The appellate court reversed and held that the term "actual damages" only encompassed out-of-pocket damages, and not damages for mental suffering. The court stated that a narrow interpretation of "actual damages" as referring only to out-of-pocket expenses, is most consistent with the legislative purposes underlying the treble damages provision of the rent control law, and that trebling of mental distress damages could lead to awards subject to constitutional attack (226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 696-697) .

The court disagreed with the result in Beeman v. Burling (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1586, 265 Cal. Rptr. 719 , which had been decided by another division of the same appellate court regarding the same treble damages provision. The court in Beeman expressed the view that damages for mental suffering in that case could be trebled. The Balmoral court stated that the court in Beeman did not have occasion to address the question of whether the San Francisco Administrative Code provision at issue authorized recovery of damages for mental suffering, because that case involved defendant's default, and the court was "dismissing a plainly meritless procedural objection" without full consideration of the issues involved (226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 697) .

Counsel should note that, a few months after the Balmoral decision, the San Francisco rent control ordinance in question was amended, and now specifically includes mental and emotional injury within the definition of "actual damages."

[b] "Actual Damages" Do Not Include Damages for Mental Suffering

The facts and procedural background of Balmoral Hotel Tenants Assn. v. Lee (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 276 Cal. Rptr. 640 , are discussed in § 141.51[3][a]. The court explained that a treble damage award for mental suffering damages could lead to an unconstitutional confiscatory result in abrogation of the constitutional "takings" provision (226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 697) . The court also rejected the tenants' contention that the trebling of mental suffering damages was necessary to provide sufficient economic incentive for tenants to bring wrongful eviction lawsuits, given the limited amount of out-of-pocket damages normally at issue; the court explained that a claim for mental suffering damages could provide such incentive even without trebling (226 Cal. App. 3d 686, 690-692) .

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief].

THE TRIAL COURT HAS DISCRETION TO AWARD A PENALTY IN TENANT'S ACTION FOR REFUND OF RENT PAID IN EXCESS OF MAXIMUM SET BY RENT CONTROL ORDINANCE AND THEREFORE THE ACTION IS GOVERNED BY THE THREE-YEAR STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Action Seeking Discretionary Penalty or Forfeiture as Part of Tenant's Remedies Governed by Three-Year Statute of Limitations. An action by a tenant for a refund of excessive rent paid in violation of a rent control law is governed by the three-year statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) if the prevailing tenant may be awarded penalty damages such as treble damages in addition to actual losses incurred, at the discretion of the trial court (Mitchell v. Leslie (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7, 11-12, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419).

[2] Comments

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a tenant's legal action for damages was filed after the expiration of the period of limitation applicable to an action seeking a mandatory penalty [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a) (one year); see § 141.49].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the tenant is seeking a discretionary award of a penalty or forfeiture of money under the particular rent control law in issue, as well as facts showing that the tenant's cause of action accrued less than three years before the action before the court was filed. For general discussion of accrual of causes of actions and potential applicability of authorities on delayed discovery of causes of action, see Ch. 147,

Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Seeking Discretionary Penalty or Forfeiture as Part of Tenant's Remedies Governed by Three-Year Statute of Limitations

Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a) provides that an action on a statute for a penalty or forfeiture is governed by a one-year statute of limitations, unless the statute imposing it prescribes a different limitation. Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a) provides that an action on a liability created by statute, other than a penalty or forfeiture, is governed by a three-year statute of limitations.

In Mitchell v. Leslie (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 419 , the plaintiffs brought an action to recover excess rent under the Santa Monica rent control ordinance. The lower court ruled that the claim was subject to the three-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a). The defendants appealed on the ground the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations in former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a)). The Superior Court Appellate Department affirmed. It held that the three-year period was applicable because restitution of excess rent is not a penalty, and because the award of treble damages was not mandatory on a finding that the landlord violated the ordinance, but rather lay within the discretion of the trial court (39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7, 11-12).

The Appellate Department distinguished Menefee v. Ostawari (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 239, 278 Cal. Rptr. 805 (discussed in § 141.49[3][a]), in which the plaintiff sought damages for wrongful termination of a tenancy, based on a rent control ordinance that provided for three times the amount of damages to a prevailing plaintiff. The defendant in Menefee moved for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitations because it was filed more than one year after the landlord served the 30-day notice to vacate the premises. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the action was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a)). The Menefee court held that because the ordinance did not permit any lesser award, the penalty was mandatory, and therefore governed by § 340(1) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(a)). The court also found that the entire action was based on the ordinance (as a 30-day notice to vacate is otherwise permitted by state law, and no other independent wrong was alleged in the complaint), and therefore the entire action was barred (39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7).

The Appellate Department in Mitchell distinguished Menefee on the ground the award of treble damages in Mitchell was discretionary rather than mandatory (39 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 7, 12).

PLAINTIFF WAS WRONGFULLY EVICTED FROM THE PREMISES, BECAUSE LANDLORD['S RELATIVE(S)] FOR WHOM PLAINTIFF VACATED PREMISES DID NOT RESIDE THEREIN FOR SIX MONTHS.

A. Landlord's Failure to Maintain Residence at Premises for Six Continuous Months Permits Finding of Fraud. The failure by a landlord['s immediate relative(s)] to maintain residence for at least six continuous months at premises that plaintiff was required to vacate on the ground that landlord['s immediate relative(s)] would occupy the premises, permits a finding of fraud (Civ. Code § 1947.10).

[EITHER]

B. Finding of Fraud Permits Award to Tenant of Treble Damages and Relocation to Vacated Unit. If the court determines that the eviction of plaintiff was based on fraud, it may award plaintiff treble the cost of relocating back to tenant's previous unit, and to treble the amount of any increase in rent that the tenant has paid, in addition to attorneys' fees, court costs, and any other remedies (Civ. Code § 1947.10).

[OR]

B. Finding of Fraud Permits Award to Tenant, Who Elects Not to Move Back to Vacated Unit, of Treble Amount of One Month's Rent and Treble Relocation Costs. If the court determines that the eviction of plaintiff was based on fraud, and the tenant elects not to relocate to his/her previous premises, the court may order the landlord to pay treble the amount of one month's rent paid by the tenant for the unit that the tenant vacated, and treble the amount of any costs incurred in relocating to a different unit, plus attorneys' fees and court costs (Civ. Code § 1947.10).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a tenant that the tenant was fraudulently induced by a landlord to vacate rented premises. The contention is based on the fact that the landlord (or his or her immediate relative(s)), who the landlord represented would replace the tenant in the premises, did not in fact maintain residence in the premises for six consecutive months; a court may determine that the eviction of plaintiff was based on fraud, and if the court does so determine, it may award the remedies set forth in the statute [Civ. Code § 1947.10].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts showing that the landlord or his or her immediate relative(s) failed to reside at the premises for six continuous months after the tenant vacated, that the landlord had a fraudulent intent at the time plaintiff was evicted, and facts supporting the damages sought.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Landlord's Failure to Maintain Residence at Premises for Six Continuous Months Permits Finding of Fraud

Civ. Code § 1947.10 provides that after July 1, 1990, in a city, county, or city and county that administers a system of controls on the price at which residential rental units may be offered for rent or lease, and that requires the registration of rents, any landlord who evicts a tenant based on the landlord's or landlord's immediate relative(s)' intention to occupy the tenant's unit, must occupy, or his or her immediate relative(s) must occupy, the unit for at least six continuous months, and failure to do so enables the court to find a fraudulent intention by the landlord or his or her immediate relative(s) to occupy the unit.

[b] Finding of Fraud Permits Award to Tenant of Treble Damages and Relocation to Vacated Unit

If fraud is determined by a court in accordance with Civ. Code § 1947.10, and the tenant elects to relocate back to his or her previous premises, the statute authorizes the court in its discretion, to order the landlord to pay to the tenant treble the cost of relocating back to the tenant's previous unit, and treble the amount of any increase in rent that the tenant has paid, in addition to other remedies. The prevailing party must be awarded attorneys' fees and court costs (Civ. Code § 1947.10).

[c] Finding of Fraud Permits Award to Tenant, Who Elects Not to Move Back to Vacated Unit, of Treble Amount of One Month's Rent and Treble Relocation Costs

If fraud is determined by a court in accordance with Civ. Code § 1947.10, andthe tenant elects not to relocate back to his or her previous premises, the statute authorizes the court in its discretion, to order the landlord to pay treble the amount of one month's rent paid by the tenant for the premises that the tenant vacated, and treble the amount of any costs incurred in relocating to a different unit, in addition to other remedies. The prevailing party must be awarded attorneys' fees and court costs (Civ. Code § 1947.10).

§ 141.54 Supporting Contention That Landlord Who Failed to Return Security Deposit and to Provide a Written Accounting of Deductions to Tenant in a Timely Manner [Civ. Code § 1950.5(g)] Is Entitled to Recover Unpaid Rent and Costs of Cleaning and Repair

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

LANDLORD IS ENTITLED TO RECOVER UNPAID RENT, COSTS OF REPAIR, AND/OR COSTS OF CLEANING, BECAUSE LANDLORD'S FAILURE TO RETURN TENANT'S SECURITY DEPOSIT AND TO PROVIDE A WRITTEN ACCOUNTING OF DEDUCTIONS FROM THE DEPOSIT IN A TIMELY MANNER WAS IN GOOD FAITH AND THEREFORE DOES NOT PRECLUDE LANDLORD FROM RECOVERING SUCH AMOUNTS AS DAMAGES IN A JUDICIAL PROCEEDING.

A. Landlord Who in Good Faith Failed to Return Security Deposit and to Provide a Written Accounting of Deductions in a Timely Manner May Recover Unpaid Rent and Costs of Repairs and Cleaning as Damages in Judicial Proceeding. A landlord who fails to return a vacating tenant's security deposit and to provide a written accounting of deductions from the deposit within three weeks after the tenant vacated the premises as required by Civ. Code § 1950.5(g) must return the security deposit to the tenant but is not barred from recovering damages for unpaid rent, repair, and cleaning in a judicial proceeding if the landlord retained the security deposit in good faith (Granberry v. Islay Investments (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 738, 749-750, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650, 889 P.2d 970).

B. Amount of Unpaid Rent, Cost of Repairs, or Cost of Cleaning to Be Recovered From Former Tenant Must Be Reasonable. A landlord who in good faith failed to return a vacating tenant's security deposit and to provide a written accounting of deductions from the deposit within three weeks after the tenant vacated the premises as required by Civ. Code § 1950.5(g) may recover damages for unpaid rent, repair, and cleaning in a judicial proceeding if the amounts to be recovered are reasonable (*Granberry v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a contention by a landlord that he or she is entitled to recover compensation for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning from a tenant who has vacated the premises, despite the landlord's failure to return the security deposit and to provide the tenant with a written accounting of any portion of the deposit to be retained as compensation for unpaid rent, repairs, and cleaning within three weeks after the termination [Civ. Code § 1950.5(g)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the landlord's failure to return the security deposit was in good faith, and facts showing that the amounts sought as damages are reasonable.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Landlord Who in Good Faith Failed to Return Security Deposit and to Provide a Written Accounting of Deductions in a Timely Manner May Recover Unpaid Rent and Costs of Repairs and Cleaning as Damages in Judicial Proceeding

In Granberry v. Islay Investments (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 738, 748, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650, 889 P.2d 970 , the defendants owned or operated between 1,200 and 1,500 residential rental units. It was the defendants' practice to charge tenants an increased rental fee for the first 31 days of tenancy, but to charge a reduced fee for all subsequent months. The defendants never returned the increased fee in whole or in part but simply retained it as part of the rental payment for the first month.

Former tenants of the defendants filed a class action seeking a refund of the amount by which the rent they had paid for the first 31 days of their tenancy exceeded the amount they paid in each of the following months. The trial court held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a refund because the increased rent paid during the first month was in fact rent and not a security deposit within the meaning of Civ. Code § 1950.5(b). The court of appeal reversed, holding that the character of the payment was a triable issue of fact [Granberry v. Islay Investments (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 382, 388-391, 207 Cal. Rptr. 652] . On remand, the court granted the defendants leave to amend their answer to allege they were entitled to set off amounts owed to them for unpaid rent, repair, andcleaning if a jury were to find the increased rental payment was a refundable security deposit.

The trial court granted the plaintiffs summary judgment on the issue of whether the defendants were entitled to a setoff in view of the fact that they had failed to comply with former Civ. Code § 1950.5(f) (now see Civ. Code § 1950.5(g)), which requires that within three weeks after the tenant has vacated the premises, the landlord must furnish the tenant with a copy of an itemized statement indicating the basis for, and the amount of, any security received and the disposition of the security, and return any remaining portion of the security to the tenant. A jury found that the excess rental payments were security deposits, but that defendants had not retained them in bad faith. On appeal, the court of appeal held, in part, that the trial court erred in ruling that defendants were not entitled to a setoff.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the ruling. It held that when a landlord, within the specified time period, fails to provide the tenant with a written accounting of the portion of the security deposit the landlord intends to retain, the right to retain all or part of the security deposit has not been perfected, and the landlord must return the entire deposit to the tenant (9 Cal. 4th 738, 745) . The failure to comply with former Civ. Code § 1950.5(f) (now see Civ. Code § 1950.5(g) ) does not completely bar the landlord from recovering damages for unpaid rent, repair, and cleaning. A landlord who retains the security deposit in good faith may recover such damages in a subsequent judicial proceeding if the landlord proves by a preponderance of the evidence that he or she has suffered such damages and that the amount claimed is reasonable (9 Cal. 4th 738, 749-750) . The Court held that since the jury had found that the defendants had acted in good faith, the defendants could raise claims for unpaid rent, repair, and cleaning through the equitable defense of setoff (9 Cal. 4th 738, 749-750) .

[b] Amount of Unpaid Rent, Cost of Repairs, or Cost of Cleaning to Be Recovered From Former Tenant Must Be Reasonable

The facts and procedural background of Granberry v. Islay Investments (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 738, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 650, 889 P.2d 970 , are discussed in § 141.54[3][a].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE SPECIAL DAMAGES AND THE LANGUAGE COMPLAINED OF IS NOT DEFAMATORY ON ITS FACE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object, by demurrer as provided in Code of Civil Procedure Section 430.30, to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)). If any ground for objection to a complaint appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, the objection on that ground may be taken by a demurrer to the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

[EITHER]

B. Libel on Its Face. To be libelous on its face, the defamatory nature of the language must appear without the necessity of explanatory matter such as an inducement, an innuendo, or any other extrinsic fact (Civ. Code § 45a; MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 548-549, 343 P.2d 36).

[OR]

B. Slander Per Se. In order for language to be slanderous per se, it must charge the plaintiff either with a crime (Civ. Code § 46(1)), with having an infectious disease (Civ. Code § 46(2)), with a fact that injures the plaintiff in his or her business (Civ. Code § 46(3)), or with being impotent or unchaste (Civ. Code § 46(4)).

[EITHER]

C. Special Damages. A publication that is not libelous on its face must have proximately caused special damages before it is actionable (Civ. Code § 45a); an allegation of special damages is an essential element of such a cause of action (Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 929, 186 Cal. Rptr. 605).

[OR]

C. Actual Damages. A publication that is not slanderous per se must have caused actual damages before it is actionable (see Civ. Code § 46(5)); an allegation of special damages is required to withstand a demurrer (Gautier v. General Tel. Co. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 309, 44 Cal. Rptr. 404).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the language complained of is neither libelous on its face nor slanderous per se and the plaintiff has failed to plead any special damages.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Form

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the plaintiff's failure to allege special damages if the language is not defamatory on its face, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Libel on Its Face

MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 343 P.2d 36 , reversed a judgment for the defendant after a general and special demurrer had been sustained. The plaintiff had sued for a defamatory article that accused him of being affiliated with communism, but the defendant argued that the article was susceptible of an innocent meaning and therefore not libelous on its face. The Court reaffirmed the test for a publication asserted to the libelous on its face that is contained in Civ. Code § 45a, and it repudiated the possible innocent interpretation rule that had developed in earlier cases (52 Cal. 2d 536, 548-549) .

[b] Slander Per Se

Slanderous language must fall into one of the four statutory categories before it is deemed slanderous per se [Civ. Code § 46(1)-(4)].

[c] Special Damages

In Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 186 Cal. Rptr. 605 , a police officer sued a newspaper for libel based on an article and photograph published in the paper. After judgment was awarded to the plaintiff, the trial court conditionally granted a new trial on the issue of damages unless the plaintiff agreed to a reduction in damages. The plaintiff agreed to the reduction and appealed from that order. The defendants appealed from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

In deciding the issue of whether or not the plaintiff had proven special damages, the court of appeal stated that if defamatory language is not libelous on its face, no cause of action arises unless the plaintiff proves special damages (136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 929) . The court concluded that the plaintiff was not entitled to special damages, because he had not proven any. For this and other reasons the case was reversed and the trial court was directed to enter judgment for the defendants (136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 941) .

[d] Actual Damages

A false and unprivileged publication that, by its natural consequences, causes actual damage is actionable [Civ. Code § 46(5)]. In Gautier v. General Tel. Co. (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 44 Cal. Rptr. 404 , the court sustained a demurrer to a complaint containing a number of counts, one of which was for slander. The court held that charging the plaintiffs with failure to pay their debts was not defamatory per se. Therefore, because the plaintiffs had failed to allege special damages, the pleading was fatally defective (234 Cal. App. 2d 302, 309) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Slander Per Se

In The Nethercutt Collection v. Regalia (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 361, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 882 , plaintiff, a former long-time employee of defendant automobile restoration and museum company, sued the company's president for slander based on statements made shortly after plaintiff's employment was terminated. Prior to his termination, plaintiff was negotiating for a raise in salary and also demanded a $230,000 finder's fee for a recent company donation valued at $2.3 million. Defendant president denied the finder's fee and terminated plaintiff's employment. Shortly after, in discussing the reasons for plaintiff's termination with other company employees, the president stated that plaintiff had demanded a finder's fee to which he was not entitled and that other employees would not work for plaintiff and were threatening to quit if he was retained. After forming his own company, plaintiff sued for slander based on those remarks, arguing that they were slander per se under Civ. Code § 46(3) because they damaged him in his business, profession, or trade. The cause was submitted to the jury on a theory of slander per se. The jury found that plaintiff suffered no actual damages, but awarded $750,000 on the slander per se theory. The court of appeal reversed. The court held that the statements that plaintiff had demanded a finder's fee to which he was not entitled and that other employees would not work for plaintiff if he remained, were not slander per se as those statements did not necessarily reflect negatively on plaintiff. The court noted that a person can make a claim for money that is rejected without having that claim reflect negatively on the person. Similarly, the court also noted that there are many reasons why employees may not want to work for another person, and that fact in and of itself does not reflect negatively on the person. Thus, it was an error to grant judgment for plaintiff on a theory of slander per se. The court then ordered the trial court to enter judgment for defendants, because the jury explicitly found that plaintiff suffered no actual damages, which would be required in order to recover on a theory of slander per quod (172 Cal. App. 4th 361, 369-370) .

[b] Special Damages

Smith v. L.A. Bookbinders Union No. 63 (1955) 133 Cal. App. 2d 486, 284 P.2d 194 , overruled on other grounds, MacLeod v. Tribune Pub. Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 551, 343 P.2d 36 , involved the issue of whether the plaintiff could amend his original complaint to state a cause of action. The court of appeal held that it was error to deny the plaintiff an opportunity to amend his original complaint, because the allegation of special damages is only one element of a cause of action for libel. However, the court affirmed the principle of Civ. Code § 45a that special damage is an essential element of an action for a publication that was not libelous on its face (133 Cal. App. 2d 486, 494-495) .

§ 142.21 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Allegedly Defamatory Statement Does Not Imply Provably False Factual Assertion

[Caption. See § 142.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT, TAKEN IN THE CONTEXT OF THE TOTALITY OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES, THE ALLEGEDLY DEFAMATORY STATEMENT DOES NOT IMPLY A PROVABLY FALSE ASSERTION.

A. Statement That Does Not Assert Fact Is Afforded Protection. Statements that cannot be reasonably interpreted as stating actual facts are entitled to protection under U.S. Const. amend. I (Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 724, 275 Cal. Rptr. 494).

B. Totality of Circumstances Test. Whether a reasonable fact finder could conclude that the published statements imply a provably false factual assertion is determined by the "totality of circumstances" test, which is a review of the meaning of the language in context and its susceptibility of being proved true or false (Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 724-725, 275 Cal. Rptr. 494).

[Optional] C. No Liability for Truthful, But One-Sided, News Story. A media defendant is not liable for publishing a factual account that provides only one perspective on a story, but fails to include additional facts that might give the reader or listener a different impression of the events discussed (Paterno v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1352 , 78 Ca. Rptr. 3d 244).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that the allegedly defamatory statement does not imply a provably false factual assertion [see Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 19-20, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 (discussed in § 142.86[3][a]); see also Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 724, 275 Cal. Rptr. 494] .

This form may be adapted for use in other procedural contexts, for example, in support of a motion for judgment on the pleadings, and may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should set forth the statement alleged to be defamatory and should show that, on examination of the meaning of the language in context, the statement is incapable of being proved true or false.

In an appropriate case, the points in § 142.85 may be used to oppose these points.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statement That Does Not Assert Fact Is Afforded Protection

In Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 275 Cal. Rptr. 494 , a high school teacher filed an action for defamation and infliction of emotional distress against the school district, the school principal, and certain students in connection with a publication in the school newspaper criticizing his professional competence and describing an incident that had allegedly occurred in his classroom. The newspaper article reported that a smoke bomb had gone off in the plaintiff's classroom. The headline stated that the students in the classroom had terrorized the plaintiff; and the article quoted the student responsible as stating that the plaintiff annoyed him and was the worst teacher in the school. The trial court sustained general demurrers to the complaint, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 727) . The court noted that prior to the filing of the appellate briefs, the courts perceived a fundamental distinction between statements of fact and statements of opinion, which were held to be protected by U.S. Const. amend. I and therefore not actionable. However, while the appeal was pending, the United States Supreme Court filed its opinion in Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 (discussed in § 142.86[3][a]), in which the Court reexamined the law of defamation as limited by the First Amendment and rejected "the creation of an artificial dichotomy between opinion and fact" (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 723) . Although the Court held in Milkovich that there is no separate First Amendment privilege for statements of opinion, it recognized that existing constitutional doctrine still protects free expression of ideas. That is, statements that cannot be reasonably interpreted as stating actual facts are still entitled to constitutional protection.

In this case, the plaintiff essentially asserted that the publication contained three factual statements: (1) the headline that the students terrorized him; (2) that he was a "babbler"; and (3) that he was the worst teacher in the school. The court stated that the narrow issue before it is whether these statements can reasonably be understood to state actual facts about the plaintiff. In determining that issue, the court considered the nature and meaning of the language used, including the verifiability of the statements, and the context in which the statements appeared, and concluded that the statements are not actionable (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 725) . With respect to the first statement, the court agreed with the plaintiff that by its nature, a headline over a news story arguably implies a factual assertion. However, it held, even if the descriptive term "terrorize" is an exaggeration of the actual event, it nonetheless falls within the protectable category of "rhetorical hyperbole": a word used in a loose, figurative sense. Moreover, the article read in full context accurately reported that one student had supplied another student with a smoke bomb that was set off during the plaintiff's class (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 726) . The court held that the second statement does not fall within the legal framework of actionable speech because a commonly accepted definition of "babbler" is one who utters meaningless or unintelligible sounds, or who talks foolishly or incessantly (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 725-726) . Obviously, the court held, the readers would have understood that the word was not used literally but as a form of exaggerated expression conveying the speaker's disapproval of the plaintiff's teaching or speaking style. The statement could not reasonably have been understood to be stating actual facts about the plaintiff (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 726) . The court also held that the third statement contains no factual assertion capable of being proved true or false. Clearly, the court concluded, the statement is an expression of subjective judgment the speaker; the full text of the sentence confirms that the statement was simply an expression of anger or disgust on the speaker's part. Inasmuch as the statement contains no verifiable facts, it is clearly protected under the First Amendment (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 725) . The court concluded that because the statements are not actionable, and that no fact finder could reasonably interpret the statements as stating actual facts about the plaintiff, the demurrers were properly sustained (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 726) .

[b] Totality of Circumstances Test

The factual and procedural background of Moyer v. Amador Valley Joint Union High Sch. Dist. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 275 Cal. Rptr. 494 , is discussed in § 142.21[3][a]. The court of appeal noted that, before Milkovich, California courts had employed a "totality of circumstances" test to differentiate between fact and opinion. Under this test, courts first examine the language of the statement: the words are defamatory if they are understood in a defamatory sense. They then consider the context in which the statement was made, that is, the nature and full content of the communication, and the knowledge and understanding of the audience to whom the publication was directed. The crucial determination whether the statement was fact or opinion was held to be a question of law for the court. The court of appeal stated that Milkovich did not substantially change these principles; it underscored that in cases raising First Amendment issues, a reviewing court must make an independent examination of the whole record to ensure that there is no infringement of free expression (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 724) . The dispositive question for the court is whether a reasonable fact finder could conclude that the published statements imply a provably false factual assertion, which is determined by applying the "totality of circumstances" test: a review of the meaning of the language in context and its susceptibility of being proved true or false (225 Cal. App. 3d 720, 724-725) .

[c] No Liability for Truthful, But One-Sided, News Story

In Paterno v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 1342 , 78 Ca. Rptr. 3d 244, plaintiff, the corporate owner of a daily city newspaper, brought suit against the author of a magazine article that provided an account of recent events at the newspaper that had culminated in the dismissal or resignation of more than half of the newsroom staff. After the article suggested that the staff had been working in a "climate of fear and paranoia" and the newspaper's principal was responsible for much of the "turmoil" because of her efforts to "silence" criticism, plaintiff sued defendant for libel and trade disparagement for allegedly falsely implying that the principal's personal agenda improperly influenced the newspaper's reporting. Defendant filed a motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. Plaintiff claimed that it could establish a probability of success on the merits sufficient to defeat the motion, but requested discovery to establish defendant's knowledge about the events and her state of mind when she wrote the report. The trial court ruled that only three statements in the article were potentially actionable, and granted discovery to allow plaintiff to uncover evidence as to whether defendant made those three statements with actual malice. Defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate, arguing that two of the three statements were true and the third was non-actionable opinion.

The court of appeal granted the petition and ordered the trial court to deny the discovery motion. The court first held that plaintiff could not establish good cause for conducting discovery on the issue of actual malice unless plaintiff first demonstrated that the statements actually contained provably false factual assertions (163 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1349) . Addressing the three statements, the court noted that the gist of the complaint was that, while defendant's statements may have been truthful, defendant had not provided plaintiff's side of the story, the inclusion of which might have given readers a different impression of the events. For example, the article stated that a story on the sentencing of one of the newspaper editors for drunk driving had been "killed" by management, which was admitted to be true by the principal. She argued, however, that the article created an impression that the story was killed to protect a favored employee, which she claimed was false. In another statement, defendant had recounted that a workplace restraining order had been sought by the newspaper to protect one employee from another employee, and the case dropped only after the employee against whom the order was sought had incurred $7,000 in legal fees. While this was true, plaintiff argued that the story created a false impression because it failed to include the fact that the case was dropped because it became moot when the employee who would have been protected left the newspaper's employ. The court of appeal held that defendant had no obligation to provide plaintiff's version of these events, and because the published statements were true, defendant was to be afforded a reasonable degree of flexibility in how to present the story (163 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1352-1355) . As to the final statement, in which defendant wrote that the newspaper had "slashed" benefits and overtime pay, the court noted first that the statement was attributed in the article to former employees of the newspaper, and plaintiff admitted that the employees' 401(k) plan had been eliminated. While plaintiff noted that the article failed to include the fact that new merit-based salary increases had been added, the court concluded the statement published in the article was non-actionable opinion about the effect of the loss of certain benefits (163 Cal. App. 4th 1342, 1355-1357) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statement That Does Not Assert Fact Is Afforded Protection

In Nygard, Inc. v. Uusi-Kerttula (2008) 159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 72 Cal. Rptr. 3d 210 , plaintiff brought suit for defamation and a variety of other tort and contract claims against a former employee based on a published interview in which defendant stated such things as working for the company was "horrible," that he felt used and worked like a slave without a break, and that he endured around-the-clock pestering. The trial court struck the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court first held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 applied to the action because the magazine was a public forum and the matter was one of public interest to the magazine's readership (159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 1036-1044) . The court then held that defendant's use of colorful language to describe what he perceived as unpleasant working conditions with plaintiff, including that the work experience was "horrible" and that plaintiff "slaved" for plaintiff, was non-actionable opinion, because no reasonable reader could conclude that the statements were literal statements of truth. The court noted, for example, that no reasonable reader could understand defendant's comments to mean that he was actually struck with horror while working for plaintiff or that he was actually enslaved (159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 1052-1053) . As to one statement made by defendant suggesting that employees were not allowed to see a doctor when injured, defendant had gone on to describe his own personal experience after an injury when he was discouraged from seeing a doctor prior to finishing his assignment. Because he had provided the factual details behind his statement, and these details were not shown to be false, the broad conclusion defendant had given based on his personal experience was not actionable (159 Cal. App. 4th 1027, 1053-1054) .

In McGarry v. University of San Diego (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 467 , plaintiff was a former university head football coach who brought a defamation action against the university and university officials after his employment was terminated. The defamation action was based in part on a statement made by a university official during a meeting with parents of the football players suggesting that plaintiff may have been terminated because of unspecified "immoral" conduct. The trial court granted defendants' motion to strike the defamation action under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court of appeal affirmed, holding in part that the statement made at the parent conference was a statement of opinion that was not actionable. The court first noted that the university official did not expressly state that plaintiff had been fired because of immoral behavior. Assuming, however, that the statement could reasonably be interpreted as suggesting that plaintiff was fired for unspecified immoral behavior, the court concluded that the statement was incapable of being interpreted as implying a provably false assertion of fact, as behavior that might qualify as immoral to one person might be perfectly acceptable to another (154 Cal. App. 4th 97, 116-117) .

In Seelig v. Infinity Broad. Corp. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 798, 119 Cal. Rptr. 2d 108 , the plaintiff was a participant on a nationally broadcast television show in which she and 49 other women competed to win the opportunity to marry an anonymous millionaire. The plaintiff did not win the contest, and in fact only appeared on the actual broadcast for less than one minute, although she was identified by name, city of residence, and occupation. On the morning before the broadcast, the hosts of a comedic talk show on a radio station in the plaintiff's city, after unsuccessfully trying to get the plaintiff to appear on the radio program to talk about her participation in the contest, made disparaging comments about the plaintiff for failing to appear on the radio show. Although the plaintiff was not specifically identified by name on the radio, the radio program participants referred to her several times as a "local loser," a "chicken butt," and a "skank." The plaintiff sued for defamation and related causes of action. The defendants filed a motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court denied the motion. The court of appeal reversed, however, finding that the anti-SLAPP statute applied and that the plaintiff had not shown a probability of prevailing on the merits of the action. The court held that the comments, made on the air about a matter of public interest in a context that was clearly meant to be humorous, constituted either the speaker's subjective judgment or rhetorical hyperbole. Because the comments did not state provable facts about the plaintiff, they were not actionable as defamation (97 Cal. App. 4th 798, 810-812) .

In Rosenaur v. Scherer (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 260, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674 , the plaintiff was a property owner who sought through a local public initiative to obtain the zoning changes needed to permit commercial development on his property. During the public battle over the initiative, an argument took place at a shopping mall between the plaintiff and a political opponent of the initiative. During that argument, the opponent allegedly called the plaintiff a "thief" and a "liar." After the initiative was defeated, the plaintiff brought suit against his former opponents for the public assertions made at the shopping mall. The trial court granted the defendants' anti-SLAPP motion to strike the complaint brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that the statements made at the mall, in the context of the heated public initiative measure, were constitutionally protected hyperbole and not provably false assertions of fact (88 Cal. App. 4th 260, 275-276) .

In Savage v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1993) 21 Cal. App. 4th 434, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 , the plaintiff was a reporter for an energy newsletter, and had been involved with an anti-nuclear group. The defendant, who worked for a power company, told the editor of the newsletter that he believed the plaintiff had a conflict of interest, and the editor fired the plaintiff on the ground of conflict of interest. The plaintiff sued the defendant for slander and other causes of action; the trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment and dismissed the cause of action, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the statement of opinion that the plaintiff had a conflict of interest could not be defamatory under Civ. Code § 45 or 46, because it could not be proved to be true or false and did not imply any objective fact that could be so proved (21 Cal. App. 4th 434, 445) .

[b] Totality of Circumstances Test

In Franklin v. Dynamic Details, Inc. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 375, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 429 , the plaintiff was the owner of a business that provided sales representation for vendors of electronics products and equipment. The plaintiff brought suit for libel, trade libel, and other causes of action against a company that provides design and manufacturing services to the electronics manufacturing industry and one of the company's corporate directors. The plaintiff alleged that the corporate director defamed the plaintiff and his company in e-mails sent to the plaintiff's clients, which suggested that the plaintiff was dishonest. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. Applying a totality of the circumstances test, the court of appeal held that the e-mails were not actionable as libel or trade libel because they expressed the director's opinions and fully disclosed the provably true facts on which those opinions were based. The e-mails suggested that the plaintiff stole copyrighted material, plagiarized data, breached a nondisclosure agreement, compromised the defendant's company, and was generally dishonorable. However, the e-mails also directed the recipient to the plaintiff's Internet web site and specifically described the relevant links to follow at that site and what those links disclosed that the director considered to be dishonest. The court noted that under established case law, a publisher is not liable for defamation if the publisher gives an opinion and fully discloses all of the facts on which that opinion is based, without implying the existence of any other facts, so long as those underlying disclosed facts are provably true. Because there was no dispute that the director's description of the materials on the plaintiff's web site was accurate, the facts underlying the opinion that the director expressed in the e-mails were fully disclosed and provably true, and neither the director nor his company could be liable for the director's opinion of the plaintiff's dishonesty, which was based on those disclosed facts (116 Cal. App. 4th 375, 384-390) .

In Ferlauto v. Hamsher (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 1394, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843 , the plaintiff was an attorney who filed suit alleging that he was defamed in a book written by the defendant. The book generally concerned the defendant's production of a movie and a lawsuit against her stemming from those events in which the plaintiff was the attorney for the other party, and it described in very colorful, unflattering, and sometimes vulgar terms the defendant's opinion of the persons involved in, and the merits of, this earlier lawsuit. However, although the defendant's account suggested that the underlying lawsuit was "frivolous" and "unethical," much of the unflattering language was directed at the actual plaintiff in the earlier underlying suit and the name of the opposing attorney, the name of the plaintiff alleging defamation, was never given in the book. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend, and the court of appeals affirmed. In applying the "totality of circumstances" test, the court noted that editorial context is a powerful element in construing as opinion what might otherwise be considered fact (74 Cal. App. 4th 1394, 1401) . The court then concluded that the "spicy prose" used in the book to describe the defendant's opponents in the earlier litigation and to provide the defendant's opinion of the merits of that litigation, taken in context, was opinion and could not support an action for defamation by the plaintiff (74 Cal. App. 4th 1394, 1405) . Because in the book the defendant had been describing the surrounding events using fiery and opinionated rhetoric, it was to be expected that the defendant would describe the emotionally charged litigation in the same fiery and highly opinionated way (74 Cal. App. 4th 1394, 1403) .

In Campanelli v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 572, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 , a terminated college basketball coach filed a defamation action against the college for which he had worked based on two allegedly defamatory remarks. The first statement was from a newspaper interview given by the vice-chancellor concerning the plaintiff's termination as head coach. The article stated that the father of one of the players felt that the former coach was putting so much pressure on his son that he was making him physically ill. The second statement was by the college athletic director who, in explaining the reasons for firing the plaintiff, stated that the players were "beaten down and in trouble psychologically." The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed (44 Cal. App. 4th 572, 575) . The court applied a totality of the circumstances test and found that the statement regarding the player's father could not be characterized as a statement of fact. First, the vice-chancellor made it clear that the statement did not express his own sentiment, but that of a parent. Second, the statement was couched in terms of a feeling, which connotes a subjective judgment. Lastly, the court considered the statement in light of the context of the statement, the charged atmosphere surrounding the coach's firing and the highly publicized facts set forth in the article (44 Cal. App. 4th 572, 578-579) . Similarly, the court held that the statement regarding the "psychological damage" suffered by players at the hands of the plaintiff was nonactionable opinion. The court took into account the fact that for the purposes of this action, the plaintiff was a public figure and that because the subject was highly publicized, the matter was one of public concern (44 Cal. App. 4th 572, 581) .

In Jensen v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th 958, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 83 , an employee brought a defamation action against his employer based on a manager's unfavorable evaluation of the employee's performance. The evaluation stated that, while the employee's work was adequate in certain respects, he had been the subject of some third-party complaints, was not carrying his weight, had a negative attitude in dealing with others, evidenced a lack of direction in his project activities, and was unwilling to take responsibility for the projects he oversaw (14 Cal. App. 4th 958, 966-967) . The court of appeal held that communications must be examined by the court in light of the context in which it was published; that is, the communication's meaning must be considered in reference to relevant factors, such as the occasion of the utterance, the persons addressed, the purpose to be served, and "all of the circumstances attending the publication." Based on this standard, the court held that the comments in question were statements of opinion, not false statements of fact. In noting the context of these statements, the court held that there was nothing in the attendant circumstances tending to show that the evaluation constituted anything but business-as-usual. The court also held that the word "evaluation" denotes opinion, not fact. Thus, even if the comments in the evaluation were objectively unjustified or made in bad faith, they could not provide a legitimate basis for the employee's libel claim because they were statements of opinion, not false statements of fact (14 Cal. App. 4th 958, 970-971) .

In reaching its decision, the court expressed a strong judicial disfavor for libel suits based on communications in employment performance reviews, particularly if, as in this particular case, the tort claim appears to be an attempt to circumvent Foley v. Interactive Data Corp. (1988) 47 Cal. 3d 654, 700, 254 Cal. Rptr. 211, 765 P.2d 373 , which held that tort remedies are not available for breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing in an employment contract to employees who allege they have been discharged in violation of the covenant. The court stated that in light of the multitude of laws designed to protect the employee from oppressive employment practices, evaluations serve the important business purpose of documenting the employer's hiring, promotion, discipline, and firing practices. Moreover, evaluations serve as a vehicle for informing the employee of what management expects, how the employee measures up, and what he or she needs to do to obtain wage increases, promotions, or other recognition. Thus, the primary recipient and beneficiary of the communication is the employee, while the tangential beneficiaries are ordinarily all part of a management group with a common interest, such as the efficient running of the business (14 Cal. App. 4th 958, 964) .

[Caption. See § 142.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR LIBEL BECAUSE IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT THE STATEMENT THAT IS THE BASIS FOR THE ACTION WAS PUBLISHED TO A THIRD PERSON.

A. Libelous Statement Not Actionable Absent Publication. A libelous statement is not actionable until it has been published to a third person (Live Oak Publ'g Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1284, 286 Cal. Rptr. 198).

[Optional] B. Party That Publishes Statements Cannot Assert Libel Action. A party that publishes the defamatory statements cannot state a cause of action in libel against the person who made the statements (Live Oak Publ'g Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1287, 286 Cal. Rptr. 198).

[Optional] C. Material Not "Published" When Sent to Fax Number Supplied by Plaintiff. A defendant does not necessarily "publish" defamatory material by faxing a letter to a number supplied by the plaintiff, even if that fax is read by a third party (Martinelli v. International House USA (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 1337-1338, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 186).

[Optional] D. Forced Republication by Defamed Person Requires Actual Republication. Imposing liability on the original publisher for forced republication by the defamed person to another person requires an actual republication of the defamatory comments, and a mere foreseeability that the defamed person might have to repeat the defamatory comments at some point in the future is an insufficient basis for imposing liability (Dible v. Haight Ashbury Free Clinics, Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 855, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 464).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for libel because it fails to allege publication to a third person [see Live Oak Publ'g Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1284, 286 Cal. Rptr. 198] .

This memorandum may be adapted for use in other procedural contexts (for example, in support of a motion for judgment on the pleadings), and may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should show that either there was no publication of the statements to third persons, or that the only publication was made by the plaintiff. If appropriate under the facts, counsel should also argue that any publication made by the plaintiff did not constitute a publication under any exception--for example, that of a coerced publication [see § 142.22[3][a]].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Libelous Statement Not Actionable Absent Publication

In Live Oak Publ'g Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 286 Cal. Rptr. 198 , a newspaper sued an individual for libel and slander. The action arose from an article in the plaintiff's newspaper concerning a political candidate. The defendant, a supporter of that candidate, wrote a letter to the newspaper accusing it of intentionally garbling the article, presumably to influence the outcome of the election. She included a check to cover the cost of printing her letter as a full-page advertisement. The newspaper kept her money and printed the letter as an advertisement. Then the newspaper and several of its employees sued her for libel. The newspaper also sued for slander, based on statements the defendant made to employees of the newspaper. The court sustained the defendant's demurrer without leave to amend regarding the libel cause of action, on the ground that the newspaper itself published the libel. The newspaper, which was given leave to amend the slander cause of action, filed a first-amended complaint, realleging both causes of action. The defendant again demurred and the court overruled the demurrer. The plaintiff declined to pursue the libel cause of action, and appealed from that dismissal. The defendant was granted summary judgment on the slander cause of action, on the ground that the plaintiff was a public figure and there was no evidence of actual malice.

The court of appeal affirmed dismissal of the libel cause of action (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1287) . The court noted that an entity other than a natural person may be libeled, and that this particular case was not the first in which a newspaper and its agents have brought suit for defamation. The court also noted that an advertisement may be held libelous (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1283) . The court stated, however, that a libelous statement is not actionable until it has been published to a third person. A plaintiff cannot manufacture a defamation cause of action by publishing the statements to third persons; the publication must be done by the defendant (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1284) . The court noted an exception to the rule: if it was foreseeable that a defendant's act would result in publication to a third person, the plaintiff may maintain a libel action. This rule applies if the act of disclosure arises from necessity, and that necessity need not be a physical necessity (as in the case of a letter to a blind person, read aloud by a sighted person) but may be superinduced by a fear that is akin to duress. The court further stated that the coercion aspect of this exception applies if the originator of the defamatory statement has reason to believe that the person defamed will be under a strong compulsion to disclose the contents of the defamatory statement to a third person after he or she has read it or been informed of its contents (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1284) . The rationale for imposing liability in this situation is the strong causal link between the actions of the originator and the damage caused by the republication. This causal link is no less strong if the foreseeable republication is made by the person defamed while under a strong compulsion to republish the defamatory statement, and those circumstances are known to the originator of the defamatory statement.

The court noted that this exception has been limited to a narrow class of cases, and usually applies if a plaintiff is compelled to republish the statements in order to disprove them. To determine if the "coercion" exception applies, the test is whether one could reasonably anticipate the communication based on necessity. The plaintiff made no claim that it was required by law to publish the advertisement, so the issue was whether, as a practical matter, it could not reasonably have refused to publish the article because it was under a sufficiently strong compulsion to do so (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1285) . The court noted that the only fact from the original complaint relating to compulsion is that the defendant "demanded" that the letter be published. The court stated that this was insufficient as a matter of law; the remaining issue is whether the complaint could have been amended to state facts establishing the requisite compulsion (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1286) . The complaint asserted that the plaintiff acted reasonably in publishing the letter, but it does not establish that it was compelled to do so (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1286-1287) . The court noted that the complaint does not depict a situation in which the statement would go unrebutted if the plaintiff refused to publish the defamatory statement, because the plaintiff could print an article contesting the accuracy of the defendant's assertions made from another forum. The court concluded that the plaintiff is not brought within the coerced republication rule. Inasmuch as it published the defamatory statements itself, it cannot state a cause of action against the defendant for libel. It is self-axiomatic that a person cannot sue himself or herself. Consequently, the trial court properly sustained the demurrer (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1287) . The court also upheld summary judgment on the slander cause of action, because the plaintiffs failed to produce evidence showing actual malice, required because of their status as public figures (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1287-1293) .

[b] Party That Publishes Statements Cannot Assert Libel Action

Live Oak Publ'g Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 286 Cal. Rptr. 198 , is discussed in § 142.22[3][a].

[c] Material Not "Published" When Sent to Fax Number Supplied by Plaintiff

In Martinelli v. International House USA (2008) 161 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 186 , plaintiff was an attorney whose family also operated an insurance agency. Plaintiff's niece came to the United States from Italy on a student visa and enrolled in an English language program run by defendant. She lived with plaintiff while attending classes. In July 2005, defendant sent a report to the United States Immigration and Customs Enforcement Agency notifying them that plaintiff's niece had accepted employment in violation of the terms of her visa and that they were reporting plaintiff to the State Bar because she asked defendant to ignore INS regulations. Defendant faxed a copy of this letter to plaintiff's daughter at plaintiff's family's insurance agency, as defendant had been led to believe that this was a proper way of contacting plaintiff. In October 2005, plaintiff wrote to defendant on her law office letterhead to discuss her niece's immigration status and her status at the school. Defendant responded with a letter addressed to plaintiff and faxed to the number that had been printed on the law office letterhead, and this letter repeated the allegedly defamatory statement that plaintiff had earlier asked defendant to ignore INS regulations. The letter was received and read by plaintiff's daughter, who was working in the law office. Plaintiff sued defendant for defamation. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary adjudication of the defamation cause of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that the faxes did not constitute publications to a third person under the circumstances of the case, defeating the defamation cause of action. The court of appeal held that the October fax sent to the law office did not constitute publication to a third person because the attorney invited correspondence to her to be sent to that fax number by printing it on the letterhead she used to write to defendant and thus she had the burden to protect her own confidentiality (161 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 1337-1338) . As to the earlier letter faxed to the insurance agency, defendant knew from prior contacts that plaintiff was deeply involved with her niece's immigration status and plaintiff's niece had provided the fax number of the insurance agency as a means of communicating with plaintiff about such issues. Although that fax had been sent to the attention of plaintiff's daughter, defendant had been told by plaintiff's niece that plaintiff's daughter was responsible for the day-to-day operations of the agency and plaintiff would not be in the office that day. Under those circumstances, the court concluded that defendant could reasonably believe that sending a fax to plaintiff's daughter at the insurance agency was equivalent to sending the fax to plaintiff, and as such the fax did not constitute publication to a third person for purposes of establishing liability for defamation (161 Cal. App. 4th 1332, 1338) .

[d] Forced Republication by Defamed Person Requires Actual Republication

In Dible v. Haight Ashbury Free Clinics, Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 464 , plaintiff was a social worker who formerly provided psychiatric services for a free clinic. After the clinic terminated her employment, plaintiff sought unemployment benefits. When the relevant state agency investigated the unemployment claim, clinic representatives told the agency that the reason for plaintiff's dismissal was that plaintiff's negligence when providing counseling services at a local jail had led to the suicide of a jail inmate. Plaintiff sued the former employer for defamation, but the trial court struck the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After concluding that the defamation complaint was covered by the anti-SLAPP statute, the court held that plaintiff had not demonstrated a probability of success on the merits of her claim. The court held in part that plaintiff had failed to show an actionable publication to a third party. As to the defendant's statements made to the state agency, plaintiff suffered no damages because she was found eligible for unemployment benefits by the agency (170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 853) . Plaintiff also argued, however, that the possibility that she would have to repeat her employer's stated reasons for discharging her to other prospective employers should constitute a republication sufficient to support her defamation claim. Recognizing court precedent for imposing liability on the original publisher of defamatory comments for a forced republication by the defamed person to another person, the court of appeal refused to extend that rule to include situations in which no actual forced republication by the plaintiff had yet taken place. The court concluded that the mere foreseeability that the defamed person might have to repeat the defamatory comments at some point in the future was an insufficient basis for imposing liability. The court noted that the rule proposed by plaintiff would require courts to engage in considerable speculation as to future conduct and future damages (170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 855) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

PLAINTIFF'S PETITION FOR A PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION MUST BE DENIED BECAUSE IT WOULD CONSTITUTE AN UNCONSTITUTIONAL PRIOR RESTRAINT ON FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS.

Prior Restraints Not Permitted to Stop Defamatory Statements. Prior restraints are disfavored and are not permitted to stop defamatory statements (Evans v. Evans (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 1168-1169, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859 ; Gilbert v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1144, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 91).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in opposition to an injunction to prevent publication of an alleged defamatory statement that prior restraints are disfavored and are not permitted to stop defamatory statements.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the scope of the injunction being sought, and should argue that it would constitute a prior restraint on the First Amendment right of free speech.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prior Restraints Not Permitted to Stop Defamatory Statements

In Evans v. Evans (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 76 Cal. Rptr. 3d 859 , plaintiff was a deputy sheriff who brought suit against his ex-wife based on allegations that she had made false accusations about him to the internal affairs division of the sheriff's department and placed defamatory information about him on the Internet. Arguing that the statements made by his ex-wife were affecting his career, reputation, and emotional well-being, plaintiff sought a preliminary injunction to prevent her from causing further damage. The trial court granted the preliminary injunction enjoining defendant from publishing false and defamatory statements about plaintiff on the Internet, and enjoining defendant from contacting the sheriff's department regarding plaintiff, with an exception for 9-1-1 calls to report criminal conduct. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded. The court of appeal noted that the use of a preliminary injunction to prevent the publication of allegedly-defamatory statements was a classic example of an unconstitutional prior restraint on free speech. Recognizing that an injunction might be appropriate for specific statements that have already been judged to be defamatory in a trial on the merits, as held by the California Supreme Court in Balboa Island Village Inn, Inc. v. Lemen (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1155-1156, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 156 P.3d 339 , discussed in § 142.90[3][a], the court of appeal held that the present injunction was unconstitutional because the statements at issue in the case had not yet been determined to be defamatory at trial. The court also concluded that the preliminary injunction was unconstitutionally vague and overbroad because it enjoined "false and defamatory" statements but did not indicate precisely what statements would violate the order (162 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 1167-1169) . The court also concluded that the order prohibiting defendant from communicating with plaintiff's employer, except in emergencies, was also overbroad in that the order would prohibit defendant from communicating information to the sheriff's department that may be relevant to law enforcement concerns, such as public safety issues or defendant's subjective feelings of personal safety. As defendant had a fundamental right to present concerns to public agencies, particularly law enforcement agencies, the court concluded that the minimal evidence presented by plaintiff was not enough to defeat this right at this stage of the proceeding (162 Cal. App. 4th 1157, 1171-1173) .

In Gilbert v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 91 , the plaintiff, a well-known actor, sought a preliminary injunction against her ex-husband and a newspaper to prevent them from disclosing allegedly defamatory statements regarding her sexual relationships and substance abuse. The paper had already published an interview with the husband that became the basis of a defamation action by the plaintiff. The plaintiff then sought the injunction to prevent future revelations. The trial court issued the injunction, stating that the plaintiff's right of privacy outweighed the ex-husband's right of free speech.

The court of appeal held that the preliminary injunction was an unconstitutional prior restraint on the ex-husband's and the newspaper's First Amendment rights. The court stated that prior restraints are disfavored and presumptively invalid, and are not permitted to stop the publication of a defamatory statement (43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1144) . The court recognized that not all prior restraints are invalid, with exceptions for extraordinary circumstances such as the prevention of disclosure of military secrets or in some cases the protection of private rights (43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1145) . However, the court found that the injunction was too broad in applying to information obtained at any time in the course of the ex-husband's relationship to the plaintiff. Furthermore, the court reasoned that heightened public interest in the personal activities of a well-known actor is a factor to be weighed in balancing the competing interests (43 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1145-1146) . Concluding that the plaintiff's right to privacy did not outweigh the ex-husband's right to express his uncensored opinion about her use of drugs and alcohol and her sexual relationships, so that the preliminary injunction was an invalid prior restraint, the court reversed the order issuing the preliminary injunction.

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF, A PUBLIC OFFICIAL, HAS FAILED TO ALLEGE MALICE.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (c)).

B. Actual Malice Required if Plaintiff Is Public Official. The first amendment requires that a public official who is suing for allegedly defamatory remarks concerning his or her conduct in public office must allege that the defendant published or broadcast the remarks with knowledge of their falsity or with reckless disregard for their truth (New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 279-280, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 ; Weingarten v. Block (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 144, 162 Cal. Rptr. 701 ; *Sierra Breeze v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. D. Definition of Public Official. The definition "public official" encompasses at a minimum all government employees who have or who appear to have substantial responsibility or control over the conduct of governmental affairs (Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 85, 86 S. Ct. 669, 15 L. Ed. 2d 597 ; Weingarten v. Block (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 144, 162 Cal. Rptr. 701).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law, because the plaintiff is a public official and has failed to allege that the defendant either published or broadcast the allegedly defamatory statements with falsity or reckless disregard for their truth. Optional Paragraph C is for use if the defendant is a public entity, or a public employee sued for conduct committed while he or she was acting in the scope of his or her employment, to counter an actual or anticipated assertion that the actual malice requirement does not apply to governmental defendants.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. Thus, counsel should discuss facts tending to show that the plaintiff is a "public official" within the definition set forth in the case law. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, including a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

California courts recognize both a potential chilling effect on the exercise of First Amendment rights from protracted litigation, and a public interest in resolving defamation cases promptly [Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 252, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 ; Okun v. Superior Court (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 442, 460, 175 Cal. Rptr. 157, 629 P.2d 1369] . That does not mean, however, that a court should grant summary judgment if there is a triable issue of fact concerning actual malice. Instead, a court may give effect to its concern of a potential chilling effect by finding no triable issues unless it appears that actual malice may be proved at trial by clear and convincing evidence [Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 252, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610] . To this extent, summary judgment is a "favored" remedy in defamation cases involving the issue of actual malice under the standard of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 [Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 252, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 ; Good Government Group, Inc. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 672, 685, 150 Cal. Rptr. 258, 586 P.2d 572] .

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint based on a public official's failure to allege malice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Actual Malice Required if Plaintiff Is Public Official

New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , was the landmark case in which the United States Supreme Court reversed a judgment against four individuals and the corporation that publishes the New York Times newspaper. To foster a national commitment to robust debate on public issues, the Court announced a constitutional privilege available to all defendants sued by public officials for defamation. The Court held that the constitutional guarantees require a federal rule that prohibits a public official from recovering damages for a defamatory falsehood relating to his or her official conduct unless he or she proves that the statement was made with "actual malice"--that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was true or not (376 U.S. 254, 279-280) .

In Weingarten v. Block (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 162 Cal. Rptr. 701 , an action against a newspaper for libel for the publication of two news stories and an editorial, the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of nonsuit rendered at the close of the plaintiff's evidence before a jury. Prior to the plaintiff's presentation of evidence, the trial court had made a determination that the plaintiff was both a public official and a public figure.

One of the plaintiff's contentions on appeal was that the trial court had erred by making a determination of the public official/public figure question prior to the commencement of the jury trial. The court of appeal upheld the procedure that was followed, noting that order of proof is generally properly left to the trial court's discretion (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 135) , and that the trial court correctly found public official status arising from the plaintiff's long-term position as city attorney, and as attorney for the Redevelopment Agency (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 139) . Because of this status, the plaintiff was required to show both that the publication was false, and that it was circulated with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 144) . In this regard, the court stated that recklessness could not be established by (1) the newspaper reporter's failure to obtain the plaintiff's version of the events, (2) inaccuracies in reporting judicial proceedings, (3) failure to provide an objective picture, or (4) a showing that the reporting was speculative or even sloppy (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 147) .

Sierra Breeze v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 102, 149 Cal. Rptr. 914 , was an action by a county supervisor against a newspaper that had in a front-page article accused him of having voted "to squander property tax funds" for an airport. The article explained the newspaper's reasons for stating that the vote was a squandering of public money. The supervisor admitted he voted funds for the airport but denied that by doing so he "squandered" public money. After holding that the statement was not libelous, because a false statement of fact as opposed to the statement of opinion was required to constitute libel, the court pointed out that to recover, the plaintiff "must show not only that the use of the word 'squander' was false and that it was a false statement of fact rather than opinion, but that it was published with malice. Malice, in this context, means that it was published with knowledge of its falsehood or with reckless disregard for whether it was false or not. [The plaintiff] does not allege that the article was printed with malice so defined" (86 Cal. App. 3d 102, 107) . The court issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the superior court to grant the newspaper's motion for summary judgment.

[b] Actual Malice Standard Applies to Governmental Defendants

In Nadel v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 , the plaintiffs had been opposed to a development project undertaken by the defendant. Employees of the defendant characterized the plaintiffs as violent, and the plaintiffs sued both the defendant, and the employees who made the statements, for damages arising from the alleged defamation. The defendants all moved for summary judgment, on the ground that the plaintiffs had not alleged that the defendants had acted with constitutionally-required actual malice; the trial court granted the motion and entered judgment for the defendant, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal discussed at length the plaintiffs' contention that the constitutional requirement of actual malice does not apply to governmental defendants. Although the court acknowledged the merit in the plaintiffs' argument that the First Amendment was intended to protect citizens from government, not to protect the government from citizens, the court concluded that any potential defamation liability is a check on governmental abuse of its power to defame, and the requirement of actual malice in the constitutional sense promotes the unfettered exchange of ideas by permitting the government to participate (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1266-1267) . The court held that, as long as a matter of public interest is involved, a governmental defendant may be held liable for defamation only if there is actual knowledge of falsity, or reckless disregard of the truth (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1267) . The court found this result especially appropriate to protect governmental employees, who should not lose their First Amendment protections by virtue of government employment (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1267) .

NOTE:

Although the court broadly stated that its holding applied to actions by public officials and public figures, the case before it involved plaintiffs found to be limited purpose public figures (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1270) . The application of the standard to public officials is therefore technically dictum, although it seems likely that a court that accepts the holding of Nadel would also apply that holding to public officials.

[c] Definition of Public Official

The question of who qualifies as a public official within the meaning of the New York Times privilege has not been answered definitively. In Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 86 S. Ct. 669, 15 L. Ed. 2d 597 , the Court did hold, however, that the category applies at the very least to those among the hierarchy of government employees who have, or appear to the public to have, substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs (383 U.S. 75, 85) .

The facts and procedural background of Weingarten v. Block (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 162 Cal. Rptr. 701 , are discussed in § 142.24[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff was a public official within the meaning of New York Times and Rosenblatt. As city attorney and attorney for the Redevelopment Agency, he had substantial control over the conduct of governmental affairs of Seaside. After his discharge and recall, the public had an independent interest in anything that might touch on his fitness for that office and his continued services to the Redevelopment Agency (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 144) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Actual Malice Required if Plaintiff Is Public Official

McCoy v. Hearst Corp. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 835, 231 Cal. Rptr. 518, 727 P.2d 711 , was a libel action brought by two police officers and a prosecutor against a newspaper and two reporters. The newspaper had published a prisoner's affidavit alleging official misconduct by the plaintiffs in connection with another prisoner's conviction. After publication, the affiant admitted the falsity of the affidavit. The trial court entered judgment against the plaintiffs, and the court of appeal affirmed. The Supreme Court reversed. The Court noted that it had a duty to examine the facts independently, to determine whether or not, under the New York Times test, the defendants knowingly published a falsehood or published a falsehood with reckless disregard for the truth (42 Cal. 3d 835, 841, 845) . The Court concluded that at the time the allegedly libelous material was published, the defendants did not possess a subjective awareness of probable falsity (42 Cal. 3d 835, 868) .

Good Government Group, Inc. v. Superior Court of Los Angeles County (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 672, 150 Cal. Rptr. 258, 586 P.2d 572 , was a proceeding in mandate seeking to compel the trial court to grant the defendant's motion for summary judgment in a libel action brought against it by the plaintiff, who was a city councilman at the time the allegedly libelous publication was made. At the time of the publication, which was made in the course of a successful recall proceeding against the plaintiff, the city was embroiled in "political turmoil and strife that was likely to ulcerate the most tranquil dispositions." In response to the defendant's contentions that the allegedly libelous statement was one of opinion and not of fact and that even if it were read as one of fact, the plaintiff failed in opposition to the motion for summary judgment to show actual malice, the Court began its analysis with the decision in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , which established the principles applicable to an action for libel brought by a public official. The Court then examined the holding of New York Times and pointed out that that case concluded that a public official may not recover damages for a defamatory falsehood relating to his or her official conduct, unless the official proves that the statement was made with actual malice. The term "actual malice" was defined as the defendant's knowledge that the statement was false or the defendant's reckless disregard of whether it was false. The Court noted that in light of this holding, the two major issues that it must decide were whether the statements complained of constituted false statements of fact, and whether a sufficient showing of malice was made to justify the conclusion that the issue must be decided by a jury. The Court concluded that the allegedly defamatory statement was ambiguous--that is, it could be read either as a statement of fact, in which event it would be libelous, or as a statement of opinion, in which event it would not be libelous, and that the issue was one that must be left to the jury's determination (22 Cal. 3d 672, 680) . The peremptory writ was, therefore, denied.

Miller v. Nestande (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 191, 237 Cal. Rptr. 359 , was an action by an incumbent candidate for public office against his opponent and several former prisoners of war (POW) for defamation arising out of the opponent's dissemination of a pamphlet to registered voters accusing the incumbent of cooperating with the enemy while a POW during the Vietnam war. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, finding that the record failed to show any triable issues of fact in regard to whether the defendants made the publication with actual malice. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiff's status as an incumbent candidate for public office required him to prove that the pamphlet was published with actual malice, even though the pamphlet was not published by a member of the media and was unrelated to his conduct while in office (192 Cal. App. 3d 191, 200-201) . It further held that the incumbent could not prove actual malice in light of numerous published descriptions of his conduct while a POW, his censure by the Navy, and the defendants' own information and observations during the war (192 Cal. App. 3d 191, 201-202) .

[b] Definition of Public Official

In Ghafur v. Bernstein (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1230, 32 Cal. Rptr. 3d 626 , the plaintiff was the superintendent of a charter school district who brought a libel suit against an anti-defamation league and two of its principals. The plaintiff alleged that a letter sent to the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and later published on the league's Internet web site, was actionable because it urged an investigation into alleged ties between the plaintiff and a terrorist organization. The trial court granted a motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff was a public official and therefore was required to prove malice in order to prevail on her libel action, which she was unable to do. The court noted that public school superintendents and school board members are public officials for the purpose of defamation actions, given the importance to the community of public school system governance. The court then held that the superintendent of a charter school district was also a public official, because charter schools receive public funding and are considered part of the state's public school system, regardless of whether a charter school superintendent was technically a government employee (131 Cal. App. 4th 1230, 1238-1240) .

McCunn v. California Teachers Ass'n (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 956, 83 Cal. Rptr. 846 , affirmed the granting of summary judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff was a former superintendent of a junior college district who had been discharged after an investigative panel had rendered a report concerning his qualifications. In addition to holding that the report was conditionally privileged and that there was no demonstration of malice under Civ. Code § 48a(4)(d), the court also implicitly determined that the plaintiff was a public official and could not prove malice according to the New York Times standard of reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of the report (3 Cal. App. 3d 956, 962-963) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF, A PUBLIC FIGURE, HAS FAILED TO ALLEGE MALICE.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 142.24, Paragraph A.]

B. Actual Malice Required if Plaintiff Is Public Figure. The First Amendment to the United States Constitution requires that a public figure who is suing for allegedly defamatory remarks must allege that the defendant published or broadcast the remarks with knowledge of their falsity or with reckless disregard for their truth (Curtis Publ'g Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 164, 87 S. Ct. 1975, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1094 ; Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 256, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610).

[Optional] C. Actual Malice Standard Applies to Governmental Defendants. The constitutional requirement that a plaintiff show actual malice to prevail in a defamation action, applies to actions brought against governmental defendants (Nadel v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1267, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188).

D. Definition of Public Figure for All Purposes. An individual who achieves pervasive fame or notoriety becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts (Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 352, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789).

E. Definition of Public Figure for Limited Purpose. An individual who voluntarily injects himself or herself or is drawn into a particular public controversy becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues (Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 352, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 ; Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1689, 285 Cal. Rptr. 430).

F. Determination of Public-Figure Status Made by Court. The question whether a plaintiff is a public figure is determined by the court, not the jury, as a mixed question of law and fact (Stolz v. KSFM 102 FM (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 195, 203-204, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law, on the ground that the plaintiff is a public figure and has failed to allege that the defendant either published or broadcast the allegedly defamatory statements with falsity or reckless disregard for their truth. Optional Paragraph C is for use if the defendant is a public entity, or a public employee sued for conduct committed while he or she was acting in the scope of his or her employment, to counter an actual or anticipated assertion that the actual malice requirement does not apply to governmental defendants.

This form may be adapted for use in a demurrer to a complaint, or in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion and a separate statement of undisputed facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Actual Malice Required if Plaintiff Is Public Figure

In Curtis Publ'g Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S. Ct. 1975, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1094 , the athletic director of a university was accused in the defendant's publication of conspiring to fix a football game involving his university. Its companion case involved an erroneous Associated Press account of a former military general's participation in a university campus riot. Because the plaintiff in Curtis was paid by a private alumni association, and the plaintiff in the companion case had resigned from the military, neither could be classified as a public official under New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (discussed in § 142.24[3][a]). A majority of the United States Supreme Court agreed with Chief Justice Warren's conclusion that the New York Times test should apply to criticism of public figures as well as public officials, extending the constitutional privilege announced in New York Times to protect defamatory criticism of nonpublic persons who are nevertheless intimately involved in the resolution of important public questions, or who by reason of their fame shape events in areas of concern to society at large (388 U.S. 130, 164 ; opinion of Warren, C.J., concurring in result).

In Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 , an organization and its founder brought an action for libel (and related causes of action) against a magazine publisher and other defendants based on an article about a Pulitzer Prize-winning expose concerning the plaintiffs' operations that had been published in a small newspaper. The plaintiffs established a program for drug rehabilitation in 1958. In the 1970's, a newspaper in a small community published a series of articles critical of the plaintiffs and refuting their asserted success in drug treatment. At that point, the plaintiffs had already been the subject of nationwide publicity, including magazine articles and a full-length movie, all of which depicted the plaintiffs favorably; but after the articles were published, the plaintiffs' reputations suffered. The newspaper received the Pulitzer Prize for the articles. Approximately two years later, the magazine published an article concerning the newspaper's Pulitzer Prize. The magazine article was based on the underlying newspaper accounts, and a subsequent book on the same topic written by the same authors, as well as interviews with the authors and a sociology professor. It recounted the history of the organization from its inception as a program for drug rehabilitation, its transformation into an "alternative life-style community," and its claim of church status. It also charged that the organization carried out a policy of intimidating and assaulting its detractors, including an account of the criminal conviction in one episode of the founder and two other members (for conspiracy to commit murder). The plaintiffs filed suit, naming as defendants the magazine publisher, the author of the magazine article, the authors of the newspaper article, and the sociologist quoted in the magazine article. The magazine publisher and author moved for summary judgment, claiming that the plaintiffs were public figures under the rule of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (discussed in § 142.25[3][a]), and consequently that the defendants can be liable only for statements made with actual malice, that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. The defendants asserted that there was no triable issue of fact as to actual malice, entitling them to summary judgment. The trial court denied the motion, and the defendants sought review by writ of mandate.

The California Supreme Court held that the trial court erred in denying the motion for summary judgment, and therefore that the writ of mandate should issue (37 Cal. 3d 244, 250) . The plaintiffs first contested their status as public figures, a question of law crucial to the proper resolution of their libel claim. In New York Times, the United States Supreme Court fundamentally altered judicial treatment of defamation actions by placing a significant constitutional limitation on the ability of a public official to recover damages for a defamatory falsehood (37 Cal. 3d 244, 252) . Emphasizing the importance of free expression and a free press under the First Amendment, the Supreme Court determined that public officials may not prevail in an action for libel relating to their official conduct absent proof that the statement was made with actual malice (37 Cal. 3d 244, 252-253) . In Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 [see § 142.25[3][c]], the Court provided a twofold rationale for extending the New York Times rule to public figures. First, it recognized that public figures are generally less vulnerable to injury from defamation because of their ability to resort to effective self-help. Those persons ordinarily enjoy considerably greater access than private individuals to the media and other channels of communication. This access in turn enables them to counter criticism and to expose the fallacies of defamatory statements (citing Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 344, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789). Second, and more significantly, public figures are less deserving of protection than private persons because public figures, like public officials, have voluntarily exposed themselves to increased risk of injury from defamatory falsehood concerning them.

Gertz therefore defined two classes of public figures. The first is the "all purpose" public figure who has achieved such pervasive fame or notoriety that he or she becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts. The second category is that of the "limited purpose" or "vortex" public figure, an individual who voluntarily injects himself or herself, or is drawn into a particular public controversy and consequently becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues (citing Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 351, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789) (37 Cal. 3d 244, 253) . Unlike the "all purpose" figure, the "limited purpose" public figure loses certain protection for his or her reputation only to the extent that the allegedly defamatory communication relates to his or her role in a public controversy (37 Cal. 3d 244, 253-254) . At this point, the Court noted that the plaintiff organization should at the very least be classified as a "limited purpose" public figure for the purposes of this general controversy, and that the individual plaintiff is a public figure to the extent that his conduct in directing the activities of the organization is at issue. The Court observed that the cases decided since New York Times and Gertz make it clear that a person or group should not be considered a public figure solely because that person or group is a criminal defendant, has sought relief through the courts, or merely happens to be involved in a controversy that is newsworthy. Rather, a public figure plaintiff must have undertaken some voluntary act through which he or she seeks to influence the resolution of the public issues involved. As such, the mere involvement of a person in a matter that the media deems to be of interest to the public does not, in and of itself, require that the person become a public figure for the purpose of a subsequent libel action (37 Cal. 3d 244, 254) . In sum, courts called on to make a determination of public figure status should look for evidence of affirmative actions by which purported public figures have thrust themselves into the forefront of particular public controversies (37 Cal. 3d 244, 254-255) . This determination is often a close question that can only be resolved by considering the totality of the circumstances that comprise each individual controversy.

In the case before it, the Court found that both plaintiffs were public figures based on their myriad attempts to thrust their case and the organization in general into the public eye, rather than on their own statements regarding their public visibility and reputation (e.g., their self-pronounced claims to be "internationally renowned" and "world famous"). The Court noted the facts tending to show the plaintiffs' intent to make its case in the public arena, and stated that although any person or organization has the right to engage in publicity efforts and to attempt to influence public and media opinion regarding their cause, significant, voluntary efforts to inject oneself into the public arena require that the entity be classified as a public figure in any related defamation actions. In this particular case, the plaintiffs sponsored massive publicity and self-promotion efforts over a period of many years, and apparently increased these efforts with regard to the present controversy. As such, they enjoyed remarkable access to the media through which to counter any criticisms they deemed to be unwarranted, and voluntarily exposed themselves to increased risk of injury from unfavorable commentary about them. Thus, the Court concluded, they have clearly met the standards for public figure status for purposes of the defamation action.

The Court then stated that the New York Times decision superimposed a constitutional standard on the common law of libel. A person who is a public figure cannot recover for defamation unless he or she proves, by clear and convincing evidence, that the libelous statement was made with actual malice, that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not (37 Cal. 3d 244, 256) . Subsequently, the United States Supreme Court clarified that reckless conduct is not measured by whether a reasonably prudent person would have published, or would have investigated before publishing. Rather, there must be sufficient evidence to permit the conclusion that the defendant in fact entertained serious doubts concerning the truth of the publication. Publishing with those doubts shows reckless disregard for truth or falsity and demonstrates actual malice (citing St. Amant v. Thompson (1968) 390 U.S. 727, 731, 88 S. Ct. 1323, 20 L. Ed. 2d 262) (37 Cal. 3d 244, 256-257) . This definition establishes a subjective test, under which the defendant's actual belief concerning the truthfulness of the publication is the crucial issue (37 Cal. 3d 244, 257) . The Court noted that although such circumstantial evidence as a failure to investigate, anger and hostility toward the plaintiff, and reliance on unreliable sources are factors that may indicate a publisher's serious doubts, it is relevant only to the extent that it reflects on the subjective attitude of the publisher. The failure to conduct a thorough and objective investigation, standing alone, does not prove actual malice, and does not necessarily raise a triable issue of fact on that controversy. Similarly, mere proof of ill will on the part of the publisher may also be insufficient (37 Cal. 3d 244, 258) .

The Court stated that there is no direct evidence that the magazine author or other magazine personnel believed the questioned passages in the article were false, or even entertained serious doubts respecting their truth. The magazine relied primarily on the writings and conversations of the sociology professor, who taught at a leading university and had authored a number of studies on the organization, and on the newspaper writers, who had received the Pulitzer Prize for their reports and editorials on the organization. Although the plaintiffs questioned the objectivity of these sources, and the extent of their knowledge, they did not question that the magazine considered them to be persons of unsullied reputation (37 Cal. 3d 244, 258-259) . In that context, the magazine's failure to contact the organization or to conduct an objective investigation is relatively inconsequential. A publisher does not have to investigate personally, but may rely on the investigation and conclusions of reputable sources. If the publication comes from a known reliable source, and there is nothing in the circumstances to suggest inaccuracy, there is no duty to investigate. Moreover, there is no duty to write an objective account, because a publisher is not required to provide an objective picture. A publisher who has no serious doubts concerning its truth can present but one side of the story. Therefore, the magazine could properly tell the story of how the newspaper writers won the Pulitzer Prize, and in that story reflect the writers' views on the organization, without also presenting the opposing viewpoint. The Court observed that fair and objective reporting may be a worthy ideal, but there is also room, within the protection of the First Amendment, for writing that seeks to expose wrongdoing and arouse righteous anger, which is typically less than objective in its presentation (37 Cal. 3d 244, 259) .

The Court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the magazine's prior knowledge of its libel suit against the sociology professor and newspaper writers should have required it independently to corroborate the statements from these sources; plaintiff organization's notoriety for filing lawsuits as a censorship device belied a publisher's conclusion that the truthfulness of published material was doubtful. In addition, the Court categorized a letter written by the magazine author previous to his publication of the article, describing the organization as "very, very nasty indeed, and litigious as hell," as "a reasonable reaction" to what he learned while researching the article, rather than as evidence of bias (37 Cal. 3d 244, 260) . The plaintiffs also relied on the argument that the magazine article factually departs from the statements and information furnished by their sources. The Court noted that this contention squarely raises the question of the extent to which the New York Times standard of actual malice permits the exercise of literary license. It stated that the language of New York Times clearly implies that all publications must necessarily be permitted some degree of flexibility in their choice of the proper words and phrases to describe the subject at issue.

The United States Supreme Court has also recognized the need for a certain degree of literary license when properly applying the New York Times standard to the facts of each case (37 Cal. 3d 244, 261) . The language to which the plaintiffs took exception, concerning the plaintiffs' unproved claims of success in drug rehabilitation, for example, fell within an acceptable range of literary license when compared to the exact language used by the defendant's sources and when judged by the general apparent accuracy of the statements made (37 Cal. 3d 244, 263-264) . In addition, the Court affirmed that the related causes of action (intentional infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy, i.e., false light and intrusion), based on the same facts as the defamation claim, were also properly subject to summary judgment for the defendants, in that the plaintiffs failed to show a triable issue of fact as to actual malice (37 Cal. 3d 244, 265) . The Court concluded that none of the alleged defamatory statements goes beyond what a responsible staff writer might draft on the basis of the information provided by sources; the sources were persons of good and distinguished reputation; and nothing in the record suggested that anyone employed by the magazine had any serious doubt as to the reliability of the sources or the truth of the challenged statements. Inasmuch as the record revealed no clear and convincing evidence of actual malice, and thus failed to raise a triable issue of fact, summary judgment should have been entered for the defendants. The Court therefore issued a peremptory writ of mandate, directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment, to enter its order granting the motion (37 Cal. 3d 244, 266) .

[b] Actual Malice Standard Applies to Governmental Defendants

The facts and procedural background of Nadel v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 188 , are discussed in § 142.24[3][b]. The court of appeal concluded that any potential defamation liability is a check on governmental abuse of its power to defame, and the requirement of actual malice in the constitutional sense promotes the unfettered exchange of ideas by permitting the government to participate (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1266-1267) . The court held that, as long as a matter of public interest is involved, a governmental defendant may be held liable for defamation only if there is actual knowledge of falsity, or reckless disregard of the truth (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1267) . The court found this result especially appropriate to protect governmental employees, who should not lose their First Amendment protections by virtue of government employment (28 Cal. App. 4th 1251, 1267) .

[c] Definition of Public Figure for All Purposes

In Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 , a prominent attorney brought a libel action against a magazine that published an article about him concerning a civil action he brought against a police officer on behalf of the family of a shooting victim. The magazine, a John Birch Society monthly publication, published an article accusing the plaintiff of participating in a communist conspiracy to discredit law enforcement, and claimed that the civil suit against the police officer was part of the conspiracy. In his capacity as counsel in the civil suit, the plaintiff attended the coroner's inquest into the victim's death, and initiated actions for damages, but neither discussed the police officer with the press nor played any part in the criminal proceeding. The plaintiff brought a diversity action for libel, and the defendant invoked the privilege of New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 (discussed in § 142.24[3][a]). The district court denied the defendant's motion for summary judgment, in which the defendant asserted that the plaintiff was a public official or public figure, that the article concerned an issue of public interest and concern, and therefore that the defendant was entitled to a constitutional privilege under New York Times because the plaintiff was unable to show malice. Following a jury verdict, the district court concluded that the New York Times standard should govern the case even though the plaintiff was not a public official or public figure, on the basis that the privilege protected discussion of any public issue without regard to the status of person defamed. The federal court of appeals affirmed, and the plaintiff petitioned for a writ of certiorari.

The United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case for further proceedings in accordance with its opinion (418 U.S. 323, 352) . The Court stated that the principal issue is whether a newspaper or broadcaster that publishes defamatory falsehoods about an individual who is neither a public official nor a public figure may claim a constitutional privilege against liability for the injury inflicted by those statements (418 U.S. 323, 332) . The Court noted that three years after New York Times, the Supreme Court extended the constitutional privilege enunciated in that case to defamatory criticism of public figures, in Curtis Publ'g Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S. Ct. 1975, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1094 [see § 142.25[3][a]] (418 U.S. 323, 334) . Curtis extended the New York Times rule to protect defamatory criticism of nonpublic persons who are nevertheless intimately involved in the resolution of important public questions or, by reason of their fame, shape events in areas of concern to society at large (418 U.S. 323, 336-337) . Thereafter, in Rosenbloom v. Metromedia (1971) 403 U.S. 29, 91 S. Ct. 1811, 29 L. Ed. 2d 296 , a plurality opinion extended the First Amendment privilege requiring proof of malice to speech on all matters of public concern. Under Rosenbloom, the of question whether malice was required depended on whether the utterance concerned an issue of public or general concern (418 U.S. 323, 337) . The Court noted that the First Amendment requires the protection of some falsehood in order to protect speech that matters, and proceeded to discuss the applicable body of prior case law to the facts of this particular case (418 U.S. 323 , 341-345). The Court stated that public figures are similar to public officials, vis-a-vis private persons. Hypothetically, it may be possible for someone to become a public figure through no purposeful action of is or her own, but the instances of truly involuntary public figures must be exceedingly rare. For the most part, those who attain this status have assumed roles of special prominence in the affairs of society. Some occupy positions of such persuasive power and influence that they are deemed public figures for all purposes. More commonly, those classed as public figures have thrust themselves to the forefront of particular public controversies in order to influence the resolution of the issues involved. In either event, they invite attention and comment (418 U.S. 323, 345) . The Court further stated that even if the foregoing generalities do not obtain in every instance, the communications media are entitled to act on the assumption that public officials and public figures have voluntarily exposed themselves to increased risk of injury from defamatory falsehood concerning them. No such assumption is justified with respect to a private individual, who has not accepted public office or assumed an influential role in ordering society (citing Curtis Publ'g Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 164, 87 S. Ct. 1975, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1094).

A private individual therefore has relinquished no interest in the protection of his or her own good name, and consequently has a more compelling call on the courts for redress of injury inflicted by defamatory falsehood. Thus, private individuals are not only more vulnerable to injury than public officials and public figures, they are also more deserving of recovery (418 U.S. 323, 345) . The Court stated that the extension of the New York Times test proposed by the Rosenbloom plurality would abridge this legitimate state interest to an unacceptable degree, holding rather that so long as states do not impose liability without fault, they may define for themselves the appropriate standard of liability for a publisher or broadcaster of defamatory falsehood injurious to a private individual (418 U.S. 323, 346-347) . This rule allows states to impose liability on a publisher or broadcaster of defamatory falsehood on a less demanding showing than that required by New York Times (418 U.S. 323, 348) .

Notwithstanding the Court's refusal to extend the New York Times privilege to defamation of private individuals, the defendant contended that the judgment should be affirmed on the ground that the plaintiff is either a public official or a public figure. The Court rejected outright the defendant's contention that the plaintiff was a public official, holding that his brief service on a public housing committee several years prior to the present incident was an insufficient basis for that classification. Otherwise, the Court stated, all lawyers would be swept under the New York Times rule as officers of the court, which would distort the plain meaning of the "public official" category beyond all recognition. The Court then assessed the plaintiff's status as a public figure, stating that in some instances an individual may achieve such pervasive fame or notoriety that he or she becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts. More commonly, however, an individual voluntarily injects himself or herself, or is drawn into a particular public controversy and consequently becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues. In either case, those persons assume special prominence in the resolution of public questions. The Court noted that the plaintiff had long been active in community and professional affairs, having served as an officer of local civil groups and of various professional organizations, and having published several books and articles on legal subjects. Although the plaintiff was consequently well known in some circles, he had achieved no general fame or notoriety in the community. None of the prospective jurors called at the trial had ever heard of him. The Court refused to "lightly assume" that a citizen's participation in community and professional affairs renders that person a public figure for all purposes, noting that "[i]t is preferable to reduce the public-figure question to a more meaningful context by looking to the nature and extent of an individual's participation in the particular controversy giving rise to the defamation." The Court therefore concluded that the New York Times standard did not apply to this particular case, and that the trial court erred in entering judgment for the defendant. Because the jury was allowed to impose liability without fault and was permitted to presume damages without proof of injury, the Court ordered a new trial on remand (418 U.S. 323, 352) .

[d] Definition of Public Figure for Limited Purpose

The factual and procedural background of Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 , is discussed in § 142.25[3][c]. In discussing whether the plaintiff was a public figure with regard to the controversy involved in the defamation action, the Court held that he was not, in that he played a minimal role at the coroner's inquest, and his participation related solely to his representation of a private client. He took no part in the criminal prosecution of the criminal defendant. Moreover, he never discussed either the criminal or civil litigation with the press. He plainly did not thrust himself into the vortex of this public issue, nor did he engage the public's attention in an attempt to influence its outcome. The Court was persuaded that the trial court did not err in refusing to characterize petitioner as a public figure for the purpose of the instant litigation.

In Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 285 Cal. Rptr. 430 , a prominent local lawyer and businessman who obtained a horse racing license regarding a racing meet in his community brought a defamation action against a local newspaper based on several published articles regarding his personal qualifications to hold the license. The plaintiff was president and legal representative, as well as a director and shareholder, of the parent corporation of a company that sought a contract to conduct horse racing. He competed with a local politician for a lease of the racing facilities, a prerequisite to obtaining a license to operate a newly created spring racing meet in the area. The plaintiff, the high bidder, was initially selected to receive the contract, subject to licensing. Public controversy arose over charges that the plaintiff was unqualified for the contract because his organization was unincorporated; consequently, his conditional approval was retracted, and his rival selected. The plaintiff publicly denounced the decision and accused the parties to the contract of collusion. He subsequently filed a lawsuit against the board of directors of the racing facility, the rival racing association that received the contract, the state agency involved, and state and county officials, seeking a temporary restraining order to prevent the award of the contract as decided. The suit alleged conspiracy to break the plaintiff's contract award. The parties argued their positions at public hearings, and the bidding process was eventually reopened. The plaintiff was again awarded the lease subject to licensing. The defendant published articles (not the subject of the instant suit) concerning the plaintiff's license application and his plans regarding the race meet. More public meetings were held regarding the license application, other competitors appeared, and the plaintiff's organization was eventually awarded a license to conduct the meet. Further public controversies arose over permitted incidental use of the facilities for the duration of the racing event. The defendant provided daily coverage of the racing.

After the race event ended, the plaintiff announced his intention to renew its license for the following year. For approximately five months, the defendant published no articles about the license renewal or related racing topics. However, that fall, defendant began publishing a series of articles about the plaintiff and his personal qualifications to be involved in horse racing. The articles concerned investigations into possible mishandling of racing funds and the plaintiff's background, and other evidence of the plaintiff's involvement with illegal gambling and other criminal activities. After the first article appeared, the plaintiff responded in a press conference, about which defendant published an article the following day. The plaintiff filed the instant defamation action. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff was a public official, and actual malice could not be shown. The plaintiff's appeal resulted in a published opinion reversing the trial court and holding that the plaintiff was not a public official as a matter of law [see Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 252 Cal. Rptr. 586 (discussed in § 142.66[3][a])]. The court in that case (Mosesian I) did not, however, resolve the question whether the plaintiff was a public figure, which also requires proof of actual malice as a predicate for damages. That issue was addressed on remand. Mosesian I also held that no reasonable jury could find actual malice; therefore, if it were to be determined in further proceedings that the plaintiff was a public figure, he would be unable to recover damages for defamation, and defendants would be entitled to judgment.

On remand, the trial court ruled that there were triable issues of fact on the question whether the plaintiff was a public figure for all purposes, but concluded as a matter of law that the plaintiff was a public figure for the limited purpose of the public controversy over his qualifications to be licensed for horse racing. The trial court therefore granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and dismissed the libel action based on the plaintiff's inability to prove actual malice. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1689) . The court stated that the United States Supreme Court has defined two categories of public figures for First Amendment analysis. The first is the "all purpose" public figure who has achieved such pervasive fame or notoriety that he or she becomes a public figure for all purposes and in all contexts. The second is the "limited purpose" or "vortex" public figure, an individual who voluntarily injects himself or herself or is drawn into a particular public controversy and consequently becomes a public figure for a limited range of issues (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1689) . The court noted that of the 31 published articles that are the subject of the action, many were prominently displayed and presumably read by many people in the community affected by the horse racing meet. Further, they were also presumably the basis of numerous radio and television news commentaries throughout that general geographical region (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1689-1690) . The court proceeded to outline the events as they unfolded, from the point at which the spring horse racing meet was authorized pursuant to state law in 1976 until the institution of the defamation action some four years later (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1690-1693) . The Court noted that speech on matters of public concern is at the heart of the First Amendment (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1693) . Freedom of expression on public questions and debate on public issues should be uninhibited, robust, and wide-open, even though it may well include vehement, caustic, and sometimes unpleasantly sharp attacks on government and public officials (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1693-1694) . For this reason, to recover damages for a defamatory falsehood relating to official conduct, a public official must prove the statement was made with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was true or false. By contrast, speech on purely private matters is of less First Amendment concern, and a plaintiff is not required to prove actual malice if the libelous statement relates to a private matter. Moreover, plaintiffs who are private individuals need not prove actual malice even if speech involves a matter of public concern. Unlike public officials or public figures, private individuals have not voluntarily exposed themselves to an increased risk of injury from defamatory statements and generally lack effective opportunities for rebutting those statements.

The court stated that three types of defamation plaintiffs have been identified who must prove actual malice if defamatory speech relates to a matter of public concern: the public official, the general-purpose public figure, and the limited-purpose public figure. Whether a plaintiff is a public official or public figure is in the first instance a question of law for the trial court to decide (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1694) . The court discussed the U.S. Supreme Court's creation of the public figure concept in Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc. (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 345, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 [see § 142.25[3][c]] , which held that persons classed as public figures are in a similar position to those classed as public officials. Hypothetically, it may be possible for someone to become a public figure through no purposeful action of his or her own, but the instances of truly involuntary public figures must be exceedingly rare. The Supreme Court further stated that it is preferable to reduce the public figure question to a more meaningful context by looking to the nature and extent of an individual's participation in the particular controversy giving rise to the defamation (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1697) . The court discussed several cases in which the plaintiff was found to be a public figure for a limited purpose (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1697-1700) .

The court noted that in this particular case, from the summer of 1979 to the beginning of the spring racing meet in May 1980, there was a substantial and almost continuous public debate and controversy over, first, who would receive the license for the 1980 spring meet and, second, what policies would be followed in conducting the meet. The first issue as to who would receive the license impacted the public's consciousness dramatically when it was learned the initial contest would be between, on the one side, the plaintiff, a prominent local lawyer and businessman, and on the other side a prominent local elected official. This fact alone, the court noted, whetted the public's appetite for controversy and created a wide interest in the outcome, apart from the question regarding which party should receive the license based on merit (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1700) . The court, after describing the events that occurred from that point until the time the allegedly defamatory articles were published, observed that the plaintiff's personal qualifications to be licensed were subject to public scrutiny and comment. The court noted that horse racing and gambling are controversial subjects and deserving of serious public concern, and that the California regulatory scheme for licensing and control of horse racing is detailed and replete with rules designed to protect the public from criminal elements who might be attracted to the horse races (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1701-1702) . The plaintiff argued that even assuming he attained public figure status for the 1980 spring meet, his public status ended after the meet was held and before the publication of the defamatory article. The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that because there was no press comment about his horse racing activities for some five months after the 1980 meet, at the time that defendant published the fall 1980 article, the plaintiff was merely a private businessman and lawyer. The court explained that the plaintiff's personal qualifications, background, and honesty as a license applicant, as well as his organization and his associates, remained subject to public scrutiny by virtue of his intention to renew his license the following year (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1702) . The fact that the plaintiff had not formally applied for the 1981 license when the article appeared is of no consequence, because the plaintiff's announcement to seek renewal reinjected the issue of his personality into the continuing public controversy over the operation of spring horse racing in that community (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1702-1703) .

The court concluded that the issue of the plaintiff's qualifications to be licensed was before the public, and under the First Amendment defendant was entitled to publish the information it had received regarding his qualifications. Public figure status, the court stated, does not end spontaneously when the publicity ends. Rather, the public figure status continues as long as the specific issue for which the public status was achieved continues. Under the totality of the unique circumstances of the case, by publicly announcing his intention to apply for a license for the 1981 spring horse racing meet, the plaintiff placed his qualifications to be licensed in the public eye and foreclosed his return to private figure at least until the 1981 licensing procedures were completed (233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 1703) .

[e] Determination of Public-Figure Status Made by Court

In Stolz v. KSFM 102 FM (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 195, 35 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740 , the plaintiffs were a radio station and the owner-operator of the station, who sued another radio station for defamation, based on a discussion over the latter station concerning assertedly improper conduct by defendants. The trial court ruled that the plaintiffs were public figures, and therefore had the burden of proving that defendant had acted with knowledge of the falsity of the statements, or with reckless disregard of the truth of the statements. The jury returned a general verdict in favor of defendant, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered pursuant to that verdict.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court properly found that the plaintiffs were public figures, required by the First Amendment to establish actual malice in order to recover for defamation (30 Cal. App. 4th 195, 205-207) . The court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the trial court had improperly made the public-figure determination based on argument, rather than evidence. The court held that, because the determination is to be made by the court, rather than by the jury, appellate review is based on the entire record (30 Cal. App. 4th 195, 204) . In the case before it, the evidence supported the public-figure finding made by the trial court (30 Cal. App. 4th 195, 205-207) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Actual Malice Required if Plaintiff Is Public Figure

In Annette F. v. Sharon S. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 100 , the plaintiff sued her former lesbian partner for libel based on a letter sent by the defendant to the directors of a gay and lesbian organization and to a gay and lesbian newspaper. In the letter, the defendant referred to the plaintiff as a "convicted perpetrator of domestic abuse," and also accused the plaintiff of making repeated false accusations of child abuse and neglect against the defendant. The very public comments made by the defendant were part of a longer dispute between the parties over the plaintiff's right to adopt the children conceived through artificial insemination by the defendant while the two parties were in a committed relationship. Their dispute over the right to adopt had received extensive public attention, as had the relationship between the two parties in general, because they had purposefully drawn public media attention to themselves to promote gay rights. The trial court denied the defendant's motion to strike the libel complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the so-called anti-SLAPP statute, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the statements made by the defendant were protected by the anti-SLAPP statute (119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1160-1162) , and that the plaintiff had failed to establish a probability of prevailing on her claim as required to defeat the motion to strike. The court held that the plaintiff was a limited purpose public figure for purposes of the dispute between the parties (119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1163-1166) , which meant that the plaintiff was required to show actual malice on the part of the defendant in order to prevail on her libel claim. The plaintiff failed to do so. The defendant, who was not a lawyer, thought the phrase "convicted perpetrator of domestic abuse," was accurate. The defendant meant to refer to a family court's finding that the plaintiff had committed domestic violence against her, and not necessarily to a criminal conviction. The court noted that the use of the term "convicted" to refer to a noncriminal adjudication was fairly common, and that the use of the phrase in the context used by the defendant did not prove actual malice (119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1168-1170) . As to the defendant's statement that the plaintiff's accusations of child abuse and neglect against the defendant were false, the court noted that the charges had been investigated by the children's attorney and found to be unsubstantiated. Because the plaintiff failed to introduce any competent evidence to show that the accusations of child abuse were true, the court held that the plaintiff failed to show a probability of success in proving libel based on that statement made by the defendant (119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1170-1171) .

In Rosenaur v. Scherer (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 260, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674 , the plaintiff was a property owner who sought through a local public initiative to obtain the zoning changes needed to permit commercial development on his property. During the public battle over the initiative, his political opponents distributed a campaign flyer alleging that the property was partly owned by out-of-town speculators. Although that fact was no longer true, the information for the assertion had come from the most recent documents filed in the county assessor's office by the plaintiff's partnership. After the initiative was defeated, the plaintiff brought suit against his former opponents for the false assertion in the flyer. The trial court granted the defendants' anti-SLAPP motion to strike the complaint brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and the plaintiff appealed. The plaintiff conceded that he was a public figure for purposes of the suit and that he had to show that the defendants acted with actual malice in order to prevail. However, the court of appeal concluded that the plaintiff could not meet that burden because the defendants had not acted with reckless disregard for the truth of their statements. The court held that the defendants had a right to rely on the information provided in the public documents if they had no reason to doubt the accuracy of the information. The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that the defendants had an obligation to verify the information first by contacting the plaintiff or one of the alleged out-of-town partners (88 Cal. App. 4th 260, 275-276) .

In Beilenson v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 944, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 357 , the plaintiff, a defeated candidate for political office, sued his political opponent for libel based on a campaign mailer that stated that the plaintiff "ripped off" California taxpayers because he maintained a private law practice on the side while he was on the public payroll. The defendant brought a SLAPP motion to dismiss the action. The trial court denied the motion, finding that the plaintiff met his burden of proof that there was a "possibility" that he would prevail. The defendant sought relief by way of extraordinary writ. The parties subsequently settled the dispute, but the court of appeal issued a decision because of the importance of the issues. The court initially found that the accusations in the mailer were statements of opinion entitled to the protection of the First Amendment. Furthermore, the court stated that even if the statements were deemed to be untruthful and not statements of opinion, the plaintiff was required to establish that the defendant was aware of the probable falsity. However, the record lacked evidence that the defendant acted with malice (44 Cal. App. 4th 944, 952) .

The facts and procedural background of Live Oak Publ'g Co. v. Cohagan (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 286 Cal. Rptr. 198 , are discussed in § 142.22[3][a]. In Live Oak, the court of appeal held that a newspaper could not state a libel cause of action against a person whose letter it had published itself, because publication to a third person is an element of that tort (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1283-1287) . With respect to the slander cause of action brought by the newspaper, the court affirmed summary judgment for the defendant, based on the plaintiff's failure to introduce evidence of actual malice in opposition to the defendant's motion (234 Cal. App. 3d 1277, 1287-1293) .

The facts and procedural background of Weingarten v. Block (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 162 Cal. Rptr. 701 , are discussed in § 142.24[3][a]. The court of appeal determined that the plaintiff was a public figure, in addition to being a public official, and that the plaintiff (as he conceded) was therefore required to show the defendant's reckless disregard for truth or falsity (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 144) .

[b] Definition of Public Figure for All Purposes

In Belli v. Curtis Publ'g Co. (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 384, 102 Cal. Rptr. 122 , the court of appeal affirmed the granting of summary judgment for the defendant in an action that arose out of two articles concerning attorney Melvin Belli's participation in Jack Ruby's trial for the murder of Lee Harvey Oswald. In his answer to the defendants' interrogatories, the plaintiff acknowledged that he was a public figure, and that the Jack Ruby trial was a matter of public interest (although the court did not specify whether the scope of the plaintiff's status as a public figure was for all purposes or for a limited purpose) (25 Cal. App. 3d 384, 388) . The court held that the plaintiff could not show with the evidence that the two disputed magazine articles were published with malice. The plaintiff contended that the defendant had knowledge of false statements in one of the articles and that the second was published in reckless disregard of whether it was true or false, but the court of appeal reviewed the evidence and concluded that the plaintiff's contentions were without merit and that the summary judgment was proper (25 Cal. App. 3d 384, 392-401) .

[c] Definition of Public Figure for Limited Purpose

In Gilbert v. Sykes (2007) 147 Cal. App. 4th 13, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 752 , a plastic surgery patient filed a medical malpractice action against her plastic surgeon. The plastic surgeon filed a cross-complaint against the patient for defamation and related torts based on statements the patient had published on her Internet web site publicizing her dissatisfaction with the results of her surgery. The patient filed a motion to strike the cross-complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the motion to strike after concluding that the surgeon had demonstrated a probability of success on the merits. The court of appeal reversed. For purposes of the surgeon's defamation claims, the court of appeal held that the surgeon was a limited-purpose public figure, and as such he was required to show that the patient's statements were made with actual malice in order to prevail. The court first held that the relative merits of plastic surgery was a subject that had garnered national attention and was the focus of widespread public interest. In reaching the conclusion that the surgeon was a limited-purpose public figure in this public debate, the court relied on evidence that the plastic surgeon had placed himself into the public debate by appearing on local television shows, writing numerous articles in medical journals and beauty magazines advocating the procedures, testifying as an expert witness on the subject, and advertising his services in the local media (147 Cal. App. 4th 13, 25) . The court also rejected the surgeon's argument that he was not a limited-purpose public figure because there was no preexisting public debate over the controversy surrounding this particular patient's treatment at the hands of the surgeon. The court stressed that it was not necessary that the surgeon's private conduct generate a public controversy before he could be deemed a public figure. If there is a public debate on a topic that concerns a substantial number of people, such as the merits of plastic surgery in general, and the surgeon placed himself into that debate, then his particular words and actions relating to that debate become fair game (147 Cal. App. 4th 13, 25) . Finally, the court held that the surgeon had failed to demonstrate that he could prevail on a defamation claim based on any words or pictures the patient had published on the web site (147 Cal. App. 4th 13, 27-34) .

The factual and procedural background of Annette F. v. Sharon S. (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 100 , is described in § 142.25[4][a]. In the course of reaching its decision, the court of appeal held that the plaintiff was a limited purpose public figure because she purposefully drew public and media attention to her relationship with the defendant to promote gay marriage and second-parent adoptions. While living together, the plaintiff and the defendant had solicited public attention and media coverage of their commitment ceremony, had set up a web site to publicize their ceremony and provide information to others about gay marriage and second-parent adoptions, and had published a book on gays in the workplace. They had willingly participated in a national television show on gay marriage, which received extensive coverage in the national press. The plaintiff's involvement in the very public litigation between her and the defendant over the plaintiff's right to adopt furthered her public recognition as an advocate for gay and lesbian rights, and specifically as an advocate for second-parent adoptions. In fact, the plaintiff had taken advantage of her national recognition to set up a nonprofit organization to solicit donations to fund her litigation seeking to establish her right to adopt. Therefore, the plaintiff's status as a limited purpose public figure extended to the subject matter of the legal dispute between the plaintiff and her former partner over the adoption rights to their children. Because the alleged domestic violence perpetrated by the plaintiff against the defendant was at the heart of the adoption dispute and related proceedings, the plaintiff was required to show that the defendant's statements were made with actual malice (119 Cal. App. 4th 1146, 1164-1166) .

Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 , is discussed in § 142.25[3][a].

Lewis v. Ueberroth (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 442, 195 Cal. Rptr. 150 , was an action for libel brought by two leaders of a community group opposing development of an area in the San Fernando Valley as a site for the Olympics, against the president of the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. The defendant had made statements critical of the leadership of the groups opposing the Olympics in an interview published in a local magazine. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the action, holding that the statements made were well within the bounds of protected public debate and could not be the basis for a libel action (147 Cal. App. 3d 442, 446) . In discussing the plaintiffs' status, the court stated that although they did not concede the point that they were public figures for purposes of the controversy, their self-proclaimed status as "active and vocal community leaders" appeared to resolve that issue (147 Cal. App. 3d 442, 446 n.2).

The facts and procedural background of Weingarten v. Block (1980) 102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 162 Cal. Rptr. 701 , are discussed in § 142.24[3][a]. In Weingarten, the court of appeal found that the plaintiff thrust himself to the forefront of the public controversy that arose from his termination, and that he was actively involved in influencing its resolution by his involvement in the recall and his continuing representation of the Redevelopment Agency as its chief local counsel. Consequently, the plaintiff was a public figure for the purpose of the litigation under the rule established in Gertz v.

Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (discussed in § 142.89[3][a]) (102 Cal. App. 3d 129, 142) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT AS DISTRIBUTOR OF A DEFAMATORY PUBLICATION IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO ALLEGE MALICE.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 142.24, Paragraph A.]

B. Malice Required to Recover for Distribution of Defamatory Publication of Another. The activity of selling or distributing books or other publications is protected by the First Amendment. A plaintiff must therefore show malice to hold a distributor liable for disseminating defamatory material published by another. At the very least, a plaintiff must show that the distributor knew of the defamatory content of the material or knew facts giving rise to a duty to investigate (*Osmond v. EWAP Inc. (1984) 153 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment in a defamation action if the motion is based on the contention that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff has failed to raise a triable issue on the question whether the defendant, as the distributor of a defamatory publication of another, had the requisite malice, in the sense that he or she knew or should have known that the publication was defamatory.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)], which include facts showing that the defendant had no actual or constructive knowledge that the publication was defamatory.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a general demurrer to the complaint, or to support a motion for judgment on the pleadings, if it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff has failed to allege facts showing that the defendant acted with malice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malice Required to Recover for Distribution of Defamatory Publication of Another

In Osmond v. EWAP Inc. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 200 Cal. Rptr. 674 , the plaintiff, a former child actor who played the character "Eddie Haskell" in a popular television series, sued an operator of adult book stores for displaying and selling copies of a pornographic film with labels stating that the male star of the film was "John Holmes, who played 'Little Eddie Haskell on the Leave it to Beaver' show." The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that there was no triable issue of fact on the issue of malice. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed the ensuing judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiff had failed to raise a triable issue on the question of malice (153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 855-857) . The court stated that one who merely disseminates the defamatory publication of another is not liable absent knowledge either of the defamatory nature of the publication or of other extraneous facts that should have put him or her on guard (153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 852) . The court observed that the defendant's activity of selling or distributing books or other publications was protected by the First Amendment, regardless of the fact that "adult" publications were involved. The court concluded that this constitutional protection required proof of malice before holding the defendant or any other distributor liable in a civil action for disseminating libelous material published by a third party (153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 853-854) . The court stated that to establish the requisite malice or scienter, the plaintiff must, at the very least, show that the defendant knew of the libelous matter, or that the defendant should have known of it because of knowledge of other facts that imposed a duty to investigate (153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 854) . The court held that summary judgment was proper, because the supporting evidence sufficiently established lack of malice by showing that the defendant had no knowledge of the libel nor of other facts giving rise to a duty to investigate, while the plaintiff's opposing evidence failed to raise a triable issue on this question (153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 855-857) . The court also noted that its affirmance on this ground was independent of the issue whether the plaintiff was a public figure because of his status as a former child actor (153 Cal. App. 3d 842, 857 n.4).

This form may be submitted in support of motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff is a public official or figure and has failed to allege that the allegedly defamatory statement was false.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion and a separate statement of undisputed facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]. If appropriate, counsel may also combine these points with those in § 142.24 or § 142.25.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint based on the failure of a plaintiff who is a public official or figure to allege the falsity of the defamatory statement.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Who Is Public Official or Figure Must Show Falsity

The facts and procedural background of Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 106 S. Ct. 1558, 89 L. Ed. 2d 783 , are discussed in § 142.32[3][a]. In reversing the decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court in Philadelphia Newspapers, the United States Supreme Court embarked on a thorough discussion of recent defamation case law, including a discussion of Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (discussed in § 142.25[3][c]), and of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc. (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S. Ct. 2939, 86 L. Ed. 2d 593 , the facts and procedural backgrounds of which are discussed in § 142.303[3][a]. In its discussion, the United States Supreme Court clarified many questions that have arisen since the latter two cases were decided. The most important of its clarifications is the Court's announcement that under New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , a public figure plaintiff must show the falsity of the statements at issue to prevail on a suit for defamation (citing Garrison v. Louisiana (1964) 379 U.S. 64, 74, 85 S. Ct. 209, 13 L. Ed. 2d 125). The Court then extended this rule of law to hold that the First Amendment requires a private figure plaintiff, suing a newspaper or other media defendant for publishing an article of public concern, to bear the burden of showing falsity before recovering damages (475 U.S. 767, 775) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Who Is Public Official or Figure Must Show Falsity

In Aisenson v. American Broad. Co. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 146, 269 Cal. Rptr. 379 , a superior court judge brought an action against a television station that broadcast the results of an opinion poll it conducted among members of the criminal law bar, concerning performance ratings of criminal law judges. The complaint alleged defamation based on the plaintiff's receiving the worst overall rating of all the judges evaluated. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant, holding that a public official may not recover damages for a published statement touching on fitness for office without proof that the defendant made a false statement of fact and that the defendant either knew the statement was false or recklessly disregarded whether it was false or not. There was no evidence in this case that the defendant either broadcast false statements of fact, or tampered with the results of the poll (220 Cal. App. 3d 146, 154-156) .

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff has failed to raise a triable issue on the question whether the defendant, making the alleged defamatory remarks during the exercise of religion, had the requisite constitutional malice.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion and should attach a separate statement of undisputed facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a general demurrer to the complaint, or to support a motion for judgment on the pleadings, if it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff has failed to allege facts showing that the defendant acted with constitutional malice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malice Required if Remarks Were Exercise of Religion

In McNair v. Worldwide Church of God (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 363, 242 Cal. Rptr. 823 , the plaintiff, a member of a church, was married to a minister of that church. The church had very strict views on the permanence of marriage, and divorce was very difficult to obtain. Some years after the marriage, a division occurred within the church, and the plaintiff allied herself with the dissidents while the plaintiff's husband remained with the church. When the plaintiff failed to disassociate herself from the dissidents, her marriage deteriorated. In the meantime the church modified its position and made divorce somewhat more acceptable. After the plaintiff and her husband were divorced, the husband remarried and continued his ministry. At the next annual church conference, the church's controversial change in position on divorce and remarriage was discussed. Because the plaintiff's former husband was a very prominent member of the ministry, his divorce and remarriage were specifically addressed. Both during that conference and in a later written report, the plaintiff's behavior as a wife and member of the church were discussed and criticized in intimate detail. After learning of the remarks, the plaintiff sued the church, her former husband, and another minister on several causes of action, among them libel and slander. After a jury trial, the trial court entered judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court said that the clause in the First Amendment that describes the free exercise of religion guarantees the freedom to believe and the freedom to act. However, religious conduct may be regulated for the protection of society if a paramount interest is threatened with grave abuse. The court concluded that the protection of a person's good name is a sufficiently important state interest that the burden of tort damages may be imposed on a church and its evangelist minister's actions under certain limitations (197 Cal. App. 3d 363, 374) . In articulating these limitations, the court drew many analogies from cases in which the reputational interests of a plaintiff were balanced against the free speech and free press protections of the First Amendment (197 Cal. App. 3d 363, 375-377) . The court concluded that in this particular case the accommodation of the competing societal interests--the protection of personal reputations on the one hand, and the free exercise of religion on the other--requires that in order for a plaintiff to recover damages for defamatory remarks made during the course of a doctrinal explanation by a duly authorized minister, the plaintiff must show, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defamation was made with constitutional malice, that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not (197 Cal. App. 3d 363, 377) . The court concluded that the plaintiff had not presented evidence sufficient to show actual malice (197 Cal. App. 3d 363, 378) .

[b] Ministerial Exception Prohibits Inquiry Into Truth or Falsity of Religious Doctrine

In Gunn v. Mariners Church, Inc. (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 206, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , a worship director sued his former church employer after the church terminated his employment because they discovered he was gay. Church leaders then made statements to the congregation that plaintiff had been "caught in a sin," had admitted to "moral and sexual actions that are sin," had suffered a "breakdown in character," and was "a broken man." Plaintiff sued for defamation, invasion of privacy, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted summary judgment for the church. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, applying the so-called "ministerial exception" to conclude that the statements were not actionable. The court first noted that it was the established practice of that church to explain to the congregation the reasons for termination of any pastoral leader. The court then held that the truth or falsity of the statements could not be evaluated without an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the doctrinal beliefs of the church, a task the court could not undertake under established First Amendment doctrine regardless of the potentially tortious nature of the statements (167 Cal. App. 4th 206, 216) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SUMMARY JUDGEMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF, A PUBLIC FIGURE, HAS FAILED TO ESTABLISH RECKLESS DISREGARD FOR TRUTH.

A. Reckless Disregard for Truth Required if Plaintiff Is Public Figure. A public figure who is suing for allegedly defamatory remarks must allege that the defendant published or broadcast the remarks with knowledge of their falsity or with reckless disregard for their truth (Curtis Publ'g Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 164, 87 S. Ct. 1975, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1094 ; Copp v. Paxton (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 829, 845, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831).

B. Clear and Convincing Evidence Required. A plaintiff must show actual malice, that is, that the defendant published or broadcast the allegedly defamatory material with knowledge of its falsity or with reckless disregard for its truth, with clear and convincing evidence (Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 71, 84, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 600).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a libel action that the plaintiff has not established that the defendant acted with reckless disregard for the truth.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant did not act with reckless disregard for the truth. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the defendant's knowledge at the time of the publication of the allegedly defamatory statement, and should argue that the statement was not published with reckless disregard for its truth or falsity.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reckless Disregard for Truth Required if Plaintiff Is Public Figure

Curtis Publ'g Co. v. Butts (1967) 388 U.S. 130, 87 S. Ct. 1975, 18 L. Ed. 2d 1094 , is discussed in § 142.25[3][a].

In Copp v. Paxton (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 829, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 831 , the plaintiff, an individual who held himself out as an expert on earthquake safety, brought a libel action against a county officer for defamation and interference with prospective economic advantage. The defendant had sent a letter to an individual who requested information about the plaintiff, and in this letter questioned the plaintiff's credentials. Enclosed with the letter was a staff memorandum that implied that the plaintiff exploited people's fears for personal gain, and was thus actionable speech. The memorandum was then allegedly passed on to the sponsors of a conference that the plaintiff was promoting, and the sponsors subsequently withdrew support. The trial court granted a summary judgment for the defendant, finding that all the communications were absolutely privileged.

Although disagreeing that the communication of the memorandum to the third party was privileged, the court of appeal affirmed the defense judgment. The court found that the republication of the memorandum was entitled to a qualified privilege requiring the plaintiff to prove that the statement was made with actual malice by showing reckless disregard for its truth or falsity (45 Cal. App. 4th 829, 845-846) . The court stated that while it could be inferred that the memorandum reached the conference sponsors from the defendant, it was not certain that it reached them through this route. Furthermore, the memorandum could have been enclosed with the letter by a staff assistant, or by the defendant without reflection. The court concluded that the finder of fact could not reasonably infer that the defendant acted with reckless disregard for the truth or falsity of the statement (45 Cal. App. 4th 829, 848) .

[b] Clear and Convincing Evidence Required

In Christian Research Institute v. Alnor (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 71, 55 Cal. Rptr. 3d 600 , plaintiffs were a nonprofit religious information dissemination organization and its president who brought an action for defamation against a former employee who administered an Internet site reporting on the fundraising practices of Christian organizations. The defamation claim was based on defendant's publication of a news item on his site stating that plaintiffs were the subject of a criminal mail fraud investigation after plaintiffs solicited funds from its own readers under the alleged pretense that their organization had lost a large sum of money due to the postal service's misdelivery of a substantial amount of plaintiffs' mail. Defendant filed a motion to strike the defamation cause of action under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court denied the motion and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order after concluding that the plaintiffs failed to show a probability of success on the merits. The court first held that plaintiffs had submitted sufficient evidence to prove by a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant's statements were false (148 Cal. App. 4th 71, 81-82) . However, because the plaintiffs were public figures, they were required to show with clear and convincing evidence that defendant published his statements with actual malice, that is, with knowledge of their falsity or with reckless disregard for the truth. The court also held that while a court ruling on a motion to strike does not generally weigh the strength of competing evidence, neither the trial court nor a reviewing court is required to consider the evidence of actual malice in the light most favorable to the plaintiff or draw all permissible inferences in favor of plaintiff (148 Cal. App. 4th 71, 84-86) . The court then concluded that plaintiffs had failed to offer clear and convincing evidence that defendant published his statements with actual malice. The court concluded in part that it was mere speculation to claim that defendant knew his statements were false when published, and the evidence established at most that defendant had been negligent in his investigation of the facts, which is insufficient to prove actual malice (148 Cal. App. 4th 71, 87-93) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reckless Disregard for Truth Required if Plaintiff Is Public Figure

Rosenaur v. Scherer (2001) 88 Cal. App. 4th 260, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 674 , is discussed in § 142.25[4][a].

In Jackson v. Paramount Pictures Corp. (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 10, 80 Cal. App. 2d 1 , the plaintiff was an internationally known performer who brought suit against a motion picture studio and a reporter who allegedly slandered the plaintiff by reporting in a radio interview and on the studio's television program that a videotape existed showing the plaintiff engaged in sexual contact with an underage boy. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendants, finding in part that the reporter lacked actual malice when making the allegedly slanderous statements because they were not made with knowledge they were false or with reckless disregard of whether they were false. The reporter in that case stated she believed her information source to be reliable, having proven reliable as a source of previous truthful information about the plaintiff. Additionally, the reporter had other reasons to believe the information to be accurate, including a well-known past criminal investigation and civil suit concerning the plaintiff involving allegations of similar sexual misconduct, the fact that a district attorney's office was in fact conducting a search for a videotape, and the fact that a newspaper report described such a videotape (68 Cal. App. 4th 10, 34-35) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the plaintiff is a private citizen who is suing for defamation, the allegedly defamatory statement related to a matter of public concern, and the complaint fails to allege at least that the defendant was negligent.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points may be used to support a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings or a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on a private individual's failure to allege negligence if the allegedly defamatory statement is related to a matter of public concern, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Negligence Required if Allegedly Defamatory Statement Relates to Matter of Public Concern

In Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (discussed in § 142.25[3][c]), the United States Supreme Court held that a private individual suing a publisher or broadcaster could not recover any damages without establishing that the language was published or broadcast with fault. The Court stated that so long as they do not impose liability without fault, the states may define for themselves the appropriate standard of liability for a publisher or broadcaster of defamatory falsehood injurious to a private individual (418 U.S. 323, 347) . The Court suggested, but did not command, that a negligence standard of fault would be appropriate (418 U.S. 323, 350) .

NOTE:

A California court of appeal decision has suggested, in dicta, that the standard in California is one of negligence [see Widener v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 415, 433, 142 Cal. Rptr. 304] .

The constitutional restrictions set forth in Gertz do not apply in all cases brought by private individuals. In Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc. (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S. Ct. 2939, 86 L. Ed. 2d 593 , the United States Supreme Court limited Gertz by holding that it does not apply to cases in which the allegedly defamatory statement does not relate to a matter of public concern (472 U.S. 749, 761-763) . In holding that a commercial credit report did not involve a matter of public concern, the Court emphasized that the type of commercial credit reporting in issue did not involve any strong interest in the free flow of commercial information nor did it require special protection to insure that debate on public issues would be robust, uninhibited, and wide-open. The Court considered the following factors relevant in reaching its finding: (1) the statement was solely in the interest of the publisher and its specific business audience; (2) it was made available to only five subscribers who had agreed not to disseminate the report further; and (3) it was made for profit (472 U.S. 749, 761-762) .

Prior to the Dun & Bradstreet decision, there was an open question as to whether the rules of Gertz applied if the defendant was not a member of the media [see Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979) 443 U.S. 111, 133 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 2675, 61 L. Ed. 2d 411 (open question as to whether the protection of First Amendment extends to cases involving nonmedia defendants)]. In Dun & Bradstreet, the four member dissent and Justice White's concurring opinion indicate that a majority of the Supreme Court feel that the rules of Gertz apply equally to nonmedia defendants (86 L. Ed. 2d 593, 611) . However, in Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 779 n.4, 106 S. Ct. 1558, 89 L. Ed. 2d 783 (discussed in § 142.32[3][a]), the Supreme Court again expressly left open the question of what standards would apply if a private plaintiff sued a nonmedia defendant, and referred to its previous footnote to the same effect in Hutchinson.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Limited to Actual Damages if Actual Malice Not Shown

The Supreme Court held in Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (discussed in § 142.25[3][c]), that private individuals suing media defendants for defamation are restricted to compensation for actual injury unless they meet the New York Times test by proving that the defendant either knew of the falsity of the statement or had a reckless disregard for the truth of the statement (418 U.S. 323, 349) . The Court stated that actual injury includes impairment of reputation and standing in the community, personal humiliation, and mental anguish and suffering as well as out of pocket losses. To recover presumed or punitive damages, the Court held that the plaintiff must prove actual malice (418 U.S. 323, 349-350) .

The rules of Gertz do not apply in all cases brought by private individuals. In Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. v. Greenmoss Builders, Inc. (1985) 472 U.S. 749, 105 S. Ct. 2939, 86 L. Ed. 2d 593 , the United Supreme Court limited Gertz by holding that it does not apply to cases in which the allegedly defamatory statement does not relate to a matter of public concern (472 U.S. 749, 759-763) . For a discussion of what constitutes a matter of public concern, see § 142.30[3][a].

Prior to the Dun & Bradstreet decision, there was an open question as to whether the rules of Gertz applied if the defendant was not a member of the media [see Hutchinson v. Proxmire (1979) 443 U.S. 111, 133 n.16, 99 S. Ct. 2675, 61 L. Ed. 2d 411 (open question as to whether the protection of First Amendment extends to cases involving nonmedia defendants)]. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a demurrer to an action brought by a private figure plaintiff against a defendant who has published speech related to a matter of public concern, if the plaintiff has failed to allege the falsity of the allegedly defamatory statement.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. If appropriate, counsel may also combine these points with those in §§ 142.30-142.31.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings or a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For related discussion and forms concerning the failure of a private individual to allege the falsity of the allegedly defamatory statement, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Private Plaintiff Suing Media Defendant Must Show Falsity

In Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 106 S. Ct. 1558, 89 L. Ed. 2d 783 , the plaintiffs (the principal stockholder of a franchisor corporation, the franchisor corporation, and its franchisees) brought a defamation action against a Philadelphia newspaper for publishing a series of articles. The general theme of the articles was that the plaintiffs had links to organized crime and used some of those links to influence the state of Pennsylvania's governmental processes. After both sides had presented all the evidence at the trial, the trial court concluded that Pennsylvania's statute giving a defamation defendant the burden of proving the truth of the allegedly defamatory statements violated the Federal Constitution. The trial court therefore instructed the jury that the plaintiffs bore the burden of proving the falsity of the allegedly defamatory statements. The jury ruled for the defendant, and awarded no damages to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, which reversed and remanded for a new trial on the grounds that the plaintiffs were only required to show fault in a defamation action, and that a showing of fault did not require a showing of falsity. The defendant then sought a writ of certiorari from the United States Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari, and reversed and remanded the decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. The Court held that the plaintiffs, as private figures bringing a defamation action against a media defendant for publishing speech related to a matter of public concern, had the burden of showing the falsity of the allegedly defamatory statements. Specifically, the Court held that the common law rule that a defendant must bear the burden of proving truth must fall to a constitutional requirement that a plaintiff, under these circumstances, bear the burden of showing falsity as well as fault before recovering damages (475 U.S. 767, 776-777) . However, the Court left open the question of the quantity of proof of falsity that a private figure plaintiff is required to present before recovering damages. The Court also left open the questions of what standards apply if a private plaintiff sues a nonmedia defendant, or if a state provided a plaintiff with the opportunity to obtain a judgment that declared the speech at issue to be false but did not give rise to liability for damages (475 U.S. 767, 779 n.4).

In James v. San Jose Mercury News, Inc. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 890 , a California court held that a deputy public defender's performance, and administration of the criminal laws in general and laws relating to child molestation in particular, were matters of legitimate public interest and concern. Therefore, the qualified constitutional protections applicable to publications by media defendants about private plaintiffs on matters of public interest or public concern applied when the deputy public defender sued a newspaper for libel for printing a column that named him in the context of a discussion of asserted violations of law by defense attorneys in criminal cases involving child victims (17 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4, 11) .

[b] Private Plaintiff Suing Nonmedia Defendant on Matter of Public Interest Must Show Falsity

In Integrated Healthcare Holdings, Inc. v. Fitzgibbons (2006) 140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 44 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517 , plaintiff was a holding company heavily leveraged by debt that attempted to buy four hospitals in Orange County. Plaintiff purchased one of those hospitals after concessions were made to the medical staff to win their approval. Two months after the sale was completed, plaintiff's lender served plaintiff with a notice of default. After this was revealed, a member of the medical staff of this hospital sent an e-mail message to members of the medical executive committee critical of plaintiff. This e-mail message was subsequently forwarded to Blue Cross, with whom plaintiff was negotiating for higher insurance payments, and the message stalled negotiations, allegedly costing plaintiff over $500,000. Plaintiff sued the author of the e-mail for defamation, among other causes of action. Defendant filed a motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court denied the motion and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the denial of the motion to strike. The court first held that the anti-SLAPP statute applied to the action because the subject of the e-mail, plaintiff's financial ability to purchase and operate the hospitals, was a matter of public interest (140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 523) . Thus, plaintiff was required to demonstrate a probability of success on the merits of the asserted claims in order to defeat the motion to strike. The court then held that plaintiff could not show a probability of success on the defamation claim. The court placed on plaintiff the burden of proving the falsity of the defendant's statements, noting that California courts had previously held that a private plaintiff bears the burden of establishing the falsity of a nonmedia defendant's statements when the statements concern a matter of public interest. The court then held that plaintiff failed to demonstrate the falsity of any statements in the e-mail that were arguably defamatory (140 Cal. App. 4th 515, 529-531) .

In Nizam-Aldine v. City of Oakland (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 781 , the plaintiffs, who were licensed civil engineers, sued for defamation on the basis of statements allegedly accusing the plaintiffs of conducting inaccurate and fraudulent boundary surveys. The trial court instructed the jury that the defendant had the burden of proving that the allegedly defamatory statements were true, and the jury returned a plaintiffs' verdict. The defendant contended that the jury instruction constituted error.

Finding that the alleged defamatory statements pertained to a matter of public concern, the court of appeal reversed the judgment. The court noted that the United States Supreme Court has held in Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. Hepps, 475 (1986) U.S. 767, 106 S. Ct. 1558, 89 L. Ed. 2d 783 , that a private-figure plaintiff cannot recover damages from a media defendant for publishing allegedly defamatory statements regarding a matter of public concern without a showing that the statements at issue are false (47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 372) . The court then held that a distinction between media and nonmedia defendants for this rule is inconsistent with the First Amendment rationale for the rule, and concluded that Hepps applied even though the defendant was not a media defendant (47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 375) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the plaintiff has failed to comply with the provisions of the retraction statute and is not seeking any special damages.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter law because the plaintiff has failed to comply with the retraction statute because his notice and demand for retraction were not sufficiently specific and is not seeking any special damages.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Specificity Required in Demand for Retraction

In Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 31-32, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , the Supreme Court reiterated the principle enunciated in MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 554, 343 P.2d 36 , that the key issue in evaluating the adequacy of a plaintiff's notice under the retraction statute is whether the publisher reasonably should have comprehended which statements the plaintiff protested and wished corrected. The Supreme Court upheld the plaintiff's notice, which demanded the correction of every statement concerning the conduct of her children and every statement concerning her suitability as a mother that had appeared in specified newspaper articles (1 Cal. 3d 20, 31) .

The facts and procedural background of Gomes v. Fried (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 186 Cal. Rptr. 605 , are discussed in § 142.20[3][c]. One of the issues raised on appeal was whether or not the retraction was sufficient under Civ. Code § 48a. The court of appeal found that the retraction letter, which referred only to certain statements in the published article, was not specific enough to allow the publisher to reasonably comprehend that a retraction of a photograph and its caption was also being requested. The court held that the plaintiff had not met the condition precedent of Civ. Code § 48a and therefore could not recover general damages (136 Cal. App. 3d 924, 938) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Specificity Required in Demand for Retraction

In Anderson v. Hearst Publ'g Co. (S.D. Cal. 1954) 120 F. Supp. 850 , the federal district court applied the California retraction statute and held that the plaintiff's demand for retraction of certain statements in an allegedly libelous newspaper article was not sufficiently specific (120 F. Supp. 850, 852) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Service of Demand on Owner

In Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 110, 77 Cal. Rptr. 243, 453 P.2d 747 , the Supreme Court, in holding that the retraction statute did not apply to nonparticipants in the dissemination of news, commented as follows: "With respect to the defamations that their employees or other participants have caused to be published or broadcast, it is only the publisher or broadcaster who has the power effectively to correct or retract." Thus, "... there is good reason for the section to designate the publisher or broadcaster as the party on whom notice to retract must be served" (71 Cal. 2d 110, 115) .

In Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 Cal. 2d 788, 228 P.2d 6 , the plaintiff sued the authors of a libelous article rather than the publisher. He contended that because service of the demand for correction must be made on the publisher, the retraction statute covered only the publisher and not his employees and other participants in publishing the newspaper. The Supreme Court rejected this contention and held that the retraction statute protects all participants in newspaper publications. In so holding, it stated: "When error is made ... it is the publisher who has power to make correction. In providing for the substitution of a retraction for general and exemplary damages it was reasonable, therefore, for the legislature to provide that the notice should be served upon him" (36 Cal. 2d 788, 791) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the defendant is a newspaper publisher or radio (or television [see Civ. Code § 48.5(4)]) broadcaster and the plaintiff failed to allege that he or she served a proper demand for a retraction in accordance with the requirements of Civ. Code § 48a. A defamation plaintiff who fails to demand such a retraction may recover only special damages [see Civ. Code § 48a(1)].

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings or a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in an appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if appropriate, counsel should show that an asserted demand for retraction is insufficient because it was merely conditional, and that the plaintiff failed to pursue communications with the defendant to an extent sufficient to inform the defendant of his or her requirements for an effective retraction.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms pertaining to the retraction statute, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statutory Period for Service Retraction Demand

The retraction statute, Civ. Code § 48a, restricts persons suing a newspaper publisher or a radio or television broadcaster to the recovery of special damages if those persons do not comply with its provisions.

[b] Conditional Demand Does Not Comply With Statute

In O'Hara v. Storer Communications, Inc. (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 282 Cal. Rptr. 712 , a woman who had been a witness in a grand jury investigation brought an action against the owner of a television station, based on a television news report that transposed her name with the name of a prostitute in connection with the same investigation. A few weeks after the broadcast, the plaintiff's attorney sent a letter to the television station, requesting it to contact him or have its counsel contact him to discuss the manner of retraction. The letter emphasized that the retraction should by published only after it had been discussed with the plaintiff's attorney. The station immediately contacted the plaintiff's attorney, sent him transcripts of the various broadcasts as he had requested, and told him that it was prepared to air a retraction or correction as soon as he let the station know what form he wanted the retraction to take. Approximately a month later, the station's attorney contacted the plaintiff's attorney, who said that he would call back, but did not. Neither the station nor its attorney heard from the plaintiff's attorney again until approximately eight months later, when the attorney demanded compensation of $2.5 million by letter. Two months later, the plaintiff filed her complaint, stating four different causes of action: defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, negligence, and invasion of privacy, alleging that the broadcast was slanderous because it imputed to the plaintiff the reference of being charged with a crime and a want of chastity. The trial court granted summary adjudication in favor of the defendant, finding that the plaintiff failed to comply with Civ. Code § 48a in making a proper demand for retraction, and that the defendant did not refuse to make a correction. At trial, in response to a series of motions in limine, the trial court made the following rulings: (1) because of the previous adjudication that the plaintiff had not complied with the retraction statute, she could not present evidence of general damages; (2) the plaintiff could not present evidence of loss of reputation, hurt feelings, and depression; (3) the plaintiff could present psychiatric testimony regarding her inability to work, with the court specially instructing the jury that it could not consider the testimony for the purposes of assessing emotional distress damages; and (4) the plaintiff could present three witness on the subject of professional capabilities before the slander. The plaintiff presented evidence regarding a loss of clients because of the defamation, as well as loss of income from her failure to obtain employment, based on her potential employer's observations that mental distress ensuing from the defamation rendered her unable to perform a job for which she might otherwise have been hired. The jury found in favor of the plaintiff, awarding $300,000 in damages. Both parties appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed in every respect except the award of prejudgment interest (231 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 1119) . With respect to the plaintiff's contention that the trial court erred in finding that she had failed to comply with Civ. Code § 48a and that the defendant had not refused to broadcast a correction, the court held that her attorney's communications with the defendant constituted only a conditional request (231 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 1110-1111) . The court noted that the letter sent by the plaintiff's attorney was a conditional request, with the plaintiff controlling the conditions to be met. The station promptly indicated its willingness to broadcast a retraction and meet her conditions. However, neither the plaintiff nor her attorney ever set those conditions, making it impossible for the station to comply with the conditional request for a retraction. The court held that this conditional request is not a demand in accordance with Civ. Code § 48a (231 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 1111) . The court further held that the plaintiff was properly allowed to produce evidence that a prospective employer failed to hire the plaintiff after noticing indications of the plaintiff's impaired mental condition caused by the defamation, and that this evidence supported an award of special, rather than general, damages (231 Cal. App. 3d 1101, 1113-1115) .

[c] Retraction Demand Only Effective as to Identified Plaintiffs

In Anschutz Entertainment Group, Inc. v. Snepp (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 598, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 133 , plaintiffs were a parent corporation and its wholly-owned subsidiary, the latter of which owned a sports arena. Plaintiffs brought suit against media defendants who allegedly slandered plaintiffs by reporting on the arena's allegedly inadequate fire safety systems. A demand for a retraction was made to the defendants, but that demand listed only the subsidiary and did not mention the parent corporation, as apparently it was common knowledge that the arena owners were a wholly-owned subsidiary of the parent corporation. The trial court denied a special motion to strike brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 by the media defendants as to those causes of action alleged by the parent corporation. Defendants appealed that denial, arguing that because the parent corporation was not listed in the retraction demand, that demand was not effective as to the parent corporation. Thus, plaintiff parent corporation was limited to seeking special damages, but because it had failed to specifically plead such damages, it was barred from any recovery.

The court of appeal ordered that the special motion to strike be granted as to that part of the complaint that sought to impose liability on the media defendants in favor of the parent corporation without the parent corporation being listed in the applicable demand for retraction. The court noted that Civ. Code § 48a(1) requires the "plaintiff" to serve the retraction demand, suggesting that the plaintiff should be named in the demand. The court also noted that naming the plaintiff who is damaged furthers the legislative purpose of allowing a media defendant to determine what needs correction, and a failure to name the specific plaintiff limits the defendant's ability to determine the necessity and scope of any correction (171 Cal. App. 4th 598, 642). Thus, the court held that a demand for retraction is only effective as to the plaintiffs listed or so described in the demand such that the defendant fairly knows who is objecting to the challenged publication. Under the instant facts, the court concluded that merely stating that a business entity was seeking a retraction did not preserve the rights of that entity's parent corporation to seek general or punitive damages.

Because the pleadings did not allege special damages suffered by the parent corporation, that plaintiff could recover no damages on those pleadings and the motion to strike should have been granted (171 Cal. App. 4th 598, 642-643) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment on the ground that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the defendant is either an owner of a broadcasting station or is an agent of an owner, the allegedly defamatory statement was made by a person other than the defendant, and the defendant exercised due care to prevent the utterance of the statement.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

For a form of affirmative defense based on the fact that the defendant is an owner of a broadcasting station or an agent of such an owner and exercised due care to prevent the utterance of the allegedly defamatory statement, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Due Care as Defense

Correia v. Santos (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 844, 13 Cal. Rptr. 132 , was an action for damages for a slanderous radio broadcast. The court of appeal explained the substance of Civ. Code § 48.5, which provides the statutory defense for an owner or agent who is sued for defamation, but exercised due care to prevent the utterance of the statement. The court then pointed out that this statute was of no assistance to the plaintiff because it provides a defense. Moreover, because the owner and agent in this case were accused of causing and making the defamatory statements, the inapplicability of the statute to the case should have been obvious (191 Cal. App. 2d 844, 856) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a libel action that the statements that the defendant made concerning the plaintiff were substantially true. However, this memorandum should only be used by a defendant who is being sued for publishing speech that is not a matter of public concern, if that defendant is sued by a private figure plaintiff. If a public figure sues for libel, or if a private figure plaintiff sues for publishing speech that is a matter of public concern, the plaintiff is constitutionally required to bear the burden of showing the falsity of the speech before recovering damages [see Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 776-777, 779 n.4, 106 S. Ct. 1558, 89 L. Ed. 2d 783 (leaving open question of what standards apply to plaintiff who sues nonmedia defendant); Nizam-Aldine v. City of Oakland (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 781 (extending the holding of Hepps to nonmedia defendants)]. A public figure plaintiff should use instead the points and authorities in § 142.27[1]; a private plaintiff suing for published speech of public concern should use instead the points and authorities in § 142.32[1] or § 142.40[1].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Truth as Defense

Draper v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank (1928) 203 Cal. 26, 263 P. 240 , was a libel action in which the Supreme Court, although acknowledging the principle that truth provides an absolute defense to a libel action, held that the defendant had not established the truth of the defamatory statements as a matter of law (203 Cal. 26, 34) .

In Swaffield v. Universal Ecsco Corp. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 147, 164, 76 Cal. Rptr. 680 , the court of appeal affirmed summary judgments granted on behalf of the defendants on the ground that the allegedly libelous statements were substantially true (271 Cal. App. 2d 147, 164) .

[b] Substantial Truth Sufficient; Objective Truth as Standard

Emde v. San Joaquin County Cent. Labor Council (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 146, 143 P.2d 20 , was an action for libel against a union for stating that the management had violated its contract by hiring nonunion labor. The Supreme Court upheld the defense of justification, stating that a defendant needs to prove only the substantial truth of the statements in order to justify the "gist" or "sting" of the remark and that a defendant's subjective belief in the truth of the statements is immaterial as long as they were objectively true (23 Cal. 2d 146, 160-161) .

Southwell v. Mallery, Stern & Warford (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 140, 239 Cal. Rptr. 371 , was an action by a physician against the publishers of an allegedly defamatory press release, published in two newspapers, stating that the plaintiff had been sued by a patient for malpractice in negligently removing her ovaries and uterus, although tests did not reveal evidence of cancer, and for discharging the patient from the hospital even though she had a fever of 101 degrees, and that the plaintiff's attorney had argued that the ovaries and uterus showed signs of precancer. The defendants pleaded the affirmative defense of truth and moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed. Although it reversed the judgment on the ground there were material issues to be tried, the court of appeal recognized that a defendant is not required to prove the literal truth of an allegedly defamatory statement in every detail, so long as the imputation is substantially true so as to justify the "gist" or "sting" of the statement (194 Cal. App. 3d 140, 145) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Substantial Truth Sufficient

In Hughes v. Hughes (2004) 122 Cal. App. 4th 931, 19 Cal. Rptr. 3d 247 , the defendants were two brothers who, in the course of an interview with a reporter, stated that "our dad's a pimp," and this statement was published in the resulting magazine article. Their father sued the defendants for defamation, but the jury returned a verdict finding that the statements were not defamatory in light of evidence showing that the plaintiff had engaged in pimping activities in the past. On appeal, the plaintiff argued that the statement was made in the present tense, that he was not a pimp at the time that the statements were made, and that evidence that he may have engaged in such activities 20 years earlier could not be used to prove the truth of the statement. The court of appeal disagreed, noting that a statement is not defamatory if it is substantially true, or if the "gist" or "sting" of the remark is true (122 Cal. App. 4th 931, 936) . According to the court, the statement could reasonably be understood to mean that the father had engaged in pimping activity at one time in the past, and thus it was for the jury to decide how the statement should be understood. There was sufficient evidence to support the jury's apparent finding that the plaintiff had engaged in such activities at some point in the past, and thus the jury could reasonably conclude that the statement that the father "was a pimp" was substantially true (122 Cal. App. 4th 931, 937-939) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER WHEN PLAINTIFF HAS NOT PROVEN THE STATEMENTS TO BE FALSE.

Plaintiff Must Show Falsity of Statement if Suing for Publishing Matter of Public Concern. A private-figure plaintiff can not recover damages for publishing a matter of public concern without showing that the statement at issue is false (Nizam-Aldine v. City of Oakland (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 372-375, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 781).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a libel action by a private figure plaintiff suing for publishing speech that is a matter of public concern that the plaintiff failed to establish that the statement was false.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff is required to establish that a published statement is false.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the statement at issue is a matter of public concern, and should argue that the plaintiff has not established that the statement is false.

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Must Show Falsity of Statement if Suing for Publishing Matter of Public Concern

In Nizam-Aldine v. City of Oakland (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 781 , the plaintiffs, who were licensed civil engineers, sued for defamation on the basis of statements allegedly accusing the plaintiffs of conducting inaccurate and fraudulent boundary surveys. The trial court instructed the jury that the defendant had the burden of proving that the allegedly defamatory statements were true, and the jury returned a plaintiffs' verdict. The defendant contended that the jury instruction constituted error.

Finding that the alleged defamatory statements pertained to a matter of public concern, the court of appeal reversed the judgment. The court noted that the United States Supreme Court has held in Philadelphia Newspapers, Inc. v. Hepps (1986) 475 U.S. 767, 106 S. Ct. 1558, 89 L. Ed. 2d 783 , that a private-figure plaintiff can not recover damages from a media defendant for publishing allegedly defamatory statements regarding a matter of public concern without a showing that the statements at issue are false (47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 372) . The court then held that a distinction between media and nonmedia defendants for this rule is inconsistent with the First Amendment rationale for the rule, and concluded that Hepps applied even though the defendant was not a media defendant (47 Cal. App. 4th 364, 375) .

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER IF DEFENDANT'S ONLY CONDUCT WAS TO ADD EMPHASIS OR HIGHLIGHTING TO AN OTHERWISE COMPLETELY ACCURATE OR TRUTHFUL STATEMENT OF FACT.

Adding Emphasis to Truthful Statement Not Defamatory. The mere addition of visible marks of simple emphasis or highlighting to an otherwise completely accurate and truthful statement of fact cannot, by itself, create a defamatory innuendo (Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 637, 652, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 397).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention that the defendant cannot be held liable for defamation merely because the defendant republished or disseminated otherwise completely truthful and accurate statements of fact that were unedited and unchanged, aside from the addition of markings or highlighting for purposes of pointing out a particular passage or adding emphasis.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise this substantive issue.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence showing that the statements were completely truthful and accurate and that the defendant did nothing other than republish or disseminate the original truthful statements with the addition of highlighting or other marks visibly emphasizing a particular passage or passages.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Adding Emphasis to Truthful Statement Not Defamatory

In Smith v. Maldonado (1999) 72 Cal. App. 4th 637, 85 Cal. Rptr. 2d 397 , the plaintiffs alleged that they were defamed when the defendants copied and disseminated a newspaper report that mentioned the plaintiffs by name as being the clients of an attorney who was, as described in the article, the subject of a law enforcement sting operation stemming from the attorney's attempts to illegally influence a California legislator on behalf of the plaintiffs. Although the copies of the newspaper report disseminated by the defendants were otherwise completely unchanged and unedited, the paragraph naming the plaintiffs as the attorney's clients had been highlighted by the defendants with a yellow marker to draw attention to the passage. Although the plaintiffs conceded that the newspaper report was truthful and accurate, they sued the defendants for defamation, arguing that the addition of the highlighting created the impression that the plaintiffs were involved in the alleged illegal activities of the attorney discussed in the article. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the mere addition of simple emphasis or highlighting to an otherwise completely accurate and truthful statement of fact cannot, by itself, create a defamatory innuendo. The court noted that truth was an absolute defense to any libel action, that the truth of a statement was not changed merely by stating it more forcefully, and that a truthful and accurate statement of fact is not rendered defamatory merely by repeating it with greater emphasis. Because the plaintiffs did not argue that the newspaper article as originally published created a defamatory innuendo, the highlighting of a single paragraph in that article could not transform the republication into defamatory material (72 Cal. App. 4th 637, 647-649) . The court of appeal concluded that accepting the plaintiffs' argument would also have a deleterious and potentially unconstitutional effect on the dissemination of accurate news reports and would interject into defamation litigation numerous subjective considerations as to what is or is not undue emphasis (72 Cal. App. 4th 637, 649) . The court added that a truthful statement of fact may be transformed into potentially defamatory material only if it is substantively changed by editing or rearranging the words, removing language from or adding language to the original statement, or repeating or reproducing the statement in a different surrounding context in such a way as to render the statement reasonably susceptible of a different meaning or interpretation (72 Cal. App. 4th 637, 652) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the defendant asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint that the allegedly defamatory statements were protected by a qualified privilege and there has not been a sufficient allegation of malice.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Form

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the presence of privilege disclosed on the face of a plaintiff's complaint see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Qualified Privilege as Ground for Demurrer

In Locke v. Mitchell (1936) 7 Cal. 2d 599, 61 P.2d 922 , the Supreme Court affirmed a general demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint on the grounds that the complaint disclosed a qualified privilege and the plaintiff had not pleaded facts showing the existence of malice at the time the communication was published (7 Cal. 2d 599, 602-603) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Qualified Privilege as Ground for Demurrer

In Emde v. San Joaquin County Cent. Labor Council (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 146, 143 P.2d 20 , statements had been printed in a newspaper devoted exclusively to the interests of organized labor, alleging that the plaintiff, an employer, had violated his contract with the union. The Supreme Court stated that these statements were protected by the qualified privilege and, because there was no evidence of malice of defeat the privilege in the record, the judgment for the plaintiff was reversed (23 Cal. 2d 146, 161-162) .

In Tschirky v. Superior Court (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 534, 177 Cal. Rptr. 357 , the plaintiff was a union official who claimed he had been libeled by the defendant, a local political candidate, in the defendant's campaign advertisement. The defendant demurred, the trial court overruled the demurrer, and the defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrer. The court of appeal issued the writ on the primary ground that the plaintiff's complaint revealed that the qualified privilege of fair comment applied to the defendant's statement. In order for the complaint to state a cause of action for libel, it had to allege facts constituting actual malice or lack of reasonable grounds for a belief in the truth of the statement by the defendant. Mere allegations of ill will, such as those made by the plaintiff, were not sufficient to override the privilege (124 Cal. App. 3d 534, 538-539) .

In Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Cal. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582 , the plaintiff appealed from a jury's judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff had been employed by the defendant when it came to the defendant's attention that the plaintiff had been lying about her absences from work. The plaintiff was given a choice of either quitting, retiring, or being fired; she chose to retire. The plaintiff later filed a complaint in which she alleged that the defendant had defamed her when other employees were told the reasons underlying her resignation. The court of appeal held that the qualified privilege was applicable to the defendant's statements and that the jury was entitled not to believe that the defendant's statements were uttered with malice. Thus, judgment for the defendant was affirmed (40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 846-849) .

In Noonan v. Rousselot (1966) 239 Cal. App. 2d 447, 48 Cal. Rptr. 817 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of dismissal after a demurrer was sustained. The plaintiff was a defeated candidate in the Republican primary election for a congressional seat in the House of Representatives and had alleged that the defendants libeled him during the course of the campaign. The court of appeal held that the New York Times standard applied to political candidates as well as to public officials, and that the rules of pleading malice under the statutory privilege also applied to pleading constitutional malice. Judged by the standard that malice must be pleaded with specificity, the plaintiff's allegation that the defendants published the allegedly libelous material "wickedly and maliciously" was insufficient and thus the qualified privilege was properly determined to afford the ground for a demurrer (239 Cal. App. 2d 447, 452-455) .

In Lesperance v. North Am. Aviation, Inc. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 336, 31 Cal. Rptr. 873 , the plaintiff had been terminated by the defendant for absences from work without notifying the defendant. In response to an inquiry from a prospective employer, the defendant's reply was that the plaintiff had been terminated as a result of five consecutive working days' absence without notification. Holding that the complaint indicated on its face that the cause of action was protected by the qualified privilege, the court of appeal affirmed the granting of a general demurrer because the plaintiff had set forth no facts that showed that malice existed on the part of the defendant at the time it made its requested reports (217 Cal. App. 2d 336, 341-342) .

In Everett v. California Teachers Ass'n (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 291, 25 Cal. Rptr. 120 , the plaintiff was an assistant superintendent of a school district at the time that a report was made concerning a professional problem in the district's elementary schools. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment of dismissal after a demurrer was sustained; it stated that the report was cloaked in the qualified privilege and that the plaintiff had not alleged malice with sufficient specificity (208 Cal. App. 2d 291, 293-297) .

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof that the allegedly defamatory statements were absolutely privileged.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege as Ground for Demurrer

In Whelan v. Wolford (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 689, 331 P.2d 86 , the court of appeal affirmed a demurrer to a complaint in which it was disclosed that the defamatory matter was contained in a report to the city planning commission that protested the granting of a variance. The court held that the protest was made in the course of an official proceeding and, hence, it was protected by the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] (164 Cal. App. 2d 689, 694) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege as Ground for Demurrer

In Young v. County of Marin (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 863, 241 Cal. Rptr. 169 , the plaintiff, an appointed county public defender, sued the county for damages based on the county administrator's dismissal of the plaintiff from her position and a release to the press of a memorandum addressed to the county board of supervisors, stating the reasons for the dismissal. With respect to the cause of action for libel, the court of appeal upheld the trial court's sustaining of the demurrer to the complaint, holding that the contents of the press release were protected under the "fair comment" privilege, as well as the absolute privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] (195 Cal. App. 3d 863, 872) .

In Green v. Cortez (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1068, 199 Cal. Rptr. 221 , the court of appeal upheld a dismissal entered after the demurrers of the defendants were sustained without leave to amend. The defendants were members of the media who had accurately reported defamatory statements made at a city council meeting. The statements were proven false and may have been reported either with knowledge of their falsity or in reckless disregard of their truth. Holding that the media enjoy an absolute privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)], the court ruled that a city council meeting was an official proceeding authorized by law and that malice was not an issue (151 Cal. App. 3d 1068, 1073-1074) .

In Pettitt v. Levy (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 484, 104 Cal. Rptr. 650 , the court of appeal sustained a demurrer to a complaint that alleged that the defendants had forged a document and submitted it to a city council and planning commission, thus causing the plaintiffs' application for a zoning variance to be denied. The court affirmed a determination that the absolute privilege applies even to a forged document if the document has a reasonable relation to the action and is made for the purpose of achieving the objects of the proceedings (28 Cal. App. 3d 484, 489, 491) .

In Scott v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 277, 112 Cal. Rptr. 609 , the court of appeal held that a demurrer to a complaint for libel and slander was properly sustained because the plaintiff alleged that several letters written to the plaintiff that criticized his work as a former city manager and that were read at a city council meeting were defamatory. It held that the statements were connected with the work of the city council and thus that they were absolutely privileged (37 Cal. App. 3d 277, 285-286) .

In Friedman v. Knecht (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 455, 56 Cal. Rptr. 540 , the court of appeal sustained the granting of a demurrer to a complaint for slander based on remarks that were made during the course of criminal proceedings in which the defendant was the Deputy District Attorney and was moving for a continuance and the plaintiff was defense counsel. The court held that the absolute privilege for statements made in a judicial proceeding applied because the defendant's remarks were related to the proceedings (248 Cal. App. 2d 455, 457-463) .

In Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706 , the court of appeal sustained a demurrer. The complaint for defamation had arisen out of a series of questions that the defendant, an attorney for a plaintiff in a related action, had asked at a deposition. The court held that the statements and questions were related to the litigation that gave rise to the deposition and, thus, that they were absolutely privileged (245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 82-93) .

In Jordan v. Lemaire (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 622, 35 Cal. Rptr. 337 , the court of appeal held that the absolute privilege for judicial proceedings applied to statements uttered during the course of a prior proceeding to quiet title to property. Thus, the trial court properly sustained a demurrer to the complaint for slander (222 Cal. App. 2d 622, 624-625) .

In Lewis v. Linn (1962) 209 Cal. App. 2d 394, 26 Cal. Rptr. 6 , the plaintiff was an attorney who was suing a municipal judge for allegedly slanderous remarks that the judge made from the bench during the course of a debate over a motion made by the plaintiff to disqualify him in a criminal proceeding. The court of appeal sustained the demurrer and held that the absolute privilege for judicial immunity applied because the statements had some relationship to the judicial function that the judge was performing and to the proceeding over which he had jurisdiction (209 Cal. App. 2d 394, 398-400) .

[Caption. See § 142.20.]

A DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FOR DEFAMATION SHOULD BE SUSTAINED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT ARISES OUT OF A CRIMINAL PROSECUTION FOR CHILD ABUSE AND FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT THE ACTION IS NOT BARRED BY THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 48.7(a) OF THE CIVIL CODE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 142.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Limitation on Commencement of Action. No person charged by _____ [indictment or information or other accusatory pleading] of child abuse may, while the charges are pending in the trial court, bring a civil libel or slander action against _____ [the minor or the _____ (parent or guardian) of the minor or any witness] based on any statements made by the _____ [minor or parent or guardian or witness] that are reasonably believed to be in furtherance of the prosecution of the criminal charges (Civ. Code § 48.7(a)).

[EITHER]

C. Child Abuse as Nonaccidental Injury Inflicted on Child. "Child abuse," as used in Section 48.7 of the Civil Code, includes a physical injury or death that is inflicted by other than accidental means on a child by another person (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code § 11165.6).

[OR]

C. Child Abuse as Sexual Assault on Child. "Child abuse," as used in Section 48.7 of the Civil Code, includes the sexual assault of a child (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code § 11165.6). The term "sexual assault" includes conduct in violation of Section _____ [261 (rape) or 261.5 (statutory rape) or 264.1 (rape in concert) or 285 (incest) or 286 (sodomy) or 288 (a) and (b) (lewd or lascivious acts on a child under 14 years of age) or 288a (oral copulation) or 289 (penetration of a genital or anal opening by a foreign object) or 647a (child molestation)] of the Penal Code (Penal Code § 11165.1).

[OR]

C. Child Abuse Includes Willful Harming or Endangering. "Child abuse," as used in Civil Code Section 48.7, includes the willful causing, permitting, or inflicting of unjustifiable physical pain or mental suffering on a child, or willfully causing or permitting child in one's custody or care to be placed in a situation that endangers the child's person or health (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code §§ 11165.3, 11165.6).

[OR]

C. Child Abuse Includes Unlawful Corporal Punishment. "Child abuse," as used in Civil Code Section 48.7, includes the infliction of unlawful corporal punishment or injury, which means willfully inflicting on a child any cruel or inhuman corporal punishment or injury resulting in a traumatic condition (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code §§ 11165.4, 11165.6).

[OR]

C. Child Abuse as Neglect of Child. "Child abuse," as used in Section 48.7 of the Civil Code, includes neglect of a child (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code § 11165.6), which means the negligent failure of a person having the care or custody of a child to protect the child from severe malnutrition or medically diagnosed nonorganic failure to thrive (Penal Code § 11165.2(a)).

[OR]

C. Child Abuse as Neglect in Out-of-Home Care. "Child abuse," as used in Section 48.7 of the Civil Code, includes abuse in out-of-home care (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code § 11165.6), which means situations of suspected physical injury on a child that is inflicted by other than accidental means, or of sexual abuse or neglect, or unlawful corporal punishment or injury, or the willful cruelty or unjustifiable punishment of a child, as defined in Penal Code §§ 11164-11174.1, if the person responsible for the child's welfare is the _____ [_____ (licensee or administrator or employee) of any facility licensed to care for children or an _____ (administrator or employee) of a _____ (public school or private school or specify other institution or agency)] (Penal Code § 11165.5).

D. Child Defined. A child is a person under the age of 18 years (Civ. Code § 48.7(f); Penal Code § 11165).

E. Failure to State Action Not Barred by Civ. Code § 48.7(a). The failure of a complaint for damages for libel or slander arising out of a criminal prosecution for child abuse to include the statement that the action is not barred by the provisions of Civ. Code § 48.7(a) is a ground for demurrer (Civ. Code § 48.7(c)).

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer (on ground of prematurity of action) to a complaint for damages for libel or slander arising out of a criminal prosecution for child abuse if the complaint fails to include the statement that the action is not barred by the provisions of Civ. Code § 48.7(a). For a memorandum supporting a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the action is time-barred, which includes an optional paragraph asserting that Civ. Code § 48.7 does not apply to a defendant who is a newsperson, see § 142.56.

With respect to the next to last alternative (Child Abuse as Neglect of Child) set forth in Paragraph C of the form, Penal Code § 11165(c) further provides that a child receiving treatment by spiritual means as provided in Welf. & Inst. Code § 16509.1 shall not for that reason alone be considered a neglected child.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and points of law stated.

[b] Judicial Notice

Counsel should attach to this form a request that the court take judicial notice of the pendency of the criminal action [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.70; Evid. Code §§ 452(d), 453)].

[c] Attorney's Fees and Costs

If the demurrer is sustained on the basis that the complaint was filed in violation of Civ. Code § 48.7, attorney's fees and costs must be awarded to the prevailing party [Civ. Code § 48.7(d)].

[d] Tolling of Statute of Limitations

The applicable statute of limitations on the action for libel or slander is tolled during the period that the criminal charges are pending before a trial court [Civ. Code § 48.7(a)].

[e] Pendency of Criminal Action

The criminal charges are not pending, within the meaning of Civ. Code § 48.7, after dismissal, after pronouncement of judgment, or during an appeal from a judgment [Civ. Code § 48.7(a)].

THE PRIVILEGES OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 47 MAY BE APPLIED TO PROTECT CONDUCT THAT OCCURS IN MEXICO IN CONJUNCTION WITH LEGAL PROCEEDINGS INITIATED IN THAT COUNTRY.

Privileges Apply to Conduct Occurring in Mexico. The privileges of Civil Code Section 47 may be applied to protect conduct that occurs in Mexico in conjunction with legal proceedings in that country (Beroiz v. Wahl (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 485, 493-494, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 905).

[2] Comments

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by a defendant in a defamation action if the defendant asserts that the conduct that forms the basis for the action is privileged under Civ. Code § 47 even though the conduct took place in Mexico. Although the case authority discussed here deals specifically with conduct in Mexico, the form and supporting argument can be modified for use if the conduct occurred in a different foreign jurisdiction.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts detailing the defendant's conduct and argue that this conduct is privileged under one of the privileges contained in Civ. Code § 47. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[4] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privileges Apply to Conduct Occurring in Mexico

In Beroiz v. Wahl (2000) 84 Cal. App. 4th 485, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 905 , the plaintiffs were residents of a condominium complex in Mexico, as well as members of the homeowners association. From 1991 to 1996, they also served on a vigilance committee that oversees the complex's professional administrator. During this period, the defendants violated the homeowners association rules, requiring action by the plaintiffs as members of the vigilance committee. In response, the defendants allegedly entered into a conspiracy to defame the plaintiffs. According to the plaintiffs, some or all of the defendants allegedly made defamatory criminal accusations against the plaintiffs, filed a false and defamatory claim against the condominium complex, and published defamatory letters to members of the homeowners association. After the plaintiffs' defamation suit was filed in California in 1997, some defendants settled and the remaining defendants filed motions for summary judgment or adjudication, contending that they had not conspired to defame the plaintiffs and that their conduct was privileged under Civ. Code § 47. Evidence tendered in support of the motion showed that: (1) one defendant had filed a criminal charge against the condominium on the advice of a Mexican attorney that a basis for the charges existed; (2) the other two defendants had only provided testimony to the local district attorney in the course of an investigation into the criminal charges, an investigation that the district attorney eventually dropped; and (3) none of the remaining defendants played any role in the defamatory letters that were sent to the homeowners association. The trial court granted the motions for summary judgment, concluding that the conduct at issue was privileged, and the plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding as an apparent matter of first impression that the privileges of Civ. Code § 47 could be applied to conduct that occurred in Mexico. The court noted that the few cases dealing with the issue in other jurisdictions had uniformly held that similar privileges applied to foreign proceedings and communications (84 Cal. App. 4th 485, 493-494) . Moreover, the court concluded that applying the privileges to such proceedings and communications tended to promote the policies underlying the privileges. For example, applying the absolute judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) to fair judicial proceedings in foreign countries encourages American citizens in these countries to resolve disputes in the courtroom, rather than by self-help, promotes the finality of judgment, and limits derivative tort litigation in California courts. Applying the qualified privilege of Civ. Code § 47(c) (which protects good faith communications serving significant interests and is normally overcome only on a showing of malice) to American citizens in foreign countries protects their good faith communications regarding their legitimate interests (84 Cal. App. 4th 485, 494) .

The court then considered the extent to which the defendants' conduct fell within the absolute privilege. The court agreed that communications that initiate or prompt criminal investigations are subject to the absolute privilege. However, because cases applying the absolute privilege to police reports extend the privilege only to police reports that trigger adequate procedural safeguards, the court added that if there is evidence on summary judgment that a particular report of potential criminal activity in a foreign country has triggered an investigation lacking adequate procedural safeguards, there may be a triable issue of fact as to whether the police report is subject to the absolute privilege, rather than the qualified privilege (84 Cal. App. 4th 485, 496) . In this case, the court concluded that there was no triable issue about the procedural fairness of the pertinent Mexican proceedings. Because the absolute privilege therefore applied, summary judgment was properly granted, and the court had no need to consider whether the defendants acted with malice in order to defeat the qualified privilege (84 Cal. App. 4th 485, 496-497) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a defamation action if the defendant asserts that he or she is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because he or she is a state officer and made the statements in an executive proceeding to which the statements clearly had a relationship.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations to support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Executive Officer

In Kilgore v. Younger (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 770, 180 Cal. Rptr. 657, 640 P.2d 793 , the state Attorney General held a press conference and released a report on organized crime containing the plaintiff's name. The plaintiff brought an action for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy. The Attorney General demurred on the ground that publication of the information was privileged. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action, and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the absolute privilege for executive officers was applicable to the Attorney General because he was discharging an official duty (law enforcement) when he held the press conference (30 Cal. 3d 770, 779) . The Court stated that regardless of the propriety of releasing the report to the media, failure to apply the absolute privilege would create a chilling effect on the performance of public duties (30 Cal. 3d 770, 782) .

In Saroyan v. Burkett (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 706, 21 Cal. Rptr. 557, 371 P.2d 293 , the Supreme Court affirmed a judgment on the pleadings. It held that a press release that was issued by the Superintendent of Banks and that stated that a former attorney in his department had been fired was absolutely privileged because it related to a defense of the policies of his department (57 Cal. 2d 706, 710-711) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Executive Officer

In Maranatha Corrections, LLC v. Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 1075, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 614 , a private prison contractor and its CEO sued the State, the Department of Corrections & Rehabilitation, and its former Director, alleging defamation caused when the Director released to the public a letter explaining that the State terminated its contract with plaintiffs because plaintiffs had wrongfully misappropriated $1.6 million in funds allegedly owed to the State. The funds in dispute were commissions generated when inmates at plaintiffs' facility used specified telephone services, and a genuine dispute existed under the contract over whether the funds belonged to the State or to plaintiffs. The trial court granted defendants' motion to strike plaintiffs' cause of action under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held first that the conduct forming the basis of the complaint was protected conduct under the anti-SLAPP statute (158 Cal. App. 4th 1075, 1085-1086) . The court then held that plaintiffs had failed to demonstrate a probability of success on the merits because the Director's conduct was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(a) as an act in the proper discharge of an official duty. The court noted that as chief executive officer of a statutorily created department of the executive branch, the Director was a policymaking official whose conduct could be protected under Civ. Code § 47(a). Because the Director had released the letter to the press in defense of her policy decision to terminate the contract, the issue of the appropriated funds was of public concern, and she had an official duty to communicate with the press about matters of public concern, the Director's conduct was privileged (158 Cal. App. 4th 1075, 1088-1089) .

In Morrow v. Los Angeles Unified School Dist. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 885 , a high school principal brought actions for defamation and invasion of privacy against his former school district, a local superintendent, and the district superintendent after a newspaper reported that plaintiff was being replaced six months before his planned retirement due to the perceived need for "stronger leadership" at the plaintiff's school in light of several recent outbursts of violence among the students. The report also indicated that the district superintendent stated that the principal's retirement plans "did not fit with the district's needs" and the principal's handling of the violence had "accelerated" the decision to replace plaintiff. The trial court granted a motion to strike the causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the defamation cause of action could not succeed because the challenged statements were protected under the executive officer privilege of Civ. Code § 47(a). While noting that some appellate decisions had refused to extend the privilege to officials who were not corresponding in rank to federal cabinet members, the court agreed with other opinions that had extended the privilege to lower ranking officials, so long as the conduct at issue encompassed a discretionary act essential to the proper exercise of an executive function decision. The court concluded that the school superintendent's statements to the press that plaintiff was being replaced as part of the school district's response to a well-publicized crisis in a public high school, made by the superintendent in his capacity of chief executive officer of the governing board of the school district, were protected statements (149 Cal. App. 4th 1424, 1440-1443) .

In Tutor-Saliba Corp. v. Herrera (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 604, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 21 , a city attorney gave a speech as an invited speaker before the Chinese-American Democratic Club. During the speech, the city attorney discussed the merits of pending litigation that his office would be pursuing involving fraud by construction contractors on a large public project. One of the contractors sued the city attorney for defamation for comments made during the speech. The trial court determined that the statements were absolutely privileged under the official duty privilege of Civ. Code § 47(a) and granted the city attorney's motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. The court of appeal held that the motion to strike was properly granted because the plaintiff could not establish a probability of prevailing because the attorney's statements were absolutely privileged. It was undisputed that the city attorney was invited to speak in his official capacity as the city attorney. The city's Board of Supervisors had appropriated substantial money to pay for the litigation, but the mayor had expressed his intention to veto the appropriation and had also implied that the city attorney agreed with the veto decision. The city attorney decided to use the speech as an opportunity before a public forum to clarify his support for and express his opinion about the merits of the litigation. The court held that the comments made during the speech were within the scope of the city attorney's official duties and were protected (136 Cal. App. 4th 604, 615) .

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a defamation action if the defendant asserts that he or she is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because he or she made the statements in a legislative proceeding to which the statements clearly had a relationship.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the absolute privilege conferred on publications made in relation to legislative proceedings, and for a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 142.77 may be used to oppose these points.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Legislative Proceeding

In Scott v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 277, 112 Cal. Rptr. 609 , the court of appeal affirmed the sustaining of a demurrer to a cause of action for libel and slander that was based on several letters to the plaintiff that criticized his work as a former city manager and that were read at a city council meeting. The court held that the allegedly defamatory statements were connected with the work of the city council and thus were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b), which provides a privilege for publications made in relation to a legislative proceeding (37 Cal. App. 3d 277, 285-286) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Legislative Proceeding

In Cayley v. Nunn (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 300, 235 Cal. Rptr. 385 , the court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendants who, while circulating a neighborhood petition in preparation for a city council hearing on their request for a height variance, falsely accused the plaintiff, a neighbor opposed to the variance, of wiretapping the defendants' phone. The court distinguished Frisk v. Merrihew (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 319, 325, 116 Cal. Rptr. 781 , in which the question of whether there was the required connection between the defamatory statement and the objective of the proceedings was improperly taken from the jury (190 Cal. App. 3d 300, 305) . The court also held that the absolute privilege of former Code Civ. Proc. § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] shielded the defendants' accusations as a matter of law because the complaint itself alleged that the defamatory statements were made to encourage neighbors to sign the defendants' petition and to attempt to influence the outcome of a city council vote. The court concluded that those facts showed a logical connection between the defamatory statements and the objective of the city council proceedings (190 Cal. App. 3d 300, 306) .

§ 142.48 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--Absolute Privilege for Publication Made in Judicial Proceeding [Civ. Code § 47(b)]

[Caption. See § 142.24.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE DEFENDANT MADE THE STATEMENTS IN A JUDICIAL PROCEEDING.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 142.24, Paragraph A.]

B. Absolute Privilege for Judicial Proceeding. Statements made in a judicial proceeding that have a relationship to the proceeding are absolutely privileged (Civ. Code § 47(b); Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 375, 379, 295 P.2d 405 ; McClatchy Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 968-971, 234 Cal. Rptr. 702).

[Optional] C. Privilege Applicable to Proposed Judicial Proceeding. If a communication has some relation to a proceeding that is actually contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration by a possible party to the proceeding, the communication is absolutely privileged (Block v. Sacramento Clinical Labs, Inc. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 386, 393-394, 182 Cal. Rptr. 438).

[Optional] D. Absolute Privilege for Attorney's Communications Related to Proceeding. An attorney is absolutely privileged to publish defamatory matter concerning another in communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding, or in the institution of, or during the course and as a part of, a judicial proceeding in which the attorney participates as counsel, if it has some relation to the proceeding (Financial Corp. of Am. v. Wilburn (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 773, 234 Cal. Rptr. 653).

[Optional] E. Absolute Privilege for Insurer That Defends Party. The privilege under Section 47(b) of the Civil Code applies to an insurer that defends a party (Doctors' Co. Ins. Servs. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1295-1298, 275 Cal. Rptr. 674).

[Optional] F. Privilege Applicable to Nonparties as Well as Parties. The judicial privilege is accorded not only to parties but to nonparties. The focus of the applicability of judicial privilege lies in whether the publication was connected or related to the underlying proceedings; not the status of the plaintiff in the subsequent proceeding (Obos v. Scripps Psychological Assocs., Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 103, 108, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30).

[Optional] G. Privilege Applicable to Quasi-Judicial Proceedings. The judicial privilege applies to communications involving quasi-judicial proceedings, including workers' compensation proceedings (Harris v. King (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1188, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790).

[Optional] H. Privilege Extends to Category of Communications Permitted by Law. The judicial privilege applies to communications the category of which are permitted by law, even if the specific communication at issue may be in violation of the law (Jacob B. v. County of Shasta (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 948, 957-959, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Judicial Proceeding

Pursuant to Civ. Code § 47(b), a publication or broadcast made in any judicial proceeding is privileged, except as follows:

- An allegation or averment contained in any pleading or affidavit filed in an action for marital dissolution or legal separation made of or concerning a person by or against whom no affirmative relief is prayed in the action is not a privileged publication or broadcast as to the person making the allegation or averment within the meaning of Civ. Code § 47 unless the pleading is verified or affidavit sworn to, and is made without malice, by one having reasonable and probable cause for believing the truth of the allegation or averment and unless the allegation or averment is material and relevant to the issues in the action.

- Civ. Code § 47(b) does not make privileged any communication carried out in furtherance of an act of intentional destruction or alteration of physical evidence undertaken for the purpose of depriving a party to litigation of the use of that evidence, whether or not the content of the communication is the subject of a subsequent publication or broadcast that is privileged pursuant to Civ. Code § 47. Physical evidence is defined as evidence specified in Evid. Code § 250 or evidence that is property of any type specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq..

- Civ. Code § 47(b) does not make privileged any communication made in a judicial proceeding knowingly concealing the existence of an insurance policy or policies. However, this exception does not apply to statements that conceal only the terms of a policy that is known to exist, including statements that misrepresent the amount of the policy coverage [Home Ins. Co. v. Zurich Ins. Co. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 17, 24-25, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 583] .

- A recorded lis pendens is not a privileged publication unless it identifies an action previously filed with a court of competent jurisdiction that affects the title or right of possession of real property, as authorized or required by law.

In Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 375, 295 P.2d 405 , the Supreme Court held the privilege conveyed by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] is an absolute privilege. The plaintiff had brought an action for slander of title based on the defendant's filing of a lis pendens but the Court stated that essentially the same privileges apply to slander of title actions as apply to defamation actions and that, consequently, the publication of the lis pendens was absolutely privileged (46 Cal. 2d 375, 378-379) .

In McClatchy Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 234 Cal. Rptr. 702 , a libel action, the defendants wrote and published a newspaper article concerning deposition testimony by one of its reporters in an unrelated libel action, in which the reporter linked the plaintiff with organized crime. The defendants filed a motion for summary judgment on the ground that none of the disputed communications were actionable, pursuant to the absolute privileges of former Civ. Code § 47(2), (4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b), (d)]. The trial court denied the motion, finding a triable fact in whether the defendants conspired to present defamatory statements through the reporter's deposition, for the purpose of later publishing libelous information in the newspaper. The defendants unsuccessfully filed a petition for an extraordinary writ. The Supreme Court granted review, and transferred the case to the court of appeal with directions to issue an alternative writ of mandate.

In issuing the writ, the court of appeal held that the privilege afforded by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] for statements made in a judicial proceeding is absolute, provided the statements have a logical connection, liberally construed, to the underlying litigation (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 968-974) . A deposition is a judicial proceeding for the purposes of former Civ. Code § 47(2) (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 968 n.2). Appellate court opinions conflict regarding whether conspiracy, if found, would defeat the privilege (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 968-969) . The court, however, rejected the holding in Bradley v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 818, 106 Cal. Rptr. 718 , which precludes application of the privilege to statements made in furtherance of a conspiracy, because the communication must be made in furtherance of the litigation and to promote the interest of justice (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 969-971) . Legislative history indicates an intent to establish an absolute privilege (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 969-970) . In enacting former Civ. Code § 47(2), the legislature omitted a provision that the statements be made without malice, which provision was originally included in other subsections of the statute (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 969) . Moreover, a subsequent amendment added the malice requirement only with respect to dissolution proceedings, which manifests an intent to change the privilege from absolute to conditional only in that one circumstance (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 970) . The policy underlying the absolute nature of the privilege is expressed in Briscoe v. LaHue (1983) 460 U.S. 325, 332-333, 103 S. Ct. 1108, 75 L. Ed. 2d 96 , holding that claims of individuals must yield to the dictates of public policy, which requires that the paths that lead to the ascertainment of truth should be left as free and unobstructed as possible (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 971) . Consequently, allegations of conspiracy do not pierce the protective shield embodied in the statute (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 971) . In rejecting the plaintiff's contentions that the statements were not protected because they did not in any way relate to the other libel action, the court noted that the publication need not be pertinent, relevant, or material in a technical sense to any issue if it has some connection or relation to the proceedings (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 972) . The court also held that the privilege for reporting judicial proceedings in a public journal under former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)] is absolute, based on the legislature's deletion of a provision in the statute requiring that the report be without malice (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 974) .

[b] Privilege Applicable to Proposed Judicial Proceeding

In Block v. Sacramento Clinical Labs, Inc. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 386, 182 Cal. Rptr. 438 , a toxicologist negligently prepared a report analyzing the blood of the plaintiff's deceased child on the request of the district attorney's office, which was investigating whether or not probable cause existed to initiate criminal charges against the plaintiff. The report was used as grounds for filing criminal charges against the plaintiff, but the charges were dismissed when the toxicologist's error was discovered. The plaintiff then initiated an action for damages for professional negligence based on publication of an injurious falsehood. The trial court sustained the defendant's motion for summary judgment on the ground that the report was absolutely privileged pursuant to former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] as a publication made in a judicial proceeding, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that if a communication has some relation to a proceeding that is actually contemplated in good faith and under serious consideration by a possible party to the proceeding, the communication is privileged (131 Cal. App. 3d 386, 393-394) .

[c] Absolute Privilege for Attorney's Communications Related to Proceeding

In Financial Corp. of Am. v. Wilburn (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 234 Cal. Rptr. 653 , a publicly traded financial corporation and its subsidiary brought an action for intentional interference with economic advantage and abuse of process against an attorney for accusing the parent corporation of certain illegal activities. The disputed communications included (1) statements to specific persons interviewed regarding future litigation, (2) statements to "persons throughout Northern California," (3) allegations in a federal complaint filed under 18 U.S.C.S. § 1964(c) (RICO) against the parent corporation, and (4) threats of additional litigation. The plaintiffs contended that the defendant made the accusations knowing they were false, and filed the complaint not to obtain legal redress, but rather to allow republication by the news media under the guise of privileged communication, in order to interfere with the plaintiffs' business and extort their money in exchange for dismissing the lawsuit. The trial court sustained the defendant's general demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that the communications were absolutely protected under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed for further proceedings, holding that statements to "persons throughout Northern California" might be outside the privilege if they were completely unrelated to the underlying proceedings (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 778) . However, the remaining communications were absolutely protected publications made in a judicial proceeding, pursuant to former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 771-778) . An attorney at law is absolutely privileged to publish defamatory matter concerning another in communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding, or in the institution of, or during the course and as a part of, a judicial proceeding in which the attorney participates as counsel, if it has some relation to the proceeding (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 773) . The defendant's threats to file lawsuits are privileged demands to resolve disputes made in actual good-faith anticipation of litigation, in light of the plaintiffs' failure to allege bad faith in connection with that litigation (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 777) . The defendant's remarks to the plaintiffs' present and former employees, depositors, and others, from whom he sought confidential information, are privileged preliminary conversations and interviews connected with a pending or contemplated action (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 777-778) . With regard to the federal complaint itself, there was nothing on the face of the complaint to show that any of its allegations were not related to the action or made in furtherance of it (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 776) . Moreover, the defendant's subjective intent, purpose, or knowledge cannot destroy the privileged status of otherwise privileged statements (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 777) . The court noted that the privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(2) applies to a variety of relevant theories of recovery, including interference with economic advantage (189 Cal. App. 3d 764, 771) .

[d] Absolute Privilege for Insurer That Defends Party

In Doctors' Co. Ins. Servs. v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 275 Cal. Rptr. 674 , a minor and her parents sued the insurer of the minor's doctor, based on its conduct in connection with a previous medical-malpractice action filed against the minor's doctor, and stating causes of action for violation of the Insurance Code [Ins. Code § 790.03], and conspiracy to violate the Insurance Code. The complaint alleged that the minor's doctor admitted his liability to his malpractice insurer, which nevertheless failed to attempt to settle the claim for several years. The complaint further alleged (1) that the insurer advised the insured to lie in his deposition, in order to avoid revealing the liability of another doctor, who would otherwise give deposition testimony establishing the insured's liability; and (2) that the insured and the other doctor consequently gave inaccurate and misleading testimony in their depositions.

After the insured's deposition was taken, the plaintiffs stated their intent to amend their malpractice complaint to add a fraud claim. The insured then retained independent counsel, who assertedly demanded that the insurer settle the claim on the insured's behalf. The insurer failed to do so for approximately one year and then unsuccessfully attempted to condition settlement on the plaintiffs' waiver of any bad-faith claims against it. Ultimately, the parties reached a settlement under which the insurer paid the policy limits to the plaintiffs in exchange for dismissal of the insured from the malpractice action.

In this action, the plaintiffs alleged that the insurer's conduct violated its contractual and statutory obligations under Ins. Code § 790.03 (regarding unfair and deceptive practices in insurance business) and sought to recover damages for loss of interest on the settlement proceeds, reduction of benefits due to increase in the cost of the annuity purchased with the settlement proceeds, and emotional distress. The defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds of failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and failure to allege a cognizable claim for conspiracy.

The trial court overruled the demurrer, and the defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrer, on the grounds that (1) the entire action should be dismissed because of the lack of a binding admission of liability, a requirement under Royal Globe Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1979) 23 Cal. 3d 880, 153 Cal. Rptr. 842, 592 P.2d 329 (discussed in Ch. 120, Insurance); (2) the conspiracy claim offended due process concerns and the litigation privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b); subsequent discussion will refer to § 47(b)]; and (3) the action was premature in that the underlying action against the insurer's alleged co-conspirators had not been concluded. The court of appeal denied the petition.

Subsequently, the California Supreme Court transferred the matter to the court of appeal, directing the court to vacate its order denying mandate and to issue an alternative writ [see Doctors' Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 39, 45, 260 Cal. Rptr. 183, 775 P.2d 508 (noninsurer defendants, as agents of insurer, were not liable for conspiracy to violate duty peculiar to the insurer); Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Cos. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 313, 250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58 (under viable statutory action, settlement is insufficient conclusion of underlying action regarding requirement of judicial determination of insured's liability); see generally Ch. 120, Insurance].

The court of appeal let a peremptory writ of mandate issue, directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1300-1301) . With respect to the issue involving Civ. Code § 47(b), the court of appeal noted that the defendant's conduct consists of communications made in the course of defending the insured in the prior malpractice action. The statute provides in part that a privileged publication is one made in any judicial proceeding. The court stated that the California Supreme Court delineated the scope of that provision in Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 205, 212, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (discussed in § 142.77[3][a]), which held that the privilege applies to any communication (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) that have some connection or logical relation to the action. Silberg explained that Civ. Code § 47(b) affords litigants the utmost freedom of access to the courts without fear of being harassed subsequently by derivative tort actions (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1293) . Silberg held that to effectuate its vital purposes, the litigation privilege is held to be absolute; it rejected a requirement, imposed by some courts of appeal, that the communication must have been in the "interest of justice" to qualify for protection under the statute (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1294) . The plaintiffs argued that insurers of litigants are not "participants authorized by law" to whom the privilege applies. The court stated that, although originally limited to witnesses, since 1874 the statute has placed no limitation on whom the privilege protects; the language is broad and unrestricted in its terms.

The court concluded that if the insurer provides a defense for a party, the realities of the insurer's role in the litigation dictate that the insurer be treated as an authorized participant in judicial proceedings for purposes of Civ. Code § 47(b). In another context, the court has noted that in the insured-insurer relationship, the attorney characteristically is engaged and paid by the carrier to defend the insured, and that the insured and the insurer have certain obligations to each other. If the matter reaches litigation, the attorney appears of record for the insured and at all times represents him or her in terms measured by the extent of the employment (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1296) . In that case, the insured, carrier, and attorney comprise a unitary whole with intramural relationships and reciprocal obligations and duties each to the other quite separate and apart from the extramural relations with third parties or with the world at large. The court held that, as those holding a vital stake in the progress and outcome of litigation, insurers providing a defense are entitled to the protections of the privilege when they communicate with other participants in the litigation (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1296) .

The court rejected the plaintiffs' reliance on the holding in Bradley v. Hartford Accident & Indem. Co. (1973) 30 Cal. App. 3d 818, 106 Cal. Rptr. 718 , in which an insurer was held not protected by Civ. Code § 47(b). In Bradley, attorneys of record in a prior personal injury action brought a defamation action against the insurer of a defendant in the prior suit. The complaint alleged that the insurer had manufactured evidence and suborned perjury by inducing a third party falsely to charge the attorneys with colluding to dismiss another defendant in the personal injury suit in exchange for giving false testimony. In reversing the dismissal following demurrer, the appellate court held that Civ. Code § 47(b) protects only publications made to promote the interest of justice, which requirement Silberg expressly overruled (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1296-1297) .

The court in Bradley noted that California cases have delineated the persons to whom the privilege applies, in harmony with the Restatement (Second) of Torts. Inasmuch as the complaint alleged that the insurer was not a party to the prior action, Bradley concluded that the insurer was not one of the designated persons to whom the absolute privilege has been extended by law. The court of appeal in this particular case noted, however, that the "interest of justice" test in Bradley has been rejected by the California Supreme Court in Silberg; and that the restriction of "designated persons" to those identified in the Restatement has been questioned, because the statutory language contains no such limitations [ see ITT Telecom Prods. Corp. v. Dooley (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 307, 262 Cal. Rptr. 773] . The court therefore declined to follow the categorical exclusion in Bradley of insurers from the privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b), stating that Silberg cannot be read to support that holding because there was no issue in Silberg regarding whether insurers are excluded from the privilege; Silberg merely stated the usual formulation that the privilege applies to any communication by litigants or other participants authorized by law (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1297-1298) . The court stated that inasmuch as the question whether an insurer is a "participant authorized by law" for purposes of Civ. Code § 47(b) was not considered or decided in Silberg, that case does not preclude the conclusion that insurers providing a defense are entitled to invoke the privilege under that statute (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1298) .

The court also rejected the plaintiffs' contention that the privilege does not apply because the conduct of the defendant constituted noncommunicative conduct, that is, the defendant's formulation and implementation of a plan to destroy all evidence of culpability, rather than the false testimony of the insured. The court acknowledged that the statute does not apply to noncommunicative conduct and does not bar the evidentiary use of privileged communications in otherwise allowable actions (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1298) . However, the court observed, the plaintiffs do not complain of any noncommunicative conduct; their only grievance is that the insurer concealed the insured's liability (and hence its own duty to indemnify), by communications to the insured and the other doctor to lie in their depositions. Characterizing the defendant's conduct as "destruction" of evidence does not alter the fact that the "destruction" was accomplished entirely by statements made in the litigation. That circumstance brings the action within the bounds of the privilege. The court stated that their claims, however styled, are founded on the utterance of injurious communications in or in connection with the prior action; a defendant cannot be liable without reliance on privileged communications made in the course of a judicial proceeding (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1299) .

The court also rejected the plaintiffs' contention that the privilege should not insulate the insurer from the unethical and criminal conduct alleged in the complaint. The court stated that, at worst, the complaint alleges that the defendant suborned perjury. However, it held that it is well settled that Civ. Code § 47(b) bars claims based on subornation of perjury. The court did not condone the "outrageous conduct" alleged in the complaint, but stated that it is in the nature of a statutory privilege that it must deny a civil recovery for immediate wrongs in order to accomplish what the legislature perceives to be a greater good. Moreover, it noted, notwithstanding Civ. Code § 47(b), perjury remains a felony offense (225 Cal. App. 3d 1284, 1300) .

[e] Privilege Applicable to Nonparties as Well as Parties

Obos v. Scripps Psychological Assocs., Inc. (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 103, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 30 , raised the issue of the application of judicial privilege to communications regarding a third party, made in the course of a court-ordered child custody and placement investigation in connection with a child custody dispute. In the course of this investigation, a court-appointed psychologist was told the mother's boyfriend, had been dishonorably discharged from the military and fired from his job for dishonesty. The psychologist discussed these allegations with the children's attorney and their therapist. The mother's boyfriend then filed this action for defamation and invasion of privacy, asserting the communications with the children's attorney and therapist damaged his reputation, and contending the judicial privilege did not apply to these communications because he was not a party to the underlying action. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, finding the communications were privileged. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the judicial privilege is accorded not only to parties, but to nonparties as well. The court stated that the focus of the applicability of judicial privilege lies in whether the publication was connected or related to the underlying proceedings; not the status of the plaintiff in the subsequent proceeding (59 Cal. App. 4th 103, 108) . Here, there was ample connection to the underlying proceeding. Permitting nonparties to the underlying action, to sue on the basis of statements otherwise protected by the judicial privilege, would, according to the court, promote chaos, particularly in the realm of custody determinations. Therefore, it would not hamstring a court-appointed psychologist's efforts to ascertain the best environment for children by permitting nonparties subsequently to sue the psychologist for alleged defamation if the psychologist's communications otherwise satisfied the requisites of Civ. Code

§ 47 (59 Cal. App. 4th 103, 109) .

[f] Privilege Applicable to Quasi-Judicial Proceedings

In Harris v. King (1998) 60 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 70 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790 , the plaintiff filed suit against several doctors, complaining that these doctors had prepared and submitted a medical report to the State Compensation Insurance Fund that defamed him and misrepresented his physical condition arising from an industrial accident. The trial court sustained the defendants demurrer to the complaint and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that the report was a prelitigation communication privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The court ruled that the privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) was absolute, and applied to communications involving quasi-judicial proceedings, including workers' compensation proceedings. Here, the defendants' communication satisfied the requirements for application of the litigation privilege because it was made in a quasi-judicial proceeding, by participants authorized by law to achieve the objects of the litigation, and the communication had a logical relation to that proceeding (60 Cal. App. 4th 1185, 1188) .

[g] Privilege Extends to Category of Communications Permitted by Law

In Jacob B. v. County of Shasta (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 948, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 477, 154 P.3d 1003 , plaintiff, in 1993 when he was 15 years old, had been accused by his brother and sister-in-law of molesting plaintiff's then-five-year-old nephew. The sheriff's office investigated and while it was believed that a molestation did occur, the case was not prosecuted because of the victim's young age and inability to communicate adequately. The victim's mother did, however, apply for and receive counseling compensation on behalf of her son from the county victim witness program on the basis of their conclusion that a crime had in fact occurred. The victim witness program also made an entry into the statewide victims-of-crime database (VOX) under which the victim and plaintiff, as the perpetrator of the molestation, were both identified. Plaintiff's brother and sister-in-law were eventually divorced, and their marriage dissolution decree prohibited contact between their son and plaintiff. Plaintiff's brother remarried, and he and his new wife, who had three sons from a previous marriage, became dissatisfied with the dissolution decree prohibiting contact with plaintiff, resulting in an ongoing dispute in a family law proceeding between plaintiff's brother's new wife and her ex-husband. In 2003, the victim's mother, now remarried herself, went to the county victim witness program office distraught over the possibility that the no-contact dissolution order might be lifted in the pending family law proceeding. She asked the office staff to help her by writing to the court, which they did. Obtaining information from the VOX database, staff members in the office prepared a letter stating that the victim's mother had come to the office in 1993 on behalf of her son, established a claim that plaintiff had molested her son, and received counseling funds. This letter was taken to the family law proceeding, and a copy was eventually provided to plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the county and the office staff member who signed the letter, asserting invasion of the constitutional right to privacy and other causes of action. A trial followed and defendants moved for nonsuit on the basis of the absolute judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). The trial court dismissed all causes of action except the invasion of privacy action, and the jury eventually rendered a verdict for plaintiff. Defendants appealed, and the court of appeal held that the litigation privilege protected the letter against all causes of action, including the one based on the constitutional right to privacy. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal decision. The Court first held that the letter was a communication otherwise protected by the judicial privilege. Plaintiff argued in part that because he was a juvenile at the time of the alleged molestation, the information obtained from the VOX system was confidential under Welf. & Inst. Code § 827 and could not be released without a prior court order. Because release of the information violated confidentiality laws, according to plaintiff, the letter could not be privileged. The Supreme Court disagreed. Noting that it had stated in previous opinions that the privilege applies to publications "permitted by law" or "authorized by law," the Court clarified that this language was meant to broaden application of the privilege to include any category of publication that was permitted by law. Regardless of whether the specific communication at issue was made in violation of the law, such as because the communication was perjurious or revealed confidential information, if it was within a category of communications permitted by law, the privilege would attach. The Court concluded that because the letter was a communication made to a family law court for purposes of determining a child welfare dispute, which was a category of communication permitted by law, the letter was covered by the privilege even if this particular letter revealed confidential information in violation of statute (40 Cal. 4th 948, 957-959) . The Court then held that the judicial privilege remains an absolute privilege even as to invasion of privacy actions based on the guarantee of privacy in the California Constitution (40 Cal. 4th 948, 961) .

[a] Absolute Privilege for Judicial Proceeding

In Soliz v. Williams (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184 , the court of appeal sustained a demurrer to the extent that the trial court had applied an absolute judicial privilege to statements made by a judge in the course of a judicially-imposed settlement conference, even though those statements were made in the hallway outside the courtroom. The court of appeal concluded that the plaintiff's state-law claims for monetary damages, which included claims for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress and defamation, could not be sustained against the defendants because the settlement conference was a judicial function that was a part of the litigation process and within the jurisdiction of the defendant when acting as a superior court judge (74 Cal. App. 4th 577, 587-589) . The court of appeal noted that the statements at issue were very serious, but also noted that immunity from suit for damages was not affected by the severity of the conduct (74 Cal. App. 4th 577, 589) .

In Rubin v. Green (1993) 4 Cal. 4th 1187, 17 Cal. Rptr. 2d 828, 847 P.2d 1044 , the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal and held that attorney communications with the residents in the plaintiff's mobile home park concerning park conditions and the possibility of the attorneys being retained to prosecute an action against the park owner for failure to maintain the park had "some relation" to an anticipated lawsuit, and thus, were privileged even if the attorneys' conduct constituted wrongful solicitation (4 Cal. 4th 1187, 1191-1196) .

In California Physicians' Serv. v. Superior Court (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1321, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 95 , the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, directing the trial court to sustain the defendant's demurrer to the plaintiffs' supplemental complaint. In that complaint, the plaintiffs sought damages for an insurer's intentional infliction of emotional distress and breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, alleging that the filing and contents of the defendant's answer to the plaintiffs' amended complaint gave rise to these causes of action. The appellate court held that the answer, consisting of one general denial and various affirmative defenses, constituted defensive pleading and as such was an absolutely privileged communication under Civ. Code § 47(b). The court explained that, because of the privilege, defensive pleading, even though allegedly false, interposed in bad faith, or even asserted for inappropriate purposes, cannot be used as the basis for allegations of ongoing bad faith and that no complaint can be grounded on such pleading, particularly if, as in this particular case, the plaintiffs sought to use the pleading as the basis for a claim of bad faith, rather than only as evidence of prior bad faith (9 Cal. App. 4th 1321, 1330) .

In Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 , the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering respondent superior court to sustain the petitioners' demurrers. The petitioners were attorneys who were sued for abuse of process, based in part on a motion they attempted to file in a criminal proceeding to which they were not parties. The motion was denied due to the lack of standing. In the abuse of process action, the trial court overruled petitioners' demurrer, and petitioners sought a writ of mandate. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the lack of standing to bring the motion did not destroy the judicial privilege [Civ. Code § 47(b)] applicable to the motions (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529) . The privilege is not restricted to the actual parties to the lawsuit, but need merely be connected or related to the proceedings (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529) . Because the motion was connected to the criminal action, the ruling that petitioners lacked standing did not operate to deny the normal defense of privilege (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 532) .

In Gootee v. Lightner (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 587, 274 Cal. Rptr. 697 , parties to a child-custody proceeding retained a psychologist for the purpose of providing recommendations to the court based on his evaluation of their case. After that proceeding concluded, one of the parties brought an action against the psychologist for professional negligence based on alleged intentional and negligent conduct. The court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant, holding that the absolute privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] bars a civil lawsuit seeking to impose liability for misfeasance allegedly committed in connection with the testimonial function for which the defendant was retained (224 Cal. App. 3d 587, 591-596) .

In Howard v. Drapkin (1990) 222 Cal. App. 3d 843, 271 Cal. Rptr. 893 , a party in a child-custody proceeding brought an action against a psychologist whom the parties retained for the purpose of rendering nonbinding findings and recommendations to the court based on her evaluation of the facts and circumstances of the case; the action alleged professional negligence, intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress, and fraud, based on the psychologist's alleged bias toward the opposing party and abusive conduct toward the plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal, holding that the defendant's conduct constituted a communication in the furtherance of justice within the meaning of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] as enunciated in Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 205, 219-220, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 (discussed in § 142.77[3][a]), and otherwise satisfied the criteria for immunity under that case (222 Cal. App. 3d 843, 863-864) . The court also held that the defendant was afforded absolute quasi-judicial immunity under common law principles (222 Cal. App. 3d 843, 852-860) .

Abraham v. Lancaster Cmty. Hosp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 796, 266 Cal. Rptr. 360 , arose from a federal district court action, which stated several federal and state causes of action, e.g., anti-trust violations, stemming from an individual defendant's conduct as the assistant administrator of a hospital, in coercing patients to patronize his hospital at the expense of the plaintiff. The defendant in the federal action brought an action in state court against the plaintiff in the federal action, alleging defamation and related causes of action. The court of appeal affirmed dismissal of all causes of action, holding that former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] provides an absolute privilege to statements made in the course of judicial proceedings, which includes the filing of a lawsuit (217 Cal. App. 3d 796, 812-813, 822) .

In Rosenthal v. Irell & Manella (1982) 135 Cal. App. 3d 121, 185 Cal. Rptr. 92 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's holding that the plaintiff's action was barred by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. The plaintiff brought an action against members of a law firm for inducing breach of contract, intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, and intentional infliction of emotional distress for alleged utterances made by the defendants that allegedly induced the plaintiff's attorneys to settle the action without his consent. The plaintiff argued that the privilege extended only to publication of false statements. The court of appeal, however, held that the privilege applies to an injurious publication of whatever nature, in a protected proceeding, and not just to false statements (135 Cal. App. 3d 121, 127-128) .

In Portman v. McDonald Law Corp. (1979) 99 Cal. App. 3d 988, 160 Cal. Rptr. 505 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of respondent attorneys' motion for judgment on the pleadings on the basis of the privilege accorded by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. The action was based on negligent misrepresentation arising from an earlier, related action in which respondents were attorneys of record for an insurance corporation that suffered a money judgment against it in appellants' favor. When the corporation appealed in that action, respondents sought to avoid the filing of an undertaking to stay enforcement on behalf of their clients and advised appellants' counsel both orally and by letter that the corporation was financially sound although the company was insolvent when the statement was made. The court of appeal held that the statement was absolutely privileged because it was related to the judicial proceedings (99 Cal. App. 3d 988, 991) .

In Rader v. Thrasher (1972) 22 Cal. App. 3d 883, 99 Cal. Rptr. 670 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of summary judgment for the defendants. The plaintiff was the former husband's former attorney in a prior divorce proceeding, and the plaintiff alleged that the defendants (the former husband and his current attorney) had defamed him in a deposition and also in a pleading filed in one of the many proceedings resulting from the divorce proceeding. The court held that all of the allegedly defamatory statements were protected by the absolute privilege for judicial proceedings and, thus, that the summary judgments were properly granted (22 Cal. App. 3d 883, 887-889) .

In Smith v. Hatch (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 39, 76 Cal. Rptr. 350 , the court of appeal affirmed summary judgments for the defendants. The complaint was based on two letters written by the defendant who was, at the time, the attorney for a contractors association. The first letter was written to the association concerning pending litigation between the association and another association; the second letter was written to the judge in the pending litigation. The court held that both letters were absolutely privileged because they were related to the judicial proceedings before the court (271 Cal. App. 2d 39, 45-50) .

Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706 , reaffirmed the principle that the privilege conferred on publications made in connection with judicial proceedings is absolute. The court held that questions asked by an attorney in a deposition are absolutely privileged (245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 85, 90) .

[b] Privilege Applicable to Proposed Judicial Proceeding

In Aronson v. Kinsella (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 254, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 , the appellate court affirmed the trial court's grant of summary judgment for the defendant, in the plaintiff's libel per se action. The action was based on allegedly false prelitigation statements about the plaintiff published in a letter. The summary judgment was granted on the ground that the statements were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The plaintiff had two arguments on appeal; that the privilege for prelitigation statements was a qualified rather than an absolute privilege that could be defeated by a showing of malice, and that in order for the prelitigation privilege to apply the contemplated litigation must be imminent. The court rejected both. As to the first argument, the court determined that the case the plaintiff cited for the qualified privilege argument, was not authority for the proposition that the privilege for prelitigation statements was a qualified rather than an absolute privilege. It concluded that if the prelitigation statement was made with a good faith belief in a legally viable claim and in serious contemplation of litigation, then the statement would be absolutely privileged (58 Cal. App. 4th 254, 266) . As to the second argument, the court found that the litigation privilege was not conditioned on an imminency requirement separate from the requirement that prelitigation statements be made in serious and good faith consideration of litigation (58 Cal. App. 4th 254, 268) .

[c] Absolute Privilege for Attorney's Communications Related to Proceeding

In Kashian v. Harriman (2002) 98 Cal. App. 4th 892, 120 Cal. Rptr. 2d 576 , the plaintiff brought a cause of action against an attorney and his client, an environmental organization, based on the attorney's actions in sending a letter to the Attorney General requesting an investigation into the plaintiff's business dealings and potential conflicts of interest. In the letter, the attorney charged that the plaintiff, who served as chairman of the board of trustees of a nonprofit, tax-exempt corporation building a local heart hospital, stood to benefit financially from the hospital because of business ventures not being made public, and also sought an inquiry into the corporation's tax-exempt status. The attorney acknowledged sending copies of the letter to clients of his who were involved in related proceedings, and parts of the letter eventually saw publication in the local newspaper, although the attorney denied providing the newspaper a copy. The plaintiff then sued, alleging causes of action for defamation and unfair competition, basing the unfair competition cause of action on assertions that the attorney's representation of environmental interest groups was a sham in that he formed his own groups to create the impression that he had more broad public support for what were essentially his own private interests and then used this as leverage to force litigation opponents to settle. The attorney filed a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, arguing that the letter and his litigation activities in general were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) and, in any event, failed to constitute defamation or unfair competition.

The trial court granted the special motion to strike, and the court of appeal affirmed. Addressing the unfair competition claim, the court of appeal held that the attorney's litigation practices were communicative conduct protected by the judicial privilege, despite allegations that the conduct may have been unethical or even illegal (98 Cal. App. 4th 892, 915-921) . Although an attorney's violation of statutory constraints may form the basis for an unfair competition claim, the plaintiff in this case failed to establish a probability of success on the merits, because the evidence provided by the plaintiff did not establish a pattern or practice of deceit (98 Cal. App. 4th 892, 921-926) . Addressing the defamation claims, the court concluded first, that delivery of the letter to the Attorney General was also absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b), as an official proceeding authorized by law (98 Cal. App. 4th 892, 926-927) . Second, the court concluded that the plaintiff failed to show that the attorney provided the letter to the newspaper (98 Cal. App. 4th 892, 928-930) . Finally, the court held that the attorney's conduct in providing the letter to other clients interested in the matter was in part covered by the litigation privilege and in part by the qualified privileged of Civ. Code § 47(b), and that the plaintiff failed to provide evidence of malice sufficient to defeat the qualified privilege (98 Cal App. 4th 892, 930-933) .

In Knoell v. Petrovich (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 164, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 162 , the plaintiff sued an attorney for defamation and other causes of action stemming from the attorney's representation of a client who alleged that the plaintiff may have forged the client's signature on an easement deed. The suit against the attorney was based on a demand letter the attorney wrote to the plaintiff on behalf of the client, as well as a letter written to the city attorney concerning the easement dispute. Although the attorney never specifically accused the plaintiff of a crime, the attorney commented in the letter to the plaintiff that the signature on the easement deed "may or may not be a forgery" and mentioned in the letter to the city attorney that her client took the position that the easement was obtained by fraud and deception. The plaintiff eventually settled with the attorney's client over the easement dispute, but then successfully sued that client and later brought suit against her attorney. The trial court granted the attorney's demurrer, finding that the suit was barred by the applicable statutes of limitation and also by the litigation privilege. The court of appeal agreed. Regarding the litigation privilege, the court noted that the privilege has been applied to demand letters and other pre-litigation communications by an attorney and can apply to all torts except malicious prosecution (76 Cal. App. 4th 164, 169-170) . The letters written by the attorney in this case were timely, specifically concerned the easement dispute, and were in anticipation of litigation. The court also rejected the plaintiff's argument that the privilege could be overcome if the allegedly actionable statements were made to "leverage" a settlement (76 Cal. App. 4th 164, 170-171) .

In Dove Audio, Inc. v. Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 777, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 830 , a law firm sent letters to various individuals in preparation of a lawsuit. In those letters, the firm stated that its client had been damaged by business activities of the plaintiff. The plaintiff filed an action against the law firm for libel and interference with economic relationship. The trial court sustained a demurrer on the ground that the letter was protected by the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b), and the court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff contended that the litigation privilege did not apply because the communication was between private parties not acting in an official capacity. However, the privilege is not limited to communications to or from government officials. It applies to communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding, such as a demand letter from an attorney to a potential adversary, and to communications made during an attorney's investigatory interviews with private individuals preparatory to a hearing (47 Cal. App. 4th 777, 781) .

In Passman v. Torkan (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 607, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291 , attorneys representing one party in litigation brought a defamation action against the opposing party based on statements he made regarding the attorneys in letters to his counsel. In the underlying action, the defendant sued his business partner for dissolution of a corporation and appointment of a receiver, claiming that his partner had fraudulently failed to report and account for the corporation's gross receipts. After the trial court determined that the defendant held a 20 percent stock ownership interest in the corporation, the partner elected in lieu of dissolution to purchase defendant's interest. When the two could not agree on the fair market value of the interest, the trial court appointed three appraisers to ascertain the value of the corporation's assets and the value of the corporation as an ongoing business. During the course of litigation, defendant wrote a letter to his attorney and sent copies of the letter to the court-appointed appraisers. The plaintiff instituted a libel action based on statements made in the letter; defendant demurred to the complaint on the grounds that the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) operated as a complete defense to the cause of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the complaint.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision regarding the publications to counsel. It concluded that the statements made in defendant's letter to his attorney were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b)(2) as publications made in a judicial proceeding. Crucial to the court's decision was its interpretation of the following rule: that in order for communications to be absolutely privileged they must be (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation; and (4) have some connection or logical relation to the action. While the plaintiff's conceded that defendant's letter satisfied the first three requirements, they challenged whether the communication had some connection or logical relation to the action. The court found that the statements did have some connection or logical relation to the action because the whole purpose of the letter was to prompt action by defendant's attorney to conclude the litigation before the opposing party could dissipate any more funds from the business (34 Cal. App. 4th 607, 613) . The court ruled that the letter not only had "some logical relation to" the lawsuit, it bore directly on the subject matter being litigated, namely the value of the business as a going concern (34 Cal. App. 4th 607, 615) . Lastly, the plaintiff's argument that the absolute privilege of § 47(b) should be limited to only those publications made without malice was rejected; the court held that the absolute privilege applies regardless of whether the publication was made with malice and that to hold otherwise would be contrary to decisions of the California Supreme Court (34 Cal. App. 4th 607, 616) .

[d] Privilege Applicable to Nonparties as Well as Parties

In Sacramento Brewing Co. v. Desmond, Miller & Desmond (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 760 , the plaintiff brought an action for defamation against a law firm that had erroneously identified the plaintiff as the debtor in the caption of a notice of motion to sell personal property filed in the course of a bankruptcy proceeding. In fact, the plaintiff had no connection at all to the bankruptcy proceeding. The law firm successfully demurred to the defamation complaint on the grounds that the mistake, which had been corrected with an amended notice of motion filed two days after the original notice, was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The court of appeal agreed, rejecting the plaintiff's argument that because the plaintiff was not actually involved with the underlying bankruptcy proceeding, the defective notice of motion had no connection to the bankruptcy case, and the litigation privilege did not apply. The court of appeal noted that it was the subject matter or context of the misstatement that was the relevant consideration, and not the isolated misstatement itself. Therefore, the court concluded that because the contextual document in which the allegedly defamatory mistake occurred--the notice of motion--was filed to further the objects of the bankruptcy litigation, the litigation privilege applied despite the fact that the plaintiff was not actually a party to the underlying proceeding (75 Cal. App. 4th 1082, 1089-1090) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be used to support a summary judgment motion by a participant, such as an expert witness, in an arbitration proceeding if the plaintiff seeks damages or other relief against the participant because of statements the participant allegedly made in the course of the proceeding. The basis for the motion is that the participant has an absolute privilege for statements under the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b).

This form may be adapted for use in other appropriate circumstances, as for example in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, if the suit is based on statements made at a deposition taken in the course of a contractual arbitration [see, e.g., Moore v. Conliffe (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 634, 639, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 152, 871 P.2d 204] , counsel would refer to documents such as a neutral arbitrator's order to take deposition and subpoena issued by the arbitrator's sponsoring organization to establish that the statements were made in the course of the arbitration proceedings.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Applies to Contractual Arbitration

Moore v. Conliffe (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 634, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 152, 871 P.2d 204 , involved an action by a decedent's survivor against an expert witness alleging concealment and suppression of evidence, intentional misrepresentation, and other torts. The witness testified at a deposition during a private, contractual arbitration arising from the alleged wrongful death of the plaintiff's daughter. Some time after the arbitrators rendered their decision, the plaintiff discovered that three months prior to the defendant's testimony, the defendant published an article in a medical journal taking a different position than he had taken at the deposition. The plaintiff commenced the action and the defendant demurred. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the complaint with prejudice, asserting that the testimony was privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the privilege only applies to statements made in a court proceeding. The defendant petitioned for review by the Supreme Court, and review was granted.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal. The Court noted that in an earlier decision, it had stated that the principal purpose of Civ. Code § 47(b) was to afford litigants and witnesses the utmost freedom of access to the courts without fear of being harassed subsequently by derivative tort actions. That purpose, stated the Court, supports application of the privilege to private arbitration proceedings. Furthermore, the legislative history of the section supports the application because the statute is derived from the common law. The Comments to the Restatement (Second) of Torts, § 588, provide that arbitration proceedings may be included within the scope of the privilege (7 Cal. 4th 634, 649) . Thus, the Court held that statements made in the course of a private contractual arbitration proceeding are protected by the litigation privilege embodied in Civ. Code § 47(b) (7 Cal. 4th 634, 658) .

[b] Privilege Applies to Deposition Testimony

The facts and procedural background of Moore v. Conliffe (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 634, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 152, 871 P.2d 204 , are discussed in § 142.49[3][a]. The defendant in the action was an expert witness who was being sued for damages arising from his alleged false testimony. The complaint did not allege that the witness testified at the arbitration hearing itself or that his deposition testimony was introduced at the hearing. Rather, the deposition was taken during a break in the hearing. Nonetheless, the Court held that the statements were made in the course of a private, contractual arbitration and were privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b)(2) (7 Cal. 4th 634, 638-639) .

NOTE:

The Court stated that, because the statements at issue in the case before it were made in the course of a private contractual arbitration proceeding authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1280 et seq., it had no occasion to determine whether the litigation privilege applied to statements made in the course of "alternative dispute resolution" proceedings other than those involving arbitration (7 Cal. 4th 634, 651 n.8). However, the Court's reliance on the similarities between arbitration proceedings and proceedings in the judicial system would seem to support an argument that alternative dispute resolution proceedings should also be within the rationale of this case to the extent that the proceedings are similar to judicial proceedings in purpose and in their reliance on the privilege to provide finality and certainty (see 7 Cal. 4th 634, 641-644) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER BECAUSE THE ALLEGEDLY DEFAMATORY _____ [STATEMENT or COMMUNICATION] WAS MADE IN _____ [AN OFFICIAL PROCEEDING AUTHORIZED BY LAW or THE _____ (INITIATION or COURSE) OF A PROCEEDING AUTHORIZED BY LAW AND REVIEWABLE BY MANDATE].

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 142.24, Paragraph A.]

[EITHER]

B. Privilege for Proceedings of Government Agencies. Statements or communications made in an official proceeding authorized by law, other than a legislative or judicial proceeding, are privileged (Civ. Code § 47(b)].

[AND/OR]

B. Privilege for Proceedings Authorized by Law and Reviewable by Mandate. Statements or communications made in the initiation or course of a proceeding that is not a legislative, judicial, or other official proceeding, but is a proceeding authorized by law and is reviewable pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1084 through 1097 are privileged (Civ. Code § 47(b)].

C. Privilege Is Absolute. The privilege conferred by Civil Code Section 47(b) is absolute and is unaffected by the existence of malice (Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259 ; see also Ascherman

v. Natanson (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 864-865, 100 Cal. Rptr. 656).

[Optional] D. Determining Quasi-Judicial Function. If a proceeding is being conducted in a manner similar to a judicial proceeding, including notice, informal pleadings, and a hearing, and the administrative agency or body performs an important public duty and decides issues of significant public concern, the participants in that proceeding should be vested with absolute immunity (Ascherman v. Natanson (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 866, 100 Cal. Rptr. 656). In determining whether an administrative body or agency possesses such quasi-judicial power, the preliminary factors to be considered are: (1) whether the administrative body is vested with discretion based on investigation and consideration of evidentiary facts, (2) whether it is entitled to hold hearings and decide the issue by the application of rules of law to the ascertained facts and, more importantly, (3) whether its power affects the personal or property rights of private persons (Tiedemann v. Superior Court (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 918, 925, 148 Cal. Rptr. 242 ; Ascherman v. Natanson (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 866, 100 Cal. Rptr. 656).

[Optional] E. Proceedings of Board of Medical Quality Assurance. Any publication in connection with proceedings of the Board of Medical Quality Assurance is clothed with the absolute privilege set forth in Civil Code Section 47(b) as having been made in the course of an "official proceeding" (Civ. Code § 47(b) cl. (3)) and proceedings reviewable by writ of mandate (Civ. Code § 47(b) cl. (4)) (Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259).

[Optional] F. Communications Prompting Official Action. Letters or communications designed to prompt official action are as much a part of an official proceeding as a communication made after the proceeding has commenced (Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259).

[Optional] G. Pleading Tort Theory Other Than Libel or Slander. The privilege provided by Civil Code Section 47(b) may not be defeated by asserting a different tort theory based on the same protected communication (Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 943, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259).

[Optional] H. Absolute Privilege Applies to Employer Response to Request for Information From Law Enforcement Agency Conducting Employment Background Investigation. Although

Government Code Section 1031.1 provides a qualified immunity for information provided by employers to law enforcement agencies conducting background checks on applicants, that statute also contains a savings clause that preserves application of the absolute immunity of Civil Code Section 47(b) to such responses (Bardin v. Lockheed Aeronautical Sys. Co. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 494, 504, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726).

[Optional] I. Absolute Privilege Applies to Pupil Expulsion Hearings. In addition to any other immunity that may exist, any testimony provided by a pupil as a witness in an expulsion hearing is specifically protected by the absolute privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) (Educ. Code § 48918.6).

[Optional] J. Statements Made to Police Reporting Potential Criminal Conduct Absolutely Privileged. Unless the elements of malicious prosecution can be proven, statements made to the police regarding potential criminal activity are protected from civil liability by an absolute privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b) (Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 350, 355, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 81 P.3d 244).

[Optional] K. No Particular Action by Official Body Required for Complaint to Be Protected. Because a complaint constitutes part of the official proceedings, it is not necessary that an official body take any particular action on the complaint for the complaint itself to be protected (Lee v. Fick (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 89, 97, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 375).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the basis that statements made in an official proceeding authorized by law, other than a legislative or judicial proceeding [see § 142.47 and § 142.48], or in any other proceeding authorized by law and reviewable by mandate, are absolutely privileged. If the statements were made in an official proceeding of a government agency, the first alternative for Paragraph B should be used [see Hackethal v. Weissbein (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 55, 64, 154 Cal. Rptr. 423, 592 P.2d 1175 (decided prior to 1979 amendment to Civ. Code § 47(2), holding that official proceedings under that section limited to government agencies)]. If this first alternative is used, optional Paragraph D should be used as well. The second alternative would be used if the proceedings in question are other than an official proceeding but are authorized by law and reviewable by mandate [see Civ. Code § 47(b)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the absolute privilege conferred on publications made in relation to administrative proceedings, and for a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender). For a discussion of types of proceedings that are reviewable by mandate, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition , and Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 142.77 may be used to oppose these points.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege for Proceedings of Governmental Agencies

Civ. Code § 47(b) provides that a privileged publication or broadcast is one made in any (1) legislative or (2) judicial proceeding, or (3) other official proceeding authorized by law.

Civ. Code § 47(b) also provides that an allegation or averment contained in any pleading or affidavit filed in an action for marital dissolution or legal separation made of or concerning a person by or against whom no affirmative relief is prayed in the action is not a privileged publication or broadcast as to the person making the allegation or averment within the meaning of Civ. Code § 47 unless the pleading is verified or affidavit sworn to, and is made without malice, by one having reasonable and probable cause for believing the truth of the allegation or averment and unless the allegation or averment is material and relevant to the issues in the action [Civ. Code § 47(b)(1)].

In addition, Civ. Code § 47(b) does not make privileged any communication made in furtherance of an act of intentional destruction or alteration of physical evidence undertaken for the purpose of depriving a party to litigation of the use of that evidence, whether or not the content of the communication is the subject of a subsequent publication or broadcast that is privileged pursuant to Civ. Code § 47. Civ. Code § 47(b)(2) defines "physical evidence" as evidence specified in Evid. Code § 250 or evidence that is property of any type specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 2031.010 et seq..

[b] Privilege for Proceedings Authorized by Law and Reviewable by Mandate

Civ. Code § 47(b) provides that a privileged publication or broadcast is one made in the initiation or course of any other proceeding authorized by law and reviewable pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1084-1097, governing mandate.

The statutory exceptions to Civ. Code § 47(b) are set out in § 142.50[3][a].

[c] Privilege Is Absolute

Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259 , was an action by an orthopedic surgeon for damages for defamation against two hospitals to which the plaintiff had some years in the past applied for staff privileges as an orthopedic surgeon and at which he had performed surgery, and against their respective administrators, arising from the disclosure of evaluative information contained in the plaintiff's personnel file. The disclosure by the administrator of the first hospital had been made to the Board of Medical Quality Assurance (BMQA), and the disclosure by the administrator of the second hospital had been made to another hospital that had requested the information in order to aid in its consideration of whether to grant the plaintiff staff privileges. The trial court granted the defendants' motions for summary judgment, and the plaintiff appealed. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that the privilege conferred by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] is absolute and is unaffected by the existence of malice (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941) .

The court of appeal in Ascherman v. Natanson (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 100 Cal. Rptr. 656 , affirmed a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the grounds that statements made by the defendant, a physician, during the course of an interview with an attorney representing a hospital district, who was preparing for an administrative hearing by the district to review a rejection of the plaintiff's application for staff privileges, were absolutely privileged from an action for slander by the plaintiff, also a physician. The court held that the administrative hearing was quasi-judicial in nature and that, therefore, the defendant's statements were privileged under the portion of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] protecting statements made in official proceedings, other than judicial or legislative proceedings, authorized by law. The court said that although the statute does not explicitly so provide, the cases make it clear that the privilege conferred by former Civ. Code § 47(2) is absolute and that it is in no way affected by the presence of malice (23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 864-865) .

[d] Determining Quasi-Judicial Function

Ascherman v. Natanson (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 100 Cal. Rptr. 656 , is discussed in § 142.50[3][c]. After developing the criteria in Paragraph D of this form and noting also that the absolute privilege extends to preliminary conversations and interviews between a prospective witness and an attorney if the communications are related to or connected with a pending or contemplated action, the court held that the hearing was quasi-judicial in character. Relying particularly on Wyatt v. Tahoe Forest Hosp. Dist. (1959) 174 Cal. App. 2d 709, 345 P.2d 93 , the court reasoned that because staff privileges are, as a practical matter, a special license, that is, a means by which a physician is permitted to fully practice his profession, the hearing was quasi-judicial in character because it functioned to ascertain facts on which the right to engage in the practice of a profession depended (23 Cal. App. 3d 861, 866-867) .

In Tiedemann v. Superior Court (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 918, 148 Cal. Rptr. 242 , the defendant allegedly made slanderous statements, which concerned his former employer's failure to report certain income to the intelligence division of the federal Internal Revenue Service. He also reported that the plaintiff, his employer, had terminated the defendant's prior employment because he had improperly claimed personal expenditures. The trial court overruled the defendant's demurrer on the ground that the statements were absolutely privileged and subsequently denied the defendant's motions for judgment on the pleading and summary judgment made on the same ground. The defendant's petition for a writ of mandate to compel the entry of summary judgment was granted by the court of appeal. Applying the principles in Paragraph D of this form, the court determined that proceedings undertaken by an official, investigative and enforcement branch of the IRS qualified as a quasi-judicial agency and that communications to the agency designed to prompt regulatory enforcement action must be considered part of the official proceeding itself, even if the communications were motivated by malice (83 Cal. App. 3d 918, 924-927) .

[e] Proceedings of Board of Medical Quality Assurance

The factual and procedural background of Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259 , is discussed in § 142.50[3][c]. In affirming a summary judgment for the defendants, the court of appeal said that the BMQA is an administrative agency created by the legislature whose responsibilities include enforcement of the Medical Practice Act and review of the performance of physicians and surgeons licensed in California. The court said that the BMQA was an agency analogous to the State Bar of California, with the duty to investigate complaints and the power to initiate disciplinary proceedings against practitioners, and that disciplinary actions taken against a licensee are reviewable by application for writ of mandate. Accordingly, the court said, any publication in connection with BMQA proceedings is clothed with the absolute privilege set forth in former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], as having been made in the course of an "official proceeding" (Civ. Code § 47(b) cl. (3)) and proceedings reviewable by writ of mandate (Civ. Code § 47(b) cl. (4)) (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941) .

The court also held that the disclosure by the administrator of the second hospital to another hospital was protected by the qualified privileges set forth in Civ. Code § 43.8 (communication of information by person in possession of it to, among others, any hospital, hospital medical staff, or peer review committee if such communication is intended to aid in evaluation of qualifications, fitness, character, or insurability of practitioner of, among others, healing arts) and former Civ. Code § 47(3) (communication, without malice, to person interested therein by, among others, one who stands in such relation to person interested as to afford reasonable ground for supposing motive for communication innocent, or who is requested by person interested to give information), and that because there was no showing that the second hospital and its administrator had acted maliciously in making the communication, the summary judgment regarding them was proper (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 944-946) .

[f] Communications Prompting Official Action

The factual and procedural background of Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259 , is discussed in § 142.50[3][c]. In affirming summary judgment in favor of the defendants, the court of appeal said that letters or communications designed to prompt official action are as much a part of an "official proceeding" as a communication made after the proceeding has commenced (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941) . The court explained the reason for this rule is that an administrative agency, to function effectively, must have an "open channel" by which concerned persons may call attention to suspected wrongdoing and that as a matter of public policy, the importance of providing citizens free and open access to governmental agencies for the reporting of suspected illegal activity outweighs the occasional harm that might befall a defamed individual (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 941-942) .

[g] Pleading Tort Theory Other Than Libel or Slander

The factual and procedural background of Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259 , is discussed in § 142.50[3][c]. The plaintiff's complaint had pleaded both libel and slander and intentional infliction of emotional distress. After holding that the communications to the Board of Medical Quality Assurance were absolutely privileged, the court said that although the complaint sets forth an alternative cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, it is settled that the privilege provided by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] may not defeated by asserting a different tort theory based on the same protected communication (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 943) .

[h] Absolute Privilege Applies to Employer Response to Request for Information From Law Enforcement Agency Conducting Employment Background Investigation

In Bardin v. Lockheed Aeronautical Sys. Co. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 494, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 , the plaintiff had applied for a job with the Los Angeles Police Department. In the course of conducting a background investigation, the Department requested and received information about the plaintiff from the plaintiff's former employer. The information provided by the former employer suggested that the employer had had problems with the plaintiff, and based on this information the plaintiff's application with the Department was suspended. Alleging that the information supplied was false, the plaintiff brought suit against the former employer for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, among other contractual and statutory causes of action. Summary judgment was granted for the defendant based on O'Shea v. General Tel. Co. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1040, 238 Cal. Rptr. 715 , which held that information given by a former employer in response to a background investigation by a police agency is absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals affirmed. The court agreed that O'Shea was directly on point and controlling, despite the subsequent enactment of Gov. Code § 1031.1, which provides only a qualified immunity for employers providing information to law enforcement agencies conducting background investigations on applicants for employment. The court held that the savings clause of Gov. Code § 1031.1(b) preserving "existing common law or statutory privileges and immunities" acted to preserve the holding of O'Shea that an absolute privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b) was also available (70 Cal. App. 4th 494, 500-504) .

[i] Statements Made to Police Reporting Potential Criminal Conduct Absolutely Privileged

In Hagberg v. California Fed. Bank (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 350, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 803, 81 P.3d 244 , the plaintiff was a woman of Hispanic descent who attempted to cash a check at a bank. Prompted by seeming irregularities with the printed check, the bank teller consulted with her supervisor about the possibility that the check might be counterfeit. The supervisor called the alleged issuer of the check, who told her that the check was not a valid check. The supervisor then called the police to report that she had a customer attempting to cash an apparent counterfeit check. While the supervisor was speaking with the police dispatcher, the bank's regional security manager again phoned the alleged issuer of the check, who this time informed the bank that the check was in fact valid. This information was relayed to the supervisor, but by then the police had arrived on the scene. The supervisor tried to stop the police before they approached the plaintiff, but she was unsuccessful. The police proceeded to detain the plaintiff. They questioned her, searched her, handcuffed her, and, after about twenty minutes, released her. The plaintiff sued the bank for various causes of action, including slander, false arrest and imprisonment, and civil rights violations. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the grounds that the statements to the police were absolutely privileged pursuant to Civ. Code § 47(b), and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, and the plaintiff again appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The court agreed with the majority of court of appeal cases that had addressed the issue that statements to the police reporting suspected criminal conduct were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (32 Cal. 4th 350, 355) . The Court noted the established rule that statements made in preparation for an official proceeding, or intended to prompt an official investigation, were covered by the absolute privilege, and need not have been made during an actual proceeding (32 Cal. 4th 350, 361-364) . According to the Court, applying the absolute privilege to statements to police, which are generally made in preparation for or intended to prompt investigation that could result in an official proceeding, serves the important public interest of securing open channels of communication between citizens and law enforcement personnel (32 Cal. 4th 350, 368-372) . The Court, recognizing an established exception to the absolute privilege for a cause of action for malicious prosecution (32 Cal. 4th 350, 361) , refused to create another exception for the tort of false imprisonment, and the Court expressly disapproved of language in earlier cases that had suggested that statements to the police were only protected from potential liability for false imprisonment if made in bad faith (32 Cal. 4th 350, 373-375 & n.8).

[j] No Particular Action by Official Body Required for Complaint to Be Protected

In Lee v. Fick (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 89, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 375 , the plaintiff was hired as a high school baseball coach, but he was terminated from this employment after the parents of several of his players complained that he was verbally and physically abusive. The plaintiff brought suit against these parents for libel, slander, and interference with prospective economic advantage. The parents brought a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, which the trial court granted as to the libel cause of action, although it denied the motion on the other causes of action. Both sides appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's decision to grant the motion to strike the libel cause of action, but reversed the trial court's denial of the motion to strike the rest of the complaint. The court held that the plaintiff could not prevail on any of the causes of action because the parents' conduct was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b). The lawsuit was premised largely on letters of complaint written by the parents that were submitted directly to the school board and not submitted to any other person or to the press. The court held that these letters, which clearly were designed to prompt an investigation, and in fact resulted in the coach's firing, were privileged as part of an "official proceeding" (135 Cal. App. 4th 89, 96) . The plaintiff argued that the complaints were not protected communications because he was fired after informal discussions between the parties and no official proceeding or hearing was ever held in response to the complaints. However, the court held that the privilege does not depend on what action, if any, an official agency takes in response to a complaint. The complaint itself is part of the "official proceeding" envisioned by the statute and remains protected by the privilege. Moreover, the court noted that many disputes are resolved informally and that the plaintiff never requested a formal hearing or otherwise challenged the school board's decision in any way (135 Cal. App. 4th 89, 97) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment

The factual and procedural background of Dorn v. Mendelzon (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 242 Cal. Rptr. 259 , is discussed in § 142.50[3][c]. In affirming the judgment, the court of appeal said that summary judgment is properly granted if the evidence in support of the moving party conclusively negates a necessary element of the plaintiff's case or establishes a complete defense, and thus demonstrates that under no hypothesis whatever is there a material factual issue that requires a trial (196 Cal. App. 3d 933, 940) .

[b] Privilege for Proceedings of Government Agencies

In Braun v. Bureau of State Audits (1998) 67 Cal. App. 4th 1382, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 791 , the former medical director of a research and training center at a state university medical center brought an action for defamation and other torts against the Bureau of State Audits, the State Auditor, and others. The lawsuit stemmed from statements made in the course of an investigative audit by the State Auditor under the Reporting of Improper Governmental Activities Act, Gov. Code § 8547 et seq, in which the Auditor concluded that the plaintiff "grossly mismanaged" the center. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer on the grounds that the statements were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b), and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal concluded that an investigative audit by the State Auditor under the Reporting of Improper Governmental Activities Act was an "official proceeding authorized by law" and all statements made in furtherance of the audit were absolutely privileged (67 Cal. App. 4th 1382, 1388-1389) . The fact that the audit report had been released to the public did not affect application of the privilege, because the Act authorized public disclosure of reports and their findings (67 Cal. App. 4th 1382, 1393) .

In Ghebreselassie v. Coleman Sec. Serv. (9th Cir. 1987) 829 F.2d 892, 898 , the Ninth Circuit affirmed that part of a summary judgment for an employer sued for defamation that had been based on the employer's statements in its termination report to a state unemployment office. The Ninth Circuit held that under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], the employer's communications to the unemployment office regarding the plaintiff employee's dismissal were entitled to a qualified privilege. Further, the Ninth Circuit held that other reports by investigators and the employer were also entitled to a qualified privilege, under former Civ. Code § 47(3) (829 F.2d 892, 898) .

In Long v. Pinto (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 946, 179 Cal. Rptr. 182 , the court of appeal affirmed summary judgment for the defendant and held that a letter regarding a physician's qualifications sent to the Board of Medical Quality Assurance (BMQA) by the appointee of a hospital review board was absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. The letter implicated, but did not name, the plaintiff as the doctor who had performed a large number of allegedly unnecessary operations on elderly rest home patients. The court found that the letter was sent to BMQA to alert the administrative agency to the situation and to prompt board action and was therefore part of an official proceeding (126 Cal. App. 3d 946, 948) .

[c] Privilege for Proceedings Authorized by Law and Reviewable by Mandate

In Long v. Pinto (1981) 126 Cal. App. 3d 946, 179 Cal. Rptr. 182 , which is discussed in § 142.50[4][b], a copy of a letter regarding a physician's qualifications sent by the appointee of a hospital review board to the board of directors of another private hospital where the plaintiff was on staff was also held to be absolutely privileged because the amendment to former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] that states that a publication is privileged if made in the initiation or course of any other proceeding authorized by law and if reviewable by a writ of mandate would apply to proceedings by a private hospital regarding the fitness of a staff doctor. Although there was no investigation of the plaintiff underway at the private hospital nor any request for information, the letter sent by the defendant was intended to prompt action by the hospital and was thus part of an official proceeding. The Supreme Court's decision in Hackethal v. Weissbein (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 55, 154 Cal. Rptr. 423, 592 P.2d 1175 , that a hearing before the judicial commission of a private medical society was not an official proceeding protected by absolute privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(2) was not applied retroactively to Long, because at the time the defendant sent the letter he was immune from liability for libel under prior judicial interpretations of former Civ. Code § 47(2), which were subsequently confirmed by the statutory amendment added shortly after the decision in Hackethal (126 Cal. App. 3d 946, 949-950) .

In Wallin v. Vienna Sausage Mfg. Co. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 203 Cal. Rptr. 375 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment for the defendant in an action for slander and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on statements made in a grievance hearing. In its decision the court noted that if a grievance hearing results in the loss of a fundamental vested right, such as employment, it is subject to review by mandate, and the former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] privilege applies to statements made in the hearing (156 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1055-1056) .

[d] Privilege Is Absolute

Tiedemann v. Superior Court (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 918, 148 Cal. Rptr. 242 , is discussed in § 142.50[3][d]. In ordering issuance of a writ of mandate directing that summary judgment be entered in favor of petitioner, the court of appeal said that it is now well established in California case law that the privilege conferred under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] is absolute and unaffected by the presence of malice (83 Cal. App. 3d 918, 924) .

[e] Determining Quasi-Judicial Function

In Picton v. Anderson Union High School Dist. (1996) 50 Cal. App. 4th 726, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 829 , a high school teacher sued his former employer, a school district, for defamation. The plaintiff had been accused of unprofessional conduct by four female students and then entered into a settlement agreement with the school district in exchange for which he resigned from his teaching position. The agreement contained a nondisclosure provision that prescribed the procedure to be followed with respect to all third party inquiries concerning the plaintiff. After the plaintiff had agreed to resign, two individuals representing the school district testified before the Committee of Credentials regarding the accusations. The plaintiff sued the school district for defamation, alleging that the defendant breached the nondisclosure provision of the settlement agreement. The defendants demurred and the trial court sustained the demurrer. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the communications to the committee were absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b), as they were made in an official proceeding authorized by law. The court applied the three criteria in Paragraph D of this form to determine whether an agency possesses quasi-judicial power, and held that the Committee satisfied all three (50 Cal. App. 4th 726, 737) .

[f] Communications Prompting Official Action

In Passman v. Torkan (1995) 34 Cal. App. 4th 607, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 291 , attorney representing one party in business litigation brought a defamation action against the opposing party based on statements he had made regarding the attorneys in a letter to the district attorney. This letter referred to the attorneys as crooked and accused them, along with the opposing party, of conspiring to defraud him. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the grounds that the privilege of statements made in official proceedings, under Civ. Code § 47(b), operated as a complete defense to the action. The trial court ruled in the defendant's favor and dismissed the complaint. The court of appeal affirmed, ruling that the defendant's communication to the district attorney's office was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b)(3) as a publication made in an official proceeding. The purpose and intent of the letter was designed to prompt a criminal prosecution by the official agency empowered to do so (34 Cal. App. 4th 607, 616) .

[g] Pleading Tort Theory Other Than Libel or Slander

The facts and procedural background of Devis v. Bank of Am. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238 , are discussed in § 142.50[4][h]. The plaintiff attempted to avoid the privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) by alleging that the defendant, a bank, was negligent in conducting the investigation that led to its report to the police. In sustaining summary judgment for the defendant, the court held that, in order to protect the privilege as applied to statements made to the police, the privilege must apply to a claim that the party who made the report to the police conducted a negligent investigation prior to making the report. Any other result would, according to the court, discourage the making of reports to the police and defeat the purpose of the privilege (65 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 1008-1009) .

[h] Statements Made to Police Reporting Potential Criminal Conduct Absolutely Privileged

In Kemps v. Beshwate (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 480 , plaintiff was the owner of a company that provided medical examinations and was the custodian of records for the physicians employed by the company. An attorney hired to provide a criminal defense to a third party tried to provide an alibi for his client by proving that the client was being examined by one of plaintiff's doctors on the day of the crime. The attorney and his hired investigators allegedly spoke with plaintiff prior to the criminal trial, but plaintiff demanded $150 per hour to appear at trial. They refused to pay, but they served plaintiff with a trial subpoena. Plaintiff failed to appear for trial, however, and the criminal defense attorney obtained a warrant for her arrest. After being held in custody for several hours, plaintiff agreed to appear at the trial later that day and did so. Plaintiff then sued the attorney and his investigators for conduct when obtaining the arrest warrant that she alleged was illegal. Defendants filed a successful motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. Plaintiff appealed, but the court of appeal affirmed. The court first held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 applied to the action because it was based on defendants' exercise of the constitutional right to petition the government. Moreover, even if there was a factual dispute over what defendants did to obtain the warrant and whether some of their conduct may have been illegal, defendants' conduct was not clearly illegal as a matter of law (180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1017-1018) . The court then held that plaintiff failed to prove a probability of success on the merits because defendants' conduct was protected by the absolute litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). The court noted that because the right to compel the attendance at trial of witnesses on behalf of a criminal defendant is a constitutionally-protected right, conduct undertaken to compel a witness to attend and testify is protected under the litigation privilege (180 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1018-1019) .

In Navarette v. Holland (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 13, 134 Cal. Rptr. 2d 403 , the plaintiff brought an action against his former wife for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and malicious prosecution, based on her reports to the police and her neighbor that the plaintiff had physically abused her once while they were married. The wife's report to the police led to the plaintiff's being prosecuted for spousal abuse, although he was acquitted apparently in large part because of his wife's testimony. Although she had originally claimed that he had thrown her down a flight of stairs, at trial she testified that he had lost his balance and inadvertently dropped her. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress claims based on the absolute judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b), and granted summary judgment on the malicious prosecution claim based on a finding of probable cause. The court of appeal agreed that as pleaded in the complaint, the wife's conduct in reporting the alleged abuse, even if false and malicious, was protected by the absolute judicial privilege. The court of appeal noted that most court of appeal opinions that had addressed the issue had agreed that statements to the police reporting suspected criminal conduct were absolutely protected. One earlier court of appeal opinion, Fenelon v. Superior Court (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1476, 1483, 273 Cal. Rptr. 367 , which had been issued by the same district of the court of appeal, had reached a contrary conclusion. However, subsequent court of appeal opinions had universally criticized that opinion, and the court concluded that it should abandon that earlier opinion as well (109 Cal. App. 4th 13, 20) . The court also held that the wife's statements made to a neighbor in conjunction with her attempt to phone her report of spousal abuse to the police, which were made right after the alleged abuse occurred, were also privileged, because these statements were an integral part of her report to the police and were in furtherance of that report. The court went on to conclude, however, that it was error to refuse to allow the plaintiff to attempt to amend his complaint to allege actionable statements by his wife that were wholly unconnected with her report to police or prosecutors (109 Cal. App. 4th 13, 21-23) .

In Devis v. Bank of Am. (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 77 Cal. Rptr. 2d 238 , the plaintiff was mistakenly arrested and imprisoned after bank personnel publicly informed police that the plaintiff had stolen checks from a depositor and tried to cash them. The plaintiff brought an action against the bank and the depositor alleging slander and negligence in performing an investigation. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court reaffirmed the established principle that statements made to the police regarding potential criminal activity are protected under Civ. Code § 47(b) as an "official proceeding" (65 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 1007-1008) . The court further held that a report made to the police is privileged even if third parties may incidentally hear the report (65 Cal. App. 4th 1002, 1011-1012) .

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in support of a motion for summary judgment if the defendant asserts that he or she is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the statements were made in a fair and true report in, or a communication to, a public journal that described one of the five types of events described in Civ. Code § 47(d) with substantial accuracy.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion. The supporting papers must also include a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed, along with supporting evidence for each fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the absolute privilege conferred on publications that were a fair and true report contained in public journals, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Public Journal

In Grillo v. Smith (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 868, 193 Cal. Rptr. 414 , the defendant, a newspaper, moved for summary judgment in a libel action involving its publication of an article and editorial concerning improper official conduct by the plaintiff, a presiding municipal court judge. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating first that the editorial, as an expression of opinion concerning the conduct of a public official in office, however unfavorable, was absolutely privileged under the First and Fourth Amendments of the United States Constitution, as well as under Cal. Const., Art. I, § 9 (144 Cal. App. 3d 868, 872) . The court also held that the newspaper article was privileged as a fair and true report of a judicial proceeding under former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)] (144 Cal. App. 3d 868, 873) . The court went on to say that if the object of the report is the presiding judicial officer himself, even a report that is not fair and true will not support the imposition of liability in the absence of a showing of malice (144 Cal. App. 3d 868, 873) .

In Handelsman v. San Francisco Chronicle (1970) 11 Cal. App. 3d 381, 90 Cal. Rptr. 188 , the court of appeal affirmed a special jury verdict that a report of a complaint filed in a superior court action was substantially accurate and thus absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d) (11 Cal. App. 3d 381, 386)].

[b] Privilege Not Lost if Proceeding Is Confidential

In Braun v. Chronicle Publ'g Co. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58 , the plaintiff sued a newspaper publisher for defamation. The plaintiff had been accused of mismanagement in her position as director of a hospital training program, and was subject to a confidential investigative audit by the State Auditor. During the audit, the defendant published five articles about the audit and the events that led up to the investigation. The defendant moved to strike the plaintiff's claims based on the anti-SLAPP statute. The plaintiff contended that she could prevail on her claims because she could defeat application of Civ. Code § 47(d), and thus escape the anti-SLAPP provisions. One of her grounds for challenging the application of the news media privilege was that the defendant could not report on the investigative audit because the investigation itself was confidential. The trial court granted the motion to strike, and entered judgment for the defendant.

With regard to the plaintiff's claim that the privilege did not apply because the audit was confidential, the court stated that the confidentiality of the audit was immaterial. In the context of judicial proceedings, case law is clear that news reports that comprise a history of the proceeding come with the privilege, and the court saw no basis to give the press less room for reporting public official proceedings than in judicial proceedings. Stating that the news reports in question constituted a history of the investigative audit, the court concluded that they came squarely within the Civ. Code § 47(d) privilege for reports of public official proceedings (52 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1050-1051) .

[c] Proceeding Which is Closed to Public Is Still Public Official Proceeding

The facts and procedural history of Braun v. Chronicle Publ'g Co. (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 61 Cal. Rptr. 2d 58 , are discussed in Discussion of Authorities, Privilege Not Lost if Proceeding Is Confidential. As an additional argument that Civ. Code § 47(d) should not apply to the defendant's articles about the State Auditor's investigation of allegations of the plaintiff's mismanagement, the plaintiff contended that the investigation did not qualify as a "public official proceeding" because the investigation was closed to the public. However, the court of appeal noted that other courts have extended Civ. Code § 47(d) to apply to confidential proceedings. Furthermore, the court agreed with the reasoning that in this context the word "public" means "governmental" as opposed to "private" action (52 Cal. App. 4th 1036, 1052) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Public Journal

In Colt v. Freedom Communications, Inc. (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1551, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 245 , the plaintiffs sued a newspaper and its affiliated web site for libel and related causes of action based on the defendants' publication of articles about the plaintiffs' allegedly causing the price of certain stocks to increase so that they could sell their shares at the higher price. The source for the defendants' articles was an investigation by the SEC into the plaintiffs' alleged misconduct, an investigation that was resolved when the plaintiffs entered into a consent decree with the SEC under which they were forced to disgorge any profits from the transactions without admitting guilt. The defendants successfully moved to strike the complaint as an anti-SLAPP suit under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the plaintiffs could not establish a probability of success in the action, because the defendants' conduct was privileged under Civ. Code § 47(d) as a fair and true report of the SEC proceedings. The privilege applies even if there may be some errors in the published account, so long as the account captures the substance of the official report. The court noted that although there were some admitted inaccuracies in the defendants' account of the plaintiffs' conduct, the reports were substantially accurate overall and were a fair description of the plaintiffs' misconduct as described in the SEC filings (109 Cal. App. 4th 1551, 1558-1560) .

In Howard v. Oakland Tribune (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 1124, 245 Cal. Rptr. 449 , the defendant, a newspaper, published articles on the investigation of a state-subsidized child care program, with specific references to charges of misuse of funds made against the plaintiffs, an administrator and her husband. The plaintiffs' defamation actions were dismissed after the defendant obtained a summary judgment on the basis of former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)] privilege. The court of appeal affirmed. It said that whether or not a privileged occasion exists within the meaning of former Civ. Code § 47(4) is a question of law. The court concluded that a state administrative agency investigation into the expenditure of public funds is a public official proceeding. Thus, the defendant's reports were privileged. The court also observed that the privilege is an absolute privilege, and is not defeated by malice on the part of the media nor the fact that the author of the reported statements may have abused his or her personal privilege (199 Cal. App. 3d 1124, 1128) .

The facts and procedural background of McClatchy Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 234 Cal. Rptr. 702 , are discussed in § 142.48[3][a]. In McClatchy, the court of appeal held that the privilege afforded by former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] for statements made in a judicial proceeding is absolute, provided they have a logical connection, liberally construed, to the underlying litigation (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 968-974) . The court further held that former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)] provides an absolute privilege for a report in a public journal of a judicial proceeding that is not vitiated by conspiracy claims, providing that the report is fair and accurate (189 Cal. App. 3d 961, 974-975) .

In Jennings v. Telegram-Tribune Co. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 119, 210 Cal. Rptr. 485 , the court of appeal affirmed an order granting the defendants' motion for nonsuit. The plaintiff's libel action was based on the defendants' newspaper report of a criminal proceeding, which the court held to be absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)]. The court reasoned that even though the report perhaps exaggerated the charges against the plaintiff, only substantial accuracy was required under former Civ. Code § 47(4), and the exaggeration was sufficiently within the permissible "literary license" of fair reporting (164 Cal. App. 3d 119, 122, 125-127) .

In Green v. Cortez (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1068, 199 Cal. Rptr. 221 , the court of appeal upheld a dismissal entered after the demurrers of the defendants were sustained without leave to amend. The defendants were members of the media who had accurately reported defamatory statements made at a city council meeting. The statements were proven false and may have been reported either with knowledge of their falsity or in reckless disregard of their truth. Holding that the media enjoys an absolute privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(4) [now see Civ. Code § 47(d)], the court said that a city council meeting was an official proceeding authorized by law and malice was not an issue (151 Cal. App. 3d 1068, 1073-1074) .

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a defamation action if the defendant asserts that he or she is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the statements were made in a fair and true report in a public journal that described either the proceeding of a public meeting held for a lawful purpose and open to the public or a public meeting for the public benefit and thus are absolutely privileged.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the absolute privilege conferred on publications that were a fair and true report of public meetings, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absolute Privilege for Report of Public Meeting

In Kilgore v. Younger (1982) 30 Cal. 3d 770, 180 Cal. Rptr. 657, 640 P.2d 793 (also discussed in § 142.46[3][a]), the plaintiff brought an action for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy against media defendants who published summaries of a report on organized crime that included the plaintiff's name among a list of persons suspected of criminal involvement. The report, prepared by the Organized Crime Control Commission, had been adopted by the state Attorney General and released by him at a press conference. The defendants demurred on the ground that the information was privileged. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action, and the plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, holding that the absolute privilege for fair and true reports of the proceedings of public meetings [former Civ. Code § 47(5) (now see Civ. Code § 47(e))] applied to the defendants (30 Cal. 3d 770, 776) . The Court stated that the media articles were merely giving further publicity to information about the plaintiff that was already public and that they were fair and true reports because they captured the substance of the Attorney General's release and had stated the alleged nature of the crime report (30 Cal. 3d 770, 778) .

In Williams v. Daily Review, Inc. (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 405, 46 Cal. Rptr. 135 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment for the defendants on the basis of erroneous jury instructions. The plaintiffs were engineering contractors who had sued a newspaper for a libelous article that insinuated they were responsible for delay in a paving project and incompetent in the preparation of bids and job performance. With regard to the issue of the applicability of the privilege available under former Civ. Code § 47(5) [now see Civ. Code § 47(e)], the trial court erroneously injected malice into the jury instructions and also purported to instruct the jury that the publication was privileged if it was for the public benefit. The court held that a publication is privileged if it is a fair and true report of the proceedings of a public meeting lawfully convened for a lawful purpose and open to the public, or, alternatively, if it is a fair and true report of the proceedings of a public meeting that is not lawfully convened for a lawful purpose or not open to the public, provided that the publication is for the public benefit (236 Cal. App. 2d 405, 418) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER WHERE DEFENDANT'S STATEMENTS ARE CLOAKED WITH A QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 142.24, Paragraph A.]

B. Qualified Privilege. Statements made without malice by a defendant who _____ _____ [either was interested in the subject matter of the communication or was related to _____ (name) in that _____ (specify relationship) and had an innocent motive in making the statements complained of by the plaintiff or was requested by _____ (name) to make the statements] are eligible for the qualified privilege under Civil Code Section 47(c) (Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Cal. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 845-847, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582).

[Optional] C. Communication by Employer. The qualified privilege of Civil Code Section 47(c) applies to and includes a communication concerning the job performance or qualifications of an applicant for employment, based on credible evidence, made without malice, by a current or former employer of the applicant to, and on request of, the prospective employer (Civ. Code § 47(c)).

D. Plaintiff Has Burden of Establishing Malice. Once the defendant has established that the allegedly defamatory communication was made on a privileged occasion, the plaintiff then has the burden of proving that the defendant made the statement with malice (Lundquist v. Reusser (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1193, 1202-1203, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 776, 875 P.2d 1279).

[Optional] E. Privilege for Employer Not Defeated by Mere Negligence. Language in Civ. Code § 47(c) requiring that the communication of an employer be "based on credible evidence" to be privileged does not mean that the privilege is defeated because of the employer's negligence, but instead means that the privilege is defeated only if the communication consists of mere rumors or unfounded gossip (Noel v. River Hills Wilsons, Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1375, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the statements were made without malice and were eligible for the qualified privilege under Civ. Code § 47(c). Optional Paragraphs C and E may be used if the communication at issue concerns the job performance or qualifications of an applicant for employment, made at the request of a prospective employer.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to the specific facts supporting the defendant's contention that the allegedly defamatory communication was made on an occasion within the scope of the Civ. Code § 47(c) privilege, and that the plaintiff has not established that the statement was made with malice. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)]..

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the qualified privilege, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Qualified Privilege

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the defendant on the basis of former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)] in Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Cal. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582 . The plaintiff was a chief operator in a telephone company when it was discovered that she had lied about several absences from work. Rather than be fired, the plaintiff chose to retire. Shortly thereafter, rumors began to circulate among the plaintiff's fellow employees. To correct some of this misinformation, the plaintiff's superiors called a meeting and told the other employees of the plaintiff's actions that resulted in her leaving. The communications made at this meeting were held to be privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(3) by the court (40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 845-847) .

[b] Communication by Employer

The qualified privilege of Civil Code Section 47(c) applies to and includes a communication concerning the job performance or qualifications of an applicant for employment, based on credible evidence, made without malice, by a current or former employer of the applicant to, and on request of, the prospective employer. This communication includes the answer of a current or former employer, or the employer's agent, to the question of whether or not the employer would rehire a current or former employee. However, the privilege does not apply to a communication concerning the speech or activities of an applicant for employment if the speech or activities are constitutionally protected, or otherwise protected by Code Civ. Proc. § 527.3 or any other provision of law [Civ. Code § 47(c)].

[c] Plaintiff Has Burden of Establishing Malice

In Lundquist v. Reusser (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 1193, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 776, 875 P.2d 1279 , the plaintiffs sued for defamation based on statements made by the defendants that a horse owned by the defendants had a conformational defect, which had been surgically corrected before the defendants' purchase; the complaint alleged that the horse was recognized by some persons who saw the defendants' picture of the horse as having been sold by the plaintiff. The statements were made at a seminar attended by 30 to 40 owners and breeders of a specific breed of horse. The trial court instructed the jury that the plaintiff bore the burden of proving that the statements in question were made by the defendants and were defamatory, and that the defendants bore the burden of proving that the statements were made on a privileged occasion and were made without malice. The trial court also gave jury instructions regarding punitive damages, which gave the plaintiff the burden of proving, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defendant had acted with oppression or malice. The jury returned special verdicts finding for the plaintiff and awarding compensatory and punitive damages to the plaintiff. The court of appeal reversed, on the ground that the trial court erred in giving the jury instruction requiring the defendant to bear the burden of proving that the statement was made without malice. The court of appeal also held that the error was prejudicial notwithstanding the award of punitive damages, because a jury properly instructed on the privilege issue might not have reached the question of punitive damages. The Supreme Court granted review, and while agreeing with the court of appeal that the plaintiff has the burden of proving malice, reversed the judgment of the court of appeal insofar as it reversed the trial court's judgment in the plaintiff's favor.

The Court noted that the language of neither Civ. Code § 47(c), nor Civ. Code § 48 (providing that malice cannot be inferred from the communication itself), is dispositive on the issue of the burden of proving malice. The Court examined the legislative history of Civ. Code § 47(c) as discussed in Brown v. Kelly Broad. Co. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 711, 726-729, 257 Cal. Rptr. 708, 771 P.2d 406 , especially its conclusion that Civ. Code § 47(c) was intended as a codification of the common-law privilege of common interest. The common law established a two-step analysis: the defendant bore the initial burden of demonstrating that the allegedly defamatory communication was made on a privileged occasion; the plaintiff then has the burden of proving that the defendant made the statement with malice. The Court concluded that the statute requires the same allocation. The Court rejected the plaintiff's reliance on Snively v. Record Publ'g Co. (1921) 185 Cal. 565, 578, 198 P. 1 , and cases that followed its holding that the defendant had the burden of proving an absence of malice, on the ground that the later holding in Locke v. Mitchell (1936) 7 Cal. 2d 599, 602-604, 61 P.2d 922 , that the plaintiff must plead malice in order to defeat a qualified privilege, had undercut Snively's rationale, a position adopted by the majority of court of appeal decisions. The Court also rejected the contention that the general allocation of the burden of proof set forth in Evid. Code § 500 superseded the common-law allocation of the burden of proof of malice (7 Cal. 4th 1193, 1202-1213) .

The Court found the instructional error harmless, however, because the jury's award of punitive damages, after an instruction placing the burden on the plaintiff to establish oppression or malice by clear and convincing evidence, necessarily showed that the jury believed the defendants had acted with the malice sufficient to overcome the qualified privilege (7 Cal. 4th 1193, 1213-1214) .

[d] Privilege for Employer Not Defeated by Mere Negligence

In Noel v. River Hills Wilsons, Inc. (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216 , the plaintiff was hired by a new employer on a contingent basis, but was fired after the new employer learned of the plaintiff's past criminal conduct and prison time. As part of the employer's investigation into the plaintiff's past, the employer sent an inquiry to a former employer of the plaintiff, who said that the plaintiff had been terminated for "loss prevention issues" and had an "unfavorable rehire status." However, the manager at the former employer had mistakenly believed that the inquiry concerned a different former employee, and the information conveyed did not accurately describe the circumstances surrounding the plaintiff's dismissal from the former employer. After being terminated by the new employer, the plaintiff sued the former employer for slander for providing the false and damaging information to the inquiring employer. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the grounds of the common interest privilege of Civ. Code § 47(c). The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted the established rule that under the common interest privilege, malice sufficient to defeat the privilege is not established by a showing of mere negligence, such as an oversight or unintentional error. Therefore, under the undisputed facts, the manager's mistake as to the subject of the inquiry was insufficient to constitute malice necessary to defeat the privilege (113 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1370-1373) . The court also rejected the plaintiff's claim that the privilege was defeated because the statements were not "based on credible evidence," as required by Civ. Code § 47(c). The court held that language in Civ. Code § 47(c) requiring that the communication of an employer be "based on credible evidence" does not mean that the qualified privilege is lost because of negligence, but instead that the privilege is defeated only if the communication is made up of mere rumors or unfounded gossip. In this case, the manager that provided the false information did not report rumors or gossip, and she had no improper purpose in making the statements. Instead, the statements were caused by mere carelessness on her part about the subject of the inquiry, circumstances that were insufficient to defeat the privilege (113 Cal. App. 4th 1363, 1375) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Qualified Privilege

In King v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 426, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 359 , plaintiff, a supervisor with a package shipping company, was terminated from his employment for allegedly falsifying an employee's time card or causing the employee to falsify his own card. Plaintiff, who argued that he was really fired for having a disability, sued his former employer for discrimination and related claims, as well as for defamation based on statements that a representative of the employer made to other employees about the reasons for plaintiff's termination. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant and the court of appeal affirmed. The court first held that plaintiff failed to raise a triable issue that the employer's stated reason for terminating plaintiff's employment was a pretext (152 Cal. App. 4th 426, 432-438) . Addressing the defamation claim, the court held that the statements made to employees of the company about the reason for plaintiff's firing were qualifiedly privileged under Civ. Code § 47(c), and that plaintiff failed to provide evidence of malice necessary to defeat the privilege. Plaintiff had been warned that it was his responsibility to monitor his drivers to ensure that they did not exceed maximum driving hours in violation of federal safety requirements. Because plaintiff chose to falsify an employee's timecard rather than limit the driver's hours, especially on a day when inclement weather was present, plaintiff was fired. The court held that statements explaining to other employees the reason for the termination, and that plaintiff had violated the company's integrity policy, were appropriate under the circumstances and privileged because the employer and its employees had a common interest in discharging their responsibilities at the facility at which plaintiff had worked (152 Cal. App. 4th 426, 440-442) .

In Terry v. Davis Cmty. Church (2005) 131 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145 , the plaintiffs were former church youth group leaders who brought suit against their former church and church leaders. The plaintiffs alleged that they were defamed by written and oral statements made in connection with church-led discussions regarding allegations that the plaintiffs had engaged in an inappropriate relationship with a 16-year-old church youth. Although the court of appeal concluded that none of the statements of which the plaintiffs complained were actionable, the court also held that any defamatory statements would be privileged as matters of common interest under the qualified privilege of Civ. Code § 47(c). The court reaffirmed that communications between church members on matters of church interest fell within the privilege. Although not all of the persons at the church meetings were actually church members, the non-members were parents of children who attended the church youth programs. Given that fact and the plaintiffs' failure to demonstrate malice, the privilege applied (131 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1556-1558) .

In Rodas v. Spiegel (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 513, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 , the plaintiff was a hardwood flooring installer who brought an action against an evaluator hired by an insurance company to evaluate and submit a report reviewing and providing repair estimates for work done by the plaintiff at a home insured by the insurance company. The lawsuit included various tort claims based on the evaluator's report, submitted to the Contractors' State License Board, which found that the home's owner suffered damage caused by improper floor installation. The plaintiff alleged that the conclusions of the report were false, that the damage was caused by water from a roof leak, and that the homeowner and the insurer knew of the leak and the cause of damage, but concealed it. The trial court dismissed the complaint as to the evaluator, and the court of appeal affirmed. As to all of the tort claims except a claim for malicious prosecution, the court of appeal held that all of the evaluator's publications were privileged under Civ. Code § 47(c), because the report was requested by two interested parties, the insurer and the homeowner. Moreover, according to the plaintiff's own allegations, knowledge of the roof leak and subsequent water damage was hidden from the evaluator. Therefore, the plaintiff was unable to overcome the qualified privilege by alleging malice on the part of the evaluator (87 Cal. App. 4th 513, 519-520) .

In Cruey v. Gannett Co. (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 356, 369, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 670 , a discharged supervisory employee brought a libel and slander action against an employee formerly supervised by the plaintiff. The libel and slander charges brought against the employee were based on complaints of sexual harassment made against the plaintiff by the employee to the EEOC and to the employer's vice-president of human resources. While the complaint about harassment made to the EEOC was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (64 Cal. App. 4th 356, 368) , the court of appeal held that complaints made by an employee to his or her employer about workplace harassment are qualifiedly privileged under Civ. Code § 47(c), because the complaint pertains to a matter of mutual interest to the employer and its employees. To hold otherwise, the court concluded, would have a chilling effect on an employee's right to be free from sexual harassment or discrimination in the workplace by exposing the employee to the risk of litigation when seeking enforcement of this right (64 Cal. App. 4th 356, 369) .

In Stockton Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 966, 254 Cal. Rptr. 389 , a police officer sued a newspaper for libel based on a story reporting that the officer had influenced a mentally retarded black teenager to confess to a murder he did not commit. The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the court to enter an order granting the newspaper's motion for summary judgment based on the qualified privilege for communications to interested persons under former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)]. The court stated that the conditional privilege applies to a newspaper's printing of a fair report, attributed to a third party, of a claim of official misconduct, even if the misconduct is denied by the official, and the newspaper is under no duty to resolve conflicting claims of what happened (40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 849-850) .

In Cuenca v. Safeway S.F. Employees Fed. Credit Union (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 985, 225 Cal. Rptr. 852 , the supervisory committee of a credit union prepared a report concerning an employee (the credit union manager), and on the basis of the report the board of directors asked the employee to resign. The employee sued for defamation. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that although the investigation and report by the supervisory committee was not absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(1) or (2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(a), (b)], it was conditionally privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)]. The court stated that the conditional privilege applies to a communication made without malice to an interested person by an interested person. The court defined "interested persons" as a communicator and recipient with a common interest, although it stated that to be protected, the communication must be one reasonably calculated to further that interest. It added that communications made in a commercial setting relating to the conduct of an employee have been held to fall squarely within the qualified privilege for communications to interested persons, and cited in this regard Deaile v. General Tel. Co. of Cal. (1974) 40 Cal. App. 3d 841, 115 Cal. Rptr. 582 (discussed in § 142.53[3][a]). Because the communication in Cuenca was directly relevant to the plaintiff's fitness as manager of the credit union, the matters were of direct interest to the supervisory committee and its auditor and board of directors, and were, therefore, qualifiedly privileged (180 Cal. App. 3d 985, 995-996) .

In Kelly v. General Tel. Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184 , the plaintiff sued his former employer, alleging a cause of action for slander based on statements his former supervisor allegedly made to other employees of his former employer. The plaintiff alleged that his former supervisor stated that the plaintiff misused company funds and falsified invoices. The defendant's general demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. The court of appeal stated that communications among company employees designed to insure honest and accurate records are protected by the qualified privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)] (136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285) . However, the court held that the plaintiff had sufficiently pleaded malice, thereby preventing application of the qualified privilege. Therefore, the court held that the trial court had erred in sustaining the demurrer to that cause of action (136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285) .

In Institute of Athletic Motivation v. University of Ill. (1980) 114 Cal. App. 3d 1, 170 Cal. Rptr. 411 , the defendant, a sports psychologist, sent a letter criticizing a sports psychology test to numerous athletic organizations and several sports magazines. At trial, a jury was instructed that the qualified privilege for communications to interested persons was applicable. The court of appeal affirmed and held that the privilege was applicable because the communication was only directed at those interested therein and there was an adequate opportunity to reply (114 Cal. App. 3d 1, 12-13) .

[b] Plaintiff Has Burden of Establishing Malice

In Bierbower v. FHP, Inc. (1999) 70 Cal. App. 4th 1, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 393 , a former employee accused of three incidents of sexual harassment by a co-worker brought a defamation action her former employer based on a memo written by a supervisor informing the personnel department of the allegations. According to the plaintiff, the memo was sent to personnel with malice because a discrepancy in the memo as to the date of the allegations demonstrated that the most recent allegation was false and the supervisor knew this. After the plaintiff presented her case at trial, nonsuit was granted to the defendant on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to present any substantial evidence of malice. The court of appeal affirmed, agreeing that the plaintiff had failed to show that the memo was written with malice sufficient to defeat the qualified privilege of Civ. Code § 47(c). The court concluded that the discrepancy as to the date of the most recent allegation had been explained without contradiction to have been a simple typing mistake by the supervisor. Absent that discrepancy, the plaintiff had failed to show that the supervisor had acted with malice in sending the report to the personnel department, which the supervisor was required to do under the company's anti-harassment policy (70 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6-9) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff consented to publication of the statements.

If appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on consent, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consent

Puchan v. Godeau (1914) 167 Cal. 692, 140 P. 952 , and Moranville v. Aletto (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 315 P.2d 91 , presented identical factual situations in which the defendant had called the plaintiff a thief. In Pouchan, the Supreme Court held that the fact that the plaintiff elicited a reiteration of the charge in more explicit language did not make consent a viable defense (167 Cal. 692, 694) . In Moranville, the court of appeal affirmed a jury verdict for the plaintiff and stated that the question of consent was a question for the jury (153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 671) .

§ 142.55 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--Person Authorized to Make Report of Child Abuse [Penal Code § 11166] Immune From Liability for Report Not Made With Knowledge of Falsity or Reckless Disregard for Truth or Falsity [Penal Code § 11172(a)]

[Caption. See § 142.24.]

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS NOT ESTABLISHED THAT DEFENDANT MADE A FALSE REPORT WITH KNOWLEDGE OF ITS FALSITY, OR RECKLESS DISREGARD OF THE TRUTH OR FALSITY OF THE REPORT, AND DEFENDANT IS THEREFORE IMMUNE FROM LIABILITY AS A RESULT OF ANY REPORT OF KNOWN OR SUSPECTED CHILD ABUSE MADE PURSUANT TO PENAL CODE SECTION 11164 ET SEQ.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 142.24, Paragraph A.]

B. Qualified Immunity for Report of Child Abuse. Any person reporting a known or suspected instance of child abuse, other than a mandated reporter, is immune from liability as a result of any report authorized by Sections 11164-11174.1 of the Penal Code unless it can be proven that a false report was made and the person knew that the report was false or made the report with reckless disregard of its truth or falsity (Penal Code § 11172(a)).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a defamation action. The ground for the motion is that the defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the plaintiff has not established that the defendant made a false report either with knowledge of it falsity, or reckless disregard of its truth or falsity, and therefore he or she is immune from civil liability as a result of any report of known or suspected child abuse authorized by Penal Code §§ 11164-11174.1 (reporting and investigation of child abuse) [Penal Code § 11172(a)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should also attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Persons to Whom Immunity Applies

Any person, other than those persons required to report child abuse, who has knowledge of or observes a child whom he or she knows or reasonably suspects has been a victim of child abuse may report the known or suspected instance of child abuse to a child protective agency [Penal Code § 11166(g)]. For these purposes, "any other person" includes a mandated reporter who acts in his or her private capacity and not in his or her professional capacity or within the scope of his or her employment [Pen. Code § 11166(g)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Qualified Immunity for Report of Child Abuse

Any person, other than those mandated reporters specified in Penal Code § 11166, who reports a known or suspected instance of child abuse shall not incur civil or criminal liability as a result of any report authorized by Penal Code §§ 11164-11174.1 unless it can be proven that a false report was made and the person knew that the report was false or was made with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the report. Any person who makes a report of child abuse known to be false or with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the report is liable for any damages caused [Penal Code § 11172(a)].

§ 142.55A Supporting Contention That Liability for Making False Report of Child Abuse Does Not Apply to Alleged Victim of Abuse [Penal Code § 11172(a)]

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

DEFENDANT MAY NOT BE HELD LIABLE FOR ALLEGEDLY MAKING A FALSE REPORT OF CHILD ABUSE UNDER PENAL CODE SECTION 11172(a) BECAUSE THAT STATUTORY PROVISION DOES NOT CREATE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST THE ALLEGED VICTIM OF THE CHILD ABUSE.

No Cause of Action Under Penal Code Section 11172(a) Against Alleged Victim of Child Abuse. Penal Code Section 11172(a), which generally permits a cause of action for making a false report of child abuse, applies only to reports of actual or suspected child abuse made by third parties and does not apply to a report of child abuse made by the alleged victim of the abuse (Chabak v. Monroy (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1515-1519, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 641).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that Penal Code § 11172(a), which generally permits a cause of action for making a false report of child abuse, does not apply to a report of child abuse made by the alleged victim of the abuse. Absence application of Penal Code § 11172(a), a child who reported his or her own alleged abuse to the appropriate authorities, such as police or parents, may defend a cause of action based on the report by asserting the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) [see § 142.48].

This form may be combined with points relating to the specific procedural context in which the issue of defendant's liability arises, or combined with other forms in this chapter, as appropriate. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the cause of action against defendant arose solely from defendant's report of his or her own child abuse to appropriate persons, such as parents or police, and argue that defendant's report was privileged under the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action Under Penal Code Section 11172(a) Against Alleged Victim of Child Abuse

In Chabak v. Monroy (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 65 Cal. Rptr. 3d 641 , plaintiff was a physical therapist accused of inappropriate conduct by a 17-year-old female athlete who was being treated by plaintiff for an injury. Although the girl did not immediately report plaintiff's alleged conduct, she eventually reported to police and her parents that plaintiff had touched and pinched her inappropriately while massaging her legs and made comments and jokes of a sexual nature. The police investigated but no charges were filed against plaintiff. Plaintiff then sued the girl for allegedly filing a false report of abuse with the police. Defendant filed a motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court denied the motion and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and ordered that the motion to strike be granted. The court first held that defendant's conduct in reporting the alleged abuse to the police and to her parents was petitioning activity, making the complaint subject to a motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 (154 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1512) . The court then held that plaintiff failed to show a probability of success on the merits. The court concluded that plaintiff could not state a cause of action under Penal Code § 11172(a), which generally permits a cause of action for making a false report of child abuse, against the alleged victim of child abuse who reports such abuse, and defendant's conduct was otherwise absolutely privileged under the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). Distinguishing other court opinions holding that Penal Code § 11172(a) created an exception to the litigation privilege, the court of appeal held that the Child Abuse and Neglect Reporting Act, Penal Code § 11164 et seq., did not apply to reports of abuse made by the alleged victim of the abuse. The court noted that the liability imposed under Penal Code § 11172(a) applied to "any report authorized" by the Act, but the only reports "authorized by" the Act were those reports made by mandatory or voluntary reporters who report their observations. Reports made by the alleged victims were not dealt with in, thus not "authorized by," the Act. The court also noted that the purpose of the act was to increase reports of suspected child abuse made by specified reporters in order to protect children from abuse, and this goal would not be furthered by imposing civil liability on a child who makes a report of his or her own abuse. The court also reviewed the legislative history and found nothing to support the conclusion that the Legislature intended the Act to apply to reports made by the alleged victim (154 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1516-1517) . Because an alleged victim of child abuse could not be held liable under these provisions, the court concluded that the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) immunized defendant from liability for making statements about the alleged abuse to her parents or the police in anticipation of litigation (154 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1519) .

§ 142.56 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)] Affirmatively Appearing on Face of Pleading

[Caption. See § 142.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 142.20, Paragraph A.]

B. One-Year Period. The statute of limitations for a defamation action is one year (Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)).

C. Publication Activates Statute of Limitations. The statute of limitations begins to run from the time of publication (Campbell v. Jewish Comm. for Pers. Serv. (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 771, 774, 271 P.2d 185).

[Optional] D. Date of Actual Distribution to Public. For purposes of the statute of limitations, the cause of action accrues on the date of first general distribution of the publication to the public, and not on the cover date of the publication (McGuiness v. Motor Trend Magazine (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62, 180 Cal. Rptr. 784).

[Optional] E. Rule of Discovery Inapplicable to Public Defamation. The rule of discovery, which permits the statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c) to be tolled until the plaintiff discovers the defamation, does not apply if the defendant has not concealed the defamation and if it is contained in a publication such as a book, magazine, or newspaper that is available to the general public, including the plaintiff (Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1250-1251, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 ; McGuiness v. Motor Trend Magazine (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62-63, 180 Cal. Rptr. 784).

[Optional] F. Discovery Rule Inapplicable Even When Publication Is Not Widely Disseminated to Public. The discovery rule is inapplicable to a publication available to the public even if the publication is not widely disseminated or mass marketed. (Hebrew Academy of San Francisco v. Goldman (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 883, 894-895, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d

[Optional] G. Discovery Rule Inapplicable Once Secret Defamation Is Revealed in Subsequent Public Publication. Once defamatory material is published in a book that is available to the general public, the equitable grounds for applying the discovery rule to toll the running of the statute of limitations disappear not only for any cause of action based on that publication, but also for any cause of action based on earlier publications that were inherently secret or confidential at the time, but are revealed in the published book (Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1252-1253, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676).

[Optional] H. Statute Tolling Limitation Period Regarding Criminal Child Abuse Is Inapplicable to Newsperson. A newsperson who reports the events of criminal child-abuse proceedings is not a witness within the meaning of Section 48.7(a) of the Civil Code, which therefore does not toll the limitations period regarding a defamation action brought against the newsperson based on statements made in connection with the criminal proceedings (Satz v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1531-1533, 275 Cal. Rptr. 710).

[Optional] I. Single Publication Rule Applies to Internet Publication. For purposes of establishing the date on which the statute of limitations begins to run, the single publication rule applies to the publication of allegedly defamatory material on an Internet web site (Traditional Cat Ass'n, Inc. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 404, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353).

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the one-year statute of limitations bars the action. Optional Paragraph D may be used to assert that the cause of action accrues on the date of first general distribution of the publication to the public. Optional Paragraphs E, F and G may be used to state that the discovery rule is inapplicable. Optional Paragraph H may be used to argue that the defendant, as a newsperson, is not within the purview of Civ. Code § 48.7(a) [see § 142.44], which tolls the limitation period in actions against certain person (e.g., witnesses) regarding statements made in connection with the criminal proceedings. Optional Paragraph I may be used to argue that the single publication rule applies to alleged defamation that is published on an Internet web site.

This form may be adapted for use to support a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings or a defendant's motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, the defendant should set forth the relevant dates showing that the action was filed after the expiration of the one-year limitation period.

Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender). For a form of affirmative defense on the same ground, and a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Publication Activates Statute of Limitations

In Campbell v. Jewish Comm. for Pers. Serv. (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 771, 271 P.2d 185 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for the defendant on several grounds. One of the grounds was that the complaint was filed more than six years after the libel was published. The court stated that a libel that was uttered only one time is not continuous and occurs only on publication (125 Cal. App. 2d 771, 774) .

[b] Date of Actual Distribution to Public

In McGuiness v. Motor Trend Magazine (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 180 Cal. Rptr. 784 , the plaintiff filed a complaint for libel on July 29, 1976. The plaintiff alleged that he was libeled in the August 1975 issue of Motor Trend Magazine by a photo caption that indicated that he, along with three others in the photo, had been indicted. That issue of Motor Trend Magazine was distributed to the general public and subscribers no later than July 24, 1975, in accordance with the magazine's general policy. The defendants moved for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by the one-year limitations period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)]. When the motion was granted, the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that California follows the general rule that for purposes of the statute of limitations, the cause of action accrued on the first general distribution of the publication to the public (129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 61) . The court noted that the plaintiff's complaint was filed more than one year beyond the date of the first general distribution to the public, and therefore was untimely. The court added that the courts have uniformly rejected the contention that the date of the cover of the publication is controlling, and that the plaintiff's suggestion that equity demanded that the cover date of the magazine be deemed the legal publication date was without merit. The court did not accept the plaintiff's contention that the industry-wide practice of postdating magazines constituted active concealment of the date of publication (129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62) .

[c] Rule of Discovery Inapplicable to Public Defamation

In Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 , the plaintiff was a potential prosecution witness in the high-profile capital murder trial of former football star O.J. Simpson. Although the plaintiff testified before the grand jury in that case, she was not called as a witness at trial, allegedly because she had sold her story to a television news magazine. However, the apparent real reason she was not called as a trial witness was because a former boyfriend had told a deputy district attorney that the plaintiff was "a felony probationer." This was subsequently repeated by the deputy district attorney to an author, who then recounted the information and its source in a nationally published book. Alleging that the statement that she was a felony probationer was false, the plaintiff sued her former boyfriend, the deputy district attorney, the county, the author, and the book publisher for defamation based on three publications of the statement: the first made by the boyfriend, the second made by the deputy district attorney, and the third contained in the book. The plaintiff alleged that her causes of action accrued when she first bought and read a copy of the book, which was several months after the book became widely distributed in California. However, the trial court sustained a demurrer in favor of the former boyfriend on the grounds that he had made his statement more than a year before the action was filed and therefore the claim against him was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court also granted summary judgment for the deputy district attorney and his employer, the county, on the grounds that the plaintiff had failed to file a claim with the county as required by the Tort Claims Act within six months after the cause of action accrued, which the defendants argued was the date the book became widely distributed in California, rather than when the plaintiff read the book. The plaintiff appealed both rulings, and the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the trial court erred in failing to consider the accrual date of the plaintiff's cause of actions under the delayed discovery rule, under which the causes of action accrued when the plaintiff knew, or with reasonable diligence should have known, of the defamatory statements. Another appeal followed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal, holding that the discovery rule could not be used to toll the accrual of a cause of action for defamation beyond the point at which the defamation was made public in a book and no longer remained secret. The Court noted that California courts had applied the delayed discovery rule in certain defamation cases, generally if the defamatory statements were hidden from view or otherwise kept secret from the plaintiff (31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1248-1249) . The Court also noted, however, that the discovery rule has not been applied to a cause of action based on publication of defamatory statements published in a book, magazine, or newspaper. Applying the rule to such actions would undermine the protection provided by the single publication rule, under which there is only considered to be a single publication of a defamatory statement for any single edition of a book or newspaper, no matter how many copies are distributed. This rule was designed in part to prevent indefinite tolling of the statute of limitations that would occur if every copy of the book created the potential for another lawsuit. The Court then held that because a cause of action for defamation based on publication in a book or newspaper accrues when the book or newspaper is first generally distributed to the public, the causes of action based on the publication in the book were not subject to delayed discovery. Because the plaintiff filed her actions more than a year after the book was first widely distributed to the public in California, those actions were time-barred (31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1250-1251) .

The factual and procedural background of McGuiness v. Motor Trend Magazine (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 180 Cal. Rptr. 784 , is discussed in § 142.56[3][b]. The court of appeal held that the rule of discovery did not apply in this case. This rule, which states that the statute of limitations should not be deemed to have commenced until the plaintiff discovers the libel, applies only to cases in which the libel is committed in an inherently secretive manner. The court stated that it has no application to a public libel in a nationally distributed magazine that is widely available to the public, including the plaintiff. The court distinguished Manguso v. Oceanside Unified School Dist. (1979) 88 Cal. App. 3d 725, 152 Cal. Rptr. 27 , in which the rule of discovery was applied. In Manguso, the court noted that the libel was in a letter that was placed by a supervisor in the plaintiff's confidential permanent personnel file, which the plaintiff did not discover for 16 years. In contrast to Manguso, the court in McGuiness found that there was no concealment of the defamation (129 Cal. App. 3d 59, 62-63) .

[d] Discovery Rule Inapplicable Even When Publication Is Not Widely Disseminated to Public

In Hebrew Academy of San Francisco v. Goldman (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 883, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178, 173 P.3d 1004 , plaintiffs were a Hebrew academy and its founder who sued an individual and related organizations for allegedly libelous comments that were made about plaintiffs in an "oral history" that was copyrighted in 1993. A transcript of the oral history was kept in a restricted-access research library at the University of California, and a few copies were made and provided to 2 other similar libraries. While any member of the general public could access the transcript by going through the proper procedures, no more than 10 copies of the transcript had apparently been made. Plaintiffs became aware of the libelous comments in the transcript in 2001 after a researcher, who had read part of the transcript while researching a book, sent copies of some pages to the academy founder. Plaintiffs sued, but the trial court granted summary judgment for defendants on the basis of the one-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c). Plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed after concluding that the single publication rule did not apply to this limited publication and, under these particular circumstances, the discovery rule tolled the running of the statute of limitations. Defendants appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and upheld the summary judgment granted by the trial court. The Supreme Court, after reviewing the rationale underling its earlier opinion in Shively v. Bozanich, discussed in [c], above, first held that the single publication rule applied not only to books and newspapers that are published with general circulation, but also to publications that are given only limited circulation and are not generally distributed to the public (42 Cal. 4th 883, 892-893) . The Court then held that the discovery rule did not delay the running of the statute of limitations under the circumstances of the case. The Court noted that the discovery rule has been applied when the defamatory material is inherently secret and hidden from view, such as when it is contained in a confidential personnel file that cannot be inspected by the plaintiff. However, the Court distinguished that situation from the facts at hand, noting that the defamatory material alleged by plaintiffs, although not widely disseminated, was not published in an inherently secretive manner and was available for inspection by the public from the moment of its original publication as an oral history transcript in 1993 (42 Cal. 4th 883, 894-895) .

[e] Discovery Rule Inapplicable Once Secret Defamation Is Revealed in Subsequent Public Publication

The factual and procedural background of Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 , is described in § 142.56[3][c]. After determining that the discovery rule could not be applied to causes of action based on publications made in a book available for distribution to the general public, the California Supreme Court went on to hold that once defamatory material is published in a book that is available to the general public, the equitable grounds for applying the discovery rule disappear not only for a cause of action based on that publication, but also for any cause of action based on earlier publications that were inherently secret or confidential at the time, but were revealed in the published book. Therefore, the delayed discovery rule was also inapplicable to the causes of action against the former boyfriend for his original defamatory statement, and to the causes of action based on the repetition by the deputy district attorney, at least from the point at which attribution of the defamatory statements to those parties was revealed in the book when it was distributed to the general public (31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1252-1253) .

[f] Statute Tolling Limitation Period Regarding Criminal Child Abuse Is Inapplicable to Newsperson

In Satz v. Superior Court (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 275 Cal. Rptr. 710 , the plaintiffs brought an action against a television news reporter based on statements made while covering a criminal trial in which the plaintiffs were prosecuted for violation of child-abuse laws. The plaintiffs alleged that the action was not barred under Civ. Code § 48.7(a), which states that no person charged with violation of child-abuse laws may bring a defamation action against the minor, parents, guardians, or witnesses, in connection with the underlying criminal prosecution; it also tolls the applicable statute of limitations period while the charges are pending [see § 142.43]. The defendant brought a motion to strike those portions of the complaint that alleged claims based on broadcasts that had been aired more than one year before the action was filed. The trial court denied the motion, as well as a subsequent motion for reconsideration. The defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate, to determine whether he was a "witness" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 48.7, in which case the older claims would not be time-barred.

The court of appeal let a writ of mandate issue directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the defendant's motion to strike, and to enter a new order granting the motion insofar as it is based on Civ. Code § 48.7 (225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1533) . The plaintiffs contended that the defendant is a "witness" within the meaning of statute, and that, therefore, their claims for defamation were tolled while the criminal charges against them were pending. The defendant contended that, because he had not witnessed any act of child abuse that was the subject of the criminal prosecution, the statute does not apply to him. The court concluded that the plain language of Civ. Code § 48.7, its legislative history, and general rules of statutory construction supported the defendant's position (225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1530) . The plain meaning of the statute, the court found, is to protect victims of child abuse, their parents or guardian, and witnesses to the acts of abuse from harassment by civil lawsuits for defamation while criminal proceedings are still pending (225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1531) . It noted that the legislation was introduced as a result of judicial concern that civil actions have intimidated witness in child abuse cases, and have inhibited the prosecution of those cases. There is nothing in the language of the statute or in its history to suggest that the legislature meant anything other than what it said: that a defamation action against the child, its parent (or guardian) or any witness to the child abuse charged in the criminal proceeding cannot be filed until after the criminal proceedings are concluded. Accordingly, the court found, the plaintiffs' allegations are wholly insufficient to invoke the tolling provisions of Civ. Code § 48.7, and there is no conceivable way they could by amendment cure the deficiency. By the plain terms of the pleading, the court noted, the defendant allegedly stated to the public, on nationwide media broadcasts, that the plaintiffs were guilty of child abuse, or, that he exceeded his role as news gatherer and reporter to become a participant in the events, and to that extent became a creator of false news. There is no allegation, and there could none be under the facts, that the defendant was a witness to any act of child abuse (225 Cal. App. 3d 1525, 1532) .

[g] Single Publication Rule Applies to Internet Publication

In Traditional Cat Ass'n, Inc. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353 , the plaintiffs were a cat breeding association and its president who brought suit against another cat breeding association and its officers. The plaintiffs' suit alleged causes of action for defamation, unfair competition, and conversion. The defamation action was based on allegedly defamatory statements published on an Internet web site created by one of the individual defendants to report on the status of earlier, ongoing litigation between the parties. The defendants filed a motion to strike the defamation cause of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, arguing that the plaintiffs could not prevail on the defamation claim because that claim was filed more than a year after the last time the allegedly defamatory material on the web site was updated. Even though the trial court agreed that the statements on the web site were made in furtherance of the defendant's free speech rights, as required to come within the ambit of the anti-SLAPP statute, the court denied the motion to strike in part because it concluded that the anti-SLAPP statute could not be used to strike a cause of action based on a statute of limitations defense. The defendants appealed the denial of the motion to strike.

The court of appeal reversed the denial of the motion to strike. The court first determined that the anti-SLAPP statute could be used to strike an applicable cause of action if the defendant shows conclusively that the cause of action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations (118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 398-399) . The court then held that for purposes of establishing the date on which the statute of limitations begins to run, the single publication rule applies to the publication of allegedly defamatory material on an Internet web site. The court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the defamation cause of action arose continuously while the web site was operating, and concluded instead that the same interests that justified applying the single-publication rule to more traditional mass-market publishing mediums, including the desire to curtail potentially perpetual liability and eliminate stale claims, applied to Internet publishing (118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 403-404) . Because the defendants established that the plaintiffs' action for defamation was filed more than a year after the last update to the allegedly defamatory material published on the web site, and because there was no evidence that the defamatory material had been republished by any other means within the year prior to the filing of the lawsuit, the defendants had shown that the defamation action was time-barred, and the trial court erred in failing to strike that cause of action (118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 404-405) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Date of Actual Distribution to Public

In Strick v. Superior Court (1983) 143 Cal. App. 3d 916, 192 Cal. Rptr. 314 , the trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment because the action was filed one day after the expiration of the one-year statute of limitations (former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)). The court of appeal upheld the dismissal based on the single publication rule (Civ. Code § 3425.3), stating that the date of actual distribution of the publication to the public occurred on the first day that a substantial body of copies of the publication was delivered to retail outlets for sale and distribution (143 Cal. App. 3d 916, 922) .

[b] Rule of Discovery Inapplicable to Public Defamation

In Long v. Walt Disney Co. (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 868, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 836 , the plaintiffs sued an entertainment company after their sixth-grade yearbook photographs had been used as templates for the creation of fictional, cartoon-like characters in a series of Saturday morning vignettes, accompanied by retail products and other Internet tie-ins. The plaintiffs alleged that this use of their likenesses subjected them to ridicule, humiliation, and defamation. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary adjudication on the grounds that the suit was brought more than two years after the last broadcast of the likenesses. The court of appeal affirmed. After briefly reviewing the Supreme Court's decision in Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 [see § 142.56[3][c]], the court of appeal held that the claim was governed by the Uniform Single Publication Act, Civ. Code § 3425.1 et seq. Therefore, the court rejected the plaintiffs' argument that the statute of limitations was tolled until the plaintiffs discovered the broadcasts. Instead, the claims accrued when the defamation was first made available to the general public through weekly broadcasts on national network television, regardless of when the plaintiffs actually became aware of the broadcasts (116 Cal. App. 4th 868, 875) . The court also rejected the plaintiffs' attempts to characterize the claims for emotional distress as something other than a claim for defamation, noting that the same result would be reached regardless of the exact tort claimed (116 Cal. App. 4th 868, 873) .

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the statements complained of did not convey a defamatory meaning to those who read or heard them.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the failure of the publication to convey a defamatory meaning, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender). For a general form of notice of motion for summary judgment based on an affirmative defense to a defamation action, see the same chapter.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Defamatory Meaning Conveyed

In Arno v. Stewart (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 955, 54 Cal. Rptr. 392 , the court of appeal held that the defendant's alleged slander on a television program in referring to the plaintiff as an "iron-clad singing member of the Mafia" could reasonably be interpreted as a joke that was devoid of any defamatory meaning. Thus, the court held that it would have been error for the court to dissociate the statement from the jocular context in which it was made and received and, thus, affirmed judgment for the defendants (245 Cal. App. 2d 955, 962-966) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Defamatory Meaning Conveyed

In Balzaga v. Fox News Network, LLC (2009) 173 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 93 Cal. Rptr. 3d 782 , plaintiffs were immigrant laborers who brought a defamation action against a television news network based on a story aired by the network. The news story consisted of an interview with an anti-illegal immigration activist who accused plaintiffs of attacking him when he went to their migrant labor camp and took their photographs. The activist complained in the report that he felt that police were not doing enough in response to his complaint, and taking matters into his own hands, the activist displayed a poster that he created that had photographs of each of the plaintiffs, along with the caption "Wanted--Robbery, Assault and Battery." The news report showed a close up of each photograph on the poster. In addition, during the length of the four-minute news story, the network ran on the screen the headline "MANHUNT AT THE BORDER," although the hosts of the news show stated that police were only "investigating" the activist's complaint and in fact had also been investigating the activist for his role in instigating the fight. Plaintiffs' complaint against the network was based solely on their use of the caption "MANHUNT AT THE BORDER," which according to plaintiffs suggested that police were actively looking for them for criminal conduct when in fact they were not. The trial court granted the network's motion to strike the complaint against it under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, after concluding that plaintiffs had not shown a probability of success on the merits. In a split decision, the court of appeal affirmed. The court majority held that taking the report in its entirety, no reasonable person could conclude that the caption about a "MANHUNT AT THE BORDER" was referring to a police manhunt for plaintiffs, rather than a hunt being waged by the interviewed activist. The court noted that the program hosts had made clear in their report that police were only "investigating" the incident, including the activist's role as a potential instigator, and that the real search was being made by the activist, who considered himself to be the victim of an assault. Because plaintiffs' claim against the network was based solely on the meaning of the headline banner, which the court concluded conveyed no defamatory meaning, plaintiffs' defamation claim against the network had to fail (173 Cal. App. 4th 1325, 1340-1341) .

In Couch v. San Juan Unified Sch. Dist. (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1491, 39 Cal. Rptr. 2d 848 , the plaintiff, a high school campus security officer, sued the school district for libel, based on a portion of an article in the school newspaper. For the period of time preceding the publishing of the article, the plaintiff was the only African-American employee at the school, whose student body was overwhelmingly white. On arriving at work one morning, the plaintiff was shown a portion of an article in the school paper that read "What's the story behind the new narc? (a) They felt that we needed someone who's actually committed murder to hand out discipline at the high school. (b) They wanted to find someone who blends in well with the students. (c) He's part of the school's new motto, We're gonna kick some ass! (d) I don't know his story, but he sells primo drugs, cheap too!" After reading this portion of the article, the plaintiff concluded that it was about him and that it accused him of being a murderer, a drug dealer, and a bully. The defendant moved for summary judgment, contending that the statements could not constitute actionable libel, because they could not reasonably be understood as implying a provably false assertion of fact, and that they were not "of and concerning" the plaintiff. The trial court granted summary judgment, finding as a matter of law that the average reader, on viewing the article in its entirety, would recognize it as a parody or joke and not as assertions of fact.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment for the defendant. The court acknowledged that statements intended as humor or parody may in certain circumstances convey a defamatory meaning and be actionable even if the words used could not be understood in their literal sense or be believed to be true. However, if, as in this case, the average reader of the statements would understand that they could not have been intended to convey a provably false assertion of fact, but were clearly a mere joke or parody, there is no defamation as a matter of law (33 Cal. App. 4th 1491, 1501) . The court first noted that the average reader of this publication was a student or teacher at the high school in the habit of reading the newspaper. The court then reasoned that almost everything about the newspaper article, beginning with the introduction, would have revealed it to the average reader as a parody (33 Cal. App. 4th 1491, 1502) .

In Polygram Records v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 216 Cal. Rptr. 252 , the court of appeal rejected the defendant's contention that comedy is a form of expression categorically protected by the First Amendment because humor is a useful and necessary form of social commentary, comparable in certain respects to political speech and religious expression. The defendant also contended that comedy is, by definition, not taken seriously or literally. Although the court of appeal agreed that under the facts of this case, the joke was not actionable as a matter of law, it rejected the defendant's broader contentions (170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 551-552) . The court declined to articulate a general principle to define comedy and held that the issue was whether the joke could reasonably be understood in a defamatory sense by those who heard it (170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 554) . The court held that not only is the language employed to be regarded with reference to the actual words used, but according to the sense and meaning that might be conveyed to those to whom it was published. Therefore, the jocular intent of the publisher will not relieve the publisher from liability if it is reasonable to not understand the utterance as a joke (170 Cal. App. 3d 543, 555) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof that the defendant is a public employee and the plaintiff has failed to allege he filed a claim with the appropriate public entity.

If appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points may be used to support a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings or a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Form

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the plaintiff's failure to allege filing a claim with the appropriate public entity if the defendant is a public employee, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Necessity of Filing Claim

In Neal v. Gatlin (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 871, 111 Cal. Rptr. 117 , the court of appeal affirmed the sustaining of a general demurrer to a complaint filed by an assistant professor who had been denied tenure. He had filed an action for libel and slander relating to his professional competency against his former colleagues, but the court of appeal held that the filing of a claim with the employing public entity was a condition precedent to the defamation action (35 Cal. App. 3d 871, 875-877) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Necessity of Filing Claim

In Hopper v. Allen (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 797, 72 Cal. Rptr. 435 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment granted to a city police chief after a former officer of the department had brought an action based on statements that the chief had made to the press and subordinate officers. The court held that the defendant's affidavits adequately showed that his statements were made in the course and scope of his employment and, hence, the plaintiff's failure to file a claim with his employer made his complaint fatally defective (266 Cal. App. 2d 797, 799-804) .

Two other cases, each involving suits by private citizens against public employees, support the principle that a claim must be filed with the employee's employer as a condition precedent to maintaining an action for defamation. In Miller v. Hoagland (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 57, 55 Cal. Rptr. 311 , the court of appeal affirmed a general demurrer to a complaint by a citizen against a city attorney for having written an allegedly defamatory letter to a trial judge on the basis of the fact that the plaintiff had not filed a claim with the city (247 Cal. App. 2d 57, 61-62) . In Burgdorf v. Funder (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 443, 54 Cal. Rptr. 805 , the court of appeal affirmed the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. In that case, a citizen was suing the chief of the State Division of Tax Collection for the publication of an allegedly libelous letter. However, the plaintiff's failure to file a claim was held to be fatal to his cause of action (246 Cal. App. 2d 443, 448) .

The questions, which they asked of various persons concerning the plaintiff's fitness for his job as superintendent, were within the scope of the powers inherent in the investigative function of their office (55 Cal. 2d 224, 233-234) .

In Burgdorf v. Funder (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 443, 54 Cal. Rptr. 805 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of dismissal after the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted. The court held that a letter written by the chief of the Division of Tax Collection and Refund of the State Controller's Office was immune from an action for libel because the official's action was discretionary and in the scope of his authority (246 Cal. App. 2d 443, 448-449) .

§ 142.60A Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--Federal Communications Decency Act of 1996 Provides Absolute Immunity for Republication of Defamatory Material on Internet

[Caption. See § 142.24.]

THE COMMUNICATIONS DECENCY ACT OF 1996, 47 U.S.C. § 230, PROVIDES IMMUNITY FROM COMMON-LAW TORT LIABILITY WHEN A PARTY REPUBLISHES DEFAMATORY MATERIAL ON THE INTERNET THAT ORIGINATES WITH A THIRD PERSON, REGARDLESS OF WHETHER THE REPUBLISHING PARTY KNOWS OR HAS REASON TO KNOW OF THE MATERIAL'S DEFAMATORY CONTENT.

A. Communications Decency Act of 1996. No provider or user of an interactive computer service shall be treated as the publisher or speaker of any information provided by another information content provider, and no cause of action may be brought and no liability may be imposed under any State or local law that is inconsistent with this provision (47 U.S.C.S. § 230(c)(1), (e)(3)).

[Optional] B. Act Provides Absolute Immunity for Republishing Defamatory Material on Internet. The federal Communications Decency Act of 1996 provides immunity from liability for republishing material that originates with a third person, even if the party republishing the defamatory material has knowledge or reason to know of the material's defamatory content (Barrett v. Rosenthal (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 33, 43-49, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 55, 146 P.3d 510).

[Optional] C. "User" Defined. Under the Communications Decency Act, the term "user" extends to all individuals who use an interactive computer service, regardless of whether the "use" at issue consists of merely receiving defamatory information, or screening and removing defamatory publication from an Internet site, or some other use of the interactive computer service (Barrett v. Rosenthal (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 33, 58-60, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 55, 146 P.3d 510).

[Optional] D. Employer is "Provider" When Providing Internet Access to Employees. An employer that provides its employees with Internet access through the company's internal computer system is a "provider" of an interactive computer service for purposes of the Act (Delfino v. Agilent Technologies, Inc. (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 790, 806, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 376).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that a party who republishes on the Internet defamatory content that originated with another person is absolutely immune from tort liability under the federal Communications Decency Act of 1996, 47 U.S.C.S. § 230, even if the republishing party knows or has reason to know of the material's defamatory content.

This form may be adapted for use depending on the specific procedural context in which the plaintiff wishes to raise the issue that the defendant is immune from liability under the Act. For example, they may be used to support a motion for summary judgment or a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the defendant was not the originator of the defamatory material, but was merely republishing the information on the Internet.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Act Provides Absolute Immunity for Republishing Defamatory Material on Internet

In Barrett v. Rosenthal (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 33, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 55, 146 P.3d 510 , plaintiffs were two doctors engaged in fighting the promotion of alternative healthcare practices and products. Defendant, a participant in two Internet newsgroups focusing on alternative medicine, posted several messages on those newsgroups referring to plaintiffs as "quacks," accusing them of bullying tactics, and repeated one story she had received that accused one of the plaintiffs of engaging in the criminal conduct of stalking women. Plaintiffs informed defendant that the story of alleged stalking was false, asked that she remove the posting, and threatened to sue her. Defendant refused, and in fact, republished the story multiple times along with details of the plaintiffs' threat to sue. Plaintiffs sued defendant for libel, libel per se, and conspiracy. Defendant filed a motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The trial court granted the motion to strike, concluding that the plaintiffs could not establish a probability of prevailing on their claims. The trial court held, in part, that the defendant was immune from liability under the federal Communications Decency Act (CDA), 47 U.S.C.S. § 230, because she republished but did not originate the defamatory material. The plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal reversed in part, holding that the CDA did not abrogate the traditional rule making persons who distribute defamatory material, without engaging in actual publication, liable if they know or have reason to know of the defamatory nature of the material they disseminate. Defendant appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Supreme Court concluded that the court of appeal erred in rejecting the prevailing view, most prominently articulated in Zeran v. America Online, Inc. (4th Cir. 1997) 129 F.3d 327 , cert. den., (1998) 524 U.S. 937 , that the CDA barred lawsuits seeking to impose liability on an internet service provider for its exercise of a publisher's traditional editorial functions, such as deciding whether to publish, withdraw, postpone, or alter content provided by another, regardless of whether the publication of another person's content is made with knowledge of the possible defamatory nature of the content. The Supreme Court agreed with this approach and concluded that the court of appeal gave insufficient consideration to the burden that its rule would impose on Internet speech when it found that "distributor" liability survived passage of the CDA. Subjecting mere distributors to defamation liability would chill Internet speech, in contravention to one of the primary goals of the Act. The court of appeal's rule would also create the anomalous result that a publisher, who plays a greater role in causing material to be published, would be absolutely immune under the Act, while a mere distributor would not (40 Cal. 4th 33, 43-49) . The Supreme Court concluded that Congress, in passing the CDA, intended to promote self-regulation of the Internet and protect from tort liability even the most active Internet publishers, those who take an aggressive role in republishing third-party content (40 Cal. 4th 33, 53) .

[b] "User" Defined

The factual and procedural background of Barrett v. Rosenthal (2006) 40 Cal. 4th 33, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 55, 146 P.3d 510 , is described in [a], above. The Supreme Court noted that the defendant in the case before it was not herself an internet service provider, thus presenting the question of whether the defendant was a "user" of an interactive computer service for purposes of establishing immunity under the Act. Noting that the Act itself does not define the term "user," the Court concluded that the term extends to all individuals who use an interactive computer service, regardless of whether the "use" at issue consists of merely receiving defamatory information, or screening and removing defamatory publication from an Internet site, or some other use of the interactive computer service. In so concluding, the Court rejected application of a distinction between "active" and "passive" use (40 Cal. 4th 33, 58-60) . Because the defendant used the Internet to gain access to newsgroups where she posted the defamatory article, the Court held that she was a "user" under the provisions of the Act (40 Cal. 4th 33, 59) . However, the Supreme Court cautioned that, at some point, active involvement in the creation of a defamatory Internet posting may expose a defendant to liability as the originator of the defamatory content, while also noting that other courts have required conduct that goes beyond the traditional editorial role of a publisher in order to overcome the immunity provided by the Act (40 Cal. 4th 33, 60).

[c] Employer is "Provider" When Providing Internet Access to Employees

In Delfino v. Agilent Technologies, Inc. (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 790, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 376 , plaintiffs were the targets of threats communicated by an individual through e-mails and postings on Internet bulletin boards. For at least some of these communications, the sender accessed the Internet using a computer at his place of employment, although the threatening content of the messages had no connection with the sender's employer. The employer did not learn that the employee had been using the employer's computer system for these purposes until months after first learning that the employee was being investigated by law enforcement. Upon learning that company equipment was being used to access the Internet for these purposes, the employer promptly terminated the sender's employment. In addition to suing the sender, plaintiffs sued the sender's employer for various torts, including intentional and negligent infliction of emotion distress. The trial court granted summary judgment for the employer on the grounds that the employer was immune from suit as a "provider" of an interactive computer service under the federal Communications Decency Act. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the Communications Decency Act includes in the definition of a "provider of an interactive computer service" one who "provides or enables computer access by multiple users to a computer server." Under this broad definition, the court easily concluded that an employer that provides its employees with Internet access through the company's internal computer system is a "provider" of an interactive computer service (145 Cal. App. 4th 790, 805-806) . As such, the employer was entitled to immunity under the Act for the threatening communications made without its knowledge by its employee (145 Cal. App. 4th 790, 807-808) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Act Provides Absolute Immunity for Republishing Defamatory Material on Internet

In Phan v. Pham (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 323, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 791 , defendant received an e-mail accusing plaintiff, a former veteran of the Navy of the Republic of Vietnam, of having been disciplined by that Navy for abusive behavior during the last days of the Vietnam War. Defendant forwarded that e-mail message to at least one other member of a Vietnam veterans group. Defendant added a brief comment prior to the original message stating that "[e]verything will come out to the daylight" and inviting the recipients to read the original message. Plaintiff sued defendant for defamation for forwarding the defamatory e-mail. However, the court of appeal held that defendant could not be held liable for forwarding the e-mail to others merely because he added prefatory remarks to the forwarded message that essentially stated that the truth would come out in the end. The court concluded that this comment made no material contribution to the alleged defamation contained in the message being forwarded. As such, the immunity for republication provided under the federal Communications Decency Act, as interpreted by the California Supreme Court in Barrett v. Rosenthal and as described in [3][a], above, applied to defendant's conduct (182 Cal. App. 4th 323, 328) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action based on republication of a defamatory statement, if it is contended that the cause of action has no merit because the originator of the defamatory statement neither authorized nor intended republication.

Optional Paragraph C should be used if the defamed person republished the defamatory statement voluntarily.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should show that the originator of the defamatory statement did not intend the statement to be republished and did not authorize anyone to republish it. If the republication is made by the person defamed, counsel should show that it was made voluntarily.

[b] Related Uses

This memorandum may be adapted for use in other procedural contexts in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of republication. For example, they may be combined with points in support of a demurrer if the cause of action shows on its face that the defendant neither authorized nor intended the republication. It may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Liability for Unauthorized and Unintended Republication

Draper v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank (1928) 203 Cal. 26, 263 P. 240 , was an action for damages for the publication by the defendant of libelous communications concerning the plaintiff. The defendant, finding some funds missing upon the termination of the plaintiff's employment with it, wrote the plaintiff's present employer on the pretext of obtaining the plaintiff's address. Thereupon the employer sought the reasons for the defendant's inquiry. The defendant instructed a detective agency to inform a local branch of the plaintiff's employer that the plaintiff was suspected of theft. This information was forwarded to the employer by the branch. The plaintiff sued for these libelous communications. The defendant contended that it could not be held liable for any injury to the plaintiff's reputation resulting from the branch office's republication of the information on the grounds that the information was sent without its consent or authorization. The trial court entered judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court held that it was the rule that the author of defamatory statements is not liable for a publication of those statements if he or she neither authorized nor intended such publication to be made. In this case, however, the Court found that the defendant was responsible for the communication because it informed the branch office with the intention that they should in turn communicate with the plaintiff's employer (203 Cal. 26, 39) .

[b] Voluntary Disclosure by Plaintiff

Shoemaker v. Friedberg (1947) 80 Cal. App. 2d 911, 183 P.2d 318 , was an action for damages for slander consisting of a statement by the defendant to the effect that the plaintiff was suffering from a venereal disease. The defendant sent a letter informing the plaintiff of the results of a laboratory report indicating the existence of venereal disease. The plaintiff revealed the contents of this letter to her landlady, her mother, and a neighbor. When pressed by the plaintiff's landlady to discuss the letter, the defendant told the plaintiff that she had gonorrhea. This statement was overheard by the landlady, the plaintiff's mother, and a neighbor. The trial court granted a motion by the defendant for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and entered judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that it was the duty of the defendant to treat the plaintiff and to inform her of the ills from which he believed she was suffering. It found that the letter written by him was addressed to the plaintiff and truthfully conveyed to her the information given him by a reputable laboratory, which information he believed to be true. The court held that the subject matter of the letter concerned a subject in which both parties were interested, and therefore it was privileged as to the plaintiff. It further found that the writing of this letter to the plaintiff was not a publication of its contents under the slander laws of California and that its original publication was by the plaintiff herself when she disclosed its contents to her landlady, her mother, and a neighbor. It held that as the defendant had no part in this publication, he cannot be held responsible for it (80 Cal. App. 2d 911, 916) .

DEFENDANT IS ENTITLED TO SUMMARY ADJUDICATION OF THE PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM FOR EXEMPLARY DAMAGES BECAUSE THE UNDISPUTED FACTS SHOW THAT DEFENDANT'S RETRACTION WAS SUFFICIENT AS A MATTER OF LAW UNDER THE STATUTORY STANDARD OF SECTION 48a OF THE CIVIL CODE.

A. Motion for Summary Adjudication of Claim for Exemplary Damages. If it is contended that there is no merit to a claim for damages as specified in Civil Code Section 3294, any party may move for summary adjudication with regard to that claim for damages (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)).

B. Statutory Requirement That Retraction Be Made in Substantially as Conspicuous a Manner as Allegedly Libelous Statement. A retraction made for purposes of giving the defendant immunity from liability for general or punitive damages must be made in "substantially as conspicuous a manner" as the allegedly libelous statement was made (Civ. Code § 48a(3)).

C. Summary Adjudication of Claim for Exemplary Damages Based on Insufficiency of Retraction Is Proper if No Reasonable Juror Could Find Retraction Insufficient. Although the issue of whether a retraction pursuant to Civil Code Section 48a of an allegedly libelous statement is generally a question for the jury to decide, under circumstances in which no reasonable juror could find the retraction insufficient, summary adjudication of a claim for exemplary damages based on the insufficiency of the retraction is proper (see Twin Coast Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 656, 660-662, 256 Cal. Rptr. 310).

This form may be submitted in support of a motion for summary adjudication of a claim for exemplary damages that is grounded on the allegation that a defendant in a libel case did not publish a retraction sufficient to meet the requirements of Civ. Code § 48a.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should set forth facts showing that the retraction met the requirements of Civ. Code § 48a.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] if there are no other triable issues of fact.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

In an appropriate case, the points in § 142.88 may be used to oppose the motion supported by these points.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Adjudication of Claim for Exemplary Damages Based on Insufficiency of Retraction Is Proper if No Reasonable Juror Could Find Retraction Insufficient

In Twin Coast Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 656, 256 Cal. Rptr. 310 , a newspaper published an account of a crime and stated that the plaintiff had been arrested as a suspect. The article was published in both editions of the newspaper. The plaintiff demanded a retraction on the day the article was published. The defendant printed a retraction in both editions on the next day and several weeks later. The retractions appeared in the same location as the defamatory subheadline, the print of the retraction's headline was larger than that of the defamatory subheadline, and the headline and article corrected every aspect of the defamatory article and expressed regret for the error. In addition, the paper acknowledged its error twice more: in an article reporting the plaintiff's libel action, and in a response to a letter to the editor. At trial, the defendants moved for a summary adjudication of the issue that the retractions were published in substantially as conspicuous a manner as the allegedly defamatory statements, as required by Civ. Code § 48a(3). The court refused to grant the motion, agreeing with the plaintiff that the issue must be resolved by the jury. The defendant sought a writ of mandate to compel summary adjudication of the issue.

The court of appeal stated that the precedents were sparse on the subject. The court held that the issue is one of fact. The court pointed out that the issue of whether one newspaper article is substantially as conspicuous as another could hardly be characterized as one of law. However, the court held that under the facts before it, no reasonable juror could find the retractions insufficient under the standard of Civ. Code § 48a(3) (208 Cal. App. 3d 656, 662-663) .

NOTE:

Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) was subsequently amended to eliminate summary adjudication of "issues." It now provides for summary adjudication of a cause of action, defense, claim for punitive damages, or the issue whether one or more defendants owed a duty to one or more plaintiffs [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)].

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE AN ALLEGATION OF SPECIAL DAMAGES IS UNNECESSARY IN THAT THE LANGUAGE COMPLAINED OF IS LIBELOUS ON ITS FACE.

A. Libel on Its Face. Special damages need not be alleged in a complaint for libel if the alleged defamatory language is libelous on its face, despite the existence of a possible nondefamatory meaning of the words used (MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 537-551, 343 P.2d 36).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege special damages.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Libel on Its Face

In MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 343 P.2d 36 , the Supreme Court reversed a general demurrer granted on the basis of the "possible innocent interpretation" rule. It held that the plaintiff's allegation that an article that had stated that a communist newspaper supported his candidacy was libelous on its face despite the possible interpretation that communist support did not mean communist sympathy (52 Cal. 2d 536, 547-551) .

[b] Language Charging Crime

In Draper v. Hellman Commercial Trust & Sav. Bank (1928) 203 Cal. 26, 263 P. 240 , the defendant had employed the plaintiff as a night teller before the plaintiff voluntarily terminated his job and returned to work for a former employer. The defendant sent a telegram to the plaintiff's employer charging the plaintiff with having fraudulently appropriated funds while he was working for the bank. The Supreme Court upheld a jury verdict for the plaintiff, stating that the telegram was clearly libelous per se (203 Cal. 26, 34) .

In Boyich v. Howell (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 801, 34 Cal. Rptr. 794 , the court of appeal held that a circular that charged the plaintiff, a candidate for reelection to the city council, with having been convicted of stuffing the ballot box during a union election was libelous on its face (221 Cal. App. 2d 801, 802) . Thus, although the complaint was uncertain and subject to a special demurrer, the granting of a general demurrer was error. Furthermore, because a libel per se was charged, an allegation of special damages was not necessary (221 Cal. App. 2d 801, 802-803) .

[c] Language Adversely Affecting Occupation

In Maidman v. Jewish Publ'ns, Inc. (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 643, 7 Cal. Rptr. 617, 355 P.2d 265 , the Supreme Court held that a publication that accused an attorney of deliberately misleading a court was libelous per se because it obviously injured his reputation, both generally and with respect to his profession. Thus, it was error to grant the defendants' demurrer (54 Cal. 2d 643, 651) .

In Cameron v. Wernick (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 890, 60 Cal. Rptr. 102 , the court of appeal held that an article about the plaintiff that accused him of being interested in a "fast buck" had a tendency to injure the plaintiff in his reputation and occupation and thus was libelous on its face. Hence, the plaintiff did not need to allege special damages, and the granting of a demurrer to the complaint was reversed (251 Cal. App. 2d 890, 893-895) .

[d] Language Charging Violation of Confidence

In Selleck v. Globe Int'l, Inc. (1985) 166 Cal. App. 3d 1123, 212 Cal. Rptr. 838 , the court of appeal held that an article in a weekly newspaper purporting to be an interview with the father of a famous celebrity in which the father revealed his son's love secrets was libelous on its face because it implied that the father violated confidences of his son. The court stated that falsely charging a person with a violation of confidence reposed in him or her is libel per se, for which special damages need not be pleaded (166 Cal. App. 3d 1123, 1132) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Language Charging Crime

In Morris v. National Fed'n of Blind (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 162, 13 Cal. Rptr. 336 , the court of appeal reversed the granting of a general demurrer on the ground that the complaint failed to allege special damages. The court held a charge asserting the plaintiff to be a "racketeer" was libelous per se because the term connotes a connection with the criminal underworld (192 Cal. App. 2d 162, 164) .

[b] Language Adversely Affecting Occupation

In Pridonoff v. Balokovich (1951) 36 Cal. 2d 788, 228 P.2d 6 , the Supreme Court held that a newspaper article, which charged the plaintiff with having been engaged in such flagrant espionage activity while a member of the American Embassy that his recall was requested, had a direct tendency to injure the plaintiff in his occupation. Therefore, the article was libelous on its face (36 Cal. 2d 788, 790) .

In Bates v. Campbell (1931) 213 Cal. 438, 2 P.2d 383 , the plaintiff had worked for the local bar association as its publicity agent. The defendant published a letter accusing the plaintiff of having flagrantly violated the confidence and trust given to her by continuing to use her former employer's stationery and failing to disclose the fact that she no longer worked for the bar association. The Supreme Court held that the complaint sufficiently alleged language that was libelous on its face both because it tended to injure the plaintiff in her occupation and because it exposed her to obloquy; thus, the granting of a demurrer to the complaint was error (213 Cal. 438, 445-446) .

In Fairfield v. Hagan (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 194, 56 Cal. Rptr. 402 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff based on letters that the defendant sent to creditors of a bankrupt estate. The letters charged the plaintiff with "milking" the estate and doing little work, charges that had a natural tendency to injure the plaintiff's reputation and that were therefore libelous per se (248 Cal. App. 2d 194, 199-201) .

In Williams v. Daily Review, Inc. (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 405, 46 Cal. Rptr. 135 , the court of appeal held that it was prejudicial error not to instruct the jury that an article was libelous on its face. The article insinuated that the plaintiffs were incompetent in the preparation of bids for a paving job and in performing the job. Thus, judgment for the defendants was reversed (236 Cal. App. 2d 405, 409-413) .

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

ACTUAL DAMAGES ARE NOT AN ESSENTIAL ALLEGATION WHERE LANGUAGE IS SLANDEROUS PER SE.

A. Slander Per Se. Actual damages need not be pleaded or proved if words spoken are fairly susceptible of a defamatory meaning within subdivisions (1) through (4) of Section 46 of the Civil Code, even if it is necessary to plead an innuendo and inducement to elucidate the defamatory meaning (Jarman v. Rea (1902) 137 Cal. 339, 345-346, 70 P. 216 ; White v. Valenta (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 243, 251-254, 44 Cal. Rptr. 241).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege special damages.

If appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Slander Per Se

In Jarman v. Rea (1902) 137 Cal. 339, 70 P. 216 , the plaintiff was a member of the city council and alleged that the defendant had accused him of accepting a bribe. The defendant contended that the words were not actionable per se and, thus, were subject to a demurrer because special damages had not been pleaded and proved. The Supreme Court rejected this contention, however, and stated that words may be slanderous per se even if the assistance of an inducement or colloquium is required (137 Cal. 339, 345-346) .

In White v. Valenta (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 243, 44 Cal. Rptr. 241 , the court of appeal reiterated the principle that spoken words may be slanderous per se if they are fairly susceptible of a defamatory meaning, even though they require the assistance of an innuendo and inducement. In such a case, no special damages need to be pleaded or proved (234 Cal. App. 2d 243, 251-254) .

[b] Language Charging Crime

In Cunningham v. Simpson (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 301, 306, 81 Cal. Rptr. 855, 461 P.2d 39 , the Supreme Court sustained a judgment for the plaintiff based on a complaint for slander although it remanded the case for a new trial on the issue of damages. The defendant had charged the plaintiff with having a "hot title" to a car, and the Court concluded that this accusation could reasonably be understood as implying that the plaintiff had acquired the car by some illegal means (1 Cal. 3d 301, 306) .

In Moranville v. Aletto (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 315 P.2d 91 , the complaint alleged that the defendant had called the plaintiff a thief. The court of appeal affirmed judgment by the jury for the plaintiff. It stated that because a cause of action for slander per se was stated, general damages were presumed as a matter of law, especially because theft is a serious charge that implies a high degree of moral turpitude (153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 672) .

[c] Language Imputing Disease

In Schessler v. Keck (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 271 P.2d 588 , the defendants conceded that utterances that charged the plaintiff with having syphilis were slanderous per se if they were false and unprivileged when published. They also conceded that an action would lie even without an allegation of special damages and based their main line of argument on the statute of limitations and several alleged pleading defects (125 Cal. App. 2d 827, 832) .

[d] Language Injuring Business

Washer v. Bank of Am. (1943) 21 Cal. 2d 822, 136 P.2d 297 , overruled on other grounds, MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 343 P.2d 36 , was an action for libel and slander based on the same language. The plaintiff had been employed by the defendant and after a stormy career he was discharged. After his discharge, an officer of the defendant made a statement concerning him to newspaper reporters that charged him with having admitted the falsification of an expense account and with having been guilty of flagrant insubordination. The Supreme Court held that, insofar as the charges injured the plaintiff in his occupation, they were defamatory per se and that it was unnecessary for him to allege special damages. Thus, the granting of the defendant's demurrer to the complaint was reversed (21 Cal. 2d 822, 828-829) .

In Rodriguez v. North Am. Aviation, Inc. (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 889, 61 Cal. Rptr. 579 , the court of appeal reversed the granting of a demurrer based on the assertion that the plaintiff had failed to sufficiently allege special damages. The court held that statements that the plaintiff was "not a competent engineer" and was "a traitor to the company" were slanderous per se under Civ. Code § 46(3) and, thus, that no allegation of special damages was necessary (252 Cal. App. 2d 889, 894) .

[e] Language Imputing Lack of Chastity

In Preston v. Frey (1891) 91 Cal. 107, 111, 27 P. 533 , the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the plaintiff. It held that statements that the plaintiff had been in a house of prostitution, had been afflicted with venereal disease, had conceived an illegitimate child, and had offered herself to a young man were slanderous per se under Civ. Code § 46(4) because they unquestionably imputed a lack of chastity to her (91 Cal. 107, 109) .

In Hitchcock v. Caruthers (1890) 82 Cal. 523, 23 P. 48 , the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for the plaintiff. The defendant had charged that the plaintiff was cohabiting with a man as his mistress, was being kept for immoral purposes, and was being used as a mistress. The Supreme Court held these statements slanderous per se under Civ. Code § 46(4) because they imputed a lack of chastity to her (82 Cal. 523, 523) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Language Charging Crime

In Douglas v. Janis (1974) 43 Cal. App. 3d 931, 118 Cal. Rptr. 280 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff and rejected the defendant's argument that there was insufficient evidence to support the judgment. The record indicated the defendant had accused the plaintiff of either "stealing" or "taking" money from one of the defendant's corporations, and thus the jury's determination that the defendant's remarks were understood in a defamatory manner was upheld (43 Cal. App. 3d 931, 938-940) .

In Mullins v. Brando (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 409, 91 Cal. Rptr. 796 , the court of appeal rejected a contention that the defendant's statement did not imply murder or an execution. The defendant had been a guest on a national talk show when he alleged that the plaintiffs, who were police officers, had "shot dead and killed" a member of the Black Panther Party. The court held that the defendant issued a charge, not a vindication of the police officers, and thus that the granting of a demurrer to the complaint was error (13 Cal. App. 3d 409, 414-415) .

[b] Language Injuring Business

In White v. Valenta (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 243, 44 Cal. Rptr. 241 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff and rejected the defendant's argument that the court erred in permitting the jury to determine whether the words "you son of a bitch" were slanderous per se. The jury had been instructed that under some circumstances the language might have the effect of imputing that the plaintiff was disqualified from conducting his business, an instruction that the court of appeal affirmed (234 Cal. App. 2d 243, 257-258).

In Hanley v. Lund (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 633, 32 Cal. Rptr. 733 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff, a doctor. The defendant, an attorney, had accused the plaintiff of medical malpractice and negligence. The court stated that such statements were slanderous per se under Civ. Code § 46(3) (218 Cal. App. 2d 633, 644) .

In Larive v. Willitt (1957) 154 Cal. App. 2d 140, 315 P.2d 732 , the court of appeal reversed the granting of a demurrer to the plaintiff's action for slander. The court held that the complaint, which alleged that the defendants had accused the plaintiff, a high school principal, of allowing students to "pet" and "embrace" in the hallways in his sight without taking any action against them, stated a cause of action under Civ. Code § 46(3) (154 Cal. App. 2d 140, 142) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS IMPROPER BECAUSE TRIABLE ISSUES OF MATERIAL FACT REMAIN REGARDING WHETHER THE QUOTATIONS ATTRIBUTED TO PLAINTIFF BY DEFENDANT ARE ACCURATE, AND, IF INACCURATE, WHETHER DEFENDANT'S ALTERATION OF PLAINTIFF'S WORDS RESULTED IN A MATERIAL CHANGE IN THE MEANING CONVEYED IN THE STATEMENTS ACTUALLY MADE TO AN EXTENT SUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT ACTED WITH ACTUAL MALICE.

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment if the complaint arises from the defendant's inaccurate or fabricated quotations of the plaintiff's words, if the plaintiff is a public figure, and the motion asserts protection under the First Amendment. The basis of the opposition is that the defendant's deliberate alteration of the plaintiff's words materially changed the meaning of the plaintiff's actual statements, for purposes of establishing their defamatory character, and that they were made with the "actual malice" required by the First Amendment [see Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc. (1991) 501 U.S. 496, 517, 111 S. Ct. 2419, 115 L. Ed. 2d 447] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. If appropriate, counsel should contrast the published material to any evidence available of the plaintiff's actual words, and show that the alteration was material and injurious to the plaintiff's reputation. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Deliberate Alteration That Materially Changes Meaning Constitutes Actual Malice

In Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc. (1991) 501 U.S. 496, 111 S. Ct. 2419, 115 L. Ed. 2d 447 , a psychoanalyst and scholar brought an action in federal district court against an author, a magazine publisher, and a book publisher based on a published work (regarding the Sigmund Freud Archives in London, of which the plaintiff had been hired and fired as Projects Director) that employed extensive quotations attributed to the plaintiff that were allegedly inaccurate or fabricated. Among several passages that ultimately formed the basis of the plaintiff's suit were the following statements attributed, within quotations marks, to the plaintiff: (1) that the man who headed the archives and Dr. Anna Freud considered the plaintiff to be "an intellectual gigolo"; (2) that if he were head of the archives, the Freud House (in which the archives were kept) would "have been a place of sex, women, fun"; and (3) that he considered himself to be the "greatest analyst who ever lived." The trial court granted the author's motion for summary judgment. The parties agreed that the plaintiff was a public figure and therefore could escape summary judgment only if the evidence in the record permitted a reasonable finder of fact to conclude, by clear and convincing evidence, that the defendants published a defamatory statement with actual malice. The district court analyzed each of the passages and held that the alleged inaccuracies did not raise a jury question, that the allegedly fabricated quotations were either substantially true, or were among several possible rational interpretations of ambiguous conversations or events, and as such were entitled to constitutional protection. The federal court of appeals affirmed, assuming for much of its opinion that the author had deliberately altered each quotation not found on the tape recordings, but holding nevertheless that the plaintiff failed to raise a jury question of actual malice, in large part for the same reasons as those set forth by the district court. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that triable issues of material fact existed regarding whether actual malice was evidenced in the publication of several of the quotations in question. The Court stated that, pursuant to Civ. Code § 45 California law defines libel as a false and unprivileged publication by writing that exposes any person to hatred, contempt, ridicule, or obloquy, that causes the person to be shunned or avoided, or that has a tendency to injure the person in his or her occupation. False attribution of statements to a person may constitute libel, if the falsity exposes that person to an injury comprehended by the statute. Further, it does not matter under the statute that the plaintiff alleges only part of the work to be false, because the test of libel is not quantitative (501 U.S. 496, 508-510) .

The Court stated that the First Amendment limits California's libel law in various respects. A plaintiff who is a public figure cannot recover unless he or she proves by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant published the defamatory statement with actual malice, that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not. Mere negligence does not suffice. Rather, the plaintiff must demonstrate that the author in fact entertained serious doubts as to the truth of the publication (501 U.S. 496, 508) . The Court noted that the term "actual malice" is in fact a shorthand expression in the context of First Amendment protections for speech, and that with regard to jury instructions, it should be replaced by the phrase "knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard as to truth or falsity," emphasizing that the phrase is crucial in this particular case (501 U.S. 496, 508-509) .

In general, the Court stated, quotation marks around a passage indicate to the reader that the passage reproduces the speaker's word verbatim. They inform the reader that he or she is reading the statement of the speaker, not a paraphrase or other indirect interpretation by an author. By providing this information, quotations add authority to the statement and credibility to the author's work. They allow the reader to form his or her own conclusions, and to assess the conclusions of the author, instead of relying entirely on the author's characterization of the subject. The Court stated that a fabricated quotation may injure reputation in at least two senses, either giving rise to a conceivable claim of defamation. First, the quotation might attribute an untrue factual assertion to the speaker, for example, a fabricated quotation of a public official admitting that he or she had been convicted of a serious crime if in fact he or she had not. Second, regardless of the truth or falsity of the factual matter asserted within the quoted statement, the attribution may result in injury to reputation because the manner of expression or even the fact that the statement was made indicates a negative personal trait or an attitude that the speaker does not hold, for example, a fabricated assertion of grandiosity or arrogance. In that situation, one need not determine whether the assertion is true in order to determine whether the report that the plaintiff made the assertion might have injured his or her reputation. The Court further stated that a self-condemnatory quotation may carry more force than criticism by another, in that it would constitute an admission against the speaker's interest (501 U.S. 496, 511-512) . The Court noted that under some circumstances, quotations are not designed to convey that the speaker actually stated the quoted material, for example, in an historical fiction piece or a clearly hypothetical conversation (501 U.S. 496, 511-513) . In this particular case, however, the work in question provides no clue that the quotations are used as a rhetorical device or to paraphrase the speaker's actual statements. To the contrary, a trier of fact could conclude that the work purports to be nonfiction. Neither the author nor the publishers indicate that the lengthy quotations attributed to the plaintiff are anything but the reproduction of actual conversations. Further, the articles were published in a magazine that "seemed to enjoy a reputation for scrupulous factual accuracy," according to the Court. These factors, the Court stated, would, or at least could, lead a reader to take the quotations at face value. The Court described the constitutional question as whether, in the framework of a summary judgment motion, the evidence suffices to show that the defendants acted with the requisite knowledge of falsity or reckless disregard as to truth or falsity. This inquiry in turn requires the consideration of the concept of falsity, that is, whether the requisite falsity inheres in the attribution of words to the plaintiff that he did not speak. In some sense, the Court stated, any alteration of a verbatim quotation is false. However, minor changes to correct grammar or syntax do not amount to falsity for purposes of proving actual malice (501 U.S. 496, 512-513) .

The Court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that any alteration of a public figure's words beyond this "technical falsity" demonstrates actual malice, holding that an author would, under that standard, lack First Amendment protection by reporting as quotations the substance of a subject's derogatory self-descriptive statements. In practice, the Court noted, the full and exact statement of a public figure's words are reported only rarely, because the author may alter the speaker's words to preserve the intended meaning, for example, by adding punctuation or rewriting to preserve coherency. Conversely, an exact quotation out of context can distort meaning, although the speaker did use each reported word (501 U.S. 496, 513-515) . The Court stated that if an author alters a speaker's words but effects no material change in meaning, including any meaning conveyed by the manner or fact of expression, the speaker suffers no injury to reputation that is compensable as a defamation.

The Court also refused to create a discrete body of jurisprudence directed to the special case of inaccurate quotations, concluding, rather, that the essential principles of defamation law accommodate this area sufficiently. The Court noted that the common law of libel overlooks minor inaccuracies and concentrates on substantial truth. A statement is not considered false unless it would have a different effect on the mind of the reader from that of the pleaded truth (501 U.S. 496, 515-517) . The Court concluded that a deliberate alteration of the words uttered by a plaintiff does not equate with knowledge of falsity for purposes of New York Times v. Sullivan, unless the alteration results in a material change in the meaning conveyed by the statement [see New York Times v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 279-280, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , discussed in § 142.24[3][a]].

The Court stated that the use of quotations to attribute words not in fact spoken bears in a most important way on that inquiry, but it is not dispositive in every case. Deliberate or reckless falsification that comprises actual malice turns on words and punctuation only because words and punctuation express meaning. Therefore, quotations may be a devastating instrument for conveying false meaning. The Court noted that in this particular case, readers of the book may have found the author's portrait of the plaintiff especially damning because so much of it appeared to be told by the plaintiff in his own words; and that if the alterations of the plaintiff's words gave a different meaning to the statements, bearing on their defamatory character, then the device of quotations might well be critical in finding the words actionable (501 U.S. 496, 517-519) . The Court disapproved the appellate court's conclusion that an altered quotation is protected so long as it a rational interpretation of an actual statement. Generally, the protection for rational interpretation serves First Amendment principles by allowing an author the interpretive license that is necessary when relying on ambiguous sources. However, if a writer uses a quotation, and a reasonable reader would conclude that the quotation purports to be a verbatim repetition the speaker's actual statement, quotation marks indicate that the author is not involved in an interpretation of the speaker's ambiguous statement, but rather is attempting to convey what the speaker said. The quotations at issue, absent any qualification, purport to set forth the plaintiff's statement, not the author's rational interpretation of his statements or thoughts.

The Court stated that the press, as well as public figures, would suffer under a rule that would give journalists the freedom to "place statements in their subjects' mouths" without fear of liability, and that the First Amendment would be ill-served by its granting near absolute, constitutional protection for that practice (501 U.S. 496, 519-520) . The Court then applied the applicable principles to the passages in question. It noted that on summary judgment, it is required to draw all justifiable inferences in favor of the nonmoving party, including questions of credibility and of the weight to be accorded particular evidence. Consequently, it assumed, except if otherwise evidenced, that the plaintiff is correct in denying that he made the statements attributed to him by the author, and that she reported with knowledge or reckless disregard of the differences between what the plaintiff said and what was quoted. (To ascertain what the plaintiff actually said, for comparison purposes, the Court considered only the tape-recorded conversations, rejecting the author's assertion that her typewritten notes of conversations should also be given weight.) The Court described its task as the determination whether the published passages differ materially in meaning from the corresponding tape-recorded statement so as to create an issue of fact for a jury regarding falsity. The Court examined each of the allegedly defamatory passages and the corresponding portions of the tape-recorded interviews in light of this standard, and concluded that a reasonable trier of fact could conclude both that the changes were defamatory, and that the changes amounted to actual malice. The Court reversed and remanded for further proceedings (501 U.S. 496, 520-525) .

PLAINTIFF IS NOT REQUIRED TO ALLEGE ACTUAL MALICE, BECAUSE HE/SHE IS NOT A PUBLIC OFFICIAL.

A. Public Official. A public official is someone who is in the government's employ and who (1) has or appears to have substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs; (2) usually enjoys significantly greater access to the mass media and therefore has a more realistic opportunity to contradict false statements than has a private individual; (3) holds a position in government that has such apparent importance that the public has an independent interest in the person's qualifications and performance beyond the general public interest in the qualifications and performance of all government employees; and (4) holds a position that invites public scrutiny and discussion of the person holding it entirely apart from the scrutiny and discussion occasioned by the particular controversy (Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 608-609, 252 Cal. Rptr. 586 ; see Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 85, 86 S. Ct. 669, 15 L. Ed. 2d 597).

B. Actual Malice. One who is not a public official need not allege actual malice in a defamation action (cf. New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 283, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the complaint did not allege actual malice even though the plaintiff is a public official. The basis for the opposition to the motion is that the plaintiff is not a public official, and as a private figure need not allege actual malice.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)] that include facts showing that the plaintiff is not a public official.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Official

Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 252 Cal. Rptr. 586 , was an action for libel brought by an individual who was the president, a director, and a significant shareholder in a corporation that applied for and was granted a license by the California Horse Racing Board to conduct horse racing at a county fairgrounds. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary adjudication of issues, holding that the plaintiff was a public official. The court then granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment because there was insufficient evidence of actual malice--that is, of knowledge of the falsity of the publication or reckless disregard of whether or not it was true [see § 142.66[3][b]].

The appellate court reversed, finding that the plaintiff was not a public official for purposes of defamation law. First, the court noted that whether or not one is a public official may not be decided by state law standards, but must be determined from the United States Supreme Court's construction of the First Amendment. The court reviewed the plurality and concurring opinions of the United States Supreme Court in Rosenblatt v. Baer, and concluded that the Supreme Court's view of a public official is someone who is in the government's employ and who: (1) has or appears to have substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs; (2) usually enjoys significantly greater access to the mass media and therefore has a more realistic opportunity to contradict false statements than has a private individual; (3) holds a position in government that has such apparent importance that the public has an independent interest in the person's qualifications and performance beyond the general public interest in the qualifications and performance of all government employees; and (4) holds a position that invites public scrutiny and discussion of the person holding it entirely apart from the scrutiny and discussion occasioned by the particular controversy. Because the plaintiff was not a government employee, the condition precedent was lacking, and he was not a public official (205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 602-609) .

For discussion of a subsequent published opinion based on this case (Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1991) 233 Cal. App. 3d 1685, 285 Cal. Rptr. 430), in which the plaintiff was found to be a limited-purpose public figure, see § 142.25[3][d].

Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 86 S. Ct. 669, 15 L. Ed. 2d 597 , was an action by a former governmental employee who had been the proprietor of a government-owned-and-operated ski recreation area. A state court jury awarded the plaintiff damages for libel before the decision of the United States Supreme Court in New York Times v. Sullivan [New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 ; *see [§ 142.66[3]*b]]. Hearing the appeal after New York Times v. Sullivan, the United States Supreme Court reversed and remanded the case to the state court. Among the issues that were to be considered on remand was whether the plaintiff was a public official encumbered with the burden of proving actual malice.

In the lead opinion, Justice Brennan addressed the question of who might be a public official. Noting the conflicting policy issues of the legitimate interest in protection of reputation and the need for vigorous debate on public issues and persons who influence public issues, he stated that the "public-official" designation applies at the very least to those among the hierarchy of government employees who have, or appear to the public to have, substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs. If a position in government has such apparent importance that the public has an independent interest in the qualifications and performance of the person who holds it, beyond the general public interest in the qualifications and performance of all government employees, the person is a public official (383 U.S. 75, 84-86) .

NOTE:

In the view of a California appellate court, Justice Brennan's opinion failed to command a majority for the public-official issue and is dicta on this point because the judgment was reversed on other grounds. Nevertheless, the court chose to adopt the reasoning and much of the language of the Brennan opinion [Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 607, 252 Cal. Rptr. 586] . This court's vote-counting is open to question, because the part of the opinion in which the issue is addressed appears to have the support of five justices (Brennan, Warren, White, Stewart, who concurred separately without expressly mentioning the issue, and Harlan, who concurred in this part but dissented from a different part). The conclusion that the language is dicta is probably correct and makes moot the question of the number of justices who concurred in it.

[b] Actual Malice

The actual-malice requirement as set down by the United States Supreme Court in New York Times Co. v. Sullivan (1964) 376 U.S. 254, 84 S. Ct. 710, 11 L. Ed. 2d 686 , is discussed in § 142.24[3][a].

[c] Licensee Is Not Public Official

The facts of Mosesian v. McClatchy Newspapers (1988) 205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 252 Cal. Rptr. 586 , are discussed in § 142.66[3][a]. In addition to holding that the plaintiff was not a public official because he was not in the government's employ, the court considered the defendant's argument that the plaintiff was a public official because he was engaged in a governmental business or function, namely, state-sanctioned horse racing. The court rejected this argument, holding that a license to perform a job and governmental power to regulate the performance of a job does not make the job a governmental function. The court analogized to attorneys, who are required to be licensed and whose performance is subject to judicial scrutiny, stating that this oversight does not make lawyering a governmental function or a lawyer a public official. Horse racing is a heavily regulated, but nevertheless private, enterprise (205 Cal. App. 3d 597, 610-611) .

[d] School Teacher Is Not Public Official

Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131 , was an action for defamation, by a public high school teacher who was accused in a fraternal order magazine of "expounding communist, Godless philosophies to our young people" because of her selection and defense of certain controversial teaching materials. The defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground that she was a public official who must prove actual malice was denied, but granted on other grounds. On cross appeal, the court affirmed the finding that the plaintiff was not a public official. The court noted language from Rosenblatt v. Baer [Rosenblatt v. Baer (1966) 383 U.S. 75, 86-87 n.13, 86 S. Ct. 669, 15 L. Ed. 2d 597 (discussed in § 142.66[3][a])] that a public official must be one whose position would invite public scrutiny and discussion of the person holding it, entirely apart from the scrutiny and discussion occasioned by the particular charges in controversy. The court stated that the governance or control that a public classroom teacher might be said to exercise over the conduct of government is at most remote and philosophical. The court refused to hold that a school teacher must be deemed to have assumed the risk of nonmalicious defamation. Such a rule would be an intolerable danger to freedom of intellect and of expression, which the teacher must have to teach effectively (97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 922-924) .

[e] Deputy Public Defender Is Not Public Official

The court in James v. San Jose Mercury News, Inc. (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 890 , has held that a deputy public defender is not a public official because he or she does not have "substantial responsibility for or control over the conduct of governmental affairs." As stated by the court, the control that a deputy public defender may exercise over the management of a particular case must invariably be controlled in turn by considerations of the best interests of the individual client, tempered only by professional constraints applicable to all attorneys and not by any generalized public interest beyond concern that indigent defendants should be competently and professionally represented. The court expressly rejected the holding of Tague v. Citizens for Law & Order, Inc. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 16, 23-24 , 142 Cal. Rptr. 689 , that an assistant public defender is a public official (17 Cal. App. 4th 1, 11) .

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT REQUIRED TO ALLEGE ACTUAL MALICE, BECAUSE HE/SHE IS NOT A PUBLIC FIGURE.

A. Public Figure Defined. A person is not deemed a "public figure" unless he either enjoys a general, national fame or has become involved in a particular controversy (Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 352, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789).

[Optional] B. Private Individual Involved in Public Matter. A private individual is not automatically transformed into a public figure by becoming involved in or associated with a matter that attracts public attention (Wolston v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1979) 443 U.S. 157, 167, 99 S. Ct. 2701, 61 L. Ed. 2d 450).

[Optional] C. Person Who Engaged in Criminal Conduct. A person who engages in criminal conduct does not automatically become a public figure for purposes of comment on a limited range of issues relating to his or her conviction (Wolston v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1979) 443 U.S. 157, 168-169, 99 S. Ct. 2701, 61 L. Ed. 2d 450).

[Optional] D. Plaintiff Not Seeking to Influence Resolution of Issues. To be a "public figure," the plaintiff must be shown to have voluntarily and actively sought, in connection with a given matter of public interest, to influence the resolution of the issues involved (Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 929, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131).

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment if the motion asserts that the complaint did not allege actual malice even though the plaintiff is a public figure. The basis for the opposition to the motion is that the plaintiff is not a public official, and as a private figure need not allege actual malice.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)] that include facts showing that the plaintiff is not a public figure.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Figure Defined

In Gertz v. Welch (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789, 812 , the facts and procedural background of which are discussed in § 142.25[3][c], the Supreme Court held that absent clear evidence of general fame or notoriety in the community and pervasive involvement in the affairs of society, an individual should not be deemed a public personality for all aspects of his life. It is preferable to reduce the public figure question to a more meaningful context by looking to the nature and extent of an individual's participation in the particular controversy giving rise to the defamation (418 U.S. 323, 352) . Applying this reasoning, the Court held that the plaintiff, an attorney, was not a public figure for the purposes of that case.

[b] Private Individual Involved in Public Matter

In Wolston v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1979) 443 U.S. 157, 99 S. Ct. 2701, 61 L. Ed. 2d 450 , the plaintiff sued the author and publishers of a book for stating that the plaintiff had been indicted for espionage and had been a Soviet agent. The plaintiff had pled guilty to contempt for not appearing before a grand jury that was investigating espionage activities in the United States. The Supreme Court held that a private individual is not automatically transformed into a public figure by becoming involved in or associated with a matter that attracts public attention and, consequently, the plaintiff was not a public figure (443 U.S. 157, 167) .

[c] Person Who Engaged in Criminal Conduct

The facts of Wolston v. Reader's Digest Ass'n, Inc. (1979) 443 U.S. 157, 99 S. Ct. 2701, 61 L. Ed. 2d 450 , are discussed in § 142.67[3][b]. The Supreme Court rejected the contention that any person who engaged in criminal conduct automatically becomes a public figure for purposes of comment on a limited range of issues relating to his or her conviction (443 U.S. 157, 168-169) .

[d] Plaintiff Not Seeking to Influence Resolution of Issues

In Franklin v. Benevolent & Protective Order of Elks (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 159 Cal. Rptr. 131 , the plaintiff was a public school teacher whose handling of controversial materials in a civics course had been challenged by the defendant's local branch and then condemned in an editorial in its national magazine. In a defamation action, summary judgment for the defendant was reversed. The court of appeal noted that the definition of a "public figure" had evolved through key decisions to the point where it now incorporated a requirement that the libel plaintiff must have voluntarily and actively sought, in connection with any given matter of public interest, to influence the resolution of the issues involved. Only by such voluntary and active participation could an individual be said to have relinquished an interest in the protection of such person's own name (97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 929) . In concluding that appellant was not a public figure, the court observed that there was no showing she had ordered materials for the purpose of inciting controversy; she had declared without contradiction that she did not anticipate controversy; and it was not clear that, but for the defendant's vigorous reaction, there would have been any controversy. There was no indication that any of her subsequent activities in connection with the controversy extended beyond what was required of her by school district regulations or to respond to inquiries initiated by the media. She did not call press conferences, take her case to the public in an attempt to influence resolution of the issues, or in any other sense assume "special prominence" beyond the prominence that the defendant thrust on her (97 Cal. App. 3d 915, 931) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Public Figure Defined

In Vegod Corp. v. American Broad. Cos., Inc. (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 763, 160 Cal. Rptr. 97, 603 P.2d 14 , the Supreme Court reversed a judgment for the defendants that had been granted on the basis of the trial court's ruling that the plaintiffs were public figures. The Court held that the plaintiffs, two corporations hired to conduct a closeout sale for a well known landmark department store, had not attained public figure status merely because they were doing business with parties to a public controversy or selling goods to the public (25 Cal. 3d 763, 769) . The Court also held that criticism of commercial conduct is not deserving of the special protection of the actual malice test (25 Cal. 3d 763, 770) .

In Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 673 , a Catholic priest had been helping to care for an elderly woman, who made him a beneficiary of her sizable estate and appointed him trustee of her trust. However, other parties challenged this appointment. In the course of this legal challenge, the woman's neighbor made a statement to the press, which was published, implying that the priest had been trying to influence the elderly woman in order to become the beneficiary of her estate. The priest sued the neighbor for slander. The defendant made a motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the so-called anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court denied the motion, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the plaintiff was not a public figure for purposes of the slander action and did not have to show that the defendant acted with malice. The court rejected the notion that being a priest, by itself, was sufficient to make a person a public figure. The court noted that the plaintiff was not particularly well-known because of religious, civic, or political activities, and that he had not sought or received notoriety or public attention by reason of his position or achievements. The court also noted that this was not a situation in which the plaintiff had thrust himself into a public controversy. The plaintiff had not been the party to challenge his appointment as trustee, and there was no public controversy until the article was published containing the defamatory statement (123 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1272-1273) .

[Caption. See § 142.65.]

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS IMPROPER BECAUSE TRIABLE ISSUES OF MATERIAL FACT REMAIN WITH RESPECT TO THE EXISTENCE OF ACTUAL MALICE, IN THAT PLAINTIFF HAS SHOWN BY CLEAR AND CONVINCING EVIDENCE THAT DEFENDANT MADE THE DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS WITH ACTUAL MALICE.

A. Clear and Convincing Evidence of Actual Malice Defeats Summary Judgment Motion. In a defamation action, a defendant's properly supported motion for summary judgment is defeated by the plaintiff's presentation of affirmative evidence showing actual malice by clear and convincing evidence (Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863).

[Optional] B. Failure to Investigate Amounting to Avoidance of Truth Supports Finding of Actual Malice. A failure to investigate the truth of a matter, resulting from a deliberate decision not to acquire knowledge of facts that amounts to a purposeful avoidance of the truth, supports a finding of actual malice (Khawar v. Globe Int'l, Inc. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 254, 279, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178, 965 P.2d 696 ; Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1048, 1053, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863).

[Optional]. C. Political Candidate Not Protected if Statement Uttered With Actual Malice. The broad protection of the First Amendment does not extend to a false statement uttered with actual malice by a candidate in a political campaign (Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863).

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment in a defamation action, to assert that the plaintiff has shown by clear and convincing evidence that the defendant made the defamatory statements with actual malice [see Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047, 1054, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863] . Optional Paragraph B is for use to assert that a failure to investigate supports a finding of actual malice, if it amounts to a purposeful avoidance of the truth. Optional Paragraph C is for use to assert that a political candidate is subject to liability for defamation with respect to false campaign charges made with actual malice.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. If actual malice is the pivotal issue in a defamation case, summary judgment in favor of a publisher of the defamatory statement is a favored remedy if the opponent fails to present clear and convincing evidence of actual malice [Reader's Digest Assn. v. Superior Court (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 244, 252, 208 Cal. Rptr. 137, 690 P.2d 610 (discussed in § 142.25[3][a])]. Counsel should therefore thoroughly discuss all facts relating to the defendant's actual knowledge of the statement's falsity, or reckless disregard for whether the statement was false or true. For example, if appropriate, counsel should show that the defendant failed to investigate the matter based on a deliberate decision to avoid discovering the truth. This point can be illustrated, for example, by showing the defendant had time to investigate, and was put on notice and given an opportunity to do so, but deliberately declined to do so. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment supported by the points in § 142.25.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Clear and Convincing Evidence of Actual Malice Defeats Summary Judgment Motion

In Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863 , a politician brought a defamation action against his former opponent based on assertions by the defendant that the plaintiff had removed and destroyed office files prior to his vacating the office after his defeat as an incumbent. The plaintiff, an incumbent county supervisor, was defeated in his race for reelection by the defendant in 1980. In 1984, the defendant was reelected. In the 1988 election campaign, the plaintiff, a public figure, ran against the defendant. During that election, certain statements were attributed to the defendant charging the plaintiff with removing and/or destroying files from his office prior to the defendant's occupancy in 1980. The statements at issue, all made in 1988, include the following: (1) the assertion on a television news program that the plaintiff shredded and destroyed all the files the day the defendant took office; (2) the assertion during a debate, that the plaintiff deliberately destroyed the office files; (3) the assertion in a campaign mailer, that the plaintiff took with him critically important files when he vacated the office; and (4) television ads with the slogan "Empty Files, Empty Promises." In the following year, the plaintiff filed a libel action against the defendant, who moved for summary judgment on the ground that the plaintiff could not establish the element of actual malice. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that there was a triable issue of fact with respect to malice. The defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate, and the court of appeal issued an alternative writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition for writ of mandate, and discharged the alternative writ (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1054) . If actual malice is the pivotal issue in a defamation case, summary judgment in favor of a publisher of the defamatory statement is a favored remedy if the opponent fails to present clear and convincing evidence of actual malice. Nonetheless, a trial court should act with caution in granting summary judgment. Although the moving party has the burden of showing there is no genuine issue of fact, the plaintiff must present affirmative evidence to show actual malice by clear and convincing evidence in order to defeat a properly supported motion for summary judgment. The court stated that the critical issue is the publisher's actual belief as to the truth or falsity of the statements, which is determined by a subjective test (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047) . A public figure may not recover damages for a defamatory falsehood without clear and convincing proof that the false statement was made with actual malice, that is, with knowledge that it was false or with reckless disregard of whether it was false or not (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047-1048) . The court concluded that the plaintiff had made a showing of actual malice sufficient to defeat the summary judgment motion (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1053-1054) .

[b] Failure to Investigate Amounting to Avoidance of Truth Supports Finding of Actual Malice

The facts and procedural background of Khawar v. Globe Int'l, Inc. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 254, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178, 965 P.2d 696 , are discussed in § 142.89[3][a]. The California Supreme Court upheld a finding that the defendant, a tabloid newspaper, acted with actual malice in publishing a photograph and story identifying the plaintiff as the actual killer of Robert Kennedy, based on a published book about the assassination. After noting that actual malice is judged by a subjective standard, the Court repeated established principles holding that, while failure to investigate a third party's defamatory falsehoods before publishing, even if a reasonably prudent person would have done so, is insufficient to support a finding of actual malice, such a finding may be upheld if there are obvious reasons to doubt the veracity of the informant or the accuracy of his reports, and the defendant fails to interview obvious witnesses who could have confirmed or disproved the allegations or to consult relevant documentary sources. The Court then concluded that there were obvious reasons to doubt the accuracy of the book's accusation that the plaintiff killed Kennedy, given the prominent nature of the event, the extent of the investigation by state and federal law enforcement agencies, and the vast quantity of evidence pointing to Sirhan Sirhan as the lone assassin and leading to his subsequent conviction (19 Cal. 4th 254, 276) . Given the obvious reasons to doubt the accuracy of the book's claim, and because that claim was an inherently defamatory accusation against the plaintiff, the jury could properly conclude that the defendant newspaper acted with actual malice in republishing that claim if it found also that the defendant failed to use readily available means to verify the accuracy of the claim by interviewing obvious witnesses who could have confirmed or disproved the allegations or by inspecting relevant documents or other evidence. The Court then found that the evidence at trial supported the jury's implied finding that neither the newspaper writer nor the editors made any effort to investigate the highly dubious claim (19 Cal. 4th 254, 276-277) .

In response to the defendant's further argument that the article was a neutral and accurate report of the book and that it had no duty to verify the claims, no matter how improbable, of a prominent and responsible source such as the author of the book, the Court found no substantial evidence in the record that the newspaper writer or editors were aware of facts about the author of the book that would justify unquestioning reliance on the highly improbable accusations. The defendant had no prior experience with the book's author, the author did not hold high public office or a position of great social responsibility, and there was no evidence his reputation in the scientific, academic, or journalistic community qualified him as a credible and reliable commentator on public affairs. To the contrary, evidence presented by one witness called by the plaintiff with substantial experience in studying the Kennedy assassinations, established that the majority of the researchers in the area considered the book's author to be unreliable. The Court thus concluded that there was no justification for failing to make any effort to verify the truth of the book's inherently incredible accusation against the plaintiff, and that the finding of actual malice should be upheld (19 Cal. 4th 254, 277-279) .

The facts and procedural background of Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863 , are discussed in § 142.68[3][a]. The question of whether the evidence is sufficient to support a finding of actual malice is one of law. The standard in determining reckless conduct is a subjective one; there must be sufficient evidence to permit the conclusion that the defendant actually had a high degree of awareness of probable falsity. As a result, failure to investigate before publishing, even if a reasonably prudent person would have done so, is not sufficient to establish reckless disregard. Although the mere failure to investigate will not support a finding of actual malice, the purposeful avoidance of truth is in a different category. Inaction, that is, failure to investigate, that was a product of a deliberate decision not to acquire knowledge of facts that might confirm the probable falsity of a statement will support a finding of actual malice (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1048) . The court noted that the statements at issue were published on six or more different occasions, in late 1988, about eight years after the alleged events on which they were predicated. The trial court reasoned that actual malice was properly inferred from the fact that there was circumstantial evidence alerting the defendant of the probable falsity of his statements, and placing him on inquiry notice after the initial statement was made, and from the fact that the defendant thereafter made no efforts to ascertain the truth prior to making the subsequent statements. The court noted that the defamatory statements fall within two categories: the destruction of the files, and the removal of the files (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1049) . The court noted that the defendant moved only for summary judgment, rather than summary adjudication of issues regarding each statement (this motion was subject to former Code Civ. Proc. § 473c, prior to its 1990 amendment; the amended version of the statute, which severely limits issues that may be subject to summary adjudication, is discussed in Ch. 221, Summary Judgments). In support of his motion, the defendant submitted evidence to show that he made the statements with a good-faith belief that they were true (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1050) .

As the factual basis for his belief, the defendant stated that when he moved into the office, he found that it contained almost no files of any kind, and none relating to constituents of that political district. Because so many files were missing, and because the plaintiff had occupied the office and had control over the files on the Friday prior to the Monday the defendant moved in, he concluded that the files had been removed from the office by the plaintiff, or at the plaintiff's direction (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1050-1051) . A trier of fact could therefore find that the defendant had a subjective belief that the paucity of files in the office when he moved into it was attributable to the plaintiff and that the belief was in good faith. On the other hand, the court stated, the evidence would not support a finding that the defendant subjectively believed that the plaintiff had destroyed the files, and does not give rise to a reasonable inference that the plaintiff shredded and destroyed all of the files the day the defendant moved into the office, or that the plaintiff deliberately destroyed the files of the constituents of his district. The court observed that the record is in fact devoid of any factual basis to support a subjective belief, good-faith or otherwise, on the defendant's part, that the statements asserting that the plaintiff shredded and destroyed the files were true at the time they were uttered in 1988. Accordingly, the court held, with regard to the defamatory statements concerning the destruction of files, the defendant failed to carry his burden to establish a prima facie showing that he uttered them with a good-faith belief in their truth.

With regard to the remaining defamatory statements, the court found that the defendant made the requisite prima facie showing, that is, a subjective good-faith belief in the truth of the statements regarding the plaintiff's removal of the files in 1980 (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1051) . However, the court found that the plaintiff submitted clear and convincing evidence from which the trier of fact could nonetheless find actual malice, that is, reckless disregard of whether they were false or not (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1051-1052) . In response, the plaintiff submitted evidence to show that when he vacated the office in 1980, he left files enough to fill at least 177 boxes, which were placed in storage eight months after the defendant first took office. The evidence also showed that the defendant's staff discussed the fact that files from the plaintiff's office still existed and were included within filing cabinets used by the defendant's staff as late as 1988. From that evidence, a trier of fact could properly find that the defendant must have entertained a serious doubt as to the truth of his published statements prior to making them; and that the good-faith belief that the defendant may have held in 1980 no longer existed in 1988, because he knew or should have known at that point that they were false. In other words, there was sufficient evidence to support the conclusion that in 1988, the defendant actually had a high degree of awareness of the probable falsity of the statements. The court noted that the plaintiff also submitted evidence that the defendant was offered the opportunity, by virtue of the plaintiff's challenge in a 1988 campaign debate, to investigate the truth regarding the charges about the missing files, but avoided the opportunity to do so (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1052-1053) . Moreover, the evidence reveals that the defendant continued to make similar statements after that point.

The court concluded that from this evidence, the trier of fact was entitled to find that the defendant's inaction was the product of a deliberate decision not to acquire knowledge of facts that might confirm the probable falsity of the charges, which amounts to a purposeful avoidance of the truth, and supports a finding of actual malice (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1053) . The court held that the motion was properly denied on the ground that triable issues of fact remained regarding the existence of actual malice (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1053-1054) . With regard to the defamatory statements concerning destruction of the files, the defendant failed to carry his burden to establish a prima facie showing that he had a subjective good-faith belief in the truth of those statements, which per se justifies denial of the summary judgment motion. Moreover, with regard to the statements concerning the emptying of the cabinets and removal of the files, the plaintiff submitted clear and convincing evidence from which a trier of fact could find that the defendant made those statements with actual malice, that is, reckless disregard of the truth (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1054) .

[c] Political Candidate Not Protected if Statement Uttered With Actual Malice

The facts and procedural background of Antonovich v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 285 Cal. Rptr. 863 , are discussed in § 142.68[3][a]. The court noted that the First Amendment precludes a defamation action based merely on an unfavorable characterization of a political opponent during an election campaign. Therefore, in enacting the Elections Code [see, e.g., Elec. Code § 29000 et seq.], the legislature recognized that any attempt at wholesale regulation of, or government intrusion into, the content of political literature is constitutionally impermissible. However, the broad protection of the First Amendment does not extend to a false statement uttered with actual malice by a candidate in a political campaign (234 Cal. App. 3d 1041, 1047) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Investigate Amounting to Avoidance of Truth Supports Finding of Actual Malice

In Masson v. New Yorker Magazine, Inc. (9th Cir. 1992) 960 F.2d 896 , one of the questions presented was whether the plaintiff presented sufficient evidence to establish that the defendant, a magazine, acted with actual malice when it published a story containing allegedly inaccurate quotes from the plaintiff (960 F.2d 896, 897-898) . The Ninth Circuit held that a trier of fact could conclude that the defendant acted with malice in publishing the story because it had a high degree of awareness of probable falsity, or it had reason to doubt the veracity of the author of the story or the accuracy of the facts and quotations in the story and it failed to take reasonable steps to dispel those doubts (960 F.2d 896, 900) . The plaintiff claimed that he made several protestations to the defendant's fact-checker that several quotations in the story about him were inaccurate, and when he asked to review portions of the article, the fact-checker promised to get back to him but never did. The plaintiff also claimed that he asked the fact-checker to speak with the author of the story about the accuracy of the quotations and was assured that there were tape recordings of all the conversations and the quotations would be verbatim and accurate, and that a number of corrections he suggested to the fact-checker found their way into galleys but were changed back by the time the magazine was published (960 F.2d 896, 900) .

The Ninth Circuit pointed out that although the plaintiff's protestations alone do not support an inference that the defendant entertained serious doubts about or even had obvious reasons to doubt the accuracy of the quotations, the plaintiff's objections were raised during a fact-checking process initiated by the defendant as part of its policy of maintaining the accuracy of its stories. The court stated that a jury could reasonably conclude that claims of inaccuracy raised in this context would be taken seriously (960 F.2d 896, 900-901) , and that one possible conclusion a jury might draw is that the defendant's fact-checker did in fact develop a serious doubt about the accuracy of the quotations; that she looked into the matter by talking to the author and/or listening to the tapes; that she (or someone else) decided it was necessary to make some of the changes in order to remove known inaccuracies; and that the quotations were changed back as the result of a conscious decision to sacrifice accuracy to creativity (960 F.2d 896, 901) .

The court also pointed out that even though a jury could find that the defendant's editors did not make a conscious decision to let the author alter the plaintiff's statements, a jury could nevertheless conclude that the defendant had developed obvious reasons to doubt the accuracy of the quotations but, in an effort to purposefully avoid the truth, failed to conduct a reasonable investigation of the plaintiff's claims of inaccuracy (960 F.2d 896, 901) . The court stated that once doubt exists as to the accuracy of a story, the publisher must act reasonably in dispelling it. Thus, if the publisher undertakes to investigate the accuracy of a story and learns facts casting doubt on the information contained in the story, it may not ignore those doubts, even though it had no duty to conduct the investigation in the first place (960 F.2d 896, 901) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege compliance with the retraction statute.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Compliance With Retraction Statute Not Necessary

In Morris v. National Fed'n of Blind (1961) 192 Cal. App. 2d 162, 13 Cal. Rptr. 336 , the court of appeal reversed a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of the defendant's general demurrer on the ground of noncompliance with the retraction statute. The court of appeal held that the retraction statute [Civ. Code § 48a] does not apply to magazines. It applies on its face only to publications in newspapers or by radio broadcasts, and, furthermore, the policy of free dissemination of news does not support its application to magazines (192 Cal. App. 2d 162, 165-166) .

In Farr v. Bramblett (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 36, 281 P.2d 372 , overruled on other grounds, Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 110, 77 Cal. Rptr. 243, 453 P.2d 747 , the court of appeal reversed the granting of the defendants' motions to strike allegations of general and exemplary damages with regard to some of the causes of action. The court stated that it was not necessary to comply with the retraction statute if the newspaper had failed or refused to publish the libelous matter submitted to it for publication. In such cases, it was sufficient for the plaintiff to allege that the copy or matrix containing the libelous matter was "published" when the defendants submitted it to the newspaper's employees for printing (132 Cal. App. 2d 36, 45-46) .

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

A DEMAND FOR RETRACTION IS NOT NECESSARY WHERE THE SLANDEROUS STATEMENT IS LATER REPRINTED IN A NEWSPAPER.

A. Republication of Slander Not Libel. The republication of slander in a newspaper bears on the extent of liability of the original slanderer, but it does not transform slander into libel and make the retraction statute applicable to persons who slander others and then find that their remarks have been reprinted in a newspaper (Mercado v. Hoefler (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 12, 18-19, 11 Cal. Rptr. 787).

B. Demand for Retraction. A demand for retraction need not be alleged in the complaint if the defamatory language was published in a newspaper or on a radio or television broadcast only after it was published by some other means (Mercado v. Hoefler (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 12, 18-19, 11 Cal. Rptr. 787).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Republication of Slander

In Mercado v. Hoefler (1961) 190 Cal. App. 2d 12, 11 Cal. Rptr. 787 , a real estate salesman sued his former employer for slanderous remarks made to a newspaper reporter. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the plaintiff, holding that the mere fact that oral defamation is subsequently quoted or printed in a newspaper does not make it libel. It is still slander. The repetition of slander may be shown because it bears on the extent of liability (190 Cal. App. 2d 12, 18) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for defamation if the basis for the demurrer is the plaintiff's failure to allege compliance with the retraction statute [see Civ. Code § 48a]. The basis of the opposition is that the defendant is a magazine rather than a newspaper within the meaning of the statute.

The form may also be adapted for use in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the same grounds if the alleged defect does not appear on the face of the complaint (that is, the nature of the defendant's business is not clear from the face of the complaint, but the defendant claims it is in fact a newspaper). If so adapted, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)] showing the legal sufficiency of the notice and demand.
