The retraction statute does not completely bar a cause of action for defamation, but rather limits the plaintiff to recovery of special damages [see Civ. Code § 48a(1)]. Thus, if the plaintiff seeks recovery of general or punitive damages in addition to special damages, this point may be raised in opposition to a motion to strike the prayer for general or punitive damages [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should show how the uncontradicted facts show that the defendant is not a newspaper within the meaning of the retraction statute.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms pertaining to the retraction statute, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Magazine Not Covered by Retraction Statute

In Burnett v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 193 Cal. Rptr. 206 , a celebrity brought a libel action against the National Enquirer publication. Immediately prior to trial of the action, the court determined, on the plaintiff's motion to vacate a prior order granting partial summary judgment to the defendant, that the defendant was not a newspaper within the provisions of Civ. Code § 48a and therefore was not entitled to the protection of the retraction statute. Trial resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

One of the principal issues on appeal was the Enquirer's status as a newspaper with concomitant entitlement to the protection of the retraction statute. On this issue, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling and held the Enquirer should not be deemed a newspaper for the purposes of this case (144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1005) . In support of its holding, the court noted that, although the defendant called itself a newspaper and was a member of a newspaper association, ample evidence demonstrated otherwise. Numerous media directories classified it as a magazine, its classification had been changed to that of a magazine by the Audit Bureau of Circulation, and it did not subscribe to the Associated Press or United Press International news services. Furthermore, its content consisted of "how-to" stories; celebrity, medical, or personal improvement articles; and gossip or television column items, as opposed to coverage of politics, sports, or crime. Another important factor noted by the court was the lack of reference to time in the articles and the fact that lead time for the stories was one to three weeks (144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1000) . The issue of lead time related to the purpose of the retraction statute, to protect newspapers who, by virtue of their manner of operation, are not generally in a position to adequately ascertain the truth of a story before the publication deadline (144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1001) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesRetractions

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.73

§ 142.73 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--No Compliance With Retraction Statute [Civ. Code § 48a] Necessary if Defamation Committed by Nonparticipant in Process of News Dissemination

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

PLAINTIFF NEED NOT ALLEGE COMPLIANCE WITH THE RETRACTION STATUTE BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT IS A NONPARTICIPANT IN THE PROCESS OF NEWS DISSEMINATION.

Nonparticipant Not Covered by Retraction Statute. A person who is a nonparticipant in the dissemination of news does not qualify for the protection of the retraction statute (Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 110, 113-116, 77 Cal. Rptr. 243, 453 P.2d 747).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege compliance with the retraction statute.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Nonparticipant Not Covered by Retraction Statute

In Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 110, 77 Cal. Rptr. 243, 453 P.2d 747 , the Supreme Court granted a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to vacate an order that had granted the defendant's motion for partial summary judgment with regard to general and exemplary damages because the plaintiffs had not complied with the requirements of the retraction statute. The plaintiffs, a corporation and its president, alleged that the defendant had defamed them in attacking the accuracy of the plaintiffs' public opinion poll, which indicated the degree of public preference for three Republican gubernatorial candidates. The Court held that a third party whose statements are reported to the public by newspaper, radio, or television, and who is not engaged in the news dissemination industry, is not protected by the retraction statute (71 Cal. 2d 110, 113-116) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Nonparticipant Not Covered by Retraction Statute

In Burnett v. National Enquirer, Inc. (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 193 Cal. Rptr. 206 , a libel action brought by a celebrity against the National Enquirer publication, the trial court had determined that the defendant was not a newspaper within the provisions of Civ. Code § 48a and therefore was not entitled to the protection of the retraction statute. On appeal, the ruling was affirmed. The court of appeal noted that although the defendant called itself a newspaper and was a member of a newspaper association, ample evidence demonstrated otherwise. Numerous media directories classified it as a magazine, its classification had been changed to that of a magazine by the Audit Bureau of Circulation, and it did not subscribe to Associated Press or United Press International news services. Furthermore, its content consisted of "how-to" stories, gossip or television column items, and celebrity, medical, or personal improvement articles, as opposed to coverage of politics, sports, or crime. Another important factor noted by the court was the lack of reference to time in the articles and the fact that lead time for the stories was one to three weeks (144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1000) . The issue of lead time related to the purpose of the retraction statute, which is to protect newspapers that, by virtue of their manner of operation, are not generally in a position to adequately ascertain the truth of a story before the publication deadline (144 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1001) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesRetractions

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.74

§ 142.74 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Plaintiff's Notice and Demand for Correction Identifying Defendant's Defamatory Statements Were Sufficiently Specific to Comply With Retraction Statute [Civ. Code § 48a]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

A DEMAND FOR CORRECTION IS SUFFICIENTLY SPECIFIC WHERE THE DEFENDANT HAS A REASONABLE COMPREHENSION OF WHICH STATEMENTS ARE ALLEGEDLY DEFAMATORY.

Sufficiency of Demand for Correction. The method by which the plaintiff notifies the defendant of the allegedly defamatory statements contained in a libelous newspaper publication or slanderous radio or television broadcast and demands their correction only needs to be specific enough to enable the defendant to have a reasonable comprehension of which statements are objectionable (Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 31-32, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 ; MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 554, 343 P.2d 36).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the notice and demand for correction served on the defendant did not comply with Civ. Code § 48a(1) because the plaintiff did not sufficiently identify which statements in the publication or broadcast were defamatory.

The form may also be adapted for use in opposition to a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication on the same grounds if the alleged defect does not appear on the face of the complaint (that is, the plaintiff alleges making a demand for retraction, but the defendant claims that the plaintiff did not in fact make an adequate demand). If so adapted, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)] showing the legal sufficiency of the notice and demand.

The retraction statute does not completely bar a cause of action for defamation, but rather limits the plaintiff to recovery of special damages [see Civ. Code § 48a(1)]. Thus, if the plaintiff seeks recovery of general or punitive damages in addition to special damages, this point may be raised in opposition to a motion to strike the prayer for general or punitive damages [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms pertaining to the retraction statute, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficiency of Demand for Correction

In Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , the plaintiff, a city council candidate, brought an action for libel and invasion of privacy against the defendant, the publisher of the Alameda Times Star and Times Star Advertiser newspapers. The action arose out of an editorial that the defendant ran in both papers disclosing the criminal activities of the plaintiff's children, and questioning the plaintiff's qualifications for public office. As part of the libel cause of action, the complaint alleged the plaintiff's timely service on the defendant of a notice of statements claimed to be libelous and a demand for correction, as required by Civ. Code § 48a(1). The notice labeled as libelous, and requested correction of, every statement concerning the conduct of the plaintiff's children and every statement concerning the plaintiff's qualifications for the city council and her suitability as a mother contained in the specified editorials. In demurring to all causes of action in the complaint, the defendant specified the plaintiff's failure to allege a sufficient demand for correction in the manner required by Civ. Code § 48a(1) as one basis for demurrer. The trial court sustained the demurrer on all grounds without leave to amend and dismissed the entire action. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of dismissal as to the libel causes of action with directions to the trial court to overrule the demurrer as to these causes of action and allow the defendant to answer. In so ruling, the Court held the plaintiff's notice and demand sufficiently and specifically satisfied the terms of the retraction statute (1 Cal. 3d 20, 30) . In support of its holding, the Court stated that the crucial issue in evaluating the adequacy of the plaintiff's notice is whether the publisher reasonably should have comprehended which statement the plaintiff protested and wished corrected (1 Cal. 3d 20, 31) . In light of this principle, the Court expressed its disbelief that the defendant was so unaware of the significance of what it printed that it did not realize what the plaintiff objected to and wished corrected (1 Cal. 3d 20, 34) . The Court found the plaintiff's notice and demand specific and comprehensible, especially when read in conjunction with the editorials in issue. The Court also found that, because the length of the editorial in and of itself was not determinative of anything, the notice and demand were not rendered incomprehensible just because they referred to statements comprising only a part of a longer editorial (1 Cal. 3d 20, 32) . The Court further found that, under the circumstances of the plaintiff's candidacy for public office, the plaintiff could reasonably demand correction of the editorial's implications rather than demanding retraction or rectification of specific statements therein. The Court finally found that nothing in the complaint or the demurrer indicated that the defendant encountered any difficulty in interpreting the plaintiff's notice and demand (1 Cal. 3d 20, 34) .

In MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 343 P.2d 36 , the plaintiff, a candidate for city election, brought a libel action against the Oakland Tribune, a newspaper. The complaint alleged that the defendant published an article that included an intimation that another journal, a so-called "Communist-line paper," endorsed the plaintiff's candidacy for city office, thereby insinuating that the plaintiff was a communist sympathizer or fellow traveler. The complaint also alleged that the plaintiff timely served the defendant with a notice of statements deemed libelous and a demand for correction, pursuant to Civ. Code § 48a. The demand set forth the offending article and stated simply that the article was grossly libelous and that the plaintiff therefore demanded its correction or retraction as provided in Civ. Code § 48a. The defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground, among others, that the plaintiff did not adequately specify the statements claimed to be libelous so as to permit it intelligently to comply with the plaintiff's demand for correction. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment. In so doing, the Court upheld the sufficiency of the plaintiff's notice and demand. The Court noted that the allegedly libelous newspaper article was short, it was set out in the plaintiff's demand, and it made only one reference to him. By stating that the article was libelous and demanding correction or retraction, the plaintiff made clear that he was objecting to the statement that referred to him in the article. The Court also noted that the statement was libelous on its face (52 Cal. 2d 536, 553) . In light of these facts, the Court expressed its disbelief that the defendant was so unaware of the significance of what it printed that it did not realize what language the plaintiff objected to and wished corrected (52 Cal. 2d 536, 554) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesRetractions

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.75

§ 142.75 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Plaintiff Meets Requirement that Notice and Demand for Correction [Civ. Code § 48a(1)] Be Served on Publisher of Newspaper

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE PLAINTIFF MET THE REQUIREMENT OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 48a(1) THAT THE NOTICE OF STATEMENTS CLAIMED TO BE LIBELOUS AND DEMAND FOR CORRECTION BE SERVED ON THE PUBLISHER BY SERVING _____ [A PERSON DESIGNATED BY DEFENDANT PUBLISHER TO RECEIVE THE NOTICE AND DEMAND or SOMEONE EMPLOYED AT THE DEFENDANT NEWSPAPER OTHER THAN THE PUBLISHER OR THE PUBLISHER'S DESIGNEE BECAUSE THE PUBLISHER ACQUIRED ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE OF THE NOTICE AND DEMAND WITHIN THE TIME LIMIT SET FORTH IN THE RETRACTION STATUTE].

A. Requirement of Service of Notice and Demand on Publisher Not Intended as Technical Barrier to Recovery. The requirement of Civil Code Section 48a(1) that the plaintiff serve the notice and demand for correction on the publisher is not intended to impose a technical barrier to recovery if the purposes of the retraction statute are satisfied, either by service on a person designated by the publisher to receive the notice and demand or by service on an employee other than the publisher's designee if the publisher timely acquires actual knowledge of the demand (Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 658, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138).

[EITHER]

B. Plaintiff Meets Requirement of Service of Notice and Demand on Publisher by Service on Publisher's Designee. A plaintiff meets the service requirement of Civil Code Section 48a(1) if the plaintiff serves the notice and demand for correction on a person designated by the publisher to receive it (Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 658, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138).

[OR]

B. Plaintiff Meets Requirement of Service of Notice and Demand on Publisher by Service on Employee Other Than Publisher or Publisher's Designee if Publisher Timely Acquires Actual Knowledge of Notice and Demand. A plaintiff meets the service requirement of Civil Code Section 48a(1) if the plaintiff serves the notice and demand for correction on someone employed at the newspaper, other than the publisher or the publisher's designee, if the publisher acquires actual knowledge of the notice and demand within the time limit set forth in Civil Code Section 48a(1) (Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 658, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138).

[Optional] C. Notice and Demand Not Required to Be Sent by Registered Mail. Neither Civil Code Section 48a(1) nor Code of Civil Procedure Section 1020 requires the plaintiff to serve the notice and demand for correction by registered mail (Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 658 n.2, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege service on a newspaper publisher of the notice of statements claimed to be libelous and of the demand for correction, as required by Civ. Code § 48a(1). The form may also be adapted for use in opposition to a motion to strike a prayer for general and/or punitive damages on the ground that the plaintiff failed to serve the publisher of the newspaper with the notice and demand [see Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 655-656, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138 ; see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 435-437 (governing motions to strike)].

Optional Paragraph C should be used in response to a defendant's argument that the notice and demand were not sent by registered mail [see Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 658 n.2, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms pertaining to the retraction statute, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirement of Service of Notice and Demand on Publisher Not Intended as Technical Barrier to Recovery

In Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138 , the plaintiff was a municipal court judge who filed a libel action for general, special, and punitive damages against a newspaper publishing company. The complaint alleged that the Orange County Register, published by one of the defendants, ran a series of articles falsely stating that the plaintiff rendered favorable decisions in return for sexual favors from prostitutes. The complaint further alleged that the plaintiff timely sent a letter, a copy of which was attached to the complaint, to the editor of the newspaper demanding a correction of the most recent article but that no correction was printed. The complaint further alleged that, even though the letter was addressed and sent to the editor rather than the publisher, the letter was known to the publisher at or about the time it was written and that the editor had actual authority, either by delegation from the publisher or by a pattern or practice developed over a period of years, to determine on behalf of the paper whether and how to respond to demands for correction and to make corrections if he determined to do so. The defendants moved to strike the prayer for general and punitive damages on the ground, among others, that the plaintiff's demand for correction failed to comply with the requirement of Civ. Code § 48a(1) that the notice of statements claimed to be libelous and demand for correction be served on the publisher of the newspaper. The trial court denied the motion to strike, and the defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate. The court of appeal granted the petition and issued the writ, directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the motion and to enter a new order granting the motion. The plaintiff then sought Supreme Court review of the court of appeal judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with its opinion. The Court held that the Civ. Code § 48a(1) requirement that a plaintiff serve the notice and demand on the publisher of a newspaper was not intended to impose a technical barrier to recovery if the purposes designed to be served by the statute are satisfied (4 Cal. 4th 652, 658) . One of the purposes of the statute is to afford a publisher an opportunity to correct committed errors before subjecting the publisher to liability. The Court held, therefore, that the requirement of Civ. Code § 48a(1) that the publisher be served with the notice and demand is satisfied if the notice and demand are (1) served on the publisher, (2) served on a person designated by the publisher to receive such notices, or (3) served on someone employed at the newspaper, other than the publisher or the publisher's designee, if the publisher acquires actual knowledge of the request for correction within the time limit set forth in the statute. The Court found this rule to be consistent with both the language of the statute and the policy it was designed to serve (4 Cal. 4th 652, 658) . For these reasons, the Court held that the allegations in the plaintiff's second amended complaint, if proved, were sufficient to establish that notice was served on the publisher within the meaning of Civ. Code § 48a(1) (4 Cal. 4th 652, 657) .

[b] Plaintiff Meets Requirement of Service of Notice and Demand on Publisher by Service on Publisher's Designee

The factual and procedural background of Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138 , is discussed in § 142.75[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the requirement of Civ. Code § 48a(1), that the notice of statements claimed to be libelous and demand for correction be served on the newspaper publisher, is met if the plaintiff serves the notice and demand on a person designated by the publisher to receive those types of notices (4 Cal. 4th 652, 658) . The Court found that this construction of the statute comports with legislative intent that Civ. Code § 48a(1) not function as a technical barricade to recovery by a plaintiff who has given notice sufficient to advise a reasonable publisher acting in good faith of a claimed error in publication (4 Cal. 4th 652, 657-658) . The Court therefore permitted the plaintiff to prove his allegations that a specified editor was designated by the publisher to receive the plaintiff's notice and demand and that the publisher had actual notice of the plaintiff's notice and demand within the time period of Civ. Code § 48a(1) (4 Cal. 4th 652, 655) .

[c] Plaintiff Meets Requirement of Service of Notice and Demand on Publisher by Service on Employee Other than Publisher or Publisher's Designee if Publisher Timely Acquires Actual Knowledge of Notice and Demand

The factual and procedural background of Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138 , is discussed in § 142.75[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that the requirement of Civ. Code § 48a(1), that the notice of statements claimed to be libelous and demand for correction be served on the newspaper publisher, is met if the plaintiff serves the notice and demand on someone employed at the newspaper, other than the publisher or the publisher's designee, if the publisher acquires actual knowledge of the notice and demand within the time limit set forth in Civ. Code § 48a(1). The Court found that this construction of the statute comports with legislative intent that Civ. Code § 48a(1) not function as a technical barricade to recovery by a plaintiff who has given notice sufficient to advise a reasonable publisher acting in good faith of a claimed error in publication (4 Cal. 4th 652, 657-658) .

[d] Notice and Demand Not Required To Be Sent by Registered Mail

The factual and procedural background of Freedom Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. 4th 652, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 839, 842 P.2d 138 , is discussed in § 142.75[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that neither Civ. Code § 48a(1) nor Code Civ. Proc. § 1020 requires a plaintiff who serves a notice of statements claimed to be libelous and demand for correction to serve the notice and demand by registered mail. Construing Code Civ. Proc. § 1020, the Court reasoned that Code Civ. Proc. § 1020 is, by its terms, permissive rather than mandatory and therefore does not require a notice that may be served by mail to be sent by registered mail. Any suggestion to the contrary in San Leandro Collection Service v. Dunbar (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 933, 935 , 66 Cal. Rptr. 495 , was disapproved (4 Cal. 4th 652, 658 n.2). Construing Civ. Code § 48a(1), the Court reasoned that imposing a registered mail requirement on the permissive terms of Code Civ. Proc. § 1020 is tantamount to building a technical barricade to recovery by the defamation plaintiff who has given notice sufficient to advise a reasonable publisher acting in good faith of a claimed error in publication. Imposition of such a technical requirement is contrary to the legislative intent of the notice and demand requirement of Civ. Code § 48a(1) (4 Cal. 4th 652, 657-658) .

While this case applies on the facts to service of the notice and demand on a newspaper publisher in an action for libel, it appears from the reasoning of the opinion that the registered mail holding can be extended to service of the notice and demand on a broadcaster in an action for slander.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.76

§ 142.76 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Statutory Defense of Due Care [Civ. Code § 48.5] as Not Applicable if Allegedly Defamatory Statements Made by Owner or Employee of Broadcasting Station

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

DEFENSE OF DUE CARE IS NOT APPLICABLE TO OWNER OF BROADCASTING STATION OR OWNER'S EMPLOYEE.

Due Care Defense Not Applicable to Owner or Employee. A defendant who is accused of having the responsibility for making slanderous remarks and who is either the owner of a broadcasting station or the owner's employee cannot take advantage of the statutory defense of due care afforded by Civil Code Section 48.5 (Correia v. Santos (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 844, 855-856, 13 Cal. Rptr. 132 (dictum)).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment on the basis of the defense granted by Civ. Code § 48.5 if the defendant does not qualify for the defense.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Additionally, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)] showing the inapplicability of the defense.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Due Care Defense Not Applicable to Owner or Employee

In Correia v. Santos (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 844, 13 Cal. Rptr. 132 , the plaintiff and the defendant were rival broadcasters. The plaintiff attempted to rely on the provisions of Civ. Code § 48.5. The court of appeal pointed out that Civ. Code § 48.5 confers a defense on the owner and agent under the prescribed circumstances, but does not raise a cause of action against them in favor of the person defamed. Because the owner and agent caused and made the broadcast that the plaintiff was objecting to, the court stated that the inapplicability of the section to the facts in that case was apparent (191 Cal. App. 2d 844, 855-856) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.77

§ 142.77 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Absolute Privilege [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Not Available to Defendant--Defamatory Statements Not Related to and Did Not Achieve Object of Proceeding

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

THE DEFENSE OF ABSOLUTE PRIVILEGE IS LIMITED TO STATEMENTS THAT ARE RELATED TO AND ACHIEVE THE OBJECT OF THE PROCEEDING.

A. Privilege Does Not Apply if Communication Is Not Related to or Does Not Achieve Object of Proceeding. The application of the absolute privilege granted by Code of Civil Procedure Section 47 subdivision (b) requires that the communication achieve the objects of the litigation and have some connection or logical relation to the action (Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 205, 212, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 ; Carney v. Rotkin, Schmerin & McIntyre (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1513, 1521, 254 Cal. Rptr. 478).

[Optional] B. Publication Has Both a Litigation and Nonlitigation Purpose. A communication cannot be immunized from use in later judicial proceedings just because it serves a litigation purpose as well as its nonlitigation purpose (Stacy & Witbeck, Inc. v. City & County of San Francisco (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment made on the basis of an absolute privilege conveyed by Civ. Code § 47(b), if the defamatory statements were neither connected to nor achieved the object of the proceeding, and thus do not qualify for the privilege.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

In an appropriate case, this form may be submitted in opposition to the points in § 142.47 -142.50.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege Does Not Apply if Communication Is Not Related to or Does Not Achieve Object of Proceeding

In Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 Cal. 3d 205, 212, 266 Cal. Rptr. 638, 786 P.2d 365 , the plaintiff, who was the husband in a previous marital dissolution proceeding, sued the attorney of his former wife for "intentional tort," among other causes of action. The action was based on the husband's allegations that the psychologist the wife's attorney had recommended as a neutral and independent psychologist to decide visitation issues was in fact biased and produced an inaccurate and defamatory report against husband. The attorney demurred to the complaint on the ground of absolute privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and entered a judgment of dismissal as to the defendant.

On the husband's appeal, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal on all other causes of action, but reversed on the intentional tort cause of action because the court stated that the privilege would not apply if the attorney's communication was made to achieve a personal objective or advantage through deceit because it would not meet the requirement that the communication be made to promote the "interest of justice." The attorney appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and ordered reinstatement of the dismissal because it agreed that the privilege is absolute, and the Court disapproved a line of appellate court cases that had employed the interest of justice test (50 Cal. 3d 205, 209, 218-219) . The Court stated that the privilege for statements made in judicial proceedings applies to all tort actions except malicious prosecution (50 Cal. 3d 205, 212) . The Court stated that for the privilege to apply the communication must be (1) made in judicial or quasi-judicial proceedings; (2) by litigants or other participants authorized by law; (3) to achieve the objects of the litigation, and (4) have some connection or logical relation to the action (50 Cal. 3d 205, 212) .

In Carney v. Rotkin, Schmerin & McIntyre (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1513, 254 Cal. Rptr. 478 , the plaintiff, a 74-year-old widow, filed an action for emotional distress, abuse of process, and unfair debt collection practices against her judgment creditor and its attorney. The attorney had falsely represented to the plaintiff that a bench warrant had been issued for her arrest for her failure to appear at a judgment-debtor examination and that she would be arrested if she did not pay her debt. The trial court sustained a demurrer based on the absolute privilege for judicial proceedings pursuant to former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)].

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the absolute privilege for judicial proceedings was inapplicable under the circumstances because the statement was not made to achieve the objective of the litigation, one of the four requirements for application of the privilege. The purpose of the court hearing was to determine whether the plaintiff had any assets to satisfy the money judgment against the plaintiff, so the statement was not made for the purpose of settlement or any other valid reason, but rather to deceive the plaintiff and obtain an advantage over her (206 Cal. App. 3d 1513, 1521-1523) .

[b] Publication Has Both a Litigation and Nonlitigation Purpose

In Stacy & Witbeck, Inc. v. City & County of San Francisco (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1, 8, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 530 , after a public contractor filed a contract claim and then sued a city on a construction contract claim, the city filed a cross-complaint under the False Claim Act (Gov. Code §§ 12650 et seq.). The trial court granted a summary judgment to the contractor on the cross-complaint, ruling that the alleged false claim was absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b).

The court of appeal reversed, emphasizing that the filing of the claim by the contractor fulfilled two independent functions and served dual purposes. First, the claim was required under the contract as the method to submit change orders. This procedure thus had a life of its own wholly apart from any judicial action. Secondly, the claim served a litigation purpose because once it was rejected the contractor initiated its breach of contract action. Furthermore, the court noted that even if the contractor had not sued the city, the city would have had the discretion to file its own suit under the False Claim Act. The court concluded that if a public contractor delivers a contract claim according to procedures prescribed by the contract, that claim does not become privileged simply because the contractor also anticipated suing the agency (47 Cal. App. 4th 1, 6-7) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Privilege Does Not Apply if Communication Is Not Related to or Does Not Achieve Object of Proceeding

In Wise v. Thrifty Payless, Inc. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1296, 100 Cal. Rptr. 2d 437 , the plaintiff filed an action against a pharmacy based on the pharmacy's unauthorized disclosure of the plaintiff's confidential information concerning her medications and drug treatment. The disclosure was made to the plaintiff's estranged husband, who said the information was needed for tax purposes, but who used the information to harass the plaintiff and obtain a tactical advantage during marriage dissolution and child custody proceedings, and who also submitted the information to the Department of Motor Vehicles to instigate an evaluation by the Department of the plaintiff's fitness to drive. The court of appeal rejected the pharmacy's claim that the judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) could be used to shield the pharmacy from liability for damages caused by the unauthorized dissemination of information to the husband. Even though the plaintiff's former husband may have been protected from liability by his use of the information, the pharmacy could not hide behind the husband's privilege. The pharmacy's own tortious conduct in initially revealing the private information to the plaintiff's estranged husband was clearly not protected by the judicial privilege, because it failed to meet any of the requirements set forth by the Supreme Court in Silberg [see § 142.77[3][a]]. The pharmacy's communication to the plaintiff's husband was not made in the course of a judicial or quasi-judicial proceeding, the pharmacy was not a litigant or other participant in the legal proceedings between the plaintiff and her husband, the disclosure to the husband had not been made to further the object of litigation, and the communication to the husband had no logical relation to any ongoing or contemplated legal proceeding (83 Cal. App. 4th 1296, 1303-1304) . The court also concluded that allowing a party at fault to evade responsibility for its wrongful conduct based on a statutory privilege enjoyed by a third party conflicted with general principles of tort law that make each person responsible for his or her own lack of care and provide for recovery of all damages, whether anticipated or not, caused by a defendant's wrongful conduct (83 Cal. App. 4th 1296, 1304-1305) .

In Nguyen v. Proton Tech. Corp. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 140, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 392 , the plaintiff brought a libel action against his former employer based on statements made by the defendant in a demand letter to the plaintiff's current employer concerning the possibility of legal action against the current employer for wrongfully soliciting the defendant's employees and customers. In the demand letter, the defendant erroneously stated that the plaintiff had been in prison for assaulting his wife, when in fact the plaintiff had been in county jail only, and only for vandalism and firing a gun at an unoccupied car. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment based on the litigation privilege, but the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the privilege will not protect prelitigation communications that are not reasonably relevant to anticipated litigation, especially if the particular communications are defamatory comments about an individual. The court then concluded that the statements about the plaintiff's past criminal history were not reasonably relevant to the subject of the demand letter, which was the charges of unfair competitive business behavior, and that the statements were primarily vindictive in nature (69 Cal. App. 4th 140, 150-152) . The court also held that subsequent statements made by the defendant to the plaintiff's parole officer, essentially repeating the charges in the letter, were also unprotected by the privilege (69 Cal. App. 4th 140, 152-153) .

In Susan A. v. County of Sonoma (1991) 2 Cal. App. 4th 88, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 27 , a psychotherapist, hired by a county public defender to evaluate a minor criminal defendant, expressed his impressions of the minor to the media, which published his statements. The minor's parents brought an action against the psychotherapist and the county (which had consented to the media interview), stating several causes of action, including defamation. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's finding that the psychotherapist's statements were protected under Civ. Code § 47(b), holding that the privilege does not afford a blanket authorization to republish otherwise privileged material on a nonprivileged occasion to persons to whom the privilege does not apply (2 Cal. App. 4th 88, 95) . The court noted that there was no evidence that the press would have had access to the information disclosed, or that the statements were part of a publicly available record (2 Cal. App. 4th 88, 96) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.78

§ 142.78 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Absolute Privilege [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Not Available to Defendant--Statements to Media Concerning Litigation Not Privileged if They Are Neither Reports of Proceeding Nor Have Some Logical Relation to Proceeding

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PRIVILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO DEFENDANT BECAUSE THE COMMUNICATION OF A PARTY TO NEWS MEDIA CONCERNING LITIGATION IS NOT PROTECTED UNDER THE LITIGATION PRIVILEGE UNLESS THE COMMUNICATION IS A REPORT OF, OR BEARS SOME LOGICAL CONNECTION TO, THE ACTION.

Communications to Media That Are Not Within Litigation Privilege. Communications to news media about anticipated litigation are not protected by the litigation privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) unless the communication has some connection or logical relation to the action (Rothman v. Jackson (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1134, 1145, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 284).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention in a defamation action that the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) is not applicable to the defendant's statements. The basis for this contention is that the communication was made to the news media, and had no connection or logical relation to the legal action.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant is not entitled to the defense of the litigation privilege, for example in a motion for summary judgment. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the defendant's statements to the news media, and should argue that the statements have no logical relation with the litigation.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Communications to Media That Are Not Within Litigation Privilege

In Rothman v. Jackson (1996) 49 Cal. App. 4th 1134, 57 Cal. Rptr. 2d 284 , an attorney, who had previously been retained to seek redress against a popular singer for alleged torts against a minor, brought a defamation action against the singer and his attorneys. In the underlying matter, the plaintiff had begun negotiations with the defendants on behalf of his client, but had not filed a lawsuit. During negotiations, a psychological evaluation of the minor was leaked to the press and the matter attracted massive publicity. The defendants responded to this negative public exposure by calling a press conference where they not only denied the charges, but also claimed that the plaintiff and his clients had knowingly made false accusations in order to extort money from the singer. In his defamation action, the plaintiff stated that the charge of extortion was damaging to his professional reputation, and caused him additional economic damage because he felt compelled to withdraw from representation of his clients. The defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground of the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the litigation privilege did not apply to the defendants' statements. A communication is privileged if made in, or in anticipation of, litigation by litigants or authorized participants to achieve the objects of the litigation, and if the communication has some connection or logical relation to the action (49 Cal. App. 4th 1134, 1145) . The court explained that this logical relation must bear a functional connection to the litigation, so that the communication act must be a necessary or useful step in the litigation process. The privilege thus protects uninhibited discussion in, and only in, judicial or quasi-judicial arenas. Public mudslinging is one of the kinds of harmful feuding that courts exist to prevent, and it would be counterproductive to provide it the same protection that Civ. Code § 47(b) gives to court processes (49 Cal. App. 4th 1134 , 1146). Concluding that the litigation privilege should not be extended to "litigating in the press," the court remanded the matter for further proceedings.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Communications to Media That Are Not Within Litigation Privilege

In Soliz v. Williams (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 577, 88 Cal. Rptr. 2d 184 , the court of appeal reversed a demurrer to the extent that the trial court had applied an absolute judicial privilege to allegedly defamatory statements concerning a pending lawsuit made by a judge to a news reporter. The case before the court of appeal involved a verified complaint alleging that the defendant had made false statements to the press that made the plaintiff appear to be a liar, and under the circumstances, the court of appeal agreed with the plaintiff that the defendant was not acting in a judicial capacity when speaking to the reporter. Although recognizing that statements to a journalist might further the judicial function during litigation under some circumstances, the court of appeal noted that speaking to a reporter about a pending lawsuit is not a normal judicial function (74 Cal. App. 4th 577, 591-595) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.79

§ 142.79 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Absolute Privilege [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Not Available to Defendant--False Report of Child Abuse [Penal Code § 11172]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE PRIVILEGE DOES NOT APPLY TO DEFENDANT BECAUSE THE PRIVILEGE OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 47(b) DOES NOT IMMUNIZE A PARTY WHO WOULD OTHERWISE BE LIABLE FOR MAKING A FALSE REPORT OF CHILD ABUSE.

False Report of Child Abuse Not Within Litigation Privilege. The statutory privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) does not immunize a party who would otherwise be liable for making a false report of child abuse under Penal Code § 11172 (Begier v. Strom (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 877, 885, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a plaintiff's contention in a libel action that the defendant's communication was not privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) because the communication consisted of a false report of child abuse.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the defendant's statements, which might otherwise be privileged, were not entitled to the protection of Civ. Code § 47(b) because the communication consisted of a false report of child abuse. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law

stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the nature of the communication at issue, and should argue that the communication constituted a false report of child abuse under Penal Code § 11172.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] False Report of Child Abuse Not Within Litigation Privilege

In Begier v. Strom (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 877, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 , the plaintiff filed an action against his former wife for intentional infliction of emotional distress based upon her alleged conduct in filing a false police report accusing the plaintiff of molesting the couple's young daughter, and repeating that charge in the couple's dissolution action. The trial court sustained a demurrer by the defendant on the basis that the police report was protected by the unqualified privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b).

The court of appeal reversed, finding that the requirement of Penal Code § 11172 that a person who knowingly makes a false report of child abuse is liable for any damages caused by the report creates a limited exception to the privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b). The court noted that although it is referred to as "absolute," the privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) has been limited in other situations. The court concluded that Penal Code § 11172 would be rendered meaningless if it did not hold that the Civ. Code § 47(b) privilege did not apply to false reports of child abuse (46 Cal. App. 4th 877, 885) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.80

§ 142.80 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Qualified Privilege for Publication [Civ. Code § 47(c)] Defeated by Existence of Malice

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

MALICE DEFEATS A QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE.

Qualified Privilege Defeated by Malice. A sufficient allegation of malice defeats a qualified privilege, the presence of which on the face of the complaint would otherwise make the complaint subject to a demurrer (Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 149, 155-159, 185 Cal. Rptr. 244, 649 P.2d 886 ; Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 28-29, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it shows on its face that it is covered by a qualified privilege and that there has not been a sufficient allegation of malice.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. For example, counsel should show facts to support a sufficient allegation of malice that would defeat a claim of qualified privilege.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Qualified Privilege Defeated by Malice

In Slaughter v. Friedman (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 149, 185 Cal. Rptr. 244, 649 P.2d 886 , the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal of the plaintiff's action for libel after the granting of the defendant's demurrer. The plaintiff alleged that the defendants, a dental insurance company its administrative officer, had defamed him by enclosing in notices to his patients of the denial of claims for dental work a statement that the plaintiff's dental work was unnecessary and that the company would no longer process dental treatment claims from the plaintiff because of overcharging. The Court held that although the defendants were required by law to provide to patients an explanation of the specific basis for denial of the claim, the publication of explanations as to a denial of claims was not protected by any absolute privilege; nevertheless the Court added that publications made by persons required by law to communicate with others, but who maintain control over the contents of those communications, are protected by a qualified privilege as provided by former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)]. However, the Court stated, the allegation that the defendants acted maliciously was sufficient to defeat the defendants' claim of a qualified privilege (32 Cal. 3d 149, 155-159) .

In Kapellas v. Kofman (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 20, 81 Cal. Rptr. 360, 459 P.2d 912 , the Supreme Court reversed the dismissal of two causes of action for libel after the granting of demurrers. The plaintiff was a candidate for a position on the city council at the time an allegedly libelous editorial was published in the local newspaper. The trial court sustained the demurrers on the twin grounds that the demand for retraction was not adequately alleged and that the publication was subject to the qualified privilege. The Supreme Court stated that the plaintiff's allegation of malice was sufficiently supported by facts that alleged past and continuing conflicts between the defendant and the plaintiff and, thus, that the defendant's claim of privilege was defeated (1 Cal. 3d 20, 28-29) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Qualified Privilege Defeated by Malice

In SDV/ACCI, Inc. v. AT & T Corp. (9th Cir. 2008) 522 F.3d 955 , one corporation supplied temporary workers to another corporation and its subsidiaries. However, after the owners of the supplying company notified the procurement specialist for the client corporation that they were going to terminate the agreement to provide workers for failure to pay invoices in a timely manner, the procurement specialist sent e-mails to several corporate managers in her company, as well as to several competitors of the supplying company, stating that the supplying company was having financial difficulties and could no longer provide services to her company. The supplying company sued the client company for defamation. The federal district court granted summary judgment for defendant corporation, but the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed. The Court held that the issue of whether the qualified common-interest privilege protected the specialist's communications suggesting that plaintiff was unable to supply services due to its financial problems could not be resolved on summary judgment, as there were triable issues regarding malice and a good-faith belief in the truth of the specialist's statements (522 F.3d 955, 962-964) .

In Stationers Corp. v. Dun & Bradstreet, Inc. (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 412, 418, 42 Cal. Rptr. 449, 398 P.2d 785 , the Supreme Court reversed the granting of summary judgment in favor of the defendant, a credit reporting company. The Court stated that at least one triable issue of fact existed, namely whether defendant had probable cause to believe its statements about the plaintiff were true and, therefore, whether it had acted with malice.

In Maidman v. Jewish Publ'ns, Inc. (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 643, 7 Cal. Rptr. 617, 355 P.2d 265 , the Supreme Court reversed demurrers to a complaint for libel. The plaintiff's cause of action arose out of an editorial that the defendant published about the plaintiff's participation in a trial and several remarks he allegedly made therein concerning Rosh Hashanah. The Court held that while the publication was entitled to the defense of fair comment under the qualified privilege, the plaintiff had alleged the existence of detailed facts that would justify the trier of facts in finding malice and that thus enabled the complaint to state a cause of action for libel per se (54 Cal. 2d 643, 650-654) .

In MacLeod v. Tribune Publ'g Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 536, 343 P.2d 36 , the Supreme Court held that a complaint that alleged that an editorial charged the plaintiff with being a communist sympathizer or fellow traveler could be easily amended to allege the existence of malice, and, thus, that the granting of the defendant's general demurrer was not proper. The plaintiff had alleged that the defendant's article was false. The Court held that although the plaintiff had not specifically alleged that the defendant knew that its article was false, had no honest belief in its truth, or had no reasonable grounds for believing it to be true, the circumstances of the case indicated that at least one of those grounds was implicit in the allegation of falsity. Hence, the plaintiff could have easily cured the error by amendment and, therefore, the general demurrer was improperly granted (52 Cal. 2d 536, 552-553) .

In Brewer v. Second Baptist Church (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 791, 797-798, 197 P.2d 713 , the Supreme Court held that there was sufficient evidence to defeat the existence of the qualified privilege and sustain a verdict for the plaintiffs. The Court held that there was ample evidence to support the jury's implied finding that the defendants were motivated by a malicious or other improper motive or that they published charges against the plaintiffs that resulted in their expulsion from the church without reasonable grounds for believing the charges. The Court also held that an inference of malice could be made from the charges themselves because the tenor of a statement made by them was evidence of malice (32 Cal. 2d 791, 799) .

In Hailstone v. Martinez (2008) 169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 87 Cal. Rptr. 3d 347 , plaintiff, who was formerly employed as a senior business agent for the Teamsters Local Union, brought suit against three labor union officials for defamation. Plaintiff based his suit on statements made by defendants to other union members stating that plaintiff had committed a crime on several different occasions by accepting reimbursement from two different union affiliates for the same travel mileage. Defendants brought a motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court held that defendants' conduct was not protected under that statute. The court of appeals affirmed the order, but for different reasons. The court first held that the conduct was protected by the anti-SLAPP statute (169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 738) . However, the court went on to conclude that plaintiff had made a sufficient showing on the probability of success on the merits to avoid having the action struck. While defendants argued that their statements were covered by the common-interest privilege, the court held that plaintiff had provided sufficient evidence of actual malice to withstand the motion to strike. Plaintiff's evidence indicated that at least one defendant had reasons to harbor ill will against plaintiff. For example, that defendant knew that plaintiff had assisted the Department of Justice with an investigation into allegations that defendant had engaged in illegal ballot stuffing during union elections. In addition, that defendant had also engaged in a heated confrontation with plaintiff concerning the implementation of a contract provision requiring just cause before a business agent could be fired (169 Cal. App. 4th 728, 740) .

In Manguso v. Oceanside Unified Sch. Dist. (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 574, 200 Cal. Rptr. 535 , a teacher sued her former supervisor and employer for a libelous letter directed to potential employers and placed in the plaintiff's master file. The defendants obtained a jury verdict in their favor after relying on the qualified privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)] (153 Cal. App. 3d 574, 577-580) . On the plaintiff's appeal, the court of appeal affirmed. However, the court preceded its decision by holding that it was error to instruct the jury that the teacher had to prove "actual malice" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 48a(4)(d) to defeat the qualified privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(3). The court reasoned that the statutory definition, requiring a showing of both hatred or ill will and a lack of good-faith belief in the truth of the defamatory publication, set forth a stricter standard that applied only if a plaintiff sought punitive damages under Civ. Code § 48a(2), (4)(c). By contrast, the court stated that the "malice" required to defeat the qualified privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(3) could be established by showing hatred, ill will, or other improper motive, or by showing a lack of good-faith belief in the truth of the defamatory publication (153 Cal. App. 3d 574, 580-581) . The court affirmed after finding this error harmless under the circumstances (153 Cal. App. 3d 574, 583-584) .

In Kelly v. General Tel. Co. (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 186 Cal. Rptr. 184 , the plaintiff sued his former employer, alleging a cause of action for slander based on statements his former supervisor allegedly made to other employees of his former employer. The defendant's general demurrer to the plaintiff's second amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. The court of appeal held that malice necessary to prevent application of a qualified privilege may be alleged by pleading that the publication was motivated by hatred or ill will toward the plaintiff. The court found that the plaintiff's allegations were sufficient and that the trial court erred in sustaining the demurrer to that cause of action (136 Cal. App. 3d 278, 285) .

In Dietrich v. Litton Indus., Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 704, 90 Cal. Rptr. 856 , one of the causes of action was based on a circular that was directed by the company's vice-president to all the company's employees. The circular had been prepared to counter charges that the plaintiff had made in a deposition in connection with other litigation against the company and its president. The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, but the judge later granted the defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that the circular was protected by the qualified privilege. The court of appeal reversed, stating that there was substantial evidence that the defendant was motivated by actual malice towards the plaintiff in publishing the circular (12 Cal. App. 3d 704, 713-715) .

In Patton v. Royal Indus., Inc. (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 760, 70 Cal. Rptr. 44 , the defendants had sent a letter to their customers and potential customers stating that the plaintiffs had been fired. In reality, the plaintiffs had resigned and had notified the defendants that they intended to go into business for themselves. The trial court had refused an instruction that a publication that contains known falsehoods is not protected by the qualified privilege. The court of appeal reversed the jury's judgment for the defendants and stated that the deliberate publication of known false and defamatory statements destroys the qualified privilege (263 Cal. App. 2d 760, 765-766) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.81

§ 142.81 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Plaintiff Sought Reiteration of Defamatory Statement From Defendant but Did Not Consent to Publication

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

A PERSON DOES NOT CONSENT TO REMARKS WHEN A REITERATION IS REQUESTED.

Reiteration Not Consent. A person does not consent to the publication of defamatory statements if he or she merely requests a reiteration of defamatory statements that have already been published (Puchan v. Godeau (1914) 167 Cal. 692, 694, 140 P. 952 ; Moranville v. Aletto (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 671, 315 P.2d 91).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment on the basis of the defense of consent if the plaintiff merely asked the defendant to repeat the defamatory statements that had already been published concerning the plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reiteration Not Consent

Puchan v. Godeau (1914) 167 Cal. 692, 140 P. 952 , and Moranville v. Aletto (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 315 P.2d 91 , presented identical factual situations in which the defendant had called the plaintiff a thief. In Pouchan, the Supreme Court held that the fact that the plaintiff elicited a reiteration of the charge in more explicit language did not make consent a viable defense (167 Cal. 692, 694) . In Moranville, the court of appeal affirmed a jury verdict for the plaintiff and stated that the question of consent was a question for the jury (153 Cal. App. 2d 667, 671) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.82

§ 142.82 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Public Employee Not Immune for Statement Made Outside Scope of Authority

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

PUBLIC EMPLOYEE'S STATEMENTS MADE OUTSIDE SCOPE OF AUTHORITY ARE NOT PROTECTED BY RULE OF IMMUNITY.

Statements Not Shielded by Rule of Immunity for Public Employee. Statements made by a public employee that are outside the scope of his authority are not shielded by the immunity rule that public employees are not personally liable for discretionary acts within the scope of their authority (Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary Sch. Dist. (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 224, 233-234, 11 Cal. Rptr. 97, 359 P.2d 465).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment by a public employee who alleges that his statements were immune from liability if the statements were, in fact, made outside the scope of the employee's authority.

If appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the point of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statements Not Shielded by Rule of Immunity for Public Employee

In Lipman v. Brisbane Elementary Sch. Dist. (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 224, 11 Cal. Rptr. 97, 359 P.2d 465 , the Supreme Court held statements by three school trustees concerning the plaintiff, a school superintendent, which alleged she had suppressed facts from the board, received "kickbacks" from district employees, engaged in "shady dealings," and "cleaned up" on business transactions involving the district to be beyond the scope of the trustees' powers. Thus, the Court held that the defense of immunity was not available to the trustees (55 Cal. 2d 224, 233-234) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.83

§ 142.83 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Qualified Immunity for Report of Child Abuse [Penal Code § 11172(a)] Not Available to Defendant

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE A DEFENDANT IS NOT IMMUNE FROM LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES CAUSED BY DEFENDANT'S REPORT OF CHILD ABUSE _____ [IF THE REPORT WAS MADE WITH KNOWLEDGE OF ITS FALSITY, OR WITH RECKLESS DISREGARD OF ITS TRUTH AND FALSITY or IF DEFENDANT HAS FAILED TO FOLLOW THE STATUTORY PROCEDURES FOR REPORTING CHILD ABUSE].

[EITHER]

Qualified Immunity Defeated by Malice. A person who reports a known or suspected instance of child abuse, who is not required to do so under Section 11166 of the Penal Code, is liable for any damages caused if the person makes the report either knowing it to be false or with reckless disregard of its truth or falsity (Penal Code § 11172(a)).

[OR]

No Qualified Immunity if Defendant Did Not Follow Statutory Reporting Procedure. A person required to report a known or suspected instance of child abuse under Penal Code Section 11166(a) is not immune under Penal Code Section 11172(a) from liability for damages caused by the report if the person fails to follow the statutory procedure set forth in Penal Code Section 11166(a) to report the known or suspected instance of child abuse to a child protection agency immediately or as soon as practically possible by telephone and prepare and send a written report of the known or suspected instance of child abuse within 36 hours of receiving the information concerning the incident (Searcy v. Auerbach (9th Cir. 1992) 980 F.2d 609, 610-611) .
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by the plaintiff in opposition to the defendant's motion for summary judgment if the defendant, who reported a known or suspected instance of child abuse, alleges that he or she is immune from liability, under Penal Code § 11172(a), as a result of the report.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, if arguing that the qualified immunity is defeated by malice, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)(2), (3)], which include facts showing that the defendant either knew that the report was false, or acted with reckless disregard of the report's truth or falsity.

In an appropriate case in which malice is at issue, these points may be submitted in opposition to the motion for summary judgment supported by the points in § 142.55.

[b] Persons to Whom Immunity Applies

A person who is a mandated reporter of suspected child abuse or neglect, which includes a person such as a child care custodian, health practitioner, employee of a child protective agency, child visitation monitor, or commercial film and photographic print processor, is immune from liability for any report required or authorized under Penal Code § 11166, even if the reporter acquired the knowledge or reasonable suspicion of child abuse or neglect outside of his or her professional capacity or outside the scope of employment [Penal Code § 11172(a)].

Any person, other than those persons required to report child abuse, who has knowledge of or observes a child whom he or she knows or reasonably suspects has been a victim of child abuse may report the known or suspected instance of child abuse to a child protective agency [Penal Code § 11166(g)] and is immune from liability unless malice is shown [see Penal Code § 11172(a)]. For these purposes, "any other person" includes a mandated reporter who acts in his or her private capacity and not in his or her professional capacity or within the scope of his or her employment [Pen. Code § 11166(g)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Qualified Immunity Defeated by Malice

Any person, other than those mandated reporters as specified in Penal Code § 11166, reporting a known or suspected instance of child abuse shall not incur civil or criminal liability as a result of any report authorized by Penal Code §§ 11165-11174.5 (reporting and investigation of child abuse) unless it can be proven that a false report was made and the person knew that the report was false or was made with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the report. Any person who makes a report of child abuse known to be false or with reckless disregard of the truth or falsity of the report is liable for any damages caused [Penal Code § 11172(a)].

[b] No Qualified Immunity if Defendant Did Not Follow Statutory Reporting Procedure

In Searcy v. Auerbach (9th Cir. 1992) 980 F.2d 609 , the Ninth Circuit reversed the District Court's order granting summary judgment to a clinical psychologist claiming immunity under Penal Code § 11172. The appellate court held that the psychologist lacked immunity for reporting child abuse because he failed to follow the procedures set forth in the statute. Specifically, he violated the statute by (1) failing to report suspected child abuse to a child protective agency either immediately by telephone or within 36 hours in writing as required by Penal Code § 11166(a), and (2) disclosing his opinion regarding abuse of the plaintiff's daughter to the plaintiff's ex-husband, a person not authorized to receive the report under Penal Code § 11167.5. As stated by the court, "[t]he statutory procedures for reporting are essential to the accomplishment of that purpose." Moreover, the statute makes no provisions for intermediate reporting through a layperson. Instead, it meticulously notes those agencies or individuals authorized to receive the report it mandates (980 F.2d 609, 610-611) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.84

§ 142.84 Opposing Motion for Summary Adjudication [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)]--Republication Was Reasonably Foreseeable

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION
Plaintiff,	)	FOR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION
vs.	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]
	)	[Attached Documents: _____]

_____

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION OF THE CAUSE OF ACTION BASED ON REPUBLICATION SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THERE IS A TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT CONCERNING WHETHER DEFENDANT, AS THE ORIGINATOR OF THE DEFAMATORY STATEMENT, SHOULD BE HELD LIABLE FOR ITS REPUBLICATION BECAUSE HE OR SHE COULD REASONABLY HAVE FORESEEN THAT THE STATEMENT WOULD BE REPUBLISHED.

A. Reasonably Foreseeable Republication. The original publisher is liable for a republication if it was a result that he or she might have reasonably foreseen as likely to occur (Siemon v. Finkle (1923) 190 Cal. 611, 617, 213 P. 954).

[Optional] B. Plaintiff's Republication. The originator of a defamatory statement will be liable for damages caused by the republication of the defamatory statement by the person defamed if that person is operating under a strong compulsion to republish the defamatory statement and the circumstances that created the strong compulsion are known to the originator of the defamatory statement at the time he or she communicates it to the person defamed (McKinney v. County of Santa Clara (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 787, 797-798, 168 Cal. Rptr. 89).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary adjudication of a cause of action for republication. The ground for opposition is that there is a triable issue of fact concerning the defendant's liability, based on whether republication was reasonably foreseeable at the time the original statement was made.

In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary adjudication supported by the points in § 142.61. It may also be adapted for use in another procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of reasonable foreseeability of republication. For example, it may be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should show that the originator of the defamatory statement could reasonably foresee that the statement would be republished. If the plaintiff was the one who republished the statement, counsel should show that he or she was under a strong compulsion to disclose the defamatory statement and that the originator of the defamatory statement knew of the circumstances creating this strong compulsion at the time he or she communicated the statement to the plaintiff. For example, counsel might show that the plaintiff was seeking new employment and was under a strong compulsion to disclose statements concerning the reasons for the termination of his or her previous employment.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to libel and slander generally, see Ch. 340, Libel and Slander in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms relating to summary judgment generally, see Ch. 537, Summary Judgment in that publication.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgment and summary adjudication, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments in this publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reasonably Foreseeable Republication

Siemon v. Finkle (1923) 190 Cal. 611, 213 P. 954 , was an action for libel based upon the publication of two letters written by Finkle to McCowan, the district attorney, and shown by McCowan to others. The first letter sent by Finkle claimed that the plaintiff had undertaken some very questionable business while he was one of McCowan's deputy district attorney and stated that he was not a suitable person to act as deputy district attorney anywhere. The trial court found that as to this letter the statements pertaining to the plaintiff were false and defamatory but that the publication thereof by the defendants was not joint and for that reason the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The second letter sent by Finkle, solicited by McCowan, charged that while serving as a deputy district attorney, the plaintiff assisted a client in defrauding his creditors. The trial court found that certain statements in this letter were false and defamatory, that the defendants knew the statements were false when they published them, and that the publication was wanton, malicious, and done for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff.

The Supreme Court affirmed, dismissing Finkle's contention that he should not be liable for McCowan's use of the information. The Court found that Finkle wrote the letter knowing that McCowan was embroiled in a bitter political battle with the plaintiff, who was endeavoring to procure McCowan's recall from the office of district attorney. The Court held that this, together with the context of the entire letter, readily warranted the inference that it was Finkle's intent and purpose that McCowan could and should use the said information for the purpose of damnifying and defeating the plaintiff in his effort to recall McCowan. The Court held that under the circumstances existing at the time of the writing and receipt of the letter, the publication by McCowan was a result that Finkle might have reasonably foreseen as likely to occur; therefore, it followed that Finkle's act in writing and sending the letter was the proximate cause of the publication by McCowan. The Court held Finkle liable for the publication by McCowan because it was in fact a publication contemplated and countenanced by Finkle (190 Cal. 611, 617) .

[b] Plaintiff's Republication

McKinney v. County of Santa Clara (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 787, 168 Cal. Rptr. 89 , involved causes of action for libel and slander resulting from the plaintiff's republications of a defamatory statement originally made by the defendant, a county. The plaintiff was terminated by the defendant from his employment as a probationary deputy sheriff. The defendant gave the plaintiff false and defamatory reasons for his dismissal. While seeking new employment, the plaintiff republished these statements by informing the prospective employer of the reasons for the termination of his previous employment. At trial, the court sustained a motion by the county to dismiss the causes of action for libel and slander resulting from the plaintiff's republications on the ground that they were without merit, because of the plaintiff's admission that he had made the republications.

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal with respect to the cause alleging the county's liability for republication by the plaintiff. The court said that the rationale for making the originator of a defamatory statement liable for its foreseeable republication was the strong causal link between the actions of the originator and the damage caused by the republication. It held that this causal link was no less strong if (1) the foreseeable republication is made by the person defamed and that person is operating under a strong compulsion to republish the defamatory statement and (2) the circumstances that create the strong compulsion are known to the originator of the defamatory statement at the time he or she communicates it to the person defamed. Thus, the court held that the originator of the defamatory statement could be held liable for the plaintiff's republication. The court found that the defendant communicated the alleged defamatory statements regarding the reasons for the plaintiff's dismissal from the police department to the plaintiff under circumstances that placed the plaintiff under a strong compulsion to disclose the contents of the alleged defamatory statements to third parties (that is, to prospective employers), that it was reasonably foreseeable by the defendant that the plaintiff would disclose the alleged defamatory statements to third parties, and that the plaintiff actually made such disclosures. The court therefore held that there was a triable issue and that the causes of action should not have been dismissed (110 Cal. App. 3d 787, 798) .

NOTE:

Imposing liability on the original publisher for forced republication by the defamed person requires an actual republication of the defamatory comments. Mere foreseeability that the defamed person might have to repeat the defamatory comments at some point in the future is an insufficient basis for imposing liability [Dible v. Haight Ashbury Free Clinics, Inc. (2009) 170 Cal. App. 4th 843, 855, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 464 ; see § 142.22].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reasonably Foreseeable Republication

Di Giorgio Corp. v. Valley Labor Citizen (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 268, 67 Cal. Rptr. 82 , was an action to recover general and punitive damages for the publication of a false and libelous article. An article containing the alleged defamatory statements was published in two newspapers. The author of the article intended that the article be published in the first newspaper, but the second newspaper received a clipping of the first published article from the author's informant and published it without discussing it with anyone. At trial, the jury returned a verdict holding the newspapers as well as the author of the article jointly and severally liable for the publication. The author of the article moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict for himself only, which the trial court denied. Judgment was entered against all the defendants, and they appealed.

The court of appeal, holding that there was no substantial evidence to prove that the author authorized, consented to, or participated in the republication of the article in the second newspaper and that the trial court's judgment holding all defendants jointly and severally liable for punitive damages was not reasonably subject to separation, reversed the judgment (260 Cal. App. 2d 268, 277) . The court stated that the general rule, that the author of defamatory statements is not liable for a publication of those statements if he or she neither authorized nor intended such publication to be made, is qualified if the republication is reasonably foreseeable (260 Cal. App. 2d 268, 273) . In this case, however, the court found that the plaintiff had not raised the foreseeability issue at trial; therefore, he could not recover damages (260 Cal. App. 2d 268, 276) .

Curley v. Vick (1963) 211 Cal. App. 2d 670, 27 Cal. Rptr. 501 , was an action for damages for publication and republication of an allegedly libelous letter. The manager of an apartment house gave the plaintiffs notice to vacate their apartment by a letter that claimed that the plaintiffs had been having very noisy parties with drinking going on until late at night and that one night they threw drinking glasses from the top floor to the patio. A copy of this letter was given to another tenant who worked with the plaintiffs. Later the letter was posted by this person on the employer's bulletin board. The plaintiffs sued the apartment house owners, on an agency theory, and others for the original publication by delivery of the letter to the other tenant and for the republication by posting on the employer's bulletin board. The trial court, not making a distinction between the causes of action, entered a joint and several judgment against all defendants, but made the finding that the apartment house owners did not authorize the republication by the plaintiffs' employer nor directly or proximately cause it to be republished. The court of appeal reversed and remanded the case for a new trial. The court held that the general rule that the author of a defamatory statement is not liable for a publication of that statement if he or she neither authorized nor intended such publication to be made, was qualified if the republication was reasonably foreseeable. The court said that there was perhaps room for inference that some sort of republication was foreseeable in this case but that because foreseeability was a principal element of proximate cause, the trial court's specific finding that proximate cause did not exist negated foreseeability and destroyed any basis upon which the owners of the apartment house could be held liable for republication (211 Cal. App. 2d 670, 673) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.85

§ 142.85 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Statement Asserts Fact That is Susceptible to Being Proved False

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

THE DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE STATEMENT THAT IS THE SUBJECT OF THIS ACTION IS REASONABLY SUSCEPTIBLE TO BEING PROVED FALSE.

A. Liability for Statements Implying Provably False Assertion. Liability for defamation may be imposed for a statement that can reasonably be interpreted to assert, expressly or impliedly, a fact that is susceptible to being proved false (Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1607-1608, 284 Cal. Rptr. 244 ; Weller v. American Broad. Cos., Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1001, 283 Cal. Rptr. 644).

B. Allocations of Questions of Law and Fact. The court must first determine as a question of law whether the statement is reasonably susceptible of a defamatory interpretation. If the statement satisfies this requirement, it is for the jury to determine whether a defamatory meaning was in fact conveyed (Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1608, 284 Cal. Rptr. 244).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for defamation in that the allegedly defamatory statement does not imply a provably false assertion [see Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1607-1608, 284 Cal. Rptr. 244] . It may be combined with § 142.86 if counsel also wishes to contend that there is no constitutional privilege for opinion.

This memorandum may also be adapted for use in other procedural contexts, for example, in opposition to the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, and may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel should therefore show that the statement expressly or impliedly asserts a fact that is susceptible to being proved false [see, e.g., Weller v. American Broad. Cos., Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1002-1003, 283 Cal. Rptr. 644 (statements could reasonably be understood as implying defamatory facts)].

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the points in § 142.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Liability for Statements Implying Provably False Assertion

In Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 284 Cal. Rptr. 244 , a former county child-welfare worker brought a defamation action against a privately employed children's counselor, based on a letter to the plaintiff's supervisor in which the defendant criticized the plaintiff's professional conduct. In the letter, the defendant complained of the plaintiff's attitude and conduct regarding several children counseled by the defendant. The letter stated, among other things, that the plaintiff's "incompetence" adversely affected certain children's lives, and that the defendant wondered whether the plaintiff held "some kind of hostility" toward a particular child or handicapped children in general. As a result of the letter, the plaintiff's employment was terminated. The plaintiff brought a defamation action against the counselor and the private facility for which she worked. The trial court deemed the defendants' trial brief to be a motion for judgment on the pleadings, which it granted on the ground that the statements were nonactionable statements of opinion. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, ultimately finding that although one of the statements is susceptible of being proved false, the plaintiff was a public official and failed to allege actual malice (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1609-1615) . The court noted that the granting of judgment on the pleadings is the equivalent of sustaining a general demurrer (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1605) . Pursuant to Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 19-20, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 (discussed in § 142.86[3][a]), there is no wholesale First Amendment exemption from liability for anything that might be labeled opinion. Accordingly, if a defendant asserts that the allegedly defamatory statement is opinion, the dispositive question is whether a reasonable fact finder could conclude that the published statements imply a provably false factual assertion (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599 , 1607). The court concluded that the sentence in the letter concerning the plaintiff's possible hostility toward children could not be reasonably understood to assert the actual fact of hostility. Rather, it amounted to nothing more than speculation or rumination--something less even than surmise or conjecture (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1608-1609) . However, the court stated that the same could not be said of the imputation of incompetence. Because of the defendant's professional status, and the professional status of the person receiving the letter (the plaintiff's supervisor), the letter was susceptible of the interpretation that the plaintiff's incompetence was asserted as an actual condition, that is, as a matter of fact. Therefore, the statements conveying an imputation of incompetence appeared actionable as against the objection that they lack the requisite factual content (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1609) . The court further stated that the plaintiff's considerable discretionary authority over the people affected by her work placed her in a role similar to that of a prosecutor or police officer, and consequently that she was a public official for purposes of application of the actual malice standard. Because she did not plead that element, the dismissal of the action was proper (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1610-1615) .

In Weller v. American Broad. Cos., Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 283 Cal. Rptr. 644 , an antique dealer brought a defamation action against a television station based on broadcasts regarding the plaintiff's sale of a certain antique to a local museum. The plaintiff marketed certain antique silver candelabra to a museum from an anonymous seller, which he described generally as a Texas estate that had possessed the candelabra for over 100 years. After the sale, the defendant received information that the candelabra had been overpriced and perhaps stolen. The defendant broadcast news reports, entitled "Museum Fraud?", which contained statements that the plaintiff had misrepresented the owner, that the candelabra had possibly been stolen from a local artist, and that, because of repairs made prior to the sale, they might have been overpriced. Those reports were aired following a report entitled "Antique Fraud," which concerned the recent felony conviction of an unrelated person for making false insurance claims for stolen silver. A jury trial resulted in judgment and an award of damages for the plaintiff. The defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the statements asserted facts susceptible of being proved false (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1005-1006) . The court noted that under Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 19-20, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 (discussed in § 142.86[3][a]), there is no absolute First Amendment privilege for statements of opinion (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 999-1000) . Pursuant to Milkovich, the court stated, it must determine: (1) whether the statements that form the basis of a defamation claim expressly or impliedly assert a fact that is susceptible to being proved false; and (2) whether the language and tenor is such that it cannot reasonably be interpreted as stating actual facts (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1001) . Considering the statements in context, the court concluded that unquestionably, the news reports could have been understood as implying that the plaintiff, at worst, had knowingly sold stolen property to the museum, and, at best, had lied about their origin and had sold them at an inflated price (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1002) . The court rejected the defendant's contention that the broadcasts were entitled to constitutional protection because they made no assertions, but rather posed open questions subject to further investigation. The court held that the publication of implied defamatory statements against the background of apparently objective and neutral reporting is almost certain to be understood as factual (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1003-1004) . With regard to this issue, the court noted that the plaintiff's claim was that the broadcasts implied certain defamatory statements. It stated that a defendant who juxtaposes a series of facts in a manner that implies a defamatory connection between them, or otherwise creates a defamatory implication, may be held responsible for the defamatory implication even though the particular facts are correct. Therefore, it is the defamatory implication, not the underlying assertions giving rise to the implication, that must be examined to discern whether the statements are entitled to full constitutional protection (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1003 n.10). Moreover, the court stated, the implied defamatory facts in this context may be given even more credence by the listener if the reports profess to be objective, yet subtly imply that the publisher tends to believe the sources alleging the defamatory facts. The court also held that the use of interrogative language alone does not entitle statements to constitutional protection if they otherwise can be understood to imply defamatory fact (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1004) .

[b] Allocations of Questions of Law and Fact

The facts and procedural background of Kahn v. Bower (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 284 Cal. Rptr. 244 , are discussed in § 142.85[3][a]. The court of appeal held that a statement is actionable if a reasonable fact finder concludes that it implies a provably false factual assertion (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1607) . The court also stated that the allocation of functions between the court and jury with respect to factual content is analogous to the allocation with respect to defamatory meaning in general. The court must first determine as a question of law whether the statement is reasonably susceptible of a defamatory interpretation. If the statement satisfies that requirement, it is for the jury to determine whether a defamatory meaning was in fact conveyed to the listener or reader (232 Cal. App. 3d 1599, 1608) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Liability for Statements Implying Provably False Assertion

In Manufactured Home Communities v. County San Diego (9th Cir. 2008) 544 F. 3d 959 , plaintiff real estate investment company brought suit against a county and a county supervisor based on public statements made by the supervisor after plaintiff imposed rent increases at several of its mobilehome parks. The statements included a statement by the supervisor that plaintiff lied to the county and said that a sewage problem was fixed; a statement that plaintiff had a reputation for running people out of older mobilehome parks, causing an increase in market value, and then selling the parks at a profit; and a statement that the incoming District Attorney was "very interested" in determining whether civil or criminal actions should be filed against plaintiff. The trial court granted defendants' motion to strike the action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. The court of appeal reversed, however, concluding that plaintiff had demonstrated a reasonable probability of success on the merits. The court held that a reasonable juror could conclude that the statements of the county supervisor were provably false factual assertions, rather than merely political hyperbole or opinion (544 F.3d 959, 963-964) .

In Overstock.com, Inc. v. Gradient Analytics, Inc. (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 688, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 29 , plaintiff was an Internet clearinghouse retailer that sued a company that prepares analytical reporting services on publicly traded companies, as well as the customer that had hired the reporting company to prepare a report on plaintiff. Defendant company had prepared and published a series of reports about plaintiff suggesting that plaintiff had been engaging in accounting irregularities in order to inflate the price of its stock. Upon publication of defendant's reports, plaintiff's stock price went through a prolonged period of decline during which time it lost almost two-thirds of its value. Plaintiff alleged that the customer had requested a negative financial report on plaintiff in order to depress the stock price so the customer could purchase after the stock had been devalued, that this customer had actively worked with defendant company to prepare the negative financial reports, and that the reports were biased and contained provably false factual assertions about plaintiff's financial accounting. The trial court denied defendants' motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal held that the plaintiff had demonstrated a sufficient probability of success on its cause of action for libel to withstand the motion to strike. Defendant's reports contained provably false factual assertions, despite language in the reports suggesting that the reports were just the preparer's "opinion," "judgment," or "belief." There were sufficient factual assertions, either explicit or implied, forming the basis for the reports to suggest that the preparer was implying that plaintiff changed its accounting method in order to boost revenue figures artificially, that this change was a violation of generally accepted accounting principles and led to continual overstatements of revenue, that plaintiff knowingly inflated its cash flow, and that plaintiff's president and CFO resigned because of these transgressions (151 Cal. App. 4th 688, 704-705) .

In Del Junco v. Hufnagel (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 789, 60 Cal. Rptr. 3d 22 , plaintiff was a trained general and vascular surgeon licensed in California with an Internet web site used to provide information about procedures performed by him for women with significant fibroid disease or endometriosis. He brought suit for defamation against the operator of another Internet web site that mimicked plaintiff's site and contained statements that plaintiff was a vascular student and "had no specialized medical training in medicine or in female medicine." The trial court entered a default judgment in favor of plaintiff. The court of appeal reversed an award of punitive damages, but otherwise affirmed. The court held that the statements made by defendant on her web site asserting that plaintiff was untrained and lacked proper credentials were not mere opinion, but were actionable factual assertions. Because plaintiff was a fully licensed, practicing physician specializing in general and vascular surgery, with all of the necessary training to perform surgeries, the statements on defendant's web site were provably false factual assertions that cast serious doubt on plaintiff's professional ability and were defamatory (150 Cal. App. 4th 789, 798-799) .

In Ruiz v. Harbor View Cmty. Ass'n (2005) 134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 133 , the plaintiff was a homeowner who brought suit for libel against the attorney for the plaintiff's homeowners' association for statements made in a letter written to the plaintiff. In this letter, the defendant had accused the plaintiff of acting "unconscionably" and "in violation of his ethical duties as a lawyer" by concealing the fact that he was an attorney from the homeowners' association and by engaging in "bullying" tactics. The letter was written in response to letters written by the plaintiff as part of an ongoing dispute with the homeowners' association, which involved the association's denial of the plaintiff's plans for rebuilding his house. Although there was an unresolved issue of whether the letter was actually published to a third party, the court of appeal held that the plaintiff, in response to a motion to strike brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, had met his burden of presenting a prima facie case that the factual assertions supporting the opinions in the letter were demonstrably false. The plaintiff provided declarations showing that he had not concealed the fact that he was an attorney from the association. Moreover, the court concluded that the words accusing plaintiff of acting "unconscionably" and "in violation of his ethical duties as a lawyer" were not mere hyperbole, epithet, or subjective expressions of disapproval. The statements contended that the plaintiff violated a specific code section based on identified conduct. Moreover, the letter was written by an attorney in "legal verbiage" and included citations to authority in support of the writer's conclusions (134 Cal. App. 4th 1456, 1472) .

In Gallagher v. Connell (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 673 , a Catholic priest had been helping to care for an elderly woman, who made him a beneficiary of her sizable estate and appointed him trustee of her trust. However, other parties challenged this appointment. In the course of this legal challenge, the woman's neighbor made a statement to the press, which was published, that the priest "was not there to help [the elderly woman], but he was there to help himself." The priest sued this neighbor for slander. The defendant made a motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the so-called anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court denied the motion, and the defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff had made the requisite showing of probability of success on the merits of the slander claim. The court held that a reasonable person reading the neighbor's statement would conclude that she was implying that the plaintiff had been trying to become the beneficiary of the estate of the elderly woman through deceit, fraud, or undue influence. The court concluded that this was an assertion of fact that was capable of being proven either true or false. Relevant evidence might include evidence of an increase or decrease in the elderly woman's care or maintenance after the plaintiff became involved in her life, evidence of any changes in the elderly woman's financial condition, evidence of whether the plaintiff knew she was planning to make him beneficiary of her estate, evidence showing the extent to which the plaintiff was involved in bringing about the changes to the elderly woman's estate plan, and evidence of the elderly woman's mental state at the time she made the changes to her estate (123 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1270-1271) .

In Sommer v. Gabor (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1455, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 235 , the plaintiff recovered damages for defamation based on the defendant's statements printed in a magazine that the plaintiff, a movie actress, was broke, had to sell her house, now lived in the worst section of town, and hung out in sleazy bars. The defendant appealed, contending that the statements were subjective opinions that were not provably false. The court rejected this, stating that the evidence established that the plaintiff did not frequent bars of any nature, was not broke, did not have to sell her house, and did not move either to the best or worst part of town. Thus, the statements were proven false in their broad sense, so that it did not matter what kind of bars were described or what part of town she was alleged to have moved to. Furthermore, the court concluded that the statements were defamatory because they attributed characteristics to the plaintiff's lifestyle that exposed her to contempt, ridicule, and disgrace (40 Cal. App. 4th 1455, 1476) . The court thus affirmed the judgment in favor of the plaintiff.

In Gould v. Maryland Sound Indus., Inc. (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 718 , a sales representative brought a defamation action against his employer based on an accusation by a senior project manager, that the sales representative had made a $100,000 error in the estimating of a bid. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer and entered a judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal reversed, stating that the accusatory statement would tend to injure the sales representative by imputing to him incompetence in his trade. The court of appeal concluded that the accusation was a statement of fact susceptible to proof or refutation by reference to concrete, provable data (31 Cal. App. 4th 1137, 1154) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading &

PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

75 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.86

§ 142.86 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--No Constitutional Privilege for Opinion

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THERE IS NO CONSTITUTIONAL PRIVILEGE UNDER THE FIRST AMENDMENT FOR OPINION AS OPPOSED TO FACT, AND THE FALSITY AND DEFAMATORY NATURE OF DEFENDANT'S STATEMENTS CAN BE PROVED FROM THE FACTS OF THE CASE.

A. No Federal Constitutional Privilege for Opinion. There is no wholesale defamation exemption under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution for anything that might be labeled "opinion," as opposed to "fact," and whether a statement is defamatory depends not on this distinction, but on whether the statement is of a defamatory nature based on the facts presented and under existing constitutional guarantees (Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 19-20, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1).

B. No Broader Protection Afforded Under California Constitution. The California Constitution does not provide a protection to statements of opinion broader than that provided under the First Amendment to the United States Constitution (Edwards v. Hall (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 904-906, 285 Cal. Rptr. 810).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts that an allegedly defamatory statement is, as a matter of law, constitutionally protected opinion.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Constitutional Privilege for Opinion

In Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 , a school wrestling coach brought a defamation action in Ohio against a newspaper and its reporter on the basis of a newspaper story that was published in which the writer stated that the coach had perjured himself at a hearing by lying about the cause of a violent altercation that took place at a wrestling match. The action went through the state courts twice, with the state Supreme Court holding on the second round that the plaintiff was not a public figure nor a public official and that the statements in issue were factual assertions as a matter of law. Subsequently, in a separate action based on the same incident, the school superintendent, Scott, brought a defamation action against the same defendants on the identical factual issues. The state Supreme Court reversed its previous position and held that the article in question was constitutionally protected opinion. Considering itself bound by the Scott decision, the appellate court in Milkovich affirmed a trial court's granting of summary judgment to the defendants. The United States Supreme Court granted certiorari to consider the important questions raised by the state court's recognition of a constitutionally-required opinion exception to the application of its defamation laws.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that there is no separate constitutional privilege for opinion required to ensure the freedom of expression guaranteed by the First Amendment. The court stated that the widely-quoted statement in Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc. (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 339-340, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (discussed in § 142.25[3][c]), that "[h]owever pernicious an opinion may seem, we depend for its correction not on the conscience of judges and juries but on the competition of other ideas," was dictum, and not intended to create a wholesale defamation exemption for anything that might be labeled opinion (497 U.S. 1, 18) . Instead, the Court held that First Amendment freedom of expression is adequately secured by existing constitutional doctrine without the creation of an artificial dichotomy between "opinion" and "fact" (497 U.S. 1, 19) . The Court listed such constitutional protections as the requirement of a showing of actual malice in cases involving public figures or officials, protection for statements that are obviously rhetorical hyperbole, the requirement that statements on matters of public concern must be provable as false, and the requirement of enhanced appellate review of cases involving First Amendment issues (497 U.S. 1, 19) . Thus, the Court said that the factfinder must conclude, based on the facts presented, and under the existing constitutional guarantees, whether the statements in question are of a defamatory nature. Under the facts before it, the Court concluded that the connotation of whether the plaintiff had committed perjury was sufficiently factual to be able to be proved true or false on remand (497 U.S. 1, 20) .

[b] No Broader Protection Afforded Under California Constitution

In Edwards v. Hall (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 285 Cal. Rptr. 810 , the head of the local branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) brought a defamation action against a television talk show host based on statements by the defendant charging the plaintiff with "extortion," or having made a demand for a contribution to the NAACP in exchange for the plaintiff's forbearance from publicizing the defendant's allegedly discriminatory hiring practices. The defendant, the host of a nationally syndicated talk show, agreed to a meeting with the plaintiff, president of a local chapter of the NAACP, to discuss allegations of discriminatory hiring practices in connection with his show. Based on that interview, the plaintiff criticized, in an article published in a local newspaper, the show's failure to hire African-Americans in important positions. The defendant, angered by the plaintiff's comments and the newspaper's failure to obtain his views, contacted the newspaper and arranged an interview with two reporters. During that interview, the defendant denied the plaintiff's discrimination charges, and said that during their meeting the plaintiff asked him for $40,000. When asked to clarify the remark, the defendant stated that the plaintiff engaged in the practice of demanding donations to the NAACP from television show personnel, on threats of public charges of discrimination; that the plaintiff was, based on that conduct, an "extortionist"; and that the defendant refused to give the plaintiff any money because he felt he was being "extorted." The defendant specified that following the meeting, the plaintiff broached the subject of the $40,000 donation to the defendant in the hall, in the presence of the defendant's manager, and that the defendant refused the request personally, also telling his manager not to give the plaintiff any money. The newspaper published a second article quoting in detail the defendant's remarks about the plaintiff, and the plaintiff's refutations of the charges. Subsequently, the defendant appeared on a local radio talk show, and repeated the substance of his newspaper interview--that he did not engage in discriminatory hiring practices, and that the plaintiff had asked for a $40,000 donation in an attempt to "manipulate" him.

The plaintiff filed a complaint alleging causes of action for defamation (libel and slander), and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The defendant moved for summary judgment. In support of the motion, the defendant filed a declaration stating that after the meeting between the plaintiff and the defendant, the plaintiff asked to speak privately with the defendant's manager, after which his manager told the defendant that the plaintiff said he needed $40,000 for a particular television show, and that he had the clear impression that he was being pressured to donate money in exchange for the plaintiff's agreement to refrain from further attacks. The defendant further stated in the declaration that the purpose of the newspaper interview was to refute misstatements made in the first newspaper article about him; and that throughout the interview he was expressing his opinion of what he believed the plaintiff and the NAACP were doing, including the exertion of unjustified pressure on him with the threat of reprisal. The defendant specified that he attempted to describe his impression of the pressure exerted by the plaintiff by indicating that he believed he was being extorted by the plaintiff, but at no time did he intend to say that he accused the plaintiff of having committed a crime. With respect to the radio interview, the defendant asserted that his comments were "defensive in nature," and that he was expressing his opinion regarding the dispute and why and how the plaintiff instigated it. The declaration of the defendant's manager stated that the plaintiff told him, in a private conversation, that the entire matter would "turn out alright," and that he needed $40,000 for a particular television show. He further stated that he believed the plaintiff was attempting to pressure the defendant into giving him money, and that when told about the conversation, the defendant refused to pay. In opposition to the motion, the plaintiff categorically denied having requested any donation from the defendant or anyone else during the meeting. The trial court grant the motion, finding that: (1) the defendant's statements were opinions, not facts; (2) the defendant's statements cannot reasonably be interpreted by a fact-finder as charging the plaintiff with a crime; and (3) the plaintiff failed to produce clear and convincing evidence that the defendant made the statements with actual malice. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the defendant's statements were sufficiently factual to be susceptible of being proved true or false, and that triable issues of material fact existed regarding whether the defendant acted with actual malice (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 903-909) . With regard to the defendant's assertion that his comments were statements of opinion, rather than assertions of fact, the court discussed Milkovich v. Lorain Journal Co. (1990) 497 U.S. 1, 110 S. Ct. 2695, 111 L. Ed. 2d 1 [see § 142.86[3][a]]. In Milkovich, the United States Supreme Court held that no separate constitutional privilege for opinion is required to ensure the freedom of expression guaranteed by U.S. Const. amend. I. In determining whether a false statement is actionable, a court must decide whether a reasonable trier of fact could conclude that the published statements imply a provably false factual assertion (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 902-903) . Using the Milkovich approach, the court analyzed the defendant's statements. The court observed that the defendant's characterization of the plaintiff as an "extortionist," taken in context, did not amount to a literal criminal charge; rather, it asserted the plaintiff's wrongful use of his position with the NAACP to solicit contributions by either threatening to create a baseless public controversy or promising to ignore a genuine discrimination problem (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 903) . The court then discussed whether this assertion is sufficiently factual to be susceptible of being proved true or false. The defendant argued that, regardless of what Milkovich may dictate under the First Amendment, the California Constitution [Cal. Const. art. I, § 2(a)] provides broader protection to freedom of speech and protects statements of opinion, pursuant to Baker v. Los Angeles Herald Examiner (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 254, 228 Cal. Rptr. 206, 721 P.2d 87 . The court noted that Baker, which described a "totality of circumstances" test to determine whether a statement was one of fact or opinion, neither discussed nor relied on Cal. Const. art. I, § 2(a), but rested its decision solely on the First Amendment (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 905) .

Furthermore, the court stated, Baker drew a distinction between statements of fact and opinion, relying on language of cases disapproved of by Milkovich, which explained that the breathing space that freedoms of expression require in order to survive is adequately secured by existing constitutional doctrine without the creation of an artificial dichotomy between opinion and fact (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 906) .

Moreover, the court noted that the California Supreme Court has expressed the view that an expanded constitutional protection for media defendants is not warranted under the California Constitution (construing language not on point in Brown v. Kelly Broad. Co. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 711, 257 Cal. Rptr. 708, 771 P.2d 406 , discussed in § 142.87[3][a]) (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 906) . The court further stated that even assuming the continued vitality of Baker's approach on independent state grounds, the defendant's comments are nonetheless actionable, because under the "totality of circumstances" test, an average listener could reasonably understand the statements to be factual (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 907) . The court also concluded that, by virtue of the sharply contrasting versions of the events that transpired at the meeting between the plaintiff and the defendant, as well as the conflicting inferences capable of being drawn from the evidence, triable issues of material fact exist (234 Cal. App. 3d 886, 907-908) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Broader Protection Afforded Under California Constitution

The facts and procedural background of Weller v. American Broad. Cos., Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 283 Cal. Rptr. 644 , are discussed in § 142.85[3][a]. The court of appeal held that the allegedly defamatory statements impliedly asserted facts that were susceptible of being proved false, and hence were actionable (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1002-1003) . The court also rejected the defendant's contention that it should construe Cal. Const. art. I, § 2(a) to extend even greater protection to this type of speech than the First Amendment (232 Cal. App. 3d 991, 1006-1007) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesFair Comment & OpinionTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.87

§ 142.87 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--Media Defendant Has No Public-Interest Privilege Under Civ. Code § 47(c) in Action by Private-Figure Plaintiff

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.66.]

IN AN ACTION BROUGHT BY A PRIVATE FIGURE, CIVIL CODE SECTION 47(c) DOES NOT GIVE A MEDIA DEFENDANT A PRIVILEGE FOR PUBLICATION OF DEFAMATORY STATEMENTS BASED ON PUBLIC INTEREST.

No Public-Interest Privilege for Media in Civil Code Section 47(c) in Defamation Action Brought by Private Individual. A publication or broadcast by the news media to the general public regarding a private person is not privileged under Civ. Code § 47(c), regardless of whether the communication pertains to a matter of public interest (Brown v. Kelly Broad. Co. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 711, 719, 738, 257 Cal. Rptr. 708, 771 P.2d 406 (decided under former Civ. Code § 47(3)).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment on the basis that the defendant has no public-interest privilege under Civ. Code § 47(c) because the plaintiff is a private figure.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to facts showing that the plaintiff is not a public official or a public figure. For forms of memoranda supporting this argument, see § 142.66 and § 142.67.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Public-Interest Privilege for Media in Civil Code Section 47(c) in Defamation Action Brought by Private Individual

In Brown v. Kelly Broad. Co. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 711, 257 Cal. Rptr. 708, 771 P.2d 406 , the plaintiff was a licensed contractor who sued a television station and its reporter for broadcasting two stories stating that the plaintiff's work on remodeling a home was shoddy and that she had refused to correct mistakes she had made. The trial court granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment based on the conditional privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, agreeing that the privilege applied but stating that a triable issue of fact regarding malice had been alleged.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal, but not on the basis that a triable issue of malice existed. Rather, the Court based its affirmance on the ground that the broadcasts were not subject to privilege under the statute. The Court held that the news media has no public-interest privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)] to make false statements regarding a private individual (48 Cal. 3d 711, 719, 756) . The Court stated that the wording of the statute, its legislative history, and judicial constructions of it did not support the interpretation that such an expansive privilege existed (48 Cal. 3d 711, 723-738) . The Court further stated that policy considerations also favor the right of private individuals who have not thrust themselves in the public light to protection of their reputations. In addition, the Court pointed out that media defendants already have constitutional protections. Private-figure plaintiffs are already required to prove at least negligence to recover any damages, and if the statement involves a matter of public concern, private-figure plaintiffs must prove the falsity of the defamation. They must also prove actual malice to recover presumed or punitive damages (48 Cal. 3d 711, 742-746) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.88

§ 142.88 Opposing Motion for Summary Adjudication [Code Civ. Proc. 437c(f)] of Claim for Exemplary Damages [Civ. Code § 3294]--By Plaintiff--Conspicuousness of Retraction Is Jury Question [Civ. Code § 48a]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION
vs.	)	FOR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION
_____ [name],	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)]
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

A COURT CANNOT DECIDE AS A MATTER OF LAW THAT A NEWSPAPER'S RETRACTION WAS PRINTED IN SUBSTANTIALLY AS CONSPICUOUS A MANNER AS THE ALLEGEDLY LIBELOUS STATEMENTS; THAT IS A QUESTION OF FACT FOR THE JURY TO DECIDE WHEN UNDER THE FACTS REASONABLE JURORS COULD DIFFER.

A. Statutory Requirement That Retraction Be Made in Substantially as Conspicuous a Manner as Allegedly Libelous Statement. [See § 142.62, Paragraph B.]

B. Conspicuousness of Retraction Is Question of Fact for Jury. The conspicuousness of the retraction in comparison with the conspicuousness of the original allegedly libelous statements is a question of fact for the jury to decide, and it is error for the court to decide this issue as a matter of law (Pierce v. San Jose Mercury News (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1626, 1630-1633, 263 Cal. Rptr. 410).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary adjudication of a claim for exemplary damages that is grounded on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's retraction under Civ. Code § 48a. The basis for opposition to the motion is that the conspicuousness of the retraction is a question for the jury, not the court, to decide.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach opposing affidavits or declarations and a separate statement of undisputed facts [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)] that include facts showing that the retraction was not as conspicuously placed as were the original libelous statements.

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points in § 142.62.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conspicuousness of Retraction Is Question of Fact for Jury

In Pierce v. San Jose Mercury News (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 1626, 263 Cal. Rptr. 410 , a newspaper published an account in its morning edition of an internal investigation by the police that had led to disciplinary action being taken against certain officers. The article stated that the plaintiff, a police captain, had been given an official letter of reprimand. The plaintiff had not been given an official letter of reprimand, nor had he been disciplined. The chief of police called the newspaper and advised several people, including the article's author and the editor, of the mistake concerning the plaintiff and of a number of other mistakes in the article. The chief asked if corrections could be made in the afternoon edition and was told it was not too late for corrections to be made. The plaintiff also called the article's author and told her that he had not been reprimanded or disciplined. However, the same article was printed in the afternoon edition, at the top of the front page with a bold headline concerning the investigation and disciplinary action. The next day, the newspaper published an article under the headline, "Police Officials Dispute Extent of Misconduct." Subsequently, the plaintiff mailed a written retraction demand to the paper. On Christmas Day, the newspaper printed a retraction in its regular column entitled, "Setting the Record Straight," on page two, in part stating that the plaintiff had not received a letter of reprimand nor been disciplined. The plaintiff sued for libel and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The defendant moved for summary judgment or summary adjudication of the issues. The court held as a matter of law that the paper's retraction complied with Civ. Code 48a insofar as the conspicuousness of the retraction, and that, therefore, the plaintiff's award was limited to special damages. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that that the issue of whether a retraction is sufficiently conspicuous is a question for the jury and not the court to decide (214 Cal. App. 3d 1626, 1630-1631) . The court stated that all California courts that have considered the issue have found that this question is for the jury. The court discussed another court of appeal opinion, Twin Coast Newspapers, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 208 Cal. App. 3d 656, 659-660, 256 Cal. Rptr. 310

[for discussion, see § 142.62[3][a]], which held that the conspicuousness of a retraction is a question of fact for the jury, but that under its facts, no reasonable juror could find the retractions insufficient under the statutory standard (214 Cal. App. 3d 1626, 1633) . In contrast, in the present case, the court stated that reasonable jurors could differ on the finding of the sufficiency of the retraction based on the facts. The retraction had no headline other than the usual "Setting the Record Straight," and the retraction was on the bottom of page two in a holiday edition of the paper. The defamatory statement, however, appeared in the afternoon edition, was headlined "Cops Accused," mentioned in the second sentence that a captain was disciplined, and named the plaintiff first in its list of those accused. Accordingly, the court held that the question should have been submitted to the jury.

NOTE:

Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f) has subsequently been amended to eliminate summary adjudication of "issues." It now provides for summary adjudication of a cause of action, defense, claim for punitive damages, or the issue whether one or more defendants owed a duty to one or more plaintiffs [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(f)(1)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesDamagesTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesRetractions

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.89

§ 142.89 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--No Constitutional Neutral Reportage Privilege For Publishing Defamatory Material About Private Figure

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 142.63.]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THERE IS NO CONSTITUTIONAL NEUTRAL REPORTAGE PRIVILEGE RECOGNIZED IN CALIFORNIA FOR REPUBLICATION OF A LIBEL CONCERNING A PRIVATE FIGURE.

A. No State or Federal Constitutional Privilege For Republication of Libel Concerning Private Figure. There is no federal or state constitutional "neutral reportage" privilege for the republication of libelous materials concerning a private figure (Khawar v. Globe Int'l, Inc. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 254, 273, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178, 965 P.2d 696).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint if the demurrer asserts a constitutional privilege protecting the neutral republication of allegedly defamatory materials about a private person. This form may also be adapted for use in another procedural context, such as a trial or appellate brief, in which counsel wishes to raise the issue of the lack of a neutral reportage privilege for materials about a private person.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised. Thus, counsel should insert facts showing that the plaintiff is a private figure, rather than a public figure, as to the events that are the subject of the allegedly defamatory materials.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No State or Federal Constitutional Privilege For Republication of Libel Concerning Private Figure

In Khawar v. Globe Int'l, Inc. (1998) 19 Cal. 4th 254, 79 Cal. Rptr. 2d 178, 965 P.2d 696 , the plaintiff, who in 1968 as a young Pakistani journalist had been photographed standing on a podium near Robert Kennedy minutes before his assassination, was identified as the actual killer of Kennedy in 1989 in an article in a tabloid newspaper. The newspaper article, which was based on a published book about the assassination, contained an enlarged copy of the photograph with an arrow identifying the plaintiff and statements identifying the plaintiff by name. The book on which the article was based did not identify the plaintiff by name, nor was identification through its published photograph possible. At the time the article was published, the plaintiff was a naturalized United States citizen living with his wife and children in Bakersfield, California, where he owned and operated a farm. After publication of the article, the plaintiff and his family were the subject of accusatory and threatening phone calls and threats, and their home and a car were vandalized. The plaintiff brought an action for defamation against the tabloid, and after a jury trial, was awarded actual, presumed, and punitive damages totaling $1,175,000. The court of appeal upheld the trial court judgment, finding that the plaintiff was not a public figure and that California has not adopted a neutral reportage privilege for private figures.

The California Supreme Court upheld the judgment against the tabloid newspaper. The Court first considered the question of whether the plaintiff was a public figure for purposes of the action. After reviewing the basic principles articulated by the United States Supreme Court in cases such as Gertz v. Robert Welch, Inc. (1974) 418 U.S. 323, 94 S. Ct. 2997, 41 L. Ed. 2d 789 (discussed in § 142.25[3][c]), the California Supreme Court agreed with the lower courts that the plaintiff was not a public figure or limited purpose public figure for purposes of this controversy. The Court noted that the plaintiff had not intentionally placed himself into any public controversy, and that under the facts present, the plaintiff had not involuntarily become a public figure for purposes of the lawsuit. The court concluded that characterization as an involuntary public figure, if ever proper, can only occur if that person, not having voluntarily engaged the public's attention in order to influence the outcome of a public controversy, has nonetheless acquired such prominence in relation to the controversy as to permit media access sufficient to counter media-published defamatory statements. In the present case, the only evidence in the record that the plaintiff was ever questioned or interviewed about the events surrounding the assassination, the book, or the tabloid article occurred after and in response to the tabloid article. However, defendants charged with defamation cannot by their own actions transform a private figure into a public figure, and as such, the Court ruled that the plaintiff did not have sufficient media access to become an involuntary public figure (19 Cal. 4th 254, 265-266) . Further, the Court rejected the defendant's argument that the plaintiff had voluntarily elected to encounter an increased risk of injury from defamatory falsehoods by seeking and obtaining a position on the podium close to Kennedy, knowing that there would be substantial media coverage. This argument was rejected in part because the plaintiff by his conduct on the podium did not voluntarily associate himself with any controversy relevant to the lawsuit, whether the controversy was considered the assassination or any post-assassination theorizing about the identity of the killer, because his actions occurred prior to these controversies arising (19 Cal. 4th 254, 266-267) .

The Court then addressed the issue of whether a "neutral reportage" privilege based on constitutional principles protects the republication of defamatory statements about private figures. The Court noted that some lower courts in other jurisdictions had held that such a privilege exists if the materials concern public figures, although neither the United States nor California Supreme Courts had ever held that the privilege exists. Without deciding whether the privilege would ever be required by state or federal constitutional principles as to public figures, however, the Court held that the privilege did not exist if the allegedly defamatory publication involves a private figure such as the plaintiff. In reaching its decision, the Court noted that most courts that had recognized the privilege had restricted it to defamatory publications concerning public figures (19 Cal. 4th 254, 268-271) .

The Court also held that the status of the original defaming party as a public figure does not justify protecting republication of their statements, even if the statements concern private figures. Reviewing the opinions of legal commentators, the Court agreed with the majority that had concluded that although the public has a legitimate interest in knowing that prominent individuals have made charges, perhaps unfounded, against a private figure, recognition of an absolute privilege for the republication of those charges would be inconsistent with the United States Supreme Court's insistence on the need for balancing the First Amendment interest in promoting the broad dissemination of information relevant to public controversies against the reputation interests of private figures. The Court concluded that the reporting of false and defamatory accusations about a private person will rarely provide valuable information in the resolution of a matter of public concern, while such reporting can have a devastating effect on the reputation of the accused individual. Further, a private person, by virtue of his or her status as a private person, has not voluntarily elected to encounter an increased risk of defamation by entering a public debate and may lack sufficient media access to counter the accusations (19 Cal. 4th 254, 271-273) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesPrivilegesConstitutional Privileges

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 142 LIBEL AND SLANDER (DEFAMATION)
PART II. FORMS

14-142 California Points & Authorities § 142.90

§ 142.90 Supporting Injunctive Relief--Injunction Against Repeating Defamatory Statements Permitted

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN INJUNCTION PREVENTING DEFENDANT FROM REPEATING STATEMENTS ADJUDICATED TO BE DEFAMATORY IS A PERMISSIBLE REMEDY AND DOES NOT CONSTITUTE A PRIOR RESTRAINT.

Injunction Prohibiting Repetition of Defamatory Statements Permitted. A narrowly-drawn injunction issued after a trial at which defendant's particular speech has been adjudicated to be defamatory may properly enjoin the defendant from repeating the defamation and is not considered an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech (Balboa Island Village Inn, Inc. v. Lemen (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1155-1156, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 156 P.3d 339).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of the proposition that a plaintiff may seek an injunction to prevent a defendant from repeating in the future statements that are adjudicated at trial to be defamatory.

[b] Argument

Counsel should include argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts detailing the defamatory statements made by the specific defendant and discuss the narrow scope of the injunction being sought.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

This form may be submitted in opposition to the points discussed in § 142.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Injunction Prohibiting Repetition of Defamatory Statements Permitted

In Balboa Island Village Inn, Inc. v. Lemen (2007) 40 Cal. 4th 1141, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 320, 156 P.3d 339 , plaintiff owned a nightclub that was adjacent to defendant's residence. Annoyed by the noise and late-night activity created by the club, defendant engaged in activities such as photographing and videotaping patrons and workers at the club, circulating petitions, and making disparaging comments about the club and the activities occurring there, suggesting that the club was owned by organized crime and was the site of activities such as prostitution, drug sales, and the filming of pornographic videos. Plaintiff sued defendant, seeking injunctive relief to prevent defendant from engaging in such activities in the future. After a bench trial, the trial court found for plaintiff and issued a permanent injunction that prohibited defendant from initiating contact with any persons known by defendant to be employed by the club, prohibited defendant from making specified disparaging comments about the club, and prohibited defendant from filming within 25 feet of the club, unless filming from her own property or documenting an actual, immediate disturbance or damage to her property. Defendant appealed. The court of appeal upheld the filming ban, but reversed the other two elements of the injunction as unconstitutional prior restraints on defendant's free speech rights. The California Supreme Court granted review.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal, while disagreeing with that court's rationale, and remanded. The Supreme Court agreed that the trial court's injunction was overly broad, but held that a narrowly-drawn injunction issued after a trial at which defendant's particular speech has been adjudicated to be defamatory may properly enjoin the defendant from repeating the defamation and is not an unconstitutional prior restraint on speech (40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1155-1156) . The Court noted the distinction between prohibiting a person from making or writing a statement before the statement is made or written and prohibiting a person from repeating a statement or republishing a writing that has already determined at trial to be defamatory and unlawful (40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1150) . The trial court's injunction was overly broad because it applied not just to the particular defendant, but also to her agents and other persons acting in concert with her or on her behalf, despite the lack of evidence that anyone other than defendant had defamed the restaurant (40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1160) . The Supreme Court noted that if a statement that was once false becomes true at a later time, the defendant may move the court to modify or dissolve the injunction (40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1161) . However, the Court also noted that an otherwise permissible injunction may not prevent a defendant from presenting grievances to government officials with relevant enforcement responsibilities (40 Cal. 4th 1141, 1160-1161) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsDefamationGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationDefensesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsDefamationRemediesEquitable Remedies

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

14-143 California Points & Authorities 143.syn

§ 143.syn Synopsis to Chapter 143: LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

§ 143.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 143.02 Governing Statutes

§ 143.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 143.04 Raising Defense of Statute of Limitations

[1] By Demurrer

[2] By Answer

[3] By Other Methods

§ 143.05 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 143.06 Related Memoranda Chapters

§§ 143.07-143.19 [Reserved]

§ 143.20 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations (General Form) [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Statute of Limitation by Demurrer

[b] Commencement of Action

[c] Accrual of Cause of Action

[d] Running of Period of Limitation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer

[b] Accrual of Cause of Action

[c] Running of Period of Limitation

§ 143.21 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Later Enacted and More Specific of Two Statutes of Limitations Is Controlling

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Later, More Specific Statute Controls

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Later, More Specific Controls

§ 143.22 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Shorter Period of Two Equally Applicable Statutes of Limitations Is Controlling

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shorter Limitation Period Controls

§ 143.23 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amended Statute of Limitations Is Controlling

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shortened Statute of Limitations Applicable Retroactively

§ 143.24 Supporting General Demurrer to a Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc §§ 340.1(l), 430.10(f)]--Failure of Plaintiff to Timely File Required Certificates of Merit in Childhood Sexual Abuse Case When Plaintiff 26 Years or Older at Time Action Filed [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.1(g), (h)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Required Certificate of Merit

§ 143.25 Supporting General Demurrer to a Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a), (b)]--Failure of Plaintiff to File Timely Action for Recovery of Damages Suffered as a Result of Childhood Sexual Abuse When Plaintiff 26 Years or Older at Time Action Commenced

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Bringing Action

§ 143.26 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2]--Failure of Plaintiff to Timely File Equitable Indemnity Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Bringing Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative.

[b] Code of Civil Procedure Section 366.2 Limitations Period Applies to Equitable Indemnity Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Application of Code of Civil Procedure Section 366.2

§ 143.27 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Discovery Rule Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Rule Inapplicable

[b] The Single Publication Rule Renders The Delayed Discovery Rule Inapplicable

§ 143.28 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Tolling for Minority Under Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a) Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Minor's Tolling Provision of Code of Civil Procedure § 352(a) Ceases to Apply and Minor's Causes of Action Accrue on Date of Emancipation

§ 143.29 Supporting Motion for Separate Trial of Special Defense [Code Civ. Proc. § 597]--Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.30 Supporting Motion for Separate Trial of Defense on Statute of Limitations--Medical Malpractice [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Separate Trial for Defense of Statute of Limitations

§ 143.31 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations Not Apparent on Face of Complaint--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defect Required to Appear on Face of Complaint

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defect Required to Appear on Face of Complaint

§ 143.32 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Action Commenced Timely

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Procedure

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Timely Commenced When Complaint Complying With State Requirements Presented Timely to Clerk for Filing

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] In General

§ 143.33 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Action Not Appearing Wholly Barred

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Not Entirely Barred

[b] Actionable and Appreciable Harm Occurring Before and Within Limitations Period

§ 143.34 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Defendant's Absence From State [Code Civ. Proc. § 351]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Business Entities

[c] Cases Arising in Interstate Commerce

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absence From State

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absence From State

§ 143.35 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Minority [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 328, 352(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.36 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Insanity [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 328, 352(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Memoranda

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insanity Based on Injury or Illness

[b] Injury Causing Disability Is Basis of Cause of Action

[c] Appointment of Conservator or Guardian Ad Litem

§ 143.37 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Imprisonment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 328.5, 352.1]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Possibility of Parole

§ 143.38 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Disability--War [Code Civ. Proc. § 354]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.39 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Disability of Attorney

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disability of Attorney Rendering Compliance Impossible

§ 143.40 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Complaint Alleges Death of Person Entitled to Sue [Code Civ. Proc. § 366.1; Prob. Code §§ 551, 552(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.41 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Death of Person Against Whom Action May Be Brought [Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2; Former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b)-(d)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substitution of Personal Representative

§ 143.42 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Court's Assumption of Jurisdiction Over Attorney's Practice Pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6180 or 6190 [Code Civ. Proc. § 353.1]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.43 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Reversal of Judgment for Plaintiff on Appeal [Code Civ. Proc. § 355]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.44 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Legal Inhibition to Sue [Code Civ. Proc. § 356]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

§ 143.45 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Suspended

During Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies [Code Civ. Proc. § 356]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Other Legal Prevention

[b] Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

[c] Effect of Suspension Period is to Extend Statutory Period

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

§ 143.46 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Statute of Limitations Equitably Tolled by Reasonable and Good Faith Pursuit of Alternative Remedy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Equitable Tolling of Statute of Limitations

[b] Reasonable and Good Faith Pursuit of Alternative Remedy

[c] Optional Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

[d] Reasonable Promptness in Refiling

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Equitable Tolling of Statute of Limitations

[b] Reasonable and Good-Faith Pursuit of Alternative Remedy

§ 143.47 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Tolled by Fraudulent Concealment of Defendant's Identity

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Fraudulent Concealment of Defendant's Identity

§ 143.48 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Tolled by Secretly Committed Breach of Contract

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Defendant's Secretly Committed Breach of Contract

§ 143.49 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Tolled by Commencement of Class Action for Members of Putative Class

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Commencement of Class Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Commencement of Class Action in Another State

§ 143.50 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Estoppel to Raise Defense of Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay Induced by Defendant

[b] Fraud Not Necessary

[c] Requirements for Delay Due to Fraud

[d] Delay Resulted From Duress Caused by Defendant's Threats Against Plaintiff

[e] Equitable Estoppel Can Apply No Matter How Unequivocally the Statutory Language Containing the Applicable Limitations Period Is Expressed

[f] Equitable Estoppel Can Apply Although No Affirmative Conduct Is Involved

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Delay Induced by Defendant

[b] Fraud Not Necessary

§ 143.51 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Defendant on Probation and Under Order of Restitution [Code Civ. Proc. § 352.5]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 143.52 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Generally

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Based on Fraud or Mistake

[b] Breach of Fiduciary Duty

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Action Based on Fraud or Mistake

[b] Breach of Fiduciary Duty

[c] Theft of Trade Secret

§ 143.53 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Action for Personal Injury Sustained Without Perceptible Trauma

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action in Certain Personal Injury Actions With No Perceptible Trauma

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action in Certain Personal Injury Actions With No Perceptible Trauma

§ 143.54 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Injuries Arising Out of Exposure to Asbestos [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Time for Filing Claim for Injury or Illness Based on Exposure to Asbestos

[b] "Disability" Defined

[c] No Disability Within Meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.2 When Retirement Unrelated to Asbestos Exposure

[d] Asbestos Claim Not Extinguished by Operation of Law Until Adjudicated by a Court

§ 143.55 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Injuries Arising Out of Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Time for Filing Claim for Injury or Illness Arising Out of Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance

[b] Media Reports, Alone, Do Not Give Rise to Inquiry Notice

§ 143.56 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Newly Discovered Claim During Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Rule Applies to Newly Discovered Claims During Action

§ 143.57 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Action for Damages Suffered as Result of Childhood Sexual Abuse [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Period of Limitation

[b] "Childhood Sexual Abuse" Defined

[c] Injury at Time of Abuse Does Not Prohibit Delayed Discovery

[d] Recollection of Childhood Abuse Does Not Prohibit Applying Delayed Discovery Principles to Plaintiff's Claim

[e] Enlarged Limitation Period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 Applies to Childhood Sexual Abuse Continuing Beyond Childhood

[f] Period of Revival for Causes of Action Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) and (3)

§ 143.58 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Strict Liability or Negligence Action for Property Damage Caused by Asbestos

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action for Property Damage by Asbestos Accrues When Asbestos Causes Contamination

§ 143.59 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Enforcement of Affirmative Covenant Running With Land

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action for Breach of Covenant Running With the Land

§ 143.59A Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Timely Filed--Statute of Limitations for Action to Quiet Title Does Not Commence Until Adverse Claim Made Against Person Holding the Property

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action to Quiet Title

§ 143.60 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Breach of Contract Committed in Secret

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delayed Discovery Rule Applies to Breaches of Contract That Are Committed in Secret

§ 143.61 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Professional Malpractice--Other Than Legal or Medical

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations

[b] Action Accrues on Later of Discovery or Damage

[c] Action Does Not Accrue Absent Damage

[d] Actual Harm Is Question of Fact

[e] Real Estate Appraiser

[f] Accountant

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accountant

§ 143.62 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amended Statute of Limitations Does Not Apply

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute as Amended, if Applied, Would Cut Off Plaintiff's Cause of Action

§ 143.63 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing That Cause of Action Arose Out of Insurer's Breach of Continuing Contractual Duty to Defend Plaintiff in Prior Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Title Insurer's Duty to Defend

[b] Breach of Liability Insurer's Duty to Defend

§ 143.64 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amendment of Limitation Period Revived Lapsed Claim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Reply Memorandum

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lapsed Claims Subject to Revival

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lapsed Claims Subject to Revival

§ 143.65 Reply Memorandum Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amendment of Limitation Period Does Not Revive Lapsed Claims

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims Generally Not Revived by Amendment

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.01

§ 143.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains points and authorities for use in supporting a general demurrer to a complaint based on the ground that the action is barred by a statute of limitations [see §§ 143.20-143.28]. It also includes forms opposing a demurrer based on the statute of limitations [see §§ 143.31-143.64] and a reply memorandum [see § 143.65].

The chapter also provides memoranda supporting separate trial of the statute of limitations defense, one for general use [see § 143.29] and one for use in medical malpractice actions [see § 143.30].

For points and authorities relating to the statute of limitations in legal and medical malpractice cases, including delayed discovery and tolling issues, see Ch. 24A, Attorneys at Law: Malpractice , and Ch. 175, Physicians and Surgeons: Medical Malpractice , respectively.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.02

§ 143.02 Governing Statutes

The periods of time within which civil actions, and special proceedings of a civil nature [see Code Civ. Proc. § 363, must be commenced, in all cases except those in which a different period is specifically prescribed by statute, are set out in Title 2 of Part 2 (§ 312 et seq.)] of the Code of Civil Procedure [Code Civ. Proc. § 312].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.03

§ 143.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Memoranda

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in summary judgment proceedings. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, tables of contents, a table of authorities, or proof of service are not counted. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.05.

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, §§ 1.03-1.06. For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs, § 1.10.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeContent & Form

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.04

§ 143.04 Raising Defense of Statute of Limitations

[1] By Demurrer

The defense that an action is barred by a statute of limitations may be raised by demurrer [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10-430.80] when the ground of objection appears on the face of the pleading or from matter of which a court must or may take judicial notice [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30; see also Basin Construction Corp. v. Department of Water & Power (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 819, 821-823, 245 Cal. Rptr. 178] .

[2] By Answer

The defense may be raised by answer whenever it cannot be raised by demurrer [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30].

[3] By Other Methods

The defense of bar of a statute of limitations has been raised by methods other than demurrer and answer, such as the following:

- Motion for judgment on the pleadings [see Wrightson v. Dougherty (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 257, 261-265, 54 P.2d 13 ; but see Berendsen v. McIver (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 347, 353, 272 P.2d 76] .

- Motion for nonsuit [see Wrightson v. Dougherty (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 257, 265, 54 P.2d 13 ; Bass v. Hueter (1928) 205 Cal. 284, 286-291, 270 P. 958 ; Magpali v. Farmers Group, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 471, 480, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225] .

- Motion for summary judgment [see Graham v. Bank of Cal. (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 438, 439-444, 17 Cal. Rptr. 279 ; see also Love v. Fire Ins. Exchange (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1136, 1142-1143, 271 Cal. Rptr. 246] .

- Motion to strike [see PH II, Inc. v. Superior Court (1995) 33 Cal. App. 4th 1680, 1683, 40 Cal. Rptr. 2d 169 ; Sullivan v. Wright (1954) 124 Cal. App. 2d 836, 837-838, 269 P.2d 671] .

- Objection to introduction of evidence [see Neff v. New York Life Ins. Co. (1947) 30 Cal. 2d 165, 174-175, 180 P.2d 900 ; Staples v. Zoph (1935) 9 Cal. App. 2d 369, 370, 49 P.2d 1131 (disapproved on other grounds in Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936 n.6, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613); but see Berendsen v. McIver (1954) 126 Cal. App. 2d 347, 353, 272 P.2d 76 ; Salveter v. Salveter (1933) 135 Cal. App. 238, 239-241, 26 P.2d 836] .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.05

§ 143.05 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For further discussion and forms of allegations, affirmative defenses, and demurrers involving the limitation of actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

Chapters that cover particular causes of action in California Forms of Pleading and Practice frequently include discussion and forms relating to the applicable statute or statutes of limitations. For further reference, see the General Index to that publication or the chapter covering a particular cause of action.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.06

§ 143.06 Related Memoranda Chapters

Related forms of memoranda of points and authorities that may be useful in particular cases involving the limitation of actions may be found in many chapters in this publication, including the following:

- Ch. 12, Accounting.
- Ch. 24, Attorneys at Law: Substitution, Withdrawal, Disqualification, and Authority to Appear.
- Ch. 24A, Attorneys at Law: Malpractice.
- Ch. 46, Conspiracy.
- Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings.
- Ch. 104, Fictitiously Named Defendants (DOES).
- Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit.
- Ch. 131, Judgments.
- Ch. 160, Motions to Strike.
- Ch. 175, Physicians and Surgeons: Medical Malpractice.
- Ch. 176, Physicians and Surgeons: Licensing and Professional Discipline.
- Ch. 196, Public Entities.
- Ch. 230, Trust Deeds and Real Property Mortgages.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-143 California Points & Authorities §§ 143.07-143.19

[Reserved]

§§ 143.07[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.20

§ 143.20 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations (General Form) [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	NO. _____
Plaintiff,	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF GENERAL DEMURRER OF _____ [name] TO COMPLAINT OF _____ [name]
vs.	)
_____ [name],	)
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
		Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object, by demurrer as provided in Section 430.30 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)). When any ground for objection to a complaint appears on the face thereof (or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice), the objection on that ground may be taken by a demurrer to the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer. The objection that an action is barred by a statute of limitations may be set up by demurrer (California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Sierra Valleys Ry. Co. (1910) 158 Cal. 690, 697-699, 112 P. 274 ; Kendrick v. City of Eureka (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 364, 367, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153). The objection that an action is barred by a statute of limitations is deemed to be included in the general ground of demurrer that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 245, 94 P. 889 ; see Iverson, Yoakum, Papiano & Hatch v. Berwald (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 995, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665 (complaint showing action barred by statute of limitations is subject to general demurrer)).

C. Limitation on Commencement of Action. Civil actions, without exception, can be commenced only within the periods prescribed in Title 2 of Part 2 (Section 312 et seq.) of the Code of Civil Procedure, after the cause of action shall have accrued, unless where, in special cases, a different limitation is prescribed by statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 312).

D. Commencement of Action. An action is commenced, within the meaning of Title 2 of Part 2 (Section 312 et seq.) of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the complaint is filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 350). It is mandatory for court clerks to demand and receive the fee required by statute before documents or pleadings are filed (Duran v. St. Luke's Hospital (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 459, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1). A petition to preserve evidence does not constitute commencement of a suit (Orr v. City of Stockton (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 622, 633, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 662).

E. Accrual of Cause of Action. A cause of action invariably accrues when there is a remedy available (Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 230, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161).

F. Running of Period of Limitation. The period of limitation begins to run when a suit may be maintained; that is, when actual and appreciable harm is inflicted (Osborn v. Hopkins (1911) 160 Cal. 501, 506, 117 P. 519 ; Barton v. New United Motor Manufacturing, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1209, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328). The on-going effects of harm, alone, cannot breathe life into prior, uncharged acts (Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (2007) 550 U.S. 618, 127 S. Ct. 2162, 167 L. Ed. 2d 982).

G. Period of Limitation. An action for _____ [type of present action] must be commenced within _____ [period of limitation] after the cause of action has accrued (_____ [statutory and/or decisional authority]).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint (or, with slight modification of wording, a cross complaint), where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by a statute of limitation.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points and authorities may be used to support a defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings [see Wrightson v. Dougherty (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 257, 261-265, 54 P.2d 13] , or a defendant's motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c; State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 604, 606, 612-613, 258 Cal. Rptr. 413 ; Graham v. Bank of Cal. (1961) 197 Cal. App. 2d 438, 439-444, 17 Cal. Rptr. 279] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Raising Statute of Limitation by Demurrer

California Safe Deposit & Trust Co. v. Sierra Valleys Ry. Co. (1910) 158 Cal. 690, 112 P. 274 , was an action to foreclose a deed of trust securing corporate bonds. The defendant did not demur but asserted in the answer that the action was barred by a statute of limitations. On appeal from a judgment on the merits, it was contended that the defense of limitation was waived by failure to raise it in a demurrer. The Supreme Court said, "[T]he only ground of demurrer applicable [in this case] is the failure to state facts sufficient [to constitute a cause of action], and this ground is, by the express provision of section 434 [superseded by Code Civ. Proc. § 430.80(a)], not waived by failure to demur. The true rule, under our practice, is, we think, that the defendant may, if the defect appears on the face of the complaint, set up the bar of the statute either by demurrer or by answer. If the complaint does not show that the statute has run, the defendant must plead his right by answer."

Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889 , was an action for the recovery of shares of stock. The defendant asserted in a general demurrer that the action was barred by a statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. The method of asserting the defense of bar of a statute of limitations was not, apparently, an issue either in the trial court or on appeal; but the Supreme Court said the bar of the statute of limitations is not specified in the code as a ground of demurrer and that objection to a complaint, while required to be stated in the demurrer, must be deemed to be included within the ground of want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (153 Cal. 234, 245) .

Kendrick v. City of Eureka (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 364, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 153 , involved an action for wrongful death and due process violations arising out of the death of plaintiff's decedents in a county jail. The plaintiffs filed an action in federal court that asserted federal claims and supplemental state claims. The district court determined all the federal claims in defendants' favor on motions for summary judgment. The district court also declined to exercise jurisdiction over the state claims and dismissed them without prejudice. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint based on the ground that statute of limitations had expired. Plaintiff's appealed the latter order, which was affirmed. The United States Supreme Court denied the plaintiffs' petition for certiorari. Thereafter, plaintiffs filed a complaint in state court. The defendants demurrered on the basis of the statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that when a complaint shows on its face that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, a general demurrer for failure to state a cause of action will lie (82 Cal. App. 4th 364, 367) . The court concluded that although the plaintiffs had 30 days from the time the federal action was dismissed to file an action, they had waited too long because the 30-day period ran from the date the court of appeals affirmed the dismissal, not from the date the United States Supreme Court denied the plaintiffs' petition for certiorari (82 Cal. App. 4th 364, 368-372) .

In Iverson, Yoakum, Papiano & Hatch v. Berwald (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 995, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 665 , plaintiff law firm sued former clients for fees. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the plaintiff's failure to allege a valid written fee agreement under Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148(a) barred plaintiff from collecting fees under a contract theory. Plaintiff was entitled to recover only under claims for common counts, which claims were barred in turn by lapse of the applicable statutory period of limitation that began to run in 1992. The trial court sustained the demurrer and entered a dismissal, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Initially, the court noted that a complaint showing on its face the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations is subject to a general demurrer. The court concluded that the promissory note, as a matter of law, did not comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 6148, were voidable, and had been voided by the client. Plaintiff's only resulting claim, based on quantum meruit for service rendered, was barred the applicable two-year period of limitation (76 Cal. App. 4th 990, 996-997) .

[b] Commencement of Action

Duran v. St. Luke's Hospital (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 459, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1) was a malpractice action where the plaintiffs' attorney mailed the complaint two days before the final day for filing and learned that the enclosed fee was inadequate after the statute of limitations expired. The filing clerk of the San Francisco Superior Court, California, received plaintiffs' complaint by mail, but did not file it, because the fee was $3 short. The statute of limitations expired the next day. The trial court granted a petition to deem the complaint filed when it was received, but subject to a motion to strike by defendants, and ultimately entered a judgment of dismissal (114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 459) .

The reviewing court affirmed the dismissal. An unbroken line of decisions by the California Supreme Court holds that it is mandatory for court clerks to demand and receive the fee required by statute before documents or pleadings are filed. Government Code statutes make it clear that the Legislature has mandatorily required that filing fees in civil actions must be paid in advance. Not only do they declare that they shall be so paid and that the clerk shall so collect them before he or she shall perform any official act, that is to say, receive for filing and file any document for the filing of which the payment of a fee is required, but the Legislature has also provided, by way of interpretation of its own language, that the word 'shall is mandatory.' ... Under the plain code provisions it must be held that the clerk properly refused to perform the official service of filing the notice until he received the proper fees (114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 460) .

In Orr v. City of Stockton (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 622, 58 Cal. Rptr. 3d 662 , plaintiff Orr was involved in a May 12, 2002 automobile collision with a City of Stockton police officer who was driving a patrol car. On October 16, 2002, Orr filed a petition to perpetuate testimony and/or preserve evidence related to the collision. Orr sought evidence of police radio communications around the time of the collision. A hearing on the petition was slated for November 26, 2002. Orr took the petition off calendar, without prejudice, after the City agreed to provide him with the requested information. On October 17, 2002, Orr presented a claim to the City under the Tort Claims Act. The City notified Orr on December 5, 2002, that it had rejected his claim. The notice contained a warning stating that subject to certain exceptions, Orr had only six months from the date this notice was personally delivered or deposited in the mail to file a court action on his state law claims. On August 4, 2003, Orr filed a document entitled First Amended Complaint for Damages and to Perpetuate Testimony, the first pleading denominated a complaint that Orr filed. The City demurred to the First Amended Complaint, citing the six-month statute of limitations set forth in Gov. Code § 945.6(a)(1). Orr countered that his petition to preserve evidence constituted an action that satisfied this statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the City's demurrer with leave to amend. Orr then filed a second amended complaint and the City similarly demurred on statute of limitations grounds. This time, though, the trial court overruled the City's demurrer, concluding that under Code of Civ. Proc. § 363, a special proceeding is included in the statutory use of the word action, and that the petition to preserve evidence filed October 16, 2002 was sufficient to meet the purposes of Gov. Code § 945.6. The City then answered Orr's second amended complaint, trial occurred, and the jury returned a verdict against the City for $221,218.62.

Based on the statute of limitations issue, the City appealed. In reversing, the appellate court concluded that a proceeding initiated by a petition to preserve evidence does not constitute a suit because it is not an adversarial proceeding to enforce a right or redress an injury. Such a petition merely allows the petitioner to obtain discovery for the limited purpose of perpetuating testimony or preserving evidence, for use in the event an action is subsequently filed. The petition proceeding does not provide the petitioner with any further relief beyond obtaining discovery materials, nor does it attempt to redress any injury or enforce any substantive right against another party (150 Cal. App. 4th 622, 633) .

[c] Accrual of Cause of Action

Heyer v. Flaig (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 223, 74 Cal. Rptr. 225, 449 P.2d 161 , was an action for damages arising from alleged malpractice by an attorney. The issue on appeal from a judgment of dismissal which followed the sustaining of the defendant's demurrer was whether the action was barred by a statute of limitations, and this issue depended in turn on when the cause of action accrued.

The plaintiffs were beneficiaries under a will negligently drafted by the defendant attorney. The Supreme Court observed that the plaintiffs could not have brought an action before the testator's death, since they had no recognized legal interest in the estate until then; therefore, the cause of action did not accrue until then. The Court said, "A statute of limitations does not commence to run until a cause of action accrues, and 'a cause of action ... invariably accrues when there is a remedy available.' (Irvine v. Bossen (1944) 25 Cal. 2d 652, 658 [155 P.2d 9] .)"

[d] Running of Period of Limitation

Osborn v. Hopkins (1911) 160 Cal. 501, 117 P. 519 , was an action by an assignee of an attorney to recover the reasonable value of his services. A judgment was rendered for the plaintiff, but the trial court ordered a new trial on the ground that part of the sum awarded by the jury, which the plaintiff refused to give up, was barred by a statute of limitations. On appeal the Supreme Court stated, in its discussion, that "it is elementary law that the statute of limitations begins to run upon the accrual of the right of action, that is, when a suit may be maintained, and not until that time."

In Barton v. New United Motor Manufacturing, Inc. (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 2d 328 , an action for wrongful termination, defendant filed a demurrer on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the action. On appeal plaintiff contended that he was entitled to the benefit of a delayed discovery rule because he did not fully understand the dimensions of his wrongful termination until two years after being discharged.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that the infliction of actual and appreciable harm commences the statutory period, even if there is uncertainty as to the amount of damages (43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1209) . The court granted that under some circumstances, the statute of limitations will not begin to run until the injured party discovers or should have discovered the facts supporting liability. However, it was apparent from plaintiff's own complaint that he suffered actual and appreciable harm when he was terminated, and the delayed discovery rule was thus of no assistance to him (43 Cal. App. 4th 1200, 1209-1210) .

In Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (2007) 550 U.S. 618, 127 S. Ct. 2162, 167 L. Ed. 2d 982 , plaintiff retired employee brought a pay discrimination claim under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C.S. § 2000e et seq., against defendant, her former employer. The employee introduced evidence that during the course of her employment several supervisors had given her poor evaluations because of her sex, that as a result of these evaluations her pay was not increased as much as it would have been if she had been evaluated fairly, and that these past pay decisions continued to affect the amount of her pay throughout her employment. Her arguments that her paychecks and a raise denial each violated Title VII and triggered a new charging period could not be reconciled with case law. The on-going effects alone could not breathe life into prior, uncharged discrimination. The employee's attempt to take the intent associated with prior pay decisions and shift it to the later pay decision was unsound. The Court rejected the argument that it adopt a special rule for pay cases noting that the particular characteristics of this case was certainly not representative of all pay cases and may not have even been typical. The court held that the employee's policy arguments for giving special treatment to pay claims found no support in the statute and was inconsistent with Supreme Court precedents (167 L. Ed. 2d 982, 998 ; but see Hammond v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1579, 1597, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690 (discrete decisions concerning plaintiff's workload within the limitations period, each of which may be a fresh violation of the FEHA)).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer

In Cameron v. San Francisco (1886) 68 Cal. 390, 391, 9 P. 430 , affirming a judgment for the plaintiff on the assumption that there was sufficient evidence at the trial to show that the action was not barred, the court stated regarding raising the defense of limitation that when it clearly appears on the face of the complaint that the period of limitation has run, the objection may be made by demurrer.

In Basin Construction Corp. v. Department of Water & Power (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 819, 245 Cal. Rptr. 178 , the trial court dismissed a complaint in intervention after sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend on the ground that the action asserted was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that a complaint showing on its face the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations is subject to general demurrer (199 Cal. App. 3d 819, 823) .

In Anderson v. McNally (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 778, 783-784, 310 P.2d 975 , affirming a judgment of dismissal following the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint in a wrongful death action, although the sustaining of the demurrer was error because the defect (admitted by the plaintiffs) was not apparent on the face of the complaint, the court stated that a demurrer based on failure to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that the action was not commenced within the applicable period of limitation must be considered a general demurrer.

[b] Accrual of Cause of Action

In Truong v. Glasser (2009) 181 Cal. App. 4th 102, 103 Cal.Rptr.3d 811 , plaintiff Vision Manufacturing, Inc. (VMI), and its president, plaintiff Steven Truong, filed a legal malpractice action against attorney Glasser arising out of his purported negligent advice in a real estate transaction. The gravamen of the complaint alleged that Glasser was negligent and breached his fiduciary duty to plaintiffs by not properly advising them concerning a property lease and lease addendum. The action sought damages because plaintiffs incurred attorney fees, costs, and other losses arising from their attempt to rescind the lease addendum and were also injured by their inability to use the property. Glasser moved for, and the court granted, summary judgment in favor of Glasser on the ground the action was barred by the Code of Civ. Proc. § 340.6 one-year statute of limitations. In affirming, the court of appeal explained that in this legal malpractice action, plaintiffs first sustained actual injury when they obtained and were obligated to pay new counsel to file a lawsuit seeking to escape the consequences of their signing the lease documents, and therefore sustained actual injury more than one year before the malpractice action was filed.

In McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 56, 104, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 37 , the complaint alleged that oil was discharged into the ground and migrated downhill. A previous owner of the downhill property had complained about the oil about 16 years before the suit was filed. Cleanup efforts were unsuccessful. By special verdict, the jury stated that it was unknown whether the contamination could be abated at a reasonable cost by reasonable means. The court held that the nuisance was a permanent nuisance because the evidence did not show that the contamination reasonably could be abated. Thus, the cause of action was barred by the three-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b), for damages to real property, which began to run when the previous owner discovered the oil. It is the underlying injury and not the legal theories of recovery superimposed on the injury that dictates the applicable statute of limitations. For limitations purposes the harm implicit in a tortious injury to property is harm to the property itself, and thus to any owner of the property once the property has been injured and not necessarily to a particular owner. An owner must bring its claim to court within the statutory period or the claim will be barred for that and all subsequent owners.

Stewart v. Seward (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 1513 involved a claimant's complaint for breach of a promise to executive a will. Specifically, the claimant asserted that the decedent had breached a promise to execute a will leaving a one-half interest in the family home to the claimant. Approximately nine months after the decedent's death, the claimant filed a creditor's claim in the probate proceeding. The administrator rejected that claim eight days later, using a standard rejection form that contained an advisement regarding the statutory three-month period of Prob. Code § 9353(a)(1), for a creditor to file suit after a rejection of a claim. Within three months after receiving the rejection notice, but more than one year after the decedent's death, the claimant filed suit. In affirming the trial court's decision sustaining the administrator's demurrer to the complaint, the Court of Appeal held that because the claim arose from an alleged oral promise or agreement concerning distribution from the decedent's estate, the action was governed by the limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 366.3, which provides that a one-year limitation period applies to a promise or agreement with a decedent to distribution from an estate and specifically states that the limitations period cannot be tolled or extended. The complaint was untimely because it was filed more than one year after the decedent's death. Further, the administrator's actions in rejecting the claim did not give rise to equitable estoppel or waiver.

In Lehman v. Superior Court (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 109, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 411 , two directors of a corporation petitioned for a writ of mandate after the trial court overruled their demurrer to the complaint of the corporation's chapter 7 trustee that asserted a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty against them. The directors demurred on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, specifically Code Civ. Proc. § 359. Although the trial court overruled the demurrer, it requested interlocutory review of whether Section 359 applied to the trustee's claim, noting that there was a split of authority on the issue. The Court of Appeal denied the petition, holding that § 359 governs a fiduciary duty claim where the basis of the directors' liability was first authorized by a statute or the Constitution. If the basis of liability existed at common law, it was not "created by law" within the meaning of Section 359, even if the common law theory of liability has since been codified. The court concluded that Section 359 was not applicable because the directors had not shown that their alleged liability was first authorized by a statute or the Constitution. In their writ petition, the directors had shown, at most, that some of the trustee's allegations might give rise to liability under various statutes, assuming the existence of facts not in the complaint. That was insufficient to invoke Section 359. Nor had the directors established that the liability authorized by those statutes did not exist at common law. As to other allegations, the directors argued that liability did not exist at common law, but they failed to identify a statute or constitutional provision that imposed such liability. That, too, was inadequate for purposes of Section 359 because a statutory or constitutional basis--a "law" within the meaning of Section 359--must exist.

In Magpali v. Farmers Group, Inc. (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 471, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 225 , plaintiff brought an action for fraud arising out of his tenure as an insurance agent for defendant. The complaint alleged that defendant fraudulently concealed a Limited Underwriting Authority program which it subsequently used to place restrictions on plaintiff's ability to conduct business and bind defendant's policies. The complaint, filed in July, 1992, alleged that defendant made various representations which omitted information about Limited Underwriting Authority in 1984 and 1985. Plaintiff was designated a Limited Underwriting Authority agent in April, 1989. After hearing plaintiff's side at trial, the trial court granted a defense motion or nonsuit, ruling that the fraud claim was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal agreed with the trial court, noting that plaintiff did not file his complaint within three years of being designated a Limited Underwriting Authority agent. Plaintiff contended that the notice that he was going to be a Limited Underwriting Authority agent did not trigger the statute of limitations because he believed the status was only temporary. However, the court ruled that plaintiff's belief made no difference because a cause of action accrues when the plaintiff has all the information essential to the claim (48 Cal. App. 4th 471, 483) . The court thus affirmed the judgment on nonsuit.

In Van Dyke v. Dunker & Aced (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 862 , plaintiffs brought a professional malpractice action against an accountant for erroneous tax advice. According to plaintiffs' complaint, defendant negligently advised plaintiffs to make a donation of real estate in order to receive a tax deduction of equal value. Plaintiffs donated the real estate, but only received a partial tax credit, thus resulting in a net loss on the transaction. Plaintiffs subsequently retained a different tax preparer who filed amended returns for the previous years and engaged in protracted negotiations with the IRS regarding the impact of the charitable property donation. The complaint was filed after plaintiffs' new tax preparer filed the amended returns. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground that the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs argued that their cause of action did not accrue until the IRS finally determined the impact of the charitable donation on their tax obligation, but the trial court concluded that plaintiffs had both discovered the negligence and suffered injury when they filed the original return.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court recognized that if a breach of professional duty causes only speculative harm or the threat of future harm then it does not suffice to create a cause of action for negligence, and the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the occurrence of appreciable and actual harm (46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 452) . However, the court concluded that plaintiffs suffered damages when they donated the property, lost appreciable expected tax benefits, and paid unanticipated taxes. There was actual injury at that point, regardless of the outcome of the eventual IRS audit (46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 457) .

[c] Running of Period of Limitation

In Aguilera v. Heiman (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 590, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 18 , plaintiff was injured when he came into contact with a high voltage electrical wire while installing rain gutters on a condominium. Almost 10 years later, he filed a civil action against defendants, an owners association and a property management business and associated individual. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer on the basis that the action was barred by the statute of limitations.

The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal. The court held that the one-year statute of limitation in former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) applied to the action, which arose from an incident on November 5, 1997. New Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which took effect on January 1, 2003 and extended the statute of limitations for personal injury suits to two years, did not apply retroactively. The statute of limitations was not equitably tolled while plaintiff was pursuing his workers' compensation remedy, even though he filed a little over two months after his injury, because defendants were not joined as defendants to the workers' compensation proceeding until after the one-year statute of limitations had already expired. The action was time-barred even if a three-year statute of limitations applied under Lab. Code § 3706. Under the facts of the case, in which plaintiff knew or had the means to know in 2002 that he had a civil action at law against defendants but waited over four and a half years further to bring his action, the court declined to toll the running of the three-year statute of limitations (174 Cal. App. 4th 590, 604) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative

DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.21

§ 143.21 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Later Enacted and More Specific of Two Statutes of Limitations Is Controlling

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a general demurrer (see § 143.20).]

_____ [Specify particular statute, e.g., SECTION 340.5 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE] APPLIES IN THIS ACTION AND OPERATES AS A BAR TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT, BECAUSE IT IS A LATER AND MORE SPECIFIC STATUTE THAN _____ [specify more general statute, e.g., CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.4] WITH REGARD TO _____ [specify cause of action, e.g., MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS].

Later, More Specific Statute Controls. When two different statutes of limitations appear to govern an action, the later, more specific statute is controlling over the earlier statute, even though the earlier statute would by its terms cover the present action (Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 894, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [see § 143.20], when the party seeking to demur claims that the plaintiff's action is time-barred under a particular statute of limitations, even though the action is not time-barred under a different statute of limitations, because the former statute is the later, more specific statute and is therefore controlling.

The authority underlying this form involved a newer specific statute construed as an exception to the earlier general statute, and the court incorporated that fact into its statement of the rule [see Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909] . However, as a general rule, a specific statute prevails over a general statute regardless of which was enacted first [see Agricultural Labor Relation Bd. v. Superior Court (1976) 16 Cal. 3d 392,

420, 128 Cal. Rptr. 183, 546 P.2d 687 ; see also Collection Bureau of San Jose v. Rumsey (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 301, 310-311, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792, 6 P.3d 713 (statute of limitations case applying rule that more specific provisions take precedence over more general ones and that later enactments supersede earlier ones)]. For a form of points and authorities that may be combined with this form if the general statute of limitations is later-enacted than the specific one, see Ch. 217, Statutory Interpretation, § 217.61, which deals with this general rule of statutory construction, although not in the context of statutes of limitation.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Later, More Specific Statute Controls

In Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 , plaintiff sustained injuries during birth that were not discovered until shortly before her eighth birthday. Plaintiff filed a malpractice action against the health care providers, alleging negligence. The complaint was brought within the statutory time period of former Civ. Code § 29 (repealed; now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4), which governed actions for injuries incurred during birth and incorporated a "delayed discovery" rule that tolled the running of the statute until after discovery of the injury. Defendant demurred, however, on the grounds that the action was time-barred because it was not brought within the three-year statutory time period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, which governs medical malpractice actions and does not incorporate a "delayed discovery" rule. The trial court agreed, sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the complaint.

The California Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the action was controlled by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 but would not be time-barred if plaintiff were allowed to amend her complaint to allege facts that would invoke a separate tolling provision of that statute. With regard to which statute of limitations was applicable to the action, the Court explained that at first glance, former Civ. Code § 29 appeared to apply to the action, because it governs all actions for prenatal and birth injuries. However, the Court also explained that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is a later-enacted statute that was passed by the Legislature with the intent to cover all personal injury claims arising from medical malpractice, and to respond to a major health care crisis in California attributable to skyrocketing malpractice premium costs. Thus, the Legislature sought to change the rules applicable to personal injury actions by malpractice victims, and to treat all malpractice victims differently from other personal injury victims. Because Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is part of an interrelated legislative scheme enacted to deal specifically with all medical malpractice claims, it is the later, more specific statute that must be found controlling over an earlier statute, even though the earlier statute would by its terms cover the present situation. Thus, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and not former Civ. Code § 29 was controlling. However, the Court noted that the action in this case might not be time-barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 if plaintiff were to allege intentional concealment of the injury, which would toll the limitations period under that statute of limitations. Thus, the case was remanded to give plaintiff an opportunity to amend her complaint to allege concealment and avoid the time-bar of the statute (41 Cal. 3d 883, 891-894, 901-902) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Later, More Specific Controls

In Collection Bureau of San Jose v. Rumsey (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 301, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792, 6 P.3d 713 , plaintiff brought an action, based on accounts receivable for medical expenses that were technically open book accounts, against a surviving spouse for recovery of hospital and medical expenses of the deceased spouse's last illness. Plaintiff filed its action nearly four years after defendant's spouse had died. At the conclusion of trial, the trial court ruled that Prob. Code § 13554(c), concerning enforcement of a deceased spouse's debt against a surviving spouse and which formerly provided that Code Civ. Proc. § 353 (but now provides that Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2) applies to actions under it, controlled, and thus the one year limitation period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 353 barred plaintiff's action (24 Cal. 4th 301, 304-305) . The court of appeal reversed, concluding that plaintiff's action was timely in that a separate and independent cause of action for recovery of the debt from the surviving spouse existed under Fam. Code § 914, which makes spouses personally liable for each other's debts incurred for necessaries of life, and that the Family Code action was governed by the four-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 337 generally applicable to open book accounts (24 Cal. 4th 301, 304-306, 309) .

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal (24 Cal. 4th 301, 313) . The Supreme Court discussed and rejected the court of appeal's conclusion that an independent cause of action was stated under Fam. Code § 914 and that the four-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 337 applied (24 Cal. 4th 301, 311-313) . Rather, the court held that Prob. Code. § 13554 controlled, expressly making the one-year limitations period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 353 applicable to plaintiff's action against defendant (24 Cal. 4th 301, 313) . In so concluding, the court applied the rules that if conflicting statutes cannot be reconciled, later enactments supersede earlier ones and more specific provisions take precedence over more general ones. The Court found Prob. Code § 13550 et seq. to be more specific than Fam. Code. 914 in that the Probate Code provisions specifically address the liability of a married person for debts incurred by the other spouse on death of that spouse, whereas Fam Code § 914 merely addresses the general liability of a spouse for the debts of the other spouse incurred during marriage. Moreover, the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 353, expressly made applicable by Prob. Code § 13554, is the more specific limitations provision, as it prescribes the limitations period for surviving causes of action on the liabilities of decedents, whereas Code Civ. Proc. § 337 merely sets forth a four-year limitation period generally applicable to all open book accounts (24 Cal. 4th 301, 310-311) . With regard to the rule that if conflicting statutes cannot be reconciled the later enactments supersede the earlier ones, again the statutory scheme of Prob. Code § 13550 et seq. were found to control rather than Fam. Code. 914 in that they were enacted later (24 Cal. 4th 301, 311) .

In Howard Jarvis Taxpayers Assn. v. City of Los Angeles (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 242, 93 Cal. Rptr. 2d 742 , a taxpayer's suit challenging a home occupation ordinance, the trial court granted summary judgment in defendant's favor, finding that the lawsuit was barred by the 90-day statute of limitations in former Gov. Code § 65009(c)(2) (now Gov. Code § 65009(c)(1)(B)). The court of appeal affirmed. In holding that the 90-day limitation period barred the lawsuit, the court stated that a specific limitations provision prevails over a more general provision. When a specific shortened limitations period applies, the general limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338 does not apply because general statutes of limitation are applicable only if no different limitation is prescribed by statute (79 Cal. App. 4th 242, 248) .

In Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 263, 268-273, 42 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , cert. denied, 516 U.S. 1113, 116 S. Ct. 912, 133 L. Ed. 2d 843 , the court concluded that a home purchaser was time barred from proceeding against a seller's real estate brokerage and agent for, among other things, negligent misrepresentation. Regarding negligent representation, the court held that Civ. Code § 2079.4, containing a two-year limitation period for actions stemming from breach of duty imposed under Civ. Code § 2079, was a specific statute that prevails over the general statute of limitations of three years for fraud and negligent misrepresentation causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d) (36 Cal. App. 4th 263, 273-274) . The court quoted Maloy v. Municipal Court (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 414, 418, 72 Cal. Rptr. 207 , for the statement that when there are two inconsistent statutes, one general and the other specific, that cover the same subject matter, the special one, whether or not enacted first, is treated as an exception to the general one and controls unless a contrary intent clearly appears (36 Cal. App. 4th 263, 273) .

In Krieger v. Nick Alexander Imports, Inc. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 205, 285 Cal. Rptr. 717 , the court held that an action brought under the Song-Beverly Consumer Warranty Act (Civ. Code § 1792 et seq.) was controlled by the specific limitation period of Com. Code § 2725 instead of the general limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338 (234 Cal. App. 3d 205, 213-215) .

Donabedian v. Manzer (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1021, 232 Cal. Rptr. 325 , was a case with substantially similar facts as those in Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 , discussed in § 143.21[4][a]. The court of appeal followed the Young opinion and its holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 is a later, more specific statute that is controlling over the earlier statute, former Civ. Code § 29 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4). As with Young, however, the court of appeal reversed and remanded to give plaintiff an opportunity to amend his complaint to allege facts that would invoke a tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (187 Cal. App. 3d 1021, 1026-1027, 1029) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.22

§ 143.22 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Shorter Period of Two Equally Applicable Statutes of Limitations Is Controlling

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a general demurrer (see § 143.20).]

BOTH _____ [specify first statute, e.g., SECTION 945.6 OF THE GOVERNMENT CODE] AND _____ [specify second statute, e.g., SECTION 340.5 OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE] STAND ON EQUAL FOOTING WITH REGARD TO _____ [specify type of cause of action, e.g., MEDICAL MALPRACTICE ACTIONS AGAINST PUBLIC ENTITIES], WITH NEITHER BEING MORE SPECIFIC THAN THE OTHER. THEREFORE, BOTH STATUTES ARE GIVEN EFFECT AND THE SHORTER LIMITATION PERIOD IS CONTROLLING.

Shorter Limitation Period Controls. When two different statutes of limitations apply to a cause of action, and each addresses a specific area of the law so that neither is more specific than the other, and the legislative schemes for each stand on equal footing, both statutes are given effect. Thus, the statute with the shorter limitation period is controlling and bars an action brought after its period has run, even if the action is brought within the second statutory period (Anson v. County of Merced (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 1199, 1202, 249 Cal. Rptr. 457).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [see § 143.30], when the party seeking to demur claims that the plaintiff's action is time-barred under a particular statute of limitations, even though the action is not time-barred under a different statute of limitations, because the two statutes have equal application but the former sets forth a shorter period of limitation than the latter and is therefore controlling.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shorter Limitation Period Controls

In Anson v. County of Merced (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 249 Cal. Rptr. 457 , plaintiff served a claim for damages for medical negligence by county health care providers on the county's board of supervisors. The claim was rejected, and plaintiff served a notice of intention to file suit on defendants pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 364. Plaintiff filed a complaint within the one-year statute of limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for medical malpractice actions, but after the expiration of the six-month statutory period of Gov. Code § 945.6 for filing an action against a public entity after a claim is rejected. Defendant demurred on statute of limitations grounds. Plaintiff unsuccessfully argued that the action was governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and not by Gov. Code § 945.6. The trial court disagreed, sustained the demurrer, and dismissed the action.

The court of appeal reversed, agreeing that Gov. Code § 945.6 applied but also holding that the action was not time-barred under that statute because the filing of the notice of intention under Code Civ. Proc. § 364 had been timely and had tolled the limitations period (202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 1204-1205) . In reaching its conclusion that Gov. Code § 945.6 applied, the court explained that both that statute and Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 are given effect. The court discussed both statutes as being parts of two separate legislative schemes (MICRA (Medical Injury Compensation Reform Act) and the Torts Claims Act) that stand on equal footing, neither being more specific than the other. Both address specific areas of the law, government tort liability and medical negligence liability. The medical negligence statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5, enacted after Gov. Code § 945.6, was a response to a growing crisis over malpractice insurance premiums, with the intent of limiting medical malpractice claims. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 fails to address the conflict with Gov. Code § 945.6, an intent may be inferred that the statutory period of Gov. Code § 945.6 remain in full force and effect. Thus, long-standing principles of statutory construction and the legislative intent behind both statutes to limit actions required the conclusion that both statutes be given effect, resulting in the shorter Gov. Code § 945.6 period being applied as the controlling one (202 Cal. App. 3d 1195, 1199-1202)

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.23

§ 143.23 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amended Statute of Limitations Is Controlling

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a general demurrer (see § 143.20)]

_____ [Specify particular statute], AS AMENDED, EFFECTIVE _____[specify date], SHORTENED THE LIMITATION PERIOD FOR COMMENCING AN ACTION FOR _____ [specify nature of action] AND APPLIES RETROSPECTIVELY TO BAR PLAINTIFF'S ACTION.

Shortened Statute of Limitations Applicable Retroactively. It is well settled that retrospective application of a shortened limitations period is permissible provided the party has reasonable time to avail himself or herself of his or her remedy before the statute cuts off his or her rights (Edward Fineman Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1125, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478 (quoting Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 297, 236 Cal. Rptr. 347)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [see § 143.20], when the party seeking to demur claims that the plaintiff's action is time-barred under an amended statute of limitations that has shortened the limitations period and the plaintiff under the amended statute still had a reasonable time within which to proceed with plaintiff's cause of action. For further discussion of the effect of amending a statute of limitations extending, or shortening, the period, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Shortened Statute of Limitations Applicable Retroactively

Edward Fineman Co. v. Superior Court (1998) 66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 78 Cal. Rptr. 2d 478 , involved an action for breach of contract, negligence, and for damages under Com. Code § 4103. Plaintiff maintained a payroll checking account at defendant's bank between 1991 and 1997. Between January 1, 1991, and June 1, 1996, defendant honored and paid 83 checks drawn on the account signed by one rather than two authorized signatures as required by the terms of the account. On May 24, 1996, defendant bank was contacted by plaintiff and directed to remove the signer as an authorized signature for the plaintiff's checking account. This was the first time defendant received any information that the signer had drawn and negotiated checks on the plaintiff's account contrary to the terms of the account signature contract. Plaintiff demanded that defendant replace and recredit plaintiff's payroll checking account in the amount of all sums charged for payment of the checks signed by the one signer. Defendant refused and plaintiff sued to recover the sums paid on the checks. Plaintiff initially filed its action in July, 1997. Defendant bank moved for summary adjudication of issues with respect to twenty-three checks drawn between January 1, 1991, and January 1, 1993, on the grounds that the claims were barred by Com. Code § 4111 (three-year statute of limitation) and Com. Code § 4406(f) (no action against bank for unauthorized payment if customer fails to discover and report unauthorized signature or alteration within one year of availability of statement or cancelled checks). Plaintiff opposed the motion arguing, among other things, that Com. Code § 4111 and Com. Code § 4406(f) did not apply because they were not enacted until 1992 and only became effective in January, 1993. Th argument regarding Com. Code § 4406(f) necessarily involved application of Com. Code § 3403(b), also amended in 1992 and effective 1993, which defines an unauthorized signature to include checks lacking a required signature. Because Com. Code § 4406(f)'s discover and report provisions are only triggered by checks with unauthorized signatures, the retroactive application of Com. Code § 3403(b) was necessarily implicated. The trial court granted defendant bank's motion and issued an order of summary adjudication holding that plaintiff's claim concerning the twenty-three 1991-1993 checks were barred by Com. Code §§ 4111, and 4406(f). Plaintiff sought writ review (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1113-1115) .

The court of appeal denied plaintiff's petition (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1126) . With regard to Com. Code § 4111, the court noted that the three-year statute of limitations of Com. Code § 4111 became effective in January, 1993. Section 4111 provides that specified actions shall be commenced within three years after the cause of action accrues. All the causes of action based on the twenty-three 1991-1993 checks accrued within that time span. Thus, the time in which to pursue recovery expired because the present action was not filed until 1997 (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1125) . There was no dispute that Com. Code § 4111 is a statute of limitations. As such it applies retroactively (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1125) . Quoting Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 297, 236 Cal. Rptr. 347 , the court stated it is well settled that retrospective application of a shortened limitations period is permissible provided the party has reasonable time to avail himself or herself of his or her remedy before the statute cuts off his or her rights (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1125) . Com. Code § 4111 became effective in 1993, leaving plaintiff with an entire year to file its action (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1125) .

With regard to Com. Code § 4406(f), the court concluded that Section 4406 is not per se a statute of limitations but instead is an issue-preclusion statute. Unlike a statute of limitations, it does not purport to bar an action against a bank. Rather, it simply precludes a customer from asserting a forgery or alteration against the bank if the customer failed to discover and report the forgery or alteration to the bank. That is, the statutory prerequisite of timely reporting discrepancies is a condition precedent to suing for recovery of any unauthorized payments (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1119) . Prior to 1993, in Far West Citrus, Inc. v. Bank of America (1979) 91 Cal. App. 3d 913, 154 Cal. Rptr. 464 , it was held that a check bearing only one of two required signatures was not an item bearing an "unauthorized" signature (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1119-1120) . Com. Code § 3403(b) was amended in 1993 to provide that if more than one person's signature is required to constitute the authorized signature of an organization, the organization's signature is unauthorized if one of the required signatures is lacking. The amendment is directly contrary to the holding in Far West Citrus, Inc. and unequivocally imposes the obligations of Com. Code § 4406(f) on customers with checking accounts that require more than one signature (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1120) . Plaintiff contended that the amendment was a change in substantive law that could not be applied retroactively. On the other hand, defendant bank argued that the Legislature intended Com. Code § 3403(b) to be clarifying legislation declaring not only what the law is, but what it had been. When the Legislature clarifies an existing provision of law it operates retroactively on the premise that the clarification is simply stating what the declared law is and as always been (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1120-1122). The court noted authority in accord with the proposition that clarifying enactments and amendments operate retroactively and nullify decisional law inconsistent with the Legislature's declared intent (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1122-1124) . Construing Section 3403(b) as a clarification of existing law, the court concluded that the twenty-three 1991-1993 checks, lacking a second required signature, fell within the classification of items that must be discovered and reported pursuant to Section 4406(f). Having failed to discover and report them within the one-year period, plaintiff was precluded from pursuing recovery against defendant bank (66 Cal. App. 4th 1110, 1125) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

92 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.24

§ 143.24 Supporting General Demurrer to a Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc §§ 340.1(l), 430.10(f)]--Failure of Plaintiff to Timely File Required Certificates of Merit in Childhood Sexual Abuse Case When Plaintiff 26 Years or Older at Time Action Filed [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.1(g), (h)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.20[1]).]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS _____ [26 YEARS OLD or OVER 26 YEARS OF AGE] WHEN HE/SHE FILED THIS ACTION FOR DAMAGES ALLEGEDLY SUFFERED AS A RESULT OF CHILDHOOD SEXUAL ABUSE AND PLAINTIFF FAILED TO TIMELY FILE THE CERTIFICATES OF MERIT REQUIRED BY CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.1(e), (f).

A. Limitation Period for Bringing an Action. A civil action for recovery of damages suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse must be commenced within eight years of the date plaintiff attains the age of majority or within three years of the date the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered that psychological injury or illness occurring after the age of majority was caused by sexual abuse, whichever period expires later, for any of the following actions: (1) an action against any person for committing an act of childhood sexual abuse; (2) an action for liability against any person or entity who owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, where a wrongful or negligent act by that person or entity was a legal cause of the childhood sexual abuse which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff; (3) an action for liability against any person or entity where an intentional act by that person or entity was a legal cause of the childhood sexual abuse which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(1)-(3)). No action described in Code of Civil Procedure, Section 340.1(a)(2) or (3), however, may be commenced on or after the plaintiff's 26th birthday (Code Civ. Proc. 340.1(b)(1)), unless the person or entity against whom the action is commenced pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) or (3) knew, had reason to know, or was otherwise on notice, of any unlawful sexual conduct by an employee, volunteer, representative, or agent, and failed to take reasonable steps, and implement reasonable safeguards, to avoid future acts of unlawful sexual conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(2)) (as to revival of such actions, see Code

Civ. Proc. § 340.1(c)).

B. Required Certificates of Merit. Every plaintiff 26 years old or more at the time an action for damages for childhood sexual abuse is filed must file certificates of merit as specified in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(g) (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(g)). These certificates consist of a certificate of merit executed by plaintiff's attorney after plaintiff's attorney has consulted with at least one licensed mental health practitioner, and a certificate of merit executed by a licensed mental health practitioner (Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(h)(1), (2)). If plaintiff's attorney is unable to consult with a licensed mental health practitioner before the running of the statute of limitations, and thus is unable to execute a certificate of merit and obtain a licensed mental health practitioner's certificate of merit before expiration of the statute of limitations, plaintiff's attorney must file a certificate explaining this. When such a certificate is filed, the plaintiff's attorney certificate of merit and the licensed mental health practitioner's certificate of merit must be filed within 60 days after filing of the complaint (Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(h)). The attorney for the plaintiff must execute a separate certificate of merit for each defendant named in the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(i)).

C. Objection by Demurrer. The failure to file certificates in accordance with Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1 is grounds for a demurrer under Code of Civil Procedure Section 430.10 (Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(l)). The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint on the grounds that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(g)). When any ground for objection to a complaint appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, the objection on that ground may be taken by a demurrer to the complaint (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

D. Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer. [See § 143.20[1], Paragraph B.]

E. Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend. When a complaint seeking to recover damages for childhood sexual abuse is timely filed, but the certificates of merit required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(g) as specified in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(h)(1), (2) have not been filed within the statute of limitations period for the action and plaintiff's attorney has not filed within that period a certificate in accordance with Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(h)(3) explaining that he or she was unable to consult with a licensed mental health practitioner as required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(h)(1) before the running of the statute of limitations and could not execute a certificate of merit and obtain a licensed mental health practitioner's certificate of merit as required by Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(h)(1), (2) before expiration of the statute of limitations, a demurrer to the complaint should be sustained without leave to amend (Doyle v. Fenster (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1705-1707, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 327).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint brought by a plaintiff 26 years of age or older at the time the action is filed who seeks recovery of damages allegedly suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse when the action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations period because (1) the certificates of merit required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(g) as specified in Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(h)(1), (2), that is, the certificates of merit executed by the plaintiff's attorney and a licensed mental health practitioner, have not been filed within the statute of limitations period for the action and (2) plaintiff's attorney has not filed within that period a certificate in accordance with Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(h)(3) explaining that he or she was unable to consult with a licensed mental health practitioner as required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(h)(1) before the running of the limitations period and was unable to execute a certificate of merit and obtain a licensed mental health practitioner's certificate of merit as required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(h)(1), (2) before expiration of the statute of limitations.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, specifically identifying the paragraph or paragraphs in the complaint that show the plaintiff's age at the time of filing the complaint, and the absence from the record of the required certificates or the untimeliness of any certificates that may have been filed.

Counsel should consult local court rules at ascertain if there are any local requirements concerning demurrers or the taking of judicial notice.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points and authorities may be used to support a defendant's motion to strike. The failure to file certificates in accordance with Code Civ. Proc § 340.1 is grounds for a motion to strike pursuant to Code Civ. Proc § 435 [Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(l)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend

In Doyle v. Fenster (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 327 , plaintiff, who was 28 years old, filed an action seeking to recover damages for psychological injury that resulted from sexual abuse that she allegedly suffered as a child. It was not disputed that plaintiff's complaint was filed within the statutory limitations period. However, the certificates of merit required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(d) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(g)) as specified in Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(1), (2) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(1), (2)), that is, the certificates of merit executed by the plaintiff's attorney and a licensed mental health practitioner, were not filed with the complaint nor were they filed before the three year statutory period ended in which to bring the action. Moreover, plaintiff's attorney never filed a certificate under Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(3) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(3)) explaining that he or she was unable to consult with a licensed mental health practitioner as required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(1) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(1)) before the running of the statute of limitations and that the certificates of merit from plaintiff's attorney and the mental health practitioner as required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(1), (2) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(1), (2)) could not be obtained before the running of the statute of limitations. After being served with the complaint, defendants filed a demurrer to it pursuant to Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(i) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(l)) which provides that the failure to file certificates in accordance with Code Civ. Proc § 340.1 is grounds for a demurrer pursuant to Code Civ. Proc § 430.10. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer and dismissed plaintiff's action agreeing with the defendants' argument that the certificates of merit required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(1), (2) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(1), (2)) must be filed prior to or at the filing of the complaint unless plaintiff's attorney files a certificate under Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(3) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(3)) explaining why the certificates could not be obtained before the running of the statute of limitations (47 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1705) .

The court of appeal affirmed the sustaining of the demurrer and the dismissal of the action. In so doing the court held that Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(e)(1), (2) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)(1), (2)) certificates of merit required by Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(d) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(g)) must be filed within the statute of limitations period for bring an action for damages suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse (47 Cal. App. 4th 1701, 1705-1707) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Required Certificate of Merit

In Tietge v. Western Province Of The Servites, Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 382, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53 , plaintiffs alleged they were sexually molested over a period of time, and filed separate actions against a religious brother who was also a parochial schoolteacher, and his religious order. Defendants demurred on the grounds that the actions were time barred, pointing out the alleged molestation occurred from 9 to 26 years before the actions were filed. Relying on the then applicable statute of limitations, the trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend, but while plaintiffs' appeals were pending, the legislature retroactively amended the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment as to the religious order, holding that the limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1did not apply to the religious order. The court reversed the judgment as to the brother, holding that the enlarged limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 applied to that action. In response to the brother's argument that the plaintiffs failed to file a certificate of merit as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(e) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(g)), the court held that just as the plaintiffs received the benefits of the 1994 amendment (providing for retroactive application of the statute), they must also assume its burdens. To the extent the plaintiffs did not comply with the procedural requirements of the statute, the brother may raise those claims in the trial court (55 Cal. App. 4th 382, 387) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

93 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.25

§ 143.25 Supporting General Demurrer to a Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a), (b)]--Failure of Plaintiff to File Timely Action for Recovery of Damages Suffered as a Result of Childhood Sexual Abuse When Plaintiff 26 Years or Older at Time Action Commenced

[1] FORM

[Caption, See § 143.20[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND BECAUSE PLAINTIFF WAS _____[26 YEARS OLD or OVER 26 YEARS OF AGE] WHEN HE/SHE FILED THIS ACTION FOR DAMAGES ALLEGEDLY SUFFERED AS A RESULT OF CHILDHOOD SEXUAL ABUSE AND CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE § 340.1 [(a) or (a), (b)] BARS COMMENCEMENT OF THE ACTION.

A. Limitation Period For Bringing Action. A civil action for recovery of damages suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse must be commenced within eight years of the date plaintiff attains the age of majority or within three years of the date plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered that psychological injury or illness occurring after the age of majority was caused by sexual abuse, whichever period expires later, for any of the following actions: (1) an action against any person for committing an act of childhood sexual abuse; (2) an action for liability against any person or entity who owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, where a wrongful or negligent act by that person or entity was a legal cause of the childhood sexual abuse which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff; (3) an action for liability against any person or entity where an intentional act by that person or entity was a legal cause of the childhood sexual abuse which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(1)-(3)). No action described in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(a)(2) or (3), however, may be commenced on or after the plaintiff's 26th birthday (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(1)), unless the person or entity against whom the action is commenced pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) or (3) knew, had reason to know, or was otherwise on notice, of any unlawful sexual conduct by an employee, volunteer, representative, or agent, and failed to take reasonable steps, and implement reasonable safeguards, to avoid future acts of unlawful sexual conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(2)) (as to revival of such actions, see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(c); Hightower v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Sacramento (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 759, 48 Cal.

Rptr. 3d 420). The revival language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 is inapplicable to childhood sex abuse actions where a final judgment had been entered under the statute of limitations that previously existed (Perez v. Roe 1 (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 171, 187-188, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 762 (separation of powers doctrine)).

B. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 143.20[1], Paragraph A.]

C. Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer. [See § 143.20[1], Paragraph B.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint brought by a plaintiff 26 years of age or older at the time the action is commenced who seeks recovery of damages allegedly suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse when the action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations period set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a), (b).

Counsel may consider adding to the form a paragraph D. Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend. For an example of such a paragraph, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

If the facts warrant, counsel may also consider adding a point dealing with Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 concerning nonrevival of actions or causes of action as to which there has been a final adjudication before January 1, 1999. See § 143.52 Optional Point F, that may be modified concerning this point.

Similarly, if the facts warrant, counsel may also consider adding a point dealing with Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(t) which provides that nothing in the amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 enacted at the 1998 portion of the 1997-1998 Regular Session is intended to create a new theory of liability [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1; Stats 1998, Ch 1032].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated, specifically identifying the paragraph or paragraphs in the complaint that show the plaintiff's age at the time of commencement of the action and the action's untimeliness.

Counsel should consult local court rules to ascertain any local requirements concerning demurrers or judicial notice.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Bringing Action

In Hightower v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Sacramento (2006) 142 Cal. App. 4th 759, 48 Cal. Rptr. 3d 420 , plaintiff sued the church bishop for sexual assault allegedly committed by a priest from 1970 to 1972. The trial court sustained the bishop's demurrers to the complaint without leave to amend on the ground the statue of limitations had expired. The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment. The court concluded the plaintiff's claims were time-barred. Plaintiff's complaint fell within the class of claims described by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(2). Because plaintiff was older than 26 years of age when the 1998 amendments to the statute took effect, the statute of limitations ran on those claims in 1977, and plaintiff's complaint was subject to the one-year revival period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(c). Plaintiff contended that he met the filing deadline because the notice of intent to sue he filed on December 31, 2003, was in fact a complaint. The Court of Appeal disagreed, concluding that the document was a motion and not a complaint and failed to invoke the court's jurisdiction. The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that his April 2004 complaint was timely because the delayed discovery rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a), and (b)(2) applied. Although the Legislature extended the limitations period date when the plaintiff discovered that his psychological injuries were caused by sexual abuse, it revived for only one year all such claims that were already time-barred. Therefore, the new discovery rule did not revive plaintiff's previously lapsed claims.

In Perez v. Roe 1 (2006) 146 Cal. App. 4th 171, 52 Cal. Rptr. 3d 762 , two plaintiffs brought suit against a Roman Catholic bishop in July 2003, alleging that they had been the victims of sexual abuse by one of its parish priests in the late 1970s and early 1980s, when they were both minors. Plaintiffs had each sued the bishop in previous suits, but their complaints were dismissed in 1994 and 1995, respectively, under the then applicable one-year statute of limitations. The trial court dismissed plaintiffs' current lawsuit against the bishop on the ground that the statute purporting to revive their previously dismissed complaints (Code Civ. Proc., § 340.1) violated the state's constitutional separation of powers doctrine. The Court of Appeal affirmed the judgment, concluding that the Legislature violated the separation of powers doctrine when it amended Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 to revive childhood sex abuse actions because final judgments had been entered in the earlier actions under the statute of limitations that previously existed. Once the judgments against plaintiffs in the previous actions were upheld on appeal, they became final for separation of powers purposes and could not be legislatively revived. Because the power to conclusively resolve cases by rendering dispositive judgments rests with the judiciary alone, the Legislature could not reverse final judgments that were rendered under the previous limitations period of § 340.1 (146 Cal. App. 4th 171, 187-188) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.26

§ 143.26 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2]--Failure of Plaintiff to Timely File Equitable Indemnity Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative

[1] FORM

[Caption, See § 143.20[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE ONE YEAR LIMITATION PERIOD OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 366.2(a) BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT DEMONSTRATES THAT THE ACTION FOR EQUITABLE INDEMNITY WAS UNTIMELY COMMENCED AGAINST THE PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE(S) FOR DECEDENT'S ESTATE.

A. Limitation Period for Bringing Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative. If a person against whom an action may be brought on a liability of the person, whether arising in contract, tort, or otherwise, and whether or not accrued, dies before the expiration of the applicable limitations period, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced within one year after the date of death, and the limitations period that would have been applicable does not apply (Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(a)). The Legislature's intent behind Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 is that the one-year statute of limitations applies to all actions against a decedent on which the statute of limitations otherwise applicable had not run at the time of death (Stoltenberg v. Newman (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 287, 296, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606).

B. Code of Civil Procedure Section 366.2 Limitations Period Applies to Equitable Indemnity Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative. Code of Civil Procedure Section 366.2 refers without qualification or restriction to "an action" on a liability of the decedent and applies to a liability "whether accrued or not accrued." Thus, section 366.2(a) bars a complaint or cross complaint for equitable indemnity against the personal representative(s) of decedent's estate filed more than one year after the decedent's death, despite the ordinary rule that an indemnity action does not accrue for statute of limitation purposes until a tort defendant pays a judgment or settlement for which that defendant is entitled to indemnity, when the one year limitation period of section 366.2(a) has not been tolled as provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(b) and the _____ [complaint's or cross complaint's] allegations fail to show that decedent had any insurance that would cover any of the claims at issue (see Bradley v. Breen (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 800, 803-805, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726). The _____ [complaint's or cross complaint's] allegations show that the equitable indemnity action against the decedent's personal representative(s) was commenced more than one year after the decedent's death in that _____ [specify]. The _____ [complaint's or cross complaint's] allegations _____ [show that the one year limitation period of section 366.2(a) was not tolled or do not show any basis on which the one year limitation period of section 366.2(a) would have been tolled] under Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(b). Moreover, the allegations fail to show that decedent had any insurance that would cover any of the claims at issue.

C. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 143.20[1], Paragraph A.]

D. Raising Statute of Limitations by Demurrer. [See § 143.20[1], Paragraph B.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for equitable indemnity brought against the personal representative for the decedent's estate when the action for equitable indemnity has been commenced more than one year after the decedent's death, the one year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(a) has not been tolled [see Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(b)], and the decedent does not have any insurance that would cover any of the claims at issue [see Bradley v. Breen (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 800, 803-805, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726].

Use of this form would not be appropriate if the action was commenced under Prob. Code § 550 et seq. against the decedent's estate to establish the decedent's liability for which the decedent was protected by insurance, because a different statute of limitations would apply in that case [see Prob. Code § 551].

Subject to the provisions governing creditor's claims, (Prob. Code § 9000 et seq.), a cause of action against a decedent that survives may be asserted against the decedent's personal representative, or to the extent provided by statute, against the decedent's successor in interest [see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.40].

Paragraph A assumes that the decedent died on or after January 1, 1993 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(c)]. Other versions of Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 apply to decedents who died before that date [see § 143.40].

Counsel may consider adding to the form a Paragraph F. Sustaining Demurrer Without Leave to Amend. For an example of such a paragraph, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitation Period for Bringing Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative.

In Stoltenberg v. Newman (2009) 179 Cal. App. 4th 287, 101 Cal. Rptr. 3d 606 , plaintiff limited partners sought review of a summary judgment in favor of defendants, a trust, a corporation, and a shareholder, in a suit for breach of fiduciary duty and an accounting. The trust was a general partner of two entities that owned a shopping mall in which the limited partners had invested. After the trustee died and his wife became the successor trustee, the mall was sold. More than one year after the trustee's death, the limited partners filed a complaint alleging that the trustee had obtained their consent to a refinancing transaction by concealing information from them. The court held that the action was one that could have been brought on a liability of the person, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(a), and that it was based on a debt of the decedent trustee even though it had been brought against the successor trustee. The complaint named the successor trustee as the party defendant only to pursue trust assets for the alleged personal misconduct of the decedent trustee, based on acts completed entirely before he died, and for which he could have been held personally liable. The court stated that Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 was intended to impose a time limit on such claims, regardless of the party against whom the action was brought. The substance of the claims in the case was for the personal misconduct of the settlor/trustee on behalf of and for the benefit of the trust, that was completed entirely before the settlor/trustee died, and for which the settlor/trustee could have been held personally liable. The action is one that could have been "brought on a liability of the person" (Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(a)), and is based " 'on a debt of the decedent' " (citing Collection Bureau of San Jose v. Rumsey (2000) 24 Cal. 4th 301, 308, 99 Cal. Rptr. 2d 792, 6 P.3d 713) even though brought against the successor trustee. The successor trustee is the named party defendant only to pursue trust assets for the acts of the deceased. Section 366.2 was intended to impose a time limit on such claims, "regardless of whom the action was brought against ... ." Accordingly, the claims against the trust were barred by section 366.2 (179 Cal. App. 4th 287, 293-294) .

[b] Code of Civil Procedure Section 366.2 Limitations Period Applies to Equitable Indemnity Action Against Decedent's Personal Representative

In Bradley v. Breen (1999) 73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 726 , decedent in 1990 pled guilty in a case involving lewd acts with a minor. Also in 1990, the minor filed an action against the decedent. In 1993, the decedent died in prison. Almost four years after decedent's death, in January, 1997, the minor filed a personal injury action against two individuals alleging, among other things, that they aided and abetted in decedent's molestation of him and seeking damages under various legal theories. The minor alleged that he was not aware of the individuals' complicity in causing his injuries until February of 1996, because of repressed memory syndrome related to the childhood sexual abuse. The individual defendants then cross complained against the decedent's estate and others for indemnity, apportionment of fault, and declaratory relief. The estate filed a demurrer to the cross-complaint based on the statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the cross complaint as against the estate and its personal representatives. An appeal ensued (73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 800-801) .

The court of appeal affirmed. The court initially held that Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 applies to cross complaints as well as to direct actions (73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 803-804) . Then the court, noting that section 366.2 applies to a liability "whether accrued or not accrued," concluded that the cross complaint against the decedent's estate for equitable indemnity, filed more than one year after decedent's death, was barred by section 366.2 despite the ordinary rule that an indemnity action does not accrue for statute of limitation purposes until a tort defendant pays a judgment or settlement for which that defendant is entitled to indemnity. The only conclusion possible from the plain and unambiguous language of section 366.2, is that it applies to bar the action for equitable indemnity, regardless of whether that action has accrued under ordinary rules applicable to such claims (73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 800, 804-805) . The court further noted that with section 366.2, the Legislature has made a public policy determination that effectively limits or qualifies the right to indemnity. The Legislature has determined that the one-year statute of limitations will best effectuate the strong public policy of expeditious and final estate administration, despite the possibility that in a rare case, such as the present one, an action for equitable indemnity may be foreclosed (73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 800, 805-806) .

The court also rejected cross complainants' suggestion that they should have been permitted to amend their complaint to state a cause of action for which decedent had insurance, to which to section 366.2 statute of limitations would not apply. The court noted that the cross complainants made no showing that decedent had any insurance that would cover any of the claims at issue and did not sustain their burden to prove the reasonable probability that the defects in their cross complaint could be cured by amendment (73 Cal. App. 4th 798, 800, 806) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Application of Code of Civil Procedure Section 366.2

Farb v. Superior Court (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 678, 94 Cal. Rptr. 3d 586 arose from a surrogacy contract between a decedent and his former wife and a surrogate mother. Prior to the children's birth, the decedent dissolved the marriage, and he provided no financial support for the children. It was undisputed that the complaint was filed more than one year after the decedent's death and that none of the enumerated exceptions in Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 applied. In accordance with the plain language of § 366.2, the one-year limitations period was not tolled during the minority of the children. Moreover, the one-year limitations period in Section 366.2 applied to an action on the liability of a deceased person, without regard to the location of the decedent's personal representative or estate.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.27

§ 143.27 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Discovery Rule Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a general demurrer (see § 143.20).]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF CANNOT ESTABLISH THAT THE DISCOVERY RULE IS APPLICABLE.

A. Discovery Rule Inapplicable. A plaintiff whose complaint shows on its face that his or her complaint would be barred without the benefit of the discovery rule must specifically plead facts to show (1) the time and manner of discovery and (2) the inability to have made earlier discovery despite reasonable diligence. The burden is on the plaintiff to show diligence and conclusory allegations will not withstand demurrer (Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1248, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 ; State of California v. CCC Information Services, Inc. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 402, 413, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 156 ; Traditional Cat Association, Inc. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 404, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353 ; McKelvey v. Boeing North American, Inc. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 160, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645).

B. The Single Publication Rule Renders The Delayed Discovery Rule Inapplicable. The single-publication rule provides that, for any single edition of a newspaper or book, there is but a single potential action for a defamatory statement contained in the newspaper or book, no matter how many copies of the newspaper or the book were distributed; and the accrual of the cause of action in that case is not delayed by the discovery rule when the defamation occurred by means of a book, magazine, or newspaper that was distributed to the public (Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1248, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676). The single publication rule applies to all publications, including those that receive only limited circulation and, thus, are not generally distributed to the public (Hebrew Academy of San Francisco v. Goldman (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 883, 890, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178, 173 P.3d 1004).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum should be combined with a general memorandum in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [see § 143.20], when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, of from matter of which the court is required or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the statute of limitation and the plaintiff has not alleged facts showing a delayed accrual of the cause of action based on the discovery rule.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Rule Inapplicable

In Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 , plaintiff's complaint alleged defamation based on the boyfriend's telling the attorney that plaintiff was a felony probationer, the attorney's repetition of the statement to the author, and the author's publication of a book containing the same statement. The boyfriend's demurrer was sustained based on the one-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c), and the court granted summary judgment to the attorney and the county. Plaintiff filed her claim with the County on May 12, 1997, and her complaint on October 22, 1997. By contrast, the first alleged defamation was published in 1994, more than one year prior to the filing of the complaint and more than six months prior to the filing of the claim with the County. The second alleged defamation was published in 1996 sometime prior to September. The third alleged defamation was communicated by means of the book, thousands of copies of which were distributed for sale in California, on a date (as plaintiff concedes) prior to October 21, 1996. Even considering October 21, 1996 to be the date of publication, the complaint was filed a year and a day after that date and the claim with the County was filed more than six months after that date. Plaintiff appealed contending that pursuant to the so-called discovery rule, all of her causes of action accrued when she first learned of the defamatory statement. She urges that, as a general rule of tort law, the accrual of a cause of action is tolled until the time the plaintiff knows (or with reasonable diligence should have known) that the injury occurred. In her case, she claims, accrual occurred in December 1996, when she bought and read a copy of the book, A Problem of Evidence. She asserted that the applicable statute of limitations should run from that time for all of her causes of action.

The appellate court held that in a claim for defamation, as with other tort claims, the period of limitations commences when the cause of action accrues, and a cause of action for defamation accrues at the time the defamatory statement is "published" (using the term "published" in its technical sense) (31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1246-1247) . With respect to books and newspapers, publication occurs (and the cause of action accrues) when the book or newspaper is first generally distributed to the public. When the basis for a claim has been published in the public record or has been the subject of publicity, several cases have declined to apply the discovery rule, commenting that the plaintiff may be expected to be sufficiently diligent to discover the basis for his or her claim within the statutory period. Courts in California and elsewhere have recognized that in certain circumstances it may be appropriate to apply the discovery rule to delay the accrual of a cause of action for defamation or to impose an equitable estoppel against defendants who assert the defense after the limitations period has expired. However, that rule has been applied when the defamatory statement is hidden from view as, for example, in a personnel file that generally cannot be inspected by the plaintiff (31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1249) . The discovery rule has not, however, been applied to postpone the accrual of a cause of action based upon the publication of a defamatory statement contained in a book or newspaper. The rule constitutes an exception to general rules concerning the accrual of a cause of action--an exception based upon equity. Courts uniformly have rejected the application of the discovery rule to libels published in books, magazines, and newspapers, pointing out that application of the discovery rule would undermine the protection provided by the single-publication rule (31 Cal. 4th 1230, 1250) .

In State of California v. CCC Information Services, Inc. (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 402, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 156 , plaintiff insured filed a qui tam action on behalf of the State of California, alleging that defendant company violated Ins. Code § 1871.7 by making false or misleading statements in connection with the settlement of the insured's automobile insurance claim following an accident in which the insured's car suffered a total loss; the statements at issue consisted of the "comparable automobile" valuations defendant provided to the insured's insurance company in the claim settlement process. The trial court found the action barred by the three-year statute of limitations specified in Ins. Code § 1871.7, as the insured had inquiry notice more than three years before he filed the complaint against defendant. The insured's action did not involve a recurring obligation or any such periodic payment obligations, nor did the insured's conspiracy allegations toll the running of the statute because they amounted to bare legal conclusions.

In affirming the trial court's holding, the court of appeal considered the legal question of whether Ins. Code § 1871.7's limitation period requires reasonable inquiry notice or actual notice of the actionable facts. The court held that the plaintiff discovers the cause of action when he at least suspects a factual basis, as opposed to a legal theory, for its elements, even if he lacks knowledge thereof. He has reason to discover the cause of action when he has reason at least to suspect a factual basis for its elements. Such reasonable suspicion exists when the plaintiff has notice or information of circumstances to put a reasonable person on inquiry (149 Cal. App. 4th 402, 413) .

In Traditional Cat Association, Inc. v. Gilbreath (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 353 , plaintiffs brought an action alleging that statements made by defendants on an Internet Web site were defamatory. The Web site at issue was created by defendants in 1998; however, the lawsuit was not brought by plaintiffs until 2002. The statute of limitations for defamation actions is one year. Accordingly, the defendants challenged the complaint through a motion to strike and a demurrer on the ground that it was barred by the statute of limitations. The accrual of causes of action growing out of the publication of defamatory or other tortious statements is governed by the single-publication rule. This rule states that one cause of action will arise and the statute of limitations will begin running upon the first general publication or broadcast of a tortious statement, no matter how many copies are distributed or how many people hear or see the broadcast. A subsequent republication gives rise to a new single cause of action. The court held that this single-publication rule applies to statements published on Internet Web sites (118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 404) . In this instance, therefore, the cause of action began to accrue when the statements were first made on the Web site. There was no evidence of republication within the limitations period. Therefore, the appellate court held that the defamation claim should be stricken from the complaint as a matter of law (118 Cal. App. 4th 392, 404) .

In McKelvey v. Boeing North American, Inc. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645 , involving consolidated cases, a class action naming several defendants, the issue was whether plaintiffs had pled facts sufficient to establish delayed discovery of their claims. Defendants in the class action, and defendant in the other actions (who had also been named as a defendant in the class action), had demurred to all causes of action in plaintiffs complaints contending the substantive claims were all barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b) and Code Civ. Proc. § 340(b) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)) and on its face the pleadings were insufficient to show delayed discovery. In two earlier actions, including the class action, the trial court had sustained the demurrers, final orders of dismissal were entered and plaintiffs appealed. In two later actions, the trial court overruled most of the demurrers, although one was sustained without leave to amend and two were sustained with leave to amend. Defendant in those actions then filed petitions for writ of mandate in which it asked the court of appeal to compel the trial judge to vacate the orders and sustain the demurrers without leave to amend (74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 155-159) .

The court of appeal, with regard to the earlier two actions affirmed the judgments, and with regard to the two later actions granted the petitions and issued peremptory writs directing the trial court (1) to vacate its orders on the demurrers and (2) to issue new orders sustaining the demurrers without leave to amend (74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 162) . The court noted that by their reliance on the "discovery rule" plaintiffs conceded by implication that, without it, their claims were barred by one or more statutes of limitations. The common law rule, that an action for personal injury or property damages accrues on the date of injury, applies only as modified by the discovery rule, which provides that the accrual date of a cause of action is delayed until the plaintiff is aware of his or her injury and its negligent cause. The plaintiff is charged with this awareness as of date plaintiff suspects or should suspect that his or her injury was caused by wrongdoing, that someone has done something wrong to him or her. Accordingly, the period of limitations begins to run without regard to whether the plaintiff is aware of the specific facts necessary to establish his or her claim, provided that plaintiff has suspicion of wrongdoing, which he or she is charged with once he or she has notice or information of circumstances that would cause a reasonable person to inquire. A plaintiff whose complaint shows on its fact that his or her claim woul d be barred without the benefit of the discovery rule must specifically plead facts to show (1) the time and manner of discovery and (2) the inability to have made earlier discovery despite reasonable diligence. The burden is on the plaintiff to show diligence and conclusory allegations will not withstand demurrer (74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 160) . The court concluded that none of the complaints or amended complaints were sufficient because none of them disclosed the time or manner of discovery by any plaintiff. They offered only conclusory allegations. Plaintiffs did not allege that they were not aware of facts sufficient to make a reasonable prudent person sufficiently suspicious to investigate further. They did not allege facts about the time or manner of discovery and failed to allege facts showing their inability to have made earlier discovery despite due diligence (74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 160-161) . Moreover, plaintiffs on appeal and in opposition to the petitions did not suggest there were additional facts they could plead to satisfy the discovery rule, but instead asserted an abstract right to amend. They have no such right. The burden is on the plaintiff to show the manner in which plaintiff can amend, and how the amendment will cure the defect (74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 161) .

In regard to cases of injury or death arising from exposure to hazardous material or toxic substances, McKelvey v. Boeing North America, Inc. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645 has been overruled by the codification of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8 to the extent it is consistent with the following statutory language: Media reports regarding the hazardous material or toxic substance contamination do not, in and of themselves, constitute sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the injury or death was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another [Stats. 2003, Ch. 873; see § 143.55].

[b] The Single Publication Rule Renders The Delayed Discovery Rule Inapplicable

The facts and analysis of Shively v. Bozanich (2003) 31 Cal. 4th 1230, 7 Cal. Rptr. 3d 576, 80 P.3d 676 are discussed in § 143.27[3][a], above.

In Hebrew Academy of San Francisco v. Goldman (2007) 42 Cal. 4th 883, 70 Cal. Rptr. 3d 178 , plaintiffs, a Hebrew academy and its dean, sued defendants, a former president of the Jewish Community Federation of San Francisco and others, for defamation. The dean alleged that he had been defamed during an interview of the former president, as part of an oral history project that was published with only limited circulation. The interview was conducted in 1992, copyrighted for publication, and published in 1993. The trial court found that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c). The transcript of the interview was not published in an inherently secretive manner. Although not widely distributed, the transcript was available to the public. Because plaintiffs had access to the document from the time it was published, the discovery rule did not apply. The cause of action for defamation accrued under the single-publication rule no later than 1993, when the interview was published. The discovery rule did not delay the accrual of the cause of action, even though the interview received only limited circulation. The Court of Appeal reversed, concluding that the alleged defamation was not subject to the single-publication rule, and that the action was tolled by the discovery rule because the alleged libel was hidden or beyond what the ordinary person could be expected to immediately detect or comprehend.

The California Supreme Court reversed the appellate court decision, holding that the single publication rule, as codified by Civ. Code § 3245.3, applies to all publications, including those that receive only limited circulation and, thus, are not generally distributed to the public (42 Cal. 4th 883, 893). Although the transcript at issue here was not published and not widely distributed, the transcript was available to the public. Rabbi Lipner became aware of the transcript when a colleague discovered it while conducting research for a book about him. As stated in Shively, the discovery rule has been applied to defamation cases "when the defamatory statement is hidden from view as, for example, in a personnel file that generally cannot be inspected by the plaintiff ... . The cases turn upon the circumstances in which the defamatory statement is made and frequently involve a defamatory writing that has been kept in a place to which the plaintiff has no access or cause to seek access." Because plaintiffs in the present case had access to the document from the time it was published, the discovery rule did not apply (42 Cal. 4th 883, 894-895) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.28

§ 143.28 Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Tolling for Minority Under Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a) Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a general demurrer (see § 143.20).]

THE COURT SHOULD SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER TO PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT WITHOUT LEAVE TO AMEND BECAUSE THE TOLLING PROVISION FOR MINORITY UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE § 352(a) IS INAPPLICABLE BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF HAS BEEN EMANCIPATED AND THE APPLICABLE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS HAS EXPIRED.

Minor's Tolling Provision of Code of Civil Procedure § 352(a) Ceases to Apply and Minor's Causes of Action Accrue on Date of Emancipation. A minor who is emancipated by court order under Family Code section 7000 et seq. is, by operation of law, subject to all legal consequences of emancipation which are set forth in Family Code section 7050, including the right to sue or be sued in the minor's own name. Once emancipated, a minor is under no legal disability with respect to bringing his or her own claim. Therefore, the minor's tolling provision of Code of Civil Procedure § 352(a) no longer applies and the emancipated minor's causes of action accrue, and statute of limitations begins to run, on the date of emancipation (West Shield Investigations & Security Consultants v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 935, 949-951, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 612).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [see § 143.20], when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from matter of which the court is required or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred by the statute of limitations because minor plaintiff was emancipated by a court order and the applicable statute of limitations has expired.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Minor's Tolling Provision of Code of Civil Procedure § 352(a) Ceases to Apply and Minor's Causes of Action Accrue on Date of Emancipation

In West Shield Investigations & Security Consultants v. Superior Court (2000) 82 Cal. App. 4th 935, 98 Cal. Rptr. 2d 612 , plaintiff was emancipated from her parents by court order on May 8, 1995. Plaintiff turned 18 on September 8, 1995. On September 9, 1996, plaintiff filed suit against several defendants alleging numerous tort and civil rights causes of action. Defendants moved for summary judgment, or in the alternative, summary adjudication, arguing in relevant part that Code Civ. Proc. § 352, which mandates that statutes of limitations are tolled for minors, ceases to apply once the minor is emancipated because Fam. Code § 7050(e)(4) expressly provides that an emancipated minor's adult powers include the right to sue, and thus, the applicable statutes of limitations barred the actions. The trial court denied defendants' motions for summary judgment and denied in part and granted in part the motions for summary adjudication. Thereafter the defendants filed writ petitions seeking extraordinary relief from the trial court's order denying their motions for summary judgment and denying in part their motions for summary adjudication.

The court of appeal granted in part and denied in part the petitions for extraordinary relief (82 Cal. App. 4th 935, 940, 957) . In so doing, the court noted that a minor who is emancipated by court order under Family Code § 7000 et seq. is, by operation of law, subject to all legal consequences of emancipation which are set forth in Family Code § 7050, including the right to sue or be sued in the minor's own name. Once emancipated, a minor is under no legal disability with respect to bringing his or her own claim (82 Cal. App. 4th 935, 949) . Therefore, the court held that when a minor is emancipated by court order under Family Code § 7000 et seq., the minor's tolling provision of Code of Civil Procedure § 352(a) no longer applies and the emancipated minor's causes of action accrue, and statute of limitations begin to run, on the date of emancipation (82 Cal. App. 4th 935, 949-951) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.29

§ 143.29 Supporting Motion for Separate Trial of Special Defense [Code Civ. Proc. § 597]--Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
Plaintiff,	)	IES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SEPARATE
vs.	)	TRIAL OF SPECIAL DEFENSE
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

A MOTION FOR A SEPARATE TRIAL OF A SPECIAL DEFENSE IS PROPERLY GRANTED WHERE THE ANSWER PLEADS THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AS A BAR TO THE ACTION.

Separate Trial for Defense of Statute of Limitations. When the answer pleads that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, the court may, either on the court's own motion or on the motion of any party, proceed to the trial of such special defense before the trial of any other issue in the case (Code Civ. Proc. § 597).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's motion for the separate trial of the special defense, which has been pleaded in the answer, that the action is barred by a statute of limitations.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of motion for the separate trial of the special defense of limitation, and a form of order granting such a motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate TrialsGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.30

§ 143.30 Supporting Motion for Separate Trial of Defense on Statute of Limitations--Medical Malpractice [Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
Plaintiff,	)	IES IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR SEPARATE
vs.	)	TRIAL OF DEFENSE ON STATUTE OF LIMITA-
_____ [name],	)	TIONS
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
		Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

A MOTION FOR A SEPARATE TRIAL OF A DEFENSE ON THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IN AN ACTION AGAINST A _____ [specify, e.g., PHYSICIAN] IS PROPERLY GRANTED WHEN THE ANSWER PLEADS THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AS A BAR TO THE ACTION.

Separate Trial for Defense of Statute of Limitations. When the answer in an action for medical malpractice pleads that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, the court must, on the motion of either party, or on its own motion, proceed to try the issue separately and before any other issues in the case are tried (Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5; Kelemen v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 861, 864, 186 Cal. Rptr. 566).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's motion for a separate trial on the issue of the statute of limitations as a bar to an action involving medical malpractice pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in an action against a physician alleging professional negligence, counsel should cite the applicable statute that prescribes a certain time period in which to bring an action against the physician [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5], and allege facts showing that the action was not brought within the applicable time period.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Separate Trial for Defense of Statute of Limitations

Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5 provides that in an action against a physician or surgeon, dentist, registered nurse, dispensing optician, optometrist, registered physical therapist, podiatrist, licensed psychologist, osteopathic physician and surgeon chiropractor, clinical laboratory bioanalyst, clinical laboratory technologist, veterinarian, or a licensed hospital as the employer of any such person, based on such person's alleged professional negligence, or for rendering professional services without consent, or for error or omission in such person's practice, if the answer pleads that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, and if any party so moves or the court on its own motion requires, the issues raised thereby must be tried separately and before any other issues in the case are tried.

In Kelemen v. Superior Court (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 861, 186 Cal. Rptr. 566 , a minor, through her mother as guardian ad litem, brought an action for prenatal medical malpractice against defendant hospitals, alleging that her cerebral palsy was caused by defendants' negligence before and during her birth. The complaint alleged that plaintiff's mother did not know or have information by virtue of which she reasonably could have known of the injury and its negligent cause until seven months before the action was filed. Plaintiff was seven years old when the action was filed. One of the defendants who answered the complaint moved for a separate trial on the defense of the statute of limitations pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5, contending that the limitation period in former Civ. Code § 29 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4) applied. Former Section 29 provided that an action for prenatal injuries must be brought within six years from birth. Plaintiff argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 defined the applicable limitations period. Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 provides that a minor's medical malpractice action must be brought within three years or prior to his or her eighth birthday, whichever is the longer period. The trial court granted the motion on the ground that the legal question of which statute applied must be decided at a separate trial. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to set aside the order, contending that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 defined the applicable period of limitations and she was within that period as a matter of law.

The court of appeal denied the petition. The court held that pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 597.5, the trial court was required to try the statute of limitations issue separately before proceeding to trial on any other issues once defendant had pleaded the statute of limitations as a defense and had moved for a separate trial on the issue (136 Cal. App. 3d 861, 864) . The court went on to state that the limitation specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 rather than former Civ. Code § 29 was applicable in the underlying action because it was the later and more specific of the two statutes in question, and it is an integral part of an interrelated, comprehensive legislative scheme governing medical malpractice actions that supplanted the limitations period in former Section 29 (136 Cal. App. 3d 861, 864-868) .

Additional cases, which hold that medical malpractice actions by minors for injuries sustained prior to or in the course of birth are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 and not former Civ. Code § 29 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.4), include Young v. Haines (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 883, 894, 226 Cal. Rptr. 547, 718 P.2d 909 , and Donabedian v. Manzer (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1021, 1025, 232 Cal. Rptr. 325 .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePretrial MattersSeparate TrialsGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewTortsMalpractice & Professional LiabilityGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.31

§ 143.31 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations Not Apparent on Face of Complaint--General Form

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
Plaintiff,	)	IES IN OPPOSITION TO DEMURRER TO COM-
vs.	)	PLAINT
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHEN THE BAR DOES NOT APPEAR ON THE FACE OF THE PLEADING.

Defect Required to Appear on Face of Complaint. In order for the bar of a statute of limitations to be raised by demurrer, the defect must clearly and affirmatively appear on the face of the pleading. It is not enough that the complaint shows merely that the action may be barred (McMahon v. Republic Van & Storage Co., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 871, 874, 31 Cal. Rptr. 603, 382 P.2d 875 ; Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 281 Cal. Rptr. 827).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but it does not clearly and affirmatively appear on the face of the complaint, or from a matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the action is barred.

Counsel for plaintiff in such a case should be alert to the possibility that although the complaint may withstand a general demurrer, the trial court might be disposed to sustain a special demurrer on the ground of uncertainty or ambiguity where a fact bearing on the limitation of the action (such as a relevant date) has been omitted. If the action is in fact not barred, then perhaps the better practice is to offer a clarifying amendment to show that it is not barred, rather than to oppose the demurrer on what amounts to a technicality.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defect Required to Appear on Face of Complaint

McMahon v. Republic Van & Storage Co., Inc. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 871, 31 Cal. Rptr. 603, 382 P.2d 875 , was an action for the recovery of allegedly fraudulent overcharges for the storage and interstate transportation of goods. The trial court sustained a demurrer on the ground that the action was barred by a federal statute of limitations [former 49 U.S.C. § 16]; but the Supreme Court observed that as to some of the demurring defendants, there was no allegation in the complaint showing them to be carriers subject to the federal statute. The court held that in order for the bar of a statute of limitations to be raised by demurrer, the defect must clearly and affirmatively appear on the face of the pleading. The court reversed the judgment of dismissal that had been entered following the sustaining of the demurrer (59 Cal. 2d 871, 874-875) .

Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 281 Cal. Rptr. 827 , was an action by real property owners against parties who leased the property from prior owners and who allegedly contaminated the property with hazardous waste during the leasehold. The complaint alleged numerous counts, including one for equitable indemnity for the costs of testing the property and abatement of hazardous conditions that plaintiffs were compelled to incur by the government and one for declaratory relief delineating the parties' respective obligations for the testing and abatement costs. Defendants demurred to all counts on the grounds each failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and were barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to all but four of the counts. In reversing with respect to the 10th and 11th counts (equitable indemnity and declaratory relief, respectively), the court stated that in order for the bar of the statute of limitations to be raised by demurrer, the defect must clearly and affirmatively appear on the face of the complaint, and that it is not enough that the complaint shows merely that the action may be barred. Because the compliant did not disclose when the plaintiff incurred costs for testing or cleanup of the hazardous waste, neither the count for equitable indemnity nor the related claim for declaratory relief was subject to demurrer based on the statute of limitations (230 Cal. App. 3d 1125, 1155) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defect Required to Appear on Face of Complaint

Baright v. Willis (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 303, 198 Cal. Rptr. 510 , was an action for legal malpractice. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend on the grounds that the statute of limitations for the action had run. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order. The court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, a legal malpractice action must be filed within four years of the date when the alleged tort occurred and within one year of the date when the alleged tort was or should have been discovered (151 Cal. App. 3d 303, 308) . The court held that the action was filed within the four-year period. With respect to the one-year period, the trial court had found plaintiff to have had knowledge of the tort at a time more than one year before the action was filed when he consulted a second attorney as to possible actions to take against defendant. But the trial court had disregarded plaintiff's allegations that he was ignorant of the tort until he was informed of it by a third attorney, before the one-year filing period (151 Cal. App. 3d 303, 310) . The court restated the rule that when ruling on a general demurrer, all allegations must be deemed to be true and that a demurrer on the ground of the bar of limitations does not lie when the complaint merely shows that the action may have been barred. It must appear affirmatively that, on the facts alleged, the right of action is necessarily barred (151 Cal. App. 3d 303, 310-311) . The question of whether or not there has been a belated discovery of the cause of action is a question of fact which becomes a question of law only when reasonable minds can draw but one conclusion from the evidence. The court held that the complaint on its face did not support a conclusion as a matter of law that, in the exercise of due diligence, plaintiff should have discovered defendant's alleged negligence and failed to do so (151 Cal. App. 3d 303, 311) . The court noted that when there is a professional relationship between a plaintiff and defendant, the degree of diligence required of the plaintiff in ferreting out negligence for purposes of the statute of limitations is diminished. Plaintiff in this action was entitled to rely on the second attorney's advice, that no cause of action existed in not filing the action, until receiving advice from the third attorney (151 Cal. App. 3d 303, 311-312) .

Childs v. State of California (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 155, 192 Cal. Rptr. 526 , was a personal injury action against the state. The complaint alleged that a claim was presented and rejected by notice dated and mailed "on or about" six months and one day before the complaint was filed. Defendant demurred on the ground that the action was barred by Gov. Code § 945.6(a)(1), requiring that any action be filed within six months of the date that a rejection is deposited in the mail, and the trial court sustained the demurrer. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the allegation revealed only that the action might be barred by the statute of limitations (144 Cal. App. 3d 155, 161) . The court held that, since a demurrer can be sustained on statute of limitations grounds only if the facts alleged show that the right of action is necessarily barred, the statute of limitations defense depended on a factual resolution and was not resolvable by demurrer (144 Cal. App. 3d 155, 161-162) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative

DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.32

§ 143.32 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Action Commenced Timely

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHEN THE COMPLAINT IS IN A FORM THAT COMPLIES WITH STATE REQUIREMENTS AND WAS TIMELY PRESENTED TO THE CLERK FOR FILING. THE CLERK HAS NO AUTHORITY TO REJECT A FILING FOR FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH A LOCAL RULE.

Action Timely Commenced When Complaint Complying With State Requirements Presented Timely to Clerk for Filing. An action is commenced within the meaning of Title 2 of Part 2 (Section 312 et seq.) of the Code of Civil Procedure, when the complaint is filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 350). In legal effect, a complaint is deemed filed when it is presented to the clerk for filing during business hours in the form required by state law. A local superior court may not condition the filing of a complaint on local rule requirements. So long as a complaint complies with state requirements, the clerk has a ministerial duty to file it (Carlson v. Department of Fish & Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1270, 1272-1276, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601). Therefore, when such a complaint has been presented to the clerk for filing during business hours before expiration of the statute of limitations, the action is timely commenced, and a demurrer based on the theory that the complaint is barred by the statute of limitations should be overruled (see Carlson v. Department of Fish & Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1270, 1282-1283, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, when the complaint, in the form required by state law, was initially presented to the clerk for filing during business hours before expiration of the statute of limitations, but the clerk declined to file it until plaintiff complied with a local rule requirement.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law stated.

[b] Procedure

The procedure for opposing a demurrer based on the clerk having improperly rejected a timely filing is unclear. The party opposing the demurrer will have to show the date the complaint was initially presented to the clerk for filing and that the clerk declined to do so until compliance with the local rule requirement. Although on a hearing on a demurrer, a court is not entitled to consider facts presented to it through affidavits (or declarations under Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5) [Childs v. State of California (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 155, 163, 192 Cal. Rptr. 526), there have been some exceptions to this rule (see, e.g., cases discussed in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 321, Judicial Notice, § 321.15[4][b][ii] (Matthew Bender)). Thus, to enhance the possibility that the court will consider such facts on the hearing on the demurrer, in addition to submitting an opposing memorandum of points and authorities, the opposing party should probably respond by (1) submitting an opposing declaration showing the date the complaint was initially presented to the clerk for filing and the clerk's refusal to do so until compliance with the local rule requirement, (2) moving for an order correcting the date of filing to the date on which the complaint was first presented for filing (which motion would include a supporting declaration), and (3) making an appropriate request that judicial notice be taken concerning the date the complaint was initially presented for filing. In Carlson v. Department of Fish & Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 , cited as authority in the form above, after defendants demurred, plaintiff responded by moving for an order correcting the date of filing to the date on which the complaint was first presented for filing [Carlson v. Department of Fish & Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1270, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601] . The court of appeal did not discuss plaintiff's responding motion or judicial notice, but nevertheless concluded that the trial court should have overruled defendants' demurrer [Carlson v. Department of Fish & Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1282-1283, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Timely Commenced When Complaint Complying With State Requirements Presented Timely to Clerk for Filing

In Carlson v. Department of Fish & Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 , plaintiff, represented by out-of-county counsel, desired to sue in Los Angeles County. Plaintiff's counsel prepared a complaint and sent it by Federal Express to the Los Angeles Superior Court in Santa Monica. The complaint complied in all respects with state requirements, but plaintiff did not include a "Certificate of Assignment" required by local rule. Because the certificate was missing, the court clerk did not file the complaint, but mailed it back to plaintiff's counsel. Counsel returned the complaint together with a Certificate of Assignment to the court several days later, but by that time the statute of limitations period had elapsed. Defendants demurred on several grounds, including that the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiff responded by moving for an order correcting the date of filing to the date on which the complaint was first presented for filing. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion, sustained defendants' demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the complaint (68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1270) .

The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to grant leave to amend the complaint. The court held that a local superior court may not condition the filing of a complaint on local rule requirements. Instead, so long as a complaint complies with state requirements, the clerk has a ministerial duty to file. In legal effect, a complaint is deemed filed when it is presented to the clerk for filing during business hours in the form required by state law. Thus, plaintiff's complaint was effectively filed when it was first presented to the clerk, and the statute of limitations therefore did not run (68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1270, 1273) . Accordingly, defendants' demurrer should have been overruled (68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1282-1283) . The court noted that for purposes of the statute of limitations, filing means delivery to the clerk during business hours (68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1273) . The court also distinguished City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 766, 70 Cal. Rptr. 826 , in which plaintiff's counsel first presented a complaint for filing on behalf of a minor, then withdrew it either because counsel failed to apply for a guardian ad litem or because counsel's petition for appointment of a guardian was defective. The complaint was again presented for filing after the statute of limitations had run. The City of Los Angeles court ruled that the complaint could not be back-dated to reflect filing on the date it was first presented to the clerk because it had not in fact been left with the clerk for filing on that date. Instead, counsel had withdrawn it. In the instant case, by contrast, plaintiff's counsel did not submit and then withdraw the complaint. Instead, counsel submitted it and the clerk declined to file it. Quoting from United Farm Workers of America v. Agricultural Labor Relations Bd. (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 912, 918, 210 Cal. Rptr. 453, 694 P.2d 138 , the court noted that it is the filer's actions that are scrutinized to determine whether the petition was timely filed. Rejection of the petition by the clerk for a technical defect cannot undo a filing that has already occurred. Scrutinizing the filer's actions in City of Los Angeles reveals that the filer did not leave the complaint with the clerk for filing, but instead withdrew it. Scrutinizing the filer's actions in the instant case reveals that plaintiff's counsel never withdrew plaintiff's complaint; instead the clerk erroneously mailed it back (68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1274-1275) . The court went on to note that the conclusion that a clerk lacks authority to enforce the Los Angeles Superior Court local rules by rejecting papers that comply with former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 201 see now 2.100-2.119 does not mean that those local rules cannot be enforced. Rather it simply means they cannot be enforced by rejecting filings that conform to state law. After a paper is filed, the panoply of possible sanctions provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 575.2, former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 227 [see now Rule 2.30] and elsewhere become available to redress local rule violations (68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 1281-1282) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] In General

Duran v. St. Luke's Hospital (2004) 114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 459, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 , was a malpractice action where the plaintiffs' attorney mailed the complaint two days before the final day for filing and learned that the enclosed fee was inadequate after the statute of limitations expired. The filing clerk of the San Francisco Superior Court, California, received plaintiffs' complaint by mail, but did not file it, because the fee was $3 short. The statute of limitations expired the next day. The trial court granted a petition to deem the complaint filed when it was received, but subject to a motion to strike by defendants, and ultimately entered a judgment of dismissal (114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 459) .

The reviewing court affirmed the dismissal. An unbroken line of decisions by the California Supreme Court holds that it is mandatory for court clerks to demand and receive the fee required by statute before documents or pleadings are filed. The court rejected the plaintiff's assertion that Carlson v. Department of Fish and Game (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1268, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 was controlling because the present case did not involve conflicting court rules but with dealt with state statutes of unambiguous language and meaning, which make the payment of fees the condition precedent to the filing of court documents or pleadings (114 Cal. App. 4th 457, 461) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.33

§ 143.33 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Action Not Appearing Wholly Barred

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE IT APPEARS THAT THE ACTION IS NOT ENTIRELY BARRED.

Action Not Entirely Barred. A demurrer based on the statute of limitations may not be sustained if it appears that the plaintiff's cause of action is not entirely barred (Vassere v. Joerger (1938) 10 Cal. 2d 689, 694, 76 P.2d 656).

Actionable and Appreciable Harm Occurring Before and Within Limitations Period. A new violation does not occur, and a new charging period does not commence, upon the occurrence of subsequent actionable acts that entail adverse effects resulting from the past actionable acts. However, if a defendant engages in a series of acts each of which is intentionally discriminatory, then a fresh violation takes place when each act is committed (Hammond v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1579, 1597, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but it appears on the face of the complaint that the action is not entirely barred.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Not Entirely Barred

Vassere v. Joerger (1938) 10 Cal. 2d 689, 76 P.2d 656 , was an action for the collection of a debt. It was based on three acknowledgments of three debts, each for a different amount. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer on the ground that the action was barred and entered a judgment of dismissal, from which the plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court observed that as to one of the three acknowledgments, it was equally possible that the acknowledgment was executed before the period of limitation on the original debt expired, or that it was executed after expiration of that period. Nothing in the complaint or in the words of the acknowledgment indicated which was the case. Thus, it was possible that the action was barred as to the one debt; and possible that the action was not barred. This problem was not important, however, the court stated, since there was no such difficulty with the other two acknowledgments, and "[a] demurrer based on the statute of limitations may not properly be sustained if any part of the cause of action be not barred" (10 Cal. 2d 689, 693-694) .

It is apparent that in using the phrase "part of the cause of action," the court did not imply the splitting of a cause of action. In truth, in the Vassere case, above, there were three causes of action (one on each of the three debts) united in one complaint. The import of the court's statement is, as the point in this memorandum suggests, that a general demurrer based on the statute of limitations may not be sustained unless the action commenced by the complaint is in all respects barred. The rule supported by the Vassere case would most likely be applied where there are two or more plaintiffs or defendants, and the action is barred as to one of them but not as to another, or where, as in the Vassere case, two or more causes of action are united in one complaint, and the action on one of them is barred.

[b] Actionable and Appreciable Harm Occurring Before and Within Limitations Period

In Hammond v. County of Los Angeles (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 1579, 1597, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 690 , plaintiff, a county employee, appealed a summary judgment from trial court in favor of defendants, the county and a supervisor, in an action alleging violations of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA). The employee submitted evidence of statements and actions before the limitations period of Gov. Code § 12960(d), suggesting that a reduction in her classroom teaching assignments was based on age and race. However, after July 2003, i.e., within the limitations period, the court of appeal found evidence that defendant continued to limit the number and types of teaching assignments that plaintiff would receive. In doing so, defendant made discrete decisions concerning plaintiff's workload within the limitations period, each of which was arguably a fresh violation of the FEHA. Thus, even if the analysis of Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. (2007) 550 U.S.618, 127 S. Ct. 2162, 167 L. Ed. 2d 982 , applies to FEHA cases, the court of appeal held that plaintiff has raised a triable issue of fact concerning whether an actionable adverse employment action under the FEHA occurred within the limitations period.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.34

§ 143.34 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Defendant's Absence From State [Code Civ. Proc. § 351]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHEN THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THE DEFENDANT'S ABSENCE FROM THE STATE.

Absence From State. If, when a cause of action accrues against a person, and he or she is out of the state, the action may be commenced within the term limited in the Code of Civil Procedure, after his or her return to the state; and if, after the cause of action accrues, he or she departs from the state, the time of his or her absence is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 351; see Heritage Marketing & Ins. Services, Inc. v. Chrustawka (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 754, 763, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 126 ; Mounts v. Uyeda (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 111, 115-122, 277 Cal. Rptr. 730).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges the defendant's absence from the state for a sufficient period after the cause of action accrued so that the action was in fact commenced within the period of limitation.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[b] Business Entities

Code Civ. Proc. § 351 does not apply to a foreign corporation, because Corp. Code §§ 2110, 2111, and 2114 authorize service of summons on foreign corporations by delivery of the summons to the California Secretary of State [see Cardoso v. American Medical Systems, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 994, 997-999, 228 Cal. Rptr. 627 ; Loope v. Greyhound Lines, Inc. (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614, 250 P.2d 651 (involving former Corp. Code §§ 6403, 6500, 6501)].

Nor does Section 351 apply to a domestic corporation, because it cannot depart from or be absent from the state [Loope v. Greyhound Lines, Inc. (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 611, 614, 250 P.2d 651] , or a domestic limited partnership that has designated an agent for service of process [see Cardoso v. American Medical Systems, Inc. (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 994, 997-999, 228 Cal. Rptr. 627 ; Epstein v. Frank (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 111, 120, 177 Cal. Rptr. 831] .

[c] Cases Arising in Interstate Commerce

Insofar as Code Civ. Proc. § 351 has been applied to a nonresident defendant who is sued on a contractual obligation incurred in interstate commerce, it has been held to violate the Commerce Clause of the U.S. Constitution and is to that extent unconstitutional, because it forces the nonresident individual to choose between being present in California for several years or forfeiting his or her statute of limitations defense, remaining subject to suit in California in perpetuity [Abramson v. Brownstein (9th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2d 389, 391-393] . Similarly, Code Civ. Proc. § 351 impermissibly burdens interstate commerce with respect to residents who travel in the course of interstate commerce. This conclusion, however, is limited to travel for the facilitation of interstate commerce. The commerce clause does not bar applying the tolling provisions of Section 351 to interstate travel unrelated to the facilitation of interstate commerce (e.g., vacation trips) [Filet Menu, Inc. v. Cheng (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1276, 1282-1284, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 384] .

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation regarding the defendant's absence from the state, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absence From State

In Heritage Marketing & Ins. Services, Inc. v. Chrustawka (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 754, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 126 , defendants moved out of California in 2000; four years later plaintiffs sued defendants for breach of contract, conspiracy to defraud, defamation, tortious interference with economic advantage, slander per se, and violation of California's Uniform Trade Secrets Act. Defendants moved for summary adjudication on various grounds, including that the second through sixth causes of action are barred by enumerated statutes of limitations. Plaintiffs opposed the motion, asserting that Code Civ. Proc. § 351 tolled the limitation periods.

The court of appeal noted that the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 351 have been applied to nonresident defendants who have never entered the state and to resident defendants who are temporarily absent from the state. In the instant case, however, the court had to determine whether § 351 applies to resident defendants who are permanently absent from California, i.e., those who move out of state. The court concluded that § 351 penalizes people who move out of state by imposing a longer statute of limitations on them than on those who remain in the state, and that the commerce clause protects persons from such restraints on their movements across state lines (160 Cal. App. 4th 754, 763) .

Mounts v. Uyeda (1991) 227 Cal. App. 3d 111, 277 Cal. Rptr. 730 , was an action for damages, filed on January 31, 1989, arising from defendant's having negligently or intentionally waved or pointed a gun at plaintiff in a threatening manner on January 30, 1988, as she drove behind defendant on a California highway, as a result of which plaintiff suffered severe emotional distress. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340 because it was not filed within one year. Plaintiff contended that under Code Civ. Proc. § 351, the statute was tolled during the four days that defendant was out of the state in July 1988, and that the complaint was, therefore, timely filed. Defendant argued that the action was excepted from the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 351 by Veh. Code § 17463, which in pertinent part provides that notwithstanding any provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 351 to the contrary, when summons may be personally served on a person as provided in Veh. Code §§ 17459 and 17460, the time of his or her absence from the state is part of the time limited for the commencement of the action described in those sections. Veh. Code §§ 17459 and 17460 provide that acceptance by a California resident of, respectively, a certificate of ownership or registration, or a driver's license, constitutes consent by that person that personal service in an action arising out of the operation or ownership of a motor vehicle in California may be made within or without the state, regardless of a subsequent change of residency. The motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that although a vehicle was used in perpetrating the assault, the action did not arise out of the operation or ownership of a motor vehicle within the meaning of Veh. Code §§ 17459 and 17460, and that Code Civ. Proc. § 351 did apply to toll the running of the statute of limitations (227 Cal. App. 3d 111, 115-120) . With respect to the constitutionality of Code Civ. Proc. § 351, the court pointed out that Abramson v. Brownstein (9th Cir. 1990) 897 F.2d 389 (discussed in § 143.34[2][c]), did not declare Code Civ. Proc. § 351 to be facially unconstitutional. The court said that the statute was not invalid on its face, that it applied in this case, and that because it did not run afoul of the commerce clause, there was no constitutional infirmity to its application (227 Cal. App. 3d 111, 121-122) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Absence From State

In Kaplan v. Mamelak (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 637, 643-644, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 861 , plaintiff patient sued defendant surgeon for operating on the wrong spinal disk. A jury returned a special verdict for the surgeon on his defense under the one-year statute of limitations for medical malpractice in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5. Plaintiff's notice of intent to sue was filed six days late, and at trial the surgeon testified that he was outside California for only three days. On appeal, plaintiff argued that harm resulted from the trial court's refusal to allow plaintiff to conduct discovery as to whether the doctor was outside of California for more than three days during the limitations period. The court of appeal agreed, noting that an absence for three more days--merely a long weekend perhaps--would have made a world of difference to the timeliness of the complaint. Thus, denying discovery prevented the patient from gathering evidence on a dispositive issue. The patient did not have to accept the surgeon's testimony as the final word.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.35

§ 143.35 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Minority [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 328, 352(a)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATION SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES PLAINTIFF'S MINORITY AS A DISABILITY.

[EITHER]

Minority as Disability. If a person entitled to commence an action for the recovery of _____ [insert, if appropriate: the possession of] real property is, at the time the title to the real property first descends to him, under the age of majority, the time, not exceeding 20 years, during which such disability continues is not deemed any portion of the time limited in Chapter 2 of Title 2 of Part 2 (Sections 315 through 330) of the Code of Civil Procedure for the commencement of such action, but such action may be commenced within the period of five years after _____ [such disability shall cease or the death of the person entitled, if he died under such disability] (Code Civ. Proc. § 328).

[OR]

Minority as Disability. If a person entitled to bring an action mentioned in Chapter 3 of Title 2 of Part 2 (Sections 335 through 3493/4) of the Code of Civil Procedure be, at the time the cause of action accrued, under the age of majority, the time of such disability is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was disabled for a period of time from suing because of being under the age of majority.

The first alternative paragraph would be used where the action is one relating to real property governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 315-330; the second alternative would be used in any other case, except those involving childhood sexual abuse cases in which Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a) applies [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a); for a form of memorandum for opposing a demurrer based on the statute of limitations in a childhood sexual abuse case, see § 143.57].

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation regarding the plaintiff's disability because of minority, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.36

§ 143.36 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Insanity [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 328, 352(a)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATION SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED IF THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES PLAINTIFF'S INSANITY AS A DISABILITY.

[EITHER]

Insanity as Disability. If a person entitled to bring an action mentioned in Chapter 3 of Title 2 of Part 2 (Sections 335 through 3493/4) of the Code of Civil Procedure be, at the time the cause of action accrued, insane, the time of such disability is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a)).

[OR, if action involves possession of, or title to, real property]

Insanity as Disability. If a person entitled to commence an action for the recovery of _____ [insert, if appropriate: the possession of] real property is, at the time the title to the real property first descends to him or her, insane, the time, not exceeding twenty years, during which such disability continues is not deemed any portion of the time limited in Chapter 2 of Title 2 of Part 2 (Sections 315 through 330) of the Code of Civil Procedure for the commencement of such action, but such action may be commenced within the period of five years after _____ [such disability shall cease or the death of the person entitled, if he or she died under such disability] (Code Civ. Proc. § 328).

[Optional] B. Insanity Based on Injury or Illness. The term "insane" includes the condition of someone who has been injured so severely or suffers from an illness as to be rendered incapable of caring for his or her property, transacting business, or understanding the nature or effects of his or her acts (see Tzolov v. International Jet Leasing, Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 118-119, 283 Cal. Rptr. 314 ; Alcott Rehabilitation Hospital v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 101, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807).

[Optional] C. Injury Causing Disability Is Basis of Cause of Action. When an incompetency results from a tortious act, the disability exists from the time of the act, and the limitation period is tolled the entire time the person is disabled (Code Civ. Proc. § 357; Weinstock v. Eissler (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 212, 230-231, 36 Cal. Rptr. 537 ; Tzolov v. International Jet Leasing, Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 118, 120, 283 Cal. Rptr. 314).

[Optional] D. Appointment of Conservator or Guardian Ad Litem. The limitation period remains tolled even when a _____ [conservator or guardian ad litem] is appointed for an incompetent person (Tzolov v. International Jet Leasing, Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 118, 120, 283 Cal. Rptr. 314).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was disabled for a period of time from suing because of insanity.

The first alternative Paragraph A may be used for all causes of action except those for possession of, or title to, real property. The second alternative Paragraph A may be used for action relating to real property governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 315-330. Optional Paragraph B is to be used when "insanity" is based on traumatic injury; Optional Paragraph C when the basis of the cause of action is a traumatic injury causing disability; and Optional Paragraph D when a conservator or guardian ad litem has been appointed for the disabled person.

When appropriate, counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Memoranda

For a form to be used in opposing a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for injury or illness suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, see § 143.57.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation regarding the plaintiff's disability because of insanity; see California Forms of Pleading and Practice in Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insanity Based on Injury or Illness

In Tzolov v. International Jet Leasing, Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 283 Cal. Rptr. 314 , plaintiff brought an action for damages for severe head injuries that rendered him permanently incompetent. Defendant demurred generally and moved to strike the complaint, claiming that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitation [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)], running from the date a guardian ad litem was appointed. After the motion to strike was granted and a judgment of dismissal was entered, the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, citing Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a)(2), which provides for tolling the limitation period during a plaintiff's "insanity." Holding that the appointment of a guardian ad litem does not start the statutory period running, the court applied the general rule that when an individual has been injured so severely as to be rendered incapable of caring for his or her property, transacting business, or understanding the nature or effects of his or her acts, the limitation period is tolled as long as the incompetence lasts (232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 118) .

In Alcott Rehabilitation Hospital v. Superior Court (2001) 93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 112 Cal. Rptr. 2d 807 , the plaintiff, an elderly woman, was an inpatient at the defendant's licensed skilled nursing facility. Both of her legs were amputated allegedly as a result of the facility's failure to provide her with proper care. The facility claimed the one-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 for health care providers barred the wrongful acts and omission occurring on or before the first admission. However, the statute of limitations was tolled because the elderly woman was insane due to a stroke and within the tolling provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 352. The facility did not contest the plaintiff was insane, and the court properly denied the facility's motion for summary adjudication because the one-year statute of limitations was tolled by the plaintiff's insanity (93 Cal. App. 4th 94, 105-106) .

[b] Injury Causing Disability Is Basis of Cause of Action

In Weinstock v. Eissler (1964) 224 Cal. App. 2d 212, 36 Cal. Rptr. 537 , the plaintiff alleged negligence on the part of several doctors and the hospital where an angiogram and spinal tap were performed that left the plaintiff paralyzed for approximately two months. The trial court sustained general demurrers for each defendant on plaintiff's third amended complaint and plaintiff refused to amend further. The plaintiff appealed from the judgment rendered after the demurrers were sustained. After determining that the demurrers were sustained on the ground that the cause of action was barred by the one-year statute of limitation on medical malpractice claims, the Supreme Court held that the limitation period was tolled during the time the plaintiff was insane because of his paralysis [see Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a)(2)]. The Court also held that when the condition of insanity results directly from, and occurs on the same day as, the wrongful act that is the basis of the action, the two events are legally simultaneous. Thus, the limitation period was suspended from the time of the operation until the plaintiff's competency was restored (224 Cal. App. 2d 212, 231-232) .

[c] Appointment of Conservator or Guardian Ad Litem

The facts and procedural background of Tzolov v. International Jet Leasing, Inc. (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 283 Cal. Rptr. 314 , are discussed in § 143.36[3][a]. In Tzolov, the court further held that the appointment of a guardian ad litem does not start the running of the statute of limitation as long as the plaintiff remains disabled by insanity. The court reasoned that the tolling provision in Code Civ. Proc. § 352 refers only to the competence of the plaintiff and not the nature or quality of his or her representation. Although a guardian ad litem is charged with protecting the plaintiff's cause of action, to start running the statute of limitation on appointment would leave the incompetent person totally at the mercy of the guardian ad litem. The court also analogized to the rule that the appointment of a general guardian (conservator) for an incompetent does not start the running of a limitation period and that the appointment of a guardian ad litem for a minor does not prejudice the minor's cause of action after he or she reaches majority (232 Cal. App. 3d 117, 119, 120) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.37

§ 143.37 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Imprisonment [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 328.5, 352.1]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES PLAINTIFF'S IMPRISONMENT AS A DISABILITY.

[EITHER]

A. Imprisonment as Disability. If a person entitled to commence an action for the recovery of [the possession of] real property is, at the time the title to the real property first descends to him, imprisoned on a criminal charge, or in execution upon conviction of a criminal offense, for a term less than life, the time, not exceeding two years, during which the imprisonment continues is not deemed any portion of the time limited in Chapter 2 of Title 2 of Part 2 (commencing with Section 315) of the Code of Civil Procedure for the commencement of the action, but such action may be commenced within the period of five years after _____ [the imprisonment ceases or the death of the person entitled, if he/she died while imprisoned] (Code Civ. Proc. § 328.5).

[OR]

A. Imprisonment as Disability. If a person entitled to bring an action mentioned in Chapter 3 of Title 2 of Part 2 (commencing with Section 335) of the Code of Civil Procedure is, at the time the cause of action accrued, imprisoned on a criminal charge, or in execution under the sentence of a criminal court for a term less than for life, the time of the disability is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of the action, not to exceed two years (Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1(a)).

[Optional] B. Possibility of Parole. A person is under a disability within the meaning of Section _____ [328.5 or 352.1] of the Code of Civil Procedure if he/she is imprisoned for a term of life but has the possibility of parole (Grasso v. McDonough Power Equip., Inc. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 597, 599, 70 Cal. Rptr. 458).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was disabled for a period of time from suing because of being imprisoned. Note however, that the suspension of the period of limitation does not apply to an action, other than an action to recover damages or that portion of an action that is for the recovery of damages, relating to the conditions of confinement, including an action brought by that person pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 1983 (civil action for deprivation of constitutional rights) [Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1(c)] Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1 is retroactive and its two-year tolling period rather than the period provided in former Code Civ. Proc. § 352(a)(3) applies to tort actions accruing before January 1, 1995, the date of its enactment [Carlson v. Blatt (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 646, 649-651, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42] .

The tolling provision of Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1(c) has been held inapplicable to medical malpractice actions which are controlled by the limitations period in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 [Hollingsworth v. Kofoed (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 423, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 808] .

The first Alternative Paragraph A would be used where the action is one relating to real property governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 315-330; the second alternative would be used in any other case.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation regarding the plaintiff's disability because of imprisonment, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Possibility of Parole

Grasso v. McDonough Power Equip., Inc. (1968) 264 Cal. App. 2d 597, 70 Cal. Rptr. 458 , was an action for damages for personal injury resulting from negligence in the manufacture of a lawnmower. At the time of commencement of the action, the plaintiff was imprisoned for a term of life, and her term had not then been fixed at a number of years. Two months before commencement of the action, the plaintiff's civil rights were restored to a limited extent for the purpose of commencing and maintaining the action. The injuries in question were sustained about eight and one half years earlier, while the plaintiff was imprisoned. She had not been released or restored to her civil rights at any time during those eight and one half years. The defendant demurred, asserting the bar of former Code Civ. Proc. § 352 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 352.1); the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the action. The appellate court reversed with directions to overrule the demurrer insofar as it was based on the statute of limitations, observing that times had changed very much since 1872 when Code Civ. Proc. § 352 was enacted; unlike in those times, nowadays a life sentence often means fewer actual years of imprisonment than a sentence of a term of years. Since a prisoner under a term of life might be released after a few years, or at least might have his civil rights restored to a limited extent, the phrase "for a term less than for life" in Code Civ. Proc. § 352 should not be construed literally. Rather, it should be understood to mean "for a term less than for life, or for a term of life but not without the possibility of parole." (The language in Code Civ. Proc. § 328.5 is substantially the same.)

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.38

§ 143.38 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Disability--War [Code Civ. Proc. § 354]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES A STATE OF WAR AS A DISABILITY TO COMMENCING THE ACTION.

State of War as Disability. When a person is, by reason of the existence of a state of war, under a disability to commence an action, the time of continuance of such disability is not part of the period limited for the commencement of the action, whether such cause of action shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such disability (Code Civ. Proc. § 354).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was disabled for a period of time from suing because of the existence of a state of war.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation regarding the plaintiff's disability because of the existence of a state of war, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.39

§ 143.39 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Disability--Disability of Attorney

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHEN THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT PLAINTIFF'S ATTORNEY BECAME DISABLED PRIOR TO THE EXPIRATION OF THE STATUTE, PREVENTING COMPLIANCE WITH THE STATUTE, AND WHEN SUSTAINING THE DEMURRER WOULD BE MANIFESTLY UNJUST.

Disability of Attorney Rendering Compliance Impossible. Disability of a plaintiff's attorney occurring prior to expiration of the applicable statute of limitations tolls the statute if compliance is thereby made impossible, and manifest injustice would otherwise result (Lewis v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 372-380, 220 Cal. Rptr. 594).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges that plaintiff's attorney was disabled prior to expiration of the applicable statute, rendering compliance impossible [see Lewis v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 372-380, 220 Cal. Rptr. 594] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the complaint alleges that plaintiff's attorney suffered disabilities that rendered compliance with the applicable statute of limitations impossible.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms relating to the format of and procedure for filing demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender). For a discussion and forms relating to limitations of actions, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda of points and authorities for use regarding demurrers generally, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Disability of Attorney Rendering Compliance Impossible

In Lewis v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 220 Cal. Rptr. 594 , petitioner retained an attorney to represent her in a personal injury action. Shortly prior to the expiration of the period of limitations, the attorney was struck by an automobile and rendered unconscious until after the period had expired. The attorney, a sole practitioner, had no attorney to cover his filing requirements, and, due to the ensuing disruption, his secretary neglected to pull his calendared cases. Counsel filed the action on the day he discovered the omission, which was one month after the expiration date. Defendant filed a motion to strike from the complaint all allegations pertaining to personal injuries on the ground that they were barred by the one-year period of limitation under Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions). Plaintiff filed opposition, supported by her attorney's declaration reciting the events causing his disability. The trial court granted defendant's motion, and plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the alternative writ, holding that the language of statutes of limitation must admit to implicit exceptions when compliance is impossible, and manifest injustice would otherwise result (175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 380) . Although the circumstances do not fall within the statutory tolling exceptions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 351-356, the court noted that there is ample precedent for judicial construction of implicit tolling exceptions in appropriate circumstances (175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 372, 376) . Consideration of the general purpose of the tolling statutes, and the nature of the tolling circumstances of Code Civ. Proc. § 353.1 (court's assumption of jurisdiction over attorney's practice) in particular, lead to the conclusion that the circumstances constitute an implicit tolling exception (175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 376) . It is wholly unreasonable to conclude that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 312 (commencement of civil actions) and 340 were intended to admit no exceptions based on impossibility when a catastrophe prevents plaintiff's attorney from submitting or the court from accepting a complaint for timely filing. Those exceptions would not prejudice the legislative purposes of barring delinquent plaintiffs or preventing litigation of stale claims any more than do the exceptions provided for by statute (175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 378) . The court rejected defendant's contention that, to have tolling effect, the disability of plaintiff's attorney must have existed on the date plaintiff's claim accrued, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 352 and 357 (disabilities of plaintiff tolling statute). Defendant's assumption that the attorney's disability must be equated with those set forth by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 352 and 357, and therefore must be subject to the same requirement, is unwarranted (175 Cal. App. 3d 366, 379) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.40

§ 143.40 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Complaint Alleges Death of Person Entitled to Sue [Code Civ. Proc. § 366.1; Prob. Code §§ 551, 552(a)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD BE OVERRULED WHEN THE COMPLAINT SHOWS THAT THE PERSON ENTITLED TO SUE DIED BEFORE THE PERIOD OF LIMITATION EXPIRED, THAT THE ACTION SURVIVED, AND THAT THE DECEDENT'S PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE COMMENCED THE ACTION BEFORE EXPIRATION OF THE LATER OF SIX MONTHS AFTER DEATH OR THE LIMITATIONS PERIOD THAT WOULD HAVE APPLIED HAD THE PERSON NOT DIED.

Death of Person Entitled to Sue. If a person entitled to bring an action dies before the expiration of the applicable limitations period, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced before expiration of the later of six months after the person's death or the limitations period that would have been applicable if the person had not died (Code Civ. Proc. § 366.1).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint shows that the action survives the death of the person, who, but for his or her death, would have been entitled to maintain it, that such person died after accrual of the cause of action but before expiration of the period of limitation, and that the action was commenced before expiration of the later of six months after the person's death or the limitations period that would have been applicable if the person had not died.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation for use when the person entitled to sue has died and the action is maintained by his or her representative, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJusticiabilityAbatement on Death of PartyCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

109 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.41

§ 143.41 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Death of Person Against Whom Action May Be Brought [Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2; Former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b)-(d)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT DEMONSTRATES THAT THE PERSON AGAINST WHOM THE ACTION AROSE DIED BEFORE THE PERIOD OF LIMITATION EXPIRED, THE ACTION SURVIVED, AND THE ACTION WAS TIMELY COMMENCED AGAINST THE DECEDENT'S ESTATE OR REPRESENTATIVE.

[EITHER, if decedent died on or after January 1, 1993]

A. Death of Person to Be Sued. If a person against whom an action may be brought on a liability of the person, whether arising in contract, tort, or otherwise, and whether or not accrued, dies before the expiration of the applicable limitations period, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced within one year after the date of death, and the limitations period that would have been applicable does not apply (Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(a)).

[OR, if decedent died on or after January 1, 1991, and before January 1, 1993]

A. Death of Person to Be Sued. If a person against whom an action may be brought on a liability of the person, whether arising in contract, tort, or otherwise, dies on or after January 1, 1991, and before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement of the action, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced within one year after the date of death, and the time otherwise limited for the commencement of the action does not apply (former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b) (repealed by Stats. 1992, ch. 178, § 6); see Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(c), as enacted by Stats.

1992, ch. 178, § 8, limiting application of new statute of limitations to decedents dying on or after January 1, 1993).

[OR, when decedent died on or after July 1, 1988 and before January 1, 1991]

A. Death of Person to Be Sued. If a person against whom an action may be brought died on or after July 1, 1988, but before January 1, 1991, and before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement of the action, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced before _____ [January 1, 1992 or _____ (one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration or the time for commencement of the action)] (former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(d) (repealed by Stats. 1992, ch. 178, § 6); see Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(c), as enacted by Stats. 1992, ch. 178, § 8, limiting application of new statute of limitations to decedents dying on or after January 1, 1993).

[OR, when decedent died before July 1, 1988]

A. Death of Person to Be Sued. If a person against whom an action may be brought dies before July 1, 1988, and before the expiration of the time limited for the commencement of the action, and the cause of action survives, an action may be commenced against the person's representatives before the expiration of _____ [(July 1, 1989, or one year after the issuing of letters testamentary or of administration) or the time limited for the commencement of the action] (former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(c) (repealed by Stats. 1992, ch. 178, § 6); see Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(c), as enacted by Stats. 1992, ch. 178, § 8, limiting application of new statute of limitations to decedents dying on or after January 1, 1993).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. After Rejection of Claim Against Estate. The filing of a timely claim against decedent's estate, or a petition under Probate Code Section 9103 to file a late claim, tolls the statute of limitations otherwise applicable and, once the claim has been rejected in whole or in part, the action may be commenced within three months after _____ [the notice of rejection was given or the claim became due], regardless of the statutory limitation period that would otherwise apply (see Prob. Code §§ 9352(a), 9353(a)).

[Optional] C. After Rejection of Claim Against Decedent's Trust. The filing of a timely claim against the trust of a decedent that was revocable during his or her lifetime tolls the statute of limitations otherwise applicable, and once the claim has been rejected in whole or in part, the action may be commenced within 90 days after _____ [notice of rejection was given or the claim became due] (see Prob. Code §§ 19253(b), (d), 19255(a)).

[Optional] D. Pending Determination of Prob. Code § 21320 Application. Until January 1, 2010, the statute of limitations for the commencement of any motion, petition, or other act by a beneficiary, including the filing of a creditor claim under Probate Code Section _____ [9000 et seq. or 19000 et seq., or 21700 et seq.], is tolled beginning with the date of an application for the court's determination under Probate Code Section 21320 of whether the motion, petition, or other act would constitute a will contest, and ending with the date the court's determination becomes final (Prob. Code § 21308). As of January 1, 2010, Prob. Code §§ 21308 and 21320 will be repealed pursuant to Stats. 2008, ch. 174, § 1.

[Optional] E. Substitution of Personal Representative. If an action was timely commenced against the decedent, plaintiff is not required by Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 (formerly Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b)) to also separately commence the action against the decedent's personal representative within one year after the decedent's death (Burgos v. Tamulonis (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 757, 763, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the defendant asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges that the person against whom the action might have been brought died before the expiration of the limitation period, that the cause of action survived, and that the action was commenced within the time provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 and former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b)-(d) or by Prob. Code §§ 9352 and 9353, 19253 and 19255, or 21308 (which is repealed as of January 1, 2010, pursuant to Stats. 2008, ch. 174, § 1).

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint for use when the person against whom the action might have been brought died and the action is maintained against his or her representative or the estate, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 454, Probate: Claims Against the Estate (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substitution of Personal Representative

In Burgos v. Tamulonis (1994) 28 Cal. App. 4th 757, 33 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728 , the plaintiff filed her personal injury action against the driver of the vehicle in an automobile accident within one year after the accident. At the time she filed the complaint, plaintiff did not know that the driver had died. By the time that plaintiff petitioned for leave to file a late claim against the estate, which was granted, and served and filed an amended complaint naming Tamulonis in her representative capacity as defendant, more than one year had passed since the driver's death. Defendant filed a demurrer to the first amended complaint on the ground that the action against the personal representative was barred by the one-year after death limitation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b) (repealed effective January 1, 1993, and reenacted without substantive change as Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 (Stats. 1992, ch. 178, § 6)). The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action as to Tamulonis (28 Cal. App. 4th 757, 759) .

The court of appeal reversed the order of dismissal. It noted that under the survival statute, plaintiff's cause of action against the decedent survived his death and, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b), the action was timely filed. It then stated that Tamulonis's argument that the action must be commenced against the personal representative within one year after the date of death reads into former Code Civ. Proc. § 353(b) language that is not there. Rather, the legislative scheme encompasses exactly the type of situation that arose in this case where it was uncontroverted the plaintiff had no actual knowledge of the administration of the estate, did not know of the death, and timely commenced the personal injury action, naming the decedent as defendant. Finally, the court found that the first amended complaint sought recovery under the same general set of facts as the original complaint and was deemed filed as of the date of the original complaint, thus rendering the action against the personal representative timely (28 Cal. App. 4th 757, 762-764) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureJusticiabilityAbatement on Death of PartyCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrers

110 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.42

§ 143.42 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Court's Assumption of Jurisdiction Over Attorney's Practice Pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6180 or 6190 [Code Civ. Proc. § 353.1]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT SHOWS THAT THE COURT ASSUMED JURISDICTION OVER PLAINTIFF'S ATTORNEY'S PRACTICE PURSUANT TO BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION _____ [6180 or 6190] AND THAT THE APPLICATION FOR THE COURT TO ASSUME JURISDICTION WAS FILED PRIOR TO THE EXPIRATION OF THE APPLICABLE STATUTE OF LIMITATION.

Court's Assumption of Jurisdiction Over Attorney's Practice Pursuant to Business and Professions Code Section 6180 or 6190. When a person who is entitled to bring an action or other proceeding that has not been filed or otherwise instituted is represented by an attorney over whose practice a California court has assumed jurisdiction pursuant to Business and Professions Code Section 6180 or 6190, and an application for the court to assume jurisdiction was filed prior to the expiration of the applicable statute of limitation or claim statute, that person has six months from the date of entry of the order assuming jurisdiction to file or otherwise institute the matter if the applicable statute of limitation otherwise would have expired (Code Civ. Proc. § 353.1).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint when the defendant asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges that the court assumed jurisdiction over plaintiff's attorney's practice pursuant to Bus. & Prof. Code § 6180 or 6190 [Code Civ. Proc. § 353.1]. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Counsel must show that the application for the court to assume jurisdiction was filed prior to the expiration of the applicable statute of limitation.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation for use when an the court has assumed jurisdiction over the plaintiff's attorney's practice, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrers

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.43

§ 143.43 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Reversal of Judgment for Plaintiff on Appeal [Code Civ. Proc. § 355]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES A FORMER ACTION FOR THE SAME RELIEF RESULTING IN JUDGMENT FOR THE PLAINTIFF, REVERSAL OF THAT JUDGMENT ON APPEAL OTHER THAN ON THE MERITS, AND COMMENCEMENT OF THE NEW ACTION WITHIN ONE YEAR AFTER THE REVERSAL.

Reversal of Judgment for Plaintiff. If an action is commenced within the time prescribed therefor, and a judgment therein for the plaintiff be reversed on appeal other than on the merits, a new action may be commenced within one year after the reversal (Code Civ. Proc. § 355).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, but the complaint alleges that the plaintiff had commenced a previous action against the defendant for the same relief, that the previous action resulted in judgment for the plaintiff, and that the judgment was reversed on appeal, other than on the merits [see Code Civ. Proc. § 355].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation for use when an action has been begun within one year after reversal of a judgment for the plaintiff in a previous action, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresAppealsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.44

§ 143.44 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Legal Inhibition to Sue [Code Civ. Proc. § 356]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE ACTION WAS STAYED BY INJUNCTION OR STATUTORY PROHIBITION.

Injunction or Statutory Prohibition. When the commencement of an action is stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition, the time of the continuance of the injunction or prohibition is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 356).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, but the complaint alleges the existence of an injunction or a statutory prohibition preventing commencement of the action for a certain period of time.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation for use where the commencement of an action was stayed for a period of time by an injunction or a statutory prohibition, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For other forms of memorandum of points and authorities relying on Code Civ. Proc. § 356, see §§ 143.45, 143.46.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrers

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.45

§ 143.45 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Suspended During Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies [Code Civ. Proc. § 356]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATION SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHEN THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT TIME WAS CONSUMED BY AN ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING WHICH WAS A PREREQUISITE TO COMMENCING THE ACTION.

A. Injunction or Statutory Prohibition. When the commencement of an action is stayed by injunction or statutory prohibition, the time of the continuance of the injunction or prohibition is not part of the time limited for the commencement of the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 356).

B. Other Legal Prevention. Section 356 of the Code of Civil Procedure is applicable in situations when the action is legally prohibited by means other than injunction or statutory prohibition, if the plaintiff is legally prevented from taking action to protect his rights (Hoover v. Galbraith (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 519, 526, 102 Cal. Rptr. 733, 498 P.2d 981).

C. Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies. When the plaintiff must exhaust administrative remedies before bringing suit, the period of limitation is suspended during the time consumed by the administrative proceeding (Community Cause v. Boatwright (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 888, 903, 177 Cal. Rptr. 657).

D. Effect of Suspension Period is to Extend Statutory Period. When the running of a period of limitation is suspended for a given length of time, the effect is to add an equal period to the statutory period (Estate of Caravas (1952) 40 Cal. 2d 33, 42, 250 P.2d 593 ; see Community Cause v. Boatwright (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 888, 903, 177 Cal. Rptr. 657).

E. Period of Limitation. The statutory period for commencement of an action for _____ [type of present action] is _____ [specify period of limitation] (Code Civ. Proc. § _____ [specify applicable code section]).

F. Exhaustion of Requirement. _____ [Indicate requirement that in present case administrative proceeding must precede action, e.g., Administrative remedies before the _____ (specify agency) must be exhausted before an action can be commenced in a court (_____ [cite applicable statute or decision])].

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the action is barred by a statute of limitations when the plaintiff has alleged in the complaint that a necessary administrative proceeding was commenced (before the statutory period of limitation expired) and concluded as a prerequisite to commencing the action. The time consumed by an administrative proceeding which the plaintiff was required to pursue before commencing an action is not part of the limitation period [Community Cause v. Boatwright (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 888, 903, 177 Cal. Rptr. 657] .

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Other Legal Prevention

Hoover v. Galbraith (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 519, 102 Cal. Rptr. 733, 498 P.2d 981 , was an action by a judgment creditor of a defunct corporation against the former directors to collect the debt represented by his judgment. The issue on appeal was whether the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 359. The Supreme Court concluded that the action was not barred. The statement set out as Paragraph B is part of the court's analysis of cases similar to the case in question (one of which was Dillon v. Board of Pension Comm'rs (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 427, 116 P.2d 37, 136 ALR 800). In the light of those cases, the court concluded that the plaintiff in the case in question had been prevented from taking action to protect his rights during the period when his judgment was on appeal and that, therefore, the time consumed by the appeal was not part of the period of limitation.

[b] Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

In Community Cause v. Boatwright (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 888, 177 Cal. Rptr. 657 , plaintiff sued defendant for fraudulent failure to disclose assets by a public official, pursuant to the Political Reform Act (PRA) of 1974 [Gov. Code § 91004], raising a number of causes of action. Defendant demurred, arguing that the two-year (now four-year) statute of limitations for actions brought pursuant to Gov. Code § 91004, imposed by Gov. Code § 91011, had run on all of the causes of action raised. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed.

The court appeal reversed as to some of the causes of action and affirmed as to others. The court noted that Gov. Code § 91007 requires that a person make a written request to the Fair Political Practices Commission (FPPC) to bring suit on the acts complained of before bringing suit privately under Gov. Code § 91004. In the present case, plaintiff made such a request on December 7, 1977, which plaintiff amended with a second letter on December 30, 1977. On March 9, 1978, the FPPC indicated that it would not proceed against defendant. The court held that the statute of limitations should have been suspended during the FPPC's investigation, stating that the long-settled rule is that whenever the exhaustion of administrative remedies is a prerequisite to the initiation of a civil action, the limitations period is tolled during the time consumed by those administrative proceedings, because during that period the plaintiff is legally prevented from taking any legal action to protect his or her rights (124 Cal. App. 3d 888, 903) . Note that Gov. Code § 91007(a)(3), as amended by Stats 1999, Ch. 577 § 1, currently contains a tolling provision.

[c] Effect of Suspension Period is to Extend Statutory Period

Estate of Caravas (1952) 40 Cal. 2d 33, 250 P.2d 593 , was a proceeding on behalf of a nonresident alien heir to recover property distributed to the State Treasurer pursuant to former Prob. Code § 1027 (now see Prob. Code § 11902) requiring that on final distribution, property not distributed to known heirs must be distributed to the state and deposited in the State Treasury, and that if a nonresident alien entitled to claim such property fails to do so within five years after succession, his rights are barred (incorporating Prob. Code § 1026, repealed [1974 Stats., ch. 701], governing the rights of nonresident aliens). The proceeding was commenced nearly six years after the nonresident alien succeeded to the claimed inheritance, and the petition alleged that during a period of approximately three years and two months after succession, the nonresident alien was prevented from making a claim because of a state of war (German military occupation of Greece, the alien's residence, from 1941 until 1944). The Supreme Court concluded that during the period when he was thus prevented from making a claim, the nonresident alien was under a disability [see Code Civ. Proc. § 354 (disability because of war)] which had the effect of extending the five year claim period for a time equal to the duration of the disability.

Community Cause v. Boatwright (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 888, 903, 177 Cal. Rptr. 657 , is discussed in § 143.45[3][b].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Required Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

Dillon v. Board of Pension Comm'rs (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 427, 116 P.2d 37 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the board to issue an order for the payment to the petitioner, as the widow of a police officer, of a pension including a cash sum equal to the pension funds accrued in the three years preceding the filing of the petition plus the amount accruing from that date to the date of the order which she sought to have issued. She had made a timely application to the board for the pension, which was denied; and the petition for writ of mandate was filed approximately three years and 10 months later. The board demurred to the petition on the ground that the action was barred, and the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. The petitioner appealed from the judgment dismissing her mandate proceeding.

The Supreme Court held that the running of the period of limitation was suspended during the period of the board's deliberations on the widow's claim. The court affirmed the judgment of dismissal, however, because even when the period consumed by the administrative proceeding was excluded from the statutory period, the time between accrual of the widow's cause of action and her commencement of the mandate proceeding exceeded the applicable statutory period of three years. (The court also held that the cause of action accrued when the petitioner's husband died, not when the board's decision was rendered.)

Myers v. Orange County (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 626, 86 Cal. Rptr. 198 , is discussed in § 143.46[4][b].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Administrative LawGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrers

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.46

§ 143.46 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Statute of Limitations Equitably Tolled by Reasonable and Good Faith Pursuit of Alternative Remedy

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS WAS EQUITABLY TOLLED BY PLAINTIFF'S REASONABLE AND GOOD FAITH PURSUIT OF AN ALTERNATIVE REMEDY.

A. Equitable Tolling of Statute of Limitations. A period of limitation applicable to one action is equitably tolled when another remedy has been sought by plaintiff and (1) defendant received timely notice of the filing of the first claim, (2) defendant was not prejudiced in gathering evidence to defend against the second claim, and (3) plaintiff acted reasonably and in good faith in filing the second claim (Addison v. State of California (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 313, 319, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941 ; Stalberg v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 932, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 750).

B. Reasonable and Good Faith Pursuit of Alternate Remedy. When an injured person has several legal remedies and, reasonably and in good faith, pursues one designed to lessen the extent of the injury or damages, the period of limitation does not run on the other while he or she is thus pursuing the one (McDonald v. Antelope Valley Community College Dist. (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 88, 100, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 ; Myers v. Orange County (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 626, 634, 86 Cal. Rptr. 198).

[Optional] C. Optional Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies. The exhaustion of administrative remedies will suspend the running of a period of limitation even though no statute makes it a condition to the right to sue (McDonald v. Antelope Valley Community College Dist. (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 88, 101, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 ; Campbell v. Graham-Armstrong (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 482, 490, 107 Cal. Rptr. 777, 509 P.2d 689 , citing Myers v. Orange County (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 626, 634, 86 Cal. Rptr. 198).

[EITHER]

D. Reasonable Promptness in Refiling. Although the third prerequisite of good faith and reasonable conduct is not well defined, in Addison v. State of California (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 313, 319, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941 , the Supreme Court stressed that the plaintiff filed the second claim a short time after tolling ended (Downs v. Department of Water & Power (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1100, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 590). Other leading cases have found equitable tolling when short intervals between dismissal and refiling were involved (see, e.g., Kolani v. Gluska (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 410-411, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 257).

[OR]

D. Reasonable Promptness in Refiling. When an initial federal court action has been filed containing pendent claims related to federal claims over which the federal court has supplemental jurisdiction, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) substitutes a bright line rule in place of a case-by-case analysis of "reasonableness." Under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d), the period of limitation for any pendent claim over which the federal court has supplemental jurisdiction is tolled while the claim is pending and for 30 days after it is dismissed unless state law provides for a longer tolling period, i.e., the second suit must be filed within 30 days after dismissal of the pendent state claims without prejudice unless state law extends that period. A plaintiff under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) is not allowed to tack onto the limitations period the full time during which the federal action was pending. Thus, when an initial federal action containing state pendent claims is filed and thereafter dismissed, what conduct is "reasonable" under the equitable tolling doctrine requirement of reasonable promptness in refiling must be assessed in light of the 30-day grace period set forth in 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) (Kolani v. Gluska (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 408-411, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 257).

[OR]

D. Effect of Suspension Period is to Extend Statutory Period. [See § 143.45[1], Paragraph D.]

E. Period of Limitation. The statutory period for the commencement of an action _____ [type of present action] is _____ [period of limitation] (Code Civ. Proc. § _____ [applicable code section]).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition by plaintiff to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the defendant asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, and the plaintiff has alleged in the complaint sufficient facts to show that he or she had two reasonable alternative procedures available when his or her cause of action accrued, one of which he or she promptly and in good faith pursued without success before pursuing the other. As the authorities cited in the memorandum show, it is uncertain what amount of the time consumed in a reasonable and good faith pursuit of one of two alternative remedies will be tacked onto the statutory period of limitation for pursuing the other under the doctrine of equitable tolling. Thus, point D in the memorandum is phrased in the alternative. The first version should be used when refiling of the action has been reasonably prompt. The second version should be used when the initial action was filed in federal court. The third version may be used when the facts do not warrant the reasonably prompt refiling argument.

The doctrine of equitable tolling does not apply when a plaintiff who has suffered several different wrongs pursues only one remedy for one of those wrongs [Aerojet General Corp. v. Superior Court (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 950, 956, 223 Cal. Rptr. 249] . In addition, the equitable tolling rule does not apply unless the second action is in reality a continuation of the earlier action, involving the same parties, facts, and cause of action [Garabedian v. Skochko (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 836, 847, 283 Cal. Rptr. 802 (no equitable tolling because defendant in second action different than defendant in first); but see Stalberg v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 750 (defendant in second action for slander of title had helped plaintiff finance first action against other defendants to quiet title)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of complaint allegations establishing a factual basis for the equitable tolling of a statute of limitations, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form of memorandum of points and authorities opposing a summary judgment for failure to file an action against a public entity within the time period of Gov. Code § 945.6 on the ground that a pending federal court action tolled the period of limitation, see Ch. 196, Public Entities in this publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Equitable Tolling of Statute of Limitations

In Addison v. State of California (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 313, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941 , plaintiff filed a claim for damages with defendants as required by Gov. Code §§ 905 and 905.2, and the claim was denied. Plaintiff filed an action in federal court alleging a federal civil rights act violation, as well as pendent state law causes of action, within the 60-day statute of limitations of Gov. Code § 945.6. After the 60 days expired, the federal action was dismissed for lack of federal jurisdiction and plaintiff filed a complaint in superior court. The superior court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the statute of limitations had expired and dismissed the action.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that by filing the first action in a timely manner the statute of limitations could be equitably tolled as to the second (21 Cal. 3d 313, 319) . The Court noted the reasoning employed in Elkins v. Derby (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 410, 414, 115 Cal. Rptr. 641, 525 P.2d 81 , in which it was held that an injured person faced with several remedies may reasonably and in good faith pursue one of them and have the statute of limitations tolled as to the other(s) (21 Cal. 3d 313, 318) . The Court then went on to explain the general application of the doctrine of equitable tolling, holding that it requires timely notice, lack of prejudice to the defendant, and reasonable and good faith conduct on the part of plaintiff (21 Cal. 3d 313, 319) . Consideration of these factors was held to be a balancing process, taking into account the injustice of barring plaintiff's claim against the policy expressed by the statute of limitation. In the case before the Court, that balance was in favor of permitting plaintiff's claim to be heard on its merits, given the minimal delay and defendants' continuing knowledge (through the federal action) of the nature of plaintiff's claims (21 Cal. 3d 313, 321) .

Stalberg v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1994) 27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 32 Cal. Rptr. 2d 750 , involved a slander of title action by downstream property owners against a title insurance company, based on defendant's creation of a fictitious easement across plaintiffs' properties in favor of upstream property owners. This action began in 1983, was tried to a jury, appealed, and remanded. The trial court then granted summary judgment to defendants on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitations. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. Plaintiffs argued several theories, including that the statute of limitations should be equitably tolled (27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 929) . The court summarized the equitable tolling doctrine, noting that a plaintiff will be relieved from the bar of the statute of limitations when, possessing several legal remedies he or she, reasonably and in good faith, pursues the one designed to lessen the extent of his or her injuries or damage. The court further stated that application of the doctrine requires timely notice, and lack of prejudice, to the defendant, and reasonable and good faith conduct on the part of the plaintiff (27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 932) . The court then found that when the plaintiffs first discovered the existence of the fictitious easement, they were unaware of the role defendant played in creating it and pursued the legal remedy which most readily addressed the cloud on their title, a quiet title action. The plaintiffs gave timely notice to the defendant, defendant, participated in the quiet title action by partially financing it and receiving updates from plaintiffs' counsel. When, during the quiet title action, plaintiffs discovered defendant's role, they so informed defendant and, on completion of the quiet title action, filed the slander of title action. The court found that the defendant had made no showing at any time that its ability to defend against plaintiff's claim on the merits was prejudiced by the delay (27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 932-933) . Thus, having found the plaintiff entitled to the benefit of equitable tolling and the defendant not to be prejudiced by applying it, the court reversed (27 Cal. App. 4th 925, 934) .

[b] Reasonable and Good Faith Pursuit of Alternative Remedy

In McDonald v. Antelope Valley Community College Dist. (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 88, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 , the trial court entered summary judgment in favor of a community college district on the ground that an employee's California Fair Employment and Housing Act (FEHA) (Gov. Code, § 12900 et seq.) claim was untimely under Gov. Code, § 12960(d). The trial court rejected equitable tolling on the apparent ground that tolling was unavailable because the employee was advised that the alternate administrative procedure that she was pursuing was voluntary and need not be exhausted. The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that traditional equitable tolling principles may apply to extend the statute of limitations for filing a FEHA administrative complaint and that there was a triable issue of fact as to whether application of equitable tolling principles rendered the employee's administrative complaint timely.

The Supreme Court affirmed the Court of Appeal's judgment and remanded the cause for further proceedings. The doctrine of equitable tolling applies when an injured person has several legal remedies and, reasonably and in good faith, pursues one; thus, it may apply where one action stands to lessen the harm that is the subject of a potential second action; where administrative remedies must be exhausted before a second action can proceed; or where a first action, embarked upon in good faith, is found to be defective for some reason (45 Cal. 4th 88, 100) . The court held that when an employee voluntarily pursues an internal administrative remedy prior to filing a complaint under the FEHA, the statute of limitations on his or her FEHA claim is subject to equitable tolling. There is neither an express limit on grounds for tolling nor a rationale based on the text or legislative intent that would compel the court to decline to extend the usual rule that limitations periods are tolled while a party pursues an alternate remedy to FEHA claims. The court rejected the district's argument that the FEHA's preemption provisions (Gov. Code, § 12993(a)-(c)) required it to interpret Gov. Code § 12960 as foreclosing judicial equitable tolling. Section 12993(c) speaks only to state-local relations and preempts only local laws. The FEHA does not displace other state laws. Furthermore, the district's argument that tolling should be categorically unavailable because the employee "voluntarily abandoned" her pursuit of her internal grievance was supported by neither the law nor the record. The administrative proceedings lacked the judicial characteristics that were essential to according administrative findings collateral estoppel effect. In the absence of quasi-judicial proceedings, the employee was not required to seek judicial relief to set aside any findings or bear the consequences of their binding effect. The Court of Appeal correctly determined that equitable tolling was not barred as a matter of law The doctrine of equitable tolling applies when an injured person has several legal remedies and, reasonably and in good faith, pursues one; thus, it may apply where one action stands to lessen the harm that is the subject of a potential second action; where administrative remedies must be exhausted before a second action can proceed; or where a first action, embarked upon in good faith, is found to be defective for some reason (45 Cal. 4th 88, 101-114) .

Myers v. Orange County (1970) 6 Cal. App. 3d 626, 86 Cal. Rptr. 198 , was an action for damages by the widow of a county employee who was allegedly wrongfully discharged. The plaintiff sought recovery of benefits under the county retirement program. The defendant demurred on the ground that the action was barred by a statute of limitations. The demurrer was sustained without leave to amend, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The allegedly wrongful discharge occurred on August 22, 1966. In April 1967, the widow applied to the Retirement Board of Orange County for rescission of the order of discharge and reinstatement of her deceased husband's status as an employee for a certain period sufficient to qualify her for benefits under the county retirement program. In May, the widow was informed that her application would not be entertained; in June, she filed a petition for writ of mandate to compel the board to hear her application; in November, a judgment was entered denying the petition; in January 1968, this judgment became final. A little more than one month thereafter, in February 1968, the widow filed a claim for damages with the Board of Supervisors of Orange County; the claim was promptly rejected, and on March 7, 1968, the complaint for damages was filed.

The applicable period of limitation for filing a claim with the board of supervisors was one year, beginning at the latest on December 5, 1966, when the widow's husband died, and at the earliest on August 22, 1966, when he was discharged. The county conceded that the time consumed in pursuing administrative remedies which a person is required to pursue before an action can be commenced is not part of the period of limitation [see § 143.45 and comments thereto]. However, the county contended that the procedures followed by the widow in this case were not necessary as prerequisites to an action; therefore, the time consumed in pursuing these procedures should not be excluded from the one year period for filing claims with the board of supervisors.

The court of appeal rejected the county's contention and made the statement set out as Paragraph B on the basis of Tu-Vu Drive-In Corp. v. Davies (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 435, 437, 58 Cal. Rptr. 105, 426 P.2d 505 , and Santa Clara County v. Hayes Co. (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 615, 617-619, 275 P.2d 456 , and several other decisions (6 Cal. App. 3d 626, 634) . The court said, "[W]e find that, upon the death of her husband, plaintiff was faced with two alternative procedures. Being uncertain of the applicability to her situation of the doctrine of the necessary exhaustion of administrative remedies, she could either [(1)] file a claim with the county for damages and thereafter institute suit, in which she would have undoubtedly been confronted with a claim by the county that the suit could not be maintained because of her failure to exhaust administrative remedies, or ... [(2)] apply for a hearing by the appeal board [of the Orange County Retirement Board] and seek to have the order of discharge rescinded and her husband reinstated as an employee from the date of discharge until the date of his death. She chose to pursue the latter remedy, and, in our opinion, in so doing, she acted reasonably, for, if she had been successful, there would have been no damages resulting from the discharge, and no claim for damages or suit for damages would have been necessary.

"Bearing in mind that a successful administrative appeal would have eliminated all claims of damage, it was likewise perfectly reasonable for plaintiff to seek the writ of mandate ... .

"We recognize, of course, that strictly speaking, the statutes requiring the presentation of a claim within one year are not statutes of limitations. These statutes are comparable, however, to a statute of limitations and have the same effect, that is, the claim is barred unless presented within one year. Additionally, the purposes of the claims statute and a statute of limitations are similar ... .

"We see no good reason, therefore, why the rule of Tu-Vu and County of Santa Clara, tolling statutes of limitation, should not be applied to toll the running of the one-year claim period, particularly in a case such as this.

"We conclude that the one-year claim period was tolled during time consumed by plaintiff's application for hearing before the appeal board, including the mandate proceeding, a total of 240 days. Assuming, as we have, the accrual of the causes of action on August 22, 1966, and December 5, 1966, respectively, the claim filed February 14, 1968, was within one year after accrual in each instance, as extended by the 240 days" (6 Cal. App. 3d 626, 635-637) .

[c] Optional Exhaustion of Administrative Remedies

McDonald v. Antelope Valley Community College Dist. (2008) 45 Cal. 4th 88, 84 Cal. Rptr. 3d 734 , is discussed in [b], above.

Campbell v. Graham-Armstrong (1973) 9 Cal. 3d 482, 107 Cal. Rptr. 777, 509 P.2d 689 , was a mandate proceeding to compel the governing board of a school district to reclassify the petitioners as full-time teachers for certain years prior to the 1965-1966 school year, to pay them back salaries for the school year 1964-1965, and for certain retirement benefits. The petitioners filed a claim with the respondent board in May 1966; the petition for writ of mandate was filed in December 1967. The petitioners appealed from a judgment denying retirement benefits for years before the 1964-1965 school years (but otherwise granting relief), which denial was based on the bar of the statute of limitations. On appeal, the petitioners contended that from May 1966 until December 1967 they reasonably and in good faith pursued an administrative remedy, as an alternative to a lawsuit, and that the time thus consumed should not be part of the period of limitation for commencing an action. The Supreme Court agreed with this interpretation of the law but held that in this case the petitioners were barred from relying on the point because of failure to raise it in the trial court (9 Cal. 3d 482, 490) .

[d] Reasonable Promptness in Refiling

In Kolani v. Gluska (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 257 , plaintiffs on September 27, 1994, sued defendant in federal court. The eleven count complaint asserted claims for violation of RICO (the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act), breach of contract, intentional and negligent interference with prospective advantage, fraud, intentional infliction of emotional distress, slander and trade libel. On June 20, 1996, the federal court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment on eight counts, and dismissed the state law counts for breach of contract and intentional and negligent interference with prospective advantage, declining to exercise supplemental jurisdiction over those claims. On September 6, 1996, 78 days after dismissal of the federal suit, plaintiffs filed a state action reasserting verbatim the claims for breach of contract and intentional and negligent interference with prospective advantage. Thereafter, the trial court sustained defendant's demurrers to the complaint finding the contract count fatally flawed and the tortious interference claims untimely. At the hearing on the demurrers and in its written order, the court indicated that plaintiffs might have viable causes of action for theft or misappropriation of confidential information or trade secrets. Plaintiffs did not request leave to amend either in their brief or at oral argument, and the court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 405-407) . An appeal followed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment insofar as it sustained demurrers, without leave to amend, to the causes of action for breach of contract and intentional and negligent interference with prospective advantage. The court, however, reversed insofar as it precluded filing of an amended complaint alleging a cause of action for misappropriation of confidential information, and remanded to permit the plaintiffs the opportunity to plead such a cause of action (64 Cal.

App. 4th 402, 412-413) . With regard to the interference claims, the court rejected the argument that the claims were saved by 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) and in the alternative by California's common law equitable tolling doctrine. The supplemental jurisdiction provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 1367 including subdivision (d), which codifies principles of equitable tolling found in state case law, was enacted in 1990. Under 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d), the period of limitation for any pendent claim over which the federal court has supplemental jurisdiction is tolled while the claim is pending and for 30 days after it is dismissed unless state law provides for a longer tolling period, i.e., the second suit must be filed within 30 days after dismissal of the pendent state claims without prejudice unless state law extends that period.

The provisions of 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) codify the tolling doctrine and apply it in all supplemental jurisdiction cases when the pendent state claims are dismissed without prejudice. Two of the three requirements for equitable tolling are met in all such cases. Defendant receives notice of the claims from the filing and service of the federal suit and the defense is not prejudiced, because the defendant if diligent will interview witnesses and gather evidence to meet the claims in the federal suit (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 408-409) . The third requirement, reasonable conduct by plaintiff, is addressed by 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d)'s requirement that the second suit be filed within 30 days after dismissal of the pendent claims. This part of subdivision (d) substitutes a bright line rule in place of the case-by-case analysis of "reasonableness" found in the equitable tolling cases (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 409-410) .

Moreover, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) does not allow plaintiff to "tack" onto the limitations period the full time during which the federal action is pending (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 410-411) . Accordingly, because plaintiffs did not refile in state court until 78 days after their federal suit was dismissed and California has no statute affording a grace period longer than 30 days, 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d) does not save plaintiffs' claims (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 410) . Neither are plaintiffs' claims saved by the equitable tolling doctrine. The leading cases finding an equitable tolling have involved short intervals between dismissal and refiling. Plaintiffs' reasonable promptness in refiling is necessary for relief under the doctrine (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 410-411) . Plaintiffs made no showing justifying the 78-day delay from dismissal of the federal suit to refiling in state court. Furthermore, what conduct is "reasonable" under the equitable tolling doctrine must be assessed in light of the 30-day grace period in 28 U.S.C. § 1367(d). It was not reasonable for plaintiffs to refile much later than 30 days after the prior dismissal, in the face of section 1367(d)'s express 30-day requirement and absent either a state statute extending that period or some extraordinary circumstances justifying the delay (64 Cal. App. 4th 402, 411) .

In Downs v. Department of Water & Power (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 590 , plaintiff on March 15, 1993, filed a charge of racial harassment in violation of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq.) with the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC). On the same day the EEOC automatically filed a copy of the charge with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH). That same day the DFEH sent a right-to-sue letter to the plaintiff. The EEOC and the DFEH have a work sharing agreement whereby the two agencies integrate their procedures to reduce duplicate of effort. Each agency has initial responsibility for processing certain claims. The responsible agency is to notify the other agency of its final determination. Rather than waiting to issue a right-to-sue letter at the end of the EEOC's investigation, the DFEH apparently routinely issues its right-to-sue letter at the time an investigation is deferred to the EEOC under the work sharing agreement. On September 29, 1995, the EEOC sent plaintiff a letter stating that it had concluded its investigation and was dismissing the charge because it was unable to establish any violation of federal statutes. The letter also gave notice of the plaintiff's right to sue in the United States District Court and the time limit in which to do so. On December, 28, 1995, plaintiff filed suit in state court for violations of FEHA, Cal. Const. art I, § 8, and Civ. Code § 51 et seq. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to plaintiff's complaint without leave to amend on the grounds that the statute of limitations had expired for each cause of action, and defendant appealed (58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1097-1098) .

The court of appeal reversed. The court held that when a charge of discrimination or harassment is timely filed concurrently with the EEOC and the DFEH, the investigation of the charge is deferred by the DFEH to the EEOC under a work-sharing agreement, and the DFEH issues a right-to-sue letter upon deferral, then the one-year period to bring a FEHA action is equitably tolled during the pendency of the EEOC investigation until a right-to-sue letter from the EEOC is received (58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1102) . The court noted that three factors determine whether the statute of limitations is equitably tolled in a particular case: (1) timely notice to defendants in filing the first claim: (2) lack of prejudice to defendants in gathering evidence to defend against a second claim; and (3) good faith and reasonable conduct by plaintiffs in filing the second claim. The timely notice requirement essentially means that the first claim must have been filed within the statutory period. Furthermore, the filing of the first claim must alert the defendant in the second claim of the need to begin investigating the facts which form the basis for the second claim. Generally, this means that the defendant in the first claim is the same one being sued in the second. The second prerequisite essentially is a requirement that the facts of the two claims be identical or at least so similar that the defendant's investigation of the first claim will put the defendant in a position to fairly defend the second. The third prerequisite of good faith and reasonable conduct on plaintiff's part is less clearly defined in the cases, but in Addison v. State of California (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 313, 319, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941 , the Supreme Court did stress that the plaintiff filed the second claim a short time after tolling ended (58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1100) . The court concluded that plaintiff had filed a timely charge with the EEOC, that the FEHA action was based on the identical facts and charges as those investigated by the EEOC, and that plaintiff reasonably awaited the outcome of the EEOC investigation and promptly filed the state law action within three months of receiving the right-to-sue letter from the EEOC (58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 1102) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Equitable Tolling of Statute of Limitations

See Downs v. Department of Water & Power (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 1093, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 590 , which is discussed in § 143.46[3][d].

In McAlpine v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1, 257 Cal. Rptr. 32 , the court of appeal denied the petition of a city and two of its police officers for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain their demurrer to a complaint against them in tort for personal injuries. One of the officers, working alone, had stopped the motorcycle on which plaintiff was a passenger because the driver and passenger matched a citizen's description of recent robbery suspects. The officer had approached the motorcycle with a drawn gun, and the motorcycle sped away. The officer shot and killed the driver and wounded the passenger, neither of whom were armed. The passenger was apprehended and criminal charges were filed against him. On February 24, 1987, he entered a plea of nolo contendere, and on May 29, 1987, he was sentenced to five years probation with a year in the county jail. On September 8, 1987, he filed a federal court tort action against the city and officers, and on April 15, 1988, he filed the state court action, thereafter dismissing the federal action. The court held that the six-month statute of limitations on filing a civil action set forth in *Gov. Code § 945.6(a)(1)*was tolled under Gov. Code § 945.3 for the period during which the criminal action was pending. The court held that the criminal case was pending until the date of sentencing and that the federal action was timely filed under Gov. Code § 945.6(a)(1) (209 Cal. App. 3d 1, 4-5) . The court further held that under the doctrine of equitable tolling, the timely filing of the federal court action tolled the six-month limitation period under Gov. Code § 945.6(a)(1) for filing the state court action, and that the state court action was therefore timely filed. The court said that under the equitable-tolling doctrine, an alternative remedy pursed during the limitations period, such as a timely filed federal action, will toll the statute of limitations (209 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5) .

In Collier v. City of Pasadena (1983) 142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 191 Cal. Rptr. 681 , plaintiff was employed by defendant as a firefighter. When plaintiff was injured, he filed a workers' compensation claim alleging that the injury was incurred during his employment as a firefighter. Defendant terminated plaintiff's employment and sent him an application for pension benefits; plaintiff filled out the form requesting a disability pension, but his attorney did not file the request for over a year. In the meantime, defendant continued to contest the workers' compensation claim on the ground that the injury was not related to plaintiff's employment. Defendant denied plaintiff's request for a disability pension but did not notify him of the rejection until after a settlement of the workers' compensation claim, at which time it claimed that the application had not been timely filed. Plaintiff sought relief from the denial of the disability pension by a writ of mandate, but defendant's demurrer was sustained on the ground that the application was untimely.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the doctrine of equitable tolling applied. The court examined the history of the doctrine, leading up to the decision in Addison v. State of California (1978) 21 Cal. 3d 313, 146 Cal. Rptr. 224, 578 P.2d 941 , discussed in § 143.46[3][a]. The timely notice requirement means that the first action must have been timely filed, and must have alerted defendant of the need to begin investigating the facts that form the basis for the second claim; the defendant in the two claims must also be essentially the same in most situations (142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 922-924) . However, in the case before it, the court held that the city and the retirement pension board were the same defendant for the purposes of the doctrine, given their commonality of interests and common representation by the city attorney's office (142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 927) . The lack of prejudice requirement was interpreted by the court to mean that the facts of the two claims must be identical, or at least so similar that defendant's investigation of the first claim will put it in a position to fairly defend the second (142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 925) . The court rejected defendant's argument that the two claims be mutually inconsistent for the statute of limitations to be tolled; relying on Nichols v. Canoga Industries (1978) 83 Cal. App. 3d 956, 964, 148 Cal. Rptr. 459 , the court held that as long as the investigation of the first claim would permit a defense of the second, it is irrelevant whether the claims are alternative or parallel, consistent or inconsistent, compatible or incompatible (142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 925-926) . The claims before the court were both based on the relationship between plaintiff's injury and his employment, a sufficient identity to permit tolling (142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 930) . Finally, the requirement that plaintiff act reasonably and in good faith was held satisfied by the lack of any significant delay between the resolution of the first claim and the institution of the second, and the absence of any conduct that might have misled defendant into believing that the second claim would be abandoned (142 Cal. App. 3d 917, 931-932) .

[b] Reasonable and Good-Faith Pursuit of Alternative Remedy

In Tarkington v. California Unemployment Ins. Appeals Bd. (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 131 , the California Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board denied unemployment insurance benefits for employees during a lockout. Three employers acted as one bargaining unit in contract negotiations with a union. After workers at one of the companies went on strike, the other two employers locked out all of their union employees. On administrative appeal from the denial of unemployment insurance claims, two locked-out employees asserted that they sought unemployment benefits on a classwide basis. The appeal was unsuccessful, and a joint petition for writ of administrative mandate was timely filed by locked-out employees of both companies. The trial court ruled that the two companies had been misjoined. A second petition, styled as a class action and naming only one employer as the real party in interest, was then filed by the two employees who sought classwide relief. After sustaining a demurrer, the trial court dismissed the employees' petition for writ of administrative mandate.

The Court of Appeal reversed and remanded, holding that the second petition, although filed more than six months after the decision of the appeals board, was not time-barred under Unemp. Ins. Code § 410. The equitable tolling doctrine applied because the first petition was timely, the claims were almost identical, and the employees acted reasonably and in good faith. The employees' conduct was not dilatory, and the class allegations made resolution on demurrer improper (172 Cal. App. 4th 1494, 1505) .

In Holdgrafer v. Unocal Corp. (2008) 160 Cal. App. 4th 907, 73 Cal. Rptr. 3d 216 , plaintiffs, commercial property owners, sued a company that owned subterranean oil pipelines for damages arising from a leak, asserting claims for trespass, nuisance, and negligence. Prior to filing suit, the parties engaged in negotiations from 1995 until early 2001, when negotiations broke down. Plaintiff filed suit in April 2001. It was undisputed that the statute of limitations on plaintiffs' claims for permanent trespass, permanent nuisance, and negligence was three years (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(b)), that plaintiffs became aware of the contamination on their property no later than 1989, and that they did not file their lawsuit until 2001. The jury found, however, that Unocal was equitably estopped from asserting the statute of limitations as a defense to all of the claims. On appeal, the court held that a defendant will be estopped to invoke the statute of limitations where there has been some conduct by the defendant, relied on by the plaintiff, which induces the belated filing of the action. It is not necessary that the defendant acted in bad faith or intended to mislead the plaintiff. It is sufficient that the defendant's conduct in fact induced the plaintiff to refrain from instituting legal proceedings. Whether an estoppel exists--whether the acts, representations or conduct lulled a party into a sense of security preventing him from instituting proceedings before the running of the statute, and whether the party relied thereon to his prejudice--is a question of fact and not of law (160 Cal. App. 4th 907, 925-926) .

The facts and procedure of McAlpine v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1, 257 Cal. Rptr. 32 , are discussed in § 143.46[4][a]. In denying the petition for writ of mandate, the court explained that the doctrine of equitable tolling requires not only that plaintiff has timely filed the alternative remedy, but also that in so doing plaintiff acted reasonably and in good faith (209 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5 n.2).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

115 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.47

§ 143.47 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Tolled by Fraudulent Concealment of Defendant's Identity

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD NOT SUSTAIN THE DEMURRER ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE THE STATUTE WAS EQUITABLY TOLLED BY THE FRAUDULENT CONCEALMENT OF DEFENDANT'S IDENTITY.

A. Equitable Tolling of Statute of Limitations. [See § 143.46[1].].

B. Fraudulent Concealment of Defendant's Identity. Defendant should be equitably estopped from asserting the statute of limitations because, as a result of intentional concealment, plaintiff was unable to discover the defendant's actual identity (Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint when the defendant has asserted that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, but the plaintiff has alleged in the complaint sufficient facts to show that the defendant had intentionally concealed his, her, or its identity from plaintiff [see Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In particular, facts showing the plaintiff's diligence in attempting to identify the defendant should be set forth. Facts showing the futility of normal discovery procedures to identify the defendant will also support the argument [see Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936-937, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Fraudulent Concealment of Defendant's Identity

Bernson v. Browning-Ferris Industries (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 926, 936, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 440, 873 P.2d 613 , involved a libel action by a city council member who was the subject of a highly critical dossier, the author, sponsor, or distributor of which was unidentified. Although plaintiff obtained a copy of the report in 1988, he had no information as to the identity of the parties behind it until 1990 when two reporters informed him of the identity of Browning-Ferris Industries. The plaintiff immediately contacted Browning-Ferris Industries' legal counsel to confirm the reporters' statements; however, counsel denied any knowledge of the report or its source. In May, 1991, another reporter provided plaintiff with more specific information about the author of the dossier prepared on behalf of Browning-Ferris Industries. Plaintiff then concluded that counsel's previous representations about Browning's noninvolvement were false and less than one year later, filed the action for libel against Browning and several individual defendants who allegedly prepared the report. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of those allegedly responsible for the libelous document on the ground that the action was not filed within one year after plaintiff learned of the existence of the document, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c)). The court of appeal affirmed, and the supreme court granted plaintiff's petition for review.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court noted that the general rule in California has been that ignorance of the identity of the defendant is not essential to a claim and will not toll the statute of limitations. Thus, when the plaintiff is aware of some of the defendants and he or she should use the normal procedure of filing suit against them, naming Doe defendants, and then taking discovery to identify the remainder (7 Cal. 4th 926, 932-933) . The Court defined the question in this case as being whether the general rule should apply when, as a result of the defendant's intentional concealment, the plaintiff is not only unaware of the defendant's identity, but is effectively precluded as a practical matter from ascertaining it through normal discovery procedures (7 Cal. 4th 926, 934) . The Court addressed one case, Staples v. Zoph (1935) 9 Cal. App. 2d 369, 370, 49 P.2d 1131 , in which the court held that ignorance of the identity of the defendant did not toll the statute of limitations. The Court distinguished Staples on the ground that it was silent on the issue of whether the defendant had intentionally concealed his identity to the plaintiff's detriment. Furthermore, the holding had never been subsequently applied to bar an action grounded on similar facts (7 Cal. 4th 926, 935) .

Relying on the principle that one should not profit from one's own wrongdoing, the Court held that a defendant may be equitably estopped from asserting the statute of limitations when, as a result of intentional concealment, the plaintiff is unable to discover the defendant's actual identity. The rule of equitable estoppel includes the requirement that the plaintiff exercise reasonable diligence and, thus, the statute of limitations will toll only until such time that the plaintiff knows, or through the exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the defendant's identity. Lack of knowledge alone is not sufficient to stay the statute; a plaintiff may not disregard reasonably available avenues of inquiry which, if vigorously pursued, might yield the desired information (7 Cal. 4th 926, 936) . In so holding, the Court disapproved the Staples case to the extent it is inconsistent (7 Cal. 4th 926, 936 n.6).

In determining whether a plaintiff has exercised reasonable diligence, courts must consider whether the filing of a timely Doe complaint would, as a practical matter, have facilitated the discovery of the defendant's identity within the requisite time period for service of process. Furthermore, if the identity of at least one defendant is known, the plaintiff must avail himself or herself of the opportunity to file a timely complaint naming Doe defendants and utilize discovery to ascertain the remaining defendants' identities. However, where discovery efforts will not be successful in ascertaining a defendant's identity because of his or her intentional concealment, the plaintiff should not be penalized (7 Cal. 4th 926, 937) .

In announcing this new rule of law, the California Supreme Court stated that this potential equitable estoppel will not unduly burden the trial courts because it will apply only in rare and exceptional cases (7 Cal. 4th 926, 937) . The Court remanded the case to determine whether, under the circumstances, defendants' actions constituted intentional concealment that deprived plaintiff, in fact, of knowledge of defendants' identity, and whether plaintiff exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to discover defendants' identity (7 Cal. 4th 926, 937-938) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.48

§ 143.48 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Tolled by Secretly Committed Breach of Contract

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE STATUTE WAS TOLLED BY DEFENDANT'S SECRETLY COMMITTED BREACH OF CONTRACT.

Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Defendant's Secretly Committed Breach of Contract. The discovery rule may be applied to breaches of contract which can be, and are, committed in secret and, where the harm flowing from those breaches will not be reasonably discoverable by plaintiffs until a future time, when: 1) the injury or the act causing the injury, or both, have been difficult for the plaintiff to detect; 2) the defendant has been in a far superior position to comprehend the act and the injury; and 3) the defendant had reason to believe the plaintiff remained ignorant that he/she had been wronged (Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-5, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint when the defendant has asserted that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, but the plaintiff has alleged in the complaint sufficient facts to show that the injury or the act causing the injury, or both, have been difficult for the plaintiff to detect, the defendant has been in a far superior position to comprehend the act and the injury and the defendant had reason to believe the plaintiff remained ignorant that he/she had been wronged [see Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-5, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Defendant's Secretly Committed Breach of Contract

Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680 involved an individual plaintiff who alleged a company who had provided him with a right of first refusal on certain real property, conveyed the property to another company without allowing him to exercise the right of first refusal. The trial court dismissed the action pursuant to defendants' motion for summary judgment, on the ground it was barred by the applicable statute of limitations. The individual appealed.

The appellate court determined that the delayed discovery rule should be applied because the first company not only breached the contract within the privacy of its own offices, but the act which constituted the breach, failure to give notice of the option offer, was the very act which prevented the individual from discovering the breach. Defendants had reason to believe the individual remained ignorant he had been wronged, since they conceded for purposes of the summary judgment motion they never provided him with notice of the option offer. The appellate court ruled that the running of the statute of limitations was tolled until such time as the individual knew or should have known of the wrongful conduct at issue. Furthermore, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment, as reasonable minds could differ as to the sufficiency of the individual's diligence in discovering the breach of contract, and therefore, whether the individual exercised reasonable diligence under the circumstances was a question of fact for a jury to decide. The court found that delayed discovery is applicable under these circumstances when: 1) the injury or the act causing the injury, or both, have been difficult for the plaintiff to detect; 2) the defendant has been in a far superior position to comprehend the act and the injury; and 3) the defendant had reason to believe the plaintiff remained ignorant that he/she had been wronged (107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-5) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersContracts LawBreachGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsTolling

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.49

§ 143.49 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Period of Limitation Tolled by Commencement of Class Action for Members of Putative Class

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE STATUTE WAS TOLLED FROM _____ [date], THE DATE AN ACTION WAS FILED ON BEHALF OF A CLASS OF WHICH PLAINTIFF IS A PUTATIVE MEMBER, UNTIL _____ [date], THE DATE ON WHICH CLASS CERTIFICATION WAS DENIED, FOR A TOTAL OF _____ [specify period, e.g., THIRTY DAYS].

Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Commencement of Class Action. The filing of a class action tolls the applicable statute of limitations for all members of the putative class until class certification is denied when the class action protects the efficiency and economy of litigation as promoted by the class action device, and it sufficiently notifies the defendant of the substantive claims of the members of the class and the number and generic identities of the potential plaintiffs who may participate in the judgment (Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1121-1125, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 ; Becker v. McMillin Construction Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1498-1502, 277 Cal. Rptr. 491).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

Thos memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint on the ground that the action is barred by the applicable statute of limitations, when the plaintiff has alleged that his or her complaint was filed after the filing of a class action on behalf of a class of which plaintiff is a member, and certain public policy considerations have been satisfied.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Commencement of Class Action

Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 , was an action against drug manufacturers for damages for personal injury caused by an allegedly defective drug, estrogen diethylstilbestrol (DES), taken by plaintiff's mother while she was pregnant with plaintiff. Plaintiff was born in 1951 and learned in 1972 that her mother had taken DES when plaintiff was in utero. Plaintiff then went to a medical center clinic for a checkup and was diagnosed as having a precancerous condition. In 1976, she had an abnormal pap smear, underwent a surgical procedure to remove abnormal tissue, and in 1978 underwent a complete hysterectomy and a partial vaginectomy to remove a malignancy. Since 1972 she had been aware, or at least suspected, that her condition was a result of her mother's ingestion of DES during pregnancy. Starting in 1972 she attempted to discover the manufacturer of the DES ingested by her mother, and efforts were increased in 1976 and 1978 when plaintiff's condition became acute.

Since at least 1978, plaintiff was aware of the pendency of one or more DES suits for failure to test or failure to warn. Plaintiff erroneously believed she was unable to sue, because she couldn't discover which manufacturer made the drug ingested by her mother. In March 1980, however, the California Supreme Court, in Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , held that a plaintiff who could not identify the precise drug manufacturer of the ingested DES could nevertheless state a cause of action against the DES manufacturers of a substantial percentage of the market share of the drug. The present action was filed almost a year later.

In 1982, the trial court in Sindell denied class certification for lack of commonality among class members on issues of proximate cause, extent of injury, and appropriate medical examination or treatment (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1120) . The trial court in the present case then granted the defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions). The court of appeal reversed. The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal with directions to affirm the summary judgment.

Although she did not raise the issue in the trial court, plaintiff, on appeal, argued that under American Pipe & Construction Co. v. Utah (1974) 414 U.S. 538, 94 S. Ct. 756, 38 L. Ed. 2d 713 , and its progeny, the filing of the class action in Sindell tolled the statute of limitations with respect to individual members of the putative class until the class was denied certification in 1982, and that her action was, therefore, timely. Sindell was an action by a woman suing on her own behalf and, "with respect to certain relief," on behalf of a class of women allegedly similarly situated. For herself individually, Sindell claimed damages for specific personal injury suffered as a result of her mother's ingestion of DES during pregnancy. In her cause of action relating to the class claims, Sindell described the class as female residents of California "who have been exposed to DES before birth and who may or may not know that fact or danger, and as a result of which, have or may have contracted or in the future may contract adenocarcinoma or vaginal or cervical adenosis or precancerous tumors of the breast or cancer of the bladder." For the class, Sindell sought only declaratory relief and an order directing defendants to publicize the dangers of DES and the necessity of medical evaluations and to fund the establishment and maintenance of clinics to provide free examinations to the DES daughters.

The Supreme Court rejected plaintiff's argument. Although it held it was not bound by the decision in American Pipe (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1119) , the Court nevertheless explained when that case would apply to toll the running of the statute of limitations (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1118-1126) . The Court said that American Pipe had held that when class action status has been denied solely because of failure to demonstrate that the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, the commencement of the original class suit tolls the running of the statute for all purported members of the class who make timely motions to intervene after the court has found the suit inappropriate for class action status (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1119) . The Court said that Bangert v. Narmco Materials, Inc. (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 207, 209 Cal. Rptr. 438 , extended American Pipe to apply to a class action suit when class certification was denied, not for lack of numerosity, but for insufficient community interest (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1119-1120) . The Court explained that underlying the tolling rule of American Pipe were two major policy considerations.

The first consideration is the protection of the class action device, that is, protecting the efficiency and economy of litigation (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1122) . In cases when class certification is denied for "subtle factors," unforeseeable by class members, a rule that failed to protect putative class members from the statute of limitations after denial of certification would induce potential class members to file protective motions to intervene or to join in the event that a class was later found unsuitable, depriving class actions of the efficiency and economy of litigation that is a principal purpose of the procedure (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1121) .

The second consideration is the effectuation of the purposes of the statute of limitations, that is, protecting the defendant from unfair claims (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1122) . The requirements of ensuring essential fairness to defendants and of barring a plaintiff who has slept on his rights are satisfied when a named plaintiff who is found to be representative of a class commences a suit and thereby notifies the defendants not only of the substantive claims being brought against them, but also of the number and generic identities of the potential plaintiffs who may participate in the judgment. In these circumstances, the purposes of the statute of limitations would not be violated by a decision to toll (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1121) .

The Court held that Sindell satisfied neither of these considerations, that it protected neither the efficiency and economy of litigation nor the defendant from unfair claims (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1122) . The court said that because the Sindell complaint did not seek personal injury damages on behalf of the class, even those absent class members who were aware of that action could not reasonably have relied on the complaint as a basis for postponing their own personal injury actions (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1125) ; that the Sindell complaint could not have apprised defendants of plaintiff's substantive claims (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1123) ; and that because it never put defendants on notice that personal injury damages were being sought on a class basis, it would be unfair to defendants to toll the statute of limitations on such personal injury actions (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1125) . The Court held that the American Pipe tolling rule was unavailable to Jolly, and that plaintiff and other similarly situated plaintiffs seeking personal injury damages in DES cases may not rely on the Sindell class action suit to toll the statute of limitations pursuant to American Pipe (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1126) , and it disapproved Bangert, above, to the extent that that decision is inconsistent with its holding (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1126 n.20).

Becker v. McMillin Construction Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 277 Cal. Rptr. 491 , was an action, filed on January 30, 1987, by Becker, the purchaser of a four-year-old single-family home in a 620-home development, many of the homes in which had been plagued with construction defects stemming from soil subsidence and other causes, against the defendant builder for damages based on strict liability and negligence. Becker had first noticed a crack in his garage floor slab in January 1984 and reported it to defendant's warranty division at that time. On September 7, 1984, another homeowner in the development, Castro, filed a construction defect action against defendant for damages for defective slabs, soil compaction, roofs, and common areas, alleging both individual and class claims on theories of breach of implied warranty, strict liability, and negligence. The development's homeowners' association, which had refused to assert Castro's claims on request, was named an unwilling plaintiff and joined as a defendant [see Code Civ. Proc. § 382]. Notice of Castro's action was given to the homeowners in the development. On February 11, 1987, Castro moved for certification of a class of homeowners and, if class certification was denied, alternatively for leave to file a third amended complaint naming the owners (including Becker) of 74 other homes as individual plaintiffs. Certification was denied on the ground that causation and damage among the different homes varied greatly enough so there was a lack of common questions of law and fact. In making its ruling, the trial court noted that the evidence showed some five or six potential causes of the construction defects, and several different kinds of projected damages, and ruled that because of these factors, it would be more appropriate to treat the various homeowners' claims individually, possibly consolidated for trial into groups according to the type of problem at the site. The court then deemed filed the third amended complaint, which named the putative class members, including Becker, as individual plaintiffs, and struck the class action claims.

Becker's insurer settled with Becker for $82,797 and then proceeded, as intervener on a subrogation basis, in Becker's action against the defendant. Becker's claims in the class action were severed and consolidated with Becker's action. Trial was set for October 1988. At the outset of trial, defendant claimed that the 10-year latent-deficiency construction-defect statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15) had run on December 14, 1986, the 10-year anniversary of the notice of completion of the property, and that both Becker's action and the amendment adding Becker as a plaintiff in the class action, filed on February 11, 1987, were untimely. Defendant argued that the rule of American Pipe & Const. Co. v. Utah (1974) 414 U.S. 538 , was not controlling, since in that case the class certification had been denied for lack of numerosity, while the multiple-party action certification had been denied for lack of common questions of law and fact. It relied on Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 , discussed above, in which no tolling was allowed and in which the denial of class certification had been made on the basis of lack of commonality. The trial court denied defendant's motion for separate trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 597) on the statute-of-limitations defense (Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15), having found the statute tolled by the pendency of a related class action, so that Becker's individual action was timely filed. The court discussed, in particular, Bangert v. Narmco Materials, Inc. (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 207, 209 Cal. Rptr. 438 , which followed American Pipe and was analyzed and disapproved in part by Jolly, above. The jury's verdict was for plaintiff, and defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the trial court correctly applied class action tolling rules summarized in Jolly, above (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1495, 1498) . The court summarized the two policy considerations discussed in Jolly, namely, protecting efficiency and economy in litigation as promoted by the class action device, and notice to the defendants of the substantive claims being brought against them and of the number and generic identities of the potential plaintiffs who may participate in the judgment (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1498-1499) . The court explained that in comparing Sindell v. Abbott Laboratories (1980) 26 Cal. 3d 588, 163 Cal. Rptr. 132, 607 P.2d 924 , and Jolly's action, the Supreme Court found inadequate notice of Jolly's claim had been given to the defendants in Sindell, and disallowed tolling, and that most of the Supreme Court's discussion focused on adequate notice to the defendants (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1499) .

The court did point out that the Supreme Court issued a warning that in the application of the American Pipe rule to personal injury mass tort cases, the presumption should be that "lack of commonality" will defeat certification and preclude application of the American Pipe tolling doctrine. Further, the Supreme Court, in a footnote dealing with alternative procedures, commented that it believed class actions can rarely be appropriate for resolution of mass-tort claims. However, the court noted that the Supreme Court had declined to decide the general issue of whether in any personal injury mass-tort case the filing of a class action complaint can serve to toll the statute of limitations for putative class members when the class ultimately is denied certification for lack of commonality, and that the Jolly decision concluded on the following, very specific note: "[W]e find that plaintiff and other similarly situated plaintiffs seeking personal injury damages in DES cases may not rely on the Sindell class action suit [citation] to toll the statute of limitations pursuant to American Pipe" (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1500) . The court added that accompanying this narrow holding was the footnote: "Insofar as Bangert v. Narmco Materials, Inc. [(1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 207, 209 Cal. Rptr. 438] is inconsistent with our holding, that case is disapproved" (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1500) .

Bangert extended American Pipe to a class action suit against a plastics research plant seeking injunctive and monetary relief for property damage, economic loss, and physical injuries, the asserted class consisting of persons living within a half-mile radius of the plant; that is, it involved both personal injury and property damage claims allegedly incurred over a 31-year period. The court of appeal concluded that Jolly disapproved Bangert in regard to the personal injury mass-tort claims but that it did not disapprove it in regard to the property damage mass-tort claims, because the affected property owners were more readily identifiable regarding number and generic identity, making it more reasonable to expect a defendant to be put on some degree of notice of the extent of the claim by the pending class action, even when class certification had to be denied for lack of common questions (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1500-1501) .

The court held that even though there was clearly a lack of commonality for class certification purposes, the substantive class and individual claims were sufficiently similar to give defendant notice of the litigation for purposes of applying the tolling rule. First, on the issue of the number and generic identities of the potential plaintiffs, the filing of the Castro action on construction defect theories must reasonably be said to have put defendant on notice that a certain number of homeowners in this specific subdivision were experiencing construction defects that might well lead to extended litigation, whether in a class forum or in individual actions. The identity and number of potential claimants were thus ascertainable to a significant degree that was adequate to give the required notice of the addresses potentially involved in the action. Some turnover in home ownership was inevitable, which later discovery could reveal, but it cannot be disputed that the generic identity of plaintiffs was obvious (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1501) .

With respect to the issue of the nature of the substantive claims, the Castro action gave defendant notice that construction defects were claimed by some homeowners at the site. It was then aware of the need to preserve evidence and witnesses respecting the claims of all the members of the class (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1502) . The court said that an experienced developer such as defendant can be expected to have general familiarity with the nature of latent-deficiency construction-defect claims that might be brought against it, such as Castro and Becker each raised. Litigation of the substantive claims would, of course, require individualized attention to causation and degree of damage at the properties; this problem was serious enough to defeat the class-certification request. However, such problems are not fatal to the existence of an adequate degree of notice to the defendant for purposes of applying the tolling rule in the property damage context (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1502) . The court, however, cautioned that its decision should not be broadly construed to apply to any and all construction-defect cases, and that, consistent with the Supreme Court's approach in Jolly, the applicability of American Pipe can only be determined by individualized attention to the identity of the claimants and the nature of the claims involved, and by a careful weighing of the important policy considerations in this area (226 Cal. App. 3d 1493, 1502) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Tolling of Statute of Limitations by Commencement of Class Action in Another State

In Clemens v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (9th Cir. 2008) 534 F.3d 1017 , plaintiff consumer sought review of a judgment from the U.S. District Court for the Central District of California, which, among other things, ruled that plaintiff's fraud claims under Civ. Code §§ 1709-1710 were barred by the three-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d), which was not tolled by the discovery rule or by the filing of a similar action in Illinois. On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals noted that in some instances, a plaintiff can rely on the filing of a prior class action to vindicate the right in question and toll the statute in the event that the class is not ultimately certified. A handful of states have applied this rule when a class action is filed in another jurisdiction. However, the California Supreme Court has not adopted such cross-jurisdictional tolling, however, and few states do. Several federal courts have declined to import the doctrine into state law where it did not previously exist. Accordingly, the Ninth Circuit ruled that the weight of authority and California's interest in managing its own judicial system counsel it not to import the doctrine of cross-jurisdictional tolling into California law. The rule of American Pipe--which allows tolling within the federal court system in federal question class actions--does not mandate cross-jurisdictional tolling as a matter of state procedure (534 F.3d 1017, 1025) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresClass ActionsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of

LimitationsTolling

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.50

§ 143.50 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Estoppel to Raise Defense of Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER BASED ON THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT DELAY IN COMMENCING THE ACTION WAS INDUCED BY THE CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT.

A. Delay Induced by Defendant. When delay in commencing an action is induced by the conduct of the defendant, the delay cannot be availed of as a defense (Tresway Aero, Inc. v. Superior Court (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 431, 438, 96 Cal. Rptr. 571, 487 P.2d 1211 ; Ateeq v. Najor (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1356-1357, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320).

B. Fraud Not Necessary. When the plaintiff's delay in commencing an action was induced by the defendant, that delay is not a defense, even if there was no designed fraud on the part of the defendant (Ginns v. Savage (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 520, 524-525, 39 Cal. Rptr. 377, 393 P.2d 689).

[Optional] C. Requirements for Delay Due to Fraud. Whether a complaint sufficiently alleges a fraudulent concealment of the cause of action, so as to extend the period of limitation, is to be determined by the same rules that apply where the question is whether a case is within the saving provision of Code of Civil Procedure Section 338 regarding actions based on fraud (Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 Cal. 203, 215, 30 P.2d 39). The complaint must plead facts showing a lack of knowledge of the facts constituting the ground for estoppel, and a lack of means of obtaining that knowledge, and how and when plaintiff became aware of those facts (Negaard v. Department of Aeronautics (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 92, 97, 107 Cal. Rptr. 920).

[Optional] D. Delay Resulted From Duress Caused by Defendant's Threats Against Plaintiff. A defendant may be estopped from pleading the defense of the statute of limitations due to threats made by the defendant, which caused duress on the plaintiff and resulted in plaintiff's delayed filing of the action (Ateeq v. Najor (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1356-1357, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320).

[Optional] E. Equitable Estoppel Can Apply No Matter How Unequivocally the Statutory Language Containing the Applicable Limitations Period Is Expressed. Application of equitable estoppel is wholly independent of the limitations period itself. It arises, not from the language of the statute, but from the equitable principle that a person will not be permitted to profit from that person's own wrongdoing in a court of justice. Because equitable estoppel operates directly on the defendant without abrogating the running of the statutory limitations period, it can apply no matter how unequivocally the statutory language containing the applicable limitations period is expressed in the absence of statutory language, or legislative history, to the contrary (Battuello v. Battuello (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 842, 847-848, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548).

[Optional] F. Equitable Estoppel Can Apply Although No Affirmative Conduct Is Involved. Although application of equitable estoppel against the assertion of a limitations defense typically arises through some misleading affirmative conduct on a defendant's part, an estoppel may also arise from silence when there is a duty to speak (Spray, Gould & Bowers v. Associated Internat. Ins. Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1263, 1268-1269, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations, but the complaint alleges facts showing that the defendant is estopped to raise that defense.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of his case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation that the defendant is estopped to raise the defense of bar of a statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delay Induced by Defendant

Tresway Aero, Inc. v. Superior Court (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 431, 96 Cal. Rptr. 571, 487 P.2d 1211 , was a mandamus proceeding to compel the respondent court to quash service of summons and to dismiss an action for failure to serve summons within three years, pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.210 et seq.). A defective summons was served within the three year period. The defendant (petitioner) requested and received an extension for appearance beyond the date three years after filing the complaint and, the Supreme Court stated, thereby effectively prevented the plaintiff from discovering the defect in service until after the three year period had elapsed. The Supreme Court made the statement set out as Paragraph A while discussing analogous cases dealing with statutes of limitations (5 Cal. 3d 431, 438) . (Writ denied as to dismissal but granted as to quashing service for summons.) Note that Code Civ. Proc. § 583.110 et seq., replacing former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 581a and 583, neither abrogate nor otherwise affect the principles of waiver and estoppel [Code Civ. Proc. § 583.140; cf. former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a(f)(1)].

Plaintiff in Ateeq v. Najor (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320 , an Iraqi citizen, entered into a partnership with defendant and plaintiff's cousin to purchase land in the United States as investments. Plaintiff gave defendant and his cousin a power of attorney to handle the investments. Defendant attempted to help plaintiff obtain residency in the United States through a business investor program, which resulted in plaintiff acquiring one-half interest in one of defendant's businesses. After further transactions, a disagreement arose between the parties, and plaintiff revoked the power of attorney. Plaintiff discovered many discrepancies, including defendant's 1987 sale of one of the properties without sharing the proceeds. Plaintiff sued defendant and his cousin, alleging undue influence, conspiracy to commit fraud, violations of trust, and constructive fraud. The jury found by special verdict that certain properties should be equally divided among the investors, that a confidential relationship existed between the investors, that defendant threatened to have plaintiff deported if plaintiff contested the accountings, and that plaintiff actually believed such threats would be carried out, and awarded general and punitive damages to plaintiff. The court entered judgment in accordance with the special verdict against defendant, and denied defendant's motion for judgment based on the statute of limitations. Defendant appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that it could not reweigh the evidence on appeal and concluding that the trial court did not err in finding defendant was estopped from pleading the defense of the statute of limitations. The special verdicts and the court findings on denying defendant's motion for judgment supported that duress occurred, that plaintiff reasonably believed defendant would carry out the threats, that plaintiff's forbearance to bring the suit was reasonable, and that duress continued up to three years before plaintiff filed the action. The appellate court found no specific California case that holds a defendant may be estopped from pleading the defense of the statute of limitations due to threats made by the defendant and causing duress on the plaintiff. However, there is ample case law on the principles of equitable estoppel. Equitable estoppel will preclude a defendant from pleading the bar of the statute of limitations when the plaintiff was induced to refrain from bringing a timely action by the fraud, misrepresentation, or deceptions of defendant. Statutes of limitation are not so rigid that under certain circumstances principles of equity and justice will not allow them to be extended or tolled. When delay in commencing an action is induced by the defendant's conduct, defendant cannot avail himself or herself of the defense of the statute. The appellate court found that the circumstances of this case clearly fell within established principles of equitable estoppel (15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1356-1357) .

The appellate court rejected defendant's argument that duress is fraud for purposed of applying the three-year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d). That section does not apply when the duress imposed is not part of the underlying cause of action, but is rather a separate wrongful action by a defendant intended to delay a filing of a lawsuit. The equitable estoppel finding was not based on fraud or concealment of the underlying action, nor was it based on any confidential relationship between the parties that was found to have ended in 1981 or 1982. Rather, it was based on independent actions consisting of defendant's threats to have plaintiff deported if he caused problems regarding the accountings (15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1357-1358) .

The reviewing court also rejected defendant's assertion that plaintiff could not rely on equitable estoppel because plaintiff failed to plead in the complaint the specific facts of duress resulting from the deportation threats. If the facts alleged in a complaint clearly show the statute has run, then the plaintiff may be required to affirmatively and specifically plead facts supporting estoppel. Plaintiff's complaint, however, did not clearly indicate the statute would have run. Accordingly, plaintiff was not required to specifically plead the deportation threats at the initial stage of filing the complaint. Plaintiff may not have necessarily known the statute was an issue until defendant raised it as an affirmative defense in his answer. Since plaintiff timely raised the issue of estoppel due to the threats in response to defendant's motion for a defense judgment, plaintiff was not precluded from relying on equitable estoppel for failure to specifically plead it in the complaint (15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1358) .

Finally, the court rejected defendant's argument that plaintiff should be prevented by laches from pursuing the action. Defendant's claimed prejudice was the loss of bank records. But these records were under defendant's control at the time defendant knew a dispute could arise. Laches, like estoppel, is founded on equitable principles. The delay was caused by defendant's wrongdoing. If defendant didn't retain all the records necessary to adequately defend himself, it resulted from his wrongful actions and equity will not condone the wrongdoing by allowing him to plead laches (15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 1359) .

[b] Fraud Not Necessary

Ginns v. Savage (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 520, 39 Cal. Rptr. 377, 393 P.2d 689 , was a mandate proceeding that the trial court dismissed following the sustaining of a demurrer on the ground of failure to commence it within the statutory period. Plaintiff contended (but did not plead) that she relied on representations by defendant's attorney to the effect that plaintiff had a longer period of time in which to commence the proceeding than was the fact. The Supreme Court reversed with directions that plaintiff be given leave to amend to set up facts showing estoppel. When delay in commencing an action is induced by conduct of the defendant, it cannot be availed of by him as a defense, even though there was no designed fraud on the part of the person sought to be estopped (61 Cal. 2d 520, 524-525) .

[c] Requirements for Delay Due to Fraud

Kimball v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (1934) 220 Cal. 203, 30 P.2d 39 , was an action for damages based on personal injury resulting from negligence. The trial court directed a verdict in favor of the allegedly negligent party on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, but the jury gave a verdict against that party's employer, who was then the only defendant, and that defendant appealed. One issue on appeal was whether the complaint alleged fraudulent concealment of the cause of action, so that defendant should have been held estopped to raise the defense of limitation. The Supreme Court stated that although the case did not fall within the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 338, "the same rules of pleading should apply and the same particularity should be required as is necessary to bring that section into operation" (220 Cal. 203, 215) .

Negaard v. Department of Aeronautics (1973) 32 Cal. App. 3d 92, 107 Cal. Rptr. 920 was a mandate proceeding. The trial court dismissed following the sustaining of a demurrer on the ground that the action was barred. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that although an attempt was made to plead estoppel, it failed because nowhere in the petition was it alleged when the petitioner became aware of the facts on which he based his contention of estoppel. The court cited Casualty Ins. Co. v. Rees Inv. Co. (1971) 14 Cal. App. 3d 716, 720, 92 Cal. Rptr. 857 , in which the court had set out the facts (stated in Paragraph C) which must be alleged as an excuse for late commencement of an action based on fraud, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 338 (32 Cal. App. 3d 92, 97) .

[d] Delay Resulted From Duress Caused by Defendant's Threats Against Plaintiff

Ateeq v. Najor (1993) 15 Cal. App. 4th 1351, 19 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320 , is discussed in § 143.50[3][a].

[e] Equitable Estoppel Can Apply No Matter How Unequivocally the Statutory Language Containing the Applicable Limitations Period Is Expressed

In Battuello v. Battuello (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 842, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 548 , plaintiff worked on the family vineyard for many years. From his childhood, plaintiff's parents told him that he would be given the vineyard when his father died. In reliance on those promises, plaintiff attended college to learn the formal aspects of running a business. From 1970 through 1995 plaintiff farmed and managed the vineyard. In 1988, plaintiff's parents had executed a trust that specified that plaintiff would receive the vineyard on the death of the survivor of plaintiff's parents. Plaintiff's father died on December 10, 1995, and shortly thereafter plaintiff learned that in 1994, plaintiff's parents executed another trust and related documents that stated that plaintiff would not receive the vineyard as promised. Plaintiff objected when plaintiff learned this and entered into settlement negotiations with his mother and her legal advisors. As a result of these negotiations, plaintiff's mother promised plaintiff that he would receive the vineyard no later than the end of 1996. In reliance on those promises, plaintiff refrained from making any objection when his mother filed a petition in superior court to confirm that the 1994 trust had title to the vineyard. The court in 1996 ruled that the trust had title to the vineyard. Shortly thereafter, plaintiff's mother repudiated the settlement agreement and took the position that plaintiff did not have any right to the vineyard other than that to which plaintiff might be entitled pursuant to the 1994 trust. Plaintiff then brought suit seeking to enforce the father's promise to give the vineyard to plaintiff when the father died. The mother, acting individually, as trustee of the trust, and apparently on behalf of the father's estate demurred to the complaint, asserting that the one year limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2 barred the action. The trial court agreed and sustained the demurer without leave to amend (64 Cal. App. 4th 842, 845-846) . Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court, quoting Bomba v. W.L. Belvidere, Inc. (7th Cir. 1978) 579 F.2d 1067, 1070 , noted that equitable estoppel, unlike tolling, is neither concerned with the point at which a limitations period commences to run nor with the circumstances which may suspend running of the limitation period. Rather, equitable estoppel comes into play after a limitations period has expired and addresses itself to the circumstances in which a party will be estopped from asserting the statute of limitations as a defense to an admittedly untimely action because that party's conduct has induced another into forebearing suit within the applicable limitations period. Application of equitable estoppel is wholly independent of the limitations period itself. It arises, not from the language of the statute, but from the equitable principle that a person will not be permitted to profit from that person's own wrongdoing in a court of justice. Because equitable estoppel operates directly on the defendant without abrogating the running of the statutory limitations period, it might apply no matter how unequivocally the statutory language containing the applicable limitations period is expressed (64 Cal. App. 4th 842, 847-848) . Although former Code Civ. Proc. § 366.2(a)(2), see now 366.2(b) which provides that "[t]he limitations period provided in this section for commencement of an action shall not be tolled or extended for any reason," except as specified in § 366.2(b)(1)-(4), clearly shows the Legislature intended that the statute of limitations set forth in that section not be "tolled" or "extended," the statute is silent about equitable estoppel. Absent such language, or legislative history suggesting that the Legislature intended to abrogate the doctrine of equitable estoppel, the doctrine of equitable estoppel still applies (64 Cal. App. 4th 842, 848) . The court concluded that plaintiff had alleged facts sufficient to come within the doctrine of equitable estoppel because he had claimed that during the settlement negotiations which followed the death of his father, his mother convinced him not to file a timely suit by telling him that he would receive the vineyard. By the time plaintiff learned that his mother's promise was false, the statute of limitations had passed (64 Cal. App. 4th 842, 848) .

[f] Equitable Estoppel Can Apply Although No Affirmative Conduct Is Involved

In Spray, Gould & Bowers v. Associated Internat. Ins. Co. (1999) 71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 552 , defendant had sold to plaintiff, a law firm, a combined business interruption and extra expense insurance policy with an effective period of September 2, 1993, to September 2, 1994. The policy contained a contractual limitations clause which in part required suit for recovery of any claim on the policy to be commenced within twelve months after discovery by the insured of the occurrence that gave rise to the claim. Plaintiffs filed a complaint on September 16, 1996, alleging causes of action for breach of contract, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, and declaratory relief, alleging that the plaintiff had suffered loss as a result of the Northridge earthquake on January 1994, that the claim on the insurance contract had been timely made and that the defendant had wrongly refused to pay. The defendant filed its answer raising a contract limitations affirmative defense, and later moved for summary judgment based on the contract limitations clause. The facts adduced in support of the summary judgment motion showed that the loss occurred on January 17, 1994, and was discovered by the insured on January 17-18, 1994. Plaintiff made a claim under the policy on November 21, 1994, and the defendant denied the claim on April 15, 1995. Taking into account a period for tolling between the date of the claim and the date of denial of the claim, the action was untimely because it was brought approximately 27 months past the contract limitations period of twelve months. In opposition, plaintiff submitted declarations and discovery responses that stated that the plaintiff's employees charged with the responsibility for the claim were unaware of the 12-month policy limitations period and that the defendant did not advise plaintiff of the 12-month limit in the exchange of correspondence relating to the claim. Plaintiff submitted in evidence 10 Cal. Code Reg. §§ 2695.1 and 2695.4, which are part of the Fair Claims Settlement Practices Regulations (10 Cal. Code Reg. § 2695.1 et seq.). 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 1695.4 (as in effect at the time of the issuance of the policy, the loss, and the submission and denial of the claim) required insurers to disclose to insureds time limits which apply to submitted claims. Plaintiffs contended that defendant had failed to notify plaintiff of the time limit for filing an action on the policy (other than the admitted existence of the policy provision) and in light of plaintiff's lack of actual knowledge of the time limit, defendant should be estopped from relying on the policy limitations provision. Defendant did not dispute the alleged violation of the regulation, but denied the applicability of 10 Cal. Code Reg. § 2695.4(a), under traditional contract and estoppel principles, to the limitations dispute The trial court granted summary judgment in defendant's favor and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded the matter for further proceedings consistent with the views expressed in the opinion. The court agreed with plaintiff that a triable issue of fact was raised whether defendant should be estopped from raising the limitations defense (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1265) . The court held that an insurer's direct violation of duly promulgated administrative regulations issued by the California Insurance Commissioner, requiring the insurer to notify a claimant insured of time limits pertaining to a claim, may provide the basis of an estoppel against the insurer's assertion of a contract limitations defense (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1263, 1265) . In reaching this conclusion, the court noted that to establish an equitable estoppel ordinarily four elements must be proved: (1) knowledge of the facts by the party against whom the estoppel is sought; (2) conduct by that party intended to be acted on or that the party seeking the estoppel had a right to believe was intended to be acted on; (3) ignorance of the facts by the party seeking the estoppel; and (4) reliance on the conduct by the party seeking the estoppel to that party's injury. Application of equitable estoppel against the assertion of a limitations defense typically arises through some misleading affirmative conduct on defendant's part. An estoppel may also arise from silence when there is duty to speak (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1268) . The duty to speak arose from the regulation imposing on insurers an unmistakable duty to advise claimant insureds of applicable time limits. The court saw no reason not to adopt this public policy as giving rise to a duty to speak for the purpose of applying the doctrine of equitable estoppel (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1269) . Moreover, the court also concluded that estoppel was not precluded by the limits of the Commissioner's regulatory authority (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1269-1271) , or by Moradi-Shalal v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Companies (1998) 46 Cal. 3d 287, 250 Cal. Rptr. 116, 758 P.2d 58 (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1271-1272) , and that estoppel was not inconsistent with Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 1, 34, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 370, 900 P.2d 619 (71 Cal. App. 4th 1260, 1272) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Delay Induced by Defendant

In Lerner v. Los Angeles City Bd. of Educ. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 382, 29 Cal. Rptr. 657, 380 P.2d 97 , reversing a judgment denying relief against a local board of education in an action by a teacher seeking reinstatement and rejecting the board's assertion of the defense of limitation on the basis of estoppel, the Supreme Court stated that the board's advice to plaintiff, that it lacked jurisdiction or authority to restore his teaching credential and that no school district could legally employ him, induced plaintiff's inaction and would estop the state board from later relying on limitation; and that the privity between the city and state boards is such that the estoppel of the state board binds the city board (59 Cal. 2d 382, 396-397) .

In Stafford v. Shultz (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 767, 270 P.2d 1 , reversing a judgment after the sustaining of a demurrer, on the ground that one of the defendants was estopped from asserting limitation because of fraudulent misrepresentation and concealment, the Supreme Court stated that the ground of relief is that defendant, having by fraud and deceit concealed material facts and by misrepresentations hindered plaintiff from bringing an action within the statutory period, is estopped from taking advantage of his own wrong (42 Cal. 2d 767, 779) .

In Carruth v. Fritch (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 426, 224 P.2d 702 , reversing a judgment following the sustaining of a demurrer, on the ground of estoppel, the Supreme Court stated that one cannot justly or equitably lull the adversary into a false sense of security, and thereby cause the adversary to subject his or her claim to the bar of the statue of limitations, and then be permitted to plead the delay caused by this course of conduct as a defense to the action (36 Cal. 2d 426, 431-434) .

In Tyra v. Board of Police & Fire Comm'r of Long Beach (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 666, 197 P.2d 710 , reversing a judgment for defendant in a mandate proceeding to compel granting retirement and benefits to firemen, the Supreme Court stated that since the delay charged to plaintiffs was induced by the erroneous position and advice of defendants and their attorneys, they could not interpose the defense of limitation because they were estopped to do so (32 Cal. 2d 666, 670-671) .

In Lukovsky v. City and County of San Francisco (9th Cir. 2008) 535 F.3d 1044 , plaintiff applicants claimed that they applied for several permanent electrical transit systems mechanics but were rejected because defendants gave preferential hiring treatment to Asian and Filipino workers. Plaintiffs argued that defendants should be equitably estopped from asserting a statute of limitations defense because, they contend, the defendants' misrepresentations about requiring written verification of qualifying experience concealed that they were hiring unqualified Asian and Filipino applicants instead. The Ninth Circuit rejected this argument, noting that the primary problem with plaintiffs' argument is that their alleged basis for equitable estoppel was the same as their cause of action, and that a plaintiff must point to some fraudulent concealment, some active conduct by the defendant above and beyond the wrongdoing upon which the plaintiff's claim is filed, to prevent the plaintiff from suing in time (535 F.3d 1044, 1052) .

In California v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 Cal. App. 4th 129, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 738 , upholding a judgment ordering specific performance of a contractual obligation requiring real estate buyers to plug and abandon idle oil wells on various properties, the Court of Appeal held that the action was not partially barred by the four-year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 337 because, among other things, the buyers were estopped from asserting limitations because they induced the seller not to sue pending settlement (165 Cal. App. 4th 129, 138) .

In Leasequip, Inc. v. Dapeer (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 394, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 782 an attorney was equitably estopped from asserting the statute of limitations defense in a legal malpractice lawsuit when the attorney advised the corporate client that the failure to comply with required corporate formalities would have no negative impact, the corporate client followed the attorney's advice and did not comply with required corporate formalities, and the statute of limitations expired because the corporation failed to comply with corporate formalities (103 Cal. App. 4th 394, 403-408) .

In Kurokawa v. Blum (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 976, 245 Cal. Rptr. 463 , the court of appeal stated the rule that estoppel to assert the defense of the statute of limitations may be invoked when the delay in commencing an action is induced by the defendant's conduct (199 Cal. App. 3d 976, 990) . The court went on, however, to find the rule inapplicable to the case before it.

[b] Fraud Not Necessary

In Benner v. Industrial Acci. Com. (1945) 26 Cal. 2d 346, 159 P.2d 24 , annulling an order denying workmen's compensation when the evidence indicated estoppel to plead limitation, the Supreme Court stated that when the delay in commencing an action was induced by the party sought to be charged, he may not invoke such conduct to defeat recovery, although there was not any designed fraud on the part of the party sought to be charged (26 Cal. 2d 346, 349) .

In Barr v. ACandS, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 , the court, although finding that estoppel did not apply in the case before it, noted that the conduct that forms the estoppel need not be fraudulent, performed in bad faith, or with an intent to mislead the plaintiff (57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 1057) .

In Kunstman v. Mirizzi (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 753, 756-757, 44 Cal. Rptr. 707 , the court noted that it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to allege actual fraud when asserting estoppel, since actual fraud in the technical sense, or bad faith or an intent to mislead, is not essential to create an estoppel (234 Cal. App. 2d 753, 756-757) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsEquitable Estoppel

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.51

§ 143.51 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Defendant on Probation and Under Order of Restitution [Code Civ. Proc. § 352.5]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

A DEMURRER BASED ON A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED WHERE THE COMPLAINT ALLEGES THAT FOR A SPECIFIED PERIOD AFTER ACCRUAL OF THE CAUSE OF ACTION DEFENDANT WAS UNDER AN ORDER OF RESTITUTION AS A CONDITION OF PROBATION WITH RESPECT TO THE ACT GIVING RISE TO THE CAUSE OF ACTION, IF THE ACTION WAS COMMENCED WITHIN THE STATUTORY PERIOD AS EXTENDED BY ADDITION OF THE PERIOD WHEN THE ORDER OF RESTITUTION WAS IN FORCE.

Extension of Period by Probationary Order for Restitution. If, after a cause of action accrues against a person, that person comes under an order for restitution as a condition of probation with respect to the specific act or omission giving rise to such person's liability, the time during which the order is in effect is not a part of the time limited for the commencement of such an action based upon that act or omission (Code Civ. Proc. § 352.5).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitation, but the complaint alleges that during the statutory period the defendant was under an order for restitution as a condition of probation with respect to the act or omission giving rise to the cause of action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation for use where the defendant is under an order for restitution, and the statutory period of limitation is thereby extended, see Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions , in California Forms of Pleading and Practice.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.52

§ 143.52 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Generally

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE THE DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT ON THE GROUND THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT PLAINTIFF DID NOT DISCOVER THE FACTS GIVING RISE TO THE CAUSE OF ACTION UNTIL _____ [date], THAT PLAINTIFF IN THE EXERCISE OF REASONABLE DILIGENCE COULD NOT HAVE DISCOVERED THE FACTS AT AN EARLIER DATE THAT DESPITE DILIGENT INVESTIGATION OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES, PLAINTIFF COULD NOT HAVE REASONABLY DISCOVERED FACTS SUPPORTING THE CAUSE OF ACTION AT AN EARLIER DATE, AND THAT THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS DID NOT COMMENCE RUNNING UNTIL THE DATE OF DISCOVERY.

[EITHER]

A. Action Based on Theft of Art or Artifact. A cause of action for taking, detaining, or injuring any goods or chattels, including actions for the specific recovery of personal property, must be commenced within three years, but a cause of action based on theft, as defined in Penal Code Section 484, of any article of historical, interpretive, scientific, or artistic significance is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the whereabouts of the article by the aggrieved party or his or her agent, or the law enforcement agency that originally investigated the theft (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(c)).

[OR]

A. Action Based on Fraud or Mistake. An action for relief on the ground of fraud or mistake must be commenced within three years, but a cause of action based on fraud or mistake is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party, of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d); E-Fab, Inc. v. Accountants, Inc. Services (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1308, 1322, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9).

[OR]

A. Action on Official Bond. An action on the bond of a public official must be commenced within three years, but a cause of action based on fraud or embezzlement is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery, by the aggrieved party or his or her agent, of the facts constituting the cause of action on the bond (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(e)).

[OR]

A. Action Against Notary Public. An action against a notary public on his or her bond or in his or her official capacity must be commenced within three years, but any cause of action based on malfeasance or misfeasance is not deemed to have accrued until discovery, by the aggrieved party or his or her agent, of the facts constituting the cause of action; provided that any action based on malfeasance or misfeasance must be commenced within one year from such discovery or within three years from the performance of the notarial act giving rise to the action, whichever is later, and provided further that any action against a notary public on his or her bond or in his or her official capacity must be commenced within six years (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(f)).

[OR]

A. Action for Civil Penalty for False Representations to the Public. An action commenced under Business and Professions Code Section 17536 must be commenced within three years, but the cause of action is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the aggrieved party, the Attorney General, the district attorney, county counsel, the city prosecutor, or the city attorney of the facts constituting grounds for commencing the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(h)).

[OR]

A. Action for Civil Penalty for Diversion or Obstruction of Designated River, Stream, or Lake. An action commenced under Fish and Game Code Section 1603.1 must be commenced within three years, but the cause of action is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the agency bringing the action of the facts constituting grounds for commencing the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(l)).

[OR]

A. Action for Civil Penalty for Pollution. An action commenced under Fish and Game Code Section 5650.1 must be commenced within three years, but the cause of action is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery by the agency bringing the action of the facts constituting grounds for commencing the action (Code Civ. Proc. § 338(l)).

[OR]

A. Action Based on Rescission of Written Contract for Fraud or Mistake. An action based on the rescission of a written contract must be commenced within four years. The time begins to run from the date on which the facts that entitle the aggrieved party to rescind occurred, but when the ground of rescission is fraud or mistake, the time does not begin to run until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. When the ground for rescission is misrepresentation under Ins. Code § 359 (authorizing rescission of insurance contract for false representation in material point), the time does not begin to run until the representation becomes false (Code Civ. Proc. § 337(3)).

[OR]

A. Action Based on Rescission of Oral Contract for Fraud or Mistake. An action based on the rescission of a contract not in writing is two years, and the time begins to run from the date on which the facts that entitle the aggrieved party to rescind occurred. But when the ground for rescission is fraud or mistake, the time does not begin to run until the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake (Code Civ. Proc. § 339(3)).

[OR]

A. Action Founded on Contract, Obligation, or Liability Evidenced by Certificate, or Abstract or Guaranty of Title of Real Property, or by Title Insurance Policy. An action founded on a contract, obligation, or liability, evidenced by a certificate, or abstract or guaranty of title of real property, or by a policy of title insurance must be commenced within two years, but the action is not deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the loss or damage suffered by the aggrieved party thereunder (Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1)).

[OR]

A. Action for Relief by Good-Faith Improver of Land. An action by a good-faith improver for relief under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 871.1-871.7 (relating to good-faith improver of land owned by another) must be commenced within one year, but the time begins to run from the date on which the good-faith improver discovers that he or she is not the owner of the land on which the improvements have been made (Code Civ. Proc. § 340(e)).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Breach of Fiduciary Duty. The delayed discovery rule applies to a breach of duty by a fiduciary even though the breach of duty may constitute a breach of contract as well (Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 922-923, 259 Cal. Rptr. 117).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint when the demurrer asserts the action is barred by a statute of limitations. The basis of the opposition is that the complaint alleges facts showing that the delayed discovery rule applies and that the statute of limitations did not commence running on the date the cause of action actually accrued, but on some later date when plaintiff discovered the facts giving rise to the cause of action, and that the complaint was therefore timely filed.

The points set forth in alternative Paragraphs A of the form are some of the most frequently cited statutes in cases involving delayed discovery. However, other statutes exist [see, e.g., Civ. Code § 3426.6 (misappropriation of trade secret); Code Civ. Proc. § 336 (action for violation of a restriction, as defined in Civ. Code § 784); Code Civ. Proc. § 338(i), (k) (certain actions normally prosecuted by a public officer or entity); Code Civ. Proc. § 340.15 (damages resulting from domestic violence)].

Under still other statutes, the discovery rule applies to shorten the applicable statute of limitations [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 (actions against health care providers based on professional negligence); Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 (actions against attorneys for a wrongful act or omission other than fraud, but including tolling provisions in specified circumstances)].

For points and authorities supporting applicability of the delayed discovery rule to an action for personal injury without perceptible trauma, see § 143.53. For points and authorities for use in an action for damages for injuries arising out of asbestos exposure, see § 143.54. For a form of points and authorities for use in an action for damages arising out of childhood sexual abuse, see § 143.57. For points and authorities for use when the plaintiff pleads facts that raise an estoppel against defendant to plead the statute of limitations, see § 143.50.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case alleged and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Based on Fraud or Mistake

In E-Fab, Inc. v. Accountants, Inc. Services (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 1308, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , an agency placed a temporary accountant with the client's company, representing that it had conducted a background screening of the accountant and had verified her credentials. The client later gave her a permanent job. Over a period of about seven years, the accountant embezzled over $1 million and altered the company's bank statements. After learning of the embezzlement, the client discovered that the accountant had prior criminal convictions, had been incarcerated, and had falsified her academic credentials, but the agency had failed to discover any of those problems in its screening process. The client filed suit against the agency within two years of discovering her background. The trial court held the suit was untimely, granted the defendant's demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court held that the suit was timely under Code Civ. Proc., §§ 337, 338(d), 339, because the discovery rule applied. The accrual trigger was the client's discovery that the agency had misrepresented the accountant's record, which put the client on notice under Civ. Code, §§ 18, 19. The complaint adequately alleged that the client had no previous reason to suspect inadequate screening and specifically described both the time and the circumstances of the client's discovery of its claim. The court found the plaintiff pleading sufficiently alleged the plaintiff was not aware of the employee's prior convictions for theft and welfare fraud and that her academic credentials had not been verified until after her embezzlement became known in November 2003 when plaintiff was first informed of the employee's criminal record by the police. Sufficient pleading also existed to support a claim an inability to have made an earlier discovery, because plaintiff alleges that it had "no reason to suspect that [defendant] did not screen plaintiff and failed to discover she had prior convictions for theft and welfare fraud, or that her academic credentials were misrepresented, or that she was embezzling money as Vickie Hunt appeared to be a competent and honest employee" (153 Cal. App. 4th 1308, 1326) .

[b] Breach of Fiduciary Duty

Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 259 Cal. Rptr. 117 , was an action for fraud, breach of contract, negligence, conversion, and civil conspiracy against an escrow company and named individuals, arising out of plaintiff's $100,000 investment in a real property transaction, based on the escrow's unauthorized disbursement of funds from plaintiff's escrow under a forged signature. Plaintiff alleged that the defendant did not attempt to verify his signature on the escrow amendment authorizing the release of funds, that he did not learn of the withdrawals for a number of years, and that, during that time, in response to his inquiries, he was informed that title to the property had passed to him and that the escrow was being taken care of. Title to the property had in fact not passed to him. The wrongful conduct alleged thus related to the defendant's failure to carry out the escrow instructions by disbursing funds pursuant to a forged amendment. The final wrongful act alleged by plaintiff occurred on September 25, 1981, and the original complaint was filed on November 21, 1986. Plaintiff alleged that he did not learn of defendant's wrongful conduct until August 1986. Defendant escrow's demurrer to the "corrected second amended complaint" was sustained without leave to amend on the ground the actions were barred by the statute of limitations.

Plaintiff appealed, first urging that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337 and 339 provide that when the ground of rescission of either an oral or written contract is fraud or mistake the time does not begin to run until discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud or mistake. The appellate court noted that this assertion was targeted only to the timeliness of plaintiff's breach of contract cause of action and that it did not directly address the propriety of the trial court's ruling with respect to the fraud, negligence, conversion, and civil conspiracy causes of action. The court said, however, that each of those causes of action was premised on the identical alleged wrongful conduct and that under the facts of the case the same timeliness analysis applied to each cause of action (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 919-920) . As to whether the delayed discovery rule could apply to a cause of action for breach of contract, the court, relying on April Enterprises, Inc. v. KTTV (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 805, 828, 195 Cal. Rptr. 421 , held that it did when the breach of contract also constituted a breach of fiduciary duty (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 920, 922) . The court said that the breach of contract claim was premised on the identical wrongful disbursement of funds that was at the heart of plaintiff's fraud cause of action and since that alleged wrongful disbursement constituted a breach of fiduciary duty by defendant the discovery rule should apply to both causes of action (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 922-924) ; the court noted that as an alternative basis for the decision in April Enterprises holding that the delayed discovery rule applied, the court there concluded that the discovery rule may be applied to breaches of contract that can be, and are, committed in secret and, moreover, where the harm flowing from those breaches will not be reasonably discoverable by plaintiffs until a future tme (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 923 n.5). The court said that under this alternative holding the discovery rule applies where, as in the case before it, an escrow holder allegedly disburses funds pursuant to a forged amendment to the escrow instructions without informing plaintiff (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 923, n.5). Consequently, the court concluded that the trial court could not have properly sustained defendant's demurrer on statute of limitations grounds (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 923) . The court further held that because the case involved a fiduciary relationship the duty of the plaintiff to exercise diligence to discover the fraud was relaxed; the court said that the nature of the relationship was such as to cause the plaintiff to rely on the fiduciary, and that awareness of facts that would ordinarily call for investigation did not excite suspicion under those special circumstances (210 Cal. App. 3d 915, 920-921) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Action Based on Fraud or Mistake

In Broberg v. The Guardian Life Ins. Co. of America (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 912, 90 Cal. Rptr. 3d 225 , a consumer purchased a $ 500,000 whole life insurance policy from Guardian Life on August 27, 1993. The policy was described to the consumer by the insurance agent as a vanishing life policy--that is, one where, after a certain number of out of pocket premium payments had been made, the policy itself would generate sufficient sums through its dividend and interest income to pay future premiums for the balance of the insured's life. For 11 years the consumer paid the annual premiums. In September 2004 Guardian Life informed him that, because dividends had steadily declined, he would be required to continue making out of pocket premium payments extending beyond the 11th year of the policy, for the policy to remain in effect. Believing the demand for further out of pocket premiums breached Guardian Life's sales promises, on June 30, 2006 consumer filed a complaint for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, unfair competition and false advertising and violation of the Consumers Legal Remedies Act against Guardian Life arising out of the marketing, promotion and sale of the vanishing premium policy. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrers to the claims for fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and unfair competition upon finding that those claims were time barred. The trial court ruled that the claims accrued upon the purchase of the policy and that justifiable reliance could not be shown. The appellate court noted that a claim for unfair competition under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 must be brought within four years of its accrual. However, the Supreme Court has not yet decided, and the Courts of Appeal are in disagreement, whether the delayed discovery rule applies to claims for unfair competition. The court concluded that--at least in the context of unfair competition claims based on a defendant's allegedly deceptive marketing materials and sales practices, which is simply a different legal theory for challenging fraudulent conduct and where the harm from the unfair conduct will not reasonably be discovered until a future date--the time to file a section 17200 cause of action starts to run only when a reasonable person would have discovered the factual basis for a claim (171 Cal. App. 4th 912, 920-921) . The court held that under the circumstances of this case, it is a question for the trier of fact concerning the presence or absence of a manifest unreasonableness in the consumer's reliance on Guardian Life's deceptive policy illustration and its agent's promise that out of pocket premiums would not be required after the 11th year of the policy: "Certainly, if the evidence ultimately establishes the disclaimers were read and understood, they may be sufficient to defeat [plaintiff's] claims. But the placement of the disclaimers (buried in a sea of same sized, capitalized print), coupled with the absence of any cautionary language on the first page of the policy illustration, which contains the deceptive language and figures indicating [plaintiff's] out of pocket payments will 'vanish,' preclude a determination the disclaimers are adequate as a matter of law" (171 Cal. App. 4th 912, 922-923) .

In Cleveland v. Internet Specialties West, Inc. (2009) 171 Cal. App. 4th 24, 88 Cal. Rptr. 3d 892 , the trial court ruled that the applicable limitations periods had expired in a lawsuit brought by investors against corporate officers and shareholders alleging breach of contract, fraud, and other causes of action. The investors had provided funds for a new business project under an agreement stating that the invested funds would be repaid out of the net cash receipts from the project. Later that year, the investors learned that the project was having financial problems, and the company did not respond to their requests for an accounting. Two years later, the company's lawyer told the investors that the project had failed. One of the officers and shareholders also told the investors that the project had gone out of business. Thereafter, about ten years after the investors first had difficulty getting financial information on the project, they learned that the project was still in business and generating revenue. The Court of Appeal reversed and remanded, holding that the trial court had intruded on the province of the trier of fact when it concluded, as a matter of law, that the applicable limitations periods commenced when the investors' requests for an accounting were denied. The causes of action could not have accrued at that time because no net cash receipts had yet been earned. Whether the investors exercised reasonable diligence after the project began generating revenue was a question for the trier of fact (171 Cal. App. 4th 24, 30-34) .

[b] Breach of Fiduciary Duty

In Cross v. Bonded Adjustment Bureau (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 801 , plaintiffs alleged causes of action against defendants for negligence, breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duty, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. In 1987, plaintiffs retained defendant attorney to collect on a 1979 judgment. In 1988, plaintiffs assigned their rights in the judgment to defendant collection agency. Plaintiffs' negligence claim alleged that defendant attorney acted as the attorney for both the plaintiffs and the defendant collection agency and that together defendants failed to preserve the plaintiffs' lien on the judgment debtor's real property by failing to record a certified copy of the renewal application and failing to serve the judgment debtor with a notice of renewal of the judgment. These failures allegedly caused plaintiffs to lose their lien priority on the property and allowed the judgment debtor to quitclaim the property to his wife as her sole property. Defendants concealed these failures from the plaintiffs and convinced them to give the judgment debtor a full satisfaction of judgment in exchange for $40,000. Had defendants properly recorded and served notice of renewal of judgment, the plaintiffs' lien would have been preserved and they would have been able to satisfy the lien either in full or in an amount significantly greater than $40,000. Plaintiffs second cause of action, for breach of contract, alleged that the plaintiffs had separate contracts, oral or implied, with the defendants, respectively. The purpose of each contract was to pursue collection activities for plaintiffs' benefit. The defendants breached the contracts by failing to act in a manner consistent with their fiduciary duties and with the standard of practice ordinarily followed by other attorneys and collection agencies. The third cause of action alleged breach of fiduciary duty and the fourth cause of action alleged intentional infliction of emotional distress.

The trial court sustained defendant collection agency's demurrer to the third and fourth causes of action without leave to amend on the grounds that they failed to state facts sufficient to constitute causes of action. The trial court concluded as to the breach of fiduciary claim that defendant owed no fiduciary duty to plaintiffs, and concluded as to the intentional infliction of emotional claim that the lack of a fiduciary relationship and the lack of outrageous conduct rendered the causes of action defective (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 273-274) .

Thereafter, defendant collection agency moved for summary judgment on the first and second causes of action on the ground that they were barred by the two-year statute of limitation contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 339. The trial court found as an undisputed fact that plaintiff was concerned about renewal of the judgment and lien priority in January, 1991, and that the two year period commenced to run at that time and thus the negligence and breach of contract claims, filed in March, 1993, were time barred (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 274) . Judgment was entered in favor of defendant collection agency, and plaintiffs appealed seeking review of the rulings on the demurrer as well as the summary judgment.

The court of appeal reversed. Regarding the cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty, the appellate court concluded that a fiduciary relationship between the parties existed and thus defendant owed a fiduciary duty to the plaintiffs. The trial court should have overruled the demurrer (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 274-277) . Similarly, regarding the claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, given the fiduciary nature of the parties the appellate court could not say that the plaintiffs failed to allege extreme and outrageous conduct as a matter of law. Accordingly, the trial court should have overruled the demurrer (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 282-284) .

With regard to the causes of action for negligence and breach of contract, the court of appeal concluded that the trial court should not have granted summary judgment based on the statute of limitations (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 282) . The evidence on the summary judgment motion established: (1) the plaintiffs on numerous occasions inquired about the status of the collection; (2) defendants did not inform the plaintiffs in a timely matter about the expiration of the lien and the transfer of the property before the plaintiffs in April, 1991, gave the judgment debtor an acknowledgement that the debtor satisfied the judgment in full by paying $40,000; (3) defendant collection agency in January, 1991, affirmatively misrepresented that a certified copy of the application to renew the judgment had been recorded with the county recorder; (4) plaintiffs first received their files from defendant collection agency in February, 1992, only after defendant collection agency had been threatened with a suit; and (5) after reviewing the files plaintiffs for the first time in April, 1992, learned about the expiration of the lien on the judgment debtor's property and the transfer of the property. Although the trial court found as an undisputed fact that plaintiff was concerned in January, 1991, about renewal of the judgment and whether the lien had been preserved, the court of appeal noted that it does not follow, however, that the two-year statute of limitation contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) commenced to run at that time. The discovery rule applied to those claims (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 278-281) .

Under the discovery rule, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until plaintiff either (1) actually discovers the injury or its cause or (2) could have discovered the injury and its cause through the exercise of reasonable diligence. The defendant collection agency nonetheless pointed out that even under the discovery rule, the limitations period begins once the plaintiff has notice or information of circumstances to cause inquiry by a reasonable person and that plaintiffs had such notice no later than January, 1991, so that the limitations period expired in January, 1993, two months before the suit was filed. The court noted that this argument overlooks the principle that defendants as fiduciaries had a duty to make full and fair disclosure to plaintiffs of all facts that affected their rights and interests. This principle has been applied and expressed in one form or another in several decisions dealing with the question of fraudulent concealment of a cause of action in its relationship to the statute of limitations. The breach of a duty to disclose known facts with intention to and which hinder commencement of an action until the action would be outlawed, is a fraud practiced on the plaintiff which in conscience estops the defendant's reliance on the statute of limitations. When there is a duty to disclose, the disclosure must be full and complete and any concealment or misrepresentation amounts to fraud sufficient to entitle a party injured thereby to an action. When a fiduciary relationship exists, plaintiffs' usual duty of diligence to discover facts does not exist. If the defendant's conduct induces delay in commencing an action, the defendant cannot avail himself or herself of the statute of limitations defense (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 280-281) .

The court of appeal concluded that the defendants' failures to disclose the ongoing status of the collection matter precluded plaintiffs from discovery of defendant collection agency's wrongful conduct thus preventing plaintiffs from learning they had a cause of action. Without deciding precisely when the statute of limitation began to run, the court held that the statute did not begin to run until some time after the end of March, 1991, less than two years before the plaintiffs filed suit (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 282) .

Parsons v. Tickner (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 810 , involved, among other things, a first amended complaint containing causes of action labeled fraud, breach of fiduciary duty and conversion, brought by the daughter of a deceased musician against several defendants. The first amended complaint alleged in part that decedent, a musician and composer, entered into an agreement in 1972 with two of the defendants to manage his musical career, that these defendants were to collect the royalties due him, that the decedent never transferred any copyrights for his music to them, but that after his death in 1973, these defendants wrongfully converted a company owned by the decedent and its catalog of decedent's songs to their own company and exploited the decedent's company catalog for their own economic advantage.

Following the decedents death intestate, probate proceeding were opened in September, 1973, and decedent's wife was appointed administrator of his estate. Among the personal property inventoried in the estate were royalty rights for the music decedent had composed with the royalty rights referring to contracts scheduled in the inventory according to the publisher's name, royalty percentage and the respective catalog of songs. One of the royalty contracts scheduled in the inventory involved songs published by the decedent's company. In 1985, the estate was distributed in accordance with a stipulation between decedent's wife and the plaintiff, approved by the court, under which any unmarshalled assets, after discovered assets, and assets not shown on the estate's inventory were to be distributed solely to the plaintiff (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1518-1519) .

The defendants who were collecting the royalties concealed the fact that the decedent never transferred any interest in his company's catalog of songs to them, but instead falsely represented to the plaintiff and decedent's wife that they were entitled to publish the catalog, subject only to the limited obligation to distribute to the estate and heirs specified royalty payments. Neither the plaintiff nor the decedent's wife became aware of these defendant's unlawful exploitation of the decedent's company catalog until June, 1991, when another defendant, the alleged purchaser of the catalog, informed the plaintiff's attorney that there were no documents or agreements transferring the decedents's copyrighted compositions to the defendants. Plaintiff sought a return of all earned revenues, royalties, and income received by the defendants (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1520) . The trial court sustained the defendants general demurrer to the plaintiff's first amended complaint without leave to amend and entered judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The defendants argued that even assuming the three year (fraud) limitation period applied to all the plaintiff's causes of action, the time for bringing those claims would have passed more than sixteen years earlier, in 1976 (three years after decedent's death) and thus plaintiff's action was time barred. The appellate court, however, rejected this argument insofar as it measured the limitation period from the decedent's death (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1525) . The court initially noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 366.1, causes of action that survive may be commenced before the later of (1) six months after the person's death, or (2) the limitation period that would have been applied if the person had not died. The plaintiff invoked the delayed accrual rule which allows a party to pursue an otherwise time barred action when the injury was not and could not have been reasonably discovered within the operative statute of limitations (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1525) , and the court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 338(d) the cause of action is not deemed to accrue until the discovery by the aggrieved party of facts constituting the fraud or mistake. The court also recognized that the plaintiff has a duty to exercise diligence to discover the facts (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1525) .

The court then found that plaintiff had alleged and judicial notice of the probate proceeding revealed that the defendants had concealed from the decedent's estate, heirs, and survivors in interest, the key fact that the decedent had never transferred his catalog of songs to them, and moreover, falsely represented they were the catalog's producer, only obligated to distribute specified royalty payments. Given the fact that the defendants held themselves out as the producers and that they distributed royalty payments in that capacity, it was not unreasonable for either the estate or the plaintiff to assume that they had a right to do so (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1527) . The court concluded that plaintiff could not have learned of the claims that plaintiff was asserting before June, 1991. Before that date, the plaintiff did not know and could not have discovered in the exercise of reasonable diligence that the defendants had no lawful right to the catalog (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1526-1529) . Thus, the delayed discovery rule applied to all of plaintiff's pleaded theories for recovery. Although the defendants claimed they owed no duty of disclosure to plaintiff, the fact specific allegations suggest they did both as fiduciaries of the decedent and because they could not pass themselves off as the owners of the catalog if they had no lawful rights to the decedent's music (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1529) . Quoting from April Enterprises, Inc. v. KTTV (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 805, 827, 195 Cal. Rptr. 421 , the court noted that thus it has been held that the date-of-discovery rule is applied to a fiduciary when strict adherence to the date of injury rule would result in unfairness to the plaintiff and would encourage wrongdoers to misled their fiduciary to delay bring suit. It is particularly appropriate when the defendant maintains custody and control of a plaintiff's property or interest. It follows that the defendants have no lawful right to the catalog an that their conduct amounted to a misappropriation of decedents music so that the income generated from its promotion is subject to a constructive trust for the benefit of the plaintiff, decedent's successor in interest, and that plaintiff's claims, although delayed for nineteen years, are not time barred (31 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1529) .

Eisenbaum v. Western Energy Resources, Inc. (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 267 Cal. Rptr. 5 , was an action by the purchaser of a limited partnership interest in an out-of-state partnership to recover his investment. Among the documents plaintiff received was a private placement memorandum, which told him, in essence, that the investment was exempt from registration under federal and state security laws. Plaintiff signed the subscription agreement for the limited partnership interest and made payments commencing on June 21, 1982. The security was neither qualified for sale by the California Department of Corporations nor exempt from qualification, and hence the sale was in violation of Corp. Code § 25110, entitling plaintiff to rescind under Corp. Code § 25503. The partnership did not succeed financially, and on June 13, 1984, plaintiff sued to rescind and for damages. Corp. Code § 25507(a) provides that no action shall be maintained to enforce any liability created under Corp. Code § 25503 unless brought before expiration of two years after the violation on which it is based or the expiration of one year after the discovery by the plaintiff of the facts constituting the violation, whichever shall first expire. Defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the one year period set forth in Corp. Code § 25507(a) was granted and plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court reversed on two grounds. First, it said that (1) when a fiduciary obligation is present, the accrual of the cause of action is postponed until the beneficiary has knowledge or notice of the act constituting a breach of fidelity, that the existence of a trust relationship limits the duty of inquiry, and that when a potential plaintiff is in a fiduciary relationship with another individual, that plaintiff's burden of discovery is reduced and he is entitled to rely on the statements and advice provided by the fiduciary (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 324) ; and (2) a plaintiff need not establish that due diligence was exercised to discover the facts within the limitations period unless a duty existed to inquire and the circumstances were such that failure to inquire would be negligent, and that when the plaintiff is not under such duty to inquire the limitations period does not begin to run until plaintiff actually discovers the facts constituting the cause of action, even though the means for obtaining the information are available (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 325) . The court held that the defendants occupied a position of trust and owed a fiduciary duty to those they sought to entice into the venture as limited partners (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 322) . The court explained that a fiduciary relation arises whenever confidence is reposed on one side and domination and influence result on the other, that the relation can be legal, social, domestic, or merely personal, that confidential and fiduciary relations are, in law, synonymous, that from plaintiff's factual assertions it could be reasonably inferred he reposed confidence and trust in the defendants, who gained a financial advantage over him by the sale, and therefore owed him a fiduciary duty, and that a promoter or insider, or a seller of a limited partnership interest, owes a fiduciary duty to the prospective purchaser of such an interest (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 322) .

Secondly, the court held that apart from the fiduciary duty resulting in application of the delayed discovery rule, the language of Corp. Code § 25507(a), which requires "discovery ... of the facts" requires plaintiff's actual knowledge of the facts before the one-year statute commences to run and that, by its plain language, the statute requires actual knowledge, not just inquiry notice (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 325) . The court concluded that a fiduciary duty existed between the defendants and plaintiff, that the usual duties of diligence to discover facts did not exist, and that, because plaintiff had received a private placement memorandum from the partnership telling him that his investment was exempt from registration under state and federal securities laws, he was entitled to rely on it, and therefore did not have actual knowledge of the facts as required to commence the one-year period of limitation set forth in Corp. Code § 25507(a) until advised by his lawyer that the security was nonexempt (218 Cal. App. 3d 314, 326) .

In Evans v. Eckelman (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 265 Cal. Rptr. 605 , plaintiff brothers sued their uncle, who was also their former foster father, for damages resulting from his sexual abuse of them in 1966 through 1968 when plaintiffs were minors. They developed psychological blocks, which began to break down in 1986, at which point they alleged they first discovered the nature of their injuries and causal connection to the defendant's acts. The action was filed in 1987, at which time the longest possible applicable period of limitation was three years from the act. Although that period was tolled during the plaintiff's minority, it had begun to run in 1977 as to the youngest of the minors. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend on the basis of the statute of limitations, and the plaintiff appealed.

In reversing, the court of appeal pointed out that courts have relied on the nature of the relationship between defendant and plaintiff to explain application of the delayed discovery rule, and that the rule is generally applicable to confidential or fiduciary relationships. The court said that the fiduciary relationship carries a duty of full disclosure, and application of the discovery rule prevents the fiduciary from obtaining immunity for an initial breach of duty by a subsequent breach of the obligation of disclosure (216 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 1615) . Quoting April Enterprises, Inc. v. KTTV (1983) 147 Cal. App. 3d 805, 831, 195 Cal. Rptr. 421 , the court said that in most instances, in fact, the defendant had been in a far superior position to comprehend the act and the injury. In many, the defendant had reason to believe the plaintiff remained ignorant that he had been wronged. Thus, there is an underlying notion that plaintiffs should not suffer where circumstances prevent them from knowing that they have been harmed. Often this is accompanied by the corollary notion that defendants should not be allowed to knowingly profit from their injuree's negligence (216 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 1615) .

[c] Theft of Trade Secret

In Cypress Semiconductor Corp. v. Superior Court (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 575, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3rd 685 , real party in interest, a trade secret owner, sued petitioner, a customer of an original misappropriator, alleging that the customer had notice and continued to use a software product incorporating the owner's source code. Respondent trial court concluded that the action was timely because the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the customer knew of the wrongfulness of its conduct. On appeal, the court held that the customer was entitled to a jury determination of its statute of limitations defense under Civ. Code § 3426.6. The single-claim rule did not apply. If the owner had a misappropriation claim against the customer, it was a separate claim with its own limitations period because the owner did not allege that the customer was involved in the original misappropriation and sought damages only from the customer's use of the software after learning of the misappropriation. However, the trial court erred in ruling that the statute did not begin to run until the customer actually learned that the program contained trade secrets. The question was when the owner first had reason to suspect that a customer of the original misappropriator had obtained or used the software knowing, or with reason to know, that it contained the trade secrets. The statute began to run when a plaintiff had any reason to suspect that a third party knew or reasonably should have known that the information was a trade secret. The third party's actual state of mind did not affect the running of the statute. Based on the record, that question could not be answered as a matter of law (163 Cal. App. 4th 575, 587) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

121 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.53

§ 143.53 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Action for Personal Injury Sustained Without Perceptible Trauma

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER, BASED ON THE LAPSE OF THE PERIOD SET OUT IN _____ [specify applicable statute of limitations, e.g., SECTION 340(c) OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE], SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT ALLEGES FACTS SHOWING THAT HIS/HER CAUSE OF ACTION DID NOT ACCRUE AT THE TIME OF DEFENDANT'S WRONGFUL ACT, BUT AT THE TIME THAT PLAINTIFF, EXERCISING REASONABLE DILIGENCE, DISCOVERED DEFENDANT'S ACT TO BE THE CAUSE OF HIS/HER INJURY.

Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action in Certain Personal Injury Actions With No Perceptible Trauma. In cases in which a plaintiff suffers injury because of a defendant's wrongful act, but is unaware of that injury or its cause at the time of the wrong because there is no perceptible trauma, the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the plaintiff discovers, or by the exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the cause of the injury (Pereira v. Dow Chemical Co. (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 865, 873-874, 181 Cal. Rptr. 364 ; G. D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25-26, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 ; Warrington v. Charles Pfizer & Co. (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 564, 569-570, 80 Cal. Rptr. 130).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint in certain personal injury actions, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations. The ground for opposition is that the complaint alleges facts showing that plaintiff suffered an injury involving no perceptible trauma, and therefore his or her cause of action should not be deemed to accrue until the time that he or she discovered or reasonably should have discovered the cause of the injury.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of his or her case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action in Certain Personal Injury Actions With No Perceptible Trauma

Pereira v. Dow Chemical Co. (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 865, 181 Cal. Rptr. 364 , was an action to recover damages for personal injuries, consisting of a permanent, severe kidney disorder, sustained by an employee who was injured by a chemical spill at his place of employment, as well as for the alleged cumulative effect of exposure to the vapors of the various chemical products manufactured or distributed by defendant companies and used at the employee's place of employment. The complaint set forth causes of action in strict liability, negligence, and implied warranty. The trial court granted defendants' motions for summary judgment, finding that no disputable issue of fact existed regarding defendants' causation and that the causes of action asserted were barred by the one-year statute of limitations under Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions).

The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant had failed to negate conclusively a necessary element of plaintiff's case or to establish a complete defense, because factual issues existed on causation (129 Cal. App. 3d 865, 871) and on when the statute of limitations, under the discovery rule, commenced to run (129 Cal. App. 3d 865, 873-874) .

G. D. Searle & Co. v. Superior Court (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 122 Cal. Rptr. 218 , was an action to recover damages for personal injuries, consisting of alleged physical and emotional trauma, sustained by a user of oral contraceptives manufactured and sold by the defendant. The complaint set forth causes of action in negligence, and in a seeming combination of elements of strict liability, fraud, and failure to warn. The complaint showed on its face that plaintiff had last used the defendant's contraceptives almost six years before filing the complaint. The defendant filed a general and special demurrer based, among other things, on the lack of allegations in plaintiff's complaint necessary to satisfy the statute of limitations. The trial court denied defendant's demurrer, and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order overruling the demurrer to the complaint, and to sustain the demurrer with leave to amend. The court found that on its face, the plaintiff's complaint showed a claim that was barred by the one-year statute of limitations because, although it alleged she had last used the defendant's products six years before she had filed the complaint, it failed to allege when the plaintiff discovered the harmful effect of the contraceptives, the circumstances surrounding the discovery, and why, in the exercise of reasonable diligence, she could not have made the discovery sooner (49 Cal. App. 3d 22, 25-26) .

Warrington v. Charles Pfizer & Co. (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 564, 80 Cal. Rptr. 130 , was an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by a plaintiff who took, while pregnant, a prescribed drug manufactured by the defendant. The trial court sustained the defendant's general demurrer to the complaint and entered judgment of dismissal, ruling that the causes of action arising from personal injuries alleged in the complaint were barred by the one-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions).

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the statute of limitations did not begin to run until the plaintiff discovered, or in the exercise of reasonable care should have discovered, that she had been tortiously injured by defendant's product (274 Cal. App. 2d 564, 569-570) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action in Certain Personal Injury Actions With No Perceptible Trauma

In Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103, 245 Cal. Rptr. 658, 751 P.2d 923 , the Supreme Court upheld the trial court's grant of summary judgment to the defendant manufacturer of DES on the ground that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions, and Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8 which codifies Jolly and extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury action based upon exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance; see § 143.55). The Court stated the rule that the statute of limitations began to run when the plaintiff suspected, or should have suspected, that her injury was caused by someone's wrongdoing. Plaintiff's reasonable duty, however, was to use pretrial discovery to establish the specific facts necessary for her claim, as opposed to "waiting for the facts to find her" (44 Cal. 3d 1103, 1111) .

In Kensinger v. Abbott Laboratories (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 376, 217 Cal. Rptr. 313 , the court reversed an order of summary judgment in favor of a defendant manufacturer of DES granted on the ground that the action was barred by the one-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions) and stated that the question of whether the plaintiff should have been aware of the factual basis of her suit more than one year before she filed her complaint was an issue of fact that precluded summary judgment.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsAffirmative DefensesGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewTortsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.54

§ 143.54 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Injuries Arising Out of Exposure to Asbestos [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT WAS TIMELY FILED UNDER SECTION 340.2(a) OF THE CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE AND BEFORE PLAINTIFF BECAME DISABLED AS A RESULT OF HIS/HER EXPOSURE TO ASBESTOS.

A. Time for Filing Claim for Injury or Illness Based on Exposure to Asbestos. Any civil action for injury or illness based on exposure to asbestos must commence within the later of the following: (1) one year after the date plaintiff first suffered disability or (2) one year after the date plaintiff either knew, or through the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, that the disability was caused or contributed to by the exposure (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a); see Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1137-1138, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 ; Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 730, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562). Section 340.2(a) does not make the limitations period run from the date of that injury or illness or its discovery, as similar statutes commonly provide, but rather makes the limitation period run from the date the plaintiff suffered "disability" and discovered that the disability was caused by asbestos exposure. Because a plaintiff cannot discover that his or her disability was caused by asbestos exposure before he or she suffers that disability, the disability must in all cases either precede or accompany its discovery. Thus, Code Civ. Proc. Section 340.2(a)(1), (2) may be read as providing in effect that an action for injury or illness arising from asbestos exposure must be filed within one year after the date the plaintiff first suffered disability and either knew or should have known the disability was caused or contributed to by that exposure (Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1138, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403).

B. "Disability" Defined. "Disability" as used in Code Civil Procedure Section 340.2(a) means the loss of time from work as a result of exposure to asbestos that precludes the performance of the employee's regular occupation (Code Civ.

Proc. § 340.2(b); see Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1138-1142, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 ; Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 730, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562).

[Optional] C. No Disability Within Meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.2 When Retirement Unrelated to Asbestos Exposure. A person does not suffer a "disability" within the meaning of Code Civil Procedure Section 340.2(a) when that person retires for reasons unrelated to his or her earlier asbestos exposure. Under such circumstances, the limitation period specified in Code Civil Procedure Section 340.2(a) does not commence to run (Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1138-1142, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 ; Duty v. Abex Corp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 742, 748-752, 263 Cal. Rptr. 13).

[Optional] D. Asbestos Claim Not Extinguished by Operation of Law Until Adjudicated by a Court. In order for a claim for damages for injury or illness based on exposure to asbestos to have been extinguished as a matter of law, a court must have adjudicated the timeliness of the claim. When a court has not, prior to the effective date of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2, adjudicated the timeliness of an asbestos claim under the limitation period of a formerly applicable, shorter, statute of limitation such as Code Civ. Proc. § 340 subd. (3) (former one-year limitation period for tort actions), the claim is considered still pending or potential, and governed by the changed rules of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 for accrual of the cause of action (Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 732, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for injury or illness based on exposure to asbestos, when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. Optional Paragraph C is for use when the plaintiff is a retiree who retired for reasons unrelated to his or her earlier asbestos exposure, and Optional Paragraph D is for use if it is claimed that the action is barred by a statute of limitation other, and shorter, than Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a).

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations of the complaint that allege the facts showing that plaintiff's claim is timely filed under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a), if necessary, refer to allegations showing that, at the time of filing the claim, plaintiff was not disabled within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(b).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Time for Filing Claim for Injury or Illness Based on Exposure to Asbestos

In Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 , beginning in the early 1940's plaintiffs' decedent (plaintiff) was employed in various industrial workplaces where he was exposed to asbestos. Plaintiff's exposure ended in 1963. Plaintiff began experiencing shortness of breath in the late 1970's and in 1979 was diagnosed with asbestosis. Nevertheless, plaintiff was able to continue to work for another decade and retired in 1989, not because of breathing difficulties, but because plaintiff reached the normal age of 65 and was tired of working. Plaintiff's shortness of breath gradually grew worse and on October 13, 1993, plaintiff filed an action to recover compensatory and punitive damages for plaintiff's asbestosis. In December 1995, before trial began, plaintiff began to experience abdominal pain and in January 1996 was diagnosed with a malignant peritoneal mesothelioma, a fatal cancer primarily triggered by exposure to asbestos. Within a month, on February 3, 1996, plaintiff filed a second action seeking to recover compensatory and punitive damages for plaintiff's mesothelioma. The actions were consolidated. At trial, after both sides had rested, defendant moved to dismiss the portion of the action seeking damages for plaintiff's mesothelioma. The sole ground was that plaintiff's second action was barred by the statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 as construed in Darden v. General Motors Corp. (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 349, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 580 . The motion was denied and the jury returned a verdict in plaintiff's favor. Defendant asserted the statute of limitations again in motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and new trial, which were denied. Defendant appealed from the judgment (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1132-1137) .

The court of appeal reversed the judgment in its entirety. The court first held that plaintiff's second action was time barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2. Second, the court held that the trial court lacked personal jurisdiction over defendant in plaintiff's first action because defendant had not been served in that action. The California Supreme Court granted review (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1137) .

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court of appeal with directions to resolve certain remaining issues in that court. Regarding plaintiff's second action, the court noted that although Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 applies only to actions for injury or illness arising from asbestos exposure, the statute does not make the limitations period run from the date of that injury or illness or its discovery as similar statutes commonly provide. Rather, the Section 340.2(a) limitations period runs from the date the plaintiff suffered "disability" and discovered that the disability was caused by asbestos exposure. Section 340.2(a) provides that an action for injury or illness based on exposure to asbestos shall be commenced within the later of the following: (1) within one year after the date the plaintiff first suffered disability; (2) within one year after the date the plaintiff either knew, or through the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, that such disability was caused or contributed to by such exposure. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(b), "disability" as used in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a) means the loss of time from work as a result of such exposure which precludes the employee's regular occupation. Because a plaintiff cannot discover that his or her disability was caused by asbestos exposure before he or she suffers disability, the disability must in all cases either precede or accompany its discovery. Thus, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a)(1), (2) may be read as providing in effect that an action for injury or illness arising from asbestos exposure must be filed within one year after the date the plaintiff first suffered disability and either knew or should have known the disability was caused or contributed to by that exposure (22 Cal. 4th 1127 , 1137-1138). The court then discussed several relevant court of appeal decisions that have construed Section 340.2, including Duty v. Abex Corp (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 742, 749-751, 263 Cal. Rptr. 13 , and Williamson v. Plant Insulation Co. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1419, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751 . Duty reasoned that Section 340.2(a) is not narrowly limited to actions by employees, but broadly applies on its face to "any civil action" for asbestos-related injury or illness, and therefore includes actions by retirees as well. The Duty court held, however, that the special definition of "disability" provided in Section 340.2(b) is not broad enough to include persons who retire for reasons unrelated to asbestos exposure (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1140) . Williamson reiterated the Duty holding (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1141-1142) . Noting that Duty and Williamson were directly in point, the court concluded that the one-year limitation period in the statute had not begun to run when plaintiff's second action was filed and thus that action was timely. Plaintiff retired for reasons unrelated to his earlier asbestos exposure and therefore did not suffer "disability" within the meaning of Section 340.2. For the same reasons, the one-year limitations period had not begun to run when plaintiff's first action was filed and thus that action was timely (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1142) . The court disapproved Darden and its progeny, Barr v. ACandS, Inc. (1997) 57 Cal. App. 4th 1038, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 494 , to the extent they are inconsistent with the court's analysis (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1147) .

In Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562 , plaintiff was exposed to asbestos fibers and dust in his employment as a boiler inspector and operator from 1949 through 1956, and from 1963 to 1985. In September 1976, a medical doctor informed plaintiff that he had suffered damage to his lungs and contracted the disease of asbestosis as a result of the exposure to asbestos. Despite the onset of the disease, plaintiff continued working. In 1981, plaintiff filed a complaint against defendants for damages for injuries arising from his work-related exposure to asbestos. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the ground that the applicable statute of limitations was Code Civ. Proc. § 340 subd. (3) (one-year limitation period for tort actions) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions) and therefore, plaintiff's causes of action were time-barred because his complaint was filed more than one year after receiving an "informed diagnosis" of his asbestos-related disease. Plaintiff argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 applied and therefore his complaint was timely because it was filed prior to his becoming disabled from work as a result of his exposure to asbestos. The trial court rejected plaintiff's claim, sustained a demurrer without leave to amend to plaintiff's second amended complaint, and entered an order dismissing his complaint. Plaintiff appealed from the order of dismissal.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order of dismissal and remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with the views expressed in the appellate court opinion (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 736) . The court held that the trial court erred in dismissing the complaint in that plaintiff's complaint was timely filed because Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2, not Code Civ. Proc. § 340 subd. (3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions), properly applied to plaintiff's causes of action (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 731) . In so holding, the court ruled that, under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(a), in any civil action for injury or illness based on exposure to asbestos, the time for the commencement of the action shall be the later of the following: (1) within one year after the date the plaintiff first suffered disability; (2) within one year after the date the plaintiff either knew, or through the exercise of reasonable diligence should have known, that the disability was caused or contributed to by the exposure (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 730) .

[b] "Disability" Defined

The facts and procedural background of Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 , are discussed in § 143.54[3][a]. The Supreme Court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(b), "disability" means the loss of time from work as a result of exposure to asbestos which precludes the performance of the employee's regular occupation (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1138) . The court applied the holding of Duty v. Abex Corp (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 742, 749-751, 263 Cal. Rptr. 13 , reiterated in Williamson v. Plant Insulation Co. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1419, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751 , that the special definition of "disability" provided for in Section 340.2(b) is not broad enough to include persons who retire for reasons unrelated to asbestos exposure (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1140-1142)

The facts and procedural background of Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562 , are discussed in § 143.54[3][a]. In Nelson, the court noted that under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(b), "disability" means the loss of time from work as a result of exposure to asbestos which precludes the performance of the employee's regular occupation (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 730)

[c] No Disability Within Meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.2 When Retirement Unrelated to Asbestos Exposure

The facts and procedural background of Hamilton v. Asbestos Corp. (2000) 22 Cal. 4th 1127, 95 Cal. Rptr. 2d 701, 998 P.2d 403 , are discussed in § 143.54[3][a]. The court applied the holding of Duty v. Abex Corp (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 742, 749-751, 263 Cal. Rptr. 13 , reiterated in Williamson v. Plant Insulation Co. (1994) 23 Cal. App. 4th 1406, 1419, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 751 , that the special definition of "disability" provided for in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2(b) is not broad enough to include persons who retire for reasons unrelated to asbestos exposure (22 Cal. 4th 1127, 1140-1142)

Duty v. Abex Corp. (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 742, 263 Cal. Rptr. 13 , was an action filed by an 82-year-old woman born in 1903 for damages for personal injury due to exposure to asbestos. She retired in 1968. After 1973, when her husband died, she lived alone, doing housework, shopping, gardening, going to church meetings, and occasionally helping to clean her daughter's house. In 1979, X-rays revealed she had lung cancer, and she was told by her doctors that the cancer was caused by her earlier exposure to asbestos. Surgery was performed. Within a few months she resumed light household tasks and helping her daughter with light housecleaning. The complaint was filed in 1985. The trial court granted defendant's motion for directed verdict, finding that the period of limitations ran one year after plaintiff's surgery in 1979 and that the action was barred. Plaintiff appealed.

In reversing the judgment, the court of appeal examined the wording and legislative history of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 and, interpreting the statute in accordance with its "plain meaning," held that the section applies to civil actions by retirees for injury caused by asbestos exposure, but that, because the statutory definition of "disability" does not apply to a retired person who retired for reasons unrelated to his or her earlier asbestos exposure, the limitations period had not yet commenced to run and that the action was not barred (214 Cal. App. 3d 742, 745, 748-753) .

[d] Asbestos Claim Not Extinguished by Operation of Law Until Adjudicated by a Court

The facts and procedural background of Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562 , are discussed in § 143.54[3][a]. In Nelson, the court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 properly applied to asbestosis victims such as plaintiff, whose complaints had not been adjudicated prior to the effective date of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 (January 1, 1980). The court noted defendants' reliance on language in the bill enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2, although not itself enacted into law, providing that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 shall apply to those causes of action that accrued prior to the change in the law made by the bill and have not otherwise been "extinguished by operation of law" (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 730) . The court rejected defendants' arguments that plaintiff's causes of action were "automatically extinguished by operation of law" in September 1977, since he had received an informed diagnosis in September 1976 (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 731) . Citing Puckett v. Johns-Manville Corp. (1985) 169 Cal. App. 3d 1010, 1016-1017, 215 Cal. Rptr. 726 , and Blakey v. Superior Court (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 101, 106, 200 Cal. Rptr. 52 , the court held that asbestosis plaintiffs whose claims were not adjudicated prior to the effective date of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 (January 1, 1980), are not subject to Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions). Instead, they are entitled to the benefits conferred by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 regardless of when they received an informed diagnosis. In order for an asbestos claim to have been "extinguished by operation of law," a court must have adjudicated the matter. There is no automatic magical extinguishment of a cause of action by the mere passage of time. When, as in the instant case, a court has not adjudicated the timeliness of the action with reference to Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, which extends statute of limitations to two years for personal injury actions), prior to the effective date of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2, the claim is considered still pending or potential and governed by the changed rules for accrual of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2 (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 732) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersEnvironmental LawHazardous Wastes & Toxic SubstancesAsbestosGeneral OverviewEnvironmental LawHazardous Wastes & Toxic SubstancesAsbestosStatutes of LimitationsGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.55

§ 143.55 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Injuries Arising Out of Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT ALLEGES FACTS SHOWING HIS/HER CAUSE OF ACTION DID NOT ACCRUE AT THE TIME OF DEFENDANT'S WRONGFUL ACT, BUT AT THE TIME THAT PLAINTIFF, EXERCISING REASONABLE DILIGENCE, DISCOVERED DEFENDANT'S ACTS TO BE THE CAUSE OF HIS/HER INJURY ARISING OUT OF EXPOSURE TO A HAZARDOUS MATERIAL OR TOXIC SUBSTANCE.

A. Time for Filing Claim for Injury or Illness Arising Out of Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance. In any civil action for injury or illness based upon exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance, the time for commencement of the action is no later than either two years from the date of injury, or two years after the plaintiff becomes aware of, or reasonably should have become aware of 1) an injury, 2) the physical cause of the injury, and 3) sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the injury was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another, whichever occurs later (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(a)).

B. Time for Filing Claim for Wrongful Death Arising Out of Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance. In an action for the wrongful death of any plaintiff's decedent, based upon exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance, the time for commencement of an action shall be no later than either (1) two years from the date of the death of the plaintiff's decedent, or (2) two years from the first date on which the plaintiff is aware of, or reasonably should have become aware of, the physical cause of the death and sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the death was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another, whichever occurs later (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(b)).

C. "Civil Action" Defined. A "civil action for injury or illness based upon exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance" does not include an action subject to Code of Civil Procedure Sections 340.2 (exposure to asbestos) or 340.5 (professional negligence of health care provider).

D. Media Reports, Alone, Do Not Give Rise to Inquiry Notice. Media reports regarding the hazardous material or toxic substance contamination do not, in and of themselves, constitute sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the injury or death was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(c)(2)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by plaintiff in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint when the defendant has asserted that the action is barred by the statute of limitations, and the plaintiff has alleged in the complaint sufficient facts to show that the injury or the act causing the injury, or both, are due to the exposure of a hazardous material or toxic substance.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should refer to the allegations of the complaint that allege the facts showing that plaintiff's claim is timely filed under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8, and refer to allegations supporting plaintiff's claim that discovery was delayed until sufficient facts were found to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the injury was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Time for Filing Claim for Injury or Illness Arising Out of Exposure to Hazardous Material or Toxic Substance

The legislature has expressly declared that it is the intent of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(a), (b) to codify the rulings in Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 Cal. 3d 1103 , Norgart v. Upjohn Co. (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 383 , and Clark v. Baxter HealthCare Corp. (2000) 83 Cal. App. 4th 1048 [Stats. 2003, ch. 873].

[b] Media Reports, Alone, Do Not Give Rise to Inquiry Notice

The legislature has expressly declared that it is the intent of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(c)(2) to disapprove the ruling of McKelvey v. Boeing North America, Inc. (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 151, 86 Cal. Rptr. 2d 645 to the extent it is inconsistent with the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.8(c)(2) [Stats. 2003, ch. 873].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersEnvironmental LawHazardous Wastes & Toxic SubstancesGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.56

§ 143.56 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Newly Discovered Claim During Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER BASED ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE PLAINTIFF HAS PLEAD SUFFICIENT FACTS FOR THE NEWLY DISCOVERED CLAIM TO BE SUBJECT TO THE DELAYED DISCOVERY RULE.

A. Discovery Rule Applies to Newly Discovered Claims During Action. If a plaintiff pleads and proves that a reasonable investigation at that time would not have revealed a factual basis for that particular cause of action, the delayed discovery rule applies and the statute of limitations is tolled until such time as a reasonable investigation would have revealed its factual basis; if a plaintiff's reasonable and diligent investigation discloses only one kind of wrongdoing when the injury was actually caused by tortious conduct of a wholly different sort, the discovery rule postpones accrual of the statute of limitations on the newly discovered claim (Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 808-809, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint when the demurrer asserts the action is barred by a statute of limitations. The basis of the opposition is that the complaint alleges facts showing that the delayed discovery rule applies and that the statute of limitations did not commence running on the date the cause of action actually accrued, but on some later date when plaintiff discovered the facts giving rise to the cause of action, and that the complaint was therefore timely filed.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discovery Rule Applies to Newly Discovered Claims During Action

In Fox v. Ethicon Endo-Surgery, Inc. (2005) 35 Cal. 4th 797, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 661, 110 P.3d 914 began as a medical malpractice action to recover damages after a gastric bypass operation resulted in severe complications to plaintiff. During the course of discovery in the medical malpractice action, plaintiff received information that a medical device used during the surgery may have malfunctioned causing her injury. Plaintiff then amended her complaint to add a products liability cause of action against the manufacturer of the device. The defendant demurred raising a statute of limitations defense to which plaintiff responded by relying on the delayed discovery rule. The trial court granted the demurrer. The court of appeal reversed and granted leave to amend for plaintiff to allege facts explaining why she did not have reason to discover the factual basis of her claim at a an earlier date. The California Supreme Court upheld the court of appeal's ruling.

The California Supreme Court held that in order to employ the discovery rule, a person who suspects that an injury has been wrongfully caused must conduct a reasonable investigation of all potential causes of that injury. If that investigation would have disclosed a factual basis for a cause of action, the statute of limitations begins to run when the investigation would have brought such information to light. If, however, a plaintiff pleads and proves that a reasonable investigation at that time would not have revealed a factual basis for that particular cause of action, the delayed discovery rule applies and the statute of limitations is tolled until such time as a reasonable investigation would have revealed its factual basis.

According to the Court, the plaintiff must plead that, despite diligent investigation of the circumstances of the injury, he or she could not have reasonably discovered facts supporting the cause of action within the statute of limitations period. In this case, the plaintiff sought leave to amend the complaint to add facts that she had no reason to suspect that a medical device used during the surgery had malfunctioned until during the deposition of the doctor who performed the surgery. During his deposition, the doctor testified that the device had given him problems on previous occasions. The plaintiff also sought to add that no reasonable person would have suspected that the device had malfunctioned. Thus, the amendment would have properly alleged that the products liability cause of action could not reasonably have been discovered within the limitations period, and the court of appeal properly ordered the trial court to grant plaintiff leave to amend. In addition, the Court noted that if a plaintiff's reasonable and diligent investigation discloses only one kind of wrongdoing when the injury was actually caused by tortious conduct of a wholly different sort, the discovery rule postpones accrual of the statute of limitations on the newly discovered claim.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.57

§ 143.57 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Action for Damages Suffered as Result of Childhood Sexual Abuse [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER BASED ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE COMPLAINT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT PLAINTIFF BROUGHT THIS ACTION WITHIN _____ [EIGHT YEARS OF ATTAINING THE AGE OF MAJORITY or THREE YEARS OF _____ (date), THE DATE PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED THAT HIS/HER PSYCHOLOGICAL ILLNESS OR INJURY, WHICH OCCURRED AFTER HE/SHE ATTAINED THE AGE OF MAJORITY, WAS CAUSED BY SEXUAL ABUSE].

A. Period of Limitation. A civil action commenced on or after January 1, 1991, for recovery of damages suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse must be commenced within eight years of the date the plaintiff attains the age of majority, that is, by the date on which plaintiff becomes 26 years of age, or within three years of the date the plaintiff discovers or reasonably should have discovered that psychological injury or illness occurring after the age of majority was caused by the sexual abuse, whichever period expires later, for any of the following actions: (1) an action against any person for committing an act of childhood sexual abuse; (2) an action for liability against any person or entity who owed a duty of care to the plaintiff, where a wrongful or negligent act by that person or entity was a legal cause of the childhood sexual abuse which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff; (3) an action for liability against any person or entity where an intentional act by that person or entity was a legal cause of the childhood sexual abuse which resulted in the injury to the plaintiff (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(1)-(3), (r), (s); see Fam. Code § 6502 (age of 18 years is age of majority)). No action described in Code of Civil Procedure, Section 340.1(a)(2) or (3), however, may be commenced on or after the plaintiff's 26th birthday (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(1)), unless the person or entity against whom the action is commenced pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) or (3), knew, had reason to know, or was otherwise on notice, of any unlawful sexual conduct by an employee, volunteer, representative, or agent, and failed to take reasonable steps, and implement reasonable safeguards, to avoid future acts of unlawful sexual conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(2)) (as to revival of such actions, see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(c)).

[Optional] B. "Childhood Sexual Abuse" Defined. Childhood sexual abuse includes incest between parents and children, ancestors and descendants of every degree, brothers and sisters of the half as well as the whole blood, uncles and nieces, or aunts and nephews; sodomy; oral copulation; lewd or lascivious acts with person under 14 years of age or by use of force, violence, duress, menace, or fear of immediate and unlawful bodily injury with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying sexual desire; penetration of the vaginal or anal opening of another person with a foreign or unknown object for purpose of sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse; providing or otherwise making available to another person a child under the age of 16 for lewd or lascivious purposes; or annoying or molesting a child if the act committed by the defendant against the plaintiff occurred when the plaintiff was under the age of 18 years (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(e); Penal Code §§ 266j, 285, 286(b), (c), 288(a), (b), 288a(b), (c), 289(h)-(j), 647.6; see also Fam. Code § 2200 (degrees of consanguinity referred to in Penal Code § 285). Nothing in Code of Civil Procedure, Section 340.1(e) limits the availability of causes of action permitted under Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(a), including causes of action against persons or entities other than the alleged perpetrator of the abuse (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(e)).

[Optional] C. Injury at Time of Abuse Does Not Prohibit Delayed Discovery. Whether or not plaintiff suffered an actual injury at the time of the occurrence of childhood sexual abuse is not relevant to the application of a delayed discovery claim under Code Civil Procedure Section 340.1 (Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1185, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389).

[Optional] D. Recollection of Childhood Abuse Does Not Prohibit Applying Delayed Discovery Principles to Plaintiff's Claim. Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1 allows tolling of the statute of limitations until the plaintiff discovered, or should have discovered, the connection between the abuse and current injuries. It is intended to toll the statute of limitations for plaintiffs who recall their abuse. Nothing in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1 requires that memories of abuse be repressed as a prerequisite to a delayed discovery claim (Sellery v. Cressey (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 545-547, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706 ; Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1186, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389).

[Optional] E. Enlarged Limitation Period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 Applies to Childhood Sexual Abuse Continuing Beyond Childhood. When alleged childhood sexual conduct is part of a course of conduct that continues beyond childhood (i.e., the alleged molestation continues as the plaintiff transitions from childhood to adulthood), the limitations period of Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1 applies (Tietge v. Western Province Of The Servites, Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 382, 386, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53).

[Optional] F. Statute's Applicability to Causes of Action That Would Have Been Barred by Laws in Effect Before January 1, 1999. Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(a)(1)-(3) was created by amendments to Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(a) enacted at the 1998 portion of the 1997-1998 Regular Session (see Stats. 1998, Ch. 1032, § 1). These amendments, and therefore Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(a)(1)-(3), apply to any action commenced on or after January 1, 1999, and to any action filed before January 1, 1999, and still pending on that date, including any action or causes of action that would have been barred by the laws in effect before January 1, 1999 (Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(u)). [Nothing in Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1(s), however, is intended to revive actions or causes of action as to which there has been a final adjudication before January 1, 1999 (Code Civ. Proc § 340.1(u))].

[Optional] G. Period of Revival for Causes of Action Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) and (3). Code of Civil Procedure Section 340.1 was amended at the 2002 portion of the 2001-2002 Regular Session (see Stats. 2002, Ch. 149, § 1) to provide that actions pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) or (3) may be commenced after the plaintiff's 26th birthday if the person or entity against whom the action is commenced knew, had reason to know, or was otherwise on notice, of any unlawful sexual conduct by an employee, volunteer, representative, or agent, and failed to take reasonable steps, and implement reasonable safeguards, to avoid future acts of unlawful sexual conduct (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)). As this amendment became effective January 1, 2003, a provision was also included to revive such actions for a period of one year. Therefore, any claim for damages described in paragraph (2) or (3) of subdivision (a) that is permitted to be filed pursuant to paragraph (2) of subdivision (b) that would otherwise be barred as of January 1, 2003, solely because the applicable statute of limitations has or had expired, is revived, and, in that case, a cause of action may be commenced within one year of January 1, 2003 (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(c)). However, the revival period does not apply to claims that have been litigated to finality on the merits in any court of competent jurisdiction prior to January 1, 2003, or any written, compromised settlement agreements which have been entered into between a plaintiff and a defendant where the plaintiff was represented by an attorney who was admitted to practice law in California at the time of the settlement, and the plaintiff signed the agreement (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(d)). Plaintiffs may raise triable issues of fact whether a plaintiff was on notice of defendant's unlawful sexual conduct as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(2) to defeat a motion for summary judgment involving the period of revival (Santillan v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 4, 10-11, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 343).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for injury or illness suffered as a result of childhood sexual abuse when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations other, and shorter, than Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1. The form can be used in actions commenced on or after January 1, 1991. Although Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1, as amended by 1990 stats., ch. 1578, and 1994 stats., ch. 288, expressly revives actions barred by the period of limitations in effect before January 1, 1991, it applies only to actions commenced on or after January 1, 1991 [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(r), (s)]. Prior law governs actions that were commenced prior to January 1, 1991. For discussion of the prior law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 5, Abuse of Minors and Elderly (Matthew Bender).

In any event, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(u) provides that the amendments to subdivision (a) enacted at the 1998 portion of the 1997-1998 Regular session, i.e., Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(1)-(3) (see Stats. 1998, Ch. 1032, § 1), apply to any action commenced on or after January 1, 1999, and to any action filed before January 1, 1999, and still pending on that date, including any action or causes of action that would have been barred by the laws in effect before January 1, 1999. Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(u), however, also expressly provides that nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(u) is intended to revive actions or causes of action as to which there has been a final adjudication before January 1, 1999 [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(u)].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to the specific allegations in the complaint that set forth the time of the crucial discovery. In addition, because of the psychological defenses characteristically manifested by victims of childhood sexual abuse, it may be helpful to include information from psychological and sociological literature about incestuous sexual abuse.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be adapted for use in some other procedural context, such as a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms related to childhood sexual abuse under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 5, Abuse of Minors and Elderly (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Period of Limitation

Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a) institutes a rule that avoids the barrier to the application of the delayed discovery exception involved in Evans v. Eckelman (1990) 216 Cal. App. 3d 1609, 1617-1620, 265 Cal. Rptr. 605 , and DeRose v. Carswell (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1011, 1016-1021, 242 Cal. Rptr. 368 , namely plaintiff's awareness of the acts of molestation. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a), the crucial discovery, or the thing that reasonably should be discovered, for purposes of the limitation period is "that psychological injury or illness occurring after the age of majority was caused by the sexual abuse."

For points and authorities relating to the revival of previously barred claims by the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1, see § 143.64.

[b] "Childhood Sexual Abuse" Defined

"Childhood sexual abuse" includes acts proscribed by the following Penal Code sections, or any prior California laws of similar effect at the time the act was committed, if the act committed by the defendant against the plaintiff occurred when the plaintiff was under the age of 18 years [Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(e)]:

- Penal Code § 285, which proscribes incest between parents and children, ancestors and descendants of every degree, bothers and sisters of the half as well as the whole blood, uncles and nieces, or aunts and nephews [see Fam. Code § 2200 (degrees of consanguinity referred to in Pen. Code § 285)];

- Penal Code § 266j, which proscribes providing or otherwise making available to another person a child under the age of 16 for lewd or lascivious purposes;

- Penal Code § 286(b), (c), which proscribes sodomy;

- Penal Code § 288(a), (b), which proscribes lewd or lascivious acts with person under 14 years of age or by use of force, violence, duress, menace, or fear of immediate and unlawful bodily injury with the intent of arousing, appealing to, or gratifying sexual desire;

- Penal Code § 288a(b), (c), proscribing oral copulation;

- Penal Code § 289(h)-(j), proscribing penetration of the vaginal or anal opening of another person with a foreign or unknown object for purpose of sexual arousal, gratification, or abuse; or

- Penal Code § 647.6, proscribing annoying or molesting a child.

[c] Injury at Time of Abuse Does Not Prohibit Delayed Discovery

In Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 , defendant demurred to an action for childhood sexual abuse, arguing that the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer, rejecting plaintiff's theory of delayed discovery under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1. The trial court ruled that delayed discovery did not apply because plaintiff's allegations indicated that he knew of the wrongfulness of defendant's conduct when it occurred, and that he suffered appreciable injury at that time.

The court of appeal reversed, emphasizing that to satisfy delayed discovery, a plaintiff need only allege the onset of psychological injury after the age of majority, and then commence the action within three years of the time the psychological injury or illness is discovered (40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1186) . The court reasoned that neither the suffering of an injury at the time of the abuse nor the repression of memories of abuse are relevant to delayed discovery claims (40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1185-1186) . Plaintiff's complaint included adequate facts to support delayed discovery, since plaintiff alleged that he did not discover the connection between psychological injury and illness he suffered as an adult and defendant's sexual misconduct until he began counseling. The court stated that it recognized the difficulty for defendants in defending an action years after the alleged acts took place, but noted that this is a legislative matter which has been resolved in favor of allowing recovery of late-discovered causes of action in child sex abuse cases (40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1186-1187) .

[d] Recollection of Childhood Abuse Does Not Prohibit Applying Delayed Discovery Principles to Plaintiff's Claim

In Sellery v. Cressey (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 706 , plaintiff was born on May 15, 1955, was married on March 15, 1984, and sued her parents on August 11, 1992, for battery, assault and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of alleged childhood sexual abuse. Plaintiff's husband joined in the suit alleging a claim for loss of consortium. Plaintiff acknowledged that she never forgot certain events which she described, but claimed that she repressed all memory of the most profound abuse that she described until she entered psychotherapy in 1991 for treatment of depression, dissociation, and sexual dysfunction. Plaintiff contended that it was through therapy that her worst memories resurfaced and that she came to realize that her psychological ailments were caused by the abuse. Plaintiff's husband echoed her testimony. Plaintiff's psychological expert explained that plaintiff's failure to see the connection between the abuse and her psychological problems was due to the phenomenon of "dissociation" which the expert defined and plaintiff's psychological expert and plaintiff's psychotherapist agreed that until the plaintiff had entered therapy, she had not appreciated the wrongfulness of the abuse nor connected it to her current psychological problems (48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 542-543) . In 1994, the defendants moved for summary judgment. After a hearing, the trial court found by reason of plaintiff's admitted conscious memory of torts committed against her during minority, that plaintiff's claim was time barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 which provided a three year statute of limitation after plaintiff discovered, or should have discovered, her injuries were caused by sexual abuse. The trial court also found that plaintiff's husband failed to state a cause of action and that even if he did it was time barred for the same reasons his wife's claim were barred. Thereafter the trial court entered judgment and dismissed the case (48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 543) .

The court of appeal reversed the dismissal as to the plaintiff wife and without discussion affirmed the dismissal as to plaintiff's husband. The appellate court noted that the trial court had committed error by reasoning that because plaintiff remembered some of the abuse, there was no basis for applying delayed discovery principles to her claim and thus her causes of action had expired when she turned 26 (i.e., eight years after reaching the age of majority) (48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 544) . In 1990, the legislature amended Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 to allow tolling of the statute of limitations until the plaintiff discovered or should have discovered, the connection between the abuse and current injuries. The amendment's legislative history establishes that it was intended to toll the statute of limitations even for plaintiffs who recall their abuse. The court cited Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1186, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 , as supporting its analysis wherein that court held that nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 requires that memories of abuse be repressed as a prerequisite to a delayed discovery claim, but to the contrary, to satisfy delayed discovery plaintiff need only allege the onset of psychological injury or illness after the age of majority and that plaintiff commenced his or her action within three years of the time plaintiff discovered such psychological injury or illness was caused by childhood sexual abuse (48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 545-547) .

Turning to the facts in the present case, the court noted that plaintiff first saw the connection between her current psychological ailments and her abuse when she entered therapy in 1991, and accepting her claim as true, the court held that her lawsuit was timely filed when filed in 1992, and therefore its dismissal was error. The defendants' primary argument in defense of the trial court's judgment, that is, that the statute of limitations was never tolled and the complaint was time barred because plaintiff always remembered some instances of abuse, was unavailing because total repression of all memory of the abuse is not necessary to toll the statute (48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 547) . Moreover, the court rejected the defendants' argument that the complaint was time-barred after 1987 because the psychological problems for which plaintiff ultimately sought treatment started surfacing in 1984, which according to the defendants, started the running of the three year period in which plaintiff should have discovered the connection between her problems and the abuse. Plaintiff, however, had offered various expert psychological testimony showing that she used various defenses mechanisms such as dissociation as a defense against fully understanding and remembering the abuse and connecting it with her present psychological injuries until her therapeutic work beginning in 1991. The court found that such expert testimony created a triable issue of fact as to the time when the plaintiff should have discovered the connection between her abuse and injuries, making summary judgment improper (48 Cal. App. 4th 538, 547-548) .

The facts and procedural background of Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 , are discussed in § 143.57[3][c]. In Lent, plaintiff admitted that he had never forgotten the sexual abuse that he suffered. He alleged, however, that he had not discovered the connection between his psychological illness and the acts of abuse until he began counseling. The defendant argued that application of delayed discovery was barred because plaintiff had uninterrupted memory of the abuse (40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1185-1186) . The court rejected this argument holding that nothing in Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 requires that memories of abuse be repressed as a prerequisite to a delayed discovery claim (40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1186) .

[e] Enlarged Limitation Period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 Applies to Childhood Sexual Abuse Continuing Beyond Childhood

In Tietge v. Western Province Of The Servites, Inc. (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 382, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 53 , plaintiffs alleged they were sexually molested over a period of time, and filed separate actions against a religious brother who was also a parochial schoolteacher, and his religious order. Defendants demurred on the grounds that the actions were time barred, pointing out the alleged molestation occurred from 9 to 26 years before the actions were filed. Relying on the then applicable statute of limitations, the trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend, but while plaintiffs' appeals were pending, the legislature retroactively amended the statute of limitations.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment as to the religious order, holding that the limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 did not apply to the religious order. The court reversed the judgment as to the brother, holding that the enlarged limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 applied to that action. In response to the brother's argument that the plaintiffs failed to file a certificate of merit as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(e) (now Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(h)), the court held that just as the plaintiffs received the benefits of the 1994 amendment (providing for retroactive application of the statute), they must also assume its burdens. To the extent the plaintiffs did not comply with the procedural requirements of the statute, the brother may raise those claims in the trial court (55 Cal. App. 4th 382, 387) .

[f] Period of Revival for Causes of Action Pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) and (3)

The 2002 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 (see Stats. 2002, Ch. 149, § 1) provides that actions pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(a)(2) or (3) may be commenced after the plaintiff's 26th birthday if the person or entity against whom the action is commenced knew, had reason to know, or was otherwise on notice, of any unlawful sexual conduct by an employee, volunteer, representative, or agent, and failed to take reasonable steps, and implement reasonable safeguards, to avoid future acts of unlawful sexual conduct also added a revival provision. Such an action, therefore, that is permitted to be filed pursuant to paragraph (2) of subdivision (b) that would otherwise be barred as of January 1, 2003, solely because the applicable statute of limitations has or had expired, is revived, and, in that case, a cause of action may be commenced within one year of January 1, 2003 (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(c)). This revival period does not apply, however, to claims that have been litigated to finality on the merits in any court of competent jurisdiction prior to January 1, 2003, or any written, compromised settlement agreements which have been entered into between a plaintiff and a defendant where the plaintiff was represented by an attorney who was admitted to practice law in California at the time of the settlement, and the plaintiff signed the agreement (Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(d)).

Santillan v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno (2008) 163 Cal. App. 4th 4, 10-11, 77 Cal. Rptr. 3d 343 , involved plaintiffs' allegation of childhood sexual abuse by a cleric. The trial court entered summary judgment for defendant bishop, finding that the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations. The issue on appeal was whether plaintiffs, who were brothers, raised triable issues of fact as to whether the diocese, the bishop's predecessor in operating the parish, was on notice of the unlawful sexual conduct, as required for revival under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(b)(2), (c). The court held that triable issues were raised as to whether the cleric's housekeeper, who died before the case was filed, knew of the alleged abuse. According to plaintiffs, she knew that they were often alone with the cleric in his bedroom with the door shut, and when their mother accused her of having known, she did not deny the charge, cried, and later said she was sorry. An inference was raised that she knew about the alleged abuse while it was ongoing. There was also a triable issue as to the housekeeper's duty to report, for purposes of imputing her knowledge to the diocese, because a cardinal testified that he would have expected her to tell somebody if she had any well-founded suspicions of sexual misconduct. Although his testimony did not expressly identify her job duties, an inference could be drawn that his expectation was based on his knowledge of the duties of parish employees (163 Cal. App. 4th 4, 10-11) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

126 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.58

§ 143.58 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Strict Liability or Negligence Action for Property Damage Caused by Asbestos

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION DID NOT ACCRUE UNTIL THE TIME OF CONTAMINATION BY ASBESTOS, RATHER THAN THE TIME THAT PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED THE PRESENCE OF ASBESTOS.

Cause of Action for Property Damage by Asbestos Accrues When Asbestos Causes Contamination. In an asbestos-in-building case, contamination by friable asbestos is the physical injury that must exist before a property owner's strict liability or tort cause of action accrues against an asbestos manufacturer (San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. W.R. Grace & Co. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1335, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for property damage based on the construction of a building with materials containing asbestos.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel must oppose the substantive issue that a property owner's cause of action for strict liability or negligence against an asbestos manufacturer is time-barred, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the time at which contamination by asbestos occurred, and should argue that the date of the occurrence of contamination is within the time period for the statute of limitations [see San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. W.R. Grace & Co. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action for Property Damage by Asbestos Accrues When Asbestos Causes Contamination

In San Francisco Unified School Dist. v. W.R. Grace & Co. (1995) 37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 44 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 , plaintiff, a school district, brought an action for strict liability and negligence against the manufacturer of asbestos-containing products for property damage to plaintiff's buildings. Defendant moved for summary judgment based on the statute of limitations. The trial court granted the motion, finding that the limitations period commenced when plaintiff became aware that its schools contained potentially damaging asbestos. On appeal, plaintiff contended that the trial court adopted the wrong legal standard for commencing the limitations period, urging that the limitations period for a strict liability or negligence cause of action does not commence until asbestos contamination occurs.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that in an asbestos-in-building case, the mere presence of asbestos constitutes only a threat of future harm, and that contamination by friable asbestos is the physical injury which must exist before a property owner's strict liability or tort cause of action against an asbestos manufacturer accrues (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1335) . The court initially noted that a plaintiff in an action for property damage cannot state a cause of action for strict liability or negligence until physical injury occurs (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1327) . Applying this rule in the context of an asbestos-in-building case, a tort recovery for loss of economic value of the building is precluded until physical injury to property occurs (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1329) . The trial court had held that the mere presence of asbestos in plaintiff's buildings constituted the required injury. However, until contamination occurs, the only damages that arise are economic losses that do not constitute physical injury to property (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1330) . The court thus concluded that physical injury resulting from asbestos contamination, rather than the mere presence of asbestos, must occur before a cause of action for strict liability or negligence can accrue in an asbestos-in-building case (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1330) . The court reversed the summary judgment for defendant, and remanded for predetermination of whether the action was filed within the limitations period (37 Cal. App. 4th 1318, 1342) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersEnvironmental LawHazardous Wastes & Toxic SubstancesGeneral OverviewEnvironmental LawHazardous Wastes & Toxic SubstancesAsbestosGeneral OverviewTortsStrict LiabilityGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.59

§ 143.59 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Enforcement of Affirmative Covenant Running With Land

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION DID NOT ACCRUE UNTIL PLAINTIFF DEMANDED THAT DEFENDANT _____ [specify action defendant is required to take under affirmative covenant running with the land, e.g., REPAIR AND STABILIZE THE HILLSIDE ON PLAINTIFF'S LOT].

Action for Breach of Covenant Running With the Land. The four-year period of limitation for an action arising from a written instrument (Code Civ. Proc. § 337) applies to an action to enforce covenants that run with the land (see Cutujian v. Benedict Hills Estates Assn. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1385, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 166). In the case of a cause of action to enforce an affirmative covenant running with the land, the statute of limitations commences when a demand for performance is made (Cutujian v. Benedict Hills Estates Assn. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1387, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 166).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for enforce an affirmative covenant running with land, such as a maintenance obligation imposed on a homeowners' association by a recorded declaration of conditions, covenants, and restrictions.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel must oppose the substantive issue that a property owner's cause of action to enforce an affirmative covenant is time-barred, for example in a motion for summary judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts alleged in the complaint, or other evidence if the issue is not raised on demurrer, regarding the time at which the plaintiff demanded that the defendant perform the perform the action that is required by the covenant, and should argue that the date of the demand is within the time period for the statute of limitations [see Cutujian v. Benedict Hills Estates Assn. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1386-1388, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 166] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action for Breach of Covenant Running With the Land

In Cutujian v. Benedict Hills Estates Assn. (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 166 , plaintiff sought to repair damage to a slope on a residential lot he had purchased in a common interest residential development. The development was subject to a declaration of conditions, covenants and restrictions (CC&R's), and was governed by defendant Association. The CC&R's required defendant to maintain natural and manmade slopes both in the common areas and within individual lots. Defendant demurred, raising the statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer. Plaintiff appealed, contending that the slump on his property was a continuing nuisance which defendant had a duty to abate under the CC&R's.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal, finding that the cause of action for breach of the CC&R's was timely (41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1390) . The court initially noted that CC&R's may be enforced as equitable servitudes and as covenants running with the land (41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1384) . The court found no California statute or judicial decision directly addressing the question of when the statute of limitations commences for enforcement of a covenant running with the land which requires the performance of an affirmative act, but noted that courts in other jurisdictions have generally concluded that the statute does not commence until there is a demand for performance (41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1385) . Reviewing the CC&R's, the court found that they stated that they would "run with the Property and Additions" and imposed on defendant an affirmative duty to maintain the slope areas in the development in a neat and safe condition, a duty which included repair when necessary or appropriate. The court concluded that the most reasonable rule of law is that the statute of limitations to enforce affirmative covenants running with the land, including duties in a declaration of CC&R's, commences when a demand for performance is made. Under this rule, the court found plaintiff's lawsuit timely (41 Cal. App. 4th 1379, 1387) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading &

PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewReal Property LawRestrictive CovenantsCovenants Running With Land

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

2-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.59A

§ 143.59A Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Timely Filed--Statute of Limitations for Action to Quiet Title Does Not Commence Until Adverse Claim Made Against Person Holding the Property

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED, BECAUSE THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS FOR AN ACTION TO QUIET TITLE DOES NOT COMMENCE UNTIL AN ADVERSE CLAIM IS MADE AGAINST THE PERSON HOLDING THE PROPERTY, AND THUS PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION DID NOT ACCRUE UNTIL DEFENDANT _____ [specify action constituting an adverse claim made by defendant against the holder of the property].

Action to Quiet Title. The four-year period of limitation for an action arising from a writing such as a homeowner association's conditions, covenants, and restrictions governing the property (Code Civ. Proc. § 337) applies to an action to quiet title (Crestmar Owners Assn. v. Stapakis (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1226, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 231). The statute of limitations for an action to quiet title does not begin to run until someone presses an adverse claim against the person holding the property (Crestmar Owners Assn. v. Stapakis (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1228, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 231).

Dated:_____.

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____

[name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint to enforce a writing such as a homeowner association's conditions, covenants, and restrictions governing real property. These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel must address the substantive issue of which party is in fact in possession of the property in question. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief or in jury instructions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts alleged in the complaint, or other evidence if the issue is not raised on demurrer, regarding the time at which an adverse claim was made against the person holding the property, and should argue that the date of the adverse claim is within the time period for the statute of limitations [see Crestmar Owners Assn. v. Stapakis (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1228, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 231] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action to Quiet Title

In Crestmar Owners Assn. v. Stapakis (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 231 , after a condominium conversion, the conditions, covenants, and restrictions (CCRs) governing the property obligated the property management corporation to transfer parking spaces in the building's garage to condominium buyers and, if any condominiums remained unsold three years after the first unit was purchased, to convey all remaining unassigned parking spaces to the homeowners' association. Two parking spaces remained unassigned and were not deeded to the homeowners' association. More than 20 years later, the corporation conveyed the spaces to its president. The homeowners' association, which had been continuously using the spaces, challenged the validity of that conveyance. Following a one-day trial, the trial court quieted title to the two spaces in the homeowners' association.

The Court of Appeal affirmed. The action was timely under Cal. Code Civ. Proc. § 337, because the statute of limitations for an action to quiet title did not begin to run until a claim adverse to the person holding the property was asserted. Further, the court found that the homeowners' association had exclusive and undisputed possession of the spaces during the quarter century before it filed its lawsuit to quiet title (157 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 1228) .

129 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.60

§ 143.60 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Breach of Contract Committed in Secret

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER ON THE GROUND THAT THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE PERIOD OF LIMITATION DID NOT BEGIN TO RUN UNTIL THE PLAINTIFF DISCOVERED THE BREACH OF CONTRACT THAT WAS COMMITTED IN SECRET BY THE DEFENDANT.

Delayed Discovery Rule Applies to Breaches of Contract That Are Committed in Secret. The delayed discovery rule applies to not only actions involving fraud, professional negligence, and breaches of fiduciary duty, but also to breaches of contract committed in secret and where the harm flowing from those breaches will not be reasonably discoverable by the plaintiff until a future time (Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint in certain breach of contract actions, where the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by a statute of limitations. The ground for the opposition is that the complaint alleges facts showing that plaintiff suffered damages because the defendant secretly committed the breach in the privacy of its own offices and failed to notify the plaintiff of the breach.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. This memorandum of points and authorities may be accompanied by counter affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 2009] or counter declarations under penalty of perjury [Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Delayed Discovery Rule Applies to Breaches of Contract That Are Committed in Secret

Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 131 Cal. Rptr. 2d 680 was a breach of contract action where the plaintiff alleged the defendant conveyed real property to another company without first notifying the plaintiff before the sale so he could exercise his contractual right of first refusal. The Superior Court dismissed the action at summary judgment on the ground that the statute of limitation barred the action. The appellate court reversed the ruling and held that the delayed discovery rule should be extended beyond actions involving fraud, professional negligence, and breaches of fiduciary duty, and be applied to breaches of contract committed in secret and where the harm flowing from those breaches will not be reasonably discoverable by the plaintiff until a future time. This exception applies when 1) the injury or the act causing the injury, or both, have been difficult for the plaintiff to detect, 2) the defendant has been in a far superior position to comprehend the act and the injury, and 3) the defendant had reason to believe the plaintiff remained ignorant that he had been wronged. In these instances, the plaintiffs should not suffer where circumstances prevented them from knowing they have been harmed and defendants should not be allowed to knowingly profit from the injured party's ignorance. The appellate court determined that the delayed discovery rule should be applied because the first company not only breached the contract within the privacy of its own offices, but the act which constituted the breach, failure to give notice of the option offer, was the very act which prevented the individual from discovering the breach. Defendants had reason to believe the individual remained ignorant he had been wronged, since they conceded for purposes of the summary judgment motion they never provided him with notice of the option offer. The appellate court ruled that the running of the statute of limitations was tolled until such time as the individual knew or should have known of the wrongful conduct at issue. Furthermore, the trial court erred in granting summary judgment, as reasonable minds could differ as to the sufficiency of the individual's diligence in discovering the breach of contract, and therefore, whether the individual exercised reasonable diligence under the circumstances was a question of fact for a jury to decide (107 Cal. App. 4th 1, 4-7) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersContracts LawBreachGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.61

§ 143.61 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing Delayed Accrual of Cause of Action--Professional Malpractice--Other Than Legal or Medical

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE THE DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT BASED ON THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS BECAUSE THE PERIOD OF LIMITATION DID NOT BEGIN TO RUN UNTIL THE PLAINTIFF BOTH SUSTAINED DAMAGE AND DISCOVERED, OR SHOULD HAVE DISCOVERED, THE NEGLIGENCE, AND THE COMPLAINT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT PLAINTIFF _____ [DID NOT DISCOVER THE FACTS GIVING RISE TO THE CAUSE OF ACTION and/or SUSTAINED NO DAMAGE] UNTIL _____ [date].

A. Statute of Limitations. The two-year period of limitation under Code of Civil Procedure Section 339(1), which refers to an obligation or liability not founded upon an instrument of writing, is commonly applied to negligence by professionals that damages intangible property interests (Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1539, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219). The two-year statute of limitations is applicable, notwithstanding the existence of other claims against the professionals, such as misrepresentation, for which a different statute of limitations might otherwise apply (Sahadi v. Scheaffer (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 704, 714, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517).

B. Action Accrues on Later of Discovery or Damage. A cause of action in tort for professional negligence does not accrue until the plaintiff both (1) sustains damage, and (2) discovers, or should discover, the negligence (Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1540, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , citing Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 203, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433).

[Optional] C. Action Does Not Accrue Absent Damage. The mere breach of a professional duty, causing only nominal damage, speculative harm, or the threat of future harm not yet realized does not suffice to create a cause of action for negligence (Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1540, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , citing Budd v.

Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 200, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433).

[Optional] D. Actual Harm Is Question of Fact. Narrowly drawn cases such as International Engine Parts, Inc. v. Feddersen & Co. (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 606, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150, 888 P.2d 1279 , identifying a particular point at which actual injury occurs, are not paradigms, and do not articulate a rule for all circumstances. As recognized in Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 200, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 , depending on the particulars, actionable harm may occur at any one of several points in time subsequent to a professional's negligence. Hence, as with other causes of action, the determination of when actionable harm occurs is generally a question of fact (see Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 588, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 (construing Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6 regarding attorney malpractice)).

[Optional] E. Real Estate Appraiser. In an action by a secured lender against a real estate appraiser the cause of action does not accrue until the lender acquires the property by foreclosure or power of sale (Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1542-1543, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219).

[Optional] F. Accountant. Under Code of Civil Procedure Section 339(1), a cause of action for accountant malpractice specifically accrues on "discovery of the loss or damage suffered by the aggrieved party," but until the client suffers damage or actual injury from the negligence, a cause of action for professional negligence cannot be established (International Engine Parts, Inc. v. Feddersen & Co. (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 606, 620, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150, 888 P.2d 1279). ["Actual injury" caused by an accountant's negligent filing of tax returns occurs when the Internal Revenue Service actually assesses the tax deficiency (International Engine Parts, Inc. v. Feddersen & Co. (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 606, 608-609, 620, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150, 888 P.2d 1279)]. The two-year statute of limitations prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) applies to actions for accounting malpractice, and where the gravamen of the case is accounting negligence, the two-year statute is applicable, notwithstanding the existence of other claims against the professionals, such as misrepresentation, for which a different statute of limitations might otherwise apply (Sahadi v. Scheaffer (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 704, 714, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for professional negligence when the demurrer asserts that the action is barred by the statute of limitations. The basis of the opposition is that the complaint alleges facts showing that the complaint was timely filed because the limitation period did not begin to run until the plaintiff both sustained damage and discovered the negligence.

This form should not be used in actions for professional negligence arising out of legal or health care provider services. These actions have their own periods of limitation [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.6 (attorneys), 340.5 (health care providers)]. For forms of points and authorities relating to these limitation periods, see Ch. 24, Attorneys at Law:

Substitution, Withdrawal, Disqualification, and Authority to Appear , Ch. 24A, Attorneys at Law: Malpractice , Ch. 175, Physicians and Surgeons: Medical Malpractice , and Ch. 176, Physicians and Surgeons: Licensing and Professional Discipline .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case alleged and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations

The plaintiff in Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , was an investor who relied on the defendant's appraisal of a parcel of real property in agreeing to lend money secured by a second trust deed on that property. If the appraisal had been accurate, the transaction would have satisfied the plaintiff's investment standards regarding ratio between the amount of the loan and the value of the security. The plaintiff made the loan in November, 1986, in reliance on the appraisal. In March, 1987, the borrower defaulted. Foreclosure commenced, with sale scheduled for October, 1987. Sale was stayed by when the borrower filed for bankruptcy, and the stay was not lifted until October, 1988. In March, 1988, the plaintiff became aware that the defendant's appraisal had been much too high. In October, 1988, having obtained relief from the bankruptcy stay, the plaintiff purchased the property at a foreclosure sale. After incurring additional expenses while holding the property, the plaintiff sold it, netting less than he had loaned. In August, 1990, the plaintiff filed the complaint against the defendant alleging that he negligently over-appraised the property, that the plaintiff relied on the appraisal in making the loan, and was thereby damaged. The trial court granted the defendant's motion for summary judgment, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The only issue on appeal was the statute of limitations; specifically, the question of law as to the date on which the cause of action accrued (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1538) . The court noted that the parties agreed that the two year limit of Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) applied to the case, and also stated that this section is commonly applied to negligence by professionals which damages intangible property interests (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1539) .

In Sahadi v. Scheaffer (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 704, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517 , appellant clients retained the respondent accountants to prepare and file their federal and state income tax returns. Separate audits resulted in federal and state notices of deficiency. After more than five years of negotiation, the clients obtained a withdrawal of the proposed federal assessment and a refund. The clients' state refund proceedings, which had been suspended during the negotiations, resulted in a refund based on the federal adjustments. The clients brought a negligence suit against the accountants less than two years after the withdrawal of the proposed assessment. In bifurcated trial proceedings, the court concluded the action was barred by the applicable statute of limitations and entered judgment in the accountants' favor. On appeal, the clients argued that the statute of limitations on their malpractice claim was tolled until the audit process was concluded by the IRS' formal withdrawal of its proposed tax deficiency assessment. The clients contended that the action was timely because their accounting malpractice suit was filed within two years of that formal withdrawal.

The court of appeal reversed, finding the action timely because the two-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) for negligent preparation of tax returns commences when the federal audit is complete. The complaint, liberally construed under Code Civ. Proc. § 452, alleged negligence both in the preparation of tax returns and in the audit process. Although the clients sustained costs associated with the audit prior to its conclusion, actual injury in law occurred for limitations purposes on the date when the assessment was withdrawn. The claims based upon the preparation of state income tax returns were also timely (155 Cal. App. 4th 704, 714) .

[b] Action Accrues on Later of Discovery or Damage

The facts and procedural background of Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , are discussed in § 143.61[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed, applying Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). The court held that a cause of action in tort for professional negligence does not accrue until the plaintiff both (1) sustains damage and (2) discovers, or should discover, the negligence (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1540) . The court cited Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 203, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 , for this proposition. Budd is an attorney malpractice case decided under Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1), prior to the enactment of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.6, which now governs attorney malpractice cases.

[c] Action Does Not Accrue Absent Damage

The facts and procedural background of Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , are discussed in § 143.61[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed, applying Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). The plaintiff contended that although he had discovered the defendant's negligence by March, 1988, over two years before the complaint was filed, he did not sustain damage and the statute of limitations did not begin to run, until he acquired the property at foreclosure less than two years before the complaint was filed. The court agreed, finding this to be the unusual case in which the negligence was discovered before the damage occurred (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1540) . Citing Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 200, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 , the court held that mere breach of a professional duty, causing only nominal damage, speculative harm, or the threat of future harm not yet realized does not suffice to create a cause of action for negligence (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1540) . The court then noted that although the plaintiff relied on defendant's appraisal in 1986 by making the loan, he did not immediately suffer damage by so doing. As a secured lender, he could resort to the security if the lender defaulted, so that as long as the borrowers meet their obligations, the alleged negligence created only potential injury, there being no need to resort to the security (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1540) .

The court further rejected the default as the time when the statute begins to run. The court declined to follow Johnson v. Simonelli (1991) 231 Cal. App. 3d 105, 282 Cal. Rptr. 205 , in which plaintiffs alleged that attorneys negligently failed to determine that the security for a transaction was inadequate, and in which the court fixed the date of default as the time when the statute commenced to run (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1541) . The Slavin court noted that default does not give resort to the security until a detailed statutory scheme has been followed, which takes a large amount of time and during which the default may be cured in a variety of ways. Whether the lender actually suffers for the erroneous appraisal depends on the value of the property when the lender acquires it, which is when the lender truly resorts to the security (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1541-1542) . The court also pointed out that the lender should not be deemed to have a cause of action at the time of default because it could lead to a multiplicity of unnecessary lawsuits against appraisers. Also, if the borrower cured the default while litigation was pending, leading to dismissal of the action, the dismissal might act as a bar to a later action against the appraiser if the borrower later defaulted and failed to reinstate, leading to an unjust result (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1542) . The court stated that these anomalies could be avoided by holding that the action does not accrue until the lender acquires the property by foreclosure or power of sale and thereby resorts to the security. This rule provides an unalterable and definitive event that will fairly fix the starting point for the statute of limitation (18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 1542) .

[d] Actual Harm Is Question of Fact

Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 , involved an action for attorney malpractice based on the attorney having missed a statute of limitations. The trial court sustained defendant attorney's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend based on the statute of limitations for attorney malpractice. The court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the issue of when actionable harm occurs for the purposes of the statute of limitations in attorney negligence cases is a question of fact. The Court noted that International Engine Parts, Inc. v. Feddersen & Co. (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 606, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150, 888 P.2d 1279 , discussed in § 143.61[3][f] and another recent case had identified particular points at which actual injury occurs in very narrowly drawn circumstances. The Court went on to state that these cases are not paradigms, and do not articulate a rule for all seasons. The Court held that depending on the particulars, actionable harm may occur at any one of several points in time subsequent to an attorney's negligence, and that hence, as with other causes of action, the determination is generally a question of fact. The Court strongly reaffirmed the established standard recognized in Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 195, 200, 98 Cal. Rptr. 849, 491 P.2d 433 regarding attorney malpractice (to the extent it has not been affected by later legislation) (11 Cal. 4th 583, 588-589) .

Although Adams involves attorney malpractice, it does call into question all "bright line" rules for purposes of determining when actual injury occurs in any professional negligence action. While these rules may well apply in many typical cases, in relying on them, counsel must bear in mind that the issue is a question of fact.

[e] Real Estate Appraiser

Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1536, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 219 , is discussed in § 143.61[3][c].

In relying on the rule of Slavin, counsel should take into consideration the California Supreme Court holding in Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 588-589, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 , discussed in § 143.61[3][d] that the issue of when actual injury occurs is a question of fact.

[f] Accountant

In International Engine Parts, Inc. v. Feddersen & Co. (1995) 9 Cal. 4th 606, 38 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150, 888 P.2d 1279 , the defendant accounting firm was the plaintiffs' tax preparer. One of the plaintiffs was incorporated as a subsidiary of the other to act as a "domestic international stock corporation" (DISC), a status conferring certain tax benefits. The defendant failed to provide the documentation necessary to maintain DISC status for plaintiff's 1983 and 1984 income tax returns. In 1985, an IRS agent audited the subsidiary's status, and plaintiffs learned that defendant had forgotten or missed the required document filing. Defendant continued to represent plaintiffs to attempt to mitigate the error. In 1986, the IRS agent advised plaintiffs that the subsidiary would be disqualified as a DISC. As a result of learning the extent of the potential liability, plaintiffs withdrew a settlement offer in unconnected litigation. At the same time a bank reduced plaintiffs' line of credit in light of the potential liability. The IRS issued a preliminary audit report in 1987, disqualifying the subsidiary as a DISC. In 1988, the IRS assessed the deficiency and imposed taxes and penalties.

Plaintiffs filed the accountant malpractice action against the defendant in 1990, one day short of two years after the tax deficiency was assessed. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the ground the action was barred by the two-year limit of Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1). Defendant argued that actual injury occurred no later than 1986, when the subsidiary had to withdraw the settlement offer in unrelated litigation and the bank reduced its line of credit. Defendant also urged that payment of attorney's fees throughout the audit constituted actual injury. The trial court granted the motion, and the court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed after granting review to resolve the narrow, but recurring, issue of when actual injury, caused by an accountant's negligent filing of tax returns, occurs so as to commence the running of the Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) period of limitations (9 Cal. 4th 606, 608) .

The Court outlined IRS procedures, noting that the examiner's premliminary findings are proposed findings subject to negotiation prior to any determination of tax deficiency, and that once a deficiency is assessed by taxpayer's consent to a deficiency assessment or by a final deficiency notice, the matter is final as to the IRS (9 Cal. 4th 606, 613) .

The Court then reviewed the development of the law regarding when an action for professional negligence accrues, including the development of the actual injury requirement and the disapproval of the "irremediable injury" test (9 Cal.

4th 606, 613-619) . Applying these established rules, the Court held that actual injury occurs when the IRS issues its penalty tax assessment. Although the plaintiff's withdrawal of a settlement offer and loss of credit may have represented "palpable harm," they were based on a tentative assessment of potential liabiltiy only. The alleged negligence may have been discovered during the audit, but that potential liability could not amount to actual harm until the date of the deficiency tax assessment or finality of the audit process. Applying the rule in this fashion conserves judicial resources by relieving the plaintiff of the need to sue the accountant while the audit is pending (9 Cal. 4th 606, 620) .

The Court expressly declined to reach the issue of whether the statute was tolled by the "continuous representation" of plaintiffs by the defendant accountant, but at the same time stated that any broadening of that rule should come from the Legislature (9 Cal. 4th 606, 622) .

Concurring, Justice Mosk would have held that actual injury would not occur until even later, when the deficiency assessment, which is subject to a petition for redetermination and to judicial review, became final (9 Cal. 4th 606, 622-623) . Concurring and dissenting, Justice Kennard would have held that actual harm occurred earlier, when plaintiffs incurred nontrivial audit-related costs, but that the statute was tolled by the defendant's continuing representation of plaintiffs in the matter (9 Cal. 4th 606, 627-628) .

In relying on International Engine Parts, Inc., counsel should take into consideration the California Supreme Court holding in Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 Cal. 4th 583, 588-589, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 594, 904 P.2d 1205 , discussed in § 143.61[3][d] that the issue of when actual injury occurs is a question of fact. The Court in Adams specifically pointed out International Engine Parts, Inc., as a decision that is not a paradigm and does not articulate a rule for all seasons.

Thus, in Van Dyke v. Dunker & Aced (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 862 , the facts and procedural background of which are discussed in § 143.20[4][b], the court stated that International Engine Parts, Inc. did not apply because the rule of that case was expressly limited to a specific type of accountant malpractice, that is, the negligent preparation of tax returns, while the claim in Van Dyke was based not on negligent tax return preparation but on allegedly erroneous tax advice upon which plaintiffs relied to their detriment [Van Dyke v. Dunker & Aced (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 454, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 862] . In Van Dyke, the court of appeal affirmed summary judgment in the defendant's favor, rejecting plaintiffs argument that their cause of action did not accrue until the IRS finally determined the impact of the allegedly negligently-advised charitable donation on their tax obligation. The court stated that the propriety of the tax advice was not contingent on the outcome of the IRS audit, and that there was nothing speculative about the damages originally suffered as a result of the alleged erroneous advice. The later determination by the IRS merely resolved the extent of the loss [Van Dyke v. Dunker & Aced (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 455, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 862] . Thus, the bright-line rule of International Engine Parts, Inc. simply did not apply to the facts of Van Dyke [Van Dyke v. Dunker & Aced (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 446, 457 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 862] .

In Sahadi v. Scheaffer (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 704, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 517 , appellant clients retained the respondent accountants to prepare and file their federal and state income tax returns. Separate audits resulted in federal and state notices of deficiency. After more than five years of negotiation, the clients obtained a withdrawal of the proposed federal assessment and a refund. The clients' state refund proceedings, which had been suspended during the negotiations, resulted in a refund based on the federal adjustments. The clients brought a negligence suit against the accountants less than two years after the withdrawal of the proposed assessment. In bifurcated trial proceedings, the court concluded the action was barred by the applicable statute of limitations and entered judgment in the accountants' favor. On appeal, the clients argued that the statute of limitations on their malpractice claim was tolled until the audit process was concluded by the IRS' formal withdrawal of its proposed tax deficiency assessment. The clients contended that the action was timely because their accounting malpractice suit was filed within two years of that formal withdrawal.

The court of appeal reversed, finding the action timely because the two-year statute of limitations under Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) for negligent preparation of tax returns commences when the federal audit is complete. The complaint, liberally construed under Code Civ. Proc. § 452, alleged negligence both in the preparation of tax returns and in the audit process. Although the clients sustained costs associated with the audit prior to its conclusion, actual injury in law occurred for limitations purposes on the date when the assessment was withdrawn. The claims based upon the preparation of state income tax returns were also timely (155 Cal. App. 4th 704, 714) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accountant

In Schrader v. Scott (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433 , the plaintiff sued an accountant for malpractice in giving unreliable tax advice on which the plaintiff acted. The complaint was filed more than two years after the plaintiff received a notice of final adjustment and deficiency from the Internal Revenue Service [see I.R.C. § 6212 (notice of deficiency)] but within one year after the plaintiff and the IRS signed a closing agreement. The trial court granted a defense motion for summary judgment on the ground that the action was barred by the statute of limitation.

The court of appeal affirmed. There was no dispute over when the negligence was discovered, over three years before filing of the complaint. The dispositive issues on appeal whether the statute of limitations for accountant malpractice based on faulty tax advice (1) ran from the time plaintiffs sustained actual or appreciable harm as a result of the negligence, or (2) was tolled until the negligence had become irremediable, and (3) whether irremediabilty would occur only when plaintiff's administrative appeals with the taxing agencies had been exhausted (8 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1684) . The court did not identify the statute of limitations it was applying, but compared accounting malpractice to legal malpractice. The court first rejected the irremediable damage test, citing Laird v. Blacker (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 606, 7 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 828 P.2d 691 , for the rule in legal malpractice cases that the cause of action accrues when the client discovers or should have discovered the negligence and suffers appreciable and actual harm (8 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1684-1685) .

The court noted that Laird held that the victim of legal malpractice sustained actual injury when the underlying action was dismissed as a result of the negligence and specifically rejected the argument that a legal malpractice plaintiff's damages were only speculative until appellate remedies in the underlying action were completed. The Laird court had noted that the relevant issue was whether the plaintiff knew she had been damaged, not whether the amount of the damage had been finally established (8 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1685) . The Schrader court also reviewed two negligent tax advice cases. One had found appreciable harm when the plaintiff paid attorney fees for representation in a tax court proceeding. The other held that the action for negligent preparation of tax returns accrued when the plaintiff received the notice that a penalty was to be assessed against him; the court holding that the harm occurred when plaintiff became liable for the tax penalty, and was not delayed until actual payment of the penalty (8 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1686-1687) . Having made it clear that the statute was not delayed until the closing agreement between plaintiff and the IRS, the only event that would have made the complaint timely, the Schrader court affirmed the summary judgment against plaintiffs without identifying at which earlier point the statute of limitations had begun to run (8 Cal. App. 4th 1679, 1687) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewTortsMalpractice & Professional LiabilityGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.62

§ 143.62 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amended Statute of Limitations Does Not Apply

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD NOT BE SUSTAINED BECAUSE THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS RELIED ON BY DEFENDANT DOES NOT APPLY, IN THAT IT WAS AMENDED AFTER PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION ACCRUED TO SHORTEN THE TIME WITHIN WHICH TO SUE, AND THE STATUTE AS AMENDED _____ [either CUT OFF PLAINTIFF'S CAUSE OF ACTION ALTOGETHER or LEFT PLAINTIFF WITH AN UNREASONABLY SHORT TIME WITHIN WHICH TO FILE HIS/HER COMPLAINT].

Statute as Amended, if Applied, Would Cut Off Plaintiff's Cause of Action. A statute of limitations which is amended to shorten the period within which to sue and thereby either eliminates a person's cause of action altogether or leaves that person with an unreasonably short period within which to file suit does not apply to the cause of action (Rosefield Packing Co. v. Superior Court (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 120, 122-123, 47 P.2d 716 ; Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 297, 236 Cal. Rptr. 347).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of the statute of limitations when the statute was amended after the cause of action accrued to shorten the period within which to sue and thereby eliminated plaintiff's cause of action or allowed an unreasonably short period within which to file the complaint. With appropriate modifications, the form may also be used in opposition to a motion for judgment on the pleadings, a motion for summary judgment, or an objection to the introduction of evidence based on the bar of the statute or in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute as Amended, if Applied, Would Cut Off Plaintiff's Cause of Action

In Rosefield Packing Co. v. Superior Court (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 120, 47 P.2d 716 , involving application of former Code Civ. Proc. § 583 [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360] that required dismissal of an action not brought to trial within five years after filing of the answer and was amended to change answer to action, thereby shortening the time within which the action had to be brought to trial, the Supreme Court said that the Legislature may shorten or extend the period of the statute of limitations, or similar time statutes relating to procedure, and the changed period may be made applicable to pending proceedings, but that there is one important qualification to the rule: when the change in remedy, as, for example, the shortening of a time limit provision, is made retroactive, there must be a reasonable time permitted for the party affected to avail himself or herself of his or her remedy before the statute takes effect. If the statute operates immediately to cut off the existing remedy, or within so short a time as to give the party no reasonable opportunity to exercise the remedy, then the retroactive application of it is unconstitutional to such party (4 Cal. 2d 120, 122-123) .

In Aronson v. Superior Court (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 236 Cal. Rptr. 347 , a 14-year-old boy, born in 1971, through his aunt as guardian ad litem, sued a physician and a university for medical malpractice based on negligent prenatal and delivery care which caused the boy total paralysis and the inability to speak. At the time the boy was born, the applicable statute of limitations for medical malpractice was four years from the date of injury or one year from actual or constructive discovery, whichever occurred first, subject to tolling during minority (former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 340.5, 352). But Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 was amended in 1975 to give a minor plaintiff either three years from the date of injury, or, if the injury occurred before the plaintiff was six years old, until the plaintiff's eight birthday, whichever period is longer, to file the action. The action was filed in 1985. Plaintiff alleged that his parents failed or refused to bring the action on his behalf. Defendants' demurrers to the complaint based on the bar of the statute of limitations were overruled, and defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal said well-settled law establishes that retrospective application of a shortened limitations period is permissible provided the party has a reasonable time to avail himself or herself of his or her remedy before the statute cuts off the right (191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 297) . The court explained that the doctrine of retrospectivity of limitations statutes is one of constitutional dimension and that statutes of limitation, being procedural, are normally retroactively applied to accrued causes of action. But the court must inquire whether, in a given case, that retrospective application may violate due process by in effect eliminating the plaintiff's right. If the time left to file suit is reasonable, no such constitutional violation occurs, and the statute is applied as enacted. If no time is left, or only an unreasonably short time remains, then the statute cannot be applied at all (191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 297) . The court held, however, that whether the time that remains is unreasonably short is a question of law and that the four years that remained to plaintiff under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.5 as amended within which he could have sued (before his eighth birthday) was a reasonable time (191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 297-298) . The court therefore granted the writ directing the trial court to vacate its orders overruling the demurrers and to sustain them on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitations (191 Cal. App. 3d 294, 300) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.63

§ 143.63 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Complaint Alleges Facts Showing That Cause of Action Arose Out of Insurer's Breach of Continuing Contractual Duty to Defend Plaintiff in Prior Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE GENERAL DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT ON THE GROUND THE ACTION IS BARRED BY THE _____ [FOUR-YEAR or TWO-YEAR] LIMITATION PERIOD OF CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION _____ [337(1) or 339(1)] SHOULD BE OVERRULED, BECAUSE THIS ACTION IS FOR DAMAGES RESULTING FROM THE DEFENDANT'S BREACH OF ITS CONTRACTUAL DUTY UNDER THE TERMS OF ITS POLICY TO DEFEND THE PLAINTIFF IN A PRIOR ACTION AGAINST THE PLAINTIFF WHEN THAT DEFENSE WAS TENDERED. THAT DUTY WAS A CONTINUING ONE, AND THE RUNNING OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS WAS EQUITABLY TOLLED UNTIL THE UNDERLYING ACTION WAS TERMINATED BY FINAL JUDGMENT.

[EITHER]

Breach of Title Insurer's Duty to Defend. A title insurer's duty to defend is a continuing one, commencing on the tender of defense and continuing until the underlying lawsuit is concluded, and may therefore be assumed by the insurer at any time before entry of a final judgment in that action. Hence, although the limitation period (Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1)) on an action against a title insurer under its policy for the breach of its duty to defend its insured accrues when the insurer refuses the insured's tender of defense, the limitation period is equitably tolled until the underlying action is terminated by final judgment, and plaintiff may elect to wait until a final judgment has been entered and the duty to defend has ceased before filing suit (Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1078, 282 Cal. Rptr. 445, 811 P.2d 737 (disapproving contrary language in Central Bank v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 859, 149 Cal. Rptr. 822); see also Israelsky v. Title Ins. Co. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 611, 616, 261 Cal. Rptr. 72).

[OR]

Breach of Liability Insurer's Duty to Defend. A liability insurer's duty to defend is a continuing one, commencing on the tender of defense and continuing until the underlying lawsuit is concluded, and may therefore be assumed at any time before entry of a final judgment in that action. Hence, although the limitation period (Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1)) on an action against a liability insurer under its policy accrues when the insurer refuses the insured's tender of defense, the limitation period is equitably tolled until the underlying action is terminated by a final judgment, and plaintiff may elect to wait until a final judgment has been entered and the duty to defend has ceased before filing suit (see Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1077-1078, 282 Cal. Rptr. 445, 811 P.2d 737 ; Oil Base, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 389, 76 Cal. Rptr. 594).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to the complaint in an action by an insured against his or her insurer for the insurer's breach of its duty to defend plaintiff in a prior lawsuit against the plaintiff, when the ground of the demurrer is that the action accrued and the statute of limitations began to run when the defendant refused the plaintiff's tender of defense, and plaintiff delayed suit until after final judgment in the underlying action, and that the present action is therefore barred by the applicable period of limitations. The ground for opposition is that the applicable statute of limitations was equitably tolled from the time the action accrued until after the prior action in which the defendant refused the tender of defense was terminated by a final judgment.

With appropriate modifications, the memorandum may also be used in opposition to a defense motion for judgment on the pleadings or to a motion by defendant for summary judgment. In addition, the authorities cited and the cases they discuss may also be used in opposition to a general demurrer, defense motion for judgment on the pleadings, or motion by defendant for summary judgment based on the running of the statute of limitations in an action for breach of any other continuing contractual duty, if the action would be barred by the statute of limitations if the statute were not tolled from the time of the defendant's breach until termination of the time the duty could have been assumed.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Breach of Title Insurer's Duty to Defend

In Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1072, 282 Cal. Rptr. 445, 811 P.2d 737 , the defendant issued plaintiff a title insurance policy in January 1984 in connection with the plaintiff's purchase of real property. The policy provided coverage for losses, including attorney's fees, incurred by reason of title to the estate or interest of the insured being vested other than as stated therein, including any defect or lien or encumbrance on such title. The policy excluded any losses resulting from a claim of easement that was not shown by the public records. In November 1984, the adjoining property owner sued plaintiff, claiming an easement by implication over the property covered by the policy and seeking reformation of a recorded easement. Plaintiff tendered the defense to the insurer, which on April 26, 1985, notified plaintiff in writing that it would not provide him with a defense and denied coverage under the policy. Plaintiff successfully defended the underlying suit, and judgment was entered in his favor on October 26, 1987. On October 24, 1988, plaintiff filed the present action against the insurer for wrongful refusal to defend. The trial court sustained the defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, on the ground that all causes of action were barred by the two-year statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1)), and dismissed the action.

The court of appeal, following Central Bank v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 859, 149 Cal. Rptr. 822 , and rejecting Israelsky v. Title Ins. Co. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 611, 261 Cal. Rptr. 72 (discussed below), affirmed, holding that plaintiff's cause of action had accrued when the defendant rejected his claim, more than two years before plaintiff commenced the instant suit, and that it was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1).

The Supreme Court granted review to resolve a conflict among the courts of appeal, namely, between Central Bank, above, which held that an action for breach of the duty to defend a claim under a title insurance policy accrued when tender of the defense was refused, not when final judgment was entered against the insured in the underlying dispute, and Israelsky, which adopted the rule of delayed commencement in cases of a continuing duty as set forth in Oil Base, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 389, 76 Cal. Rptr. 594 (discussed in § 143.63[3][b]). The Supreme Court rejected Central Bank and approved the result in Israelsky, but found the Israelsky decision flawed in one respect: it overlooked the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 312 that the action must be commenced within the statutory period after the cause of action has "accrued." The Court said that the cause of action accrued when the insurer refused to defend, and that unless equitably tolled, the statute of limitation commenced to run on the day the insurer refused the tender of defense (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1077-1078) . The Court, however, concluded that Israelsky was, although it did not so state, in fact applying the California doctrine of equitable tolling, that is, although the statutory period commences on the refusal to defend, it is equitably tolled until the underlying action is terminated by final judgment (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1077) . Citing Israelsky, the Court said that the duty to defend in a title insurance case is governed by the same principles that govern the duty to defend under general liability policies, and citing Oil Base, the Court said that the duty commences on tender of the defense and continues until the underlying lawsuit is concluded (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1077) .

The Court, again citing Israelsky, pointed out that California courts have long given the plaintiff, in cases where a continuing duty has been breached, the option of filing suit when the time for complete performance had passed (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1078) . The Court explained that the Legislature has enacted several tolling provisions in which certain periods of time are not counted toward the time limit, that, in addition, California decisions have implied tolling exceptions in a variety of situations, that the Legislature cannot predict all of the circumstances that come within the purpose of the tolling exceptions, and that it was therefore appropriate for courts to construe the statutory tolling scheme and implicit tolling exceptions to effect the ostensible legislative purpose (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1078-1079) . The Court said that the duty to defend is a continuing duty, and that it was equitable and consistent with the legislative intent to toll the limitations period in which this duty continues from the date of accrual of a cause of action to final judgment (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1079) . The Court held, in sum, that the limitation period for an action under a title insurance policy for failure to defend accrues when the insurer refuses the insured's tender of defense, but is tolled until the underlying action is terminated by final judgment, and disapproved the contrary language in Central Bank, above (53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1080) .

Israelsky v. Title Ins. Co. (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 611, 261 Cal. Rptr. 72 , was an action on a variety of theories by the buyers of real property against their title insurer for the latter's refusal to defend them in an action by the sellers involving the purchased property. The sellers' complaint alleged that an amendment to the escrow instructions, relating to the sale of the property and to the circumstances under which the buyers would reconvey a portion of the property to the sellers, did not properly reflect the sellers' agreement with the buyers. Tender of the defense of the sellers' action was twice made by the buyers to the insurance company and twice refused. The buyers' action against the insurer was commenced while the sellers' action was pending. The trial court ruled that the action against the insurer was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) on the ground that more than two years had elapsed between the insurer's rejection of the buyers' tender of defense and the time the complaint was filed, and granted the insurer's motion for summary judgment. Plaintiffs appealed.

Rejecting the contrary holding in Central Bank v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 859, 865-866 , which the Israelsky court found to be unpersuasive, and adopting the reasoning in Oil Base, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 389, 76 Cal. Rptr. 594 (discussed in § 143.63[3][b]), the court of appeal reversed. Quoting Oil Base, the court said that in the case of an executory contract, if the parties do not mutually abandon and rescind it, it is optional with the plaintiff to sue immediately on defendant's breach of a continuing duty or to wait until the expiration of the time designated in the contract before commencing an action (212 Cal. App. 3d 611, 616) . The court said that an insurer's duty to defend is continuing and may be assumed at any time before the entry of a final judgment in the action on the underlying claim (212 Cal. App. 3d 611, 616) . The court held that in an action for breach of the duty to defend in a title insurance policy the statute of limitations does not commence to run until a final judgment in the underlying action has been entered (212 Cal. App. 3d 611, 616, 623) .

NOTE:

It was this latter statement that the Supreme Court in Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1072, 1078, 282 Cal. Rptr. 445, 811 P.2d 737 , discussed above, found faulty and for which it substituted the rule that the action accrues when the tender of defense is refused, but the running of the statute of limitations is equitably tolled until the insurer's continuing duty to defend is terminated by a final judgment in the underlying action.

[b] Breach of Liability Insurer's Duty to Defend

The facts, procedural background, and holding of Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 Cal. 3d 1072, 282 Cal. Rptr. 445, 811 P.2d 737 , are discussed in § 143.63[3][a].

Oil Base, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 76 Cal. Rptr. 594 , was an action by an insured manufacturer of oil base drilling mud against its liability insurer to recover expenses and fees expended by it in defense of a California action by a Venezuela company, which had purchased some of plaintiff's mud, for damages resulting from the spontaneous combustion of the mud while it was in a warehouse in Venezuela where it was stored by the purchaser. The insurer denied coverage on the ground that the policy applied only to accidents that occurred within the United States, its territories or possessions, or Canada, and subsequently refused to defend the action. Plaintiff employed its own counsel, defended the action, recovered a defense judgment that became final, and eight days later sued the insurer. The action against the insurer was filed some six and one-half years after the insurer denied coverage and more than five years after it had refused to defend the plaintiff. The trial court ruled that the action was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 337(1). The court of appeal reversed. After holding that the word "accident" was ambiguous and that under the facts of the case the policy covered the incident in question, the court said that, in those cases in which a continuing contract involves the rendering of benefits to the plaintiff before the date for final performance, the rule is that, in the case of a continuing executory contract, if the parties do not abandon it, it is optional with the plaintiff to sue immediately on the breach or to wait until the expiration of the time designated in the contract before commencing his or her action (271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 389) . In holding that the action was not barred by the statute of limitations and reversing the judgment for the insurer, the appellate court said the insurer's duty to defend was a continuing duty that it could have assumed at any time before final judgment, that the insurer could have indicated its willingness to appear and defend at any time before trial, during trial, and at any stage before final judgment, and that until the underlying action was terminated by final judgment, the insurer had a duty that it could elect to assume (271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 389-390) . The court held that because the insurer's duty was a continuous one, the insured could elect to wait to sue until a final judgment had been entered and the duty to defend had ceased (271 Cal. App. 2d 378, 390) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersInsurance LawClaims & ContractsGood Faith & Fair DealingGeneral OverviewInsurance LawClaims & ContractsGood Faith & Fair DealingDuty to Defend

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.64

§ 143.64 Opposing General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amendment of Limitation Period Revived Lapsed Claim

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 143.31[1].]

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE AMENDMENT OF THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS, _____ [specify code section, e.g., CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 340.1] BY _____ [specify legislation, e.g., STATS. 1986, ch. 914, § 1] REVIVED PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM.

Lapsed Claims Subject to Revival. The Legislature has the power to expressly revive time-barred civil common law causes of action (Liebig v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 835, 257 Cal. Rptr. 574 ; see also Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 (following Liebig and rejecting contention that Liebig was wrongly decided)).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint based on the bar of the statute of limitations when the statute was amended to enlarge the period of limitation and expressly provided that causes of action barred under the statute prior to amendment are revived [see Liebig v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 835, 257 Cal. Rptr. 574] . The form should be used only if the cause of action is based on common law. The Legislature does not appear to have power to revive a liability created by statute [see Liebig v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 832-833, 257 Cal. Rptr. 574 ; see § 143.65].

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In particular, counsel should pinpoint the language expressly reviving previously lapsed claims.

[b] Reply Memorandum

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 143.65 may be used to reply to the contention supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lapsed Claims Subject to Revival

In Liebig v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 257 Cal. Rptr. 574 , plaintiff brought an action for tort damages against defendant for alleged sexual molestation. The defendant demurred on the ground the complaint was time-barred. The plaintiff argued that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1, enacted in 1986, extended the limitation period and expressly revived causes of action that were time barred under the former period of limitations but timely under the extension. The trial court rejected the defendant's argument that the Legislature could not effect such a revival and overruled the demurrer. The defendant sought review by extraordinary writ.

The court of appeal summarily denied the writ, but the Supreme Court granted review and retransferred the matter, directing the court of appeal to issue an alternative writ. The court of appeal did so, but ultimately denied the petition. The court first noted that the statute of limitations originally barred the action in 1985, but that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1, enacted in 1986, expressly provided that it applied to all actions commenced on or after January 1, 1987, including those that would be barred under prior law (209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 830-831) . The court went on to note that federal law allows the Legislature to revive cause of action after the statute has expired unless the passage of the statute of limitations creates a prescriptive property right, such as title in adverse possession (209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 831-832) . The court recognized that the California Supreme Court has held that the Legislature cannot revive a cause of action once the original period has elapsed, but pointed out that all these cases involved a limitations period for a liability created by statute, and not by the common law (209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 832) . The court found the uncertainty of the rule heightened by the Supreme Court's dicta in Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Cranston (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 462, 465, 24 Cal. Rptr. 851, 374 P.2d 819 , that unless the statute expressly provides to the contrary an enlargement of the statute of limitations applies to matters pending but not already barred (209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 833) . Noting that the Supreme Court in Douglas Aircraft had expressly declined to address the issue (209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 833) , the court adopted the distinction between statutory and common law causes of action, and held that the Legislature has power to expressly revive time-barred civil common law causes of action (209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 835) .

In Lent v. Doe (1995) 40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 47 Cal. Rptr. 2d 389 , defendant demurred to an action for childhood sexual abuse, arguing that the complaint was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court sustained the demurrer, rejecting plaintiff 's theory of delayed discovery under Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 on the basis that the plaintiff know of the wrongfulness of the defendant's conduct when it occurred and suffered appreciable injury at that time and that the period of limitation expired in 1981. The court dismissed the action, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 revived plaintiff 's cause of action and that plaintiff timely filed the action under Section 340.1. The court initially addressed defendant's argument that Liebig v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 828, 257 Cal. Rptr. 574 , was wrongfully decided. The court stated that it reviewed the cases discussed in Liebig and found Liebig's conclusions regarding the power of the Legislature to revive lapsed claims to be supported. Failing to be persuaded that Liebig was wrongly decided, the court followed its rule that the Legislature has the power retroactively to revive a civil cause of action time-barred under the former statute of limitations (40 Cal. App. 4th 1177, 1184) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Lapsed Claims Subject to Revival

The defendant in Nelson v. Flintkote Co. (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 218 Cal. Rptr. 562 , demurred to a complaint for damages for asbestos-related injuries on the ground it was time-barred. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the case. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the plaintiff's cause of action was revived by the enactment of the special statute of limitations for asbestos claims, Code Civ. Proc. § 340.2. The court noted that a statute of limitations for a common law tort is a procedural rule not affecting vested rights (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 733) . The court also noted that Chambers v. Gallagher (1918) 177 Cal. 704, 171 P. 931 , to the contrary, involved liabilities created by statute, which are sometimes deemed substantive rather than statutory (172 Cal. App. 3d 727, 733 n.2).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsExtension & Revival

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 143 LIMITATION OF ACTIONS
PART II. FORMS

14-143 California Points & Authorities § 143.65

§ 143.65 Reply Memorandum Supporting General Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10]--Bar of Statute of Limitations [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Amendment of Limitation Period Does Not Revive Lapsed Claims

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name]	)	REPLY MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AU-
Plaintiff,	)	THORITIES IN SUPPORT OF GENERAL DEMUR-
vs.	)	RER TO COMPLAINT OF _____
_____ [name],	)	[name]
Defendant.	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
		Date Action Filed: _____
		Trial Date: None set

_____

AN AMENDMENT OF A STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS IS PRESUMED NOT TO REVIVE LAPSED CLAIMS UNLESS THE LEGISLATURE PROVIDES FOR REVIVAL IN UNMISTAKABLE TERMS. THE AMENDMENT OF _____ [specify code section], BY STATS. _____ [number], CH. _____ [number], OPERATIVE _____ [date], LIBERALIZING THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS APPLICABLE TO CLAIMS BASED ON _____ [specify subject matter], DID NOT REVIVE CLAIMS THAT LAPSED BEFORE _____ [date].

Claims Generally Not Revived by Amendment. A legislative change in the statute of limitations is presumed not to revive lapsed claims unless the amending act expressly mandates such an effect. If the Legislature wishes to revive lapsed claims, it should so declare in unmistakable terms (Krupnick v. Duke Energy Morro Bay (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1026, 1030, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 767 ; Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Cranston (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 462, 466, 24 Cal. Rptr. 851, 374 P.2d 819 ; David A. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 286, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 537). Otherwise, such claims will be left to lie in repose. If an attempt to assert them is met by timely interposition of a defense of limitations, they will be dismissed (David A. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 286, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 537).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in a reply memorandum supporting a general demurrer based on the statute of limitations. The basis of the reply is that the legislature did not clearly revive previously barred actions, and that therefore those actions were not revived.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in reply to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 143.64.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Claims Generally Not Revived by Amendment

In Krupnick v. Duke Energy Morro Bay (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 1026, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 767 , a personal injury action was filed on January 8, 2003, and alleged that, on January 26, 2001, appellant fell on defendant's premises due to the pooling of water and other material on the floor. In affirming the dismissal, the court held that the one-year statute of limitations of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) applied. The two year statute of limitations in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 became effective on January 1, 2003 and did not operate retroactively to revive the lapsed claim. The plaintiff appealed.

The appellate court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 does not expressly provide that it applies retroactively to claims already time-barred under former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3). Even though the same act that added § 335.1 also added Code Civ. Proc. § 340.10, which provided for retroactivity, that statute expressly singled out only one class of plaintiffs, September 11 terrorist victims, as entitled to the retroactive application of Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1. Appellant was not a member of that class, and pursuant to general principles of statutory construction, § 335.1 could not be construed as applying retroactively to him. As a rule of statutory construction, it is established that an enlargement of limitations operates prospectively unless the statute expressly provides otherwise. The reason for this rule is a judicial perception of unfairness in reviving a cause after the prospective defendant has assumed its expiration and has conducted his affairs accordingly (115 Cal. App. 4th 1026, 1029) . Under the familiar rule of construction, expressio unius est exclusio alterius, where exceptions to a general rule are specified by statute, other exceptions are not to be implied or presumed. Here the Legislature specified a single exception for "9/11" terrorist victims to the general rule that statutes operate prospectively. It follows that other exceptions should not be implied or presumed (115 Cal. App. 4th 1026, 1030) .

In Douglas Aircraft Co. v. Cranston (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 462, 24 Cal. Rptr. 851, 374 P.2d 819 , the plaintiff sought declaratory relief against the State Controller to determine whether it was required to pay some unpaid wage claims to the state under the Uniform Disposition of Unclaimed Property Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 1500 et seq. The statute of limitations on the wage claims had run before the Act was enacted, and plaintiff claimed that due process precluded the Legislature from abrogating the defense of the statute of limitations after it had run. The trial court held that that plaintiff could not constitutionally be required to pay the claims to the Controller, and the Controller appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, but declined to reach the constitutional issue. The Court acknowledged the Controller's citation of Chase Securities Corp. v. Donaldson (1945) 325 U.S. 304, 315-316, 65 S. Ct. 1137, 89 L. Ed. 1628, 1636-1637 , and Campbell v. Holt (1885) 115 U.S. 620, 6 S. Ct. 209, 29 L. Ed. 483 , which had found no federal constitutional impediment to revival of lapsed causes of action. However, the constitutional issues did not have to be addressed unless it clearly appeared that the Act provided for retroactive abrogation of the defense of the statute of limitations (58 Cal. 2d 462, 464-465) . The Court then cited Code Civ. Proc. § 3, which declares that no part of that code is retroactive unless so expressly declared. The Court also noted the general rule that amendments enlarging the statute of limitations period apply to matters pending but not yet barred (58 Cal. 2d 462, 465) . The Court went on, however, to recognize that once the statute has run, it is important to allow potential defendants to rely on it in conducting their affairs and concluded that had the Legislature intended the Act to apply retroactively, it would have expressed itself in unmistakable terms (58 Cal. 2d 462, 465-466) . The Court did not find such an unmistakable expression in the Act, and held that the California rule against retroactivity applied (58 Cal. 2d 462, 466-468) .

David A. v. Superior Court (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 537 , involved claims for injuries based on childhood sexual abuse that occurred some 18 years before the action was filed in 1992. The defendants demurred on the ground the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court overruled the demurrer, and the defendants sought review by writ of mandate.

The court of appeal reviewed the history of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1 and the instant case. The court found that the plaintiff's claims were first barred when she reached her 19th birthday in 1986, but were revived when the original Section 340.1 took effect on January 1, 1987. The claims lapsed again when plaintiff turned 21. The question before the court was whether they were revived again on January 1, 1991, when Section 340.1 was again amended to further liberalize the period of limitation (20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 284-285) . The court recognized the Legislature's power to revive a lapsed claim, but stated that that did not mean that every liberalization of a statute of limitations will revive lapsed claims. Indeed, the court further recognized that in a particular case, retroactivity could so gravely infringe settled rights as to violate due process, and that revival of lapsed claims may be unfair and dishonest (20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 285) . The court stated that, accordingly, a legislative change in the statute of limitations is presumed not to revive lapsed claims unless the amending act expressly mandate such an effect. If the Legislature wishes to revive lapsed claims, it should so declare in unmistakable terms. Otherwise, such claims will be left to lie in repose, and if an attempt to assert them is met by timely interposition of a defense of limitations, they will be dismissed (20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 286) . Finding that the Legislature did not intend to revive lapsed claims, the court issued the writ directing the trial court to vacate the order overruling the demurrer and to enter an order sustaining the demurrer without leave to amend (20 Cal. App. 4th 281, 286-289) .

David A. cannot be relied on to avoid the effect of Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1. The legislature amended Section 340.1 in 1994 Stats., ch. 288, to expressly provide that the 1990 amendments of the limitation period are intended to apply to all actions commenced on or after January 1, 1991, including any action barred by the period of limitation in effect prior to January 1, 1991, thereby reviving those causes of action that had lapsed under prior law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 340.1(r), (s)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsGeneral OverviewGovernmentsLegislationStatutes of LimitationsExtension & Revival

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
Chapter 144 RESERVED

14-144 California Points & Authorities Chapter 144

RESERVED

Chapter 144 RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS

14-145 California Points & Authorities 145.syn

§ 145.syn Synopsis to Chapter 145: LIS PENDENS

§ 145.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 145.02 Governing Statutes

§ 145.03 Page Limits on Points and Authorities

§ 145.04 Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

§ 145.05 Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§§ 145.06-145.19 [Reserved]

§ 145.20 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Action Does Not Affect Title to, or Right to Possession of, Specific Real Property or Use of Easement Identified in Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.31]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Special Issues Relating to Status of Creditors' Suits

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expungement Is Proper if Pleading Does Not Contain Real Property Claim

[b] Complaint for Money Damages Does Not Relate to Real Property

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Expungement Is Proper if Pleading Does Not Contain Real Property Claim

[b] Complaint for Money Damages Does Not Relate to Real Property

§ 145.21 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Claim on Which Notice of Lis Pendens Is Based Lacks Probable Validity [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Expunge Lis Pendens Notice

§ 145.22 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Undertaking Will Secure Adequate Relief for Claimant [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Attorney's Fees

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bond Adequately Secures Relief

[b] Amount of Bond in Court's Discretion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Amount of Bond in Court's Discretion

§ 145.23 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Failure to File and Serve Notice [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.23]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lis Pendens Notice Void and Invalid

[b] Expungement Appropriate Remedy

§ 145.24 Supporting Motion to Require Claimant to Give Undertaking as Condition of Maintaining Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Undertaking as Condition of Maintaining Lis Pendens

§ 145.25 Opposing Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Action Affects Title to, or Right to Possession of, Specific Real Property or Use of Easement Identified in Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.31]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Special Issues Relating to Status of Creditors' Suits

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Leasehold Affects Right of Possession of Real Property

[b] Fraudulent Conveyance Action Constitutes Real Property Claim

[c] Right of Possession Includes Right of Access and Occupation

[d] Lis Pendens May be Recorded Against Dominant Tenement in Easement Dispute

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Conveyance Action Constitutes Real Property Claim

§ 145.26 Opposing Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Claim on Which Notice of Lis Pendens Is Based Has Probable Validity [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.3, 405.32]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real Property Claim Has Probable Validity

§ 145.27 Opposing Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Undertaking Will Not Secure Adequate Relief for Claimant [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Attorney's Fees

[3] Additional Authorities

[a] Undertaking Cannot Adequately Secure Relief

§ 145.28 Supporting Contention That Notice of Lis Pendens Does Not Protect Interest Not Alleged in Underlying Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Interest in Real Property Not Protected if Pleadings Do Not Indicate Nature and Extent of Relief Sought

§ 145.29 Supporting Contention That Expungement of Lis Pendens Does Not Affect Judgment Lien

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expungement of Lis Pendens Does Not Affect Judgment Lien

§ 145.30 Supporting Contention That Moving Party Is Entitled to Attorneys' Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38] Despite Withdrawal of Lis Pendens

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Withdrawal of Lis Pendens Does Not Preclude Recovery of Attorneys' Fees and Costs

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.01

§ 145.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains forms of points and authorities relating to notices of lis pendens. It includes the following types of forms:

- Points and authorities for use in supporting [see §§ 145.20-145.23] and opposing [see §§ 145.25-145.27] notices of motion to expunge a lis pendens notice.

- Points and authorities supporting a motion to require a claimant to post an undertaking as a condition of maintaining a lis pendens [see § 145.24].

- Points and authorities in support of contentions (1) that a notice of lis pendens does not protect an interest not alleged in the underlying action [see § 145.28], (2) that expungement of a lis pendens does not affect a judgment lien [see § 145.29], and (3) that a moving party is entitled to attorney's fees and costs [see § 145.30].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensNoticesCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.02

§ 145.02 Governing Statutes

Notices of lis pendens are governed generally by Code Civ. Proc. § 405 et seq. The requirements for expunging a notice of lis pendens and other relief are outlined in Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30 et seq., and the provision for expunging a notice after the giving of a sufficient undertaking is contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33. An award of attorney's fees to the prevailing party when a motion is granted or denied is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.03

§ 145.03 Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits; supporting and opposing memoranda must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in summary judgment or summary adjudication proceedings. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeContent & FormCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.04

§ 145.04 Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

The forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For a detailed discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form of memorandum for use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.05

§ 145.05 Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion of the statutory requirements for giving a notice of lis pendens and the procedure for expunging a notice of lis pendens, as well as other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender). For further discussions of lis pendens in specific situations, see the following chapters in that set:

- Ch. 11, Adjoining Landowners.
- Ch. 13, Adverse Possession.
- Ch. 62, Attachment.
- Ch. 215, Duress, Menace, Fraud, Undue Influence, and Mistake.
- Ch. 247, Eminent Domain and Inverse Condemnation.
- Ch. 270, Fraudulent Conveyances.
- Ch. 361, Mechanics' Liens.
- Ch. 397, Partition.
- Ch. 482, Quieting Title.
- Ch. 555, Trust Deeds and Real Property Mortgages.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensNoticesCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-145 California Points & Authorities §§ 145.06-145.19

[Reserved]

§§ 145.06[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.20

§ 145.20 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Action Does Not Affect Title to, or Right to Possession of, Specific Real Property or Use of Easement Identified in Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.31]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff [and Cross Defendant],	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES SUPPORTING MOTION TO EXPUNGE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS AND FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES AND COSTS
_____ [name],	)	[Limited Civil Case]
Defendant [and Cross Complainant].	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	Judge: _____
	)	Discovery Cut-Off: _____
	)	Motion Cut-Off: _____
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE _____ [COMPLAINT or CROSS COMPLAINT] DOES NOT AFFECT TITLE TO, OR THE RIGHT TO POSSESSION OF, SPECIFIC REAL PROPERTY OR THE USE OF AN EASEMENT IDENTIFIED IN THE _____ [COMPLAINT or

CROSS COMPLAINT].

A. Expungement Is Proper if Pleading Does Not Contain Real Property Claim. The court must order that a notice of pendency of an action be expunged if the court finds that the pleading on which the notice is based does not affect title to, or right of possession of, specific real property or the use of an easement identified in the pleading (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.30, 405.31; see Westbrook v. Superior Court (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 703, 222 Cal. Rptr. 317).

B. Burden of Proof. The claimant has the burden of proving that the pleading on which the notice is based does contain a real property claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30).

[Optional] C. Complaint for Money Damages Does Not Relate to Real Property. A lis pendens must be expunged when the complaint seeks only money damages and does not allege a lien on real property even though real property is involved in the dispute (La Paglia v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 264 Cal. Rptr. 63 ; Wardley Development, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 391, 262 Cal. Rptr. 87 ; see Campbell v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 904, 918-919, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 68 ; Lewis v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 63 ; BGJ Associates v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 971-972, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693).

D. Attorney's Fees and Costs. When an order is made granting a motion to expunge a notice of pendency of an action, the order must direct that the prevailing party be awarded reasonable attorney's fees and costs, unless the court finds that the other party acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of attorney's fees and costs unjust (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for [Cross] Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens when the complaint or cross complaint does not affect either title to, or the right to possession of, specific real property, or the use of an easement that is identified in the pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.30, 405.31].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 145.25 may be used in an appropriatecase to oppose a motion for expungement supported by this memorandum.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion of the expungement of notices of lis pendens and forms of notices of motions to expunge these notices, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[d] Special Issues Relating to Status of Creditors' Suits

The cases supporting Optional Paragraph C of this form reflect the majority view under the former lis pendens statute [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 409 et seq., repealed as of January 1, 1993] regarding the status of creditors' suits as claims affecting real property. However, in a case decided under the current lis pendens law, the California Supreme Court refused to extend that line of decisions to a fraudulent conveyance cause of action [see Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 648-652, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395 ; Hunting World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 923] . Because it was not at issue in Kirkeby, the Supreme Court did not decide whether a claim that seeks to impose a constructive trust or equitable lien may be a basis for a lis pendens [Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 650 n.7, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395] . For additional coverage of these issues, see § 145.20[3][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expungement Is Proper if Pleading Does Not Contain Real Property Claim

The court may not order an undertaking as a condition to expungement if the court finds the pleading does not contain a real property claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.31].

The court of appeal in Westbrook v. Superior Court (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 703, 222 Cal. Rptr. 317 , upheld the expungement of a lis pendens in an action against a promissor on his alleged promise to leave all his real and personal property by will to the promissee. The court's affirmance was based on the ground that the action did not affect title to, or right of possession of, the real property in question (176 Cal. App. 3d 703, 710) . The court noted that a promisee may have a constructive trust imposed (and file a lis pendens) if (1) specific property is identified or identifiable as the subject of the promise to make the will and (2) the promisor has no right to consume that property for maintenance and support or otherwise dispose of it during his or her lifetime. However, this case involved only a general promise and would be binding, if at all, only with respect to property owned by the promisor at death (176 Cal. App. 3d 703, 711-715) .

[b] Complaint for Money Damages Does Not Relate to Real Property

As mentioned in § 145.20[2][d], the cases supporting Optional Paragraph C (discussed below) reflect the majority view under the former lis pendens statute [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 409 et seq.]. The issue in most of these cases was whether a lis pendens was appropriate when a creditor sought to impose an equitable lien or constructive trust on real property in order to recover on a debt, for example, by alleging that the real property was purchased with funds that the debtor fraudulently transferred to avoid paying the creditor. The question under the prior law was whether a notice of lis pendens could properly be filed in these creditors' suits because they affected "title to or right of possession of" real property [cf. Code Civ. Proc. § 405.4].

In La Paglia v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 264 Cal. Rptr. 63 , the complaint sought to impose a constructive trust on property allegedly purchased with misappropriated money. A lis pendens was recorded on the property. The trial court refused to expunge the lis pendens, and defendant sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ. It held that the complaint did not affect title to or possession of real property. The purpose of the constructive trust was merely to secure payment of a debt and therefore the action for a constructive trust did not affect title to the property (215 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 1329) .

In Wardley Development, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 391, 262 Cal. Rptr. 87 , a bank filed a creditor's suit against Wardley, who was allegedly the transferee of assets from Chuang, against whom the bank had a money judgment. The bank recorded a lis pendens on Wardley's real property. Wardley moved to expunge the lis pendens. The trial court refused to expunge, and Wardley sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ. It held that when the beneficial interest claimed in the real property was solely to secure a claim for money damages, the action did not affect title to the real property. The lien of the creditor's suit was not entitled to be perfected by recording a lis pendens. The purpose of a lis pendens is to give notice of the action, not to indirectly obtain lien priority that cannot be obtained directly (213 Cal. App. 3d 391, 394-399) .

A different result was reached in Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395 . The facts and procedural background of Kirkeby are discussed in § 145.25[3][b]. In Kirkeby, the Supreme Court held that a fraudulent conveyance claim affects title to or the right to possession of specific real property and therefore supports the recording of a lis pendens. The Court explained that a fraudulent conveyance claim requesting avoidance of a transfer or obligation pursuant to Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(1) may result in the voiding ofa transfer of title of specific real property. By definition, the voiding of a transfer of real property affects title to or possession of real property. Therefore, the Court concluded that a fraudulent conveyance action seeking avoidance of a transfer under Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(1) clearly "affects title to, or the right to possession of" real property and is a real property claim for the purposes of the lis pendens statutes (33 Cal. 4th 642, 648) . The Court expressly did not reach the question of whether a claim seeking to impose a constructive trust or equitable lien may be a basis for a lis pendens (33 Cal. 4th 642, 650 n.7).

The Court in Kirkeby held that the plaintiff adequately pled a fraudulent conveyance claim by alleging that the defendants transferred title of certain properties with the intent to defraud. The plaintiff asked the court to void the transfers of both properties to the extent necessary to satisfy the claims in her complaint. As such, her fraudulent conveyance claim, if successful, would affect title to specific real property. Accordingly, the Court held that the plaintiff's lis pendens was improperly expunged (33 Cal. 4th 642, 650-651) .

For points and authorities reflecting Kirkeby, and for further discussion, see § 145.25.

The Supreme Court in Kirkeby cited with approval Hunting World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 923 , which was the first case to consider a creditor's suit after the enactment of the current lis pendens law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 405 et seq.]. The facts and procedural background of Hunting World are discussed in § 145.25[3][b]. In Hunting World, the court of appeal held that a creditor's action to set aside as fraudulent a debtor's transfer of real property, brought under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act [Civ. Code § 3439 et seq.], is a "real property claim" within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 405.4 because it is a cause of action that would, if meritorious, affect title to real property (22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 72) . Further, the Hunting World court found that an extension of the majority line of cases under the former law (1) was not necessary because the current lis pendens law is designed to curb abuses of lis pendens, and (2) was not warranted because the clear wording of Code Civ. Proc. § 405.31 covers a claim to set aside a conveyance of real property (22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 73) . The court acknowledged, however, that most of those cases involved constructive trust or equitable lien causes of action that were appended to lawsuits that centered on money damages; thus, those courts could conclude that the actions primarily sought money damages and did not affect title to real property. By contrast, the uniform fraudulent transfer action covered by the lis pendens in Hunting World affected only title to real property (22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 73-74) .

For points and authorities reflecting Hunting World, and for further discussion, see § 145.25.

After the decision in Hunting World, the court of appeal in Lewis v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 63 , addressed the effect of the revisions to the lis pendens law on the use of lis pendens in constructive trust cases. In that case, purchasers of real property sought expungement of a federal lis pendens filed in an action alleging that the seller of the property had originally purchased the property with misappropriated funds. The trial court denied plaintiffs' motion for summary judgment and for expungement of the lis pendens.

The court of appeal granted plaintiffs petition for a peremptory writ. It held that the lis pendens was a nullity, because all of the claims supporting it involved alleged fraud and conversion and attempts to assert a constructive trust, not disputes over title (30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 1861-1862) . The fact that one of the claims was labelled "fraudulent conveyance" was irrelevant, because there was no allegation of a conveyance of real property. The complaint alleged that the original owner of the property used misappropriated money to purchase not to convey the property (30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 1864-1865) .

The court found that the revisions to the lis pendens statute did not overrule the majority line of cases precluding the use of lis pendens in constructive trust cases (30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 1863-1864) . Further, it found no reason to believe that the Legislature intended to change the scope of the term "real property claim." It concluded that in light of a State Bar Report, which stated that the term "neither includes nor excludes claims of constructive trust or equitable lien" and which suggested that the area should be left for further judicial development, the fact the Legislature made no definitional change in the statute created a strong presumption that it was satisfied with the restrictive interpretation applied by the majority line of decisions (30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 1863-1864) .

In BGJ Associates v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 , the complaint had some causes of action that would support the imposition of a constructive trust based on a breach of fiduciary duty in the acquisition of property. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants, in breach of their fiduciary duties, wrongfully acquired certain properties for themselves, to the exclusion of plaintiffs. Plaintiffs asserted multiple causes of action, sought imposition of a constructive trust, and recorded a lis pendens. The trial court expunged the lis pendens notice on the ground that plaintiffs' pleading did not contain a real property claim within the meaning of the lis pendens statute. Plaintiffs petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its expungement of the lis pendens notice.

The court of appeal held that the trial court properly expunged the lis pendens. For purposes of the lis pendens statute, this action, against partners and a third party, for usurping to themselves the partnership's opportunity to purchase the disputed property, should be interpreted as primarily for money damages even though it included a request to impose a constructive trust on the property. The lis pendens was not available in what was essentially a fraud action seeking moneydamages with additional allegations urged to support the equitable remedies of a constructive trust (75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 971-972) .

In reaching this result, the court distinguished the line of cases that includes La Paglia and Lewis. It found the case at issue was unlike any of those cases because they all involved situations in which the action was essentially for money (75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 968) , while here plaintiffs did not seek a constructive trust remedy "solely" as "collateral" for money damages. In part the plaintiffs sought to be awarded title to the same specific real property, the property they bargained for, which was the subject of the same wrongful conduct giving rise to the constructive trust remedy in the first place. However, the complaint had 11 causes of action. Only the tenth and eleventh causes of action focused narrowly on imposition of a constructive trust. The other causes of action sought compensatory and punitive damages on fraud and tort theories, or a combination of compensatory and punitive damages with imposition of a constructive trust. The plaintiffs argued that at this pleading stage they were not required to elect between inconsistent remedies, but the court found it was apparent that, depending on market conditions, circumstances affecting the particular parcel of property, or other tactical considerations, plaintiffs could ultimately decide, if they prevailed, that they preferred to be compensated by money damages rather than transfer of title to the property. The question presented was whether plaintiffs were entitled to maintain a lis pendens on the property in the meantime. The court concluded that in the particular circumstances of this case they could not (75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 971) .

The court of appeal in Campbell v. Superior Court (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 904, 34 Cal. Rptr. 3d 68 followed the majority line of cases in holding that claims seeking imposition of a constructive trust and equitable lien did not support the recording of a lis pendens. In Campbell, the plaintiff, as trustee of a trust established by his now-deceased father, filed a complaint alleging that the defendant exercised undue influence against the father in persuading him to expend approximately $200,000 in trust funds to pay for the remodeling of the defendant's house. The plaintiff requested the imposition of a constructive trust and an equitable lien on the defendant's house and recorded a lis pendens on the house. In affirming the expungement of the lis pendens, the court of appeal agreed with the cases holding that to allow a party to record a lis pendens where the party seeks only "to freeze the real property as a res from which to satisfy a money judgment" is not consistent with the history and purpose of the lis pendens statutes (132 Cal. App. 4th 904, 918-919) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Expungement Is Proper if Pleading Does Not Contain Real Property Claim

The facts and procedural background of Kendall-Brief Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 131 Cal. Rptr. 515 , are discussed in § 145.25[3][c]. The court of appeal denied a petition for a writ of mandate commanding the superior court to expunge the lis pendens. Among other issues, the court considered the contention of real parties in interest that, because former Code Civ. Proc. § 409 permitted the recordation of a lis pendens in an action concerning real property or affecting the title or the right of possession of real property, while former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.1(a) permitted a lis pendens to be expunged only if the action does not affect title to or right of possession of the real property, the two sections should be interpreted together so that a lis pendens may not be expunged when the litigation concerns real property. The court rejected this contention based on the general rule of statutory construction that the statutes should be construed together if they harmonize and achieve a uniform and consistent legislative purpose. Because former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.1 was enacted nine years after the inclusion of the word "concerning" in former Code Civ. Proc. § 409 and the Legislature if it had wanted to use that word could have done so, the court stated that the clear implication was that the phrase "concerning real property" should be construed as having the same meaning as the words "affecting the title or the right of possession of real property" (60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 466-467) . Note that currently applicable Code Civ. Proc. § 405.4 continues the use of the term "affect."

[b] Complaint for Money Damages Does Not Relate to Real Property

In BGJ Assocs. v. Superior Court (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 693 , the plaintiffs alleged that they formed a joint venture with one of the defendants to buy certain real properties, but that defendant and others wrongfully acquired the properties for themselves. Plaintiffs' complaint asserted 11 causes of action. All but two sought compensatory and punitive damages on fraud and tort theories, or a combination of compensatory and punitive damages with imposition of a constructive trust. Two causes of action focused narrowly on imposition of a constructive trust and sought orders compelling defendants to convey to plaintiffs an interest in and possession of a described portion of the properties. The court of appeal upheld the trial court's expungement of the lis pendens notice even though the plaintiffs might have been entitled to imposition of a constructive trust requiring the defendants to convey to plaintiffs the share of the legal title plaintiffs would have acquired had the defendants not breached their duties toward plaintiffs (75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 971) . The court concluded that when a pleading combinestheories of liability for monetary damages and for a constructive trust, plaintiffs should not be able to maintain a lis pendens. The court reasoned that the danger is too great that a lis pendens, which effectively renders the property unmarketable, would have the coercive effects condemned by Lewis v. Superior Court (1994) 30 Cal. App. 4th 1850, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 63 (discussed in § 145.20[3][b]) and earlier decisions (75 Cal. App. 4th 952, 972) .

In Urez Corp. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1141, 235 Cal. Rptr. 837 , the complaint was based on fraud in connection with the purchase of real property by one joint venturer at a foreclosure sale. The complaint sought a constructive trust. The court stated that an action for money damages alone will not support a lis pendens. The court found that allegations of equitable remedies, even if colorable, will not support a lis pendens if the allegations ultimately are a collateral means to collect money damages. The court held that plaintiff's claims of an interest in the property were only for the purpose of securing a claim for monetary damages (190 Cal. App. 3d 1141, 1145-1149) .

In Deane v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 292, 210 Cal. Rptr. 406 , plaintiff alleged that it was owed money for a real estate commission and sought a constructive trust and damages. Plaintiff recorded a lis pendens, and defendant moved to expunge it on the ground that the action did not affect title to real property. The trial court refused to expunge on that ground, and defendant sought a writ of mandate. The court of appeal granted the writ and ordered the lis pendens expunged without a bond. It held that the complaint was basically for money owed, that such a cause of action did not support a constructive trust, and thus the action did not affect title to real property. Therefore, the lis pendens was not proper (164 Cal. App. 3d 292, 296-297) .

In North Coast Business Park v. Superior Court (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 858, 205 Cal. Rptr. 81 , plaintiffs were three limited partners who sued the limited partnership to impose a constructive trust on real property transferred by the partnership. Plaintiffs recorded a lis pendens, and defendants moved to have it expunged on the grounds that the action did not affect title to or possession of property. After the trial court denied the motion, defendants sought a writ of mandate. The court of appeal issued the mandate and directed that the lis pendens be expunged. It held that the limited partner's interest was in the partnership and not in the land and thus that the limited partners did not have an interest in the land and the action did not affect title to or possession of real property (158 Cal. App. 3d 858, 860) .

In Burger v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1013, 199 Cal. Rptr. 227 , plaintiff recorded a lis pendens in an action for a constructive trust against real property. The complaint alleged that the property had been improved with funds that were to have been used for another purpose. A motion to expunge was denied and plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate. The court of appeal issued the writ and ruled that the lis pendens should have been expunged. It held that the constructive trust action did not affect title to or possession of real property. The action was essentially one seeking money damages (151 Cal. App. 3d 1013, 1018-1019) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.21

§ 145.21 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Claim on Which Notice of Lis Pendens Is Based Lacks Probable Validity [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 145.20.]

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE CLAIM ON WHICH THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS IS BASED LACKS PROBABLE VALIDITY.

A. Expungement Proper if Claimant Has Not Established Probable Validity of Real Property Claim. The court must order that a notice of pendency of an action be expunged if the court finds that the claimant has not established by a preponderance of the evidence the probable validity of the real property claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32; Mix v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 989, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 826).

B. Burden of Proof. The claimant has the burden of proving the probable validity of the real property claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30).

C. Attorney's Fees and Costs. [See § 145.20[1], Paragraph D.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens when the claim on which notice of lis pendens is based lacks probable validity [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationshipbetween the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 145.21 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for expungement supported by the foregoing memorandum.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a discussion of the expungement of notices of lis pendens and forms of notices of motions to expunge such notices, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Expunge Lis Pendens Notice

Probable validity means that it is more likely than not that the claimant will obtain a judgment on the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.3]. This appears to be the same statutory standard that applies to applications for right to attach orders and the issuance of writs of attachment under Code Civ. Proc. § 484.050 [see Ch. 23, Attachment].

The court may not order an undertaking as a condition of expungement if the court finds the claimant has not established the probable validity of the real property claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32].

In Mix v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 826 , the trial court rejected a motion to expunge a notice of pending litigation brought by the winners at trial, the owners of the property in question, on the ground a substantial issue existed for appeal. The court of appeal granted the owners' petition for a writ of mandate and issued a writ directing the trial court to grant the expungement motion (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 998) . The court observed that in denying the motion to expunge, the trial court had applied the "substantial issue on appeal" test articulated in Peery v. Superior Court (1981) 29 Cal. 3d 837, 845, 176 Cal. Rptr. 533, 633 P.2d 198 for evaluating motions to expunge under former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.1. However, the court concluded that the Peery test is no longer good law in light of 1992 legislation repealing § 409.1 and enacting Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32 (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 994) . The court held that § 405.32 requires nothing less than that the trial court grant a motion for the expungement of a lis pendens pending appeal in the wake of the claimant's defeat in the trial court. It stated that there is only one exception inherent in the statutory language of "probable validity": If the trial judge himself or herself is willing to find, on the record, that the trial court's ruling will "probably" be overturned on appeal (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 994) .

If the opposing party sustains the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that the real property claim has probable validity, the court may not order expungement of the notice of pendency of action unless the court finds that adequate relief can be secured to the claimant by the giving of an undertaking. In that case, the court is required to order expungement conditioned on the giving of an undertaking [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33; see § 145.22]. Alternatively, on a motion by a person with an interest in the property, the court is permitted to require the claimant to give the moving party an undertaking as a condition of maintaining the notice of lis pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34; see § 145.24].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.22

§ 145.22 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Undertaking Will Secure Adequate Relief for Claimant [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 145.20.]

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE PROVISION OF AN UNDERTAKING WILL SECURE ADEQUATE RELIEF FOR _____ [PLAINTIFF or CROSS COMPLAINANT] WHO RECORDED THE LIS PENDENS.

A. Expungement by Giving Undertaking. If the court finds that the real property claim has probable validity, but adequate relief can be secured to the claimant by the giving of an undertaking, the court must order that the notice be expunged. The order shall be conditioned on the giving of an undertaking of such nature and in such amount as will indemnify the claimant for all damages proximately resulting from the expungement that the claimant may incur if the claimant prevails on the real property claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33).

[Optional] B. Bond Adequately Secures Relief. If a party is interested in real property only for its monetary value, expungement of the notice of pendency of action by posting a bond provides adequate security for the party who recorded the notice (Trapasso v. Superior Court (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 567-568, 140 Cal. Rptr. 820 ; Empfield v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 105, 108, 108 Cal. Rptr. 375).

[Optional] C. Amount of Bond in Court's Discretion. The court has discretion in fixing the amount of the bond to provide adequate security for the person who recorded the notice of pendency of action and does not have to fix the bond in the amount claimed by such person (Howden-Goetzl v. Superior Court (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 135, 139-140, 86 Cal. Rptr. 323).

D. Attorney's Fees. [See § 145.20[1], Paragraph D.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant or Cross Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens by posting a bond to secure adequate relief for the party who recorded the lis pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Attorney's Fees

A party who moves for and obtains expungement by posting a bond is not necessarily the prevailing party for the purposes of obtaining attorney's fees. If the party opposing the motion contends that the proffered bond is inadequate and succeeds in having the amount of the bond raised, neither party is the prevailing party and no attorney's fees should be awarded. Only if the court expunges the lis pendens and sets the bond in the amount proposed by the moving party is the moving party entitled to attorney's fees [Trapasso v. Superior Court (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 569-571, 140 Cal. Rptr. 820] .

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 145.27 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for expungement supported by this memorandum.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of motion to expunge a lis pendens by posting a bond, California Forms of Pleading and Practice, see Ch. 348, Lis Pendens , (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Bond Adequately Secures Relief

The presumption of Civ. Code § 3387 that real property is unique does not apply in determining whether an undertaking will secure adequate relief to the claimant, except in the case of real property improved with a single-family dwelling that the claimant intends to occupy [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33; see § 145.27].

In Trapasso v. Superior Court (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 140 Cal. Rptr. 820 , plaintiff's complaint alleged that he paid for but did not receive a one-third interest in an apartment. The complaint sought specific performance and partition by sale. Defendant moved to expunge the lis pendens by posting a bond, and the trial court ordered the expungement on posting a $50,000 bond. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to review the trial court's order.

The court of appeal found that expungement by posting a bond is proper prior to judgment (73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 567) . In response to plaintiff's contention that real property is unique and breach of a contract to convey cannot adequately be relieved by pecuniary compensation, the court held that if a party is interested in real property only for its monetary value, the expungement of a lis pendens by posting a bond is proper, relying on Empfield v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 105, 108 Cal. Rptr. 375 (discussed below). Plaintiff was seeking only monetary relief because he was seeking partition by sale, which would result in a monetary award (73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 567-568) . Finally, the court held that the award of attorney's fees to defendant was improper because defendant was not a prevailing party in that the court increased the amount of security tendered by defendant's motion (73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 569-570) . The writ was granted commanding that the attorney's fees award be vacated.

In Empfield v. Superior Court (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 105, 108 Cal. Rptr. 375 , plaintiff filed a complaint for foreclosure of a deed of trust securing the purchase price of property purchased by defendants from plaintiff. Defendants cross complained for rescission or reformation and recorded a lis pendens against property given plaintiff as the down payment, on which plaintiff had constructed two houses. Plaintiff moved to expunge the notice of lis pendens by posting a bond, which motion was denied, and then sought a writ of mandate to review the denial.

The court of appeal issued the writ, directing expungement on the posting of an adequate bond. It held that, despite the fact that real property is presumed to be unique [see Civ. Code § 3387 (breach of an agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately relieved by pecuniary compensation)], a bond was adequate to secure relief to cross defendants in this situation because cross defendants claimed the property only as a source of future income and support. Pecuniary relief would provide such income and support. Moreover, the court could not return the property to cross defendants in its original state because two houses had been built on it. Therefore, a bond could secure adequate relief for cross defendants and the trial court should not have denied the motion (33 Cal. App. 3d 105, 107-108) . The court of appeal also found that the lis pendens statute was constitutional (33 Cal. App. 3d 105, 108) .

[b] Amount of Bond in Court's Discretion

In Howden-Goetzl v. Superior Court (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 135, 86 Cal. Rptr. 323 , plaintiffs recorded a notice of a lis pendens on a hospital in a complicated dispute involving allegations of breach of fiduciary duty by corporate insiders. The trial resulted in judgment for defendants. Thereafter, the trial court ordered the lis pendens expunged on the posting of a $10,000 bond. Plaintiffs sought a writ of prohibition contending that the trial court abused its discretion in expunging the lis pendens.

The court of appeal denied the petition. It held that the trial court could expunge the lis pendens even after judgment (7 Cal. App. 3d 135, 138-139) . The court then considered the adequacy of the bond, and held that the statute gives the trial court discretion as to the amount of the bond and that the court does not have to order the bond in the amount of damages claimed by plaintiff. The court based its holding on the the language contained in former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.2 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33) and on the fact that the amount of the bond should not be set merely by plaintiffs' claims of alleged damages. The trial court has the discretion to examine the evidence presented by the parties and determine the proper amount for the bond (7 Cal. App. 3d 135, 139-140) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Amount of Bond in Court's Discretion

Trapasso v. Superior Court (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 140 Cal. Rptr. 820 , is discussed in § 145.22[3][a]. On the issue of the adequacy of the bond, the court of appeal found that the bond of $50,000 was sufficient to secure possible recovery of $33,000, which was the value of the alleged one-third interest based on defendant's testimony as to the value of the property. The court noted that plaintiff had testified as to a much higher value for the property but that such testimony only created a conflict in the evidence, which was for the trial court to resolve (73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 568) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.23

§ 145.23 Supporting Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Failure to File and Serve Notice [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.23]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 145.20.]

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or CROSS COMPLAINANT] FAILED TO FILE THE NOTICE AND SERVE IT ON _____ [DEFENDANT or CROSS DEFENDANT] AS REQUIRED BY STATUTE.

A. Lis Pendens Notice Void and Invalid. A notice of pendency of action is void and invalid as to any adverse party or owner of record if the notice is not served on the adverse party or owner and filed with the court and if a proper proof of service is not recorded with the notice (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.22, 405.23).

B. Expungement Appropriate Remedy. A motion for expungement is an appropriate remedy when the statutory requirements of filing and service have not been met (McKnight v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 291, 301-304, 215 Cal. Rptr. 909).

C. Attorney's Fees and Costs. [See § 145.20[1], Paragraph D.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant or Cross Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens for failure to serve and file the notice pursuant to statute [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.22, 405.23].

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should set forth facts that establish a failure to comply with the statutory filing and service requirements.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lis Pendens Notice Void and Invalid

Prior to recordation of the notice, the claimant must cause a copy of the notice to be mailed, by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to all known addresses of the parties to whom the real property claim is adverse and to all owners of record of the real property affected by the real property claim as shown by the latest county assessment roll. If there is no known address for service on an adverse party or owner, the claimant must record a declaration under penalty of perjury to that effect instead of the proof of service otherwise required. Serviceon that party or owner shall not be required. Immediately following recordation, a copy of the notice must also be filed with the court in which the action is pending. Service must also be made immediately and in the same manner on each adverse party later joined in the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.22].

A notice of pendency of action is void and invalid as to any adverse party or owner of record unless the above requirements are met for that party or owner and a proof of service in the form and content specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1013a has been recorded with the notice of pendency of action [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.23].

[b] Expungement Appropriate Remedy

In McKnight v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 291, 215 Cal. Rptr. 909 , the complaint alleged a fraudulent conveyance, and plaintiff recorded a lis pendens. Defendant moved to expunge the lis pendens, and the motion was granted. Plaintiff filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the writ. The court held that the expungement was proper because plaintiff had not served the notice of lis pendens on defendant or filed it with the court as required under former Code Civ. Proc. § 409(c) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 422). Thus, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 409(d), the lis pendens was void and invalid because the statutory requirements were not met (170 Cal. App. 3d 291, 303) .

The court held that expungement was an appropriate remedy for failure to serve and file notice. Expungement was historically the remedy for the recording of a lis pendens that did not affect title to real property. Expungement was then codified as the appropriate remedy in former Code Civ. Proc. § 409.1 if the action did not affect title to real property or was not commenced or prosecuted in good faith. Thus there was no indication in the statute that its bases were the only bases for expungement, and therefore expungement is the appropriate remedy for failure to serve and file. The court stated that expungement accomplished the purposes of establishing that the lis pendens was void and invalid and of clearing the owner's title from the cloud of the lis pendens. The court also held that in this situation the notice of lis pendens could be refiled after expungement in accordance with the statutory procedures (170 Cal. App. 3d 291, 301-303) .

Counsel should note that a technical defect in the service and filing requirements may not be enough to support a motion for expungement in all circumstances. For example, in Biddle v. Superior Court (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 135, 215 Cal. Rptr. 848 , a notice of lis pendens was recorded but was not served on defendants or filed with the court. Defendants successfully moved to expunge the notice on the ground that the service and filing requirements had not been met. However, the court of appeal, on plaintiff's petition, issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order, concluding that plaintiffs had substantially complied with the notice requirement in that they conveyed actual notice to the defendants. Moreover, defendants had waived the service defects by filing two prior motions to expunge and waiting for more than a year to assert the defects (170 Cal. App. 3d 135, 137-138) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.24

§ 145.24 Supporting Motion to Require Claimant to Give Undertaking as Condition of Maintaining Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORIT-
_____ [name],	)	IES SUPPORTING MOTION TO REQUIRE
Plaintiff [and Cross Defendant],	)	CLAIMANT TO POST UNDERTAKING AS CON-
vs.	)	DITION OF MAINTAINING LIS PENDENS AND
_____ [name],	)	FOR ATTORNEY'S FEES AND COSTS
Defendant [and Cross Complainant].	)	Date: _____
	)	Time: _____
	)	Dept.: _____
		Discovery Cut-Off: _____
		Motion Cut-Off: _____
		Trial Date: _____

_____

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S or INTERVENOR'S] MOTION TO REQUIRE CLAIMANT TO GIVE MOVING PARTY AN UNDERTAKING AS A CONDITION OF MAINTAINING THE LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE MOVING PARTY WILL SUFFER DAMAGES IN THE EVENT THAT CLAIMANT DOES NOT PREVAIL ON THE REAL PROPERTY CLAIM.

A. Undertaking as Condition of Maintaining Lis Pendens. On the motion of any person with an interest in the property, the court in which an action is pending may require the claimant to give the moving party an undertaking as a condition of maintaining the notice in the record title. The undertaking must be of such nature and in such amount as the court determines just. The court may permit evidence to be received in the form of oral testimony and may make any orders it deems just to provide for discovery by any affected party [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34].

B. Attorney's Fees and Costs. When an order is made granting a motion to require claimant to post an undertaking, the order must direct that the prevailing party be awarded reasonable attorney's fees and costs, unless the court finds that the other party acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of attorney's fees and costs unjust (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant or Cross Defendant
_____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion to require the claimant to post an undertaking, usually in the form of a bond, as a condition of maintaining the notice in the record title [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of motion to require the claimant to give the moving party an undertaking, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Undertaking as Condition of Maintaining Lis Pendens

If the moving party is not a party to the action, he or she must obtain leave of court to intervene at or before presenting the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34].

If the court grants the motion requiring the claimant to provide an undertaking, it must set a return date for the claimant to show compliance. If the claimant fails to show compliance on the return date, the court must order the lis pendens expunged without further notice or hearing [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesBondsGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesCosts & Attorney FeesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensNotices

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.25

§ 145.25 Opposing Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Action Affects Title to, or Right to Possession of, Specific Real Property or Use of Easement Identified in Pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.31]

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM OPPOSING MOTION TO EX-
_____ [name],	)	PUNGE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS AND FOR Plaintiff [and Cross Defendant],	)	ATTORNEY'S FEES AND COSTS
vs.	)	Date: _____
_____ [name],	)	Time: _____
Defendant [and Cross Complainant].	)	Dept.: _____
	)	Discovery Cut-Off: _____
	)	Motion Cut-Off: _____
		Trial Date: _____

_____

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE _____ [COMPLAINT or CROSS COMPLAINT] AFFECTS THE TITLE TO, OR RIGHT OF POSSESSION OF, SPECIFIC REAL PROPERTY OR USE OF AN EASEMENT IDENTIFIED IN THE PLEADING.

A. When Notice of Lis Pendens May Be Recorded. A _____ [plaintiff or cross complainant] may file a notice of the pendency of an action when the action affects the title to, or right to possession of, specific real property or use of an easement described in the pleading (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.20).

[Optional] B. Leasehold Affects Right of Possession of Real Property. A lis pendens is proper in an action involving a leasehold interest in real property because a leasehold is an estate in real property and therefore affects the right of possession of real property (Parker v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 397, 400, 88 Cal. Rptr. 352).

[Optional] C. Fraudulent Conveyance Action Constitutes Real Property Claim. A creditor's action to set aside as fraudulent a debtor's transfer of real property, brought under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act [Civ. Code § 3439 et seq.], is a "real property claim" within the meaning of Code of Civil Procedure Section 405.4 (Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 649, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395 ; Hunting World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 72, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 923).

[Optional] D. Right of Possession Includes Right of Access and Occupation. For purposes of the lis pendens statute, the right of possession of land encompasses more than mere ownership of the property in question; it includes the right to have access to and to occupy the property (Kendall-Brief Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 468, 131 Cal. Rptr. 515).

[Optional] E. Lis Pendens May be Recorded Against Dominant Tenement in Easement Dispute. An easement dispute affects the title or right of possession of the dominant tenement, and therefore a lis pendens may be recorded on the dominant tenement (Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 812, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 218).

F. Attorney's Fees and Costs. When an order is made denying a motion to expunge a notice of pendency of an action, the order must direct that the prevailing party be awarded reasonable attorney's fees and costs, unless the court finds that the other party acted with substantial justification or that other circumstances make the imposition of attorney's fees and costs unjust (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff or Cross Complaintant
_____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens when the complaint or cross complaint underlying the notice affects the title to, or right to possession of, specific real property or the use of an easement described in the pleading [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4, 405.32].

One or more of the optional paragraphs of this form should be used if the complaint or cross complaint involves (1) a leasehold interest (Optional Paragraph B), (2) a fraudulent conveyance (Optional Paragraph C), or (3) a right of access and occupation (Optional Paragraph D).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

This form may be used in opposition to the points set forth in § 145.20.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms of notices of motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[c] Special Issues Relating to Status of Creditors' Suits

The law is unsettled regarding the status of creditors' suits as real property claims. The California Supreme Court has held that a creditor's action to set aside as fraudulent a debtor's transfer of real property, brought under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act [Civ. Code § 3439 et seq.], is a "real property claim" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 405.4 because it is a cause of action that would, if meritorious, affect title to real property [Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 649, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395 ; see Hunting World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 72, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 923 ; see also Optional Paragraph C of this form]. However, under the prior lis pendens statute [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 409 et seq., repealed January 1, 1993], the majority view held that creditors' suits seeking to impose an equitable lien or constructive trust on real property did not affect title to real property for the purpose of recording a notice of lis pendens [see, e.g., La Paglia v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 1327-1329, 264 Cal. Rptr. 63] . In Kirkeby, the Supreme Court expressly did not reach the question of whether a claim seeking to impose a constructive trust or equitable lien may be a basis for a lis pendens [Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 650 n.7, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395] . For memoranda reflecting the majority view under the former statute, see § 145.20. For further coverage of these issues, see § 145.25[3][b].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Leasehold Affects Right of Possession of Real Property

Parker v. Superior Court (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 397, 88 Cal. Rptr. 352 , presented the question of whether a lis pendens may be properly recorded on a leasehold interest for years on real property. After a lis pendens was recorded on such an interest, the affected property was sold and the purchaser filed a motion in the superior court to expunge the lis pendens. The court denied the motion, and the plaintiff sought a writ of mandamus directing the trial court to order the expungement.

The court of appeal denied the petition. It observed that while a leasehold is not "real property" or "real estate," it nevertheless is an estate in real property. The court noted that the lis pendens statute then in effect provided for a lis pendens in "an action concerning real property or affecting the title or the right of possession of real property" (emphasis added) [see former Code Civ. Proc. § 409; now see Code Civ. Proc. § 405.4]. Because a leasehold is an estate in real property, the leasehold at issue came within the broad language of the statute. According to the court, to hold that a leasehold estate does not affect the right of possession of real property would be unreasonable (9 Cal. App. 3d 397, 400) .

[b] Fraudulent Conveyance Action Constitutes Real Property Claim

In Kirkeby v. Superior Court (2004) 33 Cal. 4th 642, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 805, 93 P.3d 395 , the plaintiff started a business with her brother and his wife (defendants). Plaintiff alleged that after she resigned from the company board of directors, defendants began looting the corporation through fraud and self-dealing. Plaintiff filed a lawsuit against defendants alleging numerous causes of action including a cause of action for fraudulent conveyance, and seeking declaratory and injunctive relief as well as damages. In her fraudulent conveyance cause of action, plaintiff alleged that her brother obtained a $50,000 loan from the business by representing that he would use the borrowed funds to construct a building to house the business operations. However, plaintiff alleged that defendants used the loan to purchase residential income property and immediately transferred their interest in the property to a family limited partnership. Plaintiff also alleged that her brother transferred his interest in his family's residence to a family trust and that defendants, as trustees of that trust, subsequently transferred the trust's interest in the residence to the family partnership. Plaintiff alleged that defendants made both of the transfers to defraud creditors, and requested that the transfers be voided to the extent necessary to satisfy the claims set forth in her complaint. These transfers formed the bases of plaintiff's fraudulent conveyance claim. Plaintiff recorded a notice of lis pendens on the two properties in question. The trial court granted defendants' motion to expunge the lis pendens on the ground the complaint primarily sought money damages. The court of appeal denied plaintiff's petition for a writ. The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal judgment and remanded the action.

The Supreme Court stated that in determining whether the pleading on which the notice is based does not contain a real property claim, the trial court must engage in a demurrer-like analysis. Thus, the court may not look through the pleadings to ascertain the purpose of the party seeking to maintain notice of lis pendens, but may only determine whether a real property claim has been properly pled by the claimant (33 Cal. 4th 642, 647-648) .

The Court explained that a fraudulent conveyance claim requesting avoidance of a transfer or obligation pursuant to Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(1) may result in the voiding of a transfer of title of specific real property. By definition, the voiding of a transfer of real property will affect title to or possession of real property. Therefore, the Court concluded that a fraudulent conveyance action seeking avoidance of a transfer under Civ. Code § 3439.07(a)(1) clearly "affects title to, or the right to possession of" real property and is a real property claim for thepurposes of the lis pendens statutes (33 Cal. 4th 642, 648-649) . The Court held that the plaintiff in Kirkeby adequately pled a fraudulent conveyance claim by alleging that the defendants transferred title of the subject properties with the intent to defraud. Plaintiff also asked the court to void the transfers of both properties to the extent necessary to satisfy the claims in her complaint. As such, her fraudulent conveyance claim, if successful, would affect title to specific real property. Accordingly, the Court held that the plaintiff's lis pendens was improperly expunged (33 Cal. 4th 642, 649-651) .

The Supreme Court in Kirkeby cited with approval Hunting World, Inc. v. Superior Court (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 923 , in which the plaintiff creditor filed a federal action against Charles W. Bogar claiming trademark infringement and counterfeiting of plaintiff's merchandise. Shortly thereafter, Bogar quitclaimed to his wife his interest in their residence. Several months later, plaintiff filed a complaint in superior court against the Bogars to set aside as fraudulent the above conveyance, and recorded a notice of pendency of that action. The Bogars moved to expunge the notice of lis pendens. The court granted the motion, and plaintiff filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal found that the trial court erred, and issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order expunging the lis pendens. The court found that a creditor's action to set aside as fraudulent a transfer of real property, brought under the Uniform Fraudulent Transfer Act [Civ. Code § 3439 et seq.], is a "real property claim" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc Section 405.4 because it is a cause of action that would, if meritorious, affect title to real property (22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 72) .

The court of appeal noted that, under the prior lis pendens law, the courts of appeal were in conflict on the issue whether a lis pendens was appropriate when a creditor sought to impose an equitable lien or constructive trust on real property in order to recover on a debt, for example, by alleging that the real property was purchased with funds that the debtor fraudulently transferred to avoid paying the creditor. The minority view held that creditors' suits did affect title to real property for the purpose of recording a notice of lis pendens [see Okuda v. Superior Court (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 135, 138-141, 192 Cal. Rptr. 388 ; Coppinger v. Superior Court (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 883, 890-891, 185 Cal. Rptr. 24 (both of these cases are discussed in § 145.25[4] [a])]. The majority view favored a restrictive application of the law because of the potential for abuse by creditors to use the notice of lis pendens to obtain an unfair advantage in the prosecution of their cases. These courts held that creditor suits did not affect title to real property for the purpose of recording a notice of lis pendens, reasoning that the creditors did not have a claim to a present interest in the real property, but were simply pursuing claims for an equitable lien or constructive trust on the real property as a means of securing recovery on a debt unrelated to the real property [see La Paglia v. Superior Court (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 1322, 1327-1329, 264 Cal. Rptr. 63 ; Wardley Development, Inc. v. Superior Court (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 391, 393, 394 n.3, 394-398, 262 Cal. Rptr. 87 ; Elder v. Carlisle Ins. Co. (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1313, 1320 n.8, 238 Cal. Rptr. 897 ; Urez Corp. v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1141, 1147-1149, 235 Cal. Rptr. 837 ; Burger v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 1013, 1017-1019, 199 Cal. Rptr. 227] .

The court of appeal found that an extension of this majority line of cases to a uniform fraudulent transfer action was not necessary because the current lis pendens law is designed to curb abuses of lis pendens. It provides for expungement if the claimant cannot show by a preponderance of the evidence that the action is probably valid. Further, the court may protect the property owner by expungement if adequate relief for the claimant may be secured by a bond or by requiring a bond as a condition of the lis pendens (22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 73) . The court also found that an extension of the majority line of cases was unwarranted because the clear wording of Code Civ. Proc. § 405.31 covers a claim to set aside a conveyance of real property. According to the court, in most of those cases, constructive trust or equitable lien causes of action were appended to lawsuits that centered on money damages; thus, those courts could conclude that the actions primarily sought money damages and did not affect title to real property. By contrast, the uniform fraudulent transfer action covered by the lis pendens in the present case affected only title to real property (22 Cal. App. 4th 67, 73-74) .

[c] Right of Possession Includes Right of Access and Occupation

In Kendall-Brief Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 131 Cal. Rptr. 515 , petitioner was an owner and developer of lots in Tract 6349 of a planned development known as Lake Forest. He contended that a private road in an adjoining tract, Tract 6353, could be used for ingress and egress by other owners of lots on Tract 6349, based on the fact that there was an easement over the private streets in Tract 6353 that was appurtenant to Tract 6349. In response to this claim of easement, real parties in interest filed an action to enjoin trespass, quiet title, enjoin violation of restrictive covenants, abate nuisance, and for violation of the California Environmental Quality Control Act in an attempt to restrain the owners of lots in Tract 6349 from using the private road. In conjunction with the filing of the action, a notice of pendency of action was recorded describing the road and Tract 6349. The superior court denied petitioner's motion to expunge the lis pendens regarding Tract 6349. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate commanding the superior court to expunge the lis pendens.

The court of appeal denied the petition. After examining whether a lis pendens may be expunged if the action affects real property [see § 145.20[4][a]], the court examined the phrase "right of possession." In the court's view, "right of possession" encompassed more than mere ownership of a lot in a land-locked subdivision: it included the right to have access to and to occupy such property (60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 467-468) . Note that currently applicable Code Civ. Proc. § 405.4 now specifically includes the use of an easement in real property as part of its definition of a "real property claim."

[d] Lis Pendens May be Recorded Against Dominant Tenement in Easement Dispute

In Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 103 Cal. Rptr. 3d 218 , the defendants were attorneys who, in the course of representing a real property owner in a prior lawsuit involving an easement dispute, filed a lis pendens on the dominant tenement. The owners of the dominant tenement sued the attorneys, claiming the lis pendens was wrongfully recorded. The attorneys appealed from the denial of their anti SLAPP [Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16] motion. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order denying the anti-SLAPP motion, holding that it is proper to record a notice of pendency of action on a dominant tenement when the litigation is an easement dispute (180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 812) . The dominant tenement's title is affected as the easement carries with it the right to use the servient tenement (180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 811) . In addition, the 1992 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.4 and 405.20 were intended to include within the definition of a "real property claim" a lis pendens recorded on either the dominant or servient tenements in an easement dispute, i.e., the use of an easement upon or appurtenant to the property affected by the action (180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 812) . Because a lis pendens affects the use of an easement upon or appurtenant to the property affected by the action, as a matter of law, the attorneys were entitled to file the lis pendens on the dominant tenement because they were asserting a real property claim. The court rejected the argument that the definition of "real property claim" should be limited to permit (1) the recording of a lis pendens on the servient tenement or (2) the recording of a lis pendens on the dominant tenement only when the dispute involves a landlocked piece of property, as was the case in Kendall Brief Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 462, 131 Cal. Rptr. 515 [see [c], above] (180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 810). Even though the court could not correct the trial court's expungement order, which occurred in the prior litigation involving the easement, it could not be used by the owner of the dominant tenement to establish that there was a probability it would prevail on its claims against the attorneys for intentional interference with prospective economic advantage and slander of title (180 Cal. App. 4th 795, 812).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fraudulent Conveyance Action Constitutes Real Property Claim

In Coppinger v. Superior Court (1982) 134 Cal. App. 3d 883, 185 Cal. Rptr. 24 , plaintiff filed an action for a constructive trust on real property and recorded a lis pendens. The complaint alleged that a constructive trust was proper because the real property had been purchased with the proceeds of a sale to plaintiff that was fraudulently induced. Defendants moved to expunge the lis pendens, but the motion was denied. On appeal, defendants contended that a constructive trust was not an action affecting title to, or possession of, real property and so the lis pendens was not proper. The court held that an action to impose a constructive trust on real property does affect title to, or right to possession of, the property (134 Cal. App. 3d 883, 890-891) . The court then held that the denial of expungement was improper on other grounds.

In Okuda v. Superior Court (1983) 144 Cal. App. 3d 135, 192 Cal. Rptr. 388 , plaintiff brought an action for statutory relief as a good-faith improver of land [see Code Civ. Proc. § 871.1 et seq.] and filed a lis pendens. Defendants moved to expunge the lis pendens on grounds that the action did not affect title to or possession of real property. The trial court granted the motion, and the plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate. The court of appeal issued the writ and directed the trial court to vacate the order of expungement. It held that the action did affect title to, or right to possession of, real property because the court is authorized to fashion an equitable remedy that could affect title or possession (144 Cal. App. 3d 135, 139-141) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesCosts & Attorney FeesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminationsReal Property LawPriorities & RecordingLis Pendens

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.26

§ 145.26 Opposing Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Claim on Which Notice of Lis Pendens Is Based Has Probable Validity [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.3, 405.32]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 145.25.]

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE REAL PROPERTY CLAIM ON WHICH THE NOTICE IS BASED HAS PROBABLE VALIDITY.

A. Real Property Claim Has Probable Validity. The lis pendens should not be expunged when the party filing the notice shows by a preponderance of the evidence that the real property claim on which the notice is based has probable validity (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.3, 405.32).

B. Attorney's Fees and Costs. [See § 145.25[1], Paragraph D.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff or Cross Complaintant
_____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens when the real property claim on which the notice is based has probable validity [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 405.3, 405.32].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

This form may be used in opposition to the points set forth in § 145.21.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms of notices of motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Real Property Claim Has Probable Validity

Probable validity means that it is more likely than not that the claimant will obtain a judgment on the claim [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.3]. This appears to be the same statutory standard that applies to applications for right-to-attach orders and the issuance of writs of attachment under Code Civ. Proc. § 484.050 [see Ch. 23, Attachment].

If the opposing party sustains the burden of establishing by a preponderance of the evidence that a real property claim has probable validity, the court may not order expungement of the notice of pendency of action unless the court finds thatadequate relief can be secured to the claimant by the giving of an undertaking. In that case, the court is required to order expungement conditioned on the giving of the undertaking [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33; see § 145.27]. Alternatively, on a motion by a person with an interest in the property, the court may require the claimant to give the moving party an undertaking as a condition of maintaining the notice of lis pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.34; see § 145.24].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.27

§ 145.27 Opposing Motion to Expunge Notice of Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.30] and for Attorney's Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38]--Undertaking Will Not Secure Adequate Relief for Claimant [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 145.25.]

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] MOTION TO EXPUNGE THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE PROVIDING AN UNDERTAKING WILL NOT SECURE ADEQUATE RELIEF FOR _____ [PLAINTIFF or CROSS COMPLAINANT], WHO RECORDED THE LIS PENDENS.

A. Undertaking Cannot Adequately Secure Relief. A notice of pendency of action may not be expunged by the giving of an undertaking unless the court finds that adequate relief to the party who recorded the notice can be secured by the undertaking (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33).

[Optional] B. Undertaking Insufficient in Action for Specific Performance Involving Single-Family Dwelling That Claimant Intends to Occupy. For purposes of determining whether the giving of an undertaking will secure adequate relief to the claimant, the presumption of Civil Code Section 3387 that real property is unique applies only in the case of real property improved with a single-family dwelling that the claimant intends to occupy. If the presumption applies, an award of damages is not adequate relief for a breach of a contract to convey real property, and thus an undertaking cannot provide adequate security (Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33).

C. Attorney's Fees and Costs. [See § 145.25[1], Paragraph D.]

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff or Cross Complaintant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens when an undertaking will not adequately secure relief to the party who recorded the lis pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.33].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

This form may be used in opposition to the points and authorities set forth in § 145.22.

[b] Attorney's Fees

A party who moves for and obtains expungement by posting a bond is not necessarily the prevailing party for the purposes of obtaining attorney's fees. If the party opposing the motion contends that the proffered bond is inadequate and succeeds in having the amount of the bond raised, neither party is the prevailing party and no attorney's fees should be awarded. Only when the court expunges the lis pendens and sets the bond in the amount proposed by the moving party is the moving party entitled to attorney's fees [Trapasso v. Superior Court (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 561, 569-571, 140 Cal. Rptr. 820] .

[3] Additional Authorities

[a] Undertaking Cannot Adequately Secure Relief

In Stewart Development Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 266, 166 Cal. Rptr. 450 , the court of appeal noted that in considering whether a bond secures adequate relief, the trial court may consider the likelihood that the party who recorded the lis pendens will prevail on the merits. It held, however, that if it appears that there will be a close contest on the merits, the trial court should not conduct a minitrial of the merits as a means of determining whether the bond will provide adequate security (108 Cal. App. 3d 266, 275) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesCosts & Attorney FeesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.28

§ 145.28 Supporting Contention That Notice of Lis Pendens Does Not Protect Interest Not Alleged in Underlying Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] IS ESTOPPED FROM CONTENDING THAT THE LIS PENDENS THAT HE/SHE/IT FILED PROTECTS AN INTEREST IN PROPERTY BECAUSE THE PLEADINGS IN THE ACTION UNDERLYING THE LIS PENDENS DID NOT PUT THE _____ [DEFENDANT or PLAINTIFF] ON NOTICE THAT _____ [OWNERSHIP or POSSESSION] OF THIS PARTICULAR INTEREST WAS IN ISSUE.

Interest in Real Property Not Protected if Pleadings Do Not Indicate Nature and Extent of Relief Sought. Filing a lis pendens does not protect the interest of a party in real property when the pleadings in the action forming the basis of the lis pendens do not indicate the nature and extent of relief sought so as to put the opposing party on notice that the pending action may have the effect of changing the ownership of the property and thus affect the interests of the opposing party (see Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 375, 379, 295 P.2d 405 ; Head v. Crawford (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 11, 16, 202 Cal. Rptr. 534).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a lis pendens did not effectively protect a party's interest in real property because the lis pendens did not adequately put the moving party on notice that the interest was in issue. For example, the form may be used in a summary judgment motion in which the moving party is attempting to assert a lien on real property obtained after the filing of the lis pendens and the opposing party is attempting to rely on the lis pendens to protect an interest granted in the action underlying the lis pendens.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general discussion and additional forms relating to lis pendens, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Interest in Real Property Not Protected if Pleadings Do Not Indicate Nature and Extent of Relief Sought

In Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 375, 295 P.2d 405 , the Supreme Court noted that, as a general rule, anyone with actual notice of the pendency of an action who acquires an interest in property takes the property subject to any judgment that may be rendered in the action. The sole purpose of recording a notice of lis pendens is to secure this same result by giving constructive notice of the pendency of the proceeding. The lis pendens is incidental to the action on which it is based and serves to give constructive notice of that which is contained in the pleadings by, in effect, republishing the pleadings (46 Cal. 2d 375, 379) .

In Head v. Crawford (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 11, 202 Cal. Rptr. 534 , a wife filed a lis pendens in a dissolution action. In her petition for dissolution, she alleged that the real property in issue was community property. Before this action, the husband had encumbered the property. After the wife had filed the lis pendens, and after the court in the dissolution action had awarded her all of the property as her separate property, the holder of the husband's debt attempted to enforce a lien on the property. The court of appeal stated that the wife could have protected all of the interest she was awarded in the property if she had given constructive notice of a claim to all of the property in her pleadings. By filing the lis pendens, the court noted, a party draws attention to the action and may obtain priority over a prior creditor of another with a record interest if the creditor either acts with constructive notice or fails to record a lien document until after the filing of the lis pendens. In this case, however, the wife had not alleged a separate property interest in the property. Rather, she had through her pleadings represented that she was entitled only to a one-half interest in the property, and was thus estopped from challenging the creditor who had relied on the representations made in her pleadings. Thus, the creditor was allowed to enforce the debt of the husband against one half of the property (156 Cal. App. 3d 11, 16) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensNotices

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.29

§ 145.29 Supporting Contention That Expungement of Lis Pendens Does Not Affect Judgment Lien

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [DEFENDANT or CROSS DEFENDANT] MAY NOT "EXPUNGE" AN ABSTRACT OF JUDGMENT AS A JUDGMENT LIEN CREATED BY A RECORDED ABSTRACT OF JUDGMENT BEARS LITTLE RESEMBLANCE TO A LIS PENDENS AND THERE IS NO STATUTORY PROCEDURE FOR EXPUNGING AN ABSTRACT OF JUDGMENT; EXPUNGING A LIS PENDENS DOES NOT EXTINGUISH A RECORDED ABSTRACT.

Expungement of Lis Pendens Does Not Affect Judgment Lien. A recorded order expunging a lis pendens does not extinguish or otherwise effect a previously recorded abstract of judgment (Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Charlton (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1069-1070, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 686).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of thecontention that an expungement of a lis pendens does not affect a judgment lien.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the argument that an order expunging a lis pendens does not extinguish a previously recorded abstract of judgment. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general discussion and additional forms relating to lis pendens, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Expungement of Lis Pendens Does Not Affect Judgment Lien

In Federal Deposit Ins. Corp. v. Charlton (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 686 , Coronado Bank obtained a judgment in Texas against Prata as administrator of a debtor's estate. The bank then entered the sister state judgment in California and recorded abstracts of judgment in Los Angeles County where Prata held real property for the estate. The property was distributed to Prata, and the bank filed an action to foreclose the lien created by the abstracts of judgment. In that action, the bank recorded a lis pendens, which was expunged. Prata then sold the property to the Charltons. The bank then added the Charltons to its foreclosure action. The Charltons moved for summary judgment contending that they were bona fide purchasers because the order expunging the lis pendens removed all clouds on the title, including the judgment liens. The trial court agreed and granted summary judgment. The Court of Appeal reversed.

The Court of Appeal found that a recorded abstract of judgment attaches to all interests owned by the judgment debtor in real property in the county and creates a judgment lien on the property. When the property encumbered by the abstract of judgment is transferred, the transferees are charged with constructive knowledge of the encumbrance and take title subject to the lien. On the other hand, a lis pendens is recorded by a person asserting a real property claim. A transfer after a lis pendens is recorded binds the transferee to a judgment rendered in the pending action but does not make the party who recorded the lis pendens a secured creditor. Conversely, the abstract of judgment is recorded after a judgment is rendered and makes the judgment creditor a secured creditor. There is no statutory procedure for expunging an abstract of judgment. Because of the different statutory schemes, there is no reason to believe that an order expunging a lis pendens extinguishes a previously recorded judgment lien (17 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1069-1070) .

The court distinguished Knapp Development & Design v. Pal-Mal Properties, Ltd. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 786, 240 Cal. Rptr. 920 , because it involved a mechanics' lien, which is a transitory lien that can be released by petition if it is not enforced (17 Cal. App. 4th 1066, 1070) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesJudgment LiensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensNotices

153 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 145 LIS PENDENS
PART II. FORMS

14-145 California Points & Authorities § 145.30

§ 145.30 Supporting Contention That Moving Party Is Entitled to Attorneys' Fees and Costs [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38] Despite Withdrawal of Lis Pendens

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	NO. _____
Plaintiff [and Cross Defendant],	MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES SUPPORTING MOTION FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES AND COSTS
vs.	[Limited Civil Case]
_____ [name],	Date: _____
Defendant [and Cross Complainant].	Time: _____
	Location: _____
	Judge: _____
	Discovery Cut-Off: _____
	Motion Cut-Off: _____
	Date Action Filed: _____
	[Trial Date:]

_____

_____ [DEFENDANT'S or CROSS DEFENDANT'S] REQUEST FOR ATTORNEYS' FEES SHOULD BE GRANTED DESPITE THE WITHDRAWAL OF THE NOTICE OF LIS PENDENS BECAUSE _____ [DEFENDANT or CROSS DEFENDANT] HAS REALIZED ITS LITIGATION OBJECTIVES AND THEREFORE IS A PREVAILING PARTY.

Withdrawal of Lis Pendens Does Not Preclude Recovery of Attorneys' Fees and Costs. When a lis pendens is withdrawn while a motion to expunge is pending, the moving party is not automatically entitled to, nor should it automatically be denied, attorneys' fees and costs. The trial court should use a practical approach under which it must determine whether the moving party realized its litigation objectives (Castro v. Superior Court (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 1022-1023, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 865).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the moving party is entitled to attorneys' fees and costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38 following the withdrawal of a lis pendens.

These points and authorities may be combined with a memorandum of points and authorities relating to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the argument that the moving party is entitled to attorneys' fees and costs following the withdrawal of a lis pendens. This form may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a general discussion and additional forms relating to lis pendens, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 348, Lis Pendens (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Withdrawal of Lis Pendens Does Not Preclude Recovery of Attorneys' Fees and Costs

In Castro v. Superior Court (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 10 Cal. Rptr. 3d 865 , the court of appeal held that when a lis pendens is withdrawn while a motion to expunge is pending, the moving party is not automatically entitled to, nor should it automatically be denied, attorneys' fees and costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 405.38. Rather, the trial court should use the "practical approach," pursuant to which it must determine whether the moving party realized its litigation objectives (116 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 1022-1023) . Using the "practical approach," the trial court has the discretion to award attorneys' fees and costs based on a determination of which party would have prevailed on the motion and whether the lis pendens claimant acted with substantial justification in withdrawing the lis pendens, or whether, in light of all of the circumstances, the imposition of fees and costs would otherwise be unjust (116 Cal. App. 4th 1010, 1022-1023) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureRemediesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesCosts & Attorney FeesGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureRemediesLis PendensTerminations

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS

14-146 California Points & Authorities 146.syn

§ 146.syn Synopsis to Chapter 146: LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS

§ 146.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 146.02 Literary Property

§ 146.03 Governing Law

[1] Federal Constitutional and Statutory Law

[2] Copyright Act of 1976

[3] Copyright Act of 1909

[4] California Copyright Law

[5] State Statutes of Limitation

§ 146.04 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 146.05 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 146.06-146.19 [Reserved]

§ 146.20 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 8; Art. VI, cl 2; 17 U.S.C. § 301(a)]--Rights Equivalent to Those Protected by, and Subject Matter as Falling Under, Federal Copyright Law

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Supremacy Clause

[b] Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976

§ 146.21 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [US Const, Art I, § 8, cl 8; Art VI, cl 2; 17 U.S.C. § 301(a)]--State Law May Not Prohibit Copying of Uncopyrighted Article

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] State Law Prohibiting Copying of Uncopyrighted Article Is Preempted

[b] No Cause of Action for Unfair Competition Is Stated Under California Law

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action for Unfair Competition Under California Law

§ 146.22 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Under State Copyright Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2)]--Cause of Action Arose From Undertakings Commenced After January 1, 1978

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption Test

[b] Undertakings Commenced Before January 1, 1978

§ 146.23 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3)]--Rights Sought to Be Protected Under State Law as Not Equivalent to Exclusive Rights Protected by Federal Copyright Law

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Actions Different From Those Proscribed by Federal Copyright Law

[b] No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Interests Different From Those Protected by Federal Copyright Law

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Actions Different From Those Proscribed by Federal Copyright Law

§ 146.24 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1)]--Subject Matter of Cause of Action as Not Within Subject Matter of Copyright Under Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. §§ 102, 103]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ideas Are Not Within Subject Matter of Copyright Act of 1976

[b] Action Based on Unauthorized Use of Plaintiff's Likeness Is Not Preempted

§ 146.25 Opposing Contention That State Statute Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(c)]--State Law Governs Protection of Sound Recordings Fixed Before February 15, 1972

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Criminal Penalties for Unauthorized Use of Sound Recordings Fixed Before February 15, 1972

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976

[b] "Sound Recording" Defined

§ 146.26 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Under Federal Statute Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(d)]--Federal Copyright Law Does Not Affect State Jurisdiction Over Claims Arising Under Other Federal Laws

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Statute Is Not Preempted

[b] Preemption of State Law as Unrelated to State Court Subject Matter Jurisdiction of Federal Claim

§§ 146.27-146.39 [Reserved]

§ 146.40 Supporting Contention That Author of Original Work Has Exclusive Ownership Under California Copyright Law in Representation or Expression of Work--Work Not Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression [Civ. Code § 980(a)(1)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Works Not Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§ 146.41 Supporting Contention That Author Has Exclusive Ownership Under California Law in Sound Recording--Sound Recording Fixed Before February 15, 1972 [Civ. Code § 980(a)(2)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

§§ 146.42-146.59 [Reserved]

§ 146.60 Supporting Contention That Purveyor of Idea May Recover in Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract for Disclosure of Valuable Idea

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Is Enforceable

[b] Idea May Be Subject Matter of Contract

[c] Adequacy of Consideration

[d] Novelty or Concreteness Not Required

[e] Past Consideration Supports Express Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Is Enforceable

§ 146.61 Supporting Contention That Implied-in-Fact Contract Exists to Pay for Disclosure of Valuable Idea

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Required to Show Existence of Implied-in-Fact Contract

[b] Use of Idea Shown by Substantial Similarity Between Idea and Manner in Which It Is Used

§ 146.62 Supporting Contention That Another's Unauthorized Disclosure or Use of Idea Is Breach of Confidence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Existence of Breach of Confidence Cause of Action

[c] Recovery in Quasi-Contract or in Tort

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Confidence Breached When Idea Is Disclosed or Used Without Permission of Confiding Party

[b] Relationship of the Parties

[c] Confidence Breached When Idea Is Disclosed or Used for Benefit of Confidant and to Detriment of Confiding Party

[d] Novelty of Idea

§ 146.63 Opposing Contention That Purveyor of Idea May Recover in Quasi-Contract for Unauthorized Use of Idea--Idea Is Not Protectible Property

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Action in Quasi-Contract as Distinguished From Action for Breach of Confidence

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Material Used Must Constitute Protectible Property

[b] Ideas Are Not Protectible Property

§ 146.64 Opposing Contention That Implied-in-Fact Contract Exists to Pay for Disclosure of Valuable Idea

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Use or Disclosure of Idea

[b] Promise to Pay Not Implied in Mere Facts That Idea Is Conveyed, Is Valuable, and Is Used for Profit

[c] Obligation to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Cannot Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Submission of Idea

[d] Party to Whom Idea Is Disclosed Must Use Idea

[e] Idea Must Be Submitted to Party to Whom Idea Is Disclosed

[f] Idea Does Not Consist of Rights Capable of Divisible Assignability

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Obligation to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Cannot Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Submission of Idea

§ 146.65 Opposing Contention That Disclosure of Idea Is Breach of Confidence

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Actionable Breach of Confidence

[b] Evidence of Communication of Idea's Confidentiality Required

[c] Knowledge of Confidential Nature of Idea Required to Precede Conveyance of Idea

[d] Actual Notice of Confidential Nature of Idea Required

[e] Opportunity to Reject Idea Required

[f] Agreement Between Parties to Maintain Confidentiality of Idea Required

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agreement Between Parties to Maintain Confidentiality of Idea Required

[b] Requirements for Actionable Breach of Confidence

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.01

§ 146.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter contains points and authorities concerning (1) preemption, under the federal Copyright Act of 1976 [17 U.S.C. §§ 101-914], of remedies for copyright infringement [17 U.S.C. § 301], (2) statutory protection of works of authorship not otherwise preempted by federal law [Civ. Code § 980], and (3) protection of ideas under California case law.

Part II, Subpart A contains points and authorities supporting [see §§ 146.20-146.22] and opposing [see §§ 146.23-146.26] the contention that causes of action under state law are preempted by the Copyright Act of 1976.

Part II, Subpart B contains points and authorities supporting the contention that authors have specific ownership rights, under California law, in works not fixed in tangible media of expression [see § 146.40] and in sound recordings fixed in tangible media of expression before February 15, 1972 [see § 146.41].

Part II, Subpart C contains points and authorities supporting [see §§ 146.60 and 146.61] and opposing [see § 146.64] the contention that a party may recover under an express or implied-in-fact contract for the breach of an express or implied-in-fact promise to pay for the disclosure or use of an idea. Part II, Subpart C also contains points and authorities supporting [see § 146.62] and opposing [see § 146.65] the contention that disclosure of an idea constitutes a breach of confidence.

Finally, Part II, Subpart B contains points and authorities opposing [see § 146.63] the contention that a party may recover in quasi-contract for breach of an implied-in-law promise to pay for the disclosure or use of an idea.

Copyright infringement under federal law is beyond the scope of this chapter. In addition, because federal law has effectively preempted the field of copyright infringement, this chapter does not discuss actions for infringement under California copyright law.

For extensive treatment of copyright protection and actions for infringement under federal law, see generally Nimmer on Copyright. For a scholarly analysis of the areas of copyright law and the protection of ideas discussed in this chapter, see Nimmer on Copyright, Ch 1, Constitutional Aspects of Copyright , Ch. 16, The Law of Ideas (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawOwner RightsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.02

§ 146.02 Literary Property

"Literary property" is a general term that is used either to describe the interest of an author (or those who claim under an author) in his or her works (whether before or after publication or before or after copyright has been secured) or to denote the corporeal property in which an intellectual production is embodied. Literary property in an intellectual production is afforded protection by the common law, by federal statute pursuant to constitutional authorization, and by state law [Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 740, 299 P.2d 257].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterLiterary WorksGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.03

§ 146.03 Governing Law

[1] Federal Constitutional and Statutory Law

With specific federal statutory exceptions, the law of copyrights is governed exclusively by federal constitutional and statutory law. U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 8 (the Copyright Clause) and U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl. 2 (the Supremacy Clause) lay the groundwork for 17 U.S.C. §§ 101-914 (known as the Copyright Act of 1976), which govern all issues of copyright law and preempt the bulk of state statutory or decisional copyright protection.

Title 28 U.S.C. § 1338(a) grants exclusive jurisdiction to the federal district courts in actions arising under 17 U.S.C. §§ 101-914.

[2] Copyright Act of 1976

Title 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) preempts and abolishes, on and after January 1, 1978, any rights under the common law or statutes of any state that are equivalent to copyright and that extend to works, fixed in a tangible medium of expression, coming within the scope and subject matter of the Copyright Act of 1976. Title 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) applies regardless of when a work is created and regardless of whether it is published or unpublished. Title 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103 define the subject matter of copyright, and 17 U.S.C. § 106 delineates the exclusive rights that a copyright owner possesses.

Under 17 U.S.C. § 301(c), any rights or remedies under the common law or statutes of any state relative to sound recordings fixed before February 15, 1972, will not be annulled or limited until February 15, 2067.

[3] Copyright Act of 1909

Under 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2), the Copyright Act of 1976 does not apply to any cause of action arising from undertakings commenced before January 1, 1978. Therefore, the federal law in effect prior to January 1, 1978, former 17 U.S.C. §§ 1-216 (known as the Copyright Act of 1909) may still apply to govern these causes of action if the work in issue attained statutory copyright under the provisions of the Copyright Act of 1909 [see, e.g., Magnuson v. Video Yesteryear (9th Cir. 1996) 85 F.3d 1424 (copyright obtained in 1968, validity of written conveyance of copyright decided under Copyright Act of 1909); American Vitagraph, Inc. v. Levy (9th Cir. 1981) 659 F.2d 1023, 1024 n.1, 1024 (decided under Copyright Act of 1909)].

[4] California Copyright Law

Consonant with the preemption provisions of 17 U.S.C. § 301, California copyright law remains valid in four instances. First, federal law does not preempt state protection with respect to any subject matter that does not come within the subject matter of copyright as specified by 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103 [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1)]. Title 17 U.S.C. § 102(a) specifically excludes works not fixed in tangible media of expression from the scope of federal copyright protection. Thus, Civ. Code §§ 980(a)(1), 981(a), and 982(a) govern the ownership rights of an author of an original work of authorship that is not fixed in a tangible medium of expression.

Second, sound recordings fixed before February 15, 1972, are not preempted until February 15, 2067 [17 U.S.C. § 301(c)]. These sound recordings are protected under California law by Civ. Code § 980(a)(2). Similarly, criminal statutes such as Penal Code §§ 653h, 653s, 653u, 653v, and 653w, designed to penalize unauthorized activities relative to sound recordings and live performances remain valid until February 15, 2067.

Third, federal law does not preempt state protection against violations of legal or equitable rights that are not equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright as specified by 17 U.S.C. § 106 [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3)].

Finally, California statutory and common law remains valid with respect to any copyright cause of action arising from undertakings commenced before January 1, 1978 [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2)].

Code Civ. Proc. § 429.30(b) governs the attachment to complaints, in actions for the infringement of rights in literary property, of copies of the work at issue, and provides for a court to view the work when necessary or desirable. While there is no case law construing Code Civ. Proc. § 429.30, former Code Civ. Proc. § 426(3), the predecessor of, and containing substantially the same provisions as, Code Civ. Proc. § 429.30, has been construed to apply in both tort and contract actions [see, e.g., Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 785, 256 P.2d 947 ; see also Edgar Rice Burroughs, Inc. v. Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Inc. (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 441, 445, 23 Cal. Rptr. 14].

[5] State Statutes of Limitation

The two-year period of limitation under Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) governs actions for breach of oral express and implied-in-fact contracts to pay for the disclosure of ideas [Thompson v. California Brewing Co. (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 477, 310 P.2d 436]. Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) also governs actions for breach of confidence in the disclosure of ideas [see Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 516, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal PreemptionCopyright LawOwner RightsState Regulation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.04

§ 146.04 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a discussion and forms for use in copyright infringement actions and in actions under California law for the protection of ideas, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright , (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and forms concerning related actions, see the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender):

- Ch. 57, Art.
- Ch. 140, Contracts.
- Ch. 411, Patents and Inventions.
- Ch. 549, Trademarks and Trade Names.
- Ch. 565, Unfair Competition.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsRemediesGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsSummary JudgmentGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.05

§ 146.05 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in contract actions, see Ch. 50, Contracts .

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in obtaining injunctive relief in trademark and trade name infringement actions, see Ch. 116, Injunctions .

For memoranda of points and authorities for use in obtaining a protective order for trade secrets, see Ch. 81, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations .

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum of points or authorities or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsRemediesInjunctive Relief

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-146 California Points & Authorities §§ 146.06-146.19

[Reserved]

§§ 146.06[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.20

§ 146.20 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 8; Art. VI, cl 2; 17 U.S.C. § 301(a)]--Rights Equivalent to Those Protected by, and Subject Matter as Falling Under, Federal Copyright Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER STATE LAW IS PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976 BECAUSE IT INVOLVES LEGAL AND/OR EQUITABLE RIGHTS THAT ARE EQUIVALENT TO THE EXCLUSIVE RIGHTS WITHIN THE GENERAL SCOPE OF COPYRIGHT AND SUBJECT MATTER THAT FALLS UNDER THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976.

A. Power of Congress to Regulate Copyright. The Congress has the power to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries (U.S. Const., Art. I, § 8, cl. 8).

B. Supremacy Clause. The United States Constitution, and the laws of the United States made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, is the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every state shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any state to the contrary notwithstanding (U.S. Const., Art. VI, cl. 2).

C. Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976. *Section 301(a) of Title 17 of the United States Code*preempts the rights created by state common law copyright if (1) those rights are equivalent to those protected by the Copyright Act of 1976 and (2) the subject matter of the copyright falls under the Copyright Act of 1976 (17 U.S.C. § 301(a), (b)(3); Robert H. Jacobs, Inc. v. Westoaks Realtors, Inc. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 637, 642, 205 Cal. Rptr. 620).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a party's cause of action under state law is preempted by federal copyright law, when the state cause of action seeks to protect legal or equitable rights that are equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright, as specified by 17 U.S.C. § 106 (exclusive rights of copyright owners), and the subject matter of the copyright falls under federal law, as specified by 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103 (subject matter of copyright).

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of federal preemption of claims under state law. For example, these points and authorities may be included in support of a motion for judgment underCode Civ. Proc. § 631.8(a) [see Robert H. Jacobs, Inc. v. Westoaks Realtors, Inc. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 637, 642, 205 Cal. Rptr. 620 (defense motion for judgment)]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the legal or equitable rights sought to be vindicated by the cause of action under state law are equivalent to one or more of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright, as specified by 17 U.S.C. § 106 [see 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3)].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and forms for use in litigating a copyright infringement action under federal law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 146.23 and 146.24.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976

In Robert H. Jacobs, Inc. v. Westoaks Realtors, Inc. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 637, 205 Cal. Rptr. 620 , plaintiff contracted with defendant realtor to provide architectural services for the construction of two homes on adjacent lots. The contracts, which plaintiff drafted, did not expressly prohibit assignment of copies of the architectural plans to others. After preparing the plans, plaintiff filed them for city approval and applied for a building permit, declaring himself the responsible architect. The approved plans that plaintiff provided defendant contained a legend declaring the plans were not transferable, but by then, defendant had already paid plaintiff's fee. Subsequently, plaintiff discovered thehomes were not being built according to his plans. Furthermore, he believed that certain construction practices violated the building code. He also learned that another defendant now owned the lots and had modified the plans, and that a second building permit had been filed, declaring the second defendant owner of the lots and plaintiff the responsible architect. After plaintiff's objection to the city building department, the second defendant agreed to substitute another architect or civil engineer to accept responsibility for the construction, and the city struck plaintiff's name from the filed documents. Plaintiff subsequently filed an action against both defendants, generally alleging an unauthorized use of his plans. Plaintiff's complaint contained a variety of causes of action, including one for common law copyright infringement under state law. After presentation of plaintiff's case, defendants moved for judgment. The trial court granted the motion and entered judgment for defendants. Among other findings, the trial court found no violation of plaintiff's common law copyright because it found defendant realtor had a license to use plaintiff's plans, the contracts did not prohibit assignment of this license, and defendant realtor ad validly assigned this license to defendant lot owner. Plaintiff appealed from the trial court's judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment. The court found a review of the evidence relating to common law copyright infringement unnecessary because the Copyright Act of 1976 abolished plaintiff's cause of action. The court held that 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) preempts the rights created by state common law copyright if (1) those rights are equivalent to those protected by federal copyright law and (2) the subject matter of the copyright falls under the Copyright Act of 1976 (159 Cal. App. 3d 637, 642) . Noting that the United States Supreme Court has not determined the meaning of "equivalent rights" under 17 U.S.C. § 301(a), the court nonetheless held plaintiff's cause of action to be preempted because it found that the plans were within the subject matter of copyright as defined by 17 U.S.C. §§ 101 and 102, and that the right plaintiff sought to vindicate by his cause of action for state common law copyright infringement was the same as that provided to copyright owners under 17 U.S.C. § 106(3) (copyright owner's right to distribute copies of work to public). The court then concluded that plaintiff was required to invoke federal jurisdiction to pursue his copyright infringement claim because the federal courts possess exclusive jurisdiction in actions arising under the Copyright Act of 1976 (159 Cal. App. 3d 637, 643) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Supremacy Clause

In Fisher v. Dees (9th Cir. 1986) 794 F.2d 432 , an action for copyright infringement and unfair competition, the court held that even if defendants' allegedly false claim of authorship of plaintiffs' song constituted a tort separate from unfair competition under California law, that cause of action was preempted by federal copyright law. Citing Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co. (1964) 376 U.S. 225, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661, 84 S. Ct. 1131, 12 L. Ed. 2d 87 , and Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting, Inc. (1964) 376 U.S. 234, 84 S. Ct. 779, 11 L. Ed. 2d 669, 84 S. Ct. 1162, 12 L. Ed. 2d 183 (both discussed in § 146.21[3][a]), the court ruled that the Supremacy Clause of the U.S. Constitution precludes the states from protecting types of intellectual property that are already covered by the federal copyright law. Therefore, the kind of misappropriation alleged by plaintiffs could be redressed, if at all, only under federal copyright law (794 F.2d 432, 440) .

[b] Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976

In Montz v. Pilgrim Films & TV, Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 606 F.3d 1153 , the complaint made clear that the plaintiff expected to profit by retaining control of the plaintiff's work instead of by selling it. The court held, therefore, that the plaintiff's claim was fundamentally a copyright claim, and that a state law cause of action based on that claim was preempted (606 F.3d 1153, 1158) . To show a viable state law claim, the complaint would have to allege that the plaintiff offered the work for sale (606 F.3d 1153, 1159-1160) .

In Kodadek v. MTV Networks, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 152 F.3d 1209 , plaintiff alleged that he originated two cartoon characters called "Beavis" and "Butthead" in 1991 and submitted his drawings to a person who two years later was credited with having created animated characters by the same name on a television show. After seeing the televised cartoon show in 1993 and having misplaced his original drawings in the interim, plaintiff drew new sketches of "Beavis" and "Butthead" from memory. In 1995 plaintiff applied for and obtained a certificate of registration by depositing with the Copyright Office two of the 1993 drawings (deemed "reconstructions" by the court), stating on his registration application that his creation was completed in 1991. Plaintiff sued the television network and others alleging copyright infringement and unfair competition in violation of Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. The court of appeals affirmed, holding that the infringement claim was foreclosed because a reconstruction, instead of an original work, was deposited. No copyright registration of the 1991 drawings occurred [17 U.S.C. § 408(b)(1), (2)], and an unfair competition claim was preempted by the Copyright Act. The latter holding was premised on a two-prong test, which found allegations of the state-law unfair competition claim were based solely on rights equivalent to those protected by federal copyright law, and the drawings were "pictorial works" clearly within the "subject matter" of the Copyright Act (152 F.3d 1209, 1212-1213) .

Maheu v. CBS, Inc. (1988) 201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 247 Cal. Rptr. 304 , involved actions for conversion and intentional interference with prospective economic advantage, among others, arising out of defendants' publication of plaintiff's business correspondence. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order of dismissal following the sustaining of a demurrer to plaintiff's fourth amended complaint without leave to amend. The court held plaintiff's conversion causes of action were preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301 because (1) plaintiff's letters were copyrightable, being within the subject matter of copyright defined under 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103, (2) the right plaintiff sought to protect by his conversion action was equivalent to one within the general scope of copyright, in that hesought damages arising from the reproduction and distribution, rather than the physical possession, of his letters, and (3) plaintiff's conversion cause of action was time-barred (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 671-674) . Plaintiff's interference cause of action was also preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301 because, in enacting the Copyright Act of 1976, Congress intended that state law claims for interference with contract or prospective economic advantage be preempted when based on unauthorized use or copying of copyrightable property (201 Cal. App. 3d 662, 677) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.21

§ 146.21 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [US Const, Art I, § 8, cl 8; Art VI, cl 2; 17 U.S.C. § 301(a)]--State Law May Not Prohibit Copying of Uncopyrighted Article

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. The following should be combined with the points and authorities in § 146.20.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER STATE LAW IS PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976 BECAUSE THE STATE CAUSE OF ACTION IS BASED SOLELY ON THE COPYING OF MATTER IN THE PUBLIC DOMAIN.

A. State Law Prohibiting Copying of Uncopyrighted Article Is Preempted. When protection of an uncopyrighted article is preempted by federal copyright law, state law may not forbid others to copy that article or award damages for copying it (Sammons & Sons v. Ladd-Fab, Inc. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 308, 187 Cal. Rptr. 874 ; see Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co. (1964) 376 U.S. 225, 232-233, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661 , reh. denied, 376 U.S. 973, 84 S. Ct. 1131, 12 L. Ed. 2d 87 ; Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting (1964) 376 U.S. 234, 237-238, 84 S. Ct. 779, 11 L. Ed. 2d 669 , reh. denied, 377 U.S. 913, 84 S. Ct. 1162, 12 L. Ed. 2d 183).

[Optional] B. No Cause of Action for Unfair Competition Is Stated Under California Law. When a complaint alleges no facts other than the lawful copying of an article in the public domain, no cause of action for misappropriation of the article, under a theory of unfair competition, is stated (Sammons & Sons v. Ladd-Fab, Inc. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 309, 187 Cal. Rptr. 874).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a party's cause of action under state law is preempted by federal copyright law, when the state cause of action seeks to prohibit the copying of an article that is not protected by copyright and is thus in the public domain. Optional Paragraph B may be used if the opposing party has attempted to use state unfair competition laws to prevent the copying of an article in the public domain.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of federal preemption of claims under state law. For example, they may be included in support of a general demurrer to a complaint [see Sammons & Sons v. Ladd-Fab, Inc. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 308, 187 Cal. Rptr. 874]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the cause of action under state law is based solely on the copying of material in the public domain [see Sammons & Sons v. Ladd-Fab, Inc. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 309, 187 Cal. Rptr. 874].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and forms for use in litigating a copyright infringement action under federal law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 146.23.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] State Law Prohibiting Copying of Uncopyrighted Article Is Preempted

In Sammons & Sons v. Ladd-Fab, Inc. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 187 Cal. Rptr. 874 , plaintiff was engaged in the design, manufacture, and marketing of storage components used in warehousing. The components were original and unique in conception and design, and had features that distinguished them from other similar products. Subsequently, defendant became a distributor of plaintiff's components and thereby acquired a supply of them, as well as literature compiled by plaintiff relating to the components. Defendant then began to manufacture and market storage components that were exact reproductions of those made and marketed by plaintiff. Additionally, defendant published and distributed a catalog, reflecting its product line, which was an exact copy of a catalog published by plaintiff and reflecting plaintiff's product line. Plaintiff then commenced an action against defendant for damages, an accounting, and injunctive relief for unfaircompetition under Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 based on defendant's copying of its components and its catalog. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that it failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Plaintiff chose not to amend its complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the complaint. The trial court based its ruling on the propositions that (1) federal law had completely preempted state law relative to the copying of unpatented and uncopyrighted matter coming within the ambit of the patent and copyright laws; (2) under federal law, the copying of plaintiff's unpatented products and the reproduction of plaintiff's uncopyrighted catalog was permissible; and (3) this copying could not, as such, be unfair competition under California law. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 313) . The court held that plaintiff had stated no cause of action, under California unfair competition law, for misappropriation of its many years of development and research on the components and the catalog (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 309) . The court found that plaintiff's components were not patented and its catalog was not copyrighted. Therefore both were in the public domain and could be freely copied by defendant (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 310) . The court also found that the complaint alleged no facts other than lawful copying of these products and catalog. It omitted any facts suggesting that defendant had failed to identify the source and origin of its own products. Citing Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co. (1964) 376 U.S. 225, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661 , reh. denied, 376 U.S. 973, 84 S. Ct. 1131, 12 L. Ed. 2d 87 , and Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting (1964) 376 U.S. 234, 84 S. Ct. 779, 11 L. Ed. 2d 669 , reh. denied, 377 U.S. 913, 84 S. Ct. 1162, 12 L. Ed. 2d 183 (both discussed above), the court held that by legitimizing the copying of matter in the public domain, federal law proscribes state law misapproriation claims based solely on such copying (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 309) . The court held plaintiff subject to the rule of Sears that a state may not, when an article is unpatented and uncopyrighted, prohibit the copying of the article itself or award damages for that copying (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 310) .

In Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co. (1964) 376 U.S. 225, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661 , reh. denied, 376 U.S. 973, 84 S. Ct. 1131, 12 L. Ed. 2d 87 , Stiffel secured design and mechanical patents on a pole lamp. Soon after Stiffel brought them on the market, Sears put on the market a substantially identical lamp, which it sold more cheaply. Stiffel then brought an action against Sears in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. In the first count of the complaint, Stiffel claimed that, by copying Stiffel's design, Sears had infringed Stiffel's patents. In the second count, Stiffel claimed that, by selling copies of Stiffel's lamp, Sears had caused confusion in the trade as to the source of the lamps and had thereby engaged in unfair competition under Illinois law. There was evidence that (1) identifying tags were not attached to the Sears lamps, even though labels appeared on the cartons in which they were delivered to customers, (2) that customers had asked Stiffel whether its lamps differed from those of Sears, and (3) that in two cases, customers who had bought Stiffel lamps had complained to Stiffel on learning that Sears was selling substantially identical lamps at a much lower price. The district court held the patents invalid for want of invention. The court then held Sears guilty of unfair competition, finding that Sears' lamp was a substantially exact copy of Stiffel's and that the two lamps were so much alike that confusion between them was likely and that some confusion had already occurred. The court enjoined Sears from unfairly competing with Stiffel by selling, or attempting to sell, pole lamps identical to or confusingly similar to Stiffel's lamp, and ordered an accounting to fix profits and damages resulting from Sears' unfair competition. The United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit affirmed the district court's judgment. Sears then petitioned the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari.

The Supreme Court granted the petition and reversed the judgment of the court of appeals. According to the Court, the question in the case was whether a state's unfair competition law could, consistently with the federal patent laws, impose liability for or prohibit the copying of an article that is protected by neither a federal patent nor a copyright (376 U.S. 225). The Court first noted that the district court had held that the pole lamp sold by Stiffel was not entitled to the protection of either a mechanical or a design patent. Consequently, the Court held that an unpatentable article, like an article on which a patent has expired, is in the public domain and may be made and sold by whoever chooses to do so. According to the Court, Sears copied Stiffel's design and sold lamps almost identical to those sold by Stiffel. Under the federal patent laws, Sears had every right to do so. It was immaterial that Stiffel originated the pole lamp and made it popular (376 U.S. 225, 231) . The Court held that to allow a state, by use of its unfair competition law, to prevent the copying of an article that represented too slight an advance to be patented, would be to permit the state to block off from the public something that federal law had said belongs to the public (376 U.S. 225, 231-232) . The Court noted that Sears had been held liable for unfair competiton because of a finding of likelihood of confusion based only on the fact that Sears' lamp was copied from Stiffel's unpatented lamp and that consequently the two looked exactly alike. Of course there could be confusion over who had manufactured the nearly identical lamps. But the Court ruled that the mere inability of the public to tell two identical articles apart is not enough to support an injunction against copying or an award of damages for copying that which the federal patent laws permit to be copied. Doubtless a state may, in appropriate circumstances, require that goods, whether patented or unpatented, be labeled or that oter precautionary steps be taken to prevent customers from being misled over the source of goods, just as it may protect businesses in the use of their trademarks, labels, or distinctive dress in the packaging of goods to prevent others, by imitating these markings, from misleading purchasers over the source of the goods (376 U.S. 225, 232) . However,because of the preemptive effect of the federal patent laws, when an article is unpatented and uncopyrighted, a state may not prohibit the copying of the article itself or award damages for that copying (376 U.S. 225, 232-233) .

In Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting (1964) 376 U.S. 234, 84 S. Ct. 779, 11 L. Ed. 2d 669 , reh. denied, 377 U.S. 913, 84 S. Ct. 1162, 12 L. Ed. 2d 183 , both parties manufactured fluorescent light fixtures of a kind widely used in offices and stores. Day-Brite secured a design patent on a reflector having cross-ribs claimed to give both strength and attractiveness to the fixture. After Day-Brite had begun selling its fixture, Compco's predecessor began making and selling fixtures very similar to Day-Brite's. Day-Brite then brought an action for an accounting and injunctive relief against Compco in the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois. The complaint alleged, in its first count, that Compco had infringed Day-Brite's patent. The second count of the complaint alleged, under Illinois law, that Compco had unfairly competed with Day-Brite in the sale of the fixtures in that the public and the trade had come to associate this particular design with Day-Brite, and Compco had copied Day-Brite's distinctive design so as to confuse and deceive purchasers into thinking Compco's fixtures were actually Day-Brite's. The district court held the patent invalid, found Compco guilty of unfair competition in the sale of its fixtures, ordered Compco to account to Day-Brite for damages, and enjoined Compco from selling, or attempting to sell, reflectors identical or confusingly similar to those made by Day-Brite. On appeal, the United States Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's judgment. Compco then petitioned the United States Supreme Court for a writ of certiorari.

The Supreme Court granted the petition and reversed the judgment of the court of appeals. Holding the issue to be whether the use of a state unfair competition law to give relief against the copying of an unpatented industrial design conflicted with the federal patent laws, the Court held the order for an accounting for damages and the injunction conflicted with the federal patent laws (376 U.S. 234, 237) . The Court reasoned that, under the federal patent laws, Day-Brite's fixture was not entitled to a patent. Therefore, the fixture was in the public domain and could be copied in every detail by whoever chose to do so. The Court cited Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co., (1964) 376 U.S. 225, 232-233, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661 , reh. denied, 376 U.S. 973, 84 S. Ct. 1131, 12 L. Ed. 2d 87 (discussed above), for the proposition that when an article is unprotected by a patent or a copyright, state law may not forbid others to copy that article. To forbid copying would interfere with the federal policy, found in Article I, Section 8, Clause 8 of the United States Constitution, and in the implementing federal statutes, of allowing free access to copy whatever the federal patent and copyright laws leave in the public domain (376 U.S. 234, 237) .

In further explanation of when a state may act to prevent unfair competition by the copying of an unpatented or uncopyrighted article, the Court held that a state has power to impose liability on those who, knowing that the public is relying on an original manufacturer's reputation for quality and integrity, deceive the public by palming off their copies as the original. That an article copied from an unpatented article could be made in some other way, that the design is "nonfunctional" and not essential to the use of either article, that the configuration of the article copied may have a secondary meaning that identifies the maker to the trade, or that there may be confusion among purchasers over which article is which or over who is the maker, may be relevant evidence in applying a state's law requiring these precautions as labeling. However, and regardless of the copier's motives, neither these facts nor any others can furnish a basis for imposing liability for or prohibiting the actual acts of copying and selling (376 U.S. 234, 238) . Concomitantly, a state cannot hold a copier accountable in damages for failure to label or otherwise identify its goods unless its failure is in violation of valid state statutory or decisional law requiring the copier to label or take other precautions to prevent confusion of customers as to the source of the goods (376 U.S. 234, 238-239) . In dictum, the Court noted that there was no showing that Illinois had any such law (376 U.S. 234, 239).

[b] No Cause of Action for Unfair Competition Is Stated Under California Law

The factual and procedural background of Sammons & Sons v. Ladd-Fab, Inc. (1982) 138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 187 Cal. Rptr. 874 , is discussed in § 146.21[2][a]. In Sammons, the court of appeal held that plaintiff had stated no cause of action, under California unfair competition law, for misappropriation of its many years of development and research on the components and the catalog (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 309) . Even though plaintiff had alleged an appropriation by defendant of plaintiff's design and development efforts, this appropriation, accomplished solely by a copying that was lawful under federal patent and copyright laws, could not be a misappropriation under state law (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 310) . Even though copying of material in the public domain may be an element in an otherwise unlawful competitive scheme, such as when free copying is accompanied by misappropriation outside the scope of copying, unfair competition claims under state law may not be based solely on that copying (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 311, 312) . The court held plaintiff subject to the rule of Sears that because of the federal patent laws, a state may not, when an article is unpatented and uncopyrighted, prohibit the copying of the article itself or award damages for that copying (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 310) . The court also held plaintiff not entitled to equitable relief for defendant's alleged failure to distinctly identify the source and origin of its products, because the allegation in the complaint did not suggest that defendant failed to identify its duplicate product and catalog as its own and because the facts alleged showed that defendant tookappropriate steps to identify the source and origin of its products (138 Cal. App. 3d 306, 313) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action for Unfair Competition Under California Law

The plaintiff in Summit Mach. Tool Mfg. v. Victor CNC Systems (9th Cir. 1993) 7 F.3d 1434 , entered into a contract with a Chinese corporation (ZMTW), under which ZMTW was to manufacture lathes from plaintiff's designs. The agreement provided that plaintiff had the exclusive right to sell outside of China all lathes manufactured by ZMTW in accordance with plaintiff's design. A few years later, defendant purchased seven lathes from ZMTW for resale in the United States. When plaintiff learned of the purchase by defendant, it notified defendant of its contract and demanded that defendant cease reselling the lathes. When defendant refused to do so, plaintiff brought suit against defendant, alleging unfair competition in violation of the federal Lanham Act [15 U.S.C. § 1125(a)] and California statutory and common law, among other claims. The trial court held that the state-law unfair competition claims were preempted by federal patent and copyright laws to the extent that they sought to prevent defendant from copying plaintiff's designs, and the court of appeals affirmed. The court noted that federal patent and copyright laws limit the states' ability to regulate unfair competition (7 F.3d 1434, 1439) . The court observed that preemption analysis involves determining whether the state law claim contains an element not shared by the federal law, that is, an element that changes the nature of the action so that it is qualitatively different from a copyright or patent infringement claim. Therefore, if copying the lathe or the plans for the lathe in itself infringes the state-created right, the state-created right is preempted (7 F.3d 1434, 1439-1440) . The court stated that to the extent that plaintiff complained that defendant had misappropriated the fruits of plaintiff's labor by marketing plaintiff's lathe with defendant's name on it, such a claim is really a claim for reverse palming off. State unfair competition laws that seek to prevent reverse palming off contain the requisite extra element and are not preempted by federal law (7 F.3d 1434, 1441) . However, to the extent that plaintiff complained that defendant had "pirated" its lathe by employing a particularly unfair method of copying, such a claim is preempted by federal law (7 F.3d 1434, 1442) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal Preemption

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.22

§ 146.22 Supporting Contention That Cause of Action Under State Copyright Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2)]--Cause of Action Arose From Undertakings Commenced After January 1, 1978

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER CALIFORNIA COPYRIGHT LAW IS PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976 BECAUSE THE STATE CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER STATE LAW AROSE FROM UNDERTAKINGS COMMENCED AFTER JANUARY 1, 1978.

A. Supremacy Clause. [See § 146.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Preemption Test. The Copyright Act of 1976 preempts state common law copyright claims if the claims arose from undertakings commenced after January 1, 1978 (17 U.S.C. § 301(a), (b)(2); Mention v. Gessell (9th Cir. 1983) 714 F.2d 87, 90 ; Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1109, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296).

C. Undertakings Commenced Before January 1, 1978. Claims arising from infringing activities are "undertakings" within the meaning of Section 301(b)(2) of Title 17 of the United States Code, and the date the infringing activities occurred is dispositive of the issue of when an undertaking was commenced (see 17 U.S.C. § 301(a), (b)(2); Mention v. Gessell (9th Cir. 1983) 714 F.2d 87, 90 ; Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1110, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a party's cause of action under state copyright law is preempted by federal copyright law, when the cause of action under state law is based on infringing acts that occurred after January 1, 1978, the effective date of the Copyright Act of 1976.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of federal preemption of claims under state copyright law. For example, they may be adapted for use in a motion in limine [see Mention v. Gessell (9th Cir. 1983) 714 F.2d 87, 90 (defense motion in limine)], and in amotion for summary judgment [see Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1106, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 (defense motion for summary judgment)]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Landsberg v. Scrabble Crossword Game Players, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 485, 486 , cert. denied 469 U.S. 1037, 105 S. Ct. 513, 83 L. Ed. 2d 403 (1984) (appeal from judgment)].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the infringing acts complained of occurred after January 1, 1978.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and forms for use in litigating causes of action under the Copyright Act of 1976, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemption Test

In Mention v. Gessell (9th Cir. 1983) 714 F.2d 87 , plaintiffs, partners in an Oregon architectural firm, contracted with a county housing authority in Oregon to design migrant labor housing. The contract was based on architectural plans and drawings developed by plaintiffs in 1974 and 1975. The housing was financed by the Farmers Home Administration (hereinafter "FmHA") and was completed in 1975. Defendants, partners in a Washington architectural firm, contracted in 1974 with a county housing authority in Washington to design migrant labor housing. This housing was also financed by the FmHA. In 1976, after the FmHA had twice rejected defendants' housing plans, defendants were furnished with a floor plan print for migrant labor housing, from plaintiffs' plan sets, during a county housing authority meeting. Subsequently, the FmHA furnished defendants with one of plaintiffs' complete plan sets. After receiving indications from both the housing authority and the FmHA that plaintiffs' prints were acceptable, defendants used the prints in preparing their third proposal, which the FmHA accepted in 1976. The Washington housing was constructed in 1976. In 1978, defendants again contracted with the housing authority for a second phase of the project, and used the 1976 design work as a schematic concept in applying to the FmHA for funds for the 1978 project. The FmHA accepted defendants' second phase proposal, and construction began in 1978. Later that year, plaintiffs learned of the Washington project and of defendants' design. In 1979, plaintiffs filed an action against defendants for common law copyright infringement under Oregon law in the United States District Court of Oregon. After trial, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs and awarded damages. The district court denied defendants' motions for judgment notwithstanding verdict or a new trial. Defendants then appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeals reversed the district court's judgment, holding that plaintiffs' claim was barred, in whole or in part, by an Oregon statute of limitations, and was preempted, in part, by the Copyright Act of 1976 (714 F.2d 87, 89) . Relative to the preemption issue, the court held that defendants' alleged infringing activities occurred in the fall of 1978, during the second phase of defendants' housing design. Plaintiffs' common law copyright claim under Oregon law was therefore preempted by the Copyright Act of 1976, through the operation of 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2), since their claim was based on an undertaking that commenced after January 1, 1978 (714 F.2d 87, 90) .

In Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 , plaintiff instituted an action against defendants arising out of the unauthorized use of his unpublished novel. The complaint contained causes of action under California law for common law copyright infringement and plagiarism, among others, and sought damages and the imposition of a constructive trust. The complaint generally alleged that plaintiff's novel served as the basis for the production, including the screenplay, of the film "The Deer Hunter" and for the subsequent publication of a paperback book of the same title. Following the parties' completion of discovery, defendants moved the trial court for summary judgment, contending, among other things, that neither the screenplay, the film, nor the novelization of "The Deer Hunter" were substantially similar to any protectable material or expression in plaintiff's novel, and thus not infringements of plaintiff's copyright in the novel. The trial court found that plaintiff's cause of action for plagiarism was, in part, preempted by the Copyright Act of 1976 and that the court therefore lacked subject matter jurisdiction over any claims relating to defendants' film or book. After determining that it did have jurisdiction over the screenplay, the trial court found, as a matter of law, that there was no substantial similarity between that work and plaintiff's novel, and thus no infringement of the copyright in plaintiff's novel. The trial court resolved all other issues in favor of defendants and entered judgment dismissing the complaint. Plaintiff then appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment. The court noted that the threshold issue to be resolved was the preemptive impact of the Copyright Act of 1976 on plaintiff's cause of action for infringement of his novel (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1108) . In this respect, the court held the act did not affect any right plaintiff may have had under a theory of common law copyright if his cause of action arose from undertakings commenced before January 1, 1978 (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1109) . Thus, if defendants' acts occurred after January 1, 1978, then the Copyright Act of 1976 applied to preempt any claim plaintiff may have had based on a theory of infringement of state common law copyright. If, on the other hand, defendants' unauthorized copying occurred before January 1, 1978, plaintiff could still pursue a claim predicated on state law. Turning to the facts of the case, the court agreed with the trial court's finding that to the extent that plaintiff had any cause of actionunder state law for infringement relative to the screenplay, that cause of action arose in 1976 or 1977 when the screenplay was written, and the trial court properly determined that it could adjudicate that claim (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1110) . The distribution of the film and the publication of the novelization, however, occurred after January 1, 1978. The court found that the trial court correctly concluded that any claim based on those activities was covered by the Copyright Act of 1976 (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1111) . The court then found that plaintiff failed to establish any of his claims under state law, including the copyright infringement claim, and that therefore the trial court properly granted the motion for summary judgment (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1111-1115) . The court found no basis for imposition of a constructive trust and, as a matter of law, plaintiff was entitled to take nothing by his complaint (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1115) .

[b] Undertakings Commenced Before January 1, 1978

The facts and procedural background of Mention v. Gessell (9th Cir. 1983) 714 F.2d 87 , are discussed in § 146.22[3][a]. In Mention, the court of appeals held plaintiffs' common law copyright claim under Oregon law to be preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2) because the claim arose from undertakings commenced after January 1, 1978. The court held that claims arising from infringing activities are "undertakings" within the meaning of 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2). Therefore, because defendants' alleged infringing activities occurred after January 1, 1978, they were not "commenced before January 1, 1978," within the meaning of 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2) (714 F.2d 87, 90) .

The facts and procedural background of Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 , are discussed in § 146.22[3][a]. In Klekas, the court of appeals held that if defendants' unauthorized copying of plaintiff's work occurred after January 1, 1978, then 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2) applied to preempt any claim plaintiff may have had based on a common law copyright theory under California law (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1110) . In reaching this conclusion, the court acknowledged that the difficult question was the meaning of the phrase "undertakings commenced before January 1, 1978" in 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2) (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1109) . The court then held that the date when a plaintiff created or began creation of a work that was allegedly subsequently plagiarized by a defendant is of no legal significance. What is dispositive of the issue of when an undertaking is commenced is the date the alleged plagiarism occurred. The court found it difficult to conceive of how a cause of action could arise before there had been some activity by a defendant that compromised a plaintiff's work (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1110) . Because the distribution of defendants' allegedly infringing film and paperback book occurred after January 1, 1978, the court found that any claim based on those activities was covered by the Copyright Act of 1976, and plaintiff's cause of action for common law copyright infringement under California law was therefore preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(2) (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1111) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal Preemption

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.23

§ 146.23 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3)]--Rights Sought to Be Protected Under State Law as Not Equivalent to Exclusive Rights Protected by Federal Copyright Law

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER STATE LAW IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976, BECAUSE THE CAUSE OF ACTION INVOLVES _____ [ACTIONS DIFFERENT FROM THOSE PROSCRIBED and/or INTERESTS DIFFERENT FROM THOSE PROTECTED] BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976.

A. Preemption Test. Nothing in the Copyright Act of 1976, Title 17 of the United States Code, Section 101 et seq., annuls or limits any rights or remedies under the common law or statutes of any state with respect to activities violating legal or equitable rights that are not equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright as specified by Title 17 of the United States Code Section 106 (17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3)).

[EITHER]

B. No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Actions Different From Those Proscribed by Federal Copyright Law. If violation of a state right is predicated on an act incorporating elements beyond mere reproduction or the like, there is no preemption; when a party's state law claims involve actions different from those proscribed by the copyright laws, the state law claims are not preempted by federal law (G.S. Rasmussen & Assoc. v. Kalitta Flying Service (9th Cir. 1992) 958 F.2d 896, 904, 906-907 ; Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630, 635) .

[AND/OR]

C. No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Interests Different From Those Protected by Federal Copyright Law. If violation of a state right is predicated on an act incorporating elements beyond mere reproduction or the like, there is no preemption; when a party's state law claims involve interests different from those protected by the copyright laws, the state law claims are not preempted by federal law (G.S. Rasmussen & Assoc. v. Kalitta Flying Service (9th Cir. 1992) 958 F.2d 896, 904, 908 ; Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630, 635) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party's cause of action under state law is preempted by federal copyright law, when the state cause of action seeks to protect legal or equitable rights that are not equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright, as specified by 17 U.S.C. § 106.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of federal preemption of claims under state law. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630, 632 (appeal from judgment)].

Counsel should insert argument in this foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the legal or equitable rights sought to be protected are not equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright, as specified by 17 U.S.C. § 106 [see 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(3)]. For example, counsel may include facts showing that the state cause of action is predicated on acts incorporating elements beyond mere reproduction or the like. Counsel may also include facts showing that the state cause of action either involves actions different from those proscribed by the federal copyright laws, or seeks to protect interests or vindicate duties different from those protected or vindicated by the federal copyright laws [see Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630, 635].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 146.20.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and forms for use in litigating state causes of action not preempted by federal law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Actions Different From Those Proscribed by Federal Copyright Law

In G.S. Rasmussen & Assoc. v. Kalitta Flying Service (9th Cir. 1992) 958 F.2d 896 , plaintiff aeronautical engineer developed modifications to the DC-8 cargo airplane to enable the aircraft safely to carry tens of thousands more pounds than that for which it originally was designed. Based on these modifications, the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) issued plaintiff a Supplemental Type Certificate certifying the airworthiness of this type of aircraft as modified by plaintiff. As a result, any DC-8 owner desiring to obtain airworthiness certification to operate a particular DC-8 with the increased cargo capacity is required to, among other things, present the FAA with a photocopy of plaintiff's certificate to verify that the modifications conform to a design that has been approved by the FAA as airworthy. Typically, the owner obtains the photocopy by paying a licensing fee to plaintiff, who is permitted by FAA rules to license his certificate for this purpose. The alternative to licensed use of the certificate requires the DC-8 owner to obtain its own Supplemental Type Certificate by independently proving to the FAA that the modification is safe. This independent proof entails hundreds of hours of engineering work and the submission of volumes of technical data to the FAA.

Defendant DC-8 owner, desiring to convert one of its passenger planes to a cargo plane in conformance with plaintiff's modifications, declined plaintiff's offer to license the certificate and, instead, pirated the certificate by obtaining a photocopy from a source other than plaintiff. The FAA subsequently certified defendant's modified aircraft as airworthy on the basis of, among other requirements, defendant's submission of the photocopied certificate. Plaintiff thereafter commenced actions in federal district court for damages under California law for defendant's conversion of the certificate and for unjust enrichment arising out of defendant's unauthorized use of his certificate. The district court granted summary judgment for defendant, holding plaintiff had no protectible property interest in his certificate and, even if he did, his action was preempted by federal copyright and patent laws. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

A panel of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the district court's judgment. First, the court held plaintiff had a protectible property interest in his certificate under California statutory and case law (958 F.2d 896, 903) . Second, relying on Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630, 635 (discussed below), the court held federal copyright law did not preempt plaintiff's actions under state law. Even though federal copyright law allowed defendant to make copies of plaintiff's certificate, it did not allow defendant to then use those copies to obtain airworthiness certificates from the FAA for particular DC-8 aircraft. Additionally, plaintiff's right to use his certificate as a basis for obtaining an airworthiness certificate for an airplane that is modified in a particular way was not a right equivalent to any right within the general scope of federal copyright law (958 F.2d 896, 904) . Neither federal patent law nor the Federal Aviation Act preempted plaintiff's state law actions (958 F.2d 896, 904-906) . The court held defendant not only had tortiously converted plaintiff's certificate under California law by using the photocopy of it to obtain airworthiness certification for its modified DC-8, butalso was thereby unjustly enriched (958 F.2d 896, 906-907) . The court remanded the case to the district court to fix the terms of the implied contract thus breached by defendant (958 F.2d 896, 907) .

In Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630 , plaintiff and defendants entered into a partnership to create and publish a book describing how to restore Ford F-100 pickup trucks. Under the partnership agreement, the named defendant was to provide capital and supervise the business end of the venture, and plaintiff was to write and edit the book. Almost two years after the partnership agreement was entered into, plaintiff delivered to the named defendant a manuscript that contained much, but not all, of the material the partners planned to include in the book. This manuscript consisted partly of a reworking of previously published magazine articles that plaintiff had written, and partly of new material, also written by plaintiff, that had never before been published. At about the same time, the named defendant became dissatisfied with plaintiff's progress on the manuscript. The named defendant hired another writer to complete plaintiff's manuscript, and then published the finished product. The book that the named defendant eventually published contained substantial quantities of plaintiff's manuscript, but also contained material added by the new writer. Plaintiff then sued his copartners on a claim, under the Copyright Act of 1976, for copyright infringement, and on claims, under state law, for conversion of the papers comprising plaintiff's manuscript and breach of the named defendant's fiduciary duty owed to plaintiff as a partner. The district court entered judgment in plaintiff's favor, and awarded him statutory damages for copyright infringement, attorneys' fees, general damages on his state causes of action, and costs of suit. Defendants appealed from the judgment, seeking reversal of the general damages award and contending, among other things, that plaintiff's state causes of action were preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301(a).

The court of appeals vacated the district court's judgment awarding plaintiff statutory damages and attorneys' fees, and remanded the cause for an award of the actual damages that plaintiff suffered from infringement of his copyrights in the magazine articles. However, the appellate court let stand the general damages award on plaintiff's cause of action under state law for conversion, holding that 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) did not preempt that cause of action. The court cited Harper & Row Publishers, Inc. v. Nation Enterprises (2d Cir. 1983) 723 F.2d 195, 200 (reversed on other grounds 471 U.S. 539, 105 S. Ct. 2218, 85 L. Ed. 2d 588 (1985)) , as persuasive authority for the proposition that 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) preempts a state-created right if that right may be abridged by an act which, in and of itself, would infringe one of the exclusive rights listed in 17 U.S.C. § 106. However, if violation of the state right is predicated on an act incorporating elements beyond mere reproduction or the like, there is no preemption. The court ruled that the conversion claim passed the preemption test, and therefore that the district court's general damages award in plaintiff's favor on this cause of action should stand. In so ruling, the court found that conversion of tangible property involves actions different from those proscribed by the copyright laws, and thus is not preempted (743 F.2d 630, 635) .

[b] No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Interests Different From Those Protected by Federal Copyright Law

The facts and procedural background of G.S. Rasmussen & Assoc. v. Kalitta Flying Service (9th Cir. 1992) 958 F.2d 896 , are discussed in § 146.23[3][a]. In Rasmussen, the court of appeals held the use of a Supplemental Type Certificate to obtain Federal Aviation Administration certification of the airworthiness of a type of aircraft is a property right under California law. As such, the protection of that property interest is not preempted by federal law, because that interest (the right to use a certificate to obtain a valuable governmental privilege) is different from the interest (the right to copy original works) protected by federal copyright and patent law (958 F.2d 896, 908) . Plaintiff was thereby permitted to bring state law actions for unjust enrichment and for damages for conversion arising out of defendant's unauthorized use of plaintiff's certificate (958 F.2d 896, 906-907) .

The facts and procedural background of Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630 , are discussed in § 146.23[3][a]. In Oddo, plaintiff's complaint for infringement of copyright contained a cause of action under California law for breach of one partner's fiduciary duty to another partner. The court of appeals held that 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) did not preempt this cause of action, because a partner's duty to his or her copartner is quite different from the interests protected by copyright (743 F.2d 630, 635) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Preemption When Cause of Action Under State Law Involves Actions Different From Those Proscribed by Federal Copyright Law

In Grosso v. Miramax Film Corp. (9th Cir. 2004) 383 F.3d 965 , the plaintiff alleged a state law claim based on the defendant's implied promise to pay the reasonable value of material that the plaintiff disclosed to the defendant [see Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 738, 299 P.2d 257 ; § 146.61[3][a]]. In holding that the claim was not preempted by the Copyright Act, the court stated that to survive preemption, the state cause of action must protect rights that are qualitatively different from the rights protected by copyright; in other words, the complaint must allege an extra element that changes the nature of the action. The implied promise to pay required by Desny is such an extra element for purposes of avoiding preemption (383 F.3d 965, 968) .

In Anderson v. Nidorf (9th Cir. 1994) 26 F.3d 100 , petitioner sought a writ ofhabeas corpus to challenge his conviction under Penal Code § 653w, which provides criminal penalties for selling a sound recording without disclosing its "origin" (that is, manufacturer, artist, producer, etc.). Among other things, petitioner argued that the statute was preempted by federal copyright law. In affirming the district court's denial of the petition, the court of appeals rejected this argument. The court noted that the copyright law [17 U.S.C. § 301(a)] preempts a state-created right if that right may be abridged by an act which, in and of itself, would infringe one of the exclusive rights under the copyright law. However, if violation of the state right is predicated on an act incorporating elements beyond mere reproduction or the like, there is no preemption (citing Oddo v. Ries (9th Cir. 1984) 743 F.2d 630, 635 , discussed in § 146.23[3][a]). The court observed that although the prevention of pirating of sound recordings is one purpose of Penal Code § 653w, the statute also has the purpose of protecting the public from being victimized by false and deceptive commercial practices. The statute criminalizes selling recordings whose labels fail to disclose the manufacturer or author; it does not criminalize unauthorized duplication or "bootlegging" of copyrighted works. The court therefore held federal copyright laws do not preempt the state statute (26 F.3d 100, 102) .

Summit Mach. Tool Mfg. v. Victor CNC Systems (9th Cir. 1993) 7 F.3d 1434 , is discussed in § 146.21[3][a].

In Durgom v. Janowiak (1999) 74 Cal. App. 4th 178, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 619 , the plaintiff sued to enforce an assignment of royalties on a copyrighted song. After the parties made an oral settlement agreement in open court, the defendant moved to dismiss for lack of subject-matter jurisdiction on the ground that the copyright had revested in the author and the plaintiff's right to receive royalties therefore had been cut off. The defendant urged that the presence of this issue in the case invoked exclusive federal copyright jurisdiction. The court of appeal observed and held that "federal jurisdiction cannot be based solely on a federal defense. This is true even where the parties agree that the federal defense is the only disputed issue to be resolved. State courts are fully competent to adjudicate state-law breach of contract claims, even where the underlying contract involves the ownership, assignment, or license of a copyright, much less the mere assignment of royalties from a copyrighted work. Thus, despite [the] federal copyright law defense, the trial court had jurisdiction" (74 Cal. App. 4th 178, 180) .

In Gladstone v. Hillel (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 977, 250 Cal. Rptr. 372 , a jewelry designer brought a state action against his former business associates for fraud and conversion, alleging that they misappropriated his design molds, jewelry, sketches, and other work materials in a business dispute. Plaintiff further alleged that defendants went on to produce a line of jewelry incorporating plaintiff's designs, either by directly using defendant's design molds or by making new molds from jewelry he had completed. The trial court awarded plaintiff damages and issued an injunction restraining defendants from using for any purpose plaintiff's molds, jewelry, sketches, designs, and other representations of plaintiff's work in their possession.

The court of appeal modified the injunction, so it would be more closely tailored to rights conferred by state law, and affirmed the damages award (203 Cal. App. 3d 977, 990) . In holding that the preemptive effect of federal copyright law did not preclude the admission of evidence showing that defendants copied plaintiff's molds and jewelry, the court used an "extra element test" to distinguish a valid state cause of action from one equivalent to a copyright claim: If, under state law, the act of reproduction, performance, distribution, or display will in itself infringe the state-created right, then the right is preempted; however, if other elements are required, in addition to or instead of, the acts of reproduction, performance, distribution, or display, in order to constitute a state-created cause of action, then the right does not lie within the general scope of copyright and there is no preemption. The extra element must be one that changes the nature of the action so that it is qualitatively different from a copyright infringement claim. Therefore, a state cause of action for conversion is not preempted, because conversion involves the extra element of wrongful possession of the tangible embodiment of a work (203 Cal. App. 3d 977, 987) .

Note that former Bus. & Prof. Code § 17300, which the Gladstone court referred to in discussing proof of violations of state unfair competition statutes, was repealed in 1991 in response to the United States Supreme Court opinion in Bonito Boats v. Thunder Craft Boats (1989) 489 U.S. 141, 167-168, 109 S. Ct. 971, 103 L. Ed. 2d 118 . Bonito Boats is discussed in Ch. 235, Unfair Competition .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal Preemption

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.24

§ 146.24 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Under State Law Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1)]--Subject Matter of Cause of Action as Not Within Subject Matter of Copyright Under Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. §§ 102, 103]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER STATE LAW IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976 BECAUSE THE CAUSE OF ACTION INVOLVES SUBJECT MATTER THAT IS NOT WITHIN THE SUBJECT MATTER OF COPYRIGHT WITHIN THE MEANING OF THAT ACT.

A. Preemption Test. Nothing in the Copyright Act of 1976, Title 17 of the United States Code Section 101 et seq., annuls or limits any rights or remediesunder the common law or statutes of any state with respect to subject matter that does not come within the subject matter of copyright as specified by Title 17 of the United States Code Sections 102 and 103, including works of authorship not fixed in any tangible medium of expression (17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1)).

[Optional] B. Ideas Are Not Within Subject Matter of Copyright Act of 1976. A claim of misappropriation of ideas does not implicate the federal copyright law because copyright protection for an original work of authorship does not extend to any idea (17 U.S.C. § 102(b); Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90, 92 (applying California law); United States Golf Association v. Arroyo Software Corporation (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 607, 621-622, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708).

[Optional] C. Action Based on Unauthorized Use of Plaintiff's Likeness Is Not Preempted. An action that is based on the defendant's unauthorized use of the plaintiff's likeness, even if that likeness is captured in a copyrightable photograph, is not preempted when the plaintiff asserts a state-law right not essentially equivalent to an exclusive right under the Copyright Act, since a human likeness is not itself copyrightable subject matter (KNB Enterprises v. Matthews (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 362, 365, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party's cause of action under state law is preempted by federal copyright law, when the state cause of action seeks to protect subject matter that does not come within the subject matter of the Copyright Act of 1976, as specified by 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103.

Optional Paragraph B may be used when the subject matter of the cause of action is an idea. Ideas are expressly excluded from the subject matter of copyright protection under the Copyright Act of 1976 [17 U.S.C. § 102(b)]. Optional Paragraph C may be used if the action is based on the unauthorized use of the plaintiff's likeness, since a human likeness is not copyrightable subject matter (even though it may be captured in a copyrightable photograph), as long as the plaintiff asserts a right that is not essentially equivalent to an exclusive right under the Copyright Act. An example of such a right would be the right of publicity protected by Civ. Code § 3344.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of federal preemption of claims under state law. These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the subject matter sought to be protected does not come within the subject matter of the Copyright Act of 1976, as specified by 17 U.S.C. §§ 102 and 103 [see 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1)]. For example, counsel may include facts showing that the state cause of action is predicated on the copying of an idea, or of a procedure, process, system, method of operation, concept, principle, or discovery [see, e.g., Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90, 92 (applying California law to cause of action for misappropriation of idea contained in written work)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in § 146.20.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of the protection of ideas under state law, together with forms for use in litigating state causes of action not preempted by federal law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ideas Are Not Within Subject Matter of Copyright Act of 1976

In no case does copyright protection for an original work of authorship extend to any idea, procedure, process, system, method of operation, concept, principle, or discovery, regardless of the form in which it is described, explained, illustrated, or embodied in the work (17 U.S.C. § 102(b)).

In Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90 , plaintiff developed a format for a television series and eventually copyrighted a script for a television show. This was a dramatic show about an interracial, crime-fighting rock band. The members of the band were recent graduates of the same high school, where they had formed the band. In the script, the band members fight crime using their athletic talents. During the time that plaintiff was developing his format, one of defendants also developed a proposed television series, involving a multiracial rock band of junior high school students. A primary theme of this series was the interaction of youths in a multiracial setting. After copyrighting his script, plaintiff submitted it to a second defendant and that defendant's production company. Subsequent to plaintiff's submission of his script, a series was broadcast on network television, produced by the first defendant. Plaintiff then commenced an action alleging generally that the broadcast series bore a strong resemblance to the script that plaintiff had submitted to the second defendant and that defendant's production company. Plaintiff alleged that this resemblance resulted from the first defendant's access to plaintiff's script through the second defendant's productioncompany and from the first defendant's misappropriation of the ideas contained in plaintiff's script. Plaintiff sought recovery under federal law for copyright and trademark infringement. He also sought recovery under California law, on a variety of theories, for the unauthorized use of the ideas in his script. The district court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The Second Circuit reversed the district court's judgment. The court held that the alleged similarities between plaintiff's script and the broadcast series were sufficient to allow a trier of fact to find that plaintiff's ideas were misappropirated under California law (751 F.2d 90 95) . In so holding, the court noted that plaintiff had never alleged that defendants actually copied from his script; he had only alleged that they misappropriated ideas contained in the script. Plaintiff claimed an interest in the ideas contained in the script, and sought redress for misappropriation of the ideas, and not for their literary or artistic expression. The court held that plaintiff's claim did not implicate the federal copyright laws, and noted that plaintiff correctly withdrew his copyright and trademark infringement claims in the district court (751 F.2d 90 92) .

In United States Golf Association v. Arroyo Software Corporation (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 607, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 708 , a national golf association (USGA) brought an action for common law misappropriation against a computer software company, seeking to enjoin an unauthorized commercial use of USGA's handicap system, formulas, and service marks. In the trial court defendant conceded that a golfing handicap formula "is not the type of subject matter that can receive copyright protection."

Affirming a permanent injunction, the court of appeal rejected a defense contention that because the handicap formulas at issue constituted a "process" or "system" that is uncopyrightable within meaning of 17 U.S.C. § 102(b), Congress intended any such formulas or system should be available freely to the public without limitation. The court held that USGA's claims based on misappropriation were not preempted by federal copyright law because none of the prerequisites for preemption applied in that USGA's handicap system and formulas were not works of authorship within the subject of copyright, and the state common law rights at issue were not equivalent to any of the exclusive rights granted by the Copyright Act. What USGA sought and the trial court ordered was an injunction preventing defendant from using the USGA formulas or misappropriating them as its own. USGA's common law misappropriation claim did not seek to bar a simple copying of the formulas. "Use" and "appropriation" are not among the "exclusive rights" granted to copyright owners under the Copyright Act. Because use and appropriation are not equivalent to the exclusive rights granted to copyright owners, USGA's misappropriation claim was not preempted (69 Cal. App. 4th 607, 621-622) .

[b] Action Based on Unauthorized Use of Plaintiff's Likeness Is Not Preempted

In KNB Enterprises v. Matthews (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 362, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 713 , the plaintiff sued under Civ. Code § 3344, claiming violation of the right of publicity of the plaintiff's assignor, a model whose likeness the defendant, without authorization, used as part of the revenue-generating content on a web site. The likeness was embodied in a copyrighted photograph. The trial court granted the defendant's summary judgment motion based on an assertion of preemption (even though the plaintiff made no claim under the Copyright Act), but the court of appeal reversed. The appellate court held that the action was not a copyright infringement action because the asserted right of publicity was not essentially equivalent to any exclusive right under the Copyright Act, and the model's likeness was not copyrightable subject matter. The action was not preempted. It was irrelevant that the likeness in question was embodied in a copyrighted photograph (78 Cal. App. 4th 362, 365) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawCivil Infringement ActionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal Preemption

166 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.25

§ 146.25 Opposing Contention That State Statute Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(c)]--State Law Governs Protection of Sound Recordings Fixed Before February 15, 1972

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify statute, e.g., SECTION 653h OF THE PENAL CODE] IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976, BECAUSE NOTHING IN THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976 ANNULS OR LIMITS ANY RIGHTS OR REMEDIES UNDER THE COMMON LAW OR STATUTES OF ANY STATE WITH RESPECT TO SOUND RECORDINGS FIXED BEFORE FEBRUARY 15, 1972, UNTIL FEBRUARY 15, 2067.

A. Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976. With respect to sound recordings fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972, any rights or remedies under the common law or statutes of any state shall not be annulled or limited by Title 17 of the United States Code until February 15, 2067 (17 U.S.C. § 301(c); Goldstein v. California (1973) 412 U.S. 546, 571, 93 S. Ct. 2303, 37 L. Ed. 2d 163).

B. "Sound Recording" Defined. A "sound recording" is a work that results from the fixation of a series of musical, spoken, or other sounds. A "sound recording" does not include the sounds accompanying a motion picture or other audiovisual work, regardless of the nature of the material objects, such as disks, tapes, or other phonorecords, in which the sounds are embodied (17 U.S.C. § 101).

C. When Work Is Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression. A work is "fixed" in a tangible medium of expression when its embodiment in a copy or phonorecord, by or under the authority of the author, is sufficiently permanent or stable to permit it to be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated for a period of more than transitory duration. A work consisting of sounds, images, or both, that are being transmitted, is "fixed" for purposes of the Copyright Act of 1976 if a fixation of the work is being made simultaneously with its transmission (17 U.S.C. § 101).

[Optional] D. "Phonorecord" Defined. A "phonorecord" is a material object in which sounds, other than those accompanying a motion picuure or other audiovisual work, are fixed by any method now known or later developed, and from which the sounds can be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated, either directly or with the aid of a machine or device. The term "phonorecord" includes the material object in which the sounds are first fixed (17 U.S.C. § 101).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that state common or statutory law governing the protection of sound recordings fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972, is preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) [see 17 U.S.C. § 301(c)]. If the tangible medium of expression involved is a phonorecord, Optional Paragraph D may be used to define the term "phonorecord."

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of preemption under the Copyright Act of 1976. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the sound recording in issue was fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972.

[b] Criminal Penalties for Unauthorized Use of Sound Recordings Fixed Before February 15, 1972

In addition to the civil copyright protection of Civ. Code § 980(a)(2), various criminal penalties provide protection under California law for owners of sound recordings fixed in tangible media of expression before February 15, 1972 [see Penal Code §§ 653h (violations relating to transferring sound recordings), 653s, 653u (violations relating to recording live performances), 653w (violations relating to nondisclosure of origins of recording)]. When a person is convicted under Penal Code § 653h, 653s, 653u, or 653w, a court must, in addition to other statutory penalties, order the forfeiture, destruction, or other disposition of all articles on which sounds can be recorded or stored, and all devices for manufacturing, reproducing, or assembling these articles [Penal Code § 653v]. Neither Penal Code § 653h nor 653s enlarges or diminishes the rights and remedies of parties in civil litigation [see Penal Code §§ 653h(f), 653s(e)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of the protection, under state law, of sound recordings fixed before February 15, 1972, and forms for use in litigating state causes of action not preempted by federal law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preemptive Effect of Copyright Act of 1976

In Goldstein v. California (1973) 412 U.S. 546, 93 S. Ct. 2303, 37 L. Ed. 2d 163 , defendants purchased and copied tape or phonograph recordings produced by companies with whom they had no contractual relationship. They labeled the duplicates in like manner as the originals, and distributed them for sale in competition with the originals. Defendants did not pay for the use of the album titles and artists' names that they copied, did not pay the various artists whose performances were copied, and did not pay those who incurred the costs of producing the originals. The state prosecuted defendants for "tape piracy" or "record piracy" in violation of Penal Code § 653h, which prohibits unauthorized duplication of fixed recordings with the intent to sell the duplicates. Defendants moved to dismiss the charges on the ground that Penal Code § 653h was preempted by U.S. Const., art. I, § 8, cl. 8 (the "Copyright Clause") and the federal copyright law. On denial of this motion, defendants pleaded no contest and were convicted on several counts. The appellate department of the superior court affirmed their convictions, and defendants thereafter sought review by the United States Supreme Court.

The United States Supreme Court affirmed, holding that Penal Code § 653h did not conflict with either U.S. Const., art. I, § 8, cl. 8 or the Copyright Act of 1909 (the federal copyright law in effect at the time of defendants' acts) (412 U.S. 546, 571) . Under the Copyright Act of 1909, federal copyright protection was available to sound recordings fixed, published, and copyrighted on and after February 15, 1972, and before January 1, 1975, whereas the recordings that petitioners copied were all fixed before February 15, 1972 (412 U.S. 546, 552) . The Court concluded that there was no national interest in copyright protection that would require any inference that the states, under the Copyright Clause, had relinquished all power to grant copyright protection (412 U.S. 546, 558, 560, 561-562) . The Court distinguished its prior holdings in Sears, Roebuck & Co. v. Stiffel Co. (1964) 376 U.S. 225, 84 S. Ct. 784, 11 L. Ed. 2d 661 , and Compco Corp. v. Day-Brite Lighting (1964) 376 U.S. 234, 84 S. Ct. 779, 11 L. Ed. 2d 669 , (discussed in § 146.21[3][a]), by holding that Congress, under the Copyright Act of 1909, had indicated neither that it wished to protect, nor to free from protection, recordings of musical performances fixed before February 15, 1972 (412 U.S. 546, 571) . Thus, Congress left the states free to act with respect to sound recordings fixed prior to February 15, 1972, and there was no conflict such as that which had existed in Sears and Compco between federal copyright law and state unfair competition law (412 U.S. 546, 570) .

Counsel should note that the Copyright Act of 1976 incorporates the holding in Goldstein, with the proviso that state protection of sound recordings fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972 will eventually be prempted on February 15, 2067 [17 U.S.C. § 301(c); see Notes of Committee on the Judiciary to § 301, House Report No. 94-1476].

[b] "Sound Recording" Defined

As defined in 17 U.S.C. § 101, copyrightable sound recordings are original works of authorship comprising an aggregate of musical, spoken, or other sounds that have been fixed in tangible form. The copyrightable work comprises the aggregation of sounds, rather than the tangible medium of fixation. Thus "sound recordings," as copyrightable subject matter, are distinguished from "phonorecords," the latter being physical objects in which sounds are fixed. "Sound recordings" are also distinguished from any copyrighted literary, dramatic, or musical works that may be reproduced on a "phonorecord" [see Notes of Committee on the Judiciary to § 101, House Report No. 94-1476].

The copyrightable elements in a sound recording will usually, although not always, involve authorship, both on the part of the performer whose performance is captured, and on the part of the record producer responsible for setting up the recording session, capturing and electronically processing the sounds, and compiling and editing them to make the final sound recording. There may, however, be cases when the record producer's contribution is so minimal that the performance is the only copyrightable element in the work. On the other hand, there may be cases (for example, recordings of birdcalls or sounds of racing cars) when only the record producer's contribution is copyrightable [see Notes of Committee on the Judiciary to § 101, House Report No. 94-1476].

Sound tracks of motion pictures are expressly included in the definition of "motion pictures" under 17 U.S.C. § 101 and are excluded from the definition of "sound recordings" [17 U.S.C. § 101; see Notes of Committee on the Judiciary to § 101, House Report No. 94-1476].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon

LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal PreemptionCopyright LawSubject MatterSound Recordings

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.26

§ 146.26 Opposing Contention That Cause of Action Under Federal Statute Is Preempted by Federal Copyright Law [17 U.S.C. § 301(d)]--Federal Copyright Law Does Not Affect State Jurisdiction Over Claims Arising Under Other Federal Laws

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S] CAUSE OF ACTION UNDER _____ [specify federal statute, e.g., SECTION 605 OF TITLE 47 OF THE UNITED STATES CODE] IS NOT PREEMPTED BY THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976, BECAUSE NOTHING IN THE COPYRIGHT ACT OF 1976 ANNULS OR LIMITS ANY RIGHTS OR REMEDIES UNDER ANY OTHER FEDERAL STATUTE.

A. Federal Statute Is Not Preempted. By their terms, the preemptive provisions ofSection 301 of Title 17 of the United States Codeare limited to state law, and nothing in the Copyright Act of 1976 annuls or limits any rights or remedies under any other federal statute (17 U.S.C. § 301(d); California Satellite Systems, Inc. v. Nichols (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 64, 216 Cal. Rptr. 180).

B. Preemption of State Law as Unrelated to State Court Subject Matter Jurisdiction of Federal Claim. When a state court in fact does have concurrent jurisdiction with the federal courts to enforce rights and obligations arising under a federal statute, it is a non sequitur to argue that because specified state causes of action are preempted by the Copyright Act of 1976, state courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to entertain a federal claim, even one sounding in copyright (California Satellite Systems, Inc. v. Nichols (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 64, 216 Cal. Rptr. 180 ; see 17 U.S.C. §§ 301(a), (d)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party's cause of action under a federal statute is preempted by federal copyright law, and that therefore, the state court is deprived of subject matter jurisdiction of the federal claim.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of preemption under the Copyright Act of 1976. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see California Satellite Systems, Inc. v. Nichols (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 61, 216 Cal. Rptr. 180 (appeal from order granting preliminary injunction)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that there exists no Congressional directive placing exclusive jurisdiction of the federal claim in the federal courts or that there exists no disabling incompatibility between the federal claim and state-court adjudication [see California Satellite Systems, Inc. v. Nichols (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 61, 216 Cal. Rptr. 180].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Statute Is Not Preempted

In California Satellite Systems, Inc. v. Nichols (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 216 Cal. Rptr. 180 , plaintiff was engaged in the distribution of Home Box Office (hereinafter HBO) television programs to subscribers. By contractual arrangements, plaintiff paid HBO for the exclusive license to distribute HBO programming in the area. Plaintiff also paid a licensed common carrier to transmit the microwave signal by which HBO subscribers received their programming. Plaintiff, in turn, charged its HBO subscribers a monthly service fee, plus an initial charge for supplying and installing a specially designed microwave antenna, a down converter (to translate the microwave signal into a frequency transmitted by ordinary television channels), and a power supply for the converter. Plaintiff had invested substantial sums to enable it to provide exclusive HBO programming to its subscribers. These sums included the costs of purchasing and servicing special equipment, programming license fees, and common carrier fees. Plaintiff sought preliminary injunctive relief under 47 U.S.C. § 605 (injunctive relief to enjoin unauthorized interception and use of microwave transmissions of television signals intended by distributor for exclusive use of paying subscribers) to enjoin defendants from manufacturing, selling, and installing microwave antennae, down converters, and power supplies locally for the purpose of enabling residents in plaintiff's service area to receive HBO television programs without paying the fee plaintiff charged its subscribers. The trial court issued a preliminary injunction, restraining defendants, during the pendency of the action, from selling or distributing any directional antenna, down converter, or power supply with the intent, understanding, or knowledge that the equipment would or may be used by residents in plaintiff's service area to intercept and receive plaintiff's HBO programs. Defendants appealed from the order granting the injunction, contending, among other things, that because plaintiff's complaint sounded in copyright infringement, it was preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301(a), and the state court lacked subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate the claim.

The court of appeal held that the state court may entertain a private action under 47 U.S.C. § 605 and affirmed the issuance of the preliminary injunction based on probable violations of 47 U.S.C. § 605. Addressing defendants' preemption defense, the court of appeal saw the issue not as one of preemption but one of a state court's subject matter jurisdiction over private causes of action arising under 47 U.S.C. § 605. The court found it clear that 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) preempts legal and equitable causes of action brought under the common law or statutes of any state which are equivalent to any of the exclusive rights within the general scope of copyright. But, by its terms, the preemptive effect of 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) is limited to state law. The court held that nothing in the Copyright Act of 1976 annuls or limits any rights or remedies under any other federal statute (170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 64) .

[b] Preemption of State Law as Unrelated to State Court Subject Matter Jurisdiction of Federal Claim

The facts and procedural background of California Satellite Systems, Inc. v. Nichols (1985) 170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 216

Cal. Rptr. 180 , are discussed in § 146.26[3][a]. In California Satellite, the court of appeal held that 17 U.S.C. § 301(a) of the Copyright Act of 1976 did not deprive the state trial court of subject matter jurisdiction to adjudicate plaintifff's claim based on 47 U.S.C. § 605 of the Communications Act of 1934. In so holding, the court noted that the preliminary injunction was issued on the basis of a probable violation of a federal, rather than a state, statute. Therefore, the court held it a non sequitur to argue that because state causes of action are preempted by 17 U.S.C. § 301(a), state courts lack subject matter jurisdiction to entertain a federal claim, even one sounding in copyright (170 Cal. App. 3d 56, 64) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismCommon LawCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsApplication of FederalismFederal Preemption

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
A. Preemption by Federal Copyright Law of Actions Under California and Other Federal Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities §§ 146.27-146.39

[Reserved]

§§ 146.27[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
B. Rights in Literary Property Under California Copyright Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.40

§ 146.40 Supporting Contention That Author of Original Work Has Exclusive Ownership Under California Copyright Law in Representation or Expression of Work--Work Not Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression [Civ. Code § 980(a)(1)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

UNDER CALIFORNIA LAW, _____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] HAS AN EXCLUSIVE OWNERSHIP IN THE_____ [REPRESENTATION or EXPRESSION] OF HIS/HER WORK BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS THE AUTHOR OF THE WORK, THE WORK IS AN ORIGINAL WORK OF AUTHORSHIP, AND THE WORK IS NOT FIXED IN A TANGIBLE MEDIUM OF EXPRESSION.

A. Exclusive Ownership in Representation or Expression of Work Under California Law. The author of any original work of authorship that is not fixed in any tangible medium of expression has an exclusive ownership in the representation or expression of the work as against all persons, except one who originally and independently creates the same or similar work (Civ. Code § 980(a)(1)).

B. When Work Is Not Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression. A work shall be considered not fixed when it is not embodied in a tangible medium of expression or when its embodiment in a tangible medium of expression is not sufficiently permanent or stable to permit it to be perceived, reproduced, or otherwise communicated for a period of more than transitory duration, either directly or with the aid of a machine or device (Civ. Code § 980(a)(1)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the author of an original work of authorship that is not fixed in a tangible medium of expression has an exclusive ownership, under California law, in the representation or expression of the work, as against all persons, except one who originally and independently creates the same or similar work [see Civ. Code § 980(a)(1)].

The foregoing points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of an author's exclusive ownership in the representation or expression of his, her, or its original work of authorship. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that (1) the party supporting the contention is the author of the work, (2) the work is one of original authorship, and (3) the work is not fixed in a tangible medium of expression [see Civ. Code § 980(a)(1)].

[b] Works Not Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression

By its terms, 17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1) explicitly preserves copyright protection under state law for works that have not been fixed in any tangible medium of expression [17 U.S.C. § 301(b)(1)]. Examples of these works could include choreography that has never been filmed or notated, an extemporaneous speech, original works of authorship communicated solely through conversation or live broadcasts, a dramatic sketch or musical composition improvised or developed from memory and without being recorded or written down, or data displayed on the cathode ray tube of a computer terminal when the data are not displayed for a period of more than transitory duration. Works not fixed in a tangible medium of expression are not subject to the preemptive effect of 17 U.S.C. § 301(a), and are subject to protection under state statute or common law until fixed in tangible form [see Notes of Committee on the Judiciary to 17 U.S.C. § 301, House Report No. 94-1476].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of protection, under California law, of original works of authorship not fixed in a tangible medium of expression, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawConstitutional ProtectionsGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterLiterary WorksGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterLiterary WorksScope of Protection

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
B. Rights in Literary Property Under California Copyright Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.41

§ 146.41 Supporting Contention That Author Has Exclusive Ownership Under California Law in Sound Recording--Sound Recording Fixed Before February 15, 1972 [Civ. Code § 980(a)(2)]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

UNDER CALIFORNIA LAW,_____ [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] HAS AN EXCLUSIVE OWNERSHIP IN THE SOUND RECORDING UNTIL FEBRUARY 15, 2047, BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS THE AUTHOR OF THE WORK, THE WORK IS AN ORIGINAL WORK OF AUTHORSHIP, AND THE WORK CONSISTS OF A SOUND RECORDING INITIALLY FIXED BEFORE FEBRUARY 15, 1972.

A. Exclusive Ownership in Sound Recording Fixed Before February 15, 1972. The author of an original work of authorship consisting of a sound recording initially fixed prior to February 15, 1972, has an exclusive ownership in the sound recording until February 15, 2047 (Civ. Code § 980(a)(2)).

B. Extent of Exclusive Ownership. The author has an exclusive ownership in the sound recording, until February 15, 2047, as against all persons except one who independently makes or duplicates another sound recording that does not directly or indirectly recapture the actual sounds fixed in the prior sound recording, but consists entirely of an independent fixation of other sounds, even though those sounds imitate or simulate the sounds contained in the prior sound recording (Civ. Code § 980(a)(2)).

C. "Sound Recording" Defined. [See § 146.25, Paragraph B.].

D. When Work Is Fixed in Tangible Medium of Expression. [See § 146.25, Paragraph C.]

[Optional] E. "Phonorecord" Defined. [See § 146.25, Paragraph D.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the author of an original work of authorship that consists of a sound recording initially fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972, has an exclusive ownership, under California law, in the sound recording, until February 15, 2047, as against all persons, except one who independently makes or duplicates another sound recording that does not directly or indirectly recapture the actual sounds fixed in the prior sound recording [see Civ. Code § 980(a)(2)].

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of an author's exclusive ownership in a sound recording fixed before February 15, 1972. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that (1) the party supporting the contention is the author of the work, (2) the work is one of original authorship, and (3) the work consists of a sound recording initially fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972 [see Civ. Code § 980(a)(2)].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of protection, under California law, of sound recordings fixed in a tangible medium of expression before February 15, 1972, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawOwner RightsState RegulationCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterSound Recordings

171 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
B. Rights in Literary Property Under California Copyright Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities §§ 146.42-146.59

[Reserved]

§§ 146.42[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
C. Protection of Ideas Under California Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.60

§ 146.60 Supporting Contention That Purveyor of Idea May Recover in Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract for Disclosure of Valuable Idea

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It may also be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 146.24.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] CAN RECOVER IN CONTRACT, EXPRESS OR IMPLIED-IN-FACT, FOR HIS/HER DISCLOSURE OF A VALUABLE IDEA, BECAUSE THE POLICY THAT PRECLUDES PROTECTION OF AN ABSTRACT IDEA BY COPYRIGHT DOES NOT PREVENT ITS PROTECTION BY CONTRACT.

A. Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Is Enforceable. California law will enforce a contract, whether express or implied-in-fact, to pay for the disclosure of an uncopyrightable idea (Landsberg v. Scrabble Crossword Game Players, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 485, 489 , cert. denied 469 U.S. 1037, 105 S. Ct. 513, 83 L. Ed. 2d 403 ; Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 605, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130).

B. Idea May Be Subject Matter of Contract. The policy that precludes protection of an abstract idea by copyright does not prevent its protection by contract, and even though an idea is not property subject to exclusive ownership, its disclosure may be of substantial benefit to the person to whom it is disclosed (Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 733, 299 P.2d 257 ; Blaustein v. Burton (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 178, 88 Cal. Rptr. 319).

C. Adequacy of Consideration. An idea, if valuable, may be the subject of contract, and its disclosure may be valid consideration for a promise to pay (Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 792, 256 P.2d 947 ; Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 601, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130).

D. Novelty or Concreteness Not Required. An idea that can be the subject matter of a contract need not be novel or concrete (Minniear v. Tors (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 502, 72 Cal. Rptr. 287 ; Chandler v. Roach (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 435, 443, 319 P.2d 776).

[Optional] E. Past Consideration Supports Express Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea. An express promise to pay for the disclosure of an idea will be enforced even though the promise is made after the disclosure and, strictly speaking, the consideration for the promise is "past," because the promise is deemed supported by moral consideration (Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 738, 299 P.2d 257 ; Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 605-606, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a party may recover in contract for breach of a promise to pay for the disclosure of his or her ideas. These points and authorities may be used to support the contention that recovery is available on either an express contract theory or an implied-in-fact contract theory. Optional Paragraph E may be used to support the contention that past consideration will support an express or implied-in-fact contract to pay for the disclosure of an idea.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of recovery in contract for breach of a promise to pay for the disclosure of ideas. For example, they may be adapted for use in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint seeking recovery in contract for the unauthorized use of an idea [see Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 779, 256 P.2d 947]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Landsberg v. Scrabble Crossword Game Players, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 485, 486 , cert. denied 469 U.S. 1037, 105 S. Ct. 513, 83 L. Ed. 2d 403 (appeal from judgment)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing either the existence of an express contract to pay for the disclosure of an idea, or conduct from which a contract to pay for the disclosure of an idea can be inferred.

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 146.64 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and a form for use in seeking recovery under theories of breach of express and implied-in-fact contract to pay for the disclosure of an idea, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Is Enforceable

In Landsberg v. Scrabble Crossword Game Players, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 736 F.2d 485 , cert. denied 469 U.S. 1037, 105 S. Ct. 513, 83 L. Ed. 2d 403 , plaintiffdeveloped a systematic strategy for playing Scrabble. He committed his system to writing in a manuscript and took steps to publish the manuscript. In response to his request for permission to use the word "Scrabble," the owner of the "Scrabble" trademark and producer of Scrabble brand crossword games requested that he send it a copy of his manuscript for evaluation. After plaintiff did so, the owner sent a copy of the manuscript to an expert "Scrabble" player to evaluate plaintiff's work. The expert found the work excellent, and contracted with the "Scrabble" owner to produce a section on strategy for a "Scrabble" handbook that the owner was considering producing. Part of the contract included an outline that the expert had copied from plaintiff's manuscript. In the meantime, the owner entered into negotiations with plaintiff for rights in the manuscript. The district court subsequently found these negotiations to be a bad-faith tactic to keep plaintiff dangling while the owner prepared its handbook based on plaintiff's work (736 F.2d 485, 487) . Plaintiff finally demanded the return or destruction of all copies of his manuscript in the owner's possession. However, the district court found not only that the owner kept copies of the manuscript, but also that the expert used his copy of the manuscript as the basis for his section of defendants' handbook (736 F.2d 485, 487) . The owner then severed its relationship with plaintiff shortly before it brought out its "Scrabble" handbook. Plaintiff sued the owner, its corporate subsidiary, and a publisher in a California superior court on several causes of action, including infringement of common-law copyright and breach of contract, under California law, to pay him for the use of his manuscript. Defendants successfully moved to have the case removed to the United States Distrit Court for the Central District of California. After a bench trial, the district court rendered judgment for plaintiff on his common-law copyright cause of action. However, the owner ignored the judgment and continued to sell and print its handbook. Plaintiff sued again for continuing copyright infringement, this time under the Copyright Act of 1976, rather than California law, because of the preemptive effect of 17 U.S.C. § 301(a). The court granted plaintiff summary judgment and damages. The owner appealed from both judgments of the district court.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit reversed the district court's judgment on the infringement claim, finding that defendants did not infringe on plaintiff's manuscript in the production of the handbook. The court noted that if it were to hold defendants' handbook to be an infringement, it did not see how anyone could state plaintiff's ideas without also being held to have infringed, and plaintiff would, in effect, have obtained a copyright on the ideas contained in his work. However, the court remanded the case to the district court for further proceedings on the breach of contract claim (736 F.2d 485, 490) . In so ruling, the court held that California law will enforce a contract, whether express or implied-in-fact, to pay for the disclosure of an uncopyrightable idea. The court noted that the district court found that because of the owner's conduct, plaintiff reasonably believed that the owner would not use or copy his manuscript, or any part of it, without his consent and without payment to him of an acceptable sum. The court held that this was conduct that could create an implied-in-fact contract (736 F.2d 485, 489) .

In Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130 , plaintiffs commenced an action for breach of express and implied-in-fact contract against a television production company and a television producer. In their complaint, plaintiffs alleged that they conceived an idea for a television format about an underwater adventure series and submitted the format in written form, together with story outlines, a screenplay, and a proposed budget, to the production company. Plaintiffs alleged that it was expressly and impliedly agreed between plaintiffs and the production company that if the company used plaintiffs' format, the company would pay for its use. During this time, the producer was an employee of the production company. Subsequently, both defendants produced a television program entitled "Sea Hunt," an underwater adventure program that, according to plaintiffs, used, exploited, and utilized plaintiffs' format and story outlines. Plaintiffs received no compensation from defendants for use of the format and outlines. After a jury verdict for plaintiffs, defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The trial court granted the motions, and plaintiffs appealed from both the judgment and the order.

The court of appeal reversed judgment notwithstanding the verdict in regard to the production company and affirmed in regard to the producer. The court also affirmed the order granting a new trial in regard to the production company and held the order ineffective in regard to the producer because judgment was affirmed in regard to him (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 614) . The court held that the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure of plaintiffs' idea, format, and story outlines to the production company supported the jury's implied finding that there was a contract between plaintiffs and the company (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 606) . The court noted that the policy that precludes protection of an abstract idea by copyright does not prevent its protection by contract (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 601) . Recovery for the use of an idea must be based on a true contract that, were it not for precedent, the court would prefer to call an express contract, which may be proved by either express promises or circumstantial evidence. However, the court recognized that usage, together with Civ. Code § 1621(defining an implied contract), had established the term "implied-in-fact" for express contracts proved by circumstantial evidence. The court distinguished express and implied-in-fact contracts from implied-in-law contracts, or quasi-contracts, which are imposed by the law for the purpose of bringing about justice regardless of the parties' intentions. The court then held that recovery for the use of an idea must be based on either an express or an implied-in-fact contract. According to the court, the law will not imply a promise, which has never been made expressly or impliedly, topay for something that defendant can have for the taking (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 605) .

[b] Idea May Be Subject Matter of Contract

In Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 299 P.2d 257 , plaintiff telephoned the office of one of defendants, a motion picture producer, and asked to speak to the producer. At the insistence of the producer's secretary that plaintiff explain the nature of his call, plaintiff told her of an idea he had for a motion picture. Plaintiff sought to send the producer a copy of the story, but when the secretary learned of its length, she stated that the producer would not read it and that he wanted stories in synopsis form. At the secretary's invitation, and in a subsequent telephone call, plaintiff dictated a brief synopsis of his idea over the telephone to the secretary. Following this disclosure, plaintiff stated that he expected to be paid if the idea were used, and the secretary acknowledged that he would be. Plaintiff did not at any time speak to the producer. Thereafter, the producer and the production company that employed him produced a film, the photoplay of which closely paralleled both plaintiff's synopsis and the historical material surrounding the life and death of the main character of both the film and plaintiff's synopsis. In addition, the film included a fictional incident that appeared in plaintiff's synopsis and that he claimed was his creation. Plaintiff then commenced an action in three counts, including breach of express or implied-in-fact contract, against the producer and the production company to recover the reasonable value of either the synopsis or his idea for the photoplay, alleging that defendants accepted and used both the synopsis and the idea in producing their film. Defendants answered the complaint and denied its material allegations. Defendants then moved for summary judgment, and the trial court granted the motion and entered judgment in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's judgment on the noncontract counts, but reversed judgment on the contract count and remanded the case for further proceedings consistent with its opinion (46 Cal. 2d 715, 752) . In so ruling, the Court held that a question of fact existed regarding whether defendants breached an implied-in-fact contract to pay plaintiff for the synopsis embodying, implementing, and adapting plaintiff's idea for their photoplay (245 Cal. App. 2d 593) . The Court held that the policy that precludes protection of an abstract idea by copyright does not prevent its protection by contract. Even though an idea is not property subject to exclusive ownership, its disclosure may be of substantial benefit to the person to whom it is disclosed. That disclosure may therefore be consideration for a promise to pay. According to the Court, the foregoing principles, first enunciated in Justice Traynor's dissent in Stanley v. Columbia Broadcasting System (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 653, 674, 221 P.2d 73 , are now accepted as the law of California (245 Cal. App. 2d 593) .

In Blaustein v. Burton (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 88 Cal. Rptr. 319 , plaintiff motion picture producer filed a complaint against defendants, two actors and a director, for damages for breach of contract, unjust enrichment, breach of confidential relationship, and services rendered and benefits conferred. In substance, plaintiff alleged that he conceived an idea for producing a film of Shakespeare's play "The Taming of the Shrew." The idea included casting a famous husband-and-wife team of actors as the stars of the film, using a well-known stage and opera director to direct the film, eliminating the play-within-a-play device used in previous film versions of the play, including in the film two key scenes that in the play occur offstage, and filming in Italy using the actual settings described by Shakespeare. Plaintiff further alleged, in substance, that he disclosed his idea to defendant actors and director, and to their agents, and that defendants, by their words and conduct, agreed to participate in the film with plaintiff as producer. Plaintiff further alleged that some time after his negotiations with defendants, a film of "The Taming of the Shrew," starring defendant actors and directed by defendant director, was produced and released. According to plaintiff, the film used his ideas for casting, director, elimination of the play-within-a-play, and inclusion of the two scenes that occur offstage in the play. Additionally, the film was photographed in Italy, although not in the actual locales described by Shakespeare. Plaintiff was not involved in any way in this film, and defendants neither paid plaintiff nor accorded him any screen or advertising credit. Thereafter, defendants moved for summary judgment, contending, among other things, that no triable issues of fact existed regarding whether a contract was entered into between plaintiff and defendants pursuant to which plaintiff was entitled to compensation because of defendants' use of the idea disclosed to them by plaintiff. The trial court granted the motion, denied a motion for reconsideration, and entered summary judgement in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, holding plaintiff's idea to be one that may be protected by contract (9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 184, 187) . The court found that whether the parties, by their oral declarations and conduct, entered into a contract whereby defendants agreed to compensate plaintiff in the event they used his idea, was a question of fact that could not be properly resolved in a summary judgment proceeding but had to be resolved on a trial of the issue (9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 184) . The court cited Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 733, 299 P.2d 257 (discussed above), for the proposition that the policy that precludes protection of an abstract idea by copyright does not prevent its protection by contract. Even though an idea is not property subject to exclusive ownership, its disclosure may be of substantial benefit to the person to whom it is disclosed. That disclosure may therefore be consideration for a promise to pay (9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 178) .

[c] Adequacy of Consideration

In Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 256 P.2d 947 , plaintiff commenced an action for damages against a motion picture producer and two motion picture production companies, arising out of defendants' alleged unauthorized use of plaintiff's literary work, and the ideas contained in it, in the production of a film about Tarzan. The first count of her complaint alleged breach of an express contract, under which plaintiff wrote a literary composition and submitted it to defendants at their request and pursuant to an express oral agreement that, in consideration for submission of the work, she would be paid the reasonable value of the work and given screen credit as author if defendants used all or part of her work. Thereafter, defendants produced and distributed a film patterned on and using plaintiff's work, but paid her nothing and gave her no screen credit. The second count of the complaint alleged the common count of quantum valebant, and sought recovery under either an implied-in-fact or an implied-in-law (quasi) contract for the reasonable value of plaintiff's work. The third count of the complaint alleged plagiarism under former Civ. Code § 980 (now see Civ. Code § 980 (revised to conform to the preemption provisions of the Copyright Act of 1976)), in that, without plaintiff's knowledge, authority, or consent, defendants produced and distributed their film, substantially copying and misappropriating her work. Defendants demurred to the complaint on the grounds that each count failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action and that, in certain particulars, each count was ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain. The trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend the complaint and entered judgment dismissing the complaint. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's judgment on the plagiarism count, but reversed the judgment on the contract counts, with directions to permit defendants to answer (40 Cal. 2d 778, 795) . In reversing the judgment of dismissal on the contract counts, the Court held that the question of whether plaintiff had any legally protectible property rights in her work, or the ideas contained in it, did not need to be considered in her claims for breach of an express or implied-in-fact contract (40 Cal. 2d 778, 791, 794) . An idea, if valuable, may be the subject of contract. While the idea disclosed may be common, or even open to public knowledge, disclosure of the idea, if protected by contract, is sufficient consideration for the promise to pay for use of the idea (40 Cal. 2d 778, 791-792) . Because the contract counts were pleaded, the proof could show that defendants agreed to pay for plaintiff's composition if they used it, or any portion of it, regardless of its originality (40 Cal. 2d 778, 791) .

The facts and procedural background of Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][a]. In holding that the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure of plaintiffs' idea, format, and story outlines to defendant production company supported the jury's implied finding that there was a contract between plaintiffs and the company, the court of appeal ruled that because the disclosure of an idea may be of substantial benefit to the person to whom it is disclosed, that disclosure may be consideration for a promise to pay for the use of the idea disclosed (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 601) .

[d] Novelty or Concreteness Not Required

In Minniear v. Tors (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 72 Cal. Rptr. 287 , which involved an appeal from two cases consolidated for trial, plaintiff conceived the idea of making an underwater adventure series for sale to television. Plaintiff wrote a script and completed a pilot film for the series, pooling his efforts with one of defendants, an underwater photographer. Plaintiff then screened the film in a private showing that was attended by another of the defendants, a television producer. After the screening, the producer told plaintiff that he had been contemplating making a series on skindivers but had not found a satisfactory format and that he felt the film contained an excellent idea. At that time, plaintiff offered the producer a booklet containing the outline of future programs for the series, including a story about a jet pilot trapped under the sea. Plaintiff was subsequently unsuccessful in his efforts to sell his pilot and series format, and the underwater photographer subsequently disassociated himself from plaintiff's project. About one month after the screening, the producer commenced production of "Sea Hunt," a television underwater adventure series, for a production company not associated with plaintiff. The producer also purchased, for the production company and from the underwater photographer, the story of a jet pilot who was trapped under the sea, and used the idea in the premiere episode of the series. Plaintiff then commenced an action against the photographer, the producer, and the production company for damages for conspiracy to defraud and convert literary material consisting of his pilot film and story outlines for subsequent episodes. Plaintiff commenced an additional action against the production company alone for damages on a contract to purchase literary material for the pilot film. In both actions, plaintiff alleged that the "Sea Hunt" series was essentially his series, and that defendants employed the same format, stories, character, develpment, and plot plays as those in his pilot film and story outlines. Plaintiff particularly alleged that one episode of the "Sea Hunt" series was a substantial copy of his pilot film and that the jet plane episode was taken from his prologue and written synopsis obtained by defendant photographer. After several days of trial before a jury, the trial court granted defense motions for nonsuit and dismissal in each case. Plaintiff appealed from the judgments of nonsuit in each case, contending, among other things, that there was sufficient and substantial evidence to take both cases to the jury.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of nonsuit in the conversion-fraudaction but reversed the judgment of nonsuit in the contract action (266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 506-507) . In reversing judgment in the contract action, the court held that all of the elements of an implied contract between plaintiff and defendants were present if defendant production company made use of plaintiff's ideas and format (266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 504) . The court then concluded that there were enough similarities in the basic plot ideas, themes, sequences, and dramatic "gimmicks" between plaintiff's pilot and story outlines and "Sea Hunt" for a jury to infer that plaintiff's ideas and format were the inspiration for "Sea Hunt" and that defendant production company used plaintiff's ideas and format (266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 505) . In so holding, the court ruled that an idea that can be the subject matter of a contract need not be novel or concrete (266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 502) .

In Chandler v. Roach (1957) 156 Cal. App. 2d 435, 319 P.2d 776 , plaintiff conceived an idea for a dramatic work based on the activities of a public defender's office. Plaintiff's agent then met with a television producer and gave him an oral and a written summary of plaintiff's idea. The producer displayed considerable interest in the project and met with plaintiff. Plaintiff interested the producer in the idea of a television series based on the activities of a public defender's office, as suggested by plaintiff, and the parties proceeded to work out terms under which the series was to be produced. Under the terms of the agreement, plaintiff was to receive for his idea, among other things, a percentage of the receipts from the series and certain other amounts for his services. At the producer's request, plaintiff subsequently prepared a script and revised it to meet with the producer's suggestions, for the producer's use in attempting to sell the series to an advertiser. Thereafter, the producer's attorneys drafted a contract that was sent to plaintiff. Plaintiff suggested certain changes in the contract, and the attorneys prepared a second written contract, which was sent to plaintiff. It appears that plaintiff did not sign the contract. Plaintiff did not hear from the producer until approximately two years later when, at a chance meeting, the producer told plaintiff that the series was "too good an idea." The producer never paid plaintiff for his ideas or services but subsequently produced a television series along the lines suggested by plaintiff. Plaintiff then commenced an action against the producer and others for breach of a contract to pay him for the use of his ideas. At the conclusion of the trial, the parties submitted jury instructions relative to implied-in-fact contracts to pay for the use of ideas. The instructions submitted by defendants and given by the court set forth the requirements that an idea must be both novel and concrete to create an implied-in-fact contract to pay for its use. After considerable deliberation, and after having these particular instructions reread to them, the jury returned a verdict for defendants, and judgment was entered accordingly. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, finding the instructions in question to be prejudicially erroneous (156 Cal. App. 2d 435, 445) . The court held there was no necessity to add the elements of novelty and concreteness to an implied-in-fact contract to pay an author for the use of his or her ideas. The court ruled that the status of an author should be the same as that of any other person in any other implied-in-fact contract situation. Therefore, courts should not engraft to the requirements of an implied-in-fact contract, in the case of an author, something that neither party has contemplated and that is not a requirement in any other form of implied-in-fact contract. Courts should permit the parties to contract with each other as they see fit, rather than arbitrarily injecting into the contract the requirements that the idea be novel and concrete. If, on the other hand, the parties to a contract agree that an idea must be novel and concrete to warrant payment for its use, then a different situation from that in the case at bench arises, and the idea's novelty and concreteness become questions of fact for a jury to decide (156 Cal. App. 2d 435, 443) . The court reasoned that while novelty and concreteness are part of the test applied in common-law copyright actions for the protection of literary property rights, this property right test is not part of any traditional contract action. Additionally, there is no reason for adopting this test in a contract action to pay for the use of ideas. The reason for the requirements of novelty and concreteness in common-law copyright was that, to have a remedy good as against the world, a property right in a work must be shown. However, this reason is missing in a contract action, because, unlike a copyright, a contract creates no monopoly. A contract to pay for the use of an idea is effective only between the contracting parties, it does not withdraw the idea from general circulation, and any person not a party to the contract is free to use the idea without restriction. Furthermore, to apply the novelty test to the consideration for a contract is, in effect, questioning the adequacy of the consideration, a practice traditionally not allowed by the courts. All that must be shown is that the idea has sufficient concreteness to be the consideration for a contract (156 Cal. App. 2d 435, 444) .

[e] Past Consideration Supports Express Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea

The facts and procedural background of Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 299 P.2d 257 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][b]. In Desny, the Supreme Court held a question of fact existed regarding whether defendants breached an implied-in-fact contract to pay plaintiff for a synopsis embodying, implementing, and adapting plaintiff's idea for a photoplay of a film produced by defendants (46 Cal. 2d 715, 740) . With respect to the action to recover damages for breach of an express contract to pay for the use or disclosure of an idea, the Court held that the purveyor of the idea could not prevail unless he or she obtained from the recipient an express promise to pay, either before or after conveying the idea. The Court saw no reason why the person who received and benefited from the idea could not make an enforceable promise to pay reasonable compensation after receiving the idea. The Court took the view that when a person has rendered services in the past with an expectation that he or she will receive reasonable compensation, a moralobligation arises on the part of anyone who receives a material or pecuniary benefit from those services, and this moral obligation is sufficent to support an executory promise to pay for the past services, even though the promisor had no legal obligation to pay before making the promise (46 Cal. 2d 715, 738) .

The facts and procedural background of Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][a]. In Donahue, the court held that the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure of plaintiffs' idea, format, and story outlines to defendant production company supported the jury's implied finding that there was a contract between plaintiffs and the company (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 601) . In examining the requirements of express and implied-in-fact contracts to pay for the disclosure or use of ideas, the court held that an express promise to pay for the conveyance of an idea, made by one who receives the idea and finds it valuable, will be enforced even though the promise is made after the conveyance and, strictly speaking, the consideration for the promise is "past." In this situation, the promise is deemed supported by moral consideration (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 606) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Express or Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Is Enforceable

In Thompson v. California Brewing Co. (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 310 P.2d 436 , an action for the recovery of the reasonable value of an idea for the advertising and promotion of the sale of beer, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's orders sustaining demurrers to counts for breach of express and implied-in-fact contracts in plaintiff's complaint and allowed plaintiff the opportunity to amend these counts to plead facts, if any existed, that would overcome the seeming bar of the statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. § 339 subd (1). The court held that the following allegations of the plaintiff stated facts constituting a cause of action for the breach of an express oral contract to pay for use of plaintiff's idea: (1) that at defendants' request, plaintiff disclosed and offered them, orally and in writing, a new and novel idea conceived by him; (2) that defendants expressly and orally agreed to pay plaintiff the reasonable value of the idea if and when they used it; (3) that defendants used the idea; (4) that by this use defendants were obligated to pay plaintiff a sum alleged to be the reasonable value of the idea; and (5) that defendants refused to pay and the amount is due and owing (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 472-473) . The court also held that the allegation of these facts stated a cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the use of plaintiff's idea when, in lieu of the allegation of the defendants' express promise to pay, plaintiff alleged that when defendants received the idea, they understood that plaintiff expected to be paid for its reasonable value if it was used (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 473) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawOwner RightsState RegulationCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
C. Protection of Ideas Under California Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.61

§ 146.61 Supporting Contention That Implied-in-Fact Contract Exists to Pay for Disclosure of Valuable Idea

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief. It should be combined with the points and authorities set out in § 146.60.]

AN IMPLIED-IN-FACT CONTRACT EXISTS TO PAY FOR _____'S [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] DISCLOSURE OF AN IDEA TO_____ [specify party, e.g., DEFENDANT], BECAUSE THE CIRCUMSTANCES PRECEDING AND ATTENDING THAT DISCLOSURE, TOGETHER WITH THE CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT, WHO ACTED WITH KNOWLEDGE OF THE CIRCUMSTANCES, FURNISH EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S IMPLIED-IN-FACT PROMISE TO PAY FOR PLAINTIFF'S DISCLOSURE IF DEFENDANT USED THE IDEA.

A. Evidence Required to Show Existence of Implied-in-Fact Contract. An implied-in-fact contract to pay for plaintiff's disclosure of a valuable idea exists when the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure of the idea, together with the conduct of defendant, who acted with knowledge of the circumstances, show that (1) plaintiff clearly conditioned disclosure of the idea on defendant's obligation to pay for disclosure, if defendant used the idea; (2) defendant knew the condition before he or she knew the idea and voluntarily accepted the disclosure; (3) defendant found the idea valuable; and (4) defendant used the idea (Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 738, 299 P.2d 257 ; Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 606, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130).

[Optional] B. Use of Idea Shown by Substantial Similarity Between Idea and Manner in Which It Is Used. Defendant is deemed to have used plaintiff's idea when there is some substantial similarity between the idea and the manner in which the idea is ultimately used (Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90, 93-94 (applying California law); see Minniear v. Tors (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 504-505, 72 Cal. Rptr. 287).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that an implied-in-fact contract exists to pay for the disclosure of an idea. Optional Paragraph B may be used when there exists a substantial similarity between the idea disclosed and the manner in which the idea is ultimately used.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise thesubstantive issue of recovery in contract for breach of a promise to pay for the disclosure of ideas. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 630-631, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 (appeal from judgment notwithstanding verdict and conditional grant of new trial)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that disclosure of the idea is conditioned on an obligation to pay for that disclosure if the idea is used, and that the party to whom the idea was disclosed (1) knew of that condition before knowing the idea, (2) had an opportunity to reject disclosure, (3) found the idea to be valuable, and (4) used the idea [see Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 646, 647 n.6, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and a form for use in seeking recovery under a theory of implied-in-fact contract for breach of an implied-in-fact promise to pay for the disclosure of an idea, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 146.64 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Required to Show Existence of Implied-in-Fact Contract

The facts and procedural background of Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 299 P.2d 257 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][b]. In Desny, the Supreme Court held a question of fact existed about whether defendants breached an implied-in-fact contract to pay plaintiff for a synopsis embodying, implementing, and adapting plaintiff's idea for a photoplay of a film produced by defendants (46 Cal. 2d 715, 740) . Furthermore, the fact, if found by the trial court, that the basic idea for defendants' photoplay had been conveyed to defendants before they saw plaintiff's synopsis would not preclude the finding of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the synopsis, including its implemented idea, if defendants used the synopsis (46 Cal. 2d 715, 750) . The Court held that an idea purveyor cannot prevail in an action to recover compensation for an abstract idea unless (1) before or after disclosure he or she has obtained an express promise to pay, or (2) the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure, together with the conduct of the person to whom the idea is offered, acting with knowledge of the circumstances, show a promise of the type usually referred to as "implied" or "implied-in-fact" (46 Cal. 2d 715, 738) . If the idea purveyor has clearly conditioned the offer to convey the idea on an obligation to pay for it if used, and the person to whom the offer is made, knowing the condition before he or she knows the idea, voluntarily accepts its disclosure, finds the idea valuable, and uses it, a court will either apply the objective test for the creation of a contract and hold that the parties have made an express (sometimes called implied-in-fact) contract, or will imply a promise to compensate in order to prevent fraud and unjust enrichment. The promise must be based on circumstances that were known to the person to whom the offer is made at and preceding the time the idea is disclosed (46 Cal. 2d 715, 739) .

One court of appeal has stated that the holding in Desny does not blur the distinction between implied-in-fact contracts and those implied by law (quasi-contracts), which had been so clearly drawn in Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 794, 256 P.2d 947 (discussed in § 146.63[3][a]). In Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130 (discussed in § 146.60[3][a]), the court interpreted Desny 's apparent reference to quasi-contracts as a reference to the possibility of the creation of an implied-in-fact contract, notwithstanding exculpatory contemporaneous statements by the parties (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 606 n 10).

The facts and procedural background of Donahue v. Ziv Television Programs, Inc. (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 54 Cal. Rptr. 130 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][a]. In Donahue, the court of appeal found the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure of plaintiffs' idea for a television series to defendant television production company supported the jury's implied finding that there was an implied-in-fact contract between plaintiffs and the production company under which the production company promised to pay plaintiffs for the disclosure of their idea (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 602, 606, 607) . Relying on Desny v. Wilder (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 715, 738, 299 P.2d 257 (discussed supra), the court held the circumstances preceding and attending disclosure, together with the conduct of the person to whom the idea is disclosed, acting with knowledge of the circumstances, must furnish the evidence of a promise implied in fact. If the idea purveyor has clearly conditioned the offer to convey the idea on an obligation to pay for it if used, and the person to whom the idea is to be disclosed, knowing the condition before he or she knows the idea, voluntarily accepts disclosure, finds the idea valuable, and uses it, a court will either apply the objective test and hold that the parties have made an express (sometimes called implied-in-fact) contract, or imply a promise to compensate in order to prevent fraud and unjust enrichment (245 Cal. App. 2d 593, 606) .

[b] Use of Idea Shown by Substantial Similarity Between Idea and Manner in Which It Is Used

The facts and procedural background of Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90 , are discussed in § 146.24[3][a]. In Whitfield, the court of appeals held that the claimed similarities between the ideas embodied in plaintiff's work and defendants' television series were sufficient to allow a trier of fact to find that defendants misappropriated plaintiff's ideas under California law (751 F.2d 90, 95) . The court also held that to support recovery on an implied-in-fact contract to pay for disclosure of his ideas, plaintiff had to show that defendants actually used his ideas, by demonstrating some substantial similarity between his ideas and the themes of programs in defendants' television series (751 F.2d 90, 93-94) . In reversing the district court's summary judgment for defendants, the court ruled that it was unable to conclude there was no similarity between plaintiff's ideas and defendants' work, because no scripts of the series, as televised, were in the record and because the materials that were in the record were in utter conflict over the existence of similarities between the televised series and the ideas in plaintiff's script (751 F.2d 90, 94) .

The facts and procedural background of Minniear v. Tors (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 72 Cal. Rptr. 287 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][d]. In Minniear, the court of appeal found that there were enough similarities between plaintiff's pilot television program and story outlines and defendants' television series for a jury to infer that plaintiff's ideas and format were the inspiration for defendants' series and that defendant production company in fact used plaintiff's ideas and format. In determining defendant's use of plaintiff's ideas, the court noted that the type of television series in issue (an underwater sea adventure series) had certain basic similarities that could not be avoided. However, the court found enough similarities in the basic plot ideas, themes, sequences, and dramatic "gimmicks" between plaintiff's ideas and format and defendant's series for the jury to infer that defendant used plaintiff's ideas and format (266 Cal. App. 2d 495, 505) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Contracts LawGeneral OverviewContracts LawTypes of ContractsImplied-in-Fact ContractsCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasMisappropriation

174 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
C. Protection of Ideas Under California Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.62

§ 146.62 Supporting Contention That Another's Unauthorized Disclosure or Use of Idea Is Breach of Confidence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____'S [Specify party, e.g., DEFENDANT] [DISCLOSURE and/or USE] OF _____'S [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] IDEA IS A BREACH OF CONFIDENCE BECAUSE THE IDEA HAS SUFFICIENT NOVELTY TO WARRANT PROTECTION, PLAINTIFF OFFERED IT AND DEFENDANT RECEIVED IT IN CONFIDENCE, AND DEFENDANT THEREAFTER_____ [DISCLOSED and/or USED] IT FOR HIS/HER OWN BENEFIT WITHOUT PLAINTIFF'S CONSENT AND TO PLAINTIFF'S DETRIMENT.

A. Confidence Breached When Idea Is Disclosed or Used Without Permission of Confiding Party. An action for breach of confidence arises whenever an idea, offered and received in confidence, is later disclosed or used without the permission of the confiding party (Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 510, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161 ; Blaustein v. Burton (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 187, 88 Cal. Rptr. 319).

B. Relationship of the Parties. The existence of a confidential relationship is not essential to a cause of action for breach of confidence, because the element of confidence is not necessarily limited to the type of case in which there is a fiduciary relationship (Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 510, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161 ; Thompson v. California Brewing Co. (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 475, 310 P.2d 436).

C. Confidence Breached When Idea Is Disclosed or Used for Benefit of Confidant and to Detriment of Confiding Party. When a party receives an idea for use in the interests and for the benefit of the party confiding the idea, the party receiving the confidence is under a duty not to use the idea to the detriment of the confiding party, and use of the idea adversely to the interests of the confiding party is a breach of that duty (Ojala v. Bohlin (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 292, 300, 2 Cal. Rptr. 919).

D. Novelty of Idea. Even though an idea may not be protectible under copyright law, it is entitled to protection in a cause of action for breach of confidence for its unauthorized use or disclosure when, as a matter of law, it is novel and concrete (Fink v. Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Ltd. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1009, 1013, 88 Cal. Rptr. 679).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that use or disclosure of an idea offered and received in confidence, and without the permission of the confiding party, is a breach of confidence.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of breach of confidence. For example, they may be adapted for use in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for breach of confidence [see Fink v. Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Ltd. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 999, 88 Cal. Rptr. 679] . They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 459, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 (appeal from judgment) discussed in § 146.65[3][a]].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that an idea was conveyed and received in confidence, that the idea was disclosed or used by the confidant for his or her benefit to the detriment and without the permission of the confiding party, and that the idea was sufficiently novel as to warrant protection under a breach of confidence theory.

[b] Existence of Breach of Confidence Cause of Action

The California Supreme Court has never ruled that a cause of action for breach of confidence can rest on a basis other than a contract that protects that confidence [Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 505, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161]. Numerous courts of appeal have, however, recognized the existence of the cause of action and have recognized it as resting on a noncontractual basis [see, e.g., Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 462, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 (and cases cited therein)]. One court of appeal has noted that it knows of no authority requiring approval of legal theory by the California Supreme Court before it can be pleaded [Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 321, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704].

[c] Recovery in Quasi-Contract or in Tort

An action for breach of confidence lies either in quasi-contract or in tort, because the obligation incurred lies not in contractual language, but is imposed by law [Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 508, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161 ; see Fink v. Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Ltd. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1009, 88 Cal. Rptr. 679 (seeking recovery in quasi-contract for breach of confidence)].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and a form for use in breach of confidence actions involving the use or disclosure of an idea, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 146.65 may be used to oppose the contention supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Confidence Breached When Idea Is Disclosed or Used Without Permission of Confiding Party

In Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161 , the parties, for purposes of resolution of a statute of limitations issue in the Supreme Court, stipulated that Valentine Davies submitted a written story to defendant in confidence and that defendant incorporated the idea, central theme, and dramatic core of that story into a successful play. Davies filed an action against defendant for breach of contract and breach of confidence. Valentine died before trial, and plaintiff pursued the litigation as the executrix of the estate. After two trials, the court dismissed the breach of confidence claim for insufficient evidence, and the jury rendered a verdict for defendant on the breach of contract claim. The court of appeal subsequently affirmed the verdict on the contract claim, reversed the judgment on the breach of confidence claim, and remanded the breach of confidence claim for a possible third trial. Defendant filed an amended answer to assert the defenses of res judicata and estoppel. Concluding that the verdict on the contract claim resolved all fact issues relevant to the breach of confidence claim, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings. The court of appeal again reversed. Defendant filed another amended answer, asserting the defense of the statute of limitations. Following a proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 597 devoted solely to resolving the limitations issue, the trial court held that the two-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 339 subd (1) barred the breach of confidence claim. Plaintiff then appealed the trial court's judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that if plaintiff had a cause of action for breach of confidence, that cause of action was subject to and barred by the two-year limitation of Code Civ. Proc. § 339 subd (1) (14 Cal. 3d 502, 516) . In so ruling, the Court addressed the breach of confidence cause of action. The Court initially noted that it has never ruled that a cause of action for breach of confidence can rest on a basis other than a contract that protects that confidence (14 Cal. 3d 502, 505) . However, because the Court was compelled to follow the law of the case, it assumed that plaintiff had stated a valid cause of action for breach of confidence (14 Cal. 3d 502, 505, 508) . The Court held that an action for breach of confidence arises whenever an idea, offered and received in confidence, is later disclosed without the permission of the confiding party (14 Cal. 3d 502, 510) . When defendant received the idea, with the understanding that the idea was confidential, defendant incurred an obligation not to use or disclose that idea without the confiding party's consent (14 Cal. 3d 502, 508) .

The facts and procedural background of Blaustein v. Burton (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 88 Cal. Rptr. 319 are discussed in § 146.60[3][b]. In this case the court held that the complaint, together with plaintiff's declaration in opposition to defendants' motion for summary judgment, was sufficient to raise a triable issue of fact over whether the disclosure of plaintiff's idea to respondents was made in confidence, and was accepted by defendants on the understanding that they would not use it without plaintiff's consent. In his declaration, plaintiff stated that because he had prior dealings with the agent for one of defendants, and knew theagent to be highly reputable, and because he had the same firm of attorneys as two of defendants, and had been the recipient of a constantly renewed invitation to disclose his ideas and render services on a film project, he reposed trust and confidence in these two defendants and their representatives and expected that his ideas would be kept in confidence by them. He did not expect or intend that defendants would go forward with production of the film and make use of his ideas without his participation (9 Cal. App. 3d 161, 187) .

[b] Relationship of the Parties

The facts and procedural background of Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161 , are discussed in § 146.62[3][a]. In holding that a cause of action for breach of confidence was barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 339 subd (1), the Court noted that the creator of an idea may transmit an idea in the protective context of a confidential relationship, as, for example, when an inventor reveals his or her concept to a patent lawyer. The Court held, however, that the existence of a confidential relationship is not essential to a cause of action for violation of confidence, because ideas may also be transmitted in the course of arm's-length negotiations between business people who can profit from their exploitation (14 Cal. 3d 502, 510) . Because a confidential relationship was not required, the Court concluded that the action could not be classified as a constructive fraud and was therefore subject to the limitation period of Code Civ. Proc. § 339 subd (1) (14 Cal. 3d 502, 511) .

In Thompson v. California Brewing Co. (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 310 P.2d 436 , plaintiff sought to recover the reasonable value of a new and novel idea for the advertising and promotion of the sale of beer by defendant brewing company. Plaintiff's complaint alleged counts for breach of express and implied-in-fact contract and for breach of confidence arising out of defendants' use of the idea. Defendants demurred to all counts in the complaint on the ground that each was barred by the two-year limitations period of Code Civ. Proc. § 339 subd (1). The trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed from the trial court's judgment dismissing his complaint.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment that plaintiff's breach of confidence count was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 339(1) (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 478) . However, the court found that but for the limitations bar, plaintiff had alleged facts sufficient to state a cause of action for breach of confidence (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 474) . The court found that plaintiff had alleged defendants' voluntary assumption of a confidential relationship, and found no reason why defendants should not have assumed that relationship. Furthermore, the court found no reason why a duty should not arise, on defendants' part, not to use or disclose the idea without plaintiff's consent, if the evidence should show defendants were looking for ideas and that plaintiff undertook to supply several ideas on the condition that they not be disclosed or used without his consent (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 475) . The court concluded that the element of confidence is not necessarily limited to the type of case in which there is a fiduciary relationship (such as that between partners or joint venturers or employer and employee) between the parties. Other circumstances may create a duty not to disclose or use without the consent of the originator of the idea (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 475) . Analogizing to the law of trade secrets, the court noted the example of A, who has a trade secret that he or she wishes to sell with or without his or her business, and B, who is a prospective purchaser. In the course of negotiations, A discloses the secret to B solely for the purpose of enabling B to appraise its value (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 475-476) . Or, A requests a loan from B, a banker, for the purpose of aiding the manufacture of a product by A 's secret process. In order to assure B of the soundness of the loan, A discloses the secret to B in confidence. In both cases, B is under a duty not to disclose the secret or use it adversely to A. Additionally, this confidence may exist even when no business relation betwee A and B exists or is contemplated, as when A comes to B, A 's former teacher, for free advice that B is willing to give with respect to the secret and discloses the secret to B in confidence. Even though given information is not a trade secret, one who receives the information in a confidential relation or discovers it by improper means may be under some duty not to disclose or use the information. Because of the confidential relation or the impropriety of the means of discovery, he or she may be compelled to go to other sources for the information (150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 476) .

[c] Confidence Breached When Idea Is Disclosed or Used for Benefit of Confidant and to Detriment of Confiding Party

In Ojala v. Bohlin (1960) 178 Cal. App. 2d 292, 2 Cal. Rptr. 919 , plaintiff conceived and developed a design for a gun holster that would permit the cocking of a single action revolver and free turning of the cylinder while being withdrawn from the holster. Plaintiff then took his metal designs and patterns to defendant, who agreed to make the holsters. Defendant agreed not to compete with plaintiff in the manufacture or sale of the holster. When defendant increased his price for manufacturing the holsters, plaintiff resumed making the holsters himself. Thereafter, defendant advertised a holster that was a substantial duplicate of plaintiff's in a magazine in which plaintiff had advertised his holster. Defendant's advertisement stated that he had pioneered the holster, and contained a picture of a holster that was also a substantial duplicate of plaintiff's. Plaintiff commenced an action against defendant for damages and injunctive relief for unfair competition. At the conclusion of trial, the trial court found defendant had engaged in unfair competition, enjoined him from making or selling holsters under plaintiff's original design, and awarded plaintiff damages. Defendant appealed from the judgment, contending, among other things, that there was no substantial evidenceto support the finding that plaintiff's communication of his design to defendant was confidential information.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment (178 Cal. App. 2d 292, 305) . The court specifically affirmed the trial court's finding that plaintiff communicated his design to defendant in confidence. The court found that plaintiff entrusted the design to defendant for the sole purpose of manufacturing the holsters for plaintiff (178 Cal. App. 2d 292, 299) . It regarded defendant's agreement not to compete as potent evidence of his duty as a trustee of the design. Having received the design for use in the interests and for the benefit of plaintiff, defendant had no right to use it in any other manner to plaintiff's detriment. It noted that the trial court found the design was given to defendant in confidence, that the information imparted was of great value to plaintiff, and that it was imparted because of plaintiff's trust and belief in defendant's integrity and because of plaintiff's confidence that defendant would keep his promise not to compete. The court found it clear from these facts that defendant assumed the duties of a trustee relative to information that was to be used solely for plaintiff's benefit. One who is so entrusted violates his duty when he uses the information for his own benefit and to the detriment of the trustor. The fact that defendant accepted the confidence reposed in him was amply shown by the assurance he gave plaintiff that he would not use the design for his own benefit. Using the design in competition with plaintiff was a breach of the relation of personal confidence that defendant had voluntarily assumed. It was a violation of defendant's duty not to use confidential information adversely to plaintiff's interests (178 Cal. App. 2d 292, 300) .

[d] Novelty of Idea

In Fink v. Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Ltd. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1009, 88 Cal. Rptr. 679 , plaintiff conceived of an idea for a television series and embodied the idea in a written program. At defendants' special request, plaintiff submitted his program in confidence to defendants and in reliance on the understanding that they would never make use of it, or any material element of it, without his consent. Defendants accepted the submission. Defendants subsequently conferred with plaintiff about the program and later requested, and plaintiff granted, an option giving them the exclusive right to acquire plaintiff's program. Defendants thereafter produced and broadcast, without plaintiff's consent, a television series based on, using, and embodying plaintiff's program. Plaintiff then commenced an action against defendants for breach of express and implied-in-fact contract, breach of confidence, infringement of common-law copyright, and fraud. On his breach of confidence count, plaintiff sought relief in quasi-contract. Defendants demurred to the complaint and the trial court sustained the demurrers. Plaintiff declined to amend the complaint, and the trial court entered judgment dismissing the complaint. Plaintiff appealed from the dismissal judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment dismissing the breach of confidence count (9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1016) . In so ruling, the court found plaintiff's program, and the ideas contained in it, to contain sufficient novelty to withstand demurrer (9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1015-1016) . The court held that the right of plaintiff's work to protection by reason of sufficient novelty and elaboration of the idea contained in it was a prerequisite in his breach of confidence count (9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1009) . This was so because this count was not based on and did not have the limitation of contractual promises. The function of a quasi-contract is to raise an obligation in law when the parties make no promise. It is not based on the apparent intentions of the parties. Unlike a contract action, quasi-contract reaches and renders liable persons other than the limited number who may have consented to a contractual relationship. Therefore, without the required novelty, there is the danger of monopoly and restraint on progress in art (9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1010) . In assessing the novelty of plaintiff's program, the court found the composite of elements in the program, including the back story, the molding of an important part of the hero's character and personality, the method for presenting and recapturing the back story in the sequential episodes, and various portrayal techniques, to be sufficiently concrete and novel, as a matter of law, to warrant protection under the breach of confidence count. The court found it unlikely that defendants would have produced their program if plaintiff had not provided his idea (9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1013, 1014) . The court also found that it could be inferred from the pleading that defendants made up their presentation from plaintiff's program, thus showing either that they felt there was novelty in the program or that they wanted it despite a lack of novelty. Finally, the court noted plaintiff's allegation that defendants specially requested him to sell them, and on his assent they did buy from him, the exclusive right to use his program This strongly indicated a viewpoint, sufficient on demurrer, that plaintiff's program did have concreteness and novelty (9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1015) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasMisappropriation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
C. Protection of Ideas Under California Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.63

§ 146.63 Opposing Contention That Purveyor of Idea May Recover in Quasi-Contract for Unauthorized Use of Idea--Idea Is Not Protectible Property

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____ [Specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] CANNOT RECOVER IN HIS/HER ACTION IN QUASI-CONTRACT FOR THE UNAUTHORIZED USE OF HIS/HER IDEAS, BECAUSE RECOVERY IN SUCH AN ACTION IS PREDICATED ON THE UNAUTHORIZED USE OF MATERIAL THATCONSTITUTES LEGALLY PROTECTIBLE PROPERTY, AND IDEAS DO NOT CONSTITUTE PROTECTIBLE PROPERTY.

A. Material Used Must Constitute Protectible Property. The material allegedly used must constitute protectible property if a party is to recover in quasi-contract for unauthorized use of the property (Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 795, 256 P.2d 947 ; Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 634, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522).

B. Ideas Are Not Protectible Property. Under California law, there is no legally protectible property right in an idea (Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 789, 795, 256 P.2d 947 ; Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90, 92 (applying California law)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party may recover in quasi-contract for the unauthorized use of his or her idea.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the protection of ideas under state law. For example, they may be used in support of a demurrer to a complaint seeking recovery in quasi-contract for the unauthorized use of an idea [see Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 779, 256 P.2d 947]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 630-631, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 (appeal from judgment notwithstanding verdict)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the property, for the unauthorized use of which recovery is sought, consists of an idea, which is not legally protectible personal property.

[b] Action in Quasi-Contract as Distinguished From Action for Breach of Confidence

An action in quasi-contract for breach of a contract implied in law to pay for the disclosure or use of an idea is to be distinguished from an action in quasi-contract for breach of confidence based on the unauthorized disclosure or use of an idea imparted in confidence. An action for breach of confidence for the wrongful disclosure of an idea will lie in either quasi-contract or tort [Davies v. Krasna (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 502, 508, 121 Cal. Rptr. 705, 535 P.2d 1161 ; see Fink v. Goodson-Todman Enterprises, Ltd. (1970) 9 Cal. App. 3d 996, 1009, 88 Cal. Rptr. 679 (seeking recovery in quasi-contract for breach of confidence); see, e.g., § 146.62].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of the protection of ideas under state law, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Material Used Must Constitute Protectible Property

The facts and procedural background of Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 256 P.2d 947 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][c]. In affirming trial court's judgment dismissing plaintiff's plagiarism count, but reversing the dismissal judgment on plaintiff's contract counts, the Supreme Court initially noted that because only the product of a writer's creative mind is protectible, a plaintiff must establish, as the subject of a cause of action for the protection of literary property or ideas, a right in the nature of property that is capable of ownership (40 Cal. 2d 778, 786) . In holding that plaintiff had stated a cause of action in quantum valebant for the reasonable value of her work, the Court held that plaintiff could not recover in quasi-contract, that is, a contract implied in law, for the use of her ideas, even though the quantum valebant common count is sufficient to state a cause of action on either a contract implied in fact or a contract implied in law (40 Cal. 2d 778, 793, 795) . The Court held that quasi-contractual recovery is based on benefit accepted or derived for which the law implies an obligation to pay. When no benefit is accepted or derived, there is nothing from which a contract can be implied. The existence of a quasi-contract under a quantum valebant count depends on whether defendant has used for its benefit any property of plaintiff in such a manner and under such circumstances that the law will impose a duty of compensation therefor (40 Cal. 2d 778, 794) . The material that is used must therefore constitute protectible property if recovery is to be had in quasi-contract. Therefore, the proof necessary to recover on a theory of quasi-contract is the same as that required by the tort action for plagiarism. Similarity must exist between plaintiff's written work and defendants' movie regarding form and manner of expression, those portions of literary property that may be protectible property. Because defendants used no property beloning to plaintiff, plaintiff could not recover on a quasi-contractual theory (40 Cal. 2d 778, 795) .

In Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 , plaintiff sought to recover the reasonable value of ideas embodied in a written format that she allegedly submitted for defendant's consideration as the basis for a motion picture. Contending that defendant accepted and used her outline in the production of the movie "Shampoo," plaintiff sought damages, an accounting, and the imposition of a constructive trust in counts in her complaintalleging plagiarism, quasi-contract, breach of implied-in-fact contract, and breach of fiduciary or confidential relationship. Defendants moved for summary judgment or an alternative order specifying issues without substantial controversy. The trial court found certain triable issues of fact and denied summary judgment. However, the court summarily adjudicated the causes of action for plagiarism, breach of a confidential relationship, and constructive trust in favor of defendants. At trial, in response to defendants' motion in limine relative to evidence of plaintiff's damages, the trial court determined that the summary adjudication distinguished the question presented by plaintiff's quasi-contract cause of action. While the allegations of a implied-in-fact contract between plaintiff and defendants raised triable issues, the trial judge dismissed the contentions of an implied-in-law obligation. Having dispensed with quasi-contract, plaintiff's potential recovery was restricted to the reasonable value of her ideas allegedly used in the production of the movie. Evidence relative to the movie's earnings and number of showings was irrelevant and the cause of action for an accounting was accordingly removed. The jury awarded plaintiff a verdict on her breach of implied-in-fact contract claim. Thereafter, the trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Plaintiff then appealed from both the judgment and the trial court's order specifying certain issues to be without substatial controversy, contending, among other things, that she was prejudiced by the summary dismissal of her count for quasi-contract.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting judgment notwithstanding the verdict and held dismissal of plaintiff's quasi-contract count proper (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 634, 651) . In ruling on the quasi-contract claim, the court cited Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 795, 256 P.2d 947 (discussed above), for the proposition that the material allegedly used by defendants must constitute protectible property if plaintiff was to recover in quasi-contract (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 634) . Because the court found that plaintiff's outline of various characters and scenes was no more than a collection of ideas that was never developed in the form of a script or story, defendant had used no property belonging to plaintiff, and plaintiff could not, therefore, recover on a quasi-contractual theory for the alleged use of her ideas (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 633, 634) .

[b] Ideas Are Not Protectible Property

The facts and procedural background of Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 256 P.2d 947 , are discussed in § 146.60[3][c]. In Weitzenkorn, the Supreme Court held that plaintiff could not recover in quasi-contract for the unauthorized use of ideas contained in her written work, because defendants had not used any property of plaintiff for their benefit (40 Cal. 2d 778, 795) . In so holding, the Court held that an idea alone, including a bare, undeveloped story situation or theme, is not protectible property under California law. The Court held also that former Civ. Code § 980 (now see Civ. Code § 980 as amended to reflect preemptive provisions of Copyright Act of 1976) gives state copyright protection only to the representation or expression of a literary work, and not to the ideas embodied therein. The Court found that the Legislature had abrogated the rule of protectibility of an idea and that California now accepts the traditional theory of protectible property under common-law copyright (40 Cal. 2d 778, 789) .

The facts and procedural background of Whitfield v. Lear (2d Cir. 1984) 751 F.2d 90 , are discussed in § 146.24[3][a]. In Whitfield, plaintiff claimed an interest in ideas contained in his script for a television program, and sought redress for defendants' alleged misappropriation of these ideas in their television series (751 F.2d 90, 92) . Applying California law to plaintiff's claims, and citing Weitzenkorn v. Lesser (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 778, 789, 256 P.2d 947 (discussed above), the court of appeals held that plaintiff's quasi-contract claim was actionable only to vindicate legally protected property interests and that an idea is not recognized as a property right (751 F.2d 90, 92) . While plaintiff's quasi-contract claim was thus precluded, the court went on to find the alleged similarities between plaintiff's script and defendants' television series sufficient to allow a trier of fact to find that defendants misappropriated plaintiff's ideas and thereby breached an implied-in-fact contract with plaintiff by failing to pay him for the use of his ideas (751 F.2d 90, 95) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject

MatterIdeasMisappropriation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
C. Protection of Ideas Under California Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.64

§ 146.64 Opposing Contention That Implied-in-Fact Contract Exists to Pay for Disclosure of Valuable Idea

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

AN IMPLIED-IN-FACT CONTRACT DOES NOT EXIST TO PAY FOR_____'S [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF] DISCLOSURE OF AN IDEA TO_____ [specify party, e.g., DEFENDANT], BECAUSE_____ [THE CIRCUMSTANCES PRECEDING AND ATTENDING THAT DISCLOSURE and/or THE CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT] FURNISH NO EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S IMPLIED-IN-FACT PROMISE TO PAY FOR PLAINTIFF'S DISCLOSURE IF DEFENDANT USED THE IDEA.

A. Elements of Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Use or Disclosure of Idea. To establish an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the use or disclosure of an idea, plaintiff must show that (1) he or she clearly conditioned disclosure of the idea on defendant's obligation to pay for it if defendant used the idea; (2) defendant, knowing the condition before he or she knew the idea, voluntarily accepted the disclosure; (3) defendant found the idea valuable; and (4) defendant used the idea (Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 646, 647 n.6, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 ; Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 318, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

[EITHER]

B. Promise to Pay Not Implied in Mere Facts That Idea Is Conveyed, Is Valuable, and Is Used for Profit. The law will not imply a promise to pay for an idea in the mere facts that the idea is conveyed, is valuable, and is used for profit; this is true even though the conveyance has been made with the hope or expectation that some obligation will ensue (Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1115, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 ; Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 318, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

[AND/OR]

C. Obligation to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Cannot Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Submission of Idea. When there exists no evidence that plaintiff expects, or indicates an expectation of, receiving compensation for the service of revealing an idea, defendant's obligation to pay for the submission cannot be inferred from the mere fact of submission of the idea (Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 318, 319, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

[AND/OR]

D. Party to Whom Idea Is Disclosed Must Use Idea. If defendant does not use the idea, plaintiff has no cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for its use (Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1114, 1115, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 ; Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 649, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522).

[AND/OR]

E. Idea Must Be Submitted to Party to Whom Idea Is Disclosed. Submission of an idea is a requirement for the implied-in-fact contractual obligation to pay for the use or disclosure of an idea (Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 647, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522).

[AND/OR]

F. Idea Does Not Consist of Rights Capable of Divisible Assignability. The purported assignment of various interests in an abstract idea does not give the assignee the right to pursue a cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract for the sale of an idea that may have previously arisen as the result of negotiations between the originator of the idea and a third party (Rokos v. Peck (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 616, 227 Cal. Rptr. 480).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party may recover under a contract implied in fact to pay for the disclosure and/or use of his, her, or its idea.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of the protection of ideas under state law. For example, they may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment [see, e.g., Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1106, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 (defense motion for summary judgment)]. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 630-631, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 (appeal from judgment notwithstanding verdict)].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that the party seeking to enforce the contract has failed to establish one or more of the requisite elements of the contract.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention set out in § 146.61.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and a form for use in seeking recovery under a theory of implied-in-fact contract for breach of an implied-in-fact promise to pay for the use or disclosure of an idea, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Elements of Implied-in-Fact Contract to Pay for Use or Disclosure of Idea

The facts and procedural background of Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 , are discussed in § 146.63[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for defendants, notwithstanding jury verdict for plaintiff on her cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay her for use of her ideas embodied in her format for a film (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 651) . The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that there existed no contractual obligation to enforce (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650) . The court held that for it to find that plaintiff and defendant production company entered an implied-in-fact contract, plaintiff had to demonstrate that she clearly conditioned the offer of her format on an obligation to pay for it, or its ideas, if used by defendant, and that defendant, knowing the condition before it knew the ideas, voluntarily accepted their disclosure, found them valuable, and used them. Defendant's implied promise, if it was to be found, had to be based on circumstances known to it at and preceding the time the ideas were allegedlydisclosed to it. Defendant must have voluntarily accepted plaintiff's format with knowledge of the conditions of tender. Thus, plaintiff had to prove defendant's conduct from which defendant's promise could be implied (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 646, 647 n 6). The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's findings that plaintiff's format was never submitted to defendant and that defendant, consequently, did not use the ideas contained in the format (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650) .

In Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , plaintiff conceived an idea for a sports quiz show and prepared a format of the idea. Subsequently, plaintiff and defendant television sports announcer held a telephone conversation in which plaintiff told the announcer that plaintiff had a sports-oriented television show that he intended to produce and that he wanted to talk to the announcer about the announcer's participation in the show as master of ceremonies. Thereafter, plaintiff and the announcer met. At the meeting, plaintiff told him the format of the show and gave him a copy of the format. The announcer expressed interest in the idea, told plaintiff he was going to talk with some television station producers, and asked plaintiff to leave a copy of the format for his review. Some time following this meeting, a television quiz show entitled "Sports Challenge" appeared on television, with the announcer as master of ceremonies, and a third party as producer. There were certain differences and similarities between the show and plaintiff's idea. Plaintiff subsequently filed two actions against the announcer, the producer, and others. One action contained counts for breach of an express contract, breach of an implied contract, and breach of confidence. The other action contained counts for plagiarism and breach of an implied contract. The cases were consolidated in trial. In the latter action, defendants demurred to the complaint, and the trial court granted the demurrer and dismissed the case. Plaintiff appealed that decision. At about the same time, all parties stipulated in both cases to (1) stay further proceedings in the former case until a final decision on appeal in the latter case, (2) waive Code Civ. Proc. § 583 subd (b) (relating to the five-year limitation on bringing a case to trial) regarding the former case, and (3) agree that the former case would be dismissed if the demurrer and dismissal in the latter case were affirmed on appeal. In an unpublished opinion, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the plagiarism count in the latter case, affirmed dismissal of the breach of implied-in-law contract count, but reversed dismissal of the breach of implied-in-fact contract count. Defendants then moved for summary judgment in both cases. The trial court granted the motion and entered judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's summary judgment (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 325) . The court held that to establish an implied-in-fact contract, one must show (1) that he or she prepared the work (or conceived the idea); (2) that he or she disclosed the work (or the idea) for sale to the party to whom the work or idea was disclosed; (3) that under all circumstances attending disclosure it could be concluded that the party to whom the work or idea was disclosed voluntarily accepted disclosure knowing the conditions on which it was tendered (i.e., the person to whom the work or idea was disclosed had an opportunity to reject the attempted disclosure if the conditions were unacceptable); and (4) the reasonable value of the work or idea. Applying these elements to the case, the court found the trial court correctly determined there was no triable issue of fact on a cause of action for an implied-in-fact contract. The trial court correctly concluded that defendant was entitled to summary judgment because there was no evidence to support an implied-in-fact contract for the services of revealing plaintiff's format, containing plaintiff's idea, to him. In fact, all evidence was to the contrary (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 318) .

[b] Promise to Pay Not Implied in Mere Facts That Idea Is Conveyed, Is Valuable, and Is Used for Profit

The facts and procedural background of Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 , are discussed in § 146.22[3][a]. In Klekas, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting summary judgment for defendants on plaintiff's count, among others, for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay him for use of the ideas in his unpublished novel, which defendants allegedly used in the production and screenplay of the film "The Deer Hunter" and in the subsequent publication of a paperback book of the same title (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1115) . The court found that the only defendant to whom plaintiff submitted his work, and the ideas contained in it, had nothing to do with the writing of the screenplay or the production of the film (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1114-1115) . Therefore, although plaintiff may have submitted his literary effort to one of the named defendants, there was nothing in the record to establish the use of his work, or his ideas, in the writing or making of the film. The court held that the law will not imply a promise to pay for an idea in the mere facts that the idea has been conveyed, is valuable, and has been used for profit. The court held this true even though the conveyance has been made with the hope or expectation that some obligation will ensue (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1115) .

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that there existed no evidence to support an implied-in-fact contract for plaintiff's services in revealing his ideas to defendant. The court held that the law will not imply a promise to pay for an idea from the mere facts that the idea has been conveyed, is valuable, and has been used for profit. The court held this true even though the conveyance has been made with the hope or expectation that some obligation will ensue. The court found that both plaintiff and defendant agreed that plaintiff's format, containing his ideas, was submitted to defendant in connection with an inquiry of whether defendant would act as master of ceremonies for plaintiff's proposed televisionshow. There was absolutely no evidence that plaintiff expected, or indicated his expectation of receiving, compensation for the service of revealing the format to defendant. On the contrary, the sole evidence was that plaintiff voluntarily submitted it to defendant for the sole purpose of enabling defendant to make a determination of his willingness to enter into a future business relationship with plaintiff (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 318) .

[c] Obligation to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Cannot Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Submission of Idea

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that there existed no evidence to support an implied-in-fact contract for plaintiff's services in revealing his ideas to defendant. The court held that an obligation to pay could not be inferred from the mere fact of submission of plaintiff's idea, on the theory that everyone knows that the "idea man" expects to be paid (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 319) . The court found that as far as the record revealed, plaintiff never thought of selling his idea for a sports quiz show to anyone, including defendant (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 318) . Plaintiff never intended to submit the property for sale and did not tell defendant that he was submitting it for sale. There was no reason to think that defendant, or anyone else with whom defendant spoke, would have believed that plaintiff's submission was an offer to sell something, which if used, would oblige the user to pay. Additionally, no obligation to pay could be inferred from plaintiff's comment that the format was his "creation" and "literary property." Just as the mere submission of an idea by a writer cannot create an obligation to pay for it, so too, knowledge on the part of the recipient of an idea that the submitter is a writer possessing an unprotected literary creation cannot create an obligation to pay. Finally, the court rejected plaintiff's argument that when the recipient of an idea permits submission of an idea with an awareness that the submitter does so in the expectation of payment if the idea is used, conduct arises from which a promise to pay may be inferred. The court held the weakness in this argument was that there was no evidence that plaintiff expected defendant to pay. Thus, defendant could not be charged with an awareness that plaintiff himself did not have (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 319) .

[d] Party to Whom Idea Is Disclosed Must Use Idea

The facts and procedural background of Klekas v. EMI Films, Inc. (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 198 Cal. Rptr. 296 , are discussed in § 146.22[3][a]. In Klekas, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting summary judgment for defendants on plaintiff's count, among others, for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay him for use of the ideas in his unpublished novel, which defendants allegedly used in the production and screenplay of the film "The Deer Hunter" and in the subsequent publication of a paperback book of the same title (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1115) . The court held that the trial court correctly concluded that no contract existed between plaintiff and defendants with respect to the use of plaintiff's literary work, embodying his ideas, because defendants made no use of any material portion of his work, or his ideas, in their screenplay (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1114) . Although plaintiff may have submitted his literary work to one of the named defendants, there was nothing in the record to establish the use of that work in the writing or making of defendants' film (150 Cal. App. 3d 1102, 1115) .

The facts and procedural background of Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 , are discussed in § 146.63[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for defendants, notwithstanding jury verdict for plaintiff on her cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay her for use of her ideas embodied in her format for a film (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 651) . The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that there existed no contractual obligation to enforce (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650) . The court held that the similarities between plaintiff's format and defendants' film were not sufficient to show either a submission of the format to defendant production company or access to and use of plaintiff's ideas by defendant writers. The trial record showed only that defendant writers independently wrote the film screenplay and subsequent script changes (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 635) . The court then held that if defendant writers did not use plaintiff's ideas in the shooting script for their film, the fact that the film may strongly resemble plaintiff's format, and the ideas contained in it, would not afford plaintiff a cause of action against defendant production company for breach of an implied contract to pay for use of the ideas (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 649) . The court found the jury's finding of access and use by defendant writers was rebutted by clear, positive, and uncontradicted evidence that any similarity between plaintiff's ideas and the screenplay and script changes resulted from the independent effort of defendant writers, and not from the writers' access to or use of plaintiff's format. Defendants were thus provided with a complete defense against the contractual obligation alleged (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650) .

[e] Idea Must Be Submitted to Party to Whom Idea Is Disclosed

The facts and procedural background of Mann v. Columbia Pictures, Inc. (1982) 128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 180 Cal. Rptr. 522 , are discussed in § 146.63[3][a]. In Mann, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for defendants, notwithstanding jury verdict for plaintiff on her cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay her for use of her ideas embodied in her format for a film (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 651) . The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's finding that there existed no contractual obligation to enforce between plaintiff and defendant production company (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650) . The court heldthat submission of plaintiff's format to defendant production company was a requirement for establishment of the contract. Submission was also the basis for plaintiff's argument that defendant writers had access to and used her ideas. The court noted that plaintiff's alleged chain of submission of her format to defendant production company had several missing links (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 644) . Plaintiff submitted her format, in an envelope, to a friend, who delivered it to a neighbor, who delivered it to a production manager employed by a different production company (but whose salary was then paid by defendant production company, as a result of the production manager's work on one of defendant's films). The production manager, in turn, delivered the format to a story editor at the production company that employed him (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 636-637) . The chain of submission essentially stopped at that point, and the court found that the format was never submitted to defendant production company (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650-651) . The court found further that the similarities between plaintiff's ideas and defendant writers' screenplay and script changes did not prove submission of the format to the production company, since the similarities resulted from the independent writing efforts of defendant writers, rather than from the writers' access to and use of the ideas in plaintiff's format (128 Cal. App. 3d 628, 650) .

[f] Idea Does Not Consist of Rights Capable of Divisible Assignability

In Rokos v. Peck (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 227 Cal. Rptr. 480 , one plaintiff wrote a film script on the subject of teenage suicide and sent a copy of it to a psychologist practicing in the area of suicide prevention, seeking the psychologist's assistance in getting a film or television program made of her script. The psychologist later wrote plaintiff, telling her he was unable to generate interest in the film industry in her script. Subsequently, plaintiff contracted with the named plaintiff to produce and promote the script. In this contract (a copy of which was not part of the record on appeal), the author purported to assign to the named plaintiff the production rights in the script and in the ideas contained therein. After the contract between the plaintiffs, a television network aired a movie about teenage suicide, containing substantially the same ideas and plot as those in the plaintiff's script and crediting the psychologist and the treatment center employing him as technical consultants. Plaintiffs then commenced an action against the network, the psychologist, and the treatment center for plagiarism, breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for use of the ideas, and unjust enrichment arising out of the alleged unauthorized use of the ideas contained in the script. Before trial, all defendants, except the psychologist and the treatment center, settled with plaintiffs, and the trial court entered a summary judgment on the plagiarism cause of action, and a judgment on the pleadings on the unjust enrichment claim, in favor of the remaining defendants. The plaintiff-author proceeded to trial on her claim for breach of an implied-in-fact contract, and judgment was awarded in her favor. As to the named plaintiff, the trial court granted defendants' motion for nonsuit on the breach of implied-in-fact contract cause of action, and the named plaintiff appealed from the trial court's ruling.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held the named plaintiff had no standing to sue the nonsettling defendants for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the use of the coplaintiff's idea, because an idea, unlike literary or other property entitled to copyright protection, cannot be segmented into varying rights that may each be independently assigned (182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 616) . The court acknowledged that a full-blown and known cause of action, including an action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract, can be assigned. However, that is not the same as saying that a purported assignment of various interests in an idea gives the assignees the right to pursue a cause of action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract for the sale of an idea that may have previously arisen as the result of negotiations between the creator of the idea and a third party (182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 616) . According to the court, the creation of an implied-in-fact contract between an author, on the one hand, and an agent, producer, or director, on the other hand, is of such a personal nature that it is effective only between the contracting parties (182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 617) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Obligation to Pay for Disclosure of Idea Cannot Be Inferred From Mere Fact of Submission of Idea

Aliotti v. R. Dakin & Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F.2d 898 , was an action for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the use of an idea in the design of stuffed animal toys, arising out of defendant's manufacture and sale of stuffed animals similar to those designed by plaintiff. Plaintiff argued that she disclosed her ideas to defendant because she hoped to obtain employment with defendant and to "put her ideas to work for [defendant]." Affirming the trial court's grant of summary judgment for defendant, the court of appeals held that no contract may be implied when a plaintiff discloses an idea to a defendant solely for the purpose of inducing the defendant to enter into a future business relationship with plaintiff, rather than for the purpose of gaining compensation for the idea (831 F.2d 898, 902) . The court ruled that even if it accepted the premise of plaintiff's argument, the uncontradicted evidence indicated that plaintiff showed her designs to defendant even before defendant's executives suggested that their company might consider hiring her (831 F.2d 898, 903) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasMisappropriation

177 of 177 DOCUMENTS

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 146 LITERARY PROPERTY, COPYRIGHT, AND THE PROTECTION OF IDEAS
PART II. FORMS
C. Protection of Ideas Under California Law

14-146 California Points & Authorities § 146.65

§ 146.65 Opposing Contention That Disclosure of Idea Is Breach of Confidence

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

_____'S [Specify party, e.g., DEFENDANT] DISCLOSURE OF _____'S [specify party, e.g., PLAINTIFF'S IDEA IS NOT A BREACH OF CONFIDENCE, BECAUSE THERE EXISTS NO EVIDENCE OF COMMUNICATION OF THE CONFIDENTIALITY OF THE IDEA, OR EVIDENCE FROM WHICH A CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE PARTIES CAN BE INFERRED.

A. Requirements for Actionable Breach of Confidence. An actionable breach of confidence only arises if an idea, whether or not protectible, is offered to another in confidence and is voluntarily received by the offeree in confidence with the understanding that it is not to be disclosed to others and is not to be used by the offeree for purposes beyond the limits of the confidence without the offeror's permission (Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 462, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 ; Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 323, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

B. Evidence of Communication of Idea's Confidentiality Required. A confidential relationship will not be created from the mere submission of an idea to another; there must exist evidence of the communication of the confidentiality of the submission, or evidence from which a confidential relationship can be inferred (Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 462, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 ; Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 323, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

C. Knowledge of Confidential Nature of Idea Required to Precede Conveyance of Idea. It is settled that knowledge of the confidential nature of the idea must precede its conveyance (Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 ; see Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

D. Actual Notice of Confidential Nature of Idea Required. Actual, rather than constructive, notice of confidentiality is necessary to establish knowledge of the confidentiality of the idea (Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276).

E. Opportunity to Reject Idea Required. An opportunity to reject the idea is mandatory if the party who allegedly wrongfully disclosed the information is to be charged with having voluntarily assumed the obligation to maintain the confidentiality of the idea (Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 ; Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 324, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

F. Agreement Between Parties to Maintain Confidentiality of Idea Required. There can be no tortious breach of confidence in the absence of an understanding between the parties that the confidential nature of the idea will be maintained (Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 466, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 ; Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322-323, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a party has disclosed an idea in breach of confidence.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue of breach of confidence. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief [see Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 459, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 (appeal from judgment)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Specifically, counsel should insert argument showing that there exists insufficient evidence either to show communication of the confidentiality of the idea, or to infer the existence of a confidential relationship between the parties [see Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 323, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704]. Counsel should also insert argument showing that one or more of the requisite elements for a breach of confidence action is missing [see Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 462, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention set out in § 146.62.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion of and form for use in breach of confidence actions involving the use or disclosure of an idea, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 349, Literary Property and Copyright (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Actionable Breach of Confidence

In Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 , the president of plaintiff corporation conceived ofnovel and unique ideas for forms for use in defendant telephone company's annual cable counting, a process by which the company takes inventory of its telephone system. The president disclosed his new forms to the company with the reservation that no other of the company's contractors were to be shown or use them. According to the president, the company agreed to this condition. Subsequently, the president wrote to the company informing it that his suggestion for improving the forms was without reservation or compensation to his corporation, and requesting that disclosure to any competing bidder relative to the work on computer forms, programs, or methods be prohibited. Thereafter, the company contracted with the corporation to perform the 1971 cable count for the company. The contract gave the company the unrestricted right to reproduce, use, and disclose any and all information, knowledge, or data originated by the corporation, its employees, and its agents in connection with the work performed, with the exception of the computer program used by the corporation. In 1972, a similar contract was executed, giving the company the unrestricted right to use or disclose all information originated by the corporation, without the computer program limitation in the 1971 contract. The president knew the 1972 agreement did not provide him with protection for the computer forms or the program. The corporation performed cable counting for the company in 1972 and 1973. In 1973, the president discovered that the company had given computer forms designed by him to another contractor for use in the cable-counting process. The company did not tell the other contractor that the forms were developed by the president, nor did the forms carry any mark identifying plaintiff as their owner. The forms carried the company's logo, and the company tod the contractor to have the forms printed at its own expense. At trial, defendants offered testimony of the custom and practice in the computer service industry to protect products and trade secrets by some form of warning, or at least a name or logo, on any item considered confidential. Plaintiff's forms did not contain any warning or claim to be confidential, even though the president distributed the forms to numerous telephone companies in the course of his sales presentations. Plaintiff then commenced an action against the telephone company and the contractor for conspiracy to misappropriate trade secrets and disclosure of confidential information. At trial, the court instructed the jury that in order to find a breach of confidence, it had to find that plaintiff conveyed "substantially secret" information to the telephone company. The jury returned a verdict for defendants, and plaintiff appealed, challenging the propriety of the jury instruction.

The court of appeal affirmed the propriety of the instruction, holding that because an idea must be confidential and novel to warrant protection on a breach of confidence theory, inclusion in the instruction of the requirement that plaintiff conveyed "substantially secret" information to the telephone company found support in the law (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 463) . The court then held that an actionable breach of confidence will arise when an idea, whether or not protectible, is offered to another in confidence, and is voluntarily received by the offeree in confidence with the understanding that it is not to be disclosed to others, and is not to be used by the offeree for purposes beyond the limits of the confidence without the offeror's permission (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 462) .

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court affirmed the trial court's summary judgment for defendants on plaintiff's breach of confidence count. The court found that plaintiff's submission of his idea was so tenuous and careless that, as a matter of law, the trial court correctly concluded that there were insufficient facts to warrant a trial (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 325) . The court held that an actionable breach of confidence will arise when an idea, whether or not protectible (under copyright law), is offered to another in confidence, and is voluntarily received by the offeree in confidence with the understanding that it is not to be disclosed to others, and is not to be used by the offeree for purposes beyond the limits of the confidence without the offeror's permission (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 323) .

[b] Evidence of Communication of Idea's Confidentiality Required

The facts and procedural background of Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 , are discussed in § 146.65[3][a]. In Tele-Count, the court held that in order to prevent the unwarranted creation or extension of a monopoly and restraint on progress in art, a confidential relationship will not be created from the mere submission of an idea to another. There must exist evidence of the communication of the confidentiality of the submission or evidence from which a confidential relationship can be inferred (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 462) .

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court held that in order to prevent the unwarranted creation or extension of a monopoly and restraint on progress in art, a confidential relationship will not be created from the mere submission of an idea to another. There must exist evidence of the communication of the confidentiality of the submission or evidence from which a confidential relationship can be inferred. Among the factors from which this inference can be drawn are proof of the existence of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the use or disclosure of the idea, proof that the material submitted was protected by reason of sufficient novelty and elaboration, or proof of a particular relationship such as partners, joint adventurers, principal and agent, or buyer and seller under certain circumstances (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 323) . In dictum, the court noted Professor Nimmer's view that in some instances proof that a plaintiff offered an idea on condition of confidence and on a clear understanding that payment would be made on use of the idea would suffice to establish a confidential relationship (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322) . The court did not believe that theunsolicited submission of an idea to a potential employee or potential business partner, even if that person then passed the information to a competitor, presented a triable issue of fact for confidentiality. To allow the disclosure that took place in the instant case to result in a confidential relationship, absent more, would greatly expand the creation of monopolies and bear the concomitant danger to the free communication of ideas. The court's conclusion that evidence of knowledge of confidence or in which a confidential relationship can be implied was a minimum prerequisite to the protecton of freedom in the arts. In the case at bench, there was no direct evidence that either party believed plaintiff was submitting his idea to defendant sports announcer in confidence. While in plaintiff's response to a defense summary judgment motion there was reference to his own thoughts from which one might infer that he felt a confidence existed, he never communicated these thoughts to the sports announcer, and nothing of an understanding of confidence could be inferred from the announcer's conduct. There was no evidence of more than a conversation that might have developed into a later relationship (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 324) .

[c] Knowledge of Confidential Nature of Idea Required to Precede Conveyance of Idea

The facts and procedural background of Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 , are discussed in § 146.65[3][a]. In Tele-Count, the court upheld a jury instruction that a breach of confidence cause of action places on the plaintiff the burden to show that the confidential nature of the information was made known to the defendant before its disclosure (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 463, 465) . The court held knowledge of the confidential nature of the information must precede its disclosure. By instructing the jury on a plaintiff's burden to establish that the confidential nature of the information was made known to defendant, the trial court properly focused attention on the element of an understanding between the parties (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465) . In all cases, the gravamen of the tort of breach of confidence is an understanding between the parties that an idea is offered on a condition of confidence (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 464) . An understanding that confidential information has been disclosed cannot arise absent evidence of knowledge of confidence (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465) .

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court noted in dictum that Professor Nimmer's view is that protection of information or ideas through a breach of confidence action takes place only if the confidential nature of the information is made clear prior to its exhibition (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322) .

[d] Actual Notice of Confidential Nature of Idea Required

The facts and procedural background of Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 , are discussed in § 146.65[3][a]. In Tele-Count, the court upheld the trial court's jury instruction that a breach of confidence places on plaintiff the burden to show that the confidential nature of the information was made known to defendant before the information was communicated to defendant (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 463) . The court rejected plaintiff's contention that no particular form of notice of confidentiality is required in a breach of confidence cause of action, including constructive notice of confidentiality (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 463-464) . The court held that an understanding that confidential information has been communicated cannot arise absent evidence of knowledge of confidence, and that actual notice of confidentiality is necessary to establish this knowledge. Mere constructive notice, or a showing that defendant should have known of the confidential nature of the information imparted, would improperly subject defendant to liability without the requisite understanding or voluntary acceptance of the confidential disclosure (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465) . The court did not read the decision in Thompson v. California Brewing Co. (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 469, 475-476, 310 P.2d 436 (discussed in § 146.62[3][b]) as permitting liability to be imposed for mere constructive notice of confidentiality (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 464) .

[e] Opportunity to Reject Idea Required

The facts and procedural background of Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 , are discussed in § 146.65[3][a]. In Tele-Count, the court upheld the trial court's jury instruction that plaintiff had the burden to prove that defendant telephone company had an opportunity to reject receipt of plaintiff's idea and information on a confidential basis before plaintiff submitted it. The court held that an opportunity to reject was mandatory if defendant was to be charged with having voluntarily assumed the obligation to maintain the confidentiality of the information (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465) . The opportunity to reject the information may be established by circumstantial evidence or inferred from circumstances surrounding communication of the information (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 465-466) . Even though the court's instruction omitted reference to proof of the opportunity to reject, the court did not find the instruction erroneous as read, particularly since the trial court otherwise instructed the jury that circumstantial evidence and inferences could be used to prove any fact (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 466) .

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court found there were insufficient facts to warrant a trial on plaintiff's breach of confidence count (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 325) . Specifically, the court found that one could not infer from anything defendant sports announcer did or said that he wasgiven the chance to reject plaintiff's information in advance (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 324) .

[f] Agreement Between Parties to Maintain Confidentiality of Idea Required

The facts and procedural background of Tele-Count Engineers, Inc. v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co. (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 214 Cal. Rptr. 276 , are discussed in § 146.65[3][a]. In Tele-Count, the court upheld the trial court's jury instruction that breach of confidence requires a showing that defendant agreed to maintain the confidentiality of information communicated to it. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that that part of the instruction giving plaintiff the burden to prove that defendant telephone company voluntarily accepted plaintiff's information with the understanding and in agreement that it would keep the information confidential improperly interjected elements of contract law into a breach of confidence cause of action (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 466, 467) . The court held there can be no tortious breach of confidence in the absence of an understanding between the parties that the confidential nature of the information will be maintained. According to the court, the breach of confidence tort is not predicated solely on an express agreement protecting the confidence. The basis of the action is an obligation created by law for reasons of justice when no contract otherwise exists. Thus, the tort can be established without proof of a promise. However, the trial court's instruction did not add an element of contract law to the cause of action. The instruction did not require a formal or comprehensive agreement. It did require that the parties be in agreement on the specific point that plaintiff's forms should remain confidential (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 466) . The court suggested the "in agreement" language be omitted from the instruction in the future, but it was not convinced that inclusion of that language in the instant case could have mistakenly led the jury to believe that plaintiff was not entitled to recover absent an express agreement with the telephone company to keep the information confidential. The court did not see how use of the language "with the understanding and in agreement" in the context of the whole instruction led the jury to believe mistakenly that plaintiff's breach of confidence action demanded proof of a contract (168 Cal. App. 3d 455, 467) .

The facts and procedural background of Faris v. Enberg (1979) 97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322, 158 Cal. Rptr. 704 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][a]. In Faris, the court held that one of the elements of a breach of confidence cause of action is that the idea be received by the offeree with the understanding that it is not to be disclosed to others (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 323) . The court found that in the case at bench, no rational receiver of the communications from plaintiff could be bound to an understanding that a secret was being imparted. One could not infer from anything defendant sports announcer said or did that he voluntarily received plaintiff's idea with an understanding that it was not to be given to others (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 324) . The court noted, in dictum, Professor Nimmer's view that proof that a plaintiff offered an idea on a condition of confidence and a clear understanding that payment would probably be made on use of the idea would suffice in some instances to establish a confidential relationship (97 Cal. App. 3d 309, 322) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agreement Between Parties to Maintain Confidentiality of Idea Required

The facts and procedural background of Rokos v. Peck (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 227 Cal. Rptr. 480 , are discussed in § 146.64[3][f]. In Rokos, the court also upheld the trial court's judgment on the pleadings in favor of defendants and against the named plaintiff on her claim for unjust enrichment. The court treated that claim as, in fact, a cause of action for breach of confidence (182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 618) . In so ruling, the court noted that as in a claim for breach of an implied-in-fact contract to pay for the use of an idea, the cause of action for breach of confidence focuses on the nature of the personal relationship existing between the original parties to the agreement, one of whom obligates himself or herself not to disclose the ideas revealed in confidence. In the case at bench, the named plaintiff had no contact with either defendant and thus could not assert a claim that defendants had somehow breached their obligation to her regardless of a purported assignment of production rights in her coplaintiff's idea (182 Cal. App. 3d 604, 619) .

[b] Requirements for Actionable Breach of Confidence

Aliotti v. R. Dakin & Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F.2d 898 , is discussed in § 146.64[4][a]. In that case the court of appeals further held that plaintiff failed to establish the requisite elements of a breach of confidence cause of action, after concluding that plaintiff had conveyed no confidential information to defendant concerning three of her stuffed animal designs, which were already on the market when she showed them to defendant. Further, plaintiff presented neither testimony that defendant knew her information was conveyed in confidence nor testimony that she and defendant agreed that any confidences would be maintained (831 F.2d 898, 903) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Copyright LawGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasGeneral OverviewCopyright LawSubject MatterIdeasMisappropriation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS

14-147 California Points & Authorities 147.syn

§ 147.syn Synopsis to Chapter 147: MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS

§ 147.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 147.02 Governing Statutes

§ 147.03 Distinction Between Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process

§ 147.04 Page Limits on Memoranda

§ 147.05 Related Pleadings and Practice Forms

§ 147.06 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§ 147.07 Related California Torts Chapters

§§ 147.08-147.19 [Reserved]

§ 147.20 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Failure to Allege Favorable Termination of Action on Which Complaint Is Based

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Favorable Termination Requirement

[b] Conclusionary Pleading Insufficient

[c] Consideration Should Be Given to Judgment as Whole

[d] Conviction Not Favorable Termination

[e] Mental Commitment Not Favorable Termination

[f] Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Not Sufficient

[g] Judgment Obtained Against Plaintiff by Fraud Not Favorable Termination

[h] Action on Which Complaint Based Not Yet Terminated

[i] Judgment Based on Statute of Limitations Not Favorable Termination

[j] Dismissal of Action Not Necessarily Favorable Termination

[k] Dismissal Based on Negotiation, Settlement, or Compromise Not Favorable Termination

[l] Dismissal Based on Plea Bargain Not Favorable Termination

[m] Voluntary Dismissal Not Favorable Termination When Based on Litigant's Motivation to Avoid Further Costs, Attorney's Fees, and Litigation

[n] Dismissal Based on Defense of Laches Not Favorable Determination

[o] Voluntary Dismissal Based On Technical Defect Is Not Favorable Termination

[p] Stipulated Judgment Not Favorable Termination

[q] Dismissal for Failure to Comply with Discovery Orders Not Favorable Termination

[r] Summary Judgment Based on Statute of Frauds Not Favorable Termination

[s] Dismissal Due to Lack of Standing Not Favorable Termination

[t] Adverse Termination More Favorable Than Settlement Offer Is Not Favorable Termination

[u] Termination Based on Failure to Comply With Compulsory Cross-Complaint Rule Is Not Favorable Termination

[v] Voluntary Dismissal of Malicious Prosecution Action Based on Adverse Appellate Decision in Underlying Action is Not Favorable Termination

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Favorable Termination Requirement

[b] Consideration Should Be Given to Judgment as Whole

[c] Conviction Not Favorable Termination

[d] Action on Which Complaint Based Not Yet Terminated

[e] Judgment Based on Statute of Limitations Not Favorable Termination

[f] Dismissal of Action Not Necessarily Favorable Termination

[g] Dismissal Based on Negotiation, Settlement, or Compromise Not Favorable Termination

[h] Voluntary Dismissal Not Favorable Termination When Based on Litigant's Motivation to Avoid Further Costs, Attorney's Fees, and Litigation

[i] Voluntary Dismissal Based On Technical Grounds Not Favorable Termination

[j] Stipulated Judgment Not Favorable Termination

§ 147.21 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Failure to Allege Malice

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malice Requirement

[b] No Malice in Reporting Facts to Authorities

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Malice Requirement

[b] No Malice in Reporting Facts to Authorities

§ 147.22 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Action Prosecuted by Defendant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prosecution of Action or Proceeding Is Required

[b] Subsidiary Procedure Within Lawsuit Insufficient

[c] Causing Investigation Not Sufficient

[d] Filing Request for Admissions Is Not Sufficient

[e] Application for License and Resulting Comparative Hearing Not Sufficient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Causing Investigation Is Not Sufficient

§ 147.23 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Action in Small Claims Court Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Small Claims Action Is Insufficient Basis

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Small Claims Action Is Insufficient Basis

§ 147.24 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Ancillary Contempt Proceeding Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Failure to Prevail on Order to Show Cause re Contempt Is Insufficient Basis

[b] Contempt Proceeding to Sanction Discovery Abuse Is Insufficient Basis

[c] Order to Show Cause Taken Off Calendar Before Hearing Is Insufficient Basis

§ 147.25 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Motion to Disqualify Opposing Attorney Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Failure to Prevail on Motion to Disqualify Opposing Counsel Is Insufficient Basis

§ 147.26 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Filing Motion in Lawsuit to Which Defendant Was Not Party Is Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Filing of Motion in Litigation to Which Defendant Was Not Party Is Not Adequate Basis.

§ 147.27 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Unsuccessful Family Law Motion or Order to Show Cause Cannot Be Basis of Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Family Law Proceedings

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Family Law Proceedings

§ 147.28 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Application for Writ of Sale to Enforce Judgment is Not Adequate Basis for Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot be Based on Motion for Writ of Sale to Enforce Judgment

§ 147.29 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Action for Malicious Prosecution May Not Be Based On Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action May Not Be Based on Underlying Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action May Not Be Based on Underlying Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration

§ 147.29A Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Unsuccessful Petition for Injunction Against Harassment or Workplace Violence Is Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Failed Attempt to Obtain Injunction Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6

[b] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Failed Attempt to Obtain Injunction Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8

§ 147.30 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Form

[d] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

[b] Period of Limitation

[c] Accrual of Cause of Action

[d] Effect of Appeal on Period of Limitation

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect of Appeal on Period of Limitation

§ 147.31 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Public Entity Immune From Liability [Gov. Code §§ 815.2(b), 821.6]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Public Employee

[b] Immunity of Public Entity

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Immunity of Public Employee

§ 147.32 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Right to Bring Action Waived by Seeking Defense Costs Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(c)

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Seeking Defense Costs

[b] Judicial Notice

§ 147.33 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Governmental Entity Not Permitted to Bring Malicious Prosecution Suit

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Governmental Entities Not Permitted to Sue for Malicious Prosecution

§ 147.34 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Defendant Had Probable Cause to Institute Civil Action on Which Complaint Is Based

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Probable Cause Must Be Shown

[b] Probable Cause as Legal Issue

[c] Summary Judgment Is Proper When Declarations or Affidavits Establish Existence of Probable Cause

[d] Favorable Outcome of Action as Establishing Probable Cause

[e] Probable Cause for Initiating Action Establishes Probable Cause for Continuing Action After Reversal on Appeal

[f] Attorney's Probable Cause

[g] Irrelevance of Attorney Research to Issue of Probable Cause

[h] Extent of Attorney's Knowledge Irrelevant Where Underlying Action Was Tenable

[i] Denial of Defendant's Summary Judgment Motion in Underlying Civil Action Normally Establishes Probable Cause

[j] Preliminary Injunction in Underlying Action Establishes Probable Cause

[k] Fraud Exception to Interim Adverse Judgment Rule Cannot Be Relitigated in Malicious Prosecution Action

[l] Failure to Post Undertaking Does Not Negate Probable Cause Established by Order for Preliminary Injunction

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment Is Proper When Declarations or Affidavits Establish Existence of Probable Cause

[b] Attorney's Probable Cause

[c] Preliminary Injunction in Underlying Action Establishes Probable Cause

§ 147.35 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Defendant Had Probable Cause to Institute Criminal Proceedings on Which Action Is Based

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conviction Establishes Probable Cause

[b] Innocence of Plaintiff Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause

[c] Setting Aside of Indictment or Information Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause

[d] Dismissal of Charges on Day of Trial Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Innocence of Plaintiff as Not Establishing Lack of Probable Cause

§ 147.36 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Defendant Not Instrumental in Causing Criminal Prosecution

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action When Defendant Not Instrumental in Causing Prosecution

§ 147.37 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Probable Cause Established by Reliance on Advice of Attorney

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Opposing Memoranda

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reliance on Advice of Counsel

[b] Effect of Mistaken Advice

[c] Investigation Not Required

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reliance on Advice of Counsel

§ 147.38 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Malice May Not Be Inferred From Lack of Probable Cause, Because Defendant Was Only Negligent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Inference of Malice Solely From Lack of Probable Cause

[b] Negligence Alone Cannot Constitute Malice

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Negligence Alone Cannot Constitute Malice

§ 147.39 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Unclean Hands Doctrine Applicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unclean Hands

[b] Conduct Supporting Defense Need Not Relate Directly to Decision to File Underlying Action

§ 147.40 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Dismissal of Prior Action as Favorable Termination if It Indicates Innocence or Lack of Merit

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[i] Related Uses

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Dismissal of Criminal Action as Sufficient

[b] Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient

[c] Dismissal of Civil Action for Want of Prosecution as Sufficient

[d] Dismissal of Criminal Action for Lack of Evidence as Sufficient

[e] Voluntary Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient

[f] Final Termination Does Not Have to Be Bar to Further Action

[g] Favorable Termination May Occur by Reason of Appellate Decision

[h] Dismissal of Civil Action as Discovery Sanction as Favorable Termination if Reflecting on Merits

[i] Dismissal of Appeal With Settlement That Preserves Favorable Trial Court Judgment as Favorable Termination

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Dismissal of Criminal Action as Sufficient

[b] Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient

[c] Dismissal of Criminal Action for Lack of Evidence as Sufficient

[d] Final Termination Does Not Have to Be Bar to Further Action

[e] Dismissal of Civil Action as Discovery Sanction as Favorable Termination if Reflecting on Merits

§ 147.41 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Action for Malicious Prosecution as Able to Be Based on Institution of Proceedings Other Than Civil or Criminal Complaints

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint as Sufficient

[b] Will Contest as Sufficient

[c] Administrative Proceeding as Sufficient

[d] Cross-Complaint Filed During Marital Dissolution Action as Sufficient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Administrative Proceeding as Sufficient

§ 147.42 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Private Party Permitted to Sue for Malicious Prosecution Based on Underlying Action in Which Public Entity Was Also Defendant

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Private Party May Sue Based on Underlying Action in Which Public Entity Was Also Defendant

§ 147.43 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Defendant Public Employee Is Not Immune Because He or She Was Acting Outside the Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[i] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Immunity When Acting Outside Scope of Employment

§ 147.44 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Action for Malicious Prosecution May Be Based on Partial Favorable Termination of Underlying Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partial Favorable Termination Is Sufficient Basis

§ 147.45 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Cause of Action Can Be Based on Allegations That Any Ground of Underlying Action Was Asserted Without Probable Cause Notwithstanding Probable Cause for Other Grounds Asserted in That Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Can Be Based on One Ground Asserted in Underlying Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Can Be Based on One Ground Asserted in Underlying Action

§ 147.46 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Reliance on Attorney's Advice Not Established

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure

[b] Failure to Make Fair Disclosure of All Facts

[c] Lack of Good Faith

[d] No Belief in Guilt

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Make Fair Disclosure of All Facts

§ 147.47 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Judicial Arbitration Award as Sufficient Basis for Action If Award Indicates Absence of Misconduct and Lack of Merit

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Uses

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Arbitration Award as Sufficient Basis for Action

[b] Final Decision by Arbitrator as Favorable Termination

§ 147.48 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Underlying Judgment Reached Through Application of Parol Evidence Rule May Constitute Favorable Termination for Purposes of Bringing Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment Reached After Application of Parol Evidence Rule May Support Malicious Prosecution Action

§ 147.49 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution

Action--Denial of Motions for Nonsuit and Summary Judgment or Motion to Strike Does Not Establish Existence of Probable Cause

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Nonsuit and Summary Judgment Motions Do Not Show Probable Cause

[b] Denial of Anti-SLAPP Motion Does Not Show Probable Cause

§ 147.50 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Default Judgment Does Not Establish Probable Cause for Bringing Underlying Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Default Judgment Does Not Establish Probable Cause

§ 147.51 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Attorney Had No Probable Cause to Institute Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable-Cause Test Focuses Only on Theory Advanced in Action

[b] Legal Complexity Does Not Establish Probable Cause

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Probable-Cause Test Focuses Only on Theory Advanced in Action

§ 147.52 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--No Probable Cause to Institute Underlying Civil Action--Defendant Was on Notice of Lack of Factual Support for Fundamental Element of Claim

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Lacked Factual Support to Prosecute Underlying Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Lacked Factual Support to Prosecute Underlying Action

§ 147.53 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Attorney Continued to Prosecute Underlying Action After Discovering Lack of Probable Cause

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Lacked Probable Cause to Continue Prosecuting Underlying Action

[b] Filing of Appeal is Continuation of Action

[c] Cocounsel Joining After Suit is Filed May Be Liable for Failing to Take Corrective Steps

§§ 147.54-147.69 [Reserved]

§ 147.70 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Improper Use of Process Alleged

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Use Requirement

[b] Bad Motive or Malice Insufficient

[c] Exercise of Right to Appeal Not Sufficient

[d] Proper Use of Attachment Not Sufficient

[e] Proper Examination of Judgment Debtor Not Sufficient

[f] Mere Filing of Complaint or Cross Complaint Not Sufficient

[g] Proper Use of Summons Not Sufficient

[h] Application for Receiver Not Sufficient

[i] Levy of Writ of Execution Not Sufficient

[j] Continued Pursuit of Meritless Litigation for Improper Collateral Purpose Not Actionable

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Use Requirement

[b] Bad Motive or Malice Insufficient

[c] Mere Filing of Complaint or Cross Complaint Not Sufficient

§ 147.71 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Insufficient Allegation of Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage Required

[b] Manner of Service Not Collateral Advantage

[c] Humiliation, Embarrassment and Intimidation Insufficient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage Required

[b] Manner of Service Not Collateral Advantage

§ 147.72 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Allegation of Action Taken Pursuant to Judicial Authority

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Judicial Authority

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Judicial Authority

§ 147.73 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations

§ 147.74 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Absolute Privilege of Publication in Judicial Proceeding [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Applicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege for Publication in Judicial Proceeding Applicable

[b] Publication Outside Courtroom

[c] Publication Need Not Be Relevant or Material in Technical Sense

[d] Judicial Enforcement Efforts Fall Within Scope of Litigation Privilege

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Privilege for Publication in Judicial Proceeding Applicable

[b] Publication Need Not Be Relevant or Material in Technical Sense

§ 147.75 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] by Defendant--Insufficiency of Evidence to Justify Finding of Ulterior Motive

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficient Evidence of Ulterior Motive

§ 147.76 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Abuse of Process--Complaint Sufficiently Alleges Facts Constituting Improper Use of Process

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Abuse of Process

[b] Improper Purpose

[c] Broad Interpretation of Process

[d] Filing Complaint for Improper Purpose

[e] Excessive Attachment

[f] Improper Use of Provisional Remedy of Claim and Delivery

[g] Garnishment on Exempt Property

[h] Improper Use of Interrogatory

[i] Notice of Deposition for Improper Purpose

[j] Improper Use of Contempt Order

[k] Improperly Obtaining Judgment and Levying Execution on Self

[l] Improper Use of Appellate Process

[m] Improper Use of Writ of Execution

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Purpose

[b] Filing Complaint for Improper Purpose

[c] Improper Use of Interrogatory

§ 147.77 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Abuse of Process--Absolute Privilege of Publication in Judicial Proceeding [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Publication Not Related to Proceeding

[b] Non-Communicative Conduct Not Protected by Judicial Privilege

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.01

§ 147.01 Scope of Chapter

This part contains memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 147.20-147.33] and opposing [see §§ 147.40-147.45] general demurrers to complaints for malicious prosecution, and for use in supporting [see §§ 147.34-147.39] and opposing [see §§ 147.46-147.52] motions for summary judgment in such actions.

This part contains memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 147.70-147.74] and opposing [see §§ 147.76-147.77] general demurrers to complaints for abuse of process. Also included is a form for use in supporting a motion for a new trial [see § 147.75].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.02

§ 147.02 Governing Statutes

The immunity of public employees from suit for malicious prosecution is governed by Gov. Code § 821.6.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.03

§ 147.03 Distinction Between Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process

To establish a cause of action for malicious prosecution, a plaintiff must plead and prove that the prior action was commenced by defendant and favorably terminated in plaintiff's favor, was brought without probable cause, and was initiated with malice [Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 50, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608] . Abuse of process differs from malicious prosecution in that the gist of the tort is not commencing an action or causing process to issue without justification but misusing or misapplying process, justified in itself, for an end other than it was designed to accomplish. The purpose for which the process is used, once it is issued, is the only thing of importance. Consequently, in an action for abuse of process, it is unnecessary for the plaintiff to prove that the proceeding was terminated in his or her favor or that it was initiated without probable cause [Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 232, 317 P.2d 613 ; see Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1168-1169, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202] .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElementsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.04

§ 147.04 Page Limits on Memoranda

Generally, a memorandum must not exceed 15 pages in length, or in the case of a motion for summary judgment or summary adjudication, 20 pages in length. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages in length [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party desiring to file a longer memorandum must obtain leave of court [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. For further discussion of the page limitations under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113, and of other basic format requirements of memoranda, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeContent & FormTortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.05

§ 147.05 Related Pleadings and Practice Forms

For a discussion, procedural guide, and forms involving actions for malicious prosecution, or the tort abuse of process, see Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

For discussion and a complaint involving wrongful attachment as an abuse of process, see Ch. 62, Attachment , in that same set. For discussion and forms for use in actions involving torts which protect interests that are similar to the interest in avoiding the improper use of process protected by abuse of process actions, see the following chapters in that set:

- Ch. 257, False Imprisonment.
- Ch. 340, Libel and Slander.
- Ch. 362, Mental Suffering and Emotional Distress.
- Ch. 429, Privacy.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.06

§ 147.06 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a memorandum of points or authorities or a trial or appellate brief, and for a sample of a complete memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeContent & FormCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting Memoranda

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.07

§ 147.07 Related California Torts Chapters

For full discussion of the causes of action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process, see Levy, Golden, and Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 43, (Matthew Bender).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART I. INTRODUCTION

14-147 California Points & Authorities §§ 147.08-147.19

[Reserved]

§§ 147.08[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.20

§ 147.20 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Failure to Allege Favorable Termination of Action on Which Complaint Is Based

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEMURRER
_____ [name],	)	TO COMPLAINT
Plaintiff,	)	[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]
vs.	)
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION BECAUSE IT FAILS TO ADEQUATELY ALLEGE THAT THE ACTION ON WHICH THE COMPLAINT IS BASED WAS TERMINATED FAVORABLY TO PLAINTIFF.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object to the complaint by demurrer on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action where such ground appears on the face of the complaint [or from any matter of which the court is required to take or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)).

B. Favorable-Termination Requirement. To state a cause of action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must plead that the prior judicial proceeding of which he or she complains terminated in his or her favor (Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 845-846, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 ; Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 638-639, 99 Cal. Rptr. 393).

C. Conclusionary Pleading Insufficient. An allegation that only states that the proceedings were terminated favorably to plaintiff without pleading any facts to support the allegation is a mere conclusion and insufficient to support the statement of a cause of action for malicious prosecution (Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 854-855, 57 Cal. Rptr. 11).

D. Consideration Should Be Given to Judgment as Whole. In determining whether a proceeding alleged to have been maliciously prosecuted has been terminated in favor of the party injured by such proceeding, consideration should be given to the judgment as a whole (Staffpro, Inc. v. Elite Show Servs., Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1402-1405, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 ; Freidberg v. Cox (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 381, 385, 386, 242 Cal. Rptr. 851).

[Optional] E. Conviction Not Favorable Termination. When the proceedings of which plaintiff is complaining terminated in his or her conviction, plaintiff cannot allege favorable termination of the proceedings (Roos v. Harris (1928) 203 Cal. 201, 202, 263 P. 225).

[Optional] F. Mental Commitment Not Favorable Termination. When the proceedings of which plaintiff is complaining terminated with a judicial order committing plaintiff to a mental institution, plaintiff cannot allege favorable termination of the proceeding (Rouse v. Twin Pines Sanitarium, Inc. (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 639, 642-643, 328 P.2d 536).

[Optional] G. Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Not Sufficient. When the underlying action resulted in a jury verdict and then a judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of plaintiff in the malicious prosecution action, the action was not terminated favorably for plaintiff in the malicious prosecution action so as to support a cause of action for malicious prosecution (Cowles v. Carter (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 350, 354-359, 171 Cal. Rptr. 269).

[Optional] H. Judgment Obtained Against Plaintiff by Fraud Not Favorable Termination. When judgment in the prior action on which plaintiff bases the action for malicious prosecution was against plaintiff and in favor of the defendant, plaintiff cannot allege favorable termination of the action even by alleging that the judgment was obtained by fraud (Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 636-639, 99 Cal. Rptr. 393).

[Optional] I. Action on Which Complaint Based Not Yet Terminated. When the action on which the malicious prosecution complaint is based is not yet final, plaintiff cannot allege favorable termination of the action because it has not terminated and plaintiff's cause of action for malicious prosecution has not yet accrued (Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 845-850, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 ; Rich v. Siegel (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 465, 467-470, 86 Cal. Rptr. 665).

[Optional] J. Judgment Based on Statute of Limitations Not Favorable Termination. When the prior action on which the action for malicious prosecution is based was dismissed because it was not filed within the relevant period of limitations, the prior action did not reflect on the merits and thus was not favorably terminated so as to support an action for malicious prosecution (Lackner v. La Croix (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 747, 750-752, 159 Cal. Rptr. 693, 602 P.2d 393 ; Warren v. Wasserman, Comden & Casselman (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1302, 271 Cal. Rptr. 579).

[Optional] K. Dismissal of Action Not Necessarily Favorable Termination. An allegation that the action on which the complaint for malicious prosecution is based was dismissed is not sufficient to state a cause of action when there are no allegations as to the reason for the dismissal (Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 853-854, 57 Cal. Rptr. 11 ; see Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 184-185, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745).

[Optional] L. Dismissal Based on Negotiation, Settlement, or Compromise Not Favorable Termination. When the prior action on which the complaint for malicious prosecution was dismissed because by reason of negotiation, settlement, or compromise between the parties, the prior action was not favorably terminated so as to support a cause of action for malicious prosecution (Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 184-185, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 ; Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 853, 57 Cal. Rptr. 11).

[Optional] M. Dismissal Based on Plea Bargain Not Favorable Termination. When criminal charges are dismissed pursuant to a plea bargain agreement under which the defendant agrees to enter a plea of guilty or nolo contendere to lesser charges, the dismissal does not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of a malicious prosecution action (Cote v. Henderson (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803-804, 267 Cal. Rptr. 274).

[Optional] N. Voluntary Dismissal Not Favorable Termination When Based on Litigant's Motivation to Avoid Further Costs, Attorney's Fees, and Litigation. A voluntary dismissal entered not on the merits of the underlying action but solely for the purpose of avoiding the payment of further attorney's fees and court costs and the inconvenience of further litigation is not a favorable termination for purposes of a malicious prosecution action (Oprian v. Goldrich, Kest & Assocs. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 337, 345, 269 Cal. Rptr. 429).

[Optional] O. Dismissal Based on Defense of Laches Not Favorable Determination. Dismissal of an action when based on the successful raising of the defense of laches is not a favorable determination for purposes of a malicious prosecution action (Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 838-839, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317).

[Optional] P. Voluntary Dismissal Based On Technical Defect Is Not Favorable Termination. When a complaint is voluntarily dismissed because of a technical defect such as a pending appeal, the dismissal is not a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action (Eells v. Rosenblum (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1856, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 323).

[Optional] Q. Stipulated Judgment Not Favorable Termination. When a complaint is terminated by way of agreement of the parties for a stipulated judgment, the judgment is not a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action (Dalany v. American Pac. Holding Corp. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 822, 828, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 13).

[Optional] R. Dismissal for Failure to Comply with Discovery Orders Not Favorable Termination. The dismissal of an action for failure to comply with discovery orders does not constitute a favorable termination if there is any doubt as to the liability or innocence of the prevailing party in the action that was dismissed (Pattiz v. Minye (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 822, 827, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 802).

[Optional] S. Summary Judgment Based on Statute of Frauds Not Favorable Termination. Summary judgment in the underlying action in favor of the malicious prosecution plaintiff is not a favorable termination for purposes of the malicious prosecution action when the underlying judgment was based on the statute of frauds (Hall v. Harker (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 836, 844-845, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44 , disapproved on other grounds, Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 336, 349, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 497).

[Optional] T. Dismissal Due to Lack of Standing Not Favorable Termination. A dismissal of the underlying action due to a lack of standing, which is a jurisdictional defect, does not constitute a favorable termination reflecting on the merits of that action for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action (Hudis v. Crawford (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1592, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 50).

[Optional] U. Adverse Termination More Favorable Than Settlement Offer Is Not Favorable Termination. A malicious prosecution plaintiff cannot meet the favorable termination requirement merely by demonstrating that the termination was more favorable to that party than the terms of a settlement offer made by that party earlier in the underlying action (Staffpro, Inc. v. Elite Show Servs., Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1400-1401, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682).

[Optional] V. Termination Based on Failure to Comply With Compulsory Cross-Complaint Rule is Not Favorable Termination. The dismissal of a cause of action because the plaintiff was required to pursue the matter as a compulsory cross-complaint in a related action, but failed to do so, is a technical disposition not related to the merits of the claim and will not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action (Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 450, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183).

[Optional] W. Voluntary Dismissal of Malicious Prosecution Action Based on Adverse Appellate Decision in Underlying Action is Not Favorable Termination. If a malicious prosecution action is stayed on the grounds that an appeal from the underlying judgment is pending, and the underlying appeal is then resolved adversely to the malicious prosecution plaintiff, a voluntary dismissal of the malicious prosecution action by that plaintiff in response to losing the underlying appeal is considered a technical disposition and not a termination on the merits for purposes of any subsequent malicious prosecution action that might be brought by the defendant in the first malicious prosecution action (Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 459, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it does not adequately allege favorable termination of the action on which the complaint is based.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] based on the contention that there was not a favorable termination of the action on which the complaint is based.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 147.40 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by this memorandum.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer based on lack of a favorable termination allegation, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Favorable Termination Requirement

Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , involved an action for medical malpractice. Defendant doctor filed a cross complaint for declaratory relief against the plaintiff and her attorney seeking a judgment that, if the malpractice action terminated favorably as to defendant, plaintiff and her attorney be found to have brought the action maliciously. Plaintiff demurred to the cross complaint, but the trial court overruled the demurrer on the basis that it was proper because the complaint only sought declaratory relief. Plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition against the trial court proceeding with the cross complaint, which the Supreme Court granted.

The Court first held that it is hornbook law that the plaintiff in a malicious prosecution action must plead and prove that the prior judicial proceeding of which he or she complains terminated in his or her favor. The Court noted that the rationale for the requirement is that favorable termination indicates that the action did not have merit (3 Cal. 3d 841, 845-846) . The Court then held that, because of inability to plead favorable termination as required, a defendant cannot cross complain for malicious prosecution in the main action.

The Court found that the favorable termination rule is supported by conceptual, practical, and policy reasons. Conceptually, a cause of action for malicious prosecution does not exist until there is favorable termination because the cause of action only accrues when the underlying action is terminated (3 Cal. 3d 841, 845-846) . Practically, the favorable termination rule avoids the possibility of inconsistent judgments which might result if malicious prosecution actions could be brought before the termination of the underlying action, and it also avoids unnecessary litigation since defendants who lose cannot bring such actions. The favorable termination rule also furthers the policy that malicious prosecution actions are not favored by the law and keeps such actions from being used to harass plaintiffs (3 Cal. 3d 841, 847-848) . The Court then found that declaratory relief was not appropriate in this situation and issued the writ of prohibition (3 Cal. 3d 841, 848-850) .

In Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 99 Cal. Rptr. 393 , plaintiffs sued real estate brokers and their attorney for fraud and malicious prosecution. The brokers had sued plaintiffs for a real estate commission and obtained a judgment which plaintiffs paid. Plaintiffs later ascertained that a key document in the case against them was forged and had criminal charges brought against the brokers and the brokers' attorney. One of the brokers was granted immunity and testified against the others. However, only the attorney was found guilty. The trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings in plaintiffs' action for fraud and malicious prosecution. The court of appeal upheld the judgment. It held that there was not sufficient evidence to set aside the judgment because the introduction of perjured testimony was intrinsic fraud which is not sufficient for setting aside a judgment. It then found that the fraud and malicious prosecution causes of action were collateral attacks on the prior judgment, and such final judgment is not subject to such collateral attack.

With regard to the malicious prosecution cause of action, the court found that plaintiffs could not plead the favorable termination of the prior action, and that this was fatal to their cause of action. The court held that the fact that the prior judgment was procured by perjured testimony was not sufficient to excuse the favorable termination requirement. The court found that one policy basis for the requirement was the doctrine of finality of judgments and the policy underlying that doctrine (22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 638-639) . The court also refused to hold that favorable termination should not be required in a malicious prosecution cause of action (22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 639) .

[b] Conclusionary Pleading Insufficient

In Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 57 Cal. Rptr. 11 , plaintiff had been the defendant in an action for damaging the malicious prosecution defendants' property, in which the malicious prosecution defendants had obtained a preliminary injunction for property damage which was later quashed as being a void order. The action for property damage was then dismissed with prejudice. Plaintiff instituted an action for malicious prosecution. Defendants demurred on the ground of uncertainty and the demurrer was sustained. Plaintiff did not amend; the action was dismissed and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that one of the essential elements of an action for malicious prosecution is favorable termination of the underlying action. However, termination based on negotiation, settlement, or consent does not constitute such favorable termination. Since the complaint merely alleged the quashing of the injunction and dismissal of the underlying action, the dismissal could have been based on agreement or consent and thus the allegations were insufficient to state a cause of action (248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 853-854) . The court noted that a mere conclusionary pleading of favorable termination would not be sufficient and that plaintiff had to clearly allege why the termination was favorable (248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 854-855) .

[c] Consideration Should Be Given to Judgment as Whole

In Staffpro, Inc. v. Elite Show Servs., Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 , the plaintiff was in the business of providing personnel and services, such as security guards and traffic control staff, for large events. The plaintiff had been sued by a competitor who alleged that the plaintiff had been engaging in unlawful practices, such as using unlicensed personnel and failing to pay proper benefits, in order to lower costs and underbid the competition. In that underlying lawsuit, the trial court had ordered the plaintiff to make certain changes to its business practices in response to the allegations of the first cause of action in the complaint. The trial court denied injunctive relief to compel further changes in the plaintiff's practices, although it recognized that there was significant evidence that some of those practices may have been unlawful as well. The trial court made further findings suggesting that it believed that the complaint had been brought in good faith by the plaintiff's competitor, although the remaining causes of action were terminated favorably to the plaintiff. After resolution of that suit, the plaintiff sued its competitor for malicious prosecution. The trial court granted the defendant's motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, after finding that the plaintiff could not show that the underlying action was terminated favorably to the plaintiff. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court recognized that there was a split among court of appeal opinions as to whether the favorable termination element may be met if the underlying proceeding involved multiple, severable causes of action, only some of which were terminated in favor of the malicious prosecution plaintiff. Although some opinions had held that the element may be met if favorable termination can be shown on at least one severable cause of action, the court of appeal was of the opinion that the Supreme Court's analysis in Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 [see § 147.45[3][a]], mandated a different conclusion. Based largely on the analysis in that opinion, the court of appeal held that severability only comes into play in analyzing the lack of probable cause element of the malicious prosecution cause of action, and that the element of favorable termination is concerned only with the result in the underlying proceeding as a whole (136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1402-1405). Because the defendant achieved success on one of the causes of action in the underlying suit, the plaintiff could not show favorable termination of that suit as a whole for purposes of making a claim for malicious prosecution (136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1407).

In Freidberg v. Cox (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 381, 242 Cal. Rptr. 851 , the underlying action involved a dispute between two attorneys, Ingraham and Ritter, over the division of a fee from a mutual client. Ingraham brought an action against Ritter, demanding a portion of the disputed fee and asserting three legal theories: quantum meruit, joint venture, and interference with contract. The court awarded Ingraham fees based on quantum meruit, but dismissed the parts of the action premised on the other two legal theories. Ritter then filed an action for malicious prosecution against Ingraham and Ingraham's attorneys, alleging that the two theories unsuccessfully asserted by defendants were prosecuted maliciously. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendants.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court rejected plaintiff's assertion that the element of favorable termination was satisfied by dismissal of the part of the action premised on theories of joint venture and interference with contract. The question of whether the original suit was successfully prosecuted against the plaintiff must be determined by the judgment or decree therein on the final adjudication, and not by the separate allegations and charges and the proof for and against each (197 Cal. App. 3d 381, 385) . Under the "primary right" theory of pleading followed in California, a cause of action is based on the injury suffered by a plaintiff, regardless of the particular legal theory or theories on which plaintiff seeks redress. Here, defendants' assertion in the action for attorney's fees on theories of joint venture and tortious interference with contract were aimed at remedying but one breach of primary right--Ingraham's right to share an attorney's fee. Defendants' various theories of recovery were merely different legal theories of the nature of the single wrong. If Ingraham had sued to recover attorney's fees solely on one theory, such as quantum meruit, and the matter had gone to final judgment, a later action to recover attorney's fees on the basis of joint venture or tortious interference with contract would be foreclosed by the doctrine of res judicata; separate prosecution of each theory would constitute splitting a cause of action (197 Cal. App. 3d 381, 388) . In the instant case, there was but one injury and one cause of action for recovery of attorney's fees. Because that action did not terminate in favor of plaintiff, the plaintiff could not maintain an action for malicious prosecution (197 Cal. App. 3d 381, 389) .

[d] Conviction Not Favorable Termination

In Roos v. Harris (1928) 203 Cal. 201, 263 P. 225 , plaintiff's complaint for malicious prosecution was based on a proceeding in which she was tried and found guilty. The complaint further alleged that the prosecution was malicious. The trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings and plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court upheld the judgment against plaintiff. It held that plaintiff could not state a cause of action for malicious prosecution because she could not plead favorable termination. It held that the final judgment of conviction could not be so collaterally attacked and was conclusive on the issue of probable cause for the prosecution of the first action (203 Cal. 201, 202) .

[e] Mental Commitment Not Favorable Termination

In Rouse v. Twin Pines Sanitarium, Inc. (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 639, 328 P.2d 536 , plaintiff's action for malicious prosecution was based on defendant physician's actions in having plaintiff committed to the state mental hospital, which commitment was ordered after a judicial hearing. The trial court entered a judgment of nonsuit and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that the cause of action for malicious prosecution was barred by the fact that plaintiff's commitment was ordered, which precluded any finding of favorable termination (162 Cal. App. 2d 639, 642-643) .

[f] Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict Not Sufficient

In Cowles v. Carter (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 350, 171 Cal. Rptr. 269 , defendant in the malicious prosecution action had brought an action against the malicious prosecution plaintiff and obtained a jury verdict. The court then granted a motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action based on prosecution of the action that had resulted in the judgment notwithstanding the verdict in his favor. Defendant demurred for failure to state a cause of action, and the demurrer was sustained without leave to amend on the basis that the prior verdict established probable cause. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the favorable termination requirement was closely related to the probable cause requirement and that judgment for plaintiff in the prior action established probable cause (115 Cal. App. 3d 350, 358) . The court then held that the jury verdict for the malicious prosecution defendant in the underlying action was sufficient to establish probable cause despite the judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court analogized to the cases holding that reversal of a jury verdict on appeal was not sufficient to establish favorable termination (115 Cal. App. 3d 350, 355-357) . The court also noted that its holding reinforces the sound principle that nonmeritorious malicious prosecution actions should be prevented from clogging the judicial system (115 Cal. App. 3d 350, 359-360) .

[g] Judgment Obtained Against Plaintiff by Fraud Not Favorable Termination

Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 99 Cal. Rptr. 393 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][a].

[h] Action on Which Complaint Based Not Yet Terminated

Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][a]. The Supreme Court held that a cross complaint for malicious prosecution was not proper because the cross complainant could not allege favorable termination of the action, which was still pending (3 Cal. 3d 841, 845-847) .

In Rich v. Siegel (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 465, 86 Cal. Rptr. 665 , plaintiff, defendant in the prior action for wrongful attachment, obtained a ruling that he should be granted a partial summary judgment on one cause of action against one plaintiff in that action. However, the action was still pending against other defendants. Plaintiff then filed an action for malicious prosecution against the plaintiff in the first action and pled that the granting of the motion for summary judgment was sufficient favorable termination. Defendant successfully demurred and the case was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal upheld the judgment against plaintiff. The court held that the granting of the motion for summary judgment was not in fact a judgment but was an order directing the subsequent entry of a judgment. Therefore, the proceeding had not been terminated and would not be final until judgment was entered and the time for appeal had expired. Thus, the favorable termination requirement was not met. The court held that termination did not have to be such that the action could not be refiled but that the action did have to be terminated (7 Cal. App. 3d 465, 468-469) .

[i] Judgment Based on Statute of Limitations Not Favorable Termination

Lackner v. La Croix (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 747, 159 Cal. Rptr. 693, 602 P.2d 393 , was an action for malicious prosecution based on an action which defendant had previously brought for medical malpractice. Defendant patient's malpractice action had been dismissed after the jury found that it had not been commenced within the applicable limitations period. Plaintiff physician then brought the action for malicious prosecution, which was dismissed by the trial court after it granted a motion for summary judgment in favor of defendant patient.

The Supreme Court upheld the trial court. It held that, although it is not essential for the prior proceeding to have been favorably terminated after a trial on the merits, it is necessary that the prior proceeding's termination reflect on the merits of the action. If the termination does not relate to the merits--reflecting on neither innocence of nor responsibility for the alleged misconduct--the termination is not favorable in the sense of supporting a subsequent action for malicious prosecution. Therefore, a dismissal on the basis of the statute of limitations in the prior action for malpractice is not sufficient because it does not bear on the issue of plaintiff's malpractice (25 Cal. 3d 747, 750-751) .

The Court noted that policy reasons run against the maintenance of a cause of action for malicious prosecution based on an action dismissed for limitations reasons. Such an action for malicious prosecution would bring up the same stale issues that the limitations defense precludes from litigation in the underlying action. It would also be unfair to allow plaintiff to use the statute of limitations as a defense and then to use such termination of the prior action as the basis of a cause of action for malicious prosecution. The Court noted that plaintiff physician had not alleged that the malpractice action was brought with knowledge that the limitations period had run and that the Court was not ruling on the right to relief in such a situation (25 Cal. 3d 747, 752) .

In Warren v. Wasserman, Comden & Casselman (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 271 Cal. Rptr. 579 , the trial court granted summary judgment on the plaintiff's malicious prosecution count, finding that the termination of the prior action by a successful defense based on the statute of limitations was not a termination in plaintiff's favor. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. Relying on Lackner v. La Croix (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 747, 752 n.3, 159 Cal.

Rptr. 693, 602 P.2d 393 , discussed above, the plaintiff had argued on appeal that the dismissal of a prior action on limitations grounds constitutes a favorable termination when the complaint alleges the prior action was prosecuted with knowledge that the statute of limitations had run. The court of appeal found plaintiff's argument to be without merit, and noted that the policy reasons behind requiring a favorable termination would be thwarted if a litigant could meet the favorable termination requirement simply by alleging defendants knew the action was barred by the statute of limitations (220 Cal. App. 3d 1297, 1301, 1303) .

[j] Dismissal of Action Not Necessarily Favorable Termination

Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 57 Cal. Rptr. 11 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][b].

In Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 , plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution against a patient and her attorney based on a malpractice action which had been voluntarily dismissed. Defendants moved for summary judgment, which was denied. Defendant attorney then sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to rule in his favor. Defendant's basic contention on the malicious prosecution cause of action was that the decision to dismiss was based on the expense of litigation and the small possible recovery and thus was not a favorable termination in plaintiff's favor. In ruling on the contention, the court of appeal stated that a dismissal based on negotiation, settlement, or consent was not a favorable termination (95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 184-185) . The court then found that there was an issue of fact as to the reasons for the dismissal and upheld the denial of the summary judgment as to plaintiff's malicious prosecution cause of action (95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 185-187) .

[k] Dismissal Based on Negotiation, Settlement, or Compromise Not Favorable Termination

Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][j].

Webb v. Youmans (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 851, 57 Cal. Rptr. 11 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][b].

[l] Dismissal Based on Plea Bargain Not Favorable Termination

In Cote v. Henderson (1990) 218 Cal. App. 3d 796, 267 Cal. Rptr. 274 , plaintiff brought an action alleging that defendant maliciously instigated the filing of criminal charges against him by reporting to the police and to the district attorney that he had forced her to engage in various nonconsensual sex acts. The district attorney filed a multiple-count felony indictment against the plaintiff based on the defendant's report, but later dismissed all of the charges except one in exchange for plaintiff pleading nolo contendere to the excepted charge. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the malicious prosecution cause of action without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that the dispositive issue was whether the prior action was pursued to a legal termination in the plaintiff's favor. The court concluded that it was not (218 Cal. App. 3d 796, 802) . The court noted that the plaintiff's nolo contendere plea in the underlying action was the legal equivalent of a guilty plea (218 Cal. App. 3d 796, 803) . It held that, as a matter of law, the favorable termination that is essential to the plaintiff in a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on the dismissal of the criminal charges remaining after the defendant in a criminal proceeding has entered a plea of nolo contendere to one or more of the charges in the accusatory pleading pursuant to a plea bargain (218 Cal. App. 3d 796, 804) . In the present case, the court found that the People's dismissal of multiple counts did not give rise to the requisite inference that plaintiff was innocent of the charged offenses. Instead, the dismissal was the result of a plea bargain, an agreement or settlement between plaintiff and the People. As such, the dismissal of the remaining criminal charges was of a procedural nature rather than on the merits or reflecting the accused's innocence (218 Cal. App. 3d 796, 805) .

[m] Voluntary Dismissal Not Favorable Termination When Based on Litigant's Motivation to Avoid Further Costs, Attorney's Fees, and Litigation

In Oprian v. Goldrich, Kest & Assocs. (1990) 220 Cal. App. 3d 337, 269 Cal. Rptr. 429 , the underlying litigation involved a dispute over the validity of a purchase option on a parcel of land. After it became apparent to the holders of the option that the landowner was not going to honor the option, they filed a complaint against the landowner, who subsequently cross complained against the option holders. Following trial on the option holders' complaint and the landowner's cross complaint, the jury returned an award for the landowner on both the complaint and cross complaint. Subsequently, however, the court of appeal reversed, directing the court to enter judgment on the cross complaint in favor of the option holders. At the conclusion of its opinion, the court of appeal also directed that the option holders' complaint be dismissed, "based on representations of counsel at oral argument." At oral argument, one of the justices asked counsel for the option holders whether he would retry the complaint if the court reversed the judgment on the landowner's cross complaint. Counsel responded he had not discussed the matter with his clients, but that if the judgment on the cross complaint were reversed, the option holders would probably be willing to forego further prosecution of the complaint rather than incur additional attorney's fees and the inconvenience of pursuing a second trial. The landowner subsequently filed a complaint for malicious prosecution, naming the option holders as defendants. The option holders filed motions for summary judgment contending, inter alia, the prior action did not result in a favorable determination to the landowner. The trial court granted the motions and entered judgments for defendants.

The court of appeal affirmed, concluding that the plaintiff did not establish that the underlying cause of action terminated in his favor (220 Cal. App. 3d 337, 345) . The court stated that the dismissal of the option holders' complaint following oral argument was not on the merits; had the court found that the option holders' complaint was based on reversible error or was without substance, it would most certainly have reversed the judgment on the complaint. Here, however, having determined to reverse the jury's verdict in favor of the landowner on the cross complaint, the court of appeal merely inquired as to whether counsel would be willing to dismiss the complaint if the judgment on the cross complaint were reversed (220 Cal. App. 3d 337, 344) . The option holders agreed to dismiss the complaint against the landowner if they received a favorable determination on the cross complaint. The motivation was to avoid the payment of further attorney's fees and court costs and the inconvenience of a second trial. The court noted that the dismissal was not on the merits and resulted from a practical decision that further litigation was too expensive to pursue (220 Cal. App. 3d 337, 345)

[n] Dismissal Based on Defense of Laches Not Favorable Determination

Plaintiffs in Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317 , brought an action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process based on defendants' filing a petition for writ of mandate to compel plaintiff to comply with provisions of the California Environmental Quality Act. The petition was denied by the trial court in that action after plaintiff raised the issues of laches. Thereafter plaintiff filed the malicious prosecution action. After the close of the trial, the trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment and took undersubmission plaintiff's motion for leave to amend the complaint. After the trial court denied leave to amend, plaintiff appealed from the judgment of the trial court, contending, among other things, that the order dismissing defendant's petition for writ of mandate on the basis of laches was a termination of that action favorable to plaintiff.

In affirming the judgment of the trial court, the court of appeal rejected plaintiff's contentions, holding that a successful laches defense does not reflect on the merits of a petition for a writ of mandate. The court stated that the successful laches defense in the present case had no more bearing on any alleged wrongful conduct than would a statute of limitations defense [see Lackner v. La Croix (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 747, 751, 159 Cal. Rptr. 693, 602 P.2d 393 ; see also § 147.20[3][a]]. The trial court in the petition case, the court observed, tried the laches defense first and never reached the merits of the petition. Consequently, the court concluded, the present case was more than appropriate for the exercise of the summary judgment procedure (133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 838-839) .

[o] Voluntary Dismissal Based On Technical Defect Is Not Favorable Termination

In Eells v. Rosenblum (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 323 , an independent claims adjuster filed a malicious prosecution action against an auto insurance broker, the president of the brokerage, and the attorney representing both. The malicious prosecution action was the fourth in a series of related lawsuits involving an auto accident and subsequent bad faith insurance claims. The adjuster filed the malicious prosecution action alleging that the voluntary dismissal without prejudice of case No. 3 constituted a termination in his favor on the merits. He asserted that case No. 3 had been filed prematurely because the appeal from case No. 2 was still pending. He alleged, however, that prematurity was not a technical defect, and thus, that the case had been dismissed on substantive, not procedural grounds. Defendants filed a demurrer, arguing that the cause of action could not be maintained because the termination of case No. 3 had not been on the merits. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, concluding that case No. 3 had not terminated in the adjuster's favor because it had been voluntarily dismissed upon a technical defect.

The court of appeal affirmed, ruling that because the dismissal of case No. 3 was based solely upon procedural grounds, it did not reflect on the substantive merits, and therefore was not a favorable termination (36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1856) . To determine whether the termination by dismissal was favorable, the court analyzed whether the termination indicated the innocence of the defendant or simply involved technical, procedural, or other reasons not inconsistent with the defendant's guilt (36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1855) . The court found that when the attorney filed the complaint in case No. 3, he did so only because he misunderstood the effect of the pending appeal in case No. 2. The complaint in case No. 3 was filed to prevent a statute of limitations defense, and was then dismissed only because the procedural posture of the case prevented it from going forward. Because the dismissal of case No. 3 was based on a technical defect, that is, the pending appeal of case No. 2, the dismissal did not reflect on the substantive merits of the action (36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1856) . The court concluded that plaintiff's failure to plead facts sufficient to satisfy the favorable termination element of his malicious prosecution action constituted a failure to allege a cause of action for malicious prosecution (36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 1856) .

[p] Stipulated Judgment Not Favorable Termination

In Dalany v. American Pac. Holding Corp. (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 822, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 13 , plaintiff resigned as president of defendant corporation rather than sell his shares, and then sued the corporation to collect loans he had advanced it. The corporation alleged affirmative defenses, and filed a cross-complaint alleging various breaches of fiduciary duty by plaintiff. The parties entered into settlement negotiations, and reached an agreement which was culminated with a stipulated judgment in favor of plaintiff. Plaintiff then filed a malicious prosecution action, alleging that the cross-complaint in the prior action had been filed without probable cause. The corporation moved for summary judgment on the ground that the prior action had not been terminated in plaintiff's favor, and the trial court granted the motion.

On appeal, plaintiff contended that because the cross-complaint ended by way of a stipulated judgment in his favor instead of a stipulated dismissal that he had obtained a favorable termination. However, the court of appeal stated that cases involving settlements effected by way of dismissal do not turn on the method by which the parties choose to terminate the litigation, but on whether the termination was the result of an agreement of the parties. The court held that where termination is by way of an agreement of the parties, whether the parties use a dismissal or a stipulated judgment, there is ambiguity with respect to the merits of the proceeding and in general no favorable termination occurs for purposes of pursuing a malicious prosecution action (42 Cal. App. 4th 822, 828-829) . The court thus affirmed the summary judgment entered by the trial court.

[q] Dismissal for Failure to Comply with Discovery Orders Not Favorable Termination

In Pattiz v. Minye (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 822, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 802 a an attorney brought an action for malicious prosecution against his former client, alleging that the client acted with malice and without probable cause in prosecuting her cross-complaint against the attorney. In the underlying action, the attorney had performed estate planning services, and billed the client for the money. She paid the bill and requested that he stop further work because she believed that his fees were "exorbitant" and "shocking." The attorney sued the client for the unpaid amounts. She responded with a cross-complaint against the attorney for breach of fiduciary duty and recovery of money paid by mistake. During discovery, the attorney sought production of the client's family financial records and other documents related to his legal services. The prior year the attorney had returned these documents to the client in a file storage box. When the client produced the box during discovery, the attorney found the papers were in disarray and some had vanished. The client insisted that she had never seen the missing documents and did not know their whereabouts. An attorney representing the client in the cross claim, declared that she removed some of the papers from the box, believing that they were irrelevant or privileged. This attorney offered to produce the missing records but her offer was refused. The trial court resolved the discovery dispute by dismissing the client's cross-claim ruling that the actions of defendant cross-complainant were egregious and a misuse of discovery process by failing to even minimally comply with the court's orders compelling discovery. The lawyer proceeded to trial in his action for unpaid fees and received a judgment against the client. Subsequently, the lawyer brought an action for malicious prosecution, alleging that the client acted with malice and without probable cause in prosecuting her cross-complaint. He also alleged that the trial court's dismissal of the cross-complaint was a favorable termination to him. The client brought a motion for summary judgment, the trial court ruled that dismissal of the cross-complaint did not reflect on the merits and entered summary judgment for the client. The attorney appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court properly granted summary judgment because the attorney could not establish that he obtained a favorable termination of the cross-action. The dismissal due to the client's failure to comply with discovery orders did not reflect the innocence of the attorney or the or the lack of merits of the action (61 Cal. App. 4th 822, 827). According to the court, declarations submitted by the client, her daughter, and her attorney in the cross-complaint reflected that the client did not abandon her action or refuse to cooperate in discovery. Further, the trial court's ruling made no express findings concerning the merits of the cross complaint, it stated only that the client had "misused the discovery process and egregiously failed to comply with court-ordered discovery" (61 Cal. App. 4th 822, 828).

[r] Summary Judgment Based on Statute of Frauds Not Favorable Termination

In Hall v. Harker (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 836, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44 , overruled in part, Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 336, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 497 , an investment fund company and its CEO brought a malicious prosecution action against the attorney of a former employee. The malicious prosecution claim was based on an underlying cross complaint alleging various causes of action filed by the attorney in response to a defamation action filed against his client by the investment company and its CEO. The underlying defamation action stemmed from letters written by the employee and his attorney and sent to various parties during a dispute between the employee and the company concerning alleged promises by the CEO that the employee would receive a bonus commission that was not otherwise mentioned in the employee's written employment contracts. Summary judgment was granted on the underlying cross complaint when the trial court ruled that the statute of frauds and the parol evidence rule precluded consideration of alleged oral statements contrary to those contained in the fully integrated written employment contracts. The investment company and its CEO eventually prevailed on their defamation action, and subsequently filed their malicious prosecution action. After a court trial, the plaintiffs prevailed on their malicious prosecution action and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court ruled first that the trial court's constant negative comments about attorneys and abuses in the practice of law demonstrated judicial bias sufficient to warrant reversal and remand for a new trial before a new judge (69 Cal. App. 4th 836, 841-843) . However, in lieu of remand, the court reversed and rendered on the basis that the disposition of the underlying cross complaint was not a favorable termination that would support a subsequent malicious prosecution action. Noting the rule that a termination to an underlying action that involves technical, procedural, or other reasons not substantive in nature will not support a malicious prosecution action, the court ruled that the statute of frauds was a purely procedural defense rendering certain types of contracts unenforceable, rather than invalid (69 Cal. App. 4th 836, 844) . The court then ruled that a disposition based on the parol evidence rule was also insufficient to support a malicious prosecution action. Although the court noted that the parol evidence rule was a rule of substantive law and not just an evidentiary rule, the court concluded that while the rule may render evidence of collateral agreements legally irrelevant, the rule could not erase the actual existence of any such agreements. Thus, if such agreements actually existed, their legal irrelevancy as an evidentiary matter precludes a substantive legal determination of any culpability based on such collateral agreements. The court then held that this resolution was not a "favorable termination" sufficient to support a subsequent malicious prosecution action (69 Cal. App. 4th 836, 844-845) , overruled in part, Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 336, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 497 .

NOTE:

The California Supreme Court has overruled Hall v. Harker to the extent that the court of appeal held that application of the parol evidence rule to reach a judgment does not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action [Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 336, 349, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 407 ; see § 147.48[3][a]].

[s] Dismissal Due to Lack of Standing Not Favorable Termination

In Hudis v. Crawford (2005) 125 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 24 Cal. Rptr. 3d 50 , an attorney brought an action under the Elder Abuse statute on behalf of two clients who alleged that the two persons being sued were liable to the clients for elder abuse of the clients' deceased aunt. The action for elder abuse was dismissed, however, on the grounds that the clients were not the successors in interest to the decedent and therefore lacked standing to sue for her abuse. The persons sued for elder abuse then sued the clients and their attorney for malicious prosecution for bringing the elder abuse action. The attorney demurred to the complaint on the grounds that the dismissal of the underlying action for lack of standing did not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of bringing a malicious prosecution action. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend. The plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that lack of standing is a jurisdictional defect that does not reflect on the merits of the action--that is, it does not reflect on the issue of whether or not the persons sued actually committed elder abuse against the decedent. The underlying dismissal demonstrated only that the attorney's clients were not the proper parties to bring the action. As such, the underlying dismissal did not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of supporting a malicious prosecution action (125 Cal. App. 4th 1586, 1592) .

[t] Adverse Termination More Favorable Than Settlement Offer Is Not Favorable Termination

The factual and procedural background of Staffpro, Inc. v. Elite Show Servs., Inc. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 682 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][c]. The plaintiff in that malicious prosecution action argued that although his business competitor had achieved some success on one cause of action in the underlying lawsuit, the cause of action was actually terminated favorably to the plaintiff because the changes to the plaintiff's business practices ordered by the court on that cause of action were narrower than changes that the plaintiff had offered to make as part of a settlement offer earlier in the proceedings. The court of appeal disagreed, noting the lack of legal authority for the plaintiff's argument, and held that a malicious prosecution plaintiff cannot meet the favorable termination requirement by demonstrating that although an underlying cause of action was actually terminated against that party, the details of the termination were more favorable to that party than the terms of a settlement offer made by that party earlier in the underlying action (136 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1400-1401).

[u] Termination Based on Failure to Comply With Compulsory Cross-Complaint Rule Is Not Favorable Termination

In Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183 , plaintiffs sued their former attorney for malicious prosecution based on two previous actions that the attorney had filed against them. In one of the previous actions, the attorney, who had represented plaintiffs in a will probate dispute, filed a petition in the probate court seeking attorney's fees he alleged that plaintiffs owed to him under his contract of representation in the probate matter, fees which plaintiffs had contested. While the attorney eventually succeeded in recovering at least some of the contested fees, the fee petition filed with the probate court failed when an appellate court determined that the fee dispute was not properly filed with the probate court, but instead should have been brought as a compulsory cross-complaint in another lawsuit that the plaintiffs had already filed against the attorney for his alleged wrongdoing in handling the probate matters. The trial court granted the attorney's motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, after concluding that plaintiffs could not demonstrate a probability of success on the merits of their malicious prosecution claim based on either of the attorney's underlying actions against them. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. As to the malicious prosecution claim based on the underlying attorney fee petition, the court held that the dismissal of the fee petition for failure to bring the petition as a compulsory cross-complaint in plaintiff's earlier lawsuit was merely an interim decision and a technical disposition that did not reflect on the merits of the fee petition. As such, plaintiffs could not predicate a malicious prosecution action on that petition (176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 450) .

[v] Voluntary Dismissal of Malicious Prosecution Action Based on Adverse Appellate Decision in Underlying Action is Not Favorable Termination

The factual and procedural background of Drummond v. Desmarais (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 183 , is described in subsection [u], above. In addition to plaintiffs' malicious prosecution claim based on their former attorney's fee petition, plaintiffs also based a malicious prosecution claim on an earlier malicious prosecution lawsuit that the attorney had filed against them after they had objected to his petition seeking to have his fees paid out of the disputed estate. Plaintiffs appealed the trial court's decision to strike this cause of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court first concluded that the evidence was sufficient to support a jury finding that the attorney had filed the underlying malicious prosecution action with malice and without probable cause, as that malicious prosecution action had been based solely on plaintiffs' objection to his fee demands and he could not have proven that plaintiffs had acted with malice in doing so (176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 451-455) . However, the court also concluded that plaintiffs could not prove a favorable termination of the attorney's underlying malicious prosecution action. The attorney's underlying malicious prosecution action had been stayed pending appeal of the dispute over the fee petition that had been filed with the probate court. Within days after the appellate court ruled that the petition was improperly filed in the probate court, the attorney had voluntarily dismissed his malicious prosecution action. Faced with those circumstances, the court of appeal held that if a malicious prosecution action is stayed on the grounds that an appeal from the underlying judgment is pending, and the underlying appeal is then resolved adversely to the malicious prosecution plaintiff, a voluntary dismissal of the malicious prosecution action by that plaintiff in response to losing the underlying appeal is considered a technical disposition and not a termination on the merits for purposes of any subsequent malicious prosecution action that might be brought by the defendant in the first malicious prosecution action. As such, plaintiffs could not prove a favorable termination of that earlier malicious prosecution action for purposes of supporting their own malicious prosecution action (176 Cal. App. 4th 439, 459-460) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Favorable Termination Requirement

Lackner v. La Croix (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 747, 749, 159 Cal. Rptr. 693, 602 P.2d 393 , is discussed in § 147.20[3][i].

In De La Pena v. Wolfe (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 481, 223 Cal. Rptr. 325 , plaintiff was originally sued by a corporation for money owed and the action was dismissed for failure of the corporation to answer interrogatories. Shortly thereafter, an attorney who was recently hired by the corporation to pursue collections, believing the action was ongoing, filed a substitution of attorney form and an at-issue memorandum in the case. Plaintiff then brought a malicious prosecution action against the attorney and others. The trial court sustained summary judgment in favor of the attorney, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal stated the rule that a favorable termination is one that tends to indicate the innocence of the accused, and while the termination need not be one that follows a trial on the merits, it must reflect the merits of the underlying action (177 Cal. App. 3d 481, 484) . The court affirmed the trial court's summary judgment, holding that a favorable termination did not exist, because the dismissal did not reflect the merits of the underlying action under the facts of the case (177 Cal. App. 3d 481, 484-486) .

In Sierra Club v. Superior Court (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 1138, 214 Cal. Rptr. 740 , an environmental organization brought a petition for administrative mandate challenging the California Coastal Commission's decision regarding a proposed development and expansion of certain property. The superior court ordered the matter remanded for reconsideration with respect to the correctness of the standard used to assess the evidence, and ultimately denied the petition. The owners of the property then brought an action against the organization for malicious prosecution; defendant unsuccessfully moved for summary judgment on the ground, among others, that plaintiffs could not establish the element of favorable termination. The court of appeal reversed, holding that defendant essentially prevailed on the procedural challenge, even though its petition was ultimately denied (168 Cal. App. 3d 1138, 1144-1147) .

Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 145 Cal. Rptr. 829 , is discussed in § 147.40[3][b]. In the course of holding that dismissal for want of prosecution is a favorable termination, the court of appeal noted that favorable termination is one of the requirements for a cause of action for malicious prosecution (80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 825) .

In Caraker v. Webster (1938) 24 Cal. App. 2d 300, 74 P.2d 1048 , plaintiff's complaint for malicious prosecution was against persons who had cited him before the Civil Service Commission under a charge of insubordination, which proceedings resulted in his discharge as hog ranch operator at a state hospital. The trial court dismissed the action after plaintiff refused to amend his fourth amended complaint. The court of appeal upheld the dismissal and judgment against plaintiff. It held that the complaint showed on its face that the proceeding against plaintiff had been successful and thus the malicious prosecution proceeding amounted to a collateral attack on the judgment that could not be sustained in the absence of allegations of extrinsic fraud (24 Cal. App. 2d 300, 301) .

[b] Consideration Should Be Given to Judgment as Whole

In Murdock v. Gerth (1944) 65 Cal. App. 2d 170, 150 P.2d 489 , the underlying action concerned a series of partnership dissolution contracts entered into between Murdock and Wolf. Among the contracts were agreements dated June 21, 1937, and July 6, 1937. Wolf, through his attorney (Gerth), filed suit against Murdock on the contract dated June 21, 1937, seeking $5,050 in damages. After trial of the action, the court entered judgment in favor of Wolf, awarding him $200 in damages. The judgment, however, was not based on the contract dated June 21, 1937, but on the contract dated July 6, 1937, which Wolf neither pleaded nor relied on in his complaint. Murdock filed suit for malicious prosecution, alleging that Gerth sought maliciously to enforce the provisions and terms of the contract dated June 21, 1937. Murdock prevailed in the trial court, and Gerth appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that in determining whether a proceeding alleged to have been maliciously prosecuted has been terminated in favor of the party injured by that proceeding, consideration must be given to the judgment as a whole. Holding otherwise would defeat the purpose of the rule that seeks to prevent collateral attack on judgments of duly constituted courts. Therefore, the decree or judgment itself in the former action is the criterion by which to determine who was the successful party in the former action. In this particular case, Wolf actually obtained a judgment against Murdock for $200. Although the sum was less than the damages requested, this judgment was conclusive proof that Murdock had an obligation to Wolf that was due and unpaid. The situation was not altered by the fact that the trial court did not adopt Wolf's theory in the prior action. The fact remains that the judgment, framed on the pleadings filed and the issues raised by those pleadings, was not in favor of Murdock (65 Cal. App. 2d 170, 177).

[c] Conviction Not Favorable Termination

In Andrews v. Young (1937) 21 Cal. App. 2d 523, 69 P.2d 891 , plaintiff had pled guilty to charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and had been given a suspended sentence. He sued the court and its officers for malicious prosecution. The trial court sustained demurrers to his complaint and dismissed the action. On appeal, the court upheld the dismissal. It held that the fact that defendant was convicted and the judgment was final precluded a collateral attack on the judgment by an action for malicious prosecution. It stated that it was a prerequisite to the maintenance of a cause of action for malicious prosecution that the plaintiff affirmatively allege a favorable termination of the underlying proceeding (21 Cal. App. 2d 523, 526) .

[d] Action on Which Complaint Based Not Yet Terminated

In Jenkins v. Pope (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 1292, 266 Cal. Rptr. 557 , an attorney sued her former client for various causes of action, including fraud. The attorney later amended her complaint to delete the fraud cause of action, and the client cross complained, alleging, inter alia, malicious prosecution of the deleted fraud cause of action. At the time the client cross complained, the attorney's other causes of action against the client were still pending. The trial court sustained the attorney's demurrer to the cross complaint without leave to amend for failure to state a cause of action and dismissed it. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the deletion of the fraud cause of action did not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of malicious prosecution. The court held that the client could not complain for malicious prosecution with respect to the deleted cause until the entire proceeding against him had reached a final termination in his favor (217 Cal. App. 3d 1292, 1298-1301) .

In Friedman v. Stadum (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 217 Cal. Rptr. 585 , plaintiff sued defendant for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. Defendant demurred on the ground that the action was premature because an appeal was pending on the action on which plaintiff's suit was based. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a plaintiff in a civil malicious prosecution action must establish that the underlying proceeding terminated in his or her favor. The court rejected plaintiff's contention that he received a favorable termination of the underlying action when a judgment of dismissal was entered, notwithstanding defendant's appeal from the judgment. The court held that the general rule is that a civil action for malicious prosecution will not lie while an appeal in the underlying action is pending (171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 778) . Thus, there was no favorable termination of the underlying action at the time plaintiff brought his suit (171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 779) .

NOTE:

Making a showing in support of a demurrer comparable to the showing made in the Friedman case will not necessarily result in obtaining dismissal. In Feld v. Western Land & Development Co. (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1336, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 , the court recommended, in dictum, that when a malicious prosecution action is brought while appeal is pending in the underlying action, the malicious prosecution action should be abated rather than dismissed [see §§ 147.30[3][b] and 147.30[3][d]].

In Baker v. Littman (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 510, 292 P.2d 595 , plaintiff filed an action for attorney's fees. Certain defendants cross complained for malicious prosecution. Plaintiff demurred to the cross complaints and they were dismissed. Cross complainants appealed and the court of appeal upheld the dismissal. It held that one of the essential elements of a cause of action for malicious prosecution is favorable termination of the underlying action and that cross complainants could not establish such termination when the underlying action was still pending (138 Cal. App. 2d 510, 514) .

[e] Judgment Based on Statute of Limitations Not Favorable Termination

In Drasin v. Jacoby & Meyers (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 481, 197 Cal. Rptr. 768 , the trial court sustained an attorney's demurrer to an action for malicious prosecution based on an earlier suit for legal malpractice. The malpractice action had been dismissed on the ground that it was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment sustaining the demurrer, citing Lackner v. La Croix (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 747, 159 Cal. Rptr. 693, 602 P.2d 393 [see § 147.20[3][i]], for the rule that a bar raised by a statute of limitations does not reflect on the merits of the action and thus is not a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action (150 Cal. App. 3d 481, 484) .

[f] Dismissal of Action Not Necessarily Favorable Termination

In Zeavin v. Lee (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 766, 186 Cal. Rptr. 545 , two physicians sued an attorney for malicious prosecution, based on a prior malpractice action filed by the attorney on behalf of a client. The complaint alleged that the prior suit was dismissed with prejudice because the client refused to cooperate with her attorney or to make discovery. A general demurrer to the malicious prosecution action was sustained without leave to amend, and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the allegation relating to the prior dismissal did not constitute a favorable termination as required for a malicious prosecution action because it did not reflect the plaintiffs' innocence or the prior action's lack of merit (136 Cal. App. 3d 766, 771) .

In Oppenheimer v. Tamblyn (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 158, 334 P.2d 152 , plaintiff sued the city attorney for malicious prosecution of a traffic offense. The complaint alleged that the action was dismissed after trial, and the trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend. On appeal, the court of appeal reversed. It held, relying on the Supreme Court case of Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 114 P.2d 335 , that the allegation of dismissal after trial was insufficient because it did not necessarily indicate the innocence of the plaintiff. It ruled however that plaintiff should have been allowed to amend because he might have been able to allege that the dismissal was a favorable termination by showing the reason for the dismissal (167 Cal. App. 2d 158, 161-162) .

Oppenheimer v. Tamblyn (1958) 162 Cal. App. 2d 293, 327 P.2d 574 , was an earlier appeal in the same case as Oppenheimer v. Tamblyn (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 158, 334 P.2d 152 . Plaintiff had alleged that the complaint against him had been dismissed, and the trial court sustained a demurrer. The court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendant. It held that the allegation of dismissal was insufficient because it did not indicate favorable termination but that plaintiff should have been given leave to amend (162 Cal. App. 2d 293, 295-296) .

[g] Dismissal Based on Negotiation, Settlement, or Compromise Not Favorable Termination

In Haight v. Handweiler (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 85, 244 Cal. Rptr. 488 , the plaintiff in the underlying action voluntarily dismissed a defendant from the action as a condition of settlement with another defendant. The court held that such a termination did not necessarily reflect the plaintiff's opinion that his action against the dismissed defendant lacked merit, and thus did not qualify as a termination in the dismissed defendant's favor in the context of that defendant's subsequent malicious prosecution action (199 Cal. App. 3d 85, 89) .

[h] Voluntary Dismissal Not Favorable Termination When Based on Litigant's Motivation to Avoid Further Costs, Attorney's Fees, and Litigation

In Contemporary Services Corp. v. Staff Pro Inc. (2007) 152 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 61 Cal. Rptr. 3d 434 , plaintiff company sued a competitor for unfair business practices. Three years later, the competitor sued plaintiff for defamation and unfair competition. Both actions came up for trial at the same time, and because the first action was reaching its 5-year limit for prosecution, it could not be continued. Even though the competitor continued to believe in the merits of its own lawsuit, because it lacked the resources to both prepare its defense in the first action and put together a case in its own lawsuit, the competitor chose to voluntarily dismiss its own lawsuit without prejudice. Plaintiff subsequently sued the competitor for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, defamation, and interference with economic advantage stemming from the underlying lawsuit and related activity undertaken by the competitor. The trial court granted the competitor's motion to strike plaintiff's action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the statute applied to all of plaintiff's causes of action, and plaintiff failed to show a probability of success on the merits. As to the malicious prosecution cause of action, plaintiff could not show that the underlying action brought by the competitor was terminated in plaintiff's favor for purposes of supporting a subsequent action for malicious prosecution. While preparing a defense to plaintiff's earlier claims, the competitor voluntarily dismissed the underlying action in order to save the cost and resources of further litigation on its own claim. The competitor continued to believe in the merits of its underlying claim and in fact had suffered no adverse rulings in that litigation that would create doubt as to the validity of the action. As such, the voluntary dismissal did not reflect on the merits of the claim and could not be used to support a malicious prosecution action (152 Cal. App. 4th 1043, 1056-1057) .

[i] Voluntary Dismissal Based On Technical Grounds Not Favorable Termination

In Robbins v. Blecher (1997) 52 Cal. App. 4th 886, 60 Cal. Rptr. 2d 815 , plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution based on defendant's filing of an alter ego action against plaintiff to enforce a judgment defendant had against a corporation. After the underlying judgment was reversed on appeal, defendant voluntarily dismissed its alter ego action, and plaintiff initiated its malicious prosecution action. Defendant demurred on the ground that plaintiff could not sufficiently allege the element of favorable termination. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and an order of dismissal was filed. The court of appeal affirmed, noting that it had reasoned in Eells v. Rosenblum (1995) 36 Cal. App. 4th 1848, 43 Cal. Rptr. 2d 323 , that the key to whether the termination of an underlying action is favorable for purposes of a malicious prosecution action is whether the termination reflects on the underlying defendant's innocence (52 Cal. App. 4th 886, 893) . The court held that a voluntary dismissal on technical grounds, such as lack of jurisdiction, laches, the statute of limitations or prematurity, does not constitute a favorable termination because it does not reflect on the substantive merits of the underlying claim. Since defendant's dismissal of its alter ego action did not reflect on the merits of the action, but only on its mootness, it did not constitute a favorable termination on the merits (52 Cal. App. 4th 886, 894-895) .

[j] Stipulated Judgment Not Favorable Termination

In Ferreira v. Gray, Cary, Ware & Freidenrich (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 409, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 683 , the plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action against a law firm, based on its role in filing a cross-complaint against the plaintiff in the plaintiff's underlying action against the firm's clients. In the underlying action, the jury found for the plaintiff in large part, awarding him $75,982 in damages, although they also found for the defendants on a few claims brought in the cross-complaint and awarded them nominal damages. Shortly after judgment on the verdict was entered, the parties agreed to settle the litigation, with the plaintiff agreeing to accept a nominal payment in return for a waiver of appeal. An amended judgment was entered shortly thereafter based on the terms of the negotiated settlement. Eight months later, the plaintiff filed his malicious prosecution action against the law firm, and the trial court granted summary judgment for the law firm on the grounds that the underlying action had not terminated in favor of the plaintiff. The court of appeals agreed, holding that if the underlying litigation ends through a stipulated judgment following a negotiated settlement, there is no favorable termination for purposes of pursuing a malicious prosecution action. Even though the jury had returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, the litigation terminated as a result of the negotiated settlement, not the judgment entered initially on the jury verdict (87 Cal. App. 4th 409, 413) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.21

§ 147.21 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Failure to Allege Malice

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT THAT DOES NOT ALLEGE MALICE ON THE PART OF THE DEFENDANT DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Malice Requirement. Pleading of malice on the part of the defendant is an essential element of a cause of action for malicious prosecution (Gogue v. MacDonald (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 482, 486, 218 P.2d 542).

[Optional] C. No Malice in Reporting Facts to Authorities. A cause of action for malicious prosecution is not stated when the complaint alleges that the defendant reported the facts to authorities, and took no active part in the arrest, and the complaint does not allege bad faith in making the report (Gogue v. MacDonald (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 482, 487, 218 P.2d 542).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it does not allege malice.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] based on the contention that defendant did not act with malice.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on an honest statement of facts to the authorities, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malice Requirement

In Gogue v. MacDonald (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 482, 218 P.2d 542 , the complaint alleged that defendant had gone before a justice of the peace and complained that plaintiff had removed himself and his belongings from defendant's cottage without paying rent. The justice of the peace had issued a complaint and had plaintiff arrested. The charges were later dismissed because the facts stated did not constitute a criminal offense. A demurrer for failure to state a cause of action was sustained to the malicious prosecution complaint and plaintiff appealed from the judgment for defendant. The Supreme Court affirmed. It held that malice was an essential element of a cause of action for malicious prosecution and must be pleaded and proved. It then concluded that a cause of action for malicious prosecution is not stated when the complaint does not allege malice and merely alleges that the defendant stated the facts of the case to the authorities and took no part in the arrest, even though the facts stated to the authorities did not constitute a public offense (35 Cal. 2d 482, 484-487) .

[b] No Malice in Reporting Facts to Authorities

Gogue v. MacDonald (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 482, 218 P.2d 542 , is discussed in § 147.21[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Malice Requirement

Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1169, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 , is discussed in § 147.70[4][a].

The issue in Maxon v. Security Ins. Co. (1963) 214 Cal. App. 2d 603, 29 Cal. Rptr. 586 , was whether an insurance policy required the insurance company to provide a defense against an action for malicious prosecution. In the course of deciding that there was no coverage, the court of appeal stated that the chief element of a cause of action for malicious prosecution is malice, which requires an improper motive or purpose (214 Cal. App. 2d 603, 615) .

[b] No Malice in Reporting Facts to Authorities

In Gomez v. Garcia (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 392, 169 Cal. Rptr. 350 , plaintiff was a former employee of a nonprofit corporation of which defendants were officers. Plaintiff had attended an employee's meeting and was asked to leave. One defendant called police who advised him that the only way they could remove plaintiff was if a citizen's arrest was made. They advised the defendant how to make the citizen's arrest and to state that it was for disturbing the peace. Defendant made the citizen's arrest and later signed a misdemeanor complaint for disturbing the peace against plaintiff. After plaintiff was acquitted, he filed the malicious prosecution action. After a jury verdict for plaintiff, defendants appealed. The court of appeal reversed. It held that in the absence of any evidence that the defendant who made the citizen's arrest did anything more than truthfully recount his observations to the police and prosecutor, the evidence was insufficient to establish that he acted with malice and without probable cause (112 Cal. App. 3d 392, 399-400) . The court noted that the fact that plaintiff was acquitted of disturbing the peace had no bearing on the validity of the arrest. It was the advice of the police to charge plaintiff with that crime and, even though he was not guilty of that crime, his own testimony established that he was guilty of the crime of trespass (112 Cal. App. 3d 392, 400) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsGeneral OverviewCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsMalice

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.22

§ 147.22 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Action Prosecuted by Defendant

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION BECAUSE IT DOES NOT ALLEGE THAT DEFENDANT PROSECUTED AN ACTION AGAINST PLAINTIFF.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Prosecution of Action or Proceeding Is Required. To state a cause of action for malicious prosecution, plaintiff must allege the prosecution of an action or proceeding by defendant against plaintiff (Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 ; Rutherford v. Johnson (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 316, 319-320, 58 Cal. Rptr. 546).

[Optional] C. Subsidiary Procedure Within Lawsuit Insufficient. A subsidiary procedural action within a lawsuit is not an "action or proceeding" that can be the basis for a malicious prosecution action (Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49).

[Optional] D. Causing Investigation Is Not Sufficient. Defendant's actions in causing an administrative body to investigate an incident and plaintiff's participation therein are not alone a sufficient basis for an action for malicious prosecution (Lebbos v. State Bar (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 656, 670, 211 Cal. Rptr. 847 ; Brody v. Montalbano (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 725, 736, 151 Cal. Rptr. 206).

[Optional] E. Filing Request for Admissions Is Not Sufficient. Filing a request for admissions is not an ancillary proceeding sufficient to support a complaint for malicious prosecution (Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 922, 134 Cal. Rptr. 145).

[Optional] F. Application for License and Resulting Comparative Hearing Not Sufficient. Filing an application for a license, even if the result is a comparative hearing that denies license to another, cannot be basis for malicious prosecution action (Stolz v. Wong Communications Limited Partnership (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1820-1822, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it fails to allege the prosecution of an action against defendant.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] based on the contention that there was no prosecution of an action against defendant.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 147.41 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prosecution of Action or Proceeding Is Required

In Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 , petitioners were attorneys representing clients in a civil lawsuit pending against real party in interest. During the course of this lawsuit, petitioners attempted to intervene in criminal cases in two separate counties in which real party was attempting to have her prior felony convictions reduced to misdemeanors or expunged. After real party was successful in having one conviction reduced to a misdemeanor and the other expunged, petitioners filed motions for reconsideration in both cases, seeking to bring to the attention of the respective courts real party's alleged conduct in the fraudulent real estate sale that was the subject of the litigation between their clients and real party. Petitioners' motions were denied in both courts. Real party then commenced an action against petitioners for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. In her malicious prosecution cause of action, she contended that petitioners' motive in intervening in the criminal cases was their wish to preserve the felony convictions to impeach her testimony in the civil lawsuit. Petitioners demurred to the malicious prosecution cause of action, and the trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. Petitioners then sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal to compel the trial court to sustain their demurrer without leave to amend.

The court of appeal issued the writ. The court noted that it issued the writ because potential destruction of the professional relationship between petitioners and their clients in ongoing litigation justified interlocutory writ review (

2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 525) . The court then held that the tort of malicious prosecution requires the initiation of a full-blown action as well as its favorable termination for the malicious prosecution plaintiff, and that subsidiary procedural actions within a lawsuit, such as an application for a restraining order or for a lien, will not support a claim of malicious prosecution. The court stated that the reason courts have refused to ground malicious prosecution suits on actions taken within pending litigation is that permitting suits on these bases would disrupt the ongoing lawsuit by injecting tort claims against the parties' lawyers and because the appropriate remedy for actions taken within a lawsuit lies in the invocation of the court's broad powers to control judicial proceedings. The court concluded that petitioners' mere making of motions to reconsider in the criminal cases was not an independent action and could not constitute initiation of a lawsuit against real party for purposes of defining the tort of malicious prosecution. The trial court therefore should have sustained the demurrer to that claim without leave to amend (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528) .

In Rutherford v. Johnson (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 316, 58 Cal. Rptr. 546 , the complaint for malicious prosecution was based on an affidavit filed by defendant in a divorce action. The affidavit charged that plaintiff and defendant's former wife had a relationship which made her unfit for child custody. Plaintiff was not a party in the divorce proceedings. A demurrer was sustained and the action for malicious prosecution was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed. The court first held that the statute of limitations had run whether the action was for malicious prosecution or for libel (250 Cal. App. 2d 316, 318-319) . The court then held that a cause of action for malicious prosecution was not stated because the complaint did not allege that an action had been brought against plaintiff, or the favorable termination of such an action (250 Cal. App. 2d 316, 320) .

[b] Subsidiary Procedure Within Lawsuit Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 , are discussed in § 147.22[3][a]. The court concluded that defendant's motions to reconsider, made in the criminal cases that had already been prosecuted, did not constitute an action or proceeding that could be the basis of a malicious prosecution action (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528) .

[c] Causing Investigation Not Sufficient

In Lebbos v. State Bar (1985) 165 Cal. App. 3d 656, 211 Cal. Rptr. 847 , defendant county bar association received 24 complaints from clients of plaintiff attorney concerning fee disputes. It forwarded the complaints to defendant State Bar without any direct requests to do so by the complainants and informed the complainants of its action. The State Bar initiated an investigation. After an informal hearing with a referee, plaintiff was exonerated of any misconduct. Plaintiff then filed a complaint against defendants county bar association and State Bar, among others, alleging numerous causes of action, including one for malicious prosecution. Defendants demurred to the initial complaint and to the complaint as subsequently amended. The trial court sustained without leave to amend demurrers to the third amended complaint and entered judgment in favor of defendants. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment.

As to the malicious prosecution cause of action, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment on the ground that the complaint did not state a prima facie cause of action for malicious prosecution. The court held that none of the proceedings that occurred constituted prosecution within the meaning of a malicious prosecution action. The court further held that investigations that do not lead to initiation of proceedings before an official body or administrative board having the power to take action adversely affecting legally protected interests of the accused are not a sufficient basis on which to found an action for malicious prosecution. Because the State Bar investigation and proceedings were informal, to determine whether there was sufficient evidence to issue an order to show cause in attorney disciplinary proceedings, and ended in the investigatory stage without additional proceedings, the court held that no "prosecution" had taken place (165 Cal. App. 3d 656, 670-671) .

The complaint in Brody v. Montalbano (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 725, 151 Cal. Rptr. 206 , was based on the actions of parents of boys involved in a scuffle at school in which a boy was injured. Plaintiff was a vice-principal of the school, and he had determined who the culprits were and had them arrested without calling their parents. The parents filed a complaint about plaintiff's actions with the school board. The school board conducted a formal investigation but determined that the principal had acted in conformance with the rules, although it also agreed with some of the parents' contentions. Plaintiff vice-principal's complaint was based on libel and malicious prosecution. After a trial, defendant parents' motion for a directed verdict was granted and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. With regard to malicious prosecution, it held that there was not sufficient evidence of malicious prosecution because no formal proceedings were ever initiated against plaintiff. The parents' complaint only led to an investigation by the board, which in essence vindicated plaintiff. Thus, there was no basis for an action for malicious prosecution (87 Cal. App. 3d 725, 735-737) .

[d] Filing Request for Admissions Is Not Sufficient

In Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 134 Cal. Rptr. 145 , the malicious prosecution complaint was based on a request for admissions in a dissolution proceeding. The request asked plaintiff to admit he had forged his ex-wife's signature to an income tax refund check. A demurrer to the complaint for malicious prosecution was sustained without leave to amend and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that filing a request for admissions is not the type of ancillary proceedings that will support an action for malicious prosecution; it is not a separate proceeding and has no independent existence (63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 922) . The court noted that the type of ancillary proceedings on which a complaint for malicious prosecution can be based are those which have an independent basis, such as a cross complaint, an insanity proceeding, or a will contest (63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 921-922) .

[e] Application for License and Resulting Comparative Hearing Not Sufficient

In Stolz v. Wong Communications Limited Partnership (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 31 Cal. Rptr. 2d 229 , plaintiff had been the holder of a Federal Communications Commission (FCC) license to operate a radio station at a specific frequency. Defendant filed an application with the FCC to compete with plaintiff for that license at the time the license was due for renewal. After the FCC awarded the license to plaintiff, plaintiff instituted an action for malicious prosecution, abuse of process, and interference with economic relations, based on the filing by defendant. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the application was not an action or proceeding instituted against plaintiff (25 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1820) . The nature of an application for an FCC license, even if the granting of the application would deny the license to another, requires the FCC to consider the public interest and how it would best be served between the applicants. The relative weighing of merits between two applicants is not the type of accusatory proceeding that can be the basis of a malicious prosecution action (25 Cal. App. 4th 1811, 1820-1822) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Causing Investigation Is Not Sufficient

In Rodas v. Spiegel (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 513, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 439 , the plaintiff was a hardwood flooring installer who brought an action against an evaluator hired by an insurance company to evaluate and submit a report reviewing and providing repair estimates for work done by the plaintiff at a home insured by the insurance company. The lawsuit included a cause of action for malicious prosecution based on the evaluator's report, submitted to the Contractors' State License Board, which found that the homeowner suffered damage caused by improper floor installation. The plaintiff alleged that the conclusions of the report were false, that the damage was caused by water from a roof leak, and that the homeowner and the insurer knew of the leak and the cause of the damage, but concealed it. The trial court dismissed the complaint as to the evaluator, and the court of appeal affirmed. As to the cause of action for malicious prosecution, the court of appeal held that if a state licensing board is empowered and directed to conduct an investigation of complaints from the public, a person alleged to have filed a false report with the board that results in the filing of charges against a licensee is not subject to an action for malicious prosecution. The court noted that it is the State License Board, rather than the evaluator, that actually initiates the citation proceeding based on its investigation of the charges (87 Cal. App. 4th 513, 520-521) .

In Imig v. Ferrar (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 48, 138 Cal. Rptr. 540 , the cause of action for malicious prosecution was based on a complaint filed by defendant with the police about the actions of plaintiff police officer during an altercation at a store. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment dismissing the action after sustaining defendant's demurrer without leave to amend for failure to state a cause of action. The court held that defendant's complaint had only led to an investigation by the police department but had not resulted in formal charges against plaintiff. Therefore, it was insufficient as the basis of a cause of action for malicious prosecution (70 Cal. App. 3d 48, 58-59) . The court held, however, that sometimes the invasion of a plaintiff's legally protected interest occurs without a formal hearing, such as when the plaintiff must initiate action to secure reinstatement of a position or license. Therefore, plaintiff should have been given leave to amend the complaint to allege, if he could, that he was suspended pending the investigation and that the investigation was required to reinstate plaintiff. These allegations would state a cause of action (70 Cal. App. 3d 48, 60) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.23

§ 147.23 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Action in Small Claims Court Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION WHEN IT IS BASED ON THE FILING OF A COMPLAINT IN SMALL CLAIMS COURT.

A. Objection by Demurrer [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Small Claims Action Is Insufficient Basis. Filing an action in small claims court is not a sufficient basis for an action for malicious prosecution because allowing such actions would frustrate the purposes of small claims courts (Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 476, 478-479, 161 Cal. Rptr. 662).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on filing a complaint in small claims court.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that an action in small claims court will not support an action for malicious prosecution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Small Claims Action Is Insufficient Basis

In Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 476, 161 Cal. Rptr. 662 , defendant in the malicious prosecution action had sued plaintiff, an attorney, in small claims court for $167.33 for unpaid automobile repairs. After a favorable judgment in the small claims action, plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution for over $100,000. Defendant filed a demurrer, which was sustained, and the action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed and the judgment was affirmed. The court of appeal first discussed the procedure in small claims court and stated that it was designed to expedite the settlement of small disputes inexpensively without the intervention of lawyers (101 Cal. App. 3d 476, 478) . The court recognized that a small claims action could be brought maliciously but held that allowing a malicious prosecution action would frustrate the purposes of small claims courts and thus could not be the basis for a malicious prosecution action. The court noted that allowing malicious prosecution actions would inject into the small claims proceedings elements of time, expense, and complexity which the small claims procedure was designed to avoid and might require the litigant to consult an attorney to make sure that he or she would not be liable for malicious prosecution before filing a small claims action (101 Cal. App. 3d 476, 479) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Small Claims Action Is Insufficient Basis

In Cooper v. Pirelli Cable Corp. (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 294, 206 Cal. Rptr. 581 , defendant initiated and obtained judgment against plaintiff in a small claims action. Plaintiff appealed to the superior court and obtained a trial de novo. After commencement of the trial de novo, both the original small claims action and the appeal were dismissed with prejudice by stipulation. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal for failure to state a cause of action, citing Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 476, 479, 161 Cal. Rptr. 662 [see § 147.23[3][a]] for the rule that a small claims action could not be a basis for a malicious prosecution action (160 Cal. App. 3d 294, 298) . The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the present case was distinguishable from Pace because in the present case, plaintiff had appealed the small claims judgment to the superior court. The court held that despite plaintiff's appeal, plaintiff's malicious prosecution action was necessarily founded on the original small claim filed by defendant (160 Cal. App. 3d 294, 298) . Thus, the court concluded the unequivocal holding of Pace was applicable to the case (160 Cal. App. 3d 294, 298-299) .

In Black v. Hepner (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 656, 202 Cal. Rptr. 799 , defendant demurred to plaintiff's action for malicious prosecution, on the ground that it was based on a small claims proceeding and could not be maintained under the rule announced in Pace v. Hillcrest Motor Co. (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 476, 161 Cal. Rptr. 662 [see § 147.23[3][a]]. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed. Plaintiff contended that the Pace decision was outdated after the 1981 amendment to former Code Civ. Proc. § 117.18 [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 116.260, 116.940], which mandated free legal advisory services for small claims litigants. Plaintiff argued that the amendment eliminated the basis for the Pace decision, i.e., the concern that allowing malicious prosecution actions founded on small claims proceedings would require litigants to consult with attorneys, contrary to the legislative intent to provide an attorney-free method of resolving small claims (156 Cal. App. 3d 656, 658-659) . The court of appeal affirmed. The court reasoned that the amendment in question neither required litigants to seek advice, nor insured that if they did, they would actually see an attorney or receive advice about the merit of their claims (156 Cal. App. 3d 656, 659) . The court also noted that the nature of the small claims procedure limited any potential harm to defendants due to malicious prosecution, but to allow actions to remedy this harm would countervail the very reason for the procedure's existence (156 Cal. App. 3d 656, 659-660) . The court concluded that Pace had been correctly decided and had not been diluted by the amendment to former Code Civ. Proc. § 117.18 [now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 116.260, 116.940] (156 Cal. App. 3d 656, 660-661)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.24

§ 147.24 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Ancillary Contempt Proceeding Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION WHEN IT IS BASED ON A CONTEMPT PROCEEDING THAT IS ANCILLARY TO THE UNDERLYING CAUSE OF ACTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Prosecution of Action or Proceeding Is Required. [See § 147.22, Paragraph B].

C. Defendant's Failure to Prevail on Order to Show Cause re Contempt Is Insufficient Basis. Not prevailing on an order to show cause re contempt brought to enforce a prior court order in ongoing litigation cannot constitute the basis for a malicious prosecution action against the attorney for the moving party (Lossing v. Superior Court (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 638, 255 Cal. Rptr. 18).

[Optional] D. Contempt Proceeding to Sanction Discovery Abuse Is Insufficient Basis. Contempt proceedings to sanction discovery abuse are ancillary proceedings without sufficient independence to support a cause of action for malicious prosecution (Lossing v. Superior Court (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 639, 255 Cal. Rptr. 18).

[Optional] E. Order to Show Cause Taken Off Calendar Before Hearing Is Insufficient Basis. Bringing orders to show cause re contempt that are taken off calendar before hearing cannot constitute the basis for a malicious prosecution action against the attorney for the moving party (Green v. Uccelli (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1121, 255 Cal. Rptr. 315).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on a contempt proceeding.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that a contempt proceeding will not support an action for malicious prosecution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Failure to Prevail on Order to Show Cause re Contempt Is Insufficient Basis

In Lossing v. Superior Court (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 255 Cal. Rptr. 18 , plaintiffs brought an action for malicious prosecution against an attorney who had, in an underlying personal injury action, unsuccessfully sought contempt sanctions against them for alleged failure to comply with a discovery order. The malicious prosecution complaint alleged that the attorney did not honestly, reasonably, and in good faith believe the plaintiffs to be guilty of contempt, and that the attorney acted maliciously to intimidate the plaintiffs and coerce them to settle the personal injury case. The attorney filed a general demurrer to the complaint. The court declined to sustain the demurrer in regard to the malicious prosecution action. The attorney then petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate, contending that his demurrer to the causes of action for malicious prosecution should have been sustained without leave to amend.

The court of appeal directed the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend (207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 641) . It held that a malicious prosecution action cannot be grounded on the institution of a contempt proceeding in an ongoing action. The court remarked that a party aggrieved by a bad-faith misuse of discovery by opposing counsel could seek compensation under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 128.5 and 2023.030 (207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 638-639) . Noting the availability of a statutory remedy and the disfavored status of malicious prosecution as a cause of action, the court concluded that contempt proceedings to sanction discovery abuse are ancillary proceedings without sufficient independence to support a cause of action for malicious prosecution (207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 639) .

[b] Contempt Proceeding to Sanction Discovery Abuse Is Insufficient Basis

Lossing v. Superior Court (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 635, 255 Cal. Rptr. 18 , is discussed in § 147.24[3][a].

[c] Order to Show Cause Taken Off Calendar Before Hearing Is Insufficient Basis

In Green v. Uccelli (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 255 Cal. Rptr. 315 , the malicious prosecution defendant, an attorney, had represented the plaintiff's former wife in an underlying dissolution action. In this underlying action, the trial court issued two orders to show cause re contempt, on the basis of the defendant's declarations that plaintiff had failed to comply with two court orders. The resolution of the first of these orders to show cause, involving the plaintiff's purported failure to pay court-ordered attorney's fees, was disputed; plaintiff contended that the order was dismissed for lack of prosecution, while defendant contended that he took the contempt proceeding off calendar when the plaintiff paid the court-ordered fees. Concerning the second order to show cause, involving plaintiff's purported failure to comply with a court order to return certain property to his former spouse, defendant took the contempt hearing off calendar when plaintiff returned the property. Plaintiff, while his dissolution action was still pending, filed a complaint against defendant based on the defendant's withdrawal of the orders to show cause. Plaintiff alleged several tort causes of action against defendant, including two for malicious prosecution. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the plaintiff's entire tort action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed (207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1125). The court stated the general rule that the plaintiff in a malicious prosecution action must establish that the prior action terminated in his or her favor (207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1120) . It then noted that there had been no termination of the underlying dissolution action in plaintiff's favor, since plaintiff's appeal was still pending. The court held that bringing orders to show cause re contempt that are taken off calendar before hearing cannot constitute the basis for a malicious prosecution action against the attorney for the moving party (207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1121) . Any decision to the contrary, said the court, would have a chilling effect on access to the courts to enforce orders and on the vigorous legal representation to which the client is entitled (207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1122) . The court noted that if the contempt proceedings were brought in bad faith or for harassment or other improper purpose, relief would be properly sought through a request for attorney's fees and sanctions within the underlying action, not through an independent action for malicious prosecution (207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1121) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.25

§ 147.25 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Motion to Disqualify Opposing Attorney Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION WHEN IT IS BASED ON AN UNSUCCESSFUL MOTION TO DISQUALIFY OPPOSING COUNSEL.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Prosecution of Action or Proceeding Is Required. [See § 147.22, Paragraph B].

C. Defendant's Failure to Prevail on Motion to Disqualify Opposing Counsel Is Insufficient Basis. Not prevailing on a motion to disqualify the attorney of an adverse party cannot constitute the basis for a malicious prosecution action against the moving party (Silver v. Gold (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 17, 23, 259 Cal. Rptr. 185).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on a motion to disqualify an opposing attorney.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that a disqualification motion will not support an action for malicious prosecution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Failure to Prevail on Motion to Disqualify Opposing Counsel Is Insufficient Basis

In Silver v. Gold (1989) 211 Cal. App. 3d 17, 259 Cal. Rptr. 185 , an attorney filed a complaint for malicious prosecution against the defendant in an underlying civil action and the defendant's attorneys, on the basis of their having filed a motion to disqualify the attorney from representing the plaintiff in that underlying action. The attorney appealed from a judgment of dismissal entered after an order sustaining a demurrer to his first amended complaint without leave to amend.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that to establish a cause of action for the malicious prosecution of a civil proceeding, a plaintiff must plead and prove, inter alia, that a prior action was commenced by or at the direction of the defendant (211 Cal. App. 3d 17, 22) . The court concluded that the defendants' motion would not support a suit for malicious prosecution. The filing of a motion to disqualify counsel, stated the court, is merely one of numerous procedures that can be invoked during the course of litigation; it does not constitute a separate action or proceeding on which a suit for malicious prosecution can be premised (211 Cal. App. 3d 17, 23-24) . The court noted in dicta that a motion to disqualify can be the basis of an action for abuse of process if the elements of that cause of action are present (211 Cal. App. 3d 17, 24) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.26

§ 147.26 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Filing Motion in Lawsuit to Which Defendant Was Not Party Is Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION WHEN IT IS BASED ON DEFENDANT'S FILING OF A MOTION ADVERSE TO PLAINTIFF IN LITIGATION TO WHICH DEFENDANT WAS NOT PARTY AT A TIME WHEN OTHER LITIGATION WAS PENDING BETWEEN PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Prosecution of Action or Proceeding Is Required. [See § 147.22, Paragraph B].

C. Defendant's Filing of Motion in Litigation to Which Defendant Was Not Party Is Not Adequate Basis. A malicious prosecution cause of action cannot be based on defendant's filing of a motion in litigation to which he or she is not a party when the motion is filed for tactical reasons as part of other ongoing litigation between plaintiff and defendant. The cause of action cannot be allowed, when to do so will disrupt the ongoing litigation and when the appropriate remedy for action taken in the litigation to which defendant is not a party rests with the inherent powers of the court with jurisdiction over that litigation to control the proceedings before it (Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on a motion that was filed in litigation to which defendant was not a party, and that was filed for tactical reasons relating to ongoing litigation between the defendant and the plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that a motion that was filed by defendant in litigation to which defendant was not a party, and that was filed for tactical reasons relating to ongoing litigation between the defendant and the plaintiff, cannot be the basis of a malicious prosecution cause of action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Filing of Motion in Litigation to Which Defendant Was Not Party Is Not Adequate Basis.

The facts and procedural background of Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 , are discussed in § 147.22[3][a]. In that case, the court of appeal held that petitioners' motions filed in criminal proceedings to which they were not parties for reconsideration of orders reducing one and expunging another of real party's prior felony convictions failed to constitute initiation of a full-blown action on which a claim of malicious prosecution could be based. Rather, the court found the motions were made in pursuit of the interests of the clients of petitioners in litigation pending against real party. Therefore, to ground a malicious prosecution action on those motions would disrupt, if not destroy, petitioners' ability to represent their clients. Moreover, the courts having jurisdiction over the criminal cases had inherent judicial power over the proceedings before them sufficient to control any problems generated by petitioners' motions, and those powers provided a remedy to real party for any filing made by petitioners in those cases. Indeed, the courts dismissed the motions in both cases (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.27

§ 147.27 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Unsuccessful Family Law Motion or Order to Show Cause Cannot Be Basis of Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IF IT IS BASED ON AN UNSUCCESSFUL FAMILY LAW MOTION OR ORDER TO SHOW CAUSE.

Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Family Law Proceedings. No malicious prosecution action may arise out of unsuccessful family law motions or orders to show cause (Bidna v. Rosen (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 37, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on unsuccessful family law motions or orders to show cause.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the family-law nature of the underlying litigation that is the basis of plaintiff's complaint.

[b] Related Memoranda

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that an unsuccessful motion or order to show cause filed in a family law proceeding cannot be the basis of a malicious prosecution cause of action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Family Law Proceedings

In Bidna v. Rosen (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251 , plaintiff had been awarded primary physical custody of his daughter in a marital dissolution proceeding. Thereafter, defendant (plaintiff's ex-wife) brought a series of six ex parte motions and orders to show cause (OSCs), seeking to change custody. Plaintiff brought a cause of action alleging that the meritless motions and OSCs were brought with the financial backing of defendant's mother, in order to force plaintiff to give up custody for financial reasons, and constituted malicious prosecution. The trial court granted defendant's demurrer and dismissed the action, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal (19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 39) . The court agreed with plaintiff that affirming the judgment would consign plaintiff to the various family remedies, which do not include punitive damages or damages for emotional distress (19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 30) . However, the court also pointed out that permitting malicious prosecution causes of action based on conduct in family proceedings would "open the sluice gates to the rivers of bitterness that often typify family law cases," and could also discourage meritorious proceedings (19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 30) . In balancing these competing considerations, the court was persuaded that the balance tilted against malicious prosecution actions. In discussing the cases that have dealt with the issue, the court stated that no California case had yet extended the tort of malicious prosecution to family actions; the opinion in Chauncey v. Niems (1986) 182 Cal. App. 3d 967, 975-976, 227 Cal. Rptr. 718 , which had stated that an order to show cause seemed a sufficient basis for a malicious prosecution action, was rejected as unpersuasive dicta (19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 32-33) . The court concluded that the California Supreme Court's statements in Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 872-874, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 448 , setting forth the basic judicial policy in favor of curing the evil of abusive litigation at its source, by the use of sanctions, rather than allowing the abusive litigation to engender more litigation, required the plaintiff here to rely on sanctions by the family law court; a malicious prosecution cause of action could not be stated (19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 37-39) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Family Law Proceedings

In Begier v. Strom (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 877, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 158 , plaintiff filed an action against his former wife for malicious prosecution, alleging that she injected false allegations of child molestation into their dissolution action for the purpose of terminating plaintiff's relationship with his daughter. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that in Bidna v. Rosen (1993) 19 Cal. App. 4th 27, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 251 , the court recognized an abiding judicial reluctance to entertain malicious prosecution actions arising out of family law proceedings (46 Cal. App. 4th 877, 886) . The court found Bidna persuasive, and found no basis for distinguishing it.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.28

§ 147.28 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Application for Writ of Sale to Enforce Judgment is Not Adequate Basis for Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IF IT IS BASED ON AN APPLICATION FOR WRIT OF SALE EMPLOYED TO ENFORCE A JUDGMENT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot be Based on Motion for Writ of Sale to Enforce Judgment. The filing of a motion for writ of sale as an attempt to enforce an existing judgment cannot be the basis for a malicious prosecution action, since the writ action is not a separate and distinct proceeding but merely the continuation of existing litigation (Merlet v. Rizzo (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 53, 60-64, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 83).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the

demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on an application for writ of sale to enforce a judgment.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on an application for writ of sale to enforce a judgment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot be Based on Motion for Writ of Sale to Enforce Judgment

In Merlet v. Rizzo (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 53, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 83 , plaintiff had opposed an application for writ of sale against property owned by plaintiff and his wife brought by defendants, attorneys and their client who had brought the writ motion in an attempt to satisfy a judgment that had been entered against the plaintiff's wife in an underlying tort action. After successfully defeating the motion for writ of sale, plaintiff filed an action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the plaintiff's claims. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the dismissal of the complaint. The court agreed with the defendants that an application for an order for a writ of sale cannot support a later claim for malicious prosecution. After reviewing the decisions of earlier cases in which malicious prosecution claims were allowed or not based on the nature of the underlying proceeding, the court concluded that malicious prosecution claims are not allowed when based on a prior proceeding that is: (1) less formal or unlike the process in the superior court (for example, a small claims hearing or an investigation or application not resulting in a formal proceeding); (2) purely defensive in nature; or (3) a continuation of an existing proceeding. The question before the court was whether or not an application for a writ of sale was a continuation of an existing proceeding. Analyzing the Supreme Court's holding in Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 , in which the Court held that a will contest could support a malicious prosecution action, the court of appeal concluded that injecting new facts and legal issues into a proceeding and imposing on a party the burden of mounting a defense were insufficient by themselves to constitute the initiation of a new, distinct proceeding. The court noted that, unlike a will contest following an initial petition for probate of the will, a motion for writ of sale occurs after liability and damages have been determined and does not result in a separate and distinct proceeding. The motion for writ of sale simply provides an expeditious statutory means to enforce a judgment and does not result in protracted litigation, while allowing a malicious prosecution action based on a writ of sale would permit a party to transform what should be a summary procedure into a full-scale lawsuit (64 Cal. App. 4th 53, 60-61) . In addition, unlike an improperly filed writ of attachment, which may support a malicious prosecution action, an application for writ of sale does not burden the property at issue and is filed only after obtaining a valid, unsatisfied judgment (64 Cal. App. 4th 53, 62) . Finally, the court rejected the plaintiff's argument that a claim for malicious prosecution is stated if the underlying proceeding was adversarial in nature, added new issues, forced the plaintiff to muster a defense, and subjected the plaintiff to the emotional strain of the proceeding. The court concluded that consideration of these factors alone was insufficient, that instead the court must consider the degree of burden created, and the burden of defending an application for writ of sale was relatively light. The court stated that applying for a writ of sale was analogous to taking an appeal, and that the Supreme Court had held in Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group (1986) 41 Cal. 3d 782, 226 Cal. Rptr. 90, 718 P.2d 77 that such a subsidiary proceeding cannot be the basis for a malicious prosecution action (64 Cal. App. 4th 53, 63) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.29

§ 147.29 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Action for Malicious Prosecution May Not Be Based On Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION MAY NOT BE BROUGHT BASED ON AN UNDERLYING PROCEEDING THAT WAS TERMINATED THROUGH BINDING CONTRACTUAL ARBITRATION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Malicious Prosecution Action May Not Be Based on Underlying Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration. A proceeding terminated through contractual arbitration cannot be the basis for a subsequent malicious prosecution action, regardless of whether the underlying action originated in court or in arbitration (Brennan v. Tremco Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 310, 314, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790, 20 P.3d 1086).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution if the demurrer asserts that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on an underlying proceeding that was terminated through binding contractual arbitration.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the underlying proceeding was terminated through binding contractual arbitration.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] if the motion alleges that a cause of action for malicious prosecution cannot be based on an underlying proceeding terminated through contractual arbitration.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action May Not Be Based on Underlying Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration

In Brennan v. Tremco Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 310, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790, 20 P.3d 1086 , the plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution against his former employer and its attorneys based on their prosecution of an underlying civil suit against him. In the underlying suit, the employer alleged various contractual and tort causes of action stemming from the employee's decision to go to work for a competitor. In that suit, the employee obtained summary adjudication in court of several of the causes of action, and the parties then agreed to binding arbitration of the remaining claims. The arbitrator ultimately ruled in favor of the employee on those remaining claims, and the court affirmed the arbitrator's award and entered judgment accordingly. The plaintiff then brought his action for malicious prosecution. The attorneys settled with the plaintiff, and the trial court then sustained the former employer's demurrer to the malicious prosecution claim. Citing the court of appeal's decision in Sagonowsky v. More (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 122, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 118 [see § 147.29[4]], the trial court concluded that a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on an underlying private arbitration. The plaintiff appealed, the court of appeal reversed, and the defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and held that a proceeding terminated successfully through contractual arbitration does not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of the tort of malicious prosecution and cannot be the basis for a subsequent malicious prosecution action, regardless of whether the underlying action originated in court or in arbitration. The Court based its decision on the trend against creating or expanding derivative tort remedies, together with the recognition that parties who voluntarily choose arbitration generally expect and desire that the arbitration will end the dispute (25 Cal. 4th 310, 315) . Although recognizing that established case law holds that a malicious prosecution action may be based on underlying judicial arbitration, the Court noted that binding contractual arbitration is fundamentally different from judicial arbitration in important ways. A dissatisfied party to private contractual arbitration does not have a right to request a trial de novo or judicial review of the arbitrator's decision. Moreover, an arbitrator in most instances of contractual arbitration does not even need to provide an explanation of the basis for the decision. The lack of a written rationale for the decision would frustrate any determination of whether or why the action was terminated in favor of a particular party. Noting that an action in small claims court will not support a malicious prosecution action, in part because the small claims process is designed to function quickly and informally, the Court also concluded that similar concerns support the same result if the underlying claim is terminated through contractual arbitration ((25 Cal. 4th 310, 317) .

NOTE:

The Supreme Court in Brennan v. Tremco Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 310, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790, 20 P.3d 1086 , explicitly disapproved of the court of appeal decision in Rogers v. Peinado (2000) 85 Cal. App.

4th 1, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 817 , which would have allowed a malicious prosecution action against an attorney who was not actually a party to the underlying arbitration agreement. Thus, Brennan prohibits a malicious prosecution action against both the actual party who brought the underlying action and that party's attorney [Brennan v. Tremco Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 310, 317, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790, 20 P.3d 1086] .

The Supreme Court's opinion does not entirely foreclose the possibility that a malicious prosecution action may be brought if the arbitration agreement explicitly states that such an action may be brought. However, because the arbitration agreement at issue was silent on the intent of the parties as to a subsequent malicious prosecution action, the Court explicitly rejected the attempt by the court of appeal to remand for a hearing to determine if a mutual intent could be discerned [see Brennan v. Tremco Inc. (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 310, 318, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790, 20 P.3d 1086] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action May Not Be Based on Underlying Proceeding Terminated Through Contractual Arbitration

In Sagonowsky v. More (1998) 64 Cal. App. 4th 122, 75 Cal. Rptr. 2d 118 , the plaintiffs, three tenants in common, brought actions for malicious prosecution against the attorney that had previously represented the fourth tenant in common. The fourth tenant had previously brought claims pertaining to a real estate dispute against the other tenants, against which the other tenants had made counterclaims. All of these claims were subject to a clause in the tenancy-in-common agreement providing for binding arbitration of "any dispute regarding this Agreement or the duties, obligations, and benefits of ownership in the Property," as well as an arbitration clause in the original contract of sale of the property at the center of the disputes. Following arbitration, at which the arbitrator denied the claims and counterclaims of all parties, the plaintiffs filed their actions for malicious prosecution against the attorney. The attorney demurred to the complaints, the trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend, and the plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal. After first determining that the plaintiffs' successful defense of the claims brought against them by the fourth tenant in common constituted a favorable termination of the underlying action (64 Cal. App. 4th 122, 129-130) , the court distinguished the rule permitting a malicious prosecution action based on an underlying judicial arbitration, noting that judicial arbitration stems from an action filed in court and lacks the finality of contractual arbitration in that any party to judicial arbitration can request a trial de novo. The court then concluded that permitting a malicious prosecution claim based on private contractual arbitration would likely increase litigation and undermine the finality of the arbitration decision, contrary to the expectations of the parties when the agreement to arbitrate was made. The court read the arbitration provisions at issue in this case broadly and found that they could not be construed to allow for filing claims of malicious prosecution in court following arbitration (64 Cal. App. 4th 122, 131-134) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.29A

§ 147.29A Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)]--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Unsuccessful Petition for Injunction Against Harassment or Workplace Violence Is Not Adequate Basis

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20.]

A COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION DOES NOT STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IF IT IS BASED ON AN UNSUCCESSFUL PETITION FOR AN INJUNCTION AGAINST _____ [HARASSMENT BROUGHT UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 527.6 or WORKPLACE VIOLENCE BROUGHT UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 527.8].

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A.]

[Optional] B. Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Failed Attempt to Obtain Injunction Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6. An unsuccessful petition for an injunction prohibiting harassment under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 is not a proper basis for a subsequent malicious prosecution action (Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1563, 1572-1574, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 368).

[Optional] C. Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Failed Attempt to Obtain Injunction Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8. Filing an action for an injunction under the Workplace Violence Safety Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8, will not support a subsequent malicious prosecution action if the request for an injunction is denied (Robinzine v. Vicory (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1416, 1422-1424, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 65).
Dated: _____

_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the claim that a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on a failed attempt to obtain an injunction against harassment under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6, or a failed attempt to obtain an injunction against workplace violence under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing that the sole basis for the plaintiff's malicious prosecution action was a failed attempt by the defendant to obtain an injunction under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 or Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Failed Attempt to Obtain Injunction Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6

In Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1563, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 368 , the plaintiff was the boyfriend of the defendant's former wife. During especially contentious proceedings to determine custody of the defendant's two sons, the defendant accused the plaintiff of abusing the two boys and reported the alleged abuse to school officials and people involved in the family law proceedings. Although resulting investigations did not reveal any abuse, the defendant filed a petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6, the civil harassment statute, to obtain an injunction prohibiting the plaintiff from coming near the children. The trial court granted a temporary restraining order, but eventually denied the petition for a permanent injunction. The plaintiff then filed suit against the defendant, asserting a cause of action for malicious prosecution. The defendant filed a special motion to strike all causes of action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the motion, and the defendant appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the denial of the motion to strike as to the malicious prosecution action. For many of the same reasons that neither a small claims action nor a family law motion will support a malicious prosecution action, the court held that an unsuccessful petition for an injunction prohibiting harassment under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 is not a proper basis for a subsequent malicious prosecution action. The court noted that harassment actions often stem from bitter and even irrational disputes, and this background of bitterness often makes it difficult to distinguish between a malicious petition and one that is not malicious. The court also noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 provides for attorney's fees as a sanction for filing a frivolous petition. Moreover, proceedings under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 were designed to be processed simply and expeditiously, with little or no involvement by attorneys, a goal that the court determined would be frustrated if consultation with an attorney were necessary to protect against a subsequent lawsuit for malicious prosecution. Because the plaintiff could not show a probability of success on the malicious prosecution claim, the trial court should have granted the motion to strike that cause of action (130 Cal. App. 4th 1563, 1572-1574) .

[b] Malicious Prosecution Action Cannot Be Based on Failed Attempt to Obtain Injunction Under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8

In Robinzine v. Vicory (2006) 143 Cal. App. 4th 1416, 50 Cal. Rptr. 3d 65 , plaintiffs were a husband and wife who filed suit for malicious prosecution against the wife's former employer. The malicious prosecution claim was based on the employer's earlier attempt to obtain an injunction against the husband under the Workplace Violence Safety Act, Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8. When filing its petition, the employer had obtained a temporary restraining order against the husband, but that order was dissolved and the request for an injunction denied when the husband presented evidence contradicting the employer's claim that the husband had threatened violence. Plaintiffs' malicious prosecution claim followed. Defendants filed a motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, but the trial court denied the motion on the grounds that the plaintiffs had shown a reasonable probability of success on the merits. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to grant the motion to strike. The court of appeal held that filing an action for an injunction under the Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 will not support a subsequent malicious prosecution action if the request for an injunction is denied. The court reviewed the then-recent opinion in Siam v. Kizilbash (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 1563, 31 Cal. Rptr. 3d 368 , discussed in [a], above, and concluded that because the provisions and goals of Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8 are substantially similar to those of Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6, the justification for not allowing a subsequent malicious prosecution action following an unsuccessful petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 applied with equal force to an unsuccessful petition under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.8. Both statutory schemes provide streamlined procedures for obtaining an injunction, without the need for hiring an attorney, and both provide their own mechanisms for sanctioning baseless or harassing allegations, eliminating the need for a subsequent action for malicious prosecution. Thus, because the plaintiffs could not show a probability of success on their malicious prosecution claim, the motion to strike should have been granted (143 Cal. App. 4th 1416, 1422-1424) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.30

§ 147.30 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION BECAUSE IT APPEARS ON ITS FACE AND FROM MATTERS OF WHICH JUDICIAL NOTICE CAN BE TAKEN THAT THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS HAS RUN.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Failure to State Cause of Action. The objection that an action is barred by a statute of limitations may be set up by demurrer (Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 675, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338) and must be deemed to be included in the ground of demurrer that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 245, 94 P. 889).

C. Period of Limitation. An action for malicious prosecution must be filed within two years (one year, prior to 2003) after the accrual of the cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3); Stavropoulos v. Superior Court (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 190, 197, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 705).

D. Accrual of Cause of Action. The statute of limitations on a cause of action for malicious prosecution begins to run on the date that the proceedings in the prior action were dismissed or terminated, not the date that the time for appeal from the dismissal or termination expires (Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 846, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 ; Soble v. Kallman (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 719, 721-722, 129 Cal. Rptr. 373).

[Optional] E. Effect of Appeal on Period of Limitation. When an appeal is filed in the underlying action, the statute of limitations runs from the date the cause of action accrues on entry of judgment to the date of filing notice of appeal; the statute is then tolled during the pendency of the appeal, but recommences to run on the date the appeal process is exhausted (Feld v. Western Land & Dev. Co. (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1334, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 ; Gibbs v. Haight, Dickson, Brown & Bonesteel (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 716, 722, 228 Cal. Rptr. 398).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it is barred by the statute of limitations.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] based on the statute of limitations.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Form

For a form of demurrer for use generally in asserting the bar of the statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

For memoranda supporting a demurrer based on the statute of limitations, see Ch. 143, Limitation of Actions in this set, and for a memorandum for use when a demurrer is based on material of which the court must take judicial notice, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

In Baillargeon v. Department of Water & Power (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 138 Cal. Rptr. 338 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for breach of contract, infliction of mental distress, and declaratory relief. Defendant's answer included the affirmative defense of statute of limitations. After discovery, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings apparently on the basis that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The court of appeal reversed the decision on the cause of action for breach of contract. The court stated that the defense of statute of limitations may be raised by demurrer and noted that since judgment on the pleadings is similar to a judgment following the sustaining of a demurrer, the standard of appellate review is the same (69 Cal. App. 3d 670, 675-676) .

Bell v. Bank of Cal. (1908) 153 Cal. 234, 94 P. 889 , was an action for the recovery of shares of stock. The defendant asserted in a general demurrer that the action was barred by a statute of limitations, and the trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action. The method of asserting the defense of bar of a statute of limitations was not, apparently, an issue either in the trial court or on appeal. The Supreme Court, however, said that the bar of the statute of limitations is not specified as a ground of demurrer in the code, and that this objection to a complaint, while required to be stated in the demurrer, must be deemed to be included within the ground of want of facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (153 Cal. 234, 245) .

[b] Period of Limitation

In Stavropoulos v. Superior Court (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 190, 45 Cal. Rptr. 3d 705 , plaintiff filed a malicious prosecution action against defendant on June 24, 2005, based on an underlying fraud action. The trial court had entered judgment in the fraud action on February 19, 2003, an appeal was filed on February 26, 2003, the court of appeals affirmed the judgment on April 1, 2004, and a remittitur issued on June 25, 2004. In the malicious prosecution action, defendant demurred on the grounds that the action was untimely under the one-year statute of limitations of Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c). Plaintiff opposed the demurrer on the grounds that when the Legislature amended and redesignated the one-year limitations period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) to Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c), and enacted a separate two-year limitations period in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 applicable to actions for "injury to... an individual caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another," the limitations period for malicious prosecution was expanded to two years. The trial court agreed with plaintiff and overruled the demurrer. Defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition. The court noted that while California has never provided a statute of limitation specifically for malicious prosecution actions, prior to the 2002 amendments courts had held that the appropriate limitations period was the one-year limitations period of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3). That statute was specifically applicable to certain intentional torts, as well as to actions "for injury to or for the death of one caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another," and courts had concluded that malicious prosecution actions should be grouped with injuries to the person described by that language. In 2002, however, that language was moved to Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 and tied to a two-year limitations period. Recognizing that a malicious prosecution action could be grouped with the other intentional torts that are specifically governed by the one-year limitations period of current Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c), the court concluded that because the catch-all language for personal injury actions quoted above was now in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1, that was the applicable statute of limitations in malicious prosecution actions. Placing malicious prosecution actions with the other intentional torts specifically listed in Code Civ. Proc. § 340(c) would require legislative action (141 Cal. App. 4th 190, 197) . Because the limitations period on the malicious prosecution action was tolled while the appeal in the underlying action was pending, plaintiff's malicious prosecution action was timely under the two-year period (141 Cal. App. 4th 190, 197-198) .

[c] Accrual of Cause of Action

The facts and procedural background of Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , are discussed in § 147.20[3][h]. In holding that a cause of action for malicious prosecution could not be stated in a cross complaint to the action complained of, the Supreme Court held that a cause of action for malicious prosecution first accrues at the conclusion of the litigation in favor of the party allegedly prosecuted maliciously. Thus, the statute of limitations begins to run on the date that the proceedings in the prior action were dismissed or terminated (3 Cal. 3d 841, 846) .

Soble v. Kallman (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 719, 129 Cal. Rptr. 373 , is discussed in § 147.30[3][b].

[d] Effect of Appeal on Period of Limitation

The facts and procedural background of Feld v. Western Land & Dev. Co. (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 23 , are discussed under § 147.30[3][b]. In that case, the court addressed, as it did in Gibbs v. Haight, Dickson, Brown & Bonesteel (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 716, 228 Cal. Rptr. 398 (discussed below), the effect of an appeal on the running of the statute of limitations. The court followed Gibbs and held that, in a malicious prosecution case in which an appeal is filed in the underlying action, the statute of limitations runs from accrual of the cause of action on entry of judgment in that action until the date of filing a notice of appeal. The statute is then tolled during the pendency of the appeal. The statute begins to run again on the date the appellate process is exhausted. In the instant case, the appellate process was deemed to be exhausted on the date the remittitur issued in the underlying action (2 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1334) . In so ruling, the court harmonized the results of Friedman v. Stadum (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 778-779, 217 Cal. Rptr. 585 [see § 147.20[4][c]] and Gibbs, and found Gibbs controlling. The court noted, but refused to apply to statute of limitations cases, Friedman's unstated assumption that a malicious prosecution cause of action does not accrue until an appeal from the underlying action is resolved (2 Cal. App. 4th 1328, 1335-1336) .

In Gibbs v. Haight, Dickson, Brown & Bonesteel (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 716, 228 Cal. Rptr. 398 , plaintiff Gibbs commenced an action against his former law clients for recovery of attorney's fees and expenses. The clients cross complained against him for breach of contract and legal malpractice. Following a jury trial, a verdict was rendered in his favor on both the complaint and the cross complaint. The clients appealed, but the judgment was affirmed in an unpublished court of appeal opinion. Gibbs then commenced a malicious prosecution action against the clients and their attorneys. The attorney defendants demurred on the ground that the one-year limitations period had elapsed. The trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment dismissing the action as to the attorney defendants. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed. In what appears to be a case of first impression, the court relied on case law in which the underlying action remained unchallenged to hold that the running of the statute of limitations is not tolled during the time for appeal from the judgment in the underlying action (183 Cal. App. 3d 716, 721-722) . However, when an appeal of that action is taken, the statute is tolled from the filing of the notice of appeal until exhaustion of the appeals process, on which date the statute commences to run again. In the instant case, judgment in the underlying action was entered August 31, 1979. The statute ran for 53 days until the notice of appeal was filed October 23, 1979. The statute thereafter was tolled for three years, six months, and eleven days during the pendency of the appeal (October 23, 1979 to May 4, 1983), and commenced to run again on May 4, 1983, when the appeal process was exhausted with the denial of the clients' petition for hearing in the Supreme Court. Gibbs filed his malicious prosecution action 361 days later, on April 30, 1984. Because the resulting total of 414 days exceeded the applicable one-year limitation period, Gibbs' action was time-barred (183 Cal. App. 3d 716, 722) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Effect of Appeal on Period of Limitation

In White v. Lieberman (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 210 , the plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action after an earlier action brought against him was successful at the trial court level, but reversed on appeal. The appellate court in the underlying action filed its remittitur on February 23, 1999, but the trial court did not enter judgment on that reversal until March 26, 1999. The plaintiff filed his malicious prosecution action on March 24, 2000. The court of appeal held that the malicious prosecution action was barred by the applicable one-year statute of limitations. The court noted that when a case is affirmed on appeal, the statute of limitations, which is tolled while the appeal is pending, begins running again on the issuance of the remittitur. The court then concluded that the same rationale should apply when a case is reversed on appeal. Therefore, the statute of limitations began to run when the appellate court issued its remittitur, rather than when the trial court entered judgment on the remittitur, and the action was untimely (103 Cal. App. 4th 210, 216-217) .

In Bellows v. Aliqout Assocs., Inc. (1994) 25 Cal. App. 4th 426, 30 Cal. Rptr. 2d 723 , the issue before the court of appeal was the date that the statute of limitations began to run again after an appeal was final: either the date that the appellate court issued the remittitur, or the date that the remittitur was filed in the trial court. The court of appeal held that, under Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.272(a) formerly Rule 25(a)), the trial court regains jurisdiction over an action when the appellate court issues the remittitur. The date that the remittitur is filed in the lower court is not material for the purposes of the statute of limitations (25 Cal. App. 4th 426, 432-434) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.31

§ 147.31 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Public Entity Immune From Liability [Gov. Code §§ 815.2(b), 821.6]

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST DEFENDANT BECAUSE IT IS A PUBLIC ENTITY AND THE COMPLAINT IS BASED ON MISREPRESENTATIONS OF A PUBLIC EMPLOYEE WHO IS IMMUNE FROM LIABILITY FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION, THEREBY MAKING THE PUBLIC ENTITY IMMUNE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Immunity of Public Employee. A public employee is not liable for injury caused by his or her instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment, even if he or she acts maliciously (Gov. Code § 821.6; see Tur v. City of Los Angeles (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 897, 901, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 470).

C. Immunity of Public Entity. A public entity is not liable for an injury resulting from the act or omission of an employee of a public entity when the employee is immune from liability (Gov. Code § 815.2(b); Citizens Capital Corp. v. Spohn (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 887, 888-889, 184 Cal. Rptr. 269 ; Johnson v. Pacifica (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 82, 85, 84 Cal. Rptr. 246).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]

Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because the defendant is a public entity that is immune from liability for malicious prosecution because its employee, who is alleged to have made the misrepresentations, is immune from liability.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that since police officers causing institution of criminal proceedings against plaintiff are immune from liability under the provisions of Gov. Code § 821.6, the city which employed them is also immune under Gov. Code § 815.2(b) [Johnson v. Pacifica (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 82, 84-87, 84 Cal. Rptr. 246 ; see § 147.31[3][b]].

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] based on the immunity.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 147.43 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by this memorandum.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of demurrers based on public employee and public entity immunity, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Immunity of Public Employee

In Tur v. City of Los Angeles (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 897, 59 Cal. Rptr. 2d 470 , plaintiff, a free-lance reporter, brought a malicious prosecution action against a firefighter who had made accusations which resulted in a criminal complaint being brought against plaintiff. Plaintiff had trained a bright spotlight on defendant's rescue helicopter during a night mission, causing defendant to momentarily lose control and thus imperiling the crew. Defendant complained to the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA), which, after an investigation, exonerated plaintiff. Defendant then presented the same accusation to the city attorney, without revealing the FAA adjudication or plaintiff's exculpatory evidence. Plaintiff was charged with interfering with a firefighter in the performance of an official duty until, on the eve of trial, the city attorney learned of the FAA adjudication and dismissed the case. In the malicious prosecution action defendant asserted immunity under Gov. Code § 821.6. However, the trial court ruled that Gov. Code § 821.6 was not applicable and that defendant's immunity, if any, was based on Gov. Code § 822.2, which immunizes public entities and public employees from liability for misrepresentations unless the employees are guilty of actual fraud, corruption or malice.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that Gov. Code § 822.2 does not create an exception to a public employee's Gov. Code § 821.6 immunity from liability for malicious prosecution. The court noted that the purpose of Gov. Code § 822.2 is to immunize public entities and their employees from liability for actions for deceit, which is a special, distinct, tort. Since plaintiff's action was based on malicious prosecution rather than deceit, Gov. Code § 822.2 did not apply. The court also noted that legislative history indicated that the bill which enacted Gov. Code § 822.2 originally contained a section which would have imposed liability on public entities for malicious prosecution but this section was deleted. Finally, the court reasoned that plaintiff's proposed exception would swallow the rule because in every case of malicious prosecution the injured party can point to a "misrepresentation" in the generic sense of the word (51 Cal. App. 4th 897, 902-903) . The court thus reversed the judgment entered in favor of plaintiff.

[b] Immunity of Public Entity

In Citizens Capital Corp. v. Spohn (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 887, 184 Cal. Rptr. 269 , plaintiffs alleged a conspiracy to destroy their businesses as collection agencies by the state and various state officials involved in an investigation of plaintiffs' businesses. The complaint was based on the institution by the state officials involved in dissemination of widespread newspaper publicity charging plaintiffs with improper conduct in the operation of their respective collection agencies and the institution of proceedings seeking to revoke their licenses. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer on the ground that the conduct relied on by plaintiffs was absolutely privileged under Gov. Code §§ 815.2 and 821.6. Plaintiffs appealed from the order of the trial court.

The court of appeal agreed with the judgment of the trial court and affirmed. Pursuant to Gov. Code § 821.6, the court observed, a public employee was immune from any liability arising out of his or her instituting or prosecuting any judicial or administrative proceeding within the scope of his or her employment, even if he or she acts maliciously and without probable cause. The immunity afforded by this statute, the court held, extended to the dissemination of publicity that merely reported the results of official investigations of plaintiffs and the revocation action based on those investigations. Since the state employees were immune from liability, the court concluded, the state, pursuant to Gov. Code § 815.2, was also exempt from liability (133 Cal. App. 3d 887, 888-889) .

Johnson v. Pacifica (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 82, 84 Cal. Rptr. 246 , is discussed in § 147.31[3][a]. The court held that since the city's employees were immune, the city was immune under the provisions of Gov. Code § 815.2(b) (4 Cal. App. 3d 82, 85) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Immunity of Public Employee

In Scannell v. County of Riverside (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 199 Cal. Rptr. 644 , the court of appeal upheld the trial court's orders sustaining general demurrers without leave to amend to plaintiff's causes of action for malicious prosecution against a county and one of its employees. The court found the county employee to be acting within the scope of his employment and therefore immune from prosecution by virtue of Gov. Code § 821.6, regardless of alleged malice. The court further found that because the employee was immune, the county employing him was likewise immune under Gov. Code § 815.2(b) (152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 604) .

In Blackburn v. Los Angeles County (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 175, 116 Cal. Rptr. 622 , a malicious prosecution action was brought against the county and certain of its employees who had brought grand theft charges against plaintiff. The county demurred based on the immunity under Gov. Code § 821.6 of its employees for malicious prosecution actions and its own immunity under Gov. Code § 815.2(b) when its employees are immune. The demurrer was sustained and judgment was entered for the county. Plaintiff appealed and the judgment was affirmed. The sole issue on appeal was the constitutionality of the immunity statutes. The court of appeal held that they were constitutional. It noted that immunity statutes have repeatedly been held to be constitutional. It also relied on the important public policy in protecting public employees from the harassment of baseless malicious prosecution actions (42 Cal. App. 3d 175, 178-179) .

In Johnson v. Pacifica (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 82, 84 Cal. Rptr. 246 , the complaint alleged that two Pacifica police officers had negligently caused the institution of proceedings against plaintiff for passing bad checks. The city demurred and the complaint was dismissed as to the city. Plaintiff appealed and the judgment was affirmed. The court of appeal held that the police officers were immune under the provisions of Gov. Code § 821.6 from liability for malicious prosecution. In response to plaintiff's contention that Gov. Code § 821.6 was only intended to apply to prosecuting attorneys and not police officers, the court held that the statute used the broad term "employees" and must therefore have been intended to apply to police officers (4 Cal. App. 3d 82, 84-87) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.32

§ 147.32 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Right to Bring Action Waived by Seeking Defense Costs Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(c)

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION BECAUSE IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION _____ [UNDER THE TORT CLAIMS ACT or FOR INDEMNITY or FOR CONTRIBUTION] PLAINTIFF SOUGHT DEFENSE COSTS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Waiver by Seeking Defense Costs. If a defendant in an action _____ [under the Tort Claims Act or for _____ (express or implied) indemnity or for contribution] prevails on a motion for _____ [summary judgment or nonsuit or directed verdict or judgment under Code of Civil Procedure Section 631.8] and seeks its defense costs under the provisions of Code of Civil Procedure Section 1038, that defendant waives the right to seek damages for malicious prosecution (Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(c)).

C. Judicial Notice. The court must take, and is hereby requested to take, judicial notice of the attached records of the _____ [specify] Court of the County of _____, Case NO. _____, in which plaintiff sought defense costs (Evid. Code §§ 452(d), 453).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the right to bring an action for malicious prosecution was waived because plaintiff sought defense costs, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1038, in a previous action.

The memorandum includes a request for the court to take judicial notice of the records in the case in which defense costs were sought, to enable the defendant to establish that fact. Certified copies of the relevant court records should be attached to the demurrer and points. For additional authorities for use in requesting the court to take judicial notice, see Ch. 71, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment based on waiver by seeking defense costs.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver by Seeking Defense Costs

Code Civ. Proc. § 1038 provides that in any civil proceeding under the California Tort Claims Act (Gov. Code § 810 et seq.) or for express or implied indemnity or for contribution in any civil action, in which the defendant or cross defendant has made a motion for summary judgment, judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8, directed verdict, or nonsuit, and the motion is granted, the court shall, on the defendant's or cross defendant's motion, at the time of granting the motion or at a later time set forth by rule of the Judicial Council adopted under Code Civ. Proc. § 1034, determine whether the plaintiff, petitioner, cross complainant, or intervenor brought the proceeding with reasonable cause and in the good-faith belief that there was a justiciable controversy under the facts and law which warranted the filing of the complaint, petition, cross complaint, or complaint in intervention [Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(a), (d)]. If the court determines the proceeding was not brought in good faith and with reasonable cause, an additional issue shall be decided regarding the defense costs reasonably and necessarily incurred by the party or parties opposing the proceeding, and the court shall render judgment in favor of that party in the amount of all reasonable and necessary defense costs, in addition to those costs normally awarded to the prevailing party [Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(a)]. Items constituting or not constituting costs normally awarded to the prevailing party under Code Civ. Proc. § 1032 are set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 1033.5. An award of defense costs under Code Civ. Proc. § 1038 can only be made on notice contained in a party's papers and an opportunity to be heard [Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(a)]. "Defense costs" includes reasonable attorney's fees, expert witness fees, the expense of services of experts, advisers, and consultants, when reasonably and necessarily incurred in defense o the proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 1038(b)]. If a motion for defense costs is made, the right to seek damages for malicious prosecution is waived. However, failure to make the motion is not a waiver of the right to seek damages for malicious prosecution [Civ. Proc. § 1038(c)].

[b] Judicial Notice

Evid. Code § 452(d) provides that the court may take judicial notice of the records of any court in California or of any court of record of the United States or of any state of the United States. Evid. Code § 453 provides that a court must take judicial notice of any matter specified in Evid. Code § 452 if: (1) a party requests it, (2) each adverse party is given sufficient notice of the request, through the pleadings or otherwise, to enable that adverse party to prepare to meet the request, and (3) the court is furnished with sufficient information to enable it to take judicial notice.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.33

§ 147.33 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Governmental Entity Not Permitted to Bring Malicious Prosecution Suit

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.20].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS A GOVERNMENTAL ENTITY AND THEREFORE MAY NOT BRING A SUIT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Governmental Entities Not Permitted to Sue for Malicious Prosecution. Governmental entities may not maintain actions for malicious prosecution against those who have previously sued the entities without success; the bringing of suits against the government is absolutely privileged and cannot form the basis for the imposition of civil liability for malicious prosecution (City of Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 527, 538-539, 183 Cal. Rptr. 86, 645 P.2d 137 , cert. granted and opinion vacated, (1983) 459 U.S. 1095, 103 S. Ct. 712, 74 L. Ed. 2d 943 , opinion reinstated, (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 727, 190 Cal. Rptr. 918, 661 P.2d 1072).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution on the ground that the complaint on its face shows that plaintiff is a governmental entity and therefore may not bring an action for malicious prosecution.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[B] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to support a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the ground that an action for malicious prosecution cannot be brought by a governmental entity.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Governmental Entities Not Permitted to Sue for Malicious Prosecution

In City of Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 527, 183 Cal. Rptr. 86, 645 P.2d 137 , cert. granted and opinion vacated, (1983) 459 U.S. 1095, 103 S. Ct. 712, 74 L. Ed. 2d 943 , opinion reinstated, (1983) 33 Cal. 3d 727, 190 Cal. Rptr. 918, 661 P.2d 1072 , defendant filed suit against the city of Long Beach and two city police officers for false imprisonment, false arrest, negligent hiring, assault, and battery. A jury found for the city and the two officers, who then instituted an action for malicious prosecution against defendant. Defendant generally demurred to the city's complaint, and the trial court sustained his demurrer without leave to amend only as to the city on the ground that municipalities should not be permitted to sue for malicious prosecution. The city appealed, and the judgment was affirmed. The Supreme Court stated that in order to avoid the chilling effect upon the constitutional right of petition which would result if municipalities were allowed to maintain actions for malicious prosecution, the best course is to defer to the legislatively provided remedy. The Court noted that an award of the expenses of suit by a trial court in an initial action, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5(a) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 128.5(a), (e)] and Code Civ. Proc. § 1021.7, will fully compensate a municipality for its expenses of defending suit. The availability of the award, in combination with the criminal sanctions provided in Penal Code § 72 for the filing of false claims with the government and the possibility of malicious prosecution actions by individual city employees, such as the police officers in this case, provide an adequate deterrent to unwarranted lawsuits without unduly infringing on the right of petition. Accordingly, the Court held that governmental entities may not maintain actions for malicious prosecution against those who have previously sued these entities without success; the bringing of suits against the government is absolutely privileged and cannot form the basis for imposition of civil liability for malicious prosecution (31 Cal. 3d 527, 538-539) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.34

§ 147.34 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Defendant Had Probable Cause to Institute Civil Action on Which Complaint Is Based

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR Plaintiff,	)	SUMMARY JUDGMENT
vs.	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED WHEN THE AFFIDAVITS ESTABLISH PROBABLE CAUSE FOR INSTITUTING THE PREVIOUS CIVIL ACTION WHICH IS THE BASIS OF THE COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. The motion must be granted if all the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Lack of Probable Cause Must Be Shown. In order to establish a cause of action for malicious prosecution, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the prior action was brought without probable cause. The probable-cause element of malicious prosecution requires a determination of whether, on the basis of the facts known to the defendant, the institution of the prior action was legally tenable (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 871, 878, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498).

C. Probable Cause Is Legal Issue. The existence or absence of probable cause is a question of law to be determined by the court, rather than a question of fact for the jury (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 875, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498 ; Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 289, 198 Cal. Rptr. 517).

D. Summary Judgment Is Proper When Declarations or Affidavits Establish Existence of Probable Cause. If a defendant's declarations or affidavits establish that he or she had probable cause to institute the underlying action, defendant's motion for summary judgment should be granted (Kassan v. Bledsoe (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 810, 815-817, 60 Cal. Rptr. 799).

[Optional] E. Favorable Outcome of Action as Establishing Probable Cause. When the action on which the malicious prosecution action is based concluded favorably to defendant (plaintiff in the prior action), probable cause for bringing the action is conclusively established notwithstanding reversal of the underlying action on appeal (Fairchild v. Adams (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 10, 15, 338 P.2d 191).

[Optional] F. Probable Cause for Initiating Action Establishes Probable Cause for Continuing Action After Reversal on Appeal. If probable cause for bringing the underlying action is established, probable cause also exists for the continuation of the same action after it has been reversed on appeal (Vanzant v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1291, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 48).

[Optional] G. Attorney's Probable Cause. In a malicious prosecution action, the objective standard of probable cause with regard to the initiation of an allegedly malicious action by an attorney is measured by whether, on the basis of the facts known to the defendant attorney, the filing of the action was objectively reasonable. The test is whether any reasonable attorney would have thought the claim tenable. Tenability must be measured in light of both the existing authorities and the leeway a litigant must be given to argue for an evolution of legal precedents (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 886, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498).

[Optional] H. Irrelevance of Attorney Research to Issue of Probable Cause. The adequacy of an attorney's research is not relevant to the court's determination of probable cause (Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 883, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498).

[Optional] I. Extent of Attorney's Knowledge Irrelevant Where Underlying Action Was Tenable. The extent of an attorney's knowledge at the time an action is filed is irrelevant where the actual facts establish that the underlying action was tenable (Hufstedler, Kaus & Ettinger v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 55, 61, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 551).

[Optional] J. Denial of Defendant's Summary Judgment Motion in Underlying Civil Action Normally Establishes Probable Cause. Denial of the defendant's motion for summary judgment in the underlying civil action is normally sufficient to establish probable cause for bringing the underlying action (Roberts v. Sentry Life Ins. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 384, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 408).

[Optional] K. Preliminary Injunction in Underlying Action Establishes Probable Cause. A preliminary injunction granted to the plaintiff in the underlying action after a hearing on the merits establishes probable cause as to all causes of action that were reasonably related to the injunction (Fleishman v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 350, 355-358, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 383).

[Optional] L. Fraud Exception to Interim Adverse Judgment Rule Cannot Be Relitigated in Malicious Prosecution Action. Although there is a fraud exception to the general rule that a trial court judgment in the underlying action in favor of the malicious prosecution defendant will establish probable cause for bringing the action even if that decision is subsequently reversed on appeal, if the claims of fraud or perjury are litigated and rejected by the fact finder in the underlying action, the malicious prosecution plaintiff cannot rely on those same claims of fraud or perjury to establish the absence of probable cause in the malicious prosecution action (Plumley v. Mockett (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1056, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 822).

[Optional] M. Failure to Post Undertaking Does Not Negate Probable Cause Established by Order for Preliminary Injunction. The failure to post a required undertaking or bond under Code of Civil Procedure Section 529(a) in order to perfect a preliminary injunction granted in an underlying action does not negate that the order granting the preliminary injunction conclusively establishes probable cause for bringing that action (Paiva v. Nichols (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1024, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 838).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in a malicious prosecution action in support of a motion for summary judgment if defendant's declarations in support of the motion establish that there was probable cause for bringing the underlying civil action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of affirmative defenses based on lack of probable cause, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Memoranda

For forms relating to summary judgment in general, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Probable Cause Must Be Shown

In Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498 , a real estate company brought an action for malicious prosecution based on defendant law firm's unsuccessful attempt to assert a lien claim and impose a lis pendens on defendant's property. Over objection, the trial court permitted an attorney called by plaintiff to testify as an expert witness on the question of the legal tenability of the prior action. The court also admitted evidence with respect to the adequacy of the legal research that had been performed by defendant before the institution of the action. In submitting the probable-cause issue to the jury, the court instructed the jury that to constitute probable cause for the prosecution of a proceeding against plaintiff, the evidence must establish that defendant, after a reasonable investigation and industrious search of legal authority, had an honest belief that its client's claims were tenable, and that defendant prosecuted claims that a reasonable lawyer would regard as tenable or did not unreasonably neglect to investigate the facts and law in making their determination to proceed with the prior action. As so instructed, the jury found in favor of plaintiff. On defendant's appeal, the court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed, and remanded the case with directions to order the entry of judgment in favor of defendant on the malicious prosecution claim (47 Cal. 3d 863, 886) . The Court stated that in order to establish a cause of action for malicious prosecution, a plaintiff must demonstrate that the prior action (1) was commenced by or at the direction of the defendant and was pursued to a legal termination in his or her favor, (2) was brought without probable cause, and (3) was initiated with malice (47 Cal. 3d 863, 871) . The Court noted that the probable-cause element in the malicious prosecution tort plays a role quite distinct from the separate "malice" element of the tort. While the malice element is directly concerned with the subjective mental state of the defendant in instituting the prior action, the probable-cause element calls on the trial court to make an objective determination of the reasonableness of the defendant's conduct: to determine whether, on the basis of the facts known to the defendant, the institution of the prior action was legally tenable (47 Cal. 3d 863, 878) . On reviewing the evidence and the applicable legal authorities, the Court concluded that the standard for legal tenability was met (47 Cal. 3d 863, 885-886) .

[b] Probable Cause as Legal Issue

The facts and procedural background of Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498 , are discussed under § 147.34[3][a]. The Supreme Court noted that the existence or absence of probable cause has traditionally been viewed as a question of law to be determined by the court, rather than a question of fact for the jury (47 Cal. 3d 863, 875) . Underlying this rule is the fact that jurors are often not capable of the sensitive evaluation of legal principles and precedents that is necessary for determining probable cause (47 Cal. 3d 863, 875) . The Court noted that when there is a dispute about the state of the defendant's knowledge, and the existence of probable cause turns on the resolution of that dispute, the question of the defendant's factual knowledge or belief is properly resolved by the jury (47 Cal. 3d 863, 881) . In the instant case, however, there were no disputed questions of factual knowledge or belief. Therefore, submission of the probable-cause issue to the jury was improper (47 Cal. 3d 863, 876) . On its independent evaluation of probable cause, the Court found that defendants did have probable cause to bring the underlying action (47 Cal. 3d 863, 886) .

In Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 198 Cal. Rptr. 517 , defendant insurer instituted an action for indemnification against plaintiff, one of its agents, after settlement of a wrongful death suit. The indemnification action was decided on behalf of plaintiff, and plaintiff subsequently brought the present action for malicious prosecution. Defendant moved for, and the trial court granted, summary judgment on the ground that there was probable cause for the indemnification suit and that no issue of material fact was disputed. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal upheld summary judgment for defendant. The court stated that when the facts are uncontroverted, the court itself must determine probable cause (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 289) . The court noted that plaintiff had not disputed the statements in a declaration offered by defendant showing the existence of probable cause without any contrary evidence (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 288) . The court further noted that the only evidentiary bases on which plaintiff might have based a claim defeating the existence of probable cause had been properly excluded by the trial court (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 289) . The court held that the trial court was well within its discretion in allowing summary judgment on the issue of existence of probable cause (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 288) .

[c] Summary Judgment Is Proper When Declarations or Affidavits Establish Existence of Probable Cause

In Kassan v. Bledsoe (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 810, 60 Cal. Rptr. 799 , an attorney brought an action for malicious prosecution based on two lawsuits in which he had been a defendant. Defendants moved for summary judgment in the malicious prosecution action on the basis of affidavits establishing their careful investigation of the cause of action against plaintiff and their reasonable belief that he was liable. Plaintiff's affidavit did not contradict defendants' affidavits and merely stated that he had done nothing wrong and that defendants had acted maliciously in joining him in the underlying action. It did not present any facts to show why defendants did not have probable cause to join him. The trial court granted the motion for summary judgment and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It noted that probable cause constitutes a complete defense in an action for malicious prosecution and that it is essential to the plaintiff's case that there be substantial evidence to create a conflict or an inference of lack of probable cause. The court concluded that the affidavits submitted by defendants established that defendants had probable cause for instituting the prior lawsuits and that plaintiff's lawsuits stated no facts sufficient to create a conflict (252 Cal. App. 2d 810, 816-817) .

[d] Favorable Outcome of Action as Establishing Probable Cause

In Fairchild v. Adams (1959) 170 Cal. App. 2d 10, 338 P.2d 191 , a brother sued his sister for instituting a will contest concerning the will of a second sister. The trial court found undue influence by the brother in the will contest, but the Supreme Court reversed, holding that there was not sufficient evidence of the undue influence. In the malicious prosecution action, the trial court entered a judgment for defendant sister and plaintiff brother appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It upheld the trial court's finding that defendant had probable cause for bringing the will contest. It held that the favorable termination of the will contest in the trial court conclusively established probable cause despite the fact that the verdict was reversed by the Supreme Court. The Court noted that 10 jurors, the trial judge, three judges of the court of appeal, and two Supreme Court justices had ruled in defendant's favor in the will contest, which showed that there was probable cause for bringing it (170 Cal. App. 2d 10, 14-15) .

[e] Probable Cause for Initiating Action Establishes Probable Cause for Continuing Action After Reversal on Appeal

In Vanzant v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 48 , a manufacturer and seller of radiator grille overlays was sued in federal court for trademark infringement and related causes of action by an automobile manufacturer, who held registered trademarks for the radiator grille designs on its vehicles. The district court in the underlying federal action granted a partial summary judgment for the automobile manufacturer and issued a permanent injunction against the grille overlay seller. However, the federal court of appeals reversed the district court and remanded for further proceedings. On remand, the district court granted summary judgment for the grille overlay seller, who subsequently filed a malicious prosecution action against the automobile manufacturer and its attorneys. The plaintiff argued that the defendants lacked probable cause for prosecuting the underlying action. The defendants demurred to the malicious prosecution complaint, arguing that the rulings in the federal district court in the defendants' favor conclusively established probable cause for bringing the action. The plaintiff argued that although those rulings may have established probable cause for bringing the action, they did not establish probable cause for continuing the action after it was reversed on appeal. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court applied the established rule that if a plaintiff in the underlying action obtains a favorable judgment on the merits, that judgment, unless procured by fraud, establishes probable cause for prosecuting the underlying action even if the judgment is subsequently reversed on appeal (96 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1289) . The court then rejected the argument of the plaintiff in this case that, notwithstanding the existence of probable cause for the defendants' initiating the underlying action, the plaintiff's malicious prosecution action could be predicated on a lack of probable cause for continuing to prosecute the underlying action after it was reversed and remanded. The court noted that California courts had typically refused to permit malicious prosecution claims based on the continuation of a properly initiated existing proceeding, because a contrary rule would disrupt ongoing litigation by injecting tort claims against the parties' lawyers and because the appropriate remedy for actions taken within a lawsuit lies in the trial court's broad powers to control judicial proceedings. In this particular case, because probable cause was conclusively established for initiating the underlying action, the court held that probable cause existed for continuing the same action after reversal on appeal (96 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 1290-1291) .

NOTE:

In 2004, the California Supreme Court held in Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 970, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802 [see § 147.53], that an attorney may be liable for malicious prosecution for continuing to prosecute a claim after the attorney discovers that the action in fact lacks probable cause, even if the attorney had probable cause to initiate the action. The Court specifically disapproved of any contrary language that may be found in Vanzant v. DaimlerChrysler Corp. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 1283, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 48 , as well as in Swat-Fame, Inc. v. Goldstein (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 613, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556 , and Morrison v. Rudolph (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 506, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 [see § 147.34[3][f]]. Therefore, although continuing to prosecute a case after reversal on appeal will not always subject an attorney to liability for malicious prosecution, the attorney should exercise caution to ensure that probable cause for continuing the action still exists.

[f] Attorney's Probable Cause

The facts and procedural background of Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498 , are discussed under § 147.34[3][a]. The Supreme Court adopted the probable-cause standard for frivolous appeals as the standard for determining an attorney's probable cause in a malicious prosecution action. The court noted that in In re Marriage of Flaherty (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 637, 650, 183 Cal. Rptr. 508, 646 P.2d 179 , it had concluded that an appeal could properly be found frivolous only if any reasonable attorney would agree that the appeal was totally and completely without merit. In a subsequent case, Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 639, 224 Cal. Rptr. 865 , the court of appeal suggested that this standard was insufficiently stringent as a test for probable cause in the malicious prosecution context and instead proposed that probable cause be measured by whether a prudent attorney after such investigation of the facts and research of the law as the circumstances reasonably warrant, would have considered the action to be tenable on the theory advanced. The Supreme Court stated that to the extent the Flaherty and Williams formulations differ, the less stringent Flaherty standard more appropriately reflects the important public policy of avoiding the chilling of novel or debatable legal claims. That policy is no less applicable to the institution of actions at the trial stage than to the pursuit of appeals. In contrast to the "prudent attorney" language of Williams, the Flaherty standard, modified to fit the context of the instant case, may make it clearer that in evaluating whether or not there was probable cause for malicious prosecution purposes, a court must properly take into account the evolutionary potential of legal principles. Thus, the appropriate probable-cause standard in the malicious prosecution action is whether any reasonable attorney would have thought the defendant's claim tenable. Applying this standard, the court concluded that the lien claim pursued by defendant, although not ultimately successful, was legally tenable and that there was probable cause to support both the lien claim and the lis pendens (47 Cal. 3d 863, 885-886) .

[g] Irrelevance of Attorney Research to Issue of Probable Cause

The facts and procedural background of Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498 , are discussed under § 147.34[3][a]. The Court held that the adequacy of an attorney's research is not relevant to the determination of probable cause. The Court rejected a dictum in Tool Research & Engineering Corp. v. Henigson (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 675, 120 Cal. Rptr. 291 , that had suggested an attorney's reasonable investigation and industrious research of legal authority is an essential component of probable cause. The Court noted that this dictum shifts the focus of the probable-cause inquiry from the objective tenability of the prior claim to the adequacy of the particular defendant's performance as an attorney. Furthermore, this component is at odds with a consistent line of California decisions that have made clear that an attorney's duty of care runs primarily to the client rather than the client's adversary, and which have precluded the adversary from maintaining a negligence cause of action against its opponent's attorney. Allowing inadequate research to serve as an independent basis for proving the absence of probable cause on the part of an attorney would tend to create a conflict of interest between the attorney and client, tempting a cautious attorney to create a record of diligence by performing extensive legal research, not for the benefit of the client, but simply to protect himself or herself from the client's adversaries in the event the initial suit fails (47 Cal. 3d 863, 882-883) .

[h] Extent of Attorney's Knowledge Irrelevant Where Underlying Action Was Tenable

In Hufstedler, Kaus & Ettinger v. Superior Court (1996) 42 Cal. App. 4th 55, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 551 , a writer of a financial newsletter sued a bank and its attorney for malicious prosecution after he had been sued for libel for an article critical of a bank offer of certificates of deposit. The defendant attorney moved for summary judgment, contending that probable cause existed for the underlying suit. Plaintiff opposed the motion, contending that there were triable issues of fact about the extent of the attorney's knowledge at the time she filed the libel action. The trial court denied the motion, and the attorney petitioned for a writ of mandate, contending that the nature and extent of her knowledge was irrelevant since the facts establish that the underlying lawsuit was tenable.

The court of appeal relied extensively on Sheldon Appel Co. v. Albert & Oliker (1989) 47 Cal. 3d 863, 254 Cal. Rptr. 336, 765 P.2d 498 , discussed under § 147.34[3][e]. The court noted that where the facts known by the attorney are not in dispute, the probable cause issue is properly determined by the trial court under an objective standard, without a determination of whether the attorney subjectively believed that the prior claim was legally tenable (42 Cal. App. 4th 55, 63) . Thus, a determination of probable cause should not be second-guessed in a malicious prosecution action (42 Cal. App. 4th 55, 65) . Furthermore, the court held that the attorney's knowledge had nothing to do with plaintiff's theory of the case, since his position was that any reasonable attorney should have known that the bank could not prevail in the libel action. With regard to whether a reasonable attorney would have thought that the bank's claim was tenable, the court noted that plaintiff did not dispute that his statements were defamatory, and admitted that he knew that some of them were false when published. Plaintiff's legal positions were that his statements were opinions, that the bank was a public figure, and that he acted without malice. The court concluded that plaintiff was not so absolutely correct that no reasonable attorney would have thought otherwise (42 Cal. App. 4th 55, 67) . The court thus issued a peremptory writ of mandate compelling the trial court to grant the attorney's motion for summary judgment.

[i] Denial of Defendant's Summary Judgment Motion in Underlying Civil Action Normally Establishes Probable Cause

In Roberts v. Sentry Life Ins. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 408 , a physician brought an action for malicious prosecution against a disability insurer and its attorneys for earlier tort claims brought in federal court against the physician for fraud and bad faith. The underlying tort claims stemmed from the payment of disability compensation to the physician under a policy issued by the insurer, under which the insurer was obligated to pay the physician $3,000 per month while he was totally disabled, with the payments reduced by 50 percent of compensation earned if he returned to work. The insurer in the underlying suit argued that the disability payments made over the course of several years were fraudulently obtained because, although the physician reported that he received no salary for 11 months out of 12 for the relevant years, he refused to report the amount of the salary payments made once a year to him by his wholly owned personal corporation, which were usually approximately $400,000. Although the underlying claims were eventually decided in favor of the physician, the trial court had denied the physician's motion for summary judgment on the fraud claim, on the grounds that triable issues existed as to whether the physician concealed material facts from the insurer with the intent to deceive. In the malicious prosecution action, the trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the defendants, and the physician appealed, arguing that factual issues existed as to whether there had been probable cause to bring the underlying claims and whether the claims had been brought maliciously.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the denial of the physician's motion for summary judgment in the underlying civil action established that the claims were supported by probable cause. The court concluded that denial of a defendant's motion for summary judgment in the underlying suit will normally be sufficient to establish probable cause, because denial of the motion provides persuasive evidence that the suit does not totally lack merit. The court noted that summary judgment motions are usually heard only after full discovery develops evidence relevant to the claim, and that the judge ruling on the motion is impartial and his or her denial of a summary judgment motion suggests that some reasonable lawyers could find the claim to be at least arguably meritorious (76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 384) . However, the court of appeal noted that under certain circumstances, a denial of summary judgment in the underlying action would not preclude a finding that probable cause was lacking--for example, if the underlying motion for summary judgment was denied due to materially false facts submitted in opposition (76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 384) . In this case, however, the court rejected the argument that the underlying denial of summary judgment had been based on false evidence presented in opposition. The court also concluded that, independent of the summary judgment ruling in the underlying civil action, a reasonable lawyer representing the insurer could have concluded that a tenable claim for fraud against the physician existed (76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 385-386) .

Note that, although stopping short of holding that the denial of a defendant's motion for summary judgment in the underlying action conclusively establishes probable cause, the court of appeal in Roberts questioned the continued viability of that part of the holding in Lucchesi v. Giannini & Uniack (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 777, 205 Cal. Rptr. 62 , discussed in § 147.49[3][a], which declined to treat denial of summary judgment as conclusive that probable cause existed. Lucchesi was decided when probable cause included an element of subjective good faith, an element later eliminated by the California Supreme Court. As noted in Roberts, denial of summary judgment may show objective legal tenability, but does not address the plaintiff's subjective good faith (76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 384) .

[j] Preliminary Injunction in Underlying Action Establishes Probable Cause

In Fleishman v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 350, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 383 , the plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action against an attorney for the plaintiff's former employer, which had previously brought an action against the plaintiff. The underlying lawsuit alleged various causes of action based generally on trade secret misappropriation, interference with contract, and false advertising, and stemmed from the plaintiff's conduct in soliciting purchasers of timeshare interests in an inn to sell their interests and repurchase at a lower price, with the plaintiff as broker. In that underlying action, the trial court granted a preliminary injunction in favor of the plaintiff's former employer, although eventually the former employer voluntarily dismissed its action against the plaintiff without prejudice. The plaintiff then filed the malicious prosecution action. The trial court denied the defendant's demurrer and motion for judgment on the pleadings. The defendant sought a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the writ of mandate, ordering the trial court to vacate its order and grant the defendant judgment on the pleadings. The court of appeal briefly reviewed the Supreme Court's opinion in Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 811, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 19, 50 P.3d 733 [see § 147.34[3][j]]. The court then concluded that if a denial of a special motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute conclusively establishes probable cause, then the issuing of a preliminary injunction must have the same effect. In deciding whether to issue a preliminary injunction, a trial court must evaluate the likelihood that the party seeking the injunction will ultimately prevail on the merits, as well as balance the comparative consequences of the issuance and nonissuance of the injunction. The trial court must carefully weigh the evidence, evaluate the credibility of witnesses, and make factual findings on disputed evidence. Therefore, a preliminary injunction granted to the plaintiff in the underlying action after a hearing on the merits establishes probable cause as to all causes of action that were reasonably related to the injunction (102 Cal. App. 4th 350, 355-356) . The court cautioned, however, that probable cause would not be established as to any causes of action that were not reasonably related to the injunction, although the court concluded that each cause of action alleged in the underlying lawsuit was reasonably related to the preliminary injunction that the trial court issued in that case (102 Cal. App. 4th 350, 358-359) .

[k] Fraud Exception to Interim Adverse Judgment Rule Cannot Be Relitigated in Malicious Prosecution Action

In Plumley v. Mockett (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 822 , plaintiff, a sales representative, and defendant, president of a company that marketed furniture-related products, sought competing patents for a pivoting-tab grommet used in the construction of desk tops. Shortly after the patent was issued to plaintiff, defendant challenged the patent before the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences, claiming that he invented the grommet first and had provided plaintiff with the idea through communications with plaintiff. While the patent proceeding was pending, defendant also sued plaintiff in state court on various causes of action, including unfair competition and misappropriation of trade secrets. In that action, the trial judge found in favor of the plaintiff on the unfair competition claim and made factual findings suggesting that much of defendant's evidence had been fabricated. Not bound by the state court's ruling, however, the Board of Patent Appeals found in favor of defendant on his patent interference claim, after concluding based on circumstantial evidence that defendant's claim appeared more likely to be truthful than plaintiff's. However, a federal district court reversed the Board's decision on the grounds that the Board erred in inferring based solely on circumstantial evidence that defendant had communicated the design for the pivoting-tab grommet to plaintiff. On remand, the Board found that defendant had insufficient evidence to substantiate his claim and issued a decision in favor of plaintiff, which was upheld on appeal. Plaintiff then filed a malicious prosecution action against defendant and his attorney based on the filing of the patent challenge with the Board. Defendants filed a motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, arguing that plaintiff could not establish a probability of success on the merits because he could not show that the underlying action for patent interference was brought without probable cause and with malice. The trial court denied the motion to strike, however, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the motion to strike should have been granted because plaintiff could not establish that the underlying patent challenge was brought without probable cause. Plaintiff recognized that while a trial court judgment in the underlying action in favor of a malicious prosecution defendant will generally establish probable cause for bringing the action even if that decision is subsequently reversed on appeal, an established exception to this so-called "interim adverse judgment rule" applied when the underlying initial judgment was procured by fraud or perjury. Plaintiff argued that the state court judge's findings that much of defendants' evidence had been fabricated was entitled to collateral estoppel effect, thereby justifying application of the fraud exception to the interim adverse judgment rule. The court rejected plaintiff's collateral estoppel argument, however, after concluding that plaintiff failed to show that the issues decided in the state court action were identical to the issues involved in the present malicious prosecution action (164 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1048-1050) . The court of appeal went on to hold that defendants' initial victory in the underling action brought before the Board, even though eventually reversed on appeal, conclusively established probable cause for bringing the patent challenge. Consistent with the general rule that the law places upon litigants the burden of exposing during trial the bias of witnesses and the falsity of evidence, thereby enhancing the finality of judgments and avoiding unending rounds of litigation, the court held that when applying the fraud exception to the interim judgment rule, if claims of fraud or perjury are litigated and rejected by the fact finder in the underlying action, the malicious prosecution plaintiff cannot rely on those same claims of fraud or perjury to establish the absence of probable cause in a subsequent malicious prosecution action. In the instant case, the Board had effectively found that it believed the testimony and evidence of defendants more than the competing evidence of plaintiff, thereby rejecting the same claims of fraud and perjury that plaintiff sought to prove in his malicious prosecution action. Thus, the court concluded that the motion to strike should have been granted because plaintiff could not establish that defendants had lacked probable cause to bring the patent challenge (164 Cal. App. 4th 1031, 1056) .

[l] Failure to Post Undertaking Does Not Negate Probable Cause Established by Order for Preliminary Injunction

In Paiva v. Nichols (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 838 , plaintiff filed a malicious prosecution action against two across-the-street neighbors based on the neighbors' prior trespass action brought against plaintiff. The underlying action stemmed from plaintiff's attempt to have aerial power lines relocated underneath the ground, which required building a trench through the street in front of the neighbors' yards and connecting the underground lines with a utility pole located on the property of one of the neighbors. While the neighbors achieved both a temporary restraining order and a preliminary injunction in the underlying trespass action, plaintiff eventually prevailed in that action, prompting his filing of the subsequent malicious prosecution action. Defendants filed a motion to strike the malicious prosecution action under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, but the trial court denied the motion. Defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of the motion to strike, concluding that plaintiff could not establish that the underlying trespass action was brought without probable cause. The court first held that under the rationale of Fleishman v. Superior Court (2002) 102 Cal. App. 4th 350, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 383 , discussed in [j], above, the trial court's granting of a preliminary injunction in the underlying trespass action conclusively established probable cause for bringing that action. In reaching that conclusion, the court of appeal noted that the trial court in the trespass suit had held two hearings, one resulting in a temporary restraining order and the other in the preliminary injunction, and had heard evidence and received documentary evidence from both sides at these hearings before concluding that the neighbors had established a reasonable probability of succeeding on their trespass claims (168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1021-1022) . The court of appeal then held that the failure of the neighbors to post an undertaking or bond under Code Civ. Proc. § 529(a) as required to perfect the preliminary injunction did not result in depriving those parties of the right to rely on the order granting the preliminary injunction to establish probable cause. The court noted that the rationale supporting the Fleishman holding--that probable cause is established if, after receiving evidence and legal argument from both sides during a hearing, the underlying court comes to the conclusion that the plaintiff in that action is likely to succeed on the merits--is not affected by a subsequent failure to perfect the preliminary injunction due to the failure to post a required bond or undertaking (168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1024) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment Is Proper When Declarations or Affidavits Establish Existence of Probable Cause

In Sangster v. Paetkau (1998) 68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 80 Cal. Rptr. 2d 66 , plaintiff was a secretary who brought a malicious prosecution action against her former employer and a local equestrian festival based on an alleged lack of probable cause in bringing cross suit against plaintiff for fraud and breach of fiduciary duty in the course of defending an action brought by a third party. The underlying actions against the secretary stemmed from her conduct in the preparation of, and billing for, printed programs for a horse show sponsored by the malicious prosecution defendants. The trial court in the malicious prosecution action granted summary judgment for the defendants, finding that defendants had probable cause to file the underlying actions, and the court of appeal agreed. The court of appeal rejected plaintiff's argument that summary judgment was inappropriate due to conflicting evidence about whether defendants had fabricated some of the evidence in the underlying cross suit. The court relied on other, undisputed evidence that was sufficient to provide an objectively reasonable basis for bringing the underlying action, including the deposition testimony and interrogatory answers of the original plaintiff in the underlying action (68 Cal. App. 4th 151, 166-168) .

Nicholson v. Lucas (1994) 21 Cal. App. 4th 1657, 26 Cal. Rptr. 2d 778 , involved an action by a dentist who was denied surgical privileges at a hospital, alleging that the proceeding to deny him the privileges constituted malicious prosecution. Defendant's motion for summary judgment included evidence that the hospital staff considered before it instituted the proceeding, consisting of patients' charts and an analysis of those charts by dentists, both on the staff and from outside. The trial court granted defendants' motion and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that the evidence established as a matter of law that the decision to institute the proceeding was reasonable, and was made with probable cause (21 Cal. App. 4th 1657, 1666-1669) . The court also held that plaintiff's evidence, which disputed the merits of the conclusion reached by the committee to terminate the surgical privileges, did not raise a triable issue of fact concerning the reasonableness of the decision to institute the proceedings (21 Cal. App. 4th 1657, 1669-1671) .

In Walsh v. Bronson (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 259, 245 Cal. Rptr. 888 , the malicious prosecution plaintiffs were newspaper reporters who had been sued by defendant attorneys in an underlying libel action. The trial court granted summary judgment to the attorney defendants, and the plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, finding that the defendants' declarations and other supporting documents established that the defendants had probable cause to bring the underlying libel action (200 Cal. App. 3d 259, 268, 271) .

[b] Attorney's Probable Cause

In Marijanovic v. Gray, York & Duffy (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 1262, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 867 , a commercial painter sued a general contractor and the attorney for the general contractor for malicious prosecution. This malicious prosecution cause of action was based on an underlying cross-complaint filed against the painter when a condominium association sued the general contractor for construction defects. The general contractor and the attorney filed motions to strike the malicious prosecution action, but the trial court denied the motions. The court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that the painter could not establish a lack of probable cause for bringing the underlying cross-complaint. When bringing the underlying cross-complaint, the attorney for the general contractor was faced with a complaint from the condominium association alleging a failure of water-exposed exterior surfaces, as well as a defect report from an expert that attributed a certain percentage of fault for those failures to the painter of those surfaces. Although the painter's attorney asserted to the attorney for the general contractor that the painter was not liable because the scope of his work on the construction project had been limited, the painter's attorney did not, at that earlier time when the underlying action was being maintained, provide any evidence documenting the precise nature of his client's limited work on the project, such as a copy of the painter's contract for the project showing that the painter was not responsible for the areas where the faulty workmanship was found. Under those circumstances, the mere assertion by the painter's attorney to the contractor's attorney that the painter was not liable for any of the defects, without more, was not enough to defeat a finding that the general contractor had probable cause to bring the cross-complaint against the painter (137 Cal. App. 4th 1262, 1271-1272).

In Morrison v. Rudolph (2002) 103 Cal. App. 4th 506, 126 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , the buyer of a condominium unit allowed the bank to foreclose on her mortgage when she was unable to make the mortgage payments as well as pay for repairs allegedly necessary to make the unit habitable due to construction defects that were present but undisclosed to her at the time she purchased the unit. When the homeowners association then sued her for unpaid assessments, she brought a cross complaint against both the association and the parties who sold the unit to her for fraud and negligent misrepresentations. The trial court granted summary judgment to the sellers on the cross complaint, finding that there was no evidence of causation. The sellers then brought an action for malicious prosecution against the buyer's attorney for prosecuting the cross complaint without probable cause. The trial court granted summary judgment for the attorney, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that an attorney is entitled to rely on information provided by the client, absent notice of specific factual mistakes in the client's version of events. In this case, the attorney's client in the underlying suit told him that she could not afford to make the mortgage payments and pay for necessary repairs, that she was forced to choose foreclosure, and that if the sellers had disclosed the defects, she never would have purchased the condominium. The client also alleged that the sellers knew of the defects and intentionally failed to disclose them. The court concluded that an attorney would consider this to be tenable as a routine claim for misrepresentation in the sale of real estate. Because the sellers could provide no reason the attorney should not have believed the facts presented by his client, the attorney had probable cause for prosecuting the underlying claim, and summary judgment in the attorney's favor on the malicious prosecution claim was appropriate (103 Cal. App. 4th 506, 512-514) .

In Swat-Fame, Inc. v. Goldstein (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 613, 124 Cal. Rptr. 2d 556 , overruled in part, Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 973, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802 , the plaintiff was an employer who brought a malicious prosecution action against a former employee and her attorneys, based on the former employee's underlying action for fraudulent inducement to enter into an employment contract. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the grounds that probable cause existed for bringing the underlying action. The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment as to the attorneys, but reversed as to the former employee. The court held that the undisputed facts demonstrated that the attorneys had probable cause to bring the underlying claim, based on the facts that were provided to the attorneys by the former employee, which were accurately reflected in the underlying complaint. Although the facts known to the attorneys turned out to be false, the attorneys had no way of knowing at the time they filed the underlying action that their client may have been lying to them, and a brief statement in a letter from the employer's attorney telling the employee's attorneys that they were "substantially misinformed regarding the facts" was deemed insufficient to put the attorneys on notice that their version of the facts was false (101 Cal. App. 4th 613, 625, 627) . However, even if probable cause existed as to the attorneys, the client could still be liable for malicious prosecution if the client knew the facts as given were false, and triable issues of fact remained on the issue of the client's liability (101 Cal. App. 4th 613, 629-632 & n.14).

In Copenbarger v. International Ins. Co. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 961, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , an action for malicious prosecution against attorneys who filed an indemnity action against successor attorneys, defendants appealed a trial court ruling of probable cause. The court of appeal recognized that there were various policies militating against permitting the assertion of indemnity and contribution claims against successor attorneys (46 Cal. App. 4th 961, 965) . However, the court found that there was a conflict among appellate cases regarding whether such cases were allowed, and concluded that in the absence of a resolution by the Supreme Court it could not be said that no reasonable attorney would have thought that filing a claim for indemnity against the defendants would be tenable (46 Cal. App. 4th 961, 966) . The court thus concluded that there was probable cause for the institution of the indemnity action.

In Bixler v. Goulding (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 246 , plaintiff, a physician, brought an action for malicious prosecution against an attorney who had filed a cross complaint against the physician on behalf of a mental health counseling center. The physician and the center had been co-defendants in a malpractice action alleging negligence in causing a patient who was the plaintiff in the underlying action to be detained against her will. The patient had spoken to a psychologist at the center, at which time she appeared depressed and gave a history of suicide attempts. The psychologist contacted the physician, and the physician recommended that the patient be committed. The psychologist then contacted the police and had the patient transported to a medical center. Both the center and the physician obtained summary judgments in the action by the patient. In the physician's action for malicious prosecution against the center's attorney, he contended that the attorney failed to review the merits of the patient's complaint. The trial court granted a summary judgment in favor of the attorney, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court stated that to establish a cause of action for malicious prosecution a plaintiff must prove that the prior action was brought without probable cause. The probable cause element calls on the trial court to make an objective determination of the "reasonableness" of the defendant's conduct (45 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 1188) . The evidence indicated that the center and its insurer viewed the patient's action as one involving possible liability, and that the physician was clearly involved in the decision to have the patient involuntarily detained. The court concluded that a reasonable attorney having been apprised of these facts would have thought the indemnity claim tenable (45 Cal. App. 4th 1179, 1190) .

[c] Preliminary Injunction in Underlying Action Establishes Probable Cause

Paiva v. Nichols (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 85 Cal. Rptr. 3d 838 , which holds that a preliminary injunction issued in an underlying trespass action conclusively established probable cause for bringing that action (168 Cal. App. 4th 1007, 1021-1022) , is discussed in [3][l], above.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.35

§ 147.35 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Defendant Had Probable Cause to Institute Criminal Proceedings on Which Action Is Based

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.34].

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED WHEN THE AFFIDAVITS OR DECLARATIONS ESTABLISH PROBABLE CAUSE FOR INSTITUTING THE CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS THAT ARE THE BASIS FOR THE MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ACTION.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 147.34, Paragraph A].

B. Lack of Probable Cause Must Be Shown. [See § 147.34, Paragraph B].

C. Probable Cause Is Legal Issue. [See § 147.34, Paragraph C].

D. Summary Judgment Is Proper When Declarations or Affidavits Establish Existence of Probable Cause. [See § 147.34, Paragraph D].

[Optional] E. Conviction Establishes Probable Cause. Where plaintiff in an action for malicious prosecution was convicted in the action on which the malicious prosecution action is based, the conviction conclusively establishes probable cause for instituting the underlying action even if the conviction is later reversed (Bealmear v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1943) 22 Cal. 2d 337, 340, 139 P.2d 20).

[Optional] F. Innocence of Plaintiff Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause. The fact that plaintiff was found not guilty in the proceeding on which the action for malicious prosecution is based does not establish that there was no probable cause for instituting the underlying action (Clary v. Hale (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 880, 886, 1 Cal. Rptr. 91 ; Sebastian v. Crowley (1940) 38 Cal. App. 2d 194, 202, 101 P.2d 120 ; see Northrup v. Baker (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 347, 354, 20 Cal. Rptr. 797).

[Optional] G. Setting Aside of Indictment or Information Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause. The setting aside of an indictment or information under Section 955 of the Penal Code does not establish lack of probable cause (Cummings v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1407, 1421, 249 Cal. Rptr. 568).

[Optional] H. Dismissal of Charges on Day of Trial Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause. The determination of the district attorney to dismiss charges on the day of trial does not indicate lack of probable cause (Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 745, 755, 181 Cal. Rptr. 423).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in a malicious prosecution action in support of a motion for summary judgment where defendant's affidavits establish that there was probable cause for instituting the criminal proceedings on which the complaint is based.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conviction Establishes Probable Cause

In Bealmear v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1943) 22 Cal. 2d 337, 139 P.2d 20 , plaintiff was charged with and convicted of stealing electricity from a public utility. He appealed and obtained a reversal. He was retried and the proceedings were dismissed on plain tiff's motion for lack of evidence. Plaintiff then commenced an action for malicious prosecution. The trial court entered a judgment for defendant after granting defendant's motion for nonsuit. Plaintiff appealed and the Supreme Court upheld the judgment for defendant. It held that in an action for malicious prosecution, the plaintiff must prove that the proceedings were prosecuted without probable cause and that the conviction of plaintiff was conclusive evidence of probable cause even where the conviction was reversed on appeal (22 Cal. 2d 337, 340) .

[b] Innocence of Plaintiff Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause

In Clary v. Hale (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 880, 1 Cal. Rptr. 91 , defendant had advanced money to plaintiff for expenses to haul defendant's merchandise in plaintiff's truck. Plaintiff had trouble with his truck and did not make the trip but refused to return the money. Defendant consulted with his attorney and then signed a complaint charging plaintiff with embezzlement. Plaintiff was tried and acquitted. He then sued defendant for malicious prosecution. The case was tried before the court without a jury and the court found for defendant, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It defined probable cause as a suspicion founded on circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. It stated that proof that no crime was committed or the innocence of the plaintiff does not negate the existence of probable cause, nor create a conflict on the issue of probable cause (175 Cal. App. 2d 880, 886) . The court found that there was probable cause for the instigation of criminal proceedings in that defendant had an honest and reasonable belief that plaintiff was guilty (175 Cal. App. 2d 880, 888-889) .

In Sebastian v. Crowley (1940) 38 Cal. App. 2d 194, 101 P.2d 120 , the malicious prosecution action stemmed from a criminal complaint made by a hotel manager against an actress for defrauding an innkeeper. The complaint was later dismissed for lack of evidence although a producer was convicted for the same crime. The jury in the malicious prosecution action found for plaintiff after a motion for a directed verdict was denied.

Defendant appealed and the judgment was reversed, with an order to enter a verdict for defendant. The court of appeal defined probable cause as a suspicion founded on circumstances sufficiently strong to warrant a reasonable man in the belief that the charge is true. It held that the existence of probable cause is not negated merely by showing that no crime was committed or that the plaintiff was innocent (38 Cal. App. 2d 194, 202) . The court then found that the defendant acted on probable cause to believe that plaintiff was guilty and only after making a fair statement of the case to the district attorney (38 Cal. App. 2d 194, 202-204) .

In Northrup v. Baker (1962) 202 Cal. App. 2d 347, 20 Cal. Rptr. 797 , defendant was sued for malicious prosecution after defendant had charged plaintiff with assault and battery. Plaintiff was acquitted of the charge. In the malicious prosecution action, there was a verdict for plaintiff and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the verdict. It defined probable cause and stated that proof that no crime was committed or that the plaintiff was innocent did not negate the existence of probable cause (202 Cal. App. 2d 347, 354) . The court then found that there was a conflict in evidence relating to probable cause and thus that the issue had been properly given to the jury (202 Cal. App. 2d 347, 354-355) .

[c] Setting Aside of Indictment or Information Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause

In Cummings v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 1407, 249 Cal. Rptr. 568 , plaintiff's property insurer instigated a criminal action against plaintiff under former Ins. Code § 556 [now see Ins. Code § 1871.1] for filing a fraudulent insurance claim. Plaintiff was bound over for trial at her preliminary hearing but the fraud charges were dismissed when the superior court granted plaintiff's motion under Penal Code § 995. Plaintiff brought an action against the insurer alleging several causes of action, including one for malicious prosecution. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. It noted that a plaintiff in a malicious prosecution action is required to show that defendant acted without probable cause; such probable cause has both a subjective element, based on the defendant's actual state of mind, and an objective element, based on the reasonableness of defendant's conduct (202 Cal. App. 3d 1407, 1419) . The court found that the subjective element of probable cause was clearly established; defendant presented uncontraverted evidence that it had formed an honest belief that plaintiff's misrepresentations constituted a violation of former Ins. Code § 556 [now see Ins. Code § 1871.1] (202 Cal. App. 3d 1407, 1420) . Plaintiff contended, however, that the objective aspect of probable cause (whether there were facts strong enough to warrant the average person's belief that a violation of former Ins. Code § 556 [now see Ins. Code § 1871.1] had been committed) had been determined in her favor, because her Penal Code § 995 motion to dismiss was granted. The court disagreed, noting that Restatement (Second) of Torts § 663 allows a defendant accused of malicious prosecution to present evidence of probable cause in spite of the prior discharge of a criminal action (202 Cal. App. 3d 1407, 1421) . Finding that the undisputed facts were sufficiently strong to warrant the average person in believing the charge of fraud to be true, the court held that the objective element of probable cause was established by defendant in its motion for summary judgment (202 Cal. App. 3d 1407, 1421-1422) .

[d] Dismissal of Charges on Day of Trial Does Not Establish Lack of Probable Cause

In Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 745, 181 Cal. Rptr. 423 , plaintiff, at the instigation of his former employer, had been charged, by criminal complaint, with two counts of grand theft and two counts of embezzlement. A preliminary examination was held at which the magistrate made no findings with respect to one charge each of grand theft and embezzlement, but bound plaintiff over for trial with respect to the other two counts. On the day of trial, the grand theft charge was dismissed on the People's motion and plaintiff was thereafter acquitted by the jury of the remaining charge of embezzlement. Plaintiff then sued his former employer for damages for slander and malicious prosecution. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was granted, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed.

With respect to the malicious prosecution cause of action, the court noted that there was no evidence raising a triable issue of fact about whether defendant had sufficient probable cause to seek initiation of criminal charges against plaintiff. The court pointed out that plaintiff's acquittal on the charge of embezzlement was not evidence of the lack of probable cause and that such evidence could not be found in the fact that the prosecutor, on the day of trial, voluntarily dismissed the charge of grand theft. Quoting from Restatement of Torts (2d), § 667, the court explained that if the prosecution of proceedings has passed out of the control of the person who initiated them and into that of the public prosecutor, the abandonment of the proceedings by the latter is not a matter to be considered by the court in a malicious prosecution action when determining the existence of probable cause, if the public prosecutor acted on his own initiative, and that the accuser cannot be prejudiced by the actions of the public prosecutor over whom he or she has no control (129 Cal. App. 3d 745, 755) . The court further pointed out that the rule that a discharge of the accused by a magistrate is conclusive of the lack of probable cause applies only when the discharge is on the merits, that the magistrate in the criminal proceeding expressly refrained from ruling on the merits, and that this action did not result in a discharge of plaintiff; rather, the People were free to reallege both charges in the information. The fact that the People decided to dismiss these charges brought the claim back within the scope of the rule that the action of the prosecutor in dismissing a criminal action on his or her own initiative provides no evidence of lack of probable cause (129 Cal. App. 3d 745, 755) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Innocence of Plaintiff as Not Establishing Lack of Probable Cause

In Ecker v. Raging Waters Group, Inc. (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1332, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 320 , security personnel at a water amusement park detained the plaintiff for several hours, pending arrival of the police, following a complaint made by several adolescent boys that the plaintiff had been surreptitiously videotaping them at the park. The plaintiff was eventually arrested for and acquitted of criminal charges of annoying or molesting a child under the age of 18. He then brought an action against the amusement park, alleging malicious prosecution and other torts. The trial court granted nonsuit on the malicious prosecution cause of action after finding that the amusement park had probable cause to arrest the plaintiff, and the court of appeal affirmed that ruling. Even though the plaintiff was eventually acquitted of the criminal charges, the court of appeal held that based on undisputed facts, it was objectively reasonable at the time to suspect that the plaintiff had committed some crime by his covert videotaping of young boys at the water park. The court also held that the fact that park personnel were uncertain at the time of plaintiff's detention as to the precise crime committed was irrelevant to the determination that probable cause existed for the arrest. Determining the precise charges to be brought was the responsibility of the prosecuting agency, not the park (87 Cal. App. 4th 1320, 1332) .

Williams v. Taylor (1982) 129 Cal. App. 3d 745, 181 Cal. Rptr. 423 , is discussed in § 147.35[3][d].

In Centers v. Dollar Mkts. (1950) 99 Cal. App. 2d 534, 222 P.2d 136 , plaintiff was charged with obtaining money under false pretenses from a grocery store. After the complaint was dismissed by the defendant, plaintiff sued the checker involved and several other employees of the grocery company as well as the company itself for malicious prosecution. The court directed a verdict in favor of all defendants and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal defined probable cause and held that the fact that plaintiff was not found guilty did not negate the existence of probable cause. The court then found that defendants other than the checker had probable cause in that they acted reasonably based on the information given to them (99 Cal. App. 2d 534, 541) . It found, however, that there was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the checker knew the charges were false and that such conflict should have been given to the jury. Therefore, the court affirmed the judgments as to all the defendants except the checker and the corporation, and reversed the judgment as to them (99 Cal. App. 2d 534, 543-546) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.36

§ 147.36 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Defendant Not Instrumental in Causing Criminal Prosecution

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.34].

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE HIS/HER DECLARATIONS ESTABLISH THAT HE/SHE WAS NOT ACTIVELY INSTRUMENTAL IN CAUSING THE CRIMINAL PROSECUTION OF PLAINTIFF.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 147.34, Paragraph A].

B. No Cause of Action When Defendant Not Instrumental in Causing Prosecution. For an action for malicious prosecution to lie against a private person, the defendant must have been actively instrumental in causing the prosecution (Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 414, 417, 253 Cal. Rptr. 561).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in a malicious prosecution action in support of a motion for summary judgment when defendant's affidavits or declarations establish that he or she was not actively instrumental in causing the criminal prosecution of plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action When Defendant Not Instrumental in Causing Prosecution

In Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Superior Court (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 414, 253 Cal. Rptr. 561 , plaintiff was a suspect in a series of arson fires at a hospital. Police investigators asked defendants, employees of the hospital, to listen to an audiotape of a telephoned bomb threat that was thought to have been made by plaintiff. Defendants identified the voice as plaintiff's. Plaintiff was arrested and incarcerated. Defendants testified at the plaintiff's preliminary hearing but took no other steps regarding the criminal action against plaintiff. After charges against plaintiff were dismissed for insufficient evidence, plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution against the defendants, who had identified him from the audiotape. Defendants moved for summary judgment. In opposition to the motions, plaintiff conceded that his arrest was not based solely on the identifications provided by defendants, and that the defendants had not sought out the authorities. Nevertheless, the trial court denied defendants' motions for summary judgment. Defendants then petitioned for a writ of mandate in the court of appeal.

The court of appeal granted defendants' petition for a writ of mandate and directed the trial court to vacate its denial of the motions for summary judgment. The court noted that a key element of malicious prosecution is that the defendant be actively instrumental in causing the prosecution. This element was not present in the instant case; the evidence established that defendants did not instigate, nor were they actively instrumental in causing, the criminal prosecution of plaintiff. The court noted that public policy requires that private persons who aid in law enforcement should be given an effective protection against the prejudice that is likely to arise from termination of a prosecution in favor of the accused (206 Cal. App. 3d 414, 417-418) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.37

§ 147.37 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Probable Cause Established by Reliance on Advice of Attorney

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.34].

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE HIS/HER DECLARATIONS ESTABLISH THAT HE/SHE FAIRLY REPORTED THE FACTS TO AN ATTORNEY AND THE ATTORNEY ADVISED HIM/HER TO INSTITUTE THE ACTION.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 147.34, Paragraph A].

B. Probable Cause as Legal Issue. [See § 147.34, Paragraph C].

[EITHER]

C. Reliance on Advice of Counsel. If a defendant in a malicious prosecution action instituted the complained-of civil action on the opinion and advice of counsel to the effect that he or she had a good cause of action after presenting all of the facts of the case in good faith before the attorney, probable cause, which is a complete defense to the malicious prosecution action, is established (Bisno v. Douglas Emmett Realty Fund 1988 (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1544, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 492 ; Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 289, 198 Cal. Rptr. 517).

[OR]

C. Reliance on Advice of Counsel. If a defendant in a malicious prosecution action instituted the complained-of criminal proceedings after fairly disclosing all the facts to an attorney and having been advised that a crime was committed, probable cause, which is a complete defense to the malicious prosecution action, is established (Keylon v. Kelley (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 490, 494-495, 10 Cal. Rptr. 549).

[Optional] D. Effect of Mistaken Advice. The fact that the advice given by the attorney as to the merits of defendant's case was mistaken does not destroy the defense of acting on advice of counsel if the client acts in good faith (Brinkley v. Appleby (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 244, 247, 80 Cal. Rptr. 734).

[Optional] E. Investigation Not Required. A client is not required to investigate all the circumstances of the basis of his or her instigation of the action, and probable cause is established if he or she fairly relates all the circumstances within his or her knowledge to the attorney and relies on the attorney's advice (Richter v. Neilson (1936) 11 Cal. App. 2d 503, 514-515, 54 P.2d 54).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in a malicious prosecution action in support of a motion for summary judgment where defendant's affidavits or declarations establish that he or she acted in good faith on advice of counsel. The first paragraph is for use when the complaint is based on a prior civil action and the second is for use when the complaint is based on a prior criminal action.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 147.46 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for summary judgment supported by this memorandum.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Form

For a form of affirmative defense based on probable cause established by advice of counsel, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reliance on Advice of Counsel

In Bisno v. Douglas Emmett Realty Fund 1988 (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 492 , plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action against an apartment landlord based on the landlord's earlier prosecution of an unlawful detainer action against him. The underlying dispute was triggered when the landlord tried to more than quadruple plaintiff's rent after plaintiff's wife, who had not been listed as a tenant on the plaintiff's lease, tried to take over full-time, sole occupancy of the apartment unit. When plaintiff refused to pay the requested increase, the landlord sought to evict. Eventually, the landlord dismissed the unlawful detainer action on advice of counsel, and plaintiff subsequently filed his malicious prosecution action. However, the trial court granted summary adjudication in favor of the landlord on that cause of action on the basis of the landlord's affirmative defense that the conduct was taken on advice of counsel. Plaintiff appealed this grant of summary adjudication.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's ruling. The plaintiff had argued that the advice of counsel defense was not proven because there was no probable cause to seek a more than quadrupled rent when the lease had a provision that specifically limited any rent increase to $2,000, an amount well below the amount sought by the landlord. Plaintiff argued that because the landlord had failed to provide the attorneys with copies of the tenant file, failed to point out the limiting contractual provision, and failed to point out certain statutory provisions that may have been relevant, the landlord could not show full disclosure to the attorneys before relying on their advice. The court rejected this argument, noting that in order to rely on the advice of counsel defense, the requisite disclosure is the disclosure of facts, and a client who turns over evidence to his or her attorney is not required to advance any particular legal theory or point out any statute or particular aspect of the evidence that may seem especially relevant. The court concluded that the evidence showed that the landlord had disclosed all relevant facts. The attorneys had a copy of the lease when providing advice to their client and the attorneys had a copy of or had otherwise been informed of the contents of plaintiff's tenant file. Disclosure of these materials was sufficient to justify application of the advice of counsel defense (174 Cal. App. 4th 1534, 1545-1549) .

The facts and procedural background of Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 198 Cal. Rptr. 517 , are discussed in § 147.34[3][h]. In that case, the court held that reliance on the advice of counsel, in good faith and after full disclosure of the facts, customarily establishes probable cause (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 288) . Applying this rule to the case before it, the court noted that plaintiff had conceded that the decision to initiate the original action against plaintiff was made by defendant's counsel. The court noted that in his moving papers plaintiff had accused defendant of disclosing certain material facts to its counsel. However, the court observed that defendant's counsel had stated in detail in his uncontroverted declaration that these facts were disclosed to him well in advance of his decision to recommend the original action against plaintiff (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 288). The court noted further that the only evidentiary bases on which plaintiff could have based a claim that defendant did not rely in good faith on its counsel's advice had been properly excluded by the trial court (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 289) .

In Keylon v. Kelley (1961) 188 Cal. App. 2d 490, 10 Cal. Rptr. 549 , defendant, a marshal of the municipal court, filed a complaint for assault and disturbing the peace against plaintiff based on statements made to him about plaintiff's acts when a deputy marshal was levying an attachment on plaintiff's property. Defendant moved for and obtained a summary judgment. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed the judgment. Defendant's affidavit stated that he was acting as a public officer and was therefore immune from liability and that he had fully disclosed all of the facts to a district attorney, who had advised signing the complaint. Plaintiff's opposing affidavit did not really challenge either assertion. The court of appeal first found that the defense of immunity was sufficient (188 Cal. App. 2d 490, 493-494) . The court then found that defendant's affidavit established that he had fully disclosed all the facts to the district attorney and that this affidavit had not been challenged by plaintiff's affidavit. The court held that acting on advice of an attorney after good faith full disclosure of all the facts is a defense to an action for malicious prosecution, and that the defense was established by defendant's affidavit (188 Cal. App. 2d 490, 494-496) .

[b] Effect of Mistaken Advice

Brinkley v. Appleby (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 244, 80 Cal. Rptr. 734 , is discussed in § 147.37[4][a].

[c] Investigation Not Required

In Richter v. Neilson (1936) 11 Cal. App. 2d 503, 54 P.2d 54 , the malicious prosecution action was based on defendant's instigation of charges of grand theft against plaintiff, arising out of a dispute over a building contract. The charges were dismissed at the preliminary hearing and plaintiff filed the malicious prosecution action. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed and the court of appeal reversed the judgment. It held that reliance on the advice of an attorney was a complete defense and that there was ample evidence that defendant did so rely when she fairly stated all the facts in her knowledge to the district attorney who advised her that she could file a criminal complaint (11 Cal. App. 2d 503, 508-513) . Plaintiff asserted that defendant should have investigated whether certain payments were made. The court of appeal held, however, that there was no duty to make a complete investigation as long as all the facts within defendant's knowledge were fairly stated to the attorney (11 Cal. App. 2d 503, 514-515) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reliance on Advice of Counsel

In Brinkley v. Appleby (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 244, 80 Cal. Rptr. 734 , defendant instituted an action for quiet title against plaintiffs and plaintiffs prevailed. Defendant then brought an action for a prescriptive easement against plaintiffs and a demurrer was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiffs instituted an action for malicious prosecution against defendant based on the prescriptive easement action. The court rendered judgment for defendant and plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the defense of reliance on advice of counsel was established because defendant had disclosed all the facts to his attorney and relied on his attorney's advice in filing the actions. Such reliance establishes a defense of probable cause. The fact that the attorney's advice was mistaken does not preclude the defense as long as defendant acted in good faith (276 Cal. App. 2d 244, 247-248) . Plaintiffs' contention that defendant should have known that he did not have a cause of action was rejected because it assumed that defendant should have known more than his attorney about the law (276 Cal. App. 2d 244, 248) .

The facts and procedural background of Kassan v. Bledsoe (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 810, 60 Cal. Rptr. 799 , are discussed in § 147.34[3][c]. The court of appeal held that the good faith reliance on advice of counsel after having fairly stated all the facts to the counsel was a defense to an action for malicious prosecution, even though the advice might have been mistaken (252 Cal. App. 2d 810, 816) . Citing Johnson v. Southern Pac. Co. (1910) 157 Cal. 333, 107 P. 611 , it then found that the declarations established the defense (252 Cal. App. 2d 810, 816-817) .

The facts and procedural background of Clary v. Hale (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 880, 1 Cal. Rptr. 91 , are discussed in § 147.35[3][b]. In holding that defendant had probable cause to initiate the complaint, the court of appeal held that the advice of an attorney establishes probable cause if it was sought in good faith and all the facts were disclosed to the attorney. It then held that there was ample evidence that defendant related all the facts to both his own attorney and to the district attorney (175 Cal. App. 2d 880, 886-887) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.38

§ 147.38 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Malice May Not Be Inferred From Lack of Probable Cause, Because Defendant Was Only Negligent

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.34].

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE EVEN IF THE ACTION WAS INSTITUTED WITHOUT PROBABLE CAUSE, DEFENDANT'S DECLARATIONS ESTABLISH THAT DEFENDANT WAS MERELY NEGLIGENT IN INSTITUTING THE ACTION.

A. No Inference of Malice Solely From Lack of Probable Cause. Although malice may be inferred from the institution of an action without probable cause, such an inference is not automatic; the party's prefiling behavior must have been clearly unreasonable (Grindle v. Lorbeer (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1461, 1465-1466, 242 Cal. Rptr. 562).

B. Negligence Alone Cannot Constitute Malice. Negligence does not equate with malice, and the negligent filing of a case does not necessarily constitute the malicious prosecution of the case (Grindle v. Lorbeer (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1461, 1465-1466, 242 Cal. Rptr. 562).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by a defendant in a malicious prosecution action in support of a motion for summary judgment if defendant's affidavits establish that the initiation of an action without probable cause was due to nothing more than the defendant's negligence. Although the points are supported only by authorities involving a civil action, they should be equally applicable, conceptually, with regard to a criminal action initiated without probable cause, but only because of the defendant's negligent conduct.

Counsel should insert argument in this form that shows the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[b] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgment generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Inference of Malice Solely From Lack of Probable Cause

In Grindle v. Lorbeer (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1461, 242 Cal. Rptr. 562 , the underlying action that formed the basis of the malicious prosecution action involved a cross complaint for equitable indemnity against an injured plaintiff. Plaintiff had been injured in a golf cart accident and sued the driver of the cart. The driver, in a separate action, sued the golf club for indemnity. In that action, the golf club's representative brought a cross complaint for equitable indemnity against the injured plaintiff in the original action.

The injured person's attorney made an immediate demand for dismissal of the cross complaint. The club's attorney refused the request, but did dismiss the action several months later after reviewing the depositions in the original personal injury action and determining that there was no basis for comparative negligence of the injured person.

The injured person then sued the golf club's representative, its insurer, and its counsel for the malicious prosecution of the cross complaint. The court granted all defendants' motion for summary judgment.

In affirming, the appellate court noted that although malice may be inferred from probable cause, the inference is not automatic, citing Weaver v. Superior Court (1979) 95 Cal. App. 3d 166, 193, 156 Cal. Rptr. 745 . Malice means actual ill will or some improper purpose, whether express or implied. In order to infer malice from the evidence supporting lack of probable cause, the parties' prefiling behavior must have been clearly unreasonable. However, even unreasonable behavior is insufficient unless the presence of malice is found as a matter of fact (196 Cal. App. 3d 1461, 1465-1466) .

[b] Negligence Alone Cannot Constitute Malice

The factual and procedural background of Grindle v. Lorbeer (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1461, 242 Cal. Rptr. 562 , is discussed in § 147.38[3][a]. After analyzing the behavior of the attorney who filed the underlying action with regard to both legal and factual research to determine if an inference of malice was possible, the court refused to find any inadequacy in the attorney's legal research. The right of defendant to bring a cross complaint for equitable indemnity against an injured plaintiff was not clearly settled at the time the cross complaint was filed. The court noted that public policy favors zealous representation, which sometimes requires that an attorney fashion innovative and creative theories of liability and defense.

With regard to the attorney's factual research, the court stated that his failure to obtain and review certain depositions before filing the cross complaint could be considered as carelessness, but not indifference or malice. The fact that the action was dismissed immediately after the attorney finally read the depositions refuted the existence of a malicious ulterior motive. The court held that negligence does not equate with malice and that the negligent filing of an action does not necessarily constitute the malicious prosecution of that case (196 Cal. App. 3d 1461, 1466-1468) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Negligence Alone Cannot Constitute Malice

The background of Daniels v. Robbins (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 204, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 , is described in § 147.40[4][e]. In that defamation action, while the court of appeal held that plaintiff had shown a probability of success on the elements of favorable termination and lack of probable cause, the court also concluded that plaintiff had not provided evidence to support a finding that the attorneys for the plaintiff in the underlying defamation action had maintained that action with malice, even though their client may have acted with malice. As to those attorneys, the evidence provided by the malicious prosecution plaintiff showed only a lack of evidentiary support for the allegations in the underlying complaint, a lack of factual investigation after the complaint was filed as evidenced by an inability to comply with discovery requests, a client who may have had ill will against the underlying defendant, and a refusal of the underlying plaintiff to dismiss without a waiver of claims by the underling defendant. Those facts, while possibly constituting negligence on the part of the attorneys, were insufficient to support a finding of malice (182 Cal. App. 4th 204, 225-227) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.39

§ 147.39 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--By Defendant--Unclean Hands Doctrine Applicable

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.34].

THE DEFENSE OF UNCLEAN HANDS, IF PROVEN, WILL BAR PROSECUTION OF A MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ACTION.

A. Unclean Hands. Under the doctrine of unclean hands, a party is barred from relief in a malicious prosecution action if he or she has engaged in unconscionable conduct with respect to the underlying action (DeRosa v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1390, 1395, 1397, 262 Cal. Rptr. 370 ; Pond v. Insurance Co. of N. Am. (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 292, 198 Cal. Rptr. 517).

[Optional] B. Conduct Supporting Defense Need Not Relate Directly to Decision to File Underlying Action. In applying the equitable doctrine of "unclean hands" to a malicious prosecution action, the conduct supporting this defense need not relate directly to the defendant's decision to file the underlying action (Kendall-Jackson Winery, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 984-987, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 743).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted by a defendant in a malicious prosecution action in support of a motion for summary judgment if defendant's affidavits establish the applicability of the unclean hands doctrine.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach declarations that support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[b] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to summary judgment generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unclean Hands

In DeRosa v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 1390, 262 Cal. Rptr. 370 , plaintiff, who had prevailed in a fraud action brought by defendants, brought an action against defendants for malicious prosecution. The court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment based on the affirmative defense of unclean hands. In support of their motion, defendants presented evidence showing that plaintiff acted fraudulently in the business dealings that were the subject of the underlying action. In response, plaintiff offered his own declaration denying any fraudulent intent. The trial court, noting it would have found plaintiff guilty of fraud had it sat as the trier of fact in the underlying action, held that plaintiff was guilty of unclean hands and granted the summary judgment motion. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the unclean hands defense bars a party from relief if the party has engaged in any unconscientious conduct directly related to the transaction or matter before the court (213 Cal. App. 3d 1390, 1395) . The court found that uncontroverted evidence indicated that plaintiff acted unconscientiously in the underlying action; consequently the unclean hands doctrine barred plaintiff's action (213 Cal. App. 3d 1390, 1396-1397) .

The facts and procedural background of Pond v. Insurance Co. of North America (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 198 Cal. Rptr. 517 , are discussed in § 147.34[3][b]. In Pond, the court of appeal upheld a determination by the trial court that plaintiff was barred from his suit by the equitable doctrine of unclean hands in that he knowingly failed to disclose critical evidence in the underlying action that would have had a significant effect on the settlement of underlying action (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 292) . The court noted that, under the doctrine of unclean hands, whenever a party who, as actor, seeks to set judicial machinery in motion and obtain some remedy, has violated conscience, good faith or other equitable principle in his or her prior conduct, then the court will refuse to interfere on his or her behalf to acknowledge his or her right, or to afford him or her any remedy. The rule, stated the court, is qualified by the requirement that the party against whom the doctrine is sought to be invoked directly "infected" the actual cause of action before the court, and is not merely guilty of unrelated improper past conduct. The court concluded that plaintiff's activities in the underlying indemnity suit related directly to the malicious prosecution action before the court because the suit was the entire basis of plaintiff's malicious prosecution claim (151 Cal. App. 3d 280, 290-291) .

[b] Conduct Supporting Defense Need Not Relate Directly to Decision to File Underlying Action

In Kendall-Jackson Winery, Ltd. v. Superior Court (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 743 , Gallo Winery filed an action for malicious prosecution against a competitor, Kendall-Jackson Winery, based on an underlying action brought and prosecuted unsuccessfully against Gallo by Kendall-Jackson for trademark infringement, trade dress violations, and unfair business practices. The underlying action was based on allegations that Gallo's Turning Leaf wine label and overall appearance mimicked one of Kendall-Jackson's top-selling premium wines, as well as allegations of unfair marketing practices in retail displays. In filing the malicious prosecution action, Gallo alleged that Kendall-Jackson's action had been brought without probable cause and for the improper purpose of harassing Gallo. Among the defenses raised by Kendall-Jackson in the malicious prosecution action was a claim that Gallo's action was barred by the doctrine of unclean hands. The claim of unclean hands was based on allegations that Gallo used its influence with retailers to influence retailer shelf schematics and other merchandising activity, and that Gallo used its own employees to move Kendall-Jackson's products at stores, all of which was designed to create favorable store placement for Gallo's similarly packaged but cheaper wines. Gallo moved for summary adjudication of the defense, admitting for these purposes that the actions took place, but arguing that the conduct, of which Kendall-Jackson was unaware when it brought the underlying action, was not directly related to its malicious prosecution action because the conduct had no effect on Kendall-Jackson's decision to file the underlying action. The trial court agreed, granting the motion for summary adjudication because all of the evidence supporting the defense consisted of documents generated after the underlying action was filed. Kendall-Jackson filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order granting the summary adjudication, holding that in applying the equitable doctrine of unclean hands to a malicious prosecution action, the conduct supporting the defense must bear a direct relationship to the claim, but that conduct need not relate directly to the defendant's decision to file the underlying action (76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 987) . The court noted the equitable nature of the defense and concluded that any evidence of the plaintiff's unclean hands either relating to the transaction before the court or affecting the equitable relationship between the litigants in the matter before the court should be available to enable the court to effect a fair result in the litigation (76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 985) .The court also concluded that the conduct supporting the defense violated the letter and spirit of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act (76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 983) . Because the underlying lawsuit was primarily about Gallo's use of allegedly unfair marketing strategies to capitalize on Kendall-Jackson's success in selling premium wines, the court concluded that a jury could find that the plaintiff's wrongful conduct was directly related to the underlying litigation, which was the matter at issue in the malicious prosecution litigation, and that the conduct described in support of the defense affected the equitable relationship between the parties (76 Cal. App. 4th 970, 987-988) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.40

§ 147.40 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)] for Malicious Prosecution--Dismissal of Prior Action as Favorable Termination if It Indicates Innocence or Lack of Merit

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO DEMUR-
_____ [name],	)	RER TO COMPLAINT
Defendant.	)	[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]
	)
	)

_____

PLAINTIFF'S ALLEGATIONS THAT THE ACTION ON WHICH THE COMPLAINT FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION IS BASED WAS DISMISSED, AND THE REASON THEREFORE, ARE SUFFICIENT TO ALLEGE FAVORABLE TERMINATION BECAUSE THE REASONS FOR THE DISMISSAL INDICATE _____ [PLAINTIFF'S INNOCENCE or LACK OF MERIT] IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION.

[EITHER]

A. Dismissal of Criminal Action as Sufficient. Where the action on which a complaint for malicious prosecution is based is dismissed, such dismissal is a favorable termination of the action if the reasons for the dismissal indicate the innocence in the underlying action of the plaintiff in the malicious prosecution action (Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 149-152, 114 P.2d 335).

[OR]

A. Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient. Where the action on which a complaint for malicious prosecution is based is dismissed, such dismissal is a favorable termination of the action if the reasons for the dismissal indicate that the underlying action lacked merit (Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 826, 145 Cal. Rptr. 829).

[Optional] B. Dismissal of Civil Action for Want of Prosecution as Sufficient. Where the action on which the complaint is based is dismissed by the court for want of prosecution, the dismissal is a favorable termination because the failure to prosecute indicates lack of merit in the action (Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 825-829, 145 Cal. Rptr. 829).

[Optional] C. Dismissal of Criminal Action for Lack of Evidence as Sufficient. If the criminal case on which the action for malicious prosecution is based is dismissed by the court for lack of evidence, the dismissal is sufficient to indicate a favorable termination of the underlying action (Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 149-152, 114 P.2d 335 ; Jackson v. Beckham (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 264, 269-272, 31 Cal. Rptr. 739).

[Optional] D. Voluntary Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient. If the action on which the action for malicious prosecution is based is voluntarily dismissed by the plaintiff therein, the dismissal is a favorable termination of the underlying action (MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 289, 79 Cal. Rptr. 707 ; Kennedy v. Byrum (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 474, 477, 479-480, 20 Cal. Rptr. 98).

[Optional] E. Final Termination Does Not Have to Be Bar to Further Action. The rule that there must have been a final termination of the action on which the malicious prosecution action is based does not mean that the termination must be such that it is a bar to any further action (Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 152-158, 114 P.2d 335 ; Peebler v. Olds (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 382, 387-388, 162 P.2d 953).

[Optional] F. Favorable Termination May Occur by Reason of Appellate Decision. An action is favorably terminated if the trial court grants summary judgment to the defendant based on the statute of limitations, a procedural ground not bearing on the merits, but the reviewing court then affirms the judgment on grounds the action lacks intrinsic merit as a matter of law (Ray v. First Fed. Bank (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 315, 317, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436).

[Optional] G. Dismissal of Civil Action as Discovery Sanction as Favorable Termination if Reflecting on Merits. Favorable termination may be found if the court concludes that a plaintiff's refusal to comply with discovery orders, resulting in involuntary dismissal of the action, reflects a concession by the plaintiff that the lawsuit lacks merit (Ross v. Kish (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 188, 200, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 484).

[Optional] H. Dismissal of Appeal With Settlement That Preserves Favorable Trial Court Judgment as Favorable Termination. If the malicious prosecution plaintiff received a favorable judgment on the merits at trial in the underlying action, but the parties subsequently settled the action and dismissed all appeals without the malicious prosecution plaintiff giving up any portion of the favorable judgment, the postjudgment settlement constitutes a favorable termination of the underlying action for the malicious prosecution plaintiff (Siebel v. Mittlesteadt (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 735, 743, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 155, 161 P.3d 527).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]

By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that there were not adequate allegations of favorable termination of the underlying action but where the underlying action was dismissed under circumstances that showed its lack of merit (civil action) or the innocence of the person who was defendant in the underlying (criminal) action.

Optional Paragraphs B and D are for use if the underlying action was civil, and optional Paragraph C may be used in an appropriate situation involving an underlying criminal action. Optional Paragraph E may be appropriate if the underlying action was either civil or criminal. Optional Paragraph F may be appropriate if in the underlying action the trial court granted summary judgment to the defendant based on the statute of limitations, but a court of appeal then affirmed the judgment on the grounds the action lacked merit as a matter of law. Optional Paragraph G may be used if the underlying action was involuntarily dismissed as a discovery sanction for failing to comply with discovery orders, if the failure to comply reflects a concession that the underlying action lacked merit. Optional Paragraph H may be used if a trial court judgment was reached on the merits in favor of the malicious prosecution plaintiff in the underlying action, the parties appealed, and a subsequent settlement was reached that dismissed the appeals and left the judgment intact as it related to the malicious prosecution plaintiff.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points in § 147.20.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment based on lack of favorable termination.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of allegation of favorable termination, see (California Forms of Pleading and Practice), Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Dismissal of Criminal Action as Sufficient

In Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 114 P.2d 335 , the complaint for malicious prosecution alleged that defendants had caused the issuance of a complaint charging plaintiff with a felony and that the felony complaint was dismissed by the magistrate for lack of evidence. Defendants moved for and obtained a judgment on the pleadings on the basis that a cause of action was not stated. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for defendants. It examined the question of when a dismissal is a favorable termination so as to support a motion for malicious prosecution. It held that a dismissal is sufficient if it indicates the innocence of the defendant and that a dismissal for lack of evidence is such a dismissal. It noted that dismissals on technical or procedural grounds or on grounds that do not indicate the innocence of the defendant are not favorable terminations (18 Cal. 2d 146, 149-151) .

[b] Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient

In Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 145 Cal. Rptr. 829 , plaintiff commenced an action for $300 for attorney's fees. Defendant cross complained for anxiety caused defendant's wife by plaintiff's process server. Defendant took no further action on the cross complaint, and it was dismissed for want of prosecution. Plaintiff then commenced an action for malicious prosecution based on the cross complaint. Defendant sought and obtained a judgment on the pleadings. The court of appeal reversed. It discussed the rules set forth in Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 114 P.2d 335 , as to the effect of dismissals. It concluded that a dismissal for want of prosecution was sufficient to establish favorable termination because it must be assumed that a person does not abandon a meritorious action by failure to prosecute. Therefore, a dismissal for want of prosecution indicates that the underlying action was without merit (80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 825-829) . The court noted that it might be possible for the defendant to establish that his or her failure to prosecute did not reflect on the merits of the action but that at the pleading stage it was sufficient for plaintiff to allege that the underlying action was dismissed for want of prosecution (80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 827-828) .

[c] Dismissal of Civil Action for Want of Prosecution as Sufficient

Minasian v. Sapse (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 823, 145 Cal. Rptr. 829 , is discussed in § 147.40[3][b].

[d] Dismissal of Criminal Action for Lack of Evidence as Sufficient

Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 114 P.2d 335 , is discussed in §§ 147.40[3][a] and 147.40[3][f].

In Jackson v. Beckham (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 264, 31 Cal. Rptr. 739 , plaintiff was charged by his employer with the theft of certain uniforms and equipment. Plaintiff was arrested and charged, but the case was then dismissed by the district attorney. Plaintiff commenced an action for malicious prosecution and received a verdict for damages in the amount of $6,500. Defendant appealed from the judgment, and the court of appeal upheld the judgment. It held that there was evidence that the dismissal by the district attorney was for lack of evidence and in the interests of justice, such a dismissal was sufficient as a favorable termination because it reflected on the lack of merit of the complaint. The court held that the jury could disregard contrary evidence that the dismissal was a result of the district attorney's laziness (217 Cal. App. 2d 264, 269-270) .

[e] Voluntary Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient

MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 79 Cal. Rptr. 707 , was an action for malicious prosecution based on a will contest. The contest was filed by one of the heirs and was eventually dismissed voluntarily by the heir. The executor of the estate sued the heir for the executor's personal damages from the malicious filing of the will contest. After a default judgment, the heir appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. It first held that the executor had standing to maintain the malicious prosecution action (275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 287-288) . It then examined the sufficiency of the complaint with regard to its allegations of favorable termination. It determined that the allegation that the will contest was voluntarily dismissed by the heir was sufficient. Such a dismissal is not on technical grounds and is a favorable termination even though made without prejudice (275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 289) . The court then found that there was sufficient evidence to support the judgment and the damages and affirmed the judgment (275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 291-294) .

In Kennedy v. Byrum (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 474, 20 Cal. Rptr. 98 , plaintiff commenced an action alleging alteration of a conditional sales contract. Defendants cross complained for malicious prosecution. They alleged that plaintiff had previously commenced a similar action against them and then had voluntarily dismissed the action. There was a trial and a verdict against plaintiff and for cross complainants. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal upheld the verdicts. With regard to the issue of favorable termination, the court found that the voluntary dismissal of the plaintiff's first action was sufficient to establish favorable termination (201 Cal. App. 2d 474, 479-480) .

[f] Final Termination Does Not Have to Be Bar to Further Action

The facts and procedural background of Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 114 P.2d 335 , are discussed in § 147.40[3][a]. The defendant in the malicious prosecution action contended that the dismissal for lack of evidence was not a favorable termination because the criminal charges could be refiled and thus the dismissal was not a final termination. The Supreme Court held that the final termination requirement is just that the proceeding at issue be finally terminated and does not require that the proceeding cannot be refiled. The Court noted that if the requirement were that the proceeding could not be refiled, a complaint for malicious prosecution could not be filed until the statute of limitations had run. Such a requirement would not be fair to persons charged where the proceedings were dismissed for lack of evidence (18 Cal. 2d 146, 155-156) .

In Peebler v. Olds (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 382, 162 P.2d 953 , plaintiffs sued for malicious prosecution based on suits filed involving disputes over rights to a cemetery. All of the suits had terminated favorably to plaintiff when the malicious prosecution action was filed. However, an additional suit involving the same dispute was filed by defendants after the commencement of the malicious prosecution action. Plaintiffs were awarded judgment in the malicious prosecution action and defendants appealed. One of their contentions was based on the pendency of the additional action. The court of appeal held that the pendency of the second action did not bar the malicious prosecution action based on the first actions. It stated that if refiling of an unfounded action abated an action for malicious prosecution, the wrongful party might defeat such an action by filing the second action after the statute of limitations had run on the action for malicious prosecution (71 Cal. App. 2d 382, 387-388) .

[g] Favorable Termination May Occur by Reason of Appellate Decision

Ray v. First Fed. Bank (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 315, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 436 ; involved three separate lawsuits. In the first a law firm served as outside counsel to a bank in an inverse condemnation lawsuit which the bank ultimately dismissed voluntarily. An individual who had acquired from the bank the property that had been the subject of the condemnation action sued the bank for breach of contract on account of the dismissal. In the second action the bank cross-complained against the law firm for malpractice. The firm moved for summary judgment on various grounds, including lack of duty and also the statute of limitations. The trial court granted the motion on the statute of limitations grounds. The bank appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, but not on the statute of limitations issue. Instead, the court held that the law firm had not, as a matter of law, breached any duty of care in following the bank's discretion to dismiss the inverse condemnation case.

Following the affirmance, the receiver of the law firm commenced a malicious prosecution lawsuit. Initially the malicious prosecution defendants obtained judgment on the pleadings, on the premise that the malpractice case had not terminated favorably to the law firm, because it had been decided on the basis of the statute of limitations. The receiver then filed a motion for new trial arguing that the court of appeal decision in the malpractice case had accomplished a favorable termination of it. The trial court agreed and reinstated his malicious prosecution case. The defendants in the malicious prosecution case appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, and held that an action is favorably terminated if the trial court grants summary judgment to the defendant based on the statute of limitations, a procedural ground not bearing on the merits, but the reviewing court then affirms the judgment on grounds the action lacks intrinsic merit as a matter of law (61 Cal. App. 4th 315, 317) . The general rule is that a favorable termination must reflect on the malicious prosecution plaintiff's innocence of the misconduct charged. In this case the court of appeal's decision affirming the summary judgment in the malpractice case did reflect on the merits and on the law firm's innocence in the strongest possible way. The court of appeal in the malpractice case held that the charges and case were unfounded as a matter of law, because the law firm had violated no duty to the bank in dismissing the inverse condemnation action. The court ruled that not only was the decision favorable, it also accomplished the final termination of the case (61 Cal. App. 4th 315, 319) .

[h] Dismissal of Civil Action as Discovery Sanction as Favorable Termination if Reflecting on Merits

In Ross v. Kish (2006) 145 Cal. App. 4th 188, 51 Cal. Rptr. 3d 484 , an attorney brought an action in small claims court against his former client for unpaid attorney fees following the attorney's representation of the client in the mediation of a real estate claim against the client. In response to the small claims action, the former client sued the attorney for breach of contract and legal malpractice. In that suit, the former client alleged that the attorney had orally told the client that the mediation representation would cost him no more than $5,000, although he had already paid $12,000. The client also alleged that the attorney committed malpractice by failing to file a mediation brief, failing to retain experts in time for the mediation, and failing to seek a defense under the client's homeowner's policy. The attorney dismissed his small claims action and filed a cross-complaint for the unpaid fees in the client's lawsuit. The client refused the court's order to be deposed, allegedly on advice of out-of-state counsel, who was seeking to be admitted as counsel in the case. The court denied the requests for admission of the out-of-state counsel and ordered the client to appear for deposition immediately. The client failed to comply, and the attorney moved for dismissal as a discovery sanction. When the client failed to oppose the motion and failed to appear at the hearing on the motion, the court granted the motion for dismissal. The attorney then sued the former client for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. The client filed a motion to strike under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, which the trial court granted as to the abuse of process cause of action. When the court denied the motion to strike the malicious prosecution action, the former client appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion to strike the malicious prosecution action. The former client argued that the attorney could not establish favorable termination of the underlying action because dismissal as a discovery sanction did not reflect on the merits of the action. The court disagreed, concluding that the evidence submitted by the attorney was sufficient to permit a reasonable inference that the breach of contract and malpractice allegations were groundless and that the client's failure to be deposed was a concession that the underlying action was groundless. The attorney presented evidence that he only agreed to represent the client in defending against the real estate claim, that the parties agreed that the cost to the client would be "$3,500 plus through mediation," and that the client himself had filed a claim with his homeowner's insurance, which was denied by the insurer. The attorney also presented evidence that he had hired three experts to evaluate the underlying real estate claim, that they prepared reports, and that the tactical decision was made not to use the experts because the attorney and client agreed that their conclusions would harm, rather than help, the client at the mediation. The attorney also explained that, while he did not file an optional mediation brief, he had made an oral presentation of his client's case to the mediator prior to the mediation, concluding that an oral presentation would be a better tactical move. Under these circumstances, the court held that it was reasonable to conclude that the client's refusal to submit to a deposition was a concession that the claims of breach of contract and malpractice lacked merit, and the dismissal of the underlying action had to be seen as a favorable termination on the merits in favor of the attorney (145 Cal. App. 4th 188, 198-200) .

[i] Dismissal of Appeal With Settlement That Preserves Favorable Trial Court Judgment as Favorable Termination

In Siebel v. Mittlesteadt (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 735, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 155, 161 P.3d 527 , plaintiff, the chief executive officer of a company, brought a malicious prosecution action against the attorneys of a former employee. In the underlying action, the former employee had sued the company, as well as plaintiff in his individual capacity, for wrongful termination, gender discrimination, and failure to pay commissions and other compensation. The causes of action against plaintiff were disposed of by the trial court through either demurrer or summary adjudication in favor of plaintiff, although the case went to trial against the company and against plaintiff for fraud. The jury rejected all of the former employee's claims except the claim against the company for compensation owed, and also found for the company on a cross-complaint it brought against the employee. All parties appealed, but later agreed to settle the case and dismiss the appeals. Under the terms of the settlement, the company agreed to pay 86 percent of the damages and costs that she had been awarded at trial, and the employee agreed to pay plaintiff's court-awarded litigation costs. The settlement also specified that plaintiff and the company would release the employee from any further liability, but the release specifically excluded the employee's attorneys. In conjunction with this exclusion, the settlement also specified that it did not modify the final termination of the action in favor of plaintiff for purposes of any subsequent action against the attorneys. Plaintiff then brought his malicious prosecution action against the employee's attorneys, alleging that they knew the claims filed against him were baseless when filed. The trial court granted summary judgment for the attorneys on the grounds that plaintiff could not show the underlying action was terminated in his favor. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that plaintiff had obtained a favorable termination.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal, holding that the underlying action had been terminated in plaintiff's favor for purposes of pursuing a malicious prosecution action. The court noted that plaintiff had received a favorable termination on the merits at trial as to the claims brought against him individually. With appeals of the trial court judgment pending, the parties reached a settlement that did not amend the judgment on the merits as it related to plaintiff. The Court also noted that, although the dollar amount the former employee received from the company was compromised, that amount related to the claims brought against the company and not the individual claims asserted against plaintiff. Because plaintiff received a favorable judgment in the underlying action, and that part of the judgment was unaffected by the settlement, plaintiff could show that the underlying action had been terminated in his favor (41 Cal. 4th 735, 743) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Dismissal of Criminal Action as Sufficient

In Scannell v. County of Riverside (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 199 Cal. Rptr. 644 , plaintiff sued public and private defendants attempting to state, inter alia, causes of action for malicious prosecution. The trial court sustained general demurrers without leave to amend, and plaintiff appealed the ensuing judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed in part, but reversed regarding the cause of action for malicious prosecution against the private defendant. In so reversing, the court held that a favorable termination of the underlying criminal action was sufficiently stated by the allegation that the action had been dismissed on the basis of a known prior grant of immunity to the accused (152 Cal. App. 3d 596, 611-614) .

[b] Dismissal of Civil Action as Sufficient

In Loomis v. Murphy (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 589, 266 Cal. Rptr. 82 , the trial court, following its dismissal of an action in which defendants had cross complained, granted defendants' motion to amend their cross complaint to include a cause of action for malicious prosecution. The original plaintiff in the action moved successfully for judgment on the pleadings with respect to this cross complaint, citing the rule set forth in Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 846, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , prohibiting the filing of a cross complaint for malicious prosecution in the same action that defendant claims is being maliciously prosecuted. The court of appeal reversed, noting that the underlying action had been favorably terminated for purposes of the tort. The court held that the Babb rule prohibiting cross complaints does not apply when there has been a favorable termination (217 Cal. App. 3d 589, 593-594) .

In Berman v. RCA Auto Corp. (1986) 177 Cal. App. 3d 321, 222 Cal. Rptr. 877 , the malicious prosecution plaintiff, an attorney, had been sued in the underlying action by an adversary party who alleged that statements made by the attorney in the course of trial proceedings were defamatory. The underlying action was dismissed on the ground that the statements were absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] and could not form the basis for the cause of action. The trial court in the malicious prosecution action granted the defendant's demurrer on the grounds that dismissal of the prior suit based on privilege did not constitute a favorable termination. On appeal by the plaintiff, the court of appeal reversed. The court first distinguished procedural and substantive defenses, noting that procedural defenses are designed to protect the integrity of the judicial system and do not absolutely shield a defendant from liability. A defense based on absolute privilege, on the other hand, creates an immunity and is a bar to liability designed to protect the rights of the individual speaker (177 Cal. App. 3d 321, 324-325) . The court therefore concluded that the absolute privilege at issue was a substantive defense and held that dismissal of a suit on the ground that defendant's statement is privileged is a favorable termination for malicious prosecution purposes (177 Cal. App. 3d 321, 325-326) .

[c] Dismissal of Criminal Action for Lack of Evidence as Sufficient

In Bulkley v. Klein (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 742, 23 Cal. Rptr. 855 , plaintiff sued for false imprisonment and malicious prosecution based on criminal charges filed against him by his landlord involving the alleged removal of the landlord's property from the premises. The criminal complaint had been dismissed for lack of evidence but the docket entry was later changed to a continuance because the complainant had failed to appear. The trial court found in favor of plaintiff in the malicious prosecution case and awarded him $1,000. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. It first held that plaintiff had not established his cause of action for false imprisonment (206 Cal. App. 2d 742, 746-748) . The court then considered whether there was substantial evidence to support the finding of liability for malicious prosecution. Relying on Jaffe v. Stone (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 146, 114 P.2d 335 [see § 147.40[3][a]], it held that dismissal of the prior criminal action for lack of evidence was sufficient to support the finding of favorable termination. It then held that the change in the docket entry to a continuance had been beyond the jurisdiction of the court and thus was a nullity (206 Cal. App. 2d 742, 749-750) .

[d] Final Termination Does Not Have to Be Bar to Further Action

In Hurgren v. Union Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1904) 141 Cal. 585, 75 P. 168 , plaintiff sued for malicious prosecution. The trial court granted a nonsuit on the ground that it had not been shown that the underlying actions had been decided in plaintiff's favor on the merits. The Supreme Court reversed. It held that a favorable termination on the merits is not required and that it is sufficient to show that the underlying proceeding had been legally terminated. The fact that the legal termination is not a bar to another suit is not a defense; otherwise, a plaintiff could be harassed by a succession of suits, each of which was dismissed before reaching the merits, and have no remedy (141 Cal. 585, 587-588) .

[e] Dismissal of Civil Action as Discovery Sanction as Favorable Termination if Reflecting on Merits

In Daniels v. Robbins (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 204, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 683 , plaintiff filed a malicious prosecution action against a man and his attorneys for a prior defamation lawsuit that they had brought against her. The defamation lawsuit had eventually been dismissed by the trial court as a sanction for failing to comply with discovery orders. The court of appeal held that this dismissal satisfied the favorable termination requirement for establishing her subsequent malicious prosecution action. The court held that dismissal following a terminating sanction granted for abuse of the discovery process may support a finding that the favorable termination element has been satisfied, if the record from the underlying action shows that the underlying plaintiff made no attempt during discovery to substantiate the allegations in the complaint and the court's dismissal of that action was justified by the plaintiff's lack of evidence. In the instant case, the plaintiff in the underlying defamation action did not provide any timely discovery responses and ignored repeated court orders to do so. The trial court in that action, when granting the terminating sanction on the eve of trial, noted that even if the discovery served by that plaintiff as a last-ditch effort to stave off sanctions were allowed at trial, he still would not have sufficient evidence to prove his defamation case. Under those circumstances, the court of appeal in the malicious prosecution action found that plaintiff had met the favorable termination requirement (182 Cal. App. 4th 204, 218-219). The court also held that the fact that the discovery abuses may have been the fault of the client rather than the attorneys does not matter for purposes of establishing the favorable termination element on the cause of action brought against the underlying attorneys (182 Cal. App. 4th 204, 220-222) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious

ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsFavorable Termination

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.41

§ 147.41 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Action for Malicious Prosecution as Able to Be Based on Institution of Proceedings Other Than Civil or Criminal Complaints

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.40].

THE COMPLAINT STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE AN ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION CAN BE BASED ON THE PROSECUTION OF _____ [A CROSS COMPLAINT or A WILL CONTEST or AN ADMINISTRATIVE PROCEEDING].

[EITHER]

A. Cross Complaint as Sufficient. A malicious prosecution action can be based on the prosecution of a cross complaint, even though the cross complaint is based on the same transaction as the complaint (Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 50-53, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608).

[OR]

A. Will Contest as Sufficient. A malicious prosecution action can be brought by an executor based on the prosecution of a will contest (Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 691-692, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 ; MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 287-288, 79 Cal. Rptr. 707).

[OR]

A. Administrative Proceeding as Sufficient. A malicious prosecution complaint can be based on the bringing of an administrative proceeding against plaintiff (Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 577, 580-581, 311 P.2d 494).

[Optional] B. Cross-Complaint Filed During Marital Dissolution Action as Sufficient. A malicious prosecution action may be based on a cross-complaint that is filed during a marital dissolution action, if that cross-complaint does not raise any family law issues such as marital status, child custody, or spousal support (Nicholson v. Fazeli (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1091, 1098-1099, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 881).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution where the demurrer asserts that a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on the proceeding involved but where the proceeding was a cross complaint, a will contest, or an administrative proceeding.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points in § 147.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cross Complaint as Sufficient

In Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608 , after being forced out as president of defendant corporation, plaintiff was given an employment contract and stock options. Following a later dispute, defendant terminated all payments to plaintiff. Plaintiff sued for declaratory relief as to the validity of the contract and options. Defendant cross complained for salary that had already been paid to plaintiff. Plaintiff prevailed and the cross complaint was dismissed. Plaintiff then sued for malicious prosecution of the cross complaint and obtained a judgment for more than $1,000,000. Defendant appealed and the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment.

The Supreme Court held that an action for a malicious prosecution could be based on a cross complaint. It found that the malicious prosecution of a cross complaint caused the same harm as the malicious commencement of an action (13 Cal. 3d 43, 51) . It found that it was not significant that the cross complaint arose out of the same transaction as the complaint since it would still cause harm and expense (13 Cal. 3d 43, 51) . It rejected the claim that the cross complaint was merely defensive because it was an affirmative claim for damages, and stated that it was not recognizing a cause of action for malicious defense (13 Cal. 3d 43, 52) .

[b] Will Contest as Sufficient

The facts and procedural background of Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 , are discussed in § 147.45[3][a]. In rejecting the argument that a malicious prosecution action should not be maintainable based on a will contest asserting multiple grounds, some of which are not supported by probable cause, the Court noted the authority holding that will contests are separate from the will probate actions, and concluded that the policies underlying the malicious prosecution cause of action apply to will contests (8 Cal. 4th 666, 691-692) .

MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 79 Cal. Rptr. 707 , is discussed in § 147.40[3][e]. The court of appeal held that an action for malicious prosecution can be based on the filing of a will contest. It held that the executor can file such an action to recover his or her damages for the malicious prosecution of the will contest because an executor is in the position of a defendant in such action (275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 287-288) . Former Prob. Code § 371 provided that on the trial of a will contest, the contestant is plaintiff and the petitioner is defendant (275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 288 n.1).

[c] Administrative Proceeding as Sufficient

In Hardy v. Vial (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 577, 311 P.2d 494 , plaintiff was discharged from his position as a professor at a state college as a result of charges made by defendants. He then petitioned for and obtained reinstatement. He filed an action for malicious prosecution against defendants, most of whom were state employees. Their demurrer on the ground that the complaint failed to state a cause of action was sustained and plaintiff appealed the ensuing judgments. The Supreme Court first held that a malicious prosecution action can be based on the institution of administrative proceedings, adopting the rule set forth in the Restatement of Torts. It noted that a person can be damaged by the malicious prosecution of administrative proceedings in the same manner as by the malicious prosecution of civil or criminal proceedings. The court also held that its holding did not depend on the type of judicial review available from the administrative proceedings (48 Cal. 2d 577, 580-581) . The court then found that the state employees were immune and affirmed judgment as to them. The defendant who was not a state employee was not immune and thus the judgment as to him was reversed (48 Cal. 2d 577, 583-584) .

[d] Cross-Complaint Filed During Marital Dissolution Action as Sufficient

In Nicholson v. Fazeli (2003) 113 Cal. App. 4th 1091, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 881 , a wife was engaged in a marital dissolution action against her husband. After dissolution was granted, the family law court retained jurisdiction to resolve issues involving property division, spousal support, and attorney's fees. The wife eventually filed an action against her husband's trust seeking declaratory relief and a constructive trust on assets she claimed were relevant to marital asset allocation and spousal support. The husband's two sons replaced the husband as trustees for purposes of defending the lawsuit. The trustees, allegedly prompted by the husband, filed a cross-complaint against the wife, seeking the return of a Jaguar automobile alleged to be trust property, or damages for its loss, as well as a constructive trust on 23 pieces of jewelry, including the wife's engagement ring, alleged to be trust assets. The trust eventually dismissed the cross-complaint, and subsequent arbitration resulted in a finding that the Jaguar and jewelry belonged to the wife, not the trust. The wife then filed a malicious prosecution action against her husband, his two sons in their capacity as trustees, and the sons' attorney for the cross-complaint, alleging lack of probable cause. The trial court sustained a demurrer for the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The primary issue on appeal was whether a cross-complaint that originates in a marital dissolution action can be the basis for a malicious prosecution action. The court held that it can. The court reviewed earlier court opinions that had held that a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on meritless motions and orders to show cause arising from family law proceedings, in part due to the acrimonious nature of such proceedings, the difficulty of distinguishing truly malicious motions from ordinary ones, and a concern not to deter meritorious motions involving child custody (113 Cal. App. 4th 1091, 1097) . However, the court refused to extend the holding of those cases to otherwise ordinary civil actions or cross-actions that happen to originate in the course of family law proceedings. In the case before the court, the cross-complaint did not raise any family law issues such as child support, marital status, or spousal support. Although the characterization of the property in question as trust property might have affected the division of community property, the cross-complaint did not seek to have the property characterized as community or separate property, but rather as trust property. According to the court, if this ordinary trust action had been brought in ordinary civil court, there would be no question that it could be the basis for a malicious prosecution action. The concerns expressed by the earlier court opinions were inapplicable, and the court concluded that the plaintiff could pursue her malicious prosecution action (113 Cal. App. 4th 1091, 1098-1099) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Administrative Proceeding as Sufficient

In Axline v. Saint John's Hosp. & Health Ctr. (1998) 63 Cal. App. 4th 907, 74 Cal. Rptr. 2d 385 , plaintiff physician sued defendant hospital following denial of his application to become a member of the medical staff, alleging several improprieties in the procedures followed in processing the application. More specifically, plaintiff asserted the hospital had violated its own bylaws and failed to provide an opportunity for plaintiff to address allegations brought against him. The trial court granted the hospital's demurrer on various grounds, holding in part that plaintiff had failed to allege facts sufficient to state a cause of action for malicious prosecution. The court of appeal reversed on various grounds, holding in part that a malicious prosecution action can be based on a denial of privileges that triggers a right to begin an administrative appeal process, even though the appeal proceeding is actually triggered by the malicious prosecution plaintiff. Thus, the court found that the letter denying staff privileges to the physician, which triggered the right to seek a formal appeal with the hospital, was sufficient to support a malicious prosecution action by the physician (63 Cal. App. 4th 907, 916-917) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.42

§ 147.42 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Private Party Permitted to Sue for Malicious Prosecution Based on Underlying Action in Which Public Entity Was Also Defendant

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.40].

THE COMPLAINT STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE A PRIVATE PARTY IS NOT BARRED FROM BRINGING AN ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION MERELY BECAUSE THE UNDERLYING ACTION WAS ALSO BROUGHT AGAINST A PUBLIC ENTITY.

Private Party May Sue Based on Underlying Action in Which Public Entity Was Also Defendant. A private party is not precluded from bringing a malicious prosecution action merely because the underlying lawsuit was also brought against a public entity (Padres L.P. v. Henderson (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 495, 510, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 584).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution if the demurrer asserts that a private party plaintiff is barred from suing for malicious prosecution because the underlying action was essentially an action against a public entity that is itself barred from suing for malicious prosecution.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used in another procedural context--for example, to oppose a motion for summary judgment or to oppose a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Private Party May Sue Based on Underlying Action in Which Public Entity Was Also Defendant

In Padres L.P. v. Henderson (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 495, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 584 , the plaintiff was a major league baseball team that brought a malicious prosecution action against an opponent of a ballpark construction project that was being developed by the team and the City of San Diego. The malicious prosecution action was based on a series of lawsuits that the opponent had brought challenging financial actions taken by the city in conjunction with the team to develop the project. The defendants in the underlying lawsuits filed by the project opponent included the city, the baseball team, and others. The opponent filed a special motion to strike the malicious prosecution action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the so-called anti-SLAPP statute, on the grounds that the opponent had an absolute right to file the underlying actions challenging the city's plans. The trial court denied the motion as it related to some of the underlying suits, and the project opponent appealed.

The court of appeal reversed in part and affirmed in part. The court rejected the opponent's claim that the underlying suits were absolutely privileged under the California Supreme Court's decision in City of Long Beach v. Bozek (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 527, 183 Cal. Rptr. 86, 645 P.2d 137 [see § 147.33[3][a]]. The court of appeal concluded that nothing in Bozek prevents a private party from bringing a malicious prosecution action based on an underlying lawsuit that also happens to have been brought against a governmental entity, even though the public entity itself would be unable to bring a malicious prosecution action. The court concluded that parties with a unique and substantial interest in a project, who attempt to protect that interest by participating in a lawsuit seeking to invalidate governmental action, are entitled to seek redress for damages suffered as a result of the action, if they can establish that the underlying lawsuit was frivolous and brought with malice (114 Cal. App. 4th 495, 510-513) . The court then went on to analyze whether the baseball team had established a probability of success on the merits of its claims, as required to defeat the special motion to strike. The court concluded that the team had failed to make a prima facie showing that two of the project opponent's underlying suits were totally without merit, and therefore the trial court should have struck those two claims. However, the court also held that the team had presented sufficient evidence to establish a probability of success on a malicious prosecution claim based on the opponent's lawsuit seeking to invalidate a bond ordinance to be used to fund construction of the ballpark, and therefore the trial court properly denied the motion to strike on that claim (114 Cal. App. 4th 495, 518-522) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.43

§ 147.43 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Defendant Public Employee Is Not Immune Because He or She Was Acting Outside the Scope of Employment

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.40].

THE COMPLAINT STATES A CAUSE OF ACTION AGAINST THE PUBLIC EMPLOYEE FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION BECAUSE IT ALLEGES THAT THE EMPLOYEE WAS ACTING OUTSIDE THE SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT AND THE EMPLOYEE THEREFORE WOULD NOT BE IMMUNE.

No Immunity When Acting Outside Scope of Employment. Under the terms of Section 821.6 of the Government Code, a public employee is only immune from liability for malicious prosecution when acting within the scope of his or her employment. Therefore, a public employee is not immune when acts constituting malicious prosecution were outside the scope of his or her employment (Vivell v. City of Belmont (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 38, 40-41, 78 Cal. Rptr. 841).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the public employee is immune but the complaint alleges that the employee was acting outside the scope of employment.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points in § 147.31.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment based on public employee immunity.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Immunity When Acting Outside Scope of Employment

In Vivell v. City of Belmont (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 38, 78 Cal. Rptr. 841 , a malicious prosecution action was brought against the city and one of its councilmen for instituting a misdemeanor action for failure to connect a sewer line. The opening statement at the trial of the malicious prosecution action stated that the councilman was involved in a dispute with plaintiff over the payment of a sewer assessment and that the councilman had made false statements to the authorities that had caused the misdemeanor complaint to be issued. The city moved for a nonsuit, which was granted. The court of appeal affirmed on the basis of the city's immunity under Gov. Code § 821.6 which provides a public entity with absolute immunity from liability for malicious prosecution (274 Cal. App. 2d 38, 40) . The court stated in dictum, however, that the trial court's failure to grant the councilman's motion for nonsuit was proper because he was not acting within the scope of his duties as a city councilman when he sought private gain by urging prosecution by the city. A public employee's immunity under Gov. Code § 821.6 from liability for malicious prosecution only applies to acts within the scope of employment (274 Cal. App. 2d 38, 40-41) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.44

§ 147.44 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Action for Malicious Prosecution May Be Based on Partial Favorable Termination of Underlying Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.40].

A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION CAN BE STATED WHEN THE PLAINTIFF OBTAINED A PARTIAL FAVORABLE TERMINATION OF THE UNDERLYING ACTION.

Partial Favorable Termination Is Sufficient Basis. A cause of action for malicious prosecution can be stated when the plaintiff obtained a partially favorable termination of a severable underlying action (Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 375, 385, 295 P.2d 405 ; Paramount Gen. Hosp. Co. v. Jay (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 360, 368-369, 261 Cal. Rptr. 723).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on a partially favorable termination of an underlying action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to oppose a motion for summary judgment [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] on the basis that a partially favorable termination will support an action for malicious prosecution.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Partial Favorable Termination Is Sufficient Basis

In Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 375, 295 P.2d 405 , the plaintiff alleged that defendant, in prior litigation, knowingly and maliciously asserted false claims to her real property. The defendant had previously filed an action against the plaintiff for money damages, and also asserted a claim to plaintiff's real property on a theory of fraudulent conveyance. The defendant prevailed in this underlying action only concerning the claim for damages. The trial court sustained defendant's objection to the introduction of evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and entered a judgment of dismissal. Plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, finding that the complaint stated a cause of action for malicious prosecution. It held that the damage and real property claims were severable, and found that the complaint stated a cause of action for malicious prosecution based on the claim of fraudulent conveyance, despite the merit of the claim on which the defendant had prevailed (46 Cal. 2d 375, 385) .

In Paramount Gen. Hosp. Co. v. Jay (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 360, 261 Cal. Rptr. 723 , plaintiffs appealed an order of dismissal of their malicious prosecution complaint against defendant. The underlying action alleged multiple causes of action; plaintiff prevailed on some of these causes, but not on all of them. Defendant demurred solely on the ground that plaintiff did not allege a favorable termination of the underlying action. The trial court sustained the demurrer to the original complaint without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a malicious prosecution action may be brought following a partial favorable termination of a severable underlying action (213 Cal. App. 3d 360, 368-369, 372) . The court noted that the claims in the instant case appeared to be severable and that, at minimum, the question of severability would require factual determinations that could not be made at the demurrer stage (213 Cal. App. 3d 360, 370) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsFavorable Termination

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.45

§ 147.45 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Malicious Prosecution--Cause of Action Can Be Based on Allegations That Any Ground of Underlying Action Was Asserted Without Probable Cause Notwithstanding Probable Cause for Other Grounds Asserted in That Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.40].

A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR MALICIOUS PROSECUTION CAN BE STATED BASED ON ALLEGATIONS THAT ANY GROUND ASSERTED IN AN ACTION CHARGING MULTIPLE GROUNDS OF LIABILITY WAS ASSERTED WITH MALICE AND WITHOUT PROBABLE CAUSE, EVEN IF OTHER GROUNDS IN THAT ACTION WERE ASSERTED WITH PROBABLE CAUSE.

Cause of Action Can Be Based on One Ground Asserted in Underlying Action. A malicious prosecution cause of action can be based on one ground asserted in a prior action with malice and without probable cause, even if one or more other grounds asserted in that action were supported by probable cause (Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 695, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 ; Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 56-57, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution, when the demurrer asserts that the complaint does not state a malicious prosecution cause of action because the complaint does not allege that all grounds asserted in the prior action were made with malice and without probable cause. The basis of opposition is that the assertion of any ground in the prior action without probable cause and with malice is sufficient to support a cause of action [Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 695, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 ; Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 56-57, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608] .

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to the specific allegations of the complaint concerning the existence of malice and lack of probable cause in the assertion of a specific ground in the prior action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Can Be Based on One Ground Asserted in Underlying Action

In Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 , the prior action was a will contest instituted by defendant, the wife of a decedent who had executed a will leaving the bulk of his estate to plaintiff. In the will contest, defendant alleged six separate grounds for invalidating the will; plaintiff prevailed in that action, and filed suit for malicious prosecution. In the malicious prosecution action, plaintiff did not allege that the will contest allegation regarding undue influence lacked probable cause; defendant demurred to the complaint, arguing that the complaint's failure to allege that all of the grounds asserted in the prior action were without probable cause precluded the cause of action. The trial court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the action, but the court of appeal reversed, holding that Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 56-57, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608 , permitted a cause of action to be stated if any of the grounds asserted in the prior action were asserted with malice and without probable cause. The Supreme Court granted review, and affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal.

The Court stated that the issue before it was whether the complaint properly pleaded the element of probable cause: whether a malicious prosecution action for bringing a will contest on multiple grounds may be maintained when the plaintiff does not allege that all the grounds asserted in the contest lacked probable cause (8 Cal. 4th 666, 676) . The issue had been resolved in the affirmative in Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 56-57, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608 , so the Court addressed the reasons advanced by defendant for refusing to follow that decision. The Court rejected the proffered reasons, concluding that a ground asserted in litigation with malice and without probable cause should continue to be redressable in a malicious prosecution action (8 Cal. 4th 666, 694-695) .

The facts and procedural background of Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608 , are discussed in § 147.41[3][a]. The Court rejected the defendant's assertion that the test for a malicious prosecution cause of action should be whether defendant had reasonable grounds to seek the relief sought in the prior action, not whether defendant had reasonable grounds for asserting each of the theories contained in that action (13 Cal. 3d 43, 57) . Instead, the Court held that a plaintiff acting in good faith may safely sue on alternative theories after full disclosure to counsel when he or she possesses a reasonable belief in each of those theories. If the original pleading advances a theory that subsequent research proves to be untenable the pleading may be amended; but a party is not permitted to pursue shotgun tactics by proceeding on counts and theories that they know or should know to be groundless (13 Cal. 3d 43, 57) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Cause of Action Can Be Based on One Ground Asserted in Underlying Action

In Videotape Plus, Inc. v. Lyons (2001) 89 Cal. App. 4th 156, 107 Cal. Rptr. 2d 1 , the plaintiffs in the underlying action, a videotaping company and its owner, brought suit against a rival company and its owner for allegedly conspiring with one of the plaintiffs' employees to purchase videotapes stolen from the plaintiffs' warehouse. The underlying complaint alleged causes of action for conversion, fraud, and negligence. The underlying negligence claim was eventually dismissed, and the trial court granted summary judgment for the defendants on the fraud and conversion claims. However, the court of appeal reversed summary judgment on the conversion claim and remanded. On remand, the trial court issued a terminating sanction against the plaintiff in the underlying action for repeated discovery abuses. The underlying defendants then brought a malicious prosecution action alleging that the underlying plaintiff had lacked probable cause for the fraud and negligence claims. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings, finding that probable cause existed to bring the underlying conversion claim and that although the fraud and negligence actions were superfluous, because they added nothing to the conversion claim, reasonable attorneys always plead alternative theories to avoid malpractice claims. The court of appeal reversed. The court held that it was settled that probable cause must support each underlying cause of action in order to defeat a malicious prosecution action. The malicious prosecution plaintiffs adequately alleged that no probable cause existed to bring the fraud or negligence claims. They had alleged that the negligence claim was asserted solely to trigger insurance coverage and that the fraud claim was asserted without knowing of any misrepresentation or duty to disclose on the part of the underlying defendants. Therefore, the trial court erred in refusing to allow the plaintiffs to proceed on malicious prosecution claims as to those underlying causes of action (89 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161-163) .

The action underlying the malicious prosecution action in Mabie v. Hyatt (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 581, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 657 , contained two claims. The first claim sought cancellation of a note and deed of trust. This claim was arguable both as to the facts and the law, and hence was supported by probable cause. The second claim accused defendants of fraud, conspiracy and malice and sought punitive damages. This second claim had no evidentiary support whatsoever. The plaintiff and her attorneys, admitted never having any evidence to support these claims. Nevertheless, as defendants in the malicious prosecution action, they moved for summary judgment, claiming that they had probable cause for the entire action. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendants in the malicious prosecution action. The appellate court reversed, holding that the malicious prosecution of the fraud, conspiracy, malice and punitive damage claims was actionable even if probable cause was present to contest the validity of the deed of trust (61 Cal. App. 4th 581, 597) . The rule, derived from Crowley v. Katleman (1994) 8 Cal. 4th 666, 695, 34 Cal. Rptr. 2d 386, 881 P.2d 1083 , is that each claim prosecuted must be supported by probable cause. Because the record clearly established that the plaintiff in the underlying action lacked probable cause to support the fraud, conspiracy, malice and punitive damage claims, the successful defendant in that action was entitled to sue for the malicious prosecution of that claim (61 Cal. App. 4th 581, 597) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.46

§ 147.46 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Reliance on Attorney's Advice Not Established

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Plaintiff,	)	NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO MOTION
_____ [name],	)	FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT
Defendant.	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]
	)
	)

_____

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THERE IS A TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT AS TO WHETHER DEFENDANT MADE A GOOD FAITH DISCLOSURE OF ALL FACTS TO HIS/HER ATTORNEY AND BELIEVED IN THE FACTS DISCLOSED.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. It is proper for a court to grant a motion for summary judgment only if the affidavits supporting the motion establish every element necessary to sustain a judgment in favor of the moving party and the opposing party has not presented any facts which give rise to a triable issue. In ruling on the motion, the moving party's affidavits are strictly construed, and doubts as to the propriety of granting the motion should be resolved in favor of the opposing party (Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Serv. Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 851 n.6, 851-852, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953). The court may not properly grant summary judgment based on inferences reasonably deducible from the papers submitted, if such inferences are contradicted by other inferences which raise a triable issue of fact (Hepp v. Lockheed-Cal. Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 717-718, 150 Cal. Rptr. 408).

[EITHER]

B. Failure to Make Fair Disclosure of All Facts. A defendant cannot rely on the defense of advice of an attorney if he or she did not fairly disclose all the facts within his or her knowledge to the attorney (Kincaid v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 733, 743, 66 Cal. Rptr. 915 ; Albertson v. Raboff (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 372, 386-387, 8 Cal. Rptr. 398).

[AND/OR]

B. Lack of Good Faith. A defendant cannot rely on the defense of advice of an attorney if he or she did not act in good faith in seeking counsel's advice and sought the advice as a mere cloak to protect himself or herself from a suit for malicious prosecution (Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 53-54, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608 ; Klotz v. Alexander (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 238, 243, 21 Cal. Rptr. 305).

[AND/OR]

B. No Belief in Guilt. A defendant cannot rely on the defense of advice of an attorney if the defendant did not believe in plaintiff's guilt or liability when the attorney was consulted (Weber v. Leuschner (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 829, 838, 50 Cal. Rptr. 86).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment made by defendant based on advice of counsel where defendant did not fairly relate all the facts to the attorney in good faith.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the memorandum (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

[b] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the points in § 147.37, which is a memorandum supporting a motion for summary judgment based on good faith reliance on the advice of an attorney.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure

Plaintiffs in Corwin v. Los Angeles Newspaper Serv. Bureau, Inc. (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 842, 94 Cal. Rptr. 785, 484 P.2d 953 , filed an action against defendants for violations of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 16720, 16726 (prohibited restraints on trade under Cartwright Act). The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment and plaintiffs appealed from the judgment entered in favor of defendants. The Supreme Court concluded that the trial court had erroneously granted the summary judgment and reversed the judgment. In reviewing the trial court's action, the Court commented that summary judgment is a drastic procedure to be used with caution so that it does not become a substitute for the open trial method of determining facts (4 Cal. 3d 842, 851-852) .

Hepp v. Lockheed-Cal. Co. (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 150 Cal. Rptr. 408 , was an action for breach of contract and fraud. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant, and the court of appeal reversed the judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal reviewed the rules for granting summary judgment. It relied on Code Civ. Proc. § 437c in stating that summary judgment may not be granted on the basis of inferences which are contradicted by other inferences which raise a triable issue of fact (86 Cal. App. 3d 714, 717-718) .

[b] Failure to Make Fair Disclosure of All Facts

In Kincaid v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1968) 259 Cal. App. 2d 733, 66 Cal. Rptr. 915 , plaintiff was charged by his employer with petty theft for installing a company part in his own washing machine, which he had sold to undercover agents for the company. He was acquitted at trial and filed an action for malicious prosecution. After a jury verdict for plaintiff, the court granted defendant's motion for a new trial but denied its motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Both sides appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the granting of a motion for a new trial, finding there was a proper basis in the insufficiency of the evidence on lack of probable cause (259 Cal. App. 2d 733, 741-742) . The court also affirmed the denial of a motion for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. It found that there was also evidence based on plaintiff's statements that he intended to pay for the timer that there was lack of probable cause. With regard to defendant's argument that it fully disclosed all the facts to the district attorney, the court held that unless the information given to the prosecuting officer is complete and fair, the advice may not be relied on to establish probable cause. The court found that there was some evidence that all of plaintiff's statements were not disclosed by the company to the district attorney (259 Cal. App. 2d 733, 743) .

In Albertson v. Raboff (1960) 185 Cal. App. 2d 372, 8 Cal. Rptr. 398 , the malicious prosecution action was based on a prior action to set aside a conveyance on the basis that it was in fraud of creditors and a lis pendens. The trial court found for plaintiff and defendant appealed on the basis that the evidence did not support the trial court's findings. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that reliance on the advice of counsel was a valid defense, but that to rely on the defense, the defendant had to establish full, good faith disclosure of all the facts to the attorney. The court then found that there was substantial evidence in support of the trial court's finding that all of the facts were not disclosed. The evidence revealed that defendant had distorted the facts as to plaintiff's indebtedness and misrepresented facts about the extent of plaintiff's liabilities (185 Cal. App. 2d 372, 386-387) .

[c] Lack of Good Faith

The facts of Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184, 529 P.2d 608 , is discussed in § 147.41[3][a]. After finding that it is proper to base an action for malicious prosecution on a cross complaint (13 Cal. 3d 43, 50-53) , the Court considered the defense of reliance on the advice of counsel and held that it depends on full disclosure of all the facts and good faith. It then found that there was substantial evidence of bad faith on the part of defendants. One of the individual defendants had stated that he was going "all the way" to get plaintiff, and the actions terminating the employment agreement and stock options were taken without any substantial legal basis. Also, one of the attorneys for defendants had written a letter in which he stated that he had argued a weak point on an earlier appeal in the case not because he thought he could win but because he wanted to show "what a bastard" plaintiff was (13 Cal.

3d 43, 53-54) . Finally, the Court considered damages and upheld the award with one small reduction (13 Cal. 3d 43, 59-67) .

In Klotz v. Alexander (1962) 203 Cal. App. 2d 238, 21 Cal. Rptr. 305 , as a joke and for an alleged wager, plaintiff performed certain "lewd acts" in the back of a store in which he was employed. Plaintiff later left his employment voluntarily but filed claims for wages due him and for unemployment insurance. Thereafter, the defendant employer had plaintiff charged with indecent exposure. After two days of trial to a jury, the court dismissed the complaint. The malicious prosecution action followed and plaintiff received a judgment for $10,000. Defendant appealed and the court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court concluded that there was evidence that defendant did not act in good faith in making the criminal complaint. The court held that where the de fense of advice of counsel is raised, defendant must establish that he or she consulted the attorney in good faith (203 Cal. App. 2d 238, 243) . The court then found that all of the facts had not been given to the district attorney although they might have been given to the police. Thus, the court concluded that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's implied finding that defendant did not provide full and fair disclosure and that the attorney's advice was not sought in good faith (203 Cal. App. 2d 238, 245) .

[d] No Belief in Guilt

In Weber v. Leuschner (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 829, 50 Cal. Rptr. 86 , plaintiff stored some peaches in defendant's warehouse. After a dispute over the condition of the fruit, plaintiff stopped payment on a check he had given to defendant. Defendant then caused a criminal complaint to be issued charging plaintiff with uttering a check without sufficient funds. The complaint was later dismissed for lack of evidence and plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution. After a jury verdict for plaintiff, defendant appealed. The court of appeal first found that there was ample evidence to support all the required elements of malicious prosecution (240 Cal. App. 2d 829, 836-837) . It then discussed the defense of advice of counsel and found that there was ample evidence that not all the facts had been given to the attorney. It also held that the jury might also have found that defendant did not believe that plaintiff was guilty when he made the criminal complaint and that such a finding would be fatal to the defense of advice of counsel (240 Cal. App. 2d 829, 838) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Make Fair Disclosure of All Facts

MacDonald v. Joslyn (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 79 Cal. Rptr. 707 , is discussed in § 147.40[3][e]. The court of appeal held that defendant could not rely on advice of counsel because the record did not show that any of defendant's three attorneys advised him to bring the will contest. The court also held that the defense of advice of counsel requires full disclosure of all the facts to the attorney and that there was no evidence of such full disclosure (275 Cal. App. 2d 282, 292) .

Jackson v. Beckham (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 264, 31 Cal. Rptr. 739 , is discussed in § 147.40[4][c]. The court held that reliance on advice of counsel was a complete defense but that to rely on the defense, defendant has to establish full disclosure of all the facts to the attorney. The court held that such full disclosure was a jury issue and upheld the jury finding for plaintiff (217 Cal. App. 2d 264, 271-272) .

The facts and holding of Kennedy v. Byrum (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 474, 20 Cal. Rptr. 98 , are discussed in § 147.40[3][e]. The court of appeal found that the trial court had discovered that defendant had known that the contract he claimed was altered was actually the one he had signed. Therefore, he could not rely on advice of counsel because he obviously had not told his attorney that he had no actual basis for the action against plaintiff (201 Cal. App. 2d 474, 481-482) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.47

§ 147.47 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Judicial Arbitration Award as Sufficient Basis for Action If Award Indicates Absence of Misconduct and Lack of Merit

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.46].

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE A FINAL ARBITRATION AWARD FOR PLAINTIFF IS A SUFFICIENT BASIS FOR A MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ACTION IF THE AWARD INDICATES THAT PLAINTIFF WAS NOT GUILTY OF MISCONDUCT AND THAT THE PRIOR ACTION HAD NO MERIT.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. [See § 147.46, Paragraph A].

B. Judicial Arbitration Award as Sufficient Basis for Action. A malicious prosecution action can be based on a civil action that was resolved through judicial arbitration (Stanley v. Superior Court (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 468, 181 Cal. Rptr. 878).

C. Final Decision by Arbitrator as Favorable Termination. An arbitrator's award denying defendant's claim in the action on which the malicious prosecution complaint is based, which became final after defendant failed to exercise his or her right to reject the award and request a trial de novo, is a favorable termination for plaintiff if the award reflects a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of misconduct and if defendant's failure to request trial de novo reflects his or her belief that the action was without merit (Stanley v. Superior Court (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 465-466, 181 Cal. Rptr. 878).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]

_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment by defendant in an action for malicious prosecution when defendant asserts either that a malicious prosecution action cannot be based on an action resolved by judicial arbitration or that the arbitration award did not constitute a favorable termination of the prior proceedings. This form may be used when the arbitration award in the prior proceedings was made and became final under circumstances indicating that the proceedings lacked merit.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. When appropriate, such argument should include contentions that the arbitrator's award reflects a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of misconduct or that defendant had no reason for failing to request a trial de novo in the prior action after the award was made, other than that the action was meritless.

[c] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution asserting that a final judicial arbitration decision is not a sufficient basis for a malicious prosecution action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Arbitration Award as Sufficient Basis for Action

In Stanley v. Superior Court (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 181 Cal. Rptr. 878 , plaintiff, a corporation, had been sued by a party represented by defendant. The action was submitted to statutory judicial arbitration at the request of defendant and resulted in an arbitrator's award determining that defendant take nothing. Defendant did not exercise his statutory right to reject the arbitration award and reprosecute the action in a trial de novo, and judgment was entered against him. Plaintiff then sued defendant for malicious prosecution. Defendant's motion for summary judgment was denied by the trial court, and defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant the motion.

The court of appeal denied the writ. The court stated that a judicial arbitration is not a qualitatively different proceeding from a normal civil action but is merely a different sort of termination for such an action (130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 467) . Since a defendant may sustain the same sorts of damages from having to defend a civil action that terminates in a judicial arbitration as he or she may sustain from having to defend a civil action that terminates in a trial, the court held that there is no policy justification for barring an action for malicious prosecution when the action terminates in arbitration (130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 468-469) . The court stated that a judicial arbitration is distinguishable from a small claims court action, which may not be the basis of an action for malicious prosecution (130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 468) . The court also stated that barring actions for malicious prosecution based on actions pursued by means of judicial arbitration would create the following anomalies: (1) it would put a plaintiff who had maliciously brought a groundless action in a better position if he or she pursued that action to an unfavorable arbitration award rather than voluntarily dismissing it as soon as it appeared that the action would lose; (2) it would force a defendant who had gotten a favorable arbitration award to reject the award and seek a trial de novo in order to preserve his or her right to bring a malicious prosecution action; and (3) it would create an escape hatch for plaintiffs who filed groundless actions in all cases when the action is subject to mandatory judicial arbitration (130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 471-472) .

[b] Final Decision by Arbitrator as Favorable Termination

The case of Stanley v. Superior Court (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 181 Cal. Rptr. 878 , is discussed in § 147.47[3][a]. In that case, defendant asserted in support of his motion for summary judgment that the arbitrator's award should not be construed as a finding in favor of plaintiff because it merely reflected defendant's inability to prove damages and not a finding that plaintiff was not guilty of misconduct. Defendant further asserted that his failure to request a trial de novo should not be construed as a belief that prior action lacked merit, since defendant had discovered that plaintiff was a shell corporation without assets and had therefore determined that further prosecution was not worthwhile. In upholding the order denying summary judgment, the court of appeal held that these assertions merely raised a factual dispute regarding the reasons for the termination of the action (130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 466) . The court stated that the arbitration award may or may not be a favorable termination depending on the result of the factual dispute at trial (130 Cal. App. 3d 460, 465) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.48

§ 147.48 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Underlying Judgment Reached Through Application of Parol Evidence Rule May Constitute Favorable Termination for Purposes of Bringing Malicious Prosecution Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.46].

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE A MALICIOUS PROSECUTION ACTION MAY BE BASED ON AN UNDERLYING JUDGMENT THAT WAS REACHED AFTER APPLICATION OF THE PAROL EVIDENCE RULE.

Judgment Reached After Application of Parol Evidence Rule May Support Malicious Prosecution Action. Application of the parol evidence rule to exclude evidence of terms that vary, alter, or add to an integrated written agreement, leading to a judgment in favor of the party asserting the integrated written agreement, constitutes a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action (Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 336, 343-345, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 497).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a plaintiff in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment in a malicious prosecution action. The basis for the opposition is that an underlying action that is resolved favorably for the malicious prosecution plaintiff can constitute a favorable termination even though the parol evidence rule was used in the underlying action to prevent the malicious prosecution defendant from introducing evidence to dispute the terms of an integrated written agreement.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, these points may be used in another procedural context--for example, to oppose a demurrer to the complaint or a motion for judgment on the pleadings.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judgment Reached After Application of Parol Evidence Rule May Support Malicious Prosecution Action

In Casa Herrera, Inc. v. Beydoun (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 336, 9 Cal. Rptr. 3d 97, 83 P.3d 497 , the plaintiff was a manufacturer of tortilla production equipment that brought a malicious prosecution action against a tortilla baking company and against the banks and a banker that had enforced a security interest in equipment sold by the plaintiff to the tortilla baking company. The malicious prosecution action was based on an underlying action brought against the equipment manufacturer by the baking company in which the baking company alleged that the manufacturer promised orally that the purchased equipment would produce 1,500 dozen 16-ounce tortillas per hour even though the manufacturer knew that the equipment would not produce at that rate. However, the parties had signed a written sales agreement in which the manufacturer promised that the equipment would produce 1,500 10-ounce tortillas per hour. The court of appeal in the underlying action affirmed a directed verdict for the equipment manufacturer, concluding that in light of the integrated written sales contract, the parol evidence rule precluded the baking company from attempting to show that the manufacturer promised that the equipment would produce 1,500 dozen 16-ounce tortillas per hour. The plaintiff then filed an action against the defendants that included causes of action for malicious prosecution. The trial court granted judgment on the pleadings in the malicious prosecution actions, holding that under Hall v. Harker (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 836, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 44 , a judgment based on the parol evidence rule does not constitute a favorable termination for purposes of a subsequent malicious prosecution action. The court of appeal reversed, rejecting the conclusion of the court of appeal in Hall.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the judgment of the court of appeal, concluding that termination of a breach of contract and fraud action based on application of the parol evidence rule satisfies the favorable termination requirement for purposes of a malicious prosecution action. The Court noted that under the parol evidence rule, no oral or written extrinsic evidence may be introduced to vary, alter, or add to the terms of an integrated written instrument. However, the Court also noted that the parol evidence rule is a rule of substantive law, even though it results in the exclusion of evidence. Under the rule, the act of embodying the complete terms of an agreement in an integrated writing has the effect of establishing the writing as the contract of the parties as a matter of substantive law. Therefore, in applying the parol evidence rule, the court of appeal in the underlying action held that the written instrument was the contract of the parties and refused to consider evidence to the contrary because that evidence was irrelevant as a matter of law (32 Cal. 4th 336, 343-344) . The court in the underlying action then concluded that under the written agreement, the manufacturer did not breach the contract or commit fraud. As such, according to the Supreme Court, the underlying court of appeal necessarily resolved the underlying action on its merits. Therefore, the underlying judgment constituted a favorable termination for the manufacturer sufficient to support a malicious prosecution action (32 Cal. 4th 336, 344-345) . The Supreme Court rejected the holding in Hall v. Harker to the extent it was inconsistent with its decision (32 Cal. 4th 336, 349) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsFavorable Termination

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.49

§ 147.49 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Denial of Motions for Nonsuit and Summary Judgment or Motion to Strike Does Not Establish Existence of Probable Cause

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.46].

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE DENIAL OF _____ [MOTIONS FOR NONSUIT OR SUMMARY JUDGMENT or A MOTION TO STRIKE UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 425.16] MADE BY THE PRESENT PLAINTIFF AS DEFENDANT IN THE PRIOR ACTION _____ [ARE or IS] NOT SUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH AS A MATTER OF LAW THAT THE PRESENT DEFENDANTS HAD PROBABLE CAUSE TO BRING THE PRIOR ACTION.

A. Rules Governing Summary Judgment Procedure. [See § 147.46, Paragraph A].

B. Denial of Nonsuit and Summary Judgment Motions Do Not Show Probable Cause. The fact that motions for summary judgment and nonsuit made by the malicious prosecution plaintiff in defending the prior underlying action had been denied in the prior action is not sufficient to show as a matter of law that the present defendants had probable cause to bring the prior action (Slaney v. Ranger Ins. Co. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 306, 319-321, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 915 ; Lucchesi v. Giannini & Uniack (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 777, 785, 205 Cal. Rptr. 62).

[Optional] C. Denial of Anti-SLAPP Motion Does Not Show Probable Cause. Denial of a motion to strike brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16 cannot be used to support a finding that the underlying action was brought with probable cause (Hutton v. Hafif (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 548-550, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 109 ; see Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(3)).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment by defendant in an action for malicious prosecution when defendant asserts that probable cause for bringing the prior action is established by the fact that motions for nonsuit and summary judgment, or a motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, made by the present plaintiff in defending the prior action, were denied by the trial court in the prior action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Nonsuit and Summary Judgment Motions Do Not Show Probable Cause

In Slaney v. Ranger Ins. Co. (2004) 115 Cal. App. 4th 306, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 915 , the plaintiff was the former owner of an aircraft that sustained extensive damage on landing. The current owners asked the plaintiff for a repair estimate, because the plaintiff still possessed the design drawings and jigs for the aircraft. The insurer company providing coverage for the current owners thought that the plaintiff's repair estimate was too high, and that the plaintiff and the current owners were fraudulently trying to force a higher payout by the insurer. The insurer denied the current owners' claim, and the current owners filed a suit for bad faith against the insurer. The insurer cross-complained against the plaintiff for conspiracy to defraud. The plaintiff filed a motion for summary judgment on the conspiracy claim, which was denied. After further discovery, the plaintiff again filed for summary judgment on the grounds of lack of evidence to support a conspiracy claim, and the motion was granted, albeit by a different judge. The action for bad faith then went to trial, and the current owners were awarded compensatory and punitive damages. In the judgment, the trial court also dismissed causes of action in the cross-complaint, specifically finding that the conspiracy action was without any basis in law or fact. The plaintiff then brought an action for malicious prosecution against the insurer and its attorneys. The defendants filed a motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, but the motion was denied on the grounds that the plaintiff had established a probability of success on the malicious prosecution cause of action.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion to strike. The court rejected the defendants' argument that the initial denial of the plaintiff's summary judgment motion in the underlying cross-action established probable cause to bring that action as a matter of law. The court noted that the only argument made by the defendants supporting probable cause for the cross-complaint was the initial denial of summary judgment. The court found that the subsequent granting of summary judgment, combined with findings made at the trial of the bad faith claim against the insurer, were sufficient to support a finding that the insurer lacked probable cause to file the conspiracy cross-complaint. The insurer had denied the underlying insurance claim on the grounds of an alleged conspiracy to defraud, but the jury in that trial had found that the insurer had denied the claim in bad faith and with malice, implicitly determining that the conspiracy to defraud theory had itself been fraudulently made and prosecuted in bad faith. The court of appeal concluded that under those circumstances, the initial denial of the plaintiff's summary judgment motion, made when the factual evidence had not yet been developed, did not establish probable cause to file the cross-complaint, and the court affirmed the denial of the motion to strike the malicious prosecution claim (115 Cal. App. 4th 306, 319-321) .

Lucchesi v. Giannini & Uniack (1984) 158 Cal. App. 3d 777, 205 Cal. Rptr. 62 , was an action for malicious prosecution based on a prior unsuccessful action for fraud and undue influence. Although present plaintiff had prevailed in the prior action, the trial court in the prior action had denied a motion for nonsuit and a motion for summary judgment made by present plaintiff in defending the prior action. The trial court in the present action for malicious prosecution granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the ground, among others, that denial of the motions for nonsuit and summary judgment in the prior action established as a matter of law that present defendants had probable cause for bringing the prior action.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's order granting summary judgment. The court noted that a summary judgment proceeding falls short of being a determination on the merits and that even a minimal showing that there is any substantial evidence tending to prove all the controverted facts necessary to establish the plaintiff's case is sufficient to defeat a motion for nonsuit (158 Cal. App. 3d 777, 787) . The court held that since neither the denial of the motion for summary judgment nor the denial of the motion for nonsuit were a determination on the merits against the defendant in the prior proceedings (and plaintiff in the present proceedings), those rulings did not establish as a matter of law that probable cause existed for the prior lawsuit (158 Cal. App. 3d 777, 788) . The court distinguished cases holding that reasonable cause for bringing the prior action was established when plaintiffs in the prior action had secured a favorable verdict which was subsequently overturned [see Cowles v. Carter (1981) 115 Cal. App. 3d 350, 171 Cal. Rptr. 269 ; Gause v. McClelland (1951) 102 Cal. App. 2d 762, 764-765, 228 P.2d 91] . The court stated that a verdict after a full adversary hearing is a determination on the merits, while proceedings on motion for summary judgment or nonsuit are not (158 Cal. App. 3d 777, 786) .

NOTE:

In a subsequent case [Roberts v. Sentry Life Ins. (1999) 76 Cal. App. 4th 375, 384, 90 Cal. Rptr. 2d 408 ; see § 147.34 [3][i], the court of appeal held that denial of a defendant's motion for summary judgment in the underlying civil action will normally be sufficient to establish probable cause for bringing the underlying action. Although stopping short of holding that the denial of a defendant's motion for summary judgment in the underlying action conclusively establishes probable cause, the court of appeal questioned the continued viability of that part of the holding in Lucchesi v. Giannini & Uniack, which was decided when probable cause included an element of subjective good faith, an element later eliminated by the California Supreme Court. As noted in Roberts, denial of summary judgment may show objective legal tenability, but does not address the plaintiff's subjective good faith. However, the subsequent court of appeal opinion in Slaney v. Ranger Ins. Co., seems to confirm the continued viability of the general principle that denial of a defendant's motion for summary judgment does not necessarily conclusively establish probable cause as a matter of law, at least if later-discovered evidence suggests that the plaintiff may have been acting maliciously or in bad faith in bringing or prosecuting the action.

[b] Denial of Anti-SLAPP Motion Does Not Show Probable Cause

In Hutton v. Hafif (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 109 , plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action against an attorney based on the attorney's prior action brought against plaintiff and others for malicious prosecution, defamation, and interference. After a motion for summary judgment was denied by one judge, the underlying action was ultimately struck under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute, by a different judge. Plaintiff's subsequent malicious prosecution action was also struck under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and defendant attorney was awarded costs and attorney's fees. Plaintiff appealed the dismissal and fee award, based in part on the enactment in 2005 of Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18, the so-called SLAPPback statute.

The court of appeal reversed the award of attorney's fees, but otherwise affirmed. The court held that the plaintiff's malicious prosecution action was a SLAPPback suit under the definition provided in Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18, and the only attorney's fees allowed under that statute are provided to a prevailing plaintiff when the motion to strike is frivolous or intended to cause delay. Unlike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(c) and (f), attorney's fees are not recoverable by a defendant who prevails on the motion to strike. Thus, the trial court erred in awarding attorney's fees to the defendant (150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 539-540) . Contending that the trial court also erred in granting the motion to strike, plaintiff argued that the 2005 amendment to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16(b)(3) overruled the holding in Wilson v. Parker, Covert & Chidester (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 811 , under which denial of a motion for summary judgment or denial of a special motion to strike could be used to support a finding that probable cause existed for bringing the underlying action. After reviewing the legislative history of the 2005 amendment, the court concluded that the Legislature only overruled that portion of the Wilson decision that would allow a showing of probable cause based on denial of a special motion to strike. The rule that probable cause can be established by the denial of a motion for summary judgment in the underlying action was unaffected. Because a motion for summary judgment was denied in the underlying action, defendant could show probable cause for bringing that action and the trial court did not err in granting the special motion to strike the plaintiff's current malicious prosecution action, as she could not demonstrate a probability of success on the merits (150 Cal. App. 4th 527, 546-550) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.50

§ 147.50 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Default Judgment Does Not Establish Probable Cause for Bringing Underlying Action

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

THE FACT THAT A DEFAULT JUDGMENT WAS INITIALLY GRANTED TO THE PRESENT DEFENDANT IN THE UNDERLYING ACTION DOES NOT ESTABLISH THAT THE PRESENT DEFENDANT HAD PROBABLE CAUSE TO BRING THAT UNDERLYING ACTION.

Default Judgment Does Not Establish Probable Cause. A default judgment in the underlying action does not establish probable cause for bringing that action because the trial court does not have the benefit of the presentation of evidence on the merits by both sides in the lawsuit (Bergman v. Drum (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 11, 22, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 112).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a defendant's motion for summary judgment in a malicious prosecution action if the defendant's motion is based on the argument that probable cause for bringing the underlying action was established when the defendant was granted a default judgment in the underlying action.

This form may be combined with points pertaining to the specific procedural context in which these points are raised, such as in a motion for summary judgment. They may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, for example, counsel should include facts showing that a default judgment in the underlying action was entered against the plaintiff in the present malicious prosecution action after a default judgment proveup, and that the trial court in that underlying action did not have the benefit of evidence on the merits presented by both sides in the dispute.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Default Judgment Does Not Establish Probable Cause

In Bergman v. Drum (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 11, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 112 , the plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action against an attorney who had previously prosecuted an action against the plaintiff on behalf of an insurance company. The underlying action was an insurance subrogation action against the plaintiff and her daughter, stemming from an automobile accident involving a car driven by the daughter and another party who was insured by the insurance company. The attorney named the plaintiff as a defendant in the subrogation action because he suspected that she was the owner of the vehicle at the time of the accident, even though Department of Motor Vehicles (DMV) records indicated that the registered owner prior to the accident was the daughter's ex-husband. Even though the plaintiff had forwarded to the attorney copies of DMV printouts showing that she was not the registered owner of the vehicle at the time of the accident, the attorney continued to prosecute the action and obtained a default judgment against her. The plaintiff subsequently made a successful motion to set aside the default judgment. The attorney appealed this ruling and continued to pursue the action against the plaintiff, until the insurance company who had hired him instructed him to dismiss the plaintiff from the lawsuit with prejudice immediately. The plaintiff subsequently sued the attorney for malicious prosecution. The trial court denied the attorney's motion to strike the complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, which was affirmed on appeal, but subsequently granted summary judgment for the defendant on the grounds that he had probable cause to sue the plaintiff in the underlying action. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court first held that the trial court erred in granting summary judgment after the motion to strike had been denied, and upheld on appeal, because the two rulings were based on the same evidence, and the standard for denying a motion to strike was effectively the same as the standard for denying summary judgment. The law of the case in litigating the motion to strike had established that the plaintiff's evidence was sufficient to create a prima facie case for malicious prosecution that had a probability of success on the merits, and no new evidence had been presented on the motion for summary judgment to change that determination as a matter of law (129 Cal. App. 4th 11, 18, 21) . However, the earlier ruling on appeal did not address the issue of whether the initial default judgment obtained against the plaintiff in the underlying action established conclusively that the defendant had probable cause for prosecuting the action against the plaintiff. The court addressed that issue and held that it did not. The court reasoned that a default judgment does not establish probable cause for bringing that action because, unlike other rulings on the merits such as on a motion for summary judgment or a motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the trial court ruling on a motion for default judgment does not have the benefit of the presentation of evidence on the merits by both sides in the lawsuit. Without this adversarial element, a default judgment cannot establish probable cause (129 Cal. App. 4th 11, 21-22) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.51

§ 147.51 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Attorney Had No Probable Cause to Institute Action

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.46].

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE A REASONABLE ATTORNEY WOULD NOT HAVE CONSIDERED THE MALICIOUS ACTION THAT WAS BROUGHT AS BEING TENABLE ON THE THEORY ADVANCED, AND DEFENDANT ATTORNEY THEREFORE HAD NO PROBABLE CAUSE TO INITIATE THE MALICIOUS ACTION AGAINST PLAINTIFF.

A. Attorney's Probable Cause. [See § 147.34, Paragraph G].

[Optional] B. Probable-Cause Test Focuses Only on Theory Advanced in Action. Probable cause to bring a civil action, or the lack thereof, must be determined with regard to the theory on which the allegedly malicious civil action was actually based. The test for malicious prosecution is not whether the defendant had reasonable grounds to seek some kind of relief in the original action, but whether he or she had reasonable grounds for asserting the theory for relief contained in the complaint and tried to the factfinder. Thus, even if the defendant had grounds for a suit against the plaintiff but failed to prosecute the suit on those grounds and instead prosecuted the suit on untenable grounds, that defendant may be found liable of malicious prosecution (Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 644, 224 Cal. Rptr. 865).

[Optional] C. Legal Complexity Does Not Establish Probable Cause. A lawyer is not immune from liability for malicious prosecution simply because the area of law involved in the underlying case was complex and no case law with similar facts established that the claim was untenable (Franklin Mint Co. v. Manatt, Phelps & Phillips, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 313, 346, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Plaintiff _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment made by a defendant attorney who had instituted the malicious action against plaintiff, when a reasonable attorney would not have considered the action to be tenable on the theory advanced.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach declarations that set forth the relevant facts that oppose the granting of the motion, together with a separate statement that responds to each of the material facts contended by the moving party to be undisputed [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[b] Related Memoranda

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to the points in § 147.34.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Probable-Cause Test Focuses Only on Theory Advanced in Action

In Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 224 Cal. Rptr. 865 , defendant attorney had brought a wrongful death action on behalf of a client against plaintiff. The wrongful death action was based on a fatal incident in which the decedent was brought to a hospital, where she made suicidal gestures with a revolver. Plaintiff, her personal physician, arranged for the decedent to be placed in a private room rather than a locked ward. That evening, decedent hanged herself. Decedent's family sought the advice of defendant attorney, who instituted the wrongful death action against plaintiff. The jury found for plaintiff, who then commenced a malicious prosecution action against defendant. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted on the grounds that as a matter of law, defendant had acted with probable cause in instituting and prosecuting the wrongful death action. The court also granted summary judgment on a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the malicious prosecution cause of action and affirmed the judgment on the emotional distress cause of action. The court noted that defendant might have had a viable claim that plaintiff had committed malpractice on a negligence theory for advising that a suicidal patient be placed in an unattended room. However, that theory was not advanced in the complaint that was filed; rather, defendant claimed only that plaintiff had been statutorily negligent by violating some inapplicable section of the administrative code. The court held that the existence of some viable but unasserted claim was irrelevant to the question of probable cause to initiate and prosecute the action. Instead, probable cause to bring a civil action must be determined with regard to the theory on which the action was actually based. The test for malicious prosecution is not whether the defendant had reasonable grounds to seek some kind of relief in the original action, but whether he or she had reasonable grounds for asserting the theory for relief contained in the complaint and tried to the factfinder (179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 644) .

[b] Legal Complexity Does Not Establish Probable Cause

In Franklin Mint Co. v. Manatt, Phelps & Phillips, LLP (2010) 184 Cal. App. 4th 313, 109 Cal. Rptr. 3d 143 , plaintiff company brought a malicious prosecution action against the attorneys who had earlier prosecuted trademark dilution and false advertising claims against it after plaintiff had advertised and sold commemorative items and memorabilia following the death of Great Britain's Princess Diana. The attorneys in that underlying suit alleged on behalf of Princess Diana's Estate and the Diana, Princess of Wales Memorial Fund, a charitable fund established on her behalf, that plaintiff's use of Princess Diana's name and likeness on their products and advertising without authorization diluted the value of the Fund's own "mark" under federal trademark law. The attorneys also alleged under federal law that plaintiffs had carried out a large-scale program of deceptive advertising when it represented that the proceeds from the sale of certain items would be donated to "Diana, Princess of Wales' Charities," although no money from these sales had ever gone to the Memorial Fund. However, summary judgment was granted to the memorabilia company in the underlying action. On the trademark dilution claim, the district court concluded that the Fund was required to demonstrate that Diana, Princess of Wales had acquired secondary meaning as to charitable and humanitarian services, rather than primarily identifying the person, but the Fund could not make such a demonstration. As to the false advertising claim, the district court concluded that no false advertising had occurred, because evidence demonstrated that the amount collected from sales of the relevant memorabilia had in fact been given to charities supported by Princess Diana, albeit not to the Memorial Fund. Plaintiff thereafter filed its malicious prosecution action against the attorneys who brought those underlying claims. The trial court held that defendants had probable cause to bring the underlying causes of action and granted judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeals reversed the judgment. After reviewing federal law governing trademark dilution, the court of appeals concluded that no reasonable attorney would argue that either "Diana, Princess of Wales" or Princess Diana's likeness had acquired a secondary meaning as an indicator of goods and services, in this case, the promotion of certain charities, that subordinated the primary identification of her as an individual (184 Cal. App. 4th 313, 334-338) . The court also rejected defendants' argument that the underlying claim was brought with probable cause because of the complexity of the issues and the lack of directly controlling authority. The court noted that a lawyer is not immune from liability for malicious prosecution simply because the area of law involved in the underlying case is complex and no case law with similar facts establishes that the claim is untenable. Rather, lawyers are charged with responsibility for acquiring a reasonable understanding of the law governing the claim to be alleged, even if achieving that understanding is more difficult in a complex area of law. The court also recognized that an attorney arguing for an extension, modification, or reversal of existing law cannot simply ignore fundamental legal principles on which that law is based and argue that the underlying claim was nonetheless objectively tenable. In the case before it, the court held that the attorneys' underlying trademark dilution claim lacked probable cause because they could never have met a clear and fundamental principle of trademark law, that is, the requirement of a showing that a descriptive mark must have acquired a secondary meaning that predominates over its descriptive meaning in the eyes of the public (184 Cal. App. 4th 313, 346) . The court also concluded that the underlying false advertising claim lacked probable cause because the facts did not support the allegations made by the attorneys in that claim (184 Cal. App. 4th 313, 349-352) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Probable-Cause Test Focuses Only on Theory Advanced in Action

In Kreeger v. Wanland (2006) 141 Cal. App. 4th 826, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 790 , an automobile accident resulted in a civil suit for negligence brought against one of the participants in the accident. In the complaint, plaintiff made multiple allegations that could have been the basis for liability, but the only claim pursued was a claim that one particular defendant was negligent in causing the accident. This suit ended in favor of the defendants. Defendants then filed a suit for malicious prosecution against the plaintiffs in the first suit, alleging a lack of probable cause for claiming that the particular defendant was negligent in causing the accident. The defendants in the malicious prosecution action filed a successful motion to strike the complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. These defendants then retaliated with a malicious prosecution action of their own, claiming that there was no probable cause for the first malicious prosecution action. Defendants in this action filed a motion to strike this complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, but the trial court denied the motion on the grounds that plaintiffs had demonstrated a probability of success on the merits. On appeal, defendants argued that they had probable cause for bringing their underlying malicious prosecution action because plaintiffs in the original auto accident lawsuit lacked probable cause to support some of the allegations in the original complaint for that lawsuit. However, because they did not base their malicious prosecution action on the lack of probable cause to support those particular allegations, the court of appeal rejected that as probable cause for the first malicious prosecution action. Because probable cause existed for the claim upon which the original lawsuit was tried, and the plaintiffs in the first malicious prosecution action lacked probable cause to challenge that fact, the plaintiffs in the second malicious prosecution action had established a probability of prevailing on their cause of action (141 Cal. App. 4th 826, 835-836) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.52

§ 147.52 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--No Probable Cause to Institute Underlying Civil Action--Defendant Was on Notice of Lack of Factual Support for Fundamental Element of Claim

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.46.]

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT WAS PUT ON NOTICE THAT A FUNDAMENTAL FACTUAL ELEMENT OF ITS UNDERLYING CASE WAS DISPUTED AND BECAUSE THE DEFENDANT DID NOT POSSESS EITHER EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A FAVORABLE JUDGMENT ON THAT ELEMENT OR INFORMATION SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT AN INFERENCE THAT SUCH EVIDENCE COULD BE OBTAINED.

Defendant Lacked Factual Support to Prosecute Underlying Action. If the defendant (the plaintiff in the underlying action) is put on notice that a fundamental factual element of its case is disputed, probable cause to prosecute the action is lacking if the defendant did not possess either evidence sufficient to support a favorable judgment on that element or information sufficient to support an inference that such evidence could be obtained (Arcaro v. Silva & Silva Enters. Corp. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 152, 158-159, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a malicious prosecution action if the grounds for the opposition are that the defendant lacked probable cause to bring the underlying civil action because the defendant was on notice that a fundamental factual element of its case was disputed, but the defendant nevertheless prosecuted the case even without evidence sufficient to support a favorable judgment on that element or information sufficient to support an inference that such evidence could be obtained.

This form can be modified for use in another procedural context, such as for use in a trial or appellate brief.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law stated. Thus, counsel should describe those facts that demonstrate that the defendant knew that a fundamental factual element of its underlying claim had been disputed by the plaintiff and that defendant lacked evidence to support that element of its underlying claim and lacked information to support an inference that any such evidence could be obtained.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Lacked Factual Support to Prosecute Underlying Action

In Arcaro v. Silva & Silva Enters. Corp. (1999) 77 Cal. App. 4th 152, 91 Cal. Rptr. 2d 433 , the plaintiff brought a malicious prosecution action against a debt collection agency for prosecuting an underlying debt collection action against the plaintiff. Before the defendant debt collection agency initiated its underlying action for debt collection, the plaintiff had informed one of its representatives that the signature on the relevant credit application and guarantee was not his, but had been forged. The plaintiff also explained to the original creditor that the credit application had most likely been filled out by another specified party who had at one time shared an office with the plaintiff and therefore would have had access to the information needed to fill out the application. However, other than verifying the plaintiff's social security number, hearing one reference by the alleged forger that the plaintiff was his "partner," and sending a demand letter for payment to the plaintiff that was not returned, the debt collection agency took no other steps to investigate the plaintiff's claim that his signature had been forged. Conversely, the plaintiff had additionally sent to the attorney for the collection agency ten signature samples that allegedly demonstrated that the signature on the credit guarantee was not his. Eventually, the debt collection action was dismissed by the collection agency, and the plaintiff later instituted the malicious prosecution action. That action was tried to the court, which ruled for the plaintiff and found that the signature on the credit application guarantee was a forgery and that the collection action was brought without probable cause. The collection agency appealed the conclusion that the action had been brought without probable cause.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court first noted that if the plaintiff had not denied the authenticity of his signature, the debt collection agency would have had probable cause to file the underlying collection action. However, the plaintiff had denied its authenticity, and the court concluded that in light of the steps the plaintiff took to disavow liability for the debt, the collection agency was on notice before it filed its collection action that the plaintiff's forgery claim was not a sham. Therefore, the collection agency would have been required to authenticate the plaintiff's signature to prevail at trial, but knew that it did not have the evidence to do so (77 Cal. App. 4th 152, 157) . The court held that if the defendant (the plaintiff in the underlying action) is put on notice that a fundamental factual element of its case is disputed, the defendant should not proceed in the absence of evidence sufficient to support a favorable judgment on that element or information sufficient to support an inference that such evidence can be obtained. Because the defendant lacked an objective, reasonable basis for believing that the plaintiff's signature was genuine, and lacked information that could lead to evidence proving that the signature was genuine, the defendant lacked probable cause to prosecute the collection action (77 Cal. App. 4th 152, 158-159) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defendant Lacked Factual Support to Prosecute Underlying Action

In Citi-Wide Preferred Couriers, Inc. v. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. (2003) 114 Cal. App. 4th 906, 8 Cal. Rptr. 3d 199 , the plaintiff was an employer that sued its workers' compensation insurance carrier for malicious prosecution, based on an underlying debt collection action in which the carrier sought to recover $7,900 in unpaid premiums that the employer allegedly owed. During discovery in the underlying action, the carrier admitted that only about $1,900 was owed, but the carrier continued to seek to recover $7,900. When the employer appeared with attorneys ready to go to trial, the carrier admitted that the premiums were paid in full and dismissed the suit. Although the trial court dismissed the malicious prosecution action based on the employer's purported admission in the underlying action that it had owed about $1,500 in premiums, the court of appeal reversed. The court of appeal held that a malicious prosecution action may be prosecuted if the creditor in an underlying debt collection action seeks to recover much more than the creditor had probable cause to seek to recover from the debtor. The court also concluded that it was for the jury to decide what the carrier knew when it sought $7,900 in debt and that the trial court erred in dismissing the action (114 Cal. App. 4th 906, 913-914) .

In Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 Cal. App. 4th 1367, 1 Cal. Rptr. 3d 116 , the plaintiffs brought an action against the former owner of a house that the plaintiffs had purchased at a sheriff's sale. The plaintiffs' complaint, which included an action for malicious prosecution, was based on the defendant's filing several lawsuits against the plaintiffs, as well as recording notices of lis pendens against the purchased property, all of which prevented the plaintiffs from reselling the property when property values were higher. The malicious prosecution cause of action was based solely on an underlying civil rights action in which the defendant alleged that the plaintiffs were "in cahoots" with the property manager, his company, and the sheriff to conceal the fact that the plaintiffs were taking title to the property for the benefit of the property manager and his company. Because the property manager and his company were the judgment creditors to the debt that triggered the foreclosure, such a scheme, according to the defendant, was set up to avoid an exception to the rule of Code Civ. Proc. § 701.680(a), which otherwise finalizes a sale of property to satisfy a judgment. However, the defendant admitted that he had no evidence to support his theory, which was based only on his suspicions. The court of appeal rejected the defendant's argument that he was merely acting on counsel's advice and affirmed a jury finding for the plaintiffs on the malicious prosecution claim. The court concluded that there was sufficient evidence for a jury to find that there was no probable cause to bring the civil rights action against the plaintiffs, in the absence of any evidence to support the claimed conspiracy (109 Cal. App. 4th 1367, 1383-1384) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.53

§ 147.53 Opposing Defendant's Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Malicious Prosecution Action--Attorney Continued to Prosecute Underlying Action After Discovering Lack of Probable Cause

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.46.]

THE MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE ALTHOUGH DEFENDANT MAY HAVE HAD PROBABLE CAUSE FOR INITIATING THE UNDERLYING ACTION AGAINST PLAINTIFF, DEFENDANT CONTINUED TO PROSECUTE THE UNDERLYING ACTION EVEN AFTER DISCOVERING THAT THE ACTION LACKED PROBABLE CAUSE.

A. Defendant Lacked Probable Cause to Continue Prosecuting Underlying Action. An attorney may be liable for malicious prosecution for continuing to prosecute a claim after the attorney discovers that the action in fact lacks probable cause, even if the attorney had probable cause to initiate the action (Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 970, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802).

[Optional] B. Filing of Appeal is Continuation of Action. A plaintiff's attorney may be liable for malicious prosecution for filing an appeal in a case after the attorney discovers that the action lacks probable cause (Soukup v. Law Offices of Herbert Hafif (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 260, 297, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 139 P.3d 30).

[Optional] C. Cocounsel Joining After Suit is Filed May Be Liable for Failing to Take Corrective Steps. An attorney joining in as cocounsel for a plaintiff in a case that has already been filed may be held liable for malicious prosecution if failing to take corrective steps immediately after associating in as cocounsel to cease prosecution of claims that lack probable cause and have been brought maliciously (see Sycamore Ridge Apartments LLC v. Naumann (2008) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 1407-1411, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment made by an attorney who is a defendant in a malicious prosecution action, if the defendant continued to prosecute an underlying action against the plaintiff even after discovering that the action lacked probable cause. Support for this proposition was established by the California Supreme Court in Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 970, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802 , which has been applied retroactively [see Bergman v. Drum (2005) 129 Cal. App. 4th 11, 23-24, 28 Cal. Rptr. 3d 112] .

This form may be modified for use in another procedural context, such as in opposition to a motion to strike brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised. Thus, counsel should include facts showing that the defendant, after initiating the underlying action, discovered facts establishing that the action in fact was not supported by probable cause.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant Lacked Probable Cause to Continue Prosecuting Underlying Action

In Zamos v. Stroud (2004) 32 Cal. 4th 958, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 54, 87 P.3d 802 , the plaintiffs were two attorneys who had previously represented a homeowner in a foreclosure action. On the advice of the plaintiffs, the homeowner had accepted a settlement against some of the defendants in the foreclosure action, in return for releasing all claims on the house. The terms of the settlement agreement were stated on the record before the court at two separate hearings. Two years later, the homeowner sued the plaintiffs for fraud and other related claims. The homeowner alleged that the plaintiffs had made representations to her to induce her to accept the settlement, including representations that they would have her house returned to her and would continue to represent her in the foreclosure action and another action, but that the plaintiffs never kept those promises. After the fraud action was filed, the plaintiffs sent transcripts of the foreclosure hearings to the homeowner's new attorneys, which showed, contrary to the homeowner's claims, that she was told and agreed on the record that she was releasing all claims to the house and that the plaintiffs would cease to represent her. Despite these transcripts, the homeowner and her attorneys refused to dismiss the fraud action, which went to trial and eventually failed when the trial court granted a motion for nonsuit. The plaintiffs then filed a malicious prosecution action against their former client, her attorneys in the fraud action, and two witnesses in that action. The attorneys and the witnesses filed a motion to strike the complaint against them pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the so-called anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court granted the motion, but the court of appeal reversed as to the former client's attorneys, concluding that the plaintiffs had shown a probability of success on the merits as to those defendants because an attorney may be liable for malicious prosecution if the attorney continues to prosecute an action after discovery of facts showing that the lawsuit has no merit. The former client's attorneys appealed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal. The Court agreed that an attorney may be liable for malicious prosecution for continuing to prosecute a claim after the attorney discovers that the action in fact lacks probable cause, even if the attorney originally had probable cause to initiate the action (32 Cal. 4th 958, 960) . The Court noted that Restatement (Second) of Torts agreed with that conclusion, as did every other state that had decided the issue (32 Cal. 4th 958, 967) . The Court also noted that the principles underlying the tort of malicious prosecution supported its conclusion, because holding an attorney liable for the damages a party incurs as a result of an attorney prosecuting a civil claim after learning the claim has no merit will encourage the voluntary dismissal of meritless claims at the earliest stage possible. An attorney can avoid liability when learning that a claim lacks probable cause by dismissing the suit at that point, or by withdrawing as attorney in the lawsuit (32 Cal. 4th 958, 969-970) . The Court went on to find that the plaintiffs had presented evidence in opposition to the motion to strike that, if believed, was sufficient to support a judgment on the malicious prosecution claim brought against the former client's attorneys. Therefore, the motion to strike should have been denied as to those defendants (32 Cal. 4th 958, 973) .

[b] Filing of Appeal is Continuation of Action

In Soukup v. Law Offices of Herbert Hafif (2006) 39 Cal. 4th 260, 46 Cal. Rptr. 3d 638, 139 P.3d 30 , an employer and his attorneys filed a lawsuit against multiple former employees for breach of fiduciary duty, defamation, malicious prosecution, and tortious interference with business relationships. One of the defendant employees was successful on a motion to strike all causes of action brought against her under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. This employee then filed an action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process against her former employer and his attorneys. The employer and his attorneys filed a motion to strike of their own under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, but the trial court denied the motion. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the anti-SLAPP statute applied and the plaintiff had failed to demonstrate a probability of success on the merits. Plaintiff appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. While the appeal was pending, the Legislature added Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 to govern SLAPPback suits, defined as actions for malicious prosecution or abuse of process arising from an underlying action that has been dismissed under the anti-SLAPP statute. Under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18(h), a SLAPPback suit is not subject to a motion to strike if the filing or maintaining of the underlying action is illegal as a matter of law. The Court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 425.18 applied to the action, but that the defendant failed to show that the filing or maintaining of the underlying action was illegal as a matter of law (39 Cal. 4th 260, 280-290) . Thus, the plaintiff had to demonstrate a probability of success on the merits in order to defeat the motion to strike brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The court held that plaintiff had met this burden. Among other arguments made, one of the attorney defendants argued that he could not be held liable for malicious prosecution because his role in the underlying action was limited to appellate counsel. The Court rejected this argument, noting that under the rationale of its earlier decision in Zamos v. Stroud, described under [a], above, the filing of an appeal is the "continuation of an action." Thus, a plaintiff's attorney who maintains an appeal after learning that the underlying action lacks probable cause may be held liable for malicious prosecution. The Court also noted evidence suggesting that the attorney's role was not limited to appellate counsel as he had claimed (39 Cal. 4th 260, 296-297) .

[c] Cocounsel Joining After Suit is Filed May Be Liable for Failing to Take Corrective Steps

In Sycamore Ridge Apartments LLC v. Naumann (2008) 157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 561 , attorneys filed a suit in representation of multiple tenants and employees of an apartment owner, alleging multiple causes of action based on dismal living conditions at the apartment and resulting physical ailments, as well as employment-related torts such as wrongful termination. Unfortunately, the attorneys listed both tenants and employees as plaintiffs on all causes of action, even though some of the causes of action clearly had no application to all plaintiffs. After the suit had been filed, other attorneys joined as cocounsel for the limited purpose of assisting in prosecution of toxic mold claims. After one of the tenant plaintiffs dismissed herself from the suit, the apartment owner brought a malicious prosecution action against the original attorneys and their cocounsel, arguing that there was no basis for asserting many of the causes of action on behalf of the dismissed plaintiff. Defendant attorneys filed a motion to strike the malicious prosecution action under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the anti-SLAPP statute. The trial court denied the motion to strike as to the original attorneys, but granted the motion as to the cocounsel who joined after suit was filed. Both the apartment owners and the attorneys who filed the underlying action appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion to strike as to the attorneys who filed the underlying action, and reversed the granting of the motion as to their cocounsel. The court held that the apartment owner had demonstrated a sufficient probability of success on the merits to withstand the motion to strike, even as applied to cocounsel, at least for any damage sustained during the time that cocounsel was associated with the suit and failed to take corrective steps. While stopping short of stating that the landowner should win at trial on the merits of the malicious prosecution claims (157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 1392 n.1), the court noted that cocounsel joining after a suit is filed should be familiar with the client's claims, and whether or not probable cause exists for bringing or sustaining such claims, before agreeing to join. By associating into the case as cocounsel, those attorneys became the proponents of all of the plaintiffs' claims, including those that were obviously untenable. However, there was no evidence that cocounsel took immediate steps to dismiss the meritless claims. The court similarly concluded that malice could be inferred on the part of cocounsel if they knew of the relevant facts and failed to take immediate steps to dismiss this plaintiff, or if they were not aware of the relevant facts but indifferently failed to adequately familiarize themselves with the case before associating in as cocounsel (157 Cal. App. 4th 1385, 1407-1411) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureSummary JudgmentMotions for Summary JudgmentGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionDefensesTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsMalicious ProsecutionElementsProbable CauseGeneral Overview

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
A. Malicious Prosecution

14-147 California Points & Authorities §§ 147.54-147.69

[Reserved]

§§ 147.54[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.70

§ 147.70 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Improper Use of Process Alleged

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF DEMURRER
_____ [name],	)	TO COMPLAINT
Plaintiff,	)	[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a)]
vs.	)	[Limited Civil Case]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR ABUSE OF PROCESS IN THAT IT FAILS TO INDICATE THAT THE PROCESS WAS USED FOR AN IMPROPER PURPOSE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Improper Use Requirement. One of the required elements of the tort of abuse of process is a use of the process in a wrongful manner, that is in a manner not proper in the regular conduct of the proceedings (Seidner v. 1551 Greenfield Owners Ass'n (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 895, 903, 166 Cal. Rptr. 803 ; Ion Equip. Corp. v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361).

C. Bad Motive or Malice Insufficient. Unless process is used for something more than a proper use with a bad motive or malice, a cause of action for abuse of process does not lie (Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 302, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 ; Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 887, 226 P.2d 739).

[Optional] D. Exercise of Right to Appeal Not Sufficient. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper when defendant has done nothing more than exercise his or her right to appeal (Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group (1985) 41 Cal. 3d 782, 792-793, 226 Cal. Rptr. 90, 718 P.2d 77 ; Tellefsen v. Key Sys. Transit Lines (1961) 198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 613, 17 Cal. Rptr. 919).

[Optional] E. Proper Use of Attachment Not Sufficient. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper when defendant has used a writ of attachment for a proper purpose in the regular conduct of the proceeding (Coy v. Advance Automatic Sales Co. (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 313, 318-320, 39 Cal. Rptr. 476 ; Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 886, 226 P.2d 739).

[Optional] F. Proper Examination of Judgment Debtor Not Sufficient. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper when a judgment creditor's acts in examining a judgment debtor are within the legitimate scope of inquiry during supplementary proceedings brought in aid of execution (Kyne v. Eustice (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 627, 632-634, 30 Cal. Rptr. 391).

[Optional] G. Mere Filing of _____ [Complaint or Cross Complaint] Not Sufficient. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper when defendant has done nothing more than file a _____ [complaint or cross complaint] and the process has not been misused (Seidner v. 1551 Greenfield Owners Ass'n (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 895, 903-905, 166 Cal. Rptr. 803 ; Muller v. Muller (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 731, 733, 23 Cal. Rptr. 900).

[Optional] H. Proper Use of Summons Not Sufficient. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper when the complaint does not allege that a summons was used for any purpose other than that for which it is intended to be used (Christensen v. Younger (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 613, 617-620, 120 Cal. Rptr. 923).

[Optional] I. Application for Receiver Not Sufficient. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper when the complaint only alleges that defendant requested the appointment of a receiver (Spira v. Superior Court (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 536, 539-542, 116 Cal. Rptr. 93).

[Optional] J. Levy of Writ of Execution Not Sufficient. The levy of a writ of execution to enforce a judgment is a proper use of process and thus not the basis for an action for abuse of process, even though plaintiff alleges that defendant was aware that the debt underlying the judgment had been settled (Lacy v. Laurentide Fin. Corp. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 251, 255-256, 104 Cal. Rptr. 547).

[Optional] K. Continued Pursuit of Meritless Litigation for Improper Collateral Purpose Not Actionable. Continuing to pursue litigation that has been determined to be meritless, such as through the filing of an amended complaint or a motion for attorney's fees, is not actionable as an abuse of process (Ramona Unified Sch. Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 510, 521, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 381).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,

_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint in an action for abuse of process when no improper use of the process has been alleged.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of general demurrer based on the fact that no improper use of process has been alleged, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Use Requirement

In Seidner v. 1551 Greenfield Owners Ass'n (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 895, 166 Cal. Rptr. 803 , a homeowner's association filed an action against the developer of its condominiums for breach of implied warranty. The developer cross complained for abuse of process. After demurrers were sustained to the cross complaint and it was dismissed, cross complainant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the elements of the tort of abuse of process are an ulterior motive in using the process and use of the process in an improper manner (108 Cal. App. 3d 895, 903) . It then held that the mere filing of a lawsuit is not sufficient as the basis of an action for abuse of process because there was no authority that held that filing a lawsuit was abuse of process absent some further action of abuse by defendant (108 Cal. App. 3d 895, 903-904) .

Ion Equip. Corp. v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361 , involved a cause of action for abuse of process based on causing service of a writ of execution while enforcement of the judgment was stayed. Defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings was based on failure to state a cause of action, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that the essential elements of a cause of action for abuse of process are an ulterior motive and a willful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceedings (110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876) . The court then held that plaintiff had not adequately pleaded an ulterior motive or wilful misuse of process (110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876) .

[b] Bad Motive or Malice Insufficient

The facts of Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , are discussed in § 147.71[3][a]. The court of appeal stated that an evil motive in serving process does not make the service of process actionable (20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 301-302) .

The facts and procedural background of Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 226 P.2d 739 , are discussed in § 147.70[3][d]. The court of appeal stated that if a party uses process for the use for which it was intended, he or she is ordinarily not liable, notwithstanding a vicious or vindictive motive. There is no abuse of process if it is used for its proper purpose even though malice is present (101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 886) .

[c] Exercise of Right to Appeal Not Sufficient

In Coleman v. Gulf Ins. Group (1985) 41 Cal. 3d 782, 226 Cal. Rptr. 90, 718 P.2d 77 , a plaintiff alleged that an insurer filed a meritless appeal for the dual purpose of delaying the case and coercing the plaintiff to settle. Plaintiff did settle for less than the amount of the judgment while the appeal was pending. Later, the plaintiff brought suit asserting various causes of action including abuse of process. The trial court sustained the insurer's demurrer without leave to amend and dismissed the action. On appeal, the court held that the abuse of process action could not lie because a showing of an improper motive in appealing is not sufficient. Rather, a showing of improper use of process must also be made. The court cited Tellefsen v. Key Sys. Transit Lines (1961) 198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 613, 17 Cal. Rptr. 919 , stating that that case had correctly held that the taking of a frivolous appeal is not enough to constitute an abuse of process (41 Cal. 3d 782, 792) .

In Tellefsen v. Key Sys. Transit Lines (1961) 198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 17 Cal. Rptr. 919 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment for defendant after the trial court sustained a demurrer to a complaint for abuse of process. Plaintiff had alleged that defendant had maliciously and frivolously taken an appeal from a judgment for money damages in a previous action in order to take advantage of plaintiff's need, as well as to set an example for other litigants and thus obtain cheap settlements. The court of appeal stated that even though abuse of process could be applied to the appellate process, the defendant did nothing more than exercise its right to appeal, although with an alleged malicious intent (198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 613) . Plaintiff did not allege any other action besides the taking of the appeal, and an improper motive in obtaining the process is not enough to afford ground for an action for abuse of process if the process were regularly issued (198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 613) . Moreover, merely taking a frivolous appeal is not enough to constitute an abuse of process since there was no allegation of any act of the defendant in using the appeal for other than its proper purpose (198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 615) .

[d] Proper Use of Attachment Not Sufficient

In Coy v. Advance Automatic Sales Co. (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 313, 39 Cal. Rptr. 476 , the complaint alleged that defendants had brought an action against plaintiff for an amount greatly in excess of the amount in dispute, caused a writ of attachment to issue and be enforced, and tried to steal plaintiff's vending machine business after the machines were attached. After a verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted a motion for a new trial. Plaintiff appealed and the trial court affirmed. It held that the complaint and the proof at trial did not establish that plaintiff had a cause of action for abuse of process. The attachment was obtained for a proper purpose and defendant's alleged bad motive was not sufficient to constitute abuse of process (228 Cal. App. 2d 313, 318-319) . The court held that if plaintiff could establish that defendant actually had sued for more than was in dispute and caused the attachment, plaintiff would have a cause of action for malicious prosecution, but that plaintiff had not alleged the elements necessary for malicious prosecution (228 Cal. App. 2d 313, 318-319) .

In Pimentel v. Houk (1951) 101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 226 P.2d 739 , plaintiff had sued defendant for the collection of two promissory notes and had levied a writ of attachment against defendant's farming equipment. Defendant cross complained on the theory that the attachment was not issued for the purpose of collecting the alleged debt sued upon but for the purpose of destroying defendant financially. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the cross complaint and entered a judgment dismissing it.

The court of appeal affirmed and stated that plaintiff had used the writ of attachment for a proper purpose in the regular conduct of the proceeding (101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 886) . Defendant did not allege that the attachment covered property exempt from execution, that it covered an excessive amount of defendant's property, that the debt alleged to be owed by defendant was otherwise secured, or that defendant requested that the levy be made on other property. Hence, on the face of the record, plaintiff was fully within his rights in causing the writ of attachment to be issued and served; the fact that he may have had an ulterior motive of destroying defendant financially did not render the use of the writ improper in the regular conduct of the proceeding (101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 886) . Even if plaintiff had attached the property without malice, the effect would have been the same (101 Cal. App. 2d 884, 886) .

[e] Proper Examination of Judgment Debtor Not Sufficient

In Kyne v. Eustice (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 627, 30 Cal. Rptr. 391 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of dismissal after the trial court had sustained a demurrer to a complaint for abuse of process. Plaintiff alleged that defendant's use of the procedure provided by former Code Civ. Proc. § 714 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 708.110] by which the judgment creditor may require the judgment debtor to appear and answer questions concerning his or her property before a judge or referee was improper. Specifically, plaintiff alleged that she was questioned concerning the names of her customers and told that they would be telephoned. The court of appeal held that the questions were proper and that the customers could be telephoned. Therefore, the complaint did not state a cause of action for abuse of process because the defendant had used the examination procedure properly and had asked proper questions (215 Cal. App. 2d 627, 632-635) .

[f] Mere Filing of Complaint or Cross Complaint Not Sufficient

Seidner v. 1551 Greenfield Owners Ass'n (1980) 108 Cal. App. 3d 895, 166 Cal. Rptr. 803 , is discussed under § 147.70[3][a].

In Muller v. Muller (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 731, 23 Cal. Rptr. 900 , plaintiff had brought an action to quiet title to real property. Defendant cross complained for an injunction and for damages for abuse of process, and the trial court sustained a demurrer to the cross complaint and dismissed it. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that defendant's allegations that the quiet title action had been brought for the primary purpose of harassing him and causing him financial loss were not sufficient to state a cause of action since there must be some misuse of the process beyond its proper scope (206 Cal. App. 2d 731, 733) .

[g] Proper Use of Summons Not Sufficient

In Christensen v. Younger (1975) 47 Cal. App. 3d 613, 120 Cal. Rptr. 923 , plaintiff was an attorney who sued the State Director of Health Care Services and the Attorney General for abuse of process. The defendants had brought suit against the plaintiff and his client for reimbursement of Medi-Cal benefits received by the client as a result of an automobile accident, and the plaintiff alleged that the suit had been maintained to force him to pay over money which was received by him for attorney's fees from the settlement of the client's cause of action. The court of appeal affirmed a judgment dismissing the cause of action. It stated that plaintiff had failed to allege that the summons was used for any purpose other than that for which a summons is intended (47 Cal. App. 3d 613, 617-620) .

[h] Application for Receiver Not Sufficient

In Spira v. Superior Court (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 536, 116 Cal. Rptr. 93 , plaintiffs alleged that they had entered into a written agreement of partnership with defendant, but that three years after the execution of the written agreement, defendant took sole control of the business and sequestered its assets. Plaintiffs sought a declaration of rights and an accounting from defendant, and they also requested the appointment of a receiver. The trial court denied the application for a receiver. The defendant then cross complained for damages for abuse of process based on plaintiffs' application for the appointment of a receiver. Plaintiffs' demurrer to the cross complaint was overruled, but the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order overruling the demurrer and to enter an order sustaining the demurrer. The court stated that the defendant had made no showing that the receivership sought by plaintiffs was not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. It did state, however, that after the termination of the action, it might be possible for either plaintiffs or defendant to complain for malicious prosecution if there had been malice and no probable cause in the filing of either the complaint or cross complaint (41 Cal. App. 3d 536, 540-542) .

[i] Levy of Writ of Execution Not Sufficient

In Lacy v. Laurentide Fin. Corp. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 251, 104 Cal. Rptr. 547 , plaintiff's complaint alleged that defendant had damaged plaintiff by causing a writ of execution to be levied on plaintiff's automobile, even though defendant knew that the debt underlying the judgment had been paid. A summary judgment was entered in favor of defendant and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal held that a cause of action was not stated for abuse of process because there was no allegation that the writ of execution was used for an improper purpose or for an improper motive (28 Cal. App. 3d 251, 255) . The court did hold, however, that plaintiff had stated a cause of action for extrinsic fraud and reversed the judgment (28 Cal. App. 3d 251, 255-260) .

[j] Continued Pursuit of Meritless Litigation for Improper Collateral Purpose Not Actionable

In Ramona Unified Sch. Dist. v. Tsiknas (2005) 135 Cal. App. 4th 510, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 381 , a school district sought to construct a new school and, in the course of approving the project, issued a mitigated negative declaration pursuant to the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). The district subsequently proposed an alteration to the project (switching from a septic sewer system to city sewer), but concluded that the change was not significant enough to warrant further environmental impact documentation. A neighborhood group filed a writ petition challenging this decision, followed by a first amended petition, but the court ruled in favor of the district on the grounds that the claims were time-barred and, in any event, the district admitted that it was no longer planning to switch the plans. The group then filed a second amended petition. The district successfully demurred to this petition. Although the petition had been dismissed, the local group sought attorney's fees under the private attorney general doctrine, arguing that their petition had been effective in causing the district to abandon its changes without complying with the CEQA process. The court denied the motion for fees. The district then sued the group and its attorney for abuse of process and barratry, based on its filing of the second amended petition and motion for attorney's fees. The district argued that these actions constituted the continued pursuit of clearly meritless litigation for the improper purpose of trying to get the district abandon the project or change its location. The group filed a successful motion to strike the district's complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16. The district appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court concluded that the initiation of a lawsuit, even if for an improper purpose, does not support a claim for abuse of process, even though it could expose the party to liability for malicious prosecution. As an extension of this principle, the court held that continued pursuit of meritless litigation for an improper collateral purpose is also insufficient to support a cause of action for abuse of process. Noting that earlier case law had established that the filing of a frivolous appeal was insufficient to support an abuse of process claim, the court concluded that the fact that a plaintiff chooses to file an amended complaint, rather than appeal an adverse decision rendered against a prior complaint, does not render the action subject to an abuse of process claim, even if the amended complaint is frivolous (135 Cal. App. 4th 510, 521). The court recognized that the gravamen of the district's complaint was really that of a malicious prosecution claim, but that the district was precluded from asserting such a claim because government entities are barred from bringing malicious prosecution claims against former plaintiffs (135 Cal. App. 4th 510, 522).

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Use Requirement

Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 , was an action by a residential developer against an adjoining homeowner and his attorney for abuse of process based on the homeowner's having filed an administrative mandate proceeding under the California Environmental Quality Act [Pub. Res. Code § 21000 et seq.], which challenged the sufficiency of the environmental impact report relied on by the city in approving plaintiff's proposed subdivision. Plaintiff alleged that the defendants instituted the environmental proceeding and continued to prosecute it for the purpose of coercing a monetary settlement rather than to further environmental matters and that defendants had offered to dismiss the proceeding in return for plaintiff's payment of money or conveyance to him of a designated lot. In affirming a summary judgment for the defendants, the Supreme Court said that the two fundamental elements of the tort of abuse of process are (1) an ulterior purpose and (2) a willful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding (42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1168) . The Court held that while a defendant's act of improperly instituting or maintaining an action may, in an appropriate case, give rise to a cause of action for malicious prosecution, the mere filing or maintenance of a lawsuit, even for an improper purpose, is not a proper basis for an abuse of process action (42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1169) . The Court explained that if the filing of an action for an improper "ulterior" purpose were itself sufficient to give rise to an abuse of process action, the "lack-of-probable cause" element of the malicious prosecution tort would be completely negated and that even if an individual could demonstrate that he or she had reasonable cause to believe that the initial lawsuit had merit when the action was filed, he or she would still face potential liability under an abuse of process theory (42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1169-1170) . Because the lack-of-probable-cause requirement in the malicious prosecution tort plays a crucial role in protecting the right to seek judicial relief, this element may not be circumvented through expansion of the abuse of process tort to encompass the alleged improper filing of a lawsuit (42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1170) .

In Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , a defense attorney represented a client charged with the sexual battery of plaintiff. In the course of that representation the defense attorney served a subpoena duces tecum for the plaintiff's mental health records on a mental health treatment facility. The facility mistakenly sent plaintiff's records directly to the defense attorney instead of the trial court and the attorney, knowing the private and confidential nature of the documents, read them, transmitted them to the defense psychiatrist and used them in cross-examining plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the attorney and his client for among other things, abuse of process. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint with leave to amend. Plaintiff elected not to amend her complaint and her action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff's complaint failed to state a cause of action for abuse of process. Specifically, the court found that plaintiff failed to allege that the defense attorney used the subpoena process in a wrongful manner. It reasoned that there was nothing improper about subpoenaing plaintiff's mental health records, and that the defense attorney did not direct the facility to send the records to him instead of the trial court, they were sent by mistake. The court acknowledged that in this case the ordinary procedure for discovering the mental health records of a prosecuting witness was not followed, but ruled that failure to follow these procedures did not by itself give rise to an action for abuse of process (55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1303) .

[b] Bad Motive or Malice Insufficient

The facts and procedural background of Friedman v. Stadum (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 217 Cal. Rptr. 585 , are discussed in § 147.20[3][h]. The court of appeal held that a plaintiff in a civil malicious prosecution action must establish that the underlying proceeding terminated in his or her favor (171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 778) . The court also held that to state a cause of action for abuse of process, a plaintiff must allege a willful act in the use of the process not proper in the regular conduct of the proceeding. Thus, in holding that the trial court properly sustained defendant's demurrer, the court of appeal noted that plaintiff did not specifically allege a willful misuse of process. The fact that plaintiff alleged malice and intent to harm in his malicious prosecution cause of action did not satisfy the element of willful misuse of an abuse of process action (171 Cal. App. 3d 775, 779) .

[c] Mere Filing of Complaint or Cross Complaint Not Sufficient

The facts and procedural background of Drasin v. Jacoby & Meyers (1984) 150 Cal. App. 3d 481, 197 Cal. Rptr. 768 , are discussed in § 147.20[3][i]. The attorney filing the complaint for malicious prosecution argued on appeal that he should have been allowed to amend his complaint to allege abuse of process. The court of appeal rejected the argument, finding that the party being sued for malicious prosecution had merely filed a complaint for malpractice. The court held that the mere filing of a complaint, even in combination with a desire to coerce a settlement, cannot constitute an abuse of process (150 Cal. App. 3d 481, 485) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
TortsIntentional TortsGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElementsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessRemedies

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.71

§ 147.71 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Insufficient Allegation of Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.70].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR ABUSE OF PROCESS BECAUSE IT FAILS TO ADEQUATELY ALLEGE THAT PLAINTIFF USED THE PROCESS WITH AN ULTERIOR MOTIVE TO OBTAIN A COLLATERAL ADVANTAGE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage Required. A cause of action for abuse of process is not stated where the complaint does not allege that the plaintiff had an ulterior motive in using the process to obtain a collateral advantage (Ion Equip. Corp. v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361 ; Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 301-302, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577).

C. Bad Motive or Malice Insufficient. [See § 147.70, Paragraph C].

[Optional] D. Manner of Service Not Collateral Advantage. A demurrer to a cause of action for abuse of process is proper where the action complains only of the manner of service of process rather than the fact that process was misused to obtain a collateral advantage over plaintiff. The harassing way in which process is served is not a collateral advantage (Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 301-302, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577).

E. Humiliation, Embarrassment and Intimidation Insufficient. Mere vexation or harassment are not objectives sufficient to give rise to the tort of abuse of process (Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1303, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint in an action for abuse of process which does not contain sufficient allegations of using the process with an ulterior motive to obtain collateral advantage.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage Required

In Ion Equip. Corp. v. Nelson (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 168 Cal. Rptr. 361 , defendant in the abuse of process action had obtained a judgment against plaintiff in the abuse of process action. Plaintiff appealed the underlying action and obtained a stay of judgment. The court of appeal dismissed the appeal, but before its remittitur was entered, defendant caused a writ of execution to be served on plaintiff. Thereafter, plaintiff sued for abuse of process resulting from having the writ served before the dismissal of the appeal was final. Defendant was granted judgment on the pleadings. Plaintiff appealed and the court of appeal affirmed. It held that an abuse of process complaint required an allegation of an ulterior motive in use of the process to obtain a benefit extraneous or a result not within the legitimate scope of the process (110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876) . It found that the only motive for defendant's use of the writ of execution was to enforce its judgment, which is the purpose of the writ. The fact that the issuance of the writ was improper was not sufficient to establish an ulterior motive (110 Cal. App. 3d 868, 876, 877) .

In Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , defendants, in a prior action, allegedly served process on plaintiffs at midnight in a loud and boisterous manner awakening plaintiffs and the neighborhood. Plaintiffs, husband and wife, filed separate complaints alleging causes of action based on abuse of process and the intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaints, and the court of appeal affirmed with regard to the abuse of process cause of action. It stated that the basis of the complaint was neither the defendants' acts in filing an action and in securing a summons since it was the manner of service, nor the fact of service itself, which was the basis of plaintiffs' attempt to state a cause of action (20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 301) . It is only where process is used to obtain a collateral advantage that an action for abuse of process will lie; the harassment from the way in which process is served is not the type of collateral advantage which is generally recognized as a purpose for which the process was designed. Thus, the complaint did not state a cause of action for abuse of process (20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 302). The court did conclude that the plaintiffs had stated a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress and reversed as to that cause of action (20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 302-311).

[b] Manner of Service Not Collateral Advantage

Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , is discussed in § 147.71[4][a].

[c] Humiliation, Embarrassment and Intimidation Insufficient

In Susan S. v. Israels (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 67 Cal. Rptr. 2d 42 , a defense attorney represented a client charged with the sexual battery of plaintiff. In the course of that representation the defense attorney served a subpoena duces tecum for the plaintiff's mental health records on a mental health treatment facility. The facility mistakenly sent plaintiff's records directly to the defense attorney instead of the trial court and the attorney, knowing the private and confidential nature of the documents, read them, transmitted them to the defense psychiatrist and used them in cross-examining plaintiff. Plaintiff sued the attorney and his client for among other things, abuse of process. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the complaint with leave to amend. Plaintiff elected not to amend her complaint and her action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed the judgment of dismissal.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff's complaint failed to state a cause of action for abuse of process. Specifically, the court found that the complaint did not allege facts showing defendants acted with an ulterior motive in serving the subpoena for plaintiff's mental health records. The complaint alleged that the purpose and motivation in subpoenaing the records of plaintiff was to intimidate, embarrass and humiliate plaintiff. The court ruled that according to the holding in Abraham v. Lancaster Cmty. Hosp. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 796, 826, 266 Cal. Rptr. 360 , mere vexation or harassment are not objectives sufficient to give rise to the tort of abuse of process. Moreover, there is no tort where, as here, process is used properly albeit with a bad motive (55 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1303) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Ulterior Motive to Obtain Collateral Advantage Required

Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 , is discussed in § 147.70[3][a].

[b] Manner of Service Not Collateral Advantage

In Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Serv. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 209 Cal. Rptr. 189 , plaintiff sued the process server that had falsely alleged personal service of plaintiff in a wrongful detainer action. The court of appeal, relying on Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 [see § 147.71[4][a]], found that no collateral advantage was shown, because it was the manner of service rather than the fact of service itself which was the subject of the complaint. If, because of the manner of service, an actionable wrong arose, it must be attributed to the acts and omissions attendant on the attempted service, and it does not relate to the process itself. The court concluded that plaintiff challenged the propriety of the method of service, and not the reasons for which he was being served, and did not establish a basis for the collateral advantage required for an abuse of process cause of action (162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 1247-1248) .

NOTE:

In Kappel v. Bartlett (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1457, 246 Cal. Rptr. 815 , the court of appeal held that a defendant's knowingly false declaration of service could support an action by the unserved party for abuse of process. Kappel involved facts somewhat similar to those in Slaughter, but in Kappel, an invalid execution on plaintiff's property resulted from the defendant's false declaration of service. The trial court in Kappel granted defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's abuse of process action without leave to amend, but the court of appeal reversed. Following Tranchina v. Arcinas (1947) 78 Cal. App. 2d 522, 526, 178 P.2d 65 , the court of appeal held that it is not necessary to plead actual malice or a collateral illegal objective, but that malice may be inferred from willful abuse of the process. Plaintiff alleged in the pleadings that the defendant's false declaration of service was executed with knowledge that it was false; the court concluded that this allegation was sufficient to satisfy the "ulterior motive" element of the tort [Kappel v. Bartlett (1988) 200 Cal. App. 3d 1457, 1463-1467, 246 Cal. Rptr. 815] .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.72

§ 147.72 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--No Allegation of Action Taken Pursuant to Judicial Authority

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.70].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR ABUSE OF PROCESS IN THAT IT FAILS TO INDICATE THAT ANY ACTION WAS TAKEN PURSUANT TO JUDICIAL AUTHORITY.

A. Objection to Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. No Judicial Authority. The tort of abuse of process lies only where there has been a misuse of the power of the court. It does not lie when defendant has taken no action pursuant to the authority of a court, either directly or by ancillary proceedings (Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 ; Meadows v. Bakersfield Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 749, 753, 59 Cal. Rptr. 34).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Defendant _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint in an action for abuse of process when the complaint does not allege that the defendant has taken action pursuant to judicial authority.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Form

For a form of demurrer based on the fact that no action taken pursuant to judicial authority has been alleged, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Judicial Authority

The facts and procedural background of Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 , are discussed in §§ 147.22[3][a] and 147.26[3][a]. Defendant attorneys, who represented clients with whom real party was involved in litigation surrounding a real estate transaction, filed unsuccessful motions for reconsideration of orders granting plaintiff's motions in other courts to reduce or expunge her prior felony convictions. In her complaint, real party contended that defendants' action constituted, among other things, abuse of process, because they wanted to preserve her convictions to impeach her testimony in the lawsuit against their clients. The trial court overruled defendants' demurrer to this cause of action, and defendants sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrer.

The court of appeal issued the writ. In so doing, the court noted that, in an abuse of process action, the act complained of must involve the use of process. Process, in turn, is action taken pursuant to judicial authority, rather than action taken without reference to the power of the court (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 530) . In the instant case, defendants' motions did not result in the issuance of any process that was then abused. They produced no act of judicial authority, and no writ or order that was then misused. Therefore, their actions fell short of the required use of process. The court further held that the fact that defendants were deemed to lack standing by one of the courts in which they filed the motion was insufficient to overcome the absence of process. The court reasoned that any abuse arising when persons without standing intervene in lawsuits is well within the scope of a court's power to control (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 530) .

In Meadows v. Bakersfield Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 749, 59 Cal. Rptr. 34 , the court of appeal was confronted with the question of whether or not recording a notice of default and publishing a notice of trustee's sale pursuant to the terms of a deed of trust constitutes process in the sense that the term "abuse of process" is used. The court determined that it does not and therefore affirmed a judgment of nonsuit for defendant. The court stated that the essence of the tort of abuse of process lies in the misuse of the power of the court; it is an act done in the name of the court and under its authority for the purpose of perpetrating an injustice. Thus, since defendant took no action pursuant to the authority of the court, directly or by ancillary proceedings, no judicial process was abused (250 Cal. App. 2d 749, 753) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Judicial Authority

In Carney v. Rotkin, Schmerin & McIntyre (1988) 206 Cal. App. 3d 1513, 254 Cal. Rptr. 478 , plaintiff, a judgment debtor, brought an action for abuse of process against defendants, who had been employed to collect plaintiff's debt. After plaintiff failed to appear at a judgment debtor examination requested by defendants, defendants falsely informed plaintiff that there was a bench warrant out for her arrest that would remain in effect until she paid defendants $1,000 on her debt. The court of appeal found that plaintiff's complaint failed to allege a cause of action for abuse of process. In making their false statements concerning the nonexistent bench warrant, defendants did not take any action pursuant to the authority of the court; thus, they did not abuse any judicial process (206 Cal. App. 3d 1513, 1526) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.73

§ 147.73 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Bar of Statute of Limitations

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.70].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR ABUSE OF PROCESS IN THAT IT SHOWS ON ITS FACE THAT IT IS BARRED BY THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Failure to State Cause of Action. [See § 147.30, Paragraph B].

C. Statute of Limitations. An action for the injury to one person caused by the wrongful act or neglect of another must be commenced within two years (one year, prior to 2003) after the date of the injury (Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1; see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3)). Code of Civil Procedure Section 335.1 applies to actions for abuse of process, and a demurrer is properly sustained if it is shown on the face of the complaint that the action was commenced more than two years (one year, prior to 2003) after the wrong is alleged to have occurred (see Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 95, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706 ; McFaddin v. H.S. Crocker Co. (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 590-591, 33 Cal. Rptr. 389).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint in an action for abuse of process when the action is barred by the two-year period of limitations contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (see former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (one-year period of limitations, prior to 2003); see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions, § 345.14).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of demurrer based on the fact that the action is barred on its face by the statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender). For a form of demurrer for use generally in asserting the bar of the statute of limitations, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 345, Limitation of Actions (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations

In Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706 , the court of appeal affirmed the granting of defendants' motion for summary judgment in an abuse of process action based on the giving of a notice that a deposition would be taken. The court held summary judgment was correctly granted because the one-year bar of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations beginning in 2003)] is the relevant period of limitation for actions involving abuse of process and the action was commenced more than one year after any of the actions that could have given rise to liability took place (245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 95) .

In McFaddin v. H.S. Crocker Co. (1963) 219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 33 Cal. Rptr. 389 , defendants objected to the introduction of any evidence by plaintiff on the ground that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The trial judge dismissed plaintiff's second cause of action for abuse of process on the ground that it was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations beginning in 2003)]. The court of appeal affirmed since the wrong was alleged to have occurred nearly three years prior to the commencement of the action (219 Cal. App. 2d 585, 590-591) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Statute of Limitations

In Simons v. Edouarde (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 826, 221 P.2d 203 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal after the sustaining of defendants' demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations beginning in 2003)]. The court stated that former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) embraces all infringements of personal rights as opposed to property rights. Hence, since an action for abuse of process falls within a statute of limitations which covers injuries done to the person, the one-year period of limitation of former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1 (two-year statute of limitations beginning in 2003)] is the applicable period of limitation and barred plaintiff's action which had been filed nearly two years after the alleged wrongful act had occurred (98 Cal. App. 2d 826, 828) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.74

§ 147.74 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Abuse of Process--Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)]--Absolute Privilege of Publication in Judicial Proceeding [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Applicable

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.70].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR ABUSE OF PROCESS BECAUSE IT APPEARS ON ITS FACE THAT THE ABSOLUTE PRIVILEGE OF PUBLICATION IN A JUDICIAL ACTION IS APPLICABLE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 147.20, Paragraph A].

B. Privilege for Publication in Judicial Proceeding Applicable. A complaint for abuse of process fails to state a cause of action when it shows on its face that it is based on a publication which is absolutely privileged under Civil Code Section 47(b) because it was made in the course of a judicial proceeding (see Umansky v. Urquhart (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 371-372, 148 Cal. Rptr. 547 ; Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 924-926, 134 Cal. Rptr. 145).

[Optional] C. Publication Outside Courtroom. The privilege for publication in a judicial proceeding attaches to a publication made outside a courtroom since many portions of a judicial proceeding occur outside of open court (Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 842-843, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317).

[Optional] D. Publication Need Not Be Relevant or Material in Technical Sense. The absolute privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) may attach even though the publication was not relevant or material in the technical sense to any issue, as long as it has some connection to the proceeding; any doubt in this regard must be resolved in favor of a finding of privilege (Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 ; Profile Structures, Inc. v. Long Beach Bldg. Material Co. (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 437, 442, 226 Cal. Rptr. 192).

[Optional] E. Judicial Enforcement Efforts Fall Within Scope of Litigation Privilege. If the gravamen of the action is a communicative act, the litigation privilege extends to noncommunicative acts that are necessarily related to the communicative conduct, including acts necessary to enforce a judgment (Rusheen v. Cohen (2006) 37 Cal. 4th 1048, 1065, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516, 128 P.3d 713 ; see also (Brown v. Kennard (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 40, 47-51, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for malicious prosecution when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action because it shows on its face that its basis is a publication in a judicial proceeding that is absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b).

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should show that the filing of pleadings in a wrongful death action seeking punitive damages is a publication in a judicial proceeding and absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) [Umansky v. Urquhart (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 371-372, 148 Cal. Rptr. 547 ; see § 147.74[3][a]].

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points in § 147.77 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a demurrer supported by this memorandum.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of affirmative defense based on the absolute privilege for publications in judicial proceedings of Civ. Code § 47(b), see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 357, Malicious Prosecution and Abuse of Process (Matthew Bender), and for a general discussion of the absolute privilege for publications made in judicial proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 340, Libel and Slander (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Privilege for Publication in Judicial Proceeding Applicable

In Umansky v. Urquhart (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 148 Cal. Rptr. 547 , a doctor was sued in a wrongful death action. One of the causes of action sought punitive damages even though punitive damages are not proper in a wrongful death action. After the cause of action seeking punitive damages was deleted by stipulation, the doctor sued the attorneys for plaintiffs in the wrongful death action for abuse of process in bringing the cause of action for punitive damages. Defendants filed a demurrer and a motion for judgment on the pleadings and the abuse of process action was dismissed. Plaintiffs appealed and the court of appeal affirmed the judgment of dismissal.

The court stated that the filing of a complaint can be considered "process" for the purposes of an action for abuse of process (84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 371) . It then found, however, that the pleading of the cause of action for punitive damages in the original action was published in a judicial proceeding and thus absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. Former Civ. Code § 47(2) applies to abuse of process and the pleading therefore could not serve as the basis for the tort of abuse of process (84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 370, 371) . The privilege applies when (1) the publication was made in a judicial proceeding, (2) it had some connection or logical relation to the action, (3) it was made to achieve the objects of the litigation, and (4) it involved litigants or other participants authorized by law (84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 371) . The court held that the cause of action was filed to achieve the objects of litigation even though it was barred by former Code Civ. Proc. § 377 [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 377.60 et seq.], the wrongful death statute, because defendants had the right to make the argument that the statute was unconstitutional; the privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) should protect such efforts (84 Cal. App. 3d 368, 372) .

The facts and holding in Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 134 Cal. Rptr. 145 , are discussed in § 147.22[3][d]. In ruling that a cause of action was not stated for abuse of process, the court of appeal held that the service of a request for admission was absolutely privileged as a publication in a judicial proceeding under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)]. The court then held that the publication of the request for admission with regard to forgery of an endorsement on an income tax refund check met the requirement that the publication was made to achieve the objectives of the litigation because the request was pertinent to the dissolution litigation in that it was connected to the issue of the husband's ability to pay (63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 924-925) .

[b] Publication Outside Courtroom

The facts and procedural background of Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317 , are discussed in § 147.20[3][n]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of summary judgment in plaintiff's action for malicious prosecution and abuse of process. Plaintiff had alleged that certain statements made to its legal representatives at a settlement conference involving a separate action between the same parties was an abuse of process in that defendant in that action had threatened to use a petition for writ of mandate that defendant had filed as a device to force plaintiff to settle. The court held that the privilege of publication in a judicial proceeding attaches to a publication made outside a courtroom and observed that many portions of a judicial proceeding occur outside of open court. Citing prior California law, the court noted that there was an element of coercion in every lawsuit, but that nonetheless, the statement was essentially a settlement proposal. As such, the court remarked, it was made to achieve a settlement, which the courts have long favored. Moreover, it is necessary to protect attorneys during the course of representation of their clients and to promote free access to the courts. The court concluded that the language was part of the adversary system and to be anticipated in the course of heated battle between adverse parties; consequently, the statement was within the privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], and accordingly, plaintiff could not state a cause of action for abuse of process (133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 842-843) .

NOTE:

The Supreme Court in Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202 , granted hearing in that case to resolve an apparent conflict between the court of appeal decision in Oren and the court of appeal decision in Asia Inv. Co. v. Borowski (1982) 133 Cal. App. 3d 832, 184 Cal. Rptr. 317 . The court of appeal in the Oren case, in discussing former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], concluded that when the publication itself is alleged to be the tortious conduct, the privilege in former Civ. Code § 47(2) creates a "transactional immunity," but when the alleged tortious conduct is something other than the publication itself, then the publication may be used as evidence bearing on the tortious nature of that conduct; that is, former Civ. Code § 47(2) does not provide an immunity from "use" of the publication. The court of appeal further suggested that to the extent the Asia Investment decision had reached a contrary conclusion, that decision should not be followed.

Although the Supreme Court in Oren affirmed a summary judgment for the defendants on the ground the complaint did not state a cause of action for abuse of process [see § 147.70 [3][a], the Court said that the privileges of former Civ. Code § 42 [now see Fam. Code § 6601], unlike evidentiary privileges that function by the exclusion of evidence, operate as limitations on liability and that thus, while former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] bars certain tort causes of action that are predicated on a judicial statement or publication itself, the section does not create an evidentiary privilege for these statements. Accordingly, when allegations of misconduct properly put an individual's intent at issue in a civil action, statements made during the course of a judicial proceeding may be used for evidentiary purposes in determining whether the individual acted with the requisite intent. Plaintiff in Oren had contended that the tortious conduct was the defendants' filing and continued pursuance of an administrative mandate proceeding under the California Environmental Quality Act (Pub. Res. Code § 21000 et seq.) and that the "ulterior" purpose was to extort a monetary settlement from plaintiff as revealed by statements made in the course of settlement negotiations. The Supreme Court said that if this conduct could properly support a cause of action for abuse of process (which the court concluded it could not), former Civ. Code § 47(2) would not preclude plaintiff from making evidentiary use of defendants' statements during settlement negotiations to prove the intent with which defendants' conduct was undertaken. Although the Court appeared to follow the statements made in the court of appeal decision in that case, it also said that because former Civ. Code § 47(2) does not preclude the evidentiary use of the statements made during negotiation, the Court did not reach plaintiff's broader claim that former Civ. Code § 47(2) is entirely inapplicable in the abuse of process context. In this regard, the Court noted that plaintiff, with some persuasive force, suggested that a number of past cases that have upheld the propriety of abuse of process actions on the basis of unauthorized conduct in a judicial proceeding could not have been decided as they were if the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) were applicable in the abuse of process context [Oren Royal Oaks Venture v. Greenberg, Bernhard, Weiss & Karma, Inc. (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1157, 1167-1168, 232 Cal. Rptr. 567, 728 P.2d 1202] .

[c] Publication Need Not Be Relevant or Material in Technical Sense

The facts and procedural background of Adams v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 49 , are discussed in §§ 147.22[3][a] and 147.26[3][a]. Defendant attorneys, who represented clients with whom real party was involved in litigation alleging fraud in a real estate transaction, filed unsuccessful motions for reconsideration of orders granting plaintiff's motions in other courts to reduce or expunge her prior felony convictions. The motion filed in one of those courts was denied on the ground that defendants lacked standing to file it. In her complaint, real party contended that defendants' action constituted, among other things, abuse of process, because they wanted to preserve her convictions to impeach her testimony in the lawsuit against their clients. The trial court overruled defendants' demurrer to this cause of action, and defendants sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrer.

The trial court issued the writ. The court first held the motions filed by defendants were protected by judicial privilege under Civ. Code § 47(b) (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 528-529) . The court noted that the privilege is not restricted to the actual parties to a lawsuit, but need merely be connected or related to the proceedings. The court reasoned that defendants' motions were related to the proceedings, since there was clearly some relationship between the evidence of fraudulent behavior that defendants attempted to present to the criminal courts and the proceedings in progress there for reduction or expungement of criminal convictions. The latter proceedings were addressed to the court's discretion and therefore depended on a showing of good behavior since the conviction. An attempt to demonstrate that the convicted person's behavior had not been good was therefore rationally connected to the proceedings (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529) . The court then held defendants' lack of standing did not destroy the claim of privilege. In the first place, the lack of standing did not constitute such a lack of connection with the lawsuit as to render the reconsideration motions tortious. In the second place, the privilege applies to publications in connected proceedings, such as in the reduction/expungement proceedings and the underlying civil suit in the instant case, to protect the rights of litigants and interested parties to communicate with the court (2 Cal. App. 4th 521, 529-530) .

In Profile Structures, Inc. v. Long Beach Bldg. Material Co. (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 437, 226 Cal. Rptr. 192 , defendant was granted a temporary protective order under Code Civ. Proc. § 486.050 that prohibited the plaintiff from transferring certain funds. Although the order was personal to the plaintiff, the defendant did not serve the order on the plaintiff, but instead served it on two outside parties who owed money to the plaintiff. When the outside parties wrongfully withheld the funds from plaintiff, plaintiff brought an action seeking damages for abuse of process against defendant. The action was dismissed by the trial court on the ground that the service of the order on the outside parties was absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)].

The court of appeal affirmed. It initially noted that the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] attaches if the publication (1) was made in a judicial proceeding, (2) had some connection or logical relation to the action, (3) was made to achieve the objects of the litigation, and (4) involved litigants or other participants authorized by law (181 Cal. App. 3d 437, 441-442) . The court then rejected plaintiff's contention that the publication of the order had no logical relationship to the underlying action and was not made to achieve the objects of the litigation. It held that the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) may attach even though the publication was not pertinent, relevant, or material in the technical sense to any issue, as long as it has some connection to the proceeding. The court then held that any doubt in this regard must be resolved in favor of finding of privilege, and that the privilege will be denied only when the matter is so palpably irrelevant to the subject matter of the controversy that no reasonable person can doubt its irrelevancy and impropriety (181 Cal. App. 3d 437, 442-443) . Applying these rules to the case at bar, the court found that the publication of the order to the plaintiff's debtors could not be said to have no logical relation to the underlying action, and that the privilege applied (181 Cal. App. 3d 437, 443) .

[d] Judicial Enforcement Efforts Fall Within Scope of Litigation Privilege

In Rusheen v. Cohen (2006) 37 Cal. 4th 1048, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 516, 128 P.3d 713 , a judgment debtor filed a cross-complaint for abuse of process against the attorney of the party who had gained a default judgment against the judgment debtor. According to the debtor, in order to obtain the default judgment, the attorney had submitted declarations of service that falsely stated that the debtor had been properly served in the action. The abuse of process action was based on the attorney's role in subsequently obtaining a writ of execution and levying on the judgment debtor's property. The trial court granted the attorney's motion to strike the cross-complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, concluding that the attorney's conduct was protected by the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b) and that the debtor could not prevail on the cross-complaint. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the act of executing on the writ to enforce the judgment was noncommunicative conduct that was not protected by the privilege.

The California Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. The Court held that the litigation privilege may be used as a defense to an abuse of process claim that is based on actions taken to enforce a judgment. Specifically, the Court held that if the gravamen of the action is a communicative act, the litigation privilege extends to noncommunicative acts that are necessarily related to the communicative conduct, including acts necessary to enforce a judgment (37 Cal. 4th 1048, 1065). In this particular case, the Court held that the gravamen of the action was the filing of declarations of service in order to obtain a default judgment, and that this was privileged communicative conduct. Although the declarations were alleged to have been false, because the gravamen of the action was based on this privileged communicative conduct, subsequent noncommunicative conduct taken to enforce the default judgment, which included application for a writ of execution and the act of levying on property, was also privileged and could not support an abuse of process claim (37 Cal. 4th 1048, 1065). The Court noted that although extending the litigation privilege has the effect of limiting these types of abuse of process claims, an aggrieved party has other remedies that do not involve another round of litigation. These remedies could include moving to set aside the judgment, posting an undertaking or seeking a writ of supersedeas to counter enforcement efforts, or filing a claim of exemption from execution of the judgment (37 Cal. 4th 1048, 1064). In reaching its decision, the Court specifically disapproved Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Assocs. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602 , to the extent that it was inconsistent with the Court's opinion (37 Cal. 4th 1048, 1065).

In Brown v. Kennard (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 40, 113 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 , the plaintiff filed an action for abuse of process against an attorney who sought to enforce a money judgment by levying on the plaintiff's deposit account pursuant to a writ of execution. The underlying judgment was entered against a third party in an action to which the plaintiff was not a party and in which the defendant had represented the judgment creditor. In the abuse of process action, the plaintiff alleged that the defendant abused process by causing a wrongful writ to be levied on the plaintiff's categorically exempt funds, which consisted of Social Security retirement benefits and personal retirement benefits, and refusing to release the levy after being given notice of the exempt status of the funds. The plaintiff also claimed that the purported money judgment was void because it was an order granting only partial summary judgment and that in any event, the plaintiff was not a party to the underlying litigation. The defendant demurred to the abuse of process action, claiming that the plaintiff failed to state a cause of action because issuance of a writ of execution is absolutely privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) and that the communicative act of causing the writ to be issued occurred during a judicial proceeding. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that although California has recognized that an action for abuse of process may lie if a wrongful levy is executed on exempt property, courts have applied the litigation privilege to protect against such actions in the judgment enforcement context, at least if successive seizures of exempt property are not involved. The court noted earlier opinions that had concluded that actions to enforce a judgment were the type of conduct permitted by law in the course of a judicial proceeding, and were logically and legally related to the litigation objective--that is, the collection of a judgment. Moreover, at least one opinion had concluded that for policy reasons, even an otherwise qualifying fraudulent act is privileged under Civ. Code § 47(b) (94 Cal. App. 4th 40, 47-48) . Agreeing that enforcement proceedings are an extension of the judicial process and related to the realization of a litigation objective, the court in this case held that the privilege was a defense to the abuse of process action because the defendant had employed a court-sanctioned procedure to obtain a writ of execution on a judgment, levied on that writ within the confines of the judicial procedure, and used the writ for its designed purpose (94 Cal. App. 4th 40, 49) . The court also concluded that the privilege extended to the act of carrying out the directive of the writ, and not merely to the act of applying for the writ, because holding otherwise would effectively strip the privilege of its purpose (94 Cal. App. 4th 40, 50) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Privilege for Publication in Judicial Proceeding Applicable

Carden v. Getzoff (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 907, 235 Cal. Rptr. 698 , involved an action for abuse of process, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and negligent infliction of emotional distress by an anesthesiologist who claimed that defendant had manufactured false evidence as an expert accounting witness for the anesthesiologist's former wife in a marital dissolution action. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of defendant's demurrer without leave to amend on the ground that the publications made in both the document prepared by defendant for use at the settlement agreement negotiations and in the testimony of defendant at the dissolution proceedings were covered by the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] (190 Cal. App. 3d 907, 913) .

Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706 , is discussed in § 147.73[3][a]. In holding that a cause of action for abuse of process was not stated, the court of appeal held that the contents of a deposition are privileged as published in a judicial action and cannot be the basis of a cause of action (245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 99) .

[b] Publication Need Not Be Relevant or Material in Technical Sense

Loomis v. Superior Court (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1026, 241 Cal. Rptr. 236 , was an action for abuse of process. The plaintiff, an attorney, had been suspended by the State Bar. During the period of suspension, a motion was filed in an action on behalf of a client represented by plaintiff. Defendant then filed a motion to strike the motion on the ground that the client could not be represented by a suspended attorney and attached public records from the State Bar disciplinary proceeding in support of this motion. Plaintiff brought this subsequent action for abuse of process and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court denied defendant's motion for summary judgment based on the privilege under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], but the court of appeal, on defendant's petition for a writ of mandate, directed entry of judgment for defendant. The court stated that the privilege applies to any publication made in a judicial proceeding, so long as it had some logical relation to the action, was made to achieve the objectives of the litigation, and involved litigants or other participants authorized by law. The privilege is denied only to a publication so palpably irrelevant to the matter in controversy as to leave no reasonable doubt of its irrelevancy or impropriety. The court concluded that the privilege applied to the undisputed facts; the motion to strike, although unsuccessful, was not palpably improper, nor was its supporting documentation palpably irrelevant (195 Cal. App. 3d 1026, 1029-1030) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.75

§ 147.75 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] by Defendant--Insufficiency of Evidence to Justify Finding of Ulterior Motive

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MOTION FOR Plaintiff,	)	NEW TRIAL
vs.	)	[Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Defendant.	)	Time: _____
	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE WAS INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE PRESENTED TO SUPPORT A FINDING THAT DEFENDANT HAD AN ULTERIOR MOTIVE.

A. Motion for New Trial. On the application of the party aggrieved, the _____ [verdict or decision] may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the _____ [verdict or decision], if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

B. Insufficient Evidence of Ulterior Motive. Where there is no direct evidence that plaintiff had an ulterior motive in using process, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting a motion for a new trial (Fairfield v. Hamilton (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 594, 604, 24 Cal. Rptr. 73).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted by a defendant in support of a motion for a new trial where the evidence is not sufficient to support a verdict that defendant misused the process of the court in an abuse of process action.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion and forms related to a motion for a new trial, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice Ch. 371, Motions After Trial .

[c] Related Memoranda

For a form of memoranda in support of a motion for a new trial, see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Insufficient Evidence of Ulterior Motive

In Fairfield v. Hamilton (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 594, 24 Cal. Rptr. 73 , the cause of action for abuse of process was based on defendant's filing of numerous actions against plaintiff. After a verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted a motion for new trial, and the court of appeal affirmed. It held that there was conflicting evidence as to whether defendant had an ulterior motive in instituting the complained of proceedings. The court noted that in spite of evidence of defendant's enmity toward plaintiff, it reasonably could be inferred from the circumstances either (1) that he acted with legitimate motives or (2) that he committed no improper acts in the use of the legal processes in the regular course of the proceedings when he prosecuted the actions. Since there was no direct evidence that defendant ever offered to desist in his various actions if plaintiff changed his position in regard to defendant's claims regarding property in a related bankruptcy proceeding, the court of appeal could not say that the trial court abused its discretion in granting defendant's motion for a new trial (206 Cal. App. 2d 594, 603-604) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureJudgmentsRelief From JudgmentMotions for New

TrialsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.76

§ 147.76 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Abuse of Process--Complaint Sufficiently Alleges Facts Constituting Improper Use of Process

[1] FORM

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

	)
	)	NO. _____
_____ [name],	)	MEMORANDUM IN OPPOSITION TO DEMUR-Plaintiff,	)	RER
vs.	)	Date: _____
_____ [name],	)	Time: _____
Defendant.	)	Location: _____
	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE ALLEGATIONS OF THE COMPLAINT SHOW THAT DEFENDANT USED THE PROCESS FOR AN IMPROPER PURPOSE.

A. Abuse of Process. One who uses legal process, whether criminal or civil, against another to accomplish a purpose for which it is not designed is liable to the other for the pecuniary loss caused thereby (Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 317 P.2d 613).

B. Improper Purpose. The improper purpose on which abuse of process is based usually takes the form of coercion to obtain a collateral advantage, not properly involved in the proceeding itself, such as the surrender of property or the payment of money by the use of the process as a threat or a club (Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 461, 466, 72 Cal. Rptr. 344, 446 P.2d 152 ; Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 232, 317 P.2d 613).

C. Broad Interpretation of Process. The term "process" in the tort abuse of process is not limited to the strict sense of the term and has been interpreted broadly to encompass the entire range of procedures incident to litigation (Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 94, 104 n.4, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817).

[Optional] D. Filing Complaint for Improper Purpose. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that a complaint was filed for an improper purpose (Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 94, 103, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817 ; Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 461, 466, 72 Cal. Rptr. 344, 446 P.2d 152).

[Optional] E. Excessive Attachment. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that defendant attached assets greatly in excess of his or her claim (White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 336, 347, 66 Cal. Rptr. 697, 438 P.2d 345).

[Optional] F. Improper Use of Provisional Remedy of Claim and Delivery. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that the provisional remedy of claim and delivery has been used for an improper purpose (see Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 461, 466, 72 Cal. Rptr. 344, 446 P.2d 152 ; Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 229-232, 317 P.2d 613).

[Optional] G. Garnishment on Exempt Property. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that plaintiff garnished wages that he or she knew were exempt from execution for the improper purpose of forcing plaintiff to pay the judgment from exempt property (Czap v. Credit Bureau of Santa Clara Valley (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5-7, 86 Cal. Rptr. 417 ; Arc Inv. Co. v. Tiffith (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 853, 856, 330 P.2d 305).

[Optional] H. Improper Use of Interrogatory. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that an interrogatory served as a discovery procedure was used for an improper purpose (Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 296-297, 113 Cal. Rptr. 113).

[Optional] I. Notice of Deposition for Improper Purpose. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that a notice of deposition was used for an improper purpose (Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 94-95, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706).

[Optional] J. Improper Use of Contempt Order. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that contempt orders were obtained and served on plaintiff for an improper purpose (Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 524-527, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874).

[Optional] K. Improperly Obtaining Judgment and Levying Execution on Self. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that the defendant conspired to obtain a judgment and levied execution on himself or herself to defeat plantiff's rights (Weisenburg v. Molina (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 478, 486-490, 129 Cal. Rptr. 813).

[Optional] L. Improper Use of Appellate Process. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that the appellate process has been used for an improper purpose (see Tellefsen v. Key Sys. Transit Lines (1961) 198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 613, 17 Cal. Rptr. 919 (dictum)).

[Optional] M. Improper Use of Writ of Execution. An action for abuse of process can be based on allegations that, despite an existing stay of execution, a writ of execution was used to levy on property for an improper purpose, such as making it more difficult financially for the judgment debtor to prosecute an appeal (Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Assocs. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1019-1020, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602).

Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in opposition to a general demurrer to a complaint for abuse of process where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege an improper purpose in the use of the process but plaintiff contends that the complaint alleges that process was used improperly.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Abuse of Process

Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 317 P.2d 613 , is discussed in § 147.76[3][f]. The Supreme Court adopted the definition of abuse of process which is set forth in the Restatement of Torts. That definition is that one who uses legal process, whether criminal or civil, against another to accomplish a purpose for which it is not designed is liable to the other for the pecuniary loss caused thereby (49 Cal. 2d 210, 231) .

[b] Improper Purpose

Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 461, 72 Cal. Rptr. 344, 446 P.2d 152 and Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 317 P.2d 613 , are discussed in § 147.76[3][f]. In both cases, the Supreme Court stated that the improper purpose required for abuse of process usually takes the form of coercion to obtain a collateral advantage, not properly involved in the proceeding itself, such as the surrender of property or the payment of money, by the use of process as a threat or club (69 Cal. 2d 461, 466 ; 49 Cal. 2d 210, 232) .

[c] Broad Interpretation of Process

Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 94, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817 , is discussed in § 147.76[3][d]. In that case, the Supreme Court stated that the term "process" as used in the tort of abuse of process has never been limited to the strict sense of the term; instead, it has been interpreted broadly to encompass the entire range of procedures incident to litigation. This broad reach of the abuse of process tort can be explained historically, since the tort evolved as catch-all category to cover improper uses of the judicial machinery that did not fit within the earlier established, but narrowly circumscribed, action of malicious prosecution (7 Cal. 3d 94, 104 n.4).

[d] Filing Complaint for Improper Purpose

In Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 94, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817 , plaintiffs alleged that defendant collection agency had knowingly and wilfully filed actions in improper counties, pursuant to statutorily inadequate complaints, for the purpose of impairing its adversaries' ability to defend and with the intent and effect of obtaining an increased number of default judgments. They sought injunctive relief and a nullification of past judgments, but the trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint. The Supreme Court reversed. It held that the complaint had sufficiently alleged that defendant's conduct amounted to a tortious abuse of process which could be enjoined since alternative legal remedies were inadequate to protect the interests of the plaintiffs (7 Cal. 3d 94, 103-108) . It held, however, that the prior judgments were not void and could not be collaterally attacked. Therefore, it sustained the demurrer as to cause of action seeking nullification of past judgments (7 Cal. 3d 94, 114-122) .

[e] Excessive Attachment

In White Lighting Co. v. Wolfson (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 336, 66 Cal. Rptr. 697, 438 P.2d 345 , plaintiff had sued defendant for money due and owing. Defendant denied the indebtedness and filed a cross complaint which included a count for abuse of process arising out of an attachment well in excess of plaintiff's claim. The trial court sustained a demurrer to this count for failure to state a cause of action as well as to the other counts of the cross complaint. The Supreme Court reversed. It held that a claim based on excessive attachment constitutes a cause of action for abuse of process rather than for malicious prosecution and such a claim may be brought in the action in which the attachment issued (68 Cal. 2d 336, 347) .

[f] Improper Use of Provisional Remedy of Claim and Delivery

In Templeton Feed & Grain v. Ralston Purina Co. (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 461, 72 Cal. Rptr. 344, 446 P.2d 152 , plaintiff alleged that defendant was liable for damages for abuse of process because it had filed a claim and delivery action for possession of property which had been secured by a chattel mortgage and had caused the property to be provisionally seized. The jury awarded damages to plaintiff, and defendant appealed on the basis that there was not sufficient evidence to support the jury's verdict. The Supreme Court rejected the contention and held that there was substantial evidence from which the jury properly could have found that defendant, in procuring the seizure, knew or should have known that it was not entitled to possession of the property and that defendant had seized the property in order to force plaintiff to discharge the debt owed to defendant by another person (69 Cal. 2d 461, 466) .

In Spellens v. Spellens (1957) 49 Cal. 2d 210, 317 P.2d 613 , plaintiff had commenced an action to have her Mexican marriage to defendant declared valid and sought separate maintenance. After this action was at issue and the property rights of the parties were involved, the husband brought an action against the wife to recover possession of personal property. The wife cross complained for abuse of process in the use of the provisional remedy of claim and delivery by her husband in the action for possession. The trial court determined that the husband had maliciously commenced the action knowing that the issues of the right to the property were involved in the main action and caused a claim and delivery writ to issue and be served; it awarded compensatory and punitive damages. The Supreme Court affirmed. It stated that the service of the writ, by which an automobile was seized and other property of the wife interfered with, was plainly done for the ulterior purpose of making things difficult for her so that she would drop her main action. Thus, it was like a threat, not really to obtain possession of the property which the husband claimed as his own, but to coerce the wife with regard to the main action (49 Cal. 2d 210, 230) . Therefore, the husband's actions with an improper purpose constituted abuse of process (49 Cal. 2d 210, 229-232) .

[g] Garnishment on Exempt Property

In Czap v. Credit Bureau of Santa Clara Valley (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 1, 86 Cal. Rptr. 417 , plaintiff had sued for damages for abuse of process and for an injunction against a credit bureau. Plaintiff alleged that (1) the bureau had been repeatedly garnishing her wages in execution of a judgment for attorney's fees incurred earlier in a divorce action, (2) the bureau knew that most of her wages were exempt from execution, and (3) the repeated attempts to garnish her wages would jeopardize her employment and thereby had the purpose of forcing her to pay the judgment out of exempt wages in order to avoid the loss of her employment. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint and denied the application for a preliminary injunction. The court of appeal overruled the order denying the preliminary injunction and the judgment of dismissal. It held that the plaintiff had stated a cause of action for abuse of process based on the allegations that defendant knowingly garnished exempt wages for the improper purpose of jeopardizing plaintiff's employment to force her to pay the judgment from exempt wages, and therefore the trial court should reconsider the plaintiff's application for a preliminary injunction (7 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5-7) .

In Arc Inv. Co. v. Tiffith (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 853, 330 P.2d 305 , a municipal court granted claims of exemption filed by a judgment debtor and restrained further levies on the debtor's personal earnings unless a court order was obtained first. The appellate division of the superior court affirmed the order. The court noted that successive seizures of exempt property, such as the earnings of a debtor, may give rise to an action for abuse of process and that a wrongful use made of process rightfully issued may constitute an abuse of process. Since abuse of process is a contempt of court, and since a municipal court has the inherent power to prevent abuses in the use of its process, the municipal court had jurisdiction to issue the order restraining the judgment creditor from garnishing the debtor's wages (164 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 853, 856, 857).

[h] Improper Use of Interrogatory

In Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 113 Cal. Rptr. 113 , the trial court had dismissed a cross complaint for abuse of process after granting a motion for summary judgment by plaintiff. The abuse of process cross complaint was based on an alleged improper use of a written interrogatory in the discovery process, allegedly used to disclose and publish material calculated to injure the defendant's reputation as an attorney and to expedite his demise as a practicing lawyer.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and the dismissal of the cross complaint. It stated that written interrogatories authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 2030.010 et seq. come within the range of procedures incident to litigation and, thus, the use of an interrogatory constitutes the use of process. In addition, it could be inferred that there was an abuse of the process in that the interrogatory had the purpose of publishing the fact that a confidential complaint against defendant had been filed with the State Bar by 10 attorneys in the county charging him with professional misconduct; publishing this fact could be inferred to have been done to damage appellant's reputation as a lawyer and thereby unfairly eliminate or impede his activities as a competitor in the practice of law (38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 297-298) . This case is also discussed in § 147.77[3][a].

[i] Notice of Deposition for Improper Purpose

In Thornton v. Rhoden (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 53 Cal. Rptr. 706 , the court of appeal affirmed the granting of defendants' motion for summary judgment in an abuse of process action based on the giving of a notice that a deposition would be taken. The court noted in dictum that in a proper case an abuse of the powers which a litigant derives from the taking of a deposition on proper notice would give such a notice the status of process for the purpose of the tort abuse of process and that taking a deposition for the purpose of publishing defamatory matters might be an abuse of process. However, the action in question was barred by the statute of limitations (245 Cal. App. 2d 80, 94-95) .

[j] Improper Use of Contempt Order

In Clark Equip. Co. v. Wheat (1979) 92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 154 Cal. Rptr. 874 , the cross complaint for abuse of process was based on plaintiff obtaining contempt orders against cross complainant in an action for possession of machinery. Cross complainant pleaded and proved that the contempt orders for failure to turn over certain machinery were obtained when plaintiff had knowledge that cross complainant did not have possession of the machinery. After a jury verdict for cross complainant, plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that there was evidence on which the jury could find that the contempt orders were obtained for an improper purpose and thus were an abuse of process (92 Cal. App. 3d 503, 524-527) .

NOTE:

In Green v. Uccelli (1989) 207 Cal. App. 3d 1112, 1125, 255 Cal. Rptr. 315 , the court of appeal expressly held that "filing orders to show cause seeking to enforce prior court orders in a [marital] dissolution action cannot constitute a basis for independent actions for abuse of process." The court in Green did not distinguish, or even mention, Clark Equipment. The effect of Green on the general validity of Clark Equipment is therefore unclear. When the defendant's improper use of process took place in connection with a marital dissolution action, counsel should use Clark Equipment with caution.

[k] Improperly Obtaining Judgment and Levying Execution on Self

In Weisenburg v. Molina (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 478, 129 Cal. Rptr. 813 , plaintiff was a judgment creditor of defendant and was attempting to enforce the judgment by levying on defendant's wages. Defendant prepared and filed an action against himself based on a note to a relative on which he was liable but which was not yet due. He then prepared a stipulated judgment in favor of the relative and had the judgment executed on himself in an attempt to protect himself from plaintiff's levies of execution. The jury entered a verdict for abuse of process and defendant appealed. The court of appeal affirmed. It held that there was ample evidence on which to base the judgment for abuse of process which resulted from defendant's improperly having the judgment entered and executed on himself to defeat plaintiff's rights (58 Cal. App. 3d 478, 487-489) .

[l] Improper Use of Appellate Process

Tellefsen v. Key Sys. Transit Lines (1961) 198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 17 Cal. Rptr. 919 , is discussed in § 147.70[3][c]. The court of appeal stated in dictum that abuse of process could be based on improper use of the appellate process in an appropriate case. However, under the relevant facts involved, defendant had done nothing more than exercise its right to appeal (198 Cal. App. 2d 611, 613) .

[m] Improper Use of Writ of Execution

Drum v. Bleau, Fox & Assocs. (2003) 107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 132 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602 , is discussed in § 147.77[3][b]. In holding that the plaintiff had demonstrated a probability of prevailing on his abuse of process claim sufficient to withstand a special motion to strike under Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, the court of appeal concluded that the act of levying a writ of execution when enforcement of the judgment had been stayed, the stay had been announced in open court in a defendant's presence, and a minute order had memorialized the stay, established a prima facie case of willful acts in the improper use of process (107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1019) . The court also held that the plaintiff's allegations concerning the defendants' ulterior motive of making it financially more difficult for him to prosecute an appeal were sufficient allegations to withstand a motion to strike (107 Cal. App. 4th 1009, 1020) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Purpose

In Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 733 , a civil rights action was filed against the owner of property that was the site of a restaurant. The lawsuit alleged that there was no parking space set aside for disabled patrons in front of the restaurant and that the counter in the restaurant was to high to be reached from a wheelchair. After that suit had been filed, a second suit making the same allegations was filed by the same attorney representing a different plaintiff. However, the attorney waited two and a half months after filing the second action before serving the defendant with notice of that lawsuit. Without knowledge of the second suit, the property owner settled the first lawsuit by agreeing to pay $3,500 to the attorney and $2,500 to the plaintiff. After being served in the second action, the property owner cross-complained in that lawsuit for abuse of process, alleging that plaintiff in the second suit intentionally delayed service of process with the ulterior motive of obtaining a larger settlement than would be obtained had defendant known of the second claim when settling the first. The trial court refused plaintiff's motion to strike the cross-complaint under the anti-SLAPP statute, Code Civ. Proc. § 425.16, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal concluded that the evidence, if believed, was sufficient to establish an abuse of process. The cross-complaint alleged that the second plaintiff, acting through his attorney, knowingly delayed serving his complaint until an identical lawsuit filed by the same attorney was settled. The evidence supported an inference that the purpose of the delay was to obtain a higher settlement than would have been achieved if the property owner was confronted with both lawsuits together. The court concluded that this evidence was sufficient to support a finding that process was used in a manner that was not proper in the regular course of prosecuting a lawsuit and was done with an ulterior motive (155 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 1372) .

[b] Filing Complaint for Improper Purpose

In Yu v. Signet Bank/Va. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304 , plaintiffs were California consumers who, after accepting preapproved credit cards issued by Virginia banks, had eventually accumulated delinquent accounts. The complaint included allegations of abuse of process based on the collection practices used by the banks, which included filing suit in Virginia against those California debtors who did not formerly request a change in jurisdiction in order to obtain default judgments that could then be used to support wage garnishments against the debtors. Summary judgment was granted for the defendant banks. The court of appeal reversed. The court found, first, that the default judgments obtained in Virginia were void because the Virginia courts did not have personal jurisdiction over the California consumers, and that the jurisdiction question could be raised in California because it was not litigated in Virginia (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1384-1388) . The Court, relying on Barquis v. Merchants Collection Assn. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 94, 101 Cal. Rptr. 745, 496 P.2d 817 , then held that an abuse of process action could be based on the intentional filing of the collection suits in Virginia against California credit card holders with knowledge of an inadequate basis for the assertion of personal jurisdiction in Virginia and in hopes of obtaining default judgments that could be used to support improper garnishment orders and settlement leverage (69 Cal. App. 4th 1377, 1389-1390) .

[c] Improper Use of Interrogatory

Twyford v. Twyford (1976) 63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 134 Cal. Rptr. 145 , is discussed in §§ 147.22[3][d] and 147.74[3][a]. In ruling that a cause of action for abuse of process was not stated, the court held in dicta that an action for abuse of process could be based on abuse of the discovery device of requests for admissions (63 Cal. App. 3d 916, 923) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
CHAPTER 147 MALICIOUS PROSECUTION AND ABUSE OF PROCESS
PART II. FORMS
B. Abuse Of Process

14-147 California Points & Authorities § 147.77

§ 147.77 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)] for Failure to State Cause of Action [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Abuse of Process--Absolute Privilege of Publication in Judicial Proceeding [Civ. Code § 47(b)] Inapplicable

[1] FORM

[Caption. See § 147.76].

THE DEMURRER SHOULD BE OVERRULED BECAUSE THE ALLEGATIONS IN THE COMPLAINT DO NOT ALLEGE CONDUCT THAT IS PRIVILEGED UNDER THE JUDICIAL PRIVILEGE OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 47(b).

Publication Not Related to Proceeding. A complaint states a cause of action for abuse of process when it is based on a publication made in a judicial proceeding if the publication is not related to the proceeding and was made for another purpose (Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 300-302, 113 Cal. Rptr. 113).

[Optional] B. Non-Communicative Conduct Not Protected by Judicial Privilege. The judicial privilege of Civil Code Section 47(b) does not protect conduct that is non-communicative in nature (Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 1373, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 733).
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for abuse of process where the demurrer asserts that the conduct on which the action is based is absolutely privileged as published in a judicial proceeding.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points in § 147.74.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Publication Not Related to Proceeding

Younger v. Solomon (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 113 Cal. Rptr. 113 , is discussed in § 147.76[3][h]. In response to the contention that the publication of the complaint to the State Bar as part of the interrogatories was privileged as a publication in a judicial proceeding under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [see now Civ. Code § 47(b)], the court of appeal held that the privilege only applies when the publication has some reference to the subject matter of the pending litigation (38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 300-301) . It then held that the publication of the fact that a complaint has been made to the State Bar about plaintiff had no relation to the complaint in the action, which was based on intentional infliction of emotional distress for ambulance chasing operations, insofar as the complaint to the bar was not related to the events at issue (38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 300-302) . It concluded that the privilege was thus not applicable and a cause of action was stated (38 Cal. App. 3d 289, 301-302) .

[b] Non-Communicative Conduct Not Protected by Judicial Privilege

The factual and procedural background of Booker v. Rountree (2007) 155 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 66 Cal. Rptr. 3d 733 , is described in § 147.76[4][a]. Plaintiff argued that the abuse of process cross-complaint must fail because the underlying conduct was protected by the judicial privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). The court of appeal disagreed. The court concluded that the gravamen of the cross-complaint was the failure to serve the underlying action until a prior suit had settled. As that delay involved no statements, representations, or any assertive conduct that was a speech substitute, there was no communicative conduct involved in that delay. The court held that such passive inaction was not protected by the judicial privilege (155 Cal. App. 4th 1366, 1373) .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsDemurrersCivil ProceduresPleading & PracticeDefenses, Demurrers & ObjectionsFailures to State ClaimsTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessGeneral OverviewTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessDefensesTortsIntentional TortsAbuse of ProcessElements

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 14 Chapters 140-149 LANDLORD & TENANT---to---MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
Chapters 148through 149 RESERVED

14-148 California Points & Authorities Chapters 148through 149

RESERVED

Chapters 148RESERVED

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities 150.syn

§ 150.syn Synopsis to Chapter 150: MANDATE AND PROHIBITION

§ 150.01 Scope of Chapter

§ 150.02 Governing Law

§ 150.03 Function and Scope of Prerogative Writs

§ 150.04 Mandate and Prohibition Compared

§ 150.05 Administrative Mandate Distinguished

§ 150.06 Lack of Adequate Legal Remedy Requirement

§ 150.07 Mislabeled and Alternative Petitions

§ 150.08 Use of Points and Authorities to Support or Oppose Writ Petition

[1] In Appellate Court

[2] In Superior Court

§ 150.09 Using the Forms in This Chapter

[1] In Support of Writ Petition

[2] Opposition to Petition

§ 150.10 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 150.11 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

§§ 150.12-150.29 [Reserved]

§ 150.30 Supporting Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Establishing Elements Essential to Issuance of Writ of Mandate

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

§ 150.31 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Assume Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Assume Jurisdiction

[b] Duty of Lower Court to Hear and Determine Merits of Matters Within Its Jurisdiction

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Hear and Determine Merits of Matters Within Its Jurisdiction

§ 150.32 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Exercise Discretion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Exercise Its Discretion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Exercise Its Discretion

§ 150.33 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Exercise Discretion in Particular Manner

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Compelling Trial Court to Correct Abuse of Discretion

[c] Writ of Prohibition Compared

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Court Can Exercise Discretion in Only One Way

[b] Trial Court Abused Its Discretion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Trial Court Can Exercise Discretion in Only One Way

§ 150.34 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Recall and Quash Writ of Execution

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quashing Writ of Execution

§ 150.35 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Prepare Settled Statement for Record on Appeal

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Settle Statement on Appeal

§ 150.36 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Initiate Contempt Proceedings for Disobedience of Court Order

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contempt Proceedings

§ 150.37 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Court Clerk--Duty of Clerk to Enter Default Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entry of Default Judgment

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Entry of Default

§ 150.38 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Court Clerk--Duty of Clerk to Issue Writ of Execution

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Execution

§ 150.39 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Perform Mandatory Ministerial Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance of Ministerial Duty

[b] Ministerial Act Defined

[c] Duty Imposed by Statute

[d] Agency Rules

[e] Charter-Prescribed Duties

[f] Building Permit

[g] Elections

[h] Initiatives

[i] Forfeiture of Property

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agency Rules

[b] Building Permit

[c] Elections

[d] Initiative

§ 150.40 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Instate Petitioner to Office or Employment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Administrative Mandamus Compared

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Instatement to Office

[b] Instatement to Employment

§ 150.41 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Refrain From Performing Ministerial Act in Unlawful Manner

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Restraining Unlawful Act

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Restraining Unlawful Act

§ 150.42 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Exercise Discretion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Discretion

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exercise of Discretion

§ 150.43 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Exercise Discretion in Particular Manner

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Abuse of Discretion

[b] Exercise of Discretion in Particular Manner

[c] Failure to Exercise Discretion After Reasonable Time

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Abuse of Discretion

§ 150.44 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Private Organization

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitrary Refusal to Act

[b] Reinstatement to Membership

[c] Admission to Membership

[d] Enforcing Right of Stockholder

[e] Membership in Labor Union

[f] Failure to Follow Prescribed Procedures

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Enforcing Right of Corporate Shareholder

[b] Membership in Labor Union

§ 150.45 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Direct Appeal Is Inadequate Legal Remedy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mandate Proper When Direct Appeal Is Inadequate Legal Remedy

§ 150.46 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Court Violated Appellate Court's Instructions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mandate Proper When Lower Court Violated Appellate Court's Instructions

§ 150.47 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Procedure for Opposing Petition

[c] Opposition to Petition

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Objection by Demurrer

§ 150.48 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Abuse of Discretion

§ 150.49 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Act to Be Compelled Is Discretionary, Not Ministerial

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Act Within Discretion of Public Entity or Official

[b] Legislative Act

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Act Within Discretion of Public Entity or Official Exercise of Discretion

[b] Legislative Act

§ 150.50 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Act to Be Compelled Is Future Act

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Future Acts

§ 150.51 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Act to Be Compelled Is Unlawful

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance of Unlawful Act May Not Be Compelled

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Performance of Unlawful Act May Not Be Compelled

§ 150.52 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Petitioner Failed to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

§§ 150.53-150.69 [Reserved]

§ 150.70 Supporting Petition for Writ of Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Establishing Elements Essential to Issuance of Writ of Prohibition

[c] Writ of Prohibition Against Corporation, Board, or Person

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[e] Opposing Memoranda

§ 150.71 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Excess of Jurisdiction

[b] Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[c] Administrative Agency Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[b] Administrative Agency Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

§ 150.72 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Action Contrary to Prescribed Procedure Is in Excess of Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Contrary to Prescribed Procedure

§ 150.73 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Refuses to Follow Stare Decisis

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Refusal to Follow Stare Decisis

§ 150.74 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Enforced Statute or Ordinance Unconstitutional on Its Face

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Enforcement of Unconstitutional Statute or Ordinance

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Enforcement of Unconstitutional Statute or Ordinance

§ 150.75 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Improperly Granted or Denied Jury Trial

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Grant of Jury Trial

[b] Improper Denial of Jury Trial

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Denial of Jury Trial

§ 150.76 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Enjoined Enactment or Enforcement of Valid Statute or Ordinance

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Injunction Against Valid Statute or Ordinance

§ 150.77 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Issued Unconstitutional Preliminary Injunction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unconstitutional Injunction

§ 150.78 Opposing Petition for Writ of Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Procedure for Opposing Petition

[c] Opposition to Petition

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

§ 150.79 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Act Is Not Judicial

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Action Requirement

[b] Ministerial Act Not Subject to Prohibition

[c] Act of Arbitrator

[d] Act of Administrative Agency

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judicial Action Requirement

§ 150.80 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Mere Error Is Not Excess of Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mere Error Not Sufficient

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Mere Error Not Sufficient

§ 150.81 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Judicial Act Has Been Completed

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Action Completed

[b] Prohibition Not Proper After Final Judgment

§ 150.82 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Act Is Not Threatened

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Not Threatened

§ 150.83 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Jurisdictional Determination Depends on Unresolved Question of Fact

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Factual Issue to Be Decided

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factual Issue to Be Decided

§§ 150.84-150.119 [Reserved]

§ 150.120 Supporting Contention That Appropriate Writ May Be Issued When Petition Seeks Both Mandate and Prohibition

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Should Issue Writ That Is Justified by Allegations in Petition

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court Should Issue Writ That Is Justified by Allegations in Petition

§ 150.121 Supporting Contention That Issuance of Peremptory Writ in First Instance Is Justified

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Peremptory Writ in First Instance Defined

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Issuance of Peremptory Writ in First Instance

[b] Trial Court Provided Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard in Response to Suggestive Palma Notice

§§ 150.122-150.139 [Reserved]

§ 150.140 Supporting Contention That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Need Not Be Party to Lower Court Proceeding

[b] Special Interest or Right

[c] Enforcement of Public Duty

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Petitioner Need Not Be Party to Lower Court Proceeding

[b] Special Interest or Right

[c] Enforcement of Public Duty

§ 150.141 Supporting Contention That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested--Petitioner Is Taxpayer in Matter Relating to Taxation

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Status of Taxpayer in Matter Related to Taxation

§ 150.142 Supporting Contention That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested--Petitioner May Suffer Harm From Environmental Effects of Challenged Action

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Environmental Harm

§ 150.143 Supporting Contention That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested--Petitioner Is Organization With Beneficially Interested Members

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Representations by Organization With Beneficially Interested Members

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Representation by Organization With Beneficially Interested Members

§ 150.144 Opposing Contention That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Beneficial Interest

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Beneficial Interest

§§ 150.145-150.159 [Reserved]

§ 150.160 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discretionary Determination

§ 150.161 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Original Filing in Appellate Court

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution

[b] Original Jurisdiction of Appellate Court

[c] Public Entity Immunity Is Matter of Public Interest

[d] Legal Existence of Public Corporation Is Matter of Public Interest

[e] Right to Exercise Power of Eminent Domain Is Matter of Public Interest

[f] Enforcement of Law Is Matter of Public Interest

[g] Certification of Class is Matter of Public Interest

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution

[b] Public Entity Immunity as Matter of Public Interest

§ 150.162 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Question Is One of First Impression and of General Importance to Bench and Bar

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Issues Presented of First Impression and of General Importance

§ 150.163 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Similar Lawsuits Are Pending and No Case Law Exists on Issue Presented by Petitioner

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Similar Lawsuits Pending

§ 150.164 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Petitioner Cannot Bring Action Against Respondent

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Grounds for Action Against Respondent

[b] Availability of Declaratory Relief Not Determinative

§ 150.165 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--General Form

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Related Memoranda

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy

[b] Prejudice From Delay

[c] Review by Extraordinary Writ May Be Proper When It Will Not Halt Ordinary Progress of Action

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Prejudice From Delay

§ 150.166 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Leave to Amend or File Pleading

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Opportunity to Plead Cause of Action or Defense

[b] Amendment of Complaint

[c] Filing of Cross Complaint

[d] Amendment of Answer

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Amendment of Complaint

§ 150.167 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Granting Motion to Strike

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike

[b] Absolute Defense

[c] Entire Answer Stricken

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike

§ 150.168 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Motion to Strike--Claim for Unobtainable Relief

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Claim for Unobtainable Relief

§ 150.169 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Sustaining or Overruling Demurrer

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Demurrer Sustained

[b] Demurrer Overruled

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Demurrer Sustained

[b] Demurrer Overruled

§ 150.170 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Motion to Quash Service for Lack of Personal Jurisdiction or to Stay or Dismiss Action on Ground of Inconvenient Forum or to Dismiss for Delay in Prosecution [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a), (c)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time to File Petition

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Mandate Authorized

§ 150.171 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Superior Court Order Determining Venue [Code Civ. Proc. § 400]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time to File Petition

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Mandate Authorized

§ 150.172 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Consolidating Actions

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation of Actions

§ 150.173 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Class Certification

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Is Not Appealable

[b] Inordinate Expense of Trial

§ 150.174 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Granting Preliminary Injunction

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Petitioner's Rights Enjoined

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exercise of Petitioner's Rights Enjoined

§ 150.175 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Granting Partial Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication of Issues [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time for Filing Petition

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Portion of Case Will Not Be Tried on Merits

[b] Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Damages

[c] Summary Judgment Against One Party Only

§ 150.176 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Summary Judgment or Summary Adjudication of Issues [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time for Filing Petition

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Summary Adjudication

[b] Denial of Summary Judgment

[c] Liberal Use of Writs

[d] Long and Expensive Trial

§ 150.177 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Relief From Waiver of Jury Trial

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Review of Denial of Waiver of Jury Trial

§ 150.178 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Dismissal for Delay in Prosecution

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Motion to Dismiss for Delay in Prosecution

[b] Failure to Serve and Return Summons

[c] Failure to Bring Case to Trial

[d] Failure to Bring Case to Trial After Remand

§ 150.179 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Erroneous Refusal to Enter or Erroneous Entry of Default Judgment

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Refusal to Enter Default Judgment

[b] Entry of Default Judgment

§ 150.180 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order or Judgment When Petitioner Cannot Post Stay Bond

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Cannot Post Stay Bond

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Petitioner Cannot Post Stay Bond

§ 150.181 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Expunging Lis Pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.39]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time to File Petition

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Mandate Authorized

§ 150.182 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order in Coordination Proceeding [Code Civ. Proc. § 404.6]

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Time to File Petition

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Memoranda

§ 150.183 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order in Probate Proceeding

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order in Probate Proceeding

§ 150.184 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--Review of Order Denying Discovery

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[c] Opposing Memoranda

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Denying Discovery

§ 150.185 Opposing Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Petitioner's Right to Appeal Is Adequate Remedy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Doubts Resolved in Favor of Denial

[b] Direct Appeal

[c] Enforcement of Judgment or Order Has Been Stayed and Supersedeas Available

[d] Factors for Consideration When Petitioner Can Appeal From Eventual Judgment

[e] Time and Expense of Appeal

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Direct Appeal

[b] Time and Expense of Appeal

[c] Factors for Consideration When Petitioner Can Appeal From Eventual Judgment

§ 150.186 Opposing Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Petitioner's Right to Petition for Writ in Lower Court Is Adequate Remedy

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Seek Writ in Lower Court

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Seek Writ in Lower Court

§§ 150.187-150.199 [Reserved]

§ 150.200 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Petitioner Failed to Request Action or Raise Objection in Lower Court

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relief Not Requested Below

[b] Relief Requested But Court Has Not Ruled

[c] Petitioner Could Have Intervened

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relief Not Requested Below

§ 150.201 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Petitioner Is Guilty of Laches

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Establishing the Defense of Laches

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Laches

§ 150.202 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Petitioner Is Guilty of Unclean Hands

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unclean Hands

§ 150.203 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Ruling on Prior Petition Is Res Judicata

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Summary Denial of Prior Petition Bars Relief

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prior Denial Is Res Judicata

§ 150.204 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Petition Raises Issue That Is Moot

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mootness

[b] Compliance With Alternative Writ

[c] Useful Purpose Not Served

§ 150.205 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Lapse of Statute of Limitations or Statutory Period for Filing Petition

[1] FORM

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

[b] Lapse of Statute of Limitations

[c] Lapse of Express Statutory Period for Filing Petition

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lapse of Statute of Limitations

[b] Applicable Limitation Period

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.01

§ 150.01 Scope of Chapter

This chapter includes forms of memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 150.30-150.46] and opposing [see §§ 150.47-150.152] petitions for writs of mandate. It also includes memoranda for use in supporting [see §§ 150.70-150.77] and opposing [see §§ 150.78-15.83] petitions for writs of prohibition. The chapter also includes forms of memoranda relating to issues that are common to both writs, which may be used to support [see §§ 150.120, 150.121, 150.140-150.143, 150.160-150.184] and oppose [see §§ 150.144, 150.185, 150.186, 150.200-150.205] a petition for writ of mandate, prohibition, or both.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.02

§ 150.02 Governing Law

Proceedings for writ of mandate and writ of prohibition are governed generally by Cal. Const., art. VI, § 10, Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1063, 1064, 1084-1110b, and, in appellate courts, Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.485-8.493. Local appellate or superior court rules may also affect writ proceedings [see, e.g., Local Rules of the Courts of Appeal, First App. Dist. Policy Statement A; Los Angeles Co. Super. Ct. Rules, Rules 7.2(b)(7), 7.6, 7.7].

Except as otherwise provided in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1084-1110b, the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure governing civil actions generally (Code Civ. Proc. § 307 et seq.) apply to and constitute the rules of practice in mandate and prohibition proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 1109]. The provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 307 et seq. relating to new trials and appeals also apply to mandate and prohibition proceedings, except to the extent that they are inconsistent with the provisions of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1084-1110b [Code Civ. Proc. § 1110].

Similarly, the civil law and motion rules for trial courts, Cal. Rules of 3.1100 et seq., apply to proceedings for a writ of mandate or prohibition in superior courts [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1100, 3.1103(a)(2)].

In addition, a number of statutes expressly authorize the use of extraordinary writs, usually mandate, to review certain types of orders or judgments [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 418.10(c) (denial of motion to quash service), 437c(m) (denial of summary judgment)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibitionGovernmentsCourtsRule Application & Interpretation

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.03

§ 150.03 Function and Scope of Prerogative Writs

Courts and commentators have characterized writs of mandate and prohibition as "prerogative writs" [see, e.g., American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 588, 113 Cal. Rptr. 561] , that is, a court order requiring the performance of a specified act, or giving authority to have it done, issued by the exercise of the extraordinary power of the court, on proper cause shown [Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed. 1979) at 1441, 1442].

Prerogative writs are utilized as a means for reviewing judicial, nonjudicial, and administrative rulings [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1103]. They are available only in extraordinary circumstances and courts are vested with discretion to accept or reject requests for them [see American Mut. Liab. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1974) 38 Cal. App. 3d 579, 588-589, 113 Cal. Rptr. 561 ; Renken v. Compton City School Dist. (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 106, 112, 24 Cal. Rptr. 347] .

The three major prerogative writs available in California civil proceedings are:

> (1) Writs of mandate or mandamus, which may issue to compel performance of a ministerial act or mandatory duty when there is a clear legal right in the person seeking relief, a corresponding duty in the defendant, and a lack of any other adequate remedy [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086];
>
> (2) Writs of prohibition, which may issue to prevent an inferior court or tribunal possessing judicial or quasi-judicial powers from exercising its jurisdiction in matters over which it lacks sufficient jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]; and
>
> (3) Writs of review (or certiorari), which may issue to review miscellaneous actions of inferior tribunals, boards, and officers exercising judicial functions when these bodies have exceeded their jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1068, 1074].

Of the three prerogative writs, writs of mandate and prohibition are by far the most commonly used in California civil proceedings. For discussion comparing these writs, see § 150.04. For discussion and forms relating to the less commonly used writ of review, see Ch. 205, Review (Certiorari), Writ of.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.04

§ 150.04 Mandate and Prohibition Compared

Mandate and prohibition are similar in several basic respects. Both remedies are prerogative writs [see § 150.03], issuable by any court (except a municipal or justice court) on the verified petition of the party beneficially interested when there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086, 1103]. The writs may be issued and directed to "an inferior tribunal, or to a corporation, board, or person" [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1103]. To a large degree, the procedural requirements for the writs overlap [see Code Civ. Proc § 1105], and, in some cases, the writs can be used interchangeably [see, e.g., Rio Del Mar. etc. Club v. Superior Court (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 214, 217, 190 P.2d 295 (mandamus or prohibition appropriate to secure meritorious dismissal denied by trial court)].

Mandate and prohibition differ in respect to what they can compel the ordered party (known as the "respondent") to do. Generally speaking, mandate is used to compel ministerial action, while prohibition is used to restrain or prevent judicial action. Mandate can compel a respondent to perform an act that the law specially enjoins, or compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which he or she is entitled, and from which he or she is unlawfully precluded [Code Civ. Proc. § 1085]. Prohibition, on the other hand, can arrest the proceedings of a respondent (typically a court) exercising judicial functions when the proceedings are without or in excess of the respondent's jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. § 1102].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.05

§ 150.05 Administrative Mandate Distinguished

The writ of administrative mandate is a specialized writ of mandate that is used to obtain review of administrative decisions [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a)]. The writ is only available when conditions specified in Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 are met [Keeler v. Superior Court (1956) 46 Cal. 2d 596, 599, 297 P.2d 967] . That is, there must be a final decision by an administrative agency that has discretionary authority to make findings of fact and that was required by law to hold a hearing at which evidence was required by law to be compiled in support of the agency's findings of fact [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a); Environmental Protection and Information Center v. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 459, 519-520, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28, 187 P.3d 888 (findings required in administrative mandate but not traditional mandate); O.W.L. Foundation v. City of Rohnert Park (2008) 168 Cal. App. 4th 568, 585, 86 Cal. Rptr. 3d 1 (traditional mandamus appropriate when city chose to hold public hearing although no hearing legally required); Blue Cross of California v. State Department of Health Services (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 322, 329, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 772 ;]. Additionally, the petitioner for the writ must be beneficially interested in issuance of the writ and have no plain and speedy remedy in the ordinary course of law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1086].

The choice of remedy between regular and administrative mandate depends to a large degree on whether the agency action is adjudicatory or legislative in nature [Mileikowsky v. Tenet Healthsystem (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 531, 554-555, 27 Cal. Rptr. 3d 171 (writ of mandate proper to determine whether hearing officer had authority to suspend hearing as sanction); Tielsch v. City of Anaheim (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 570, 574, 206 Cal. Rptr. 738 ; Garrick Development Co. v. Hayward Unified School Dist. (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 320, 327-328, 4 Cal. Rptr. 2d 897] . Generally speaking, a legislative action is the formulation of a rule to be applied to all future cases, while an adjudicatory action involves the actual application of such a rule to a specific set of existing facts [Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 35 n.2, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 ; Tielsch v. City of Anaheim (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 570, 574, 206 Cal. Rptr. 738] . If the statutory requirements for relief are otherwise met, acts by an administrative body that are of an adjudicatory nature typically are reviewable under administrative mandate, while acts by such a body that are of a legislative or quasi-legislative nature are reviewable under regular, or traditional, mandate [see City of Arcadia v. State Water Res. Control Bd. (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1392, 1408, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 373 ; Western States Petroleum Assn. v. South Coast Air Quality Management Dist. (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 1012, 1018, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 354 ; Carrancho v. California Air Resources Board (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1265-1267, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 536 (variances in review authorized in traditional mandamus and administrative mandate); Langsam v. City of Sausalito (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 871, 879, 235 Cal. Rptr. 672 ; Santa Ana Tustin Community Hospital v. Board of Supervisors (1982) 127 Cal. App. 3d 644, 653, 179 Cal. Rptr. 620] .

Administrative mandate is not available if the underlying administrative order or decision did not result from a proceeding in which a hearing was required by law and at which evidence was required to be taken [Taylor Bus Service, Inc. v. San Diego Bd. of Education (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1331, 1339, 241 Cal. Rptr. 379] .

For further discussion and forms relating to writs of administrative mandate, see Ch. 195, Public Administrative Law [see also California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions (Matthew Bender)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Administrative LawAgency RulemakingRule Application & InterpretationGeneral OverviewCivil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.06

§ 150.06 Lack of Adequate Legal Remedy Requirement

Perhaps the most significant burden on a petitioner for either a writ of mandate or a writ of prohibition is to show that he or she has no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1086, 1103; Barratt American, Inc. v. City of Rancho Cucamonga (2005) 37 Cal. 4th 685, 705, 37 Cal. Rptr. 3d 149, 124 P.3d 719 ; Phelan v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 363, 366, 217 P.2d 951 ; but see Smith v. Superior Court (1996) 41 Cal. App. 4th 1014, 1020-1022, 49 Cal. Rptr. 2d 20] . The question of whether there is an adequate legal remedy is one of fact, depending on the circumstances of each particular case, and its determination is a matter largely within the sound discretion of the court [Barnard v. Municipal Court (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 324, 327, 298 P.2d 679] . The court's determination will not be disturbed on appeal from denial of the writ petition absent a showing of abuse of discretion [see W.A. Rose Co. v. Municipal Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 74, 1 Cal. Rptr. 49] . Therefore, although Code Civ. Proc. § 1086 provides that a writ of mandate "must be issued" in all cases when there no adequate remedy at law, a court in fact has broad discretion to grant or deny the writ because its determination on the issue of adequacy is discretionary. In practice, only a small fraction of writ petitions are granted [see Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1271, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66 (90 percent of writ petitions are summarily denied)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.07

§ 150.07 Mislabeled and Alternative Petitions

Superior and appellate courts are authorized to grant extraordinary relief "in the nature of mandamus, certiorari, and prohibition" [Cal. Const., art. VI, § 10]. Under modern principles of pleading, neither a mislabeled petition nor a defective prayer bar the relief justified by proper allegations and proof [Peck's Liquors, Inc. v. Superior Court (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 772, 775, 34 Cal. Rptr. 735] . Should a party petition for the wrong writ, the reviewing court generally will treat the petition as one for the appropriate writ [see, e.g., Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 850, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 (petition for prohibition treated as petition for mandate); Coelho v. State Personnel Bd. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 968, 971, 257 Cal. Rptr. 557 (petition for administrative mandamus treated as petition for ordinary mandate); County of Butte v. Superior Court (1985) 176 Cal. App. 3d 693, 696, 222 Cal. Rptr. 429 (petition for prohibition treated as petition for mandate); see also § 150.120].

On appeal from a judgment granting a petition for an extraordinary writ, the court of appeal may treat the case as an appeal from an injunction if the trial court effectively granted injunctive relief [see, e.g., Oberlander v. County of Contra Costa (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 535, 538, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 182 (in action for injunctive and declaratory relief and writ of mandate, trial court granted injunctive relief by writ of mandate)].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedureEquityAdequate Remedy at LawCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.08

§ 150.08 Use of Points and Authorities to Support or Oppose Writ Petition

[1] In Appellate Court

A petition for a writ of mandate or prohibition filed in an appellate court must be accompanied by a supporting memorandum of [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.486(a)].

No statement in opposition to the petition is required unless requested by the court, but the respondent or any real party in interest may, separately or jointly, serve and file a memorandum in opposition, together with any statement of fact considered material and not included in the petition [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(a)].

[2] In Superior Court

Neither the Code of Civil Procedure nor the California Rules of Court expressly require that points and authorities be filed in support of a petition for a writ of mandate or prohibition in the superior court. Such a requirement may nevertheless be reasonably implied. The rules set out in Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1100 et seq. apply in proceedings on application for a writ of mandate or prohibition [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 3.1100, 3.1103(a)(2)]. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(a) requires, in turn, that a notice of motion be supported by a memorandum. A petition for a writ of mandate or prohibiton may fairly be characterized as a motion, if not a notice of motion. The definitions of a motion and order in civil actions apply to similar acts in a proceeding for a writ of mandate or prohibition [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1064], and under Code Civ. Proc. § 1003, a motion is an application for order, which, in turn, is defined as any written direction by a court not included in a judgment [see also Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088, 1089, 1090, 1107 (referring to petition as "motion" or "application")]. Moreover, Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1114, designating which applications, motions, and petitions do not require memoranda, does not include a petition for writ of mandate or prohibition among its number [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1114].

The advisability of filing points and authorities to support a petition is buttressed not only by statutory language but also by practical considerations. A court may summarily deny an ex parte petition for an alternative writ when it appears from the face of the petition that an alternative writ will not be issued [see Kingston v. Department of Motor Vehicles (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 549, 552, 76 Cal. Rptr. 614] . Further, while a respondent has a right to file a memorandum in opposition to the petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1107], a petitioner has no right to respond to the memorandum. Thus, it is the practice of counsel in many counties throughout California to file points and authorities in support of petitions sought in the superior courts.

The respondent, real party in interest, or both, may serve and file points and authorities in opposition to the granting of any prerogative writ [Code Civ. Proc. § 1107].

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.09

§ 150.09 Using the Forms in This Chapter

[1] In Support of Writ Petition

Counsel should use the forms in this chapter to build a memorandum in support of a writ petition by first choosing either the skeletal form for mandate [see § 150.30] or for prohibition [see § 150.70]. Points and authorities should then be added to the skeletal form as necessary under the circumstances: points supporting elements unique to either mandate [see §§ 150.31-150.46] or prohibition [see §§ 150.71-150.77], general points [see §§ 150.120-150.121], points relating to the beneficial interest requirement [see §§ 150.140-150.143], and points relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement [see §§ 150.160-150.184]. In some circumstances, issuance of both writs may be the only means to obtain complete relief [see, e.g., W.A. Rose Co. v. Municipal Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 75, 1 Cal. Rptr. 49 (writ of mandate ordering court clerk to enter default and writ of prohibition restraining court from proceeding with action)]. If counsel seeks both writs, he or she should combine the two skeletal forms and modify them accordingly. If counsel is unsure which writ provides the appropriate relief under the circumstances, use § 150.120 in requesting that the court issue the appropriate writ based on the facts pleaded in the writ petition [see § 150.07].

[2] Opposition to Petition

Counsel should use the forms in this chapter to build a memorandum opposing a writ petition by first choosing either the skeletal form for mandate [see § 150.47] or for prohibition [see § 150.78]. Points and authorities should then be added to the skeletal form as necessary under the circumstances: points opposing elements unique to either mandate [see §§ 150.48-150.52] or prohibition [see §§ 150.79-150.83], and points relating to issues common to both writs, such as the lack of petitioner's beneficial interest [see § 150.144], the existence of an adequate legal remedy [see §§ 150.185-150.186], and defenses common to both writs [see §§ 150.200-150.205].

For discussion of the procedure for filing opposition to a writ petition, either in the form of preliminary opposition under Code Civ. Proc. § 1107 or in the form of a demurrer or answer or both under Code Civ. Proc. § 1089, see §§ 150.47[2] (mandate) and 150.78[2] (prohibition).

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeTime LimitationsCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.10

§ 150.10 Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a discussion, procedural guide, and forms for use in mandate and prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

For a discussion, procedural guide, and forms of petitions for judicial review of a final administrative order under administrative mandate [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 474C, Procedures in Reviewing Agency Decisions (Matthew Bender).

For discussions, procedural guides, and forms for use in the related proceeding of certiorari, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 492, Review (Certiorari), Writ of (Matthew Bender).

For forms of petitions for writs of mandate for use in particular situations, see the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice:

- Ch. 3, Abatement of Actions.
- Ch. 4, Abortion and Birth Control Methods.
- Ch. 19, Alcoholic Beverages: Civil Liability.
- Ch. 61, Associations and Clubs.
- Ch. 110, Churches and Religious Organizations.
- Ch. 118, Civil Service.
- Ch. 120, Class Actions.
- Ch. 160, Corporations.

- Ch. 190, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing.
- Ch. 191, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations.
- Ch. 192, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse.
- Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions.
- Ch. 194, Discovery: Interrogatories.
- Ch. 195, Discovery: Inspection of Tangible Evidence.
- Ch. 196, Discovery: Requests for Admissions.
- Ch. 197, Discovery: Physical and Mental Examinations.
- Ch. 198, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information.
- Ch. 199, Discovery: Preservation of Evidence.
- Ch. 200, Discovery: Review of Discovery Orders.
- Ch. 243, Elections.
- Ch. 247, Eminent Domain.
- Ch. 302, Initiative, Referendum, and Recall.
- Ch. 414, Physicians: Licensing and Discipline.
- Ch. 415, Physicians: Medical Malpractice.
- Ch. 416, Physicians: Membership on Hospital Staffs or in Professional Organizations.
- Ch. 462, Public Accountants.
- Ch. 512, Schools.
- Ch. 518, Service of Summons and Papers.
- Ch. 579, Zoning and Planning.

For forms of petitions for writs of prohibition for use in particular situations, see the following chapters in California Forms of Pleading and Practice:

- Ch. 3, Abatement of Actions.
- Ch. 59, Assemblies, Meetings, and Demonstrations.

- Ch. 135, Contempt.
- Ch. 190, Discovery: Scope, Regulation, and Timing.
- Ch. 191, Discovery: Privileges and Other Discovery Limitations.
- Ch. 192, Discovery: Sanctions for Discovery Misuse.
- Ch. 193, Discovery: Depositions.
- Ch. 194, Discovery: Interrogatories.
- Ch. 195, Discovery: Inspection of Tangible Evidence.
- Ch. 196, Discovery: Requests for Admissions.
- Ch. 197, Discovery: Physical and Mental Examinations.
- Ch. 198, Discovery: Exchange of Expert Witness Information.
- Ch. 199, Discovery: Preservation of Evidence.
- Ch. 200, Discovery: Review of Discovery Orders.
- Ch. 317, Judges.

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:
Administrative LawJudicial ReviewAdministrative RecordDisclosure & DiscoveryCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.11

§ 150.11 Related Points and Authorities Chapters

For memoranda for use in petitioning for a writ of mandate to compel proper payment of civil service salaries, certification of a civil service appointment, or administration of a civil service exam, see Ch. 36, Civil Service .

For memoranda for use in petitioning for writ review of discovery orders, see Ch. 89A, Discovery: Review of Discovery Orders .

For memoranda for use in petitioning for a writ of prohibition to restrain guardianship proceedings see Ch. 106, Guardianship and Conservatorship .

For memoranda for use in petitioning for review by writ of a ruling on a motion to disqualify a judge for cause under Code Civ. Proc. § 170.3, see Ch. 130, Judges . For memoranda for use in petitioning for review by writ of a ruling on a peremptory motion brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 170.6, see Ch. 130, Judges .

For memoranda for use in petitioning for writ review of an administrative adjudicatory order or decision under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (administrative mandamus), see Ch. 195, Public Administrative Law and Ch. 36, Civil Service .

For memoranda for use in petitioning for review of mandate of employment decisions affecting teachers, see Ch. 211, Schools: Certification, Dismissal, and Related Employment Issues .

For memoranda for use in petitioning for writ review of an order disallowing a defense or postponing a trial date in an unlawful detainer action, see Ch. 236, Unlawful Detainer .

For a discussion of how to use the forms in this chapter to draft a complete memorandum, or a trial or appellate brief, and for an illustration of a completed memorandum, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

Legal Topics:

For related research and practice materials, see the following legal topics:

Civil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeOpposing MemorandaCivil ProcedurePleading & PracticeMotion PracticeSupporting MemorandaCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsMandamusCivil ProcedureRemediesWritsCommon Law WritsProhibition

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-150 California Points & Authorities §§ 150.12-150.29

[Reserved]

§§ 150.12[Reserved]

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.30

§ 150.30 Supporting Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,

[or]

IN THE COURT OF APPEAL OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
_____ APPELLATE DISTRICT
[DIVISION _____]

[or]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)
Petitioner,	)	[CIVIL] NO. _____
vs.	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF	)	FOR WRIT OF MANDATE
CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF	)	[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086(; Cal. Rules of Ct.,
_____,	)	Rule 8.486)]
[or]	)	Date: _____
_____ [name of	)	Time: _____

other inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person]	)	Location: _____
Respondent,	)	[Judge: _____]
_____ [name],	)	Date Action Filed: _____
Real Party in Interest.	)	[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THIS COURT SHOULD ISSUE A WRIT OF MANDATE COMPELLING RESPONDENT TO _____ [specify act] BECAUSE RESPONDENT IS _____ [AN INFERIOR TRIBUNAL or CORPORATION or BOARD or PERSON] HAVING A DUTY TO SO ACT, AND PETITIONER IS BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED AND HAS NO PLAIN, SPEEDY, AND ADEQUATE REMEDY IN THE ORDINARY COURSE OF LAW.

When Writ of Mandate May Issue. A writ of mandate may issue from any court to any inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person to compel the performance of an act that the law specifically enjoins as a duty from an office, trust, or station, or to compel the admission of a party to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which the party is entitled and from which the party is unlawfully precluded. The writ must be issued on the verified petition of the party beneficially interested, when there is no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086).

[Add specific points and authorities showing that the writ is necessary to compel the respondent to perform a duty or to admit petitioner to the use and enjoyment of a right or office to which the petitioner is entitled and from which he or she is unlawfully precluded by respondent. (If respondent is a lower court or court clerk, see §§ 150.31-150.38. If respondent is a public entity or official, see §§ 150.39-150.43. If respondent is a private organization, see § 150.44.)]

[Add specific points and authorities showing why petitioner's remedy at law is inadequate (see §§ 150.160-150.184).]

[Add specific points and authorities showing that petitioner has a beneficial interest in the proceedings (see §§ 150.140-150.43)].

[If the petition seeks a writ of mandate or, in the alternative, a writ of prohibition, add specific points and authorities showing that appropriate writ may be issued when petition seeks both writs (see § 150.120).]

[Add specific points and authorities showing that issuance of a peremptory writ in the first instance is justified, if appropriate (see § 150.121).]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Petitioner _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing form is a skeletal memorandum in support of a petition for writ of mandate. It is designed to be combined with additional, more specific points and authorities showing why the court should exercise its discretion to issue a writ of mandate under the particular circumstances of the case [see discussion under § 150.30[2][b]].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For discussion regarding supporting points and authorities generally, see § 150.08.

[b] Establishing Elements Essential to Issuance of Writ of Mandate

The foregoing form sets out the general point of law that a writ of mandate may properly issue when the following conditions exist: (1) respondent is an inferior lower tribunal, corporation, board, or person; (2) respondent has a duty to perform the act sought to be compelled by the writ; (3) petitioner has a clear and beneficial right to performance of that act; and (4) petitioner has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086; Payne v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 908, 925, 132 Cal. Rptr. 405, 553 P.2d 565] .

The bracketed instructions that follow the general point of law in the foregoing form indicate that additional paragraphs, taken from subsequent forms in this chapter, should be added showing the following elements: (1) the respondent's duty, as an inferior tribunal, public entity or official, or private organization, to do the act sought to be compelled by the writ; (2) the petitioner's beneficial interest in the performance of that act; and (3) the inadequacy of petitioner's remedy at law. Further bracketed instructions indicate that additional paragraphs taken from subsequent forms in this chapter should be added, if appropriate, to show the following: (1) the propriety of issuing the writ if the petition mistakenly seeks a writ of prohibition, or seeks the writs in the alternative; and (2) the propriety of issuing a peremptory writ in the first instance. Counsel should refer to the forms indicated in the bracketed instructions and choose the paragraphs that best fit the factual situation involved.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For forms of petitions for writs of mandate, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.47 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.31

§ 150.31 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Assume Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT COURT TO ASSUME OR EXERCISE JURISDICTION BECAUSE RESPONDENT HAS JURISDICTION BUT HAS REFUSED TO PROCEED ON THE GROUND OF LACK OF JURISDICTION.

A. Duty of Lower Court to Assume Jurisdiction. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a court to assume or exercise jurisdiction when it has jurisdiction and has refused to proceed on the ground of lack of jurisdiction (Wisely v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 267, 270, 220 Cal. Rptr. 893).

B. Duty of Lower Court to Hear and Determine Merits of Matters Within Its Jurisdiction. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a court to hear and determine the merits of all matters properly before it within its jurisdiction, either when it refuses to proceed because it erroneously believes that it has no jurisdiction, or when it disposes of the matter on the sole ground that it has no jurisdiction (Robinson v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 379, 383-384, 218 P.2d 10).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to exercise its jurisdiction when the court has jurisdiction but has refused to proceed on the ground of lack of jurisdiction.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the trial court has jurisdiction over the matter. For example, counsel could show that although an appeal has stayed trial court proceedings, the matters in issue are incidental aspects of the cause that are not within the scope of the reviewing court's exclusive jurisdiction [see Wisely v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 267, 269, 220 Cal. Rptr. 893] .

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Assume Jurisdiction

In Wisely v. Superior Court (1985) 175 Cal. App. 3d 267, 220 Cal. Rptr. 893 , a criminal defendant was found guilty in a death penalty case, and given a penalty advisory verdict of death. The trial court granted a new trial on the penalty phase, and the People appealed. Subsequently, the trial court granted the People's motion to quash petitioner's subpoenas duces tecum, and denied petitioner's motion to compel production of probation reports pursuant to Penal Code § 1203.05, on the ground that the superior court lacks jurisdiction to compel discovery while the appeal is pending. Defendant brought a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to hear the discovery motions on the merits.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, directing the superior court to annul its orders regarding discovery (175 Cal. App. 3d 267, 270) . Even after an appellate court has obtained jurisdiction over a dispute, the trial judge retains certain powers over the parties and the incidental aspects of the cause that are not within the scope of the reviewing court's exclusive jurisdiction (175 Cal. App. 3d 267, 269) . Discovery proceedings sought preparatory to an anticipated new trial on the penalty phase constitute matters embraced in the action and not affected by the judgment or order, within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 916 (perfecting of appeal stays proceedings). A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a court to assume or exercise jurisdiction when it has jurisdiction and has refused to proceed on the ground of lack of jurisdiction (175 Cal. App. 3d 267, 270) .

[b] Duty of Lower Court to Hear and Determine Merits of Matters Within Its Jurisdiction

In Robinson v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 379, 218 P.2d 10 , petitioners obtained an arbitration award after submitting a contract dispute to the Labor Commissioner for settlement. When petitioners moved for an order confirming the award, the court denied the motion on the ground that the statutory procedure for confirmation of arbitration awards did not apply to awards made by the Labor Commissioner. Petitioners then sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to take jurisdiction of the motion and to render a judgment either confirming, modifying, correcting, or vacating the award.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the statutes applied to Labor Commissioner awards. In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court applied the principle that a trial court is under a duty to hear and determine the merits of all matters properly before it that are within its jurisdiction. Mandate will issue to compel the performance of this duty, the court held, even when the trial court's refusal to pass on the merits is based on the considered but erroneous belief that it has no jurisdiction as a matter of law to grant the relief requested (35 Cal. 2d 379, 383) . The writ is available, the court held, whether the court merely refuses to proceed because of its erroneous belief that it has no jurisdiction or whether the court makes a ruling disposing of the matter on the sole ground that it has no jurisdiction ( 35 Cal. 2d 379, 383-384) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Hear and Determine Merits of Matters Within Its Jurisdiction

In Elliott v. Superior Court (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 825, 71 Cal. Rptr. 807 , the superior court refused to hear and determine on the merits a motion and petition for instructions filed during the lifetime of the beneficiary of a testamentary trust under her husband's will and a petition for instructions filed after the beneficiary's death by the special administrator of her estate. The probate court erroneously believed that it lacked jurisdiction because of the death of the income beneficiary. The court of appeal determined that the court had jurisdiction and, applying the holding in Robinson v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 379, 218 P.2d 10 (discussed under § 150.31[3][b]) issued a writ of mandate compelling the probate court to hear and determine on the merits the two petitions and motion (265 Cal. App. 2d 825, 830-831, 837) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.32

§ 150.32 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Exercise Discretion

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION TO DETERMINE WHETHER _____ [specify determination, e.g., DEFENDANT IS ENTITLED TO RELIEF FROM THE DEFAULT JUDGMENT] BECAUSE RESPONDENT HAS REFUSED TO EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION IN THE ERRONEOUS BELIEF THAT IT HAS NO DISCRETION.

Duty of Lower Court to Exercise Its Discretion. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a court to exercise its discretion when the court has refused to exercise its discretion because of a mistaken belief that the court has no discretion (Erlich v. Superior Court (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 551, 556, 47 Cal. Rptr. 473, 407 P.2d 649).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to exercise its discretion when it has failed to do so on the basis of a mistaken belief that it had no discretion.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Exercise Its Discretion

In Erlich v. Superior Court (1965) 63 Cal. 2d 551, 47 Cal. Rptr. 473, 407 P.2d 649 , defendant successfully appealed an unfavorable judgment in a trade libel action and obtained a judgment that awarded him the costs of appeal. The action was remanded for retrial on the issue of damages. Plaintiff then moved to quash the writ of execution on defendant's costs judgment, contending that defendant was insolvent and would be unable to satisfy any judgment that plaintiff might win on retrial. The trial court denied the motion to quash as premature and plaintiff filed an independent action for an injunction against enforcement of the costs judgment. The court in the second action granted summary judgment for defendant, apparently on the ground that the issue had been decided against plaintiff in the earlier proceeding. In its order, the court stated that it had no discretion in the circumstances. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain issuance of the writ of execution.

The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate directing the court to consider, in accordance with the standards set out in the opinion, whether plaintiff was entitled to have collection of the costs judgment enjoined pending a determination of the trade libel action (63 Cal. 2d 551, 558) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court stated that the writ can issue when a trial court refuses to exercise its discretion because of a mistaken belief that it has no discretion. The trial court, the Court observed, expressly granted summary judgment on the erroneous basis that it had no discretion (63 Cal. 2d 551, 556) . The Court said that the action was not barred by the doctrine of res judicata and that the trial court should determine whether an injunction was warranted (63 Cal. 2d 551, 556, 558) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Duty of Lower Court to Exercise Its Discretion

In Payne v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 908, 132 Cal. Rptr. 405, 553 P.2d 565 , petitioner had a default judgment entered against him because he was a prisoner, had no attorney, and could not participate in the suit. Petitioner moved to vacate the default judgment pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 473. The motion was denied and he petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, directing the trial court to vacate the judgment and appoint counsel for petitioner if the trial court determined that he was incarcerated and indigent (17 Cal. 3d 908, 926-927) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court observed that the trial court's denial of relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473 apparently was not an act of discretion but rather a refusal to exercise discretion. When the court was informed that the original judgment was taken against petitioner while he was unable to obtain an attorney or personally appear, the Court held, a duty arose to determine whether petitioner had been denied meaningful access to the courts. If the court ascertained that petitioner was indigent, it had no other course but to vacate the judgment. Failure to do so was grounds for a writ of mandate (17 Cal. 3d 908, 926) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.33

§ 150.33 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Exercise Discretion in Particular Manner

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO _____ [specify ruling, e.g., SUSTAIN DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT] BECAUSE, UNDER THE FACTS, RESPONDENT'S DISCRETION CAN BE EXERCISED IN ONLY ONE WAY AND THE FAILURE TO SO EXERCISE IT CONSTITUTED AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

A. Trial Court Can Exercise Discretion in Only One Way. A writ of mandate may be used to direct the trial court to exercise its discretion in a particular manner when the relevant facts are undisputed and, under those facts, the court's discretion can be exercised in only one way (Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 574, 579, 114 Cal. Rptr. 106, 522 P.2d 666).

B. Trial Court Abused Its Discretion. If, on the basis of undisputed facts, it is clear that the trial court abused its discretion, a writ of mandate to compel the court to exercise its discretion in the proper way is appropriate (Robbins v. Superior Court (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 199, 205, 211 Cal. Rptr. 398, 695 P.2d 695).

C. Clear Legal Duty. When the trial court has a clear legal duty to grant certain relief, it is an abuse of discretion to refuse such relief, and mandate will lie to compel the performance of the clear legal duty (San Diego Wholesale Credit Men's Assn. v. Superior Court (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 458, 464, 110 Cal. Rptr. 657).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing memorandum may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to exercise its discretion in a particular way on the basis that to act in any other way constitutes an abuse of discretion.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should demonstrate that the facts of the case are undisputed, and that the applicable law dictates the outcome sought by counsel.

[b] Compelling Trial Court to Correct Abuse of Discretion

The foregoing points and authorities support the contention that mandate is an available remedy because the court has a legal duty to exercise its discretion in only one way [see Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 574, 579, 114 Cal. Rptr. 106, 522 P.2d 666] . When combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate, it is designed to satisfy the requirement that the act sought to be compelled by the writ is one that the respondent court has a legal duty to perform [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1085]. As such, the foregoing contention is one of the most commonly used to demonstrate respondent's "legal duty" when the respondent is a lower court. It can be used in support of a challenge to many types of court orders, such as an order overruling a demurrer [see Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 850-851, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379] , an order denying leave to amend a complaint [see Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 289, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443] , or an order refusing to dismiss an action for delay in prosecution [see Dresser v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 68, 74, 41 Cal. Rptr. 473] .

However, even if the lower court is required to exercise its discretion in a particular manner, the reviewing court may nevertheless deny relief on the ground that the petitioner has an adequate legal remedy in the ordinary course of law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1086; Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 851, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379] .

To qualify for extraordinary relief by writ of mandate, an abuse of discretion must, in effect, constitute one of the "extraordinary circumstances" in which a reviewing court will exercise its discretion to issue the writ. The Supreme Court in Schweiger v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 507, 517-518, 90 Cal. Rptr. 729, 476 P.2d 97 , stated that error alone, as distinguished from an abuse of discretion or other "extraordinary circumstance," does not merit relief by writ. However, when the trial court's ruling deprives petitioner of an opportunity to litigate fully the action on its merits, the ruling constitutes an abuse of discretion that may be remedied by mandate.

Therefore, counsel should demonstrate that the challenged ruling was an abuse of discretion not only in the sense that it establishes the trial court's legal duty to exercise its discretion in a particular manner, but also in the sense that the abuse of discretion constitutes an extraordinary circumstance that cannot be remedied in the ordinary course of law [see also § 150.30[2][b]].

[c] Writ of Prohibition Compared

A writ of prohibition is only available if the trial court acted without or in excess of its jurisdiction [Code Civ. Proc. § 1102]. Although the writ does not reach errors of law or fact, the meaning of "excess of jurisdiction" extends to any acts exceeding the court's power, whether that power is defined by constitutional provision, express statutory declaration, or rules developed by the courts and followed under the doctrine of stare decisis [Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 287, 291, 109 P.2d 942] . For a form in support of a writ of prohibition for use when a court has failed to follow stare decisis, see § 150.73.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.48 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Trial Court Can Exercise Discretion in Only One Way

In Hurtado v. Superior Court (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 574, 114 Cal. Rptr. 106, 522 P.2d 666 , a wrongful death action, defendant moved for a separate trial of the issue of whether the measure of damages was to be applied according to the law of California, where the accident occurred, or the law of Mexico, where plaintiffs and the decedent resided. The superior court ruled that California law applied. Defendant then obtained a writ of mandate from the court of appeal, which directed the trial court to vacate its ruling and to issue a ruling that Mexican law applied. Plaintiffs petitioned for review.

The Supreme Court reversed and denied the writ, holding that the trial court correctly looked to California law because California was both the forum and an interested state (11 Cal. 3d 574, 582) . The Court applied the principle that, although mandate cannot be issued to control a court's discretion, in unusual circumstances the writ will lie when, under the facts, that discretion can be exercised in only one way. The facts had been stipulated to and were not in dispute. The sole issue was a question of law concerning which measure of damages should be applied. The trial court, the Court reiterated, is under a legal duty to apply the proper law and may be directed to perform that duty by writ of mandate (11 Cal. 3d 574, 579) .

[b] Trial Court Abused Its Discretion

In Robbins v. Superior Court (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 199, 211 Cal. Rptr. 398, 695 P.2d 695 , plaintiffs brought an action challenging the county's policy of giving certain welfare recipients "in-kind" benefits, in the form of housing in an emergency shelter, in lieu of cash grants. When the trial court denied plaintiffs' motion for a preliminary injunction, plaintiffs petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of mandate to compel the court to grant the injunction.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the test for issuance of a preliminary injunction was met by plaintiffs and, therefore, the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the injunction (38 Cal. 3d 199, 218) . In holding that mandate was an available remedy, the Court applied the principle that, although mandate does not generally lie to control the exercise of judicial discretion, the writ will issue when, under the facts, that discretion can be exercised in only one way. If, on the basis of undisputed facts, the Court explained, it is clear that the trial court abused its discretion in failing to issue the preliminary injunction, a writ of mandate to compel issuance of the injunction was appropriate (38 Cal. 3d 199, 205) .

In San Diego Wholesale Credit Men's Assn. v. Superior Court (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 458, 110 Cal. Rptr. 657 , a contract action, plaintiff applied for a prejudgment writ of attachment and, after a hearing, the application was denied. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate compelling the court to order the clerk to issue the writ of attachment.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the evidence presented at the hearing was such that the court could not have found other than that statutory ground for issuance of an attachment existed, that the plaintiff had established the probably validity of the contract claim, and that there was no reasonable probability that a successful defense could be asserted (35 Cal. App. 3d 458, 464, 465) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court applied the principle that a trial court abuses its discretion when it has a clear legal duty to grant certain relief but refuses to do so, and mandate will lie to compel the performance of the clear legal duty (35 Cal. App. 3d 458, 464) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Trial Court Can Exercise Discretion in Only One Way

In Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , a medical malpractice action, defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking a declaratory judgment that, if the action terminated in defendant's favor, defendant was entitled to damages from plaintiff and her attorney for malicious prosecution. Plaintiff and her attorney demurred on the ground that the cross-action was premature because favorable termination is a precondition to an action for malicious prosecution. The trial court overruled the demurrer, relying on dictum in a case that appeared to authorize the granting of a declaratory judgment for malicious prosecution before the prior suit is terminated. Plaintiff and her attorney petitioned the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition to prevent the court from proceeding with the cross-action.

The California Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate, disapproving the dictum and holding that a defendant cannot cross-complain for malicious prosecution in the main action, even if the cross-complaint is framed as a request for declaratory relief (3 Cal. 3d 841, 846, 848, 850) . In its discussion of the propriety of writ review, the Court applied the principle that in unusual circumstances the writ will lie when, under the facts, the court's discretion can be exercised in only one way. The Court concluded that the trial court had no discretion to overrule petitioner's demurrer because the cross-complaint was legally defective on its face. Consequently, the trial court was under a legal duty to sustain the demurrer and could be directed to do so by a writ of mandate (3 Cal. 3d 841, 851) .

In Mannheim v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 678, 91 Cal. Rptr. 585, 478 P.2d 17 , a decedent's heirs obtained a decree entitling them to one-half of the decedent's estate. Under the existing probate statutes, the other half would have escheated to the state. Former Prob. Code § 228 was then amended to prevent the escheat of property in such circumstances. The court of appeal denied the heirs' petition for a writ of mandate to compel the probate court to enter a supplemental order distributing to them the remaining half of the estate pursuant to the amended statute.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the amendment applied to estates not permanently escheated to the state on the amendment's effective date (3 Cal. 3d 678, 687, 693) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court applied the principle that a court can be compelled to exercise its discretion in a particular manner in those rare instances when, under the facts, it can be legally exercised in but one way. The court determined that there was no dispute concerning the facts. The only issue was whether, as a matter of law, the amended statute controlled the right of succession (3 Cal. 3d 678, 685) . If it did, then the probate court was under a legal duty to apply them and could be directed to perform that duty by writ of mandate (3 Cal. 3d 678, 685-686) .

In American Internat. Group, Inc. v. Superior Court (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 749, 285 Cal. Rptr. 765 , the court held that a federal preemption issue was properly decided by writ of mandate after the trial court sustained a judgment on the pleadings. It stated that although a trial court's refusal to sustain a demurrer or grant a judgment on the pleadings is normally reviewed under an abuse of discretion standard, when the issue is (1) tendered on undisputed facts, (2) significant, and (3) purely legal in nature, the appellate court may issue a writ of mandate after an independent review (234 Cal. App. 3d 749, 755) .

In Glass v. Superior Court (1988) 204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 251 Cal. Rptr. 690 , one party in a business tort action moved for an order to compel the deposition in California of the other party's corporate officers, who were out-of-state residents. The trial court ruled that Code Civ. Proc. § 2026 (out-of-state residents not required to attend deposition in California) controlled over Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(e)(3) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260 effective July 1, 2005) (distant depositions) and denied the motion. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, holding that Code Civ. Proc. §

2025(e)(3) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260 effective July 1, 2005) was the governing statute and directing the trial court to grant the discovery motion (204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1052-1053) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court determined that the writ was appropriate because the trial court could exercise its discretion in only one way. Rather than remanding the matter for a hearing on the motion, the court reviewed the facts and concluded that the balance of the factors that must be balanced under Code Civ. Proc. § 2025(e)(3) (Code Civ. Proc. § 2025.260 effective July 1, 2005) weighed conclusively in petitioner's favor (204 Cal. App. 3d 1048, 1053) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.34

§ 150.34 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Recall and Quash Writ of Execution

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO RECALL AND QUASH THE WRIT OF EXECUTION BECAUSE THE WRIT WAS IMPROVIDENTLY ISSUED.

Quashing Writ of Execution. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a court to recall and quash a writ of execution that was improvidently issued (Evans v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 186, 188, 124 P.2d 820 ; Hustead v. Superior Court (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 780, 792, 83 Cal. Rptr. 26).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to recall and quash a writ of execution that should not have been issued.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms involving writs of execution, see Ch. 254, Executions and Enforcement of Judgments in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Quashing Writ of Execution

In Evans v. Superior Court (1942) 20 Cal. 2d 186, 124 P.2d 820 , plaintiffs obtained a judgment against a savings and loan association and a writ of execution issued. The State Building and Loan Commissioner, which had taken possession of the association's assets under a statutory procedure for liquidation, moved the court to recall and quash the writ of execution on the ground that the statutes entitled the Commissioner to liquidate the assets free of any judgment liens. The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the legislation withdrew from plaintiffs the right to a judgment lien and execution during the process of liquidation (20 Cal. 2d 186, 190-191) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court held that the court had a duty to recall the writ of execution if it was improvidently granted. If the Commissioner's taking of possession of assets was a part of the process of liquidation within the meaning of the legislation, the court could exercise its "jurisdiction" in but one way--by granting the motion to recall and quash the writ (20 Cal. 2d 186, 188) .

In Hustead v. Superior Court (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 780, 83 Cal. Rptr. 26 , the wife in a divorce action obtained a garnishment order directing her husband's subtenant to pay the monthly rentals to the wife in order to satisfy a judgment for child and spousal support. The husband then assigned the lease to a third party, who demanded payment of rent. The subtenant paid the third party the rent and the wife subsequently obtained a writ of execution against the subtenant. When his motion to quash was denied, the subtenant sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to recall and quash the writ of execution. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that once the lease was assigned, no rent was due to the husband and there was no longer any basis for the garnishment order (2 Cal. App. 3d 780, 791-792, 793) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court held that any attempt to enforce payment by issuance of a writ of execution was unsupported. When these facts were brought to the court's attention, it had a duty to recall and quash the writ of execution (2 Cal. App. 3d 780, 792) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.35

§ 150.35 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Prepare Settled Statement for Record on Appeal

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO SETTLE A STATEMENT ON APPEAL BECAUSE RESPONDENT HAS ARBITRARILY REFUSED TO DO SO.

Duty to Settle Statement on Appeal. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel the settlement of a statement on appeal when a court has arbitrarily refused to settle the statement on appeal (Western States Constr. Co. v. Municipal Ct. (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 146, 148-151, 238 P.2d 562).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to settle a statement on appeal when it has arbitrarily refused to do so.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms involving appeals generally, see Ch. 40, Appeal: An Overview .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Duty to Settle Statement on Appeal

In Western States Constr. Co. v. Municipal Ct. (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 146, 238 P.2d 562 , a plaintiff obtained a judgment after a trial in the municipal court. When the defendant requested the court to settle the statement for appeal, the judge refused on the ground that plaintiff's principal trial attorney had died and could not propose amendments to the statement. Further, the judge could not remember all the proceedings. The superior court denied a petition for a writ of mandate and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and directed the superior court to issue the writ, holding that the absence of proposed amendments, from whatever cause, did not relieve the trial judge of the duty to settle the proposed statement with such corrections and additions as might be necessary (38 Cal. 2d 146, 151) . Unless there is some justification, the Court held, a trial judge may not arbitrarily refuse to settle the statement (38 Cal. 2d 146, 148-149) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.36

§ 150.36 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Duty of Court to Initiate Contempt Proceedings for Disobedience of Court Order

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO ENTERTAIN CONTEMPT PROCEEDINGS BECAUSE RESPONDENT REFUSED TO ENFORCE A PLAIN PROVISION OF THE JUDGMENT.

Contempt Proceedings. Mandate is a proper remedy to compel the trial court to entertain contempt proceedings when the trial court has refused to enforce a plain provision of a judgment (Butler v. Butler (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 136, 62 Cal. Rptr. 825 (dictum)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to entertain contempt proceedings.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms involving contempt proceedings generally, see Ch. 135, Contempt in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contempt Proceedings

In Butler v. Butler (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 62 Cal. Rptr. 825 , a wife in a divorce proceeding obtained an order to show cause why the husband should not be held in contempt for failure to pay court-ordered support. The court dismissed the contempt proceedings on the ground that it lacked jurisdiction. On appeal, the court of appeal affirmed because the order dismissing the contempt proceedings was not an appealable order (255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 136) . However, the court recognized that a writ of mandate is the proper remedy when a trial court in effect refuses to enforce a plain provision of a judgment (255 Cal. App. 2d 132, 136) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.37

§ 150.37 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Court Clerk--Duty of Clerk to Enter Default Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a)]

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO ENTER A DEFAULT JUDGMENT IN PETITIONER'S FAVOR BECAUSE DEFENDANT _____ [name] WAS SERVED WITH A SUMMONS BUT FAILED TO MAKE A TIMELY APPEARANCE IN THE ACTION.

Entry of Default Judgment. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a court clerk to enter a default judgment for the plaintiff, in an action arising on contract or judgment for the recovery of money or damages only, when the defendant was properly served but made no appearance within the required time (Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a); W.A. Rose Co. v. Municipal Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 74, 1 Cal. Rptr. 49).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a lower court to enter a default and a default judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a), which authorizes the clerk to enter a default judgment in an action arising on contract or judgment for the recovery of money or damages only.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms involving default proceedings generally, see Ch. 205, Defaults and Default Judgments in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Entry of Default Judgment

In W.A. Rose Co. v. Municipal Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 1 Cal. Rptr. 49 , a plaintiff in a municipal court action sought from the superior court a writ of mandate ordering the municipal court clerk to enter a default, as well as a writ of prohibition restraining the municipal court from proceeding with the action. The superior court issued the writs and the defendant, as real party in interest, appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff was entitled to a default judgment and the writs were properly issued (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 71, 75) . When plaintiff filed a request for a default, the time to appear had expired and defendant had not made an appearance in the action (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 70-71) . The clerk should have entered it and, in so doing so, would have been performing a purely ministerial function (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 71) .

Counsel should note that the court in Rose determined that the filing of a motion for change of venue did not constitute an appearance under the default statute, former Code Civ. Proc. § 585(1). However, Code Civ. Proc. § 585(a) now provides that a motion for change of venue is an appearance precluding a default [see Code Civ. Proc. § 396b(a)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Entry of Default

In Todd v. Everett (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d 209, 55 Cal. Rptr. 382 , the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the court clerk to enter a default judgment for petitioners (247 Cal. App. 2d 209, 212) . The court held that, once the clerk receives proof of service of the summons and sees no appearance on file, the clerk has a ministerial duty to enter the default (247 Cal. App. 2d 209, 211) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.38

§ 150.38 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Court Clerk--Duty of Clerk to Issue Writ of Execution

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO ISSUE A WRIT OF EXECUTION BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS OBTAINED A VALID JUDGMENT.

Writ of Execution. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel the court clerk to perform his or her duty to issue a writ of execution on a valid judgment (Kahn v. Smith (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 12, 14, 142 P.2d 13).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a court clerk to issue a writ of execution.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender). For discussion and forms involving writs of execution, see Ch. 254, Executions and Enforcement of Judgments in that publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Execution

In Kahn v. Smith (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 12, 142 P.2d 13 , the trial court granted defendants' motion for a new trial beyond the statutory time in which a new trial could be granted. Plaintiffs then sought a writ of execution on their judgment, but the court clerk refused to issue the writ. The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate to compel the clerk to issue the writ of execution, holding that the order granting a new trial was invalid (23 Cal. 2d 12, 14, 15) . If the order was invalid, the Court explained, the clerk had a duty to issue the writ and mandate was the appropriate remedy to enforce the performance of that duty (23 Cal. 2d 12, 14) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.39

§ 150.39 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Perform Mandatory Ministerial Act

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO _____ [set forth legal duty of public entity or official, e.g., ISSUE PETITIONER A RESIDENTIAL BUILDING PERMIT] BECAUSE THIS ACT IS MINISTERIAL, NOT DISCRETIONARY, AND _____ [cite statute, ordinance, charter provision, agency rule, or other law] CREATES A MANDATORY DUTY IN RESPONDENT TO PERFORM THE ACT.

A. Performance of Ministerial Duty. A writ of mandate will lie to compel the performance of a clear, present, and ministerial duty that the law specifically enjoins (Code Civ. Proc. § 1085; City of Dinuba v. County of Tulare (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 859, 868, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 614, 161 P.3d 1168 ; Santa Clara County Counsel Attys. Assn. v. Woodside (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 525, 539-540, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 869 P.2d 1142 ; County of Sacramento v. Hickman (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 841, 845, 59 Cal. Rptr. 609, 428 P.2d 593 ; Syngenta Crop Protection, Inc. v. Helliker (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1181-1182, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 191 ; Elmore v. Imperial Irrigation Dist. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 193, 205 Cal. Rptr. 433).

B. Ministerial Act Defined. An act required by law is ministerial in character when it does not involve the exercise of judgment and discretion; when an official is required and authorized to do a prescribed act on a prescribed contingency, his or her functions are ministerial only [Glendale City Employees' Assn. Inc. v. City of Glendale (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 328, 344, 124 Cal. Rptr. 513, 540 P.2d 609 ; Jackson v. Gourley (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 966, 970, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72 (DMV acceptance of certificate of completion of driver's education course from correspondence school ministerial act)].

[Optional] C. Duty Imposed by Statute. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a public official to perform a ministerial act required by statute (Morris v. Harper (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 52, 59-63, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62).

[Optional] D. Agency Rules. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a public agency to follow its own rules when it has a ministerial duty to do so (Pozar v. Department of Transportation (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 269, 271, 193 Cal. Rptr. 202).

[Optional] E. Charter-Prescribed Duties. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a city council or civil service board to perform its mandatory duties prescribed by the charter (LePage v. City of Oakland (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d. 689, 692, 91 Cal. Rptr. 806).

[Optional] F. Building Permit. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a city official to issue a building permit when all of the legal requirements have been complied with by petitioner (Palmer v. Fox (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 453, 456, 458, 258 P.2d 30).

[Optional] G. Elections. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a public official to conduct an election according to law (Wenke v. Hitchcock (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 746, 751, 100 Cal. Rptr. 290, 493 P.2d 1154 ; Miller v. Greiner (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 827, 830, 36 Cal. Rptr. 737, 389 P.2d 129).

[Optional] H. Initiatives. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a public official to place an initiative that complies with the formal requirements on the ballot, unless directed by a court to do otherwise after a compelling showing has been made that a proper case has been established for interfering with the initiative power (Farley v. Healey (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 325, 327, 329, 62 Cal. Rptr. 26, 431 P.2d 650 ; Gayle v. Hamm (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 250, 254-255, 101 Cal. Rptr. 628).

[Optional] I. Forfeiture of Property. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a public official to follow statutory procedures for effecting a forfeiture of property. Thus, a writ may be issued to compel compliance with a statutory requirement that if a claim of interest is timely filed by a person who is notified of a pending administrative forfeiture, the official proposing to seize the property must commence a judicial forfeiture proceeding (Nasir v. Sacramento County Off. of the Dist. Atty. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 976, 990-995, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 694).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a public entity or official to perform an act required by the law.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender). For discussion relating to interpretation of statutes and ordinances, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 531, Statutes and Ordinances (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.50 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance of Ministerial Duty

In City of Dinuba v. County of Tulare (2007) 41 Cal. 4th 859, 868, 62 Cal. Rptr. 3d 614, 161 P.3d 1168 , the defendant County of Tulare improperly computed the portion of tax revenue to which the plaintiff City of Dinuba Redevelopment Agency was statutorily entitled. The trial court held that the defendant was immune from suit, and the court of appeal reversed.

The California Supreme Court upheld that court of appeal's ruling that the defendant was not immune from suit. It also held that mandamus was available when one public entity sought to force another to release funds in accordance with a statutory duty [41 Cal. 4th 859, 868] . The Court held that any hardship caused by enforcing the defendant's duty should be taken up with the Legislature, rather than with the courts [41 Cal. 4th 859, 869] .

In Santa Clara County Counsel Attys. Assn. v. Woodside (1994) 7 Cal. 4th 525, 28 Cal. Rptr. 2d 617, 869 P.2d 1142 , the attorneys in the office of county counsel brought a declaratory and injunctive relief action against the county because the county notified the attorneys they could not file a petition for a writ of mandate to enforce their bargaining rights. The trial court determined the attorneys were entitled to proceed against the county and enjoined the county from terminating the attorneys for seeking mandamus, but the court of appeal reversed.

The Supreme Court reversed, and remanded with directions to allow the filing for a writ of mandate. The Court held that, despite the attorneys' attorney-client relationship with the county, the attorneys could meet the requirements for obtaining a writ of mandate. In making this determination, the Supreme Court found the existence of the prerequisites of a clear, present and ministerial duty on the part of the county and a clear, present and beneficial right in the attorneys (7 Cal. 4th 525, 539-541) .

In County of Sacramento v. Hickman (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 841, 59 Cal. Rptr. 609, 428 P.2d 593 , a county and several of its school districts sought a writ of mandate to compel the county assessor to comply with the state tax code, which required that property be assessed from between 20 to 25 percent of its full value. Respondent, who had announced a higher assessment, contended that the state law was unconstitutional. The Supreme Court issued the writ, upholding the constitutionality of the statute (66 Cal. 2d 841, 854) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court applied the principle that the writ lies to compel the performance of a clear, present, and ministerial duty that the law specially enjoins. There could be no doubt, the Court held, that respondent's duty to assess in accordance with the law was a mandatory one (66 Cal. 2d 841, 845) . The tax code required that property "shall be assessed" at a ratio between 20 and 25 percent. Therefore, the petitioners made out a prima facie case for a writ of mandate (66 Cal. 2d 841, 846) .

In Syngenta Crop Protection, Inc. v. Helliker (2006) 138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 42 Cal. Rptr. 3d 191 , Syngenta and another pesticide manufacturer submitted data to the state Department of Pesticide Regulation (the "Department") concerning the health effects and environmental impacts of the active ingredients in their pesticides in connection with their applications for pesticide registration. After the manufacturers obtained certificates of registration, the department took into account its evaluations of their data in considering applications by other manufacturers. Syngenta challenged the registrations of the other pesticides by filing a complaint and petition for writ of mandate seeking declaratory and injunctive relief and a writ of mandate. Syngenta alleged that in evaluating applications for registration, the Department considered data that Syngenta previously submitted to the Department, without its consent, in violation of former Food & Agric. Code § 12811.5. Syngenta alleged in its combined complaint and writ petition that applications for registration that the other manufacturer submitted to the Department were incomplete because they were not accompanied by all the data required by law. Syngenta also alleged that the Department had a duty to refrain from considering data submitted by Syngenta in evaluating the applications by the other manufacturer, a duty to deny any incomplete applications, and a duty to refrain from renewing any registration that was improperly issued. Syngenta alleged that it had no other adequate remedy at law. The Department demurred on the grounds that a writ of mandate cannot compel the Department to exercise its discretion in a particular manner. The trial court sustained the Department's demurrer to Syngenta's application for writ of mandate on the bases that the Department had no ministerial duty to deny or cancel a registration, that Syngenta had no standing to enforce former Food & Agric. Code § 12811.5 in a mandate proceeding, and that an injunction was the appropriate remedy.

In the court of appeal, Syngenta contended it was entitled to a writ of mandate directing the Department to refrain from renewing any registrations issued in violation of former Food & Agric. Code § 12811.5 and to cancel any registrations issued in violation of that former section. Syngenta contended that the Department had a ministerial duty to refrain from using the data without its consent and had a ministerial duty to cancel any registration issued in violation of the former statute. The court concluded that Syngenta alleged facts sufficient to support the issuance of a writ of mandate (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1181-1182). If the other manufacturer failed to submit all data required by law and the Department considered data previously submitted by Syngenta to fill the gaps, each resulting registration issued by the Department was a clear abuse of discretion (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1181-1182). The only proper course of action in the event of an incomplete application that could be deemed complete only by reference to data previously submitted to the Department by another applicant who had not consented to the Department's current consideration of the data was for the Department to deny registration and cancel any registration issued in violation of former Food & Agric. Code § 12811.5 (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1182). The court of appeal held that Syngenta had a beneficial interest in the enforcement of those duties, and sustaining the demurrers to Syngenta's count for a writ of mandate was error (138 Cal. App. 4th 1135, 1180-1182).

In Elmore v. Imperial Irrigation Dist. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 205 Cal. Rptr. 433 , a farmer claimed that the Imperial Irrigation District had been wasteful in its water management practices, resulting in flooding of his land. He petitioned for a writ of mandate in the superior court, alleging that the district had violated its statutory duties. The court sustained a demurrer to the petition on the ground that it was overly broad and petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the order sustaining the demurrer and remanded the cause (159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 199) . The court stated that mandate will issue to compel performance of duties specifically imposed by law and to correct abuses of discretion. Citing Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085 and 1086, the court held that to state a cause of action for a writ of mandamus the petition must plead facts showing: (1) respondent agency has a clear duty; (2) petitioner has a beneficial interest in respondent's performance of that duty; (3) respondent has the ability to perform the duty; (4) respondent has failed to perform the duty or has abused its discretion in performing the duty; and (5) petitioner has no other plain, speedy, or adequate remedy (159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 193) . The court found each factor to be satisfied in the case, and thus the petition alleged sufficient facts to state a cause of action (159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 193-198) .

[b] Ministerial Act Defined

In Glendale City Employees' Assn., Inc. v. City of Glendale (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 328, 124 Cal. Rptr. 513, 540 P.2d 609 , a city employees' union brought an action to compel the city to compute employee salaries in accordance with a negotiated memorandum of understanding approved by the city council. The trial court found that the memorandum was binding, entered judgment for plaintiffs, and issued a writ of mandate to compel the computing and paying of the salaries as fixed by the judgment. The city appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded on the ground that the city officials who had the authority to compute and pay wages had not been joined in the proceeding (15 Cal. 3d 328, 345) . In concluding that mandate was otherwise an available remedy, the Court rejected the city's contention that the writ mandated the enactment of a new salary ordinance, a legislative act that cannot be compelled by mandate (15 Cal. 3d 328, 343-344) . The Court found that the writ directed the nonlegislative and ministerial acts of computing and paying the salaries as fixed by the memorandum of understanding and the judgment. The critical question in determining if an act required by law is ministerial in character, the Court explained, is whether it involves the exercise of judgment and discretion. The council's approval of the memorandum of understanding was the legislative act that fixed employee salaries in accord with that understanding. The agreement, as interpreted by the court, admitted of no discretion (15 Cal. 3d 328, 344) . Therefore, the duty of officials to carry out the city's obligations was of a ministerial character and was properly compelled by mandate (15 Cal. 3d 328, 344-345) .

In Jackson v. Gourley (2003) 105 Cal. App. 4th 966, 970, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 72 , a high school student brought an action to compel the Department of Motor Vehicles to accept the certificate of completion issued by a private high school upon the student's completion of its correspondence driver education course. The Department argued that the correspondence course did not satisfy the requirements of the Vehicle and Education Codes. Therefore, the Department argued that it could not accept the certificate of completion issued by the private high school. The trial court issued a writ of mandate to compel the Department to accept the certificate of completion. The Department appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the issuance of the writ of mandate. It first determined that the Department's duty to accept the certificate of completion was a ministerial duty, one that a public officer is obligated to perform in a prescribed manner required by law when a given state of facts exists (105 Cal. App. 4th 966, 970) . The court concluded that neither the Vehicle Code nor the Education Code expressly or implicitly grant the Department any discretion to refuse certificates of completion for private school correspondence courses in driver education (105 Cal. App. 4th 966, 978) .

[c] Duty Imposed by Statute

In Morris v. Harper (2001) 94 Cal. App. 4th 52, 114 Cal. Rptr. 2d 62 , a physician filed a petition for writ of mandate to compel the acting director of the California Youth Authority (CYA) to comply with a statute that required the CYA to obtain licenses for its correctional treatment centers. The trial court granted the petition and issued the writ.

The court of appeal affirmed. It concluded the petition was properly granted because the relevant statute imposed a legal duty on the acting director. The court rejected the acting director's argument that the petition was improperly granted because he was willing to comply with the statute without coercion. The acting director's delay in complying, however, justified the writ (94 Cal. App. 4th 52, 59-61) . Additionally, the acting director argued that he could not be compelled to comply with the statute because the ability to obtain the licenses depended on the approval and cooperation of third parties. The court determined that the acting director could be compelled to do his part to obtain the licenses regardless of whether third parties cooperated (94 Cal. App. 4th 52, 61-62) . Finally, the court rejected the argument that, because the CYA could run the correctional treatment centers without offering the services for which a license is required, forcing the CYA to obtain licenses was an impermissible attempt to control the discretion of a public officer. The court held that the writ was appropriately worded to require the CYA to comply with the licensing statute only if it chose to offer the services for which a license was needed (94 Cal. App. 4th 52, 62-63) .

[d] Agency Rules

In Pozar v. Department of Transportation (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 269, 193 Cal. Rptr. 202 , a bid submitted by a contractor for a highway construction project contained a discrepancy between the proposed per-unit price for materials and the computed total price for the materials. The Department of Transportation determined that the entire bid was uncertain and decided to award the contract to another bidder. The contractor petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the department to follow its published procedure, which requires that the per-item price will prevail in case of a discrepancy. The superior court denied the petition. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that a court has the power to direct an agency to follow its own rules when it has a ministerial duty to do so (145 Cal. App. 3d 269, 271-272) . The department's own rules obligated it to accept the per-unit price in the absence of specified circumstances, none of which were present in petitioner's case (145 Cal. App. 3d 269, 271) .

[e] Charter-Prescribed Duties

In LePage v. City of Oakland (1970) 13 Cal. App. 3d 689, 91 Cal. Rptr. 806 , a city police officer sought a declaratory judgment and a writ of mandate to compel the city to count all the time spent in work-incurred disability retirement status as a credit towards years of service retirement time. The trial court issued the writ. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court properly construed the applicable provisions of the city charter (13 Cal. App. 3d 689, 696) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate as a remedy, the court stated that the writ can be used to compel a city council or civil service board to perform its mandatory duties prescribed by the charter (13 Cal. App. 3d 689, 692) .

[f] Building Permit

In Palmer v. Fox (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 453, 258 P.2d 30 , petitioners sought a building permit allowing them to construct a single-family residence on their property. The permit was denied because of racial restrictions in the deed and, after a trial, they obtained a writ of mandate compelling the responsible city official to issue the permit.

The court of appeal affirmed with certain modifications, holding that petitioners were entitled to have their plans processed and approved, contingent on their compliance with any new building code provisions enacted since the trial and contingent on approval by the city's independent art jury, which was not a party to the proceedings (118 Cal. App. 2d 453, 456, 458-459) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court applied the principle that when an official is required and authorized to do a prescribed act on a prescribed contingency, his or her function is ministerial only and mandate may be issued to control the official's action on the happening of the contingency. The court found that issuance of the permit was merely the completion of the official's processing of petitioner's application and that the official would have no right to withhold the permit when petitioners complied with the prerequisites for its issuance (118 Cal. App. 2d 453, 458) .

[g] Elections

In Wenke v. Hitchcock (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 746, 100 Cal. Rptr. 290, 493 P.2d 1154 , petitioner moved in anticipation of a redistricting plan that would take his residence out of the district in which he sought election. The Supreme Court exercised its original jurisdiction and issued a writ of mandate compelling a registrar of voters to issue nomination papers to petitioner (6 Cal. 3d 746, 756) . Voting registrars, the Court stated, are public officers with the ministerial duty of permitting qualified voters to register and mandate is the proper remedy to compel an officer to conduct an election according to law (6 Cal. 3d 746, 751) .

In Miller v. Greiner (1964) 60 Cal. 2d 827, 36 Cal. Rptr. 737, 389 P.2d 129 , the Supreme Court exercised its original jurisdiction to prevent the holding of a special election to determine whether the city manager should be retained in office for the ensuing two years (60 Cal. 2d 827, 833-834) . The Court determined that such an election would violate the city charter requiring such an election to be held in odd-numbered years in conjunction with general municipal elections (60 Cal. 2d 827, 831) . It stated that a writ of mandate will issue to compel an officer to conduct an election according to the law (60 Cal. 2d 827, 830) .

[h] Initiatives

In Farley v. Healey (1967) 67 Cal. 2d 325, 62 Cal. Rptr. 26, 431 P.2d 650 , petitioners who attempted to submit a measure to the voters sought a writ of mandate to compel public officials to determine the sufficiency of signatures to a petition to place an initiative measure on the ballot and, if determined to be sufficient, to place the proposed initiative on the ballot. The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the registrar of voters had exceeded his authority in undertaking to determine whether the proposed initiative was within the power of the electorate to adopt (67 Cal. 2d 325, 327, 329) . Given compliance with the formal requirements for submitting an initiative, the Court explained, the registrar must place it on the ballot unless he or she is directed to do otherwise by a court on a compelling showing that the proper case has been established for interfering with the initiative power (67 Cal. 2d 325, 327) .

In Gayle v. Hamm (1972) 25 Cal. App. 3d 250, 101 Cal. Rptr. 628 , petitioners obtained a writ of mandate commanding the county clerk to ascertain if petitioner's initiative petition had the requisite number of qualified signatures. The court of appeal affirmed the issuance of a writ of mandate, holding that the trial court properly refused to adjudicate the validity of the proposed measure prior to its submission to the electorate (25 Cal. App. 3d 250, 258) . The county clerk's duty in processing the initiative petition for the requisite number of signatures was ministerial, the court held. In addition, a court should not interfere with the right of people to propose legislation absent a compelling showing that the proposed ordinance would be invalid even if enacted (25 Cal. App. 3d 250, 255) .

[i] Forfeiture of Property

In Nasir v. Sacramento County Off. of the Dist. Atty. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 976, 15 Cal. Rptr. 2d 694 , the district attorney notified a vehicle owner that the vehicle was about to be subjected to administrative forfeiture on the ground of being used in connection with commission of a drug offense by the owner's son. The owner filed a claim to have the vehicle restored to him; however, the district attorney, viewing the claim as not timely filed, seized the vehicle. The owner petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel compliance with Gov. Code § 11488.4, which requires that if a claim is timely filed, the district attorney must commence a judicial forfeiture proceeding. The trial court denied the petition, and the court of appeal reversed with directions to issue a peremptory writ.

Preliminarily the court of appeal disposed of the issue of timeliness of the claim filing. Although the claim was filed one day late under the filing requirements stated in the district attorney's notice, the notice was deficient. The claim was filed within the period prescribed in connection with a required public notice, and the court of appeal concluded that the filing was timely (11 Cal. App. 4th 976, 982-988) . Having found the claim to have been timely, the court held that mandate was an appropriate remedy to compel the district attorney to perform the act enjoined on him by law, that is the commencement of a judicial forfeiture action (11 Cal. App. 4th 976, 990) . The district attorney also contended that issuing a writ would be fruitless because the vehicle had been sold. The court of appeal concluded that the vehicle owner was entitled to a hearing of his claim regardless of whether the vehicle could be restored to him, because the impossibility of restoring it to him was due entirely to the district attorney's precipitate seizure and disposition of it. If the owner prevailed in a judicial forfeiture proceeding, the trial court would be authorized to order the payment of compensation in lieu of restoration of the vehicle (11 Cal. App. 4th 976, 990-995) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Agency Rules

In Timmons v. McMahon (1991) 235 Cal. App. 3d 512, 518, 286 Cal. Rptr. 620 , a temporary guardian of two children brought an administrative mandamus action to obtain benefits under the Aid to Families With Dependent Children-Foster Care (AFDC-FC) program. The guardian also sought an ordinary writ of mandate to compel the director of the Department of Social Services to correct the department's eligibility policies so that temporary as well as permanent guardians could obtain AFDC-FC benefits. The department challenged the guardian on the ground that with respect to the ordinary mandate action she was not "beneficially interested" as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 1085. The court held that the "beneficial interest" requirement is satisfied when a public right is at stake and the relator is a citizen interested in having the laws executed and the duty in question enforced.

[b] Building Permit

In Ellis v. City Council (1963) 222 Cal. App. 2d 490, 497, 35 Cal. Rptr. 317 , plaintiff obtained a writ of mandate to compel city officials to issue a building permit for construction of a swimming pool. After a subsequent trial on the issue of damages, however, the court granted a nonsuit, finding that the building inspector was not acting in a ministerial capacity in refusing to issue the permit and that plaintiff suffered no damages. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the building inspector's refusal to issue petitioner a permit was an arbitrary refusal to perform a ministerial act (222 Cal. App. 2d 490, 498, 501) . The evidence established that petitioner had complied with all the legal requirements entitling her to issuance of the permit and, under Palmer v. Fox (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 453, 258 P.2d 30 (discussed under § 150.139[3][f]), the official had no right to withhold the permit (222 Cal. App. 2d 490, 497) .

[c] Elections

In Jolicoeur v. Mihaly (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 565, 96 Cal. Rptr. 697, 488 P.2d 1 , the Supreme Court exercised its original jurisdiction and issued a writ of mandate ordering respondent registrars of voters to permit minors over the age of 18 to register to vote in the same manner as adult registrants (5 Cal. 3d 565, 582) . The Court stated that a writ of mandate is the proper remedy for compelling an officer to conduct an election according to law (5 Cal. 3d 565, 570 n.2).

In San Dieguito Union High School Dist. v. Rosander (1985) 171 Cal. App. 3d 968, 217 Cal. Rptr. 737 , the court of appeal denied a school district's petition for a writ of mandate to set aside a trial court judgment that ordered issuance of a writ of mandate directing cancellation of a scheduled election. The election concerned a proposed removal of part of a junior high school program from petitioner high school district to real party elementary school district (171 Cal. App. 3d 968, 972) . The court held that the writ sought by the high school district was the appropriate proceeding to compel the county superintendent of schools to follow Educ. Code § 37085, which authorizes an election that may result in the withdrawal of students from a high school district's junior high school system. The court agreed with the high school district that the proposed election was invalid because it limited the vote in the election to voters of the elementary school district, thus unconstitutionally disenfranchising the remaining voters of the high school district (171 Cal. App. 3d 968, 972-973) . The court then held that because a proceeding in mandate may be utilized to enforce the constitutional rights of equal protection, a school district that may be adversely affected by a school district reorganization plan and election has standing to seek a writ of mandate to set aside the plan and compel compliance with legislative requirements governing the election (171 Cal. App. 3d 968, 973) .

[d] Initiative

Brosnahan v. Eu (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 1, 181 Cal. Rptr. 100, 641 P.2d 200 , was a mandate-prohibition proceeding to prevent the Secretary of State from instituting measures preparatory to placing on the ballot an initiative measure relating to criminal justice and entitled "The Victims' Bill of Rights," after the superior court had issued a writ of mandate directing the Secretary of State to certify the initiative for the election and to take other steps required by law to place the measure before the voters. Petitioners asserted that the Secretary of State had failed to comply with certain statutory provisions regarding the number of valid signatures required to qualify the measure for the ballot and that the proposed measure was unconstitutional because it contained more than one subject and amounted to a revision of the constitution rather than an amendment [see Cal. Const., art. II, § 8(d), art. XVIII, §§ 1-3]. The Secretary of State had concluded, on the basis of random samplings, that the petitions contained 108.76 percent of the number of signatures required for a place on the ballot but that this was less than the 110 percent required by Elec. Code § 3520(g). While the Supreme Court proceeding was pending, the Legislature passed, and the Governor signed, an urgency measure (Stats. 1982, ch. 102) that had the sole effect of qualifying the measure for the ballot. The Supreme Court, by a sharply divided vote, upheld the validity of the special legislation, concluded that the initiative measure should be placed on the ballot, vacated its stay of the superior court judgment granting the writ, and denied the peremptory writs of mandate and prohibition (31 Cal. 3d 1, 4) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.40

§ 150.40 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Instate Petitioner to Office or Employment

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO INSTATE PETITIONER TO _____ [specify office or position to which petitioner is entitled] BECAUSE _____ [cite to constitutional provision, statute, ordinance, or other law] CREATED A DUTY IN RESPONDENT TO INSTATE PETITIONER TO THAT RIGHT OR OFFICE.

[EITHER]

Instatement to Office. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel the instatement of a person to a public office when the person has been unlawfully precluded from the office and his or her title to the office is only incidentally involved (Code Civ. Proc. § 1085; Housing Authority v. City Council (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603, 609, 25 Cal. Rptr. 493 ; see Lungren v. Deukmejian (1988) 45 Cal. 3d 727, 731-732, 248 Cal. Rptr. 115, 755 P.2d 299).

[OR]

Instatement to Employment. Mandate is the proper remedy to instate a public employee to a position when the public employer has a clear, present, and ministerial duty under law to do so (Code Civ. Proc. § 1085; Taylor v. Board of Trustees (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 500, 507, 204 Cal. Rptr. 711, 683 P.2d 710 ; Norton v. San Bernardino City Unified School District (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 749, 756-762, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 917).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel the instatement of a public official or a public employee to a position as required by law.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Administrative Mandamus Compared

The writ of administrative mandamus is available to review decisions resulting from administrative hearings held by either governmental or nongovernmental bodies [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(a); Anton v. San Antonio Community Hosp. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 802, 815-817, 140 Cal. Rptr. 442, 567 P.2d 1162] . The scope of review is considerably broader than the review provided by ordinary mandate because Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b) authorizes the reviewing court to determine whether the administrative decision is supported by the findings and whether the findings are supported by the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5(b); see Environmental Protection and Information Center v. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 459, 519-520, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28, 187 P.3d 888 (findings required in administrative mandate but not traditional mandate)].

For forms relating to review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 of public administrative proceedings generally, see Ch. 195, Public Administrative Law . For forms relating to review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 of employment decisions affecting teachers, see Ch. 211, Schools: Certification, Dismissal, and Related Employment Issues . For forms relating to review under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 of employment decisions affecting civil service employees, see Ch. 36, Civil Service .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Instatement to Office

In Housing Authority v. City Council (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 599, 25 Cal. Rptr. 493 , a city council held a hearing under a charter provision and then passed a resolution dismissing several housing commissioners for misconduct in office. The commissioners obtained a writ of mandate to compel a city council to reinstate them to their positions. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the lower court did not abuse its discretion (208 Cal. App. 2d 599, 609) . The Court also held that mandate was the proper procedure through which petitioners could seek reinstatement to their offices because the writ compels the admission of a party to a right or office to which he or she is entitled and was unlawfully precluded (208 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603, 609) . Ordinarily, quo warranto is the remedy for determining title to office, usually when more than one person is claiming the office. A mandate proceeding is proper, however, if the question of title is only incidental to the main question of whether petitioners were unlawfully precluded from the right or office (208 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603) . The city council was functioning under law to fulfill state purposes and so could be compelled by mandate to reinstate petitioners (208 Cal. App. 2d 599, 605, 609) .

In Lungren v. Deukmejian (1988) 45 Cal. 3d 727, 248 Cal. Rptr. 115, 755 P.2d 299 , the governor nominated petitioner to fill the office of Treasurer when the sitting treasurer died. The Assembly voted to confirm the nomination but the Senate voted to deny it. Although petitioner was a member of the United States Congress at the time, he sought a writ of mandate to enforce his right to assume the office of Treasurer, representing that he would resign his congressional seat if the court were to decide in his favor. The writ petitioner sought would compel the governor to issue him a commission and to compel various other public officials to allow him to assume office, contending that confirmation by one house was sufficient under the California Constitution.

The Supreme Court denied the petition, holding that the Constitution requires confirmation by both houses (45 Cal. 3d 727, 743) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court noted that petitioner did not have a present right to the remedy because he could not hold two offices at the same time; however, the court went on to consider the petition because of the public interest in resolving the dispute as soon as possible (45 Cal. 3d 727, 732) .

[b] Instatement to Employment

In Taylor v. Board of Trustees (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 500, 204 Cal. Rptr. 711, 683 P.2d 710 , petitioner was a temporary teacher who was asked to fill the position of a permanent teacher on long-term leave. Because he taught for at least 75 percent of that school year and performed all the duties of a certificated teacher, petitioner became eligible under Educ. Code § 44918 to be reemployed the following year for any vacant positions in which he was qualified to serve. The following year, the school district failed to give petitioner any preferential hiring right. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the school board to employ him as a probationary teacher and to pay him various back salary benefits to which the statute entitled him. The trial court denied the petition, finding that the statute did not apply to teachers hired to replace permanent teachers on leave.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded, holding that the district had a statutory obligation to reemploy petitioner unless he lacked the appropriate qualifications (36 Cal. 3d 500, 509) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court concluded that the district had a clear, present, and ministerial duty under Educ. Code § 44918 to reemploy petitioner. However, the Court found that the question of whether petitioner had a clear, present, and beneficial right to performance of that duty would turn on resolution of the question of whether he was qualified to serve (36 Cal. 3d 500, 507) .

In Norton v. San Bernardino City Unified School District (2008) 158 Cal. App. 4th 749, 756-762, 69 Cal. Rptr. 3d 917 , the defendant school district had terminated the plaintiff's employment. The plaintiff appealed the defendant's decision to an administrative law judge, who ruled that the district should reinstate the plaintiff with his prior title and salary, but should suspend him for one month without pay. The district gave the plaintiff his prior title and backpay but did not give him his previous job duties. The plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to compel the defendant to give him his previous job duties. The trial court denied the petition.

The court of appeal first ruled that the challenged decision was subject to a writ of mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 because the district's decision not to fully reinstate the plaintiff to his former duties and responsibilities was not reached following an evidentiary hearing (158 Cal. App. 4th 749, 757) . As to the merits, the district argued that it was required only to restore the plaintiff to his former position at his former salary, and the job duties were not relevant. The court of appeal disagreed and held that the district was expressly required to reinstate the plaintiff to his former duties and responsibilities. The court held that the personnel commission's decision did not vest the district with discretion to pick and choose which aspects of the plaintiff's former position it would restore (158 Cal. App. 4th 749, 762) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.41

§ 150.41 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Refrain From Performing Ministerial Act in Unlawful Manner

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM _____ [set forth act to be restrained] BECAUSE _____ [cite constitutional provision, statute, ordinance, charter provision, agency rule, or other law] PROHIBITS RESPONDENT FROM PERFORMING RESPONDENT'S DUTY IN THAT MANNER.

Restraining Unlawful Act. A writ of mandate may issue to restrain a public official from the performance of his or her ministerial duty in an unlawful manner (Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Van de Kamp (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 262-263, 226 Cal. Rptr. 361).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate, known as "prohibitory mandate," is proper to restrain a public entity or official from performing a ministerial act in an unlawful manner.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Restraining Unlawful Act

In Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Van de Kamp (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 226 Cal. Rptr. 361 , plaintiffs brought suit for a writ of mandate to enjoin the Attorney General from enforcing Penal Code § 11165 et seq., the child abuse reporting law, in a specified manner. The Attorney General had previously issued an opinion interpreting the law, in conjunction with Penal Code § 288, as requiring a report of child abuse in all cases involving sexual activity of minors under the age of 14, including consensual sexual activity with other minors. Petitioners argued that enforcement of this interpretation was unlawful and should be enjoined by writ of mandate.

The court of appeal agreed and granted the writ. The court initially noted that just as the lawful exercise of a ministerial duty of a public official may be compelled by writ of mandate, the unlawful exercise of such a duty may be restrained by a writ of mandate (181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 262) . When a writ of mandate is employed to restrain a public official from performing a duty in an unlawful manner, it is known as a writ of prohibitory mandate (181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 263) . The court then found that the Attorney General's interpretation of the child abuse reporting act was erroneous and that the act did not require the reporting of consensual sexual activity of minors under the age of 14 with other minors. The court additionally held that such an interpretation would render the act in violation of the constitutional right to privacy of children under the age of 14 (181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 276) . It held that the writ should be granted because the Attorney General was enforcing or threatening to enforce the law in a manner not authorized by statute and in a manner that would violate the constitution (181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 281-282) . In so holding, the court recognized that while prohibitory mandate is usually reserved for fact patterns showing present action that is unlawful or a clear cut statutory duty that violates the constitution, when the interests at stake are significant, a writ may be used to prohibit the translation of an interpretation of the law into action (181 Cal. App. 3d 245, 264) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Restraining Unlawful Act

In Planned Parenthood Affiliates v. Swoap (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 1187, 219 Cal. Rptr. 664 , the court of appeal held that funding restrictions in § 33.35 of the Budget Act of 1985-1986, concerning family planning organizations that provide abortion-related services, violated the "single subject" provision of Cal. Const., art. IV, § 9. The court reasoned that § 33.35 improperly amended the Family Planning Act (Welf. & Inst. Code §§ 14500-14508) and did not simply clarify it. The court issued a peremptory writ of mandate, directing the secretary of the state heath and welfare department and other public officials to refrain from enforcing the unconstitutional provisions (173 Cal. App. 3d 1187, 1201-1202) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.42

§ 150.42 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Exercise Discretion

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION TO DETERMINE WHETHER _____ [specify determination, e.g., PETITIONER IS QUALIFIED FOR AN APPOINTMENT TO THE POSITION OF NOTARY PUBLIC] BECAUSE RESPONDENT HAS REFUSED TO EXERCISE ITS DISCRETION IN THE ERRONEOUS BELIEF THAT IT HAS NO DISCRETION.

Duty to Exercise Discretion. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a public officer to exercise discretion (Ballard v. Anderson (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 873, 884-885, 95 Cal. Rptr. 1, 484 P.2d 1345).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a public entity or official to exercise its discretion when it has refused to do so.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Discretion

In Ballard v. Anderson (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 873, 95 Cal. Rptr. 1, 484 P.2d 1345 , a minor female sought a writ of mandate to compel the therapeutic abortion committee of a county hospital to consider on its merits her application for an abortion without the consent of her parents. The Supreme Court exercised its original jurisdiction and granted the writ as prayed, holding that a statute permitted minors to seek abortions without parental consent (4 Cal. 3d 873, 884-885) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court explained that the writ was proper because it did not compel the committee to authorize the abortion but only compelled the committee to exercise its discretion to approve or disapprove the application according to the relevant statutory criteria (4 Cal. 3d 873, 884) . Therefore, it applied the principle that mandate lies to command the exercise of discretion in order to compel some action upon the subject involved (4 Cal. 3d 873, 885) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exercise of Discretion

In Hollman v. Warren (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 351, 196 P.2d 562 , petitioner applied to be a notary public. The Governor refused to act on the application in the belief that a statute prevented him from appointing any more notaries in the county. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the Governor to exercise discretion on the application. The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that the statute limiting the number of notaries was invalid (32 Cal. 2d 351, 359-360) . The Court enunciated the principle that a writ of mandate will lie to command the exercise of discretion to compel some action on the subject involved (32 Cal. 2d 351, 355) .

In Los Angeles County Employees Assn., Local 660 v. County of Los Angeles (1973) 33 Cal. App. 3d 1, 108 Cal. Rptr. 625 , two unions sought a writ of mandate to compel the county and its departments to undertake negotiations with the unions. The trial court issued the writ, and the court of appeal affirmed, holding that both state law and a local ordinance required negotiation (33 Cal. App. 3d 1, 8) . Mandate, the court held, was the proper method to compel the government officials to comply with both the state and local law because the duty to negotiate, by itself, is not a discretionary act. However, the writ could not compel them to reach a specified result (33 Cal. App. 3d 1, 8) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.43

§ 150.43 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Official--Duty of Public Entity or Official to Exercise Discretion in Particular Manner

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO _____ [set forth legal duty of public entity of official, e.g., ASCERTAIN PREVAILING WAGES FOR COMPARABLE JOBS AND SET SALARIES IN ACCORDANCE WITH THOSE WAGES] BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S FAILURE TO DO SO CONSTITUTES AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

A. Abuse of Discretion. Mandate will lie if the action taken by a public entity or official is so palpably unreasonable and arbitrary as to indicate an abuse of discretion as a matter of law (Sanders v. City of Los Angeles (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 252, 261, 90 Cal. Rptr. 169, 475 P.2d 201).

B. Exercise of Discretion in Particular Manner. Mandate will lie to correct an abuse of discretion if the petitioner clearly establishes the right to have discretion exercised in a particular manner (Protect the Historic Amador Waterways v. Amador Water Agency (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 1099, 1105-1106, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 104 ; Coelho v. State Personnel Bd. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 968, 971, 257 Cal. Rptr. 557).

[Optional] C. Failure to Exercise Discretion After Reasonable Time. A court seeking to remedy a violation of law may require a particular remedy if the governmental entity fails to exercise its discretion after being given a reasonable opportunity to do so (see Common Cause of California v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 432, 446, 261 Cal. Rtpr. 574, 777 P.2d 610).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a public entity or official to exercise its discretion in a particular way on the basis that the action it took was an abuse of discretion.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.51 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Abuse of Discretion

In Sanders v. City of Los Angeles (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 252, 90 Cal. Rptr. 169, 475 P.2d 201 , city employees obtained a writ of mandate directing the city to ascertain prevailing wages paid in private industry for comparable jobs and to pay the employees salaries that were at least equal to those wages, as required by the city charter. The writ provided that the city could use any appropriate administrative procedures to make the required ascertainment. On appeal from the trial court's enforcement order for payment of back wages, the court of appeal held that the city had failed to comply with the writ because the procedures it used to determine salaries were unreasonable and unfair. Mandate was proper, the court explained, when the action taken is so palpably unreasonable and arbitrary as to indicate an abuse of discretion as a matter of law (3 Cal. 3d 252, 261) .

[b] Exercise of Discretion in Particular Manner

In Protect the Historic Amador Waterways v. Amador Water Agency (2004) 116 Cal. App. 4th 1099 , defendant Amador Water Agency (Agency) certified an environmental impact report (EIR) for a project that was to replace a canal with a pipeline. In the EIR, the Agency acknowledged that the pipeline would affect the flow of various streams in the area. Nonetheless, the Agency concluded that this reduction in stream-flow would not constitute a significant effect on the environment within the meaning of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA), Pub. Res. Code § 21000 et seq. Plaintiff Protect the Historic Amador Waterways filed a petition for writ of mandate, challenging the EIR on the ground the Agency abused its discretion by asserting the bare conclusion that modifying the flow of local creeks was not a significant adverse physical change to the existing environmental conditions. The trial court denied plaintiff's petition.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the Agency abused its discretion. It held that abuse of discretion is shown if (1) the agency has not proceeded in a manner required by law, or (2) the agency's determination is not supported by substantial evidence (116 Cal. App. 4th 1099, 1105) . It held that if an agency fails to comply with the informational requirements of CEQA, the agency fails to proceed in "a manner required by law" and therefore abuses its discretion (116 Cal. App. 4th 1099, 1105) . The court of appeal concluded that the Agency abused its discretion because the EIR did not contain a required statement indicating why the Agency determined that the reduction in the flow of local streams would not be significant. Nevertheless, the court noted that its conclusion did not mean the Agency must start the EIR process anew. Rather, prior to recertification, the Agency needed to correct the deficiency in the EIR (116 Cal. App. 4th 1099, 1110-1113) .

In Coelho v. State Personnel Bd. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 968, 257 Cal. Rptr. 557 , an employee of the Department of Fish and Game was suspended for four days after an administrative hearing on charges of failure of good behavior. A remedy under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 (administrative mandamus) was unavailable because the Department was not required to hold an evidentiary hearing to impose a suspension of five days or less. The employee sought a writ of mandate to review the administrative decision and the trial court sustained a demurrer on the ground of lack of jurisdiction. The court of appeal reversed, holding that traditional mandate will lie to correct an abuse of discretion when a petitioner clearly established the right to have discretion exercised in a particular manner (209 Cal. App. 3d 968, 971) .

[c] Failure to Exercise Discretion After Reasonable Time

In Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 432, 444, 261 Cal. Rtpr. 574, 777 P.2d 610 , a taxpayer and several organizations sought a preliminary injunction and writ of mandate requiring a county and its officials to deputize certain county employees as voting registars in order to comply with a statute that required counties to implement voter outreach to minority and low-income communities. The trial court granted the preliminary injunction and the court of appeal affirmed.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that there was no possibility that plaintiffs could prevail on the merits because the applicable statute did not require deputization of county employees as a means to achieve the goal of maximizing voter registration (49 Cal. 3d 432, 443) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court concluded that, even if the present outreach program was inadequate to fulfill the statute's requirements, a writ of mandate could not require the county to take a particular course of action specifically committed to the county's discretion. The Court applied the principle that a court seeking to remedy a violation of law should not require a particular remedy unless (1) the governmental entity has no discretion to exercise, or (2) it fails to exercise that discretion after being given a reasonable opportunity to do so, and concluded that neither of the exceptions applied (49 Cal. 3d 432, 446) . The second exception was based on Legislature v. Reinecke (1973) 10 Cal. 3d 396, 110 Cal. Rptr. 718, 516 P.2d 6 . In Reinecke, the state Legislature failed after the 1970 census to pass any reapportionment bill acceptable to the Governor. The Supreme Court adopted temporary apportionment plans for the 1972 elections pursuant to its duty to insure the electorate equal protection and the right to vote (10 Cal. 3d 396, 399 n.1). By the end of the 1972 legislative session, a reapportionment statute had still not been enacted. Therefore, the Court appointed Special Masters to hold public hearings and present their recommendation for a specific reapportionment plan. The Supreme Court adopted the plan but declined to issue an order to the Legislature, instead relying on the parties to accede to the holding (10 Cal. 3d 396, 407) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Abuse of Discretion

In Manjares v. Newton (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 365, 49 Cal. Rptr. 805, 411 P.2d 901 , the parents of school-age children obtained a writ of mandate directing the school board to provide transportation for their children after the board discontinued certain school bus routes for financial reasons. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that there was no reasonable basis for the board's refusal to provide transportation (64 Cal. 2d 365, 378) . Although the state Education Code gave the board discretion to determine whether or not transportation should be provided, the Court explained that mandate will lie whenever an administrative board has abused its discretion (64 Cal. 2d 365, 370) . Under the circumstances, the court properly concluded that the transportation costs or the possibility that other families might demand bus service did not provide a reasonable justification for the denial of transportation to children who have no other means to attend school (64 Cal. 2d 365, 373-374) .

In Griffin v. Board of Supervisors (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 318, 33 Cal. Rptr. 101, 384 P.2d 421 , voters sought a writ of mandate to compel a county board of supervisors to reapportion supervisorial districts to make them more equal in population. One district containing 50 percent of the population had the same representation as a district containing less than two percent of the population. A state statute, which authorized but did not require county boards to reapportion districts, required that when districts were reapportioned, they should be made as nearly equal in population as possible. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the board was under a duty to redistrict the county (60 Cal. 2d 318, 322) . Even absent a statutory requirement, the court held, districts must be redistricted periodically to preserve the representative system of government. Although the statute gave the board some discretion in deciding whether redistricting has become necessary, the discretion was not unlimited, and when there were drastic deviations from equality of population, the refusal to redistrict was an abuse of discretion (60 Cal. 2d 318, 322) .

In Walker v. County of Los Angeles (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 626, 12 Cal. Rptr. 671, 361 P.2d 247 , county employees obtained a writ of mandate directing the county board of supervisors to ascertain prevailing wages paid in private industry for comparable jobs and to pay the employees salaries that were at least equal to those wages, as required by the county charter. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment in relevant part, holding that the board's enactment of a salary ordinance without making any determination of prevailing wages was so palpably unreasonable and arbitrary as to demonstrate an abuse of discretion as a matter of law. A writ of mandate was the proper remedy to compel the board to perform its mandatory duty under the charter (55 Cal. 2d 626, 639) .

In Saleeby v. State Bar (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 547, 216 Cal. Rptr. 367, 702 P.2d 525 , petitioner's claim for reimbursement from the Client Security Fund [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 6140.5] was not granted in full by the State Bar. Petitioner sought review from the Supreme Court by traditional writ of mandate, essentially challenging the State Bar's rules governing Client Security Fund matters on the ground that they violated due process rights. The Supreme Court issued a peremptory writ of mandate, directing the State Bar to revise its rules to comport with an applicant's right to an opportunity to be heard and to have a statement of findings sufficient for meaningful review, and also directing the State Bar to reconsider its prohibition against compensation of an attorney who assists an applicant (39 Cal. 3d 547, 575) . Before reaching this decision on the merits, the Court held that traditional mandamus under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, and not administrative mandamus under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5, was the appropriate method of review, because of the absence of a clear statutory requirement for a hearing on the claim or of a record sufficient for Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 review, and because the writ petition to the Supreme Court was a fundamental challenge to the State Bar's adoption of the rules and thus was a challenge to the State Bar's quasi-legislative actions. The Court then held that while traditional mandamus does not lie to compel a particular method of exercising discretion, it does lie to correct an abuse of discretion or the actions of an administrative agency that exceed the agency's legal powers, such as the State Bar's asserted complete and limitless discretion to award or deny a claim from the fund arbitrarily (39 Cal. 3d 547, 561-568) .

In Bright Development v. City of Tracy (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 783, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 618 , a developer sought mandate against a city challenging the city's requirement that the developer place off-site utilities underground. The trial court denied the petition. The court of appeal reversed. It found there was no policy existing at the time the developer applied to the city that supported such a requirement. The city, therefore, did not have the discretion to impose a requirement that developers place off-site utilities underground (20 Cal. App. 4th 783, 800) .

The facts and procedure of Elmore v. Imperial Irrigation Dist. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 205 Cal. Rptr. 433 , are discussed in § 150.39[3][a]. In holding that mandate could lie to compel an irrigation district to comply with its statutory duties, the court of appeal applied the principle that mandate will issue both to compel performance of duties specifically imposed by law and to correct abuses of discretion (159 Cal. App. 3d 185, 193) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.44

§ 150.44 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Private Organization

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD ISSUE TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO _____ [set forth legal duty of private organization, e.g., REINSTATE PETITIONER AS A MEMBER] BECAUSE RESPONDENT'S FAILURE TO DO SO WAS ARBITRARY [AND, IN ADDITION, VIOLATED RESPONDENT'S OWN BY-LAWS].

A. Arbitrary Refusal to Act. Mandate will lie when a private organization's refusal to act is arbitrary and in violation of its own by-laws (see Haller v. Burbank Community Hospital Foundation (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 650, 658-659, 197 Cal. Rptr. 45).

[Optional] B. Reinstatement to Membership. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a private organization to reinstate a person to membership (Taboada v. Sociedad Espanola etc. (1923) 191 Cal. 187, 194 ; Bernstein v. Alameda etc. Med. Assn. (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 241, 254, 293 P.2d 862).

[Optional] C. Admission to Membership. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy to compel a private organization to admit a person to membership (see Lewin v. St. Joseph Hospital of Orange (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 383, 146 Cal. Rptr. 892).

[Optional] D. Enforcing Rights of Corporate Shareholder. A writ of mandate will lie to enforce a corporate shareholder's statutory rights (Hobbs v. Tom Reed Gold Min. Co. (1913) 164 Cal. 497, 501-502, 129 P. 781 ; Johnson v. Langdon (1902) 135 Cal. 624, 626-627, 67 P. 1050).

[Optional] E. Membership in Labor Union. A writ of mandate will lie to compel the reinstatement or admission of a person to a labor union (Cason v. Glass Bottle Blowers Asso. (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 134, 231 P.2d 6 (reinstatement); Thorman v. Intl. Alliance etc. Employees (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 629, 634, 320 P.2d 494 (admission), overruled on other grounds in Consolidated Theatres, Inc. v. Theatrical Stage Employees Union (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 713, 721 n.8, 73 Cal. Rptr. 213, 447 P.2d 325).

[Optional] F. Failure to Follow Prescribed Procedures. A writ of mandate is appropriate because the organization failed to follow prescribed procedures (Hard v. California State Employees Assn. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 708, 711, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615 ; Lewin v. St. Joseph Hospital of Orange (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 383, 146 Cal. Rptr. 892).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper to compel a private organization to perform an act when its refusal to do so is arbitrary or resulted from a failure to follow its own by-laws. Optional paragraphs include points and authorities for use if petitioner has been improperly excluded, suspended, or expelled from a private organization, including a labor union, or if the organization has failed to follow presenters procedures, or if the petitioner is a stockholder who has been denied a plain right.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, (Matthew Bender). For a form of petition for a writ of mandate to restore a purportedly expelled member of an unincorporated association to membership privileges, see Ch. 61, Associations and Clubs in that publication. For a discussion and forms related to the corporate rights of stockholders, see Ch. 160, Corporations in that publication.

[c] Related Memoranda

For memoranda relating to exclusion or expulsion from membership in associations or societies, see Ch. 22, Associations and Clubs in this publication. For memoranda relating to administrative mandate, see Ch. 195, Public Administrative Law .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Arbitrary Refusal to Act

In Haller v. Burbank Community Hospital Foundation (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 650, 197 Cal. Rptr. 45 , a hospital took several disciplinary actions against petitioner, a surgeon, including the restriction of his staff privileges. Although the medical staff by-laws entitled petitioner to a hearing, no hearing was held before petitioner was informed of the restrictions. Petitioner sought a writ of administrative mandate for relief to compel the hospital to set aside its decision restricting his practice, among other relief. The superior court sustained a demurrer to that part of the petition addressing the restriction of privileges on the ground that administrative mandate was not a proper remedy and that the petition was barred by petitioner's failure to exhaust his administrative remedies. Petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the trial court should have treated the petition as one for a writ of ordinary mandate and then issued a writ ordering the hospital to grant petitioner a hearing on the restrictions (149 Cal. App. 3d 650, 655, 659) . The court found that the by-laws entitled petitioner to a hearing (149 Cal. App. 3d 650, 657) . Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, the court stated, anticipates the arbitrary or improper refusal by an association to hold a hearing and authorizes resort to a writ of mandate to compel such a hearing (149 Cal. App. 3d 650, 658) . The court also held that the petition was not barred by a failure to exhaust administrative remedies because petitioner was not adequately informed of his right to appeal the restrictions and, even if he were adequately informed, pursuit of the remedies would have been futile (149 Cal. App. 3d 650, 656-658) .

[b] Reinstatement to Membership

In Taboada v. Sociedad Espanola etc. (1923) 191 Cal. 187 , the Supreme Court held that petitioners were entitled to a writ of mandate restoring them to the privileges that they had enjoyed as members in good standing of a fraternal organization. The Court affirmed a judgment of a superior court granting the writ because it determined that petitioners had been illegally expelled from membership in the society (191 Cal. 187, 193-194) .

In Bernstein v. Alameda etc. Med. Assn. (1956) 139 Cal. App. 2d 241, 293 P.2d 862 , petitioner, a physician, had been expelled from a local medical association on a finding that he was guilty of seven violations of the Principles of Medical Ethics of the American Medical Association. The state council reduced the charges to six. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the association to restore him to membership but the trial court denied the writ, although it eliminated three more of the charges against him. The court of appeal determined that another charge was not supported by the evidence and directed the trail court to order the state council to redetermine the penalty for petitioner in light of the fact that only two of the original seven charges remained. The court entertained no doubt, however, that mandate was the appropriate proceeding for the judicial consideration and determination of the issues presented (139 Cal. App. 2d 241, 253-254) .

[c] Admission to Membership

In Lewin v. St. Joseph Hospital of Orange (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 146 Cal. Rptr. 892 , the court of appeal held that a traditional writ of mandate pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1085 was the proper proceeding for seeking admission to defendant hospital's chronic renal hemodialysis facility (82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 383-384) .

[d] Enforcing Right of Stockholder

In Hobbs v. Tom Reed Gold Min. Co. (1913) 164 Cal. 497, 129 P. 781 , a stockholder sought a writ of mandate to compel the board of directors of a corporation to allow him to inspect the operations of a mine owned by the corporation. The trial court sustained respondents' demurrer and the stockholder appealed the ensuing judgment. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the corporation had a duty to permit the inspection, just as a corporation has a common-law duty to allow an inspection of its records (164 Cal. 497, 501-502) . The Court explained that if the right to inspect corporate property was given by statute, unless the statute imposes restrictions or limitations, the right was absolute and could be enforced by a writ of mandate, regardless of the purposes of motives of the stockholder or the existence of good cause. On the other hand, if the right to be enforced was a common-law right, the issuance of the writ was discretionary and the motives of petitioner could be questioned, and petitioner was required to show good cause for granting the relief (164 Cal. 497, 502) .

In Johnson v. Langdon (1902) 135 Cal. 624, 67 P. 1050 , the Supreme Court held that a stockholder's statutory right to examine a corporation's books may be enforced by a writ of mandate. The Court also held that because the applicable statute was based on the principle that the shareholders have a right to be fully informed about the conditions of the corporation, a stockholder is not required to show any reason for the examination and may not be prevented from such an inspection with the defense that his or her motives are improper (135 Cal. 624, 625-626) .

[e] Membership in Labor Union

In Cason v. Glass Bottle Blowers Asso. (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 134, 231 P.2d 6 , petitioner, president of a local union, was suspended by the national union because he allegedly refused to permit local members to work on several Sundays and on Monday in violation of the contract between the employer and the national union. The Supreme Court held that petitioner had been denied a fair hearing before the national union's grievance committee because he was not permitted either to hear the testimony of the only witness against him or to examine the file that the committee considered (37 Cal. 2d 134, 144-145) . Therefore, the Court issued a writ of mandate directing that either the petitioner be granted a full and fair hearing on the charges or that he be reinstated to membership (37 Cal. 2d 134, 147) .

In Thorman v. Intl. Alliance etc. Employees (1958) 49 Cal. 2d 629, 634, 320 P.2d 494 , overruled on other grounds, Consolidated Theatres, Inc. v. Theatrical Stage Employees Union (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 713, 721 n.8, 73 Cal. Rptr. 213, 447 P.2d 325 , a motion picture operator sought a writ of mandate to compel a local union to admit him to membership. The Supreme Court held that mandate was the proper remedy to compel his admission because the complaint did not raise an issue of whether petitioner's employment affected interstate commerce (49 Cal. 2d 629, 634) .

[f] Failure to Follow Prescribed Procedures

In Hard v. California State Employees Assn. (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 708, 117 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615 , an employee organization petitioned for writ of mandate to prevent one of its divisions from incorporating and conducting business on its own. The trial court granted the petition. The court of appeal, however, reversed. The division argued it followed the prescribed procedures set forth in the Government Code when it conducted its election concerning whether it should incorporate. The court of appeal agreed. It found the election had not plainly contravened either the bylaws of the employee organization or the statutory authority (96 Cal. App. 4th 708, 714-715) .

In Lewin v. St. Joseph Hospital of Orange (1978) 82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 146 Cal. Rptr. 892 , a private hospital decided to operate its renal hemodialysis facility on a closed-staff basis, meaning it would be operated exclusively by a group of doctors, excluding other qualified doctors from its operation. A qualified doctor who was not allowed to operate the renal hemodialysis facility petitioned for writ of mandate, and the trial court granted the petition, finding that, by law, the hospital was required to operate the facility on an open-staff basis. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the hospital did not act arbitrarily or fail to follow procedures and give notices required by law. Noting that courts may not substitute their own judgment, the court determined that the hospital's proceedings had been fair (82 Cal. App. 3d 368, 387-391) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Enforcing Right of Corporate Shareholder

In Miller v. Imperial Water Co. No. 8 (1909) 156 Cal. 27 , petitioner, a stockholder in a corporation organized to distribute water for irrigation to its members, sought a writ of mandate to compel the corporation to deliver water to him for the same price and on the same terms as it delivered water to other stockholders. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition on the ground that mandate does not lie to enforce contractual duties.

The Supreme Court overruled the demurrer, holding that the petition rested on a right based entirely on the petitioner's membership in the corporation (156 Cal. 27, 29, 31) . The denial of water to petitioner would deprive him of a right that would practically exclude him from all of the privileges and benefits of membership, the Court explained. Petitioner stated a cause of action for mandate, the Court held, because his right to obtain water was an inseparable adjunct of his membership in the corporation and the corporation had a plain duty to furnish the water (156 Cal. 27, 29-30) .

[b] Membership in Labor Union

In Smetherham v. Laundry Workers' Union (1941) 44 Cal. App. 2d 131, 111 P.2d 948 , petitioner was expelled from membership in her union for a fight that she had with a co-worker. After appealing her expulsion to the international union, she filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel her reinstatement. The superior court granted the petition on the ground that the executive board of the local union had no jurisdiction to expel her under the by-laws or constitution of the union. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (44 Cal. App. 2d 131, 139) . It stated that mandate is proper to compel the reinstatement to membership of a person who has been illegally expelled from a duly organized association (44 Cal. App. 2d 131, 135) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.45

§ 150.45 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Direct Appeal Is Inadequate Legal Remedy

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE IS PROPER WHEN DIRECT APPEAL IS NOT AN ADEQUATE LEGAL REMEDY.

Mandate Proper When Direct Appeal Is Inadequate Legal Remedy. While a direct appeal is generally an adequate remedy at law, it must be both adequate and "speedy" (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1086). If direct appeal is not speedy, a writ of mandate may issue (Kawasaki Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 200, 205-206, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 863).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a direct appeal is not an adequate legal remedy because it is not speedy. They should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate [see § 150.30].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mandate Proper When Direct Appeal Is Inadequate Legal Remedy

In Kawasaki Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (2000) 85 Cal. App. 4th 200, 101 Cal. Rptr. 2d 863 , plaintiff entered into a dealer sales and service agreement with an automotive dealer. Plaintiff later terminated the agreement, alleging the defendant dealer had breached the contract. The defendant filed a protest with the New Motor Vehicle Board, which found that the contract termination was justified. The defendant then filed a petition for a writ of mandate in the superior court. Applying an independent judgment standard, the superior court granted the petition and issued a writ directing the New Motor Vehicle Board to vacate its decision and adopt a different decision. Plaintiff petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted plaintiff's petition. Concluding that the trial court erroneously applied an independent judgment standard rather than a substantial evidence standard, the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its decision and deny the defendant dealer's petition (85 Cal. App. 4th 200, 203-206) . In response to an argument by defendant that plaintiff's petition was improper in that a direct appeal was an adequate legal remedy, the court of appeal determined that it would be intolerable to force plaintiff to maintain its relationship with defendant, after the latter had breached its contract, for another two or more years, the time it would require to complete an appeal. Accordingly, it found that, pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 1086, the legal remedy was not sufficiently speedy and a writ could issue (85 Cal. App. 4th 200, 205-206) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.46

§ 150.46 Supporting Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Court Violated Appellate Court's Instructions

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE IS PROPER WHEN THE LOWER COURT VIOLATED THE APPELLATE COURT'S INSTRUCTIONS.

Mandate Proper When Lower Court Violated Appellate Court's Instructions. When an appellate court's reversal is accompanied by directions requiring specific proceedings on remand, those directions are binding on the trial court and must be followed. Any material variance from the directions is unauthorized and void [Butler v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 979, 982, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 403 (decision directed trial court to enter new default judgment in accordance with evidence presented at default prove-up hearing, not reconsider prior rulings or allow trial)].

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of mandate is proper on the ground that the lower court violated the instructions of the court of appeal. They should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30).

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence that the trial court's treatment of the case on remand diverged from the appellate court's instructions, to petitioner's detriment.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mandate Proper When Lower Court Violated Appellate Court's Instructions

In Butler v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 979, 128 Cal. Rptr. 2d 403 , the lower court judgment awarded the tenant plaintiffs nominal damages on their personal injury claims against the landlord. The court of appeal had previously reversed that judgment and remanded it to the trial court. Despite the appellate court's specific directions, the trial court issued an order granting a motion for reconsideration of a ruling that was rendered before the judgment was issued.

The court of appeal held that the effect of the trial court's order was to allow further trial court proceedings that were contrary to the court's directions on remand. Because the trial court's order materially differed from the court of appeal's remand directions, it was unauthorized and void. Accordingly, the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate its order granting reconsideration and compelling it to comply with the remand directions (Butler v. Superior Court (2002) 104 Cal. App. 4th 979, 982) .

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

§ 150.47 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,

[or]

IN THE COURT OF APPEAL OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
_____ APPELLATE DISTRICT
[DIVISION _____]

[or]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name], Petitioner,	)
vs.	)	[CIVIL] NO. _____
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF	)	MEMORANDUM IN _____ CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF	)	[PRELIMINARY OPPOSITION TO or SUPPORT
_____,	)	OF DEMURRER TO or SUPPORT OF ANSWER
[or]	)	TO] PETITION FOR WRIT OF MANDATE
_____ [name of	)	Date: _____
other inferior tribunal, corporation, board, or person]	)	Time: _____

Respondent,	)	Location: _____
_____ [name],	)	[Judge: _____]
Real Party in Interest.	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE PETITION FOR A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [specify grounds for opposing petition, e.g., IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH THAT PETITIONER IS ENTITLED TO ISSUANCE OF THE WRIT].

[EITHER]

A. Preliminary Opposition to Petition for Writ of Mandate. Within ten days after the petition is filed, the respondent or any real party in interest, separately or jointly, may serve and file a preliminary opposition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1107; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(a) (reviewing courts)].

[OR]

A. Return by Demurrer, Verified Answer, or Both. A respondent, real party in interest, or both, may make a return to an alternative writ of mandate by demurrer, verified answer, or both (see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(b) (reviewing courts)).

[Optional] B. Objection by Demurrer. A party may object by demurrer to a petition for mandate on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to show a right to relief, when that ground for objection appears on the face of the petition [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a), 1109). A showing on demurrer that the petition for writ does not state facts sufficient to justify relief is a complete answer to the petition, and a court on such showing is warranted in discharging the alternative writ or order to show cause and dismissing the proceeding (StorMedia Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 449, 455 n.7, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 976 P.2d 214).

[Optional] C. Objection by Answer. A party may object by answer to a petition for mandate when any ground for objection does not appear on the face of the petition (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.30(a), 1109).

[OR]

A. Response When No Alternative Writ Is Sought. When a petition for writ of mandate is filed in a trial court and no alternative writ is sought, and when a record of the proceedings to be reviewed has been filed with the petition or when no record of a proceeding is required, a respondent may answer or otherwise respond within 30 days after service of the petition (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088.5, 1089.5).

[CONTINUE]

[Add specific points and authorities in opposition to granting the petition for writ of mandate, when appropriate, showing that under the particular facts of the case, petitioner has not sufficiently established one or more elements that are necessary to justify a grant of relief by writ of mandate, e.g., that respondent lower court did not abuse its discretion (see § 150.48), that the act that the petition seeks to compel on the part of respondent public entity or official is discretionary, not ministerial (see § 150.49), that respondent has no present legal duty to perform the act that the petition seeks to compel (see §§ 150.50, 150.51), that petitioner has failed to exhaust administrative remedies (see § 150.52), that petitioner has no beneficial interest in the proceedings (see § 150.144), or that petitioner's remedy at law is adequate (see §§ 150.185, 150.186).]

[Add specific points and authorities in opposition to granting the petition for writ of mandate, when appropriate, showing one or more affirmative defenses to the granting of a writ of mandate (see §§ 150.200-150.205).]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Respondent _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is a skeletal memorandum in opposition to a petition for writ of mandate. It sets out general points relating to the procedural context in which opposition to the petition may be raised [see § 150.47[2][b]]. It is designed to be combined with additional, more specific points and authorities showing why the court should exercise its discretion to deny issuance of a peremptory writ under the particular circumstances of the case [see § 150.47[2][c]].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a petition supported by the points and authorities set out in § 150.30.

[b] Procedure for Opposing Petition

This form sets out three procedural contexts in which opposition to a petition for writ of mandate may be raised. First, a respondent or real party in interest may file a memorandum in opposition to a petition for writ of mandate within ten days after the petition is filed (first alternative Paragraph A) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1107; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(a)(1) (reviewing courts)].

Second, a respondent or real party in interest may file a memorandum in support of his or her return to an alternative writ of mandate by demurrer, verified answer, or both (second alternative Paragraph A, Paragraphs B, C) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(b) (reviewing courts)]. In superior courts, this return must be made on the date for return of the alternative writ or the date on which the petition is noticed for hearing. If the return is by demurrer alone, the court may allow an answer to be filed within such time as it may designate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089]. In reviewing courts, this return must be made within 30 days after the court issues the alternative writ or order to show cause or notifies the parties that it is considering issuing a peremptory writ in the first instance. If the return is by demurrer alone, and the demurrer is not sustained, the peremptory writ may issue without leave to answer [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.490(h); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089 (provisions do not affect rules governing original writ proceedings in reviewing courts)].

Third, a respondent may file points and authorities in support of his or her answer or other response to petition for writ of mandate in which no alternative writ has been sought (third alternative Paragraph A) [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088.5, 1089.5]. In such a case, when a record of the proceedings to be reviewed has been filed with the petition or when no record of a proceeding is required, a respondent generally may answer or otherwise respond within 30 days after service of the petition [Code Civ. Proc. § 1089.5].

For discussion regarding opposing points and authorities generally, see § 150.08.

[c] Opposition to Petition

The bracketed instructions that follow the general procedural points of law in the foregoing form indicate that additional paragraphs, taken from subsequent forms in this chapter, should be added to show that relief by writ of mandate is inappropriate under the particular circumstances of the case. Relief is inappropriate, for example, if the petitioner has not established one or more elements requisite for relief, such as his or her beneficial interest or the lack of an adequate remedy at law. Relief is also inappropriate if respondent or real party in interest can establish an affirmative defense. Counsel should refer to the forms indicated in the bracketed instructions and choose the paragraphs that best fit the factual situation involved.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For further discussion relating to opposition to a petition for writ of mandate, and forms of return by demurrer or answer, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Objection by Demurrer

In StorMedia Inc. v. Superior Court (1999) 20 Cal. 4th 449, 84 Cal. Rptr. 2d 843, 976 P.2d 214 , plaintiffs filed a class action against defendant corporation and several of its officers, seeking damages for alleged violations of Corp. Code § 25400(d) (market manipulation). Plaintiffs, as a class, allegedly purchased stock of defendant corporation at time when the stock was artificially inflated due to false and misleading statements of defendants. The trial court overruled most of defendants' general demurrers to the complaint, and defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate directing that it set aside its orders overruling the demurrers, and to sustain the demurrers and dismiss the action instead (20 Cal. 4th 449, 452-454) .

The court of appeal, after soliciting opposition, summarily denied the petition. The Supreme Court subsequently granted the defendants' petition for review and issued an order to show cause why the relief sought in the writ petition should not be granted. Plaintiffs, as real parties in interest, filed with the Court a consolidated demurrer to the writ petition, as well as a return to the order to show cause (20 Cal. 4th 449, 454) . The Court, before ruling on the substantive merits of the petition, noted that the plaintiffs' demurrer was authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1089, and asserted that the writ petition failed to state a claim on which relief might be granted. The Court held that a showing on such general demurrer, that the petition does not state facts sufficient to justify relief, is a complete answer to an order to show cause, and a court on such showing is warranted in discharging the order and dismissing the proceeding. Moreover, the Court noted that when, as in this case, the demurrer is based on that ground, and the petition presents only issues of law, there is no need to consider the return and demurrer separately (20 Cal. 4th 449, 455 n.7). On consideration of the merits of the case, the Court affirmed the court of appeal's denial of the writ petition (20 Cal. 4th 449, 463) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.48

§ 150.48 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Lower Court--Court Did Not Abuse Its Discretion

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE PETITION FAILS TO SHOW THAT RESPONDENT COURT ABUSED ITS DISCRETION.

No Abuse of Discretion. A writ of mandate will not issue if the challenged ruling was not an abuse of the court's discretion (Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 215-216, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate is proper when the respondent is a lower court. The ground for opposition is that respondent's action does not constitute an abuse of discretion subject to correction by writ of mandate.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47).

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Abuse of Discretion

In Coy v. Superior Court (1962) 58 Cal. 2d 210, 23 Cal. Rptr. 393, 373 P.2d 457 , plaintiff filed an action for abuse of process seeking special, general, and punitive damages. Five months before the date set for trial, he sought to amend the complaint for the sole purpose of adding an allegation of damages for mental suffering. The trial court denied the motion and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate for review of that order, as well as for review of a discovery order. The Supreme Court held, inter alia, that mandate did not lie to review the order denying the motion to amend. The Court explained that, although mandate may be used to compel a trial court to allow an amendment in some cases, the motion rests largely in the trial court's discretion. The plaintiff made no showing of abuse of discretion and, therefore, mandate did not lie (58 Cal. 2d 210, 215-216) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.49

§ 150.49 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Act to Be Compelled Is Discretionary, Not Ministerial

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE ACT IT SEEKS TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO PERFORM IS DISCRETIONARY, NOT MINISTERIAL.

A. Act Within Discretion of Public Entity or Official. A writ of mandate is not proper to control the exercise of discretion by an administrative board or a legislative body (Faulkner v. Cal. Toll Bridge Authority (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 317, 326, 253 P.2d 659 ; Shamsian v. Dep't of Conservation (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 621, 639-641, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 62 ; Riggs v. City of Oxnard (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 526, 530, 201 Cal. Rptr. 291).

[Optional] B. Legislative Act. A legislative or quasi-legislative decision of a public entity or official is entrusted solely to its discretion and cannot be compelled by mandate (Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 432, 443-445, 261 Cal. Rtpr. 574, 777 P.2d 610 ; Coachella Valley Unified School Dist. v. State of California (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 93, 113-117, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 ; County of San Diego v. State of California (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 489 ; Carrancho v. California Air Resources Board (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1265-1267, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 536 (differentiating between traditional mandamus and administrative mandate)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate is proper when the respondent is a public entity or official. The ground for opposition is that respondent's action was discretionary, not ministerial, and thus is not subject to correction by writ of mandate.

This form should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Act Within Discretion of Public Entity or Official

In Faulkner v. Cal. Toll Bridge Authority (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 317, 253 P.2d 659 , petitioners sought to restrain the state Toll Bridge Authority from proceeding with construction and financing of a bridge and to grant them a hearing on the question of whether a bridge or an earth-fill type of crossing should be built. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint and petitioner appealed. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the allegations of the petition related at most to the wisdom of the respondent's acts and fell short of showing any abuse of discretion (40 Cal. 2d 317, 333-334) . Petitioners failed to show that respondents had not performed any act specifically required by the relevant legislation. The writ was properly denied because a writ of mandate will not issue to control discretion within the area lawfully entrusted to an administrative body (40 Cal. 2d 317, 326) .

In Shamsian v. Dep't of Conservation (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 621, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 62 , the plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate to compel the Department of Conservation to provide convenient, economical, and efficient beverage container redemption opportunities for California consumers as required by the California Beverage Container Recycling and Litter Reduction Act. The trial court held that the Act vested discretion in the Department to develop a recycling program consistent with legislative goals and there was no ministerial act that the plaintiff could compel.

On appeal, the court of appeal agreed. The court held that no duty arises under the act, and that the act is merely a general statement of legislative intent that does not impose any affirmative duty that would be enforceable through a writ of mandate (136 Cal. App. 4th 621, 640-641). In addition, the court held, the Department has discretion to exempt convenience zones from the certified recycling center or location requirement. The court held that a writ of mandate would not lie to control the Department's discretion as to establishing certified recycling centers or locations within convenience zones (136 Cal. App. 4th 621, 640-641).

In Riggs v. City of Oxnard (1984) 154 Cal. App. 3d 526, 201 Cal. Rptr. 291 , petitioner, who owned a transmission shop, complained to the city that a neighboring transmission shop was operating in violation of an existing city zoning ordinance. The city had erroneously approved a zone clearance for the nonconforming shop, and the owners had quit their previous jobs and spent substantial sums of money to commence the new business. The city decided to defer prosecution of the nonconforming shopowners, who threatened to sue the city because of its mistake. The city and the shopowners entered into an agreement to defer prosecution pending a review by the city council and planning commission of a suggested amendment to the ordinance. Petitioner then sought a writ of mandate to compel the city to issue a criminal citation and order a civil injunction against the nonconforming shop. The superior court denied the writ and petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the city did not abuse its discretion (154 Cal. App. 3d 526, 531-532) . In addressing petitioner's argument that a writ of mandate will lie when an individual taxpayer or property owner seeks to enforce a clear public duty, the court of appeal stated that the city had enforced the ordinance and that the means of enforcing it was within the discretionary power of the city. A writ of mandate will not issue to compel that the city's discretionary power be exercised in a particular way. A court's function is to determine whether or not a municipal body has acted within the limits of its power and discretion; its function is not to challenge the municipality's power and wisdom (154 Cal. App. 3d 526) .

[b] Legislative Act

The facts and procedure in Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 432, 261 Cal. Rtpr. 574, 777 P.2d 610 , are discussed in § 150.43 [3][c]. In its refusal to compel a county to deputize certain employees as voter registrars to implement a statutorily-mandated voter outreach program, the Court held that the statute made clear that the decision to adopt a deputization program rested in the discretion of the individual counties (49 Cal. 3d 432, 444) . Therefore, even if the county had a ministerial duty to implement the voter outreach program, the decision to do so by deputization was a quasi-legislative decision entrusted solely to local elected officials (49 Cal. 3d 432, 445) .

In Coachella Valley Unified School Dist. v. State of California (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 93, 113-117, 98 Cal. Rptr. 3d 9 , various school districts petitioned for a writ of mandate requiring the State to abide by the federal No Child Left Behind Act (NCLBA) testing requirements. The plaintiffs argued that the defendant tested all children in English, including limited English proficient (LEP) students, thereby affecting the tests' validity and reliability. The plaintiffs argued that the State's testing procedures violated mandatory duties under the NCLBA and constituted an abuse of discretion. They alleged that the defendant violated mandatory duties to create and implement a testing and accountability system that complied with the NCLBA. The trial court held that the State's manner of conducting assessments under the NCLBA did not violate any ministerial duty created by the statute. The court reasoned that the NCLBA did not mandate a specific way to test English language learners. Instead, it specified the results that must ensue, i.e., valid and reliable assessments. The trial court held that the State's tests did not constitute an abuse of discretion in that the process by which the tests were adopted was not arbitrary or capricious, unlawful, or procedurally unfair.

On appeal, the plaintiffs argued that the State's testing program violated mandatory duties under the NCLBA and constituted an abuse of discretion. The court of appeal first noted that mandate is available to compel the performance of a clear, present and ministerial duty on the part of the respondent where the petitioner has a beneficial right to performance of that duty. It observed that a ministerial act is one that a public functionary is required to perform in a prescribed manner in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to his or her own judgment or opinion concerning the propriety of such act (176 Cal. App. 4th 93, 113) . The court noted that the NCLBA did not require any specific method for testing students, only that the test results be valid and reliable. The court noted that the State proceeded in public and engaged in a deliberative, policymaking process to determine how LEP students should be tested for the NCLBA (176 Cal. App. 4th 93, 116) .

Nonetheless, the plaintiffs argued that the NCLBA imposed mandatory duties to assess LEP students in a valid and reliable manner and provide reasonable accommodations most likely to yield accurate data. Because these duties are mandatory, the plaintiffs argued, the State's function in carrying them out became ministerial, notwithstanding the exercise of discretion as to how to fulfill the mandate. The court of appeal disagreed, holding that the plaintiffs conflated the constraints the NCLBA impose on the State's discretion with the notion of ministerial duties. The plaintiffs' argument eliminated the distinction between ministerial and discretionary acts, and ignored the quasi-legislative nature of the State's actions. The court held that if the plaintiffs' argument were correct, the court would become the official second-guesser on the issue of how to assess LEP students under the NCLBA, the very thing the NCLBA conferred discretion on the State to do. The court held that the plaintiffs' position impinged on the separation of powers, impermissibly injecting the judiciary into the quasi-legislative functions lodged with the State (176 Cal. App. 4th 93, 116-117) .

In County of San Diego v. State of California (2008) 164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 79 Cal. Rptr. 3d 489 various California counties sued the defendant State of California seeking a writ of mandate for reimbursement under Cal. Const., Art. XIII B, § 6 for the costs of providing state-mandated programs and services. The trial court granted the writ of mandate, noting however that compliance with the judgment rested solely in the Legislature's discretion. The defendant appealed, arguing that the writ of mandate was improper because it violated the separation of powers doctrine in that courts may not order the Legislature to appropriate funds or order the payment of funds the Legislature has not appropriated.

The court of appeal agreed. It held that mandate may not be used to order the Legislature to enact any specific legislation because, by so doing, the court would be exercising a legislative function (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 594) . In response, the plaintiffs argued that once funds had been appropriated by legislative action, a court may order the State Controller to make appropriate expenditures from such funds. The court rejected that argument finding that the Legislature had not yet appropriated the required funds (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 595) .

The court of appeal also held that the writ was unnecessary because the defendant was already required to reimburse the plaintiffs under Gov. Code § 17617. The writ gave the plaintiffs the right to reimbursement without giving them any additional benefit (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 596) . The court of appeal held that the trial court acknowledged this by providing that compliance with the writ rested within the Legislature's discretion (164 Cal. App. 4th 580, 596) .

In Carrancho v. California Air Resources Board (2003) 111 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 4 Cal. Rptr. 3d 536 , rice growers sought a writ of mandate to compel the California Air Resources Board and other agencies to develop a feasible, realistic implementation plan and schedule for achieving 50 percent diversion of rice straw left over after harvest or to advise the Legislature that they could not phase down the practice of burning the rice straw by so doing. The plaintiffs claimed the agencies' preparation, analysis, and progress reports were deficient. The trial court denied the writ of mandate.

On appeal, the plaintiffs argued that the agencies' actions were informal and not legislative, and that their ministerial duties were subject to control by mandate. The court of appeal disagreed. It held that the agencies' actions required discretion and therefore were not ministerial. The court held that although traditional mandamus may be used to compel an agency to exercise its discretion, the manner of exercising discretion is entitled to deference; hence, mandate may not be used to control the agency by forcing it to exercise its discretion in a particular manner or to reach a particular result (111 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1268) . The court concluded that the agencies' developing the diversion plan and preparing the progress reports at issue were subject to the judicial-deference standard of review because the agencies' information gathering was a type of delegated legislative activity. Thus, although plaintiffs could compel the agencies to issue the statutorily required documents, because the manner of preparation and their contents were left to the agencies' discretion, review was limited to determining whether the agencies' findings, conclusions, and recommendations were arbitrary, capricious, or unsupported by substantial evidence (111 Cal. App. 4th 1255, 1268-1269) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Act Within Discretion of Public Entity or Official Exercise of Discretion

In Bowles v. Antonetti (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 283, 50 Cal. Rptr. 370 , petitioners obtained a writ of mandate to compel a city council to annul a resolution vacating a portion of a public street. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the writ was improper because it commanded the city council to perform legislative acts in a particular manner (241 Cal. App. 2d 283, 287) . In addition, the city council's finding that the affected portion of the street was not necessary for present or future public street purposes was not a bad-faith, arbitrary, or capricious action amounting to an abuse of discretion (241 Cal. App. 2d 283, 288) .

In Monarch Cablevision, Inc. v. City Council (1966) 239 Cal. App. 2d 206, 48 Cal. Rptr. 550 , petitioner sought a writ of review and a writ of mandate to set aside a city council's grant of a television antenna system franchise to a competitor and to compel the city to grant the franchise to petitioner. The trial court dismissed the petition and petitioner appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a writ of mandate would not issue to set aside a legislative act involving the exercise of discretion and to compel the performance of another legislative act also involving the exercise of discretion (239 Cal. App. 2d 206, 211) . In addition, the court held that the city council did not abuse its discretion (239 Cal. App. 2d 206, 212) .

In US Ecology, Inc. v. State of California (2001) 92 Cal. App. 4th 113, 111 Cal. Rptr. 2d 689 , the petitioner, a company selected to develop and operate a low level radioactive waste facility for the state pursuant to a regional compact the state entered into with several other states, sued the state to compel performance after the company expended a significant amount of money preparing to undertake its duties. The company also sought a writ of mandate because the state had failed to acquire from the federal government a particular site for the facility. The trial court sustained the state's demurrer to the petition without leave to amend. The court of appeal affirmed. It determined that the state's legal duty under the regional compact was to develop a regional low level radioactive waste facility on a timely basis. The selection of a site, however, was a matter of discretion; therefore, even though the state had taken steps toward using the particular site for the facility, mandate did not lie to compel the state to obtain the site from the federal government because the state could still exercise its discretion and select a different site (92 Cal. App. 4th 113, 137-139) .

[b] Legislative Act

In Hutchinson v. City of Sacramento (1993) 17 Cal. App. 4th 791, 796, 21 Cal. Rptr. 2d 779 , the petitioners sought mandate to compel the establishment of certain speed limits within the city limits. The court denied the petition. The court of appeal affirmed. It held petitioners were not entitled to mandate because the establishment of speed limits is a legislative act, not subject to mandate as a ministerial duty (17 Cal. App. 4th 791, 796) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.50

§ 150.50 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Act to Be Compelled Is Future Act

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE RESPONDENT'S REFUSAL TO PERFORM IS ONLY ANTICIPATED AND SPECULATIVE.

Future Acts. A writ of mandate will not issue to compel the performance of future acts or when there is merely an anticipated or possible refusal to perform a future duty (Diller v. Flynn (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 449, 453, 38 Cal. Rptr. 229 ; Northridge etc. Water Dist. v. McDonell (1958) 158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 127-128, 322 P.2d 25).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate is proper when the respondent is a public entity or official. The ground for opposition is that respondent's duty to perform the act sought to be compelled is not a present duty.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Future Acts

In Diller v. Flynn (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 449, 38 Cal. Rptr. 229 , petitioner, the director of a savings and loan association, obtained a writ of mandate compelling the association and its officers to allow him to inspect and copy from records of the association "at all reasonable times" and "so long as he is a director of said Association." The court of appeal affirmed, with the modification that the writ should be directed to only one present inspection by petitioner and not by its terms be extended to inspections that petitioner might request in the future. Writs of mandate, the court reasoned, do not issue to compel the performance of future acts or for the mere anticipated or possible refusal to perform a future duty. The association had not adopted a fixed policy and there was nothing to indicate that the association would not comply with the law established in the appeal (226 Cal. App. 2d 449, 453) .

In Northridge etc. Water Dist. v. McDonell (1958) 158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 322 P.2d 25 , petitioner brought an original proceeding in the court of appeal to compel the secretary of a county water district to sign bonds for an improvement district within the water district. The court of appeal refused to issue a writ of mandate, holding that it had no original jurisdiction under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1138-1140, which authorize submission of an agreed case (158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 125) . A writ of mandate, the court reasoned, will not be issued to compel performance of an act until there has been an actual, as distinguished from an anticipated, refusal (158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 127) . Similarly, mandate will not lie to compel the performance of future acts. The court observed that no reason had been given why the bonds, after they were authorized, had not been printed and presented to the secretary of the district for his signature (158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 128) . The court could not assume that when the secretary was presented with the bonds he would then refuse to sign them (158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 129) . Therefore, the court chose not to depart from the rule that courts will concern themselves only with issues that require a decision that can result in a binding judgment (158 Cal. App. 2d 123, 129) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.51

§ 150.51 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Act to Be Compelled Is Unlawful

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE ACT IT SEEKS TO COMPEL RESPONDENT TO PERFORM IS UNLAWFUL.

Performance of Unlawful Act May Not Be Compelled. A writ of mandate is not proper when its issuance would encourage the accomplishment of an unlawful act or purpose (Slater v. City Council (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 864, 868, 47 Cal. Rptr. 837 ; Plum v. City of Healdsburg (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 308, 317, 46 Cal. Rptr. 827).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate is proper when the respondent is a public entity or official. The ground for opposition is that the act sought to be compelled encourages an unlawful act or purpose.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Performance of Unlawful Act May Not Be Compelled

In Plum v. City of Healdsburg (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 308, 46 Cal. Rptr. 827 , petitioners applied for a zoning permit to build a trailer camp on their property. The applicable ordinance permitted industrial uses and other uses which, in the opinion of the planning commission, were of a "similar nature." The city planning commission approved petitioner's application but the city council denied it on the ground that the trailer camp was not a similar use. The building inspector then refused to issue the permit, contending that the city council's determination on the issue of "similar" use overrode the decision of the planning commission. Petitioners obtained a writ of mandate directing the building inspector to issue a permit and respondents appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that a trailer camp was not a "similar" use permitted by the ordinance (237 Cal. App. 2d 308, 317-319) . The inspector, the court held, could not be forced to do an act that the ordinance prohibited him from doing. Mandate will not lie, the court reasoned, to compel the performance of acts that are void, illegal, contrary to public policy, or that tend to aid an unlawful purpose (237 Cal. App. 2d 308, 317) . Because the planning commission's determination to permit the use was null and void, the inspector was justified in refusing to issue the permit (237 Cal. App. 2d 308, 319) .

In Slater v. City Council (1965) 238 Cal. App. 2d 864, 47 Cal. Rptr. 837 , petitioners obtained a writ of mandate to compel a city council to grant them the right to subdivide their real property. An ordinance prohibiting that type of subdivision was enacted before entry of the judgment granting the writ. The court of appeal reversed, holding that petitioners were bound by the subsequently enacted ordinance (238 Cal. App. 2d 864, 867) . The court observed that a writ of mandate should not issue to compel an act that would tend to aid an unlawful purpose and that petitioners offered no equitable reason why they should be permitted to divide their property to the detriment of their neighbors (238 Cal. App. 2d 864, 868) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Performance of Unlawful Act May Not Be Compelled

In Pratt v. Adams (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 602, 40 Cal. Rptr. 505 , a group of landowners, who wished to avoid the requirements of state and local subdivision laws, filed a partition action and obtained a court order confirming the referee's plan for division of their property. When petitioners were unable to obtain permits to build residences on the property, they sought a writ of mandate to compel county officers to issue the permits. The trial court denied the petition and petitioners appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that petitioners deliberately circumvented the subdivision laws and that, therefore, a writ of mandate would not issue to assist them in the fulfillment of their plan to accomplish an unlawful purpose (229 Cal. App. 2d 602, 606) .

In Smith v. Kraintz (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 696, 20 Cal. Rptr. 471 , petitioner bought a parcel of real property on which he intended to erect a building. He applied for a building permit but failed to disclose the existence of an easement or right of way for the benefit of the public generally and a fire protection district in particular. The building permit was issued but it was later revoked because of the existence of the public easement. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the county building inspector to issue the permit, but the trial court denied the writ. The court of appealed affirmed, holding that there was in fact a public easement by implied dedication and that granting the permit would interfere with the public easement (201 Cal. App. 2d 696, 701) . Petitioner made a false representation in his application for a building permit, the court observed, and, furthermore, a writ of mandate ought not to be granted when its enforcement would work an injustice or accomplish a legal wrong (201 Cal. App. 2d 696, 699-700) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.52

§ 150.52 Opposing Contention That Writ of Mandate Is Necessary to Compel Action by Public Entity or Officer--Petitioner Failed to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE PETITIONER HAS FAILED TO EXHAUST HIS/HER/ITS ADMINISTRATIVE REMEDIES.

Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies. A writ of mandate will not be issued when petitioner has failed to exhaust available administrative remedies (Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 292-293, 109 P.2d 942 ; Alta Loma School Dist. v. San Bernardino County Com. on School Dist. Reorganization (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 554, 177 Cal. Rptr. 506).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate is proper when the respondent is a public entity or official. The ground for opposition is that petitioner failed to exhaust his or her administrative remedies before petitioning for the writ.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Exhaust Administrative Remedies

The facts and procedure in Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 , are discussed in § 150.71[3][a]. In issuing a writ of prohibition to restrain the court of appeal from enforcing a writ of mandate, the Supreme Court held that the lower court had acted in excess of its jurisdiction when it interfered with administrative proceedings before they were final (17 Cal. 2d 280, 305-306) . A complete administrative procedure was available, including a hearing and two appeals, and there was nothing for any court to review until that procedure had been invoked (17 Cal. 2d 280, 291) . The rule, the Court reiterated, is that when an administrative remedy is provided by statute, relief must be sought from the administrative body and this remedy exhausted before the courts will act (17 Cal. 2d 280, 292) . It is not a matter of judicial discretion but a fundamental rule of procedure laid down by courts of last resort, followed under the doctrine of stare decisis, and binding on all courts (17 Cal. 2d 280, 293) .

In Alta Loma School Dist. v. San Bernardino County Com. on School Dist. Reorganization (1981) 124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 177 Cal. Rptr. 506 , a county committee established to recommend a reorganization of a high school district approved a plan that would abolish several component school districts. The component school districts sought a writ of mandate to compel the committee to set aside its action and to prohibit the committee from sending its plan to the State Board of Education for approval. The trial court overruled the committee's demurrer to the petition and the committee appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, noting that the fact that the State Board of Education had the power to order any necessary modifications obviated the need for judicial review of the proposal's propriety. Stating that the rule requiring exhaustion is not discretionary, but a jurisdictional prerequisite to judicial review, the court held that plaintiffs were precluded from such review until they had pursued the administrative processes available with the board (124 Cal. App. 3d 542, 554-556) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
A. MANDATE

15-150 California Points & Authorities §§ 150.53-150.69

[Reserved]

§§ 150.53[Reserved]

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.70

§ 150.70 Supporting Petition for Writ of Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,

[or]

IN THE COURT OF APPEAL OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
_____ APPELLATE DISTRICT
[DIVISION _____]

[or]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	[CIVIL] NO. _____
Petitioner,	)	MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF PETITION
vs.	)	FOR WRIT OF PROHIBITION
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF	)	[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103(; Cal. Rules of Ct.,
CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF	)	Rule 8.486)]
_____,	)	Date: _____
Respondent,	)	Time: _____

_____ [name],	)	Location: _____
Real Party in Interest.	)	[Judge: _____]
	)	Date Action Filed: _____
		[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THIS COURT SHOULD ISSUE A WRIT OF PROHIBITION RESTRAINING RESPONDENT FROM _____ [specify threatened judicial act] BECAUSE RESPONDENT IS AN INFERIOR TRIBUNAL PROCEEDING WITHOUT OR IN EXCESS OF ITS JURISDICTION, AND PETITIONER IS BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED AND HAS NO ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Writ of Prohibition. When there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law, a writ of prohibition may be issued on the verified petition of the person beneficially interested, by any court to an inferior court, to arrest the proceedings of the tribunal when such proceedings are without or in excess of jurisdiction of the tribunal (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103).

[Add specific points and authorities showing that respondent is a lower court or other tribunal that is threatening to act without or in excess of its jurisdiction (see §§ 150.71-150.77)].

[Add specific points and authorities showing why petitioner's remedy at law is inadequate (see §§ 150.160-150.184).]

[If petitioner is not a party in a lower court action, add specific points and authorities showing that petitioner has a beneficial interest in the proceedings (see § 150.140).]

[If the petition seeks a writ of prohibition or, in the alternative, a writ of mandate, add specific points and authorities showing that appropriate writ may be issued when petition seeks both writs (see § 150.120).]

[Add specific points and authorities showing that issuance of a peremptory writ in the first instance is justified, if appropriate (see § 150.121).]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for Petitioner _____ [name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing form is a skeletal memorandum in support of a petition for writ of prohibition. It is designed to be combined with additional, more specific points and authorities showing why the court should exercise its discretion to issue a writ of prohibition under the particular circumstances of the case [see § 150.70[2][b]].

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

For discussion regarding supporting points and authorities generally, see § 150.08.

[b] Establishing Elements Essential to Issuance of Writ of Prohibition

The foregoing form sets out the general point of law that a writ of prohibition may properly issue when the following conditions exist: (1) respondent threatens to perform a judicial act; (2) the act is without or in excess of respondent's jurisdiction; (3) there is no adequate remedy at law, and (4) petitioner has a beneficial interest in the proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103; see Chodos v. Superior Court (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 703, 714, 38 Cal. Rptr. 301] .

The bracketed instructions that follow the general point of law in the foregoing form indicate that additional paragraphs, taken from subsequent forms in this chapter should be added showing the following elements: (1) a lower court's threatened judicial act that is without or in excess of jurisdiction; (2) the petitioner's beneficial interest in restraining that act; and (3) the inadequacy of petitioner's remedy at law. Further bracketed instructions indicate that additional paragraphs, taken from subsequent forms in this chapter, should be added, if appropriate, to show the following: (1) the propriety of issuing the writ if the petition mistakenly seeks a writ of mandate, or seeks the writs in the alternative; and (2) the propriety of issuing a peremptory writ in the first instance. Counsel should refer to the forms indicated in the bracketed instructions and choose the paragraphs that best fit the factual situation involved.

[c] Writ of Prohibition Against Corporation, Board, or Person

The prohibition statutes authorize issuance of the writ to restrain a corporation, board, or person exercising judicial functions, as well as a court [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]. Only a constitutional grant of judicial power, however, authorizes a corporation, board, or person to exercise judicial functions [see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 1; Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equal. (1936) 6 Cal. 2d 557, 562-563, 59 P.2d 119] . Most local and statewide administrative agencies, such as city councils, school boards, planning commissions, and civil service and merit systems boards, for example, have no constitutional authority to exercise judicial functions [see Standard Oil Co. v. State Board of Equal. (1936) 6 Cal. 2d 557, 562-563, 59 P.2d 119 (state agencies); Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 42-44, 46 n.1, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 (local agencies); but see Boren v. State Personnel Board (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 634, 637-638, 234 P.2d 981 (State Personnel Board derives judicial powers from constitution)]. Therefore, in most cases a writ of prohibition is used to review the judicial acts of a lower court.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For further discussion and forms of petitions for writs of prohibition, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.78 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for prohibition that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.71

§ 150.71 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM PROCEEDING WITH THE ACTION BECAUSE ANOTHER COURT HAS EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION.

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. Any acts that exceed the defined power of a court in any instance, whether that power is defined by constitutional provision, express statutory declaration, or rules developed by the courts and followed under the doctrine of stare decisis, are in excess of jurisdiction and may be restrained by prohibition (Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 288-291, 109 P.2d 942 ; Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 852, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817).

[EITHER]

B. Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction. A court that is proceeding although another court has exclusive jurisdiction is acting in excess of its jurisdiction, and a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain it from proceeding (Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 455, 460, 199 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[OR]

B. Administrative Agency Has Exclusive Jurisdiction. A court that is proceeding although an administrative agency has exclusive jurisdiction is acting in excess of its jurisdiction, and a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain it from proceeding (Musicians Union, Local No. 6 v. Superior Court of Alameda County (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 695, 700, 73 Cal. Rptr. 201, 447 P.2d 313).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that another court or tribunal has exclusive jurisdiction over the proceeding.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Excess of Jurisdiction

In Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 , longshoremen who were out of work made claims for unemployment benefits and an initial administrative determination was made that they were entitled to the benefits. Their former employers intervened in the administrative proceedings, contending that the longshoremen left work because of a labor dispute and so were not entitled to benefits. After a hearing, a referee affirmed the initial determination. Instead of taking a further administrative appeal to the California Employment Commission, the employers obtained a temporary restraining order from the court of appeal, as well as a writ of mandate directing the commission to withhold benefits as long as the asserted labor dispute was in progress. The employers then filed an appeal to the commission. While the appeal was pending, the longshoremen sought a writ of prohibition from the Supreme Court to restrain the court of appeal from enforcing its temporary restraining order and writ of mandate.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the court of appeal was without jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandate (17 Cal. 2d 280, 305-306) . The Court explained that, for the purposes of prohibition, jurisdiction has a broader meaning than merely whether the court has jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter. A court acts in excess of jurisdiction when, although it has jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties, it has no jurisdiction to act except in a particular manner, to give certain kinds of relief, or to act without the occurrence of certain procedural prerequisites (17 Cal. 2d 280, 288) . The Court gave a number of examples of excess of jurisdiction and then stated that any acts that exceed the defined power of a court in any instance, whether that power is defined by constitutional provision, express statutory declaration, or rules developed by the courts and followed under the doctrine of stare decisis, are in excess of jurisdiction and can be restrained by prohibition (17 Cal. 2d 280, 291) . The Court then concluded that the court of appeal acted in excess of jurisdiction when it interfered with administrative proceedings before they were final (17 Cal. 2d 280, 305-306) .

The facts and procedure in Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817 , are discussed in § 150.161[3]. In holding that the trial court acted in excess of jurisdiction, the Supreme Court followed the holding in Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 , above, and held that the concept of jurisdiction is wider than jurisdiction over the subject matter and parties. Lack of jurisdiction for prohibition purposes means want or excess of the power of the court to act (61 Cal. 2d 846, 852) .

[b] Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

In Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. v. Superior Court (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 455, 199 Cal. Rptr. 1 , an action for damages, the trial court denied a motion for abatement made under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(c) and 597, and the moving party sought review by petition for a writ of prohibition. In granting the writ, the court of appeal noted that it was undisputed that at the time the action for damages was filed another action for declaratory relief was pending and that both actions involved the same parties and arose out of the same transaction (151 Cal. App. 3d 455, 458) . The court held that when two superior courts have concurrent jurisdiction over the subject matter and the parties, the first court to assume jurisdiction has exclusive and continuing jurisdiction until such time as all necessarily related matters have been resolved, and that a writ of prohibition is an appropriate remedy when the second court refuses to recognize this exclusive jurisdiction (151 Cal. App. 3d 455, 460) .

[c] Administrative Agency Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

In Musicians Union, Local No. 6 v. Superior Court of Alameda County (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 695, 73 Cal. Rptr. 201, 447 P.2d 313 , a baseball team owner and stadium operator brought an action to enjoin a musicians' union from picketing the stadium during games. The trial court issued a preliminary injunction and the union petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain all further proceedings, including enforcement of the injunction. The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that under federal law the controversy was subject to the jurisdiction of the National Labor Relations Board and that real parties in interest failed to demonstrate that the board in its discretion would have failed to assert jurisdiction (69 Cal. 2d 695, 700) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Another Court Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

In Kresteller v. Superior Court (1967) 248 Cal. App. 2d 545, 56 Cal. Rptr. 771 , a wife obtained a divorce decree granting her custody of the children, but no child support. She later filed an independent action in another county for child support. Her former husband sought a writ of prohibition to prevent the second action from proceeding, and the court of appeal granted the writ. The court held that prohibition was proper, despite the fact that the husband was liable for child support, because the trial court that had granted the divorce decree had first assumed jurisdiction and retained exclusive jurisdiction over the issue of child support (248 Cal. App. 2d 545, 549) .

In Loftis v. Superior Court (1962) 205 Cal. App. 2d 148, 23 Cal. Rptr. 125 , a wife instituted two divorce actions against her husband in two different superior courts. The court of appeal issued a writ of prohibition against the second proceeding on the basis that the court to first acquire jurisdiction had exclusive jurisdiction (205 Cal. App. 2d 148, 148-149) .

In Cade v. Superior Court (1961) 191 Cal. App. 2d 554, 12 Cal. Rptr. 847 , the dispute involved the validity of notes and deeds of trust. Petitioners' action was filed in Los Angeles and summons was served. Thereafter, real parties in interest filed another action in another county. Petitioners sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the second court from proceeding. The court of appeal granted the writ. It held that the first court had assumed exclusive jurisdiction over the subject matter when the summons was served and that the threatened invasion of that jurisdiction presented a case for prohibition (191 Cal. App. 2d 554, 559) .

[b] Administrative Agency Has Exclusive Jurisdiction

In State Comp. Ins. Fund v. Superior Court (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 416, 46 Cal. Rptr. 891 , an employee who was injured on the job received a compensation award in proceedings before the Industrial Accident Commission. He then brought an action against the employer's compensation insurer, alleging that the insurer negligently failed to ascertain the safety of the employer's premises. The trial court overruled the employer's demurrer and the employer sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from proceeding with the action. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the Industrial Accident Commission had exclusive jurisdiction (237 Cal. App. 2d 416, 418) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.72

§ 150.72 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Action Contrary to Prescribed Procedure Is in Excess of Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM _____ [specify act to be restrained, e.g., PROCEEDING IN A CONTEMPT PROSECUTION AGAINST PETITIONER] BECAUSE THE COURT IS PROCEEDING IN A MANNER CONTRARY TO PRESCRIBED PROCEDURE.

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. [See § 150.71, Paragraph A.]

B. Action Contrary to Prescribed Procedure. When a lower court proceeds contrary to prescribed procedures, it is acting in excess of jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition to restrain it from doing so is proper (Safer v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 230, 242, 124 Cal. Rptr. 174, 540 P.2d 14).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that the court is acting contrary to a procedure prescribed by statute.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the

points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Contrary to Prescribed Procedure

In Safer v. Superior Court (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 230, 124 Cal. Rptr. 174, 540 P.2d 14 , petitioners were being criminally prosecuted for disobeying a court order in a picket situation. When they arrived for trial, they were served with orders to show cause in civil contempt proceedings by the district attorney, who dismissed the criminal charges. The evident purpose was to convert a misdemeanor trial, with a right to a jury trial, into a civil contempt proceeding with no such right. Petitioners demurred to the contempt proceedings, and the trial court overruled the demurrer. Petitioner then sought a writ of prohibition restraining the court from proceeding with the contempt proceedings.

The Supreme Court held that the district attorney did not have authority to prosecute the contempt in that manner (15 Cal. 3d 230, 235-242) . It stated that it is well settled that when a statute authorizes prescribed procedures and the court acts contrary to authority thus conferred, it has exceeded its jurisdiction. The Court relied on its earlier decision of Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 (discussed in § 150.71[3][a]), which, while delineating the general rules for prohibition, had stated, in dicta, the rule about restraining action contrary to prescribed procedures (15 Cal. 3d 230, 242) . The Court held that the lower court was in excess of jurisdiction when it allowed the district attorney to prosecute the case contrary to the statutorily authorized procedure and in excess of his authority (15 Cal. 3d 230, 242) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.73

§ 150.73 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Refuses to Follow Stare Decisis

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM _____ [specify act to be restrained, e.g., PROCEEDING WITH A NEW TRIAL] BECAUSE THAT ACT IS PROHIBITED BY _____ [cite case] AND, IN THREATENING TO SO ACT, THE COURT IS REFUSING TO FOLLOW STARE DECISIS.

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. [See § 150.71, Paragraph A.]

B. Refusal to Follow Stare Decisis. When a lower court refuses to apply a clear, binding precedent laid down by a higher court, it is acting in excess of jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition will issue to restrain it from acting contrary to stare decisis (see Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 450, 455-456, 20 Cal. Rptr. 321, 369 P.2d 937 (writ of review)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that the court is acting contrary to case law when there is a clear and binding precedent applicable to the facts.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Refusal to Follow Stare Decisis

In Auto Equity Sales, Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 450, 20 Cal. Rptr. 321, 369 P.2d 937 (writ of review), the appellate department of a superior court vacated a municipal court order for new trial. Only one appellate decision applied to the facts and the superior court recognized the decision but refused to follow it on the ground that it had been incorrectly decided. Moving parties then petitioned for a writ of review.

The Supreme Court held that the superior court had exceeded its jurisdiction. The writ of review, like the writ of prohibition, the Court recognized, can only be used to attack acts committed in excess of jurisdiction (57 Cal. 2d 450, 454) . The superior court refused to apply the one appellate decision that controlled the disposition of the case. Citing Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal (1941) 17 Cal. 2d 280, 109 P.2d 942 (discussed in § 150.71[3][a]), the Court held that failure to adhere to the principal of stare decisis amounted to a jurisdictional error (57 Cal. 2d 450, 455) . The Court noted, however, that there was only one controlling case to be applied. If there were conflicting cases from a higher court, it would not necessarily be an excess of jurisdiction for the inferior court to choose between them (57 Cal. 2d 450, 456) .

Note that, although the decision in Auto Equity involved a writ of review, such a writ is proper only when a court has exceeded its jurisdiction and there is no appeal [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1068]. The standard set out in Abelleira for a determination of whether there has been an excess of jurisdiction entitling petitioner to a writ of prohibition was also the standard used in Auto Equity to determine whether a writ of review should issue.

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.74

§ 150.74 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Enforced Statute or Ordinance Unconstitutional on Its Face

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM _____ [specify act to be restrained, e.g., PROCEEDING IN THE CRIMINAL PROSECUTION AGAINST PETITIONER] BECAUSE THE COURT IS THREATENING TO ENFORCE _____ [specify law, e.g., AN ORDINANCE] THAT IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL ON ITS FACE.

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. [See § 150.71, Paragraph A.]

B. Enforcement of Unconstitutional Statute or Ordinance. When a lower court is threatening to enforce a statute or ordinance that is unconstitutional on its face, it is acting in excess of its jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain the court from enforcement (Dulaney v. Municipal Court (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 77, 81-82, 112 Cal. Rptr. 777, 520 P.2d 1 ; see Rescue Army v. Municipal Court (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 460, 462-465, 171 P.2d 8).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that the court is threatening to enforce a facially unconstitutional statute or ordinance.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Enforcement of Unconstitutional Statute or Ordinance

In Dulaney v. Municipal Court (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 77, 112 Cal. Rptr. 777, 520 P.2d 1 , petitioners were prosecuted in the municipal court for unlawfully affixing signs to utility poles without the requisite permit. They sought a writ of prohibition in the superior court on the ground that the statute was unconstitutional. The writ was denied in the superior court and petitioner filed a new petition in the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the ordinance was unconstitutional (11 Cal. 3d 77, 89) . The Court stated that when a statute or ordinance sought to be enforced is alleged to be unconstitutional on its face, a petition for writ of prohibition is an appropriate method of seeking relief (11 Cal. 3d 77, 81-82) .

In Rescue Army v. Municipal Court (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 460, 171 P.2d 8 , petitioners sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from enforcing an ordinance regulating the solicitation of contributions. The Supreme Court upheld that ordinance and denied writ relief but stated that a writ of prohibition was a proper method of testing the constitutionality of a statute because the invalidity of the legislation goes to the jurisdiction of the court. The concept of jurisdiction, the Court stated, is very broad in prohibition and certiorari proceedings. A writ may be granted when the court has no jurisdiction to act except in a certain manner because, for instance, it is enforcing an unconstitutional statute, even though it has jurisdiction in the fundamental sense over the subject matter and the parties. The lower court has jurisdiction to decide its own jurisdiction but, if it decides erroneously, the writ of prohibition is proper (28 Cal. 2d 460, 463-464) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Enforcement of Unconstitutional Statute or Ordinance

In Pryor v. Municipal Court (1979) 25 Cal. 3d 238, 158 Cal. Rptr. 330, 599 P.2d 636 , petitioner was being prosecuted for lewd behavior in a public place. After a mistrial, petitioner sought a writ of prohibition against a retrial on the ground that the statute was unconstitutionally vague. The Court denied the writ, holding that the statute could be given a constitutional construction (25 Cal. 3d 238, 244, 258) . The Court stated, however, that prohibition was a proper remedy because a court lacks jurisdiction to proceed to trial under a statute that is unconstitutional on its face (25 Cal. 3d 238, 245) .

In Canon v. Justice Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 446, 39 Cal. Rptr. 228, 393 P.2d 428 , petitioner was charged with violating election laws by anonymously posting a handbill attacking a candidate. He demurred on First Amendment grounds, and when the demurrer was overruled, he petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the statute was discriminatory (61 Cal. 2d 446, 461) . The Court held that prohibition is a proper remedy when petitioner is contending that a statute is unconstitutional on its face (61 Cal. 2d 446, 450) .

The facts and procedural background in Harden v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 630, 284 P.2d 9 , are discussed in § 150.161[3][e]. In holding that a city did not have the power to condemn land outside its borders, the Supreme Court stated that the constitutionality of a statute may be tested by a writ of prohibition when the lower court has decided that it has jurisdiction and is proceeding to act (44 Cal. 2d 630, 634) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.75

§ 150.75 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Improperly Granted or Denied Jury Trial

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM TRYING THE ACTION _____ [BEFORE or WITHOUT] A JURY BECAUSE THE MOTION FOR JURY TRIAL WAS IMPROPERLY _____ [GRANTED or DENIED].

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. [See § 150.71, Paragraph A.]

[EITHER]

B. Improper Grant of Jury Trial. If a trial court grants a jury trial in a proceeding when there is no right to a jury trial, it is acting in excess of jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition is proper (see Southern Pac. Transportation Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 433, 435, 129 Cal. Rptr. 912).

[OR]

B. Improper Denial of Jury Trial. If a trial court improperly denies a party a jury trial, it is acting in excess of jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition is proper (see Turlock Golf etc. Club v. Superior Court (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 693, 695, 50 Cal. Rptr. 70).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that the court is either trying a case before a jury when a motion for jury trial was improperly granted or trying the case without a jury when the motion was improperly denied.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Improper Grant of Jury Trial

In Southern Pac. Transportation Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 433, 129 Cal. Rptr. 912 , plaintiff brought an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 871.1 et seq., the good-faith improver statutes. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a jury trial and defendant petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the Legislature had not intended that there be a right to jury trial in an action brought under the statutes (58 Cal. App. 3d 433, 438) . The court stated that prohibition was the proper method of determining the issue of the right to jury trial (58 Cal. App. 3d 433, 435) . Although the court did not expressly hold that the trial court threatened to exceed its jurisdiction by granting a jury trial, this holding is implicit in its granting of the writ of prohibition because the writ lies only when the respondent threatens to act without or in excess of its jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102].

[b] Improper Denial of Jury Trial

In Turlock Golf etc. Club v. Superior Court (1966) 240 Cal. App. 2d 693, 50 Cal. Rptr. 70 , a local court rule required posting of jury fees for all members of the jury panel, rather than just for those selected. Petitioner refused to post the added fees, and the superior court held that the right to jury trial was waived. Petitioner applied for a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from refusing to allow a jury trial. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the additional fees were not authorized (240 Cal. App. 2d 693, 701) . The court stated that prohibition is a proper remedy to test the right to a jury trial and that the remedy of appeal was not adequate (240 Cal. App. 2d 693, 695) . Although the court did not expressly hold that the trial court threatened to exceed its jurisdiction by refusing to permit a jury trial, this holding is implicit in its granting of the writ of prohibition because the writ lies only when the respondent threatens to act without or in excess of its jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Denial of Jury Trial

Le Jeune v. Superior Court (1963) 218 Cal. App. 2d 696, 32 Cal. Rptr. 390 , involved a petition for appointment of a conservator. The proposed conservatee resisted the petition and demanded a jury trial but his jury demand was denied. The court of appeal issued a writ of prohibition, stating that prohibition was a proper remedy to protect the proposed conservatee's right to a jury trial (218 Cal. App. 2d 696, 698) .

In Ford v. Superior Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 754, 1 Cal. Rptr. 559 , petitioners sued for rescission of a contract and demanded a jury trial. The trial court refused to grant a jury trial. The court of appeal issued a writ of prohibition, holding that the action was at law, that petitioners had a right to a jury trial, and that prohibition was proper to test the right to a jury trial (176 Cal. App. 2d 754, 759) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.76

§ 150.76 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Enjoined Enactment or Enforcement of Valid Statute or Ordinance

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM ENJOINING THE _____ [ENACTMENT or ENFORCEMENT] OF _____ [cite to statute or ordinance] BECAUSE THE _____ [STATUTE or ORDINANCE] IS LEGALLY VALID.

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. [See § 150.71, Paragraph A.]

B. Injunction Against Valid Statute. When a lower court has enjoined the enforcement or enactment of a valid statute or ordinance, it is acting in excess of its jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition is therefore proper (City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 423, 430, 333 P.2d 745).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that the court is enjoining the enactment or enforcement of a valid statute or ordinance.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the

points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Injunction Against Valid Statute or Ordinance

In City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 423, 333 P.2d 745 , petitioners brought an action to challenge an ordinance, adopted by referendum, which provided for the sale of land by the city to the Los Angeles Dodgers baseball team to build Dodger Stadium. The superior court enjoined the city from proceeding under the ordinance. The city sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from enforcing the injunction.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the ordinance was valid (51 Cal. 2d 423, 438) . The Court also ruled that a lower court is acting in excess of jurisdiction when it enjoins the enactment or enforcement of a valid statute or ordinance, because the lower court lacks the power to grant such an injunction (51 Cal. 2d 423, 429-430) . The lack of jurisdiction is based on Civ. Code § 3423(g), which provides that an injunction is not proper to prevent a legislative act by a municipal corporation, and by Code Civ. Proc. § 526(b)(4), which provides that an injunction cannot be granted to prevent the execution of a public statute by officers of the law for the public benefit (51 Cal. 2d 423, 430) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.77

§ 150.77 Supporting Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Court Issued Unconstitutional Preliminary Injunction

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD ISSUE TO RESTRAIN RESPONDENT FROM ENFORCING THE PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION BECAUSE THE INJUNCTION IS UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

A. Excess of Jurisdiction. [See § 150.71, Paragraph A.]

B. Unconstitutional Injunction. If a trial court issues a preliminary injunction that is unconstitutional, it is acting in excess of jurisdiction and a writ of prohibition is proper (see United Farm Workers Organizing Committee v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 556, 563 n.7, 94 Cal. Rptr. 263, 483 P.2d 1215).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper to restrain a lower court from acting without or in excess of jurisdiction, on the ground that the court is enforcing an unconstitutional preliminary injunction.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unconstitutional Injunction

In United Farm Workers Organizing Committee v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 556, 94 Cal. Rptr. 263, 483 P.2d 1215 , the superior court issued a preliminary injunction enjoining petitioners from, among other things, publicizing the fact of their labor dispute with the real party in interest and urging the public to boycott its products. Petitioners sought a writ of prohibition against the enforcement of the preliminary injunction. The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the injunction was overly broad (4 Cal. 3d 556, 571-572) . The Court stated that prohibition is an appropriate remedy to enjoin the enforcement of a preliminary injunction alleged to be unconstitutional (4 Cal. 3d 556, 563 n.7). Although the Court did not expressly hold that the trial court threatened to exceed its jurisdiction, this holding is implicit in its granting of the writ of prohibition because the writ lies only when the respondent threatens to act without or in excess of its jurisdiction [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1102].

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.78

§ 150.78 Opposing Petition for Writ of Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Skeletal Form

[1] FORM

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
[or]

IN THE COURT OF APPEAL OF THE
STATE OF CALIFORNIA,
_____ APPELLATE DISTRICT
[DIVISION _____]

[or]

SUPERIOR COURT OF CALIFORNIA,
COUNTY OF _____

_____ [name],	)	[CIVIL] NO. _____
Petitioner,	)	MEMORANDUM IN _____
vs.	)	[PRELIMINARY OPPOSITION TO or SUPPORT
THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE STATE OF	)	OF DEMURRER TO or SUPPORT OF ANSWER
CALIFORNIA, COUNTY OF	)	TO] PETITION FOR WRIT OF PROHIBITION
_____,	)	[Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 1089, 1105(; Cal.
Respondent,	)	Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487)]
_____ [name],	)	Date: _____
Real Party in Interest.	)	Time: _____

) Location: _____
[Judge: _____]
Date Action Filed: _____
[Trial Date: _____]

_____

THE PETITION FOR A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [specify grounds for opposing petition, e.g., IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO ESTABLISH THAT PETITIONER IS ENTITLED TO ISSUANCE OF THE WRIT].

[EITHER]

A. Preliminary Opposition to Petition for Writ of Prohibition. Within 10 days after service and filing of a petition for writ of prohibition, the real party in interest, the respondent, or both, may serve and file points and authorities in opposition to the petition (Code Civ. Proc. § 1107; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(a) (reviewing courts)).

[OR]

A. Return by Demurrer, Verified Answer, or Both. A respondent, real party in interest, or both, may make a return to an alternative writ of mandate by demurrer, verified answer, or both (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1089, 1105; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(b) (reviewing courts)).

[Optional] B. Objection by Demurrer. A party may object by demurrer to a petition for mandate on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to show a right to relief, when that ground for objection appears on the face of the petition [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.10(e), 430.30(a), 1109).

[Optional] C. Objection by Answer. A party may object by answer to a petition for mandate when any ground for objection does not appear on the face of the petition (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430.30(a), 1109).

[CONTINUE]

[Add specific points and authorities in opposition to granting the petition for writ of prohibition, when appropriate, showing that under the particular facts of the case, petitioner has not sufficiently established one or more elements that are necessary to justify a grant of relief by writ of prohibition, e.g., that respondent court's act is not a threatened judicial act in excess of jurisdiction (see §§ 150.79-150.82), that the jurisdictional issue depends on a question of fact (see § 150.83), that petitioner has no beneficial interest in the proceedings (see § 150.144), or that petitioner's remedy at law is adequate (see §§ 150.185, 150.186).]

[Add specific points and authorities in opposition to granting the petition for writ of prohibition, when appropriate, showing one or more affirmative defenses to the granting of a writ of prohibition (see §§ 150.200-150.204).]
Dated: _____

Respectfully submitted,
_____ [firm name, if any]
By: _____ [signature]
_____ [typed name]
Attorney for _____ [party's status and name]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form is a skeletal memorandum in opposition to a petition for writ of prohibition. It sets out general points relating to the procedural context in which opposition to the petition may be raised [see § 150.78[2][b]]. It is designed to be combined with additional, more specific points and authorities showing why the court should exercise its discretion to deny issuance of a peremptory writ under the particular circumstances of the case [see § 150.78[2][c]].

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose a petition supported by the points and authorities set out in § 150.70.

[b] Procedure for Opposing Petition

This form sets out two procedural contexts in which opposition to a petition for writ of prohibition may be raised. First, within ten days after the petition for writ of prohibition is filed, the respondent or any real party in interest, separately or jointly, may serve and file a preliminary opposition (first alternative Paragraph A) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1107; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(a) (reviewing courts)].

Second, a respondent or real party in interest may file points and authorities in support of his or her return to an alternative writ of prohibition by demurrer, verified answer, or both (second alternative Paragraph A, Paragraphs B, C) [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089 (general provisions applicable to return to writ of mandate), 1105 (providing that Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088-1097 also apply in proceedings for writ of prohibition); Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(b) (reviewing courts)]. In superior courts, this return must be made on the date for return of the alternative writ or the date on which the petition is noticed for hearing. If the return is by demurrer alone, the court may allow an answer to be filed within such time as it may designate [see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089]. In reviewing courts, this return must be served and filed within 30 days after the court issues the alternative writ or order to show cause or notifies the parties that it is considering issuing a peremptory writ in the first instance. If the return is by demurrer alone, and the demurrer is not sustained, the peremptory writ may issue without leave to answer [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.487(a)(4); see Code Civ. Proc. § 1089 (provisions do not affect rules governing original writ proceedings in reviewing courts)].

For discussion regarding opposing points and authorities generally, see § 150.08.

[c] Opposition to Petition

The bracketed instructions that follow the general procedural points of law in the form indicate that additional paragraphs, taken from subsequent forms in this chapter, should be added to show that relief by writ of prohibition is inappropriate under the particular circumstances of the case. Relief is inappropriate, for example, if the petitioner has not established one or more elements requisite for relief, such as his or her beneficial interest or the lack of an adequate remedy at law. Relief is also inappropriate if respondent or real party in interest can establish an affirmative defense. Counsel should refer to the forms indicated in the bracketed instructions and choose the paragraphs that best fit the factual situation involved.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For further discussion relating to opposition to a petition for writ of prohibition, and forms of return by demurrer or answer, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.79

§ 150.79 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Act Is Not Judicial

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE ACT PETITIONER SEEKS TO RESTRAIN IS NOT A JUDICIAL ACT.

A. Judicial Action Requirement. When the petitioner is seeking to restrain action that is nonjudicial, a writ of prohibition is not proper (Aronoff v. Franchise Tax Board (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 177, 181-182, 32 Cal. Rptr. 1, 383 P.2d 409 ; Water Users Assn. v. Board of Directors (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 131, 135, 109 Cal. Rptr. 592).

[Optional] B. Ministerial Act Not Subject to Prohibition. A writ of prohibition is only proper to restrain judicial action; a ministerial act by a court cannot be restrained by a writ of prohibition (Santini v. Justice's Court (1933) 218 Cal. 671, 671-672, 24 P.2d 761 ; Donner Finance Co. v. Municipal Court (1938) 28 Cal. App. 2d 112, 114, 81 P.2d 1054).

[Optional] C. Act of Arbitrator. Prohibition does not lie to restrain the acts of an arbitrator (International Film Investors v. Arbitration Tribunal of Directors Guild (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 699, 704, 199 Cal. Rptr. 690).

[Optional] D. Act of Administrative Agency. Prohibition does not lie to restrain the acts of state or local administrative agencies, unless they have an explicit constitutional grant of judicial power (Aronoff v. Franchise Tax Board (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 177, 181-182, 32 Cal. Rptr. 1, 383 P.2d 409 ; see Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 44, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 (local agencies)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that respondent's action does not constitute a judicial act.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Action Requirement

In Aronoff v. Franchise Tax Board (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 177, 32 Cal. Rptr. 1, 383 P.2d 409 , petitioner sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the Franchise Tax Board from undertaking any further proceedings to collect their taxes. The Supreme Court denied the writ, holding that state agencies, such as the Franchise Tax Board, do not possess any judicial power and that a writ of prohibition was not proper because it challenges only judicial powers (60 Cal. 2d 177, 181-182) .

In Water Users Assn. v. Board of Directors (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 131, 109 Cal. Rptr. 592 , landowners within an irrigation district sought a writ to restrain the levy and collection of assessments to pay bonds. As one basis for denying the writ, the court of appeal held that the imposition of bond service assessments was not a judicial function (34 Cal. App. 3d 131, 135) .

[b] Ministerial Act Not Subject to Prohibition

In Santini v. Justice's Court (1933) 218 Cal. 671, 24 P.2d 761 , a writ of prohibition was sought to restrain a court from enforcing an allegedly improper judgment. The Supreme Court denied the writ, holding that prohibition was not proper to restrain a ministerial act such as the issuance of a writ of execution (218 Cal. 671, 671-672) .

In Donner Finance Co. v. Municipal Court (1938) 28 Cal. App. 2d 112, 81 P.2d 1054 , petitioners' basic contention was that a judgment against them in municipal court was not proper because they had dismissed the complaint. Petitioners sought a writ of prohibition from the superior court restraining the municipal court from issuing a writ of execution. The superior court granted the petition. The court of appeal reversed, holding that the issuance of the writ of prohibition was improper because the municipal court's action in issuing a writ of execution was ministerial, not judicial (28 Cal. App. 2d 112, 113-114) .

[c] Act of Arbitrator

In International Film Investors v. Arbitration Tribunal of Directors Guild (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 699, 199 Cal. Rptr. 690 , petitioner entered into a takeover agreement with a film production company and, when certain conditions occurred, took over production of a film. Subsequently, an employee of the production company filed an arbitration claim based on his employment contract. The production company requested that petitioner be added as a defendant in the arbitration on the ground that petitioner had exercised its takeover rights. Petitioner sought a writ of prohibition on the ground that it was not a party to the employment agreement. The trial court denied the petition and petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal dismissed the appeal, holding that the order denying the writ of prohibition was tantamount to an order compelling arbitration, and so was not an appealable order (152 Cal. App. 3d 699, 702, 706) . In addition, the court held, prohibition was not petitioner's proper remedy. The writ can be used to restrain the enforcement of an order to arbitrate but does not lie to restrain the acts of an arbitrator because there was no judicial act to be restrained (152 Cal. App. 3d 699, 704) .

[d] Act of Administrative Agency

Aronoff v. Franchise Tax Board (1963) 60 Cal. 2d 177, 32 Cal. Rptr. 1, 383 P.2d 409 , is discussed under § 150.79[3][a], [4][a].

In Strumsky v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (1974) 11 Cal. 3d 28, 112 Cal. Rptr. 805, 520 P.2d 29 , the widow of a county employee sought a writ of administrative mandate to review a county retirement board's decision to deny her service-connected death benefits. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment denying the writ, holding that a court must independently review the evidence in a writ proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 when the administrative agency's decision substantially affects a fundamental vested right (11 Cal. 3d 28, 44) . In its analysis, the Court recognized the established principle that judicial review is more limited in the case of agencies that have been granted judicial power by the Constitution: even though a vested right is involved, the agency's determination is entitled to the deference due a judicial decision (11 Cal. 3d 28, 34-36) . Case law also provided for more limited review in the case of local agencies, including both purely local agencies and state agencies of limited territorial jurisdiction (11 Cal. 3d 28, 35) . The Court concluded, however, that there was no basis for the local agency exception because judicial powers cannot be exercised by local agencies (11 Cal. 3d 28, 44) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judicial Action Requirement

In Walsh v. Railroad Comm'n (1940) 16 Cal. 2d 691, 107 P.2d 611 , petitioners sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the city attorney from prosecuting them. The city attorney demurred, and the Supreme Court sustained the demurrer. It held that the petition did not allege facts sufficient to warrant the issuance of the writ because neither the city attorney's threat to prosecute, nor prosecution, was a judicial function and thus such action was not properly subject to a writ of prohibition (16 Cal. 2d 691, 694) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.80

§ 150.80 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Mere Error Is Not Excess of Jurisdiction

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE ACT PETITIONER SEEKS TO RESTRAIN IS MERE ERROR, NOT AN ACT IN EXCESS OF JURISDICTION.

Mere Error Not Sufficient. When the challenged action of the lower court is at the most mere error, a writ of prohibition is not proper because the lower court is not acting in excess of jurisdiction (County of Santa Clara v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 545, 549-551, 94 Cal. Rptr. 158, 483 P.2d 774 ; Childress v. Municipal Court (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 611, 613, 87 Cal. Rptr. 383).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that respondent's action is mere error and is not without or in excess of jurisdiction.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mere Error Not Sufficient

In County of Santa Clara v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 545, 94 Cal. Rptr. 158, 483 P.2d 774 , a tort action against a county, the superior court granted plaintiff's petition for relief from filing a late claim under the Tort Claims Act, Gov. Code § 810 et seq. The county petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The Supreme Court held that a writ of prohibition was not proper because the lower court's ruling, if wrong, was an error of law and did not involve its jurisdiction. Compliance with or relief from the tort claim requirements, the Court held, does not go to the jurisdiction of the court to act and therefore is not a basis for prohibition (4 Cal. 3d 545, 549-550) . The Court then held that the superior court did not abuse its discretion in granting the petition. It ruled on the issue because it had been fully briefed and refusal to rule would have resulted in unnecessary delay (4 Cal. 3d 545, 551-552) .

In Childress v. Municipal Court (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 611, 87 Cal. Rptr. 383 , petitioner was being prosecuted for distribution of obscene films. The municipal court viewed the films and found them obscene. Petitioner petitioned the superior court for a writ of prohibition against the prosecution, which the court granted. The state appealed. The court of appeal held that prohibition was not proper because the municipal court had jurisdiction over the offense and its holding, if wrong, amounted only to an error of law and was not in excess of jurisdiction (8 Cal. App. 3d 611, 613) . The court noted that the petitioner was not claiming that the statute was unconstitutional and also noted that petitioner's rights of free expression had been protected (8 Cal. App. 3d 611, 614-615) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Mere Error Not Sufficient

In Howard Greer etc. Originals v. Superior Ct. (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 816, 197 P.2d 768 , defendant's default was entered and he moved to set it aside. The motion was denied and judgment was entered against him. Defendant then moved to set aside the judgment. Plaintiff petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of prohibition restraining the superior court from hearing the motion, on the ground that the decision on the motion to set aside the default was res judicata. The court of appeal denied the writ on the basis that a defense of res judicata did not go to the lower court's jurisdiction and that an error of law not involving a court's jurisdiction is not reviewable in prohibition proceedings (87 Cal. App. 2d 816, 817) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.81

§ 150.81 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Judicial Act Has Been Completed

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE ACT PETITIONER SEEKS TO RESTRAIN HAS ALREADY BEEN COMPLETED.

A. Judicial Action Completed. Prohibition is not proper to restrain judicial acts that are completed or final (Melancon v. Superior Court (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 698, 704-705, 268 P.2d 1050 ; Schoenfeldt v. Municipal Court (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 748, 749, 9 Cal. Rptr. 912).

[Optional] B. Prohibition Not Proper After Final Judgment. A writ of prohibition does not lie after a final judgment has been entered when there are no further judicial acts to be performed (Big Jim Mines, Inc. v. Superior Court (1937) 9 Cal. 2d 503, 504, 71 P.2d 67 ; Crittenden v. Municipal Court (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 811, 812, 31 Cal. Rptr. 280).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that respondent's action is not threatened but has already been completed.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the

points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judicial Action Completed

In Melancon v. Superior Court (1954) 42 Cal. 2d 698, 268 P.2d 1050 , defendants in a shareholder's derivative suit made a motion to require plaintiff to furnish security. Plaintiff sought a writ of prohibition to prevent the trial court from considering the security issue, but the hearing was held and security ordered before the Supreme Court's alternative writ was served. The Court denied the peremptory writ, holding that a writ of prohibition ordinarily issues only to prevent future judicial acts rather than to undo acts already done and that appeal was an appropriate remedy (42 Cal. 2d 698, 704-705, 708) .

In Schoenfeldt v. Municipal Court (1960) 187 Cal. App. 2d 748, 9 Cal. Rptr. 912 , petitioner was convicted of a misdemeanor and did not appeal. Instead, he sought a writ of prohibition in superior court against enforcement of the judgment on the basis that the statute involved was unconstitutional. The superior court denied the petition and petitioner appealed. The court of appeal granted respondent's motion to dismiss the appeal. It held that prohibition is a preventive, not a corrective, writ and cannot be used after judgment to take the place of appeal even if the basis of the petition is jurisdictional (187 Cal. App. 2d 748, 750) .

[b] Prohibition Not Proper After Final Judgment

In Big Jim Mines, Inc. v. Superior Court (1937) 9 Cal. 2d 503, 71 P.2d 67 , certain shareholders obtained a judgment restraining a corporate assessment. The corporation petitioned for a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from making any further orders in the case. The Supreme Court denied the writ, holding that prohibition cannot be used to review proceedings already completed and, therefore, will not lie after judgment is entered when there are no further judicial acts to be performed (9 Cal. 2d 503, 504) .

In Crittenden v. Municipal Court (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 811, 31 Cal. Rptr. 280 , petitioner sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the municipal court from trying him on three traffic tickets. The superior court denied the writ, the trial was held, and petitioner was convicted. Petitioner appealed the denial of the writ to the court of appeal. It held that prohibition is a preventive, not a corrective remedy, and that it was not proper after a final judgment when there are no further judicial acts to perform, even if the judgment was erroneous (216 Cal. App. 2d 811, 812) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.82

§ 150.82 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Act Is Not Threatened

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE COURT HAS NOT THREATENED TO PERFORM THE ACT PETITIONER SEEKS TO RESTRAIN.

Action Not Threatened. When the petitioner contends that certain action is beyond the jurisdiction of the lower court, but the lower court has not threatened to take such action, a writ of prohibition is not proper (Chodos v. Superior Court (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 703, 714, 38 Cal. Rptr. 301).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that respondent has not threatened to perform the act petitioner seeks to restrain.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Not Threatened

In Chodos v. Superior Court (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 703, 38 Cal. Rptr. 301 , the trial court granted a motion for new trial on the condition that defendants pay costs to plaintiffs. The costs were paid after the 60-day period for determination of the motion for new trial had expired. Plaintiff moved for a writ of execution on the basis that the granting of the motion for a new trial was no longer in effect because of the late deposit. The court denied the writ of execution. Plaintiffs sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from resetting the matter for a new trial.

The court of appeal denied the writ. One of the grounds for denial was that the record did not show that the trial court intended to set the matter for a new trial and that, therefore, the trial court had not threatened to perform any act in excess of its jurisdiction (226 Cal. App. 2d 703, 714) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.83

§ 150.83 Opposing Contention That Writ of Prohibition Is Necessary to Arrest Action by Lower Court That Is Without or in Excess of Jurisdiction--Jurisdictional Determination Depends on Unresolved Question of Fact

[1] FORM

A WRIT OF PROHIBITION SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE JURISDICTIONAL ISSUE DEPENDS ON THE RESOLUTION OF A FACTUAL ISSUE THAT HAS NOT YET BEEN DECIDED.

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

Factual Issue to Be Decided. When the jurisdiction of the trial court depends on a factual issue that it has not yet decided, a writ of prohibition is not proper (Agricultural Prorate Com. v. Superior Ct. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 550, 586, 55 P.2d 495 ; see City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 423, 430, 333 P.2d 745).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that the jurisdictional issue depends on the resolution of a factual issue that has not yet been decided.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to prohibition proceedings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Factual Issue to Be Decided

In Agricultural Prorate Com. v. Superior Ct. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 550, 55 P.2d 495 , the basic issue was the constitutionality of an agricultural regulatory act. The petition for writ of prohibition sought to restrain the trial court from enjoining the implementation of the act. As one basis for denial of the writ, the Supreme Court held that the contention that a district was not properly organized presented factual issues for the trial court and that, if the trial court found that the district was not properly organized, it could properly issue the injunction. Therefore, the writ was not issued because of the unresolved issues of fact (5 Cal. 2d 550, 586-587) .

The facts and procedure in City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court (1959) 51 Cal. 2d 423, 333 P.2d 745 , are discussed in § 150.76[3][a]. In dicta, the Supreme Court noted that prohibition is not proper when the propriety of the trial court's action depends on questions of fact. However, it found that neither party had pointed to any evidence that would present such a factual question (51 Cal. 2d 423, 430) . The Court then held that the writ would issue on substantive grounds (51 Cal. 2d 423, 438) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Factual Issue to Be Decided

In Brock v. Superior Court (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 682, 81 P.2d 931 , the superior court restrained the state agricultural board from enforcing the Milk Control Act. The director of the agency sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from enforcing the temporary restraining order. The Supreme Court followed its earlier holding in Agricultural Prorate Com. v. Superior Ct. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 550, 55 P.2d 495 , discussed under § 150.83[3][a], and held that the propriety of the trial court's action depended on factual issues that the trial court must decide. The Court then denied the writ (11 Cal. 2d 682, 687-688) .

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
B. PROHIBITION

15-150 California Points & Authorities §§ 150.84-150.119

[Reserved]

§§ 150.84[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
C. POINTS COMMON TO MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
i. General Points

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.120

§ 150.120 Supporting Contention That Appropriate Writ May Be Issued When Petition Seeks Both Mandate and Prohibition

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30), a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70), or a petition that seeks both writs in the alternative.]

THIS COURT SHOULD ISSUE THE APPROPRIATE EXTRAORDINARY WRIT JUSTIFIED BY THE ALLEGATIONS OF THE PETITION.

Court Should Issue Writ That Is Justified by Allegations in Petition. It is proper to pray for writ relief in the alternative; neither a mislabeled petition nor a defective prayer will bar the relief that is justified by proper allegations and proof (Peck's Liquors, Inc. v. Superior Court (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 772, 775, 34 Cal. Rptr. 735).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the court in which a petition for a prerogative writ has been filed should issue whatever writ is justified by the allegations of the petition, regardless of the fact that the petition prays for another type of writ, or that it prays for both mandate and prohibition in the alternative [see also § 150.07].

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70). Alternatively, counsel may wish to include the foregoing points and authorities in a memorandum that combines both § 150.30 and § 150.70 and supports a petition for either mandate or prohibition, as the court deems appropriate.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate and prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court Should Issue Writ That Is Justified by Allegations in Petition

In Peck's Liquors, Inc. v. Superior Court (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 772, 34 Cal. Rptr. 735 , plaintiff obtained from the superior court an order to compel after defendant refused to answer certain questions in a deposition. Defendant petitioned the court of appeal for "certiorari, prohibition, mandamus, or other appropriate writ" to restrain the superior court from enforcing the order to compel.

The court of appeal issued a writ of prohibition, holding that the privilege against self-incrimination applied and the witnesses could not be compelled to answer (221 Cal. App. 2d 772, 785) . In its discussion of the form of the writ petition, the court recognized that, when a pleader is in doubt about the type of writ he or she should seek, it is proper to state the prayer in the alternative form. As with pleading generally, the court explained, neither mislabeling nor a defective prayer will bar relief that is justified by proper allegations and proof (221 Cal. App. 2d 772, 775) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Court Should Issue Writ That Is Justified by Allegations in Petition

The facts and procedure of Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , are discussed in § 150.33[4][a]. In that case, the Supreme Court treated a petition for prohibition as a petition for mandate and granted a writ of mandate (3 Cal. 3d 841, 850) .

The facts and procedure of Coelho v. State Personnel Bd. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 968, 257 Cal. Rptr. 557 , are discussed in § 150.43[3][b]. In that case, the court of appeal treated a petition for administrative mandamus as a petition for ordinary mandate and granted a writ of mandate (209 Cal. App. 3d 968, 971) .

LexisNexis®

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
C. POINTS COMMON TO MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
i. General Points

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.121

§ 150.121 Supporting Contention That Issuance of Peremptory Writ in First Instance Is Justified

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

THIS COURT SHOULD ISSUE A PEREMPTORY WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] IN THE FIRST INSTANCE BECAUSE RESPONDENT AND REAL PARTY IN INTEREST HAVE BEEN GIVEN ADEQUATE NOTICE AND AN OPPORTUNITY TO BE HEARD, THE PETITION AND OPPOSING PAPERS ADEQUATELY ADDRESS THE ISSUES RAISED IN THE PROCEEDING, NO FACTUAL DISPUTE EXISTS, AND ADDITIONAL BRIEFING IS UNNECESSARY.

A. Issuance of Peremptory Writ in First Instance. A peremptory writ may be issued in the first instance when respondent and real party in interest have been served with notice 10 days beforehand and had an opportunity to file a response on the merits, the petition and opposing papers, if any, adequately address the issue raised by the petition, no factual dispute exists, and the additional briefing that would follow issuance of an alternative writ is unnecessary to disposition of the petition (Palma v. U.S. Industrial Fasteners, Inc. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 171, 176, 177-180, 203 Cal. Rptr. 626, 681 P.2d 893 ; see also Lewis v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1232, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 970 P.2d 872).

[Optional] B. Trial Court Provided Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard in Response to Suggestive Palma Notice. If a trial court decides to enter a new ruling in response to a suggestive Palma notice, the court must inform the parties of its intent to do so and provide them with an opportunity to be heard (Brown, Winfield & Canzoneri, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1233, 1238-1250, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145, 223 P.3d 15).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the court in which a petition for a writ of mandate or prohibition has been filed may issue a peremptory writ in the first instance.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Peremptory Writ in First Instance Defined

A writ of mandate or prohibition may either be alternative or peremptory. An alternative writ commands the respondent to show cause why the respondent has not done an act or refrained from acting as requested in the writ petition [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1087, 1089, 1105]. The peremptory writ, if ultimately issued, actually commands the respondent to act or refrain from acting [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1087, 1104]. In lieu of issuing an alternative writ, the court may issue a peremptory writ in the first instance, thus dispensing with the need to await the filing of a return, oral argument, and the preparation of an appellate opinion [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088, 1105].

When a petitioner intends to seek a peremptory writ in the first instance, he or she must provide at least 10 days notice to the respondent and real party in interest. With the notice, a copy of the petition must also be served [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1088, 1105; Palma v. U.S. Industrial Fasteners, Inc. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 171, 178-179, 203 Cal. Rptr. 626, 681 P.2d 893] . It is not clear whether a petitioner satisfies the notice requirement by simply asking in the prayer of the petition for a peremptory writ in the first instance [see City of Santa Cruz v. Superior Court (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 1669, 1675, 236 Cal. Rptr. 155 (notice apparently adequate when petition prayed for writ in first instance and real party in interest was served with petition and filed opposition)].

Courts of appeal may issue a "suggestive," "coercive," or "speaking" Palma notice. This is a notice that the court of appeal intends to issue a peremptory writ in the first instance granting the relief requested by the petitioner and suggesting that the trial court enter a new order. If a trial court decides to enter a new ruling in response to a suggestive Palma notice, the court must inform the parties of its intent to do so and provide them with an opportunity to be heard [Brown, Winfield & Canzoneri, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1233, 1238-1250, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145, 223 P.3d 15] . For further discussion of notice requirements, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate and prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Issuance of Peremptory Writ in First Instance

In Palma v. U.S. Industrial Fasteners, Inc. (1984) 36 Cal. 3d 171, 203 Cal. Rptr. 626, 681 P.2d 893 , defendants in a negligence action moved for summary judgment. The motion was denied and defendants petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate to review the order. The prayer of the petition asked for issuance of an alternative writ and, after return, issuance of a peremptory writ commanding the superior court to set aside its order and enter a new order granting the motion. The court of appeal did not issue an alternative writ. Instead, 12 days after the petition was filed, the court issued a peremptory writ commanding the superior court to grant the summary judgment motion. The court complied with the writ and plaintiff appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and directed the trial court to deny the summary judgment motions, holding that triable issues of fact existed (36 Cal. 3d 171, 186) . In its discussion of the propriety of issuing the peremptory writ, the Court recognized that Code Civ. Proc. § 1088 authorizes a court of appeal to issue a peremptory writ in the first instance when the opposing parties have been served with "due notice" 10 days beforehand. Case law authorizes issuance of the writ in the first instance when it appears that the petition and opposing papers on file adequately address the issue raised by the petition, that no factual dispute exists, and that the additional briefing that would follow issuance of an alternative writ is unnecessary to disposition of the petition (36 Cal. 3d 171, 178-179) . The Court went on to hold, however, that "due notice" requires, at a minimum, that a peremptory writ of mandate or prohibition not issue in the first instance unless the respondent and real party in interest have received notice, from the petitioner or from the court, that the issuance of such a writ in the first instance is being sought or considered (36 Cal. 3d 171, 176, 180) . In addition, an appellate court, absent exceptional circumstances, should not issue a peremptory writ in the first instance unless the respondent and real party in interest have either filed a response on the merits or been given the opportunity to do so (36 Cal. 3d 171, 176, 180) .

In Lewis v. Superior Court (1999) 19 Cal. 4th 1232, 82 Cal. Rptr. 2d 85, 970 P.2d 872 , the trial court denied defendant's motion for summary judgment in a personal injury action. Defendant petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate. The court of appeal filed a document inviting the real party in interest to file a response and stating that "the court may issue a peremptory writ." Without issuing an alternative writ or order to show cause or hearing oral argument, the court of appeal issued an order directing issuance of a peremptory writ of mandate in the first instance instructing the trial court to set aside its denial of defendant's motion and to enter a new order granting the motion.

The Supreme Court affirmed. It determined that the court of appeal was not required to afford the parties an opportunity to orally argue the case before the court issued a peremptory writ in the first instance (19 Cal. 4th 1232, 1243-1253) . The Court also held that the court of appeal's three-page order was sufficient under Cal. Const., art. VI, § 14, which requires that decisions determining causes must be in writing with reasons stated. The Court reasoned that, although the order was more brief than most formal appellate opinions, it sufficiently described the general nature of the legal issue and responded to the parties' contentions (19 Cal. 4th 1232, 1261-1264) .

[b] Trial Court Provided Notice and Opportunity to Be Heard in Response to Suggestive Palma Notice

In Brown, Winfield & Canzoneri, Inc. v. Superior Court (2010) 47 Cal. 4th 1233, 1238-1250, 104 Cal. Rptr. 3d 145, 223 P.3d 15 , the plaintiff brought a declaratory relief action against the defendant. The trial court stayed the action pending the resolution of an underlying case. Thereafter, the court lifted the stay before the underlying case was resolved. The defendant filed a petition for writ of mandate with the court of appeal requesting that the stay be reinstated. The court of appeal issued a "suggestive" Palma notice, stating that the court of appeal intended to issue a peremptory writ in the first instance granting the relief requested by the defendant and suggesting that the trial court enter a new order. The next day, the trial court issued an order that acknowledged the court of appeal's suggestive Palma notice, vacating its order lifting the stay, and reinstating the stay pending resolution of the underlying case. The plaintiff appealed, arguing that it was entitled to an opportunity to be heard before the trial court reinstated the stay.

The California Supreme Court first noted that a suggestive Palma notice was not an order, but was more like a tentative ruling [47 Cal. 4th 1233, 1245-1246] . The Court held that because a suggestive Palma notice is nonbinding, a trial court that acts in response to the notice acts on its own motion [47 Cal. 4th 1233, 1250]. Therefore, the Court held, before vacating, modifying, or otherwise reconsidering an interim ruling in response to a suggestive Palma notice, the trial court must inform the parties that it is considering taking such action and provide them with an opportunity to be heard [47 Cal. 4th 1233, 1250].

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
C. POINTS COMMON TO MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
i. General Points

15-150 California Points & Authorities §§ 150.122-150.139

[Reserved]

§§ 150.122[Reserved]

California Points & Authorities

Copyright 2010, Matthew Bender & Company, Inc., a member of the LexisNexis Group.

Volume 15 Chapters 150-159 MANDATE & PROHIBITION---to---MOTIONS TO RECONSIDER
CHAPTER 150 MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
PART II. FORMS
C. POINTS COMMON TO MANDATE AND PROHIBITION
ii. Beneficial Interest Requirement Action Relating Beneficial Interest Requirement

15-150 California Points & Authorities § 150.140

§ 150.140 Supporting Contention That Petitioner Is Beneficially Interested--General Form

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] SHOULD ISSUE BECAUSE _____ [PETITIONER HAS A SPECIAL INTEREST OR PARTICULAR RIGHT TO BE PRESERVED OR PROTECTED, INDEPENDENT FROM THAT HELD IN COMMON WITH THE PUBLIC AT LARGE or THE QUESTION RAISED BY THE PETITION IS ONE OF PUBLIC RIGHT AND THE OBJECT OF THE WRIT IS TO PROCURE THE ENFORCEMENT OF A PUBLIC DUTY].

[EITHER]

A. Beneficial Interest Requirement. A writ of mandate may issue on the verified petition of the party beneficially interested (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086).

[OR]

A. Beneficial Interest Requirement. A writ of prohibition may issue on the verified petition of the person beneficially interested (Code Civ. Proc. § 1103).

[CONTINUE]

[Optional] B. Petitioner Need Not Be Party to Lower Court Proceeding. Any party who is beneficially interested may seek writ relief and need not necessarily be a party to the action before the tribunal against whom the relief is sought (Sonoma County Nuclear Free Zone, '86 v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 173 n.3, 234 Cal. Rptr. 357 (mandate); Klose v. Superior Court (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 913, 916, 217 P.2d 97 (prohibition)).

[EITHER]

