C. Special Interest or Right. A petitioner has a sufficient beneficial interest in issuance of a writ if he or she possesses some special interest to be subserved, or some particular right to be preserved or protected, independent from that held in common with the public at large (California Association for Health Services at Home v. State Department of Health Services (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 696, 704-707, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 102 ; Union Bank of California, N.A. v. Superior Court (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 378, 399, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 894 ; Taschner v. City Council (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 48, 55-56, 107 Cal. Rptr. 214 , overruled on other grounds, Associated Home Builders etc., Inc. v. City of Livermore (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 582, 596 n.14, 135 Cal. Rptr. 41, 557 P.2d 473).

[OR]

C. Enforcement of Public Duty. A petitioner is not required to show any legal or special interest in the result when the question raised in the petition is one of public right and the object of the writ is to procure the enforcement of a public duty; it is sufficient that petitioner is interested as a citizen in having the laws executed and the respondent's duty enforced (Environmental Protection and Information Center v. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 459, 479-480, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28, 187 P.3d 888 ; Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 432, 439, 261 Cal. Rtpr. 574, 777 P.2d 610 ; Marshall v. Pasadena Unified School District (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 344]).

[Add additional, more specific points and authorities, as appropriate, relating to petitioner's particular beneficial interest (see, e.g., §§ 150.141 -150.143).]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the general contention that the petitioner for a writ of mandate or prohibition is entitled to the relief to the extent that he or she has a beneficial interest in the proceeding [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1086, 1103].

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with more specific points and authorities relating to the petitioner's particular beneficial interest in the proceeding (see §§ 150.141 -150.143). The combined points and authorities relating to the beneficial interest requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.144 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate or prohibition that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Need Not Be Party to Lower Court Proceeding

In Sonoma County Nuclear Free Zone, '86 v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 234 Cal. Rptr. 357 , the proponents of a ballot initiative sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to set aside its writ directing the county clerk to accept for filing ballot arguments against the initiative that had been submitted after the filing deadline, set by the county clerk under Elec. Code § 3784, had expired. The proponents had not been named in the superior court writ proceeding as real parties in interest and had no notice of the hearing.

The court of appeal, after stating that the occurrence of the election prior to its resolution of the petition did not render the petition moot, reversed (189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 171) . The court said that any party with a sufficient beneficial interest in the subject of the proceedings may seek writ relief, and need not necessarily be a party to the action before the tribunal against whom the relief is sought. Whether the proponents had a beneficial interest sufficient to be petitioners in the proceeding dovetailed with the question of whether they had an interest directly affected by the proceedings sufficient to render them real parties in interest in the superior court writ proceeding (189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 173 n.3). The court concluded that the proponents were real parties in interest and should have been named as such in the superior court writ proceeding and that they had a sufficient beneficial interest to appear as petitioners in the proceeding before it because they had a special interest to be served or some particular right to be preserved or protected over and above the interest held in common with the public at large (189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 174-175) . The court further concluded that the trial court's issuance of the peremptory writ was beyond the pale of its authority because the proponents had no notice of the hearing on the petition (189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 175-176) .

In Klose v. Superior Court (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 913, 217 P.2d 97 , a petition for a writ of mandate was filed in superior court to require a city council to vacate petitioner's seat on the council and call a special election. Petitioner sought prohibition against the court considering the mandate petition. The court of appeal held that petitioner was beneficially interested in the mandate proceeding, although not a party to it, because of his status as a taxpayer and as the person sought to be ousted from the city council (96 Cal. App. 2d 913, 916) . The court of appeal then issued a writ restraining the superior court from proceeding with the mandate proceedings (96 Cal. App. 2d 913, 916-926) .

[b] Special Interest or Right

In California Association for Health Services at Home v. State Department of Health Services (2007) 148 Cal. App. 4th 696, 56 Cal. Rptr. 3d 102 , plaintiffs were a home health care provider, an association of home health care providers, and a disability rights advocacy group. They sought a writ of mandate against the State Department of Health Services, claiming it failed to comply with federal Medicaid and state Medi-Cal laws by refusing since 2000 to raise or review Medi-Cal reimbursement rates paid to the providers of home health care services. The trial court issued a writ of mandate requiring the Department to perform a review of reimbursement rates for 2005. The trial court denied plaintiffs' request for a writ to compel the Department to raise reimbursement rates for prior years. Plaintiffs appealed the trial court's denial of a writ to compel a review and an increase of rates for past years, and the Department cross-appealed the grant of the writ to compel a review of rates for 2005.

The court of appeal first looked at the plaintiffs' standing to seek a writ of mandate. The Department argued that the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief because there was no private right of action for the Department's failure to comply with the state plan or with federal law. The court of appeal rejected this argument, holding that the fact that the state plan did not create an explicit private right of action for damages did not mean that it could not be the basis for a writ of mandate (148 Cal. App. 4th 696, 705) . The Department also argued the state plan was a contract between California and the federal government, but did not have the force of law, and that a writ of mandate could compel only the performance of an act specially enjoined by law. The court rejected this argument, holding that whether the state plan was a contract or a law, the Department was required by regulation to follow it (148 Cal. App. 4th 696, 706) . Finally, the court held that the plaintiffs, recipients and providers of Medi-Cal services, had a special interest over and above the public at large in ensuring that payment rates are sufficient to enlist enough providers so that care and services are available under the plan. Likewise, the providers had a direct monetary interest in ensuring that they were paid for their services (148 Cal. App. 4th 696, 707) .

In Union Bank of California, N.A. v. Superior Court (2005) 130 Cal. App. 4th 378, 388, 29 Cal. Rptr. 3d 894 , investors alleged they were defrauded in Ponzi scheme disguised as a mortgage lending business. The investors sued the bank that opened and operated the bank account allegedly looted by the business for fraud, conspiracy, aiding and abetting, and negligent misrepresentation. The investors sought production of the bank's suspicious activity reports (SARs). These are reports that national banks are required to file with the federal government whenever they detect a known or suspected violation of federal law or a suspicious transaction related to money laundering. Under federal law, SAR's and their supporting documents are confidential and not subject to disclosure. Only the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), the agency responsible for regulating national banks, has sole discretion whether to grant a request to review SAR's or their supporting documents.

In this case, the bank had an internal form called Form 244 to identify, register, and describe what might constitute suspicious activity. The investors sought production of any Form 244 related to the scheme, and the bank claimed they were privileged. According to the bank, the sole purpose of Form 244 was to aid the bank in complying with its obligations under federal law to report suspicious activity and file SAR's. The trial court ordered production of the Form 244's. The bank filed a petition for a writ of mandate.

Among other arguments, the investors argued that the bank lacked standing in the writ proceeding because it had no beneficial interest in the subject matter of the action. They argued that the OCC had the privilege, not the bank. The court of appeal rejected this argument. It held that although the OCC held the SAR privilege, the bank had an interest in protecting documents that were prepared with an understanding they would be maintained in confidence, particularly when the investors sought to predicate the bank's liability on those documents. Furthermore, the court held, the fact the bank was compelled by federal law to resist disclosure of documents covered by the SAR privilege gave it a sufficient beneficial interest in the subject matter of the action to enforce the privilege in a writ proceeding (130 Cal. App. 4th 378, 399) .

In Taschner v. City Council (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 48, 107 Cal. Rptr. 214 , overruled on other grounds, Associated Home Builders etc., Inc. v. City of Livermore (1976) 18 Cal. 3d 582, 135 Cal. Rptr. 41, 557 P.2d 473 , petitioner, a property owner, sought a writ of mandate to challenge the constitutionality of an ordinance that limited the height of buildings. Respondent city council filed a general demurrer that was sustained without leave to amend.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that petitioner had standing to maintain the action. A private citizen may apply for a writ of mandate when he or she is a party beneficially interested. Such an interest exists when one has some special interest to be subserved or some particular right to be preserved or protected independent of that held in common with the public at large. In the instant case, petitioner was a property owner and his right to be free from height limitations in the development of his property constituted a sufficient special interest (31 Cal. App. 3d 48, 55-56) .

[c] Enforcement of Public Duty

In Environmental Protection and Information Center v. California Department of Forestry and Fire Protection (2008) 44 Cal. 4th 459, 479-480, 80 Cal. Rptr. 3d 28, 187 P.3d 888 , the Pacific Lumber Company entered into an agreement with state and federal governments regarding litigation arising from logging on Pacific Lumber's property in Humboldt County. The agreement provided that the state and federal governments would purchase a portion of Pacific Lumber's property for conservation purposes, and that Pacific Lumber could log the rest of its property, provided that it obtained regulatory approvals from state and federal agencies. Pacific Lumber obtained the approvals. Various environmental and labor groups, including the United Steelworkers Union (the Steelworkers), challenged the regulatory approvals. Pacific Lumber argued that the Steelworkers did not have standing to sue because the Steelworkers did not have a beneficial interest in the outcome of the case. The trial court held that the regulation of logging over 200,000 acres of highly valued timberland involved a public right and a public duty. Therefore, the Steelworkers need not show that they had any legal or special interest in the result, since they were citizens interested in having the laws executed and the duty in question enforced (44 Cal. 4th 459, 479) . Pacific Lumber argued that an exception to the citizen standing rule should be applied to labor unions, as had been applied to corporations pursuant to Waste Management of Alameda County, Inc. v. County of Alameda (2000) 79 Cal. App. 4th 1223, 94 Cal. Rptr. 2d 740 .

Declining to rule on that issue, the California Supreme Court noted that the trial court found that the Steelworkers qualified as a citizen litigant under Waste Management. The Steelworkers had shown a continuing interest in and commitment to issues regarding sustainable economic development, environmental quality, and timber harvesting. The Court held that the Steelworkers had over 12,000 members in California with sufficient interest in the proper enforcement of timber harvest laws, that interested individuals would have trouble participating in the litigation, and that the Steelworkers' participation did not conflict with competing legislative policies. The Court concluded that substantial evidence supported the trial court's conclusion that the Steelworkers had standing to sue (44 Cal. 4th 459, 480-481) .

The facts and procedure of Common Cause v. Board of Supervisors (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 432, 261 Cal. Rtpr. 574, 777 P.2d 610 , are discussed in § 150.43[3][c]. In holding that a county, which was required by statute to increase minority and low-income voter registration, had no mandatory duty to use deputatization of certain voter registrars as a remedial device, the Court held that citizens of the county had standing to seek a writ of mandate compelling adoption of the deputization program. When the question is one of public right and the object of the mandate is to procure the enforcement of a public duty, the Court explained, the petitioner need not show that he or she has any legal or special interest in the result, because it is sufficient that he or she is interested as a citizen in having the laws executed and the duty in question enforced (49 Cal. 3d 432, 439) .

In Marshall v. Pasadena Unified School District (2004) 119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 344 , a school district advertised for bids for a project to modernize a school. A contractor submitted a bid for the project, which was accepted. Later, the district terminated its contract with the contractor. Purportedly acting pursuant to an emergency resolution under Pub. Cont. Code § 20113, the district awarded a contract for completing the work to another company. The original contractor assigned its claim against the district to Marshall. Marshall had been the vice president of the contractor and was now the president of PW, a general contractor.

Marshall and PW filed a writ petition against the district arguing that no emergency had existed and the district had acted unlawfully when it awarded the contract to another company. Marshall and PW sought to preclude the district from making any payments to the new company and to require the district to advertise publicly for bids to complete the project and award the contract to the lowest responsible bidder. The trial court granted the writ petition, finding that no emergency had existed and ordering the district to advertise publicly for bids to complete the work. The district appealed.

In its appeal, the district argued that Marshall and PW lacked standing to file a petition for writ of mandate in that neither Marshall's status as a taxpayer, nor PW's possibility of bidding on a contract to complete the project, were sufficient to confer standing. The court of appeal disagreed. It held that while Code Civ. Proc. § 1086 requires that a party be "beneficially interested" to maintain a writ petition (119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1250) , a citizen's action "is a long-established exception to the requirement of a personal beneficial interest" (119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252) . The court held that the exception applies if the question is one of public right and the object of the action is to enforce a public duty--in which case it is sufficient that the plaintiff be interested as a citizen in having the laws executed and the public duty enforced (119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252) . The court held that judicial recognition of citizen standing is an exception to, rather than repudiation of, the usual requirement of a beneficial interest (119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252) . The court held that Marshall and PW had standing as citizens in this case (119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252) . The petition by Marshall and PW was not aimed merely at securing an opportunity for PW to bid on the completion contract. Their petition also sought to protect the public fisc by requiring the district to publicly advertise for bids to complete the work and to award a contract for the work to the lowest responsible bidder (119 Cal. App. 4th 1241, 1252) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Petitioner Need Not Be Party to Lower Court Proceeding

In Seven Up Bottling Co. v. Superior Court (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 75, 236 P.2d 623 , petitioner was served with a subpoena and a subpoena duces tecum in a divorce action between two other persons. Petitioner moved to quash the subpoenas on the ground that the underlying affidavit was insufficient. When the trial court denied the motion, petitioner sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from enforcing the subpoenas. Because petitioner had been served with the subpoenas, the court of appeal held that petitioner was beneficially interested (107 Cal. App. 2d 75, 76-77) .

In Monterey Club v. Superior Court (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 131, 119 P.2d 349 , the district attorney sought to enjoin certain persons from operating poker parlors in Gardena. Petitioner, a nonprofit corporation that operated one such club but was not a party, petitioned for a writ of prohibition on the basis that the court did not have jurisdiction to issue the injunction. The court of appeal held that petitioner was beneficially interested because it operated one of the clubs whose operation was sought to be enjoined (48 Cal. App. 2d 131, 143) . The court then found that the injunction was in excess of jurisdiction and issued the writ (48 Cal. App. 2d 131, 143-150) .

[b] Special Interest or Right

The facts and procedure of Sonoma County Nuclear Free Zone, '86 v. Superior Court (1987) 189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 234 Cal. Rptr. 357 , are discussed under § 150.140[3][a]. The court of appeal held that proponents of a ballot initiative had a beneficial interest in mandate proceedings to review a court's order directing the county clerk to accept ballot arguments against the petitioners' initiative. The court concluded that the proponents had a sufficient beneficial interest to appear as petitioner in the proceeding before it because they had a special interest to be served or some particular right to be preserved or protected over and above the interest held in common with the public at large (189 Cal. App. 3d 167, 174-175) .

[c] Enforcement of Public Duty

In Madera Community Hospital v. County of Madera (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 136, 201 Cal. Rptr. 768 , the appellate court overruled the trial court's denial of a writ of mandate to compel defendant to adopt standards for the medical aid and care of the indigent within the county due to lack of standing. In deciding that plaintiff had standing, the court of appeal reviewed the holdings of previous cases and found that the action plaintiff sought was a matter of public right and plaintiff came within the parameters of a citizen seeking to procure the enforcement of a public duty (155 Cal. App. 3d 136, 141-146) .

In Santa Monica Mun. Employees Assn. v. City of Santa Monica (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1538, 237 Cal. Rptr. 185 , the court of appeal upheld a trial court ruling granting a petition for writ of mandate to compel a city to comply with provisions of the city charter by filling all vacancies by promotion on competitive examinations unless there was approval by the personnel board of exceptional circumstances. The city argued that because neither the individual members or the association had shown any actual harm, the petition for writ of mandate should have been denied. The appellate court held that while the harm to the members was potential rather than definite, when the question is one of public right and the object of the mandamus is to procure the enforcement of a public duty, it is sufficient that the petitioner is a citizen interested in having the laws executed and the duty enforced (191 Cal. App. 3d 1538, 1548) .

Citizens Assn. for Sensible Development of Bishop Area v. County of Inyo (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 151, 217 Cal. Rptr. 893 , involved an action for writ of mandate by a citizens' group against a county board regarding the environmental impact of proposed construction, in which the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of relief to petitioner. Among other determinations, the court held that if a public right is involved, and the object of the writ of mandate is to procure enforcement of a public duty, the plaintiff is not required to have any legal or special interest in the results; it is sufficient that as a citizen, petitioner is interested in having the public duty enforced (172 Cal. App. 3d 151, 158) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Status of Taxpayer in Matter Related to Taxation

In Knoff v. City etc. of San Francisco (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 184, 81 Cal. Rptr. 683 , four San Francisco taxpayers brought an action in the form of a taxpayers' suit against the city and county, its board of supervisors, and the county assessor to obtain a writ of mandate to require official action to address the situation brought about by a grand jury investigation and the subsequent indictment of the assessor. The trial court granted the writ of mandate substantially as prayed, and on appeal, the court of appeal affirmed. One of the arguments on appeal was whether petitioners had standing to seek mandamus in a taxpayers' suit. The trial court found that petitioners filed the action on their own behalf and on behalf of all other citizen-resident taxpayers of San Francisco to aid in the collection of taxes. The court of appeal held that this finding provided a proper basis for petitioners' standing to sue in mandamus and to do so in the form of a taxpayers' suit. Petitioners' status as San Francisco taxpayers made them beneficially interested parties who could maintain their action because its object was to compel the performance of public duties that the law specially enjoins (1 Cal. App. 3d 184, 198) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Environmental Harm

In Bozung v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1975) 13 Cal. 3d 263, 118 Cal. Rptr. 249, 529 P.2d 1017 , a number of county residents and taxpayers, together with a citizens' coalition, sought a writ of mandate and declaratory relief on the ground that the state Environmental Quality Act (Pub. Res. Code § 21000 et seq.) required a Local Agency Formation Commission to prepare and certify an environmental impact report before approving a city's annexation of property intended for future development. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrers without leave to amend and plaintiffs appealed to the court of appeal, which reversed. Petitioners sought review from the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court adopted the opinion of the court of appeal as its own opinion (13 Cal. 3d 263, 267) . One of the issues on appeal was whether the plaintiffs had the beneficial interest required to obtain a writ of mandate. The court of appeal found that they did, whether or not they lived in the annexing city or the area to be annexed. For some plaintiffs, including the citizens' coalition, an allegation that they would be harmed by the environmental effects of the challenged annexation was sufficient to withstand demurrer. Furthermore, the court held, plaintiffs had standing to procure the enforcement of a public duty (13 Cal. 3d 263, 272) .

PETITIONER IS BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED IN THE SUBJECT MATTER OF THIS PROCEEDING BECAUSE PETITIONER IS AN ORGANIZATION REPRESENTING INDIVIDUALS WHO ARE BENEFICIALLY INTERESTED.

Representation by Organization With Beneficially Interested Members. A petitioner has sufficient beneficial interest in issuance of a writ when the petitioner is an organization that represents members who have a beneficial interest in the action to which the writ pertains (Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 122-128, 109 Cal. Rptr. 724 (mandate)).

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner has a beneficial interest in the proceeding for writ of mandate or prohibition because petitioner is an organization representing members who have a beneficial interest in the proceedings.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the petitioner's beneficial interest in the proceeding (see § 150.140), and, when appropriate, with additional, more specific points and authorities relating to his or her particular beneficial interest (see §§ 150.141, 150.142). The combined points and authorities relating to the beneficial interest requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Representations by Organization With Beneficially Interested Members

In Residents of Beverly Glen, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (1973) 34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 109 Cal. Rptr. 724 , plaintiff, a nonprofit corporation composed of families living in a specified area, brought a declaratory relief and mandate action against the city of Los Angeles to set aside a conditional use permit that the city granted to a developer and to have a section of the city code declared unconstitutional. The trial court entered a summary judgment in favor of the defendants on the ground that plaintiff lacked standing to sue.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that plaintiff's allegations that it was a corporation whose members lived in the affected area and would suffer injury if the challenged project was allowed to proceed were sufficient to establish plaintiff's standing (34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 121-122) . The court noted that in recent years, there had been a marked accommodation of formerly strict procedural requirements of standing to sue when matters relating to social and economic realities of the present-day organization of society were concerned (34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 122) . One result of this accommodation is the principle that an organization, created for the purpose of representing its members who themselves have a beneficial interest in the subject matter, has standing to sue (34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 124) . After noting the rule that when the question is one of a public right and the object of mandamus is enforcement of a public duty, a petitioner need not show a legal or special interest in the result since the interest of a citizen in having the law executed and the duty in question enforced is sufficient, the court held that plaintiff had standing to seek redress for the injuries allegedly suffered by its members. It concluded that the trial court should turn its examination to the factual question of whether plaintiff does and can in fact adequately represent those it seeks to represent (34 Cal. App. 3d 117, 127-129) .

[a] Representation by Organization With Beneficially Interested Members

In Driving Sch. Ass'n of Cal. v. San Mateo Union High Sch. Dist. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 14 Cal. Rptr. 2d 908 , the association petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the school district to stop charging fees for high school students to take a 24-hour driver training course in the adult school operated by the district. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition without leave to amend, on the ground that the association lacked standing. The court of appeal reversed, concluding that the association had standing under the exception for an organization with beneficially interested members. Whether any of the members, which were private, for-profit driving schools, would have had standing was open to question; however, the court applied the so-called public interest exception. The issue of whether the school district had authority to charge the fees was an issue affecting the public interest and concerning the performance of a public duty. Any citizen is beneficially interested in such an issue and so has standing to petition for an extraordinary writ to bring the issue before a court. Moreover, the association was evidently the only person with sufficient interest and resources to bring that issue before a court, since none of the students would have been likely to test the district's fee policy in court (11 Cal. App. 4th 1513, 1517-1519) .

In International Union of United Auto. etc. Workers v. Department of Human Resources Dev. (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 924, 130 Cal. Rptr. 368 , a group of employees and the union to which they belonged petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent Department of Human Resources Development to review decisions of the State Unemployment Insurance Appeals Board, which had denied the employees' claims for unemployment insurance benefits, and questioned the constitutionality of enforcement of the Unemployment Insurance Code. The trial court denied the petition, and the court of appeal affirmed. One of the issues on appeal was whether petitioner union had standing to seek a writ of mandate. Respondents relied on Parker v. Bowron (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 344, 254 P.2d 6 (discussed in § 150.144[3][a]), which held that an unincorporated association did not have a beneficial interest in the issuance of a writ of mandate affecting its employees when, if the writ issued, only a small proportion of the members would benefit, and if the writ were denied, the association would not suffer any detriment (58 Cal. App. 3d 924, 934) . The court of appeal remarked that Parker was both distinguishable and repudiated by subsequent cases. The current law is that a labor union is entitled to represent its members in an action that is inseparably founded upon its members' employment. That the union had standing would not change the result, however, because the union had failed to state a cause of action (58 Cal. App. 3d 924, 935) .

A WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE PETITION FAILS TO SHOW THAT ANY BENEFIT COULD ACCRUE TO PETITIONER IF THE WRIT WERE ISSUED OR THAT PETITIONER WOULD SUFFER ANY DETRIMENT IF THE WRIT WERE DENIED.

A. Beneficial Interest Requirement. [See § 150.140, Paragraphs A.]

B. No Beneficial Interest. A writ should not issue when there is no indication that any benefit could accrue to petitioner if the writ were issued or that petitioner would suffer any detriment if it were denied (*Parker v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate or prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that the petitioner is not beneficially interested in the proceeding.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used to oppose the contention supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 150.140-150.143.

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Beneficial Interest

In Parker v. Bowron (1953) 40 Cal. 2d 344, 254 P.2d 6 , a labor council and one of its officers, acting on behalf of its affiliated unions and their members, sought a writ of mandate to compel city officials to fix city salaries at an amount at least equal to the prevailing scale for similar employment in private industry. The trial court denied the writ, and petitioners appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that neither the officer nor the council had standing to sue (40 Cal. 2d 344, 357) . It explained that the officer had alleged no facts to show that he had any right or interest in the action since he did not plead that he was an employee of the city or even that he was a resident or taxpayer of the city. There is no indication that any benefit could accrue to him if the writ were issued or that he would suffer any detriment if it were denied (40 Cal. 2d 344, 351-352) . The Court also reasoned that the council had alleged no facts that would show any right or interest of the unions in the action, which would show that any benefit, except possibly an incidental one of satisfying a very small proportion of their members, would accrue if the writ were granted, or which would show that any detriment would be suffered if it were denied (40 Cal. 2d 344, 354) .

Counsel should note that the Parker decision followed, in part, from the then-existing rule that an unincorporated association may not sue or be sued as an entity but that such action must be taken by or against the individual members [see Fuller v. San Bernardino Valley (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 52, 59, 51 Cal. Rptr. 120] . Therefore, Parker has been criticized in subsequent cases [see International Union of United Auto. etc. Workers v. Department of Human Resources Dev. (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 924, 935, 130 Cal. Rptr. 368 , discussed in § 150.143[4][a]].

In Regency Outdoor Advertising, Inc. v. City of West Hollywood (2007) 153 Cal. App. 4th 825, 829-830, 63 Cal. Rptr. 3d 287 , the plaintiff billboard company filed a petition for writ of mandate requiring the defendant city to invalidate the city's zoning amendment because the city did not review the amendment's environmental effects pursuant to the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). The trial court held that the plaintiff was seeking a writ of mandate in order to pursue its commercial interests against competitors. The court therefore dismissed the petition and entered judgment for the defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that standing to petition for a writ of mandate ordinarily requires the petitioner to have a beneficial interest in the writ's issuance [153 Cal. App. 4th 825, 829] . This means that the petitioner have some special interest to be served or some particular right to be preserved or protected over and above the interest held in common with the public at large [153 Cal. App. 4th 825, 829] . The court concluded that the plaintiff's commercial and competitive interests were not within the zone of interests CEQA was intended to preserve or protect and could not serve as a beneficial interest for purposes of the standing requirement [153 Cal. App. 4th 825, 829-830] .

[a] No Beneficial Interest

In Savient Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Department of Health (2007) 146 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1465, 53 Cal. Rptr. 3d 689 , a pharmaceutical company manufactured a drug used to treat HIV-related illnesses. The Department, through its contractor, delisted the drug from the formulary for some purposes because cheaper drugs were available. The pharmaceutical company filed a petition for writ of mandate to invalidate the delisting and to nullify the contract between the Department and its contractor on the ground that the Department improperly delegated management to the contractor. The trial court denied the petition.

The court of appeal upheld the denial. The court held that the pharmaceutical company lacked standing to assert its claim of improper delegation to the contractor because the contractor did not make the delisting decision. The Department delisted the drug. Nothing the contractor did as a result of the contract damaged the manufacturer. Because the contract did not specially aggrieve the manufacturer, the court held, it lacked standing to attack the contract. Thus, the pharmaceutical company was not beneficially interested within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 1086 in the contractor's authority and did not have standing to petition for writ of mandate [146 Cal. App. 4th 1457, 1465] .

State Water Res. Control Bd. Cases (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 674, 39 Cal. Rptr. 3d 189 , involved coordinated water rights proceedings in which various State Water Resources Control Board decisions were challenged. The court of appeal held that a party is not aggrieved by an error that injures only nonappealing coparties. The court held that the guiding principle is one often encountered in daily life: "no harm, no foul" (136 Cal. App. 4th 674). The same reasoning applies with equal force to a party claiming to be aggrieved by a water rights decision by the State Water Resources Control Board. Thus, the question was whether the rights or interests of certain parties suffered an immediate, pecuniary, and substantial injury because of the Board's decision to include the encroachment lands within the authorized place of use in the Bureau's permits subject to a mitigation requirement. The party could not identify any such injury, other than uncertainty about the future. The court held that this uncertainty was merely speculation, and was not an identifiable injury (136 Cal. App. 4th 674).

In Sacramento County Fire Protection Dist. v. Sacramento County Assessment Appeals Bd. II (1999) 75 Cal. App. 4th 327, 89 Cal. Rptr. 2d 215 , the superior court dismissed a petition for writ of mandate filed by a fire district in which the fire district sought to challenge the valuation of certain property by the county assessor. The court concluded the fire district did not have standing.

The court of appeal affirmed. It found the fire district was not beneficially interested because the district has no special interest to be served or particular right to be preserved or protected over and above the interest held in common by the public, even though the district would lose some of its tax funding because of the decrease in property valuation (75 Cal. App. 4th 327, 332-333) . The court also held that the public interest exception to the beneficial interest requirement did not apply because the policy underlying the public interest exception is outweighed by a competing consideration--namely, the risk of chaos in allowing all public entities that rely on taxation for funding to challenge property valuations (75 Cal. App. 4th 327, 334) . Because the fire district is not an agency charged with enforcing the taxation statutes, it has no standing to challenge the assessor's decision concerning the valuation of property (75 Cal. App. 4th 327, 335-336) .

In Municipal Court v. Superior Court (Gonzalez) (1993) 5 Cal. 4th 1126, 22 Cal. Rptr. 2d 504, 857 P.2d 325 , the Supreme Court affirmed the court of appeal's denial of a mandate petition by a municipal court against a superior court. The superior court had granted a habeas corpus writ for real party in interest following a probable cause hearing by a commissioner assigned by the municipal court. The Court stated that it is the parties in the underlying proceeding, not the courts whose rulings are challenged, that have a beneficial interest in the case's outcome. The role of the respondent court is that of a neutral party. This is true even when the subject matter of the mandamus proceeding is a ruling that significantly affects the operations of the petitioning court (5 Cal. 4th 1126, 1129) . The Court rejected the municipal court's request that the reviewing court adopt a "common-sense" approach in assessing its beneficial interest in obtaining an appellate ruling on the propriety of its use of court commissioners. There is no public duty to use court commissioners to make probable cause determinations, and no public right would be enforced if the municipal court prevailed at the mandamus proceeding. The Court declined to address the merits of the petition. In general, California courts have no power in mandamus or otherwise to render advisory opinions or give declaratory relief (5 Cal. 4th 1126, 1132) .

In Carsten v. Psychology Examining Com. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 793, 166 Cal. Rptr. 844, 614 P.2d 276 , a member of a state psychology examining board filed a petition for a writ of mandate to challenge the legality of actions taken by the board. Petitioner sought to compel the board to comply with Bus. & Prof. Code § 2942, which permitted licensing of applicants who achieved a passing grade of 75 percent on their licensing examinations. The board had instead adopted the national mean for its passing score, thereby allowing the licensing of applicants with scores as low as 67.5 percent. The trial court denied the petition and dismissed the case.

The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that petitioner lacked standing because she was not beneficially interested in the proceeding under Code Civ. Proc. § 1086, which generally requires that petitioner have some special interest to be served or some particular right to be preserved or protected, over and above the interest held in common with the public at large (27 Cal. 3d 793, 796) . The Court reasoned that petitioner was neither seeking a license nor in danger of losing one and, therefore, was not adversely affected by the board's action (27 Cal. 3d 793, 797) . The Court also held that petitioner did not have standing as a citizen taxpayer because it was as a board member that she acquired knowledge of the events on which she based the lawsuit and the suit was brought in her capacity as a board member (27 Cal. 3d 793, 799) .

In De La Cuesta v. Superior Court (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 945, 200 Cal. Rptr. 1 , the court of appeal held that petitioners were not entitled to a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant their motion for attorney's fees Civ. Code § 1717 (action on contract), because petitioners had misconceived their proper remedy, and their motion, even if granted, could not afford them the relief they sought. Thus, petitioners lacked the beneficial interest requisite to issuance of the writ (152 Cal. App. 3d 945, 950) .

In Grant v. Board of Medical Examiners (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 43 Cal. Rptr. 270 , petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the Board of Medical Examiners to set aside its decision in a disciplinary proceeding. The trial court denied the writ. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the administrative action was actually favorable to petitioner because the board's decision had dismissed both the accusation and the proceedings against petitioner. Because a party not aggrieved is a party not beneficially interested, petitioner had no beneficial interest in the proceeding and the writ was properly denied (232 Cal. App. 2d 820, 827-829) .

In Funeral Dirs. Assn. v. Bd. of Funeral Dirs. (1944) 67 Cal. App. 2d 311, 154 P.2d 39 , an incorporated nonprofit association composed of funeral directors and embalmers sought a writ of mandate to annul an order of the State Board of Funeral Directors, which had placed a licensee on probation for one year. The trial court sustained demurrers to the petition on the ground that petitioner was not a party who was beneficially interested. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a trade association is not a party beneficially interested in a proceeding between a state board and a licensee of such a board (67 Cal. App. 2d 311, 313) .

A WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] SHOULD ISSUE BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS NO ADEQUATE REMEDY IN THE ORDINARY COURSE OF LAW.

[EITHER]

A. Inadequate Remedy Requirement. A writ of mandate must be issued in all cases when there is not a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, in the ordinary course of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 1086).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the general contention that the petitioner for a writ of mandate or prohibition is entitled to relief to the extent that he or she has no plain, speedy, or adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1086, 1103].

These points and authorities should be combined with more specific points and authorities relating to the particular circumstances that show why there is no other plain, speedy, or adequate legal remedy (see §§ 150.161-150.182). It is, in fact, crucial that the foregoing general contention be buttressed by more specific points and authorities that relate to the particular circumstances of the case, because the most significant burden on a petitioner for either a writ of mandate or a writ of prohibition is to show that he or she has no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1086, 1103; Phelan v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 363, 366, 217 P.2d 951 ; for further discussion, see § 150.06].

The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Discretionary Determination

In W.A. Rose Co. v. Municipal Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 1 Cal. Rptr. 49 , a plaintiff in a municipal court action sought from the superior court a writ of mandate ordering the municipal court clerk to enter a default, as well as a writ of prohibition restraining the municipal court from proceeding with the action. The superior court issued the writs and the defendant, as real party in interest, appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff was entitled to a default judgment and the writs were properly issued (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 73, 75) . The issuance of mandate and the issuance of prohibition, the court stated, depend on the absence of another adequate remedy (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 75) . The adequacy of other remedies is a factual question whose determination lies largely in the discretion of the trial court. Because the municipal court was proceeding with the action in spite of the fact that the court lost jurisdiction when it improperly denied plaintiff default and judgment, the superior court could have determined that any appeal remedy was not a speedy or an adequate one (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 74) .

§ 150.161 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

PETITIONER'S REMEDY AT LAW IS INADEQUATE BECAUSE THE PUBLIC INTEREST REQUIRES A PROMPT RESOLUTION OF THE SUBJECT OF THE PETITION.

A. Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution. When the issue presented by a petition for a writ of mandate or prohibition is a matter of public interest, the public welfare requires a prompt resolution of the issue and petitioner's remedy in the ordinary course of law is not adequate (Brown v. Superior Court (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 509, 515, 96 Cal. Rptr. 584, 487 P.2d 1224 (mandate); Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 854, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817 (prohibition); Johnson v. City and County of San Francisco (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 7, 19, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 8 (mandate); San Bernardino Associated Gov'ts v. Superior Court (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 (mandate)).

[Optional] B. Original Jurisdiction of Appellate Court. An appellate court will exercise its original jurisdiction in the first instance when the issues presented are of great public importance and must be resolved promptly (Wenke v. Hitchcock (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 746, 750, 100 Cal. Rptr. 290, 493 P.2d 1154 (original filing in Supreme Court); Aden v. Younger (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 662, 670, 129 Cal. Rptr. 535 (original filing in court of appeal)).

[Optional] C. Public Entity Immunity Is Matter of Public Interest. The issue of whether a public entity or employee is immune from suit is of great public importance and should be resolved promptly by writ review (County of Santa Barbara v. Superior Court (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 754, 93 Cal. Rptr. 406).

[Optional] D. Legal Existence of Public Corporation Is Matter of Public Interest. The issue of whether a public corporation legally exists and operates is of great public importance and should be resolved promptly by writ review (Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 853-854, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817).

[Optional] E. Right to Exercise Power of Eminent Domain Is Matter of Public Interest. The issue of whether a public entity has the right to exercise the power of eminent domain is of great public importance and should be resolved promptly by writ review (*Harden v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petition involves a matter of public interest that requires prompt resolution.

These points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), and, when appropriate, with additional, more specific points and authorities relating to this requirement (see §§ 150.163-150.182). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Original Filing in Appellate Court

Optional Paragraph B of this form is for use when the petition is filed in a court of appeal or in the California Supreme Court without first seeking the writ in a lower court. In such a case, if the petition could have been filed in a lower court in the first instance, petitioner must set forth the circumstances which, in his or her opinion, render it proper that the writ should issue originally from the reviewing court [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.490(b)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate and prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum set out in §§ 150.185 and 150.186 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate or prohibition that is supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution

In Brown v. Superior Court (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 509, 96 Cal. Rptr. 584, 487 P.2d 1224 , the Secretary of State brought an action to impose civil penalties for violations of an election campaign statute. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on the ground that the statute was unconstitutional and dismissed the action. The Secretary petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the superior court to vacate the dismissal and proceed with the action.

The Supreme Court held that the statute was constitutional and issued the writ (5 Cal. 3d 509, 524) . The Court found that petitioner's remedy at law, an appeal from dismissal of the action, was inadequate because the public welfare required a prompt resolution of the issue of the statute's constitutionality (5 Cal. 3d 509, 515) .

In Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817 , a taxpayer brought an action challenging the validity of a sale-leaseback method of financing a community hospital. The hospital district contended that the trial court was proceeding in excess of its jurisdiction and petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The Supreme Court held that prohibition was proper, stating that the public interest in resolution of the issue of the validity of the statute and hospital district made the remedy of appeal inadequate (61 Cal. 2d 846, 853-854) . The court noted that there was a substantial need for the hospital, and that the people had voted to form the district and build the hospital. Thus, the public interest required a prompt resolution of the issue of the validity of the district, which could not be obtained by an appeal from the final judgment (61 Cal. 2d 846, 853-854) . The court also noted that petitioners were not dilatory and that the urgency was caused by the fact that the action challenging the validity was filed on the last possible date, at which time the statutory authorization was about to expire (61 Cal. 2d 846, 854) .

In Johnson v. City and County of San Francisco (2006) 137 Cal. App. 4th 7, 40 Cal. Rptr. 3d 8 , the Small Property Owners of San Francisco, Inc. (SPOSF) filed a complaint for a writ of mandate challenging a San Francisco Administrative Code section that requires landlords who seek eviction under the state Ellis Act to pay their tenants' relocation costs. Under the Code, landlords are required to notify their tenants about their right to receive payment and the amount of payment which the landlord believes to be due. The SPOSF argued that the belief requirement in the Code is facially invalid because it is not authorized by the state Ellis Act. The City opposed the petition, arguing that writ relief was not appropriate and that the belief requirement was not preempted. The trial court denied the petition for a writ of mandate, finding that the Ellis Act did not preempt the belief requirement. The trial court found that writ relief was not appropriate because (1) disputes were unlikely to arise in the future because it is easy to comply with the belief requirement, and (2) owners may adjudicate any disputes that do arise in the course of unlawful detainer proceedings.

The court of appeals disagreed that landlords have an adequate remedy at law because they may adjudicate the validity of their termination notices in individual unlawful detainer actions (137 Cal. App. 4th 7, 19). To require each landlord to litigate the issue separately could lead to inconsistent rulings by different trial court judges (137 Cal. App. 4th 7, 19). The court held that issuing a writ of mandate prevents piecemeal litigation regarding the belief requirement (137 Cal. App. 4th 7, 19).

In San Bernardino Associated Governments v. Superior Court (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 293 , the Sierra Club filed a petition for writ of mandate, injunctive relief, and declaratory relief seeking to compel the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors (Board) to conduct an environmental review before placing a sales tax measure on the November 4, 2004, ballot. Alternatively, if the sales tax measure was passed by the voters, the Sierra Club sought a writ of mandate to prevent the measure's implementation. The Board filed a demurrer to the petition, which the trial court overruled. The Board sought a writ of mandate ordering the trial court to reverse its decision and sustain the demurrer.

The court of appeal held that it had discretion to review the overruling of the demurrer in a writ proceeding. The court held that discretionary writ review of an order overruling a demurrer is appropriate when the issue is a matter of public importance and requires immediate resolution (135 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113). Here, the issue was a matter of public importance because the sales tax was expected to raise approximately $6 billion between 2010 and 2040. Revenues from the sales tax would be used to widen and improve highways and freeways; improve freeway interchanges; improve local streets and roads; expand transit for seniors and disabled riders; and expand Metrolink commuter rail. These projects and services were of considerable benefit to the public (135 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113). The court found further that the "legislative findings and declarations" provision in the Local Transportation Authority and Improvement Act provided that local highway and transportation improvements and services are an immediate high priority and are a matter of statewide concern (135 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113). Based on these factors, the court held that writ review by the court was permissible and appropriate (135 Cal. App. 4th 1106, 1113).

[b] Original Jurisdiction of Appellate Court

In Wenke v. Hitchcock (1972) 6 Cal. 3d 746, 100 Cal. Rptr. 290, 493 P.2d 1154 , petitioner intended to be a candidate for a seat on the county board of supervisors. In anticipation of a redistricting plan that would remove his residence from the district in which he sought election, petitioner had moved his residence. When the registrar of voters refused to accept petitioner's nomination papers, petitioner sought a writ of mandate in the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction, holding that the case came within the rule that the Court will exercise jurisdiction when the issues are of great public importance and must be resolved promptly. The Court reasoned that petitioner's nomination papers had to be filed within a month after the writ proceedings were initiated. In addition, lower courts were unlikely to grant relief because of a longstanding California Supreme Court case that appeared to be unfavorable to petitioner. If the issues were to be resolved in time, the Court concluded, jurisdiction must be exercised (6 Cal. 3d 746, 750-751) .

In Aden v. Younger (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 662, 129 Cal. Rptr. 535 , mental patients and doctors sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal to prohibit enforcement of state legislation that made the requirements for obtaining patients' consent to electroshock treatments much stricter. The Supreme Court accepted jurisdiction, holding that the case came within the rule that a reviewing court will take original jurisdiction when the issues are of great public import and there is a necessity for prompt resolution of those issues. The constitutionality of a state-wide law was challenged, the Court reasoned, and the rights of mental patients were dramatically affected by delaying a dispositive decision of the legislation's constitutionality (57 Cal. App. 3d 662, 670) .

[c] Public Entity Immunity Is Matter of Public Interest

In County of Santa Barbara v. Superior Court (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 93 Cal. Rptr. 406 , plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against a city, which had released a prisoner who later killed plaintiffs' father. The city demurred based on its statutory immunities. The trial court overruled the demurrer and the city petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the city was immune (15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 755-758) . The court noted that ordinarily the overruling of a demurrer is reviewable on appeal and not by prohibition. However, relying on People v. Superior Court (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 754, 178 P.2d 1 , it held that prohibition is a proper remedy when the sole basis of the demurrer is sovereign immunity, which is a jurisdictional question, because the public importance of the question is sufficient to require that the issue be speedily determined (15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 754-755) .

[d] Legal Existence of Public Corporation Is Matter of Public Interest

The facts and procedure of Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817 , are discussed under § 150.161[3][a]. In that case, the Supreme Court held that the public interest in resolution of the issue of the validity of a statute and hospital district made the remedy of appeal inadequate (61 Cal. 2d 846, 853-854) . The court noted that there was a substantial need for the hospital, and that the people had voted to form the district and build the hospital. Thus, the public interest required a prompt resolution of the issue of the validity of the district, which could not be obtained by an appeal from the final judgment (61 Cal. 2d 846, 853-854) .

[e] Right to Exercise Power of Eminent Domain Is Matter of Public Interest

In Harden v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 630, 284 P.2d 9 , a city brought a condemnation action and the owner demurred on the basis that the city could not condemn land out of the city limits. The trial court overruled the demurrer and the owners petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the city was not authorized to condemn the land. The court found that petitioner's remedy of appeal was inadequate and not speedy because a failure of justice would occur in a matter of public importance by a wrongful exercise of jurisdiction (44 Cal. 2d 630, 634-636) .

[f] Enforcement of Law Is Matter of Public Interest

In City of Santa Monica v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 223, 41 Cal. Rptr. 824 , plaintiffs obtained a preliminary injunction restraining the city from enforcing a gambling ordinance. The city sought a writ of prohibition on the basis that the injunction was beyond the court's jurisdiction. The court of appeal upheld that ordinance and issued the writ (231 Cal. App. 2d 223, 225-227) . The court found that the remedy of appeal was inadequate and that the public interest required a prompt resolution of the issue of the validity of the ordinance because, pending the appeal, the city would be restrained from enforcing ordinances whose validity had not yet been determined (231 Cal. App. 2d 223, 225) .

[g] Certification of Class is Matter of Public Interest

In Corbett v. Superior Court (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 649, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 46 , plaintiff sought class certification to file a claim against a bank and a car dealership for violating the Unfair Competition Law (UCL), Bus. & Prof. Code § 17200 et seq., with respect to automobile financing. The superior court denied class certification on the ground that the California Supreme Court, in Kraus v. Trinity Management Services, Inc. (2000) 23 Cal. 4th 116, 138, 96 Cal. Rptr. 2d 485, 999 P.2d 718 , held that class actions and UCL claims were fundamentally incompatible when it concluded that Bus. & Prof. Code § 17203 did not authorize orders for disgorgement into a fluid recovery fund.

The court of appeal did not agree that under Kraus class actions and UCL claims are mutually exclusive. The court of appeal held that UCL claims and class actions are not mutually exclusive as a matter of law. The court based its holding on the fact that refusing to ever permit a liquid recovery in a UCL claim would thwart the purpose of the UCL because it would permit defendants to keep a portion of their illicit profits (101 Cal. App. 4th 649, 667) .

[a] Public Interest Requires Prompt Resolution

In City of Glendale v. Superior Court (1993) 18 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 23 Cal. Rptr. 2d 305 , the plaintiff lessee brought an action against the lessor municipality for breach of contract when the municipality attempted to exercise its right of eminent domain to cut short the plaintiff's lease term. The trial court bifurcated the issue of whether contract damages or eminent domain damages applied and found the plaintiff was entitled to contract damages. The municipality filed a petition for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order. The court of appeal issued the writ. It found that, even though the issue arose from a preliminary determination which could be reviewed on appeal after final judgment, the legal remedy was inadequate because it would result in reversal after an expensive trial (18 Cal. App.

4th 1768, 1776) . The court also opined the general requirement of inadequacy of the legal remedy should be relaxed because the petition raised an issue of widespread public importance (18 Cal. App. 4th 1768, 1776) .

In Los Angeles City Ethics Com. v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 150 , the superior court issued a permanent injunction barring the city ethics commission from participating or assisting in the district attorney's investigation of the city attorney's office. The commission sought review by both an appeal and a petition for an extraordinary writ. The court of appeal concluded that the issue of the commission's powers was an issue of widespread public interest that needed to be quickly determined. Therefore, the court held that review on an extraordinary writ was proper and that the commission's appeal would be considered as moot (8 Cal. App. 4th 1287, 1298 n.13, 1299) .

In County of Santa Barbara v. Superior Court (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 93 Cal. Rptr. 406 , plaintiffs brought a wrongful death action against a city, which had released a prisoner who later killed plaintiffs' father. The city demurred based on its statutory immunities. The trial court overruled the demurrer and the city petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the city was immune (15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 755-758) . The court noted that ordinarily the overruling of a demurrer is reviewable on appeal and not by prohibition. However, relying on People v. Superior Court (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 754, 178 P.2d 1 , it held that prohibition is a proper remedy when the sole basis of the demurrer is sovereign immunity, which is a jurisdictional question, because the public importance of the question is sufficient to require that the issue be speedily determined (15 Cal. App. 3d 751, 754-755) .

The facts and procedure of Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , are discussed in § 150.33[4][a]. In issuing a writ of mandate directing the trial court to sustain a demurrer to a cross-complaint, the Court noted that the trial court's ruling that a malicious prosecution action was not premature had the potential to throw open the courtroom doors to malicious prosecution actions. Therefore, the Court issued a writ of mandate under the recognized exception for cases that have such a significant legal impact that the Court feels compelled to intervene (3 Cal. 3d 841, 851) .

In California League of Senior Citizens, Inc. v. Brian (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 443, 110 Cal. Rptr. 809 , petitioner sought a writ restraining an agency from implementing certain welfare regulations, which petitioners contended conflicted with state law. The court of appeal held that the regulations were invalid and issued the writ (35 Cal. App. 3d 443, 457) . The court, relying on County of Sacramento v. Hickman (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 841, 59 Cal. Rptr. 609, 428 P.2d 593 , found that extraordinary relief in the nature of mandate is a proper remedy when the issues are of great public importance and must be resolved promptly (35 Cal. App. 3d 443, 448) .

[b] Public Entity Immunity as Matter of Public Interest

In People v. Superior Court (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 754, 178 P.2d 1 , the State of California demurred in a personal injury action on the basis of sovereign immunity. When the demurrer was overruled, the State petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The Supreme Court held that sovereign immunity was not applicable and denied the writ (29 Cal. 2d 754, 757-763) . However, the Court found that the remedy by appeal was inadequate because of the importance of the issue, which required a speedy resolution (29 Cal. 2d 754, 756) .

§ 150.162 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Question Is One of First Impression and of General Importance to Bench and Bar

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

PETITIONER'S REMEDY AT LAW IS INADEQUATE BECAUSE THE ISSUES PRESENTED ARE OF FIRST IMPRESSION AND OF GENERAL IMPORTANCE TO BENCH AND BAR.

Issues Presented of First Impression and of General Importance. An extraordinary writ is a proper remedy to review a trial court's ruling when the issues presented are of first impression and of general importance to the bench and bar, and general guidelines can be laid down for future cases (City of Garden Grove v. Superior Court (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 355, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 656 ; *Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 767-768, 21 Cal. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petition seeks review of a trial court's ruling when the issues presented are of first impression and of general importance to the bench and bar so that general guidelines can be laid down for future cases.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate remedy requirement (see § 150.160), and, when appropriate, with additional, more specific points and authorities relating to this requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.163, 150.164-150.182). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should set forth reasons why the issues presented are important to the bench and bar.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in §§ 150.185 and 150.186 may be used to oppose the petition for mandate or prohibition that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Issues Presented of First Impression and of General Importance

In City of Garden Grove v. Superior Court (2007) 157 Cal. App. 4th 355, 68 Cal. Rptr. 3d 656 , a driver was arrested for possession of marijuana during a traffic stop in Garden Grove. The Garden Grove prosecutor dismissed the possession charges when the driver presented a physician's statement authorizing the driver to use cannabis as medicine for a medical condition. However, the prosecutor opposed the driver's request to have the marijuana returned to him. The trial court held that because the marijuana was not illegally possessed the police department was required to return it to the driver. The City of Garden Grove petitioned for a writ of mandate and/or prohibition directing the trial court to vacate its order and enter a new one denying the driver's motion for return of property. The City argued that it had standing to challenge the trial court's order because it had a special interest in keeping marijuana off the streets and its police officers may be criminally liable if they returned the driver's marijuana to him.

The court of appeal held that while the City did not have standing in the traditional sense, public policy considerations dictated that it afford the City standing in order to resolve the important and widespread issue presented in the case. The court noted that the case involved important issues related to California's medical marijuana laws, and that if the City prevailed, the police could thwart the objectives of the laws by withholding marijuana they have seized from qualified patients, even when the patient is no longer subject to state criminal prosecution. The court held that whether that was a necessary consequence of federal drug policy was a question of first impression and one that is of considerable importance to those who rely on cannabis for medicinal purposes (157 Cal. App. 4th 355, 370). The court further held that standing was necessary because the case implicated constitutional concerns respecting the relationship between state and federal law. The court held that standing is also favored if an interested party may otherwise find it difficult or impossible to challenge the decision at issue, and here the City would likely not be able to obtain judicial review of the trial court's order unless it is afforded standing in this proceeding (157 Cal. App. 4th 355, 371).

In Toshiba America Electronics Components, Inc. v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 767-768, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 532 , the parties disagreed about whether the demanding party or the responding party should pay the cost (possibly as much as $1.9 million) for recovering usable information from the responding party's computer backup tapes for purposes of a Code Civ. Proc. § 2031 production demand. The trial court held that the responding party had to bear these costs.

The responding party filed a petition for a writ of mandate and requested a stay of the trial court's order. The court of appeal held that, although it rarely reviews discovery orders in petitions for an extraordinary writ, it is appropriate to do so if review is necessary to answer a question of first impression of general importance to the trial courts and the legal profession (124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 767) . The court noted that California courts have not ruled upon the question of which party should pay when it is necessary to translate electronic data compilations to obtain usable information responsive to a discovery request. The court held that the question is bound to arise with increasing frequency. Given that the cost of translating such material can be exorbitant, the question of who should bear the cost raises practical concerns as well as policy issues. The court held that these issues were sufficiently novel and important to justify review by extraordinary writ (124 Cal. App. 4th 762, 767) .

In Simon v. Superior Court (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 63, 68, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 428 , the plaintiff bank held two promissory notes executed by the defendants as security for a loan. Both notes were secured by the same real property. After the defendants defaulted on the senior note, the bank effected a nonjudicial foreclosure. The bank then sued on the amount claimed due on the junior note although the junior lien had been exhausted by the foreclosure of the senior note. The bank also sought accrued penalties, interest, and attorney's fees. In response, the defendants raised various affirmative defenses, including provisions of the antideficiency statute. The bank then filed an amended complaint, asserting four causes of action: (1) a claim of money on a written instrument, (2) a deficiency judgment, (3) fraud, and (4) negligent misrepresentation in the inducement of the loan. Defendants demurred to, and sought summary adjudication of, the first two causes of action on the grounds that they were barred by the three-month statute of limitation of Code Civ. Proc. § 580a. The trial court overruled defendants' demurrer and denied the motion for summary adjudication on the ground that the limitation period was not applicable. Defendants then sought a writ of mandate from the court of appeal.

Although the parties addressed themselves to the limitation issue, the court of appeal requested briefing and argument on the issue whether the bank could receive a deficiency judgment after exhausting the security under the senior lien. The court granted the writ holding that the bank's action for a deficiency judgment was barred by the antideficiency statute [see Code Civ. Proc. § 580d]. The court also held that review by writ of mandate was appropriate because intervention by an appellate court may be required to review questions of first impression and general importance to the bench and bar where general guidelines can be laid down for future cases. In such cases, the statutory requirement of inadequacy of appellate remedy may be relaxed in favor of immediate review of a question of statewide importance so that lower decisions in other cases will be uniform (4 Cal. App. 4th 63, 68) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

PETITIONER'S REMEDY AT LAW IS INADEQUATE BECAUSE SIMILAR LAWSUITS ARE PENDING AND NO CASE LAW EXISTS ON THE ISSUE PRESENTED BY PETITIONER.

Similar Lawsuits Pending. An extraordinary writ is a proper remedy to review a trial court's ruling when similar lawsuits are pending and when no case law on the issues argued exists for the trial courts' guidance (California Highway Patrol v. Superior Court (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 488, 496, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16 ; State of California ex rel. Dept. of Rehabilitation v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 282, 285, 187 Cal. Rptr. 1).

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petition seeks review of a trial court's ruling when similar lawsuits are pending and no case law exists on the issue or issues presented by the writ petition.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), and, when appropriate, with additional, more specific points and authorities relating to this requirement (see §§ 150.161, 150.164 -150.182). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should identify other similar lawsuits that are pending and demonstrate that no case law exists to guide the trial court on the issues that are the subject of the writ petition.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Similar Lawsuits Pending

In California Highway Patrol v. Superior Court (2006) 135 Cal. App. 4th 488, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 16 , the California Highway Patrol (CHP) responded to an accident caused by a driver driving under the influence of alcohol. The CHP billed the driver for its costs in responding to the accident. The driver paid part of the billed amount and disputed the remainder in a class action filed against the CHP. In response to the driver's summary judgment motion, the trial court ruled that the CHP could recover some of its costs but was not entitled to recover its law enforcement expenses such as performing a field sobriety test and making an arrest. The CHP filed a petition for a writ of mandate challenging the trial court's order.

The court of appeal noted the pendency of many similar cases pending in California. The court held that, ordinarily, an appeal after trial presents an adequate remedy at law for a party aggrieved by an order granting summary adjudication (135 Cal. App. 4th 488, 496). Here, however, interlocutory writ review was appropriate because the petition raised an issue of first impression that was of widespread interest, as the multiplicity of similar lawsuits confirmed (135 Cal. App. 4th 488, 496). The court held that judicial economy was best served by an early appellate resolution of the issue (135 Cal. App. 4th 488, 496).

In State of California ex rel. Dept. of Rehabilitation v. Superior Court (1982) 137 Cal. App. 3d 282, 187 Cal. Rptr. 1 , a physically handicapped person sued a restaurant for failure to provide restroom facilities and an access ramp for the handicapped. The restaurant settled this action but cross-complained for indemnity against the architects of the building, the contractor, and the city, alleging negligent failure to advise the restaurant management of handicap accessibility requirements. The complaint also alleged that the city was under a duty to prevent construction of buildings that failed to meet the requirements. The city answered and cross-complained against the state and the Attorney General, alleging that the Department of Rehabilitation and the Attorney General knew that the city was not exacting compliance with the access requirements in issuing building permits and failed to advise the city to refuse to issue those building permits. The department and the Attorney General answered and moved for judgment on the pleadings. The trial court denied the motion, and the moving parties petitioned for a writ of mandate to direct the trial court to enter judgment in their favor.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the department had no duty to inform city officials of the provisions requiring compliance and that the Attorney General was immune from liability for failure to enforce the law (137 Cal. App. 3d 282, 285-287) . The court held that review by extraordinary writ was appropriate because similar lawsuits were pending and no case law existed on the argued issues for the trial courts' guidance (137 Cal. App. 3d 282, 285) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Grounds for Action Against Respondent

In Candid Enterprises, Inc. v. Grossmont Union High School Dist. (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 878, 218 Cal. Rptr. 303, 705 P.2d 876 , respondent, a high school district, entered into an agreement with petitioner's predecessor in interest, a real estate developer who planned to build a condominium project. The developer agreed to pay certain "school-impact fees," which had been established to ensure that new developments financed any increased need for school facilities that was attributable to those developments. In exchange, the district issued to the county a "school-availability letter," attesting that adequate school facilities could be provided. Under county law, issuance of such a letter was a prerequisite to approval of any proposed development. By the time petitioner sought building permits for the condominium project, enrollment in the school district had declined and the district was no longer entering into agreements for collection of school-impact fees. Petitioner paid the fees under protest and then, by letter, unsuccessfully sought a refund from the district. Petitioner then met with the district's governing board, which also refused to refund the fees or cancel the agreement. Finally, petitioner filed for a writ of mandate against the district and its governing board. The trial court overruled respondents' demurrer and ordered that mandate issue. Respondents appealed.

The California Supreme Court reversed on the substantive ground that the imposition of school impact fees did not violate petitioner's right to equal protection and was not preempted by state law (39 Cal. 3d 878, 885) . However, the Court also held that the demurrer was properly overruled because a writ of mandate was available as a potential remedy. The Court reasoned that petitioner had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. An action on the contract for refund of fees paid, as well as release from payment of the remainder, was inadequate because there were no grounds on which to allege a breach or to seek rescission. No statutory action for a refund then existed. Petitioner had no grounds to file for a writ of administrative mandate under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 because the governing board was not required by law to grant petitioner a hearing on the request for a refund. Finally, the Court observed, an action for declaratory relief was inappropriate because petitioner was attacking the county law as applied. The Court cited for this principle Mobil Oil Corp. v. Superior Court (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 293, 307, 130 Cal. Rptr. 814 , in which the court of appeal held that a challenge to an act as applied by an administrative board is a challenge to an administrative action, and therefore is properly brought under Code Civ. Proc. § 1094.5 rather than by means of an action for declaratory relief (39 Cal. 3d 878, 885 n.3).

[b] Availability of Declaratory Relief Not Determinative

The facts and procedure in Glendale City Employees' Assn., Inc. v. City of Glendale (1975) 15 Cal. 3d 328, 124 Cal. Rptr. 513, 540 P.2d 609 , are discussed in § 150.39[3][b]. The Supreme Court upheld the trial court's determination that mandate was available because plaintiffs had no adequate remedy at law. An action for breach of contract was not adequate because payment of plaintiffs' wages required the cooperation of certain city officials (15 Cal. 3d 328, 343) . The Court also noted that plaintiffs had sought declaratory relief in their action and had established a controversy sufficient to justify that remedy. However, the Court held, the fact that an action in declaratory relief lies does not prevent the use of mandate (15 Cal. 3d 328, 343 n.20).

§ 150.165 Supporting Contention That There Is No Plain, Speedy, and Adequate Remedy in Ordinary Course of Law--Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy to Protect Petitioner's Substantial Rights--General Form

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

PETITIONER'S REMEDY AT LAW IS INADEQUATE BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS NO RIGHT TO AN IMMEDIATE REVIEW BY APPEAL AND, UNDER THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF THIS CASE, THE RIGHT TO APPEAL A LATER JUDGMENT DOES NOT AFFORD PETITIONER AN ADEQUATE REMEDY.

A. No Direct Appeal. The order challenged by petitioner is not appealable (see Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1).

[AND]

B. Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy. Petitioner's right to an appeal from an eventual judgment is an inadequate remedy when the circumstances of the case, including the expense of proceeding with trial, the prejudice resulting from delay, the inordinate pretrial expenses, and the possibility that the asserted error might infect the trial and might not be corrected in a lower tribunal before or during trial weigh in favor of granting petitioner immediate relief (Vineyard Springs Estates, LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 633, 643, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 587 ; Hogya v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 128, 142 Cal. Rptr. 325).

[Optional] C. Prejudice From Delay. Petitioner's remedy by appeal from an eventual judgment is inadequate when, by the time an appeal is heard, a favorable decision will no longer protect petitioner's rights (Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v.

Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 850-852, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395 P.2d 817 ; Tracy Educators Ass'n v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 530, 534, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 ; Running Fence Corp. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 400, 412-413, 124 Cal. Rptr. 339).

[Optional] D. Review by Extraordinary Writ May Be Proper When It Will Not Halt Ordinary Progress of Action. Review by petition for an extraordinary writ is proper in some instances even though the petitioner may have a clear remedy by appeal, when the writ review does not halt the ordinary pre-judgment processing of the case. [Thus, if the case has already reached judgment and has been through the appeal process once, and has been apparently resolved except for narrow issues to be resolved by the trial court on remand, the appellate court may properly consider a writ petition for review of the trial court's ruling on that issue when it appears that the ruling was in error. The court of appeal should use of the writ review procedure to resolve promptly a "dangling issue" in such a case]. (Science Applications Internat. Corp. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1100, 1102, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332).

[Add additional, more specific points and authorities, as appropriate, relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal under the particular circumstances of the case (see, e.g., §§ 150.166-150.182).]

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate.

This form should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), and with more specific points and authorities relating the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.182). It should also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Appeal Is Inadequate Remedy

In Vineyard Springs Estates, LLC v. Superior Court (2004) 120 Cal. App. 4th 633, 643, 15 Cal. Rptr. 3d 587 , Wyatt filed an action for premises liability and negligence against Vineyard, the owner of a shopping center, after Wyatt had been assaulted at the shopping center. Vineyard moved for summary judgment, asserting that Wyatt could not establish a triable issue of material fact as to duty, breach, or causation, because Vineyard had had no knowledge of prior similar crimes occurring at the shopping center. In her opposition to the motion, Wyatt included declarations from her attorney and others suggesting that Vineyard had had constructive knowledge of prior similar incidents. Vineyard objected to the declarations on several grounds, including lack of foundation, inadmissible hearsay, and lack of authentication.

The trial court tentatively denied Vineyard's summary judgment motion, finding a triable issue of fact as to Vineyard's constructive notice of prior similar incidents. The tentative ruling did not mention Vineyard's evidentiary objections. At the hearing on the motion, Vineyard's counsel repeatedly pointed out the trial court's failure to rule on the objections and requested a ruling. The court promised at three different times during the hearing that it would provide one. Vineyard's counsel argued the merits of the objections. She also asserted that if the objections were valid, all of Wyatt's evidence was inadmissible, mandating summary judgment for Vineyard.

The trial court ultimately denied Vineyard's motion for summary judgment, and failed to rule on or mention Vineyard's evidentiary objections to Wyatt's evidence.

Vineyard petitioned the court of appeals for a writ of mandate, requesting a peremptory writ directing the trial court to rule on the evidentiary objections. The court of appeal held that Code Civ. Proc. § 437c requires trial courts to weigh and rule on evidentiary objections in connection with summary judgment motions. Section 437c(g) provides that the trial court's "order shall specifically refer to the evidence proffered in support of, and if applicable in opposition to, the motion which indicates that no triable issue exists" (120 Cal. App. 4th 633, 642) . The court held that, if a trial court fails to rule on summary judgment evidentiary objections, the objections are ordinarily deemed waived on appeal, and the appellate court will consider the objected-to evidence in reviewing the ruling on the motion. Thus, the court held, Vineyard had no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because it was headed for trial (120 Cal. App. 4th 633, 643) . The court issued a writ commanding the trial court to vacate its order denying summary judgment, rule on all evidentiary objections, and reconsider the summary judgment motion in light of its rulings on the evidentiary objections (120 Cal. App. 4th 633, 643) .

In Hogya v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 142 Cal. Rptr. 325 , petitioner brought a class action under the Consumer Legal Remedies Act (Civ. Code § 1750 et seq.) against various meat sellers for fraud in labeling. Although the trial court concluded that all of the statutory criteria were met, it refused to certify the class based on other considerations. Petitioner sought writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant his motion for class certification. The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the statutory criteria were exclusive and the trial court had a duty to certify the class (75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 140) . In its discussion of the availability of writ review, the Court reviewed the factors that must be considered in evaluating the adequacy of the appellate remedy. These include, but are not limited to, the expense of proceeding with trial, prejudice resulting from delay, inordinate pretrial expenses, the possibility that the asserted error might not infect the trial, and the possibility the asserted error might be corrected in a lower tribunal before or during trial (75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 128) . The court found that there was no reasonable likelihood that any single member of the class could recover more than $10 (75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 130-131) . Therefore, the court concluded, the expense of proceeding through trial was grossly disproportionate to the damages petitioner could expect to recover in his individual capacity and appeal from final judgment was not a practical remedy (75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 131) .

[b] Prejudice From Delay

The facts and procedure of Corona etc. Hosp. Dist. v. Superior Court (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 846, 40 Cal. Rptr. 745, 395

P.2d 817 , are discussed in § 150.161[3][a]. The Supreme Court concluded that the hospital district did not have an adequate remedy at law because the time required for appeal would mean that the district would lose its construction contract, its site, the benefit of the statute being challenged, and money. The Supreme Court acknowledged that generally the fact that prohibition was not as expeditious as appeal was not sufficient. It held, however, that when an appeal would not only be inexpeditious but would be totally ineffective in protecting petitioner's rights, the only adequate remedy is prohibition (61 Cal. 2d 846, 850-852) .

In Tracy Educators Assn. v. Superior Court (2002) 96 Cal. App. 4th 530, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 916 , the school district rejected a teacher's request for a half-time leave of absence to fulfill her duties as president of a teachers' association. The association filed a petition for writ of mandate in the trial court to compel the district to grant the request. The trial court denied the petition. Instead of appealing, the association filed a petition for writ of mandate in the court of appeal. The court of appeal held that mandamus was appropriate because, by the time an appeal could be resolved, the teacher's two-year term as association president would have expired. Hence, appeal was not an adequate remedy (96 Cal. App. 4th 530, 534) .

In Running Fence Corp. v. Superior Court (1975) 51 Cal. App. 3d 400, 124 Cal. Rptr. 339 , an artist obtained a use permit to construct and display his running fence, a 24-mile long art project, in Marin and Sonoma counties. A group organized to stop the art project successfully petitioned for a writ of mandate to direct the county board of supervisors to set aside its approval of the project on the basis that an environmental impact report was required. The artist then sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the trial court from taking any further proceedings in the action.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the trial court exceeded its jurisdiction because the requirements of the state Environmental Quality Act (Pub. Res. Code § 21050 et seq.) were met (51 Cal. App. 3d 400, 431-433) . The Court also determined that the remedy of appeal was not adequate because the time required for appeal would mean that the project could not be undertaken. The permits would expire, easements to use the land would expire, the weather would turn rainy, and various other additional expenses would occur (51 Cal. App. 3d 400, 409-413) .

[c] Review by Extraordinary Writ May Be Proper When It Will Not Halt Ordinary Progress of Action

In Science Applications Internat. Corp. v. Superior Court (1995) 39 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 46 Cal. Rptr. 2d 332 , a party filed a petition for writ of mandate requesting immediate review of the trial court's ruling on the assessment of costs, as litigation expenses, of "high-powered computer support akin to paralegal services or document retrieval." There had been an appeal from the underlying judgment, and the court of appeal had remanded the case to the trial court solely to determine the issue of costs.

The court of appeal issued a writ, directing the superior court to vacate its ruling. In so acting, the appellate court addressed the propriety of determining the petition for the writ on its merits, despite the existence of a clear remedy by appeal. The "clear remedy" rule reflects a general policy not to interfere in the ordinary progress of an action toward judgment by limiting immediate, intermediate review of issues that may ultimately by reviewed on appeal of the entire judgment. The court reasoned that this policy did not apply to the writ petition at issue, because the parties had already had their full "day in court," and they had already "stood in line" through one complete turn in appeal process. There were other special reasons for allowing immediate review by writ. While the case had originally presented multiple and difficult issues, the remaining issue sent to the trial court for resolution on remand was narrow. Moreover, the issue had already been briefed once and, to some extent, considered by the appellate court. The court stated that when a piece of litigation has "once journeyed the full and tiresome path of appellate review," gaining apparent resolution with the exception of only one post-appellate trial court ruling, a petition for writ of mandate to review that ruling should be determined on the merits when it appears the ruling is erroneous. The court of appeal should not avoid using the writ process when it may it to resolve a final, "dangling issue" promptly (39 Cal. App. 4th 1095, 1100-1102) .

[a] Prejudice From Delay

In Housing Authority v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 550, 219 P.2d 457 , a city had a commitment for federal money to construct low-income housing. Citizens obtained sufficient signatures on a referendum against the project but the city clerk refused to file the referendum on the ground that it was not proper because the city's action was administrative while the power of referendum only applies to legislative acts. The citizens then sued to enjoin the project. The housing authority petitioned for a writ of prohibition against the superior court's assumption of jurisdiction over the suit. The Supreme Court held that the Housing Authority's remedy of appeal was inadequate because the federal funds would be lost during the time required for appeal. It then held that the referendum was not proper and issued the writ (35 Cal. 2d 550, 556-559) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), with general points and authorities supporting the contention that appeal is not an adequate remedy (see, e.g., § 150.165), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

APPEAL IS NOT AN ADEQUATE REMEDY BECAUSE THE COURT'S ORDER DENYING PETITIONER LEAVE TO _____ [AMEND or FILE] HIS/HER PLEADING HAS DEPRIVED PETITIONER OF THE OPPORTUNITY TO PLEAD A _____ [CAUSE OF ACTION or DEFENSE].

A. No Opportunity to Plead Cause of Action or Defense. When it appears that the trial court has made a ruling that deprives a party of the opportunity to plead his or her cause of action or defense, relief by mandate may be appropriate to prevent a needless and expensive trial and reversal (Holtz v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 296, 301 n.4, 90 Cal. Rptr. 345, 475 P.2d 441 ; Tate v. Superior Court (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 251, 28 Cal. Rptr. 548).

[EITHER]

B. Amendment of Complaint. A writ of mandate will lie to compel the trial court to permit an amendment of a complaint when the court's refusal to permit the amendment deprives petitioner of the opportunity to plead his or her cause of action (Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 289, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443).

[OR]

B. Filing of Cross-Complaint. A writ of mandate will lie to compel the trial court to permit the filing of a cross-complaint when the court's refusal to accept the cross-complaint was an abuse of discretion (Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 901-902, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[OR]

B. Amendment of Answer. A writ of mandate will lie to compel the trial court to allow an amendment to an answer when the court's refusal to permit the amendment deprives petitioner of the opportunity to plead his or her defense to the action (Tate v. Superior Court (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 251, 28 Cal. Rptr. 548).

[2] Comments

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review a denial of a motion for leave to amend a pleading or file a cross-complaint.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.167 -150.182). They should also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161 -150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Opportunity to Plead Cause of Action or Defense

In Holtz v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 296, 90 Cal. Rptr. 345, 475 P.2d 441 , plaintiffs brought an action alleging that their land and buildings were damaged by excavation done by the city in connection with subway construction. The complaint contained a strict liability count, based on a theory of inverse condemnation, and a count for negligence. The city moved to strike those allegations of the complaint alleging damage to the buildings, relying on Civ. Code § 832, which absolves an excavator from liability to a neighbor under certain conditions. The trial court determined that the statute did not absolve a negligent excavator and denied the motion to strike with respect to the second count. The court granted the motion, however, with respect to the strict liability count. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to reinstate the stricken allegations.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, holding that general inverse condemnation principles made the city strictly liable for any damage (3 Cal. 3d 296, 311) . In its discussion of the adequacy of plaintiffs' appellate remedy, the Court applied the principle that, when it appears that the trial court has made a ruling that deprives a party of the opportunity to plead his or her cause of action or defense, relief by mandate may be appropriate to prevent a needless and expensive trial and reversal. Most of plaintiffs' injury involved damage to their buildings. Therefore, striking the allegations of those damages was, for all practical purposes, substantially equivalent to striking the entire inverse condemnation cause of action. Under those circumstances, plaintiffs could properly seek relief through a writ of mandate (3 Cal. 3d 296, 301 n.4).

In Tate v. Superior Court (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 28 Cal. Rptr. 548 , plaintiff brought an action against defendants for injuries he suffered on the job. Plaintiff's employer and the employer's worker's compensation carrier were not parties to the action. One defendant amended his answer to allege the employer's contributory negligence and to request that payments plaintiff had already received from the insurance carrier be setoff against any damages award. The trial court sustained plaintiff's demurrer to the amendment to the answer. The remaining defendants moved to amend their answers and were denied. Defendants then sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to allow the affirmative defenses.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that a third-party tortfeasor can invoke the concurrent negligence of the employer in an action brought by the employee (213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 245-246, 251) . In its discussion of the propriety of the writ, the court observed that the motions for leave to amend were supported by an ample showing of good cause (213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 249) . In addition, there was no reason to believe that allowing the amendments would either add to the complexity of the trial or delay it significantly (213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 250) . When it appears that the trial court has made a ruling that deprives a party of the opportunity to plead a cause of action or defense, the court stated, relief by mandate may be appropriate to prevent a needless and expensive trial and reversal (213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 251) .

[b] Amendment of Complaint

In Daum v. Superior Court (1964) 228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 39 Cal. Rptr. 443 , the trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to a contract action on the ground that conditions precedent in the contract had not occurred. Plaintiff moved for leave to amend the complaint to allege defendants' anticipatory breach. When the motion was denied, plaintiff sought a writ of mandate ordering the court to permit filing of the amended complaint.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the amended complaint pleaded the necessary elements of an anticipatory breach (228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 288, 290) . In its discussion of the availability of the writ, the court recognized that it is error to refuse permission to amend when the motion is timely made and when granting the motion will not prejudice the opposing party. When, in addition, the refusal results in a party being deprived of the right to assert a meritorious cause of action or a meritorious defense, it it not only error but an abuse of discretion and mandate will lie (228 Cal. App. 2d 283, 286, 289) .

In Foot's Transfer & Storage Co. v. Superior Court (1980) 114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 171 Cal. Rptr. 1 , petitioner was the defendant in an action for damages for breach of contract. After a default was taken against petitioner and then vacated, petitioner filed an answer, which did not contain any affirmative defenses or counterclaims. After petitioner made numerous unsuccessful requests that plaintiff stipulate to the filing of a cross-complaint, and nearly two years after petitioner had been served with the complaint, petitioner moved for leave to file a cross-complaint under Code Civ. Proc. § 426.50. The motion was denied and petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant the motion.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that the evidence to support the trial court's denial of the motion was insufficient as a matter of law (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 904) . The court recognized that mandate will issue when the trial court abuses its discretion (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902) . The court held that the trial court, in denying the motion, made an implied finding of bad faith on the part of petitioner that was not supported by petitioner's delay in seeking leave to file the cross-complaint (114 Cal. App. 3d 897, 902-903) .

[d] Amendment of Answer

The facts and procedure of Tate v. Superior Court (1963) 213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 28 Cal. Rptr. 548 , are discussed under § 150.166[3][a]. In issuing a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to permit defendants to amend their answers to raise a defense, the court of appeal held that the motions for leave to amend were supported by an ample showing of good cause (213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 249) . In addition, there was no reason to believe that allowing the amendments would either add to the complexity of the trial or delay it significantly (213 Cal. App. 2d 238, 250) .

[a] Amendment of Complaint

In Peterson v. Superior Court (1982) 31 Cal. 3d 147, 181 Cal. Rptr. 784, 642 P.2d 1305 , a passenger brought a personal injury action against a driver who was allegedly intoxicated at the time of an accident. Plaintiff moved for leave to file an amended complaint to allege facts justifying an award of punitive damages. The trial court denied the motion on the ground that Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 , which authorized such damages, was not retroactive. Plaintiff then sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant leave to amend the complaint.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that Taylor was retroactive (31 Cal. 3d 147, 150, 152-158, 164) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the Court stated that the writ will lie when it appears that the trial court has deprived a party of an opportunity to plead his or her cause of action or defense, and when extraordinary relief may prevent a needless and expensive trial and reversal. The Court concluded that such a combination of circumstances existed in petitioner's case (31 Cal. 3d 147, 164) .

In Landis v. Superior Court (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 548, 42 Cal. Rptr. 893 , the court of appeal held that the trial court had abused its discretion in refusing to permit petitioner to amend his complaint (232 Cal. App. 2d 548, 557) . The amendment sufficiently stated a cause of action for reformation and breach of contract, and did not raise a disfavored plea, contradict a material admission in the original pleading, or change the basic cause of action (232 Cal. App. 2d 548, 556) . Moreover, the only apparent hardship to the defendants was that they would have to defend. In light of these circumstances, the court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the respondent court to permit the filing of petitioner's amended complaint (232 Cal. App. 2d 548, 557) .

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review the grant of a motion to strike a complete defense or answer.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166, 150.169-150.182). They should also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.185 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike

The facts and procedure in Holtz v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 296, 90 Cal. Rptr. 345, 475 P.2d 441 , are discussed in § 150.166[3][a]. The Supreme Court issued a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to reinstate damages allegations that had been stricken, holding that the writ was proper because the order to strike had deprived plaintiff of the opportunity to plead his cause of action or defense (3 Cal. 3d 296, 301 n.4).

In Perkins v. Superior Court (1981) 117 Cal. App. 3d 1, 172 Cal. Rptr. 427 , plaintiff sued defendant for invasion of privacy and interference with business. Defendant moved to strike the phrase "wrongfully and intentionally," and the word "retaliation" from the complaint, arguing that the phrase and the word were mere legal conclusions. Defendant also moved to strike all references to punitive damages. Defendant's motion was granted, and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal.

In issuing the writ, the court of appeal held that mandate is proper when a trial court has deprived a party of the opportunity to plead his or her action, and when extraordinary relief at the pleading stage could prevent reversal or retrial (117 Cal. App. 3d 1, 5) . The court also held that the language in question, when taken in context rather than in isolation, sufficiently described ultimate facts constituting a cause of action for punitive damages, especially in view of the fact that the distinction between ultimate facts and legal conclusions is not a clear one (117 Cal. App. 3d 1, 6-7) . Therefore, the trial court had abused its discretion in granting the motion to strike (117 Cal. App. 3d 1, 7) .

[b] Absolute Defense

In Carter v. Superior Court (1956) 142 Cal. App. 2d 350, 298 P.2d 598 , plaintiff filed an action against his employer for injuries incurred on the job. In the answer, the employer alleged that plaintiff had filed the claim with the Industrial Accident Commission and entered into an agreement of compromise and release with the employer and the employer's compensation carrier and that, furthermore, the Commission now had exclusive jurisdiction of the dispute. The trial court granted plaintiff's motion to strike the defense from the answer and the employer sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the court from further proceedings or a writ of mandate to compel the court to reinstate the employer's defense.

The court of appeal granted the writ of mandate, holding that the facts pleaded in the proposed defense were sufficient, if proven, to bar the action (142 Cal. App. 2d 350, 356) . In its discussion of the availability of mandate, the court held that an appeal from an adverse judgment was not an adequate remedy because the defense, if sustained by proof, would terminate the action without any trial of the issues tendered by the complaint. Defendant had a right to assert his meritorious defenses (142 Cal. App. 2d 350, 359) .

[c] Entire Answer Stricken

In Mediterranean Exports, Inc. v. Superior Court (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 174 Cal. Rptr. 169 , plaintiff brought an action for breach of a commercial lease against a foreign corporation allegedly doing business in California. Plaintiff moved for an order to strike defendant's answer and cross-complaint on the ground of lack of capacity, alleging that defendant was unqualified to do business in the state and had forfeited its ability to defend by failure to pay state corporate taxes. The court granted the motion and defendant sought a writ of mandate to reinstate the answer and cross-complaint.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that there was a triable issue of fact concerning whether defendant was actually doing business in California and on the issue of whether defendant had pay its taxes (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 617-618, 619) . In its discussion of the adequacy of an appellate remedy, the court held that the "final judgment" from which defendant might appeal would necessarily be a default judgment because the court order struck its answer in the action. The erroneous order therefore deprived defendant of the right to defend the action, as well as the right to sue on the cross-complaint, and extraordinary relief was called for (119 Cal. App. 3d 605, 618) .

[a] Motion to Strike

In Brandt v. Superior Court (1985) 37 Cal. 3d 813, 210 Cal. Rptr. 211, 693 P.2d 796 , plaintiff brought an action against an insurer for breach of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, based on the insurer's refusal to pay benefits allegedly due under plaintiff's policy. The trial court granted defendant's motion to strike the portion of the complaint that sought attorney's fees as damages incurred in compelling payment, including fees for bringing a breach of contract action against the insurer. Plaintiff filed mandate proceedings. Noting its reluctance to exercise its discretion to review rulings at the pleading stage, the Supreme Court held that in this case extraordinary relief was appropriate because the issue was of widespread interest, the courts of appeal were in conflict, and the trial court's ruling effectively deprived plaintiff of the opportunity to present a substantial portion of his cause of action (37 Cal. 3d 813, 816) . The Court issued a peremptory writ of mandate, commanding the trial court to vacate its order striking portions of the complaint (37 Cal. 3d 813, 820) .

In Courtesy Ambulance Service v. Superior Court (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 161 , the trial court granted a defense motion to strike a claim for punitive damages, and the plaintiff petitioned for an extraordinary writ. The court of appeal stated the governing rule thus: "where a ruling on the pleadings deprives a party of a substantial part of its claim, and where a significant issue of law is involved, extraordinary review is appropriate" (8 Cal. App. 4th 1504, 1510) . The court then proceeded to consider the merits of the petition. Implicitly the court equated striking a claim for punitive damages with depriving the plaintiff of an opportunity to plead a cause of action.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion to Strike Claim for Unobtainable Relief

In Smith v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 133 , the plaintiff sued her attorneys for malpractice and asserted claims for damages for emotional distress and punitive damages (in addition to ordinary damages). The defendants moved to strike those claims, and the trial court denied the motion. The defendants petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the defendants' petition, directing the trial court to vacate the order of denial and to grant the motion to strike. The court held that relief by mandate was appropriate in the case, pointing to two grounds. First, the court noted that appeal would not be an adequate remedy in this case because "the petitioners will be required to conduct further discovery on plaintiff's emotional distress claim, and trial will be extended by the introduction of evidence on that issue. Trial could also be lengthened by holding a bifurcated proceeding on plaintiff's punitive damage claim, with petitioners obligated to produce evidence concerning their financial condition" (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1037) . Second, the court noted that the petition should be heard in this case because the underlying question, whether the plaintiff could recover emotional distress damages in a negligence action involving only economic injury, was an issue of great public importance requiring immediate resolution (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1037) . The court went on to hold that neither the claim for emotional-distress damages nor the claim for punitive damages could be asserted, as a matter of law (10 Cal. App. 4th 1033, 1037-1042) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

In Taylor v. Superior Court (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 890, 157 Cal. Rptr. 693, 598 P.2d 854 , plaintiff brought an action for injuries suffered in a collision with defendant when defendant was allegedly drunk. Defendant demurred to the complaint insofar as it sought punitive damages, contending that punitive damages could not be assessed against a negligent driver. The trial court sustained the demurrer and plaintiff sought a writ of mandate directing the court to overrule the demurrer.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that punitive damages were recoverable against drunk drivers (24 Cal. 3d 890, 897, 900) . The Court acknowledged that mandate will lie when it appears that the trial court has deprived a party of an opportunity to plead his or her cause of action or defense and when extraordinary relief may prevent a needless and expensive trial and reversal. In petitioner's case, such a combination of circumstances was presented (24 Cal. 3d 890, 894) .

In Pfleger v. Superior Court (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 421, 218 Cal. Rptr. 371 , the court of appeal consolidated for review three cases in which petitioners brought causes of actions for negligence, implied warranty, strict liability, fraud, nuisance, and inverse condemnation against real parties city, county, and land developers. The actions arose out of mud slides and flooding that occurred during a severe winter storm and allegedly damaged the real property of petitioners, who were owners and occupants of single-family dwellings. The nuisance causes of action alleged that real parties, owners of real property located uphill from petitioners' homes, had maintained their property in a dangerous condition, and had failed to design or construct drainage or slide control facilities for their property adequate to divert and drain hillside waters and prevent future flooding of and mud slides onto petitioners' properties. Real parties city, county, and land developers demurred to the nuisance causes of action on the ground that a cause of action for nuisance cannot be stated against a public entity when it is predicated on a hazard that could be the basis of a cause of action for a dangerous condition of public property under Gov. Code § 835. The trial court entered orders sustaining the demurrers without leave to amend the complaints. Petitioners then sought writs of mandate in the court of appeal to compel the trial court to vacate its orders.

The court of appeal issued an alternative writ to the trial court (172 Cal. App. 3d 421, 424) . The court held that the demurrers were erroneously sustained, and directed the issuance of peremptory writs to the trial court, directing it to set aside the orders sustaining the demurrers and to enter new and different orders overruling those demurrers (172 Cal. App. 3d 421, 432) . The court found it appropriate to inquire into the propriety of the trial court's rulings. The court held that a writ of mandate may issue, in the discretion of the appellate court, when it appears that the trial court, by sustaining a demurrer without leave to amend, has deprived a party of an opportunity to plead a cause of action (172 Cal. App. 3d 421, 425) .

[b] Demurrer Overruled

In Harden v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 630, 284 P.2d 9 , a city brought a condemnation action and the owner demurred on the basis that the city could not condemn land out of the city limits. The trial court overruled the demurrer and the owners petitioned for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the city was not authorized to condemn the land (44 Cal. 2d 630, 639-642) . In its discussion of the availability of the writ, the court held that the petitioner's remedy at law was inadequate. The order overruling the demurrer could not be appealed, and therefore, if the lower court was acting in excess of jurisdiction, petitioner would be subjected to the expense of an unnecessary trial (44 Cal. 2d 630, 635-636) .

In Grange Debris Box. & Wrecking Co. v. Superior Court (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1349, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 515 , a building owner brought an action against an oil company for contamination of soil. The oil company cross complained against the city who had purchased the site for redevelopment and agreed to hold the oil company harmless for any damage to the property. The city cross complained against cross defendant contractor for indemnity based on negligent excavation of the site and removal of underground tanks. Cross defendant demurred to the cross complaint on the ground that the 10-year statute of limitations set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15(a) and (c) had expired. The city argued that since it was barred from asserting the same statute of limitations against the oil company by Code Civ. Proc. § 337.15(e), then cross defendant should be barred from asserting the period against the city. The trial court overruled the demurrer, and cross defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal granted the petition, ordering that a writ of mandate be issued directing the trial court to vacate its order overruling the demurrer, and to enter a new order sustaining the demurrer. The appellate court found that the 10-year statute of limitations did bar the city's cross complaint against the contractor for indemnity, even though the city was prevented from asserting the statute of limitations against the oil company (16 Cal. App. 4th 1349, 1354-1357) .

Although reviewing courts are generally reluctant to issue writs at the pleading stage, they may be persuaded to do so if the error is clear and substantially prejudices the petitioner. The appellate court found that intervention in the case at hand would probably avoid a lengthy and unnecessary proceeding to determine defendant contractor's fault and appeal from any judgment against that defendant. The appellate court did allow the trial court to exercise its discretion in determining whether to grant the city leave to amend its cross complaint (16 Cal. App. 4th 1349, 1360) .

In Wallis v. Superior Court (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 207 Cal. Rptr. 123 , the trial court granted plaintiff partial summary judgment on a cause of action for breach of contract, sustained defendant's demurrers without leave to amend to plaintiff's causes of action for bad-faith breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and sustained defendant's demurrer with leave to amend to plaintiff's cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to vacate its order sustaining defendant's demurrers. The court of appeal held that writ review was proper in this instance because, first, plaintiff could not appeal at this point because of the one final judgment rule and, second, to refuse consideration of the petition would result in piecemeal disposition of the case (160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1114 n.1).

In Pearce v. Superior Court (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 197 Cal. Rptr. 238 , the trial court sustained defendants' demurrers without leave to amend in a shareholder's derivative action on the basis of plaintiff's lack of standing to sue. Plaintiff petitioned for an alternative writ of mandate ordering the trial court to vacate the order sustaining the demurrers. The court of appeal granted the writ, finding that plaintiff did have standing and that mandate was a proper remedy (149 Cal. App. 3d 1058, 1061, 1068) .

In Spira v. Superior Court (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 536, 116 Cal. Rptr. 93 , plaintiffs brought an action seeking a declaration of rights, an accounting, and appointment of a receiver on the ground that defendant took sole control of business and sequestered its assets in violation of a written partnership agreement. Defendant filed a cross complaint for damages for abuse of process. The trial court overruled plaintiff's demurrer to the cross complaint. The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate, holding that the cross complaint sounded in malicious prosecution and not abuse of process and that, therefore, the demurrer should have been sustained (41 Cal. App. 3d 536, 542) .

Counsel should note that the Supreme Court in Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 (discussed under 150.169[4][b]) held that a cross complaint for malicious prosecution will not lie in the same action alleged to be maliciously prosecuted (3 Cal. 3d 841, 846, 848) .

In Trindade v. Superior Court (1973) 29 Cal. App. 3d 857, 106 Cal. Rptr. 48 , a personal injury action, the trial court sustained plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's cross complaint on the ground that it had been filed more than one year after the cause of action arose and, therefore, was barred by the one-year statute of limitations prescribed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 340(3) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 335.1). The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate commanding the trial court to overrule the demurrer, holding that the cross complaint was timely because it was not barred at the time the complaint was filed (29 Cal. App. 3d 857, 860-861) .

[b] Demurrer Overruled

The facts and procedure in Babb v. Superior Court (1971) 3 Cal. 3d 841, 92 Cal. Rptr. 179, 479 P.2d 379 , are discussed in § 150.33[4][a]. In issuing a writ of mandate directing the trial court to sustain plaintiff's demurrer to a cross complaint for malicious prosecution, the Court determined, without explaining why, that plaintiff's remedy at law was inadequate (3 Cal. 3d 841, 851) .

In State of California v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 105 Cal. Rptr. 2d 499 , the plaintiffs, real parties in interest, sued the state; they alleged various tort causes of action resulting from the death of their decedent, who had been piloting an airplane to fight a fire when the airplane crashed. The state demurred to the complaint, asserting immunity under Gov. Code § 850.4. The trial court sustained the demurrer as to some causes of action but overruled it as to others, thus allowing the case to go to trial. The state petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrer as to all causes of action. The court of appeal noted that an appellate court rarely reviews pleading issues by extraordinary writ, especially when the trial court has overruled the demurrer. Nonetheless, the court determined that the petition's immunity claims raised an issue of significance, justifying review by extraordinary writ (87 Cal. App. 4th 1409, 1412) .

In City of Ontario v. Superior Court (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 894, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 32 , the state sued the City of Ontario on a claim for equitable indemnity. The city demurred on the ground that the action was barred because the state had not filed a timely claim under the Government Tort Claims Act, and the state responded that it was not subject to the claim-filing requirement of that act. After the trial court overruled the demurrer, the city petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to sustain the demurrer without leave to amend. The court of appeal, noting that the case presented an issue of first impression, granted the petition after analyzing the claim-filing requirement. Preliminarily the court rejected the state's argument that a mandate proceeding was inappropriate. The court concluded that "the issue is one of substantial legal importance. If the City's position is correct, the entire case will be disposed of without the expense and delay of trial. In the circumstances, the availability of an eventual remedy by appeal from an unfavorable judgment is not adequate" (12 Cal. App. 4th 894, 898) .

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that a writ of mandate is expressly authorized to review an order denying a Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10 motion to quash service of summons for lack of jurisdiction or to stay or dismiss an action on the ground of inconvenient forum or to dismiss an action for delay in prosecution under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.110 et seq. [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(a), (c)].

This form is for use only when one or more of these motions is brought pursuant to Section 418.10, that is, when the defendant has not made a general appearance and before the defendant's time to plead has expired [see Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 410.30(b) (Section 418.10 not applicable to motion to stay or dismiss for inconvenient forum after defendant has made general appearance)]. If the motion was not made pursuant to Section 418.10, mandate is still the appropriate remedy, but under general principles relating to mandate rather than by express statutory authorization [see McDonough Power Equipment Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 527, 530, 105 Cal. Rptr. 330, 503 P.2d 1338 (prior law; involuntary dismissal for delay in prosecution)]. For a form supporting a review of an order denying a motion to dismiss for delay in prosecution under Code Civ. Proc. § 583.110 et seq., when the motion was made not made in the time frame of a Section 418.10 motion, see § 150.178.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160). They may also be combined with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.169, 150.171-150.182), or with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Time to File Petition

Petitioner must file the petition for writ of mandate within 10 days after service of notice of entry of order denying the motion, or within any further time not exceeding 20 days that the trial court may for good cause allow [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)]. In addition, the petition must be filed before petitioner files any pleading in the action [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c)]. If petitioner files an answer before filing the writ petition, then he or she submits to the jurisdiction of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 418.10(c); Neihaus v. Superior Court (1977) 69 Cal. App. 3d 340, 345, 346 n.1, 137 Cal. Rptr. 905] .

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.205 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Mandate Authorized

In Northern Natural Gas Co. v. Superior Court (1976) 64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 134 Cal. Rptr. 850 , defendant filed motions to quash service of summons on the ground that it was a foreign corporation not engaged in business in California. The trial court denied the motion and defendant sought relief through mandate.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the court to grant the motion to quash, holding that defendant was not she jurisdiction of the California courts (64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 991) . When a trial court erroneously denies a motion to quash service on grounds of lack of personal jurisdiction, the court held, mandate is the appropriate remedy to review the erroneous ruling (64 Cal. App. 3d 983, 995) .

In Hamilton v. Superior Court (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 418, 112 Cal. Rptr. 450 , petitioner filed an action against her former husband, who resided out of state, to establish a judgment for divorce and obtain custody and support orders. On its own motion, the trial court transferred the action to the neighboring county, where petitioner resided. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to review the ruling.

The court of appeal issued the writ, directing the court to transfer the action back to the county in which it was filed (37 Cal. App. 3d 418, 425) . The court held that petitioner was entitled to bring suit in any county in California (37 Cal. App. 3d 418, 422) . Furthermore, there was no motion or sufficient showing made, as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 397, that authorized the court to change the place of trial (37 Cal. App. 3d 418, 425) .

A WRIT OF MANDATE IS THE PROPER REMEDY TO COMPEL A SUPERIOR COURT TO SEVER AN ACTION FOR TRIAL.

Consolidation of Actions. Mandate will lie to compel a court to sever actions for trial when the court abused its discretion in consolidating the actions (State Farm etc. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 428, 432, 304 P.2d 13).

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review an order granting a motion for consolidation. The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.171, 150.173-150.182). [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Consolidation of Actions

In State Farm etc. Ins. Co. v. Superior Court (1956) 47 Cal. 2d 428, 304 P.2d 13 , petitioner, an insurance company, brought an action for declaratory relief to determine whether its policy covered an automobile collision between its insured and a third party. While the action was pending, several persons filed personal injury actions against petitioner's insured. The third parties successfully moved to consolidate all the actions. Petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to sever the declaratory relief action from the other actions.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the trial court abused its discretion in ordering the consolidation (47 Cal. 2d 428, 430, 433) . The consolidation, the court reasoned, resulted in prejudice to the petitioner and former Code Civ. Proc. § 1048 only authorized consolidation when it could be done without prejudice to a substantial right (47 Cal. 2d 428, 430) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), with general points and authorities supporting the contention that appeal is not an adequate remedy (see, e.g., § 150.165), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

APPEAL IS NOT AN ADEQUATE REMEDY BECAUSE PETITIONER HAS NO RIGHT TO A DIRECT APPEAL AND THE EXPENSE OF PROCEEDING THROUGH A TRIAL IS GROSSLY DISPROPORTIONATE TO THE DAMAGES PETITIONER CAN EXPECT TO RECOVER IN HIS OR HER INDIVIDUAL CAPACITY.

A. Order Is Not Appealable. There is no right to direct appeal of an order denying class certification when the order fails to dispose of the entire action (General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 247, 250-252, 244 Cal. Rptr. 776 ; Rosack v. Volvo of America Corp. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 749, 182 Cal. Rptr. 800 ; Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 806-807, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964).

B. Inordinate Expense of Trial. Review of a denial of class certification on appeal from an adverse judgment is inadequate when the expense of proceeding through a trial is grossly disproportionate to the damages petitioner can expect to recover in his or her individual capacity (Hogya v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 130-131, 142 Cal. Rptr. 325).

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.172, 150.174-150.182). They may also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, counsel should demonstrate that there was no reasonable likelihood that any single member of the class could recover more than an amount of damages that would be grossly disproportionate to the expense of proceeding through a trial [see Hogya v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 130-131, 142 Cal. Rptr. 325] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Is Not Appealable

In General Motors Corp. v. Superior Court (1988) 199 Cal. App. 3d 247, 244 Cal. Rptr. 776 , plaintiffs in a consumer action against an automobile manufacturer and its dealers moved to certify a national class of all purchasers of the allegedly defective model of automobile. The trial court certified the class on a statewide basis only. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to review the order and also took a precautionary appeal from the order.

The court of appeal denied the writ in an unpublished portion of its opinion. In its discussion of the availability of mandate, however, the court held that there was no appeal from the order. An appeal would violate the "final judgment rule" set forth in Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1 because the denial of nationwide certification did not have a "death knell" effect of making further proceedings in the action impractical. The statewide class certified by the trial court, the court observed, consisted of 21,000 members. Therefore, the court applied Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , discussed below, and held there was no appeal from the certification order (199 Cal. App. 3d 247, 250-251) .

In Rosack v. Volvo of America Corp. (1982) 131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 182 Cal. Rptr. 800 , plaintiff brought an antitrust action against an automobile manufacturer and its dealers on behalf of herself and a class of automobile consumers. The trial court denied certification of the class and entered an order dismissing the class action. On appeal, the court of appeal held that an appeal from the intermediate order on class certification would violate the "final judgment" rule unless the order disposes of the entire action. A party seeking earlier appellate review, the court held, must rely on a writ of mandate (131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 749) . In order to reach the merits, however, the court treated the appeal as a petition for writ of mandate and granted the writ to compel the court to grant class certification (131 Cal. App. 3d 741, 750, 763) .

In Vasquez v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 800, 94 Cal. Rptr. 796, 484 P.2d 964 , plaintiffs brought an action against a seller and finance company on behalf of themselves and a class of consumers who bought merchandise under fraudulent installment contracts. Defendants' demurrers were sustained on the ground that plaintiffs failed to state a class action for fraud. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to allow them to try the fraud action as a class action.

The Supreme Court granted the writ (4 Cal. 3d 800, 825) . In its discussion of the adequacy of plaintiffs' appellate remedy, the Court held that plaintiffs had no appeal from the order dismissing their first cause of action as a class action because an appeal would violate the rule that an appeal may be taken only from a final judgment (4 Cal. 3d 800, 806) . When all the causes of action set forth in the complaint have a single object, an appeal will not be permitted from a judgment disposing of only one count of the complaint (4 Cal. 3d 800, 806-807) . Because the certification order barred a substantial portion of their cause from being heard on the merits, the mandate petition deserved consideration (4 Cal. 3d 800, 807) .

Note that the court of appeal in Clothesrigger, Inc. v. GTE Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 605, 609-611, 236 Cal. Rptr. 605 , accepted an appeal from an order denying certification to a nationwide class and reversed the trial court, without discussing whether such an order was appealable.

[b] Inordinate Expense of Trial

The facts and procedure of Hogya v. Superior Court (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 142 Cal. Rptr. 325 , is discussed in § 150.165[3][a]. In issuing a writ to compel the trial court to grant plaintiff's motion for class certification, the court of appeal held that petitioner's remedy by appeal was inadequate because the expense of proceeding through trial was grossly disproportionate to the damages petitioner could expect to recover in his individual capacity (75 Cal. App. 3d 122, 130-131) .

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), with general points and authorities supporting the contention that appeal is not an adequate remedy (see, e.g., § 150.165), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

APPEAL IS NOT AN ADEQUATE REMEDY BECAUSE THE PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION PREVENTS PETITIONER FROM EXERCISING HIS/HER/ITS LAWFUL RIGHTS DURING THE TIME NECESSARY FOR AN APPEAL.

Exercise of Petitioner's Rights Enjoined. An appeal pursuant to Code of Civil Procedure Section 904.1 from the granting of a preliminary injunction is not an adequate or speedy remedy when the injunction prevents petitioner from exercising its lawful rights during the time necessary for the appeal (County of Butte v. Superior Court (1985) 176 Cal. App. 3d 693, 697, 222 Cal. Rptr. 429 ; United Farm Workers etc. Committee v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 768, 769, 62 Cal. Rptr. 567).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review an order granting a preliminary injunction under the circumstances.

These points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.173, 150.175-150.182). They may also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

NOTE:
If this form is combined with the points and authorities set out in § 150.165, then Paragraph A of that form should be deleted, because the granting of a preliminary injunction is immediately appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1(a)(6).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.185 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Exercise of Petitioner's Rights Enjoined

In County of Butte v. Superior Court (1985) 176 Cal. App. 3d 693, 222 Cal. Rptr. 429 , a county sheriff, two citizens, and members of the sheriff's department filed for a writ of mandate to compel the county board of supervisors to rescind layoffs and demotions and to provide necessary funding to guarantee continued employment of all employees. The superior court granted a preliminary injunction barring the board from proceeding with the layoffs, demotions, and budget cuts. The board filed a petition for a writ of prohibition.

The court of appeal, treating the petition as one for a writ of mandate, held that although an order granting or denying a preliminary injunction is specifically made appealable by Code Civ. Proc. § 904.1, mandate is available to review orders relating to preliminary injunctions when the remedy at law is not plain, speedy, and adequate. The court held that, in this case, the delay inherent in the appeals process made an appeal inadequate because of the effect of the superior court decision on the board's budgeting process and the interest of the parties and the public in a prompt resolution of the immediate dispute (176 Cal. App. 3d 693, 697) .

In United Farm Workers etc. Committee v. Superior Court (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 768, 62 Cal. Rptr. 567 , the trial court granted a preliminary injunction against a farm workers' union in an action brought by a farm owner. The injunction prohibited various union organizing and picketing activities, including the use of bullhorns. The union sought a writ of prohibition, contending that the absolute ban on the use of bullhorns was a violation of its rights of free speech.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the ban was unconstitutional (254 Cal. App. 2d 768, 772-777) . In its discussion of the adequacy of the union's appellate remedy, the court held that appeal was not adequate or speedy because during the time necessary for appeal, the harvest season would be over and therefore the union was entitled to a speedy determination of its constitutional rights by the petition for a writ of prohibition (254 Cal. App. 2d 768, 769) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Exercise of Petitioner's Rights Enjoined

In Evans v. Superior Court (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 563, 96 P.2d 107 , a state regulatory commission took possession of a lending institution on the ground that it was impairing its assets. When litigation was commenced between the agency and lending institution, a committee of investors in the lending institution obtained a preliminary injunction enjoining the agency from spending any of the institution's money to hire special counsel. The agency sought a writ of prohibition preventing enforcement of the injunction. The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the agency's remedy at law of appeal from the injunction was inadequate because of the exigencies of the situation, in which the agency needed special counsel to handle the litigation involving the institution (14 Cal. 2d 563, 579-581) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), with general points and authorities supporting the contention that appeal is not an adequate remedy (see, e.g., § 150.165), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A PEREMPTORY WRIT IS PROPER TO REVIEW ANY ORDER UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 437c OTHER THAN AN ORDER FOR ENTRY OF SUMMARY JUDGMENT, INCLUDING AN ORDER GRANTING PARTIAL SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION OF ISSUES.

A. Peremptory Writ Authorized. On entry of any order under Section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure, other than an order for entry of summary judgment, a party may petition an appropriate reviewing court for a peremptory writ (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)).

[Optional] B. Substantial Portion of Case Will Not Be Tried on Merits. When an order granting partial summary judgment bars a substantial portion of petitioner's case from being tried on the merits, petitioner's appellate remedy is not adequate (Bundren v. Superior Court (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 784, 787 n.1, 193 Cal. Rptr. 671).

[Optional] C. Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Damages. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy when a court has erroneously granted a motion for partial summary judgment on the issue of damages (see Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 110, 111, 77 Cal. Rptr. 243, 453 P.2d 747 ; Mason v. Superior Court (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 989, 994, 210 Cal. Rptr. 63).

[Optional] D. Summary Judgment Against One Party Only. When summary judgment has been entered against only one defendant, an appeal is not an adequate remedy when the case will go on without a substantial portion being heard on the merits (Bodenhamer v. Superior Court (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 180, 183 n.3, 223 Cal. Rptr. 486).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that a peremptory writ is expressly authorized to review an order granting partial summary judgment or summary adjudication of issues [see Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)].

These points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160). They may also be combined with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.174, 150.176-150.182), and with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Time for Filing Petition

A petition for a peremptory writ under Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m) must be filed within 20 days after service on the petitioner of a written notice of entry of the order. If the notice is served by mail, this period is increased by five days if the place of address in within California, by 10 days if it is outside California but within the United States, and by 20 days if it is outside the United States. The period is increased by two days if the notice is served by fax, Express Mail, or other overnight delivery method. The superior court may, for good cause, and prior to the expiration of the initial period, extend the time for filing for a period not exceeding 10 days [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)].

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.205 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Portion of Case Will Not Be Tried on Merits

In Bundren v. Superior Court (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 784, 193 Cal. Rptr. 671 , plaintiff brought an action against a hospital for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on the hospital's debt collection practices. The remaining four causes of action in the complaint sought recovery from her insurance carrier. The trial court granted defendant's motion for partial summary judgment and dismissed plaintiff's cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to vacate the partial summary judgment order.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that a triable issue of fact existed (145 Cal. App. 3d 784, 787) . In its discussion of the adequacy of plaintiff's appellate remedy, the court observed that, because five of her six causes of action remained pending, there was no final judgment from which to appeal. A petition for writ of mandate was properly entertained because the trial court's order barred a substantial portion of plaintiff's case from being tried on the merits (145 Cal. App. 3d 784, 787 n.1).

[b] Partial Summary Judgment on Issue of Damages

In Field Research Corp. v. Superior Court (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 110, 77 Cal. Rptr. 243, 453 P.2d 747 , the trial court in a defamation action granted defendant's motion for partial summary judgment with regard to the issue of general and exemplary damages. The Supreme Court held that the court's order was erroneous and issued a writ of mandate directing the court to deny defendant's motion (71 Cal. 2d 110, 116) .

In Mason v. Superior Court (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 989, 210 Cal. Rptr. 63 , plaintiffs brought an action seeking cancellation of a deed to real property, quiet title, ejectment, and declaratory relief in their first count, and damages in their second count. Plaintiff then recorded and filed a lis pendens. Defendants moved for summary judgment and/or adjudication of issues. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment on the first count only. Plaintiffs filed a petition for a writ of mandate, alleging that the order granting the summary judgment was erroneous. The court of appeal, in issuing the writ, noted that a writ of mandate is the appropriate means for reviewing and correcting an erroneous partial summary judgment because the judgment is not itself an appealable order (163 Cal. App. 3d 989, 993-994) .

[c] Summary Judgment Against One Party Only

In Bodenhamer v. Superior Court (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 180, 223 Cal. Rptr. 486 , two owners of a jewelry business filed insurance claims for losses in a burglary. When disputes arose over the amount of the claims, the owners brought an action for fraud and violations of Ins. Code § 790.03(h) (unfair settlement practices) against the insurer and the company it had hired to adjust the claims. The adjustor moved for summary judgment on the ground that Ins. Code § 790.03(h) did not apply to independent insurance adjustors. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the adjustor and against one of the plaintiffs. The orders left the other plaintiff with a cause of action against the insurer and its agents for fraud. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the order.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the statute applied to independent claims adjustors (178 Cal. App. 3d 180, 184-185) . The Court also held that appeal of the summary judgment against one plaintiff, though available immediately, was not an adequate remedy because the case would go on without a substantial portion being heard on the merits (178 Cal. App. 3d 180, 183 n.3).

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), with general points and authorities supporting the contention that appeal is not an adequate remedy (see, e.g., § 150.164), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

A PEREMPTORY WRIT IS PROPER TO REVIEW ANY ORDER UNDER CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 437c OTHER THAN AN ORDER FOR ENTRY OF SUMMARY JUDGMENT, INCLUDING AN ORDER DENYING SUMMARY JUDGMENT OR SUMMARY ADJUDICATION OF ISSUES.

A. Peremptory Writ Authorized. On entry of any order under Section 437c of the Code of Civil Procedure, other than an order for entry of summary judgment, a party may petition an appropriate reviewing court for a peremptory writ (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(m)).

[EITHER]

B. Denial of Motion for Summary Adjudication. A writ of mandate is the proper remedy when a court has erroneously denied a motion for summary adjudication of issues (Knowles v. Superior Court (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1294-1295, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 ; Leyva v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 462, 468 n.1, 210 Cal. Rptr. 545).

[OR]

B. Denial of Summary Judgment. A writ of mandate will issue to compel a trial court to grant summary judgment in petitioner's favor when denial of petitioner's motion for summary judgment was an abuse of discretion; there has been an abuse of discretion when affidavits in support of the motion were sufficient to sustain summary judgment in petitioner's favor and when the opponent did not by counteraffidavit show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact (Roman Catholic Archbishop v. Superior Court (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 405, 410-412, 93 Cal. Rptr. 338).

C. Liberal Use of Writs. When there is no triable issue of fact and the court denies a motion for summary judgment, the ruling is automatically an abuse of discretion; under these circumstances, a more liberal use of the extraordinary writs is proper to avoid an unnecessary trial (Whitney's at the Beach v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 266, 83 Cal. Rptr. 237 (mandate)).

[Optional] D. Long and Expensive Jury Trial. A writ of mandate should issue to review denial of petitioner's motion for summary judgment when denial of the writ petition would otherwise subject petitioner to a long and expensive jury trial (Sierra Breeze v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 102, 104 n.2, 149 Cal. Rptr. 914 (mandate); Bricklayers & Masons Union No. 1 v. Superior Court of Kings County (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 578, 581-582, 31 Cal. Rptr. 115 (prohibition)).

The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

The points and authorities set out in § 150.205 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Summary Adjudication

In Knowles v. Superior Court (2004) 118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 13 Cal. Rptr. 3d 700 , plaintiffs were a decedent's family who sued the decedent's doctor for medical malpractice. The doctor filed a motion for summary adjudication or summary judgment, arguing that the family's claims were barred by the statute of limitations. The doctor also argued that one son's wrongful death action failed because the son suffered from a head injury and was therefore not aware the father was dead. The trial court denied the doctor's motion. The doctor then filed a petition for writ relief.

Before reviewing the merits of the doctor's motion, the court of appeal held that an order denying a motion for summary judgment may be reviewed by way of a petition for a writ of mandate. If the trial court's denial of a motion for summary judgment will result in a trial on nonactionable claims, a writ of mandate will issue (118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1294-1295) . The court of appeal granted the writ in part because the family filed their complaints more than one year after they discovered their claims. The court of appeal denied the writ in part, holding that the doctor did not make a prima facie showing that the decedent's mentally incompetent son could not establish wrongful death damages (118 Cal. App. 4th 1290, 1301-1302) .

In Leyva v. Superior Court (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 462, 210 Cal. Rptr. 545 , plaintiffs in a securities fraud case moved for summary adjudication, arguing that the instruments sold to them by defendant constituted "securities" within the statutory meaning of the term. The court denied the motion and plaintiffs petitioned for mandate.

The court of appeal denied the writ on the ground that plaintiffs failed to demonstrate sufficient facts in favor of their motion for summary adjudication (164 Cal. App. 3d 462, 475) . The court, however, rejected defendants' contention that the writ should be denied on the procedural ground that petitioners failed to demonstrate the absence of an adequate remedy at law (164 Cal. App. 3d 462, 467) .

[b] Denial of Summary Judgment

In Roman Catholic Archbishop v. Superior Court (1971) 15 Cal. App. 3d 405, 93 Cal. Rptr. 338 , plaintiff brought an action for damages allegedly sustained from a breach of an agreement with a monastery in Switzerland, naming as defendant the local Archbishop on the theory that the Archbishop was the alter ego of the monastery. The trial court denied defendant's motion for summary judgment and defendant sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to grant the motion. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the writ should be granted when the affidavits in support of the moving party are sufficient to sustain a judgment in his or her favor, when the opposing party does not by counteraffidavit show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact (15 Cal. App. 3d 405, 410) . Because the affidavits of the Archbishop demonstrated that the real party in interest could not meet the requirements of the alter ego theory, the court held that summary judgment was appropriate and that the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the motion (15 Cal. App. 3d 405, 411-412) .

[c] Liberal Use of Writs

In Whitney's at the Beach v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 83 Cal. Rptr. 237 , plaintiff brought an action against defendant for negligent maintenance of a skating rink. Defendant moved for a summary judgment on the basis that it never had used, maintained, or assumed any responsibility for the maintenance of the ice rink. The motion was denied and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that it was an abuse of discretion not to grant the motion for summary judgment because there was no factual issue present with regard to defendant's ownership, possession, or control of the premises (3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 270-272) . The court set out the principles to be applied in determining whether writ review from a denial of summary judgment is proper: (1) if the proceedings reveal that there is a triable issue of fact, the motion must be denied; (2) if the trial court errs and grants the motion on an erroneous finding that there is no such issue, an appeal lies from the ensuing judgment; and (3) if there is no triable issue and the court errs in denying the motion, the ruling is an error in law and automatically is an abuse of discretion. Under these circumstances, the court stated, the more liberal use of the extraordinary writs may be proper. In doubtful cases, the appellate court may exercise its discretion and entertain the writ so as to avoid unnecessary proceedings. The court warned, however, that doubts should be resolved in favor of denial of review (3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 266) .

[d] Long and Expensive Trial

In Sierra Breeze v. Superior Court (1978) 86 Cal. App. 3d 102, 149 Cal. Rptr. 914 , defendant, a newspaper, moved for summary judgment in a libel action and the motion was denied. The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to grant the motion, holding that the allegedly defamatory article merely expressed an opinion (86 Cal. App. 3d 102, 104, 108) . The court acknowledged that the writ is a proper remedy when the affidavits in support of the moving party are sufficient to sustain a judgment in that party's favor, and when the opposing party does not by counteraffidavit show facts sufficient to present a triable issue of fact. In its discussion of the adequacy of petitioner's appellate remedy, the court only noted that, in issuing an alternative writ of mandate, the court necessarily determined there was no other adequate remedy. The court also observed, however, that petitioner alleged that he had no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of the law in that denial of his petition would subject him to a long jury trial with attendant expenses (86 Cal. App. 3d 102, 104 n.2).

In Bricklayers & Masons Union No. 1 v. Superior Court of Kings County (1963) 216 Cal. App. 2d 578, 31 Cal. Rptr. 115 , the defendant union was sued by a contractor for intentional interference with contractual relations. The union moved for a summary judgment on the basis that acts complained of were protected or prohibited by the National Labor Relations Act and that, therefore, exclusive jurisdiction rested in the National Labor Relations Board. The summary judgment was denied and the union petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The court of appeal determined that the union's remedy of appeal was neither adequate nor speedy because the union could not appeal the denial of the motion for summary judgment. Therefore, if the jurisdictional issue were not reviewed by the petition for the writ, the union would have to proceed to a possibly unnecessary trial if it later prevailed on the jurisdictional issue (216 Cal. App. 2d 578, 582) . The court then held that the NLRB had exclusive jurisdiction and issued the writ (216 Cal. App. 2d 578, 584-588) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with general points and authorities supporting the contention that petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law (see, e.g., § 150.160), with general points and authorities supporting the contention that appeal is not an adequate remedy (see, e.g., § 150.165), and with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.70).]

APPEAL IS NOT AN ADEQUATE REMEDY BECAUSE IT WILL BE DIFFICULT AFTER A TRIAL FOR PETITIONER TO ESTABLISH THAT HE/SHE/IT WAS PREJUDICED BY THE COURT'S ORDER DENYING RELIEF FROM THE WAIVER OF A JURY TRIAL, AND A TRIAL WOULD BE INEFFICIENT AND TIME CONSUMING.

Review of Denial of Waiver of Jury Trial. A writ of mandate is a proper remedy to review a trial court's order denying a plaintiff's motion for relief from waiver of a jury trial, because, after a court trial, it would be difficult for plaintiff to establish that he or she was prejudiced by denial of a jury trial, and even if he or she could establish prejudice, such a procedure would be inefficient and time consuming (Byram v. Superior Court (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 648, 654, 141 Cal. Rptr. 604).

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate.

The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review an order denying a plaintiff's motion for relief from his or her waiver of a jury trial.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.176, 150.178-150.182). They may also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.185 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Review of Denial of Waiver of Jury Trial

In Byram v. Superior Court (1977) 74 Cal. App. 3d 648, 141 Cal. Rptr. 604 , plaintiff in a personal injury action requested a jury trial throughout the proceedings but received notice, 10 days before trial, that jury fees had not been deposited 14 days in advance. Plaintiff immediately filed a motion for relief from the waiver. Defendants presented no evidence that they would be prejudiced by allowing a jury trial, but the court denied the motion. Plaintiff then petitioned for a writ of mandate or prohibition.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the court to vacate its order, holding that the court abused its discretion (74 Cal. App. 3d 648, 654-655) . The court noted that right to trial by jury is a basic and fundamental part of the system of jurisprudence. Mandate was the proper remedy, the court held, because, after a court trial, it would be difficult for petitioner to establish that he was prejudiced by denial of a jury trial. In addition, even if he could establish such prejudice, such a procedure would be inefficient and time consuming (74 Cal. App. 3d 648, 654) .

APPEAL IS NOT A SPEEDY OR ADEQUATE REMEDY TO REVIEW AN ORDER DENYING DISMISSAL FOR PLAINTIFF'S DELAY IN PROSECUTION, BECAUSE IT REQUIRES DEFENDANT FIRST TO SUBMIT TO AN UNWARRANTED TRIAL OF THE ACTION AND THEN APPEAL FROM AN ADVERSE JUDGMENT.

A. Denial of Motion to Dismiss for Delay in Prosecution. A writ of mandate is proper to review a trial court's order denying a motion for dismissal for delay in prosecution, because requiring petitioner to submit to an unwarranted trial of the case, and then appeal from an adverse judgment, would not afford speedy or adequate relief (Tomales Bay etc. Corp. v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 389, 392, 217 P.2d 968).

[EITHER]

B. Failure to Serve and Return Summons. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a dismissal of an action when the plaintiff has failed to serve the summons within the three-year period prescribed by Section 583.210(a) of the Code of Civil Procedure, or has failed to file the proof of service of the summons within 60 days thereafter as prescribed by Section 583.210(b) of the Code of Civil Procedure, and the trial court has refused a motion on that ground (see Coates

B. Failure to Bring Case to Trial After Remand. A writ of mandate is proper to compel a trial court to dismiss an action under Sections 583.320(a)(3) of the Code of Civil Procedure when there has been a failure to bring the action to trial within three years of the filing of a remittitur when an appeal has been taken, the judgment reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial (see *McDonough Power Equipment Co. v. [a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review the denial of a motion for mandatory dismissal of an action for delay in prosecution.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.177, 150.179-150.182). [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Motion to Dismiss for Delay in Prosecution

In Tomales Bay etc. Corp. v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 389, 217 P.2d 968 , plaintiff brought an action against California Employment Stabilization Commission and the Commission cross-complained against plaintiff. The main complaint was dismissed for delay in prosecution and the cross-action went to trial, resulting in judgment for plaintiff. The Commission obtained an order for new trial and plaintiff subsequently moved to dismiss the Commission's action against him for failure to bring it to trial within five years after plaintiff originally filed his action. The motion was denied because trial had been commenced within five years after the Commission filed its cross-complaint in the original action. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of prohibition to prevent the court from proceeding with the trial.

The Supreme Court held that the cross-complaint was not subject to dismissal and denied the petition (35 Cal. 2d 389, 393-394) . In its discussion of the adequacy of petitioner's appellate remedy, however, the Court ruled that the order was not appealable and that to compel petitioner to submit to an unwarranted retrial of the case, and then appeal from an adverse judgment, would not afford speedy or adequate relief (35 Cal. 2d 389, 392) .

[b] Failure to Serve and Return Summons

In Coates Capitol Corp. v. Superior Court (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 125, 59 Cal. Rptr. 231 , petitioner was a defendant in a wrongful death action that alleged that decedent died from a gunshot wound inflicted by an employee of petitioner. Three years after the complaint was filed, defendant moved for an order dismissing the action on the ground that summons had not been served and a return had not been made within three years after commencement of the action as required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210, 583.250). Plaintiff opposed the motion on the ground that defendant, a domestic corporation, had concealed itself from the commencement of the action and, thus, that service of process could not be completed. The trial court denied defendant's motion, and defendant then petitioned the court of appeal for a writ of mandate compelling the court to dismiss the action against it. The court of appeal held that a domestic corporation cannot secrete itself within the meaning of former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210, 583.250) (251 Cal. App. 2d 125, 129) . Therefore, the court granted the writ of mandate (251 Cal. App. 2d 125, 130) .

Dresser v. Superior Court (1964) 231 Cal. App. 2d 68, 41 Cal. Rptr. 473 , was an eminent domain action in which summons had not been served on petitioners within the three-year period required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210, 583.250) and the parties had filed no stipulation in writing extending the statutory period. In issuing a writ of mandate commanding the trial court to set aside the judgment of condemnation and dismiss the action, the court of appeal stated that former Code Civ. Proc. § 581a (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.210, 583.250) is mandatory and jurisdictional. Thus, as to any action falling within the former code section, the court has power to act only by ordering a dismissal (231 Cal. App. 2d 68, 73-74) .

[c] Failure to Bring Case to Trial

In J.C. Penney Co. v. Superior Court (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 666, 343 P.2d 919 , the trial court denied defendant's motion to dismiss the action for failure to bring the case to trial. The Defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate or prohibition. The Supreme Court issued a writ of prohibition, holding that the stipulation signed by the parties was not sufficient to extend the five-year statutory time limit (52 Cal. 2d 666, 669-671) . The court stated that a writ of mandate is an appropriate remedy to compel dismissal of an action after the time prescribed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 583 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 583.310, 583.360) has expired (52 Cal. 2d 666, 669) .

[d] Failure to Bring Case to Trial After Remand

In McDonough Power Equipment Co. v. Superior Court (1972) 8 Cal. 3d 527, 105 Cal. Rptr. 330, 503 P.2d 1338 , after a remittitur was filed in the trial court, a continuance resulted in the action not being brought to trial within the three-year period prescribed by former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(b) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.320(a)(3)]. Defendant moved for dismissal and sought a writ of mandate to review the trial court's denial of the motion.

The Supreme Court issued the writ (8 Cal. 3d 527, 534) . It held that when a judgment of dismissal based on a demurrer is reversed and remanded for a new trial by an appellate court, plaintiff must, under former Code Civ. Proc. § 583(b) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 583.320(a)(3)), bring the action to trial within three years after the filing of the remittitur in the trial court (8 Cal. 3d 527, 532) .

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy to review either the trial court's refusal to enter a default judgment, because the court does not have jurisdiction to proceed, or the trial court's entry of default judgment, because it lacks personal jurisdiction over the defendant.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.178, 150.180-150.182). They may also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Refusal to Enter Default Judgment

The facts and procedure in W.A. Rose Co. v. Municipal Court (1959) 176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 1 Cal. Rptr. 49 , are discussed in § 150.37[3][a]. In affirming a superior court judgment that directed the municipal court to enter default for plaintiff, the court of appeal noted that the adequacy of other remedies is a factual question whose determination lies largely in the discretion of the court that issued the writs. The standard of review requires affirmance, absent a showing of abuse of discretion. The court concluded that the superior court could have, and undoubtedly did, determine that any appeal remedy was not speedy or adequate because the municipal court was proceeding with the action in spite of the fact that it lost jurisdiction when the plaintiff was improperly denied default and judgment (176 Cal. App. 2d 67, 74) .

[b] Entry of Default Judgment

In Jardine v. Superior Court (1931) 213 Cal. 301, 2 P.2d 756 , one defendant in a stockholders' suit claimed that the court did not obtain jurisdiction over it and petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The Supreme Court denied the writ, holding that jurisdiction was properly obtained over petitioner (213 Cal. 301, 321) . In its discussion of the adequacy of another remedy, the Court held that appeal after a default judgment was not an adequate remedy because appealing would amount to a general appearance that would waive the jurisdictional issue. The petitioner should not have to choose between allowing the action to go by default and then appealing on the jurisdictional issue, which would result in the loss of the right to contest on the merits, or appearing to defend the case on the merits, which would waive the jurisdictional issue (213 Cal. 301, 304) . The Court also noted that a decision on the jurisdictional issue in petitioner's favor would save the delay and expense of a trial (213 Cal. 301, 304-305) .

In Bakersfield Hacienda, Inc. v. Superior Court (1962) 199 Cal. App. 2d 798, 18 Cal. Rptr. 812 , plaintiff attempted to obtain jurisdiction over petitioner corporation by obtaining an order for substituted service on the Secretary of State. After a default was entered against petitioner, it petitioned for a writ of prohibition. The court of appeal issued the writ, holding that the substituted service was not proper (199 Cal. App. 2d 798, 804-805) . In its discussion of the adequacy of another remedy, the court held that appeal from the default was not an adequate remedy because it would amount to a general appearance and waive the jurisdictional issue (199 Cal. App. 2d 798, 802-803) .

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. The specific ground for the contention is that appeal is an inadequate remedy when appellant is required to post a bond to stay the judgment pending appeal, but cannot afford to do so.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160), with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.179, 150.181-150.182). They may also be combined, when appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Petitioner Cannot Post Stay Bond

In United Farm Workers Organizing Committee v. Superior Court (1971) 4 Cal. 3d 556, 94 Cal. Rptr. 263, 483 P.2d 1215 , the superior court issued a preliminary injunction enjoining petitioners from, among other things, urging the public to boycott the products of the real party in interest. Petitioners sought a writ of prohibition against enforcement of the injunction.

The Supreme Court issued the writ, holding that the injunction was overly broad (4 Cal. 3d 556, 571-572) . The Court also held that petitioner's remedy of appeal was inadequate when its unchallenged assertion was that it was unable to post a stay bond in the amount required by the trial court (4 Cal. 3d 556, 563 n.7).

In Woods-Drury, Inc. v. Superior Court (1936) 18 Cal. App. 2d 340, 63 P.2d 1184 , plaintiff commenced an unlawful detainer proceeding against petitioner. Before judgment was final, plaintiff commenced two further unlawful detainer actions against petitioner on which trials were held. Petitioner petitioned for a writ of prohibition on the theory that the second two proceedings were in excess of jurisdiction while the first proceeding was not final. In issuing a writ of prohibition, the court of appeal held that appeal was an inadequate remedy because posting bonds in order to stay the judgments on appeal would be a tremendous burden on petitioner (18 Cal. App. 2d 340, 349-350) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Petitioner Cannot Post Stay Bond

Rondos v. Superior Court (1957) 151 Cal. App. 2d 190, 311 P.2d 113 , was an action for breach of a contract to sell a bar and form a partnership. A receiver was appointed to run petitioner's business. Petitioner sought a writ of prohibition on the basis that the court did not have jurisdiction to appoint a receiver. The court of appeal held that the remedy of appeal from the order appointing a receiver was inadequate because of the hazards of having a receiver run a bar and because petitioner was unable to post a stay bond in his appeal (151 Cal. App. 2d 190, 193-194) . The court then held that the lower court did not have jurisdiction to appoint a receiver and ordered issuance of the writ (151 Cal. App. 2d 190, 194-195) .

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate.

The specific ground for the contention is that a writ of mandate is expressly authorized to review an order granting or denying a motion to expunge a notice of lis pendens [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.39].

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with general points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement (see § 150.160). They may also be combined with general points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see § 150.165), and, if appropriate, with other specific points and authorities relating to the inadequacy of the remedy of appeal (see §§ 150.166-150.180, 150.182), and with other specific points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal requirement (see §§ 150.161-150.164). The combined points and authorities relating to the lack of adequate legal remedy requirement should then be combined, in turn, with a general memorandum supporting a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.30) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.70).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Time to File Petition

Petitioner must file and serve the petition for writ of mandate within 20 days of being served with written notice of the order granting or denying the motion to expunge a lis pendens. The court that issued the order may, prior to the expiration of the initial 20-day period, extend the time for one additional period not to exceed 10 days [Code Civ. Proc. § 405.39].

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 150.205 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Writ of Mandate Authorized

In Amalgamated Bank v. Superior Court (2007) 149 Cal. App. 4th 1003, 1015-1017, 57 Cal. Rptr. 3d 686 , a purchaser bought a real estate parcel at a foreclosure sale for $2,000. Creditors with a security interest in the property filed an action to set aside the judicial foreclosure sale and recorded a notice of lis pendens on the property. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the purchaser. The creditors filed a notice of appeal. Several months later, the purchaser moved to expunge the lis pendens. The trial judge granted the motion. The creditors filed a petition for writ of mandate to challenge the trial court's order granting the purchaser's motion to expunge the lis pendens.

The court of appeal addressed the issue of what an appellate court should do about an order expunging a lis pendens when a real property claimant is appealing from an adverse judgment in the trial court and files a writ petition asking the court to stay the expungement until the appeal is decided. The court noted that the 1992 amendments to the lis pendens law place the burden on the party filing a lis pendens to show the "probable validity" of his or her real property claim before trial, but do not state what standard the trial court should apply when facing a motion to expunge the lis pendens after the claimant suffers an adverse judgment (149 Cal. App. 4th 1003, 1008). The court held that on a motion to expunge a lis pendens after judgment against the claimant and while an appeal is pending, the trial court must grant the motion unless it finds it more likely than not that the appellate court will reverse the judgment (149 Cal. App. 4th 1003, 1015) . The court held that in deciding a writ petition under Code of Civ. Proc. § 405.39 after judgment and pending appeal, an appellate court must assess whether the underlying real property claim has "probable validity" as that term is used in Code of Civ. Proc. § 405.3, i.e., whether it is more likely than not the real property claim will prevail at the end of the appellate process (149 Cal. App. 4th 1003, 1016-1017) .

In Mix v. Superior Court (2004) 124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 996-997, 21 Cal. Rptr. 3d 826 , real property owners agreed to sell their condominium to buyers. However, the sellers' real estate agent, not the sellers themselves, signed the sales agreement. While the escrow was pending, the sellers sought to withdraw from the transaction, claiming the sale was improper because they did not actually sign the sales agreement. The buyers filed a complaint for breach of contract and recorded a lis pendens on the property. The trial court ruled in the sellers' favor on the contract claim, but denied the sellers' motion to expunge the lis pendens because the time for the buyers to appeal had not yet expired. The sellers filed a writ petition with the appellate court seeking to have the lis pendens expunged.

The court of appeal issued a peremptory writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate the order denying the sellers' motion to expunge and to enter a new order granting the motion. The court held that Code Civ. Proc. § 405.32 required a trial court to expunge a lis pendens if the claimant was unsuccessful at trial, unless the trial court was willing to find that its own decision was likely to be reversed on appeal (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 995-996) . The court noted that decisions on motions to expunge lis pendens are expressly not appealable, and that appellate courts only reach them via petitions for writ of mandate (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 996) . Thus, the court held, courts of appeal have the power to issue stay orders when they receive such petitions (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 996) . The court held that the stay is an important safety valve when a trial court's ruling to expunge a stay appears to be a miscarriage of justice, and the appellate court is willing to predict, at the start of the appellate process, that it will ultimately reverse the ruling (124 Cal. App. 4th 987, 997) .

In Howard S. Wright Construction Co. v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 , plaintiff in an action on a construction contract filed a mechanic's lien and a lis pendens against property owned by defendant. Defendant moved to expunge the lis pendens on the ground that the defendant performed the work pursuant to a contract between plaintiff and the lessee of the property and that defendant had previously recorded a notice of nonresponsibility. Plaintiff relied upon the "participating owner" doctrine, which makes the property owner subject to a mechanic's lien, despite a notice of nonresponsibility, if the owner participates in the contract to make the improvements. However, the trial court concluded that plaintiff failed to prove the defendant's participation in the lessee's improvements, and the court granted the motion to expunge the lis pendens. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order.

The court of appeal granted the writ, holding that an order expunging a notice of lis pendens is not appealable, but it may be reviewed on a petition for writ of mandate. On the other hand, the court held that the grant of a motion to remove a mechanic's lien is essentially a judgment on the underlying foreclosure action that no lien exists; that judgment is a final, appealable judgment for which writ relief would ordinarily be denied (106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 317).

The points and authorities set out in § 150.185 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a petition for mandate that is supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order in Probate Proceeding

In Varney v. Superior Court (1992) 10 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 865 , the probate court determined, in a special statutory proceeding [see Prob. Code § 21310 et seq.], that a will beneficiary's filing of a claim as a creditor and filing of a petition for conveyance of estate property would constitute a "contest" as that term was used in the will's no-contest clause. The beneficiary sought review on a petition for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal observed that, although the probate court's order was not one of the kinds of orders made directly appealable by statute [see former Prob. Code § 7240 (now see Prob. Code § 1300 et seq.)], it was not necessary to determine whether the order was appealable. The policy reason for limiting direct appeals from orders in probate matters is to prevent delay in the distribution of estates. The court concluded that the policy would be served in this case by hearing the petition for the writ, "even if the superior court's order is appealable, given the short filing period requirements [for creditors' claims] in probate matters, the need for timely and orderly administration of estates, and the importance of the issues presented in this case" (10 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098) . The important issue was whether the court of appeal may extend the time for filing a creditor's claim, in order to permit meaningful review of the probate court's interpretation of a forfeiture clause (the no-contest clause) in a will. The court concluded that it had the authority to do that (10 Cal. App. 4th 1092, 1098-1102) .

Order Denying Discovery. Appeal is not an adequate remedy to review an order denying discovery to which the petitioner is entitled, particularly if the petitioner presents a significant issue of first impression (Leake v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 675, 677, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 767).

[a] Use of Form

This form may be submitted in support of the contention that the petitioner lacks a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, because the petitioner's remedy by appeal is inadequate. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Order Denying Discovery

In Leake v. Superior Court (2001) 87 Cal. App. 4th 675, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 767 , the People commenced proceedings for commitment of the petitioner pursuant to the Sexually Violent Predator Act (Welf. & Inst. Code § 6600 et seq.). The petitioner moved the trial court for an order requiring exchange of expert witness information. However, when the People sought a protective order, the trial court ruled that civil discovery is not applicable to proceedings pursuant to the Sexually Violent Predator Act. The petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to grant his discovery motion.

Initially, the court of appeal observed that appellate courts usually do not provide extraordinary relief concerning pretrial discovery orders. Nonetheless, it determined that such relief was justified for two reasons. First, the petitioner identified a significant issue of first impression--that is, whether civil discovery applies to proceedings pursuant to the Sexually Violent Predator Act. And second, the effect of the trial court's protective order was to deny the petitioner discovery to which he may have been entitled. Accordingly, the court granted the petition, finding civil discovery applies to proceedings pursuant to the Sexually Violent Predator Act (87 Cal. App. 4th 675, 677) .

A. Doubts Resolved in Favor of Denial. Doubts as to whether writ relief is warranted should be resolved in favor of denial of review (see Whitney's at the Beach v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 266, 83 Cal. Rptr. 237).

B. Factors for Consideration When Petitioner Can Appeal From Eventual Judgment. A writ petition should be denied when (1) granting the petition would encourage piecemeal litigation and foster the delay of a trial, vex the litigants and the trial court with multiple proceedings, and add to the delay of judgment appeals pending in the appellate court, particularly when consideration of writ will neither save time nor aid in the resolution of the lawsuit; or (2) the purported error may be cured prior to trial, have little or no effect on the outcome of the trial, or be properly considered on appeal (see Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1272-1273, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66).

C. Time and Expense of Appeal. A petitioner's remedy of appeal from a judgment or order is not inadequate merely because the appeal will cost more and take longer than the writ proceeding (Jollie v. Superior Court (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 52, 56, 237 P.2d 641 ; Mitchell v. Superior Court (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 304, 219 P.2d 861 ; see Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1269, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66).

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the contention that a writ of mandate or prohibition is proper. The ground for opposition is that petitioner has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law by way of appeal.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, the foregoing points and authorities may be used to oppose the contentions supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 150.165-150.182.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Doubts Resolved in Favor of Denial

The facts and procedure in Whitney's at the Beach v. Superior Court (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 83 Cal. Rptr. 237 , are discussed in § 150.176[3][c]. In its discussion of the principles governing writ review of an order denying summary judgment, the court of appeal stated that doubt about whether relief is warranted should be resolved in favor of denial of review (3 Cal. App. 3d 258, 266) .

[b] Direct Appeal

In Phelan v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 363, 217 P.2d 951 , plaintiff recovered a judgment and defendant made a motion for new trial. The trial court denied the motion but reduced the amount of the judgment. After the time for appeal from the order had expired, plaintiff sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to strike that portion of the order that reduced the judgment.

The Supreme Court denied the writ on the ground that petitioner had failed to request the lower court to act (35 Cal. 2d 363, 372-375) . The Court also held the order was appealable and the right to appeal afforded petitioner a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy (35 Cal. 2d 363, 370-372) . The court reasoned that when there is a right to an immediate review by appeal, that remedy is almost as speedy as a writ proceeding and should be considered adequate unless petitioner can show some reason why it is rendered inadequate by the particular circumstances of the case. Although petitioner alleged that he had no other adequate remedy and that he would suffer great and irreparable harm unless the writ issued, these bare allegations, without supporting facts, were not sufficient to sustain the burden of showing the appellate remedy was inadequate (35 Cal. 2d 363, 370) . Furthermore, petitioner was in no position to claim that the remedy of immediate review by appeal was less expeditious than mandate because he waited until his time to appeal lapsed and then applied for the writ, without any excuse for his failure to file an appeal (35 Cal. 2d 363, 370-371) .

In Augustyn v. Superior Court (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1221, 231 Cal. Rptr. 298 , petitioner was one of thousands of investors who were defrauded in a statewide investment scheme perpetrated by a licensed real estate broker and the broker's employees, some of whom also had real estate licenses. The defrauded investors had recourse to a recovery fund that was established by the state Real Estate Commissioner to compensate victims of real estate fraud. However, there was not enough money in the fund to pay all the defrauded investors their full damages. Therefore, the Commissioner brought an action under Bus. & Prof. Code § 10470 et seq. (Recovery Act) to consolidate all claims arising from the investment scheme, including those claims based on dealings with employees who were separately licensed, so that payments could be prorated and then equitably distributed among all claimants. The trial court construed the Recovery Act to permit only one recovery when only one license was necessary to complete the transaction. Therefore, the court granted the request for consolidation and issued a declaratory judgment ruling that any investor defrauded by one of the separately licensed agents could make only one claim against the fund, against the account of the licensed broker who employed the agents. Petitioner, who had dealt with a separately licensed agent, sought a writ of mandate contending that he was entitled to more than one recovery against the fund.

The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that preliminary review by extraordinary writ was inappropriate (186 Cal. App. 3d 1221, 1225, 1229) . The court reasoned that the declaratory relief ruling was a final judgment between the Commissioner and particular applicants and, therefore, petitioner had an adequate remedy in the form of a prompt appeal. Furthermore, the court explained, an appeal was the preferred remedy in petitioner's case because considering a writ petition by one individual claimant would leave the claims of other investors for piecemeal determination. Finally, the court appeared to give weight to the fact that there was no obvious or manifest abuse of discretion in the trial court's ruling that all claimants were entitled to only one recovery. The ruling was supported by the decisions cited and petitioner could cite no contrary authority directly construing the applicable statutes (186 Cal. App. 3d 1221, 1225) .

[c] Enforcement of Judgment or Order Has Been Stayed and Supersedeas Available

In general, the perfection of an appeal stays proceedings in the trial court [Code Civ. Proc. § 916(a)]. However, certain judgments are not automatically stayed by appeal [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 917.1-917.9].

In McAneny v. Superior Court (1906) 150 Cal. 6, 87 P. 1020 , the trial court appointed a receiver in a divorce proceeding to take control of a spouse's property to enforce its judgment. Petitioner appealed the judgment and stayed further proceedings by a stay bond. Petitioner then sought a writ of prohibition on the basis that the appointment of a receiver was in excess of jurisdiction. The Supreme Court denied the writ (150 Cal. 6, 10) . In its discussion of the adequacy of other remedies, the Court held that an appeal was an adequate remedy because an appeal stayed the enforcement of the judgment and a writ of supersedeas was available to restrain the trial court if it attempted to proceed to enforce the judgment (150 Cal. 6, 9-10) . The Court noted that petitioner contended that the remedy by appeal was not adequate because of the amount of the stay bond, that the respondent denied the allegation, and that the court was unable to rule on this contention because the case was submitted without a trial (150 Cal. 6, 10) .

In Moon v. Superior Court (1943) 59 Cal. App. 2d 447, 139 P.2d 84 , petitioner appealed an unfavorable custody order. The trial court made an order purportedly staying the enforcement of the custody order but later discontinued the stay and ordered petitioner to deliver custody to respondent. Petitioner applied for a writ of prohibition. The court of appeal denied the writ, holding that the appeal automatically stayed enforcement of the judgment and that the trial court's attempt to discontinue the stay could be overturned by a writ of supersedeas (59 Cal. App. 2d 447, 449-450) . Therefore, petitioner's remedy by appeal was adequate (59 Cal. App. 2d 447, 450) .

Counsel should note that a custody order is no longer automatically stayed by appeal [see Code Civ. Proc. § 917.7].

[d] Factors for Consideration When Petitioner Can Appeal From Eventual Judgment

In Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66 , plaintiffs brought an action against their tenants for property damages and included a claim for declaratory relief against the tenant's insurer. The trial court denied the insurer's motion to sever the declaratory relief action. The insurer petitioned for a writ of mandate and the court of appeal summarily denied the writ. The Supreme Court granted a petition for review and retransferred the case with direction to issue an alternative writ.

In its decision granting the peremptory writ of mandate, the court of appeal set out its reason for its summary denial--the record was incomplete--and set out, for the guidance of practitioners, the principles that appear to govern appellate courts' decisions to summarily deny a writ petition. The court noted that the large number of rejections of writ petitions demonstrates that courts will not use their scarce resources to second-guess every ruling and order of the trial court, particularly when to do so would save neither time nor aid in the resolution of a lawsuit. Reviewing courts take a strict view of the extraordinary nature of the writs lest they run the risk of encouraging piecemeal litigation and fostering the delay of trials, vexing the litigants and trial courts with multiple proceedings, and adding to the delay of judgment appeals pending in the appellate court (209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1272) . Further, some issues may diminish in importance as a case proceeds towards trial and petitioners seeking extraordinary writs do not always consider that a purported error of a trial judge may be cured prior to trial, have little or no effect on the outcome of the trial, or be properly considered on appeal (209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1273) .

[e] Time and Expense of Appeal

The facts and procedure in Omaha Indemnity Co. v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 258 Cal. Rptr. 66 , are discussed under § 150.185[3][d]. The court of appeal recognized that error by the trial judge does not of itself insure that a writ petition will be granted because a remedy will not be deemed inadequate merely because additional time and effort would be consumed by its being pursued through the ordinary course of the law (209 Cal. App. 3d 1266, 1269) .

In Jollie v. Superior Court (1951) 38 Cal. 2d 52, 237 P.2d 641 , the writ of prohibition was sought on the ground that indispensable parties had not been joined and therefore that the court was acting in excess of jurisdiction. The court of appeal found that the remedy of appeal by one party was not inadequate merely because it would entail a large expenditure of time and money (38 Cal. 2d 52, 56) . It then found that certain parties were not indispensable and denied the writ (38 Cal. 2d 52, 57-59) .

In Mitchell v. Superior Court (1950) 98 Cal. App. 2d 304, 219 P.2d 861 , petitioner sought a writ of prohibition from the action of a trial court in a partition action. The court of appeal held that the writ should be denied because the petitioner's remedy of appeal was not inadequate merely because an appeal would take time and cost money (98 Cal. App. 2d 304, 305) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Direct Appeal

In Conway v. Municipal Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 166 Cal. Rptr. 246 , petitioner was a defendant in a municipal court action. Petitioner failed to appear on the date of trial and a default judgment was entered in the plaintiff's favor. Petitioner then moved to set aside the judgment. When the motion was denied, petitioner made a motion for reconsideration, which the municipal court also denied. Subsequently, petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate directing the municipal court to set aside the default judgment. A week after filing the petition, petitioner also filed an appeal from the denial of the motion for reconsideration. By the time the appellate department of the superior court heard the writ petition, petitioner was in default with respect to his appeal because no clerk's transcript had been prepared. The appellate department issued the writ of mandate and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding that a writ of mandate was not available because his direct right of appeal from the order denying his motion to set aside the default judgment constituted a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law (107 Cal. App. 3d 1009, 1014) .

[b] Time and Expense of Appeal

In Brock v. Superior Court (1947) 29 Cal. 2d 629, 177 P.2d 273 , petitioner sought a writ of prohibition on the basis that a motion for change of venue should have been granted. In denying the writ, the Supreme Court held that the remedy of appeal was not inadequate merely because appeal is not as expeditious as prohibition (29 Cal. 2d 629, 638-639) .

[c] Factors for Consideration When Petitioner Can Appeal From Eventual Judgment

In Nguyen v. Superior Court (2007) 150 Cal. App. 4th 1006 , a losing candidate filed an election contest in the trial court. When the trial court rejected his challenge, he filed a petition for writ of mandate. The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that the candidate had an adequate remedy at law. The statute at issue, Elec. Code § 16900, provided that any party aggrieved by a court judgment in an election contest may appeal to the court of appeal, and that the person declared elected by the superior court is entitled to the office in like manner as if no appeal had been taken. In addition, the court noted that Code of Civ. Proc. § 44 provides that courts of appeal give preference to appeals in election contests.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Seek Writ in Lower Court

In Los Angeles County v. Nesvig (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 600, 41 Cal. Rptr. 916 , a county approved a lease-leaseback scheme to finance the construction of a new museum. Two nonprofit corporations, one which contracted to operate the proposed museum and one which hoped to get the lease and build the museum, sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal to compel the clerk of the board of supervisors to invite bids on the lease, as was required by statute. Petitioners contended that the suit raised an important question of whether the statute applied to the construction of nonmandatory public facilities and, in addition, that a speedy decision was essential because county property was lying idle with no return of revenue. The court of appeal denied the writ, holding that no exceptional circumstances were shown to justify an exercise of original jurisdiction (231 Cal. App. 2d 600, 602-603) . It is not the policy of the appellate court, the court explained, to entertain original proceedings when such proceedings could as well have been instituted in the superior court (231 Cal. App. 2d 600, 601) . Although an exercise of original jurisdiction would be appropriate if construction was already underway, if a substantial part of the project were in operation, and if tenants were awaiting completion, these circumstances were not present in petitioners' case (231 Cal. App. 2d 600, 602) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Seek Writ in Lower Court

In Bonelli v. Flournoy (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 495, 58 Cal. Rptr. 535 , petitioner, a former member of the state tax board, sought a writ of mandate in the court of appeal to compel the State Controller to pay him his retirement pension. The Controller had impounded the pension on the ground that petitioner illegally solicited and kept funds as a member of the tax board and that the amount he owed the state, though still undetermined, was greater than the amount due on his pension. The Controller had also filed suit against petitioner to recover the diverted funds but was unable to effect service because petitioner had fled the country. The court of appeal denied the writ, holding that the facts did not furnish a sufficient reason to excuse petitioners from applying to the superior court for relief. Furthermore, the court observed, petitioner seemed to be trying to get a strategic advantage over the position he would be in were he to file a cross-complaint in the Controller's action or initiate a suit in superior court (250 Cal. App. 2d 495, 500) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE PETITIONER FAILED TO REQUEST THE LOWER COURT TO _____ [PERFORM THE ACT TO BE COMPELLED BY THE WRIT or OBJECT TO THE ACT TO BE RESTRAINED BY THE WRIT].

A. Relief Not Requested Below. Before seeking writ review, petitioner should first request the lower court to act, unless it appears that the demand would have been futile; it is assumed that any valid objection properly brought to the attention of that court will prevail (Phelan v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 363, 372, 217 P.2d 951 (mandate); Citizens Utilities Co. v. Superior Court (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 805, 814, 31 Cal. Rptr. 316, 382 P.2d 356 (prohibition)).

[Optional] B. Relief Requested But Court Below Has Not Ruled. When an objection was raised in the court below and that court has not yet ruled on the issue, a writ should not be issued because it will not be presumed that the lower court will rule incorrectly (American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers v. Superior Court (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 676, 686, 24 Cal. Rptr. 772 (prohibition)).

[Optional] C. Petitioner Could Have Intervened. When petitioner is not a party to an action, a writ should not issue if petitioner could have moved to intervene in the action and then raised an objection in the lower court (MacFarland v. Superior Court (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 173, 176, 38 P.2d 800 (prohibition)).

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate and prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relief Not Requested Below

The facts and procedure of Phelan v. Superior Court (1950) 35 Cal. 2d 363, 217 P.2d 951 , are discussed in § 150.185[3][b]. In that case, the Supreme Court denied a petition for writ of mandate on the ground that petitioner failed to make a motion to vacate a challenged order. Instead, petitioner waited until after the time for appeal had passed and then filed a writ petition, without ever having presented the matter to the trial court. Before seeking mandate in an appellate court to compel action by a trial court, the Court held, a party should first request the lower court to act. If such a request has not been made, the writ ordinarily will not issue unless it appears that the demand would have been futile (35 Cal. 2d 363, 372) .

In Citizens Utilities Co. v. Superior Court (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 805, 814, 31 Cal. Rptr. 316, 382 P.2d 356 , petitioner, a public utility, sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from trying an eminent domain action, contending that the court did not have jurisdiction to proceed. The Supreme Court held that the writ should not issue because the petitioner had not properly raised the issue with the trial court, and, if the issue had been properly raised, the trial court could have devised a procedure to protect petitioner's rights. The Court noted that petitioner's failure to raise the issue below caused extended and unwarranted litigation (59 Cal. 2d 805, 814) .

[b] Relief Requested But Court Has Not Ruled

In American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers v. Superior Court (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 676, 24 Cal. Rptr. 772 , petitioner was a society of composers that was being sued by one of its former members. The society moved for summary judgment on the ground that the superior court did not have jurisdiction because plaintiff had not exhausted his remedies under the society's rules. The trial court denied the motion for summary judgment, and petitioner sought a writ of prohibition to restrain the superior court from proceeding with the action.

The court of appeal held that a writ of prohibition was not proper when the lower court had not yet decided the jurisdictional issue and that the lower court had not so decided because the ruling on the summary judgment was only that there was a factual dispute and not a ruling that the court had jurisdiction. The court of appeal stated that it would not anticipate that the superior court would incorrectly decide the jurisdictional issue (207 Cal. App. 2d 676, 686) . The court of appeal then found that petitioner claimed that its affidavits established as a matter of law that the action should be dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Therefore, the court of appeal considered the merits and found that the affidavits did not establish lack of jurisdiction as a matter of law. It denied the writ (207 Cal. App. 2d 676, 691) .

[c] Petitioner Could Have Intervened

MacFarland v. Superior Court (1934) 3 Cal. App. 2d 173, 38 P.2d 800 , arose from an unlawful detainer action in which a writ of possession was obtained. Petitioner, who was not a party to the unlawful detainer action, took possession of the premises, claiming rights as an assignee for creditors of the defendant in the unlawful detainer action. The plaintiff in the unlawful detainer action instituted an action for a writ of mandate against the sheriff to compel him to execute the writ of possession. Petitioner sought a writ of prohibition against the mandate action on the basis that it was in excess of jurisdiction. The court of appeal held that petitioner should have made its claim of lack of jurisdiction to respondent superior court by intervening in the proceeding for mandate. Since it had not done so, the writ of prohibition was denied (3 Cal. App. 2d 173, 175-176) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Relief Not Requested Below

In Sayegh v. Superior Court (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 814, 285 P.2d 267 , petitioner applied for a family allowance during probate of her deceased husband's will, which omitted any provision for her. Although she had signed a prenuptial agreement waiving all interest in the decedent's estate, the trial court found that the agreement was obtained by duress, fraud, and undue influence and granted her the family allowance. The heirs named in decedent's will later commenced a proceeding to determine heirship under the terms of the will. Petitioner requested the probate judge to terminate the heirship proceeding on the ground that the order for family allowance was a final judgment binding on all parties interested in the estate. The judge refused to rule on the issue and set the case for trial, and petitioner sought a writ of prohibition. The Supreme Court denied the writ, holding that the petition was premature because prohibition ordinarily will not be granted until an objection to jurisdiction has been made and overruled in the lower court. The trial court's refusal to rule on the res judicata effect of the order for family allowance, the Court concluded, did not constitute a decision on the issue (44 Cal. 2d 814, 815-816) .

In Schaeffer v. Municipal Court (1968) 260 Cal. App. 2d 819, 67 Cal. Rptr. 479 , petitioner was charged in municipal court with drunk driving. He petitioned the superior court for a writ of prohibition on the ground that police procedures requiring him to choose a chemical test for blood alcohol without first consulting an attorney prevented him from having chemical tests of alcohol content available for trial. The superior court issued the writ and the People appealed. The court of appeal discharged the writ, holding that it was improperly issued because the petitioner had not established that he had raised the issue in the municipal court by moving to suppress evidence or by any other remedy, thus giving the lower court the opportunity to rule correctly on the issue (260 Cal. App. 2d 819, 823-824) .

Laches. When there has been an unreasonable delay in the filing of the writ petition and respondent or real party in interest has suffered prejudice as a result of the delay, petitioner is guilty of laches and a writ of should not issue (see Conti v. Board of Civil Service Commissioners (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 351, 359-360, 82 Cal. Rptr. 337, 461 P.2d 617 ; Lewis v. Superior Court (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 736, 740-741, 68 Cal. Rptr. 631).

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a writ of mandate or prohibition. The ground for opposition is that the defense of laches bars relief under the circumstances of the case.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.78). In an appropriate case, the foregoing form may also be combined with points and authorities opposing the petition on the ground that an applicable statute of limitations has lapsed (see § 150.205).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in addition to showing that petitioner could have reasonably sought writ relief sooner, counsel should demonstrate the actual prejudice that respondent or real party in interest suffered as a result of petitioner's delay [see § 150.201[2][b]].

[b] Establishing the Defense of Laches

The defense of laches requires unreasonable delay in bringing suit, plus either acquiescence in the act about which petitioner complains or prejudice to the respondent resulting from the delay. Prejudice is never presumed but must be affirmatively demonstrated [Miller v. Eisenhower Medical Center (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 614, 624, 166 Cal. Rptr. 826, 614 P.2d 258 (finding no laches even though petition for writ of mandate filed one year and 17 days after receiving notice of challenged action)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Laches

In Conti v. Board of Civil Service Commissioners (1969) 1 Cal. 3d 351, 82 Cal. Rptr. 337, 461 P.2d 617 , a city employee who was discharged appealed to a civil service board, which upheld the discharge. Petitioner filed a petition for writ of mandate six months later but the matter lay dormant because a draft of an alternative writ did not accompany the petition. Petitioner's counsel discovered the omission and set the case for hearing on a date 10 months and 25 days after receiving notice of the board's decision. The superior court issued a writ of mandate compelling petitioner's reinstatement, finding that there was no validity in the defense of laches because the ten-month delay in filing the petition was excusable and inadvertent and because respondents suffered no prejudice from the delay. Respondents appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed and remanded the cause for further proceedings, holding that there was no evidence to sustain the court's finding that the delay was excusable or that respondents suffered no prejudice from the delay (1 Cal. 3d 351, 357-358) . The defense of laches, the Court recognized, requires unreasonable delay plus either acquiescence in the act about which petitioner complains or prejudice to the respondent resulting from the delay (1 Cal. 3d 351, 359) . Prejudice cannot be presumed, the Court held, because it is one of the required elements of the defense (1 Cal. 3d 351, 360-362) .

In Lewis v. Superior Court (1968) 261 Cal. App. 2d 736, 68 Cal. Rptr. 631 , the trial court ordered plaintiff to join parties to the action as indispensable parties and vacated the trial date. When plaintiff moved to set the case for trial, the court denied the motion because the parties had not yet been joined. Eight months later, plaintiff moved again to set the case for trial and the motion was denied. Plaintiff then sought a writ of mandate to compel the trial court to set the action for trial.

The court of appeal denied the writ, holding that petitioner was guilty of laches. Petitioner made no showing to justify the delay in seeking relief from the trial court's first denial of the motion to set, which might have been challenged promptly by a mandate proceeding (261 Cal. App. 2d 736, 741) .

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE PETITIONER IS GUILTY OF UNCLEAN HANDS.

Unclean Hands. When a petitioner for a prerogative writ has unclean hands, a writ should not issue (Crestlawn Memorial Park Asso. v. Sobieski (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 43, 51, 26 Cal. Rptr. 421 (mandate)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a writ of mandate or prohibition. The ground for opposition is that the defense of unclean hands bars relief under the circumstances of the case.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Unclean Hands

In Crestlawn Memorial Park Asso. v. Sobieski (1962) 210 Cal. App. 2d 43, 26 Cal. Rptr. 421 , the Commission of Corporations amended a permit to issue corporate stock after a substantial portion of the stock had been sold and issued pursuant to the permit. Petitioners, whose voting shares were reduced by the amendment, sought a writ of mandate to compel the Commission to set aside its decision to amend the permit. The trial court denied the writ on the grounds that the original permit was issued as a result of petitioners' nondisclosures and would not have been issued had the Commissioner known the facts concerning the motives and intentions of petitioners and the group of stockholders associated with them. The court of appeal affirmed, holding in relevant part that a proceeding for a writ of mandate is an equitable proceeding in which the doctrine of unclean hands applies. The writ was properly denied, the court concluded, because the trial court found that petitioners participated in a conspiracy and that each of them sought the aid of the court with "unclean hands" because they were unjust, unfair, and inequitable in their acts and dealings (210 Cal. App. 2d 43, 51) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

THE COURT SHOULD DECLINE TO ISSUE THE REQUESTED WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] BECAUSE A PRIOR ALTERNATIVE WRIT WAS ISSUED AND THAT HOLDING IS RES JUDICATA IN THIS PROCEEDING.

Prior Denial Is Res Judicata. When the petitioner has previously sought a prerogative writ and the court issued an alternative writ, the prior holding is res judicata and precludes granting a writ on a second application for the same purpose involving the same parties and the same facts (Overstreet v. County of Butte (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 504, 506, 20 Cal. Rptr. 631, 370 P.2d 335 ; Kowis v. Howard (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 888, 894-895, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728, 838 P.2d 250 (decided under "law of the case" doctrine); Carretti v. Italpast (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 1242, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126 (without written decision, denial of writ petition does not constitute decision on merits with res judicata effect)).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

The foregoing points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a writ of mandate or prohibition. The ground for opposition is that the relief is barred by res judicata.

The foregoing points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in the foregoing form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Summary Denial of Prior Petition Bars Relief

A summary denial of a writ of mandate or prohibition, without an opinion, is not res judicata [Kowis v. Howard (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 888, 894-895, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728, 838 P.2d 250] .

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate and prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Prior Denial Is Res Judicata

In Overstreet v. County of Butte (1962) 57 Cal. 2d 504, 20 Cal. Rptr. 631, 370 P.2d 335 , plaintiff brought a wrongful death action against a county and the county's demurrer, based on sovereign immunity, was overruled. The county petitioned for a writ of prohibition and the court of appeal issued the writ, directing the superior court to dismiss the action. Plaintiff then appealed the dismissal, contending that there had been an intervening change in the law governing sovereign immunity. The Supreme Court affirmed the dismissal, holding that res judicata applied (57 Cal. 2d 504, 507) . When a proceeding in prohibition is determined on the merits and becomes final, the Court explained, the judgment is res judicata in later special proceedings involving the same parties and the same set of facts (57 Cal. 2d 504, 506) .

In Kowis v. Howard (1992) 3 Cal. 4th 888, 894-895, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 728, 838 P.2d 250 , the trial court denied defendant's motion for relief from a discovery order. The defendant filed a writ of mandate contending that the trial court erred in denying his motion for relief. The court of appeal summarily denied the petition. After trial and verdict, the defendant appealed again contending that the trial court abused its discretion in denying his motion for relief. The court of appeal held that the earlier summary denial of the petition for the writ of mandate was "clearly on the merits" and found itself precluded from reconsidering the issue by the doctrine of law of the case. The Supreme Court granted review on the question whether the court of appeal erred in applying the law of the case doctrine after summary denial of the writ of mandate (3 Cal. 4th 888, 892) .

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal and remanded with instruction to consider the issue on the merits. It held that a summary denial of a writ of mandate does not establish law of the case whether the denial is intended to be on the merits or for some other reason (3 Cal. 4th 888, 899) . The Court's analysis of the law of the case doctrine applies equally to situations involving the res judicata effect of a ruling.

In Carretti v. Italpast (2002) 101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 125 Cal. Rptr. 2d 126 , a cross-defendant filed a motion to quash service of the summons upon it based on lack of personal jurisdiction. When the trial court denied the motion, the cross-defendant filed a petition for a writ of mandate. The court of appeal ordered the issuance of an alternative writ of mandate directing the trial court to either vacate its order denying the motion to quash or show cause why a peremptory writ of mandate should not be issued. In response, the trial court vacated its order and granted the motion to quash. The court of appeal then discharged the alternative writ and denied for mootness the petition for a writ of mandate.

The cross-complainant filed a notice of appeal from the order granting the motion to quash. The cross-complainant argued that the court of appeal was not precluded from reversing the trial court's order by virtue of the fact that it previously issued an alternative writ and later summarily denied the writ petition. The court of appeal agreed, holding that merely because a court has denied a petition for writ of mandate, it has not necessarily made a decision on the merits having res judicata effect. The proper rule is that unless a written opinion follows the issuance of an alternative writ, the denial of a writ petition does not have issue-preclusive effect (101 Cal. App. 4th 1236, 1242) .

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF _____ [MANDATE or PROHIBITION] SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE ISSUE IT RAISES IS MOOT.

A. Mootness. A writ will not issue when the question presented is moot (Environmental Coalition of Orange County, Inc. v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 164, 170-171, 167 Cal. Rptr. 735 (mandate); Genser v. McElvy (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 711-712, 82 Cal. Rptr. 521 (mandate); *Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. [Optional] B. Compliance With Alternative Writ. A writ will not issue when respondent has complied with petitioner's demands after issuance of an alternative writ (see Bruce v. Gregory (1967) 65 Cal. 2d 666, 671, 56 Cal. Rptr. 265, 423 P.2d 193).

C. Useful Purpose Not Served. A writ will not issue when issuance of the writ would be useless, unenforceable, or unavailing (Genser v. McElvy (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 711, 82 Cal. Rptr. 521 ; Zagoren v. Hall (1932) 122 Cal. App 460, 462, 10 P.2d 202).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a writ of mandate or prohibition. The ground for opposition is that the issue raised by the petition is moot, and issuance of the writ would therefore be useless or unenforceable.

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see § 150.78).

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For discussion, forms, and a procedural guide relating to mandate and prohibition proceedings, see Ch. 358, Mandate and Prohibition in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Mootness

In Environmental Coalition of Orange County, Inc. v. Local Agency Formation Com. (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 164, 167 Cal. Rptr. 735 , petitioner appealed the denial of a writ of mandate to compel a local agency to annul its current environmental impact report and to prepare a new, more comprehensive report on a proposed annexation area to the city. Petitioner failed, however, to name the city as a defendant, to notify it of the petition, and to enjoin it from proceeding with the annexation. Therefore, the annexation had been completed before the hearing on the writ.

The court of appeal held that the previously justiciable controversy was moot (110 Cal. App. 3d 164, 170-171) . It also noted that a judgment in the case could not annul annexation because the court had no personal jurisdiction over the city, which was not a party to the action. Therefore, the court dismissed the appeal on its own motion (110 Cal. App. 3d 164, 173) .

In Genser v. McElvy (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 82 Cal. Rptr. 521 , the State Architect approved a change order that substituted plastic pipe for metal pipe in the construction of a school. Petitioners, contending that use of the plastic pipe was unsafe and violated the Education Code, sought a writ of mandate to compel the State Architect to revoke the change order. The trial court denied the writ, and the court of appeal affirmed on the ground that the proceeding was moot (276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 711) . It explained that issuance of the writ would be ineffectual because the plastic pipe had already been installed and encased in the walls and floors of the school (276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 712) .

In Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. v. Superior Court (1938) 10 Cal. 2d 545, 76 P.2d 108 , petitioners appealed a verdict against them and then sought a writ of prohibition because they were not sure whether appeal or prohibition would secure the appropriate relief. The appeal and the petition for a writ were heard together. The holding on the appeal was such that the issues raised on the writ of prohibition were not applicable and the Supreme Court dismissed the petition as moot (10 Cal. 2d 545, 546) .

In Campbell v. Superior Court (1932) 126 Cal. App 652, 14 P.2d 925 , the petition for a writ of prohibition was an attempt to restrain the actions of the superior court in entertaining an election challenge. However, pending the decision on prohibition, a recount showed clearly that petitioner had lost the election and made the issue raised in the petition for prohibition moot. Therefore, the court of appeal denied the writ (126 Cal. App 652, 653-654) .

[b] Compliance With Alternative Writ

In Bruce v. Gregory (1967) 65 Cal. 2d 666, 56 Cal. Rptr. 265, 423 P.2d 193 , petitioner was a citizen and taxpayer who sought to compel a tax collector to make certain tax records regularly available for inspection. The trial judge denied the petition after the tax collector promulgated amended regulations allowing access to the records. The Supreme Court affirmed, holding that the amended regulations were valid (65 Cal. 2d 666, 678-679) . The Court also held that the trial court properly considered the amended regulations because the court is required to apprise itself of facts that arise after pleading that render the dispute moot or make the remedy useless (65 Cal. 2d 666, 671, 673) . If a respondent has complied with the petitioner's demands after issuance of the alternative writ, the Court stated, the writ has accomplished the purpose of the proceedings and the petition should be dismissed as moot (65 Cal. 2d 666, 671) .

[c] Useful Purpose Not Served

The facts and procedure in Genser v. McElvy (1969) 276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 82 Cal. Rptr. 521 , are discussed under § 150.204[3][a]. In affirming denial of a writ of mandate on the ground that the proceeding was moot, the court of appeal stated that the writ will not be issued when it would be useless, unenforceable, or unavailing (276 Cal. App. 2d 709, 711) .

In Zagoren v. Hall (1932) 122 Cal. App 460, 10 P.2d 202 , petitioner was an attorney who sought a writ of mandate to compel the county clerk to issue a writ of execution to satisfy an order for the payment of attorney's fees that had been granted for his services in behalf of an estate. The court of appeal refused to issue the writ because there was no property in the estate against which the writ of execution could be levied. The court stated that a writ of mandate will not be issued when it would be useless, unenforceable, or unavailing (122 Cal. App 460, 462) .

§ 150.205 Opposing Petition for Writ of Mandate [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1085, 1086] or Prohibition [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1102, 1103]--Lapse of Statute of Limitations or Statutory Period for Filing Petition

[The following should be combined, when appropriate, with a general form of memorandum opposing a petition for a writ of mandate (see, e.g., § 150.47) or a petition for a writ of prohibition (see, e.g., § 150.78).]

A WRIT OF MANDATE SHOULD NOT ISSUE BECAUSE THE APPLICABLE _____ [STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS or TIME PERIOD FOR FILING THE PETITION] HAS EXPIRED.

[EITHER]

A. Lapse of Statute of Limitations. A proceeding for a writ of mandate is barred if it is not commenced within the period prescribed by the applicable statute of limitations (Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 688, 697, 197 P.2d 721).

B. Applicable Limitation Period. The appropriate limitation period in a proceeding for a writ of mandate depends on what right is involved and begins to run when the right first accrues (Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 688, 693, 697, 197 P.2d 721 ; Union Paving Co. v. City Council (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 440, 442-443, 11 Cal. Rptr. 351).

[OR]

A. Lapse of Time Period for Filing Petition. The petitioner is not authorized to seek review of the challenged order by petition for writ of mandate, because he/she did not file the petition within the express time limits for seeking such review (see [specify applicable statutory time period, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 400]).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a writ of mandate on the ground that the petition is barred by the lapse of the applicable statute of limitations, or that it was not filed within the applicable statutory time period [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. § 400 (petition to review order granting or denying motion to change venue is generally required to be filed within 20 days after service of notice of order)].

These points and authorities should be combined with a general memorandum opposing a petition for writ of mandate (see § 150.47). In an appropriate case, the foregoing form may also be combined with points and authorities opposing the petition on the ground that the defense of laches also applies (see § 150.201).

Generally, the defense of laches or lapse of an applicable statute of limitation period has not arisen in proceedings for a writ of prohibition, because these are usually promptly initiated in view of the requirement that the writ issue only to arrest a threatened but uncompleted judicial action. In an appropriate case, however, this form may be adapted for use in such a proceeding.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Lapse of Statute of Limitations

There is no general statutory time limit on the application for writs [see State v. Superior Court of San Mateo County (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 396, 399, 69 Cal. Rptr. 683] . Some courts have held that, if a petition for writ of mandate filed in an appellate court seeks review of a trial court ruling, and there is no other statutory time limit, the petition may be denied as untimely if it is not filed within the 60-day period normally applicable to filing notice of appeal [see Popelka, Allard, McCowan & Jones v. Superior Court (1980) 107 Cal. App. 3d 496, 499, 165 Cal. Rptr. 748 (noting that court has discretion to deny petition on this basis regardless of actual prejudice)]. In addition, petitions for writ of mandate have been held to be subject to the statute of limitations, the applicable period being determined by the nature of the right asserted in the petition [see Allen v. Humboldt County Bd. of Supervisors (1963) 220 Cal. App. 2d 877, 884, 34 Cal. Rptr. 232] . The applicable limitation period begins to run when the petitioner's right first accrues [Monroe v. Trustees of the California State Colleges (1971) 6 Cal. 3d 399, 405, 99 Cal. Rptr. 129, 491 P.2d 1105 ; Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 688, 697, 197 P.2d 721] .

Laches may be a proper ground for denying relief in a writ proceeding, even when, in a mandate proceeding, the applicable statute of limitations has been satisfied [Ragan v. City of Hawthorne (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d. 1361, 1368, 261 Cal. Rptr. 219 (mandate proceeding); State v. Superior Court of San Mateo County (1968) 263 Cal. App. 2d 396, 399, 69 Cal. Rptr. 683 (holding that laches had not been established in prohibition proceeding); see § 150.201].

[c] Lapse of Express Statutory Period for Filing Petition

In a number of instances, parties are specifically authorized by statute to seek review of a nonfinal court order by means of a petition for writ of mandate [see, e.g., Fam. Code § 7123(a) (right of minor to petition for writ of mandate to review denial of petition for declaration of emancipation); Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170.3(d) (petition for writ of mandate to review determination of question of disqualification of judge); 400 (petition for writ of mandate to review order granting or denying change in venue), 404.6 (petition for writ of mandate to review order relating to motion for coordination of actions), 405.39 (petition for writ of mandate to review order granting or denying motion to expunge lis pendens); 437c(m) (petition for "peremptory writ" to review nonappealable order relating to motion for summary judgment) 877.6(e) (petition for writ of mandate to review order on motion to determine good-faith settlement); see also Code Civ. Proc. § 1245.255(a)(1) (right to petition for writ of mandate to review resolution of necessity prior to commencement of eminent domain proceeding)]. These statutory provisions generally impose time limitations as well as other procedural requirements in obtaining the writ [see, e.g., Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170.3(d) (requiring party to file petition for writ of mandate within 10 days after notice to parties of decision relating to disqualification of judge), 400 (generally requiring party to file petition within 20 days after service of notice of order relating to motion to change venue), 437c(l) (generally requiring party to file petition within 20 days after service of notice of entry of order relating to summary judgment)].

In such a case, if a petition for writ of mandate has not been filed within the applicable statutory time period, the foregoing form may be adapted to oppose the petition on that ground. Thus the foregoing form, as adapted, may be used to oppose a petition for writ of mandate that is supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 150.170, 150.171, 150.175, 150.176, 150.181, and 150.182.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lapse of Statute of Limitations

In Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 688, 197 P.2d 721 , petitioner sought a writ of mandate to compel a city council and city officials to transfer unencumbered surplus monies in the general fund into a bond redemption fund in order that petitioner could be paid principal and interest on certain improvement bonds he owned. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the petition and entered a dismissal. Petitioner then obtained an order setting aside the judgment and granting leave to file an amended petition. Respondents appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the order and affirmed the judgment of dismissal, holding that petitioner's causes of action for mandate were barred by limitations statutes (32 Cal. 2d 688, 693, 697-698) . The Court reasoned that an action on the bonds was subject to the four-year limitations period prescribed by Code Civ. Proc. § 337 for an action on a written instrument. The bonds held by petitioner matured more than 10 years before the action was commenced and so the action was barred (32 Cal. 2d 688, 693-694) . A proceeding for a writ of mandate is barred, the Court explained, if it is not commenced within the period prescribed by the limitations statutes and that the limitation period begins to run when the right first accrues. Furthermore, petitioner failed to allege facts excusing the delay in seeking the writ of mandate (32 Cal. 2d 688, 697) .

[b] Applicable Limitation Period

Barlow v. City Council of Inglewood (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 688, 197 P.2d 721 , is discussed under § 150.205[3][a].

In Union Paving Co. v. City Council (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 440, 11 Cal. Rptr. 351 , petitioner completed street improvements under contract with a city. The city engineer filed an assessment so that bonds could be issued to cover the sums due for petitioner's work. The city council objected to the assessment, contending that petitioner's work was deficient. Four years later, petitioner asked the city council to confirm the assessment and issue bonds but the city council refused on the ground that the statute of limitations had run on confirmation. After another four years passed, petitioner unsuccessfully demanded that the city council issue a reassessment and then sought a writ of mandate to compel the city council to act. The trial court denied the writ and petitioner appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the action was barred by the statute of limitations (189 Cal. App. 2d 440, 442-443) . The applicable statute commenced to run when petitioner could have made a demand for a reassessment and petitioner's delay of four years in making the demand did not postpone the running of the statute (189 Cal. App. 2d 440, 442) . If the proceeding were deemed an action on a liability created by statute, the proceeding had to be commenced within three years under former Code Civ. Proc. § 338(1) (see now Code Civ. Proc. § 338(a)). It if were deemed an action on a written contract under Code Civ. Proc. § 337 or an action for relief not otherwise provided for under Code Civ. Proc. § 343, then it was necessary for the proceeding to have been commenced within four years. The court pointed out that under any of the limitations periods the proceeding was commenced too late (189 Cal. App. 2d 440, 443) .

Proposed Revision of California Mechanics' Lien Law

In 1999, the California Law Revision Commission was asked to undertake a study of the law governing mechanics' liens and associated construction remedies in California. The resulting recommendation, which includes proposed legislation, was sent to the governor and the legislature in February 2008 [see http://www.clrc.ca.gov/pub/Printed Reports/REC H821.pdf]. The recommendation provided the basis for SB 1691, which was introduced during the 2007-2008 session, passed both the assembly and senate but was vetoed by the governor as not being of sufficiently high priority. The legislation has been resurrected in the 2009-2010 session as SB 189, which, as of December 2009, is under consideration by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. In its current form, SB 189 closely tracks the Commission's proposed legislation, and if enacted, would be operative January 1, 2011. Provided the legislation is enacted, it will be fully incorporated into this chapter in a future release.

Significant changes to current mechanics' lien law that would be made by the proposed legislation include the following:

1. Reorganization. The proposed legislation relocates the provisions of the mechanics' lien law relating to private works of improvement to the end of the Civil Code, beginning with Section 8000. This avoids the confusion of using old Civil Code section numbers for new and different provisions, and allows for future expansion without resorting to decimal section numbering.

The proposed legislation also relocates the statutes governing public work construction remedies, such as the stop notice and payment bond. The public work provisions would be moved into the Public Contract Code, beginning with Section 41010. This is intended to solve the problems created by multiple sets of corresponding but dissimilar provisions for public and private works.

2. Terminology. The proposed legislation cleans up and systematizes the statutory definitions to provide more consistent usage throughout the mechanics' lien law.

3. Standardization of notice provisions. The current mechanics' lien law provides for many types of notice, including preliminary notice, stop notice, notice of overdue laborer compensation, notice of non-responsibility, notice to principal and surety, stop work notice, notice of completion, and notice of cessation. Each notice is subject to unique provisions governing content, service, and proof of service. The proposed legislation standardizes these notice provisions to provide consistency throughout the range of remedies [see proposed Civ. Code §§ 8100-8118]. For example, the legislation prescribes standard content applicable to all notices [see proposed Civ. Code § 8102; proposed Pub. Con. Code § 42120]. It replaces the individual variants in existing law applicable to one type of notice or another by establishing a general procedure for giving notice to be applied throughout the mechanics lien law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 415.20]. It also standardizes the proof of mailing and proof of delivery provisions and adds a provision for proof of electronic notice [see proposed Civ. Code § 8118; proposed Pub. Con. Code § 42190].

4. Preliminary notice. Although the proposed legislation retains most of the substance of the preliminary notice provisions of existing law, the existing provisions are broken into smaller, more comprehensible pieces, streamlines and simplifies their wording, and clarifies the language of the notice [compare Civ. Code §§ 3097, 3098 with proposed Civ. Code §§ 8200-8214].

The proposed legislation eliminates the existing provision that seems to both require a direct contractor to give preliminary notice to the construction lender and exempts the contractor from having to do so [see Civ. Code § 3097(b)]. Under the proposed legislation, the contractor is required to give the lender preliminary notice [see proposed Civ. Code § 8200].

5. Notice of claim of lien. Existing law does not require a lien claimant to notify the owner when a claim of lien is recorded, nor does it require the county recorder to do so except in certain counties, on request. Recognizing that the constitutionality and fairness of the mechanics' lien law would be enhanced if the lien claimant were required to notify the owner on recording a claim of lien, the proposed legislation imposes a recording requirement [see proposed Civ. Code §§ 8418, 8420].

6. Lis pendens requirement. The proposed legislation requires that a claimant who commences an action to enforce a lien claim record a lis pendens disclosing the enforcement action within 110 days of recording the lien claim. Failure to do so results in expiration of the claim, rather than having to wait a year or more [see proposed Civ. Code § 8460(a)].

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT A REQUIRED CIVIL CODE SECTION 3097 PRELIMINARY 20-DAY NOTICE (PRIVATE WORK) WAS GIVEN.

A. Objection by Demurrer. Code of Civil Procedure Section 430.30(a) allows a defendant to demur to the complaint when any ground for objection appears on the face of the complaint. A defendant may demur on the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)).

B. Failure to State Cause of Action. A complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien that fails to allege that the plaintiff gave a preliminary 20-day notice (private work) when required by Civil Code Section 3097 fails to state a cause of action (see Borchers Bros. v. Buckeye Incubator Co. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 234, 240, 28 Cal. Rptr. 697, 379 P.2d 1).

C. Enforcement of Claim of Lien. Civil Code Section 3114 allows a claimant to enforce a mechanics' lien only if the claimant has given a preliminary 20-day notice (private work) as required by Civil Code Section 3097 and has made the requisite proof of service (Civ. Code § 3097.1).

[EITHER]

D. When Preliminary Notice Must Be Given to Owner and Original Contractor. Except one under direct contract with the owner or one performing actual labor for wages, as described in Civil Code Section 3089(a), or a person or entity to whom a portion of a laborer's compensation is paid as described in Civil Code Section 3089(b), every person who furnishes labor, service, equipment, or material for which a mechanics' lien otherwise can be claimed, must give the owner or reputed owner, and the original contractor or reputed contractor, a written preliminary notice no later than 20 days after the claimant has first furnished labor, service, equipment, or materials to the jobsite (Civ. Code § 3097).

[OR]

D. When Preliminary Notice Must Be Given to Construction Lender. Except the contractor, or one performing actual labor for wages, as described in Civil Code Section 3089(a), or a person or entity to whom a portion of a laborer's compensation is paid as described in Civil Code Section 3089(b), all persons, including persons who have a direct contract with the owner, who furnish labor, service, equipment, or material for which a mechanics' lien otherwise can be claimed, must give the construction lender, if any, or reputed construction lender, if any, a written preliminary notice no later than 20 days after the claimant has first furnished labor, service, equipment, or materials to the jobsite (Civ. Code § 3097).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff has failed to plead that he or she gave defendant a preliminary 20-day notice as required by Civ. Code § 3097.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the lack of allegations in the complaint establishing that the plaintiff gave defendant a preliminary 20-day notice. Counsel can then argue that the complaint is subject to demurrer based on the authorities set forth above and discussed below.

[c] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a demurrer when it appears on the face of the complaint that (1) a lien is claimed for labor, services, equipment, or materials furnished more than 20 days before a preliminary 20-day notice (private work) was served on the defendant for the labor, services, equipment, or materials [see Civ. Code § 3097(c), (d)], or (2) service of the notice was done in an improper manner [see Civ. Code §§ 3097(f) (manner of service of notice), 3097.1 (proof of service), 3114 (proof of service as prerequisite to enforcement of lien)] IGA Aluminum Products, Inc. v. Manufacturers Bank (1982) 130 Cal. App. 3d 699, 181 Cal. Rptr. 859 is very much on point in the latter instance. In that case, the court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment when the plaintiff had sent his preliminary notice by regular first class mail instead of by first class registered or certified mail as required by Civ. Code § 3097(f).

This form may also be modified and used to support a demurrer to a complaint to enforce a stop notice claim, based on the failure of the stop notice claimant to give a preliminary 20-day notice (private work) when required by Civ. Code § 3097 [see Civ. Code § 3160 (service of stop notice as ineffective if preliminary notice not given when required)].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of demurrer, together with a discussion of demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.39 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

In Borchers Bros. v. Buckeye Incubator Co. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 234, 28 Cal. Rptr. 697, 379 P.2d 1 , the court sustained a general demurrer to the complaint on the grounds that it failed to allege that plaintiff had given a preliminary notice required by former Code Civ. Proc. § 1193 [now see Civ. Code § 3097]. The sole contention on appeal was the constitutionality of Section 1193. In holding that former Section 1193 was constitutional, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's order dismissing the plaintiff's complaint based on its failure to state a cause of action (59 Cal. 2d 234, 240) .

Former Code Civ. Proc. § 1193 required a preliminary notice to be given not later than 15 days prior to the filing of a claim of lien, unlike its successor Civ. Code § 3097, which requires a preliminary notice to be given within 20 days after a lien claimant has furnished labor, materials, services, or equipment [see Civ. Code § 3097(c), (d)]. However, the purpose of the preliminary 20-day notice remains the same, which is apprising the owner, the construction lender, and the original contractor of potential mechanics' liens claims [see Borchers Bros. v. Buckeye Incubator Co. (1963) 59 Cal. 2d 234, 240, 28 Cal. Rptr. 697, 379 P.2d 1 ; 51 Ops. Cal. Atty. Gen. 65, 69 (1968)] .

[b] Enforcement of Claim of Lien

Serving a preliminary notice is a fairly routine task that should be automatically calendared for every construction job.

Some claimants balk at this, believing it may indicate a lack of trust, but the better practice is to always serve a preliminary notice, rather than risk losing a lien claim.

[c] When Preliminary Notice Must Be Given to Owner and Original Contractor

As indicated in this form, Civ. Code § 3097 refers to Civ. Code § 3089(a) and (b). Civ. Code § 3089(a) defines "laborer" to mean any person who, acting as an employee, performs labor upon or bestows skill or other necessary services on any work of improvement. Under Civ. Code § 3089(b), "laborer" also includes any person or entity, including an express trust fund described in Civ. Code § 3111, to whom a portion of the compensation of a laborer as defined in Civ. Code § 3089(a) (see above) is paid by agreement with that laborer or the collective bargaining agent of that laborer.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to State Cause of Action

Windsor Mills v. Richard B. Smith, Inc. (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 336, 77 Cal. Rptr. 300 , involved an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien. The plaintiff alleged in his third amended complaint that he gave actual and constructive notice to defendants of his intention to file a mechanics' lien, but did not otherwise allege that he gave a preliminary notice. Defendant filed a demurrer based on plaintiff's failure to allege delivery of a written preliminary notice under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1193 [now see Civ. Code § 3097] (272 Cal. App. 2d 336, 337-338) . On appeal from a judgment of dismissal, the court held that an oral preliminary notice was insufficient, and affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the complaint based on its failure to state a cause of action (272 Cal. App. 2d 336, 343) .

[b] When Preliminary Notice Must Be Given to Construction Lender

In Romak Iron Works v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 767, 163 Cal. Rptr. 869 , plaintiff was a subcontractor on a private construction project. Plaintiff gave a 20-day notice to the owner and inquired if there was a construction lender. It was informed that there was no construction lender, which was not true. Several months after it performed the work, it learned of the existence of the construction lender. Plaintiff then gave a 20-day notice to, and served a stop notice, on the lender. When suit was filed to enforce the stop notice, the construction lender moved for summary judgment on the basis of the failure to give notice. The summary judgment was granted.

The court of appeal affirmed. It held that lack of actual knowledge of the construction lender was not an excuse under the statute because the subcontractor could have learned of the lender from the deed of trust or addressed the stop notice to "construction lender" at the job site. It also held that service of the notice on the owner was not sufficient for service on the lender (104 Cal. App. 3d 767, 773-778) .

§ 152.21 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] to Foreclose Mechanics' Lien--Failure to Allege That Materials Furnished Were Intended to Be and Actually Were Used in Work of Improvement

[Caption. See § 152.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT THE MATERIALS FURNISHED BY THE PLAINTIFF WERE INTENDED TO BE AND WERE ACTUALLY USED IN THE WORK OF IMPROVEMENT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 152.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Materials Contributed to Work of Improvement. Only persons and laborers of every class who have furnished materials or leasing equipment to be used or consumed in, or who have furnished appliances, teams, or power that has contributed to, a work of improvement are entitled to a mechanics' lien on the property on which they have bestowed labor or furnished materials, appliances, or leased equipment (Civ. Code § 3110).

C. Alleging That Materials Were Furnished For and Used in Improvement. A complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien for materials furnished to a work of improvement must contain substantial allegations to the effect that the materials were furnished for and to be used in, and that they were used in, the work of improvement (Ensele v. Jolley (1922) 188 Cal. 297, 300, 204 P. 1085).

[Optional] D. Materials Must Have Been Used in Improvement. A person who has furnished materials for use in a work of improvement has no right to a mechanics' lien unless those materials were actually used in some part of the improvement, even when the failure to use the materials was caused by the owner abandoning a portion of the original contract (California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co. (1911) 16 Cal. App. 692, 701-702, 118 P. 103). Further, proof of delivery of materials to the building site does not create a presumption of their use in the improvement so as to sustain a mechanics' lien; the materialman must prove that the materials were actually used in the building ( Consolidated Electrical Distributors, Inc. v. Kirkham, Chaon & Kirkham, Inc. (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 54, 95 Cal. Rptr. 673).

[Optional] E. Intent to Use Materials in Particular Improvement. In a suit to foreclose a materialman's lien, the plaintiff must not only allege and prove that the materials were actually used and consumed in the construction, alteration, addition, or repair of the building, but must also allege and prove that the material was furnished by the materialman expressly for that particular building (W.P. Fuller & Co. v. Fleisher (1923) 63 Cal. App. 78, 218 P. 53).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien for materials furnished to a work of improvement when the lien claimant has failed to allege facts showing that the materials were furnished for and actually used, consumed in, or contributed to, the improvement.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should refer to the lack of allegations in the complaint establishing that materials furnished by the claimant were actually used, consumed in, or contributed to, the improvement. If the complaint includes specific allegations that affirmatively reveal that the materials were not used in the improvement or were not furnished expressly for that particular improvement, counsel should refer to these allegations. Counsel can then argue that the complaint is subject to demurrer based on the authorities set forth above and discussed below.

[c] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment to a lien foreclosure complaint based on the plaintiff's failure to demonstrate that the materials furnished for a work of improvement were actually used, consumed in, or contributed to, the improvement.

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Chapters

For a form of demurrer, together with a discussion of demurrers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.40 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Alleging that Materials Were Furnished for and Used in Improvement

In Ensele v. Jolley (1922) 188 Cal. 297, 204 P. 1085 , the defendant appealed from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in an action to foreclose a materialman's lien. The plaintiff was the proprietor of a lumber business. His complaint alleged (among other things) that he had furnished to the defendant under an oral agreement certain building materials for a barn and dwelling house on the defendant's premises. Although the defendant did not demur to plaintiff's complaint, he urged on appeal that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The Supreme Court affirmed the lower court's decision, finding the complaint to be sufficient when read as a whole. The Court noted that there is no question that in order to entitle a materialman to a lien against the owner of a structure, the materials must have been furnished to be used in, and must also have been used in, the structure. Further, the complaint must contain allegations to this effect (188 Cal. 297, 302-303) .

[b] Materials Must Have Been Used in Improvement

California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co. (1911) 16 Cal. App. 692, 118 P. 103 , involved consolidated mechanics' lien foreclosure actions by various claimants who had furnished labor and materials for use in the construction of a large hotel. Certain plaintiffs were awarded liens for materials that were not actually included in the hotel because they were unused at the time construction ceased. The trial court found in each of these cases that the material was furnished for use in the hotel and was necessary to its completion as originally designed. However, the building was not constructed as originally designed because the owner decided to stop construction and to accept what had been completed as the final structure.

The court of appeal reversed the lower court's decision regarding the liens for unused materials. Unswayed by the argument that some of the materials were specially manufactured for use in the building, the court held that the vendors of the materials were charged with knowing that they had no lien until their property had become merged into the structure (16 Cal. App. 692, 712-713) .

[c] Intent to Use Materials in Particular Improvement

In W.P. Fuller & Co. v. Fleisher (1923) 63 Cal. App. 78, 218 P. 53 , defendants successfully appealed an adverse judgment in plaintiff's mechanics' lien action for materials used in the construction of an office building. Defendants contended there was no evidence to support the trial court's finding that the materials were furnished by the plaintiff to be used in this particular office building. The court of appeal, interpreting former Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 [now see Civ. Code § 3110], agreed and held that in a suit to enforce a materialman's lien, the plaintiff must not only allege and prove that the material was actually used or consumed in the construction, alteration, addition to, or repair of the building, but must also allege and prove that the materials were furnished by the materialman expressly for that particular building (63 Cal. App. 78, 79-80) .

§ 152.22 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] to Foreclose Mechanics' Lien--Failure to Allege That Plaintiff-Contractor Was Duly Licensed [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031]

[Caption. See § 152.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO CONSTITUTE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT THE PLAINTIFF WAS DULY LICENSED AS A CONTRACTOR AT ALL TIMES DURING THE PERFORMANCE OF THE CONTRACT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 152.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Contractor Defined. For purposes of the Contractors' State License Law, the term "contractor" is synonymous with the term "builder." "Contractor" means any person who undertakes to, or offers to undertake to, or purports to have the capacity to undertake to, or submits a bid to, or does himself or herself, or by or through others, construct, alter, repair, add to, subtract from, improve, move, wreck or demolish any building, highway, road, parking facility, railroad, excavation or other structure, project, development or improvement, or to do any part of the foregoing, including the erection of scaffolding or other structures or works in connection with the foregoing, or the cleaning of grounds or structures in connection with the foregoing, or the preparation and removal of roadway construction zones, lane closures, flagging, or traffic diversions, or the installation, repair, maintenance, or calibration of monitoring equipment for underground storage tanks, and whether or not the performance of this work involves the addition to or fabrication into any structure, project, development, or improvement described above of any material or article of merchandise. Further, "contractor" specifically includes subcontractors and specialty contractors (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026).

C. Alleging and Proving Existence of License. No person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor, may bring or maintain any action in any court of this State for the collection of compensation for the performance of any act or contract for which a license is required by the Contractors' State License Law without alleging and proving that he or she was a duly licensed contractor at all times during the performance of the act or contract, except that this prohibition shall not apply to contractors who are each individually licensed under the Contractors' State License Law but who fail to comply with Business and Professions Code Section 7029 (license for joint venture) (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(a); see Vallejo Development Co. v. Beck Development Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 929, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669).

D. Licensing Requirements in Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action. An action to foreclose a mechanics' lien is an action within the meaning of Business and Professions Code Section 7031, which provides that no action may be brought or maintained by a contractor unless the contractor alleges that he or she is licensed (Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 154, 308 P.2d 713).

E. Failure to State Cause of Action. If there is no allegation in a contractor's complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien that the plaintiff was a licensed contractor, it is clear that the pleading does not state a cause of action (Albaugh v. Moss Constr. Co. (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 126, 130, 269 P.2d 936).

F. Burden of Proof. The explicit language of Business and Professions Code Section 7031 requires one to plead and prove licensed contractor status in order to bring or maintain an action. The existence of this language renders inapplicable Evidence Code Section 520, which provides that the party claiming that a person is guilty of crime or wrongdoing has the burden of proof on that issue.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to support a general demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien when the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint that the plaintiff mechanics' lien claimant was not duly licensed at all times during the performance of his or her contract.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum of points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien. This form may also be used in support of a demurrer to a complaint, or a motion for summary judgment in an action to enforce a stop notice [see Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 154, 308 P.2d 713 (actions on stop notice bonds for public works or improvements)].

See also the discussion of licenses in California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 104, Building Contracts (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.41 or § 152.42 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Contractor Defined

In Vallejo Development Co. v. Beck Development Co. (1994) 24 Cal. App. 4th 929, 29 Cal. Rptr. 2d 669 , plaintiff development company sold residentially-zoned parcels to "merchant builders" who were to complete and sell individual homes. Under the purchase agreements, plaintiff was solely responsible for construction of infrastructure improvements. Plaintiff did not have a contractor's license. After various parties brought an action against plaintiff for failure to complete the infrastructure, plaintiff recorded mechanics' liens and filed actions to foreclose on the mechanics' liens. The trial court ruled that plaintiff could not state a cause of action for compensation because it was not a licensed contractor, and sustained the defendants' demurrers without leave to amend. Plaintiff then filed motions for reconsideration and proposed second amended complaints. The trial court reaffirmed its prior orders, ruled that the proposed second amended complaints had no effect on the license requirement, and entered judgment against plaintiff, dismissing all of its complaints.

The court of appeal affirmed. It reviewed the language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031, and noted that Bus. & Prof. Code § 7056 provides that a general engineering contractor's license is required for fixed works requiring specialized engineering knowledge and skill, including the construction of streets. The court held that it was clear that plaintiff had agreed to do work for which a license was required (24 Cal. App. 4th 929, 937-938, 944) .

The court found that plaintiff was acting in the capacity of a contractor when it agreed to be responsible for and undertook to complete the infrastructure. Even if plaintiff only provided administrative and oversight functions, it was acting as a contractor. People who enter into construction contracts must be licensed even when they do not do the actual work. Plaintiff argued that "master developers" should not be subject to licensing requirements, but the court found that the Legislature intended that the entity with ultimate responsibility for the construction work must be licensed. The court declined to find any exemption for master developers from the licensing requirement. It also found that plaintiff's involvement as an unlicensed contractor was not incidental to the overall transaction between the parties; the construction of $40 million of improvements was not incidental to the contract (24 Cal. App. 4th 929, 944) .

[b] Licensing Requirements in Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action

In Lewis & Queen v. N.M. Ball Sons (1957) 48 Cal. 2d 141, 308 P.2d 713 , the plaintiff, engaging in the contracting business as a partnership, brought an action to recover against sureties on labor and material bonds and a stop notice bond posted by the defendant pursuant to Civ. Code § 3196 (release bond for stop notice on public works of improvement), all in connection with contracts entered into by plaintiff for construction work on the Hollywood Parkway. One partner had an individual contractor's license, the other did not, and the partnership had no license. The trial court found for defendants based on the facts that plaintiff agreed to act and had acted as a contractor within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7026 (contractor defined), and because it had done so without the license required by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7028.

The Supreme Court affirmed. Given the fact that the Court had previously held that an action to enforce an arbitration award is an action within the meaning of § 7031, as is an action to foreclose on a mechanics' lien, the Court decided that plaintiff was barred by § 7031 from maintaining any action for compensation on the bonds. The Court noted that the importance of deterring unlicensed persons from engaging in the contracting business outweighs any harshness between the parties, and that this deterrence can best be realized by denying violators the right to maintain any action for compensation in the courts (48 Cal. 2d 141, 150) .

Under some circumstances, alleging facts that, if proved, would establish substantial compliance with the license requirement of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 may be sufficient to withstand demurrer [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e), (f); see also § 152.42[3][a]].

[c] Failure to State Cause of Action

In Albaugh v. Moss Constr. Co. (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 126, 269 P.2d 936 , the trial court found for defendants in a mechanics' lien action when it was stipulated that neither the plaintiff nor his partner were licensed as contractors at any time during performance of the contract. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that because there was no allegation in the complaint that the partners were licensed contractors, it was clear that the complaint did not state a cause of action. The court noted that the partners' failure to obtain a contractor's license before they "embarked upon their venture" with defendants rendered their contract illegal (125 Cal. App. 2d 126, 130-132) .

Fillmore v. Irvine (1983) 146 Cal. App. 3d 649, 194 Cal. Rptr. 319 (opinion certified for partial publication), involved an action by a drywall finisher to foreclose a mechanics' lien. Defendants contended that plaintiff was a contractor without a valid contractor's license, but the trial court, relying on Lab. Code § 2750.5 (discussed below), found that plaintiff was an employee exempt from the license requirement [see Bus. & Prof. Code § 7053] and rendered judgment in his favor.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's decision. The court examined Lab. Code § 2750.5, which creates a rebuttable presumption, affecting the burden of proof, that a worker who performs services requiring a contractor's license is an employee. The court found that if § 2750.5 were applied to determinations under Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 7031 and 7053, every unlicensed person working on a job would be characterized as an employee, and that this result would repeal by implication the ban in § 7031 on recovery by an unlicensed contractor. Noting that there is a presumption against repeals by implication, the court ruled that § 2750.5 is not applicable to determinations under §§ 7031 and 7053 (146 Cal. App. 3d 649, 657) .

The court also considered plaintiff's argument that if he was not an employee, he was an unlicensed contractor, that contracting without a license is a misdemeanor, and that defendants should have the burden of proving that he was an unlicensed contractor pursuant to Evid. Code § 520. Section 520 provides that a party claiming that a person is guilty of a crime or wrongdoing has the burden of proof on that issue. The court noted, however, that Evid. Code § 300 provides that the Evidence Code is inapplicable when "otherwise provided by statute." Because the explicit language of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031 requires one to plead and provide licensed contractor status in order to bring or maintain an action, the burden of proof in contractor licensing cases is "otherwise provided by statute." Consequently, § 520 was inapplicable (146 Cal. App. 3d 649, 661-662) .

[a] Licensing Requirements in Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action

See the discussion of Albaugh v. Moss Constr. Co. (1954) 125 Cal. App. 2d 126, 269 P.2d 936 , in § 152.22[3][c].

Licensed contractors should beware of dealing with unlicensed subcontractors. In Holm v. Bramwell (1937) 20 Cal. App. 2d 332, 67 P.2d 114 , the court of appeal modified a judgment foreclosing a mechanics' lien to secure payment of money due the plaintiff, who was a licensed building contractor. The trial court had disallowed the plaintiff's claim to the extent of an amount he voluntarily paid a subcontractor who was not licensed. The court directed the trial court to ascertain the amount of interest due according to the findings and to allow that sum as part of the judgment. As modified, the appellate court affirmed, stating that the plaintiff's contract with the unlicensed subcontractor was illegal and void and that the court properly disallowed amounts paid to the subcontractor. The court added that a mechanics' lien may not be founded on an illegal contract procured contrary to law (20 Cal. App. 2d 332, 336-337) .

This memorandum of points of authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien against the property of a noncontracting owner if the complaint fails to allege that the noncontracting owner had knowledge of the work of improvement and did not post and record a notice of nonresponsibility pursuant to Civ. Code § 3094.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Estoppel as Basis for Noncontracting Owner's Responsibility

Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 , involved an action to foreclose mechanics' liens against a noncontracting owner's property for services rendered in connection with the subdivision of the property. While there was evidence that the owner had knowledge of the services being rendered by the plaintiffs, there was no allegation in their complaint or proof by the plaintiffs that the owner had not filed a notice of nonresponsibility pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. § 1183.1(b) [now see Civ. Code §§ 3094, 3129]. The court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of a judgment of foreclosure of the noncontracting owner's property based on its finding that the person with whom the plaintiffs contracted was an agent of the owner [see § 152.51[3][d]]. However, the court held that no claim of lien attached by reason of the owner's failure to file a notice of nonresponsibility since former § 1183.1(b) [now see Civ. Code §§ 3094, 3129] rested on the doctrine of estoppel. When estoppel is an element of the action, it must be especially pleaded in the complaint with sufficient accuracy to disclose the facts relied on and the plaintiff must prove all of the essential elements constituting it. The plaintiffs failed to meet either of these requirements in their action (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 26-27) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Estoppel as Basis for Noncontracting Owner's Responsibility

In John R. Gentle & Co. v. Britton (1910) 158 Cal. 328, 111 P. 9 , the plaintiff alleged and proved that the defendant noncontracting owner had knowledge of the improvements to which the plaintiff furnished materials and labor and failed to post and record within the statutory time period set forth in former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1192 [now see Civ. Code § 3094] a notice of nonresponsibility. In holding that there was substantial evidence to support these findings, the Supreme Court commented that former Section 1192 [now see Civ. Code § 3129] rested on the doctrine of estoppel. When the owner of real property procured the property's improvement and received the benefit of another's labor or materials, the owner was deemed to have created an equitable lien on the premises to secure the payment of the value of the labor and materials (158 Cal. 328, 332) .

authorize its enforcement, and is not capable of being amended or reformed (Madera Flume & Trading Co. v. Kendall (1898) 120 Cal. 182, 183, 52 P. 304).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien when the plaintiff's complaint fails to name the person by whom the plaintiff was employed or to whom he or she furnished the labor, services, equipment, or materials.

Paragraphs D and E should be used with caution, since, in Cargill v. Achziger (1958) 165 Cal. App. 2d 220, 224, 331 P.2d 774 , the court stated that the rule as to the effect of a variance between the claim of lien and the proof has been considerably relaxed from the harsh rule laid down in early decisions. The variance interpreted by the court was between the claim of lien, which stated that the plaintiff as the original contractor furnished labor and materials, and proof that the plaintiff was actually an employee. In discussing the modern rule, the court noted that in order to bar recovery the variance must be material. Similarly, in Barrett-Hicks Co. v. Glas (1910) 14 Cal. App. 289, 299, 111 P. 760 , the court set forth the following test as to the sufficiency of the claim: whether the notice so far departs from the terms and conditions of the contract as to render it misleading to the injury of the owner. If it does, the variance is fatal.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.43 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Essential Allegation

In Clements v. T.R. Bechtel Co. (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 227, 238, 273 P.2d 5 , the plaintiffs appealed from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining the defendants' demurrer to a complaint to foreclose mechanics' liens for work, labor, and furnished materials required for road paving and construction. The demurrer was based in part on the ground that the plaintiffs failed to set forth the lien claim contents, thus failing to comply with former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1187 [now see Civ. Code § 3084]. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that when the complaint alleged the substance of the information required to be contained in the claim of lien, and alleges that the claim of lien contains a description of the type of work done, a statement of the demand after deduction of all just credits and offsets, the names of the owners, the type of materials furnished, the names of the person by whom the plaintiffs were employed, and a sufficient description of the property sought to be charged, the complaint was sufficient. The Court stated, however, that a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien must substantially comply with former Section 1187 as to the contents of the lien claim (43 Cal. 2d 227, 238) .

[b] Failure to Name Person to Whom Materials Furnished

The court in Hogan v. Bigler (1908) 8 Cal. App. 71, 96 P. 97 , reversed plaintiff's judgment foreclosing a materialman's lien on the grounds that the claims of lien stated that the materials used in the structure were furnished to one person, when the lower court found that the materials were actually furnished to someone else. The appellate court, interpreting former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1187 [now see Civ. Code § 3084] noted in strong language that "[w]e have no power to dispense with the plain requirements of the statute. The legislature saw fit to require that the claim should state the name of the person to whom the materials were furnished. The claim in this case does not do so; hence it cannot be the basis for the enforcement of a lien" (8 Cal. App. 71, 72) .

[c] Correction by Averment in Complaint

In Madera Flume & Trading Co. v. Kendall (1898) 120 Cal. 182, 183-184, 52 P. 304 , the defendant appealed from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien and from an order denying a new trial, contending that the lien claim was defective in that the plaintiff did not state the name of the person to whom he furnished the materials. The Supreme Court agreed and reversed the trial court. The Court stated that the failure to name the person to whom the plaintiff furnished his materials rendered the claim of lien defective, a defect that could not be aided by averring in the complaint that in fact they were furnished to the defendant. The Court stated that a lien claim must be complete in itself at the time of filing in order to authorize its enforcement, and is not capable of being amended or reformed. The Court added that the right to enforce a mechanics' lien depends on compliance with the requirements of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1187 [now see Civ. Code § 3084], and, unless the claim contains the statements required by this code provision, the claimant is not entitled to his or her lien (120 Cal. 182, 183-184) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien when the complaint fails to allege a substantial compliance with the requirements relating to the contents of a claim of lien in that the claim fails to name the owner or reputed owner of the property.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment based on the failure to include in the claim of lien recorded by the plaintiff the name of the owner or reputed owner of the property sought to be charged with a mechanics' lien.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.44 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Essential Allegation

The facts and procedural background of Clements v. T.R. Bechtel Co. (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 227, 273 P.2d 5 , are discussed in § 152.24. The Supreme Court in this case stated that a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien must substantially comply with former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1187 as to the contents of the claim. Among other things, the complaint must, either by direct allegation, or by an attached copy of the claim of lien, show that the claim of lien contains the name of the owner or reputed owner of the property, if known, and a sufficient description of the property, and that it is duly verified (43 Cal. 2d 227, 238) .

[b] Defective Claim of Lien

In Diamond Match Co. v. Sanitary Match Fruit Co. (1925) 70 Cal. App. 695, 234 P. 322 , the plaintiff appealed from an order granting a judgment of nonsuit based on the fact that the lien claim omitted the name of the owner or reputed owner of the property. Apparently the owner made a clerical mistake by inserting its own name instead of the defendant's as owner of the property. Plaintiff unsuccessfully tried to argue that the case should fall within the exception of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1203 (now see Civil Code Section 3261), which provided that mistakes in the lien claim did not invalidate it unless made with the intent to defraud. The court was not persuaded by this argument, noting that the errors enumerated by Section 1203 did not include errors in stating the name of the owner. The court noted that each county recorder must keep an index of lien claim notices, which includes an index of parties against whom the lien is claimed. It is important that these indexes be accurate; the filing of the claim in the recorder's office is intended to protect the owner of the property against double payment to the contractor. The lien claim index would be of little efficacy if the provision regarding the statement of the owner's name in the notice of the lien claim was held not to be a material requirement. The court concluded by stating that, for these reasons, "the requirement that the claim of lien shall contain the name of the owner or the reputed owner of the property is imperative, and must be complied with, where such owner is known to the claimant, to perfect the lien" (70 Cal. App. 695, 702) .

In H & L Supply, Inc. v. Ewing (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 283, 61 Cal. Rptr. 289 , the plaintiff appealed from a judgment entered following the granting of a motion for nonsuit in his action to foreclose a mechanics' lien for air conditioning and heating equipment furnished to a subcontractor on a project consisting of the erection of a building on property owned by the defendants. The president and sole stockholder of the plaintiff corporation prepared a preliminary notice that he directed an employee to serve on the defendants. The motion for nonsuit was based on the insufficiency of the description of the property contained in the lien claim, as no street number was given, and it was difficult to determine what part of the 160 acres was being liened without knowing the name of the owner, which the plaintiff failed to insert in the claim.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court, holding that the information omitted in the claim of lien must be included if the claim of lien is to be properly indexed by the county recorder, and that the recording of documents without indexing would defeat the purpose of recording. It was this rationale that defeated the plaintiff's contention that Civil Code Section 3261--which provides that an error in the description of the property does not invalidate the lien if it is not fraudulent or does not put subsequent owners on notice of the lien--evidenced a legislative intent to disregard those errors that do not prejudice the owner or third persons. The court noted that the Legislature did not include an error in the owner's name in Civil Code Section 3261 because the name of the property owner is necessary for proper indexing of the property. The Court also rejected plaintiff's argument that the Diamond Match case is no longer controlling because service of a pre-lien notice can give notice of the owner of the property, stating that the pre-lien notice is not designed to supplant a recorded claim of lien. However, the court noted that the plaintiff's argument would be more persuasive were it mounted on the framework of estoppel, that is, on a showing that the owner in this case had actual notice through the preliminary notice (253 Cal. App. 2d 283, 286-287) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING THAT THE CLAIM OF LIEN WAS RECORDED WITHIN THE PRESCRIBED STATUTORY PERIODS.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 152.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Essential Allegation. In an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, the plaintiff must plead and prove facts showing the plaintiff's substantial compliance with the statutory requirements relative to the filing of his or her claim of lien, including the fact that the claim of lien was filed within the prescribed period (M. Arthur Gensler, Jr., & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 703, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503 (dictum)).

[EITHER]

C. Time for Original Contractor to Record Lien. Each original contractor, in order to enforce a lien, must record his or her claim of lien after he or she completes his or her contract and before the expiration of (a) 90 days after the completion of the work of improvement as defined in Civil Code Section 3106 if no notice of completion or cessation has been recorded, or (b) 60 days after recordation of a notice of completion or notice of cessation (Civ. Code § 3115).

[OR]

C. Time for Claimants Other Than Original Contractor to Record Lien. Each claimant other than an original contractor, in order to enforce a lien, must record his or her claim of lien after he or she has ceased furnishing labor, services, equipment or materials, and before the expiration of (a) 90 days after completion of the work of improvement if no notice of completion or cessation has been recorded, or (b) 30 days after recordation of a notice of completion or notice of cessation (Civ. Code § 3116; see Fontana Paving, Inc. v. Hedley Brothers, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 146, 156, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 ; Insul-Acoustics, Inc. v. Lee (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 552, 186 Cal. Rptr. 324).

[OR]

C. Time to Record When Multiple Original Contracts. When the work of improvement is not made pursuant to one original contract for the work of improvement but is made in whole or in part pursuant to two or more original contracts, each covering a particular portion of the work of improvement, and the owner has, within 10 days after completion of any such contract for a particular portion of the work of improvement, recorded a notice of completion, notwithstanding Civil Code Sections 3115 and 3116, the original contractor under the contract covered by the notice must, within 60 days after recording the notice, and any claimant under the contract other than the original contractor must, within 30 days after the recording of the notice of completion, record his or her claim of lien (Civ. Code § 3117).

[Optional] D. Time to Record When Multiple Residential Units. When a work of improvement consists of the construction of two or more separate residential units, each such unit is considered a separate work of improvement. The time for recording claims of lien against each such unit commences to run on the completion of each unit (Civ. Code § 3131).

[Optional] E. Separate Contract for Site Improvement. If a site improvement is provided for in a contract separate from any contract for the erection of residential units or other structures, the site improvement is considered a separate work of improvement (Civ. Code § 3135; Lambert Steel Co. v. Heller Financial, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1042-1043, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453), and the time to record a claim of lien for work performed or materials furnished under such a separate contract is separate from the time to record claims of lien for work performed or materials furnished under the contract for the erection of the residential units or other structures (see Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 752-755, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien when the complaint fails to allege facts showing that the claim of lien was recorded within the appropriate periods prescribed in Civ. Code §§ 3115-3117.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this memorandum of points and authorities may be used in support of a motion for summary judgment based on the plaintiff's failure to record his or her claim of lien within the appropriate periods prescribed in Civ. Code §§ 3115-3117.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Essential Allegation

In M. Arthur Gensler, Jr., & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503 , the Supreme Court held that lien claims were timely filed under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1193.1(d)(3) when (1) they were filed more than 90 days but less than 150 days from the last date on which the work was done on the contract, (2) no notice of completion was filed, (3) the work was not substantially completed, and (4) the owner's occupancy did not establish constructive completion (7 Cal. 3d 695, 706) . The Court stated as dictum that in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action the plaintiff must plead and prove facts showing substantial compliance with the statutory requirements relative to the filing of his or her claim of lien, including the fact that the claim of lien was filed within the prescribed period (7 Cal. 3d 695, 703) .

[b] Time for Claimants Other Than Original Contractor to Record Lien

In Fontana Paving, Inc. v. Hedley Brothers, Inc. (1995) 38 Cal. App. 4th 146, 45 Cal. Rptr. 2d 295 , a materialman supplied asphaltic concrete materials to a paving subcontractor and then brought a mechanics' lien foreclosure action seeking to recover the unpaid balance on its materials contract. The trial court granted judgment for the materialman based on a finding that, though the plaintiff's lien was filed more than 90 days after the work of improvement was completed, it was timely filed when it was filed 30 days before the defendant filed a notice of completion.

The court of appeal reversed. The court noted that Civ. Code § 3116 specifies two alternative time periods for filing liens by claimants other than original contractors: (1) within 90 days after completion if no notice of completion or cessation has been recorded, or (2) within 30 days after recordation of a notice of completion or cessation. The court agreed with the trial court's finding that the plaintiff's lien claim was untimely under the first time period because it was recorded more than 90 days after completion of the work of improvement (38 Cal. App. 4th 146, 154) . However, the court of appeal disagreed with the trial court's finding that the notice of completion, which was recorded almost six months after completion of the work, was valid and thereby opened a new 30-day period under Civ. Code § 3116 for filing liens. The appellate court found that, because the notice of completion was not recorded within 10 days after completion of the work of improvement, it was invalid under Civ. Code § 3093, which sets forth the requirements for a valid notice of completion. Because the notice of completion was invalid, it had no effect on the 90-day lien filing period of Civ. Code § 3116, which had expired by the time the plaintiff's claim of lien was filed (38 Cal. App. 4th 146, 154-156) .

In Insul-Acoustics, Inc. v. Lee (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 552, 186 Cal. Rptr. 324 , a subcontractor performed work on a tenant's store in a shopping mall, and then brought a mechanics' lien foreclosure action against the tenant. The trial court granted summary judgment for the defendant on the ground that the plaintiff's claim was not timely recorded as required by Civ. Code § 3116.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court held that the subcontractor's lien was not enforceable because it was not filed within 90 days of the completion of the work of improvement. The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that its lien was timely recorded because the "work of improvement" included not only the work on the defendant's store but also work that was later performed at other stores in the mall pursuant to separate subcontracts between the plaintiff and the general contractor. Because each job at each store was the subject of a separate contract between plaintiff and the general contractor, and between the general contractor and the individual tenant involved, each job was a separate work of improvement. There was no basis for holding the separate improvements to be an "an entire structure or scheme of improvement as a whole" (which is part of the definition of a "work of improvement" under Civ. Code § 3106). The "work of improvement as a whole" was the fixturization of defendant's shop. Defendant had no legal responsibility for, or connection with, the improvements ordered by the other tenants in the mall for their own shops (136 Cal. App. 3d 552, 555) .

[c] Separate Contract for Site Improvement

In Lambert Steel Co., Inc. v. Heller Financial, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 , a property owner obtained a loan, secured by a deed of trust, to construct a retail and office complex. The deed of trust was recorded after the performance of preliminary demolition and site cleanup work. Thereafter, four contractors performed their respective contracts and recorded mechanics' liens. Before the completion of construction, the owner defaulted on the loan, and the four contractors filed complaints seeking to foreclose on their mechanics' liens. They asserted that their mechanics' liens had priority over the construction deed of trust. The trial court awarded damages to three of the four contractors against the owner, but found that the deed of trust had priority over the mechanics' liens, which it discharged. As to the fourth contractor, the trial court entered judgment in favor of the holder of the secured note, after discharging this contractor's mechanics' lien on the ground that the contractor failed to give the required 20-day preliminary notice.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the mechanics' liens were not entitled to priority over the construction deed of trust. The court acknowledged that Civ. Code § 3134 provides that a mechanics' lien has priority over other liens or other encumbrances that attach after the commencement of the work of improvement. It also noted, however, that Civ. Code § 3135 provides that if a site improvement is provided for in a separate contract from any contract governing the erection of residential units or other structures, then the site improvement will be considered a separate work of improvement. Although preliminary demolition and site cleanup work were performed before the recordation of the trust deed, this work was performed under contracts that were separate from the contract to build the structures. Consequently, that work was not the commencement of the work of improvement for purposes of Section 3134 (16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1038-1039) . The court also noted that Section 3135 is not limited to residential structures, and does not violate public policy (16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1040-1043) .

In Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105 , the defendants appealed from a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of the plaintiffs' mechanics' liens for work performed in connection with the construction of several apartments consisting of multiple units in a subdivided tract. The court of appeal reversed, holding in part that the trial court had failed to make certain necessary findings. Two of these findings dealt with work performed by two plaintiffs, consisting in one case of labor and materials furnished for the installation of streets, curbs, gutters, and sidewalks in the tract, which was performed under a separate contract from the contract for the erection of the apartments, and in the second case of labor and materials furnished for the installation of yard lights, and other work intended primarily for landscaping (2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 752-753) .

The court took judicial notice that this latter work was work of the character referred to in former Code Civ. Proc. § 1184.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3114], that is, site improvement work, and therefore, could be deemed work performed under a separate contract, as this work was also performed under a separate contract, and, as such, was a separate work of improvement (2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 755) . The defendants had recorded a notice of completion, which could only be effective if in each case the trial court had made a finding of exactly when the work under each of these contracts had actually been completed. The trial court had mistakenly concluded that the notice was premature in any case because the whole project could not be considered completed until the city in which the improvement work was taking place had accepted the work [see Civ. Code § 3086]. The court held elsewhere that the trial court was in error in this respect and directed the court to determine the date that each contract was completed in order to determine the date of completion and whether the liens had been timely filed (2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 760) .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE _____ [LIEN or CHARGE] OF DEFENDANT'S _____ [TRUST DEED or MORTGAGE or other encumbrance] HAS PRIORITY OVER PLAINTIFF'S CLAIMED MECHANICS' LIEN.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. The motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(a), (c)).

B. General Rule of Priority. The general rule that liens have priority according to the time of their creation as prescribed in Civil Code Section 2897 governs in fixing priorities under the mechanics' lien law (Tracy Price Associates v. Hebard (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 787, 72 Cal. Rptr. 600).

[EITHER]

C. Priority of Encumbrance on Work of Improvement. Any lien, mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance on a work of improvement and its construction site is preferred to any mechanics' lien that is claimed for labor or materials furnished to the improvement if (1) the lien, mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance attaches, or is recorded, prior to the commencement of the work of improvement, or (2) the lien claimant had notice of the lien, mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance prior to the commencement of the work of improvement (Civ. Code § 3134).

[OR]

C. Priority of Encumbrance on Site Improvement. A mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance is preferred to any mechanics' lien that is claimed for labor or materials furnished to the site improvement if (1) the mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance attaches, or is recorded, prior to the commencement of the site improvement work, or (2) the lien claimant had notice of the mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance prior to the commencement of the site improvement work (Civ. Code § 3137).

[OR]

C. Priority of Encumbrance Financing Site Improvements. Any mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance recorded before the commencement of site improvement work that was given for the sole or primary purpose of financing the site improvements, and whose loan proceeds are, in good faith, placed in the control of the lender under a binding agreement with the borrower to the effect that the proceeds are to be applied to the payment of claims of claimants and that no portion of the proceeds will be paid to the borrower in the absence of satisfactory evidence that all the claims have been paid or that the time for recording claims of liens has expired and no such claims have been recorded, is preferred to any mechanics' lien claimed for labor or materials furnished to the site improvement (Civ. Code § 3137).

D. Priority Entitles Defendant to Judgment in His or Her Favor. The determination that the charge or lien of a trust deed, mortgage, or other encumbrance is entitled to priority over a plaintiff's mechanics' lien entitles the defendant to a judgment in his or her favor in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action (see Barr Lumber Co. v. Shaffer (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 14, 16-24, 238 P.2d 99).

[EITHER]

E. Priority Dependent on Commencement of Work. No mechanics' lien attaches, and, hence, no priority may be asserted for that lien, unless and until construction commences by the doing of actual visible work on the land or the delivery of construction materials (Walker v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 152, 156-157, 84 Cal. Rptr. 521, 465 P.2d 497 ; D'Orsay Int'l Partners v. Superior Court (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 836, 842, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 399).

[OR]

E. Priority of Encumbrance Over Site Improvement Lien if Payment Bond Recorded. The holder of any mortgage or deed of trust that is subordinate to a mechanics' lien claimed for labor or materials furnished to a work of improvement pursuant to Civil Code Section 3134 who has procured a payment bond as defined in Civil Code Section 3096 that is in an amount not less than 75 percent of the principal amount of the mortgage or deed of trust, that refers to the mortgage or deed of trust, and that is recorded in the office of the county recorder in the county where the site is located, has his or her mortgage or deed of trust preferred to all liens for labor, services, equipment, or materials furnished after the recording (Civ. Code § 3138).

[OR]

E. Priority of Encumbrance Over Work of Improvement Lien if Payment Bond Recorded. A holder of any mortgage or deed of trust that is subordinate to a mechanics' lien claimed for labor or materials furnished to a site improvement pursuant to Civil Code Section 3137, who procures a payment bond as defined in Civil Code Section 3096, in an amount not less than 50 percent of the principal amount of the mortgage or deed of trust, and who records the payment bond in the office of the county recorder in the county where the site is located before completion of the work of improvement, has his or her mortgage or deed of trust preferred to all site improvement liens (Civ. Code § 3139).

[OR]

E. Obligatory Payments From Secured Lender. When a mortgage or deed of trust securing a construction loan has been recorded prior to the commencement of work or the furnishing of materials, but no advancements of loan proceeds is made until after work has commenced or materials have been furnished, the lien of the mortgage or deed of trust is prior and superior to the mechanics' lien claims when the making of the advances is obligatory on the part of the mortgagee or the beneficiary (Smith v. Anglo-California Trust Co. (1928) 205 Cal. 496, 500, 271 P. 898).

[Optional] F. Commencement of Separate Site Improvement Work. A site improvement provided for in a separate contract from any contract regarding the erection of residential units or other structures is a separate work of improvement, and its commencement does not constitute a commencement of the work of improvement consisting of any residential unit or other structure (Civ. Code § 3135; see Lambert Steel Co. v. Heller Financial, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453).

[Optional] G. Advances Used in Payment of Claims of Liens. A mortgage or deed of trust that would be prior to any mechanics' lien to the extent of obligatory advances made thereunder in accordance with the commitment of the lender, is also prior to the mechanics' lien as to any other advances secured by the mortgage or deed of trust that are used in payment of any claim of lien that is recorded at the date or dates of the other advances and thereafter in payment of costs of the work of improvement. This priority will not exceed the original commitment of the lender as shown in the mortgage or deed of trust (Civ. Code § 3136).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment when a defendant who is joined in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action has, under the priority rules set forth in Civ. Code §§ 3134 (liens claimed on works of improvements), 3137 (site improvement liens), or 3138 and 3139 (payment bonds by junior holders of mortgages or deeds of trust), a charge or lien of a deed of trust, mortgage, or other encumbrance on real property that is senior or prior to the claimed mechanics' lien.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law raised. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a demurrer to a mechanics' lien foreclosure complaint when it appears on the face of the complaint that the charge or lien of the mortgage, trust deed, or other encumbrance of the defendant is entitled to priority over the plaintiff's mechanics' lien as a matter of law.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.48 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Rule of Priority

In Tracy Price Associates v. Hebard (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 72 Cal. Rptr. 600 , the plaintiff brought a mechanics' lien foreclosure action for architectural services rendered in connection with prospective improvements on real property. Each defendant claimed some interest in property, and the plaintiff alleged that the defendants' interests were junior to its mechanics' lien. One defendant was a purchaser of the property at a trustees' sale following the foreclosure on a trust deed. The trust deed was recorded after the plaintiff commenced the preparation of plans. A second defendant held an attachment lien on the property following a judgment in an unrelated civil action against the defendant who formerly owned the property and contracted for the plaintiff's services. Although the prospective improvements were never commenced, surveying work had been done, which involved the placing of permanent monuments and the setting of temporary grade stakes on the property. Judgment was for the plaintiff, the trial court finding that the plaintiff had an interest in the property superior to that of the other claimants. The defendants appealed. The court of appeal affirmed that portion of the judgment decreeing that the lien on the excess proceeds of the foreclosure sale was prior and superior to any other party's interest or right in, or claim to, these proceeds, and reversed as to the remainder of the judgment (266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 788) .

[b] Priority Entitles Defendant to Judgment in His or Her Favor

In Barr Lumber Co. v. Shaffer (1951) 108 Cal. App. 2d 14, 238 P.2d 99 , the trial court sustained a general demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien for materials furnished and used in the construction of a home. The demurrers were filed by defendants who claimed superior interest in the property on which the construction was taking place, and were based on the fact that the priority of the defendants' interests appeared on the face of the plaintiff's complaint. The trial court entered judgment in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the charge or lien of a trust deed, mortgage, or other encumbrance that has priority over a mechanics' lien has priority over the lien in all respects, including the improvement to which the plaintiff furnished materials. Therefore, since the interests of these defendants were not subject to the mechanics' lien, the demurrers to the plaintiff's complaint were properly sustained (108 Cal. App. 2d 14, 23) .

[c] Priority Dependent on Commencement of Work

Walker v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 152, 84 Cal. Rptr. 521, 465 P.2d 497 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action in which a deed of trust, which was given to the defendant savings and loan to secure a construction loan, was recorded after plaintiff architects had prepared plans and specifications for a proposed construction, but before any actual physical construction had begun. The trial court held that plaintiffs' mechanics' lien had priority over the deed of trust and the defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the trial court's holding, stating that the general rule is that a mechanics' lien does not attach unless and until construction has been undertaken by the doing of actual visible work on the land or the delivery of construction materials to the site. The Court went on to state that when only plans and specifications have been prepared in anticipation of the erection of a building, this preparation work does not entitle the plaintiffs to a mechanics' lien that would have priority over the recorded deed of trust lien (2 Cal. 3d 152, 158) .

In D'Orsay Int'l Partners v. Superior Court (2004) 123 Cal. App. 4th 836, 20 Cal. Rptr. 3d 399 , the court of appeal granted a developer's petition for writ of mandate seeking an order directing that the trial court release a mechanic's lien outright without the posting of a bond. The court held that a contractor who performed design and planning services for the project, on which construction never commenced, could not rely on the principles underlying the design professional's lien [Civ. Code § 3081.1 et seq. (providing lien remedy for design professionals when no actual construction of planned work of improvement is commenced before recordation of notice of lien)] to file a mechanic's lien (123 Cal. App. 4th 836, 841) . Since the contractor attempted to file a mechanic's lien rather than a design professional's lien, the court did not decide whether a contractor performing design services or employing design professionals may assert a design professionals' lien (123 Cal. App. 4th 836, 841) .

[d] Obligatory Payments from Secured Lender

In Smith v. Anglo-California Trust Co. (1928) 205 Cal. 496, 271 P. 898 , an administrator of an estate brought an action against a securities company. The company had made a construction loan secured by a deed of trust to property owned by the estate, and the administrator sought to recover from the company the balance of funds remaining undisbursed in a construction loan held by the company. On motion of the defendant company, the trial court made an order bringing into the action as parties defendant several mechanics' lien claimants who furnished labor and materials to a work of improvement funded by the construction loan. In declaring that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment against the company in the amount of the undisbursed loan proceeds, the trial court also held the deed of trust of the company to be a first charge or lien on the real property and superior to the adverse claims of all the other defendants, including the mechanics' lien claimants.

On claimants' appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's decree of priority. Although advances from the construction loan were made after the work of improvement had commenced, the Court stated that the general rule was that when a mortgage or deed of trust has been recorded before the commencement of work or the furnishing of materials, but no advances are made under the loan until after work has commenced or materials have been furnished, the lien of the mortgage or deed of trust is prior and superior to the mechanics' lien claims when the making of the advances is obligatory on the part of the mortgagee or the beneficiary (205 Cal. 496, 500-501) . The Court explained that the mortgage or deed of trust, as against subsequent mechanics' lien claimants, becomes a lien for the whole sum advanced from the time of its execution and recordation, and not for each separate amount advanced from the time of the advancement, although the right to enforce the collection of the advancement can only arise on the date each advancement is to be made (205 Cal. 496, 500) .

[e] Commencement of Separate Site Improvement Work

The facts and procedural background of Lambert Steel Co. v. Heller Financial, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 , are discussed in § 152.26 under Separate Contract for Site Improvement. The Court of Appeal held that the mechanics' liens were not entitled to priority over the construction deed of trust. The court acknowledged that Civ. Code § 3134 provides that a mechanics' lien has priority over other liens or other encumbrances that attach after the commencement of the work of improvement. It also noted, however, that Civ. Code § 3135 provides that if a site improvement is provided for in a separate contract from any contract governing the erection of residential units or other structures, then the site improvement will be considered a separate work of improvement. Although preliminary demolition and site cleanup work were performed before the recordation of the trust deed, this work was performed under contracts that were separate from the contract to build the structures. Consequently, that work was not the commencement of the work of improvement for purposes of Civ. Code § 3134 (16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1038-1039) .

The appellate court also found that § 3135 is not unfair or against public policy, and that it creates stability and predictability in the construction field. Construction lenders are not required to review the preexisting contracts between the owner and subcontractors to determine whether the contracts were for site improvement, because this procedure would have a negative effect on the approval of construction loans. Moreover, the current system, which requires the lender to inspect the site for visible signs of work before recording its lien and disbursing the funds, is not unfair to any of the subcontractors who come after the deed of trust is filed. Those subcontractors would know of the construction loan and expect to be junior to it at all times (16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1043) .

[a] Priority Dependent on Commencement of Work

The facts and procedural background of Tracy Price Associates v. Hebard (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 72 Cal. Rptr. 600 , are discussed in § 152.27[3][a]. In Tracy, the Court of Appeal, after setting forth the general rule of priority, stated that regardless of whether the former owner who had contracted for the plaintiff's services was at fault in failing to commence construction of the work of improvement, that fault could not be attributed to the defendant purchaser or the holder of the attachment lien. As to these defendants, the condition precedent to the plaintiff's claim of priority was the commencement of construction. The court also held that the defendants' priority could not be defeated on the grounds of estoppel or waiver by the defendants' mere knowledge that the owner planned to construct improvements on the land and that if he did an architect would have had a potential lien (266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 787) .

The facts and procedural background of Lambert Steel Co. v. Heller Financial, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 , are discussed in § 152.27[3][e]. In Lambert, the court held that temporary fencing is not an improvement at all, since it is erected solely for security and liability purposes, and not to improve the property. Temporary fencing is personal property that can be removed by its owner and used again. Because it is temporary and will be removed, it cannot be considered to be the construction or alteration of, an addition to, or repair, in whole or in part, of any fence pursuant to Civ. Code § 3106 (definition of "work of improvement"). Therefore, installing a temporary construction fence does not commence the work of improvement under Civ. Code § 3134 (16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1043) .

[b] Commencement of Separate Site Improvement Work

The facts and procedural background of Tracy Price Associates v. Hebard (1968) 266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 72 Cal. Rptr. 600 , are discussed in § 152.27[3][a]. In Tracy, the plaintiff contended on the defendants' appeal that the work of improvement had commenced, that work being the surveying work that had been done under a separate contract with the former owner in preparation of the improvements to be constructed based on the plaintiff's architectural designs. The court rejected this contention, holding that the plaintiff could not ride on the coattails of the surveyor (266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 784) . Although the court stated that the surveyor's work was lienable work under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1188.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3134], its work could not be deemed commencement of the work of improvement insofar as the plaintiff was concerned, since it was preliminary subdivision work of the character described in former Code Civ. Proc. § 1184.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3135]. That is, the work was provided for in a contract separate from a contract with respect to the erection of a residential unit or other structure and, hence, was a separate work of improvement. Its commencement did not constitute commencement of the improvements that the plaintiffs had prepared architectural plans for (266 Cal. App. 2d 778, 784-785) .

A. Waiver of Lien by Claimant. A mechanics' lien may be waived by the claimant, and the waiver does not require a formal contract, but may be inferred from the circumstances and conduct of the parties (Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 134, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728 ; see Santa Clara Land Title Co. v. Nowack & Associates, Inc. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1558, 1568, 277 Cal. Rptr. 497).

[OR]

A. Release of Lien. The clear implication of Civil Code Section 3262, which limits the ability of the original contractor to waive or impair the claims and liens of other persons, is that the contractor may waive or release his or her own claim, when doing so does not affect or impair the claims or liens of other laborers or subcontractors. Such a waiver releases the claim of lien and the claimant's inchoate personal right to a lien that attached when the work began (Santa Clara Land Title Co. v. Nowack & Associates, Inc. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1558, 1568, 277 Cal. Rptr. 497).

[OR]

A. Abandonment of Lien Claim. A right to a mechanics' lien is abandoned if the lien claimant specifically agrees to take stock in lieu of monetary payment for his or her services (Reaves v. Fremont Valley Development Corp. (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 13, 24 39 Cal. Rptr. 783).

[Optional] B. Reasserting Title to Materials Waives Lien. Reasserting title to materials for which a mechanics' lien is claimed and selling the materials to another person constitute a waiver of the lien (Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 134).

[Optional] C. Partial Waiver of Lien. A contractor may limit his or her right to claim a lien upon an entire tract of land by his or her waiver of the lien upon a portion of the tract (A.A. Baxter Corp. v. Home Owners and Lenders (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 725, 732, 86 Cal. Rptr. 854).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a defendant in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action in support of a motion for summary judgment when the plaintiff has waived, released, or abandoned his or her right to a lien.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Lien by Claimant.

Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728 involved plaintiff's installation of air conditioning equipment pursuant to a conditional sales contract between the plaintiff and a tenant of the owners. The owners knew of the installation but did not file a notice of nonresponsibility. After filing the mechanics' lien action, plaintiff removed the equipment without the owner's consent, sold it to a third person, and credited the defendants with the amount received. The trial court entered judgment for plaintiffs.

The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment, holding that plaintiff had waived his right to a mechanics' lien as a matter of law by removing the equipment. The court noted that a mechanics' lien may be waived by the claimant, and that the waiver does not require a formal contract, but may be inferred from the circumstances and the conduct of the parties. The court also stated that one who furnishes materials or machinery for improvements on land retains title until the materials or machinery are paid for, and that this fact does not ordinarily deprive him or her of the right to a mechanics' lien. However, reasserting title to the materials and selling them to another person constitutes a waiver of the lien (18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 134) .

The court then found that the plaintiff would be entitled to a mechanics' lien only if it the air conditioning equipment had become affixed to the realty. Although under the conditional sales contract the equipment remained personalty, the court noted that it was not legally inconsistent for the equipment to be considered as a fixture as to the defendant-owners, who were not parties to the contract and had no knowledge of it. As to the defendant-owners, plaintiff recognized this principle and elected to treat the equipment as affixed. Plaintiff then, without the defendants' consent, entered the premises, repossessed the equipment, and sold it to a third person. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff, as to the defendant-owners, voluntarily elected to treat the equipment as personalty. Consequently, as a matter of law, the plaintiff waived his right to a mechanic's lien against the property (18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 134-135) .

The facts and procedural background of Santa Clara Land Title Co. v. Nowack & Associates, Inc. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1558, 277 Cal. Rptr. 497 , are discussed in § 152.28[3][b]. The court in that case noted that Civil Code Section 3262, by limiting the ability of an original contractor to waive or impair the claims and liens of other persons, clearly implies that the contractor may waive or release his or her own claim (226 Cal. App. 3d 1558, 1568-1569) .

[b] Release of Lien

In Santa Clara Land Title Co. v. Nowack & Associates, Inc. (1991) 226 Cal. App. 3d 1558, 277 Cal. Rptr. 497 , a title company commenced proceedings against a mechanics' lien claimant to quiet title to property owned by the title company, and the defendant filed a cross-complaint seeking enforcement of a judgment of foreclosure of its mechanics' lien. The defendant had performed engineering services for the plaintiff's predecessors in interest and had recorded mechanics' liens on two occasions. However, the defendant had also executed a lien release so that one of the predecessors could obtain financing. The defendant continued to perform engineering services and recorded a new lien claim, but this recordation did not occur until after the newest owner had defaulted and the lender had foreclosed. The plaintiff subsequently acquired the property from the lender by grant deed. The trial court granted summary judgment for plaintiff on the complaint and the cross-complaint.

The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the release of lien executed by the defendant released both its claim of lien and its inchoate personal right to a lien that attached when its work began. The court ruled that Civil Code Section 3154 (governing petitions to release liens) did not invalidate the release. There was no reason for the lender to utilize the Section 3154 procedure; indeed, it could not do so because the claimant had executed a release. The court also held that Civil Code Section 3262 did not invalidate the release. Section 3262 limits the ability of the owner or original contractor to waive, affect, or impair the claims and liens of other persons. According to the court, the clear implication of this statute is that the contractor may waive or release his or her own claim (226 Cal. App. 3d 1558, 1568-1569) .

[c] Abandonment of Lien Claim

In Reaves v. Fremont Valley Development Corp. (1964) 229 Cal. App. 2d 13, 39 Cal. Rptr. 783 , defendants appealed from a judgment foreclosing mechanics' liens against their property. The plaintiffs had been hired by defendants to make surveys and do engineering work for several subdivisions. Plaintiffs were not paid for their services, but agreed in writing to accept 36,000 shares of stock in defendants' corporation in lieu of monetary payment for their services. The defendants argued that this constituted an accord and satisfaction for the debt.

The appellate court agreed, reversing the judgment of the trial court and holding that plaintiffs had abandoned their right to a lien claim by agreeing to accept the stock. As no sum was due the plaintiffs for their work, they had no right to file mechanics' liens (229 Cal. App. 2d 13, 24) .

[d] Partial Waiver of Lien

In A.A. Baxter Corp. v. Home Owners and Lenders (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 725, 86 Cal. Rptr. 854 , plaintiff was a grading and excavating contractor whose president and sole stockholder was a limited partner in a firm that was a developer of a housing tract. Pursuant to a special permit from the city, plaintiff completed two contracts with the developer for excavating, grading, and storm drain construction on the entire tract, which was developed into a three-unit subdivision. Work under the special permit was accepted by the city engineer, a necessary step in final filing and approval of the subdivision maps. A balance was still owing plaintiff at the time, but no mechanics' lien was filed, because this would have precluded the recording of the subdivision maps. Plaintiff's claim of lien was thus not filed until after the defendant lenders made loans and the defendant homeowners had purchased lots in unit 3. The lien was filed only against unit 3 of the subdivision and lands not within the subdivisions; it omitted properties in units 1 and 2. Defendants claimed that the lien was ineffective because it was not filed within the time prescribed by law, that plaintiff attempted to place the burden of payment for the work on the entire tract on one unit, that plaintiff was estopped to assert the lien, and that plaintiff was guilty of laches. The trial court granted plaintiff a personal judgment against the developer, but denied foreclosure of the mechanics' lien.

The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiff could not claim a lien on a part of the tract when the work done by him was on the entire tract. The object of the lien was the entire tract of land, and not a part of the tract. Thus, the contractor's right to claim a lien upon the entire tract could be limited by his waiver of the lien upon a portion of the tract. The application of equitable principles dictated this result. When work is performed on an entire tract, there is a difference between limiting the enforcement of the contractor's lien to a part of the tract and permitting him or her to claim a lien only on a part of the tract, particularly when, as was the case here, the owners of the part of the tract on which the contractor claimed the lien became owners only after the work was completed and before the contractor's claim was filed. When defendant homeowners and lenders made their purchases and loans, they were entitled to rely on the assumption that any claim of lien by a contractor for grading the entire tract of land would be upon the entire tract, would not be limited to lots in unit 3, and, in any event, would not subject their property to more than a proportionate share of the amount of the contractor's claimed lien (7 Cal. App. 3d 725, 732-733) .

§ 152.29 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--By Defendant--Failure to Join Indispensable Parties Having or Claiming Interest in Property Sought to Be Foreclosed Within 90 Days of Recorded Claim of Lien

[Caption. See § 152.27.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO JOIN, WITHIN THE 90-DAY PERIOD PRESCRIBED IN CIVIL CODE SECTION 3144 FOR FORECLOSURE OF MECHANICS' LIENS, DEFENDANTS WHO ARE INDISPENSABLE PARTIES HAVING AN INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY SOUGHT TO BE FORECLOSED.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 152.27, Paragraph A.]

B. Compulsory Joinder of Parties. A person who is subject to service of process and whose joinder will not deprive the court of jurisdiction over the subject matter of the action shall be joined as a party in the action if (1) in the person's absence complete relief cannot be accorded among those already parties, or (2) the person claims an interest relating to the subject of the action and is so situated that the disposition of the action in his or her absence may (i) as a practical matter impair or impede his or her ability to protect the interest, or (ii) leave any of the persons already parties subject to a substantial risk of incurring double, multiple, or otherwise inconsistent obligations by reason of his or her claimed interest (Code Civ. Proc. § 389(a)).

C. Determination of Indispensability. Persons who have acquired interests in property against which a mechanics' lien is sought before the mechanics' lien foreclosure action was commenced, or after the action was commenced if they had no notice of the action, are indispensable parties who must be joined in the foreclosure action (Packard-Bell Electronics Corp. v. Theseus, Inc. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 358-361, 53 Cal. Rptr. 300).

D. Effect of Failure to Join. A mechanics' lien claimant's failure to name as defendants persons who have an interest in the property sought to be foreclosed, and are adjudged to be indispensable parties to the action within the 90-day period for commencing a foreclosure action provided for in Civil Code Section 3144 entitles the defendant to the foreclosure action to a judgment in his or her favor (see Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 23-24, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 ; Riley v. Peters (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 296, 298, 300, 15 Cal. Rptr. 41).

[Optional] E. Junior Encumbrancer as Indispensable Party. A junior encumbrancer is entitled to dispute, and has an interest in contesting, the amount, the validity, and the priority of the lien claimed for labor and material, and must be accorded this opportunity within the time provided by Civil Code Section 3144 (Riley v. Peters (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 296, 298, 300, 15 Cal. Rptr. 41).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action when the lien claimant has failed to join an indispensable party as a defendant to the action and the 90-day period for commencement of the foreclosure action prescribed by Civil Code Section 3144 has passed.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien when it appears on the face of the complaint, or from matters of which a court must take judicial notice, that plaintiff failed to join an indispensable party who claims an interest in the property sought to be foreclosed [see Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(d) (objection to complaint for defect or disjoinder of parties)].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.49 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Determination of Indispensability

In Packard-Bell Electronics Corp. v. Theseus, Inc. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 358-361, 53 Cal. Rptr. 300 , the plaintiff appealed from those portions of a judgment denying foreclosure on 42 out of 44 lots against which he sought to enforce his mechanics' lien. The plaintiff had recorded his lien claim against all 44 lots, had timely filed a foreclosure action, and two months thereafter had filed a notice of lis pendens. The court denied foreclosure of (1) lots that had been sold by the defendant-owner before suit was filed but within 90 days of the recordation of the lien, (2) lots that were sold more than 90 days after plaintiff commenced his suit but before the lis pendens had been recorded, and (3) lots that were sold before the claim of lien had been recorded. None of the lot buyers were joined in the action.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment only with respect to those lots that had been purchased after the suit was filed and prior to the date when the lis pendens was recorded. Regarding those lots as to which the trial court denied foreclosure, the appellate court affirmed and held that foreclosure could not be ordered without giving the owners of those lots, who were indispensable parties, an opportunity to contest the amount, validity, and priority of the claimed lien. As to those lots that had been purchased after suit was filed and prior to the filing of the lis pendens, the trial court erred in denying a decree of foreclosure, since if those owners had actual knowledge of the pending foreclosure suit at the time they acquired title to the property, they would be bound by the decree of foreclosure (244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 358-364) .

[b] Effect of Failure to Join

In Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 , the appellate court affirmed the trial court's finding that a mechanics' lien was not enforceable against a husband and wife who held property as tenants in common when no notice of the lien was given to the wife and she was not a party to the foreclosure action, and when neither the claim of lien nor the complaint to foreclose affirmatively stated that the lien was only in respect to the interest of the husband. Because under Civil Code Section 3144 a lien does not bind any property for more than 90 days after the lien has been filed unless foreclosure proceedings are commenced in a proper court, the court found that the lien as to the property portion held by the tenants in common had expired, and the plaintiffs had no valid lien against their property (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 22-24) .

Riley v. Peters (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 296, 15 Cal. Rptr. 41 , was an appeal from a judgment quieting title to real property. The single question on appeal was whether the appellants, holders of mechanics' liens on the property, who had failed in their lien foreclosure actions to join as parties the trustee under a deed of trust or the subsequent owners under that deed, could prevail over those owners after the expiration of the statutory period for foreclosure of the liens. The trustee and subsequent owners brought the action against persons who had obtained lien foreclosure judgments on property to which they supplied labor and materials prior to the deed of trust recordation date. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment for the plaintiffs. Even though the mechanics' liens were entitled to priority over the deed of trust because the work of improvement had commenced before the deed of trust had been recorded, the commencement of the foreclosure action against the owner only, and not also against the trustee or the subsequent trust deed holders was not effective to preserve the lien. The court held that a junior encumbrancer is entitled to dispute and has an interest in contesting the amount, the validity, and the priority of the lien claimed for labor and material, and must be accorded this opportunity within the statutory time frame, while the evidence on which the lien claim rests is sufficiently recent (194 Cal. App. 2d 296, 298-300) .

[c] Junior Encumbrancer as Indispensable Party

See the discussion of Riley v. Peters (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 296, 15 Cal. Rptr. 41 , in § 152.29[3][b].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.50 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Essential Allegation

The facts and procedural background of Clements v. T.R. Bechtel Co. (1954) 43 Cal. 2d 227, 273 P.2d 5 are discussed in § 152.24[3][a]. The Supreme Court in Clements stated that a lien foreclosure complaint must show a substantial compliance with former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1187 [now see Civ. Code § 3084] as to the contents of the claim. Among other things, the Court stated, it must, either by direct allegation, or by an attached copy of the claim of lien, show (1) that the claim of lien contains the name of the owner or reputed owner of the property, if known, and a sufficient description of the property, and (2) that it is duly verified (43 Cal. 2d 227, 238) .

[b] Defective Claim of Lien

In Credit Bureau of San Diego, Inc. v. Williams (1957) 153 Cal. App. 2d 834, 835-836, 315 P.2d 355 , plaintiff brought an action to foreclose its mechanics' lien upon defendant's property in San Diego. Although the plaintiff's claim of lien described the property as "2152 California Street, San Diego, California, which premises claimant is informed and believes to be described as Lot 5, block 227," there were no houses on the 2100 block of California Street, and no number 2152. The trial court found this description so insufficient as to amount to no description at all, and rendered judgment for defendant on the mechanics' lien, a decision which the appellate court affirmed (153 Cal. App. 2d 834, 837) .

[c] Reference to Preliminary Notice

In H & L Supply, Inc. v. Ewing (1967) 253 Cal. App. 2d 283, 61 Cal. Rptr. 289 , the plaintiff in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action appealed from a judgment entered following the granting of a motion for nonsuit based on an insufficient property description. The president of the plaintiff corporation prepared a preliminary notice that described the property to be liened as "Ptn. of NE 1/4 of Section 3, 30-27, as per Map recorded in Book 3752 at Page 485 of Hall of Records of Kern County, California." No street number was given, and it was difficult to determine what part of the 160 acres was being liened without knowing the name of the owner, which plaintiff failed to insert in the claim. The plaintiff argued that the lien claim was not defective because he had given the owner a preliminary notice that put him on notice of the information omitted in the lien claim (253 Cal. App. 2d 283, 285) .

The court rejected plaintiff's argument, stating the lien claim is not designed to supplant a recorded claim of lien, but to alert the owner to the circumstances and that a lien is imminent. The court held that the mechanics' lien statutes enacted at the time the prelien notice, former Civil Procedure Section 1193.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3097] was added did not dispense with or mollify the requirements of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1(j) [now see Civ. Code § 3094], relating to the filing of the lien claim. The court noted, however, that the plaintiff's argument would have been more persuasive if it had been mounted on the framework of an estoppel, that is, if it had been shown that the owner had actual notice of the facts through the preliminary notice (253 Cal. App. 2d 283, 287) .

[a] Defective Claim of Lien

The court in Borello v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 490-496, 34 Cal. Rptr. 648 , set forth a test for the sufficiency of the property description. In this action to foreclose a mechanics' lien, plaintiffs furnished and operated excavating and grading equipment used in the subdivision of property owned by defendant Eichler. In their lien claim, plaintiffs described the property simply as "Unit 3 and Unit 4, Terra Linda, San Rafael." Although there were four subdivisions in this area -- Terra Linda, Terra Linda Valley, Terra Linda Oaks and Terra Linda Gardens -- there was no evidence that at the crucial time Eichler owned any units 3 and 4 in any of the four subdivisions except Terra Linda Valley. Furthermore, Eichler admitted at trial that it knew that plaintiffs were working on the Terra Linda Valley units. Thus, the appellate court distinguished this situation from cases involving property descriptions that were entirely erroneous or unambiguously erroneous, rather than merely defective or vague, and therefore did not constitute descriptions at all.

The appellate court held that a property description in a mechanics' lien claim will generally be sufficient if it will enable a party familiar with the locality to identify the property with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of others (221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 492-493) . Extrinsic evidence may be admitted to determine the sufficiency of a vague or inaccurate description, and errors may be disregarded if the identification of the property is otherwise sufficient, provided there is no fraud and no one is misled by the description (221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 493) .

§ 152.31 Supporting Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] and Dismissal of Noncontracting Defendant Landowner--Recording of Bond for Release of Mechanics' Lien [Civ. Code § 3143]

[Caption. See § 152.27.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT AND FOR DISMISSAL OF DEFENDANT AS A NONCONTRACTING LANDOWNER BECAUSE A CIVIL CODE SECTION 3143 LIEN RELEASE BOND HAS BEEN RECORDED.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 152.27, Paragraph A.]

B. Release Bond. If the owner of property, or the owner of any interest in property, sought to be charged with a claim of lien, or any original contractor or subcontractor disputes the correctness or validity of any claim of lien, he or she may record a surety bond in the office of the county recorder in which the claim of lien was recorded. The bond may be recorded either before or after the commencement of an action to enforce the claim of lien, with a penal sum equal to one and one-half times the amount of the claim or one and one-half times the amount allocated in the claim of lien to the real property sought to be released. The bond must be conditioned for the payment of any sum that the claimant may recover on the claim together with his or her costs of suit in the action, if he or she recovers therein (Civ. Code § 3143).

C. Effect of Recording Release Bond. On the recording of a bond as prescribed in Civil Code Section 3143, the real property is released from the lien and from any action brought to foreclose the lien (Civ. Code § 3143).

D. Summary Judgment for Landowner. Summary judgment for a defendant landowner should be granted in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action if a Civil Code Section 3143 lien release bond has been recorded either before or after the commencement of the action (Frank Curran Lumber Co. v. Eleven Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 182184, 76 Cal. Rptr. 753).

E. Dismissal of Noncontracting Defendant Owner. If the plaintiff claiming a mechanics' lien on the defendant's property did not contract directly with defendant and a Section 3143 lien release bond has been recorded, it is proper on the granting of summary judgment to dismiss the action as to that owner (Frank Curran Lbr. Co. v. Eleven Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 184-185, 76 Cal. Rptr. 753).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment and the dismissal of a mechanics' lien claimant action by a defendant landowner, if a Civil Code Section 3143 lien release bond has been recorded and the defendant had no personal contract with claimant.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum, as well as a separate statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Summary Judgment for Landowner

In Frank Curran Lbr. Co. v. Eleven Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 76 Cal. Rptr. 753 , the trial court granted a motion for summary judgment by a defendant landowner in an action to foreclose a subcontractor's mechanics' lien action. The motion was based on affidavits and declarations demonstrating that the original contractor for the improvement had recorded a lien release bond as prescribed in former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.2 [now see Civ. Code § 3143].

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment. In response to the plaintiff's argument that such a bond violated Section 15 of Article XX of the California Constitution, which grants a mechanics' lien for labor and materials bestowed on property, the court stated that the Legislature is empowered to balance the interests of the lien claimant and the property owner, and to adopt legislation that will relieve the owner of the burden of the lien and at the same time afford the claimant reasonable assurance that his or her claim, if valid, will be paid in full. The Legislature effected this by former Section 1193.2, which both allowed the owner to remove the encumbrance on the property and provided (under the terms of the statutory bond) ample guarantee of payment to the claimant (271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 182-184) .

[b] Dismissal of Noncontracting Defendant Owner

The facts and procedural background of Frank Curran Lumber Company v. Eleven Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 76 Cal. Rptr. 753 are discussed in § 152.31[3][a]. In that case, the trial court on granting summary judgment ordered the dismissal of the action as to the defendant landowner who had no direct contract with the plaintiff. In affirming this portion of the judgment, the court of appeal stated that because the effect of the recording of the lien release bond was to free the real property from the effect of the lien claim and any action brought to foreclose the lien, and because no personal judgment could be rendered against the landowner due to lack of privity, it was proper on the grant of a summary judgment to dismiss the action as to that defendant only (271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 185) .

[Caption. See § 152.27.]

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE DEFENDANT, A NONCONTRACTING OWNER, HAS NOT CAUSED THE CONSTRUCTION OF A WORK OF IMPROVEMENT AND HAS POSTED AND RECORDED A CIVIL CODE SECTION 3094 NOTICE OF NONRESPONSIBILITY.

A. Summary Judgment. [See § 152.27, Paragraph A.]

B. Noncontracting Owner's Responsibility for Improvement. Every work of improvement constructed on any land, and all work or labor performed or materials furnished in connection with that work with the knowledge of the owner or of any person having or claiming any estate in the land, is deemed to have been constructed, performed, or furnished at the instance of the owner or person having or claiming an estate. The interest of the owner or person having or claiming an estate is subject to any recorded mechanics' lien unless the owner or person having or claiming an estate posts and records a notice of nonresponsibility pursuant to Civil Code Section 3094 (Civ. Code §§ 3094, 3129).

C. Posting and Recording Notice of Nonresponsibility. A person who owns or claims an interest in property on which a work of improvement is being constructed and who has not caused this construction effectively insulates his or her property from mechanics' liens by posting a notice of nonresponsibility in some conspicuous place on the construction site and recording the notice within 10 days after the person obtained knowledge of the improvement (Civ. Code § 3094; Frank Curran Lbr. Co. v. Eleven Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 185-186, 76 Cal. Rptr. 753).

[Optional] D. Failure to Verify Notice Not Fatal. Failure to verify the notice of nonresponsibility is not fatal when the parties are equally blameless, no prejudice arises from the lack of verification, and the landowner is not unjustly enriched (Baker v. Hubbard (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 226, 234, 161 Cal. Rptr. 551).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien by a defendant who did not contract for or otherwise cause the construction work taking place on property in which he or she claims or has an interest, and who within 10 days after having obtained knowledge of the improvement posted and recorded a notice of nonresponsibility pursuant to Civil Code Section 3094.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.51 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Posting and Recording Notice of Nonresponsibility

The facts and procedural background of Frank Curran Lbr. Co. v. Eleven Co. (1969) 271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 76 Cal. Rptr. 753 are discussed in § 152.31[3][a]. The court of appeal in that case rejected the plaintiff's contention that the noncontracting defendant landowner could not avail himself of benefits of the release bond because of the landowner's failure to post and record a notice of nonresponsibility pursuant to former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1183.1(b) [now see Civ. Code § 3094]. The court held that former Section 1183.1(b) gave a landowner the right to insulate his or her property from the effect of the mechanics' or materialman's claim of lien for materials or labor furnished under a contract with someone holding less than a fee title to the property, provided that the landowner posted and recorded a notice of the nonresponsibility within 10 days after having obtained knowledge of the construction of a work of improvement (271 Cal. App. 2d 175, 185-186) .

[b] Failure to Verify Notice Not Fatal

In Baker v. Hubbard (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 226, 161 Cal. Rptr. 551 , a landlord was held not liable on a mechanics' lien when he had posted a notice of nonresponsibility, even though the notice was not verified as required by statute. The court of appeal held lack of verification was not fatal when neither party was at fault, the landlord would not be unjustly enriched, and no prejudice arose from the lack of verification. The court also held that the landlord was not liable as a participant in the construction with the tenant when the landlord had not required the improvements, authorized the improvements, or agreed to pay for any of the improvements (101 Cal. App. 3d 226, 234-235) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Posting and Recording Notice of Nonresponsibility

Baker v. Hubbard (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 226, 161 Cal. Rptr. 551 , is discussed in § 152.32[3][b].

[b] Failure to Verify Notice

In Los Banos Gravel Co. v. Freeman (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 785, 794-797, 130 Cal. Rptr. 180 , the court held that both the posted and filed notices must be verified, and that the statute must be strictly construed to require this dual verification (58 Cal. App. 3d 785, 800) . The Los Banos case may be distinguished from the Baker case in that in Baker, the owner's lease compelled the lessee to substantially enhance the value of his real property or be in default of its terms. In such a case, the owner is deemed to be a participant with his or her lessee in contracts designed to make those improvements, and a mechanics' lien will attach to the owner's interest whether or not a notice is filed.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action by a defendant who (1) did not contract for or otherwise cause the construction of a work of improvement taking place on his or her property, and (2) had no knowledge of the construction.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lack of Knowledge of Improvement

P.W. Wood, Inc. v. Blalack (1927) 86 Cal. App. 572, 261 P. 737 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action on the property of a noncontracting lessor landowner for the unpaid price of repair work done at the request of the lessee. The trial court's judgment for the plaintiff was reversed by the court of appeal. The court held that because the defendant had no knowledge of the repair work being done and no evidence was produced that an agency relationship existed between the lessee and lessor, no lien could be created under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1183 [now see Civ. Code § 3110], for there was no one acting under the authority of the owner who could bind the owner. The court also noted that since the defendant had no knowledge of the repair work, he was not required to and in fact was in no position to disclaim responsibility for the work as provided by former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1192 [now see Civ. Code §§ 3094, 3129] (86 Cal. App. 572, 576) .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR JUDGMENT ON THE PLEADINGS BECAUSE IT APPEARS ON THE FACE OF THE COMPLAINT THAT PLAINTIFF'S MECHANICS' LIEN FORECLOSURE ACTION WAS NOT BROUGHT WITHIN THE TIME PERIOD PRESCRIBED BY CIVIL CODE SECTION 3144.

A. Objection by Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings. A defendant may move for judgment on the pleadings when the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against the defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 438(c)(1)(B)).

B. Sufficiency of Pleadings. A judgment on the pleadings is reviewed the same as a judgment of dismissal entered following the sustaining of a general demurrer, the question being whether a cause of action has been stated (Gill v. Curtis Pub. Co. (1952) 38 Cal2d 273, 275, 239 P2d 630).

C. Statute of Limitations. When it appears from the face of the complaint that an action is barred by the statute of limitations, that defense may be raised by a motion for judgment on the pleadings (Wrightson v. Dougherty (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 257, 261-265, 54 P.2d 13).

D. Limitations on Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action. No mechanics' lien binds any property for more than 90 days after the recording of the mechanics' claim of lien, unless within that time an action to foreclose the lien is commenced in a proper court (Civ. Code § 3144). Thus, a recorded mechanics' lien becomes a nullity when no action to foreclose it is commenced within 90 days (West Coast Development v. Reed (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 693, 700, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 790).

[Optional] E. Proper Court. If a mechanics' lien foreclosure action is commenced in an improper court, that is, a court of a county or a judicial district other than the county or judicial district in which the land sought to be foreclosed is located, the subsequent transfer of the action to a proper court after expiration of the 90-day period comes too late, and the action is barred by Civil Code Section 3144 (L.A.M. Constr. v. Kriz (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304 ; Halbert's Lumber, Inc. v. Burdett (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 14, 18-19, 249 Cal. Rptr. 285 ; States Shingle Co. v. Kaufman (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 830, 835, 39 Cal. Rptr. 196).

[Optional] F. Extension of Credit by Mutual Agreement. The giving of credit pursuant to Civil Code Section 3144, whereby the lien claimant's time within which to commence the mechanics' lien foreclosure action is extended for 90 days after the expiration of the credit, must be by mutual agreement and an averment of agreement is essential in a complaint that alleges such an extension of credit (Richards v. Hillside Dev. Co. (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 776, 780, 2 Cal. Rptr. 693).

[Optional] G. Rights of Bona Fide Purchasers. As against any purchaser or encumbrancer for value and in good faith whose rights are acquired subsequent to the expiration of the 90-day period following the recording of the claim of lien, no giving of credit or extension of the lien or of the time to enforce the same is effective unless evidenced by a notice of agreement recorded in the office of the county recorder prior to the acquisition of the rights of the purchaser or encumbrancer (Civ. Code § 3145).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for judgment on the pleadings when it appears on the face of the complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien that the action is being commenced after the 90-day period specified for foreclosure actions in Civil Code Section 3144. Such a defect should appear on the face of the complaint because, while the limitations period itself generally is not considered as part of the substantive right of the mechanics' lien claimant to foreclose his or her lien [Petersen v. W.T. Grant Co. (1974) 41 Cal. App. 3d 217,

220-223, 115 Cal. Rptr. 874] and hence need not be pleaded, it is an essential allegation of a complaint to foreclose that the plaintiff's claim of lien was recorded within the period specified in Civil Code Sections 3115-3117 [see M. Arthur Gensler, Jr., & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 703, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503] , and Civil Code Section 3144 requires that the lien be foreclosed within 90 days of the date that the claim of lien was recorded.

Optional Paragraph G is for use by a defendant in a foreclosure action when the complaint shows on its face the failure to file the action within the 90-day period, and contains no allegation that an agreement to extend credit, which would extend the time period within which the claim may be foreclosed an additional 90 days after the expiration of the credit [see Civ. Code § 3144], or an agreement to waive the 90-day period, was recorded before the acquisition of the defendant's right in the property in question as prescribed in Civil Code Section 3145.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support either a demurrer to a mechanics' lien foreclosure complaint or a motion for summary judgment based on the action being barred by the Civ. Code § 3144 limitations period.

[b] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice and discussion of motion for judgment on the pleadings, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 206, Demurrers and Motions for Judgment on the Pleadings (Matthew Bender).

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.46 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Objection by Motion for Judgment on the Pleadings

Code Civ. Proc. § 438, enacted in 1993, codifies the procedures governing motions for judgment on the pleadings. The motion may be directed either at the entire complaint or at any cause of action in it [Code Civ. Proc. § 438(c)(2)]. The motion may be made only after the defendant has filed his or her answer and the time to demur to the complaint has expired [Code Civ. Proc. § 438(f)(2)]. If there is a material change in applicable case law or statute, the motion may be made even though a demurrer was overruled on the same grounds as is the basis for the motion for judgment on the pleadings [Code Civ. Proc. § 438(g)(1)].

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 438(e), unless the court permits otherwise, a motion for judgment on the pleadings may not be made after entry of a pretrial conference order under Code Civ. Proc. § 575, or within 30 days of the day initially set for trial, whichever is later.

[b] Sufficiency of Pleadings

In Gill v. Curtis Pub. Co. (1952) 38 Cal. 2d 273, 239 P.2d 630 , the Supreme Court reversed a judgment on the pleadings for the defendants. The Court stated that on review the case would be treated the same as would be a judgment of dismissal entered following the sustaining of a general demurrer, that the allegations in the plaintiffs' complaint must be taken as true, and that the question is whether a cause of action has been stated (38 Cal. 2d 273, 275) .

[c] Statute of Limitations

In Wrightson v. Dougherty (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 257, 54 P.2d 13 , counsel for the defendants in a replevin action and action to quiet title moved the court for a nonsuit, and for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that it affirmatively appeared from plaintiff's opening statement and on the face of plaintiff's complaint that the causes of action were barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court granted the motions and the Supreme Court affirmed. While the Court did not specifically approve the raising of the question of the statute of limitations by way of a motion for a judgment on the pleadings, the Court did hold that because it appeared that the complaint stated no facts that would take the causes of action out of the bar of the statute, the motion for judgment on the pleadings was properly granted (5 Cal. 2d 257, 261-265) .

[d] Limitations on Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action

In West Coast Development v. Reed (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 693, 700, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2nd 790 , a real estate partnership dismissed its action against a small businessman engaged in the sale and installation of shingle roofs. The businessman then sought sanctions for a frivolous action. Although the appellate court remanded the action because the trial court failed to state in its order the grounds for sanctions, the court held that the partnership's action in continuing the lawsuit after the mechanics' lien had been released indicated bad faith. The court noted that the lien had become a nullity because no action to foreclose had been commenced within 90 days.

[e] Proper Court

In L.A.M. Constr. v. Kriz (1993) 14 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1, 18 Cal. Rptr. 2d 304 , plaintiff timely filed a mechanics' lien foreclosure action in superior court. At a status conference nine months after the lien was recorded, the superior court transferred the action to municipal court because plaintiff's lien claim fell below the superior court jurisdictional minimum. The defendants then moved for summary judgment, arguing that the lien was void because the action had not been transferred to a "proper court" within the 90-day period prescribed by Civ. Code § 3144. The trial court granted the motion.

The appellate court reversed, holding that the fact that the case was transferred from the superior court of the county in which the property was located to the municipal court in that county more than 90 days after the action was filed did not affect plaintiff's right to foreclose on its lien. After a discussion of preceding case law, including States Shingle Co. v. Kaufman (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 830, 39 Cal. Rptr. 196 (discussed above), the court concluded that a "proper court" includes all courts within the judicial district and county where the property is located. In reaching its decision, the court noted that States Shingle and its line of cases involved territorial jurisdiction, while this case involved subject matter jurisdiction. According to the court, subject matter jurisdiction, which gives rise to either superior court or municipal/justice court jurisdiction, is much more flexible. Thus, "[w]hile the property remains in the same district and county, the proper court for subject matter jurisdiction may vary even if the face amount of the lien suggests the proper court because, for example, part of the lien has been paid, or a cause of action to foreclose a small lien is joined with a very substantial claim based on fraud, or for other reasons" (14 Cal. App. 4th Supp. 1, 5).

Halbert's Lumber, Inc. v. Burdett (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 14, 249 Cal. Rptr. 285 , involved a materialman's action to foreclose a mechanics' lien on defendant's personal residence. Plaintiff filed his complaint in the municipal court of the proper county but in the wrong judicial district, one in which neither the real property nor any portion of it was located, and did not transfer the action to the proper judicial district until well after the expiration of the 90-day period to file. Defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the grounds that it was not timely filed was sustained without leave to amend, and the action was dismissed. Plaintiff appealed, and the appellate department of the superior court affirmed the order of dismissal, holding that the transfer of the action to the proper court did not relate back to the initial filing of the complaint, even though the action had been filed in the proper county. The court rejected plaintiff's reliance on Division of Labor Law Enforcement v. Egnew Invest., Inc. (1966) 247 Cal. App. 2d Supp. 863, 865, 55 Cal. Rptr.

767 , which held that Code Civ. Proc. § 396 (which allows the transfer of an action to a court that has subject matter jurisdiction to relate back to the date of the initial filing in an improper court) was applicable to a case in which an action is brought in the wrong judicial district but the right county. Noting that Egnew, a superior court appellate department case, was based on former Code Civ. Proc. § 1198.1, which was repealed when Civ. Code § 3144 was enacted, the court held that it was instead bound by Douglas v. Donner Pines, Inc. (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 268, 140 Cal. Rptr. 839 . That case postdated Egnew, and its reasoning in interpreting a "proper court" was based on the analysis of the precise purpose of Code Civ. Proc. § 392 (202 Cal. App. 3d Supp. 14, 18-19).

States Shingle Co. v. Kaufman (1964) 227 Cal. App. 2d 830, 39 Cal. Rptr. 196 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action for materials supplied to a general contractor for use in construction on defendant's property. The suit was filed in a county where no part of defendant's property was located, and which was therefore an improper court for the purposes of Civ. Code § 3144. Eleven months after the suit was filed the action was transferred to the superior court of the county in which the property was located. Defendants filed an answer, raising the special defense that the action had not been timely filed. A judgment of foreclosure was then entered. The court of appeal reversed, holding that § 3144 barred the action because the foreclosure action was not commenced in or transferred to a proper court within 90 days after filing of the lien claim. The court stated that in the light of the precise language of Civ. Code § 3144, the apparent statutory objective is to unbind the property at the end of 90 days, permitting owners, buyers, encumbrancers, and title insurance companies to deal freely with the property in reliance on the expiration of the limitation period (227 Cal. App. 2d 830, 834) . The court noted that these persons should not have to face the burden of examining court filings in all 57 California counties (227 Cal. App. 2d 830, 835) .

[f] Extension of Credit by Mutual Agreement

In Richards v. Hillside Dev. Co. (1960) 177 Cal. App. 2d 776, 2 Cal. Rptr. 693 , the trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend to the plaintiffs' first amended complaint for foreclosure of a mechanics' lien. The demurrer was based on the fact that the complaint showed on its face that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1198.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3144] barred the action. Within the statutory time period prescribed by Civ. Code §§ 3115-3117, the plaintiffs had recorded their claims of lien for labor and materials furnished to the defendant. Before 90 days had elapsed the plaintiffs recorded a notice extending credit to the defendants. This notice and a second notice extending credit that was recorded did not bear the defendant's signature. In the foreclosure complaint, the plaintiffs failed to allege any mutual agreement for either extension.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court, finding error in not allowing the plaintiffs to amend their complaint to show the requisite mutual agreement (177 Cal. App. 2d 776, 779) . However, the court did agree that in a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien that alleges that an extension of credit was given, the complaint must aver that the extension of credit was mutually agreed upon (177 Cal. App. 2d 776, 780) .

[a] Limitation on Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action

In Sawyer Nurseries v. Galardi (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 663, 226 Cal. Rptr. 502 , the bankruptcy court's approval of a claim by a creditor who latter asserted a mechanics' lien claim after release of the property from the bankruptcy court's jurisdiction did not absolve the creditor from the statutory 90-day foreclosure action requirement, even though other creditors had failed to object to the claim in bankruptcy court.

In Automatic Sprinkler Corporation v. Southern California Edison Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 627, 266 Cal. Rptr. 662 , a subcontractor filed suit to enforce his lien against a utility company. The Court of Appeal affirmed the trial court's granting of the utility company's motion for summary judgment, holding in pertinent part that the subcontractor's action to enforce its mechanics' lien was barred because it was not commenced in or transferred to the proper court within 90 days after the lien was recorded, as required by Civ. Code § 3144. The court noted in footnote 4 of its opinion that it is significant that the Legislature added subdivision (b) to § 3144, specifying that when there is a failure to timely commence an action to foreclose the lien, the lien shall automatically be null and void and of no further effect. The court stated that the language makes it clear that the statute is not merely a statute of limitations, and that a failure to timely commence the action terminates the substantive right to a lien (216 Cal. App. 3d 627, 635) .

[b] Proper Court

In Douglas v. Donner Pines (1977) 73 Cal. App. 3d 268, 140 Cal. Rptr. 839 , plaintiff filed a complaint (against a named defendant and fictitious defendants) in the Superior Court of Santa Clara County to foreclose mechanics' liens on property located in Nevada County. Plaintiff was awarded liens against the two properties and also an order severing the action as to the fictitious defendants. After plaintiff filed an amended complaint against those defendants, the action was transferred to Nevada County. There, the trial court sustained defendants' demurrer and dismissed the complaint for failure to file it in "a proper court" within 90 days after recordation of the lien claim. The Court of Appeal affirmed, holding that the Santa Clara County Superior Court was not a "proper court" in which to commence the action to foreclose mechanics' liens against property located in Nevada County. The court rejected plaintiff's argument that the repeal of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 5, which provided that all actions to enforce liens on real property had to be commenced in the county of the property's situs, had the effect of altering the rule that a mechanics' lien foreclosure suit must be commenced in a proper court. The court held that the repeal meant only that commencing the action in a county in which the real property is located is now a rule of venue and no longer a jurisdictional requirement (73 Cal. App. 3d 268, 271-272) .

The facts and procedural background of Automatic Sprinkler Corporation v. Southern California Edison Co. (1989) 216 Cal. App. 3d 627, 266 Cal. Rptr. 662 , are discussed in § 152.34[4][a]. In that case, the court held that a lien became null and void when an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien was filed in the wrong county and was not transferred to the proper court within 90 days after the lien was recorded (216 Cal. App. 3d 627, 635) .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT TO PROVE THAT THE INSTALLATION OF A CHATTEL, IN CONNECTION WITH WHICH PLAINTIFF FURNISHED LABOR AND MATERIALS, CAUSED THE CHATTEL TO BECOME A FIXTURE ATTACHED TO THE REALTY.

A. Motion for New Trial. On the application of an aggrieved party, the _____ [either verdict or decision] may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to justify the _____ [either verdict or decision], substantial rights of the aggrieved party have been materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657).

B. Attachment of Chattels to Realty. Real property is subject to a mechanics' lien for materials installed on the property only if the chattels installed become fixtures attached to the realty (R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 711-712, 20 P.2d 665).

C. Burden of Proof. A mechanics' lien claimant has the burden of proving that items that it claims are subject to mechanics' lien are fixtures or works of improvement (Energrey Enterprises v. Oak Creek Energy Systems (1990) 119 B.R. 739).

D. Factors Used in Determining Whether Chattel Is Fixture. The following main factors are considered in determining whether materials installed on real property become affixed to the realty: (1) physical annexation; (2) adaptation to use with the real property; and (3) intention to annex to the realty. Of these, the intention of the parties is the most significant factor. Other factors include the relationship of the claiming parties, the relative difficulty of removal, the nature of the article annexed, and whether the fact of annexation is open and apparent (Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 132, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728).

[Optional] E. Intent as Objectively Determined if Rights of Third Person Involved. When the rights of a person unconnected with the transaction are concerned, and the person is without actual or constructive notice of the intent of the parties responsible for annexing the personalty to the realty, the question of intent in affixing the chattel to the realty is not so much the intent of the parties to the transaction as it is the apparent intent as it would reasonably appear to that third person (Kruse Metals Mfg. Co. v. Utility Trailer Mfg. Co. (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 176, 183, 23 Cal. Rptr. 514).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial based on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to prove that the installation of a chattel, in connection with which the plaintiff furnished labor and materials, caused the chattel to become a fixture attached to the realty.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary judgment based on affidavits and declarations showing that an installed chattel in connection with which the plaintiff furnished labor and materials is not a fixture annexed to the realty.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.53 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Attachment of Chattels to Realty

In R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 20 P.2d 665 , the defendant appealed from a judgment foreclosing the plaintiff's mechanics' lien. The trial court imposed the lien on certain buildings located on the property, as well as on the real estate itself. The sole contention on the appeal was that the buildings were appellant's personal property and thus were not subject to the plaintiff's lien. The defendant lessee, acting pursuant to the power granted in his lease with the defendant lessor (neither the lessee nor lessor appealed from the judgment), caused a structure standing on the leased premises to be torn down, and entered into two conditional sales contracts with the appellant for the purchase of a steel service station with canopy and a steel comfort station. The contracts provided that the properties would not be attached to the realty and would not become a fixture or part of the real estate. Thereafter, the defendant lessee entered into a contract with the plaintiff for the furnishing of labor and materials necessary for the plumbing and wiring of the gasoline and comfort stations. The plaintiff was not paid for the labor and materials, and took all the necessary steps to perfect and foreclose its mechanics' lien (217 Cal. 708, 709-710) .

On appeal, defendant contended that, by virtue of the conditional sales contracts and the fact that the buildings were removable, the buildings remained personal property (217 Cal. 708, 710) . The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the trial court's judgment. While the Court nowhere explicitly held that in order for the plaintiff's lien to attach to the chattel and the surrounding realty, the chattel must have become a fixture, the issue of the case was whether the chattel did become a fixture, and the basic assumption of the Court was that if it did not, it would not have been subject to the plaintiff's lien (217 Cal. 708, 711-716) .

[b] Burden of Proof

In Energrey Enterprises v. Oak Creek Energy Systems (1990) 119 B.R. 739 , a mechanics' lien claimant asserted a lien on wind towers erected on Chapter 11 debtor's property. The Bankruptcy Court entered judgment for debtor, and claimant appealed. The District Court held that the evidence supported the trial judge's determination that the towers, motors, machinery, turbines, and other related articles of wind towers were not "fixtures," but that the foundations of the wind towers were fixtures, to which the mechanics' lien could attach. The court held that the claimant had the burden of proving that items which it claimed were subject to a mechanics' lien were fixtures or works of improvement (119 B.R. 739, 746-747) .

[c] Factors Used in Determining Whether Chattel Is Fixture

Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728 , involved an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien for labor and materials furnished in connection with the installation of supplementary air conditioning units. The noncontracting defendant owners had leased their restaurant property. Plaintiff had installed the equipment pursuant to a conditional sales contract with the defendants' lessee. In installing the units, modifications were required in the existing air conditioning system, but the units were not attached to the building because they rested on the roof by their own weight. No other evidence of attachment was produced at trial. Defendants were aware of the improvements being made but did not file a notice of nonresponsibility. The lessee vacated the premises, leaving a portion of the purchase price unpaid, and the plaintiff thereafter foreclosed his mechanics' lien. After commencement of the action, plaintiff removed the equipment, sold it to a third person, and credited defendants with the amount received. After a nonjury trial, the trial court entered judgment against the defendants, thereby establishing a lien on their property although it never found that the units were fixtures. The defendants appealed, contending that the plaintiff's repossession constituted a conversion of the defendant's property, that the repossession changed the character of the units from realty to personalty, and, in the alternative, that the units had never become affixed to the realty.

The Court of Appeal reversed, holding, inter alia, that reversal was required because of the trial court's failure to make a finding whether the units had become fixtures. Such a finding was essential to awarding the plaintiff a mechanics' lien, and to determining whether his subsequent actions constituted a conversion of the units and a waiver of his lien. To assist the trial court in determining whether the units had become fixtures, the court listed the factors set forth in Paragraph C of this form (18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 132) . The court did not take into consideration the rule stated in R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 20 P.2d 665 , that the rules governing fixture law between vendor-vendee, or mortgagor-mortgagee, and not those rules governing the subject between landlord and tenant, are applied in determining whether a chattel has become a fixture. The court apparently felt that under modern theories, a broader factor analysis should be used in deciding this issue.

[d] Intent as Objectively Determined if Rights of Third Person Involved

In Kruse Metals Mfg. Co. v. Utility Trailer Mfg. Co. (1962) 206 Cal. App. 2d 176, 23 Cal. Rptr. 514 , plaintiff fabricated and installed a bag house, which is a piece of equipment designed to filter sand and dust, and a blower system in a shed situated on the defendant's property. The bag house and blower were equally adaptable to use outdoors and inside the shed, and could easily be removed without injury to the property. Defendant contended, and the trial court agreed, that the bag house and blower system were not affixed to the land and had not become a part of it, and, therefore, that no lien could be claimed for plaintiff's labor and materials. The equipment had not been ordered by the owner, but by his sublessee, who covered the equipment with a chattel mortgage on the day of its installation. Plaintiff was aware of the mortgage.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment. The court discussed various factors to be considered in determining whether the equipment had become fixtures and noted that, as a general rule, the intent of the parties is a controlling criterion in ascertaining whether property is permanently attached. In this particular case, moreover, the question of intent was one of objective rather than subjective intent, because the intent of the parties refers to those immediate parties to the transaction such as mortgagor and mortgagee, vendor and vendee, and their successors in interest. However, when the rights of a person who is unconnected with the transaction are concerned, and the person is without actual or constructive notice concerning the intent of the parties responsible for annexing the personalty to the realty, as was the case with the defendant owner, the question is not so much the intent of the parties as the apparent intent as it would reasonably appear to such a third person (206 Cal. App. 2d 176, 183) .

[a] Factors Used in Determining Whether Chattel Is Fixture

Allstate Insurance Company v. County of Los Angeles (1984) 161 Cal. App. 3d 877, 207 Cal. Rptr. 888 , involved two separate appeals consolidated for decision, in which plaintiffs sought refunds of property taxes paid under protest. The issue was whether certain office computer systems should be classified as realty or as personalty for the purposes of property taxation. In determining that the particular computers were and remained personalty, the court used a fixtures analysis. The court noted that the three-pronged test to be applied in determining whether the systems were fixtures was as follows: (1) the manner of their annexations to the realty; (2) their adaptability to the use and purpose of the realty, and (3) the intentions of the parties making the annexations. The court further noted that in making the determination, the element of intent is regarded as a crucial and overriding factor, with the remaining criteria considered only as subsidiary ingredients relevant to the determination of intent (161 Cal. App. 3d 877, 885-886) .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT TO PROVE THAT PLAINTIFF'S LABOR RESULTED IN A PERMANENT IMPROVEMENT TO THE REALTY.

A. Motion for New Trial. [See § 152.35, Paragraph A.]

B. Permanency of Improvement as Essential. Real property is subject to a mechanics' lien for labor and materials furnished only if the labor performed resulted in a permanent improvement to the realty (Ogden v. Byington (1926) 198 Cal. 151, 156, 244 P. 332).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action when there is insufficient evidence to prove that the plaintiff's work permanently improved the property subject to the plaintiff's claim of mechanics' lien.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[i] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications, this form may be used to support a motion for summary judgment or a general demurrer in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action when the plaintiff's work did not permanently improve the property.

[c] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 152.54 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Permanency of Improvement as Essential

Ogden v. Byington (1926) 198 Cal. 151, 244 P. 332 , involved an appeal by the plaintiff from an adverse judgment in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action. The defendant lessors leased property to the defendant lessee for the purpose of growing rice and other grain. The lessee then contracted with the plaintiff for the furnishing of agricultural equipment and labor for use in connection with the construction of irrigation ditches and levees. In holding for the defendants, the trial court found that no structure or improvement of any kind had been constructed or erected on the land, and that no value had been added to the land.

The Supreme Court affirmed. In response to the plaintiff's contention that the work done and materials furnished fell within former Code of Civil Procedure Sections 1183 (works of improvement; now see Civ. Code § 3106) and 1191 (site improvements; now see Civ. Code § 3102), the Court stated that the character of the work done and materials and supplies furnished did not have the structural character or permanency required to bring it within these code provisions. The Court stated that an essential characteristic of labor or materials furnished to real property, for which a lien is sought to be established, is that of permanence (198 Cal. 151, 156) .

[b] Preparation of Land for Agricultural Purposes

Young v. Shriver (1922) 56 Cal. App. 653, 206 P. 99 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action for the performance of labor consisting of plowing several tracts of land that had been in a wild and uncultivated state. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment entered on the order sustaining the demurrer.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that a lien was not available for the plowing or breaking of lands used or to be used for agricultural purposes, whether or not the work was the initial work of that character done upon the lands. The court stated that neither the constitutional provisions for a mechanics' lien [Cal. Const., Art. XX, § 15; now see Cal. Const., Art. XIV, Sec. 3] nor former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1191 (site improvement; now see Civ. Code § 3102) contemplates lien claims for agricultural work of this nature. If these liens were allowed, annually cultivated agricultural lands could be subject to innumerable encumbrances for work that was not of a permanent nature (56 Cal. App. 653, 654) .

[c] Segregation of Amounts Claimed for Permanent Improvements

Gross v. Hazeltine (1930) 107 Cal. App. 446, 290 P. 673 , involved a plaintiff lessee's action to establish a mechanics' lien for materials and labor furnished in improving defendant lessor's real property. The lease provided that the lessee was to prepare the land to produce the best crops, to plant the crops as he deemed best, and to care for and harvest them. After the plaintiff performed the work he claimed a lien for the full amount of the work. The trial court held that the plaintiff had a lien on the land, and the defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment, in part because the plaintiff failed to show how much he spent for the portion of the work that constituted a permanent improvement. It was apparent to the court that only a portion of the work performed by the plaintiff, and agreed upon by the defendants, was a permanent improvement. The plaintiff's failure to apportion the amount in his claim of lien required the judgment to be reversed, and the trial court was directed to enter judgment in the defendants' favor (107 Cal. App. 446, 455-456) .

[a] Permanency of Improvement as Essential

The facts and procedural background of Lambert Steel Co., Inc. v. Heller Financial, Inc. (1993) 16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 20 Cal. Rptr. 2d 453 , are discussed in § 152.26[3][c]. The court in Lambert held that temporary construction fencing was not an improvement, as it was erected solely for security and liability purposes, and not to improve the property. The fencing was personal property that could be removed by the owner and used again and again. Because it was temporary and would be removed, it could not be considered to be the construction or alteration of, an addition to, or repair, in whole or in part, of any fence pursuant to Civil Code Section 3106 ("work of improvement" defined) (16 Cal. App. 4th 1034, 1043) .

In United Rentals Northwest, Inc. v. Snider Lumber Products, Inc. (2009) 174 Cal. App. 4th 1479, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 471 , the court of appeal recognized that a work of improvement must result in a permanent improvement to give rise to a mechanic's lien. However, in that case the improvement consisted of the removal of wood drying kilns that were 68 and 120 feet long, made of steel frame and bolted to concrete slabs. The court of appeal concluded that the permanency requirement cannot have much significance when the improvement is the removal or demolition of a building. There is no requirement in the statute that the land remain vacant permanently after the removal or demolition. Logically, the permanency doctrine must be satisfied in such a context by the fact that the removed or demolished building is removed or demolished [174 Cal. App. 4th 1479, 1484-1485].

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion to remove a mechanics' lien when the owner has already paid the full contract price.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Removal of Lien

In Lambert v. Superior Court (1991) 228 Cal. App. 3d 383, 279 Cal. Rptr. 32 , the owners hired a contractor to make major alterations to their home. Two years and several change orders later, the owners discharged the contractor and hired another contractor to finish the work. In October of 1990, the contractor recorded a mechanics' lien against the property, then immediately filed a complaint for damages for breach of contract and to foreclose the mechanics' lien. In December of 1990, the court granted the contractor's unopposed request to stay proceedings on the complaint pending termination of the arbitration prescribed by the contract. While the stay request was pending, the owners filed a motion to remove the mechanics' lien on the ground that they had paid the contractor more than $361,000, well over the contract price. After hearing, the lower court denied the motion on the grounds that the owners had not availed themselves of the statutory remedy for disputing the lien (i.e., a surety's release bond under Civil Code Section 3143). The owners then petitioned for writ relief.

The Court of Appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying the owners' motion to remove the mechanics' lien and to reconsider the motion in light of the views expressed in the opinion. The court ruled that the owners' motion was not improper. If a claimant has not yet imposed a lien or, having imposed it, has not yet sued to foreclose it, the owner's speediest remedy is through proceedings for injunctive or declaratory relief. When the claimant has already brought an action to foreclose a lien, however, the owner may more easily file a motion in the pending action. According to the court, if the claimant may use a mechanics' lien to protect the eventual award of an arbitrator, it follows from due process considerations that an owner may ask the court to remove an improper lien while arbitration is pending. The court noted that the owners correctly asserted that a Civil Code Section 3143 release bond may not be available to an individual owner, who will usually be required to post liquid collateral in the amount of the bond, and held that such a release bond is not the exclusive means of removing a mechanics' lien. The court, in quoting Connolly Development, Inc. v. Superior Court (1976) 17 Cal. 3d 803, 132 Cal. Rptr. 477, 553 P.2d 637 , stated that "the recording of a mechanics' lien deprives the landowner of a significant property interest, and thus constitutes a 'taking' within the meaning of the federal and state due process clauses." Due process would not be provided if a claimant's unjustified lien or a lien of an unjustified amount could be removed only by pledging collateral in excess of the amount claimed (228 Cal. App. 3d 383, 386) .

THE COURT SHOULD GRANT DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO CONSOLIDATE BECAUSE ANY NUMBER OF PERSONS CLAIMING LIENS ON THE SAME PROPERTY MAY JOIN IN THE SAME ACTION.

A. Authority to Consolidate. When actions involving a common question of law or fact are pending before the court, it may order all the actions consolidated (Code Civ. Proc. § 1048(a)).

B. Consolidation of Actions to Foreclose Mechanics' Liens. Any number of persons claiming liens on the same property may join in the same action to foreclose their liens, and when separate actions are commenced the court may consolidate them (Civ. Code § 3149; Schulte v. Buben (1932) 215 Cal. 172, 8 P.2d 843).

C. Allegations of Various Complaints Taken Together. When actions have been consolidated for trial, allegations of various complaints may be taken together and treated as one pleading, and allegations in one complaint can be taken to remedy defects or omissions in another (Tyler v. J.I. Metrovich Bldg. Co. (1920) 47 Cal. App. 59, 190 P. 208).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted by a lien claimant in support of a motion to consolidate when there are several lien claimants on the same property. In large multiparty construction cases, the benefits of consolidation in order to avoid duplication of time and effort during discovery and at trial are obvious.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

With appropriate modifications, this form points and authorities may be used by a lien claimant as the basis of an evidentiary motion at trial to remedy defects in the claimant's pleadings by referencing pleadings of other lien claimants in the consolidated action.

[a] Consolidation of Actions to Foreclose Mechanics' Liens

In Schulte v. Buben (1932) 215 Cal. 172, 8 P.2d 843 , the plaintiff appealed from a judgment of dismissal entered upon the sustaining of a demurrer to plaintiff's third amended complaint to foreclose on its mechanics' lien. In holding that the plaintiff contractor had stated a cause of action for foreclosure of the lien and reversing lower court's decision, the Supreme Court noted that the mechanics' lien law "is of an equitable nature and should be so construed as to permit the determination of all controversies arising thereunder, where possible, in a single proceeding, thus preventing a multiplicity of suits" (215 Cal. 172, 174) .

[b] Allegations of Various Complaints Taken Together

In Tyler v. J.I. Metrovich Bldg. Co. (1920) 47 Cal. App. 59, 190 P. 208 , landowners appealed from a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs in three consolidated mechanics' lien cases. After the actions were consolidated for trial, a stipulation was made that certain allegations of the complaints were true and that a bond in proper form was filed, but it was left open to the court to determine whether the bond was sufficient. This was the sole issue on appeal.

Two of the three mechanics' lien claimant plaintiffs alleged that a bond was duly executed and filed with the county recorder. The appellate court held that because the actions were consolidated for trial, the allegations of the various complaints could be taken together and treated as one pleading, with the allegations in one complaint remedying the defects in another (47 Cal. App. 59, 61-62) .

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF, AS A LIEN CLAIMANT UNDER DIRECT CONTRACT WITH DEFENDANT, IS NOT REQUIRED TO GIVE A PRELIMINARY 20-DAY NOTICE (PRIVATE WORK).

A. Claimant Under Direct Contract Not Required to Give Preliminary Notice. A person who furnishes labor, service, equipment, or material for which a lien otherwise can be claimed and who is under direct contract need not give the owner or reputed owner a Civil Code Section 3097 preliminary notice in order to have a valid lien claim (Civ. Code § 3097).

[Optional] B. Lien Claimant's Direct Contract With Owner-Lessor. If a mechanics' lien claimant contracts directly with a lessee for labor or materials to be furnished to a work of improvement located on the leased property, and the lessor knows of the construction and fails to record and post a notice of nonresponsibility pursuant to Civil Code Section 3094, then the lien claimant has a direct contract with the lessor for the purposes of Civil Code Section 3097 (M. Arthur Gensler, Jr., & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 707-708, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503).

[Optional] C. Lien Claimant's Direct Contract With Owner's Agent. When the lien claimant contracts directly with an agent of the owner, the owner is considered to be under direct contract with the claimant and is not entitled to a preliminary 20-day notice (private work) (Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 17, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414).

[Optional] D. Owner's Actual Notice of Lien Claimant's Identity and Express Promise to Pay. When an owner has actual notice of a lien claimant's identity and expressly promises to pay, and the lien claimant makes deliveries in reliance on that promise, the lien claimant is relieved of the obligation to show strict compliance with Civil Code Section 3097 requirements (Truestone, Inc. v. Simi West Industrial Park II (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 722-723, 209 Cal. Rptr. 757).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien based on the plaintiff's failure to allege service of a preliminary 20-day notice (private work), if the plaintiff has contracted directly with the owner, or with a person deemed to the agent of the owner, for the furnishing of labor or materials to a work of improvement.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Lien Claimant's Direct Contract With Owner-Lessor

M. Arthur Gensler, Jr., & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503 , involved an action to foreclose mechanics' liens brought by lien claimants for (1) the performance of architectural and design services in connection with remodeling work, and (2) the performance of the remodeling work itself. The action was brought against both the lessee's and lessor's interest in the real property on which the remodeling work was being done. The contracts for the services and work were with the lessee. In giving the plaintiffs a judgment of foreclosure of their liens, the trial court found that the lessor at all times during the remodeling knew of the work being performed on his property, and had not posted or recorded a notice of nonresponsibility. The court further found that the plaintiffs had a direct contract with the lessor for the purposes of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193(a) (preliminary 20-day notice [private work]) [now see Civ. Code § 3097]; thus, the plaintiffs were not required to give the lessor a preliminary notice in order to enforce their lien claim against him.

In affirming the judgment, the Supreme Court held that under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1183.1(b) [now see Civ. Code § 3129] the noncontracting owner is placed in the position of a party to the contract by the conclusive presumption that the work was done at his or her instance and request. This presumption arises after the owner has obtained knowledge of the work being done on his or her property. Thus, if a lien claimant contracts directly with the lessee, and the lessor knows of the construction and fails to record and post a notice of nonresponsibility, that lien claimant has a direct contract with the owner for the purposes of giving a preliminary notice. Because the plaintiffs had such a direct contract, no preliminary notice was required to be given to the lessor (7 Cal. 3d 695, 707) .

[b] Lien Claimant's Direct Contract With Owner's Agent

Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action for services rendered incident to the subdivision of certain property. No preliminary notice was given to the owner of the property, but one was given to the owner's husband, who had contracted for the services rendered. The trial court denied judgment of foreclosure based in part on the plaintiffs' failure to give the proper preliminary notice, which negated any lien that the plaintiffs could claim against the property.

The court of appeal reversed this portion of the judgment, noting that the owner was aware of the agreement with the plaintiffs, that she had approved of her husband's action, and that she had acted to facilitate the progress of the subdivision plan. Based on the principle that the actual authority of the agent may be implied from the conduct of the parties, the court held that because the plaintiffs had contracted with the agent of the owner, the contract in contemplation of law was deemed the contract of the owner. Because the owner was deemed to have contracted directly with the plaintiffs, the court held she was not entitled to a preliminary notice [decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 1193(a); now see Civ. Code § 3097(a)] (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 14-16) .

[c] Owner's Actual Notice of Lien Claimant's Identity and Express Promise to Pay

In Truestone, Inc. v. Simi West Industrial Park II (1984) 163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 209 Cal. Rptr. 757 , a materials supplier sought to recover the cost of materials delivered to a contractor and used in construction on real property owned by the defendant. The supplier joined an action for breach of contract against the contractor with a mechanics' lien foreclosure action against the defendant owner. The trial court granted the owner's motion for summary judgment and dismissed the complaint as to it.

The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that although the plaintiff had failed to comply with the requirement of Civil Code Section 3097 that a preliminary notice given by mail be sent by registered or certified mail, the plaintiff had alleged that defendant had actual knowledge of his identity and later expressly promised to pay him for all past and future deliveries of materials. If these allegations were true they would relieve plaintiff of the obligation to show strict compliance with the statutory notice requirement. The court also noted that evidence of a defendant's promise to pay is admissible in a lien foreclosure action, which may be amended to show the existence of an express contract. Furthermore, Section 3097 provides an exception to the notice requirement for one under direct contract with the owner. The policy of the law favors protection of laborers and materialmen, and an exception to the statutory notice requirement precludes the defeat of the lien on meaningless technicalities when a materialman is known to the owner and makes deliveries in reliance on the owner's promise to pay. In these circumstances, the property owner is not prejudiced by lack of notice (163 Cal. App. 3d 715, 722-723) .

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER BECAUSE A MECHANICS' LIEN COMPLAINT FOR MATERIALS FURNISHED FOR AND ACTUALLY USED IN A WORK OF IMPROVEMENT NEED NOT ALLEGE THE SATISFACTION OF THE ESSENTIAL REQUIREMENTS OF CIVIL CODE SECTION 3110 IN THE PRECISE LANGUAGE OF THE STATUTE.

A. Alleging Statutory Requirements. While plaintiff's complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien for materials furnished to a work of improvement must allege that the materials were furnished for and to be used in, and that they were actually used in, the improvements in question, the complaint need not aver the satisfaction of these requirements in the precise terms or language of the statute (Ensele v. Jolley (1922) 188 Cal. 297, 300, 204 P. 1085 ; see California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co. (1911) 16 Cal. App. 692, 704, 118 P. 103).

[Optional] B. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a mechanics' lien foreclosure complaint based on the plaintiff's failure to allege that the materials furnished to a work of improvement were intended to be and actually were used in the improvement, when the complaint alleges facts showing that these requirements were met. Paragraph B of the form may be used when the materials furnished were removed after installation and were not used in the finished work of improvement.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Alleging Statutory Requirements

Ensele v. Jolley (1922) 188 Cal. 297, 204 P. 1085 , involved defendant's appeal from a judgment in the plaintiff's favor in a mechanic's lien foreclosure action. The plaintiff's complaint alleged that as the owner of a lumber business he had furnished building materials to the defendant for the erection of a barn and completion of a dwelling on the premises. The plaintiff alleged the completion of the building, the value of the materials furnished, and the failure of the defendant to pay, and made other essential allegations to show he was entitled to foreclose his mechanics' lien. Although the defendant did not demur to plaintiff's complaint, the defendant urged on appeal that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The Supreme Court agreed that in order to entitle a materialman to a lien against the owner of premises on which a structure has been erected, the materials must not only have been furnished to be used in the structure but must also have been actually used in it. The Court held that it is well settled that the complaint must contain substantial allegations to the effect that the materials were furnished for and to be used in, and that they were used in, the buildings in question. However, while these essential requirements of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1183 [now see Civ. Code § 3110] must be alleged in the plaintiff's complaint, it is not necessary that the complaint aver their existence in the precise terms or language of the statute. The complaint is sufficient if, from reading it as a whole, it can be fairly deduced that the plaintiff conformed to the statute's requirements in the respect that the materials under the agreement with the defendant were to be furnished for the designated structure, and that the materials were actually used in the construction of the structure (188 Cal. 297, 300) .

The facts and procedural background of California Portland Cement Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co. (1911) 16 Cal. App. 692, 118 P. 103 are discussed in § 152.21[3][b]. The court in that case held that the mechanics' lien law should be liberally construed to effect its object, and that its notice requirements should emphasize substance over form (16 Cal. App. 692, 704) .

[b] Materials Installed But Removed

them in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action. The plaintiff furnished hardwood flooring intended for a residence that was being constructed by a contractor for the defendants. The contract for furnishing the flooring and laying it in the building was sublet to a third person, who purchased the flooring from the plaintiff. Because the flooring was poorly laid, defendant's architect ordered nearly all of it torn out, and other flooring laid in its place. Defendants contended on appeal that because the furnished materials were not finally used by them in the building's construction, plaintiff was not entitled to maintain a lien on the premises.

The court of appeal rejected the above contention and affirmed the judgment of the trial court, holding that a materialman is not required to ascertain whether material ordered by a building contractor conforms to the requirements of the agreement between the contractor and the owner. The court explained that the materialman's contractual relations are solely with the contractor dealing with the materialman, and that the materialman simply furnishes material as directed by the party with whom he or she contracts. In this case the problem with the flooring was due entirely to the manner in which it was laid, something the plaintiff had no part of. Therefore, the fact that by the owner's act the materials furnished may have been rendered useless did not defeat the rights of an innocent materialman, who had no knowledge or notice of defective or poor workmanship in the installation of the materials (97 Cal. App. 752, 757) .

[a] Materials Installed But Removed

Pacific Sash & Door Co. v. Bumiller (1912) 162 Cal. 664, 124 P. 230 , involved an appeal from an order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial following a judgment for the plaintiffs in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action. The defendants had offered to prove at trial that, after alterations had been made for which certain lien claimants had furnished labor and materials, the structures composing them were all removed from the building prior to the filing of any liens against it. The trial court refused to allow this evidence.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court, holding that since it appeared that the structures containing the alterations were used for some time before they were actually removed, this was enough to sustain the trial court's ruling. The Court added that it knew of no statute or decision declaring that the removal of an alteration to a building after it is completed and used destroys the lien that former Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 [now see Civ. Code § 3110] gives to persons furnishing materials or labor for the alteration, even if the removal is made before the filing of the lien. The Court held that if the materials are actually used in and the work is actually done on the alteration, the change made is of such a character as to come within the terms of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 giving a lien for alterations on a building, and the work is completed and put to use as altered, the lien cannot be defeated by a subsequent removal of that portion of the building comprising the alterations and restoration of the building to its original state (162 Cal. 664, 666) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien based on the complaint's failure to allege that the plaintiff was duly licensed at all times during the performance of his or her contract, when the complaint alleges sufficient facts to show that plaintiff is exempt from the licensing regulations.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Furnisher of Finished Products or Articles

In Pickens v. American Mortgage Exchange (1969) 269 Cal. App. 2d 299, 74 Cal. Rptr. 788 , plaintiffs filed a complaint for money damages and to foreclose their mechanics' lien. The lower court granted defendant's summary judgment motion based on the fact that plaintiffs were not licensed contractors. The appellate court reversed the summary judgment, finding that there were triable issues of fact as to whether the furniture and fixtures supplied by plaintiffs to defendants fell within the exception of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7045, which provides that the licensing requirements do not apply to the sale or installation of any finished products or articles of merchandise that do not become a fixed part of the structure (p. 705).

[b] Issue of Fact

In Vaughn v. De Kreek (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 671, 83 Cal. Rptr. 144 , the plaintiff, who had no contractor's license, contracted with the defendants, who were homeowners, to landscape their yard. After the plaintiff performed and the defendants refused to pay, the plaintiff recorded a mechanics' lien for the labor and materials furnished for the work. The defendants contended that plaintiff had acted as an unlicensed contractor and, therefore, was barred from recovery by Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031. The plaintiff argued that he had merely furnished the materials as a supplier, and had installed them as the defendants' employee. The court of appeal affirmed a jury verdict for the defendants, stating that the question of whether the plaintiff was functioning as an unlicensed contractor or merely as an employee hired by the defendants to supply materials and act as an employee, was essentially a question of fact for the jury (2 Cal. App. 3d 671, 677) .

The facts and procedural background of Borello v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 498, 34 Cal. Rptr. 648 , are discussed in § 152.30[4][a]. The plaintiffs in that case were employees of defendant subcontractor and furnished and operated excavating and grading equipment used by the subcontractors. The plaintiffs were not licensed contractors. In their action to foreclose their mechanics' lien, the appellate court found ample evidence to support the trial court's finding that they had acted as employees with wages as their sole compensation and not as contractors, including the following facts: (1) the defendant employed the plaintiffs as equipment operators and paid them by the hour; (2) the plaintiffs rented equipment pursuant to arrangements with the defendant's foreman and billed the defendant monthly for the rental charges; and (3) the plaintiffs took orders from the defendant's foreman and had no discretion as to how to perform their work (221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 498) .

[c] Independent Contractor and Employee Distinguished

The facts and procedural background of Vaughn v. De Kreek (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 671, 83 Cal. Rptr. 144 , are discussed in § 152.41[3][b]. The court in that case considered whether the plaintiff was an independent contractor or an employee of the defendant. The court stated that this determination is governed primarily by the right of control that rests in the employer, rather than in the employer's actual exercise of control. When no express agreement is shown regarding the claimed employee's rights to control the mode and manner of doing the work, the existence or nonexistence of the right must be determined by reasonable inferences drawn from the circumstances shown, and is a question of fact for the jury. The court stated that the jury could have reasonably inferred that the plaintiff was an independent contractor from evidence indicating that the manner and mode of the work, and even the selection of some of the plants and the direction of the workmen, was left to the plaintiff (2 Cal. App. 3d 671, 677) .

[d] Contractors' State License Law and Mechanics' Lien Law Distinguished

In Steinbrenner v. J.A. Waterbury Constr. Co. (1963) 212 Cal. App. 2d 661, 28 Cal. Rptr. 204 , the plaintiff brought an action pursuant to former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1190.1 and 1192.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3196] against a defendant and his surety for the price of millwork and cabinets furnished to the defendant as a general contractor. The trial court found that the plaintiff had only "furnished materials and supplies" within the meaning of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7052, that he was a materialman and not a contractor, and therefore that he did not need a license. The millwork the plaintiff agreed to furnish was all fabricated at his plant and delivered to the construction site for installation by the defendant's employees.

The court of appeal affirmed. In response to the defendant's contention that the mechanics' lien law rule of Theisen v. County of Los Angeles (1960) 54 Cal. 2d 170, 5 Cal. Rptr. 161, 352 P.2d 529 , applied (that is, the plaintiff was considered a subcontractor because he performed a substantial specified portion of the construction that was the subject of the general contract, and did so pursuant to the plans and specifications by which the original contractor was bound), the court noted that the term "subcontractor" was given a broad interpretation in Theisen. This is consistent with the mechanics' lien law's purpose to provide financial security for suppliers who do no installation work themselves, but whose custom-made products have little economic value except as part of the building for which they were designed. On the other hand, the purpose of the Contractors' State License Law is to protect the public from incompetent and unreliable contractors. Therefore, the court stated, while Theisen presented an interesting analogy, Bus. & Prof. Code § 7052, which distinctly excludes suppliers who do not themselves fabricate or consume their materials in the work of the general contractor, was controlling (212 Cal. App. 2d 661, 664-666) .

Johnson v. Silver (1958) 161 Cal. App. 2d Supp 853, 327 P.2d 245 , involved an appeal from judgments for the plaintiffs in two consolidated mechanics' liens actions. The defendant owner had hired the defendant original contractor to excavate property for an apartment building. The contractor, who was not licensed, hired the plaintiffs to haul away dirt after the contractor excavated the property. The defendants contended that the plaintiffs were barred from recovery by the fact that the contractor was unlicensed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, stating that the Contractors' State License Law was enacted for the safety and protection of the public against imposition by persons inexperienced in contracting work, and for the prevention of fraudulent acts by contractors resulting in a loss to subcontractors, materialmen, employees (as was the case here), and owners of structures. Because the plaintiffs were in a class of those for whose protection the law was enacted, they were removed from the imputation of in pari delicto, and, thus, entitled to enforce a mechanics' lien action for recovery of what was justly due them (161 Cal. App. 2d Supp 853, 855-856).

[f] Furnishing Materials as Supplier and Installing as Employee

In Cargill v. Achziger (1958) 165 Cal. App. 2d 220, 331 P.2d 774 , the defendants appealed from a judgment foreclosing plaintiff's mechanics' lien. Plaintiff brought the action for labor and materials furnished to the defendants and used in grading and paving a parking lot and driveway on the defendants' property, and in oiling a driveway, hauling trash, and blading grass. The plaintiff had told one defendant before he performed any work that he was not a contractor and would have to take the work on a labor and materials basis. It was also the plaintiff's understanding that he could have been fired at will. The defendants contended that since the plaintiff did not come within Bus. & Prof. Code § 7052 (applying to materialmen) or 7053 (applying to employees), he must have been required to hold a contractor's license in order to recover.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court. After setting forth the substance of Bus. & Prof. Code §§ 7052 and 7053 [see Paragraph A of this form], the court stated that there is nothing in the Contractors' State License Law that precludes one from furnishing materials as a supplier and then installing them as an employee (165 Cal. App. 2d 220, 223) .

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS SUBSTANTIALLY COMPLIED WITH THE LICENSING REQUIREMENTS OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONS CODE SECTION 7031.

A. Substantial Compliance Doctrine. The court may determine that there has been substantial compliance with licensure requirements under Business and Professions Code Section 7031 if it is shown at an evidentiary hearing that the person who engaged in the business or acted in the capacity of a contractor (1) had been duly licensed as a contractor in California prior to the performance of the act or contract, (2) acted reasonably and in good faith to maintain proper licensure, and (3) did not know or reasonably should not have known that he or she was not duly licensed (Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e), (f)).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien based on the complaint's failure to allege that the plaintiff was duly licensed at all times during the performance of his or her contract, when the complaint alleges sufficient facts to show that plaintiff has substantially complied with the licensing requirements set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031. For coverage of the evolution of the substantial compliance doctrine, see § 152.42[3][a].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.22.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Compliance Doctrine

The substantial compliance doctrine ameliorates the harshness of the basic licensing requirement of Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031. Under that requirement, no person engaged in the business or acting in the capacity of a contractor may bring or maintain any action, or recover in law or equity in any action, in any California court for the collection of compensation for the performance of any act or contract for which a license is required by the Contractors' State License Law [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7000 et seq.] without alleging that he or she was a duly licensed contractor at all times during the performance of that act or contract. This prohibition applies regardless of the merits of the cause of action [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(a) (statute also sets forth an exemption for contractors who are each individually licensed but who fail to comply with joint venture licensing provisions when applicable)]. The substantial compliance doctrine provides an exception to this prohibition by permitting the recovery of compensation by unlicensed contractors under limited circumstances.

This form reflects the current version of the substantial compliance doctrine, which is set forth in Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(e), (f) [see Stats., 1994, ch. 550 (most recent amendments to doctrine)]. This version applies to virtually all contracts entered into on or after January 1, 1992, and to all actions or arbitrations arising from such a contract, with the following exceptions [Bus. & Prof. Code § 7031(f)]:

- Any legal action or arbitration commenced before January 1, 1995, regardless of the date on which the parties entered into the contract; or

- Any legal action or arbitration commenced on or after January 1, 1995, if the action or arbitration was initially commenced before that date, and was subsequently dismissed.

From 1990 through 1991, there was no doctrine of substantial compliance in California [see Hydrotech Systems, Ltd. v. Oasis Waterpark (1991) 52 Cal. 3d 988, 996 n. 5, 277 Cal. Rptr. 517, 803 P.2d 370] . Prior to 1990, only a judicial doctrine of substantial compliance existed in California [see Latipac, Inc. v. Superior Court (1966) 64 Cal. 2d 278, 281-282, 49 Cal. Rptr. 676, 411 P.2d 564 ; G.E. Hetrick & Associates, Inc. v. Summit Construction & Maintenance Co. (1992) 11 Cal. App. 4th 318, 329, 13 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803] .

A. Requirements Met if Statutory Purpose Achieved. If the purpose of the requirement of Civil Code Section 3084(a)(4) is achieved, that is, that the owner is given an opportunity to ascertain the truth of the claim and to protect himself or herself against double payment, and no one is prejudiced, technical requirements do not stand in the way of achieving the purpose of the mechanics' lien law (*Wand Corp. v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements Met if Statutory Purpose Achieved

In Wand Corp. v. San Gabriel Valley Lbr. Co. (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 855, 46 Cal. Rptr. 486 , the trial court granted the defendant a summary judgment in plaintiff's lien foreclosure action. The basis for the decision was the fact that the claim of lien did not comply with former Code Civ. Proc. § 1193.1(j)(4) [now see Civ. Code § 3084(a)(4)], in that the lien did not contain the name of the person by whom the plaintiff was employed or to whom he furnished the materials, which was in this case the original contractor. The plaintiff had in fact inserted on the line of a printed form a claim of lien, where the plaintiff should have written in the name of the original contractor, the word "claimant." Thus, according to the claim of lien, the plaintiff appeared to have made a contract with himself. This defect had already been admitted in the plaintiff's complaint, which failed to allege that the lien claim contained the statement required by former § 1193.1(j)(4). Defendant's answer admitted that before the claim of lien was recorded, the defendant received a preliminary notice that did contain the correct name of the person to whom the plaintiff furnished the materials.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court and held that mere proof of the mistake did not mean that the plaintiff could not prevail, and that defendant would have to prove that he was actually prejudiced by the mistake, or that the plaintiff's mistake was made with the intent to defraud. The court noted that the purpose of requiring the claimant to reveal the identity of the person to whom he or she furnished materials is to give the owner an opportunity to ascertain the truth of the claim and to protect himself or herself against double payment as best he or she can. After reviewing several cases, the court concluded that if there is a unifying thread that explains most of them, it was that when the purpose of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193(j)(4) is achieved and no one is prejudiced, technical requirements should not stand in the way of achieving the purpose of the mechanics' lien law. Because the preliminary notice contained the correct name of the person to whom the plaintiff furnished materials, the court held that when the preliminary notice does so correctly designate the name to be included in the claim of lien, and when the claim of lien that is recorded is not fraudulent and does not mislead third persons, the failure of the lien claim to contain that name is not necessarily fatal to the enforcement of the lien (236 Cal. App. 2d 855, 861) .

[b] Reference to Preliminary Notice

Wand Corp. v. San Gabriel Valley Lbr. Co. (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 855, 46 Cal. Rptr. 486 , is discussed in § 152.43[3][a].

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER BECAUSE PLAINTIFF IS NOT REQUIRED TO STATE THE NAME OF THE OWNER OR THE REPUTED OWNER IN HIS/HER CLAIM OF LIEN IF THIS NAME IS NOT KNOWN.

A. Name of Owner Not Required if Not Known. Civil Code Section 3084(a)(2) requires the lien claimant to insert the name of the owner or reputed owner in the lien claim only when it is known to the lien claimant; and the failure to include the name presumes that the claimant does not know the name (Allen v. Wilson (1918) 178 Cal. 674, 678, 174 P. 661).

[Optional] B. Name of Reputed Owner. As indicated by the language of Civil Code Section 3084(a)(2), it is sufficient to give only the name of the reputed owner, and, if an individual does so in good faith, the individual does not lose his or her lien when he or she subsequently determines that some other individual is the actual owner (*Frank Pisano & Associates v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used to oppose a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien, based on the plaintiff's failure to include in the recorded lien claim the name of the owner or reputed owner of the property sought to be charged with the mechanics' lien, when the lien claimant did not know the name of the owner or reputed owner.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.25.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Name of Owner Not Required if Not Known

In Allen v. Wilson (1918) 178 Cal. 674, 174 P. 661 , the defendant appealed from a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of a mechanics' lien against a lot owned by the defendant. The defendant contended on appeal that the plaintiff's lien claim was invalid in that it did not name anyone as the owner or reputed owner of the property.

The court of appeal rejected this contention and affirmed the trial court. The court noted that there did not appear to be any evidence that the plaintiff knew the name of the owner when he filed the lien claim, and held that former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1187 [now see Civ. Code § 3084] only requires the lien claimant to insert the name of the owner or reputed owner in his or her claim of lien when he or she knows the name. The court stated that if the name is not known, the claim filed is sufficient if it is silent on the subject. When it is silent on the subject, the name of the owner or reputed owner is presumably not within the knowledge of the claimant (178 Cal. 674, 678) .

[b] Name of Reputed Owner

In Frank Pisano & Associates v. Taggart (1972) 29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 105 Cal. Rptr. 414 , the plaintiffs appealed from a judgment denying them the right to foreclose their mechanics' lien, and the cross complainants appealed from a judgment denying them monetary damages on their cross complaint. The defendants in the mechanics' lien foreclosure action sought to sustain the judgment on the ground (among others) that the lien claim failed to name the owners of the property at the time it was recorded. The claim of lien in fact named the former owner.

The court of appeal reversed a portion of the judgment and affirmed all other portions. With respect to the alleged defective claim of lien, the court held that the failure to name the actual owners of the property in the plaintiffs' claim of lien was not fatal to their cause of action. The court held that it is sufficient to give only the name of the reputed owner. The court noted that if this is done in good faith, the claimant does not lose his or her lien if he or she subsequently determines that some other individual is the actual owner. Because one of the reputed owners in this case had made certain representations to one of the plaintiffs, indicating he was the owner, the court found that the plaintiffs had acted reasonably in naming him as the owner (29 Cal. App. 3d 1, 18-19) .

§ 152.45 Opposing Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] to Foreclose Mechanics' Lien--Notice of Completion Ineffective to Shorten Prescribed Statutory Period Within Which Claim of Lien Must Be Recorded

[Caption. See § 152.39.]

THE COURT SHOULD OVERRULE DEFENDANT'S GENERAL DEMURRER BECAUSE A NOTICE OF COMPLETION IS INEFFECTIVE TO SHORTEN THE PRESCRIBED STATUTORY PERIOD WITHIN WHICH A CLAIM OF LIEN MUST BE RECORDED IF IT IS RECORDED BEFORE COMPLETION OF THE WORK OF IMPROVEMENT.

A. Completion Defined. In the case of any work of improvement other than a public work, completion means actual completion of the work of improvement. Any of the following shall be deemed equivalent to a completion: an occupation or use of the work of improvement by the owner or the owner's agent, accompanied by a cessation of labor on the work of improvement; an acceptance by the owner or the owner's agent of the work of improvement; after commencement of the work of improvement, a cessation of labor thereon for a continuous period of 60 days, or a cessation of labor thereon for a continuous period of 30 days or more if the owner files for record a notice of cessation; or an acceptance by a public entity when the work of improvement is subject to such an acceptance (Civ. Code § 3086). A contract is complete for purposes of commencing the recordation period under Civ. Code § 3115 when all work under the contract has been performed, excused, or otherwise discharged (Howard S. Wright Construction Co. v. BBIC Investors (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 228, 241, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 769).

B. Recording of Notice of Completion. A notice of completion must be recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county in which the site is located, within 10 days after completion of the work of improvement (Civ. Code § 3093).

C. Premature Recording of Notice of Completion. A notice of completion recorded by the owner before actual completion of the work of improvement is premature and does not limit the time within which claims of lien must be recorded (Scott, Blake & Wynne v. Summit Ridge Estates, Inc. (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 347, 357, 59 Cal. Rptr. 587).

[Optional] D. Completion as Question of Fact. The determination of the date of completion of a work of improvement is a question of fact (Scott, Blake & Wynne v. Summit Ridge Estates, Inc. (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 347, 357, 59 Cal. Rptr. 587).

[Optional] E. Occupancy and Use. When an occupancy or use of a work of improvement by the owner or the owner's agent coexists with the performance of the labor by the lien claimant or is consistent with further work by the claimant, the so-called occupancy has indicated not a constructive completion but only a cessation of labor, which must continue for 60 days before the 90-day period during which the lien must be filed commences, if no notice of completion was recorded (M. Arthur Gensler, Jr., & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 706, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503).

[Optional] F. Subject to Acceptance. The phrase, "subject to acceptance," as set forth in Civil Code Section 3086, is not to be equated with inspection and approval or the issuance of certificates of occupancy under building regulations, but must find its base in some legislative enactment by the public authority. Thus, whether a project is subject to acceptance does not depend on whether the contractor had complied with all requirements necessary to approval and acceptance of the project, nor upon acceptance itself, but rather on whether the improvement was required to be accepted by a public authority pursuant to a legislative act (A.J. Raisch Paving Co. v. Mountain View Sav. & Loan Assn. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 832, 836, 105 Cal. Rptr. 96).

[Optional] G. Laches. The doctrine of laches entitles a court to consider a delay in recording a claim of lien as a reason for denying equitable relief to foreclose a mechanics' lien, such as when a plaintiff used the delay to advance its financial interests and that of its president and sole shareholder at the expense of defendant homeowners and lenders (A.A. Baxter Corp. v. Home Owners & Lenders (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 725, 735, 86 Cal. Rptr. 854).

[Optional] H. Original Contractor. An original contractor is any contractor who has a direct contractual relationship with the owner (Civ. Code § 3095). Thus, one who is normally considered a subcontractor and has a contract with the owner's lessee is an original contractor for the purpose of recording his or her claim of lien, and has 60 days to file the claim (rather than 30 days as does a subcontractor) (Benson Elec. Co. v. Hale Bros. Assoc., Inc. (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 686, 689-692, 55 Cal. Rptr. 73).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint to foreclose a mechanics' lien based on the plaintiff's failure to allege facts showing that the claim of lien was timely recorded, when the notice of completion, which was recorded in order to shorten the time period within which the claim of lien must be recorded, was recorded prematurely.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Completion Defined

In Howard S. Wright Construction Co. v. BBIC Investors (2006) 136 Cal. App. 4th 228, 38 Cal. Rptr. 3d 769 , the owner informed the contractor that it was experiencing financial difficulties and would not be paying the contractor any more money. The court of appeal held that the contractor's recording of a mechanic's lien was not premature, because its contract was "completed" within the meaning of Civ. Code § 3115 on the anticipatory breach of the other contracting party (136 Cal. App. 4th 228, 241-242) . The court concluded that a contract is complete for purposes of commencing the recordation period under § 3115 when all work under the contract has been performed, excused, or otherwise discharged (136 Cal. App. 4th 228, 241) .

[b] Premature Recording of Notice of Completion

In Scott, Blake & Wynne v. Summit Ridge Estates, Inc. (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 347, 59 Cal. Rptr. 587 , the defendants appealed from a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of plaintiff's mechanics' lien for surveying and engineering services rendered in connection with subdivision work. The trial court had found that the plaintiff did not complete his services under his contract until March 31, 1961. Notices of completion were recorded by defendants on January 5 and February 21, 1961, and were intended to pertain to work performed by the plaintiff in connection with the laying of sewers, storm drains, and underground utilities in the tract in question. The defendants contended on appeal, among other contentions, that the plaintiff's claim of lien was not timely filed by reason of the notices of completion recorded by the defendants.

The Court of Appeal affirmed. It held that a notice of completion, if filed by the owner before actual completion of the work of improvement, is premature and does not limit the time within which claims of lien must be filed. Moreover, the date of completion of a work of improvement is a question of fact. Here, there was sufficient evidence to sustain the trial court's judgment, because the services plaintiff performed after the defendant had recorded his notices of completion were basic to the "scheme of improvement," as those terms are used to describe a work of improvement under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1182(b) [now see Civ. Code § 3106]. Therefore, the court concluded that the work of improvement was not completed until the plaintiff had completed his services under his contract (251 Cal. App. 2d 347, 357) .

[c] Completion as Question of Fact

Scott, Blake & Wynne v. Summit Ridge Estates, Inc. (1967) 251 Cal. App. 2d 347, 59 Cal. Rptr. 587 , is discussed in § 152.45[3][a].

[d] Occupancy and Use

M. Arthur Gensler, Jr. & Associates, Inc. v. Larry Barrett, Inc. (1972) 7 Cal. 3d 695, 103 Cal. Rptr. 247, 499 P.2d 503 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action filed by an architectural firm and a general contractor for services performed by them in remodeling the defendant's building at the request of his lessee. The trial court gave judgment for the plaintiffs and the defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed. The original contract between the lessee and plaintiffs specified a ceiling price for the work to be done. The lessee encountered financial difficulty while the work was in progress and attempted to obtain additional financing without success. The lessee was unable to pay the architects anything and to continue to pay the contractor. Work was discontinued, and the plaintiffs then recorded their lien claims within 150 days of the date of discontinuance, but after the expiration of 90 days.

The defendants contended on appeal that the recordation had come too late because the date of discontinuance was the date of completion and the plaintiffs had only 90 days from that date to record their claim of lien. The Court responded by holding that in a lien foreclosure action, the plaintiff must plead and prove facts showing his or her substantial compliance with the statutory claim filing requirements, including the fact that the claim of lien was filed within the prescribed period. The Court also stated that this period depends on a construction of the pertinent statutes, and is a matter of law that may be independently determined on appeal. The Court noted that, under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1(d)(3) [now see Civ. Code § 3086], a completion is deemed equivalent to a cessation of labor on a work of improvement for a continuous period of 60 days. Under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1(d)(1), a completion is also deemed equivalent to the occupation or use of a work of improvement by the owner or the owner's agent (which the lessee had been in this case), accompanied by a cessation of labor on the work of improvement. Thus, the question became what constitutes "occupancy and use." The Court stated that it was reasonable to conclude, as the trial court did, that occupancy equals completion of the job only if it does not coexist with the labor throughout, or is somehow inconsistent with further work by the mechanic. The Court found that in those cases where the occupancy does coexist with the performance of labor, or is consistent with further work by the laborer (such as in this case, where the lessee promised to recommence work), the so-called occupancy has not indicated a constructive completion; there has only been a cessation of labor, which must continue for 60 days before the 90-day period of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1(c) [now see Civ. Code §§ 3315, 3116] commences. Therefore, the Court concluded that the plaintiffs had 150 days to record their claims of lien (7 Cal. 3d 695, 703-706) .

[e] Subject to Acceptance

In A.J. Raisch Paving Co. v. Mountain View Sav. & Loan Assn. (1972) 28 Cal. App. 3d 832, 105 Cal. Rptr. 96 , the defendant savings and loan appealed from the trial court's judgment of foreclosure of the plaintiff's mechanics' lien on a tentative subdivision tract in the City of Newark. The defendant contended on appeal that the plaintiff's lien claim was not timely filed, because the plaintiff had mistakenly assumed that the subdivision work was subject to acceptance by the city. The defendant argued that it was not subject to acceptance because the tentative subdivision map had not been submitted to the city council for final approval. Further, the necessary permits had not been obtained, and the requirements applicable prior to the recordation of the final map (as set forth in the Subdivision Map Act and applicable city ordinance) had not been performed.

The court of appeal rejected the defendant's argument and affirmed the trial court. It pointed out that the plaintiff had correctly relied on Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105 , in which the court had held that the phrase "subject to acceptance" as set forth in former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1191.1(e) [now see Civ. Code § 3086] is not to be equated with inspection and approval or the issuance of certificates of occupancy under building regulations, but must find its base in some legislative enactment by the public authority. The question of whether a project is "subject to acceptance" does not depend on the contractor's compliance with all the requirements necessary to approval and acceptance of the project, or on acceptance itself, but rather on whether the improvement was required to be accepted by a public authority pursuant to a legislative act. The city ordinance, as interpreted by the court, clearly called for acceptance of the improvement by the city council, and because the ordinance met the requirements set forth in the Deason case, the plaintiff's lien claim was timely filed (28 Cal. App. 3d 832, 836-837) .

In A.A. Baxter Corp. v. Home Owners & Lenders (1970) 7 Cal. App. 3d 725, 86 Cal. Rptr. 854 , a grading and excavating contractor was denied foreclosure of his mechanics' lien for work in grading and preparing land for subdivision before a subdivision map was accepted by the county or recorded. The plaintiff had delayed in filing his lien claim until lots in the subdivision had been sold to homeowners and construction loans for the erection of homes on the lots so sold had been recorded. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the contractor's claim was barred by laches, and rejecting his contention that the laches doctrine is not applicable to a timely recorded lien claim. The court noted that the contractor was a limited partner in the subdivision development firm for which he had done the work, knew prior to filing his claim of lien that the development firm was financially insecure, and that his contract for the work provided for payment in cash every two weeks. Thus, if the plaintiff had insisted on payment as provided by his contract, and on nonpayment had asserted his claim of lien, the subdivision map would not have been accepted by the city, the lots in the subdivision would not have been subjects for sale, the defendant homeowners would not have purchased and improved those lots, and defendant lenders would not have loaned money on them. Because the purpose of the mechanics' lien statute is the protection of property owners as well as lien claimants, the plaintiff's course of conduct was inequitable and justified denial of relief (7 Cal. App. 3d 725, 734-735) .

[g] Original Contractor

In Benson Elec. Co. v. Hale Bros. Assoc., Inc. (1966) 246 Cal. App. 2d 686, 55 Cal. Rptr. 73 , defendants appealed from a judgment of the trial court foreclosing a mechanics' lien. Plaintiff installed an electrical system in a bowling alley at the request of defendant's lessee. The owner filed a notice of completion, and, within 60 days of the date of recordation, plaintiff recorded his claim of lien. Defendant contended that this came too late because plaintiff had only 30 days to record his claim of lien, the time period specified in former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3116] for recording claims of lien by lien claimants other than original contractors. Thus, the question was whether one who contracts directly with a lessee who is in command of construction is an original contractor within the meaning of former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1(c) [now see Civ. Code § 3115], which provides for the longer period within which to record a claim of lien. The court noted former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1193.1(b) [now see Civ. Code § 3095], which provides that an original contractor is any contractor who has a direct contractual relationship with the owner, and stated that no one could contend that if plaintiff had a direct contract with the owner he could not be considered an original contractor, even though he would normally be considered a subcontractor. The fact that plaintiff had contracted with the owner's lessee rather than the owner did not change the situation (246 Cal. App. 2d 686, 691-692) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment based on the failure to file an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien within 90 days of the recording of the first claim of lien, when a second timely lien was recorded and the action was filed within 90 days of the second claim of lien.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should include facts showing that second lien and the action based on it were timely.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Action Based on Second Claim of Lien Is Proper

In Coast Central Credit Union v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 703, 257 Cal. Rptr. 468 , plaintiff timely recorded a claim of mechanics' lien but did not bring an action to foreclose within the 90 days required by Civ. Code § 3144. Plaintiff then recorded a second claim of lien, which was timely because the notice of completion had not yet been filed. Plaintiff brought an action based on the second claim of lien within the required 90 days of its recording. Defendant moved for summary judgment on the basis that the failure to bring a timely action on the first claim of lien forever barred an action to foreclose the mechanics' lien. The trial court denied the motion, and defendant petitioned for a writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the petition, holding that a claimant has a constitutional inchoate personal right to a mechanics' lien. Recording a timely claim transforms the inchoate right to a tangible lien on the property. Civ. Code § 3144 provides that failure to commence a timely action to foreclose the lien makes it automatically null and void. However, only the tangible lien is extinguished and the inchoate right to a lien remains. It may thus be perfected by timely recording a second claim of lien (209 Cal. App. 3d 703, 708-711) .

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE THE RELEASE OF PLAINTIFF'S EXPIRED CLAIM OF LIEN DOES NOT STATE THAT THE CLAIM HAS BEEN FULLY SATISFIED AND THEREFORE DOES NOT PRECLUDE THE TIMELY RECORDING OF A SECOND NOTICE OF LIEN AND THE FILING OF AN ACTION THEREON.

A. Release of Expired Claim of Lien Does Not Preclude Timely Recording of Second Notice of Lien and Filing of Related Action. Either a voluntary release of a null and void lien, or a decree ordering the release of such a lien, has no effect on the validity of any subsequently recorded lien, and therefore does not preclude the timely recording of a second claim of lien and the bringing of an action within 90 days of the recording of the second claim (Solit v. Tokai Bank (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1444, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243).

B. Release Does Not Extinguish Lien When Release Does Not State That Claim Has Been Fully Satisfied. Only when a release states that the claim of lien has been fully satisfied is the claimant's inchoate right to a lien extinguished (*Solit v. Tokai Bank (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1444, 81 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment based on the release of a null and void lien, when (1) the release did not expressly state that the claim was satisfied, and (2) a second timely lien was recorded and the action was filed within 90 days of the second claim of lien.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should include facts indicating that the release did not expressly state that the claim was satisfied and showing that the second lien and the related action were timely.

In an appropriate case, this form of points and authorities may be used to oppose the points and authorities set out in § 152.28.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Release of Expired Claim of Lien Does Not Preclude Timely Recording of Second Notice of Lien and Filing of Related Action

In Solit v. Tokai Bank (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1444, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243 , the claimant failed to commence an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien within 90 days after it was recorded, so the lien became void and unenforceable pursuant to Civ. Code § 3144. The property owners demanded that the claimant remove the cloud on title caused by the expired claim of lien, and threatened to petition under Civ. Code § 3154 for an order releasing the lien and an award of attorney's fees if the claimant did not release the lien voluntarily. The claimant executed and recorded a release of lien. The claimant received no compensation for causing the lien to be released, nor did the release indicate that the obligation on which the lien was based had been satisfied. Thereafter, the property owners filed an action against the claimant for breach of contract and other causes of action. The claimant recorded a new claim of lien and cross-complained against the property owners and others, including in the cross-complaint a cause of action to foreclose the mechanics' lien. On the plaintiffs' motion for summary adjudication, the trial court ruled as a matter of law that the claimant's release of the first lien extinguished all of its lien rights against the property, thus making any subsequent liens unenforceable. The court found that the parties intended the release of the first lien to have the same effect as a decree under Civ. Code § 3154, and noted that the effect of such a decree would be to preclude the foreclosure of a new claim of lien.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment. According to the court, if an owner has used the procedure available under Civ. Code § 3154 to obtain a recordable decree so that record title may be made to reflect that a specific lien has, by operation of Civ. Code § 3144, automatically become "null and void and of no further force and effect," this does not prevent either the owner or the claimant from taking further proceedings to resolve any disputed issues between them. The only further proceeding that is specifically mentioned as being barred once a decree is obtained is "an action foreclosing such lien" (68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1443 , citing Civ. Code § 3154(g)). The court stated that the only logical conclusion to be drawn from this statutory scheme is that once a timely-recorded lien becomes null and void because the claimant did not commence an action to enforce it, the lien can be removed as a cloud upon title either by the claimant's voluntary recordation of a release of the lien, or by court decree pursuant to Civ. Code § 3154. But either method only goes to the removal of a particular lien as a cloud on title, and nothing in the statutory scheme indicates that either method has any effect on whether the claimant can record a subsequent lien on the property, which, if it is timely recorded, can be enforced within 90 days after the recordation even though based on the same work performed or materials supplied that served as the basis for the prior lien. Thus, either a voluntary release of a null and void lien, or a decree ordering the release of such a lien, has no effect on the validity of any subsequently recorded lien. The validity of the subsequent lien must be determined on its own merits (68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1443-1444) .

In so holding, the court of appeal disapproved its prior decision in Maris Management Corp. v. Assured Drywall & Textures (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 268, 273-275, 199 Cal. Rptr. 309 that once a decree releasing the property has been granted, the lien is extinguished, and there is no lien on which to base a new claim (68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1445-1446) .

[b] Release Does Not Extinguish Lien When Release Does Not State That Claim Has Been Fully Satisfied

The facts and procedural history of Solit v. Tokai Bank (1999) 68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 243 are discussed in § 152.47[3][a]. The court of appeal noted that its holding in that case was consistent with the result reached by a number of other courts, including the court of appeal in Koudmani v. Ogle Enterprises, Inc. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1650, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 (68 Cal. App. 4th 1435, 1444) , which is discussed below.

In Koudmani v. Ogle Enterprises, Inc. (1996) 47 Cal. App. 4th 1650, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 330 , a mechanics' lien claimant executed a release of its first claim of lien for materials after the 90-day period to commence an action to foreclose that lien had expired. The claimant thereafter timely recorded a second claim of lien with respect to the same materials. The trial court granted the property owner's petition to release the property from the second claim of lien.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that because the release of the first lien did not clearly state that the claimant's claim for materials was satisfied, but only stated that the lien was "hereby satisfied or otherwise released and discharged," the release did not extinguish the claimant's constitutional inchoate right to a mechanics' lien as a remedy for obtaining the unpaid claim. The court held that only when a release states that the claim of lien has been fully satisfied is the claimant's inchoate right to a lien extinguished, because then the underlying obligation has been paid according to the express terms of the release (47 Cal. App. 4th 1650, 1658-1659) .

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S MECHANICS' LIEN HAS PRIORITY OVER THE LIEN OR CHARGE OF THE DEFENDANT'S ENCUMBRANCE.

[EITHER]

A. Priority of Mechanics' Liens. Mechanics' liens (other than with respect to site improvements) are preferred to any lien, mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance on the work of improvement and the site, that attaches subsequent to the commencement of the work of improvement, and also to any lien, mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance of which the claimant had no notice and which was unrecorded at the time of the commencement of the work of improvement (Civ. Code § 3134).

[OR]

A. Priority of Mechanics' Liens. A mechanics' lien that is claimed for labor or materials furnished to a site improvement is preferred to the following:

(a) Any mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance that attaches subsequent to the commencement of the site improvement of work;

(b) Any mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance of which the claimant had no notice and that was unrecorded at the time of the commencement of such site improvement; and

(c) Any mortgage, deed of trust, or other encumbrance recorded before the commencement of the site improvement work that was given for the sole or primary purpose of financing the site improvements, unless the loan proceeds are, in good faith, placed in the control of the lender under a binding agreement with the borrower to the effect that the proceeds are to be applied to the payment of claims of claimants and that no portion of the proceeds will be paid to the borrower in the absence of satisfactory evidence that all the claims have been paid or that the time for recording claims of liens has expired and no such claims have been recorded [Civ. Code § 3137].

[Optional] B. Optional Advances From Secured Lender. If a lender with actual knowledge of a junior mechanics' lien makes advances under a senior lien that the lender could not be compelled to make, the advances are optional and, therefore, subordinate to the junior lien if the advances are not used (1) in payment of any mechanics' liens recorded at the time of the advances, and (2) thereafter in payment of the costs of improvements on the property as provided in Civil Code Section 3136 (Turner v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 457, 459, 51 Cal. Rptr. 552).

[Optional] C. Commencement of Improvement as Question of Fact. Whether an improvement has commenced so as to trigger the time period for the filing of a notice of nonresponsibility is a question of fact (Arthur B. Siri, Inc. v. Bridges (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 599, 601, 11 Cal. Rptr. 322).

[Optional] D. Priority of Mechanics' Liens for Labor or Materials Furnished After Encumbrance Recorded. Lien claimants performing labor and furnishing materials under a contract between the owner and contractor are entitled to a lien that relates back to the time of commencement of work on the building, so as to take priority over a mortgage recorded subsequent thereto (see Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel (1925) 72 Cal. App. 1, 9, 236 P. 357).

[Optional] E. Priority of Mechanics' Liens for Work Performed After Deed Recorded. When the plaintiff's work is part of the same general improvement commenced before a deed of trust was recorded, plaintiff's mechanics' lien claim has priority over the deed of trust, even though the deed of trust was recorded before the plaintiff commenced work (Westfour Corp. v. California First Bank (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 394).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien when the defendant contends that the lien or charge of his or her encumbrance has priority over the mechanics' lien claimed in the foreclosure action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.27.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Optional Advances From Secured Lender

Turner v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 457, 51 Cal. Rptr. 552 , involved a declaratory relief action brought by the holder of a second deed of trust, which was obtained as security for the purchase price of unimproved real property, against the holder of a first deed of trust on the same property, which was obtained to secure a construction loan with the plaintiffs' vendees for the construction of a dwelling on the property. Under the loan agreement the vendees agreed that on the happening of certain conditions, the defendant could declare a default and discontinue further payments from the loan fund. These conditions apparently occurred and the defendant declared a default but continued making payments. The plaintiffs, the holders of the second deed of trust, complained that these latter payments were optional under the loan agreement and, therefore, the first deed of trust had lost its priority as against the second deed of trust to the extent of the further payments. The trial court held that the second deed of trust was junior to the entire amount of the defendant's first deed of trust.

The Court of Appeal affirmed, sustaining the judgment on a 1957 addition to the mechanics' lien law, former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1181.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3136]. Under this statute, if the other advances were used in the payment of any mechanics' liens recorded at the time of the advances, and, thereafter, in the payment of the costs of improvements on the property, the second trust deed would retain its priority. Because the trial court had expressly found that all of the loan proceeds were used for the construction of the dwelling pursuant to the terms of the loan agreement, the court concluded that the disbursement made after the declaration of default was entitled to the same priority under its deed of trust as that enjoyed by the disbursements made before the declaration (242 Cal. App. 2d 457, 459-460) .

[b] Commencement of Improvement as Question of Fact

Arthur B. Siri, Inc. v. Bridges (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 599, 11 Cal. Rptr. 322 , involved a mechanics' lien foreclosure action against both the interests of the vendor and vendee in real property on which the plaintiff had done clearing and grading work at the request of the vendees. The trial court gave judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant vendor appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The principal question before the court was whether the vendor's notice of nonresponsibility had been given before any construction had taken place on the property. The trial court determined that the notice had been filed before the commencement of the work of improvement. The court of appeal held that since this finding was supported by substantial evidence, the trial court had not abused its discretion (189 Cal. App. 2d 599, 601-602) .

[c] Priority of Mechanics' Liens for Labor or Materials Furnished After Encumbrance Recorded.

Simons Brick Co. v. Hetzel (1925) 72 Cal. App. 1, 236 P. 357 , involved an appeal from a judgment in favor of mechanics' lien claimants who had furnished labor and materials after the defendant had recorded his mortgage. On appeal, defendant contended his mortgage lien was superior and prior to the plaintiff's liens, even though the work in connection with which the mechanics' liens were claimed had commenced before the mortgage had been recorded.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, holding that the plaintiffs were entitled to liens for their labor and materials furnished under a contract between the owner and contractor. Because the contract was valid, plaintiffs' liens under the rule of priority set forth in former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1186 [now see Civ. Code § 3134] related back to the commencement of the work, and so were prior to the defendant's mortgage (72 Cal. App. 1, 5-6) .

[d] Priority of Mechanics' Liens for Work Performed After Deed Recorded

Westfour Corporation v. California First Bank (1992) 3 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 5 Cal. Rptr. 2d 394 , involved a contractor's action against a construction lender to foreclose on mechanics' liens. The trial court granted judgment for the lender, finding that the complaint was barred by the 90-day statute of limitations prescribed by Civil Code Section 3144, because when the contractor filed the complaint, it knew of the lender's existence and probable position as the lender, but nevertheless named the lender as a "Doe" defendant.

The Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the relevant inquiry was whether the contractor knew of the lender's actual interest in the property at the time it filed the complaint, not merely whether it was aware of the lender's existence. The court noted that Civil Code Section 3134 provides that a mechanics' lien has priority over a previously recorded deed of trust only if the lien relates to work commenced before the deed of trust was recorded, and ruled that the contractor's liens had priority under § 3134 because the contractor's work was part of the work that the former general contractor had commenced before the deed of trust was recorded. The court made its ruling despite the fact that the deed of trust was recorded almost two years before the contractor commenced its portion of work on the project. The court found substantial evidence to support its finding, including the fact that the lender's own witnesses admitted that tenant improvements were part of the original project and that the lender did not consider the project complete until the tenant improvement work was finished (3 Cal. App. 4th 1554, 1562-1563) .

[Caption. See § 152.48.]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE A PERSON WITH AN INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY SOUGHT TO BE FORECLOSED IN THE PLAINTIFF'S MECHANICS' LIEN ACTION IS NOT AN INDISPENSABLE PARTY TO THIS ACTION IF HE OR SHE HAD ACTUAL OR CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE OF THE PENDENCY OF THE ACTION.

A. Notice of Pendency of Foreclosure Action. Persons having an interest in property that is the subject of a lien claim in an mechanics' lien foreclosure action are not indispensable parties to the action if they had actual knowledge, or constructive knowledge imparted by a recorded lis pendens pursuant to Civil Code Section 3146, of the pendency of the action (*Packard-Bell Electronics Corp. v. [Optional] B. Theseus, Inc. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 364, 53 Cal. Rptr. 300*).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment by the defendant in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action when the motion was based on the failure to join, within the 90-day period prescribed by Civil Code Section 3144 for commencement of a mechanics' lien foreclosure action, a person who has an interest in the property subject to the plaintiff's claim of lien and who had actual or constructive notice of the pendency of the action.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.29.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Notice of Pendency of Foreclosure Action

In Packard-Bell Electronics Corp. v. Theseus, Inc. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 53 Cal. Rptr. 300 , the plaintiff in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien appealed from those portions of a judgment of foreclosure denying foreclosure on 42 out of 44 lots against which he sought to enforce his mechanic's lien. The plaintiff had duly recorded his claim of lien against the 44 lots and had filed a foreclosure action within the required 90-day statutory period. Two months after the filing of the action, plaintiff filed a notice of lis pendens pursuant to former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1198.2 [now see Civ. Code § 3146]. The court denied foreclosure of lots that had been sold by the defendant owner before suit was filed but within 90 days of the recordation of the lien, of lots that were sold more than 90 days after plaintiff commenced his suit but before the lis pendens had been recorded, and of lots that were sold before the claim of lien had been recorded. No lot buyers were joined in the action.

The Court of Appeal reversed the judgment only with respect to those lots that had been purchased after suit was filed and prior to the date when the lis pendens was recorded. Regarding the other lots (i.e., the lots on which the denial of foreclosure was affirmed), the appellate court held that the trial court could not order foreclosure without giving the lot owners an opportunity to contest the claimed liens. They were indispensable parties because they could in no respect be bound by a decree for the sale of the property. As to these owners, the mechanics' lien had expired because suit against them was not filed in the applicable 90-day period; consequently, the court concluded that it was not required to determine the priority situation that would have existed had they been joined in the action. Regarding those lots that had been purchased after suit was filed and prior to the filing of the lis pendens, the trial court erred in denying a decree of foreclosure. If those purchasers had actual knowledge of the pending foreclosure suit at the time they acquired title to the property, they would be bound by the decree of foreclosure. Those purchasers, therefore, were not indispensable parties to the action, and the court concluded that the plaintiff could establish in a subsequent action brought to try title, that some or all of the purchasers had acquired title with actual knowledge of the foreclosure suit (244 Cal. App. 2d

[b] Binding Decree of Foreclosure

See the discussion of Packard-Bell Electronics Corp. v. Theseus, Inc. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 53 Cal. Rptr. 300 , in § 152.49[3][a].

[c] Notice of Mechanics' Lien Rights

Dockrey v. Gray (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 388, 341 P.2d 746 , involved an appeal from a judgment for plaintiff in an action by a mechanics' lien holder to reach the surplus after sale of the property to which the lien attached. The sale was made pursuant to a power of sale under a prior deed of trust. The trust deed was security for a construction loan and had priority over the mechanics' lien. This priority had been lost for the amount of certain voluntary advances made by the holder of the trust deed out of the construction loan fund after the commencement of construction and with actual notice of the plaintiff's mechanics' lien rights [see Turner v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1966) 242 Cal. App. 2d 457, 51 Cal. Rptr. 552] . Hence, the mechanics' lien holder who had foreclosed his lien would appear to be entitled to the excess of the proceeds from the trustee's sale of the property, because the trust deed holder had lost his rights to that excess. However, the trust deed holder contended that, because he had never been joined in the mechanics' lien foreclosure action, he was not bound by the foreclosure decree in the plaintiff's action. The court of appeal disagreed with the trust deed holder and affirmed the trial court (172 Cal. App. 2d 388, 390-392) .

Dockery has been distinguished in later cases dealing with joinder of indispensable parties on the basis that it was expressly found in Dockery, above, that the trust deed holder had notice of the plaintiff's mechanics' lien rights [see Packard-Bell Electronics Corp. v. Theseus, Inc. (1966) 244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 53 Cal. Rptr. 300 ; Riley v. Peters (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 296, 15 Cal. Rptr. 41] . Moreover, the court in Packard-Bell Electronics Corp., discussed in § 152.49[3][a] stated that it is only during the pendency of a mechanics' lien foreclosure action that notice may affect a person having an interest in the property subject to the claim of lien; notice before the commencement of the action does not affect even a junior encumbrancer's rights in the property (244 Cal. App. 2d 355, 360-361) .

§ 152.50 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c]--In Action to Foreclose Mechanics' Lien--Claim of Lien Contains Sufficient Description of Site, Is not Fraudulent, and Does Not Mislead Third Persons

[Caption. See § 152.48.]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE A CLAIM OF LIEN CONTAINS A DESCRIPTION OF THE SITE SUFFICIENT FOR IDENTIFICATION IF IT ENABLES IDENTIFICATION OF THE PROPERTY WITH REASONABLE CERTAINTY TO THE EXCLUSION OF OTHERS, IS NOT FRAUDULENT, AND DOES NOT MISLEAD THIRD PERSONS.

A. Sufficiency of Description of Property. The description of property sought to be charged with a mechanics' lien is sufficient if it allows a party familiar with the locality to identify the property with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of others (Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 754, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105).

B. Errors in Description of Property. No mistake or error in the description of the property against which a mechanics' lien is recorded invalidates the lien unless the court finds that the mistake or error was made with an intent to defraud, or that an innocent third party without direct or constructive notice has, since the claim was recorded, become a bona fide owner of the property, and that the claim of lien was so deficient that it did not put the party on further inquiry (Civ. Code § 3261).

C. Disregard of Errors in Description of Property. Errors in the description of property subject to a mechanics' lien may be disregarded if the property identification of the property is otherwise sufficient, and if the claim of lien that is recorded is not fraudulent and does not mislead the owner or innocent third persons (Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 754, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105).

[Optional] D. Sufficiency of Description as Question of Fact. Whether the description of property to be charged with a mechanics' lien is sufficient for identification is a question of fact to be determined by the jury or court from a consideration of the circumstances of the particular case (Borello v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 494, 34 Cal. Rptr. 648).

[Optional] E. Extrinsic Evidence to Determine Sufficiency. Extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of a description that is vague or inaccurate, and the description of the property may be found sufficient when the property is clearly identifiable from the extrinsic facts (Borello v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 493, 34 Cal. Rptr. 648).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment based on the failure to include in the recorded lien claim a site description that is sufficient for identification, when the identification, though vague or ambiguous, did not mislead the owner or third persons, and was not fraudulent.

Counsel should include in this form argument showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.30.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Sufficiency of Description of Property

In Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105 , the defendants appealed from a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of the plaintiffs' mechanics' liens for work performed in connection with the construction of several apartments consisting of separate multiple units in a subdivided tract. The defendants contended on appeal (among other contentions) that one plaintiff's liens were defective because of the erroneous property description in the lien claims. The deficiency was predicated on the absence of the words "northwest quarter" in the claim of lien. However, the plaintiffs' amended lien added the words, "commonly known as Palo Fierro Estates," and the trial court found this description sufficient for identification, and that no defendant was mislead or prejudiced by any deficiency.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court. The court stated that, as a general rule, the description of property sought to be charged with a lien will be deemed sufficient if it enables a party familiar with the locality to identify it with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of others. Thus, errors in the description may be disregarded if the identification of the property is otherwise sufficient, and when the recorded lien claim is not fraudulent and does not mislead the owner or innocent third person. As authority, the court cited former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1196.1 [now see Civ. Code § 3261] (2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 754) .

[b] Disregard of Errors in Description of Property

Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105 , is discussed in § 152.50[3][a].

[c] Sufficiency of Description as Question of Fact

The facts and procedural background of Borello v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 34 Cal. Rptr. 648 are discussed in § 152.30[4][a]. The court in Borello stated the general rule that a property description is sufficient if it will enable a party familiar with the locality to identify the property with reasonable certainty to the exclusion of others. Errors in the description may be disregarded if the identification is otherwise sufficient, provided there is no fraud and no one is misled by the description (221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 492) . The court also held that extrinsic evidence is admissible for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of a description that is vague or inaccurate, and the property description may be deemed sufficient when the property is clearly identifiable from such extrinsic facts (221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 493) . The court distinguished those cases holding that an insufficient property description involving property descriptions that were entirely erroneous or unambiguously erroneous, rather than merely defective or vague, and therefore did not constitute descriptions at all. Finally, the court noted that whether the description of the property sought to be charged is sufficient for identification is a question of fact to be determined by the jury or court from a consideration of the circumstances of the particular case (221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 493-494) .

[d] Extrinsic Evidence to Determine Sufficiency

Borello v. Eichler Homes, Inc. (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 487, 34 Cal. Rptr. 648 , is discussed in § 152.50[3][c].

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S NOTICE OF NONRESPONSIBILITY IS INEFFECTIVE TO INSULATE HIS/HER PROPERTY FROM MECHANICS' LIENS.

A. Strict Construction of Statutory Nonresponsibility Requirements. Civil Code Sections 3094 and 3129, permitting an owner to relieve himself or herself from lien liability for improvements on his or her property, are strictly construed, and the owner must show that he or she has fully complied with all of the requirements of these sections (Oil Tool Exch., Inc. v. Hasson (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 544, 547, 41 P.2d 211).

[EITHER]

B. Ineffective Posting and Recording of Notice of Nonresponsibility. A notice of nonresponsibility is ineffective for any purpose if the person owning or claiming an interest in property on which a work of improvement is being constructed has not posted and recorded the notice pursuant to Civil Code Section 3094 within 10 days after obtaining knowledge of the improvement (Civ. Code § 3094; Hayward Lbr. & Inv. Co. v. Orondo Mines (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 697, 699-700, 94 P.2d 380).

[OR]

B. Proof of Posting Within Statutory Time Period. To avail himself or herself of the benefits of the notice of nonresponsibility, an owner must prove that his or her written notice was posted in some conspicuous place on the construction site within 10 days after obtaining knowledge of the construction (Oil Tool Exch., Inc. v. Hasson (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 544, 547, 41 P.2d 211).

[OR]

B. Owner as Agent of Contractor. An owner acting through his or her agent in causing the construction of improvements against which mechanics' liens are claimed is not entitled to relieve his or her property from the liens by posting and recording a notice of nonresponsibility (Ott Hardware Co. v. Yost (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 593, 601, 159 P.2d 663).

[Optional] C. Constructive Knowledge of Improvement. If the owner who posted and recorded a Civil Code Section 3094 notice of nonresponsibility had constructive knowledge of the improvement (that is, knowledge that would put a prudent person on inquiry regarding whether the improvement had commenced) for more than 10 days before the posting and recording, the notice is ineffective to relieve the owner from responsibility for mechanics' liens claimed in connection with the improvement (Hayward Lbr. & Inv. Co. v. Orondo Mines (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 697, 703, 94 P.2d 380).

[Optional] D. Commencement of Improvement. A notice of nonresponsibility is ineffective for any purpose if it is posted and recorded before the commencement of the work of improvement, that is, before there is work and labor on the ground, the effects of which are apparent--easily seen by everybody (English v. Olympic Auditorium, Inc. (1933) 217 Cal. 631, 636-637, 20 P.2d 946).

[Optional] E. Commencement of Improvement as Question of Fact. Whether a notice of nonresponsibility has been posted and recorded within 10 days of commencement of the work of improvement pursuant to Civil Code Section 3094 is a question of fact (English v. Olympic Auditorium, Inc. (1933) 217 Cal. 631, 637, 20 P.2d 946 .

[Optional] F. Lessee as Agent of Owner. A lessee is an agent of the owner/lessor for the purpose of rendering the owner's interest in the leased property subject to mechanics' liens if under the terms of the lease the lessee is obligated, as a condition or covenant of the lease, to make the improvements in connection with which the liens are claimed (Ott Hardware Co. v. Yost (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 593, 599, 159 P.2d 663 ; Howard S. Wright Construction Co. v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 321, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment based on the posting and recording by the noncontracting defendant owner of a notice of nonresponsibility, when the notice was, in fact, ineffective to insulate the owner's interest.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.32.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Strict Construction of Statutory Nonresponsibility Requirements

Oil Tool Exch., Inc. v. Hasson (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 544, 41 P.2d 211 , involved an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien against both the lessor and lessees of certain real property. The lien was based on the unpaid rental price of drilling equipment furnished to the lessee for oil wells to be drilled on the property. The trial court denied a judgment of a mechanics' lien on the lessor's interest based on the fact that the lessor had posted and recorded a notice of nonresponsibility. The only evidence of the notice received at trial was a recorded copy of the notice, with an attached verification and an affidavit of posting.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court, holding that a strict construction of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1192 [now see Civ. Code §§ 3094, 3129], whereby an owner may relieve himself or herself from lien liability for improvements on his or her property, necessarily follows the adopted rule of liberal construction of former Code Civ. Proc. § 1183 [now see Civ. Code § 3110], which bestows a lien for labor and materials furnished to a work of improvement. Because the owner failed to prove that the written notice was posted in some conspicuous place on the property within 10 days after he obtained knowledge of the construction, the notice was ineffective to relieve him of the claimed mechanics' lien (4 Cal. App. 2d 544, 547) .

[b] Ineffective Posting and Recording of Notice of Nonresponsibility

In Hayward Lumber & Inv. Co. v. Orondo Mines (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 697, 94 P.2d 380 , the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment declaring a mechanics' lien on a noncontracting lessor's interest in certain real property for materials furnished by the plaintiff lien claimant at the request of the lessee. The principal defense relied on by the defendant lessor was that she had posted and recorded, in due time and in proper manner, a notice of nonresponsibility sufficient in form and substance. The court found that this defense was defective because she had constructive knowledge of the lessee's improvement work for more than 10 days prior to the date on which she actually did post and record the notice. The court held that the notice would have been a bar to the enforcement of the lien on her property only if the posting and recording had been timely; because they were not timely, the notice was ineffective for any purpose (34 Cal. App. 2d 697, 699-700) .

[c] Proof of Posting Within Statutory Time Period

Oil Tool Exch., Inc. v. Hasson (1935) 4 Cal. App. 2d 544, 41 P.2d 211 , is discussed in § 152.51[3][a].

[d] Owner as Agent of Contractor

Ott Hardware Co. v. Yost (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 593, 159 P.2d 663 , involved an action to foreclose mechanics' liens against both the interests of the lessor and lessee in real property. The plaintiffs had furnished labor and materials for remodeling work being done by the lessees. The lessors had posted and recorded a notice of nonresponsibility at a time when the remodeling work was being contemplated. Although the trial court made no specific finding that the notice was effective to relieve the lessor's interest, it gave judgment to the plaintiffs for a lien on the whole of the building and on no part of the surrounding property. The lessors appealed, contending that on filing a notice of nonresponsibility the entire property is exempted from all mechanics' liens. The court of appeal found it unnecessary to address the lessor's contention because it held that by the terms of the lease, the lessees were the statutory agents of the lessors for the purpose of filing a notice of responsibility. The court held that a participating owner, even though acting through his or her agent, is not entitled to relieve his or her property from mechanics' liens by filing a notice of nonresponsibility (69 Cal. App. 2d 593, 601) .

[e] Constructive Knowledge of Improvement

In Hayward Lbr. & Inv. Co. v. Orondo Mines (1939) 34 Cal. App. 2d 697, 94 P.2d 380 , discussed in § 152.51[3][b], the court of appeal held, quoting the language of Harmon Lbr. Co. v. Brown (1913) 165 Cal. 193, 131 P. 368 that the knowledge that subjects the noncontracting owner to liability for mechanics' liens is not just actual knowledge; constructive knowledge, i.e., notice of circumstances that would put a prudent person on inquiry as to the fact in question, is equally potent to bind the owner. The court found this knowledge in the fact that the lease provided for extensive work to be done on the property by the lessee. The lessor's husband was employed by the lessee, and was doing work on the property that would immediately suggest to a prudent person that the work being done was the same work agreed on in the lease (34 Cal. App. 2d 697, 703) .

[f] Commencement of Improvement

In English v. Olympic Auditorium, Inc. (1933) 217 Cal. 631, 20 P.2d 946 , the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's judgment that gave the plaintiff lien claimants mechanics' liens on the work of improvement but not on the surrounding property. In holding that the digging of a test hole and the delivery of lumber to the construction site constituted the commencement of the improvement, thereby making the owners-lessors, notice of nonresponsibility effective to insulate their interests from the mechanics' liens, the Court stated the general rule that a notice of nonresponsibility, which was posted before the commencement of a work of improvement, is ineffective for any purpose. The Court further held that commencement of work means some work and labor on the ground, the effects of which are apparent--easily seen by everybody (217 Cal. 631, 637) .

[g] Commencement of Improvement as Question of Fact

English v. Olympic Auditorium, Inc. (1933) 217 Cal. 631, 20 P.2d 946 , is discussed in § 152.51[3][f].

[h] Lesee as Agent of Owner

In Ott Hardware Co. v. Yost (1945) 69 Cal. App. 2d 593, 159 P.2d 663 , discussed in § 152.51[3][d], in finding that the lessors' notice of nonresponsibility was ineffective to insulate their interest from the claimed mechanics' liens, because of the statutory agency relationship of the lessors and lessees as shown by the terms of the lease, the court of appeal considered the general American rule that, if the lease obligated the lessee to make improvements on the leased property, regardless of other factors, the lessee is an agent of the lessor for the purpose of rendering the whole of the leased property subject to mechanics' liens. Although not rejecting this rule, the court stated that under the terms of the lease before it, when the lessee is obligated as a condition or covenant of the lease to make the improvements, and when a breach of the condition or covenant returns the property to the owner, and the owner promises to repay to the lessee the estimate cost of a major portion of the improvements out of future rents, the lessee is the statutory agent of the lessor for the purpose of the construction of the improvement (69 Cal. App. 2d 593, 597-601) .

Howard S. Wright Construction Co. v. Superior Court (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 641 , concerned the lease of a warehouse to a telecommunications company. A supplement to the lease identified alterations that were required to establish the building as a "point of presence" on the lessee's fiber optics network. The telecommunications company subsequently declared bankruptcy. A contractor who had worked on the building filed an action to foreclose its mechanic's lien and also recorded a lis pendens. The court of appeal reversed orders of the trial court granting the property owner's motion to remove the lien and expunge the lis pendens. The court held the contractor was likely to succeed in its claim that the landlord was a "participating owner" and therefore the lien attached to the entire property (106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 326) . The fact that the contractor never viewed the tenant as the agent for the landlord was irrelevant, because the tenant becomes the agent of the landlord "by implication of law" when the lease requires the tenant to make improvements (106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 325) . The fact that the lease did not require specific improvements was not determinative. The question was whether the improvements were a practical necessity for the contemplated use of the premises, and the evidence supported the contractor's claim that renovating the premises was required to allow the tenant to conduct its fiber optics business and to allow the landlord to obtain the agreed-on rent (106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 326) . The absence of any cost-sharing or profit-sharing arrangement between the landlord and tenant also was not determinative. The financial entanglement existed in a different form in that the landlord stood to benefit from the higher rent made possible by the improvements (106 Cal. App. 4th 314, 326) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Commencement of Improvement

Arthur B. Siri, Inc. v. Bridges (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 599, 11 Cal. Rptr. 322 , involved an action to foreclose mechanics' liens against both the vendor's and vendee's interests in real property on which the plaintiff lien claimant had done clearing and grading work at the request of the vendees. Under the land purchase contract the vendees were to subdivide the property, and on the completion of each subdivided lot, the vendor was to execute a grant deed for each lot. On learning of timber clearing operations taking place on the property, the vendor posted and recorded a notice of nonresponsibility. Subsequently, the plaintiff entered into his grading and clearing contract with the vendees. In affirming the trial court's judgment that the plaintiff had a lien on the whole of the subdivided land, the court of appeal held that a notice of nonresponsibility is premature and ineffective to relieve an owner from liability for mechanics' liens claimed for a work of improvement constructed on his or her property, if the owner posted and recorded a notice of nonresponsibility based on knowledge of the intended construction of the improvement rather than actual construction. Because the object of the notice is to bring home to those who are expending labor or materials on an improvement that the owner of the land will not be responsible for the labor or materials, and because the question of the commencement of the improvement is one of fact, the trial court, the court of appeal stated, did not abuse its discretion in determining that the logging operation was not an act that necessarily brought home to an observer that this was the commencement of the improvement of the land for subdivision purposes (189 Cal. App. 2d 599, 601-602) .

[Caption. See § 152.48.]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT BECAUSE IT IS BASED ON AN UNENFORCEABLE "PAY IF PAID" PROVISION IN DEFENDANT'S SUBCONTRACT WITH PLAINTIFF.

"Pay If Paid" Provision Is Unenforceable. A provision in a contract between a general contractor and a subcontractor, whereby payment by the owner to the general contractor is a condition precedent to the general contractor's obligation to pay the subcontractor for work the subcontractor has performed, is contrary to public policy and therefore unenforceable because it effects an impermissible indirect waiver or forfeiture of the subcontractor's constitutionally-protected mechanics' lien rights in the event of nonpayment by the owner. Because it is unenforceable, a pay if paid provision in a subcontract does not insulate a general contractor from its contractual obligation to pay its subcontractors for work performed (Wm. R. Clarke Corp. v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 882, 896-897, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578, 938 P.2d 372).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment when the motion is based on the existence of a "pay if paid" provision in the contract between a plaintiff subcontractor and a defendant general contractor that purports to condition the defendant's obligation to pay the plaintiff for work performed on the project owner's payment to the defendant.

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that the contractual provision on which the motion for summary judgment is based is a pay if paid provision. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, as well as a separate statement in response to the moving party's statement of undisputed material facts [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] "Pay if Paid" Provision in Subcontract Is Unenforceable

In Wm. R. Clarke Corp. v. Safeco Ins. Co. of America (1997) 15 Cal. 4th 882, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d 578, 938 P.2d 372 , the owner of a commercial building entered into a contract with a general contractor to rehabilitate the building. The general contractor in turn entered into subcontracts for the project. The subcontracts contained a "pay if paid" provision making payment by the owner to the general contractor a condition precedent to the general contractor's obligation to pay the subcontractors. The subcontracts also contained an addendum reiterating the pay if paid provision yet purporting to preserve the subcontractors' mechanics' lien rights and making them the sole remedy if the owner failed to pay the subcontractors. The general contractor obtained a labor and material payment bond from a surety. After substantial work had been completed on the project, the owner stopped making payments to the general contractor, who then declined to pay the subcontractors. The subcontractors recorded mechanics' liens and filed actions against the surety seeking recovery under the payment bond. The trial court entered judgment for the subcontractors and the Court of Appeal affirmed.

The California Supreme Court affirmed the Court of Appeal. The surety contended that its obligation under the payment bond never matured because the liability of a surety on a private works payment bond is no greater than that of its principal, and the principal in this case never incurred any obligation to pay because a condition precedent to its payment obligation--payment by the owner--never occurred. In rejecting this argument, the Supreme Court noted that mechanics' liens are remedial legislation to be liberally construed in order to protect laborers and materialmen. By law, a subcontractor may not waive its mechanics' lien rights except in connection with a payment or a promise of payment, and a conditional release is effective only if the claimant is actually paid [Civ. Code § 3262]. A waiver and release of mechanics' lien rights is null, void, and unenforceable unless it follows substantially the form of one of the statutory lien waivers set forth in Civ. Code § 3262(d) (15 Cal. 4th 882, 889) . The surety contended that a pay if paid provision set forth in a construction subcontract does not violate this statutory anti-waiver provision because, under Civ. Code § 3140, which limits a subcontractor's recovery on a mechanics' lien claim to the amount that is due under the terms of the subcontract, mechanics' lien rights are available only to subcontractors whose payment rights have vested under the terms of their contracts. Absent such a contractual right, a subcontractor has no mechanics' lien remedy to enforce. The Supreme Court acknowledged that, strictly speaking, a pay if paid provision does not take the form of a mechanics' lien waiver. However, the court found that such a provision is in substance a waiver of mechanics' lien rights because it has the same practical effect. If the owner has become insolvent, it may never make another payment to the general contractor, the subcontractor's right to receive payment has been indefinitely postponed, and the subcontractor has effectively waived its mechanics' lien rights (15 Cal. 4th 882, 890) . Thus, the Court held that a pay if paid provision whereby payment by the owner to the general contractor is a condition precedent to the general contractor's obligation to pay the subcontractor for work the subcontractor has performed, is contrary to public policy and therefore unenforceable because it effects an impermissible indirect waiver or forfeiture of the subcontractor's constitutionally-protected mechanics' lien rights in the event of nonpayment by the owner. Because it is unenforceable, a pay if paid provision in a subcontract does not insulate either general contractors or their payment bond sureties from their contractual obligations to pay subcontractors for work performed (15 Cal. 4th 882, 890, 896-897) .

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL BECAUSE THERE IS SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE TO SHOW THAT THE INSTALLATION OF A CHATTEL, IN CONNECTION WITH WHICH PLAINTIFF FURNISHED LABOR AND MATERIALS, CAUSED THE CHATTEL TO BECOME A FIXTURE ATTACHED TO THE REALTY.

A. Vendee or Mortgagee as Favored by Fixture Rules. As between the vendor and vendee or the mortgagor and mortgagee, the rule in reference to fixtures is construed most strongly in favor of the vendee or mortgagee (R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 711, 20 P.2d 665).

[Optional] B. Fixture Rules Not Determined by Landlord-Tenant Rules. Whether or not a disputed item attached to real estate is personalty or realty, for purposes of determining if the real property on which the item has been installed is subject to a mechanics' lien, the rules governing the subject between vendor-vendee, or mortgagor-mortgagee, are applicable, rather than those that govern the subject as between landlord and tenant (R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 714, 20 P.2d 665).

[Optional] C. Conditional Sales Contract as Not Determinative. As between the buyer and conditional seller, goods conditionally sold may be treated as personal property with title remaining in the seller. However, as to third persons without notice, the goods may still be considered part of the land or building, thus permitting a mechanics' lien claimant to claim a lien on the goods and land of which they are a part (R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 713-714, 20 P.2d 665).

[Optional] D. Right of Vendor to Mechanics' Lien. The retention of title per se does not deprive a conditional vendor of an affixed chattel to a mechanics' lien as against an owner of the realty who had notice of the improvement (Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 133, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial when the motion is based on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to prove that a chattel that had been installed, and in connection with which the plaintiff furnished labor and materials, became a fixture attached to the realty. The issue may be framed in terms of a claimant's claim of lien on an annexed chattel for labor and materials furnished in connection with the chattel's installation (as was the case in R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 20 P.2d 665), or on the realty on which the annexed chattel is located (as was the case in Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728). Paragraphs A and B are included in this form to show that, regardless of how the issue is framed, the factors to be applied in deciding whether the chattel is a fixture are to be construed most strongly in favor of the lien claimant, who is in a position comparable to that of a mortgagee and vendee under the rule of R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 714, 20 P.2d 665 .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.32.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Vendee or Mortgagee as Favored by Fixture Rules

The facts and procedural background of R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 20 P.2d 665 , are discussed in § 152.35[3][a]. In his appeal, the appellant contended that, by virtue of the conditional sales contracts and the fact that the buildings were removable, the buildings remained personalty. The Supreme Court disagreed and affirmed the trial court's judgment, holding that the buildings were fixtures attached to the realty and, as such, were subject to the mechanics' lien. The Court reviewed those factors used in determining whether a chattel has become a fixture, and noted that one factor used is the relationship of the parties. Thus, the Court stated, as between a vendor and vendee, or mortgagor and mortgagee, the rule in reference to fixtures is construed most strongly in favor of the vendee or mortgagee, but as between landlord and tenant, the rule has been modified in reference to articles annexed for purposes of trade. Keeping these general principles in mind, the Court then determined that the conditional sales contract between the lessee and appellant, under which the property was treated as personalty with title remaining in the seller, did not in any way affect the rights of the plaintiff lien claimant to claim a lien on the premises, because the plaintiff had been without knowledge, actual or constructive, of the sales contract. Finally, the Court determined that the test to be applied in determining whether an article has become annexed to the realty is the rules governing the subject between vendor-vendee, or mortgagor-mortgagee, thereby favoring the lien claimant's position, rather than the rules governing the subject between landlord and tenant (217 Cal. 708, 714-715) . It should be noted that the Barcroft case was decided prior to those cases that developed a more comprehensive factor analysis in deciding the question of whether a chattel remained personalty or had become annexed to the realty [see Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 132, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728 ; see also Standard Oil Co. v. State Bd. of Equalization (1965) 232 Cal. App. 2d 91, 42 Cal. Rptr. 543] .

[b] Fixture Rules Not Determined by Landlord-Tenant Rules

See the discussion of R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 20 P.2d 665 , in § 152.53[3][a].

[c] Conditional Sales Contract as Not Determinative

See the discussion of R. Barcroft & Sons Co. v. Cullen (1933) 217 Cal. 708, 20 P.2d 665 , in § 152.35[3][c].

[d] Right of Vendor to Mechanics' Lien

The facts and procedural background of Cornell v. Sennes (1971) 18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 95 Cal. Rptr. 728 , are discussed in § 152.32, under Discussion of Authorities, Factors Used in Determining Whether Chattel is Fixture. The court of appeal stated the rule that real property is subject to a mechanics' lien for labor and materials only if the chattels installed became fixtures attached to the realty, and held that the trial court had erred in failing to find whether the units had become fixtures, because such a finding was essential to awarding the plaintiff a mechanics' lien, and to determine whether his subsequent actions constituted a conversion of the units and a waiver of his lien. For the assistance of the trial court, the court discussed some of the factors to be considered in determining whether the units had become fixtures. The court noted that some evidence of one factor, the intention of the parties, was contained in the plaintiff's conditional sales contract, in which the units were treated as personalty with title in the plaintiff. However, the court continued that it saw no reason why the retention of the title per se should deprive a conditional vendor of an affixed chattel to a mechanics' lien, and that it was only one of the factors to be considered by the trial court in making its determination as to whether the chattel became a fixture. The court stressed, however, that it was dealing not with a right to a lien as against subsequent purchasers, mortgagees, or other encumbrancers without notice, but, rather, with a right to a lien against the owner of the realty who had notice of an improvement and failed to file a notice of nonresponsibility. Finally, the court held that, while the plaintiff could, consistent with his rights under the sales contract, treat the units as fixtures, if, in fact, the trial court decided they were fixtures, his subsequent removal of the fixtures constituted an election to treat them as personalty and a waiver of his mechanics' lin rights (18 Cal. App. 3d 126, 133-134) .

§ 152.54 Opposing Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657] in Mechanics' Lien Foreclosure Action--Evidence Sufficient to Show That Labor Performed Resulted in Permanent Improvement

[Caption. See § 152.53.]

THE COURT SHOULD DENY DEFENDANT'S MOTION FOR A NEW TRIAL BECAUSE THERE IS SUFFICIENT EVIDENCE TO SHOW THAT PLAINTIFF'S LABOR RESULTED IN A PERMANENT IMPROVEMENT TO THE REALTY.

[EITHER]

A. Work of Improvement. Except as otherwise provided in Civil Code Sections 3082 through 3267, a work of improvement means the entire structure or scheme of improvement. It includes, but is not restricted to, the construction, alteration, addition to, or repair, in whole or in part, of any building, wharf, bridge, ditch, flume, aqueduct, well, tunnel, fence, machinery, railroad, or road, the seeding, sodding, or planting of any lot or tract of land for landscaping purposes, the filling, leveling, or grading of any lot or tract of land, the demolition of buildings, and the removal of buildings (Civ. Code § 3106).

[OR]

A. Site Improvement. Site improvement means the demolishing or removing of improvements, trees, or other vegetation located on the site, or drilling test holes or the grading, filing, or otherwise improving of any lot or tract of land or the street, highway, or sidewalk in front of or adjoining any lot or tract of land, or constructing or installing sewers or other public utilities, or constructing any areas, vaults, cellars, or rooms under sidewalks or making any improvements on them (Civ. Code § 3102).

[Optional] B. Preliminary Engineering Work. The setting of permanent monuments in the ground for the purpose of land subdivision, following extensive engineering services, is an "improvement" under Civil Code Section 3106, and satisfies the requirement that, for a claimant to be entitled to a lien, the improvement must be of a permanent character (Nolte v. Smith (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 140, 148-150, 11 Cal. Rptr. 261).

[Optional] C. Preparing Land for Agricultural Purposes. Grading and leveling land to change the surface of the ground so that it can be irrigated for farming is a permanent improvement of the land for purposes of a mechanics' lien claim (Thomas v. Gismegian (1923) 191 Cal. 497, 497-498, 216 P. 601).

[Optional] D. Landscaping and Maintenance. Landscaping, and any maintenance that is necessary to insure that the planting is well established on the ground, is a work of improvement giving rise to a lien (Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 753, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action when the action is based on the insufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to prove that the plaintiff's labor resulted in a permanent improvement of the realty.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case, this form may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities set out in § 152.36.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preliminary Engineering Work

Nolte v. Smith (1961) 189 Cal. App. 2d 140, 148-150, 11 Cal. Rptr. 261 , involved an appeal by the defendants in a mechanics' lien foreclosure action brought for engineering services rendered in connection with a land subdivision project. The trial court found that the plaintiff had been employed to perform the engineering services necessary to subdivide the property into residential lots; that he had performed all the terms of the contract; that his services had consisted of surveying, preparing a subdivision map for recording, and constructing and erecting permanent markers and monuments on the property; and that the defendants were the owners of the property, had known of the plaintiff's work, and had failed to post and record a notice of nonresponsibility, thereby making them responsible for the plaintiff's work. On appeal, defendants contended that plaintiff was not entitled to a lien, as there was insufficient evidence to show that the plaintiff's services had been used in a work of improvement of a permanent character.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, and in response to this particular contention, found that the improvement in question was permanent. The court stated that the setting of permanent monuments in the ground, following extensive engineering services, was an improvement, an integral and essential part of the scheme of improvement as those terms are used in former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1182 (works of improvement) [now see Civ. Code § 3106], and satisfied the requirement that the improvement be of a permanent character (189 Cal. App. 2d 140, 148-150) .

[b] Preparing Land for Agricultural Purposes

In Thomas v. Gismegian (1923) 191 Cal. 497, 216 P. 601 , the plaintiffs recovered a judgment in the trial court for the foreclosure of a mechanics' lien for the grading of a tract of land belonging to the defendant. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment, stating that the grading and leveling performed by the plaintiff, changing the surface of the ground so that it could be irrigated, was a permanent improvement on the land. The Court distinguished the case of Young v. Shriver (1922) 56 Cal. App. 653, 206 P. 99 , by a finding that the leveling of the land, as done here, was in the nature of a permanent improvement, while the plowing and leveling essential to the raising of annual crops, as was the case in Shriver, was not work of a permanent character, because it did not contribute to the permanent value of the land (191 Cal. 497, 497-498) .

[c] Landscaping and Maintenance

In Howard A. Deason & Co. v. Costa Tierra, Ltd. (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 83 Cal. Rptr. 105 , the defendants appealed from a judgment decreeing the foreclosure of plaintiffs' mechanics' liens for work performed in connection with the construction of apartments consisting of multiple units in a subdivided tract. One issue raised on appeal by the defendant owners and construction lender was a plaintiff's claim of mechanics' lien for landscaping and landscaping maintenance. The defendants conceded that this plaintiff had a basic right to a mechanics' lien on his landscaping contract, since such work is explicitly lienable under former Code of Civil Procedure Section 1182 (works of improvement) [now see Civ. Code § 3106], but contended that the plaintiff could claim no lien for maintenance work performed later. The trial court made no finding as to how much of the work performed by the plaintiff was of a permanent nature. The court of appeal reversed, instructing the trial court to make a finding on this issue. The court held that plaintiff could claim a lien only for the portion of the work that was of a permanent nature, because permanency of improvement is an essential characteristic of work giving rise to a lien. For the trial court's assistance, the court stated that landscaping, and any maintenance that is necessary to insure that the planting of a lawn and shrubs by the plaintiff is well established on the ground, is a work of improvement, but that if it appeared that the plaintiff's work consisted of mowing and watering the lawn and shrubs, as alleged by the defendants, then the lien for that work would have been improperly granted (2 Cal. App. 3d 742, 753-754) .

§ 152.55 Supporting Contention That Service of Process on Trustee of Deed of Trust Does Not Constitute Service of Process on Beneficiaries [Civ. Code § 2937.7]

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

SERVICE OF PROCESS ON THE TRUSTEE OF A DEED OF TRUST IN AN ACTION TO FORECLOSE A MECHANICS' LIEN DOES NOT CONSTITUTE SERVICE ON THE BENEFICIARIES OF THE DEED OF TRUST AND THEY ARE NOT BOUND BY THE JUDGMENT.

Service of Process on Trustee Only Is Not Effective Service on Beneficiaries in Action to Foreclose Mechanics' Lien. Service of process on the trustee of a deed of trust in an action to foreclose a mechanics' lien does not constitute service of process on the beneficiaries of the deed of trust, and thus the beneficiaries are not bound by the judgment if they were not served (Civ. Code § 2937.7; Monterey S.P. Partnership v. W.L. Bangham, Inc. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 454, 459-463, 261 Cal. Rptr. 587, 777 P.2d 623).

[2] Comments

This points and authorities may be submitted in support of the contention that service of process on the trustee of a deed of trust does not constitute service of process on the beneficiaries of the deed of trust.

This points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive contention. For example, a beneficiary could use this contention in a quiet title action to quiet title to property that had been sold after a default judgment in a mechanics' lien action in which the trustee but not the beneficiaries had been served [see, e.g., Monterey S.P. Partnership v. W.L. Bangham, Inc. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 454, 459-463, 261 Cal. Rptr. 587, 777 P.2d 623] .

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should include a description of the failure to serve the beneficiaries.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Service of Process on Trustee Only Is Not Effective Service on Beneficiaries in Action to Foreclose Mechanics' Lien

Civil Code Section 2937.7 provides that service on the trustee does not impose any obligation to notify the beneficiaries. This section was apparently enacted in response to the court of appeal decision that was ultimately reversed by the Supreme Court in Monterey S.P. Partnership v. W.L. Bangham, Inc. (1989) 49 Cal. 3d 454, 261 Cal. Rptr. 587, 777 P.2d 623 .

Monterey S.P. Partnership was a quiet title action by the ultimate owner of property purchased from the beneficiaries of a deed of trust to quiet title to property that was sold to a mechanics' lien claimant. The claimant obtained a default judgment in the mechanics' lien action after service of process on the trustee, but not on the beneficiaries, of a deed of trust. The judgment quieted title in plaintiff. The claimant appealed, and the court of appeal reversed the finding of the trial court. Plaintiff sought review by the Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal opinion. The Court held that persons who are not made parties by service of process to a mechanics' lien action are not bound by the judgment. It held that a trustee under a deed of trust does not have a duty under the deed of trust to defend the interests of the beneficiaries, and that the trustee is not the trustee of an express trust. Therefore, former Civil Code Section 369, which authorized the trustee of an express trust to defend an action on behalf of the beneficiaries, was not applicable, and service on the trustee was not service on the beneficiaries. Because the beneficiaries were not served, they were not bound by the judgment, and the ultimate owner who purchased from the beneficiaries owned the property free and clear of the mechanics' lien and default judgment (49 Cal. 3d 454, 459-463) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT BY THE DEFENDANT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. The party against whom a complaint has been filed may object by demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)) when the ground for the objection to the complaint appears on the face thereof [or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice] (Code Civ. Proc. § 430.30(a)).

B. Outrageous Conduct as Element of Prima Facie Case. Outrageous conduct by the defendant is an element of a prima facie case for the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress (Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Serv.

(1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 1248, 209 Cal. Rptr. 189 ; Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 394, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78).

C. Failure to Allege Outrageous Conduct. A complaint for intentional infliction of mental distress fails to state a cause of action when it fails to allege facts showing that the defendant's conduct was outrageous or has gone beyond all reasonable bounds of decency (Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Serv. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 1248, 209 Cal. Rptr. 189 ; Agostini v. Strycula (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 804, 808, 42 Cal. Rptr. 314).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for intentional infliction of mental distress where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the plaintiff has failed to allege outrageous conduct by the defendant.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 153.40 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Outrageous Conduct as Element of Prima Facie Case

In Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Serv. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 209 Cal. Rptr. 189 , plaintiff's landlord filed a complaint in unlawful detainer against plaintiff and hired defendant to serve process. Defendant signed a sworn affidavit of service stating that he had personally served plaintiff, although plaintiff had been out of town on the date defendant said he was served. After a default judgment was entered against him, plaintiff filed a motion to set it aside. At the hearing on the motion defendant testified that service was proper and identified as the person served an individual who was sitting next to plaintiff's attorney. The individual was not plaintiff, and testified that he had never been served by defendant. The default judgment was set aside. Plaintiff filed a complaint alleging several causes of action against several defendants, among them intentional infliction of mental distress. The trial court granted defendants' motion for summary judgment, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment in the intentional infliction of mental distress action. The court said that an action in intentional infliction of mental distress is predicated on a showing of extreme and outrageous conduct by the defendant, intended to cause extreme mental suffering. The court said that defendant's actions did not as a matter of law constitute the kind of extreme and outrageous conduct on which liability may be based (162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 1248) .

In Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , the plaintiff sought damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress, as well as declaratory relief of his right to monthly payments and damages for fraud. The defendant insurance company stipulated to judgment for declaratory relief and the court granted the defendants' motions for nonsuit with respect to the cause of action for fraud in the inducement. On the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress the jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, awarding compensatory and punitive damages against the defendant insurance company and its claims supervisor, Amason. Defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict were denied, as was defendant Amason's motion for new trial. After the plaintiff accepted a remission of the punitive damage award against the insurance company, its motion for new trial was denied. Defendants appealed from the judgment, as modified, and from the order denying their motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The plaintiff had purchased a disability insurance policy from the defendant insurance company which provided for payments of $150 per month to plaintiff should he become totally disabled. Payments were limited to a maximum period of two years in the event of sickness and 30 years in the event of injury. The plaintiff thereafter had an accident at work which caused various injuries, and was eventually terminated by his employer. There was virtually unanimous agreement by the physicians connected with the case that the plaintiff was disabled because of an injury to his back resulting from the accident and the defendant insurance company had knowledge of almost all of the doctors' reports. More than a year after the accident, defendant Amason concluded that the claim should be paid under the sickness provision of the policy which exposed the company to liability for only two years. The plaintiff was informed of this. Then the defendants informed the plaintiff that they regarded his condition as one of a congenital nature, and contested the validity of the policy because the plaintiff had not informed them of any such defect. After plaintiff retained an attorney, the defendant company dropped the contest and resumed some payments. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, holding that the plaintiff had stated a case for emotional infliction of mental distress. The court listed the elements of a prima facie case, one of which was the requirement of outrageous conduct by the defendant. The defendants conceded, however, that their conduct was outrageous, but contended on appeal that their conduct was privileged, that the plaintiff's emotional distress was not of sufficient severity, and that the plaintiff's distress was not caused by the defendants' conduct. The court disagreed and found that the defendants, without probable cause for believing that the plaintiff had made an intentional material misrepresentation or that his disability was due to anything other than his injury n the job, embarked on a concerted curse of conduct to induce the plaintiff to surrender his insurance policy or enter into a disadvantageous settlement of a nonexistent dispute by means of false and threatening letters and the employment of economic pressure based on his disabled condition, exacerbated by the insurer's malicious and bad faith refusal to pay plaintiff's legitimate claim.

[b] Failure to Allege Outrageous Conduct

The facts and procedural background of Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Serv. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 209 Cal. Rptr. 189 , are discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's summary judgment in the intentional infliction of mental distress action. The court defined the elements of an action in intentional infliction of mental distress and then distinguished the facts of this from those in Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , another case involving an improper service. In that case, the defendant interfered with the residents' rights to privacy and peaceful occupancy of the premises; the action was extreme and clearly implied the intent to inflict emotional distress existed. The court said that defendant's actions in this case did not permit the inference that he acted with the requisite intent to inflict emotional distress. Nor did his actions as a matter of law constitute the kind of extreme and outrageous conduct which resulted in liability (162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 1248) .

In Agostini v. Strycula (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 804, 42 Cal. Rptr. 314 , the plaintiff was a dismissed city employee who brought an action against other city employees for alleged interference with civil service contract relations and intentional infliction of emotional distress. A judgment of dismissal was entered after a demurrer to the complaint was sustained without leave to amend. The plaintiff had been employed as a group supervisor at the Youth Guidance Center. He was suspended from his duties on a charge of insubordination growing out of the alleged infliction of corporal punishment on a child under his care. A hearing was held at which the plaintiff appeared and was represented by counsel. Defendants, other than the defendant hearing officer, testified at the hearing that the plaintiff had used corporal punishment as discipline in violation of standing rules and instructions. He was found guilty and dismissed. It was the testimony at this hearing that was the basis for plaintiff's action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's judgment of dismissal, holding, in part, that no facts showing extreme and outrageous conduct could be pleaded. Such conduct is required before liability arises.

[c] Trivialities as Insufficient

In Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , the plaintiffs, husband and wife, filed separate actions against common defendants. Each alleged a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrers to these causes of action. The conduct on which the complaints were based consisted of the actions of the defendants' agent in pounding on the front door of the plaintiffs' home at night when the house was darkened in an attempt to serve process on the plaintiff husband. The house had a functioning doorbell but the agent did not use this. No other attempt at service had been made and the defendants had no reason to believe service of process could not be made at a reasonable time and in a reasonable manner. The loud pounding awakened the plaintiffs and their family and the neighborhood. The court of appeal reversed, holding that each plaintiff had alleged a cause of action to recover for the intentional infliction of emotional distress. One of the points on appeal was whether unnecessary pounding on the front door of a darkened house at midnight in a loud and boisterous manner, which awakened not only the occupants but also the neighborhood, could be considered extreme and outrageous conduct. The court noted that liability does not extend to mere insults, indignities, threats, annoyances, petty oppressions, or other trivialities. However, where reasonable men may differ, it is for the jury, subject to the control of the court, to determine whether the conduct in a particular case has been sufficiently extreme and outrageous to result in liability. Thus, the judgments of dismissal were improper and the trial court was instructed to overrule the demurrers.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Allege Outrageous Conduct

In Hughes v. Pair (2009) 46 Cal. 4th 1035, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 636, 209 P.3d 963 , one of three trustees for a $350 million trust suggested during a telephone conversation with plaintiff, the trust beneficiary's mother, that he would be amenable to voting for a sizable trust disbursement requested by her if she would engage in sexual relations with him. At a museum exhibit later that same night, he told her in person that he would "get [her] on [her] knees eventually" and that he was "going to fuck [her] one way or another." Based on these comments, she sued him for statutory sexual harassment under Civ. Code § 51.9 and for intentional infliction of emotional distress. In rejecting plaintiff's intentional infliction of emotional distress claim, the California Supreme Court concluded, without substantial analysis, that, viewed in the context of plaintiff's previous and protracted legal battles with the trustees over allocation of the trust assets, the defendant's inappropriate comments made on that one day fell far short of conduct that is so outrageous that it "exceeds all bounds of that usually tolerated in a civilized community" (46 Cal. 4th 1035, 1051) .

In McMahon v. Craig (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1502, ___ Cal. Rptr. 3d ___, plaintiff was the owner of a Maltese show dog that suffered from respiratory distress. When the dog was five years old, plaintiff took her to a veterinarian for surgery on her throat. Although the dog was not supposed to eat anything for 24 hours after the surgery, the veterinarian instructed an assistant to administer a mixture of water and baby food to the dog only two hours after surgery. The dog aspirated on the mixture and died a day and a half later while still under the veterinarian's care. There was also evidence that the dog had not been provided appropriate antibiotics, oxygen, glucose, and other supportive care after the surgery. Plaintiff sued the veterinarian for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The court of appeal held that although a pet owner may be emotionally involved in the pet's health and especially susceptible to emotional distress should the pet die, a veterinarian's medical care is directed solely at the pet and malpractice by a veterinarian will not support recovery by the pet owner for intentional infliction of emotional distress (176 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1516-1517) . In addition, the court also concluded that efforts on the part of the veterinarian to cover up the fact that the death of the pet may have been caused by malpractice were not outrageous enough to support a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, at least when the fact that the pet has died while undergoing treatment had not been concealed from the pet owner. Plaintiff had alleged that, in the days following the surgery, the veterinarian had denied that the dog had ingested any food after the surgery, had wrongfully stated that the dog had been under constant post-operative care and never left alone, and had falsified the dog's medical records to support those claims (176 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1517) .

In Mintz v. Blue Cross of California (2009) 172 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 92 Cal. Rptr. 3d 422 , plaintiff was denied coverage for an experimental cancer treatment by the third-party administrator for plaintiff's health insurance plan. The administrator advised plaintiff of the right to internal review of that decision, but failed to notify of the right to request an independent external review as required by statute. In addition, the health plan itself stated that a member would be advised of the right to external review when the denial of services triggered such a right. Plaintiff sued the third-party administrator for intentional interference with contract, reckless infliction of emotional distress, and negligence. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer on all causes of action, and the court of appeal affirmed as to the interference with contract and infliction of emotional distress causes of action, but reversed on the negligence cause of action. As to the infliction of emotional distress cause of action, the court of appeal held that the health plan administrator's denial of coverage for treatment it deemed to be investigational or experimental, along with a failure to advise the insured of the right to seek independent external review of that decision, did not constitute outrageous conduct that would support an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (172 Cal. App. 4th 1594, 1609) .

In Unterberger v. Red Bull North America, Inc. (2008) 162 Cal. App. 4th 414, 75 Cal. Rptr. 3d 368 , plaintiff for four years was the distributor on specified Caribbean islands of a canned energy drink manufactured by defendant. Two years after North American operations were shifted from the European division that had originally dealt with plaintiff to a newly-created North American division, the drink manufacturer ended its distributorship relationship with plaintiff. Plaintiff sued for breach of contract, fraud, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted nonsuit in favor of defendant manufacturer on the contract claim, finding that there was no agreement that the relationship could only be ended for good cause, and granted summary adjudication on the fraud and emotional distress claims. The court of appeal affirmed. As to the intentional infliction of emotional distress claim, the court of appeal agreed with the trial court that, as a matter of law, termination of the distributorship arrangement was not the type of outrageous conduct required to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (162 Cal. App. 4th 414, 423) .

In Coleman v. Republic Indem. Ins. Co. (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 403, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 744 , the plaintiffs were involved in a car accident caused by another party. The plaintiffs' insurer was a subsidiary of the insurer of the other party. The plaintiffs filed a claim with the other party's insurer, and that insurer's adjuster told them that the claim was "straightforward," that the claim would be settled despite the applicable statute of limitations, and that they did not need an attorney. After the limitations period expired, the plaintiffs were told that the claim was denied and that the limitations period had expired. The plaintiffs then sued both insurers, who shared management and a common claims processing office, alleging breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing, negligent infliction of emotional distress, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the insurers' demurrers, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that under established law, as a third party to the tortfeasor's insurance contract, the plaintiffs could not sue for breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing. Assuming that the alter ego doctrine applied to the relationship between the two insurers, the fact that the plaintiffs shared the same insurer as the tortfeasor did not change the result that they were not owed a duty of care as third-party claimants under the tortfeasor's policy (132 Cal. App. 4th 403, 409-415) . Because no duty of care was owed to them, the plaintiffs could not state a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress (132 Cal. App. 4th 403, 415-416) . The court then noted that prior cases had established that the delay or denial of an insurance claim is not sufficiently outrageous to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Under those authorities, the insurer's actions in misleading the plaintiffs as to the applicable limitations period and directly advising them that they would not need an attorney were not so outrageous as to support a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (132 Cal. App. 4th 403, 416-417) .

In Ross v. Creel Printing & Publ'g Co. (2002) 100 Cal. App. 4th 736, 122 Cal. Rptr. 2d 787 , the plaintiff brought an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress against a publishing company and its attorneys, based on a letter sent to the plaintiff by the attorneys threatening the filing of criminal charges if the plaintiff did not make good on checks that had been sent to the publishing company by the plaintiff, but had been returned unpaid by the bank. The plaintiff alleged in his suit that the letter threatening criminal action caused him severe emotional distress, that the defendants knew this would happen, and that because the threat of criminal action to obtain an advantage in a civil action violated the California Rules of Professional Conduct, this conduct was sufficiently outrageous to support his cause of action. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrer without leave to amend, and the court of appeal affirmed. The plaintiff had relied on earlier authority from the court of appeal in Kinnamon v. Staitman & Snyder (1977) 66 Cal. App. 3d 893, 136 Cal. Rptr. 321 , which held that the violation of a professional rule of conduct was sufficient to find the conduct outrageous. However, the court of appeal rejected the analysis from this earlier case. The rules of professional conduct themselves now provide, in Rule 1-100, that a violation does not create a new civil cause of action. Therefore, a violation, in and of itself, does not necessarily constitute outrageous conduct sufficient to support an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Because the plaintiff's only basis for claiming that the letter constituted outrageous conduct was an allegation that it violated a rule of professional conduct, the plaintiff failed to allege outrageous conduct or demonstrate that he could amend the complaint to do so (100 Cal. App. 4th 736, 745-749) .

In Kraslawsky v. Upper Deck Co. (1997) 56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 65 Cal. Rptr. 2d 297 , plaintiff, who was terminated after refusing to take a urinalysis drug/alcohol test under defendants' reasonable cause drug testing program, sued for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of defendant and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that defendant presented evidence that its conduct was not outrageous and that plaintiff failed to proffer contrary evidence (56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 182) . Plaintiff's claim was based on defendants' request that she take a urinalysis test, involving a testing procedure that plaintiff admitted she did not find overly intrusive. The court found that even assuming the facts as were stated in plaintiff's declaration and that there was no individualized suspicion for the drug test, plaintiff could not establish that defendants' conduct went beyond all bounds of decency (56 Cal. App. 4th 179, 194) .

In Trerice v. Blue Cross of Cal. (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 257 Cal. Rptr. 338 , the plaintiff's allegations of her employer's outrageous conduct consisted of the following: (1) pursuant to a reduction in work force, presenting her with a termination package, which she accepted; (2) withdrawing the package the following day and telling her that she was still employed; (3) seven days later, telling her that her position would, in fact, be eliminated, effective in 30 days; (4) providing her with a termination package that was less advantageous that the one that had previously been offered; (5) during the final 30 days, assigning her to tasks that were menial compared to her prior responsibilities. The court of appeal upheld summary judgment for the defendant on these facts. Although the court agreed that the alleged conduct was less than exemplary, the court concluded that, as a matter of law, it did not qualify as the kind of outrageous conduct necessary to support an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (209 Cal. App. 3d 878, 883-884) .

In Pitman v. City of Oakland (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1037, 243 Cal. Rptr. 306 , an employee of a police agency was dismissed due to information disseminated by the California Highway Patrol concerning the employee's arrest and conviction for illegal possession and use of drugs and alcohol. The employee filed an action against its employer, alleging four causes of action, including intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint, holding that mere allegations of severe emotional distress, without facts indicating the nature or extent of any mental suffering resulting from alleged outrageous conduct, failed to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (197 Cal. App. 3d 1037, 1047).

In Cornblith v. First Maint. Supply Co. (1968) 268 Cal. App. 2d 564, 74 Cal. Rptr. 216 , the defendant's demurrer to an action based on intentional infliction of emotional distress, was sustained without leave to amend when the plaintiff indicated to the court that he was unable to more strongly plead a cause of action, and a judgment of dismissal was entered. The plaintiff alleged that he was employed by the defendant company and that the defendant officer was one of its officers. The officer refused to permit a fellow employee to service the plaintiff's accounts while the plaintiff was recovering from an accident, admonished another salesman not to give plaintiff any help, and informed other employees not to follow the customary procedure of taking phone orders from plaintiff, thereby requiring the plaintiff to mail or personally bring in his orders. The complaint alleged that the officer's acts were inflicted with malice and with the intent to injure him mentally and emotionally and that, as a consequence of the acts, plaintiff suffered humiliation and severe emotional distress. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that the trial court was correct in concluding that the complaint failed to state a cause of action. The court noted that intentional infliction of emotional distress, without physical trauma, can be a ground of liability only when the defendant's conduct is outrageous or has gone beyond all reasonable bounds of decency. The defendant officer was entitled to direct the job activities of plaintiff and his fellow salesmen, and to determine office procedure.

NOTE:

Although Cornblith mentions the requirement of outrageous conduct in the absence of physical trauma, later cases (in which outrageous conduct was found) have not drawn such a distinction, and have cited with approval the Restatement (Second) of Torts, which requires outrageous conduct in any intentional infliction of mental distress case [see, e.g., Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 302-304, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577]

In Scott v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 277, 112 Cal. Rptr. 609 , one of the causes of action alleged by the plaintiff was for mental suffering and emotional distress. The trial court sustained without leave to amend a demurrer to such cause of action for failure to state a cause of action. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that under the facts of the case, the conduct charged was not sufficiently outrageous as a matter of law to support an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

[b] Trivialities as Insufficient

In Cochran v. Cochran (1998) 65 Cal. App. 4th 488, 76 Cal. Rptr. 2d 540 , defendant, knowing that his former live-in girlfriend and her daughter would hear, had left a message on his son's answering machine that defendant was delivering a ticket for the daughter on an airliner that had recently suffered a well-publicized crash. The former girlfriend and her daughter sued for intentional infliction of emotional distress, alleging that they took the threat seriously because they knew defendant was angry over revelations they had made on television about their former relationships, and also alleging that defendant had made thinly-veiled threats in the past to cause them problems. The court, in sustaining a demurrer for defendant, held that the message, made in the course of a feud following the break-up of an intimate relationship, was not an actionable death threat. Rather, the court viewed the message as precisely the type of insult, indignity, threat, annoyance, petty oppression, or other triviality that were not deemed actionable under the tort (65 Cal. App. 4th 488, 498) .

In Yurick v. Superior Court (1989) 209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 257 Cal. Rptr. 665 , the plaintiff's employment supervisor was alleged to have made comments to the effect that plaintiff was senile and a liar because she was over 40 years old. In finding this conduct insufficiently outrageous as a matter of law, the court stated that ordinarily, a defendant is not liable for mere insult, indignity, annoyance, or even threats if the case is lacking in other circumstances of aggravation. The law has not progressed to the point where there is a remedy in the form of tort damages for all intended mental disturbance. Liabilities cannot be extended to every trivial indignity. Accordingly, there is no recovery for profanity, obscenity, or abuse, without circumstances of aggravation, or for insults, indignities or threats that are considered to amount to nothing more than mere annoyances (209 Cal. App. 3d 1116, 1128) .

§ 153.21 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Intentional Infliction of Mental Distress--Complaint Does Not Allege That Defendant Intended to Cause Plaintiff Distress or That Plaintiff Was Present When Defendant Acted With Reckless Disregard of Plaintiff's Interests

[Caption. See § 153.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING THAT DEFENDANT EITHER DIRECTED EGREGIOUS CONDUCT TOWARD PLAINTIFF WITH THE INTENT TO CAUSE PLAINTIFF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS, OR ACTED WITH CONSCIOUS DISREGARD OF PLAINTIFF'S INTERESTS WHILE PLAINTIFF WAS PRESENT AND DEFENDANT WAS AWARE OF PLAINTIFF'S PRESENCE.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 153.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Intent or Reckless Disregard Is Element of Prima Facie Case. The defendant's intention of causing, or reckless disregard of the probability of causing, emotional distress is an element of a prima facie case for the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress (Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 394, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78).

C. Conduct Must Be Directed at Plaintiff or Occur in Presence of Plaintiff of Whom Defendant Is Aware. Conduct that is intentional or in reckless disregard of plaintiff's interest and outrageous is not sufficient to impose liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress; the conduct must either be directed at plaintiff, or occur in the presence of a plaintiff of whom the defendant is aware (Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 1002, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 ; Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 903, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for intentional infliction of mental distress where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face thereof, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the plaintiff has failed to allege that the defendant either directed the outrageous conduct toward the plaintiff, or acted in the presence of a plaintiff of whom the defendant was aware.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts that tend to show that the allegedly outrageous conduct that is the basis of the cause of action was neither directed toward plaintiff nor occurred in plaintiff's presence, of which defendant was aware.

[c] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 153.41 may be used in opposition to the demurrer supported by these points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Intent as Element of Prima Facie Case

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. In discussing the defendants' contention on appeal that the plaintiff had failed to prove facts constituting a prima facie case of intentional infliction of emotional distress, the court of appeal listed as a second element of the tort the requirement of the defendant's intention of causing or reckless disregard of the probability of causing emotional distress. In reviewing defendants' arguments concerning this portion of their appeal, the court noted that they conceded that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's implied finding of the requisite intent or recklessness.

[b] Conduct Must Be Directed at Plaintiff or Occur in Presence of Plaintiff of Whom Defendant Is Aware

The facts and procedural background of Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 , are discussed in § 153.38[3][a]. The trial court had found the defendant liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on its finding that the disposal of liquid toxic wastes (that eventually leached into the groundwater and contaminated plaintiffs' wells) into a landfill in violation of both the rules of the landfill and company policies, in order to reduce costs, was extreme and outrageous conduct, and that defendant "had to realize" that the eventual discovery of the toxic contamination by those drinking the contaminated water would almost certainly result in their suffering severe emotional distress. The Court found this finding ambiguous, in that it could be interpreted two ways: as a finding that defendant actually knew of the particular plaintiffs and their consumption of the water, and sent wastes to the landfill despite a realization that plaintiffs would almost certainly suffer emotional distress on their discovery of the facts; or as a finding that defendant had to have realized that its misconduct was almost certain to cause emotional distress to any person who might foreseeably consume the water and subsequently discover the facts (6 Cal. 4th 965, 1002-1003). The Court held that liability would not exist in the second interpretation because knowledge of the particular plaintiffs is lacking. Because Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 903, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181 , requires that liability be imposed only on a defendant whose conduct is directed at the plaintiff, or occurs in the presence of a plaintiff of whom the defendant is aware, and it was not clear whether the trial court's finding met this requirement, the cause of action was remanded (6 Cal. 4th 965, 1003).

Christensen v. Superior Court (1991) 54 Cal. 3d 868, 2 Cal. Rptr. 2d 79, 820 P.2d 181 , was an action brought as a class action by relatives and designated representatives of decedents whose remains were allegedly mishandled by defendants. The complaint alleged that defendants had contracted to perform cremations with dignity, but had instead sold body parts and dental gold to other defendants, and sought to recover damages on various theories, including intentional infliction of emotional distress. On review of the trial court's ruling of standing to sue made in a coordination proceeding, the court of appeal treated the ruling as one in the nature of a demurrer, and held that, assuming for the purposes of the motion that the allegations of the complaint were true, the family members and close friends of the decedents could recover damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress because the mishandling of the remains was intentional and outrageous. The Supreme Court reversed (54 Cal. 3d 868, 902) .

The Court noted the following elements of the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress: (1) extreme and outrageous conduct by the defendant with the intention of causing, or reckless disregard of the probability of causing, emotional distress; (2) the plaintiff's suffering severe or extreme emotional distress; and (3) actual and proximate causation of the emotional distress by the defendant's outrageous conduct (54 Cal. 3d 868, 903). The Court stated that it is not enough that the conduct be intentional and outrageous. It must be conduct directed at plaintiff, or occur in the presence of a plaintiff of whom defendant is aware (54 Cal. 3d 868, 903). This requirement is a factor that distinguishes intentional infliction of emotional distress from the negligent infliction of emotional distress (54 Cal. 3d 868, 904) . The presence of the plaintiff at the time the outrageous conduct committed with reckless disregard of the plaintiff's interests occurs is recognized as the element establishing a higher degree of culpability, and is therefore necessary to establish the cause of action (54 Cal. 3d 868, 906) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Conduct Must Be Directed at Plaintiff or Occur in Presence of Plaintiff of Whom Defendant Is Aware

In Sabow v. United States (9th Cir. 1996) 93 F.3d 1445 , the family of a deceased Marine Corps Colonel sued the federal government for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs contended that the military failed to properly investigate the Colonel's death, negligently handled his remains, and unreasonably questioned decedent's wife shortly after she had discovered her husband's body. The district court dismissed the emotional distress count for failure to state a claim. The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the district court's judgment as to the emotional distress count. The court held that neither the alleged failure to follow investigative guidelines nor the alleged handling of decedent's remains was conduct directed at the plaintiffs, or that occurred in the presence of plaintiffs of whom the defendant was aware. In addition, the court ruled that while the decision to question decedent's wife on the morning she found her husband, did not constitute the defendant officers' finest hour, it was not conduct was so extreme and outrageous as to be actionable under California law (93 F.3d 1445, 1455) .

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for intentional infliction of emotional distress when the basis of the complaint is an allegedly defamatory publication by defendants, which failed to support a cause of action for defamation.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Independent Cause of Action for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress

In Flynn v. Higham (1983) 149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 197 Cal. Rptr. 145 , plaintiffs brought an action for defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and invasion of privacy, based on the publication of a book purporting to describe details of the life of plaintiff's deceased father. Defendants filed a demurrer for failure to state a cause of action on all three counts. The trial court sustained the demurrer with leave to amend. When plaintiffs failed to amend the demurrer within the allowed time period, the trial court entered judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court held that there is no cause of action for defamation of a deceased person (149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 680) . The court then held that an independent cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress cannot be maintained based on the same facts that were insufficient to support a cause of action for defamation (149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 681) . The court stated that to allow a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress under these circumstances would be to permit plaintiffs to do indirectly what they could not do directly, and would render meaningless any defense of truth or privilege regarding defamation (149 Cal. App. 3d 677, 682) .

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION BECAUSE PLAINTIFF CANNOT BRING A TORT CAUSE OF ACTION FOR REFUSAL TO ALLOW CHILD VISITATION IN CALIFORNIA, AND PLAINTIFF'S EXCLUSIVE REMEDY LIES UNDER THE FAMILY LAW ACT.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 153.20, Paragraph A.]

B. No Tort Cause of Action for Refusal to Allow Child Visitation. No tort cause of action exists in California for intentional infliction of emotional distress against a former spouse who has custody of a child for refusal to allow court-ordered visitation of the child by the other former spouse. Instead, the noncustodial spouse's exclusive remedy lies under the Family Law Act, which would be undermined if the courts were to recognize a damages cause of action under these circumstances (*In re Marriage of Segel (1986) 179 Cal. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Tort Cause of Action for Refusal to Allow Child Visitation

In In re Marriage of Segel (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 602, 224 Cal. Rptr. 591 , a judgment of dissolution of marriage had been granted to plaintiff wife and defendant husband. When defendant husband later initiated proceedings to modify his spousal support to plaintiff wife, the parties renegotiated the terms of the marital settlement agreement and agreed to transfer physical custody of their child from plaintiff wife to defendant husband. Thereafter, defendant husband refused to allow plaintiff wife to visit the child. Plaintiff wife then initiated an action against defendant husband, the fourth cause of action of which was for damages from intentional infliction of emotional distress for defendant husband's refusal to allow child visitation. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the fourth cause of action, and plaintiff wife appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that no tort cause of action could be brought for failure to allow child visitation. The court first held that the cause of action, although termed one for intentional infliction of emotional distress, was actually for loss of filial consortium, which has not been recognized as a basis for a cause of action in California (179 Cal. App. 3d 602, 607-608) . Further, the court held that the exclusive remedy of a spouse to enforce her right to visitation with her child lies under the former Family Law Act (former Civ. Code §§ 4000-5317 (now see Family Code)), and that judicial recognition of a cause of action for loss of filial consortium would create an unwarranted remedy of monetary damages and should be rejected because it would undermine the purposes of the Act, which is designed to regulate and supervise the care, custody, and financial support of minor children whose parents are the subject of dissolution proceedings (179 Cal. App. 3d 602, 608-609) .

DEFENDANT'S DEMURRER TO THE COMPLAINT FOR DAMAGES FOR INTENTIONAL INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS SHOULD BE SUSTAINED BECAUSE THE ACTION IS BASED ON DEFENDANT'S ALLEGED SEDUCTION OF PLAINTIFF AND THE CAUSE OF ACTION FOR SEDUCTION OF PERSONS OVER THE AGE OF LEGAL CONSENT HAS BEEN ABOLISHED.

A. Action for Seduction Abolished. No cause of action arises for seduction of a person over the age of legal consent (Civ. Code § 43.5(c)).

B. No Cause of Action for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Based on Seduction of Person Over Age of Legal Consent. Because the action for seduction of a person over the age of legal consent has been abolished by Section 43.5(c) of the Civil Code, a complaint for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress resulting from defendant's alleged seduction of plaintiff, who at all times was over the age of legal consent, fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action (Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 394, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454).

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a general demurrer to a complaint for damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress when the act complained of is the alleged seduction of a person who was over the age of legal consent.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Cause of Action for Intentional Infliction of Emotional Distress Based on Seduction of Person Over Age of Legal Consent

Atienza v. Taub (1987) 194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 239 Cal. Rptr. 454 , was an action by a former patient against a physician for damages for medical malpractice and intentional infliction of emotional distress arising out of sexual relations she allegedly was induced to engage in with the physician during the course of her treatment. Plaintiff alleged she went to defendant for treatment for phlebitis allegedly sustained as the result of an industrial injury and that during the course of the treatment defendant seduced her into having sexual relations and an affair. She alleged that by initiating a sexual relationship with her while she was under his care, defendant failed to adequately care for and treat her by abusing her psychologically while purportedly treating her physically. She also alleged in the emotional distress cause of action that defendant's conduct constituted a conscious and reckless disregard for the risk to her health and well-being, entitling her to punitive damages. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint on the professional negligence cause of action, and overruled the demurrer to the emotional distress cause of action. Defendant secured the issuance of an alternative writ of mandate pursuant to which the trial court vacated its earlier order to the extent it overruled the demurrer and ordered the demurrer sustained without leave to amend. The court then dismissed the action.

The court of appeal first affirmed the judgment of dismissal for defendant on the cause of action for medical malpractice on the ground the complaint did not allege that the defendant physician engaged in sexual relations with the plaintiff on the pretext that they were a necessary part of her treatment; the court concluded that the sexual relations were outside the patient-physician relationship (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 391-394) . The court then affirmed the dismissal of the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress on the ground the core of the action was an allegation of seduction and that an action for seduction of a person over the age of legal consent has been abolished by Civ. Code § 43.5(c) (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 394) . The court said that the complaint alleged an action for seduction rather than malpractice and that such an action, standing alone, is barred by Civ. Code § 43.5 (194 Cal. App. 3d 388, 394-395) .

In Richelle L. v. Roman Catholic Archbishop (2003) 106 Cal. App. 4th 257, 130 Cal. Rptr. 2d 601 , which does not specifically discuss the requirements of a cause of action for intentional or negligent infliction of emotional distress, the court of appeal held that a member of the clergy may be subject to tort liability for sexually inappropriate conduct with a consenting adult parishioner, under the theory that the conduct has breached a fiduciary duty arising out of a confidential relation, if the alleged injurious conduct was not dictated by a sincerely held religious belief or carried out in accordance with established beliefs and practices of the religion to which the pastor belongs and if no other reason prevents the issues from being framed for the trier of fact in secular rather than sectarian terms (106 Cal. App. 4th 257, 279) . However, the court rejected the plaintiff's claim for two reasons. First, the plaintiff failed to allege that the misconduct occurred while the pastor was providing counseling services to the plaintiff (106 Cal. App. 4th 257, 280) . Second, the plaintiff alleged that the depth of her religious faith rendered her especially vulnerable to the pastor's advances, which the court concluded was fatal to her tort claims, because such a claim cannot be adjudicated without reference to the nature of plaintiff's religious beliefs and the doctrines of the church (106 Cal. App. 4th 257, 280-281) .

In McDaniel v. Gile (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 363, 281 Cal. Rptr. 242 , a client sought damages for intentional infliction of emotional distress from her attorney on the ground that he had abandoned her dissolution case because she would not submit to his sexual demands. The trial court granted summary adjudication of issues against the client, finding in part that the action was barred by Civ. Code § 43.5.

The court of appeal reversed, finding sufficient allegations of outrageous conduct. The court found that Atienza did not preclude the claim. The client did not have sexual relations with the attorney, and thus was not seeking damages for seduction, but rather was seeking damages for what amounted to sexual harassment (230 Cal. App. 3d 363, 374) . The court found both that the attorney had abused a special relationship with the client, and that the client was peculiarly susceptible to emotional distress because of her pending marital dissolution (230 Cal. App. 3d 363, 373) .

NOTE:

The court's language and analysis in McDaniel v. Gile suggests that not all cases of emotional distress arising from consensual sexual intercourse between adults can be dismissed as disguised actions for seduction. The court noted that the outdated action for seduction protected a young, inexperienced woman from older men's sexual advances, and required that she be chaste and virtuous at the time of seduction [McDaniel v. Gile (1991) 230 Cal. App. 3d 363, 374, 281 Cal. Rptr. 242] . That situation is very different from the abuse of a fiduciary relationship by demanding and having sexual intercourse with someone who is particularly susceptible to emotional distress. Such conduct might be considered outrageous enough to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, rather than merely the basis of a claim for damages for seduction that is barred by Civ. Code § 43.5. Also, Civ. Code § 43.93 creates a cause of action against a psychotherapist, permitting recovery of damages caused by sexual contact with the psychotherapist under specified conditions.

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial in an action for intentional infliction of mental distress that resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The ground of the motion would be that evidence that the defendant's conduct caused the plaintiff's emotional distress was insufficient to support the verdict or decision [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary judgment by a defendant in an intentional infliction of mental distress action.

[d] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 153.42 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Motion for New Trial

Insufficiency of evidence to justify a verdict or other decision is a ground for granting a new trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. Accordingly, if a court or jury in an intentional infliction of mental distress action finds that a defendant's conduct caused the plaintiff's emotional distress, and the evidence is insufficient to establish the element of causation, a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence would be appropriate.

A party seeking a new trial must file a notice of intention to move for a new trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659] supported by a memorandum of points and authorities [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1600], and a motion on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision must be made on the minutes of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 658]. Where the motion is made on the minutes, reference may be made to any depositions or documentary evidence offered at trial, and to the court reporter's report of the proceedings or any certified transcript of the report [Code Civ. Proc. § 660]. For more complete analysis of motions for new trial, see Ch. 155, Motions After Trial .

[b] Causation as Element of Cause of Action

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. In discussing the defendants' contention on appeal that the plaintiff had failed to prove facts constituting a prima facie case of intentional infliction of emotion distress, the court of appeal listed as an element of the tort the requirement of actual and proximate causation of the emotional distress by the defendants' outrageous conduct. The defendants claimed on appeal that, whatever emotional distress the plaintiff may have suffered, it was not caused by their conduct, but, rather by the plaintiff's unfortunate economic situation. The court noted that the premise of their claim was that the theory of the plaintiff's pleadings was confined to two letters which defendants had written to plaintiff and in which they stated their intention to discontinue further payments under the insurance policy because of the plaintiff's material misrepresentation concerning his alleged congenital defect. The defendants were, thus, claiming that these letters constituted the instrumentality of the tort and that, therefore, their conduct constituted a breach of contract and did not give rise to a cause of action sounding in tort. The court held, however, that the plaintiff had tried his case without objection on the theory that the defendants' entire course of conduct was the instrumentality of the tort. More important, the court rejected the claim that the defendants' conduct was not tortious by stating that the implied in law duty of good faith and fair dealing imposes on a disability insurer a duty not to threaten to withhold or actually withhold payments, maliciously and without probable cause, for the purpose of injuring its insured by depriving him or her of the benefits of the policy. The court further stated that the relationship of the parties is significant in determining wether the violation of this duty may be the basis for an action for damages for the intentional infliction of emotional distress and found that, where as here the defendant offers services of a quasi-public nature and has implied in law duties towards those persons for whom the services are offered arising out of the vulnerability of those persons to oppressive economic tactics, the liability of a defendant such as the defendants in this case cannot be limited to breach of contract, but, in addition, extends to damages a plaintiff may have suffered for severe emotional distress.

[c] Proximate Cause as Question of Law in First Instance

In Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , the plaintiffs, husband and wife, filed separate actions against common defendants. Each alleged a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrers to these causes of action. The conduct on which the complaints were based consisted of the actions of the defendants' agent in pounding on the front door of the plaintiffs' home at night when the house was darkened in an attempt to serve process on the plaintiff husband. The house had a functioning doorbell but the agent did not use this. No other attempt at service had been made and the defendants had no reason to believe service of process could not be made at a reasonable time and in a reasonable manner. The loud pounding awakened the plaintiffs and their family and the neighborhood. The court of appeal reversed, holding that each plaintiff had alleged a cause of action to recover for the intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court noted that proximate cause is a question of law in the first instance. But it becomes a question of fact when conflicting inferences or conclusions can be drawn from the evidence.

[d] Judgment for Plaintiff as Erroneous Where Causation Not Proved

In Spackman v. Good (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 518, 54 Cal. Rptr. 78 , a guardian brought an action on behalf of two minors to recover damages for willfully injurious misconduct causing the minors emotional and mental distress and disturbance. Judgment was entered for plaintiffs. The defendant appealed from an order denying his motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and from the judgment awarding damages. The plaintiff minors lived with the defendant and his wife and their mother for a one or two month period during their parents' divorce proceedings. The evidence on the issue of the defendant's misconduct showed discussions of topics involving sex in the minors' presence, furnishing liquor to the minors, and allowing the minor girl to spend the night with a boy and go to a drinking party. The court of appeal reversed with instructions to enter judgment in favor of defendant. One of the grounds for reversal was that the evidence was not sufficient to establish that the defendant's misconduct was the cause of plaintiffs' mental state. The court noted the reluctance to impose liability because of problems of proof inherent in the issue of causation incident to recovery for psychopathic or psychoneural disorders. While such difficulties do not bar recovery in such cases, the complexity of the issue of causation in actions seeking recovery for mental or emotional distress or disturbance should be recognized. Particular inquiry should be directed to the sufficiency of proof of the cause of a condition where, as in the case at hand, the only evidence on the issue is the conflicting opinions of experts. The issue must be decided on a case-to-case basis. In determining whether an expert opinion is legally sufficient proof of the cause of a psychopathic condition, the court must subject the evidence to a scrutinizing analysis to ascertain the presence or absence of supportive factors. An opinion not supported by reason or contrary to reason in light of such an analysis, should be rejected as a matter of law. In this case, the hypothetical questions used to develop the experts' opinions on the issue of causation included unproven acts of misconduct by the defendant and failed to include other pertinent causative factors, such as the plaintiff's parents' domestic disputes climaxing in divorce and custody proceedings. The court concluded that the expert opinions on the issue of causation lacked that degree of probative force essential to legal proof.

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial in an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress which resulted in a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. The ground of the motion would be that the evidence that the plaintiff suffered severe or extreme emotional distress was insufficient to support the verdict or decision [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points and authorities may be used to support a motion for summary judgment by a defendant in an intentional infliction of emotional distress action. However, it should be noted that, where a plaintiff adequately alleges facts showing that the plaintiff suffered severe emotional distress, such as by alleging that plaintiff became frightened, upset, nervous, and humiliated, and suffered extreme mental suffering and duress, the determination of the court as to whether on the evidence severe emotional distress can be found is a question which cannot be resolved in the pleading stage [Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 311, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577] and which normally will only be resolved after the court in a trial on the merits has heard all the evidence relating to the emotional distress suffered by the plaintiff.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Severe Emotional Distress as Element of Cause of Action

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. In discussing the defendants' contention on appeal that the plaintiff had failed to prove facts constituting a prima facie case of intentional infliction of emotional distress, the court of appeal listed as an element of the tort the requirement that plaintiff suffer severe or extreme emotional distress. The defendants contended on appeal that there was no evidence that the plaintiff had suffered emotional distress of sufficient severity to establish the tort by arguing that the testimony established at most that the plaintiff was only mildly upset by the defendants' conduct. In rejecting the defendants' contention, the court noted that no case had adequately defined the term "severe."

Relying on Restatement (Second) of Torts § 46, comment j, the court found that "severe" means substantial or enduring, as distinguished from trivial or transitory, and that, therefore, severe emotional distress means emotional distress of such substantial quantity or enduring quality that no reasonable person in a civilized society should be expected to endure it. The court added that it is for the court to determine whether on the evidence severe emotional distress can be found, and that it was for the jury to determine whether on the evidence it has in fact existed. In affirming the trial court's judgment, the court concluded that there was sufficient evidence from which emotional distress of the requisite severity could be found and that there also was substantial evidence to support the jury's determination that it in fact existed. The court noted in this respect that, although the plaintiff did not suffer any traumatic emotional distress, the evidence was sufficient to show that the plaintiff had suffered severe emotional distress by suffering grief, humiliation, embarrassment, chagrin, disappointment, and worry.

[b] Emotional Distress as Required to Be of Substantial Quantity or Enduring Quality

Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.26[3][a].

[c] Possibility of Finding Emotional Distress as Duty of Court

Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.26[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Severe Emotional Distress as Element of Cause of Action

In Pitman v. City of Oakland (1988) 197 Cal. App. 3d 1037, 243 Cal. Rptr. 306 , an employee of a police agency was dismissed due to information disseminated by the California Highway Patrol concerning the employee's arrest and conviction for illegal possession and use of drugs and alcohol. The employee filed an action against the agency, alleging four causes of action, including intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint, holding that mere allegations of severe emotional distress, without facts indicating the nature or extent of any mental suffering resulting from alleged outrageous conduct, failed to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (197 Cal. App. 3d 1037, 1047) .

[b] Emotional Distress as Required to Be of Substantial Quantity or Enduring Quality

Schild v. Rubin (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 755, 283 Cal. Rptr. 533 , involved an action under Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6 for an injunction prohibiting harassment, defined to include conduct that would cause a reasonable person to suffer "substantial emotional distress" [see Code Civ. Proc. § 527.6(b)]. The conduct complained of involved playing basketball on the neighboring property at reasonable times of the day for less than 30 minutes at a time and no more than five times per week. In rejecting the injunction, the court of appeal analogized to the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress, for purposes of which "severe emotional distress" means highly unpleasant mental suffering or anguish from socially unacceptable conduct that entails such intense, enduring, and nontrivial emotional distress that no reasonable person in a civilized society should be expected to endure it (232 Cal. App. 3d 755, 762-763) .

SUMMARY JUDGMENT FOR DEFENDANT IS PROPER WHERE THE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT WAS PRIVILEGED.

A. Summary Judgment. A defendant may move for summary judgment in any action or proceeding if it is contended that the action has no merit. Such motion must be granted if all of the papers submitted show that there is no triable issue as to any material fact and that defendant is entitled to judgment as a matter of law (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c).

B. Conduct as Required to Be Unprivileged. To impose liability on the theory of intentional infliction of emotional distress it must appear that the defendant's conduct was unprivileged (Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 641, 99 Cal. Rptr. 393).

[Optional] D. Filing of Complaint as Privileged. The filing of a lawsuit is a publication in the course of a judicial proceeding, which is absolutely privileged under Section 47, subdivision b, of the Civil Code. This privilege not only defeats a claim for defamation, but also for intentional infliction of emotional distress (Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 639, 645, 224 Cal. Rptr. 865).

[Optional] E. Statements Made in Course of Judicial Proceeding. A privilege, analogous to that described in Section 47(b) of the Civil Code, protects witnesses in an official proceeding from liability for claimed intentional infliction of emotional distress as a result of statements made by them in the course of the proceeding (Agostini v. Strycula (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 804, 808, 42 Cal. Rptr. 314).

[Optional] F. Communications Preliminary to Proposed Judicial Proceeding. The absolute privilege contained in Section 47(b) of the Civil Code for a publication made in any judicial proceeding extends to communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding and operates to prevent a suit for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on those communications (Lerette v. Dean Witter Org., Inc. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 573, 576-578, 579, 131 Cal. Rptr. 592).

[Optional] G. Defamation Privileges Under Federal Constitution Apply. Constitutional privileges arising under the First Amendment apply to actions for intentional infliction of emotional distress (Hustler Magazine v. Falwell (1988) 485 U.S. 46, 50, 108 S. Ct. 876, 99 L. Ed. 2d 41).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment when the motion asserts that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law since the defendant's conduct was privileged either because he or she was asserting a legal right or because a privilege analogous to that in defamation actions existed.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations which support the motion [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c].

[b] Related Uses

With appropriate modifications these points and authorities may be used to support a demurrer to a complaint for intentional infliction of mental distress when the privilege appears on the face of the complaint. In a case in which a qualified privilege appears on the face of the complaint, a plaintiff must allege specific facts showing malice in defeating the privilege, rather than conclusory facts [see Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 589, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86] . However, facts showing that a privilege exists must appear on the face of the complaint or else the complaint is not subject to demurrer [Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 589, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86 (newspaper advertisement gave rise to cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress; because asserted fact that defendants received written request for advertisement, which would indicate qualified privilege for communications among interested parties, was outside complaint, plaintiffs need not allege specific facts showing malice)].

[c] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in see § 153.44 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by these memorandum of points and authorities.

For forms of memoranda supporting demurrers and motions for summary judgment by defendants in actions for defamation on the ground that the defendants were absolutely or qualifiedly privileged to publish the defamatory publications, see Ch. 142, Libel and Slander (Defamation).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Conduct as Required to Be Unprivileged

In Kachig v. Boothe (1971) 22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 99 Cal. Rptr. 393 , the plaintiffs brought an action for fraud, malicious prosecution, and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted the defendants' motions for judgment on the pleadings and judgment for defendants was entered. The basis for the action concerned a letter that had been introduced as evidence in a prior trial in which the plaintiffs had been defendants. The plaintiffs ascertained after a prolonged investigation following the conclusion of that trial that the letter was a false document manufactured at the suggestion of one of the defendants and that the testimony of the other defendants concerning this document was perjured. The court of appeal reluctantly affirmed the judgment. In discussing the cause of action for intentional infliction of mental distress the court noted that to impose liability on that theory it must appear that the defendant's conduct was unprivileged. The court stated that the privileges recognized in connection with the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress are similar to those recognized in defamation actions. Former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] provides that a publication made in the course of a judicial proceeding is absolutely privileged. This privilege is accorded not only to parties but to witnesses, even when their testimony is allegedly perjured and malicious (22 Cal. App. 3d 626, 641) . Thus, the plaintiffs were not entitled to relief.

[b] Assertion of Legal Rights

In Girard v. Ball (1981) 125 Cal. App. 3d 772, 178 Cal. Rptr. 406 , an action against an electrical contractor by a real estate developer for intentional infliction of emotional distress arising from a dispute over amounts due pursuant to a contract between the parties, defendant moved for summary judgment. The trial court granted the motion, and the court of appeal affirmed the decision.

The court of appeal first noted that defendant's demands for certain charges were based on a valid contract and were made in good faith. The court stated that an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress exists only when the defendant's conduct was not privileged and that a good-faith assertion of an economic interest is privileged conduct and cannot give rise to an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Such a privilege can be vitiated by outrageous conduct, but the evidence demonstrated that defendant had made his demands in conformance with common business practice and had not acted unreasonably (125 Cal. App. 3d 772, 786-787) . Since no evidence controverted these findings, the trial court had properly granted defendant's motion for summary judgment based on the privilege of assertion of a legal right (125 Cal. App. 3d 772, 787) .

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. The defendants urged on appeal that, notwithstanding the outrageous nature of their conduct, no liability could be predicated on a communication from one contracting party to another relating to the resolution of a dispute over their contract. The court acknowledged that an insurance company is privileged, in pursuing its own economic interest, to assert in a permissible way its legal rights and to communicate its position in good faith to its insured even though it is substantially certain that in so doing emotional distress will be caused. However, the court stated that this exercise of the privilege to assert one's legal rights must be done in a permissible way with a good-faith belief in the existence of the rights asserted. Thus, one who, in exercising such a privilege, acts in an outrageous manner may be held liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court concluded this portion of its opinion by finding that the defendants had abused their privilege by having had no probable cause to believe that the plaintiff had made a misrepresentation of a material fact, and that, even if it could be said that they had asserted their legal rights in good faith, they were not privileged to do so in an outrageous manner (10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 395) .

[c] Defamation Privileges as Applicable

In Lerette v. Dean Witter Org., Inc. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 573, 131 Cal. Rptr. 592 , plaintiff alleged in his complaint that defendant Debow, as assistant general counsel for defendant Dean Witter, sent a letter to the chairman of the board of a particular bank in which he accused plaintiff, who was president of the board, of misrepresenting the financial condition of a person to whom Dean Witter subsequently extended credit and who thereafter defaulted on his obligation, that the letter also stated that unless a settlement could be reached, Dean Witter planned to sue plaintiff and the bank for violation of security laws and for fraud and misrepresentations, and that this letter was sent with the intention to, and did, defame plaintiff and inflict significant mental distress on him. Defendants demurred generally to the complaint which was sustained without leave to amend. From an entry of a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal affirmed.

The questions on appeal were (1) whether former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], which defines a privileged publication as any one made in a judicial proceeding, conferred an absolute privilege on defendants to publish the subject letter, and (2) whether the privilege operates to prevent a suit for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on the same publication. Plaintiff contended on appeal that former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] was inapplicable both because the letter was not sent in any judicial proceeding actually underway, and because defendant Dubow was not counsel for Dean Witter in the judicial proceeding referred to in the letter. The court, however, found that the privilege to defame in the course of judicial proceedings is not limited to statements made during trial but can extend, notwithstanding the phrasing of the statute, to communications preliminary to a proposed judicial proceeding. Thus, the court held that the demand letter sent by defendant Dubow was fully privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] as preliminary to a judicial proceeding. The court, in addition, found that former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] extended to communications of any attorney retained by a client expecting to be a party to threatened litigation so long as the attorney has been employed by the client with reference to the impending judicial proceeding or controversy underlying it. Thus, the court held that defendant Dubow was participating counsel at the time he composed and sent the letter.

Examining the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the court held that the privilege which protected defendants from liability for defamation protected them from liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court stated that to proceed with this cause of action would substantially defeat the purpose of the privilege, exalt a judicially derived cause of action above the clear legislative intent, and operate as a severe deterrent to communications otherwise protected. Thus, no such cause of action, based on the defamatory nature of a communication which is itself privileged under the defamation law, could be permitted (60 Cal. App. 3d 573, 579) .

[d] Filing of Complaint as Privileged

In Williams v. Coombs (1986) 179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 224 Cal. Rptr. 865 , defendant attorney had brought a wrongful death action on behalf of a client against plaintiff. The wrongful death action was based on the fatal incident in which the decedent had been brought to a hospital and made suicidal gestures with a revolver. Plaintiff, her personal physician, arranged for the decedent to be placed in a private room rather than a locked ward. That evening, decedent hanged herself. Decedent's family sought the advice of defendant, who instituted the wrongful death action against plaintiff. The jury found for plaintiff, who then commenced an action against defendant for malicious prosecution and intentional infliction of emotional distress from the filing of the wrongful death action. Defendant moved for summary judgment, which was granted on both causes of action. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed as to the malicious prosecution cause of action, but affirmed as to the emotional distress cause of action. The court held that the filing of a complaint is absolutely privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)], and that privilege applies to defeat a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress from the filing of a complaint. Thus, plaintiff could not claim intentional infliction of emotional distress from the filing of a malicious complaint (179 Cal. App. 3d 626, 645-646) .

[e] Statements Made in Course of Judicial Proceeding

The factual background of Agostini v. Strycula (1965) 231 Cal. App. 2d 804, 42 Cal. Rptr. 314 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][b]. In affirming the trial court's dismissal of plaintiff's action for interference with civil service contract relations and intentional infliction of emotional distress, the court, in addition to holding that defendant's conduct was not outrageous, held that the statements complained of were made in the course of an official proceeding, and privilege, analogous to that described in former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b) (statements made in official proceeding authorized by law as privileged], protected the defendants from liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court stated that when called as witnesses the defendants were under a duty to state fully and fairly such facts as were within their knowledge bearing on the subject under investigation, and that, although the action was not one for defamation, the privilege contained in former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] extended to plaintiff's action.

[f] Communications Preliminary to Proposed Judicial Proceeding

Lerette v. Dean Witter Org., Inc. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 573, 131 Cal. Rptr. 592 , is discussed in § 153.27[3][c].

[g] Defamation Privileges Under Federal Constitution Apply

In Hustler Magazine v. Falwell (1988) 485 U.S. 46, 108 S. Ct. 876, 99 L. Ed. 2d 41 , plaintiff, a public figure, brought an action against a magazine publisher for defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on a "gross" and "patently offensive" parody of the plaintiff that was published in defendant's magazine. At trial, plaintiff prevailed on the claim for intentional distress but lost on the claim for defamation because the parody in question did not contain a false statement of fact. The court of appeals affirmed.

The United States Supreme Court reversed. Narrowly construed, the Court's decision held that public figures and officials may not recover for the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress by reasons of the publications such as the one in issue in the case at bar without showing that the publication contains a false statement of fact made with "actual malice." Broadly construed, the Falwell decision supports the proposition that the constitutional protections designed to give breathing space to the free flow of ideas and opinions apply to actions for intentional infliction of emotional distress, at least in the instance when such claims are based on statements published by a media defendant (485 U.S. 46, 49-56) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Defamation Privileges as Applicable

In Komarova v. National Credit Acceptance, Inc. (2009) 175 Cal. App. 4th 324, 95 Cal. Rptr. 3d 880 , plaintiff was the target of persistent, harassing credit card debt collection efforts on the part of a debt collection agency. Without plaintiff's participation, the collection agency filed for and received an arbitration award confirming the debt. However, despite having a similar name, plaintiff was not the person who actually owed the debt. Plaintiff then filed a suit against the debt collectors for intentional infliction of emotional distress and violations of the Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act, Civ. Code § 1788 et seq. Although plaintiff was awarded compensatory and punitive damages at trial on both causes of action, the court of appeal reversed the damage award on the intentional infliction of emotional distress cause of action. The court held that the defendant had a complete defense based on the litigation privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b). The court noted that the fact that plaintiff was not a party to the underlying arbitration proceedings did not prevent defendant from asserting the litigation privilege as a defense (175 Cal. App. 4th 324, 341) .

In Wallin v. Vienna Sausage Mfg. Co. (1984) 156 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 203 Cal. Rptr. 375 , the court of appeal affirmed a summary judgment for defendant in an action for slander and intentional infliction of emotional distress based on statements made in a grievance hearing. The court noted that the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) [now see Civ. Code § 47(b)] applies to statements made during a grievance procedure hearing that is reviewable by mandate (156 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1056) , and that the privilege also necessarily precludes a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (156 Cal. App. 3d 1051, 1057) .

[b] Filing of Complaint as Privileged

In Cantu v. Resolution Trust Corp. (1992) 4 Cal. App. 4th 857, 6 Cal. Rptr. 2d 151 , the sole basis for the plaintiff's alleged cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress was the defendants' initiation of legal action and the filing of supporting declarations. The court of appeal found the action barred by the privilege of Civ. Code § 47(b), stating that the improper filing of a lawsuit may be redressed only in a cause of action for malicious prosecution (4 Cal. App. 4th 857, 888-889) .

[c] Statements Made in Course of Judicial Proceeding

In Ribas v. Clark (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 355, 212 Cal. Rptr. 143, 696 P.2d 637 , plaintiff and his former wife appeared at a dissolution arbitration proceeding in which defendant testified as to the substance of a telephone conversation between plaintiff and plaintiff's former wife, on which he had eavesdropped. Plaintiff filed an action against defendant seeking damages for violations of criminal statutes prohibiting eavesdropping, as well as for common-law invasion of privacy, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and the related tort of "outrage." The trial court sustained a demurrer to the amended complaint without leave to amend. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment with directions to allow plaintiff to amend his complaint for a possible cause of action based on criminal statutes prohibiting violations of privacy, but also held that the causes of action in common law were barred by the privilege accorded to statements made in judicial proceedings under former Civ. Code § 47(2) (now Civ. Code § 47(b)) (38 Cal. 3d 355, 364) .

Carden v. Getzoff (1987) 190 Cal. App. 3d 907, 235 Cal. Rptr. 698 , involved an action for abuse of process, intentional infliction of emotional distress, and negligent infliction of emotional distress by a physician who claimed that defendant had manufactured false evidence as an expert accounting witness for the physician's former wife in a marital dissolution action. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's sustaining of defendant's demurrer without leave to amend on the ground that the publications made in both the document prepared by defendant for use at the settlement agreement negotiations and in the testimony of defendant at the dissolution proceedings were covered by the absolute privilege of former Civ. Code § 47(2) (now Civ. Code § 47(b)) (190 Cal. App. 3d 907, 913) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment when the motion asserts that defendant is entitled to a judgment as a matter of law because the declarations or other evidence in support of the motion establish that the conduct claimed to be outrageous was undertaken by defendant in good-faith reliance on the advice of informed counsel.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should refer to facts supporting the good faith of defendant's reliance on the advice of counsel, as well as the facts tending to show that counsel was informed of the facts surrounding the advised conduct. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits, declarations, or other papers that support the motion. The supporting papers must include a separate statement of material facts that the moving party contends are undisputed, along with supporting evidence for each fact [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Good-Faith Reliance on Advice of Informed Counsel as Complete Defense

In Melorich Builders, Inc. v. Superior Court (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 931, 207 Cal. Rptr. 47 , the conduct claimed to be outrageous was the filing of an unbonded stop notice by Melorich as general contractor in the course of litigation between the parties. Melorich moved for summary judgment, the uncontroverted declarations of its president, secretary, and attorney establishing that: (1) they were not familiar with the legalities of stop notices; (2) they did not know a general contractor could not utilize a stop notice to collect funds; (3) the stop notice was filed to protect their interest in funds held by the construction lender; (4) the stop notice was filed on the advice of their attorney; (5) the attorney's recommendation to file the stop notice was not based on information supplied by officers of Melorich; (6) the attorney was familiar with the facts surrounding the litigation; (7) the stop notice was in effect for 23 days; and (8) when advised a stop notice was not available to Melorich, the attorney withdrew the stop notice. The trial court denied the motion for summary judgment, stating that there was a controverted issue of material fact regarding whether or not the filing of the stop notice was privileged. However, the court did not address the second issue raised by the motion, that Melorich's conduct was not outrageous.

The court of appeal issued a writ of mandate directing the trial court to vacate its order denying summary judgment and to enter an order granting Melorich summary judgment as to the intentional infliction of emotional distress cause of action. Applying the standards set forth in Bertero v. National General Corp. [Bertero v. National Gen. Corp. (1974) 13 Cal. 3d 43, 53-53, 118 Cal. Rptr. 184] , a malicious prosecution action, the court determined that as a matter of law, conduct is not outrageous, and thus cannot be the basis of an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, when the evidence shows that: (1) the defendant acted on the opinion and advice of counsel; (2) counsel's advice was based on full disclosure of all facts by defendant or the advice was initiated by counsel based on counsel's familiarity with the case; and (3) the defendant's reliance on the advice of counsel was in good faith (160 Cal. App. 3d 931, 937) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by a defendant employer in an action by a former employee for damages based on alleged intentional infliction of emotional distress if the terms and conditions of plaintiff's employment are governed by a collective bargaining agreement.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the motion, and a separate statement of the facts that the party contends are undisputed [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption of State-Law Claim

In Friday v. Hughes Aircraft Co. (1986) 188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 236 Cal. Rptr. 291 , an employee of an aircraft manufacturing company, though not a union member, was a member of the bargaining unit and thus bound by the terms and conditions of the collective bargaining agreement. The employee brought an action against his employer for wrongful termination of employment and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the employer on the grounds of federal preemption and collateral estoppel.

Without ruling on the collateral estoppel issue, the court of appeal affirmed, holding, in part, that both causes of action were preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act [29 U.S.C.S. § 185(a)] (188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 123, 125) . The court stated that the facts underlying plaintiff's emotional distress claim consisted solely of complaints about matters covered under the collective bargaining agreement, such as safety, unfair work assignments, work restrictions, and denials of promotion and overtime. Because plaintiff's tort claim was inextricably intertwined with considerations of the labor contract, it was preempted by federal labor law (188 Cal. App. 3d 117, 125) .

[b] Construction of Collective Bargaining Agreement

In Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142 , plaintiff was discharged from her employment after an investigation into her alleged misappropriation of funds. She challenged the dismissal under the provisions of a collective bargaining agreement and won reinstatement but not back pay. She then sued in a California court under various tort theories, including wrongful discharge and intentional infliction of emotional distress. The defendant employer removed the case to the federal district court. That court then granted the employer's motion for summary judgment, ruling that the state-law claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress was preempted by Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 [29 U.S.C.S. § 185].

On appeal, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed. The court noted two United States Supreme Court opinions that dealt with the preemption of state-law claims under Section 301. In Lingle v. Norge Division, Magic Chef (1988) 486 U.S. 399, 405-406, 108 S. Ct. 1877, 100 L. Ed. 2d 410 , the Court held that an application of state law is preempted by Section 301 only if the application requires the interpretation of a collective bargaining agreement. Accordingly, the key to determining the scope of Section 301 preemption is whether the claim can be resolved only by referring to the terms of the bargaining agreement. The Ninth Circuit considered Lingle to be an application of the Supreme Court's prior decision in Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 220, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206 , in which the Court held that a state-law claim is preempted if resolution is "substantially dependent" on analysis of the terms of an agreement made between the parties in a labor contract.

Applying the Supreme Court tests to the facts, the Ninth Circuit found that the allegations of intentional infliction of emotional distress arose out of the discharge and the defendants' conduct in leading up to it. A determination of the validity of the emotional-distress claim would require consideration whether the discharge was justified under the terms of the collective bargaining agreement. Therefore, the court held that the claim was preempted under Lingle and Allis-Chalmers (854 F.2d 1142, 1149-1150) .

In Tellez v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co., Inc. (9th Cir. 1987) 817 F.2d 536 , the Ninth Circuit refused to find preemption under Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act. The plaintiff sued his employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress based on the dissemination of a letter of suspension to members of the employer's management. The collective bargaining agreement made no provision for such an act, and its grievance mechanism was not equipped to redress it. Accordingly, the court said that examination or interpretation of the agreement would not help to resolve the claim, and there was no preemption (817 F.2d 536, 539) .

[c] Exceptions of Farmer v. Carpenters Not Applicable in Cases Under Section 301

In Farmer v. Carpenters (1977) 430 U.S. 290, 97 S. Ct. 1056, 51 L. Ed. 2d 338 , the plaintiff brought an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress under California law against his own labor union and union officials for alleged outrageous acts committed in discriminating against him in making hiring-hall job assignments because of his inter-union political activities. The United States Supreme Court noted that state-law claims may be preempted under Sections 7 and 8 of the National Labor Relations Act [29 U.S.C.S. §§ 157, 158] (430 U.S. 290, 296) . However, the Court stated that no provision of the National Labor Relations Act protects the outrageous conduct alleged in the complaint (430 U.S. 290, 301) , and held that there is no preemption if it is possible for the state court to consider the outrageousness of the conduct without resolving the underlying labor dispute regarding discriminatory treatment (430 U.S. 290, 304-305) . Thus, the alleged union discrimination itself, or threats of discrimination, cannot constitute the outrageous conduct on which the action is based. It is essential that the tort action be either (1) unrelated to employment discrimination, or (2) a function of the particularly abusive manner in which the discrimination is accomplished or threatened rather than a function of the actual or threatened discrimination itself (430 U.S. 290, 305) .

NOTE:

After Farmer v. Carpenters, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals initially applied its two-part test not only to cases under the National Labor Relations Act but also to cases under Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act [see Olguin v. Inspiration Consol. Copper Co. (9th Cir. 1984) 740 F.2d 1468, 1475-1476 ; Garibaldi v. Lucky Food Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 1984) 726 F.2d 1367, 1372-1375] . However, in a case that did not involve a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the Ninth Circuit limited Farmer v. Carpenters to cases under the National Labor Relations Act [Vincent v. Trend W. Technical Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 828 F.2d 563] . The court viewed the United States Supreme Court opinion in Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck [Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206] as establishing a different test for cases under Section 301. The Ninth Circuit did not discuss this test nor set forth any significant analysis for its determination. It simply remanded the case for reconsideration in light of Allis-Chalmers [Vincent v. Trend W. Technical Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 828 F.2d 563, 565-566] .

Allis-Chalmers was a bad-faith insurance case involving a disability plan included in a collective bargaining agreement. The Supreme Court held that Section 301 preempts all state-law torts claims against employers by employees covered by a collective bargaining agreement unless the state's tort law confers nonnegotiable state-law rights on employers and employees independent of any right established by contract [Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 213, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206] . Because entitlement under the plan was created by the collective bargaining agreement, the action was preempted [Allis-Chalmers Corp. v. Lueck (1985) 471 U.S. 202, 218, 105 S. Ct. 1904, 85 L. Ed. 2d 206] . The Court neither harmonized nor distinguished the tests of Farmer v. Carpenters. The second prong of the Farmer test, relating to the "particularly abusive manner," seems unique to the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress, which was not at issue in Allis-Chalmers.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Construction of Collective Bargaining Agreement

In Soldinger v. Northwest Airlines (1996) 51 Cal. App. 4th 345, 58 Cal. Rptr. 2d 747 , plaintiff, a Jewish airline employee, sued her employer for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff alleged that defendant knew of the significance of Passover to her, but refused to allow her to observe the holiday in accordance with her religious beliefs, insisting she work on the holiday, and terminating her employment when she refused to do so, even though they found a replacement for her and despite its knowledge that the airlines did not punish similar behavior by Christians. The trial court granted summary judgment in defendant's favor on the ground that the Railway Labor Act required that the claim be resolved in accordance with a collective bargaining agreement (CBA). The court of appeal reversed, stating that where factual questions about an employer's conduct do not involve interpreting the CBA, an action for intentional infliction of emotional distress is not preempted (51 Cal. App. 4th 345, 377) . Since the factual dispute involved the employer's motives for denying plaintiff's request to allow her to observe Passover, it did not involve an interpretation of the CBA. The court thus concluded that plaintiff's cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress was not preempted (51 Cal. App. 4th 345, 379-380) .

In Moreau v. San Diego Transit Corp. (1989) 210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 258 Cal. Rptr. 647 , plaintiff, who was an employee covered by a collective bargaining agreement (CBA), resigned under pressure after being arrested for selling drugs to a police undercover informant who had been placed on the employer's night maintenance crew. Plaintiff did not challenge the employer's actions through the union grievance procedures. Plaintiff was acquitted in a criminal trial in which plaintiff had raised an entrapment defense. He then sought reinstatement and back wages from the employer. When the employer refused, he sued for wrongful discharge and intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress in state court under state law (210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 618-619) .

In affirming summary judgment for the employer, the court of appeal characterized the issue as whether an employer may participate in a law enforcement procedure that ultimately results in an employee being entrapped, and then terminate the employee because of conduct resulting from the entrapment. With regard to intentional infliction of emotional distress, the issue was whether the employer's participation in plaintiff's entrapment and its discharge of him based on the entrapment exceeded all bounds of decency, or instead constituted reasonable actions that fell within the "just cause for discharge or discipline" required by the CBA. The court held that the issues could not be resolved without deciding whether the parties to the CBA, in requiring just cause for discharge, intended to encompass discharge or discipline arising from entrapment designed to control drug use in the work place. Because resort to interpretation of the CBA was required, the state-law causes of action were preempted (210 Cal. App. 3d 614, 624-625) .

[b] Exceptions of Farmer v. Carpenters Not Applicable in Cases Under Section 301

The facts of Newberry v. Pacific Racing Ass'n (9th Cir. 1988) 854 F.2d 1142 , are discussed in § 153.29[3][b]. The plaintiff contended that the defendant employer's conduct was so outrageous as to qualify for the exception to exemption under Farmer v. Carpenters. The Ninth Circuit reviewed all of its preemption decisions after Farmer. It ended the discussion by reaffirming its holding that the exceptions to preemption set forth in that case do not apply to cases against employers under Section 301 of the Labor Management Relations Act [29 U.S.C.S. § 185], including actions for intentional infliction of emotional distress (854 F.2d 1142, 1148-1149) . The court added no analysis concerning its conclusion that this result was compelled by Allis-Chalmers.

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment by a defendant airlines in an action by a passenger for damages based on emotional distress if the claims stem from the negligent rendition of service and conduct of the flight crew.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. For example, counsel should provide facts showing that plaintiff's claim for emotional distress stems from the negligent rendition of service and conduct of the flight crew (for example, rude treatment by a flight attendant), and should then argue that it is therefore preempted by Section 105 of the Airline Deregulation Act.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Federal Preemption of Service Related State-Law Claims

In Gee v. Southwest Airlines (9th Circuit 1997) 110 F.3d 1400 , a consolidated action, plaintiff Gee, an Asian-American airline passenger sued Southwest Airline for a variety of tort actions, including intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress stemming from an incident that occurred on a flight where plaintiff was seated behind a noisy wedding party. During the flight plaintiff complained to a flight attendant and asked the attendant not to serve the group any more alcohol because they appeared to be intoxicated. Nevertheless, the attendant served one beer a piece to three members of the group. Plaintiff claimed that after her complaint, the wedding party harassed her with racial slurs, pantomimed cocking and shooting a gun at plaintiff and her companions, and threatened to "get them" upon landing. Plaintiff sued in state court and defendant airlines removed the case to federal court on diversity grounds. The district court granted defendants motion for summary judgment on the grounds that the claims were preempted by Section 105 of the Federal Aviation Act, [49 U.S.C.S. § 41713(b)(1)], commonly referred to as the Airline Deregulation Act (ADA).

Plaintiff Rowley, a paralyzed passenger, filed suit for the intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress she suffered when defendant airlines failed to provide a narrow wheel chair to assist her in moving from the door of the plane to her seat. The airlines also failed to have plaintiff's motorized scooter meet her at the door of the plane as requested. The district court also granted defendant airlines motion for summary judgment, finding the claims expressly preempted by the ADA. Both plaintiffs appealed.

The Ninth Circuit affirmed, holding that emotional injury claims against an airlines related to the negligent rendition of service and conduct of the flight crew are preempted by the ADA (110 F.3d 1400, 1406) . While finding its analysis outdated, the court based its decision on an earlier Ninth Circuit case, Harris v. American Airlines (9th Circuit 1997) 55 F.3d 1472 , in which the court held that an African-American woman's claims for emotional distress based on a drunk passenger's racial slurs, and the airlines negligence in continuing to serve the inebriated passenger who was harassing her, were service-related and therefore preempted by Section 105 of the ADA. The Ninth Circuit in the instant case first found that because plaintiff Gee's claims were virtually identical to those in Harris those claims were also preempted. The court then found that plaintiff Rowley's claim was preempted because it was grounded on the conduct of flight crew members who failed to provide assistance with her disability, conduct which was determined in Harris to be "related to" service under the ADA. The court concluded by stating that while the ADA preempts service-related emotional distress claims, safety related personal injury or death claims concerning airline operations or maintenance are not preempted by the ADA. And a claim that may be fairly characterized as relating both to service and operations should not be preempted (110 F.3d 1400, 1406, 1407) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based on witnessing injury to a third party. This form asserts that the complaint fails to allege sufficient facts to support an award of damages for mental suffering to the bystander plaintiff in that it appears on the face of the complaint, or from matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the defendant has no liability to the injured person.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should specify the facts showing that the defendant has no liability to the injured person, and the source of those facts, referring either to the complaint or to a source from which the court may take judicial notice.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Absence of Primary Liability

In Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , the plaintiff brought an action to recover for damages for emotional trauma and physical injury suffered from witnessing the infliction of injury to her child due to the negligence of the defendant. The trial court sustained a motion for judgment on the pleadings because the plaintiff mother was not within the zone of danger. The plaintiff's daughter was killed when struck by the defendant's car while she was crossing the road. The mother witnessed the collision and alleged great emotional disturbance and shock and injury to her nervous system. The Supreme Court reversed, holding the complaint stated a cause of action as to the mother, even though she was not within the zone of danger. In dicta, the Court noted that the defendant interposed the defense that the contributory negligence of the mother, sister, and child, which at the time would have been a complete bar to recovery, contributed to the accident. If any such defense is sustained and defendant found not liable for the death of the child, the mother or sister should not recover for the emotional trauma which they allegedly suffered. In the absence of the primary liability of the tortfeasor for the death of the child, there is no ground for an independent and secondary liability for claims for injuries by third parties. The basis for such claims must be the adjudicated liability and fault of defendant; that liability and fault must be the foundation for the tortfeasor's duty of due care to third parties who, as a consequence of the negligence, sustain emotional trauma.

[b] Adjudicated Fault Required

Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , is discussed in § 153.31[3][b].

[Caption. See § 153.20.]

THE COMPLAINT OF PLAINTIFF _____ [name of bystander] FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A RECOVERY OF DAMAGES FOR MENTAL SUFFERING IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE THAT PLAINTIFF IS EITHER A RELATIVE RESIDING IN THE SAME HOUSEHOLD AS _____ [name of injured party] OR A MEMBER OF THE IMMEDIATE FAMILY OF _____ [name of injured party], SUCH AS A PARENT, SIBLING, CHILD, OR GRANDPARENT.

A. Family Relationship Required for Recovery. Absent exceptional circumstances, recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress to a bystander should be limited to plaintiffs who are relatives residing in the same household as the victim, or who are parents, siblings, children, and grandparents of the victim (Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 668 fn. 10, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 ; Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 267, 250 Cal. Rptr. 254, 758 P.2d 582).

[Optional] B. In-Laws Not Proper Plaintiffs. Absent exceptional circumstances or residence in the same household, only members of the immediate family may recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress to a bystander, and in-laws are not included even if a close, loving relationship with the injured person is demonstrated (Moon v. Guardian Postacute Servs., Inc. (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 1011-1013, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 218).

[Optional] C. Residence in Same Household Must Be For Substantial Period of Time. Meeting the requirement of residence in the same household requires residence for a substantial period of time, and an allegation that the injured person and the plaintiff resided in the same household for an undisclosed period of time is insufficient (*Moon v. [Optional] D. Nonrelated Bystander Not Proper Plaintiff. A bystander who is not actually related to the injured person, such as by blood or marriage, cannot recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress regardless of how close the relationship between the persons may be (Rodriguez v. Kirchhoefel (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 427, 433, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 891).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based on witnessing injury to a third party. This form asserts that the complaint fails to allege sufficient facts to support an award of damages for mental suffering to the bystander plaintiff in that it neither appears on the face of the complaint nor from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice that plaintiff is a member of the victim's immediate family or a close relative residing in the same household. For a form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress involving injury to a third person if there was no allegation that plaintiff witnessed the infliction of the injury, see § 153.33.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Family Relationship Required for Recovery

The factual background of Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 , is discussed in § 153.33[3][a]. In setting limitations on the recovery of damages for emotional distress to bystanders, the California Supreme Court concluded that a plaintiff who may recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third person must be closely related to the injured victim. In a footnote, the Court stated that in most cases, no justification exists for permitting recovery by persons who are only distantly related to the injury victim. Absent exceptional circumstances, recovery should be limited to relatives residing in the same household, or to parents, siblings, children, and grandparents of the victim (48 Cal. 3d 644, 668, n.10).

In Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 267, 250 Cal. Rptr. 254, 758 P.2d 582 , plaintiff brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress and loss of consortium arising from an automobile accident in which defendants were allegedly negligent. In the accident, plaintiff was a passenger and suffered serious injuries; the driver, plaintiff's cohabitant, was killed. In his complaint, plaintiff alleged that his relationship with the decedent was "stable and significant and parallel to a marital relationship." The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer to the counts for negligent infliction of emotional distress and loss of consortium on the ground that the lack of a legal marriage precluded the action, and plaintiff appealed. The California Supreme Court affirmed.

The Court noted the three-part test set forth in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740-741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , and also noted that under the third prong of the test (whether the plaintiff and the victim were closely related), recovery has been denied to cousins and "best friends" (46 Cal. 3d 267, 271) . The Court then discussed the holdings in Ledger v. Tippitt (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 625, 210 Cal. Rptr. 814 , and Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 573, 127 Cal. Rptr. 720 , in which an unmarried cohabitant and the foster parent of an infant, respectively, were permitted to recover because of evidence of a close relationship. Although the Court agreed that emotional distress on the part of an unmarried cohabitant may be categorized as "foreseeable," the Court cited policy considerations weighing against sanctioning a cause of action irrespective of the foreseeability of injury (46 Cal. 3d 267, 273-274) . The state's interest in promoting the marriage relationship (46 Cal. 3d 267, 274-275) , the difficult burden placed on courts if the emotional attachments of the parties and the "stability" of the relationship are factual issues (46 Cal. 3d 267, 275-276) , and the need to limit the number of persons to whom a negligent defendant owes a duty of care (46 Cal. 3d 267, 276) were all cited by the Court as supporting the conclusion that the cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress should be limited to the immediate family of the injured person (46 Cal. 3d 267, 276-277). The Court also emphasized the need to draw a "bright line" that would exclude de facto siblings, parents, grandparents, or children, as well as unmarried cohabitants (46 Cal. 3d 267, 277) .

[b] In-Laws Not Proper Plaintiffs

In Moon v. Guardian Postacute Servs., Inc. (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 218 , a son-in-law was included as a plaintiff in an action against the nursing facility where his mother-in-law died. The plaintiff sought to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on his personal observation of the effects of the defendant's alleged abuse of his mother-in-law before she died, which included observation that she had become malnourished and dehydrated, had lost significant weight, had become immobile and bedridden, had contracted an infection, and had become incontinent. He had also observed her lying in bed with infected wounds and blisters on her feet. The son-in-law alleged facts showing that he had a close, loving relationship with his mother-in-law and that she had lived in his household on and off since he had been married to her daughter, a period spanning approximately thirty years. However, the defendant successfully demurred to the plaintiff's cause of action after the plaintiff was unable, despite repeated amendments, to allege any exceptional circumstances that would justify allowing an in-law to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress as a bystander. The plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court reviewed the requirements for recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress caused by witnessing an injury to another, including the requirement that the plaintiff and the injured person be closely related. The court noted that Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 [see § 153.32[3][a]], limited recovery, absent exceptional circumstances, to relatives residing in the same household, or to parents, siblings, children, or grandparents. Although acknowledging that this standard does not limit recovery only to blood relatives, the court interpreted the California Supreme Court's language to mean that absent exceptional circumstances or residence in the same household, only members of the injured person's immediate family may recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress to a bystander (95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 1011) . The court of appeal concluded that in-laws are not included even if a close, loving relationship with the injured person is demonstrated (95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 1011-1013) . The court was wary of placing too great a burden on trial courts by requiring that they consider whether in-laws have emotional attachments equal to those between parents and children or siblings (95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 1012) .

[c] Residence in Same Household Must Be for Substantial Period of Time

The factual and procedural background of Moon v. Guardian Postacute Servs., Inc. (2002) 95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 116 Cal. Rptr. 2d 218 , is discussed in § 153.32[3][b]. The court of appeal noted that the discussion in Thing v. La Chusa does not clarify whether a plaintiff seeking to establish standing on the basis of residence in the same household must show that the injured person was residing in the same household as the plaintiff at the time of the injury, or whether it was sufficient that the residence have been shared for some minimum period of time. Assuming without deciding that the injured person need not have been residing in the same household as the plaintiff at the actual time of injury, the court held that meeting the requirement of residence in the same household requires, at a minimum, that the plaintiff plead residence in the same household for a substantial period of time. Although the court declined to specify what might meet this requirement, the plaintiff in this particular case had alleged only that his mother-in-law had resided in his household for "a period of time" immediately before she was placed in the nursing facility where her injuries allegedly occurred, and the court concluded that this was an insufficient allegation to meet the requirement (95 Cal. App. 4th 1005, 1012-1013) .

[d] Nonrelated Bystander Not Proper Plaintiff

In Rodriguez v. Kirchhoefel (2005) 128 Cal. App. 4th 427, 26 Cal. Rptr. 3d 891 , the plaintiff witnessed the death of her friend, who was struck and killed by a car while she was crossing a street in a pedestrian crosswalk. The plaintiff sued the driver of the car for negligent infliction of emotional distress. The defendant moved for summary judgment on the grounds that the plaintiff could not recover as a witness because she was not actually related to the decedent. The trial court agreed and granted the motion, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. After reviewing relevant case law dealing with the requirements for recovery of emotional distress damages by a witness to an injury to another, the court agreed with the defendant that standing to recover was limited to those who were actually related to the person who suffered the physical injury. Although the plaintiff acknowledged that she was not actually related to the decedent, she argued that their relationship had been similar to that of sisters and noted that she had been living with the decedent and her family for two to three years at the time of the accident. The court concluded, however, that this was insufficient. Prior Supreme Court precedent had made clear that recovery was extended only to persons closely related by blood or marriage. No recovery was allowed in the absence of such actual family relationship, regardless of how close the parties may otherwise have been (128 Cal. App. 4th 427, 432-433) .

§ 153.33 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Negligent Infliction of Mental Distress--Injury to Third Party--Plaintiff Not Contemporaneously Aware of Injury

[Caption. See § 153.20.]

PLAINTIFF'S COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE FACTS SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT A RECOVERY OF DAMAGES FOR MENTAL SUFFERING IN THAT IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING THAT PLAINTIFF WAS CONTEMPORANEOUSLY AWARE OF THE INJURY TO THE THIRD PARTY.

A. Objection by Demurrer. [See § 153.20, Paragraph A.]

B. Failure to Observe Injury. A plaintiff may recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third person only if he or she is present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time it occurs, and is then aware that it is causing injury to the victim (Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 667-668, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 ; Ebarb v. Woodbridge Park Assn. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 781, 784-786, 210 Cal. Rptr. 751 ; Deboe v. Horn (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 221, 223-224, 94 Cal. Rptr. 77).

[Optional] C. Event Required to Be Subject of Sensory Perception. The plaintiff must have been a percipient witness to the injury to the third party, and plaintiff's perceptions must have been sensory (Ebarb v. Woodbridge Park Assn. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 781, 785, 210 Cal. Rptr. 751 ; Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Ctr. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 22, 24, 106 Cal. Rptr. 883).

[Optional] D. No Recovery for Medical Malpractice Not Perceived as Causing Harm When Conduct Occurred. Because a plaintiff must have a contemporaneous understanding that the conduct that is being observed is conduct that is actually causing harm, bystanders in medical malpractice cases cannot sue for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on unperceived medical errors hidden within a course of treatment (Bird v. Saenz (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 910, 921, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465, 51 P.3d 324).

[Optional] E. Contemporaneous Awareness of Injury Must Be Reasonably Certain. Plaintiff's contemporaneous awareness of injury must be reasonably certain and a mere belief that it is more likely than not that a close relative has suffered an injury is not enough to support recovery as a bystander (Ra v. Superior Court (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 142, 150-151, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based on witnessing injury to a third party. This form memorandum asserts that the complaint fails to allege sufficient facts to support an award of damages for mental suffering to the bystander plaintiff in that it neither appears on the face of the complaint nor from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice that plaintiff observed the injury to the third party.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[b] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities in § 153.46 may be used in opposition to the motion supported by this memorandum of points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Observe Injury

In Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 , the plaintiff was near the scene of a traffic accident but neither saw nor heard the accident. She became aware that her son had been injured in the accident when told by a daughter that her son had been hit by a car. She rushed to the scene, where she saw her child, whom she believed to be dead, lying bloody and unconscious in the roadway. The mother sued the parties whose alleged negligence caused the accident for damages for mental suffering.

The trial court granted summary judgment on the ground that the mother could not prevail, because she did not contemporaneously and sensorily perceive the accident. Although the court of appeal reversed, the California Supreme Court agreed with the trial court.

The Court reviewed numerous negligent infliction of emotional distress cases, including the landmark case of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , in which the Court had held that the right to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress was to be determined under the neutral principles of foreseeability and proximate cause that generally govern tort law. Under Dillon, foreseeability was to be determined with reference to certain guidelines, one of which was that the shock must have resulted from a sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident, as contrasted with learning of the accident from others after its occurrence. After Dillon, courts viewed the guidelines as flexible, and sometimes allowed damages for shock received soon after the injury-producing event by one who was not actually present at the exact moment when the event occurred [see, e.g., Archibald v. Braverman (1969) 275 Cal. App. 2d 253, 256 (facts similar to Thing, involving arrival within moments after injury)].

In Thing, the Court concluded that over 20 years of experience with determining foreseeability under Dillon had failed to produce consistent and just results. Greater certainty and a more reasonable limit on the exposure to liability for negligent conduct required that a more definite standard than mere foreseeability under the Dillon guidelines was required. The Court therefore limited the right to recover to plaintiffs who personally and contemporaneously perceive the injury-producing event and its traumatic consequences (48 Cal. 3d 644, 667-668) .

In Ebarb v. Woodbridge Park Assn. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 781, 210 Cal. Rptr. 751 , the sister of a boy who drowned in a spa/jacuzzi at their condominium complex sued various parties for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on her alleged close proximity to the jacuzzi and witnessing of all or part of the drowning and the removal of the boy's body from the jacuzzi. In fact, plaintiff had been down the street playing with a friend when the accident occurred. As she was walking home, she saw a fire truck approaching the complex. On arriving at the complex, a woman asked for the boy's father. At that time, plaintiff could see the pool area and knew something was wrong, but she could not see the spa itself. The woman took plaintiff to her apartment, and kept her there. Plaintiff said she knew by the way the woman was acting that her brother was dead. About 10 minutes later, plaintiff went to get the mail and was stopped by a nurse. She asked the nurse if her brother was dead, and the nurse said yes. Fifteen to twenty minutes later, plaintiff managed to elude the nurse and go to the top of the stairs where she saw the boy's body floating in the spa and a man attempting to pull him up. Later, after the spa had been drained and her mother and father arrived, plaintiff accompanied them to the spa and saw the boy's body in the bottom of the spa, his arm still encased in the drain pipe that trapped him. The defendant condominium association moved for and was granted summary judgment on the ground that plaintiff's shock was not the result of sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiff's knowledge that her brother was dead from the manner in which the woman prevented her from going to the pool was not the type of perception that allows recovery, but only an example of learning of the accident from others (164 Cal. App. 3d 781, 785) .

[b] Event Required to Be Subject of Sensory Perception

Ebarb v. Woodbridge Park Assn. (1985) 164 Cal. App. 3d 781, 210 Cal. Rptr. 751 , is discussed in § 153.33[3][a].

In Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Ctr. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 22, 106 Cal. Rptr. 883 , the plaintiff brought an action for the wrongful death of her five-year-old daughter allegedly resulting from the malpractice of a hospital. The plaintiff included a count for emotional trauma and resulting physical injury caused to herself by witnessing the progressive decline and ultimate death of her daughter in the hospital. The hospital's demurrer to this count was sustained without leave to amend, and the count was dismissed. The complaint alleged that the daughter had been admitted to the hospital suffering from an unspecified ailment, that the hospital negligently diagnosed and treated her, and that the child died as a result. The mother accompanied her daughter to the hospital and stayed with her for extended periods of time during her hospitalization and witnessed her death. The court of appeal affirmed. The requirements that the plaintiff be located near the scene of the accident and that the shock result from the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident emphasize the need that the event causing injury to the third party must itself be one that can be the subject of sensory perception. The fact that the result is visible is not determinative. In this case, the failure to diagnose was not an event that could be perceived by a lay person.

NOTE:

The California Supreme Court has rejected language in Jansen that required that the injury-causing event be the result of a sudden occurrence [Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 168, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 ; see § 153.46[3][c]]. The Court held that observed conduct constituting neglect of a person's medical needs is sufficient. In so holding, the Court distinguished the facts in Jansen, accepting that in that case the plaintiff had not perceived the defendant's conduct--that is, the misdiagnosis Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 169-170, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 ; see § 153.46[3][c]].

[c] No Recovery for Medical Malpractice Not Perceived as Causing Harm When Conduct Occurred

In Bird v. Saenz (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 910, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465, 51 P.3d 324 , the plaintiffs brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress against physicians attending their mother's surgery. The plaintiffs were at the hospital while their mother was undergoing surgery, although they were not in the operating room to observe the surgery, during which an artery was transected. However, they did hear a call over the hospital loudspeaker for a thoracic surgeon, they were provided reports from medical staff that there had been complications and that their mother may have suffered a nicked artery or vein and may have suffered a stroke, and they saw their mother, discolored and in obvious distress, being rushed through the hallway while surrounded by numerous medical personnel. Eventually, emergency surgery stopped their mother's internal bleeding. Although the plaintiffs admitted that they were not present when their mother's artery was transected, they argued that the relevant injury-producing event included the defendants' failure to diagnose and treat the damaged artery immediately, and that the events they witnessed in the hallway were a part of that failure and could support recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress. The defendants successfully moved for summary judgment, but the court of appeal reversed, finding a triable issue of fact as to whether the plaintiffs were present at the time of the injury-producing event and knew at that time that it was causing injury to their mother. The defendants appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the court of appeal. After reviewing relevant case law dealing with a bystander's cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress, the Court noted that although a plaintiff need not contemporaneously understand that a defendant's conduct constitutes legal negligence, the plaintiff must have a contemporaneous understanding that the conduct that is being observed is conduct that is actually causing harm. The Court rejected the implication found in Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 573, 127 Cal. Rptr. 720 , that all that is required is that the plaintiff observe the results of the infliction of harm, directly and contemporaneously. Instead, the Court concluded that in the context of medical malpractice cases, bystanders cannot sue for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on unperceived medical errors hidden within a course of treatment (28 Cal. 4th 910, 920-921) . In this case, the plaintiffs could not show that they were aware, when they witnessed their distressed mother being rushed through the hallways, that the physicians had committed medical malpractice by failing to make a proper diagnosis or were failing to administer appropriate treatment for their mother's condition. In other words, although they witnessed their mother's distress, they were not contemporaneously aware that the physicians were causing the injury through conduct that the plaintiffs were observing (28 Cal. 4th 910, 921-922) . The Court recognized that most misdiagnoses, unsuccessful treatments, or treatments that turn out to be inappropriate only in retrospect will not be contemporaneously observable by a lay person, and thus will usually be insufficient to support a bystander claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress. However, the Court stopped short of saying that medical malpractice could never support such a claim, noting that in some extreme situations even a lay person may contemporaneously perceive that incorrect treatment is causing an injury, such as when a family member observes a surgeon amputate the wrong limb of a patient (28 Cal. 4th 910, 918, 920-921) .

[d] Contemporaneous Awareness of Injury Must Be Reasonably Certain

In Ra v. Superior Court (2007) 154 Cal. App. 4th 142, 64 Cal. Rptr. 3d 539 , plaintiff sued a store after her husband was injured by a falling sign. While shopping at the store with her husband, plaintiff heard a loud bang emanating from the nearby area of the store where she knew her husband to be, feared that her husband had been injured, turned and saw her husband with his hand to his head, bending at the knees, in apparent pain. She did not immediately see the sign that had fallen laying on the floor. Plaintiff sought to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress as a bystander with contemporaneous awareness of the injury caused to her husband. Plaintiff stated in her discovery responses and declaration that while she did not absolutely know that her husband had been injured when she heard the noise, she believed it more likely than not. The trial court granted summary adjudication in favor of defendant on this cause of action on the basis that this evidence established that plaintiff had not contemporaneously perceived the injury to her husband. Plaintiff filed a petition for writ of mandate.

The court of appeal denied the writ petition. The court held that a plaintiff's contemporaneous awareness of injury must be reasonably certain and a mere belief that it is more likely than not that a close relative has suffered an injury is not enough to support recovery as a bystander. The court noted that it is the emotionally traumatic effect of perceiving the infliction of serious injury on a close relative that is actionable in a bystander suit, rather than observation of the immediate aftermath or consequences of the injury-producing event. The court also noted that a contemporaneous fear of possible injury to another is insufficient to support recovery. In the instant case, plaintiff was not reasonably certain that her husband was being injured when she heard the loud noise, she merely feared that it was more likely than not, and as such, the court concluded that plaintiff could not recover as a bystander (154 Cal. App. 4th 142, 150-153) .

[a] Failure to Observe Injury

In Fluharty v. Fluharty (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 484, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 244 , a son sued his father for emotional distress occasioned by his father's attempted suicide. Immediately after murdering plaintiff's mother, the father telephoned the son, told him what he had done, and advised him that he intended to take his own life. Plaintiff and his wife immediately drove to the father's home where he found his father with a shotgun pointed at his chin. He pleaded with him not to shoot himself and wrestled for control of the gun when it discharged, very slightly injuring plaintiff's wife. Plaintiff sought to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress on the theory that he was a bystander to the shotgun blast that injured his wife. Plaintiff testified that he immediately became aware the blast hit the truck behind which his wife was standing, that after his father was subdued he looked to see if his wife was okay and could not find her. Plaintiff ran around asking if anyone had seen her and was then told that she had been seen walking to a neighbor's house. He testified that the first time he learned his wife had been injured was two hours after the incident. The trial court rejected plaintiff's claim and the court of appeal affirmed. The critical fact precluding this claim was that while plaintiff may have feared for his wife's safety, he was unaware of her injury at the time it occurred (59 Cal. App. 4th 484, 494).

In Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 , a 6-year-old girl and her 13-year-old brother sued a church and its parent organization, seeking to recover damages on theories including negligent infliction of emotional distress. The plaintiffs alleged that the church pastor had sexually molested the boy who, in turn, molested his sister. The trial court granted the defendants' summary judgment motion, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court of appeal relied on Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 , and Golstein v. Superior Court (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1427, 273 Cal. Rptr. 270 , for the proposition that, in order to recover on a bystander theory, plaintiff must have been present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time it occurs, and must also have been aware at that time that it was causing injury to the victim (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 838-839) . Because the sister could not allege that she was present at the scene when the pastor (or the church or the parent organization) injured her brother, or that she was then aware that the actions of the pastor (or the church or the parent organization) caused injury to her brother, the court held that she had not stated a cause of action (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 839) .

The court of appeal further held that the sister did not have an independent cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on the direct-victim theory set forth in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], and Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 590, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 [see § 153.49[3][b]], because she did not establish an independent, preexisting relationship with the pastor that would have imposed a duty of care toward her (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 840) .

In Breazeal v. Henry Mayo Newhall Memorial Hospital (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1329, 286 Cal. Rptr. 207 , the plaintiff sought damages as a bystander for emotional distress suffered because of allegedly negligent medical treatment rendered to her son in a hospital emergency room. It was alleged only that the plaintiff saw the doctor bent over the child, and that there was blood on both of them. The court of appeal found that no evidence established that the mother witnessed an event that caused injury to her son or that she contemporaneously was aware that any such event was causing him injury (234 Cal. App. 3d 1329, 1342) .

In Fife v. Astenius (1991) 232 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 284 Cal. Rptr. 16 , the plaintiffs heard the sound of vehicle impact, then ran outside to discover that a family member had been injured in the accident. The court held that even if the plaintiffs might be considered to be present at event (through sound rather than sight), they did not contemporaneously perceive it because they were unaware at that time that the victim was involved (232 Cal. App. 3d 1090, 1092-1093) .

In Scherr v. Las Vegas Hilton (1985) 168 Cal. App. 3d 908, 214 Cal. Rptr. 393 , a woman viewed a "live" television broadcast of a fire at defendant's hotel, at which her husband was a guest who sustained injuries as a result of the fire. The coverage did not, however, portray her husband's injuries in the fire. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the wife's cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress because her pleading did not specify how and when she discovered her husband's condition. The court of appeal affirmed, holding that, although plaintiff might have concluded from the broadcast that her husband was in danger, she did not witness his injuries as they were being inflicted, and therefore could not plead that she suffered shock therefrom (168 Cal. App. 3d 908, 910) .

In Madigan v. City of Santa Ana (1983) 145 Cal. App. 3d 607, 193 Cal. Rptr. 593 , the parent and stepparent of two children killed in an auto collision with defendant brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. On the basis of the fact that the plaintiffs had not arrived at the scene until 15 minutes after the accident, the trial court granted defendant's demurrer. On appeal, the court upheld the ruling, finding that the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident required for recovery was absent in the present case (145 Cal. App. 3d 607, 610) .

[b] Event Required to Be Subject of Sensory Perception

In Budavari v. Barry (1986) 176 Cal. App. 3d 849, 222 Cal. Rptr. 446 , plaintiff brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress and loss of consortium after her husband died of cancer. The action was based on the defendants' (a hospital and physicians) failure to inform her husband of a lesion on his lung or to investigate it further while the cancer was in an early, curable stage. The trial court dismissed the action after sustaining defendants' demurrer. In affirming the dismissal, the court of appeal discussed cases involving bystander witnesses to damaging negligent events, as well as cases brought by direct victims of negligence [see §§ 153.37 and 153.49], noting that plaintiff did not fit within either category. The court said that plaintiff was not a percipient witness to defendants' negligence, because the failure to detect cancer or to follow up on X-ray findings was not an event that could be witnessed (176 Cal. App. 3d 849, 852-853) .

§ 153.34 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff May Not Recover for Emotional Distress Damages Based on Attorney Malpractice Resulting Only in Economic Loss

[1] FORM

[The following may be included in a memorandum or points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A CLIENT MAY NOT RECOVER EMOTIONAL DISTRESS DAMAGES FOR ATTORNEY MALPRACTICE CAUSING ONLY ECONOMIC LOSS.

No Recovery for Emotional Distress Damages When Attorney Malpractice Results in Only Economic Loss. Emotional distress damages are not recoverable in an attorney malpractice action alleging only economic loss regardless of whether the malpractice occurred in the context of litigation or tax advice (Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1691, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention in a legal malpractice action that a plaintiff may not recover emotional distress damages where the malpractice leads only to economic loss.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that plaintiff may not recover emotional distress damages.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss evidence of the type of loss sustained by plaintiff [see Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1693, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery for Emotional Distress Damages When Attorney Malpractice Results in Only Economic Loss

In Camenisch v. Superior Court (1996) 44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 52 Cal. Rptr. 2d 450 , a client brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress and legal malpractice against an attorney. Plaintiff had hired defendant to prepare trust and estate documents, including a life insurance trust in favor of his daughters, and informed defendant that he wanted to ensure financial security for his wife and daughters and that he did not want the proceeds to become a taxable part of his estate. Defendant prepared the life insurance trust, and assured plaintiff that the proceeds would not be taxed. When plaintiff discovered that the trust was incorrectly formed and estate taxes would result he sued for emotional distress damages. Defendant demurred, but the trial court overruled the demurrer.

The court of appeal disagreed, and issued a writ of mandate to strike all allegations directed toward emotional distress. The court held that the law does not recognize a protectable interest in freedom from the emotional distress involved in paying taxes, even if the taxes might have been avoided by skilled legal advice and drafting. Therefore, a lawyer may not be held liable for the emotional distress of a client who learns that the attorney's negligence may have thwarted the client's tax avoidance goal. The fact that the alleged negligence did not take place in a litigation context did not defeat the general rule that emotional distress damages are not recoverable for attorney malpractice when the malpractice leads only to economic loss (44 Cal. App. 4th 1689, 1691) .

§ 153.35 Supporting Contention That Plaintiff May Not Recover Emotional Distress Damages for Negligent Breach of Home Construction Contract Resulting Only in Economic Injury

[The following may be included in a memorandum of points and authorities, or in a trial or appellate brief.]

A PLAINTIFF MAY NOT RECOVER EMOTIONAL DISTRESS DAMAGES FOR NEGLIGENT BREACH OF A HOME CONSTRUCTION CONTRACT IF THE ONLY INJURY IS ECONOMIC INJURY AND PROPERTY DAMAGE AND IF THE CONTRACTOR BREACHED NO DUTY THAT WAS INDEPENDENT OF THE CONTRACT.

No Recovery for Emotional Distress for Negligent Breach of Home Construction Contract. Even if it is foreseeable that breach of a contract to build a house would result in emotional distress to homeowners, homeowners are not entitled to recover emotional distress damages for negligent performance of the contract if the only injury caused is economic injury and if the contractor breached no duty that was independent of the contract (Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 543, 552-557, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a defendant's contention that emotional distress damages may not be recovered merely because the defendant negligently breached a contract with the plaintiff to build a house, if the only injury sustained by the plaintiff is economic injury or property damage and if the defendant breached no duty that was independent of the contract.

These points and authorities may be combined with points and authorities pertaining to the specific procedural context in which counsel wishes to raise the substantive issue that the plaintiff may not recover emotional distress damages.

[b] Argument

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss evidence showing that the breach of contract was merely negligent, that the only injury proximately caused by the breach was economic injury, and that the defendant violated no legal duty that was independent of the contract.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Recovery for Emotional Distress for Negligent Breach of Home Construction Contract

In Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 543, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 , the plaintiffs, a married couple, contracted with the defendant for construction of their "dreamhouse" on an ocean-view lot. Shortly after moving into the house, however, the house suffered very extensive leaks during heavy rainfall, with significant structural damage caused by the saturation. The defendant's efforts to fix these problems were ineffectual, and inspections by another contractor and a structural engineer revealed serious construction errors involving the roof, exterior stucco, windows, waterproofing, and even the home's structural components. The plaintiffs brought suit against the defendant, alleging breach of contract, fraud, negligent misrepresentation, and negligent construction. Among the plaintiffs' allegations were a claim that they suffered emotional distress caused by both the defective condition of the house and the defendant's invasive and unsuccessful repair attempts. The husband at one point had to be taken away in an ambulance due to a heart condition brought on, in part, by excessive stress, including the stress suffered on learning the full extent of the problems with the house. The wife alleged stress caused by fear that the house would collapse in an earthquake, as well as fear for her daughter's safety. At trial, the defendant prevailed on the claims for fraud and negligent misrepresentation, although the plaintiffs prevailed on the breach of contract action and the defendant was found to have negligently constructed the house. In addition to the costs of repair, the jury awarded damages for emotional distress and for the husband's physical pain and suffering and lost earnings, and the defendant appealed. In a split decision, the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, including the award of damages for emotional distress. The defendant appealed the award of emotional distress damages.

The Supreme Court reversed, holding that because the defendant's negligence directly caused only economic injury and property damage and because the defendant had breached no duty independent of the contract, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover for emotional distress based on breach of a contract to build a house. The Court began by noting the distinction between tort damages and contract damages and the limitation generally imposed on contract damages to those within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was made (21 Cal. 4th 543, 550-551) . The Court then noted that although breach of a contractual duty may support an action in tort, a breach of contract is tortious only if the breach also violates a duty independent of the contract that arises from principles of tort law (21 Cal. 4th 543, 551-552) . However, the Court rejected the plaintiffs' claim that tort recovery for mental distress is appropriate if mental distress is a foreseeable result of the negligent breach of a standard commercial contract, because foreseeability alone does not support imposition of a tort duty (21 Cal. 4th 543, 552) . The Court noted that, outside of the insurance context, a tortious breach of contract may generally be found if (1) the breach is accompanied by a common law tort such as fraud or conversion, (2) the means used to breach the contract are tortious by use of deceit or undue coercion, or (3) one party intentionally breaches the contract, intending or knowing that such a breach will cause severe, unmitigable harm in the form of mental anguish, personal hardship, or substantial consequential damages (21 Cal. 4th 543, 553-554) . Partly to promote the interests of stability in commercial affairs, the Court concluded that a breach of a commercial contract that is merely negligent, as was the breach involved in this case, could not support the recovery of tort damages for emotional distress (21 Cal. 4th 543, 554) .

The Supreme Court went on to note that even if the defendant's negligence violated a duty independent of the contract, the plaintiffs would not be entitled to emotional distress damages under the facts of the case. The Court noted the absence of case law allowing recovery for emotional distress arising solely from property damage and stressed that a contractual relationship, without more, is insufficient to support an award of damages for emotional distress if the negligent conduct resulted only in economic injury to the plaintiff (21 Cal. 4th 543, 554-555) . Noting that policy concerns had been used to deny emotional distress damages in other cases involving injury to economic interests, the Court concluded that policy concerns supported a similar limit on recovery if the negligence concerns the construction of a home (21 Cal. 4th 543, 555-557) . The Court also rejected the argument that the husband's heart condition was directly caused by the negligent construction, concluding instead that although the heart condition may have resulted from the emotional distress, the stress itself derived from an inherently economic concern (21 Cal. 4th 543, 557-558) .

Finally, the Court went on to hold that damages for emotional distress could not be recovered as consequential damages on the action brought on the contract itself. Noting that damages for emotional distress are generally not recoverable in an action for breach of an ordinary commercial contract, the Court concluded that the balance of policy considerations, including the impact on stability and predictability in commercial affairs, cautioned against allowing emotional distress damages for negligent breach of a construction contract (21 Cal. 4th 543, 558-561) .

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based solely on damage to property, when the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action in that it appears on the face of the complaint, or from any matter of which the court is required to or may take judicial notice, that the plaintiff has failed to allege facts showing a preexisting relationship between the parties giving rise to a duty of care by defendant or that defendant committed an intentional tort.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. For example, in an appropriate case, counsel might point out that the damage to plaintiff's property was caused by machinery used on nearby property, and that no relationship existed between plaintiff and defendant before that time [see, e.g., Cooper v. Superior Court (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1012-1013, 200 Cal. Rptr. 746] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Recovery Solely for Property Damage Requires Preexisting Relationship Between Parties or Intentional Tort by Defendant

Cooper v. Superior Court (1984) 153 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 200 Cal. Rptr. 746 , involved an action for negligent infliction of mental distress caused by a tractor that ran into plaintiff's home when it was negligently allowed to roll away from the place it was parked. Plaintiff was not home at the time of the incident and did not observe the accident. Plaintiff's home, swimming pool, and grounds were damaged, and she and her family moved to a hotel until repairs were made. In addition to recovery of damages for property loss, plaintiff sought damages for emotional distress arising out of the accident. Plaintiff claimed that she felt insecure, that she suffered headaches and intestinal disorders, that she sought psychology therapy, and that she continued to be affected emotionally and physically by the accident. Defendants' motion for summary adjudication of the emotional distress claim, on the ground that plaintiff could not state a cause of action for emotional distress arising from damage to her property, was granted by the trial court. The court of appeal issued an alternative writ of mandate on the issue of emotional distress, staying a planned arbitration hearing pending its decision.

The court of appeal denied the writ of mandate and dissolved the stay. The court held that plaintiff had not made the requisite minimum showing of a preexisting relationship between the parties or of an intentional tort by the defendant. The court stated that no California case has allowed recovery for emotional distress arising solely out of property damage without this minimal showing (153 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1012) . Although courts have expanded the scope of the tort of negligent infliction of emotional distress, reasonable limitations on the extent and remoteness of a defendant's liability must be maintained. The court added that emotional distress arising out of loss of property evokes a sentimental loss, but stated that recovery is limited to cases when, at a minimum, the required preexisting relationship or intentional tort is shown (153 Cal. App. 3d 1008, 1013) .

NOTE:

In Molien v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals, the California Supreme Court abolished physical impact or injury as a requirement for recovery of damages for emotional distress suffered because of negligent conduct [Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 924-931, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 ; see § 153.49]. In Cooper, the court viewed the question as whether Molien should be extended to redress emotional distress resulting solely from negligent injury to property (27 Cal. 3d 916, 1012) . Although Molien was a medical malpractice case that did not involve property damage, there is nothing in the opinion that suggests that the abolition of the physical-impact-or-injury requirement would not apply to property damage cases. However, in Erlich v. Menezes, a case involving the negligent breach of a commercial contract to build a home, the California Supreme Court reiterated that emotional distress damages are generally unavailable in cases in which the only injury is injury to economic or property interests, at least if the conduct is merely negligent [Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 543, 554-558, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 ; see § 153.35]. The Supreme Court in Erlich recognized decisions such as Molien, but noted that those cases permitted emotional distress damages without personal injury only if the claim involved mental anguish stemming from a personal undertaking the traumatic results of which were unavoidable, as in Molien, or if the express object of a breached contract was the mental and emotional well-being of one of the contracting parties [Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 Cal. 4th 543, 559, 87 Cal. Rptr. 2d 886, 981 P.2d 978 ; see § 153.35] .

In Lubner v. City of Los Angeles (1996) 45 Cal. App. 4th 525, 53 Cal. Rptr. 2d 24 , a city trash truck parked at the top of a hill rolled down and crashed into plaintiffs' home damaging the house, two cars and their artwork, which included paintings, drawing, prints and posters. Plaintiffs filed a negligence action against the City of Los Angeles for property damages as well as emotional distress due to the loss of the artwork. The trial court ruled that emotional distress damages were not permitted in property damage cases. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that because the artwork was property, recovery for emotional distress would be permitted only if there was a preexisting relationship between the parties or an intentional tort (45 Cal. App. 4th 525, 532) . The court looked at the factors in this case and found that the moral blame on the defendant city was only that which attended ordinary negligence. Nothing in the record indicated bad faith or reckless indifference to the plaintiffs' emotional tranquility. The court concluded that on balance, the factors did not favor permitting the emotional distress damages (45 Cal. App. 4th 525, 534) .

Sher v. Leiderman (1986) 181 Cal. App. 3d 867, 226 Cal. Rptr. 698 , was an action by plaintiffs for damages caused when the trees of their neighbors, the defendants, grew to a point where they prevented the sunlight from reaching plaintiff's house, thus causing a reduction in the value of the house and emotional distress on the part of the plaintiffs. Plaintiffs brought suit for negligent infliction of emotional distress as well as for nuisance. The trial court found for defendants on these issues, and the court of appeal affirmed. Regarding the cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress, the court held that plaintiffs could not recover damages for emotional distress based on damage to property in the absence of some preexisting relationship or an intentional tort. Noting that the type of preexisting relationships on which such damages may be based generally involves a contractual or trust relationship, the court held that the mere ownership of adjoining lots and a long history as neighbors was not the type of relationship that would give rise to a heightened duty of care sufficient to support an emotional-distress award based on damage to property (181 Cal. App. 3d 867, 884-885) . The court considered plaintiffs' attempt to recover on a theory of negligent infliction of emotional distress after determining that they were unable to state a cause of action for nuisance (181 Cal. App. 3d 867, 883) .

NOTE:

Emotional distress damages are recoverable in a cause of action for nuisance [see Smith v. County of Los Angeles (1989) 214 Cal. App. 3d 266, 287-288, 262 Cal. Rptr. 754] .

§ 153.37 Supporting Demurrer to Complaint [Code Civ. Proc. § 430.10(e)] for Negligent Infliction of Mental Distress--Injury to Third Party--Plaintiff Not Direct Victim Because No Duty Owed

[Caption. See § 153.20.]

THE COMPLAINT FAILS TO STATE A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR NEGLIGENT INFLICTION OF MENTAL DISTRESS BASED ON INJURY TO A THIRD PARTY WITH PLAINTIFF AS A DIRECT VICTIM BECAUSE IT FAILS TO ALLEGE FACTS SHOWING THAT PLAINTIFF WAS A DIRECT VICTIM OF THE ASSERTEDLY NEGLIGENT ACT.

A. Foreseeability Alone Is Insufficient to Impose Duty. In order for a plaintiff to recover damages for emotional distress arising from negligently caused injury to another as a direct victim of the negligent conduct, there must be a duty between the tortfeasor and the plaintiff based on more than mere foreseeability that the conduct would cause the distress (Huggins v. Longs Drug Stores Cal., Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 124, 130, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587, 862 P.2d 148 ; Holliday v. Jones (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 102, 106-112, 264 Cal. Rptr. 448).

B. Failure to Show That Defendant's Negligence Was Directed at Plaintiff. Failure to allege facts showing that defendant's negligence was directed at plaintiff precludes a cause of action for negligent infliction of mental distress alleging plaintiff as a direct victim of defendant's negligence based on injury to a third party (Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 172, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 ; Goodwin v. Reilley (1985) 176 Cal. App. 3d 86, 95, 221 Cal. Rptr. 374).

C. Family Relationship Alone Is Insufficient to Impose Duty. Family relationship alone is not a sufficient basis for imposing a duty of care to refrain from negligently causing emotional distress (Fluharty v. Fluharty (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 484, 496, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 244).

[Optional] D. No Duty Owed to Non-Using Buyer of Defective Product to Prevent Emotional Distress. A manufacturer does not owe a duty of care to prevent causing emotional distress to the buyer of a defective product, if that buyer is not the party using the product at the time of the injury and if that buyer does not witness the injury-causing event (*Gu v. [a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint that alleges that plaintiff is a direct victim of negligent conduct and suffered emotional distress because of injury to a third party caused by the same conduct, pursuant to the holding in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]]. The ground for the demurrer is that the complaint fails to allege facts showing that plaintiff is a direct victim of defendant's negligence [see Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 172, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1] .

These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the defendant did not owe a duty to plaintiff as a direct victim of the asserted negligence [see Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Foreseeability Alone Is Insufficient to Impose Duty

In Huggins v. Longs Drug Stores Cal., Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 124, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587, 862 P.2d 148 , a pharmacist employed by defendant mislabeled the instructions on a prescription for plaintiffs' infant son, directing a dosage five times greater than that actually called for by the treating physician. The son was injured as a result of the overdosage, and plaintiffs sued defendant to recover damages for the emotional distress they allegedly suffered at the realization that they had contributed to their son's condition. The trial court granted defendant's motion for summary judgment, on the ground that plaintiffs could not recover based on a "direct victim" theory because defendant's only duty of care was to the child, not to plaintiffs. Plaintiffs appealed and the court of appeal reversed, holding that a pharmacist has a duty to a patient's parent or other closely-related caregiver who administers the medication as prescribed, if the pharmacist knew or should have known that the medication was for an infant or other helpless patient. The California Supreme Court agreed to review this holding, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeal (6 Cal. 4th 124, 133) .

The Court stated that, despite the broad language in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], the foreseeability that a person may suffer emotional distress as a result of defendant's negligence is not sufficient to impose liability; the defendant must have assumed a duty to the plaintiff directly (6 Cal. 4th 124, 130) . In the context of medical care, the Court read cases that had imposed direct-victim liability as involving cases in which the plaintiff was a patient of the defendant, with the status as patient the basis for imposing a duty of care toward the plaintiff (6 Cal. 4th 124, 130-132) . The Court held that the professional duties of pharmacists are no different than the duties of other medical professionals who provide services to children, and are owed to the patient himself or herself only. A pharmacist is not responsible for the emotional well-being of a patient's parents (6 Cal. 4th 124, 132-133) .

The Court also rejected plaintiffs' claim that liability could be based on their (unwitting) participation in administering the improper dosage that injured their child. Although emotional distress resulting from that participation is foreseeable, the Court held that this foreseeability did not warrant the creation of a new right of recovery for intangible injury, given the "inevitable" enlargement of potential liability for all providers of medical goods and services obtained by parents for their children and the concomitant increase in medical malpractice insurance costs (6 Cal. 4th 124, 133) .

In Holliday v. Jones (1989) 215 Cal. App. 3d 102, 264 Cal. Rptr. 448 , children of a victim of legal malpractice were awarded damages for emotional distress suffered because of the attorney's negligence in representing their father in a homicide defense. As a result of the professional negligence, the father was imprisoned for a significant period of time until the conviction was overturned on appeal on the ground of attorney incompetence. On retrial, he was acquitted.

In the civil malpractice action, the court of appeal reversed the award of damages for the emotional distress of the children. The court readily acknowledged that the children had suffered actual and foreseeable emotional distress as a result of the attorney's negligence (215 Cal. App. 3d 102, 106) . It further acknowledged that under Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], foreseeability of the distress alone might be sufficient to permit one to recover for the negligent caused injury of another (215 Cal. App. 3d 102, 111) .

However, the court held that foreseeability is not the only consideration in light of subsequent California Supreme Court decisions, particularly Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 588, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 [see § 153.49[3][b]]. In Marlene F., the California Supreme Court allowed two mothers of children who had been molested by a counselor to recover damages for their emotional distress under a negligence cause of action. The counselor had been treating the parents and children together in family therapy. However, the Court stressed that negligently causing emotional distress is not an independent tort, but simply the tort of negligence, in which all of the elements, including duty, must be present. Duty must be based on more than the mere foreseeability that the conduct will cause the distress. The duty must be assumed by the defendant or imposed on the defendant as a matter of law, or arise out of a relationship between the defendant and the plaintiff. In Marlene F., the duty arose from the therapist-patient relationship between the mothers and the therapist.

The court found that the Supreme Court had made a policy determination that costs associated with attempting to compensate intangible losses are socially significant and cannot be ignored. Because no recovery is allowed in California for a child's loss of parental consortium [Borer v. American Airlines, Inc. (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 441, 138 Cal. Rptr. 302, 563 P.2d 858] , the same recovery cannot be sanctioned through a claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress (215 Cal. App. 3d 102, 111) . The court attempted to synthesize the cases as allowing recovery for negligently inflicted emotional distress if: (1) there is a special relationship between the parties (Marlene F.); (2) the plaintiff is a direct object of some aspect of the defendant's conduct (Molien); (3) the plaintiff is a percipient witness to the results of the defendant's negligent act [see §§ 153.31-153.33, 153.45, 153.46]; or (4) there is a loss of spousal consortium [see Rodriguez v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (1974) 12 Cal. 3d 382, 115 Cal. Rptr. 765, 525 P.2d 669] (215 Cal. App. 3d 102, 111) .

[b] Failure to Show That Defendant's Negligence Was Directed at Plaintiff

The facts and procedural background of Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 , are discussed in § 153.50[3][c]. The Supreme Court held that plaintiffs had not stated a cause of action as direct victims of defendant's negligence. While plaintiff was a foreseeable plaintiff to whom the defendants owed a duty of care pursuant to Dillon, the duty owed was owed to plaintiff as a percipient witness, not as a direct victim of negligence (39 Cal. 3d 159, 172-173) .

In Goodwin v. Reilley (1985) 176 Cal. App. 3d 86, 221 Cal. Rptr. 374 , parents of a son who was injured by a drunk driver brought an action against the driver to seek damages for causes of action in negligence and strict liability, including negligent infliction of emotional distress, as direct victims of the driver's negligence. Plaintiffs' son was struck and seriously injured when defendant's motorcycle crossed the center line and collided with the son's motorcycle. Plaintiffs did not observe the occurrence, but visited their son the next day in the hospital, at which time they were allegedly put in fear of his imminent death. Defendant was subsequently convicted of operating a motor vehicle under the influence of alcohol, in violation of Veh. Code § 23153(a), (b). The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and dismissed the action. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, holding that plaintiffs were not direct victims of defendant's negligence (176 Cal. App. 3d 86, 94-95) . The court rejected plaintiffs' contention that the complaint established a cause of action under the guidelines of Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], on the theory that the legislative intent in enacting Veh. Code §§ 23152 and 23153 (driving under the influence) was to deter drunk driving and to prevent the kinds of harm that drunk driving is likely to cause. There was no support for plaintiffs' assertion that the legislative purpose in enacting those sections was to protect the next-of-kin of an intoxicated motorist's victim from emotional distress (176 Cal. App. 3d 86, 95) .

[c] Family Relationship Alone Is Insufficient to Impose Duty

In Fluharty v. Fluharty (1997) 59 Cal. App. 4th 484, 69 Cal. Rptr. 2d 244 , a son sued his father for emotional distress occasioned by his father's attempted suicide. Immediately after murdering plaintiff's mother, the father telephoned the son, told him what he had done, and advised him that he intended to take his own life. Plaintiff and his wife immediately drove to the father's home where he found his father with a shotgun pointed at his chin. He pleaded with him not to shoot himself and wrestled for control of the gun when it discharged, very slightly injuring plaintiff's wife. Plaintiff sought to recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress on the theory that he was a direct victim. He argued that his father's conduct, including killing plaintiff's mother, inviting plaintiff to view the scene, attempting to kill himself in plaintiff's presence, struggling over the shotgun, and discharging it was sufficiently outrageous to support this claim. The trial court denied recovery under this theory and the court of appeal affirmed.

The determinative issue for the court was whether the father owed his son a duty of care under the circumstances, and the following factors were relevant to this question: the extent to which the transaction was intended to affect the plaintiff, the foreseeability of harm to him, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to the defendant's conduct and the policy of preventing future harm. Although the infliction of emotional distress might have been foreseeable under the bizarre circumstances of this case, the court ruled that foreseeability alone was insufficient to impose a duty on the father because the other relevant policy factors did not support it (59 Cal. App. 4th 484, 495) . The court determined that the connection between defendant's conduct and the claimed injury was suspect in a family setting where emotional pain was an inherent staple of the parent-child relationship. Because the law imposed no criminal sanction for intentional acts of self-destruction, recognition of a duty under these circumstances would be tantamount to imposing a duty on parents generally to refrain from conduct which would cause emotional distress to their adult children. According to the court, family relationship alone was not a sufficient basis for imposing a duty of care to refrain from negligently causing emotional distress. It explained that plaintiff came to the scene of his father's attempted suicide knowing full well his father's intentions, perhaps hoping to avert an even greater catastrophe than had already befallen the family. His involvement in these events did not constitute him a victim, direct or otherwise, of his father's conduct (59 Cal. App. 4th 484, 496) .

[d] No Duty Owed to Non-Using Buyer of Defective Product to Prevent Emotional Distress

In Gu v. BMW of N. Am., LLC (2005) 132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 33 Cal. Rptr. 3d 617 , the plaintiff was the owner of a vehicle purchased from the defendant. The plaintiff loaned the vehicle to her sister, and while driving the vehicle with their parents as passengers, the plaintiff's sister lost control of the vehicle and crashed into a pole and a tree. The sister died from the injuries she sustained, and the parents were injured. The plaintiff brought a cause of action against the defendant for negligent infliction of emotional distress, even though she was not in the vehicle at the time of the accident and did not witness the accident. The plaintiff based her cause of action on allegations that she purchased the vehicle because of representations about the vehicle's safety, that the defendant had a duty to her to market and sell a vehicle that provided adequate safety to the buyer and other foreseeable users, and that it was foreseeable that the purchaser of the vehicle would suffer emotional injury if the vehicle killed a member of the purchaser's family. The plaintiff contended that she could recover emotional distress damages as a direct victim of the defendant's alleged negligence in manufacturing, designing, and selling a defective vehicle. The trial court disagreed, sustaining a demurrer for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. The court noted that the plaintiff could not recover for emotional distress under a bystander theory because it was undisputed that she did not witness the accident. Therefore, the issue was whether she could state facts sufficient to recover emotional distress damages as a direct victim of the defendant's alleged negligence (132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 204-205) . The court concluded that she could not. The court rejected the plaintiff's contention that as a purchaser of the car, she stood in a special relationship with the defendant sufficient to impose a duty of care to prevent her emotional distress. Instead, the defendant's duty to exercise reasonable care extended only to persons using the car as intended and to other persons within the range of potential danger from the vehicle (132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 206) . Moreover, the purchase agreement in and of itself could not support recovery of emotional distress damages because the emotional well-being of the buyer was not an express object of the contract (132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 206-207) . Finally, the court rejected the contention that under the facts of the case, a duty of care could be imposed on public policy grounds. The court examined the claim under the traditional Rowland factors and concluded that these factors weighed against imposing a duty of care. Although the court recognized the foreseeability of the injury and the certainty of harm, the court concluded that those factors were outweighed by the lack of moral blame, the lack of a need to impose additional incentives to prevent the selling of defective products beyond those already created by products liability law, and the costs associated with exposing manufacturers to additional liability for emotional distress suffered by owners of a product who were not using the product or even in the area when the product caused an injury to another (132 Cal. App. 4th 195, 208-210) .

[a] Foreseeability Alone Is Insufficient to Impose Duty

In Melican v. Regents of University of California (2007) 151 Cal. App. 4th 168, 59 Cal. Rptr. 3d 672 , plaintiffs were the family members of a decedent whose remains were bequeathed to a university's willed body program (WBP) to be used for medical research. Plaintiffs alleged that defendants could be held liable for returning the decedent's cremated remains commingled with the cremated remains of another person. The court of appeal held that while a mortuary or crematorium may be liable for emotional distress for negligent mishandling of a corpse, a research institution that obtains willed bodies for medical dissection, research, and teaching purposes, and does not purport to provide funeral-related services, does not owe the same duties to the family members of donated corpses (151 Cal. App. 4th 168, 179) . In addition, the court noted that the university contractually agreed only to dispose of the decedent's remains in accordance with state law, and thus had no duty to return any remains to the decedent's family. While the defendant university may have voluntarily undertaken to do so, the court concluded that such a voluntary undertaking would not support the imposition of liability even if the remains returned had been commingled with the remains of another corpse. The fact that it was foreseeable that the plaintiffs might have suffered emotional distress from receiving commingled remains was an insufficient basis for imposing liability on defendants, as bodies donated to the WBP were routinely subjected to treatment that could cause foreseeable emotional distress to family members (151 Cal. App. 4th 168, 180-181) .

In Ess v. Eskaton Props., Inc. (2002) 97 Cal. App. 4th 120, 118 Cal. Rptr. 2d 240 , the plaintiff was the sister of a woman who was diagnosed with Alzheimer's disease and then was placed in a skilled nursing facility for full-time care. While in the facility, the woman was sexually assaulted by an intruder. The plaintiff then sued the facility, seeking to recover for the emotional distress caused to her upon learning of the assault on her sister. The court of appeal agreed with the trial court that the plaintiff could not recover for her emotional distress. In rejecting the plaintiff's claim that she could recover as a direct victim of the facility's negligence, the court of appeal noted that the facility undertook to provide care to the sister, not to the plaintiff. Even though the plaintiff had previously provided care for her sister and the facility knew that injury to the sister would probably cause distress to the plaintiff, and even though the plaintiff would incidentally benefit from the facility's provision of care to her sister, this was insufficient to impose a duty of care on the facility owed directly to the plaintiff (97 Cal. App. 4th 120, 128-129) .

In Klein v. Children's Hosp. Med. Ctr. (1996) 46 Cal. App. 4th 889, 54 Cal. Rptr. 2d 34 , plaintiffs brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on an misdiagnosis of their daughter. Defendants misdiagnosed the daughter as suffering from a deadly form of bone cancer. As a result of this alleged negligence, plaintiffs gave authorization for unnecessary treatment, and suffered emotional distress. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrer, and the court of appeal affirmed. Plaintiffs contended that they were direct victims of the misdiagnosis. The court agreed that it was clearly foreseeable that parents would suffer emotional distress under such circumstances, but stated that foreseeability has a minor role in the full tort analysis of duty, breach of duty, causation and damages (46 Cal. App. 4th 889, 895) . The court referred to Huggins v. Longs Drug Stores Cal., Inc. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 124, 24 Cal. Rptr. 2d 587, 862 P.2d 148 , for the rule that the existence of a contract between a parent and a medical caregiver to provide medical treatment for a child is not in itself sufficient to impose on the caregiver a duty of care owed to the parent (46 Cal. App. 4th 889, 896) . Concluding that, as in Huggins, the parents' distress was caused not by apprehension of their own health, but by that of their child, the court affirmed the judgment for defendant (46 Cal. App. 4th 889, 899) .

In Jacoves v. United Merch. Corp. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468 , the parents of an adult psychiatric patient who committed suicide sued the sporting goods store in which the patient purchased the rifle he used against himself, seeking to recover damages for theories including negligent infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs alleged that the store had negligently sold the rifle and ammunition to their son. The trial court granted, and the court of appeal affirmed, summary judgment in favor of the store.

The court of appeal relied on the rule set forth in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167

Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], that a plaintiff who suffers emotional distress without accompanying physical injury may recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress if the defendant owed the plaintiff a direct duty. However, the plaintiffs here did not establish the required duty. The defendant was a store that sold firearms, the son was an adult, and the plaintiffs had no contact with the store (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 119) .

In Burger v. Pond (1990) 224 Cal. App. 3d 597, 273 Cal. Rptr. 709 , plaintiff sought to recover damages for emotional distress allegedly caused by an attorney's negligent provision of legal services to her husband in the handling of his divorce from his first wife. The attempted dissolution was set aside due to a jurisdictional error after the husband-client had remarried plaintiff and they had a child together. Plaintiff argued that she had stated a cause of action because the attorney was aware of the husband-client's intentions to remarry and have a child, and it was, therefore, foreseeable that plaintiff would be emotionally distressed due to the negligence. The court rejected the argument, finding that foreseeability is not a substitute for legal duty. Nothing established a special relationship between the attorney and plaintiff sufficient to impose on the attorney any duty toward her (224 Cal. App. 3d 597, 606-607) .

In Khan v. Shiley Inc. (1990) 217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 266 Cal. Rptr. 106 , defendant had manufactured a heart valve that was surgically implanted in plaintiff. The valve subsequently had a high incidence of malfunction; was found by the Food and Drug Administration to have the potential to cause serious adverse health consequences, including death; and was subsequently recalled (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 853 n.7). Plaintiff sued for negligent infliction of emotional distress, based on her knowledge that her valve might malfunction at any time.

The court of appeal affirmed the demurrer based on Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 588, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 , specifically its language on the limits of duty. The court rejected the view that the plaintiff was a direct victim, stating that in the absence of product malfunction, the plaintiff cannot establish that defendants breached any duty owed to her (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 856) . The court held that product malfunction is an essential element of a cause of action under any product liability theory (217 Cal. App. 3d 848, 854-855, 857) . The fact that the distress might easily be characterized as a foreseeable result of the negligence was apparently of no import.

[b] Failure to Show That Defendant's Negligence Was Directed at Plaintiff

In McMahon v. Craig (2009) 176 Cal. App. 4th 1502, ___ Cal. Rptr. 3d ___, plaintiff was the owner of a Maltese show dog that suffered from respiratory distress. When the dog was five years old, plaintiff took her to a veterinarian for surgery on her throat. Although the dog was not supposed to eat anything for 24 hours after the surgery, the veterinarian instructed an assistant to administer a mixture of water and baby food to the dog only two hours after surgery. The dog aspirated on the mixture and died a day and a half later while still under the veterinarian's care. There was also evidence that the dog had not been provided appropriate antibiotics, oxygen, glucose, and other supportive care after the surgery. Plaintiff sued the veterinarian for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. The court of appeal held that defendant did not owe a duty directly to plaintiff not to cause her emotional distress. The court concluded that although a veterinarian is hired by the owner of a pet and the pet owner may be emotionally involved in the pet's health, a veterinarian's medical care is directed solely at the pet. Thus, malpractice by a veterinarian does not directly harm the pet owner and will not support recovery by the pet owner for negligent infliction of emotional distress, at least when the plaintiff was not present at the scene when the injury-producing event occurred. The court noted that a person cannot recover for negligent infliction of emotional distress when he or she is not present at the scene when a family member suffers injury from a physician's malpractice, and it would be anomalous to allow such a recovery when a person's pet is injured through similar conduct (176 Cal. App. 4th 1502, 1510-1515) .

In Steven F. v. Anaheim Union High Sch. Dist. (2003) 112 Cal. App. 4th 904, 6 Cal. Rptr. 3d 105 , the plaintiffs were the parents of a female high school student who engaged in a sexual relationship with a teacher. The court of appeal held that the school district was not liable for the emotional distress caused to the parents when the parents discovered, prior to the school district doing so, that their daughter had engaged in the sexual relationship. The student had gone to great lengths to conceal the relationship from her family and friends, there was no evidence that the district or any teacher or supervisory employee had knowledge of the sexual relationship, and there was nothing to warn the district of a propensity on the part of the teacher to engage in such a relationship with a student. Under those circumstances, even assuming for the sake of argument that the district may have been negligent in supervising the teacher, there was no conduct by school officials that was aimed at the parents that would support holding the school district liable for the parents' emotional distress (112 Cal. App. 4th 904, 906, 910, 914-915) .

In Evan F. v. Hughson United Methodist Church (1992) 8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 10 Cal. Rptr. 2d 748 , a 6-year-old girl and her 13-year-old brother sued a church and its parent organization, seeking to recover damages on theories including negligent infliction of emotional distress. The plaintiffs alleged that a pastor of the church had sexually molested the boy who, in turn, molested his sister. The trial court granted summary judgment in favor of the church and the parent organization. The court of appeal affirmed.

The court of appeal relied on Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 , and Golstein v. Superior Court (1990) 223 Cal. App. 3d 1415, 1427, 273 Cal. Rptr. 270 , for the proposition that, in order to recover on a bystander theory, plaintiff must have been present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time it occurs, and must also have been aware at that time that it was causing injury to the victim (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 838-839) . Because the sister could not allege that she was present at the scene when the pastor (or the church or the parent organization) injured her brother, or that she was then aware that the actions of the pastor (or the church or the parent organization) caused injury to her brother, the court held that she had not stated a cause of action (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 839) .

The court of appeal further held that the sister did not have an independent cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on the direct-victim theory set forth in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], and Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 590, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 [see § 153.49[3][b]], because she did not have an independent, preexisting relationship with the pastor that would have imposed a duty of care toward her (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 840) . The sister's only relationship with the pastor was telling him on three or four occasions that her brothers did things that she did not like, such as pulling her hair or calling her a brat. Marlene F. requires a more serious relationship than this. Furthermore, the pastor's conduct, unlike the therapist's conduct in Marlene F., was not directed at the sister (8 Cal. App. 4th 828, 840) .

Schwarz v. Regents of Univ of Cal. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 149, 276 Cal. Rptr. 470 , is discussed in § 153.37[4][b]. A father sought to recover damages for emotional distress that he allegedly incurred due to the negligent treatment of his son in psychotherapy. The court rejected the claim, holding that if negligence is alleged to have occurred during the medical treatment of the child, the defendant's conduct is directed solely at the child, the intended third-party beneficiary of the contract, and not at the parent who enters into the contract solely as a surrogate for the minor child (who could otherwise disaffirm the contract). The contract is not, in itself, sufficient to impose a duty of care on the medical professional toward the parent. The court approved Martinez v. County of Los Angeles (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 884, 893, 231 Cal. Rptr. 96 , and rejected Newton v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1986) 184 Cal. App. 3d 386, 228 Cal. Rptr. 890) (226 Cal. App. 3d 149, 168) .

In Anderson v. Northrop Corp. (1988) 203 Cal. App. 3d 772, 250 Cal. Rptr. 189 , the wife of a terminated employee sued the employer for negligent infliction of emotional distress, alleging that she was a direct victim of the employer's conduct that constituted the alleged wrongful termination of her husband. The court of appeal noted, in rejecting the claim, that although the employer might well have anticipated that the wife would suffer mental distress, it did nothing to include her within the scope of its allegedly improper actions. Although foreseeability of harm is considered by courts in determining whether or not to impose a legal duty, it must be linked with tortious conduct directed toward the plaintiff for liability to result (203 Cal. App. 3d 772, 777) . The court considered it to be a contortion of the "direct victim" logic to characterize any of the employer's acts as directed toward the employee's spouse (203 Cal. App. 3d

In Martinez v. County of Los Angeles (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 884, 231 Cal. Rptr. 96 , plaintiffs, parents of a child who was born with brain damage, brought an action for negligent infliction of emotional distress against defendant physicians. Defendants had been responsible for the prenatal care of the mother and the delivery of the child. Plaintiffs alleged that as a result of defendants' negligence, they suffered damages from restructuring their lives to take care of the child. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's dismissal of the action, noting that the parents had failed to allege conduct by the physicians directed to the parents that elicited serious emotional response (186 Cal. App. 3d 884, 893) .

BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS ALLEGED NO PRESENT PHYSICAL INJURY OR ILLNESS CAUSE BY THE EXPOSURE TO _____ [THE CARCINOGENIC SUBSTANCE or AIDS or other life-threatening disease], AND HAS NOT SHOWN THAT IT IS MORE LIKELY THAN NOT THAT HE/SHE WILL DEVELOP [THE DISEASE] AS A RESULT OF THE EXPOSURE, DAMAGES FOR THE EMOTIONAL DISTRESS RESULTING FROM THE FEAR OF DISEASE CANNOT BE RECOVERED.

Emotional Distress Damages Caused by Fear of Disease Absent Present Physical Injury or Illness Recoverable Only if Plaintiff Establishes That Future Disease Is More Likely Than Not. As a matter of public policy, emotional distress damages caused by the fear of life-threatening disease that is not probable is generally not compensable in a negligence action in which the plaintiff has not suffered any physical injury or illness as a result of the exposure to the disease or a substance causing the disease (Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 990, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795).

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for summary judgment that asserts that a cause of action seeking to recover damages for emotional distress, caused by plaintiff's fear of developing cancer as a result of defendant's negligence in exposing plaintiff to a carcinogenic or toxic substance without any present physical injury or illness, is precluded because plaintiff has not established that it is more likely than not that he or she will develop the feared cancer as a result of the exposure [Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 997, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795] .

The "more likely than not" standard does not apply if the plaintiff pleads and proves that the defendant's conduct in causing the exposure amounts to "oppression, fraud, or malice" as defined in Civ. Code § 3294 [Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 997-1000, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795] . For a form of points and authorities regarding this exception, see § 153.52.

Counsel should insert argument in the form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss the facts showing that plaintiff has not established that it is more likely than not that he or she will develop cancer as a result of the exposure.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Emotional Distress Damages Caused by Fear of Future Cancer Absent Present Physical Injury or Illness Recoverable Only if Plaintiff Establishes That Future Cancer Is More Likely Than Not

In Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 , four landowners who lived adjacent to a landfill brought actions against Firestone Tire and Rubber Co. (Firestone) for damages and declaratory relief, alleging that Firestone had dumped large quantities of liquid waste (including various types of toxins and solvents) at the landfill over a period of years between 1967 and 1980, despite the landfill's prohibition against the dumping of toxic substances and liquids. By May 1977 Firestone also promulgated policies setting forth the proper methods of disposing of toxins and liquids, but despite initially complying with those policies, the cost of compliance led a manager to resume dumping the liquids at the landfill.

In 1984, plaintiffs discovered that toxic chemicals had contaminated their water wells; some of the chemicals are known carcinogens and others are strongly suspected to be carcinogenic. They filed suit against Firestone in 1985, alleging causes of action for negligence, negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress, and strict liability/ultrahazardous activity. The trial court, sitting without a jury, found for plaintiffs on all of these theories, and entered judgment for plaintiffs. In its findings of fact, the court found that Firestone's waste disposal practices between 1967 and 1974 were negligent because of the dumping despite knowledge that the landfill prohibited the disposal of liquid wastes, and because a minimal inquiry would have disclosed the danger to groundwater and the potential for contaminating wells that was caused by the practices. The court also found that the post-1977 disposal, in violation of its own policy, was extreme and outrageous conduct that constituted intentional infliction of emotional distress.

The trial court awarded plaintiffs damages for the fear of cancer and the emotional distress that resulted from that fear, based on its conclusion that plaintiffs had established that they had an increased chance of contracting cancer in the future. The court also awarded plaintiffs damages representing the present value of the costs of future periodic medical monitoring to detect the onset of disease at the earliest possible time. The court also awarded damages for plaintiffs' psychiatric illness and the treatment of that illness, and damages for the general disruption of plaintiffs' lives and the invasion of their privacy. Finally, the court awarded punitive damages in the amount of $2.6 million, on the ground that Firestone's post-1977 dumping was conducted with conscious disregard of the rights and safety of others.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment with the exception of the award for future medical monitoring, which it reversed on the ground that plaintiffs had not established that cancer was reasonably certain to occur. The Supreme Court granted review, and reversed the judgment of the court of appeal to the extent that it affirmed the award of punitive damages and the award for plaintiffs' fear of cancer, and reversed the award for future medical monitoring. The Court remanded the cause to the court of appeal, permitting remand to the trial court for retrial.

The Court rejected Firestone's contention that damages for emotional distress can be recovered only if plaintiff has suffered a physical injury, noting that the physical injury requirement was rejected in favor of the requirement that a claim of mental distress in the absence of physical injury be supported by some guarantee of genuineness in the circumstances of the case (6 Cal. 4th 965, 987-988) . However, the Court rejected the court of appeal's standard for determining whether emotional distress damages based on a fear of cancer are available. The court of appeal required that the fear of cancer be objectively reasonable, that the trier of fact consider evidence regarding the likelihood that cancer will occur (permitting the trier of fact to conclude that a fear of a remote cancer is not reasonable), and that the fear is genuine. The Court held that although the plaintiff is required to establish the reasonableness of his or her fear of cancer, the mere fact of an exposure or a significant increase in the risk of cancer is not sufficient to establish reasonableness (6 Cal. 4th 965, 988-990) .

The Court held that a carcinogenic or other toxic ingestion or exposure, without more, does not provide a basis for fearing future physical injury or illness that the law is prepared to recognize as reasonable. Even a plaintiff's knowledge that his or her risk of cancer has been significantly increased by a toxic exposure, without requiring any further showing of the actual likelihood of the feared cancer due to the exposure, provides no protection against unreasonable claims based on wholly speculative fears (6 Cal. 4th 965, 990-997) . Thus, the Court concluded that the proper rule is that emotional distress caused by the fear of a cancer that is not probable should generally not be compensable in a negligence action. In the absence of a present physical injury or illness, damages for fear of cancer may be recovered only if the plaintiff pleads and proves that (1) as a result of the defendant's negligent breach of a duty owed to the plaintiff, the plaintiff is exposed to a toxic substance that threatens cancer; and (2) the plaintiff's fear stems from a knowledge, corroborated by reliable medical or scientific opinion, that it is more likely than not that the plaintiff will develop the cancer in the future due to the toxic exposure. Under this rule, the plaintiff must do more than simply establish knowledge of a toxic ingestion or exposure and a significant increased risk of cancer. The plaintiff must further show that based on reliable medical or scientific opinion, the plaintiff harbors a serious fear that the toxic ingestion or exposure was of such magnitude and proportion as to likely result in the feared cancer (6 Cal. 4th 965, 997) .

[a] Emotional Distress Damages Caused by Fear of Disease Absent Present Physical Injury or Illness Recoverable Only if Plaintiff Establishes That Future Disease Is More Likely Than Not

In Macy's Cal., Inc. v. Superior Court (1995) 41 Cal. App. 4th 744, 48 Cal. Rptr. 2d 496 , plaintiff brought an action against Macy's for emotional distress damages after she pricked her finger on a hypodermic needle in the pocket of a jacket that had been returned to Macy's by another customer. Plaintiff's emotional distress was based on her fear that she had contracted AIDS or another serious or lethal disease. Plaintiff admitted that she did not test positive for the HIV virus, and would stand only a 1 in 200,000 chance of contracting the virus from the needle if it was contaminated. Macy's moved for summary adjudication on the issue of emotional distress damages. The trial court denied this motion, stating that plaintiff could recover because she was within the area of physical risk and actually sustained a physical impact. The court of appeal noted that the policy considerations involved in imposing liability for emotional distress damages for fear of contracting a life-threatening disease were discussed in Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 990, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 . Under Potter, a plaintiff must show that it is more likely than not that the plaintiff will develop the life-threatening disease in order to recover. The court stated that the issue left open by Potter was what degree of physical injury is required for parasitic recovery of emotional distress damages for fear of disease (41 Cal. App. 4th 744, 752) . The court disagreed with the trial court reasoning, holding that the issue was not whether the plaintiff was in the area of physical risk or sustained a physical impact, but rather whether the plaintiff sustained physical injury, meaning detrimental change to the body (41 Cal. App. 4th 744, 757) . The court ruled that Macy's had the burden of proof on its motion, and that it satisfied this burden by presenting evidence that plaintiff did not test positive for HIV. Since plaintiff could meet neither the Potter "more likely than not" test, nor the requirement of a physical injury for purposes of parasitic recovery of emotional distress damages, Macy's was entitled to summary adjudication. The court thus issued a peremptory writ directing the trial court to vacate its order denying summary adjudication and to enter a new order granting the motion.

PLAINTIFF IS NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER DAMAGES FOR NEGLIGENTLY INFLICTED EMOTIONAL DISTRESS STEMMING FROM PLAINTIFF'S FEAR FOR HIS/HER OWN SAFETY BECAUSE PLAINTIFF HAS FAILED TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT OWED PLAINTIFF A LEGAL DUTY TO AVOID CAUSING PLAINTIFF TO EXPERIENCE EMOTIONAL DISTRESS UNDER THE FACTUAL CIRCUMSTANCES OF THE CASE.

Plaintiff Seeking Mental Distress Damages for Fear of Own Safety Must Establish That Defendant Owed Plaintiff Legal Duty of Care. The negligent infliction of emotional distress is simply one application of the tort of negligence, and to recover for the negligent infliction of the emotional distress caused when fearing for one's own safety, as in all negligence cases, the plaintiff must show that the defendant owed the plaintiff a legal duty of care under the particular facts of the case (Lawson v. Management Activities, Inc. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 657, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745).

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a demurrer to a complaint that alleges that plaintiff can recover for the negligent infliction of emotional distress suffered when defendant's actions caused plaintiff to fear for his or her own safety. The grounds for the demurrer are that plaintiff has failed to show that defendant owed plaintiff a legal duty of care to avoid causing this emotional distress.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that the defendant did not owe a legal duty of care to plaintiff under the traditional factors set out in Rowland v. Christian (1968) 69 Cal. 2d 108, 70 Cal. Rptr. 97, 443 P.2d 561 . Those factors include the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff has been injured, the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant, and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, and the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved [Lawson v. Management Activities, Inc. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 657, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Plaintiff Seeking Mental Distress Damages for Fear of Own Safety Must Establish That Defendant Owed Plaintiff Legal Duty of Care

In Lawson v. Management Activities, Inc. (1999) 69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 81 Cal. Rptr. 2d 745 , plaintiffs were a group of employees at a car dealership who watched a corporate jet crash nearby. Plaintiffs filed an action to recover from the owners and operators of the jet for the "serious, substantial, and enduring mental anguish" they suffered when they momentarily feared that the jet would crash into them or that they would suffer injury from the resulting explosion. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend. Plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Declining to pigeonhole the case as either one for "bystander" liability or "direct victim" liability, as court opinions have tended to do with cases involving the negligent infliction of emotional distress, the court of appeal stressed that negligent infliction of emotional distress is not a separate tort from negligence, but simply one application of negligence principles. Thus, in order to state a claim for negligently inflicted emotional distress, plaintiffs must establish the traditional negligence elements of duty, breach, damages, and causation. In order to establish that a legal duty of care was owed to plaintiffs under the circumstances, a court must analyze the particular facts of the case under the factors traditionally used to determine whether a duty of care existed. Those factors include the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff has been injured, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered, the moral blame attached to defendant's conduct, the policy of preventing future harm, the extent of the burden to the defendant, and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty to exercise care with resulting liability for breach, as well as the availability, cost, and prevalence of insurance for the risk involved (69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 656-657) .

Applying those factors to the factual circumstances of a plane crash, the court held that the operator of an airline did not have a legal duty to avoid the infliction of emotional trauma on physically untouched spectators of a plane crash, even those spectators who momentarily reasonably feared for their own safety. The court concluded that, while foreseeability and the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury suffered might support the imposition of liability, the other factors, including the relative lack of moral blame and the lack of need for additional incentive to prevent plane crashes, weighed heavily against imposing a duty of care (69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 657-660) .

The court, disagreeing with the Ninth Circuit's holding in In re Air Crash Disaster Near Cerritos, Cal. (9th Cir. 1992) 973 F.2d 1490 , rejected the broad proposition that California law allows recovery for emotional distress whenever one reasonably fears for one's own safety because of the negligence of another, regardless of the factual context (69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 660-661) . The court also distinguished earlier cases that had established a rule permitting recovery for emotional distress stemming from fear for one's own safety triggered in a bystander by a negligent automobile driver. The court noted that, unlike the constant concern with the safety of bystanders that may be associated with ground travel, the safety of bystanders in air travel is usually irrelevant and only arises when a crash is about to occur (69 Cal. App. 4th 652, 667-668) .

AN ALLEGATION OF OUTRAGEOUS CONDUCT IS SUFFICIENT TO WITHSTAND A DEMURRER IF REASONABLE PERSONS MIGHT DIFFER AS TO WHETHER THE CONDUCT WAS SUFFICIENTLY EXTREME AND OUTRAGEOUS.

A. Jury Question Where Reasonable Persons Differ. Where reasonable persons might differ, it is for the jury to determine whether the conduct was sufficiently extreme and outrageous to result in liability for the intentional infliction of mental distress (Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1123, 252 Cal. Rptr. 122, 762 P.2d 46 ; Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 308-309, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577).

[Optional] B. Relationship of Parties. The relationship between the parties is significant in determining whether the conduct was outrageous (Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 498, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216).

[Optional] C. Abuse of Authority. The extreme and outrageous character of the conduct may arise from an abuse of a position or a relation which gives actual or apparent authority or power to affect the interests of the plaintiff, as in the case of police officers, school authorities, and collecting creditors (Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 303 n.5, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577).

[Optional] D. Abuse of Trust. Those in a relation or position that gives them power to damage another's interest may act outrageously when they breach the trust of those whose lives they promised to make more meaningful. For example, a religious organization that misrepresented and concealed its identity in order to induce unsuspecting outsiders into a highly structured environment where they were subjected, without their knowledge or consent, to coercive persuasion, may have acted outrageously (Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1122, 252 Cal. Rptr. 122, 762 P.2d 46).

[Optional] E. Relationship of Insurer-Insured. An insurer has a special relationship to its insured and has special implied-in-law duties toward the insured that must be considered in determining whether conduct is sufficiently outrageous to impose liability (Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 403-404, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78).

[Optional] F. Relationship of Landlord-Tenant. A landlord has a special relationship with his/her tenant that must be considered in determining whether conduct is sufficiently outrageous to impose liability (see Aweeka v. Bonds (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 278, 281-282, 97 Cal. Rptr. 650).

[Optional] G. Relationship of Employer-Employee. An employee is entitled to a greater degree of protection from insult and outrage by his/her employer than if he/she were a stranger (Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 498, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216).

[Optional] H. Special Susceptibility to Emotional Distress. A defendant's awareness of a plaintiff's special susceptibility to emotional distress is significant in determining whether the conduct was outrageous (Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 498, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216).

[Optional] I. Insulting Language With Aggravated Circumstances. Aggravated circumstances can make mere insulting language a sufficient basis for a cause of action (Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 499, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216).

[Optional] J. Words That Result in Physical Injury. Where mere words, oral or written, result in physical injury to another, they are actionable under the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress as long as the act is intentional, it is unreasonable, and the actor should recognize it as likely to result in illness (Bowden v. Spiegel, Inc. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 793, 794-795, 216 P.2d 571).

[Optional] K. Intentional or Unreasonable Acts Likely to Cause Illness. Behavior may be considered outrageous if a defendant acts intentionally or unreasonably with the recognition that the acts are likely to result in illness through mental distress (Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 288, 297, 131 Cal. Rptr. 547).

[Optional] L. Verbal Threats and Intimidation. Verbal threats and intimidation made in the course of an investigation, which are designed to prevent plaintiff from "going public" with concerns about the investigation, constitute a sufficient allegation of extreme and outrageous conduct (Sabow v. United States (9th Cir. 1996) 93 F.3d 1445, 1456) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for intentional infliction of mental distress where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege facts showing that the defendant's conduct was outrageous but where the facts are such that reasonable persons could differ on the question.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the point of law raised.

[b] Exclusive Remedy of Workers' Compensation

The exclusive remedy provisions of the workers' compensation law [Lab. Code §§ 3601, 3602] bar actions for intentional infliction of emotional distress arising from an employee-employer relationship [see § 153.40[1], Optional Paragraph G] if the misconduct attributed to the employer involves actions that are a normal part of the employment relationship, such as demotions, promotions, criticism of work practices, and frictions in negotiations regarding grievances [see Cole v. Fair Oaks Fire Prot. Dist. (1987) 43 Cal. 3d 148, 160, 233 Cal. Rptr. 308, 729 P.2d 743] . For further discussion of this issue, see Ch. 239, Workers' Compensation Exclusive Remedy Doctrine .

[c] Related Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 153.20.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Jury Question Where Reasonable Persons Differ

In Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, filed separate actions against common defendants. Each alleged a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained defendants' demurrers to these causes of action. The conduct on which the complaints were based consisted of the action of the defendants' agent in pounding on the front door of plaintiffs' home at night when the house was darkened in an attempt to serve process on plaintiff husband. The house had a functioning doorbell but the agent did not use this. No other attempt at service had been made and defendants had no reason to believe service of process could not be made at a reasonable time and in a reasonable manner. The loud pounding awakened plaintiffs and their family and the neighborhood. The court of appeal reversed, holding that each plaintiff had alleged a cause of action to recover for the intentional infliction of emotional distress. One of the points on appeal was whether unnecessary pounding on the front door of a darkened house at midnight in a loud and boisterous manner, which awakened not only the occupants but also the neighborhood, could be considered extreme and outrageous conduct. The court noted that liability does not extend to mere insults, indignities, threats, annoyances, petty oppressions, or other trivialities. However, where reasonable persons may differ, it is for the jury, subject to the control of the court, to determine whether the conduct in a particular case has been sufficiently extreme and outrageous to result in liability. Thus, the judgments of dismissal were improper and the trial court was instructed to overrule the demurrers.

[b] Relationship of Parties

In Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 , plaintiff brought an action for damages based on the intentional infliction of emotional distress and violation of the Unruh Civil Rights Act. The trial court entered an order of dismissal after defendants' demurrer to the third amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. Plaintiff was a black, employed as a truck driver by defendant corporation. Plaintiff, in his capacity as shop steward for the Teamster's Union, informed his foreman, another defendant, that plaintiff had advised another employee that he should not drive a certain truck to the job site since that employee was not a teamster. Plaintiff's remarks to the foreman were not rude, insubordinate, or otherwise violative of plaintiff's duties as an employee. The foreman shouted at plaintiff in a rude, violent, and insolent manner, calling him a "nigger," and telling him to get his pay check since he was fired. Plaintiff reported the incident to the corporation's secretary, another defendant, who ratified and confirmed the foreman's acts, including plaintiff's discharge, on behalf of the corporation and the other defendants. As a result of the incident, plaintiff allegedly suffered humiliation, mental anguish, and emotional and physical distress. He was sick and ill for several weeks thereafter, was unable to work, and sustained shock, nausea, and insomnia. Plaintiff alleged that the foreman's conduct was intentional and malicious, and that the secretary's conduct was done intentionally or with a wanton and reckless disregard of the consequences to plaintiff. Plaintiff also alleged that blacks are particularly susceptible to emotional and physical distress from conduct such as committed by defendants. At the time of the action, plaintiff was reinstated in his job through grievance and arbitration procedures and had received back pay. The Supreme Court held that plaintiff had leaded a situation in which reasonable persons might differ regarding defendants' liability and that the order of dismissal should, therefore, be reversed as to the cause of action for intentional infliction of mental distress. The court noted that defendants stood in a position or relation of authority over plaintiff. The cases and commentators have emphasized the significance of the relationship between the parties in determining whether liability should be im posed. Plaintiff's status as an employee should entitle him to a greater degree of protection from insult and outrage than if he were a stranger to defendants.

[c] Abuse of Authority

The factual background of Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][a]. Defendants argued that there was no special relationship between the parties that was abused. Plaintiffs, however, did not accede to the proposition that the relationship of defendants to plaintiff husband was immaterial. The conduct was the result of actions designed and intended by those claiming damages from plaintiff husband in a lawsuit, and the immediate actor was proceeding under color of process issued in that lawsuit. Plaintiffs cited Bowden v. Spiegel, Inc. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 793, 216 P.2d 571 , in which the malicious conduct of an agent of a creditor was held to spell out a cause of action. The court noted the position of the Restatement (Second) of Torts that the extreme and outrageous character of conduct may arise from an abuse of a position or a relation with the plaintiff, which gives the defendant actual or apparent authority over the plaintiff, or power to affect his or her interest. As examples, police officers, school authorities, and collecting creditors have been held liable for extreme abuse of their position.

[d] Abuse of Trust

In Molko v. Holy Spirit Assn. (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 1092, 252 Cal. Rptr. 122, 762 P.2d 46 , plaintiffs, former members of defendant Unification Church, had initially been recruited by specific members of defendant through invitations to socialize and then to visit a farm for relaxation. Both plaintiffs repeatedly asked whether the group had any religious affiliation and were told no. While at the farm plaintiffs led strictly regimented and isolated lives, and were strongly discouraged from leaving. After some time, plaintiffs were informed that the group was part of the Unification Church. Plaintiffs remained with the group and became members of defendant. Later plaintiffs were on separate occasions forcibly abducted from a public street by third parties and deprogrammed. Plaintiffs then filed an action against defendant, alleging they had been fraudulently induced to join defendant through a variety of deceptive tactics on the part of some of its members. Each plaintiff asserted several causes of action, among them intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court granted summary judgment for defendant on all causes of action. Plaintiffs appealed. The court of appeal affirmed the summary judgment. Plaintiffs petitioned the State Supreme Court for review.

The California Supreme Court reversed the summary judgment for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs contended that the misrepresentation and concealment of defendant's identity for the purpose of inducing them to submit unknowingly to coercive persuasion was actionable as intentional infliction of emotional distress (46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1120) . The Court found that the imposition of tort liability against defendant church is constitutionally permissible in that it does not interfere with the free exercise of religion [see Ch. 105, Fraud and Deceit]. However, the Court specifically distinguished defendant's threats of divine retribution if plaintiffs left the church as protected religious speech that could not form the basis of a claim for intentional infliction of mental distress (46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1120) . The Court rejected defendant's contention that the misrepresentations were privileged under former Civ. Code § 47(3) [now see Civ. Code § 47(c)] as communications without malice, to an interested person by an interested person, because the communications were not from one interested party to another. The Court also rejected defendant's attempt to characterize one plaintiff's harms as self-inflicted. That plaintiff had sold flowers on the streets for 17 hours a day for 19 consecutive days. The Court said plaintiff's statement reflected not consent, but mere submission (46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1121) . The Court observed that defendant did not attempt to negate (1) its intention to cause, or its reckless disregard of the probability of causing, emotional distress, (2) plaintiffs' severe emotional suffering, or (3) its conduct's actual and proximate causation of that suffering. It said that to be entitled to summary judgment defendant must conclusively negate at least one necessary element of the cause of action, and therefore, defendant had to establish as a matter of law that its conduct was not extreme and outrageous in the sense required to support an action for emotional distress (46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1121-1122) . The Court explained that conduct is extreme and outrageous when it exceeds all bounds usually tolerated by a decent society, and is of a nature that is especially calculated to cause, and does cause, mental distress. Liability does not extend to mere insults, indignities, threats, annoyances, petty oppressions, or other trivialities. Behavior may be outrageous if a defendant (1) abuses a relation or position that gives him or her power to damage the plaintiff's interest, (2) knows the plaintiff is susceptible to injuries through mental distress, or (3) acts intentionally or unreasonably with the recognition that the acts are likely to result in illness through mental distress. The Court rejected both of defendant's arguments why its conduct was not, as a matter of law, extreme and outrageous. First, the Court noted that fraud, even though purportedly religiously motivated, is actionable conduct. Thus, defendant's contention that its actions were nothing more than intensive religious practice differing only in degree, not in kind, from those of many other religious groups was not convincing. Second, the Court said that the harmful behavior defendant argued was self-inflicted occurred after plaintiff had formally joined defendant, and had no bearing on whether its original fraudulent inducement into an atmosphere of coercive persuasion is extreme and outrageous. The Court noted that defendant's continued deceptions could be seen as conduct breaching plaintiffs' trust in the integrity of those who were promising to make their lives more meaningful. So viewed, defendant's actions might constitute an abuse of a relation or position that gives it power to damage plaintiffs' interest (46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1122) . The Court explained that when reasonable persons differ, it is for the jury, subject to the control of the court, to determine whether, in the particular case, the conduct has been sufficiently extreme and outrageous to result in liability. Since reasonable persons could differ ere, a question of fact remains regarding whether defendant's conduct was outrageous (46 Cal. 3d 1092, 1123) .

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. In affirming the judgment and holding that plaintiff had stated a case for emotional infliction of mental distress, the court noted that cases and commentators have emphasized the significance of the relationship between the parties in determining whether liability should be imposed. The court added that the special obligation of public utilities and other enterprises affected with the public interest is also considered significant in the imposition of liability on such defendants even in the absence of outrageous conduct, and reasoned that such an imposition of liability was based on a policy of encouraging fair treatment of the public whom the enterprises serve. The court found that both of these considerations were pertinent in the case before it. The insurance business is governmentally regulated to a substantial degree and is, thus, affected with a public interest and offers services of a quasi-public nature. In addition, an insurer has a special relationship to its insured and has special implied-in-law duties toward the insured. In observing that this special relationship and these special duties take cognizance both of the great disparity in the economic situations and bargaining abilities of the insurer and the insured and of the fact that an insured does not contract to obtain a commercial advantage but to protect himself or herself from the risks of accidental loss, the court found that the considerations noted above were particularly cogent in disability insurance since the very risks insured against presuppose that if and when a claim is made, the insured will be disabled and in strait financial circumstance, and, therefore, particularly vulnerable to oppressive tactics on the part of an economically powerful entity.

[f] Relationship of Landlord-Tenant

In Aweeka v. Bonds (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 278, 97 Cal. Rptr. 650 , the tenant plaintiffs attempted to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of mental distress, among others. The trial court sustained without leave to amend the landlords' demurrer to their amended complaint and entered a judgment of dismissal. Plaintiffs had notified defendants of the need for repairs in their apartment on numerous occasions and the defendants repeatedly refused to repair any of the conditions. Plaintiffs indicated their intention to exercise the right to repair and deduct under Civ. Code §§ 1941 and 1942. Defendants then almost doubled the amount of rent that constituted an actual eviction since plaintiffs were unable to pay the increased rental. The court of appeal held that the complaint alleged a cause of action for intentional infliction of mental distress. The court cited Richardson v. Pridmore (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 124, 217 P.2d 113 , which stated that an eviction could be unlawful and actionable even though not accompanied with threat, violence, or abusive language. The court also pointed out that Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 , had stressed the significance of the relationship between the parties in determining whether liability should be imposed and that the authorities indicate that landlords have been held liable for abuse of their position.

[g] Relationship of Employer-Employee

Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][b].

[h] Special Susceptibility to Emotional Distress

The factual background of Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][b]. According to plaintiff, defendants were aware of his particular susceptibility to emotional distress. Such susceptibility has often been mentioned as significant in determining liability. Blacks may be particularly susceptible to severe emotional distress from discriminatory conduct or the use of racial epithets. Plaintiff's own susceptibility to racial slurs and other discriminatory conduct is a question for the trier of fact, and cannot be determined on demurrer.

[i] Insulting Language With Aggravated Circumstances

Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 498, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][b].

[j] Words That Result in Physical Injury

In Bowden v. Spiegel, Inc. (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 793, 216 P.2d 571 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries based on the intentional infliction of mental distress. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the first amended complaint without leave to amend and entered judgment for defendant. Defendant corporation operated several retail stores. Defendant First Doe as agent of the corporate defendant telephoned the home of a neighbor of plaintiff at 11:00 P.M. and asked for her. The neighbor asked if it was an emergency and the agent replied that it was. The neighbor walked down the street to plaintiff's home and told her there was an emergency telephone call for her. When the plaintiff reached the telephone the agent asked her to bear up as what he was going to tell her was going to be a shock. He then proceeded to demand payment of a bill and threatened to take her into court unless she came into the store the next morning at ten. The entire neighbor family listened to plaintiff's end of the conversation. Plaintiff did not owe the company any money. As a result of this action, plaintiff became ill. On appeal, the court of appeal reversed with directions to overrule the demurrer. The court noted that given the elements that the act is intentional, that it is unreasonable, and that the actor should recognize it as likely to result in illness, the modern cases recognize that mere words, oral or written, which result in physical injury to another are actionable. Once the wrongful quality is established, it does not matter whether the conduct consisted of acts alone, or of acts accompanied by words, or of mere spoken words alone. The nature of the wrongful conduct that induces physical harm through its effect on the mind and nervous system is generally immaterial.

[k] Intentional or Unreasonable Acts Likely to Cause Illness

Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 288, 131 Cal. Rptr. 547 , was an action for declaratory relief, an injunction, and damages in connection with alleged threats by defendants to evict plaintiff from her apartment. Plaintiff and other tenants organized a tenants' meeting after defendants had announced a rent increase. Defendants attended the meeting after receiving a petition which had been signed by plaintiff and other tenants requesting their presence. At this meeting, one defendant called plaintiff a troublemaker, accused her of upsetting the other tenants, and then gave her a three-day eviction notice. When plaintiff refused to vacate, a second defendant stated that the situation would be dealt with as it was dealt with down south, and, thereafter, plaintiff received a 30-day eviction notice. However, at the time of trial, plaintiff was still occupying her apartment. After plaintiff presented evidence at trial on her causes of action, one of which included damages for intentional infliction of mental distress, defendant moved for a judgment of nonsuit on the jury causes of action and a judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 631.8 on the other causes of action. The trial court granted both motions, and from the entry of judgment on all causes of action in favor of defendants, plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed as to the causes of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress and in all other respects affirmed. The court of appeal held that with respect to this cause of action, plaintiff had presented substantial evidence that defendants' actions were outrageous and caused plaintiff to suffer fear, worry, anxiety, and sleeplessness. The court stated that, with respect to the sufficiency of the evidence concerning defendants' outrageous conduct, although earlier decisions and the Restatement of Torts emphasized the need to look for more in the way of outrage as a guarantee that he claims were genuine when bodily harm did not accompany the emotional distress, latter decisions have permitted pleading and proof of less outrageous conduct [see Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 ; see also § 153.40[3][a]]. The court found that the modern rule is that there is liability for conduct exceeding all bounds usually tolerated by a decent society, of a nature which is especially calculated to cause and does cause mental distress. Relying on the Restatement (Second) of Torts, the court stated that behavior may be considered outrageous if a defendant abuses a relation or position that gives him or her power to damage the plaintiff's interest or acts intentionally or unreasonably with the recognition that the acts are likely to result in illness through mental distress. The court found substantial evidence in the entire course of defendants' conduct that defendants' behavior was outrageous in that they acted knowingly and unreasonably with the intention to inflict emotional distress and abused the special relationship between landlords and tenants.

[l] Verbal Threats and Intimidation

In Sabow v. United States (9th Cir. 1996) 93 F.3d 1445 , the family of a deceased Marine Corps Colonel sued the federal government for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs alleged that at a meeting held six weeks after the Colonel's death, a senior military investigator "continually, repeatedly and adamantly stated that decedent had killed himself due to serious allegations of misconduct against him," referred to decedent as a "crook and felon who had committed serious violations of the Uniform Code of Military Justice," and became furious and began screaming at plaintiffs in response to their questions regarding the investigation. The district court dismissed the emotional distress count for failure to state a claim.

The Ninth Circuit Court of Appeal reversed, holding that the allegations, if true, described extreme and outrageous conduct directed at plaintiffs and comprised a claim for intentional infliction under California law. The court found the conduct particularly outrageous given that it allegedly was designed to prevent plaintiffs from going public with their concerns about the investigation. Similarly, the court determined that the senior officer's use of illegitimate means (instructing military personnel to investigate ways in which plaintiff's medical license could be revoked) to fulfill impermissible ends (to silence plaintiff's criticism and prevent further inquiries about the military's investigation), also supported a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress (93 F.3d 1445, 1456) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Jury Question Where Reasonable Persons Differ

The factual background of Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][b]. The court noted that plaintiff at least pleaded a situation in which reasonable persons might differ regarding defendants' liability. Thus, the order of dismissal was reversed as to the cause of action for intentional infliction of mental distress.

In Cross v. Bonded Adjustment Bureau (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 801 , plaintiff sued a collection agency for causing plaintiff to lose a lien priority on the property of a judgment debtor. Defendant filed a demurrer to the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, contending that its conduct was not outrageous. The trial court sustained the demurrer, and plaintiff appealed. The court of appeal reversed noting that where reasonable persons may differ, it is for the jury to determine whether the conduct has been sufficiently extreme and outrageous to result in liability. Finding that the parties were in a fiduciary relationship, so that defendant was in a position of power to adversely affect plaintiff's interests, the court concluded that reasonable minds could differ as to whether defendant's conduct was sufficiently extreme and outrageous (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 284) .

[b] Relationship of Parties

In Cross v. Bonded Adjustment Bureau (1996) 48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 55 Cal. Rptr. 2d 801 , plaintiff sued a collection agency for intentional infliction of emotional distress, for causing plaintiff to lose a lien priority on the property of a judgment debtor. Plaintiff had hired defendant to collect on a judgment, and defendant had failed to record a certified copy of a renewal application in the county where the judgment debtor's property was located. Defendant filed a demurrer, contending that there was no fiduciary relationship between the parties, and that its conduct was not outrageous. The trial court sustained the demurrer. The court of appeal reversed, initially noting that the relationship between a collection agency and a judgment creditor is fiduciary in nature (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 276) . The court then stated that the outrageous character of conduct may arise from an abuse by a party in a position to have actual or apparent authority over another. Given the fiduciary nature of the parties' relationship, the court concluded that it could not say that plaintiff failed to allege outrageous conduct as a matter of law (48 Cal. App. 4th 266, 283) .

[c] Abuse of Authority

In Wallis v. Superior Court (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 207 Cal. Rptr. 123 , plaintiff, a former employee of real party in interest, defendant furniture manufacturing corporation, brought an action against defendant for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiff alleged that, at age 55, he was permanently laid off by defendant, ineligible for receipt of his accrued pension benefits until age 65, and lacking in work skills outside furniture manufacture. Prior to his layoff, plaintiff entered into a written agreement with defendant whereby defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a specified sum monthly until plaintiff reached age 65, in return for plaintiff's promise not to compete with defendant's business. Defendant subsequently terminated the payments. The court of appeal held that plaintiff had alleged facts sufficient to show outrageous conduct since plaintiff alleged that defendant intentionally abused its position of financial control over him by terminating the payments without good reason, lied about its reasons for doing so, knew of plaintiff's vulnerable employment and economic position, and intended to cause him harm, as a result of which he suffered emotional distress (160 Cal. App. 3d 1109, 1120) .

[d] Relationship of Insurer-Insured

In Hailey v. California Physicians' Service (2007) 158 Cal. App. 4th 452 , plaintiffs sued their health insurer for intentional infliction of emotional distress, breach of contract, and bad faith after the insurer sought to rescind the policy after one of the plaintiffs suffered severe injuries in an automobile accident. Although the insurer learned of alleged misrepresentations in the original insurance application in February 2001, the insurer did not notify plaintiffs that they were rescinding the policy because of these alleged misrepresentations until June 1, 2001. In the interim, the automobile accident occurred on March 19, 2001, and the insurer had authorized health care providers to provide surgery and other treatment in an amount exceeding $450,000. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer to the cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, but the court of appeal concluded that plaintiffs had adequately stated a claim and reversed. The court noted that, while the health insurance company may have been within its rights to seek rescission of the policy based on alleged misrepresentations in the policy application, the insurance company acted in an outrageous manner if it obtained the knowledge necessary to justify rescission but waited until after the insured had suffered a serious injury requiring substantial medical treatment before seeking to rescind. By waiting until an injury is sustained, the insurer not only risked liability for bad faith, but sought rescission at a time when the insured was known to be peculiarly susceptible to emotional distress (158 Cal. App. 4th 452, 475-476) .

[e] Relationship of Landlord-Tenant

In Stoiber v. Honeychuck (1980) 101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 162 Cal. Rptr. 194 , the court of appeal overruled a demurrer in favor of defendant landlord, holding in part that the availability of a remedy for breach of the implied warranty of habitability does not preclude a tenant from suing a landlord in a situation where the landlord's conduct was extreme and outrageous, resulting in severe emotional distress. Where the landlord allegedly refused to correct defective and unsafe conditions, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the tenant has not stated a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress (101 Cal. App. 3d 903, 922) .

Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 288, 131 Cal. Rptr. 547 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][k].

[f] Relationship of Employer-Employee

In Prevost v. First W. Bank (1987) 193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 239 Cal. Rptr. 161 , plaintiff, a bank employee, alleged that he was wrongfully and in bad faith terminated from his employment because he supported the losing party in an internal power struggle. He also alleged that he was libeled by a communication made by the employer-bank to its bonding company in which it was alleged that the employee might have committed a crime. Plaintiff also included causes of action for intentional and negligent infliction of emotional distress. In reversing summary judgment for the bank on the infliction of emotional distress causes of action, the court of appeal noted the rule that conduct may be considered outrageous if a defendant abuses a position that gives it the power to damage plaintiff's interest (193 Cal. App. 3d 1492, 1503-1504) .

NOTE:

Although the court in Prevost did not distinguish among defendant's alleged acts so as to indicate exactly what behavior might be considered to be outrageous, its decision may, by implication, stand for the proposition that a bad-faith wrongful termination of an employment contract constitutes an outrageous act sufficient to state a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress because of the potentially coercive employment relationship.

In Lagies v. Copley (1980) 110 Cal. App. 3d 958, 168 Cal. Rptr. 368 , plaintiff, a newspaper reporter, brought an action for damages against defendants, his employer and certain coemployees, alleging, in part, a conspiracy to intentionally inflict emotional distress on plaintiff. Plaintiff had alleged that defendants, standing in a position of authority over him, and for the purpose of causing him to suffer such distress, had intentionally humiliated plaintiff, refused to print his stories, singled him out for denial of merit raises, demoted him, blackballed him (thus precluding other employment), and published plaintiff's confidential sources (thus destroying his credibility as an investigative reporter), all without just cause or provocation. The trial court entered a judgment of dismissal after sustaining a demurrer to this cause of action. The court of appeal reversed. After reviewing prior California cases, including Alcorn v. Anbro Eng'g, Inc. (1970) 2 Cal. 3d 493, 498, 86 Cal. Rptr. 88, 468 P.2d 216 [see § 153.40[3][b]], the court concluded that plaintiff had alleged facts and circumstances that reasonably could lead the trier of fact to conclude that defendants' conduct was extreme and outrageous, having a severe and traumatic effect on plaintiff's emotional tranquility. The court noted that plaintiff's pleadings had charged more than mere insulting language or supervision of job activities; an abuse of the employer-employee relationship with intent to damage plaintiff was the ultimate fact pleaded. The court held that these aggravated circumstances alleged by plaintiff were sufficient to uphold his complaint as against defendants' general demurrer (110 Cal. App. 3d 958, 974) .

[g] Special Susceptibility to Emotional Distress

In KOVR-TV v. Superior Court (1995) 31 Cal. App. 4th 1023, 37 Cal. Rptr. 2d 431 , three children sued a television reporter and the station that employed him, for intentional infliction of emotional distress. Plaintiffs' complaint alleged that, with knowledge that no adult was present and with the camera rolling, the reporter interrogated the children about the murder of two children who lived next door by their mother. At the time, the children were unaware of the deaths of their friends and neighbors. The complaint alleged that the reporter informed the children that the mother had killed her children and then herself, "conveying this information in such a manner as to cause the children emotional distress so that their visible emotional distress would be demonstrative to the TV audience." Defendants moved for summary judgment, arguing as a matter of law that the conduct of the interview, and particularly the manner of informing the children of the tragic deaths of the neighbors, were not such extreme and outrageous acts as would support liability for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court denied the summary judgment motion, stating that whether or not defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous was a triable issue of fact, and that the videotape indicated a triable controversy existed. Defendants sought a writ of mandate directing the superior court to vacate its denial of their motion for summary judgment and to grant the motion.

The court of appeal ruled that the trial court properly denied defendant's motion (31 Cal. App. 4th 1023, 1026) . The court focused on the issues of whether the defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous, and whether defendant had either the intention of causing, or reckless disregard of the probability of causing, emotional distress. To be outrageous, conduct must be so extreme as to exceed all bounds of that usually tolerated in a civilized community. According to the court, the videotaped interview revealed an uninvited, intrusive encounter by adult strangers with children of tender years not in a public place, but in their home. A jury could conclude these facts revealed an alarming absence of sensitivity and civility (31 Cal. App. 4th 1023, 1030) . The court further concluded that a jury could find that a television reporter who attempts deliberately to manipulate the emotions of young children for some perceived journalistic advantage has engaged in conduct so outrageous in character, and so extreme in degree, as to go beyond all possible bounds of decency. Given that possible interpretation, defendants failed to negative the existence of a material triable issue of fact with regard to plaintiffs' allegations of extreme and outrageous conduct. The court was unpersuaded by defendant's argument regarding the fact that they did not ultimately broadcast the interview. Although the record did not reveal why the interview was not broadcast, the court determined that no reason would negative the childrens' allegations that defendant's conduct was extreme and outrageous (31 Cal. App. 4th 1023, 1031) .

In Katsaris v. Cook (1986) 180 Cal. App. 3d 256, 225 Cal. Rptr. 531 , plaintiff's dogs were shot without his knowledge by the defendant neighbors' employee for allegedly disturbing livestock on the property. For 10 days, plaintiff attempted to find the dogs and asked defendants several times if they had seen them or knew where the dogs were. When plaintiff finally found the dogs after 10 days and discovered what had happened, he brought actions for damages, negligence, and intentional infliction of emotional distress against defendants. The trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment, holding that Food & Agric. Code § 31103, which provides that dogs entering property where livestock are confined may be killed, precluded recovery on all three claims. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment on the damages and negligence claims but reversed on the emotional distress claim. The court held that plaintiff could bring an action based on the neighbor's denial of any knowledge of the dogs and on plaintiff's special susceptibility to emotional distress and anxiety caused by not knowing what had happened to his dogs and where they were (180 Cal. App. 3d 256, 267-269) .

The factual background of Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][a]. The court cited the Restatement (Second) of Torts, which provided that the extreme and outrageous character of conduct may arise from the knowledge that plaintiff is peculiarly susceptible to emotional distress, by reason of some physical or mental condition or peculiarity. Where there is such knowledge, conduct that would otherwise not be outrageous may become so.

AN ALLEGATION THAT THE CONDUCT OF DEFENDANT WHICH CAUSED PLAINTIFF SEVERE EMOTIONAL DISTRESS WAS DONE WITH THE INTENT TO CAUSE SUCH HARM TO PLAINTIFF IS A SUFFICIENT ALLEGATION OF INTENTIONAL CONDUCT.

Allegation of Intent to Cause Emotional Distress as Sufficient. A complaint for intentional infliction of emotional distress which is otherwise sufficient need not allege that the defendant knew or should have known of the plaintiff's existence and knew that his/her conduct would cause emotional harm to the plaintiff in order sufficiently to allege intentional conduct on the part of defendant. It is sufficient to allege that the act was done with the intent to cause emotional harm to plaintiff (Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 588, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for intentional infliction of mental distress where the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to allege facts showing that the defendant intended to cause the plaintiff emotional distress but where the complaint alleges that the act or conduct in question was done with the intent to cause such distress.

Where appropriate, counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 153.21.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Allegation of Intent to Cause Emotional Distress as Sufficient

Vescovo v. New Way Enters., Ltd. (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 582, 130 Cal. Rptr. 86 , involved an advertisement placed in defendant newspaper which gave plaintiffs' address, and stated in essence that plaintiff wife was available for sexual activity. In their complaint, plaintiffs alleged that neither the wife nor anyone acting on her behalf gave permission to defendants to publish the advertisement. Following the appearance of the advertisement, the wife received numerous letters soliciting her to perform immoral and criminal acts, over 100 persons wrongfully entered on plaintiffs' property creating disturbances and using lewd and threatening language, and over 150 motor vehicles cruised by plaintiffs' house creating a number of disturbances. Plaintiffs set forth 10 causes of action, one of which was for the intentional infliction of emotional distress to plaintiff daughter. The allegations concerning this cause of action were that defendants published the advertisement with intent to injure, disgrace, and cause great mental distress and anguish to the daughter. Defendants demurred to this cause of action, as well as to certain other causes of action alleged in the complaint. The trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend, and, on entry of a judgment of dismissal, plaintiffs appealed. Plaintiffs contended that, with respect to their cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress, they had sufficiently alleged intentional conduct on defendants' part. Defendants argued, however, that there must be a direct allegation that they were aware of the daughter's existence or should have recognized a danger of harm to her from the conduct toward the wife. The court of appeal agreed with plaintiffs and reversed the judgment of dismissal as to this cause of action. The court stated that, although it would have been preferable for plaintiffs to allege in the manner for which defendants had argued, it was sufficient to allege that the act was done with the intent to case emotional harm to the daughter since it was not the function of the court at this stage of the action to determine whether plaintiffs would be able to prove that defendants acted intentionally toward the daughter.

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities in § 153.25.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Causation as Question of Fact When Conflicting Inferences Can Be Drawn

In Tate v. Canonica (1960) 180 Cal. App. 2d 898, 5 Cal. Rptr. 28 , the plaintiffs were the widow and children of a person who had been subjected to threats and accusations for the purpose of harassing, embarrassing, and humiliating him. They brought an action for wrongful death resulting from the intentional infliction of mental distress. The trial court entered a judgment against the plaintiffs after an order sustaining a demurrer to their complaint without leave to amend. The court of appeal noted that the complaint was uncertain and ambiguous and thereby subject to a special demurrer but stated that the question was whether the complaint stated or could state a cause of action. The acts complained of were not done for the purpose of causing the deceased to commit suicide but it was alleged that they were done intentionally to cause him emotional distress and caused him to become physically and mentally disturbed, as a result of which the deceased took his life. The court noted that proximate cause is legal cause, as distinguished from the layman's notion of actual cause, and is always, in the first instance, a question of law. It becomes a question of fact when conflicting inferences or conclusions can be drawn from the evidence within the area of proximate cause as legally defined. Although earlier cases gave some support to the position that suicide is an independent intervening cause, thus breaking the chain of legal causation, the court held that in a case where the defendant intended, by his conduct, to cause serious mental distress or serious physical suffering, and does so, and such mental distress is shown by the evidence to be a substantial factor in bringing about a suicide, a cause of action for wrongful death results, whether the suicide was committed in a state of insanity, or in response to an irresistible impulse, or not. If the mental distress was caused by the negligence of a defendant, then the defendant can avoid liability if the decedent could, in spite of his mental illness, have decided against suicide and refrained from killing himself.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Causation as Question of Fact When Conflicting Inferences Can Be Drawn

In Golden v. Dungan (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 295, 97 Cal. Rptr. 577 , the plaintiffs, husband and wife, filed separate actions against common defendants. Each alleged a cause of action for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The trial court sustained the defendants' demurrers to these causes of action. The conduct on which the complaints were based consisted of the actions of the defendants' agent in pounding on the front door of the plaintiffs' home at night when the house was darkened in an attempt to serve process on the plaintiff husband. The house had a functioning doorbell but the agent did not use this. No other attempt at service had been made and the defendants had no reason to believe service of process could not be made at a reasonable time and in a reasonable manner. The loud pounding awakened the plaintiffs and their family and the neighborhood. The court of appeal reversed, holding that each plaintiff had alleged a cause of action to recover for the intentional infliction of emotional distress. The court noted that proximate cause is a question of law in the first instance. But it becomes a question of fact when conflicting inferences or conclusions can be drawn from the evidence.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Highly Unpleasant Mental Reaction as Satisfying Requirement of Emotional Distress

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. On appeal, the defendants contended that there was no evidence that the plaintiff had suffered emotional distress of sufficient severity to establish the tort of intentional infliction of emotional distress. They argued that the testimony established at most that the plaintiff was only mildly upset by the defendants' conduct. The court rejected the defendants' contention and found that there was sufficient evidence that the plaintiff suffered severe emotional distress. Noting that the judge and jury were in a better position to judge the severity of plaintiff's emotional distress, the court found that, although the evidence did not indicate that plaintiff had suffered any traumatic emotional distress of the character of shock, horror, or nausea, it did indicate, however, that plaintiff suffered the requisite emotional distress since such distress may consist of any highly unpleasant mental reaction such as fright, grief, shame, humiliation, embarrassment, anger, chagrin, disappointment, or worry. The evidence in this respect showed that plaintiff was frightened, worried, and upset by defendants' false charges against him, by their demand for repayment of a substantial sum of money impliedly threatening legal action against him, and by the notification that the monthly payments were being discontinued. As a result of these communications, plaintiff became worried about losing his home and about his family lacking food and clothing. This anxiety was inferrably substantial, especially in view of plaintiff's disabled and impecunious condition, which was known to defendants when they acted. The court added that, in addition, the duration of the emotional distress is one of the factors to be considered in determining its severity, and that the jury could reasonably infer that plaintiff's worry persisted for the duration of defendants' recalcitrance.

[b] Duration of Distress as Factor in Determining Severity

Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.43[3][a].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Highly Unpleasant Mental Reaction as Satisfying Requirement of Emotional Distress

The factual background of Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 288, 131 Cal. Rptr. 547 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][k]. In concluding that the issue of intentional infliction of emotional distress should have gone to the jury, the court of appeal considered the evidence that plaintiff had suffered severe emotional distress. Noting the requisite distress needed to satisfy the requirement of severe emotional distress set forth in Fletcher, the court commented that the recent trend has been to require less severe distress in pleadings and proof than is required in the Restatement (Second) of Torts. The court found that plaintiff had presented evidence that she was afraid that defendants would remove her and her belongings from her apartment, that she would be locked out, that she was unable to sleep after defendants told her that she would be "handled the way they do down south," and that another witness had testified that plaintiff told her in a quavering voice that she was alone and afraid. The court concluded that, based on this evidence, the jury could find that plaintiff had suffered severe emotional distress.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment that asserts that the defendant was privileged in asserting his legal rights. The plaintiff's assertion is that the privilege does not apply because the defendant acted outrageously or in bad faith.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should relate the facts tending to show that the defendant's conduct was outrageous or was undertaken in bad faith. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a motion supported by the points and authorities in § 153.27.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Assertion of Right in Outrageous Manner

In Symonds v. Mercury Sav. & Loan Assn. (1990) 225 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 275 Cal. Rptr. 871 , plaintiff and defendant financial institution (Mercury) became embroiled in a dispute over a dishonored check. Plaintiff had deposited a third-party check for a substantial sum of money in her account. Mercury provisionally credited plaintiff's account, but failed to properly process and present the check for payment in a timely manner. By the time that it was presented, there were insufficient funds in the maker's account to cover the check, although sufficient funds had existed for 44 days. Mercury then charged back plaintiff's account, froze all of her other accounts at Mercury, and demanded that she sign a promissory note for the amount previously credited on account of the dishonored check. Mercury's branch manager repeatedly called plaintiff to demand that she sign the note. Plaintiff then obtained counsel, who instructed the manager to direct all further communication to him. Nevertheless, the manager continued to call plaintiff every day until the action was initiated.

On appeal from the trial court's granting of demurrer for Mercury, the court held the allegations to be sufficient to constitute outrageous conduct and reversed. The court found that in the area of collection practices, California recognizes that a creditor has a qualified privilege to protect its economic interest. However, the privilege may be lost if the creditor uses outrageous and unreasonable means in seeking payment. In determining whether the conduct is sufficiently outrageous or unreasonable to become actionable, the court emphasized that rude or insolent behavior, standing alone, is not sufficient to make the creditor liable. However, the conduct may rise to the requisite level of outrageousness if the creditor knows the debtor is susceptible to emotional distress because of the debtor's physical or mental condition (225 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1469) .

Here, the manager knew that plaintiff was elderly and that the charge back placed her in a difficult financial position. Further, she was told that plaintiff's health had suffered because of the loss of the money, yet she continued to call plaintiff to pressure her into signing a promissory note. Finally, the manager continued to place these threatening calls even though she had been directed to speak only with plaintiff's attorney. Under these facts, the court held that a jury might reasonably find that Mercury's conduct was outrageous (225 Cal. App. 3d 1458, 1469) .

The factual background of Fletcher v. Western Nat'l Life Ins. Co. (1970) 10 Cal. App. 3d 376, 89 Cal. Rptr. 78 , is discussed in § 153.20[3][a]. In affirming the judgment of the trial court and holding that the plaintiff had stated a case for intentional infliction of emotional distress, the court held that any privilege which the defendants may have had in asserting their legal rights could not bar the plaintiff's recovery. The defendants had urged that, notwithstanding the conceded outrageous nature of their conduct, no liability could be predicated on a communication from one contracting party to another relating to the resolution of a dispute over their contract. The court acknowledged that an insurance company is privileged, in pursuing its own economic interest, to assert in a permissible way its legal rights and to communicate its position in good faith to its insured even though it is substantially certain that in so doing, emotional distress will be caused. However, the court stated that this exercise of the privilege to assert one's legal rights must be done in a permissible way and with a good-faith belief in the existence of the rights asserted. Thus, one who, in exercising the privilege, acts in an outrageous manner may be held liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

After concluding that, even if it could be said that the defendants were asserting their legal rights in good faith, they were not privileged to do so in an outrageous manner, the court added that the evidence viewed most favorably to the plaintiff indicated that there was no probable cause to believe that the plaintiff had made a misrepresentation of material fact or that his disability was due to anything other than his injury. Thus, there was not a good-faith dispute concerning the liability under the policy. The court stated in this respect that a settlement implies the existence of a good-faith dispute, and that there is no public policy in favor of an attempt to coerce settlement of a nonexistent dispute by outrageous means.

[b] Bad Faith in Asserting Legal Right

[a] Assertion of Right in Outrageous Manner

The factual background of Newby v. Alto Riviera Apartments (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 288, 131 Cal. Rptr. 547 , is discussed in § 153.40[3][k]. In holding that plaintiff had presented substantial evidence that defendants behavior was outrageous in that they had acted knowingly and unreasonably with the intention to inflict mental distress and had abused the special relationship between landlords and tenants, the court added that defendants' conduct was not privileged. The court stated with respect to defendants' conduct, that one who exercises the privilege of asserting his or her own economic interests in an outrageous manner may be held liable for intentional infliction of emotional distress.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress and physical injury based on the viewing of an injury to a third party, if the demurrer states that plaintiff has failed to allege a duty to plaintiff, but the complaint alleges a close family relationship between plaintiff and the victim.

These points and authorities may be combined with those in § 153.47 if counsel wishes to contend that the complaint sufficiently states the genuineness of a claim of serious mental distress, for example, if counsel wishes to contend that physical injury need not be alleged.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. If the relationship between plaintiff and the victim is in issue, counsel should describe the relationship, and if it is not one of parent-child, siblings, or grandparent-grandchild, counsel should emphasize that the plaintiff and the injured person are related and reside in the same household [see Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 668 n.10, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 ; *Kriventsov v. San Rafael Taxicabs, Inc. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1445, 1447-1450, 229 Cal. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Family Members Beyond Child-Parent Relationship May Recover

The factual background of Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 , is discussed in § 153.33[3][a]. In setting limitations on the recovery of damages for emotional distress to bystanders, the California Supreme Court concluded that a plaintiff who may recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third person must be closely related to the injured victim. In a footnote, the Court stated that in most cases, no justification exists for permitting recovery by persons who are only distantly related to the injury victim. Absent exceptional circumstances, recovery should be limited to relatives residing in the same household, or to parents, siblings, children, and grandparents of the victim (48 Cal. 3d 644, 668 n.10).

In Kriventsov v. San Rafael Taxicabs, Inc. (1986) 186 Cal. App. 3d 1445, 229 Cal. Rptr. 768 , the victim's uncle, who lived with and had developed a strong emotional relationship with the victim, observed his hit-and-run death by defendant, and filed an action for negligent infliction of emotional (and physical) harm resulting from the observation. Plaintiff alleged that his relationship with his nephew was analogous to that between a parent and child. The trial court sustained a demurrer without leave to amend, and dismissed the complaint on the ground that the relationship between plaintiff and the victim was not sufficiently close to establish a duty between the defendant and plaintiff. Plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The membership of many family units extends beyond parents and children to grandparents, stepparents, aunts, and uncles. In the case of a child victim, all close family members may be expected to have assumed responsibilities for child-rearing and to have acquired attendant emotional relationships with children that normally accompany those circumstances (186 Cal. App. 3d 1445, 1449-1450) .

THE REQUIREMENT OF SENSORY AND CONTEMPORANEOUS OBSERVANCE OF THE ACCIDENT DOES NOT REQUIRE A VISUAL PERCEPTION OF THE IMPACT CAUSING THE DEATH OR INJURY IF PLAINTIFF HAS OTHERWISE ALLEGED FACTS SHOWING HE/SHE WAS A PERCIPIENT WITNESS TO THE ACCIDENT.

A. Visual Perception of Impact Not Required. The requirement of sensory and contemporaneous observance of the injury to the third person does not require a visual perception of the impact causing the death or injury. It is sufficient if plaintiff shows that he or she was otherwise a percipient witness of the accident (Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 59, 76, 137 Cal. Rptr. 863, 562 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] C. Injury Resulting From Sudden Occurrence Not Required. An injury need not have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by the plaintiff. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based on witnessing injury to a third party. This form asserts that the complaint alleges sufficient facts to support an award of damages for mental suffering to the bystander plaintiff in that it contains sufficient allegations of contemporaneous observance of the injury-producing event.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 153.33.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Visual Perception of Impact Not Required

Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 59, 137 Cal. Rptr. 863, 562 P.2d 1022 , involved an action brought by plaintiff husband for damages for the emotional suffering caused when defendant struck plaintiff's parked car, killing plaintiff's wife. The accident occurred while plaintiff was sitting in the driver's seat and his wife and a friend were closing the rear door of the car. Defendant rear-ended the car, pinning plaintiff's wife under the car. Although plaintiff did not see his wife struck and did not know the extent of her injuries, he had fully perceived the fact that she had been struck, since he knew her position an instant before the impact, observed defendant's vehicle approaching, and realized that the car must have struck her. The jury returned a special verdict for plaintiff, awarding damages for the resulting emotional suffering. On appeal, defendant argued for reversal because plaintiff admitted that he neither actually saw his wife being struck by defendant's car nor did he immediately observe the effect of the impact on her. In holding that this verdict must be set aside on other grounds, the Court noted one factor as stated in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , to be considered in determining whether a defendant owes a duty of due care with respect to the possible emotional suffering a plaintiff may have as a result of witnessing an injury to a third person, which is whether the shock the plaintiff suffered resulted from a direct emotional impact on the plaintiff from the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident. The Court stated that this requirement does not demand a visual perception of the impact causing the death or injury, and found that under the circumstances of the case, plaintiff was a percipient witness to the impact causing his wife's injuries.

NOTE:

For a plaintiff to recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third person, he or she must have been present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time when it occurred, and must have been then aware that injury was being caused. The California Supreme Court has stated that this factor was present in each of its prior decisions upholding recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress, thus reaffirming its holding in Krouse [Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 668, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814]

[b] Plaintiff Is Not Required to Comprehend Defendant's Negligence

In Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 573, 127 Cal. Rptr. 720 , defendants demurred to plaintiff's complaint, which attempted to allege in part a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. After the demurrer was filed, both parties filed declarations of fact, which were considered by the trial court in determining whether the complaint could state a cause of action. The allegations of the complaint and the declarations of fact showed that plaintiff, Mrs. Ramsburg, had acted as a foster parent for plaintiff Mobaldi who had been born with a defect that was thought likely to result in the child's early death. The child, who had become completely integrated into the family of the Ramsburgs, had corrective surgery, which was considered to have greatly improved the child's health. Thereafter, Mrs. Ramsburg had taken the child to defendant hospital for certain tests related to the defect. Because he was afraid to be alone, the child was held by Mrs. Ramsburg while he was given an injection of glucose solution that was 10 times the strength of what it should have been. After this injection, and while plaintiff physicians were out of the room and Mrs. Ramsburg still held him, the child went into convulsions, became comatose, and suffered severe irreversible brain damage. Because of her presence and the damage to the child, Mrs. Ramsburg suffered physical injury that resulted from severe emotional distress in witnessing the destruction of the child. However, it was apparent that Mrs. Ramsburg was unaware that it was the defendants' negligence that caused the injuries to the child. For that reason as well as the lack of a family tie to the child [see § 153.32], the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appealed and the court of appeal reversed. The court stated, with respect to Mrs. Ramsburg's lack of understanding of defendants' negligence, the requirement of sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident, involved the test of foreseeability and that foreseeability depends on what the emotionally traumatized plaintiff observes. The court further stated that it is observation of consequences of the negligent act and not observation of the act itself that is likely to cause trauma so severe as to result in physical injury. Thus, the court held that so long as the plaintiff's observation of the results of the defendants' infliction of harm on another was direct and contemporaneous, there was no significance in the plaintiff's lack of awareness that the defendants' conduct inflicting the injury was negligent. The court expressly disapproved gratuitous dictum in Hair v. Monterey County (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 538, 544, 119 Cal. Rptr. 639 , requiring that the tortious event be susceptible of understanding observance by the plaintiff. The court stated that the requirement as stated in Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Ctr. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 22, 24, 106 Cal. Rptr. 883 , that the event causing the injury is one that can be the subject of sensory perception, is sufficient to avoid potentially infinite liability. The additional requirement of understanding observance is not necessary because that requirement would limit liability and loss shift only fortuitously, and thus, would possess no rational relationship to the reasons for the Dillon requirement.

NOTE:

Mobaldi was disapproved on other grounds in Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 267, 277, 250 Cal. Rptr. 254, 758 P.2d 582 . However, its holding that the plaintiff is not required to be contemporaneously aware that the defendant's act is negligent, was expressly adopted by the California Supreme Court in Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 170, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 [see § 153.46[3][c]].

Subsequently, however, the Supreme Court has cautioned that although a plaintiff need not contemporaneously understand that the defendant's conduct is negligent, the plaintiff must have a contemporaneous understanding that the conduct that is being observed is conduct that is actually causing harm [Bird v. Saenz (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 910, 920, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465, 51 P.3d 324 (rejecting holding of Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 573, 127 Cal. Rptr.

720)]. Therefore, in the context of medical malpractice cases, bystanders cannot sue for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on unperceived medical errors hidden within a course of treatment [Bird v. Saenz (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 910, 921, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465, 51 P.3d 324] . Most misdiagnoses, unsuccessful treatments, or treatments that turn out to be inappropriate only in retrospect will not be contemporaneously observable by a lay person, and thus will usually be insufficient to support a bystander claim for negligent infliction of emotional distress. However, under some extreme situations, even a lay person may contemporaneously perceive that incorrect medical treatment is causing an injury, such as when a family member observes a surgeon amputate the wrong limb of a patient [Bird v. Saenz (2002) 28 Cal. 4th 910, 918, 920-921, 123 Cal. Rptr. 2d 465, 51 P.3d 324] .

[c] Injury Resulting From Sudden Occurrence Not Required

In Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 , decedent, plaintiffs' son, became ill when he was in the custody of a county juvenile hall. Plaintiffs visited decedent while he was at the infirmary, and observed that he was very ill and in severe pain. Plaintiff mother expressed her concern to the juvenile hall authorities, who attempted to reassure her about decedent's condition. When plaintiff mother thereafter visited decedent, his condition had worsened. She became very distressed and concerned, and requested that decedent be allowed to see the family physician. Her request was refused, and she was sent to one of the defendants, who again reassured her and stated that the decedent had to remain in the infirmary. Each of plaintiff mother's subsequent repeated requests to defendant, various nurses, and other doctors that she be allowed to take decedent to her private physician were refused. Finally, the son died, and plaintiffs sued. One of the causes of action set forth in plaintiffs' complaint was for negligent infliction of emotional distress. Defendants demurred to that cause of action, among others, and the trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to set aside the demurrer.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, and enumerating the guidelines set out in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740-741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , held that the decedent's injury need not have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by plaintiff mother (39 Cal. 3d 159, 167-168) . The Court disapproved Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , to the extent that it implicitly approved the sudden occurrence requirement, stating that it is an unwarranted restriction on the Dillon guidelines (39 Cal. 3d 159, 168) . The Court held that if there is observation of the defendant's conduct and the injury, and contemporaneous awareness that the defendant's conduct or lack thereof is causing harm, recovery is permitted (39 Cal. 3d 159, 170) .

[d] Plaintiff's Voluntary Presence Does Not Preclude Recovery

The facts and procedural background of Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 , are discussed in § 153.46[3][c]. The Supreme Court held that the decedent's injury need not have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by plaintiff mother (39 Cal. 3d 159, 167-168) . Defendants suggested that plaintiffs should not receive the benefit of the rule set out in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740-741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 [see § 153.31[3][b]], because they were voluntarily present at a location where distressing incidents were likely to occur. The Court noted that Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , implied the rule that recovery by a plaintiff voluntarily at the scene of a traumatic event may be precluded. However, the Court held that such a requirement undercuts the very foundation on which the Dillon case rested because a distinction between the voluntary and involuntary presence of a close relative of the injured or dead person appears to relieve the defendant of liability for the very risk that should have been foreseen. Thus, the Court disapproved Justus to the extent that it makes a contrary suggestion (39 Cal. 3d 159, 171) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Visual Perception of Impact Not Required

In Wilks v. Hom (1992) 2 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 3 Cal. Rptr. 2d 803 , a mother was in her trailer when leaking gas ignited in an explosion. Two of her young children were also in the trailer, although in different rooms and outside of the mother's line of vision. The court, relying on Krouse v. Graham, found sufficient presence and contemporaneous observation of injury. Like the husband in Krouse, the mother was physically present at the scene and then fully aware of the peril that confronted her children (2 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1271) . The court noted that this formulation of the rule does not require that the plaintiff have visually perceived the injury, and that the California Supreme Court opinion in Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 , did not disapprove Krouse on this point (2 Cal. App. 4th 1264, 1271) .

In Ausin v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 354, 152 Cal. Rptr. 420 , the court of appeal reversed the order of the trial court granting summary judgment on plaintiff's cause of action to recover damages for emotional distress resulting from the death of plaintiff's unborn child. The court distinguished Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 585, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , in which the plaintiff only alleged that he was in the delivery room and the Supreme Court concluded that he did not and could not have seen any negligent acts. In this case, the plaintiff alleged that he learned of death by his own observation of the cessation of life in the fetus and that his shock and distress were occasioned by that sensory and contemporaneous realization of the death.

[b] Injury Resulting From Sudden Occurrence Not Required

In Ortiz v. HPM Corp. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 285 Cal. Rptr. 728 , a husband and wife were both employed at the same location. The wife discovered her husband trapped inside of a molding machine while the machine was still running. The husband's skin was discolored, his body was limp, and blood was flowing from his left arm. The wife was the individual who summoned help to extract the husband from the machine.

The court relied on Ochoa in finding sufficient presence at the injury-producing event and contemporaneous awareness of injury. As in Ochoa, the injury-producing event continued for a period of time, and the wife personally observed it while it was still occurring. It was not necessary that she observe the husband becoming entrapped in the machine (234 Cal. App. 3d 178, 183-186) .

A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR NEGLIGENT INFLICTION OF SERIOUS MENTAL DISTRESS IS NOT DEFICIENT IF FACTS ARE ALLEGED SHOWING A SUFFICIENT GUARANTEE OF GENUINENESS IN THE MENTAL DISTRESS CLAIM.

A. Physical Injury Is Not Required to Recover for Negligent Infliction of Serious Emotional Distress. A cause of action may be stated for the negligent infliction of serious emotional distress without any allegation of physical injury (Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 928, 930, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813).

B. Guarantee of Genuineness of Claim Is Found in General Standard of Proof. The function formerly served by the requirement of a physical injury, to guarantee the genuineness of claims, is now served by the general standard of proof required to support a claim of mental distress in the circumstances of the case and is a matter of proof to be presented to the trier of fact (Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 930, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813).

[Optional] C. Allegation of Defendant's Conduct Causing Foreseeable Injury Is Sufficient. Allegations of objectively verifiable conduct by the defendants that foreseeably elicited serious emotional responses in the plaintiff serve as a measure of the validity of plaintiff's claim for emotional distress and state a cause of action (Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 930, 931, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813).

[Optional] D. Emotional Distress Damages Are Recoverable If Action Based on Contract for Comfort, Happiness, or Personal Welfare. A plaintiff may recover damages for the unintentional infliction of emotional distress if the defendant has tortiously breached a duty arising out of a contract that is designed to protect plaintiff from injury to the peace of mind and if the terms of the contract relate to matters that concern directly the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of the plaintiff (Truestone, Inc. v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 165, 170-171, 127 Cal. Rptr. 386).

[Optional] E. Substantial Damage Is Sufficient Guarantee. A sufficient guarantee of genuineness exists and a court may thus adjudicate a negligence claim for mental distress if the facts show that the plaintiff has suffered substantial damage apart from the alleged emotional injury (Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 917, 937, 122 Cal. Rptr. 470).

[Optional] F. Outrageous Conduct Is Not Required. A defendant's conduct need not be outrageous; the strongest assurance of the validity of a claim is the link between the tortious conduct and the emotional injury (Mercado v. Leong (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 317, 326, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 569).

[a] Use of Form

This form of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for the negligent infliction of serious mental distress if the demurrer asserts that the complaint failed to allege facts showing a sufficient guaranty of genuineness to permit the court to adjudicate the mental distress claim.

Counsel should insert argument in the form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , involved an amended complaint for damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress unaccompanied by physical injury. Plaintiff appealed from a judgment entered after a demurrer to the complaint was sustained. Plaintiff had alleged that he and his wife were members of defendant hospital's health plan, and that when his wife went to Kaiser for a routine physical examination, she was negligently examined and tested and informed by defendant physician that she had infectious syphilis, which was in fact false. Defendants knew plaintiff would learn of the diagnosis because they instructed his wife to so advise him. Thereafter, plaintiff had to undergo tests which revealed that he did not have syphilis. Nonetheless, his wife became upset and suspicious that plaintiff had engaged in extramarital activities, and the resulting tension and hostility caused the marriage to break up. Plaintiff further alleged that defendants knew or should have known that their diagnosis that his wife had and that he might have syphilis would cause him emotional distress, and that in fact he suffered extreme emotional distress and incurred medical expenses for counseling in an effort to save the marriage.

The Supreme Court reversed, recognizing negligent infliction of serious emotional distress as a tort independent of other injury. The Court noted that the primary justification for the physical injury requirement is to guard against false claims, but that this function is served by other guarantees in some instances, such as where substantial damages other than physical injury suffered by plaintiff serve to guarantee the genuineness of a claim for intentional infliction of emotional distress. The Court condemned the physical injury requirement as allowing emotional distress damages where the distress is accompanied by the most trivial physical injury, while mechanically precluding recovery on potentially valid claims. The Court further criticized the rule because it encourages extravagant pleading and distorted testimony, and because the distinction between physical and emotional injury is unclear. The Court thus rejected the physical injury requirement holding that, where the proof is not of a medically significant nature, the genuineness of the claim is guaranteed by the general standard of proof necessary to sustain a claim of serious emotional distress in the circumstances of the case. The Court quoted a standard adopted by the Hawaii Supreme Court: "serious mental distress may be found where a reasonable man, normally constituted, would be unable to adequately cope with the mental stress engendered by the circumstances of the case."

Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , is discussed in § 153.47[3][a].

[c] Allegation of Defendant's Conduct Causing Foreseeable Injury Is Sufficient

The factual background of Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , is discussed in § 153.47[3][a]. The Court noted that defendants' negligent examination of plaintiff's wife and ensuing conduct were objectively verifiable actions which foreseeably elicited serious emotional responses in plaintiff and thus served as a measure of the validity of plaintiff's mental distress claim.

[d] Emotional Distress Damages Are Recoverable If Action Based on Contract for Comfort, Happiness, or Personal Welfare

Truestone, Inc. v. Travelers Ins. Co. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 165, 127 Cal. Rptr. 386 , was an appeal from a judgment dismissing on demurrer some, but not all, of the causes of action asserted by multiple plaintiffs against multiple defendants. All of plaintiffs' causes of action arose out of the defendants' failure to settle a claim under a policy of liability insurance issued to plaintiff corporation within the limits of the policy. Plaintiff's fourth cause of action alleged that plaintiff corporation was closely held, that the failure to settle was intentional and reckless and resulted in damages consisting of severe mental and emotional distress to plaintiff shareholders, that plaintiff shareholders also suffered from damages to their share because the eventual payment by the corporation of the amount required to settle the claim reduced the value of their stock, and that the conduct of defendants in refusing to settle was willful and malicious.

In stating that the hurdle for plaintiffs' recovery for injury to their peace of mind was the general rule that damages for unintentional infliction of emotional distress are not recoverable in the absence of other damage to person or property to which they are related, the court found that plaintiffs' action presented the unique situation of emotional distress incident to and accompanied by injury to property where there is a bar to recovery for the property damage based on the rule that the diminution in the value of their shares was incidental to the injury to their corporation. However, neither reason for the bar--that the injury is deemed to be that of the separate corporate entity and that otherwise, each stockholder could independently sue on the same cause of action--was pertinent to the right of an insured shareholder who personally contracts to achieve peace of mind through indemnity to his or her wholly owned corporation to recover for emotional distress incident to the improper conduct of the insurer in destroying that peace of mind. Quoting from Windeler v. Scheers Jewelers (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 851, 88 Cal. Rptr. 39 , the court added that, whenever the terms of a contract relate to matters which concern directly the comfort, happiness, or personal welfare of one of the parties, he or she may recover damages for physical suffering or illness proximately caused by its breach.

[e] Substantial Damage Is Sufficient Guaranty

Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 Cal. App. 3d 917, 122 Cal. Rptr. 470 , involved an amended supplemental complaint filed by plaintiffs in their action to quiet title and for damages for breach of contract and negligence against defendant title company. In this supplemental complaint, plaintiffs sought additional general damages and punitive damages against the title company based in part on negligent infliction of emotional distress. This claim for mental distress arose out of the refusal of the title company to take any action after plaintiffs had requested the title company to eliminate an easement claimed by a neighbor over plaintiffs' land, which easement was mentioned neither in a preliminary title report nor in a title insurance policy issued by the title company. The company had taken the position that it had no obligation to plaintiffs under the title policy since the neighbor's deed had been excluded from coverage--a position subsequently determined to be untenable since the easement had not been mentioned in the exclusionary provisions of the policy. At a jury trial on their supplemental complaint, plaintiffs testified in effect that they were worried, upset, and shocked over the company's failure to sue the neighbor or otherwise eliminate the easement and cover the consequent payment of attorney's fees in their action to quiet title and for breach of contract and negligence. In addition, a court appointed psychiatrist testified in effect that plaintiff's symptoms of emotional distress were directly attributable to the litigation and the company's failure to clear title. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs for $200,000, and defendants appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. Defendants argued on appeal in part that the supplemental complaint failed to state legally sufficient facts to set forth a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress, and that, therefore, their motion for judgment on the pleadings should have been granted. Specifically they argued that damages for emotional distress are not awarded in a negligence action unless the distress resulted directly from, or manifested itself in, physical "impact or injury." The court rejected defendants' argument. The court reviewed the reasons for the rule: (1) that emotional distress without injury is too trivial; (2) that courts would otherwise be inundated with fraudulent claims; (3) that otherwise speculative judgments would be imposed on defendants; and (4) that the causal link between a defendant's negligence and a plaintiff's emotional distress would be too attenuated. The court rejected each of these reasons. It stated that: (1) mental trauma can be just as debilitating as physical paralysis; (2) that the problem of fraudulent claims both is as great under the "impact or injury" rule, since the slightest physical injury is sufficient to satisfy the rule, and would not justify eliminating an entire class of claims; and (3) there is as great a problem of speculative judgments in cases involving physical injuries as there is in cases involving emotional stress only.

In rejecting the reason involving the problem of establishing a causal link between negligence and emotional distress, the court noted that courts generally are concerned with this problem because of the unlimited and undeserved liability which might result from the extension of independent protection to mental equilibrium and with the fact that there is no guarantee of genuineness, that is, no adequate proof, of the mental distress claim. Relying particularly on Crisci v. Security Ins. Co. (1967) 66 Cal. 2d 425, 58 Cal. Rptr. 13, 426 P.2d 173 , the court articulated, however, a more precise rule than the "impact or injury" rule in order to solve the problem that is raised by fraudulent claims for mental distress. The court examined the Crisci opinion and stated that in determining whether a plaintiff had suffered an empirically verifiable injury, a court should determine whether the plaintiff had suffered a detriment whose impact was readily observable and identifiable--that is, an injury that could not be as easily fabricated as mental distress and the proof of which could be drawn from sources other than the plaintiff's own mouth. The court concluded that the "impact or injury" rule thus is no longer strictly applied, and that courts may adjudicate negligence claims for mental distress if sufficient guaranties of genuineness are found in the facts of the case--such as, if the plaintiff had suffered substantial damage apart from the alleged emotional injury. The court added that substantial damage need not be compensable since imposition of a requirement of compensability would add little to the guaranty of genuineness; rather, interference with one's legally protected interests is sufficient damage to satisfy the test set forth in Crisci. The court found that plaintiffs had suffered substantial financial and property damage consisting of $170 for loss of use of the property and $7,100 for attorney's fees spent in their action to quiet title and for damages for breach of contract and negligence.

The court noted in a footnote that the Supreme Court had not yet permitted recovery for negligently inflicted emotional distress if the mental injury was the only damage caused by the defendant's wrongful conduct. The court added that, although endorsement of such an action would seem to be the logical end product of the decisional trends, it would not set forth such a rule since the case before it involved substantial financial injury and the resolution of the case thus could be based on the specific standard articulated in Crisci, that is, a claim that results in substantial damages apart from the emotional distress.

[f] Outrageous Conduct Is Not Required

In Mercado v. Leong (1996) 43 Cal. App. 4th 317, 50 Cal. Rptr. 2d 569 , plaintiff sought damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress from a physician for negligence in the delivery of her child which resulted in permanent nerve damage for the child. In a special verdict, the jury found that the defendant was negligent, but that his conduct was not outrageous. Defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the basis that under Bro v. Glaser (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 894 , a finding of outrageous conduct on the part of the defendant is required in order to award damages for negligent infliction of emotional distress. Concluding that it was bound by Bro, the trial court granted the motion and entered judgment in favor of defendant.

On appeal, plaintiff contended that recovery was governed by Burgess v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1064, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197 , rather than Bro. The court of appeal agreed with plaintiff. In determining liability for negligent infliction of emotional distress to a direct victim, the Burgess court identified a list of policy considerations: the foreseeability of harm to the plaintiff, the degree of certainty that the plaintiff suffered injury, the closeness of the connection between the defendant's conduct and the injury, the moral blame, the policy of preventing future harm, and the extent of the burden on the defendant and the consequences to the community of imposing a duty (43 Cal. App. 4th 317, 322-323) . The court concluded that the Bro test of outrageousness strayed from the guidelines established by the Supreme Court in Burgess, and declined to apply it (43 Cal. App. 4th 317, 327) . The judgment for defendant was thus reversed, and the trial court directed to enter judgment in plaintiff's favor.

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Physical Injury Is Not Required to Recover for Negligent Infliction of Serious Emotional Distress

In Slaughter v. Legal Process & Courier Serv. (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 209 Cal. Rptr. 189 , defendant process server signed a sworn affidavit of service stating that he had personally served plaintiff, who was in fact out of town on the date specified. The court of appeal reversed the summary judgment that the trial court granted to defendant on the negligent infliction of mental distress cause of action. In its discussion, the court addressed the aspect of physical injury in an action for negligent infliction of mental distress. Plaintiff had testified that he suffered no impact or physical injury. Citing authority, the court said that physical injury is no longer a prerequisite to recovery for emotional distress. The attempted distinction between physical and psychological injury, formerly required, merely clouds the issue. The essential question is one of proof; whether the plaintiff has suffered a serious and compensable injury should not turn on this artificial and often arbitrary classification scheme (162 Cal. App. 3d 1236, 1251) .

[b] Emotional Distress Damages Are Recoverable If Action Based on Contract for Comfort, Happiness, or Personal Welfare

In Quesada v. Oak Hill Improvement Co. (1989) 213 Cal. App. 3d 596, 261 Cal. Rptr. 769 , a sister and a niece of a decedent sued a county and a cemetery for damages for emotional distress suffered on account of the defendants' having presented for viewing and interred the wrong body, despite their protestations of error. Defendants' demurrer on the ground that plaintiffs were neither parties to a burial contract nor persons having the legal duty to dispose of a deceased's body under Health & Safety Code § 7100 was granted. (The widow's separate claim arising from the same negligent acts was settled.)

The court of appeal reversed, rejecting the view that limitations on the defendants' duty could be found either in contract or in the Health and Safety Code. Instead, the court adopted the general view of Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.47[3][a]], that a duty is owed to foreseeable direct victims of negligent conduct. The court found that close friends and relatives of a deceased are obvious and foreseeable victims of the negligent handling of a corpse (213 Cal. App. 3d 596, 602-606) .

However, the court also adopted limitations on this pure foreseeability analysis, reflecting the California Supreme Court's rejection of broad potential liability for emotional distress resulting from negligence [see Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 664, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 ; Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 ; Elden v. Sheldon (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 267, 274, 250 Cal. Rptr. 254, 758 P.2d 582] . In determining the proper limitations, the court analogized the effect of the negligent handling of a corpse to percipient witness cases [see §§ 153.31-153.33, 153.45, 153.46], and adopted the limitations of the Supreme Court applicable to those cases, holding that only persons closely related to the decedent may recover [see Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 668 n.10, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814 ; see also § 153.32[3][a]] (213 Cal. App. 3d 596, 607-610) . Close relatives include relatives residing in the same household, or parents, siblings, children, and grandparents of the victim. Exceptional circumstances may enlarge the group to include other relatives [see Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 668 n.10, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814, 261 Cal. Rptr. 769]. The court held that the sister was clearly owed a duty and entitled to recover and also reversed as to the niece, allowing her the opportunity to prove that special circumstances might bring her within the group (213 Cal. App. 3d 596, 610) .

Allen v. Jones (1980) 104 Cal. App. 3d 207, 163 Cal. Rptr. 445 , involved plaintiff's second amended complaint for damages for negligent performance of a contract. The only damages sought under the negligence cause of action were for emotional distress. Plaintiff appealed from a judgment entered after a demurrer to the second amended complaint was sustained. Plaintiff's second amended complaint alleged that he was the brother and nearest living relative of Ralph Allen and that on his brother's death plaintiff entered into an oral contract with the defendant mortuary for the cremation and shipment of his brother's remains to Illinois. Plaintiff alleged that as a result of defendant's negligence in packaging the remains, they were lost, causing plaintiff great nervous shock, mental anguish and humiliation. On appeal, the primary question was whether the action could be maintained because the only damage alleged was mental suffering. The court of appeal reversed the dismissal.

The court first recognized that severe mental distress was a foreseeable result of breach of the contract, notwithstanding the general rule that damages for mental suffering are not recoverable in an action for breach of contract. However, the court refused to base its decision on contract, stating that it is not clear whether mental distress without physical illness can ever support an action for breach of contract. (In this regard, it is noteworthy that Allen was decided prior to Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.47[3][a]].) The court then found that plaintiff pleaded an action in negligence as well as contract by alleging that the remains were lost due to defendant's negligent preparation of them for shipment, and held that damages for emotional distress are recoverable in tort for a mortuary's negligent mishandling of a corpse even though the plaintiff suffers no physical injury. The court reasoned that the psychological devastation likely to result from a mortuary's mistake requires that mortuaries be held to a high standard of care, and that the nature of the wrongful conduct necessarily present in such a case provides a sufficient guarantee of the genuineness of the claim of mental distress.

In Windeler v. Scheers Jewelers (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 88 Cal. Rptr. 39 , defendant appealed from a judgment entered on a jury verdict awarding plaintiff $4,000 damages for personal injuries and $1,436 for property loss damage resulting from the failure of defendant to return six rings which plaintiff had entrusted to defendant for the purpose of having the stones in the rings removed and reset in a new ring. Plaintiff's complaint alleged in part that she suffered emotional and physical injury which resulted from the negligence of defendant in failing properly to care for the rings. With regard to this injury, plaintiff had testified that she had informed defendant at the time she entrusted the rings to him that the rings had a sentimental value and were cherished mementos, and that when she was told the rings were lost, she suffered terrible headaches, loss of sleep, and general nervousness; that she was forced to remain off work for three days; and that her physician prescribed a tranquilizer. Following entry of judgment, defendant moved for a new trial, alleging in part that the verdict was contrary to law. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment of the trial court. The primary question on appeal was whether plaintiff could recover for her mental suffering and emotional distress. After determining that the nature of the relationship which existed between plaintiff and defendant was one of bailment, and outlining some of the features of that relationship, the court determined that the bailment was a contract, which the jury had found that defendant had negligently breached. Thus, the question became whether mental suffering and emotional distress are elements of actual damages for breach of such a contract. The court noted the general rule that the damages which may be recovered for breach of contract are those damages which may reasonably be supposed to have been within the contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of the contract and that would be the probable result of the breach. The court further noted that within the ambit of this rule there has evolved the rule that, if a person contracts to do a particular thing, and the failure to perform may result in physical suffering or illness on the part of the other contracting party, that person is presumed to have contracted with reference to the payment of damages for the injury or illness if damages accrue by reason of a breach of the contract on his or her part. In applying this rule, the court found that both parties knew of the special circumstance concerning the sentimental value of the rings, and that, because the contract was one whose terms related to matters directly concerning the happiness and comfort of plaintiff, and were such as to move her affection and tender feelings, the jury was entitled to include as damages the damage for plaintiff's physical suffering and emotional distress.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress and physical injury if defendant contends that plaintiff's injuries resulted from an unforeseeable superseding cause. The ground for opposition is that the intervening cause was foreseeable, or it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable.

These points and authorities may be combined with those in § 153.47 if counsel wishes to contend that the complaint sufficiently states the genuineness of a claim of serious mental distress, for example, if counsel wishes to contend that physical injury need not be alleged.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Injury Was Foreseeable Consequence of Defendant's Conduct and Resulting Intervention by Another

In Pool v. City of Oakland (1986) 42 Cal. 3d 1051, 232 Cal. Rptr. 528, 728 P.2d 1163 , plaintiff brought suit against defendant storeowner after defendant summoned the police in the erroneous and unsupported belief that plaintiff was attempting to pass counterfeit currency. The suit included a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress based on damages plaintiff suffered as a result of the treatment he received at the hands of the police, including a false arrest. Plaintiff prevailed at trial, and defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict or a new trial. The motions were denied, and defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed, upholding the liability of the storeowner for negligently causing plaintiff emotional distress. The Court found that defendant breached a duty of care in negligently summoning the police (42 Cal. 3d 1051, 1060-1063) . The Court further rejected defendant storeowner's argument that plaintiff's injuries were the result of an unforeseeable superseding cause. The Court stated that a defendant is liable for injuries brought about by an intervening cause of independent origin if the intervening cause was foreseeable by defendant or, if not foreseeable, if it caused injury of a type that was foreseeable. The Court found that the harm to plaintiff was foreseeable, since being arrested by the police is a foreseeable consequence of reporting a transaction as illegal. Since the injuries were foreseeable, the acts of the police officers, even if wrongful, did not relieve defendant storeowner of liability (42 Cal.

PLAINTIFF NEED NOT ALLEGE CONTEMPORANEOUS PERCEPTION OF INJURY TO A THIRD PARTY BECAUSE HE/SHE IS A DIRECT VICTIM OF DEFENDANT'S TORTIOUS CONDUCT, RATHER THAN A BYSTANDER.

A. Limitations Applicable to Bystanders Inapplicable to Direct Victims. The requirement of contemporaneous perception of injury to a third party does not apply if the plaintiff is a direct victim of the defendant's tortious conduct in that defendant's negligence was directed to plaintiff (*Molien v. [a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based on an injury to a third party if the demurrer asserts that the complaint fails to state a cause of action in that it fails to allege facts showing that the emotional distress suffered by plaintiff was caused by plaintiff's contemporaneous perception of injury or accident to a third party [see Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 ; Andalon v. Superior Court (1984) 162 Cal. App. 3d 600, 611, 208 Cal. Rptr. 899] .

These points and authorities may be combined with those in § 153.47 if counsel wishes to contend that the complaint sufficiently states the genuineness of a claim of serious mental distress.

These points and authorities may also be adapted for use in a trial or appellate brief.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Therefore, counsel should discuss facts showing that plaintiff was a direct victim of defendant's tortious conduct, in that the defendant owed a duty directly to the plaintiff, independent of the duty owed to the person who was otherwise injured.

[b] Limitations on Direct-Victim Theory of Liability

The California Supreme Court has held that a finding that a defendant owed a duty to the victim must be based on more than mere foreseeability of distress [see Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 ; Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 172-173, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 ; see generally § 153.37]. Cases decided before this limitation should be considered questionable to the extent that the cases relied primarily on foreseeability of harm to find that a duty to the plaintiff existed [see Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 ; Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 172-173, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 (both cases rejected contention that foreseeability of distress was sufficient to impose duty); see also Schwarz v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 149, 163-168, 276 Cal. Rptr. 470 (discussing viability of older cases)]. However, counsel may wish to argue that the particular factual situation in his or her case relies on factors other than foreseeability to support the conclusion that the defendant owed a duty to plaintiff. For complete discussion of the potential scope of the direct-victim theory, see Levy, Golden & Sacks, California Torts, Ch. 5, Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Limitations Applicable to Bystanders Inapplicable to Direct Victims

The facts and procedural background of Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 , are discussed in § 153.47[3][a]. The Court rejected the physical-injury requirement in a cause of action for negligent infliction of serious emotional distress, holding that when the proof is not of a medically significant nature, the genuineness of the claim is guaranteed by the general standard of proof necessary to sustain a claim for that cause of action in the circumstances of the case. The Court also held plaintiff to be a direct victim of the physician's negligent misdiagnosis. The case was factually dissimilar to the bystander scenario of Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 . Therefore, plaintiff need not have been present when the physician announced the erroneous diagnosis to plaintiff's wife in order to state a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress against the physician. The Court reiterated and relied on its explicit statement in Dillon that an obligation hinging on foreseeability must necessarily be adjudicated only on a case-by-case basis. The risk of harm to plaintiff's husband was reasonably foreseeable to defendant. It was easily predictable that an erroneous diagnosis of syphilis and its probable source would produce both marital discord between plaintiff and his spouse and resultant emotional distress to plaintiff. Because the disease is normally transmitted only by sexual relations, it was rational to anticipate that both spouses would experience anxiety, suspicion, and hostility when confronted with what they had every reason to believe was reliable medical evidence of a particularly noxious infidelity. Under these circumstances, the Court held that defendant physician owed plaintiff a duty to exercise due care in diagnosing the physical condition of plaintiff's wife (27 Cal. 3d 916, 923) .

[b] Direct-Victim Theory Based on Duty

In Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 , the California Supreme Court reaffirmed the direct-victim theory of recovery as set forth in Molien [Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 ; see § 153.49[3][a]], but retreated significantly from a possible reading that foreseeability, standing alone, could be sufficient to make one a direct victim of another's negligence for the purpose of recovering damages for emotional distress only.

Marlene F. involved the claim of two mothers for damages for negligently inflicted emotional distress arising from the sexual molestation of their sons by a therapist with whom the mothers and sons were being treated in family counseling. Four justices upheld the allegations of the complaint as supported by Molien's direct-victim theory. However, the lead opinion construed Molien as not creating a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress based solely on the foreseeability that serious emotional distress might result from the defendant's conduct. The Court noted as an example that it is plainly foreseeable that close family members of a patient would suffer severe emotional distress if told that the patient had been diagnosed as suffering from a terminal illness. However, without more, the patient's physician would not be liable for that distress, whether or not the diagnosis was erroneous (48 Cal. 3d 583, 589-590) . Rather, damages for severe emotional distress are recoverable in a negligence action when they result from the breach of a duty owed the plaintiff that is assumed by the defendant or imposed on the defendant as a matter of law, or that arises out of a relationship between the two (48 Cal. 3d 583, 590) . The Court then reaffirmed that Molien involved such a duty and was correctly decided. The duty that made the mothers direct victims in Marlene F. arose from the fact that the mothers, as well as the sons, were the patients of the therapist and therefore were owed a duty by the therapist (48 Cal. 3d 583, 590-591) .

Three justices, concurring in the result, indicated that Molien should have no application beyond its facts. However, these justices concurred in the result because they viewed the allegations as sufficient to plead a professional negligence cause of action (48 Cal. 3d 583, 599-601) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Limitations Applicable to Bystanders Inapplicable to Direct Victims

In Long v. PKS, Inc. (1993) 12 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 16 Cal. Rptr. 2d 103 , plaintiff brought an action for damages after she was injured in a traffic accident and her foster daughter was killed in the same accident. The plaintiff sought recovery for her own injuries. In addition, she sought, and the jury awarded her, damages for the emotional distress she suffered from witnessing her foster daughter's injury and death. The defendants appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed, this aspect of the award.

The trial court properly instructed the jury that it could award damages for the emotional distress that the plaintiff suffered as the result of witnessing her foster daughter's injury and death. The limitations on recovery for emotional distress suffered by a bystander who witnesses injury to another did not apply to plaintiff, who was a direct victim of the defendant's negligence, suffering physical injuries herself. Therefore, she was entitled to recover all reasonably foreseeable damages, including damages for her emotional distress in witnessing the death of her foster daughter (12 Cal. App. 4th 1293, 1298) .

[b] Direct-Victim Theory Based on Duty

In Wooden v. Raveling (1998) 61 Cal. App. 4th 1035, 71 Cal. Rptr. 2d 891 , plaintiff property owner sued defendant car driver for negligent infliction of emotional distress on a direct victim theory. The lawsuit was based on the following set of alleged facts: plaintiff was standing on her property when defendant drove his car in a negligent manner on the adjoining street; defendant's car collided with a second car; the collision caused defendant's car to be propelled, at high speed, onto plaintiff's property so that it appeared that defendant's car would strike plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that although the car did not strike her, she was placed in fear of being severely injured or killed by it and that she suffered great mental pain and suffering as a result. The trial court sustained defendant's demurrer without leave to amend based on the opinion in Bro v. Glaser (1994) 22 Cal. App. 4th 1398, 27 Cal. Rptr. 2d 894 . Bro proclaimed a two-pronged test which Bro stated should be applied in all nonimpact, noninjury, nonbystander negligent infliction of emotional distress (NIED) cases: preexisting relationship plus outrageous conduct.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that while the result in Bro seemed correct in view of the particular facts of that case, the two-pronged test it announced was hopelessly inconsistent with the great weight of other authority, including several Supreme Court cases (61 Cal. App. 4th 1035, 1037) . The court stated that none of the controlling Supreme Court precedents, Potter v. Firestone & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 , Burgess v. Superior Court (1992) 2 Cal. 4th 1064, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 615, 831 P.2d 1197 , Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Med. Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 , suggested an outrageous conduct component for an NIED claim; instead they treat an NIED claim as simply a species of negligence in which damages caused by a breach of duty are compensable. Nor did any of these Supreme Court precedents limit direct victim NIED recovery to instances of preexisting relationship; instead they list three possible origins for the necessary duty: duty imposed by law, duty assumed by defendant, or preexisting relationship between defendant and plaintiff (61 Cal. App. 4th 1035, 1042) .

In Zavala v. Arce (1997) 58 Cal. App. 4th 915, 68 Cal. Rptr. 2d 571 , plaintiff appealed from a summary judgment in favor of her former obstetrician, in her damage action arising out of the in utero death of her baby almost three weeks after the delivery due date. She contended that the trial court erred in ruling as a matter of law she had not stated, and could not state a claim for direct victim emotional distress damages The court of appeal concluded that plaintiff's complaint was sufficient to constitute a professional negligence cause of action under which emotional distress damages were recoverable based on a direct victim theory. Because the professional malpractice alleged, if proved by a preponderance of the evidence, would constitute a breach of a duty of care owed to the mother as well as her post-term fetus, the court held that the mother stated a claim for recovery of direct victim emotional distress damages resulting from the breach of the duty. For public policy reasons, however, plaintiff's recoverable damages did not include emotional distress damages resulting from the loss of her child's affection, society, companionship and love, or other similar loss of filial consortium (58 Cal. App. 4th 915, 920) .

Phyllis P. v. Superior Court (1986) 183 Cal. App. 3d 1193, 228 Cal. Rptr. 776 , was a mandate proceeding arising out of an action against a school district and school authorities by a mother for damages for negligent and intentional infliction of emotional distress resulting from the sexual assault and rape of her eight-year-old daughter by a fellow pupil who had previously engaged in several incidents of sexual molestation against the daughter, both on and off school grounds. The school authorities had been informed of these prior incidents but had failed to notify the mother of them. The mother alleged that had she been informed of the earlier sexual assaults, she could have taken precautionary measures to prevent the rape that ultimately occurred and that, as a result of the defendants' failure to notify her, she suffered severe emotional distress because of both the rape and her having had to observe the subsequent physiological and psychological deterioration of her daughter. The trial court sustained a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend and dismissed the action. Plaintiff petitioned for a writ of mandate to compel its reinstatement. In directing that the writ issue, the court of appeal held that: (1) a special relationship existed between the defendants and the mother; (2) the defendants had a duty to notify the mother on learning of the first series of sexual assaults on the daughter; (3) the injuries to the mother from their failure to inform her were foreseeable; and (4) the mother's cause of action was properly based on her status as a direct victim of defendants' negligence, rather than on the injuries to the daughter (183 Cal. App. 3d 1193, 1196-1197) .

THE REQUIREMENT OF SENSORY AND CONTEMPORANEOUS OBSERVANCE OF THE ACCIDENT DOES NOT REQUIRE A VISUAL PERCEPTION OF THE IMPACT CAUSING THE DEATH OR INJURY IF PLAINTIFF HAS OTHERWISE ALLEGED FACTS SHOWING HE/SHE WAS A PERCIPIENT WITNESS TO THE ACCIDENT.

A. Necessity of Showing Plaintiff Was Percipient Witness. The requirement of sensory and contemporaneous observance of the injury to the third person does not require a visual perception of the impact causing the death or injury. It is sufficient if plaintiff shows that he or she was otherwise a percipient witness of the accident (Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 59, 76, 137 Cal. Rptr. 863, 562 P.2d 1022).

[Optional] B. Plaintiff Is Not Required to Comprehend Defendant's Negligence. The fact that plaintiff was unaware that defendant's conduct which inflicted the injury to the third person was negligent is not significant in determining whether plaintiff's emotional distress resulted from a direct emotional impact from the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident (Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 573, 583, 127 Cal. Rptr. 720).

[Optional] C. Injury Resulting From Sudden Occurrence Not Required. An injury need not have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by the plaintiff. All that is required is observation of the defendant's conduct and the injury and contemporaneous awareness that the defendant's conduct or lack thereof is causing harm (Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 167-170, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a demurrer to a complaint for negligent infliction of mental distress based on witnessing injury to a third party. This form asserts that the complaint alleges sufficient facts to support an award of damages for mental suffering to the bystander plaintiff in that it contains sufficient allegations of contemporaneous observance of the injury-producing event.

Counsel should insert argument in this form showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated.

In an appropriate case these points and authorities may be used in opposition to a demurrer supported by the points and authorities in § 153.33.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Necessity of Showing Plaintiff Was Percipient Witness

Krouse v. Graham (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 59, 137 Cal. Rptr. 863, 562 P.2d 1022 , involved an action brought by plaintiff husband for damages for the emotional suffering caused when defendant struck plaintiff's parked car, killing plaintiff's wife. The accident occurred while plaintiff was sitting in the driver's seat and his wife and a friend were closing the rear door of the car. Defendant rear-ended the car, pinning plaintiff's wife under the car. Although plaintiff did not see his wife struck and did not know the extent of her injuries, he had fully perceived the fact that she had been struck, since he knew her position an instant before the impact, observed defendant's vehicle approaching, and realized that the car must have struck her. The jury returned a special verdict for plaintiff, awarding damages for the resulting emotional suffering. On appeal, defendant argued for reversal because plaintiff admitted that he neither actually saw his wife being struck by defendant's car nor did he immediately observe the effect of the impact on her. In holding that this verdict must be set aside on other grounds, the Court noted one factor as stated in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , to be considered in determining whether a defendant owes a duty of due care with respect to the possible emotional suffering a plaintiff may have as a result of witnessing an injury to a third person, which is whether the shock the plaintiff suffered resulted from a direct emotional impact on the plaintiff from the sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident. The Court stated that this requirement does not demand a visual perception of the impact causing the death or injury, and found that under the circumstances of the case, plaintiff was a percipient witness to the impact causing his wife's injuries.

NOTE:

For a plaintiff to recover damages for emotional distress caused by observing the negligently inflicted injury of a third person, he or she must have been present at the scene of the injury-producing event at the time when it occurred, and must have been then aware that injury was being caused. The California Supreme Court has stated that this factor was present in each of its prior decisions upholding recovery for negligent infliction of emotional distress, thus reaffirming its holding in Krouse [Thing v. La Chusa (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 644, 668, 257 Cal. Rptr. 865, 771 P.2d 814] .

[b] Plaintiff Is Not Required to Comprehend Defendant's Negligence

In Mobaldi v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1976) 55 Cal. App. 3d 573, 127 Cal. Rptr. 720 , defendants demurred to plaintiff's complaint which attempted to allege in part a cause of action for negligent infliction of emotional distress. After the demurrer was filed, both parties filed declarations of fact which were considered by the trial court in determining whether the complaint was amenable to state a cause of action. The allegations of the complaint and the declarations of fact showed that plaintiff, Mrs. Ramsburg, had acted as a foster parent for plaintiff Mobaldi who had been born with a defect which was thought likely to result in the child's early death. The child, who had become completely integrated into the family of the Ramsburgs, had corrective surgery which was considered to have greatly improved the child's health. Thereafter, Mrs. Ramsburg had taken the child to defendant hospital for certain tests related to the defect. Because he was afraid to be alone, the child was held by Mrs. Ramsburg while he was given an injection of glucose solution which was 10 times the strength of what it should have been. After this injection, and while plaintiff physicians were out of the room and Mrs. Ramsburg still held him, the child went into convulsions, became comatose, and suffered severe irreversible brain damage. Because of her presence and the damage to the child, Mrs. Ramsburg suffered physical injury which resulted from severe emotional distress in witnessing the destruction of the child. However, it was apparent that Mrs. Ramsburg was unaware that it was the defendants' negligence which caused the injuries to the child. For that reason as well as the lack of a family tie to the child [see § 153.32], the trial court sustained the demurrer without leave to amend and entered judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appealed and the court of appeal reversed. The court stated, with respect to Mrs. Ramsburg's lack of understanding of defendants' negligence, the requirement of sensory and contemporaneous observance of the accident, involved the test of foreseeability and that foreseeability depends on what the emotionally traumatized plaintiff observes. The court further stated that it is observation of consequences of the negligent act and not observation of the act itself which is likely to cause trauma so severe as to result in physical injury. Thus, the court held that so long as the plaintiff's observation of the results of the defendants' infliction of harm on another was direct and contemporaneous, there was no significance in the plaintiff's lack of awareness that the defendants' conduct inflicting the injury was negligent. The court expressly disapproved gratuitous dictum in Hair v. Monterey County (1975) 45 Cal. App. 3d 538, 544, 119 Cal. Rptr. 639 , requiring that the tortious event be susceptible of understanding observance by the plaintiff. The court stated that the requirement as stated in Jansen v. Children's Hosp. Med. Ctr. (1973) 31 Cal. App. 3d 22, 24, 106 Cal. Rptr. 883 , that the event causing the injury is one which can be the subject of sensory perception is sufficient to avoid potentially infinite liability. The additional requirement of understanding observance is not necessary since that requirement would limit liability and loss shift only fortuitously, and thus, would possess no rational relationship to the reasons for the Dillon requirement.

[c] Injury Resulting From Sudden Occurrence Not Required

In Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 , decedent, plaintiffs' son, became ill when he was in the custody of a county juvenile hall. Plaintiffs visited decedent while he was at the infirmary, and observed that he was very ill and in severe pain. Plaintiff mother expressed her concern to the juvenile hall authorities, who attempted to reassure her about decedent's condition. When plaintiff mother thereafter visited decedent, his condition had worsened. She became very distressed and concerned, and requested that decedent be allowed to see the family physician. Her request was refused, and she was sent to one of the defendants, who again reassured her and stated that the decedent had to remain in the infirmary. Each of plaintiff mother's subsequent repeated requests to defendant, various nurses, and other doctors that she be allowed to take decedent, various nurses, and other doctors that she be allowed to take decedent to her private physician were refused. Finally, decedent died, and plaintiffs sued. One of the causes of action set forth in plaintiffs' complaint was for negligent infliction of emotional distress. Defendants demurred to that cause of action among others, and the trial court sustained the demurrers without leave to amend. Plaintiffs sought a writ of mandate to compel the court to set aside the demurrer.

The Supreme Court granted the writ, and enumerating the guidelines set out in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740-741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 , held that the decedent's injury need not have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by plaintiff mother (39 Cal. 3d 159, 167-168) . The Court disapproved Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , to the extent that it implicitly approved the sudden occurrence requirement, stating that it is an unwarranted restriction on the Dillon guidelines (39 Cal. 3d 159, 168) . The Court held that if there is observation of the defendant's conduct and the injury, and contemporaneous awareness that the defendant's conduct or lack thereof is causing harm, recovery is permitted (39 Cal. 3d 159, 170) .

[d] Plaintiff's Voluntary Presence Does Not Preclude Recovery

The facts and procedural background of Ochoa v. Superior Court (1985) 39 Cal. 3d 159, 216 Cal. Rptr. 661, 703 P.2d 1 , are discussed in § 153.50[3][c]. The Supreme Court held that the decedent's injury need not have been the result of a brief and sudden occurrence viewed contemporaneously by plaintiff mother (39 Cal. 3d 159, 167-168) . Defendants suggested that plaintiffs should not receive the benefit of the rule set out in Dillon v. Legg (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 728, 740-741, 69 Cal. Rptr. 72, 441 P.2d 912 [see § 153.31[3][b]], because they were voluntarily present at a location where distressing incidents were likely to occur. The Court noted that Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , implied the rule that recovery by a plaintiff voluntarily at the scene of a traumatic event may be precluded. However, the Court held that such a requirement undercuts the very foundation on which the Dillon case rested because a distinction between the voluntary and involuntary presence of a close relative of the injured or dead person appears to relieve the defendant of liability for the very risk which should have been foreseen. Thus, the Court disapproved Justus to the extent that it makes a contrary suggestion (39 Cal. 3d 159, 171) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Necessity of Showing Plaintiff Was Percipient Witness

In Ausin v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1979) 89 Cal. App. 3d 354, 152 Cal. Rptr. 420 , the court of appeal reversed the order of the trial court granting summary judgment on plaintiff's cause of action to recover damages for emotional distress resulting from the death of plaintiff's unborn child. The court distinguished Justus v. Atchison (1977) 19 Cal. 3d 564, 585, 139 Cal. Rptr. 97, 565 P.2d 122 , where the plaintiff only alleged that he was in the delivery room and the Supreme Court concluded that he did not and could not have seen any negligent acts. In this case, the plaintiff alleged that he learned of death by his own observation of the cessation of life in the fetus and that his shock and distress were occasioned by that sensory and contemporaneous realization of the death.

Proc. § 437c] in Action for Negligent Infliction of Emotional Distress--Injury to Third Party--Triable Issue of Fact Exists Regarding Whether Defendant Owed Duty Directly to Plaintiff, Based on Physician-Patient Relationship or on Duty to Plaintiff Assumed by Defendant

[Caption. See § 153.44.]

PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE A TRIABLE ISSUE OF FACT EXISTS REGARDING WHETHER DEFENDANT OWED A DUTY DIRECTLY TO PLAINTIFF, BASED ON A PHYSICIAN-PATIENT RELATIONSHIP OR ON AN ASSUMED DUTY BASED ON DEFENDANT'S UTILIZATION OF PLAINTIFF AS INSTRUMENTALITY OF TREATMENT OF THE INJURED PERSON, THE BREACH OF WHICH WOULD SUPPORT A CAUSE OF ACTION FOR NEGLIGENT INFLICTION OF EMOTIONAL DISTRESS.

A. Summary Judgment Is Proper Only if There Are No Triable Issues as to Any Material Fact. A motion for summary judgment may be granted only if there is no triable issues as to any issue of material fact (Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(c)).

B. Defendant May Owe Plaintiff Duty of Care Arising Out of Special Relationship or Assumed Duty. A hospital or doctor may be liable for emotional distress resulting from an injury to another if the conduct breaches a duty owed directly to the person who suffers the distress. Such a duty may arise from a physician-patient relationship between plaintiff and defendant, or may be assumed by the hospital or doctor. An assumed duty may arise from the utilization of plaintiff as an active instrumentality in the treatment of the third person (Jacoves v. United Merch. Corp. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 109-111, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment that asserts that the plaintiff has not stated a cause of action, because the defendant owed no direct duty of care to plaintiff. The basis for the opposition to the motion is that a triable issue of fact exists regarding whether a direct duty was either created by a physician-patient relationship between plaintiff and defendant, or assumed by defendant's utilization of plaintiff as an active instrumentality in the treatment of another.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should emphasize those facts tending to show that defendant had a physician-patient relationship with plaintiff, not merely with the injured person, or that defendant made plaintiff an active instrumentality of the treatment of the injured person. In addition, counsel should attach affidavits or declarations that support the memorandum [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c(b)].

For memoranda of points and authorities regarding summary judgment motions generally, see Ch. 221, Summary Judgments .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant May Owe Plaintiff Duty of Care Arising Out of Special Relationship or Assumed Duty

In Jacoves v. United Merch. Corp. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 11 Cal. Rptr. 2d 468 , parents sued a psychiatric hospital where their suicidal son was treated, alleging that they suffered emotional distress damages as a result of defendants' negligent treatment of their son. The complaint alleged that, during defendants' treatment of their son, the hospital required them to contract with the hospital for the son's care, even though the son was then an adult. The parents also alleged that the doctors who treated their son had involved them in their son's treatment (for instance, in family therapy sessions). The trial court granted the hospital's motion for summary judgment, and plaintiffs appealed.

The court of appeal reversed, holding that the defendants' summary judgment motion had not negated the complaint's factual allegations that could support a finding that the defendants had owed a duty of care directly to plaintiffs (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 110) . The court rejected defendants' contention, based on Schwarz v. Regents of Univ. of Cal. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 149, 276 Cal. Rptr. 470 [see § 153.37[4][b]], that a contract between a caregiver and a parent for the treatment of a child does not create a duty toward the parent. The court of appeal found that the case before it was distinguishable from Schwarz because of the allegations that plaintiffs' participation in their son's treatment was much greater than that of the plaintiff in Schwarz (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 109-110) . The court found that the facts before it more closely resembled the facts that supported the finding that a direct duty based on a physician-patient relationship existed in Marlene F. v. Affiliated Psychiatric Medical Clinic, Inc. (1989) 48 Cal. 3d 583, 590, 257 Cal. Rptr. 98, 770 P.2d 278 [see § 153.49[3][b]].

The court also held that a triable issue of fact existed concerning whether defendants assumed a duty toward plaintiffs by their conduct in involving plaintiffs in the treatment of their son. The court likened the allegations in the complaint to those in Molien v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1980) 27 Cal. 3d 916, 923, 167 Cal. Rptr. 831, 616 P.2d 813 [see § 153.49[3][a]], in which the California Supreme Court held that a doctor had assumed a duty to a patient's husband by directing that the patient tell the husband of a diagnosis (which turned out to be inaccurate) that the patient had a sexually transmitted disease. The court held that an assumed duty similar to the one found in Molien could arise from the utilization of the parents as active instrumentalities in a patient's treatment (9 Cal. App. 4th 88, 109) .

15-153 California Points & Authorities § 153.52

§ 153.52 Opposing Motion for Summary Judgment [Code Civ. Proc. § 437c] in Action to Recover Damages for Emotional Distress Caused by Fear of Future Cancer Due to Exposure to Carcinogen--Likelihood of Cancer Not Required to Recover Emotional Distress Damages Caused by Fear of Cancer Because Defendant's Conduct in Causing Plaintiff's Exposure Constituted Oppression, Fraud, or Malice

[Caption. See § 153.44.]

PLAINTIFF IS NOT REQUIRED TO ESTABLISH THAT CANCER IS MORE LIKELY THAN NOT TO RESULT FROM HIS/HER EXPOSURE TO [CARCINOGENIC or TOXIC] SUBSTANCES CAUSED BY DEFENDANT IN ORDER TO RECOVER EMOTIONAL DISTRESS DAMAGES CAUSED BY FEAR OF CANCER, BECAUSE DEFENDANT'S CONDUCT CONSTITUTED [OPPRESSION or FRAUD or MALICE] AS DEFINED IN CIVIL CODE SECTION 3294, REQUIRING PLAINTIFF TO ESTABLISH ONLY AN ACTUAL RISK OF CANCER THAT IS SIGNIFICANT.

Defendant's Oppressive, Fraudulent, or Malicious Conduct in Exposing Plaintiff to Carcinogen Makes Proof of Likelihood of Cancer Unnecessary to Support Recovery for Fear of Cancer. If defendant's conduct in exposing plaintiff to a toxic substance constitutes oppression, fraud, or malice under Civil Code Section 3294, plaintiff need not establish that cancer is likely in order to recover emotional distress damages for fear of cancer; an actual risk of cancer that is significant can support recovery of those damages (Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 999-1000, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795).

These points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for summary judgment that asserts that plaintiff did not suffer any present physical injury or illness from his or her exposure to a toxic substance and has not shown that he or she is more likely than not to develop cancer, and therefore is precluded from recovering emotional distress damages for fear of cancer. The ground of opposition is that plaintiff can establish that defendant's conduct constituted oppression, fraud, or malice under Civ. Code § 3294, making the "more likely than not" threshold inapplicable [Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 999-1000, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795] .

In an appropriate case, these points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to the motion supported by the points and authorities in § 153.38.

Counsel should insert argument in this form, showing the relationship between the facts of the case and the points of law stated. Thus, counsel should discuss facts supporting the contention that defendant's conduct constitutes oppression, fraud, or malice under Civ. Code § 3294. In addition, even if oppression, fraud, or malice can be established, counsel must be prepared to show that plaintiff's actual risk of cancer is significant in order to recover [Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 999, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Defendant's Oppressive, Fraudulent, or Malicious Conduct in Exposing Plaintiff to Carcinogen Makes Proof of Likelihood of Cancer Unnecessary to Support Recovery for Fear of Cancer

The facts and procedural background of Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 Cal. 4th 965, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 550, 863 P.2d 795 , are discussed in § 153.38[3][a]. The Court held that generally, emotional distress damages based on a fear of cancer may be recovered absent present physical injury or illness only on a showing that the feared cancer will more likely than not occur. However, the Court also held that a plaintiff need not meet this standard if the plaintiff pleads and proves that the defendant's conduct in causing the exposure amounts to "oppression, fraud, or malice" as defined in Civ. Code § 3294. Once the plaintiff has made this showing, the plaintiff must still demonstrate that his or her fear of cancer is reasonable, genuine, and serious in order to recover damages. The mere ingestion of a carcinogen, or even a significant increase in the risk of cancer, is insufficient; the plaintiff must show that his or her actual risk of cancer is "significant" before recovery will be allowed (6 Cal. 4th 965, 999-1000) .

CHAPTER 155 MOTIONS AFTER TRIAL
PART I. INTRODUCTION

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.02

§ 155.02 Governing Law

[1] Motions for Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict (JNOV)

Motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, also known as motion JNOV, are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 629. Time for serving and filing the motion is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 659. Code Civ. Proc. § 664 governs the entry of judgment when a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is pending.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4) and 904.2(e) govern appeals from orders denying the motion. When the parties consent, Gov. Code § 69741.1 allows the motion to be heard anywhere in the state by the judge who presided at trial.

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.108(d) and 8.752 govern the filing of an appeal after an order denying the motion.

[2] Motions for New Trial

Motions for new trial are governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 655-663.2 and 914. A new trial is defined in Code Civ. Proc. § 656. Grounds on which the motion may be granted are set forth in Code Civ. Proc. § 657.

The time limits for serving and filing the notice of intention to move for a new trial are set out in Code Civ. Proc. § 659. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660-662 govern the hearing and disposition of the motion, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4) and 904.2(e) cover appeals from orders granting the motion.

Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1600, governs the notice of intention to move for a new trial. Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.108(b) and 8.752(a), cover extension of time to appeal when notice of intention to move for new trial is filed. A new motion for trial following a bifurcated trial is governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1591.

[3] Motions to Vacate Judgment and Enter Another Judgment

Motions to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment are governed by Code Civ. Proc. §§ 663 and 663a. The grounds on which the motion may be made are contained in Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1), (2). The contents of the motion and the time within which the motion must be filed are governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 663a.

The hearing of a motion to set aside and vacate a judgment and to enter another and different judgment is governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1602.

Extensions of time to appeal from a judgment when notice of intention to move to vacate a judgment and enter another and different judgment are governed by Cal. Rules of Ct., Rules 8.104(b) and 8.752(b).

§ 155.03 How to Use the Forms in This Chapter

[1] Page Limits on Points and Authorities

One of the more significant drafting requirements to keep in mind are page limits: supporting and opposing memoranda of points and authorities must not exceed 15 pages, or 20 pages in summary judgment or summary adjudication proceeding. A reply or closing memorandum may not exceed 10 pages. Exhibits, declarations, attachments, a table of contents, a table of authorities, and the proof of service are excluded from these page limits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(d)]. Any party must obtain leave of court to file a longer memorandum [see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1113(e)]. These and other drafting requirements are discussed in further detail in Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

[2] Using the Forms to Build a Draft Memorandum

Most of the forms included in this chapter are designed to be combined with other points and authorities to form a complete memorandum. For example, in Part II, Subpart B, the forms relating to motions for a new trial include "general" forms supporting or opposing a motion for new trial based on one of the statutory grounds. More specific points and authorities relate to individual issues or factual variations within one of these statutory grounds, and are designed to be combined, when appropriate, with the relevant general form. Thus, one of the general forms may be used alone, in the absence of either more specific issues or fact variations or another general ground. The more specific forms, however, are not intended for use alone, but must be combined with the relevant general form to create a more complete memorandum.

For discussion on how to select and use the forms in the publication generally, in order to build a draft memorandum and complete the draft, with detailed discussion of all drafting requirements and strategic or stylistic considerations, see Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs . For a skeletal form for memorandumfor use in creating a properly formatted outline in which to compile relevant forms from this publication, see also Ch. 1, Writing Legal Memoranda and Briefs .

PART I. INTRODUCTION

§ 155.04 Memoranda Supporting or Opposing Post Trial Motions

With respect to motions for new trial, the moving party must serve and file a memorandum in support of the motion within 10 days after filing the notice of intention to move for a new trial. Within 10 days thereafter, the opposing party may serve and file a corresponding memorandum in reply [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1600(a)]. If the moving party does not serve and file the prescribed memorandum, the court may deny the motion without a hearing on the merits [Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1600(b)]. The trial court has discretion to deny the motion without considering it based on the moving party's failure to timely file the memorandum [see In re Marriage of Steiner (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 519, 529, 11 Cal. Rptr. 3d 671 (in marital dissolution action, trial court did not abuse its discretion by denying wife's motion for new trial as untimely, where wife failed to comply with 10-day requirement under former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 236.5) (now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1600)].

When a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is combined with a motion for new trial, the points and authorities for each should be filed separately. If combined, the memorandum should clearly indicate in the caption that it supports both motions. If this is not done, the court may strike the motion for new trial on the ground that there is no memorandum of points and authorities filed supporting it [Clay v. Lagiss (1956) 143 Cal. App. 2d 441, 450, 299 P.2d 1025] .

THE MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE A MOTION FOR DIRECTED VERDICT SHOULD HAVE BEEN GRANTED HAD A PREVIOUS MOTION BEEN MADE AND BECAUSE THERE IS NO SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE OR REASONABLE INFERENCES DRAWN THEREFROM TO SUPPORT A VERDICT IN THE PREVAILING PARTY'S FAVOR.

A. Judgment Notwithstanding the Verdict. Before the expiration of its power to rule on a motion for new trial, the court, on motion of a party against whom a verdict has been rendered, must render judgment in favor of an aggrieved party notwithstanding the verdict whenever a motion for directed verdict for the aggrieved party should have been granted had a previous motion been made (Code Civ. Proc. § 629).

B. Grounds Same as for Directed Verdict. The grounds for granting a judgment notwithstanding the verdict are the same as for granting a motion for directed verdict (see Trammell v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 538, 556, 129 Cal. Rptr. 361).

C. Lack of Substantial Conflict in Evidence. The primary requirement for the granting of the motion is that there is no substantial conflict in the evidence (Robinson v. North American Life & Cas. Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 111, 118, 30 Cal. Rptr. 57).

D. Lack of Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict. The court will grant a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict only if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is no substantial evidence or reasonable inference drawn therefrom to support the verdict (Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 104, 110, 120 Cal. Rptr. 681, 534 P.2d 377).

[EITHER, if motion by defendant when no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support plaintiff's verdict]

E. No Evidence of Sufficient Substantiality to Support Verdict in Plaintiff's Favor. Defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is granted when and only when, disregarding conflicting evidence on behalf of defendants and giving plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, no evidence of sufficient substantiality supports a verdict in plaintiff's favor (Reynolds v. Willson (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 94, 99, 331 P.2d 48 ; Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf etc. Co. (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 499, 501, 50 P.2d 803).

[OR, if motion by defendant when plaintiff failed to prove essential element of his or her cause of action]

E. Plaintiff's Failure to Prove Essential Element of Cause of Action. A motion by defendant for judgment notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff will be granted when plaintiff has failed to prove an element essential to his or her cause of action (Kerby v. Elk Grove Union H.S. Dist. (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 246, 36 P.2d 431).

[OR, if motion by plaintiff when evidence dictates determination in plaintiff's favor]

E. Evidence Dictates Determination in Plaintiff's Favor. Plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict will be granted if the evidence, as a matter of law, dictates a determination of all the issues in the case in his or her favor (see Jach v. Edson (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 99, 62 Cal. Rptr. 925).

[OR, if motion by plaintiff when no substantial support given to defense of defendant]

E. No Substantial Support Given to Defense of Defendant. The court may grant plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, if, on the whole evidence, the cause of action alleged in the complaint is supported, and no substantial support is given to the defense alleged by defendant (Gordon v. Strawther Enterprises, Inc. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 515, 78 Cal. Rptr. 417).

[2] Comments

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Code Civ. Proc. § 629.

The filing of a notice of appeal from the judgment does not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to grant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict [Foggy v. Ralph F. Clark & Associates, Inc. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1204, 1210-1213, 238 Cal. Rptr. 130 (rejecting contrary holding in Weisenburg v. Molina (1976) 58 Cal. App. 3d 478, 486, 129 Cal. Rptr. 813)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show the propriety of granting the judgment notwithstanding the verdict in light of the substantive issues involved in the particular cause of action or defense. For instance, in a negligence action, counsel might argue that the court should grant the motion because the record is devoid of any evidence from which the jury could reasonably find negligence on the part of the moving party [see Scott v. Fuller Co. (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 501, 507, 107 P.2d 55] . Similarly, in the contest of a will on the ground of undue influence, counsel might argue that the evidence for the contestant goes no further than perhaps to justify the suspicion of undue influence, but it has no substantial force as evidence that the suspicion is well-founded [see Estate of Leahy (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 301, 306, 54 P.2d 704] .

Counsel should cite case authority relevant to the particular cause of action or defense to support his or her contentions. Care should be taken to differentiate between cases that deal with defendant's motions and those that deal with plaintiff's motions, since the standards for granting the motions differ depending on whether plaintiff or defendant is the moving party.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of a notice of motion and order relating to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 629, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.30 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Grounds Same as For Directed Verdict

Trammell v. Western Union Tel. Co. (1976) 57 Cal. App. 3d 538, 129 Cal. Rptr. 361 , was an action in which an addressee of a telegram sued the telegraph company for negligence in the nondelivery of a telegram intended to inform the addressee to return to work. The telegram had allegedly been delivered to the wrong person, causing plaintiff to be terminated by his employer. Plaintiff further alleged that defendant was motivated by malice and oppression in misrepresenting to plaintiff's former employer that the telegram had been properly delivered. The jury found for plaintiff, awarding him compensatory damages of $13,500 and punitive damages of $50,000. The court then granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of punitive damages with an alternative order granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. The court denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of compensatory damages. Plaintiff appealed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and the alternative order granting a new trial. Defendant appealed from the judgment as originally entered relating to punitive damages and from the portion of the judgment awarding compensatory damages in excess of $500.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of punitive damages, but reversed the judgment for compensatory damages to the extent of recovery above $500 (57 Cal. App. 3d 538, 558) . Noting that a judgment notwithstanding the verdict should be granted only if a motion for directed verdict should have been granted, the court stated that the record failed to show substantial evidence that Western Union's employees acted with either malice or oppression in not providing information to correct or show the mistake at an earlier date (57 Cal. App. 3d 538, 556-558) . The court explained that a directed verdict or judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be sustained on appeal only when it can be said as a matter of law that no other reasonable conclusion is legally deducible from the evidence and that any other holding would be so lacking in evidentiary support that the reviewing court would be compelled to reverse it or the trial court would be required to set it aside as a matter of law (57 Cal. App. 3d 538, 556-557) .

[b] Lack of Substantial Conflict in Evidence

Robinson v. North American Life & Cas. Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 111, 30 Cal. Rptr. 57 , was an action brought by decedent's widow to determine whether or not the decedent had coverage under a group life insurance policy issued by defendant. The policy only covered those who were actively at work on the effective date of the policy. For those who were not actively at work on that date, coverage became effective on the date of return to active work. After trial by jury, plaintiff was denied recovery. The court also denied her motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and in the alternative for a new trial. She appealed from the denial of the motion.

The court of appeal stated that the cardinal requirement for the granting of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is that there is no substantial conflict in the evidence. However, in this case, a substantial conflict in the evidence existed as to whether or not the decedent had returned to active work after the effective date of the policy. Therefore, the court held that the trial court's denial of the motion was proper (215 Cal. App. 2d 111, 118) .

[c] Lack of Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict

Hauter v. Zogarts (1975) 14 Cal. 3d 104, 120 Cal. Rptr. 681, 534 P.2d 377 , concerned a products liability action on three theories of liability: misrepresentation, breach of express and implied warranty, and strict liability in tort based on defective design of defendant's product, a golf ball driving device. While using the device, plaintiff was seriously injured when a golf ball struck him in the left temple. After the jury found for defendant, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Defendant appealed, claiming that substantial evidence supported the jury's verdict.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict. It held that the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may properly be granted only if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is no substantial evidence to support the verdict (14 Cal. 3d 104, 110) . The Court noted, however, that even though it was bound to view the evidence in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, its review of the record disclosed no evidence nor any reasonable inference therefrom that supported the jury's verdict (14 Cal. 3d 104, 111) . The evidence led the Court to a contrary conclusion--that the plaintiff should recover as a matter of law under each cause of action (14 Cal. 3d 104, 111) . The Court then remanded the case for an ascertainment of damages (14 Cal. 3d 104, 121) .

[d] No Evidence of Sufficient Substantiality to Support Verdict in Plaintiff's Favor

Reynolds v. Willson (1958) 51 Cal. 2d 94, 331 P.2d 48 , involved an action for personal injuries to a child who, while trespassing on defendant's land, fell into defendant's partially filled swimming pool. Plaintiff suffered considerable brain damage. Through his father as guardian ad litem, plaintiff sued defendant for damages and obtained a jury verdict in the sum of $50,000. Defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, noting that defendant's motion can be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence on behalf of the defendants and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, no evidence of sufficient substantiality supports a verdict in plaintiff's favor (51 Cal. 2d 94, 99) . After reviewing the record, the Court concluded that there was sufficiently substantial evidence to support the verdict on the theories of liability raised by plaintiff (51 Cal. 2d 94, 106) . The elements of the attractive nuisance doctrine and the trap theory had been present (51 Cal. 2d 94, 100-101) . The Court then affirmed the order denying the motion (51 Cal. 2d 94, 106) .

Hamakawa v. Crescent Wharf etc. Co. (1935) 4 Cal. 2d 499, 50 P.2d 803 , was an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff while he was about to board a freighter docked at a municipal pier. Defendant, a stevedoring company, was loading cargo when an empty loading sling caused a bale of paper to fall onto plaintiff. The jury awarded damages to plaintiff. Defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was denied, and it appealed.

The Supreme Court held that a judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper and reversed the lower court's order. The Court stated that if the court had granted the motion for a directed verdict, defendant is entitled to a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The Court said that the trial court should have granted a directed verdict for the defendant if, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in plaintiff's favor. The Court concluded that defendant owed plaintiff no legal duty except to refrain from inflicting any willful or wanton injury and to conduct its activities with reasonable care for his safety after it knew or should have known of plaintiff's presence (4 Cal. 2d 499, 501) . Since plaintiff was a trespasser and defendant had no reason to expect plaintiff to be on the premises, the Court held that plaintiff was not entitled to recover as a matter of law (4 Cal. 2d 499, 503) . It then reversed the lower court's order denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff (4 Cal. 2d 499, 504) .

[e] Plaintiff's Failure to Prove Essential Element of Cause of Action

Kerby v. Elk Grove Union H.S. Dist. (1934) 1 Cal. App. 2d 246, 36 P.2d 431 , was an action for damages for death of a high school student hit by a basketball during physical education class. The suit was based on the alleged negligence of the instructor in failing to adequately supervise the game. After a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, the trial court granted judgment for defendant, notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, stating that the rule regarding the consideration of the evidence authorizing the rendering of a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is exactly the same as that which applies to a motion for nonsuit (1 Cal. App. 2d 246, 250) . A nonsuit may be granted for failure of the defendant to prove a sufficient cause only when there is no substantial evidence to support some essential issue on which plaintiff's right to recover judgment depends (1 Cal. App. 2d 246, 250) . Since the student had a chronic aneurism that the instructor did not know he possessed, the court held that the instructor was not negligent in allowing the student to participate in the game (1 Cal. App. 2d 246, 252) . There was no evidence that the instructor omitted to perform any duty at the time of the accident. Therefore, the judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper (1 Cal. App. 2d 246, 253) .

[f] Evidence Dictates Determination in Plaintiff's Favor

Jach v. Edson (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 62 Cal. Rptr. 925 , was an action in which plaintiff was injured in a scuffle with defendant that occurred in a high school gymnasium. The action was based on negligence and assault and battery. A jury trial resulted in a verdict for defendant. The court granted plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of liability and granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the issue of damages. Defendant appealed.

The court of appeal dismissed the appeal from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict since the order granting the motion was not a judgment, and therefore, was not appealable (255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 98) . However, since a court can consider the propriety of an order for judgment notwithstanding the verdict prior to the entry of judgment, the court considered the validity of the order. The court noted that the trial court may enter judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of the plaintiff if the evidence, as a matter of law, dictates a determination of all the issues in the case in his or her favor. However, a trial court has no authority to enter multiple final judgments determining multiple issues between the same parties to an action (255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 99) . Therefore, it was error for the trial court to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of liability and a new trial on the issues of damages (255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 100) .

It should be noted however, that the court of appeal in Gordon v. Strawther Enterprises, Inc. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 78 Cal. Rptr. 417 (discussed in [g], below), held that the trial court properly granted a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of liability and a motion for new trial on the issue of damages (273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 517-518) .

[g] No Substantial Support Given to Defense of Defendant

Gordon v. Strawther Enterprises, Inc. (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 78 Cal. Rptr. 417 , involved an action for injuries resulting to a child who fell into the swimming pool of an apartment complex. Plaintiff sued the corporation, Strawther Enterprises, Inc., the legal owner of the apartment complex, and Big North Enterprises, Inc., which had entered into an agreement to purchase the complex at the time of the accident and was the equitable owner in possession and control of the complex. The jury rendered a verdict for $500,000 in favor of plaintiff against Strawther, but rendered a verdict that plaintiff take nothing as against defendant Big North. The trial court granted a new trial to plaintiff as against Big North on both the issues of liability and damages and granted a new trial to Strawther on the question of damages. The court denied plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict as against Big North. All parties appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the denial of the judgment notwithstanding the verdict in favor of Big North and remanded the case with instructions to the trial court to render judgment in favor of plaintiff, leaving the issue of damages to be determined on retrial (273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 519) . In reversing the denial of judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court stated that plaintiff's motion may be granted if, on the whole evidence, the cause of action alleged in the complaint is supported, and no substantial support is given to the defense alleged by the defendant. The court noted that it was clear from all the evidence in the case that Big North's act or omission was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries since Big North was in possession and control of the premises and failed to secure the gate to the pool, thus violating a city ordinance (273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 515) . The court also held that the granting of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of liability and the granting of a new trial on the issue of damages was within the discretion of the trial court (273 Cal. App. 2d 504, 517-518) .

It should be noted however, that the court of appeal in Jach v. Edson (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 62 Cal. Rptr. 925 (discussed in [f], above), held that it was error for the trial court to enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of liability and an order granting a new trial on the issue of damages (255 Cal. App. 2d 96, 99) .

[h] Inherently Incredible Evidence Ignored

Foggy v. Ralph F. Clark & Associates, Inc. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1204, 238 Cal. Rptr. 130 , was an action by a husband and wife against a real estate corporation engaged in the business of real estate appraisal and two of its employees for damages for negligence and fraud in appraising real property to be used as security for the repayment of a loan to be made by plaintiffs to the property owner, and which was made on the basis of the appraisal. The jury returned a verdict for plaintiffs against the corporation only. The trial court, having determined that the testimony of a particular witness in support of the verdict on the issue of damages did not constitute substantial evidence and was inherently incredible, granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground there was no substantial evidence that plaintiffs had suffered any damage. The court also granted in part and denied in part a motion for new trial. Judgment was entered for defendant corporation notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiffs, and plaintiffs appealed.

Although the court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and affirmed the order granting a new trial, it upheld the propriety of the trial court's determination that the testimony of the witness on the issue of damages was inherently incredible. The court said: (1) to be substantial the evidence supporting the verdict must be of ponderable legal significance; (2) the term "substantial" evidence is not synonymous with "any" evidence; (3) the evidence must be reasonable in nature, credible, and of solid value; and (4) in ruling on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the trial court may disregard evidence in support of the verdict if that evidence is "inherently incredible" (192 Cal. App. 3d 1204, 1214-1215) .

[a] Lack of Substantial Evidence to Support Verdict

In Viner v. Sweet (2004) 117 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 12 Cal. Rptr. 3d 533 , a legal malpractice action based on attorneys' negligently negotiating and drafting agreements for the sale of plaintiffs' ownership interest in a company they had founded and termination of their employment with the company, the trial court erred in denying the attorneys' motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict. As to the attorney's malpractice regarding the scope of the nonsolicitation, noncompetition and indemnity clauses and the absence of provisions for attorney's fees and for retention of their rights to stock dividends, plaintiffs presented no evidence at all, substantial or otherwise, indicating that but for attorney's negligence, it was more likely than not they would have obtained more favorable result in their negotiations (117 Cal. App. 4th 1218, 1226-1233) .

Clark v. Bellefonte Insurance Co. (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 326, 169 Cal. Rptr. 832 , involved an action by the owner of an automobile polishing company against his insurer involving claims connected with the theft of two automobiles.

The court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of the defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict for the insured since there was no substantial evidence that the failure to reimburse the plaintiff was a breach of contract (113 Cal. App. 3d 326, 335) .

Van Den Eikhof v. Hocker (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 900, 151 Cal. Rptr. 456 , was a personal injury action against a father whose daughter negligently drove his business car while on a personal trip. The court of appeal reversed the order denying defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict insofar as the order applied to the father (87 Cal. App. 3d 900, 906) . It stated that no substantial evidence existed to support the special finding of the jury that, at the time of the accident, the daughter was the agent of her father and acting within the scope of her authority (87 Cal. App. 3d 900, 902) .

In Washer v. Bank of America (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 501, 197 P.2d 202 , plaintiff, a former bank employee, sued Bank of America for libel and slander allegedly resulting from a press release issued by the bank's personnel director and vice-president. The release charged that plaintiff had falsified an expense account and was guilty of flagrant insubordination. The court affirmed judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict, stating that it was proper to grant the motion reasonable minds could draw but one inference and that inference pointed inevitably to the falsification of the expense account and the truth of the charge of insubordination (87 Cal. App. 2d 501, 507) .

Estate of Smethurst (1936) 15 Cal. App. 2d 322, 59 P.2d 830 , involved the contest of a will on the grounds that the testator was incapable of making a will due to intoxication. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for the proponents of the will notwithstanding the verdict, stating that the fact that the testator may have been under the influence of alcohol at the time he made his will did not invalidate the instrument unless he had no independent comprehension of what he was doing at the time (15 Cal. App. 2d 322, 331) . Since contestants failed to submit evidence on that issue, judgment for the proponents notwithstanding the verdict was proper (15 Cal. App. 2d 322, 336) .

[b] Plaintiff's Failure to Prove Essential Element of Cause of Action

Estate of Leahy (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 301, 54 P.2d 704 , was a contest of a will on the ground of undue influence. Judgment for the proponents of the will notwithstanding the verdict was affirmed. The court of appeal stated that the evidence for the contestant went no further than perhaps to justify the suspicion of undue influence and had no substantial force as evidence that the suspicion was well-founded (5 Cal. 2d 301, 306) . The court concluded that the trial court did not err in granting the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (5 Cal. 2d 301, 306) .

In Sukoff v. Lemkin (1988) 202 Cal. App. 3d 740, 249 Cal. Rptr. 42 , the court of appeal held that a trial court improperly denied a defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict in a legal malpractice action. The action arose out of legal representation during marital dissolution proceedings. The court found that the evidence was insufficient, as a matter of law, to support the verdict, which awarded $90,000 in compensatory damages to the plaintiff. The plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was negligent, that his conduct was the proximate cause of the alleged damages, or that the plaintiff actually suffered damages. The court stated that the purpose of a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is not to afford a review of the jury's deliberation but to prevent a miscarriage of justice in those cases in which the verdict rendered is without foundation. The scope of appellate review is to determine whether there is any substantial evidence, contradicted or not, supporting the jury's conclusions. While the denial of such a motion largely rests within the trial judge's discretion, the denial in this case was in error because the plaintiff failed to establish the necessary elements of her cause of action (202 Cal. App. 3d 740, 743-744) .

In Institute of Veterinary Pathology, Inc. v. California Health Laboratories, Inc. (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 111, 172 Cal. Rptr. 74 , plaintiff brought an action for damages based on intentional interference with prospective business advantage against a parent corporation and two subsidiaries. The trial court directed a verdict for the parent on the issue of punitive damages and later granted its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of compensatory damages. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that there was insufficient evidence to support a verdict in plaintiff's favor for compensatory damages, since plaintiff failed under both the alter ego and agency principles to establish the parent's responsibility for the conduct of its subsidiaries (116 Cal. App. 3d 111, 121) .

In Rollenhagen v. City of Orange (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 414, 172 Cal. Rptr. 49 , plaintiff, a self-employed auto mechanic, brought a defamation action against a broadcasting company and a former customer who gave a television interview in which she stated that she had been victimized by plaintiff. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict, stating that absent evidence of malice, the privilege of fair comment governed, and defendants were entitled to judgment as a matter of law (116 Cal. App. 3d 414, 428-429) .

In Borba v. Thomas (1977) 70 Cal. App. 3d 144, 138 Cal. Rptr. 565 , the purchaser of excess lands in a water district brought an action for fraud against the seller who stated that Bureau of Reclamation approval of the purchase price would be no problem. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict, noting that, as a matter of law, defendant had made no misrepresentation of fact, but had made a nonactionable expression of opinion, and if a misrepresentation had been made, plaintiff was not justified in relying on it (70 Cal. App. 3d 144, 155) .

Brock v. Southern Pacific Co. (1948) 86 Cal. App. 2d 182, 195 P.2d 66 , was an action for malicious prosecution of civil proceedings brought by defendants to establish plaintiff's insanity. The court of appeal affirmed the granting of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict as to defendants Southern Pacific Company and the Board of Trustees of Stanford University (86 Cal. App. 2d 182, 190) . Plaintiff's evidence failed to prove that the Southern Pacific Company doctors had instigated the institution of commitment proceedings or that the Stanford Hospital doctor, in recommending plaintiff's commitment, had acted without probable cause to believe plaintiff was mentally ill (86 Cal. App. 2d 182, 190-199) .

In McKellar v. Pendergast (1945) 68 Cal. App. 2d 485, 156 P.2d 950 , plaintiff sought to recover damages from the manager of her apartment building for personal injuries received when she slipped on an oily substance on the lobby floor. She maintained that defendant's agent, a janitor, was negligent in disposing garbage from individual apartments. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff, stating that plaintiff failed to prove the existence of every essential fact on which she relied, in that she failed to prove the causal connection between the alleged negligence and the resulting injury (68 Cal. App. 2d 485, 489) .

Scott v. Fuller Co. (1940) 41 Cal. App. 2d 501, 107 P.2d 55 , was an action by a subcontractor's employee for personal injuries sustained when he fell from a joist set up by the general contractor as part of a form for pouring concrete and not as a scaffold. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiff, stating that the record was devoid of any evidence from which the jury could reasonably find negligence on the part of respondents (41 Cal. App. 2d 501, 507) . If there was any breach of duty toward the appellant, the court stated that it was on the part of appellant's employer, the subcontractor, in failing to furnish appellant with equipment essential to safe working conditions (41 Cal. App. 2d 501, 507) .

[c] Evidence Dictates Determination in Plaintiff's Favor

Doyle v. McPherson (1939) 36 Cal. App. 2d 81, 97 P.2d 249 , involved an action to recover the balance due on a stock brokerage account. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs, notwithstanding the verdict, finding that plaintiffs had proved by substantial evidence the allegations of their complaint and that defendant had failed to offer evidence to prove his special defenses of the statute of limitations and damages by way of counterclaim (36 Cal. App. 2d 81, 84-85) .

THE MOTION FOR JUDGMENT NOTWITHSTANDING THE VERDICT SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE, VIEWED IN THE LIGHT MOST FAVORABLE TO THE PREVAILING PARTY, SUPPORTS THE VERDICT.

A. Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict. A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict of a jury should be denied if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is substantial evidence to support the verdict (Sweatman v. Department of Veterans Affairs (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 62, 68, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602, 18 P.3d 29 ; Clemmer v. Hartford Insurance Co. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 865, 878, 151 Cal. Rptr.

285, 587 P.2d 1098 ; Brandenburg v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 282, 284, 169 P.2d 909).

B. Power of Trial Court. In ruling on a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the court cannot weigh the evidence or judge the credibility of witnesses, but must accept the evidence tending to support the verdict as true, unless such evidence is inherently incredible on its face (Begnal v. Canfield & Associates, Inc. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 66, 72, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 ; Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 690, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 ; see also Sprigg v. Garcin (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 873, 164 Cal. Rptr. 677).

[EITHER]

C. Reasonable Inference Supports Verdict. The motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict will be denied if any reasonable inferences drawn from the evidence support the verdict (McFarland v. Voorheis-Trindle Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 698, 706, 343 P.2d 923 ; Gray v. Southern Pacific Co. (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 632, 645-646, 145 P.2d 561).

[AND/OR]

D. Substantial Conflict in Evidence. A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict will denied if there is a substantial conflict on a material issue in the evidence (Robinson v. North American Life & Cas. Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 111, 118, 30 Cal. Rptr. 57).

[AND/OR]

E. Evidence Presents Question for Jury's Determination. A judgment notwithstanding the verdict should be denied where the evidence presents a question for the jury's determination (Meyser v. American Bldg. Maintenance, Inc. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 933, 939-940, 149 Cal. Rptr. 808).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict under Code Civ. Proc. § 629.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should add further points and authorities showing the propriety of denying the motion in light of the substantive issues raised at trial. For instance, in a personal injury action based on negligence in which plaintiff has recovered damages and defendants have moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, plaintiff's counsel should demonstrate that there was a sufficient showing from which the jury could have reasonably concluded that defendants' actions constituted negligence. In preparing these points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The form may be used to oppose a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.10.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict

In Sweatman v. Department of Veterans Affairs (2001) 25 Cal. 4th 62, 68, 104 Cal. Rptr. 2d 602, 18 P.3d 29 , a veteran sued the Department of Veterans Affairs for breach of contract after the Department denied his claim for disability benefits for bipolar manic-depressive disorder because of misrepresentations in his application for coverage under the Cal-Vet home protection plan, including omission of his prior hospitalization for depression. At trial, the jury returned a special verdict finding that the Department did not breach its contract with the veteran. The trial court denied the veteran's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, which contended that the home protection plan constituted insurance subject to the mandatory provisions of the Insurance Code, including the requirement that disability insurance include an incontestability clause, stating that the legal basis supporting the jury's verdict was the law governing contracts, rescission, and false representation, impliedly rejecting the claim that the plan constituted insurance (25 Cal. 4th 62, 67) .

The California Supreme Court affirmed. The Court held that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be granted only if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is no substantial evidence in support (25 Cal. 4th 62, 68) . The veteran did not dispute that there was substantial evidence that his application for coverage under the plan did not disclose his history of depression and that the master agreement excluded coverage for preexisting conditions and permitted rescission for misstatements in the application. Further, the jury was not asked to resolve factual questions bearing on the question whether the plan constituted insurance nor did the parties offer conflicting evidence on that point, so that the question before the Court was one of law, to be addressed under a de novo standard of review. The Court then found that disability coverage under the Cal-Vet home protection plan is not disability insurance subject to the provisions of the Insurance Code generally governing such policies (25 Cal. 4th 62, 73) .

Clemmer v. Hartford Insurance Co. (1978) 22 Cal. 3d 865, 151 Cal. Rptr. 285, 587 P.2d 1098 , was an action brought by a widow and the minor son of the deceased to recover from the slayer's insurance company the amount of a wrongful death judgment obtained against the slayer. The slayer had previously been convicted of second-degree murder. The insurance company defended on the ground that the death arose from the slayer's willful act for which the insurer was not liable under a policy exclusion and Ins. Code § 533. Following a jury verdict, the trial court entered judgment against the defendant insurer, but it subsequently granted defendant insurer's motion for a new trial on the issue of whether the death was caused by a willful act. Plaintiffs appealed from the order granting a limited new trial. Defendant appealed from that portion of the judgment that was not affected by the order granting a limited new trial and also from the orders of the court denying its motions for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, to set aside and vacate the judgment and enter a new and different judgment, and for a new trial. Defendant also filed a protective cross appeal from the whole of the judgment pursuant to former Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3(c) [now see Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 8.108(d)].

Since the denial of a motion to set aside and vacate and the denial of a motion for new trial are nonappealable orders, the Supreme Court dismissed defendant's appeal insofar as it purported to be from these orders. The Court held that the denial of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper, stating that if the evidence is conflicting or if several reasonable inferences may be drawn, the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict should be denied (22 Cal. 3d 865, 877-878) . A motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict of a jury may properly be granted only if it appears from the evidence viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict that there is no substantial evidence to support the verdict. If there is any substantial evidence, or reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, in support of the verdict, the motion should be denied.

Although defendant contended that there was no substantial evidence to support the verdict since the testimony of plaintiffs' expert witness was rendered absurd by certain internal inconsistencies, the Court held that these inconsistencies did not require that the testimony be disregarded in its entirety nor did they mean that the testimony was necessarily insufficient to support the verdict. The trier of fact must consider internal inconsistencies, resolve them if possible, and determine what weight to give the testimony (22 Cal. 3d 865, 878) . Since the trial court, in considering this testimony, decided that the evidence did not as a matter of law compel the conclusion that the slayer was in possession of his mental faculties at the time of the murder, the Court held that the trial court properly denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (22 Cal. 3d 865, 877-878) .

Brandenburg v. Pac. Gas & Elec. Co. (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 282, 169 P.2d 909 , was an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff who was hit by a turning streetcarthat overlapped the safety zone. After judgment for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, holding that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict of a jury may properly be granted only if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is no substantial evidence, or reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, in support of the verdict. If there is any substantial evidence, or reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, in support of the verdict, the motion should be denied (28 Cal. 2d 282, 284) . Since it was apparent to defendant that persons alighting in the safety zone would relax their vigilance, the motorman had a duty to give warning that the rear of the car would protrude into the safety zone even if the zone was maintained by the city and not the carrier. There was also a duty of the company to instruct the motorman to give this warning (28 Cal. 2d 282, 286) . The Court held thatplaintiff was also not contributorily negligent since he had no reason to believe that the safety zone would be within the area of overswing (28 Cal. 2d 282, 287) . Since there was ample evidence to support the verdict, the Court reversed the lower court's granting of judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict and directed the lower court to enter judgment in accordance with the jury's verdict (28 Cal. 2d 282, 288) .

[b] Power of Trial Court

In Begnal v. Canfield & Associates, Inc. (2000) 78 Cal. App. 4th 66, 92 Cal. Rptr. 2d 611 , a former employee sued her former employer, alleging that her employment was terminated based on her age in violation of the Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov. Code § 12900 et seq.). The former employer had taken over the functions of the department at the hospital at which the former employee worked and terminated her employment allegedly for "job abandonment," making discriminatory comments, and failure to perform newly imposed duties. The former employee testified that she did perform the duties. Further, her employment was terminated only 8 days after she had received a performance rating of "good" or "very good" in all categories. Finally, another employee testified that she had made the racially discriminatory comment. The jury found that the former employer had terminated the former employee based on her age. The former employer moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that the former employee was replaced by a person older than her, and therefore as a matter of law could not have been terminated because of her age. The trial court granted the motion.

The court of appeal reversed and remanded with directions to enter a new judgment in the former employee's favor in accordance with the jury verdict, stating that the trial may grant judgment notwithstanding the verdict only if the verdict is not supported by substantial evidence, and that the court may not weigh evidence, draw inferences contrary to the verdict, or assess the credibility of witnesses. The appellate court may uphold an order granting judgment notwithstanding the verdict only if, reviewing all the evidence in the light most favorable to the party in whose favor the verdict was entered, resolving all conflicts, and drawing all inferences in that party's favor, and deferring to the implicit credibility determinations of the trier of fact, there is no substantial evidence to support the jury verdict. In this case, the court held that evidence that an employee is replaced by an older person who is also within the protected class does not preclude any inference that the employee was terminated based on age if the employee presents other evidence to support an inference of discrimination (78 Cal. App. 4th 66, 73-76) . The court found that evidence that the former employee was replaced by an older person weighed against the inference that she was terminated based on her age, but did not conclusively establish the absence of age discrimination so as to preclude the jury from drawing other inferences. Further, the former employee presented the jury with substantial evidence that the stated reasons for her termination were false or pretextual and that the decision was based on age. The court thus concluded that the jury verdict was supported by substantial evidence (78 Cal. App. 4th 66, 76-78) .

Hale v. Farmers Ins. Exch. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 117 Cal. Rptr. 146 , involved an action against an insurance company and its employees in which plaintiff alleged bad-faith refusal to pay medical benefits under his automobile insurance policy. The jury awarded damages against the insurer for breach of contract, compensatory damages against all defendants for bad faith, and punitive damages against the insurance company and its employees. The trial court granted defendant insurance company's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of punitive damages, but denied the motion of the individual defendants.

The court of appeal reversed the granting of the motion, stating that the trial court may not weigh the evidence or judge the credibility of witnesses, but must accept the evidence tending to support the verdict as true, unless it is inherently incredible on its face. The order may be granted only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from plaintiff's evidence, there is no evidence sufficiently substantial to support the verdict. The court stated that the denial of the individual employees' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict reflected the trial court's concurrence in the original verdict since it was clear that the trial court had found that the evidence established oppression or malice. The court of appeal held that since an employer is not responsible for punitive damages when he or she neither directed nor ratified the employee's action, the propriety of granting the insurance company's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict had to be resolved by a determination of whether or not there was any substantial evidence to sustain a finding of knowledge, authorization, or ratification on the part of the company for the acts of the individual employees (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 690) . Since the court found evidence from which the jury could have inferred either authorization or ratification of the acts of the employees, it reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict (42 Cal. App. 3d 681, 692) .

Sprigg v. Garcin (1980) 105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 164 Cal. Rptr. 677 , was an action for legal malpractice against a law firm that originally represented plaintiff in a lawsuit against the lessee of plaintiff's warehouse. After plaintiff substituted attorneys and later settled the action for $25,000, plaintiff filed the professional negligence action against his original attorneys. After trial, the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the amount of $34,640.31. The trial court granted defendants' motion for new trial, but denied their motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. From these orders, the parties appealed.

The court of appeal reversed and ordered that judgment notwithstanding the verdict be entered for the defendants. The court noted that the trial judge's power to grant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is identical to his or her power to grant a directed verdict. The trial judge cannot weigh the evidence or judge the credibility of witnesses. The court stated that if the evidence is conflicting or several reasonable inferences may be drawn, the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict should be denied. It added that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict may be properly granted only if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is no substantial evidence to support the verdict. If there is any substantial evidence or reasonable inferences to be drawn therefrom, in support of the verdict, the motion should be denied (105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 873) . However, the court's review of the record indicated that no evidence or reasonable inference therefrom was offered from which the jury could properly find that the defendants' activities proximately caused injury to the plaintiff even though there was evidence from which defendants' negligence could be inferred (105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 874) . Therefore, the court reversed the trial court's denial of defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and also reversed the order granting a new trial (105 Cal. App. 3d 869, 875) .

[c] Reasonable Inference Supports Verdict

In McFarland v. Voorheis-Trindle Co. (1959) 52 Cal. 2d 698, 343 P.2d 923 , a bulldozer operator brought an action against a landowner for personal injuries sustained in clearing the landowner's property. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict on the ground that plaintiff was a special employee as a matter of law and plaintiff's sole remedy was workers' compensation.

The Supreme Court reversed the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, stating that the motion may be granted when and only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of the plaintiff (52 Cal. 2d 698, 703) . Since the evidence most favorable to the verdict supported the inference that the operator was not a special employee of the landowner, the trial court erred in granting judgment notwithstanding the verdict (52 Cal. 2d 698, 706) .

Gray v. Southern Pacific Co. (1944) 23 Cal. 2d 632, 145 P.2d 561 , was an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act (45 U.S.C. §§ 51-59) for the wrongful death of a brakeman due to the alleged negligent operation of the train by defendant. After judgment for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The Supreme Court reversed the granting of the motion, stating that the inference drawn by the jury that defendant negligently caused the fatal accident was supported by the evidence. The Court stated that it is not the function of the court to search the record for conflicting circumstantial evidence in order to take the case away from the jury on a theory that the proof gives equal support to inconsistent inferences. The focal point of judicial review is the reasonableness of the particular inference or conclusion drawn by the jury. The jury, and not the court, is the fact-finding body; it weighs the contradictory evidence and inferences, judges the credibility of witnesses, receives expert instructions, and draws the ultimate conclusions as to the facts. The very essence of its function is to select from among conflicting inferences and conclusions that which it considers the most reasonable. Courts are not free to reweigh the evidence and set aside the jury verdict merely because the jury could have drawn different inferences or conclusions or because judges feel that other results are more reasonable. Therefore, the Court reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict (23 Cal. 2d 632, 646) .

[d] Substantial Conflict in Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Robinson v. North American Life & Cas. Co. (1963) 215 Cal. App. 2d 111, 30 Cal. Rptr. 57 , is discussed in § 155.10[3][b]. In the Robinson case, the court of appeal held that the cardinal requirement for the granting of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is a lack of substantial conflict in the evidence. This requirement was not met in the case. Since there were substantial conflicts in the evidence, the trial court's denial of the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was correct (215 Cal. App. 2d 111, 118) .

[e] Evidence Presents Question for Jury's Determination

Meyser v. American Bldg. Maintenance, Inc. (1978) 85 Cal. App. 3d 933, 149 Cal. Rptr. 808 , was an action by the lessor-owners of commercial property and their tenant against a building maintenance company for damages caused by fire. The trial was bifurcated pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 598. At the conclusion of plaintiff's case in the liability phase of the trial, defendant's motion for nonsuit was denied. The jury later returned a verdict for plaintiff. Before the damages trial and after the entry of the verdict, defendant moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial. The motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was granted, and the new trial motion was denied.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, holding that the trial court had no jurisdiction to enter it after the liability phase of a bifurcated trial (85 Cal. App. 3d 933, 937) . The motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict cannot be made until the jury has returned verdicts on both liability and damages (85 Cal. App. 3d 933, 937) . Furthermore, the court held that if the evidence in a case is such that different conclusions can be rationally drawn, the case presented is one for a jury and a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is improper (85 Cal. App. 3d 933, 938-940) . Thus, even though defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict should not have been granted because the testimony of plaintiff's expert witness, a fire chief, was internally inconsistent regarding the cause of the fire, it was not so inherently weak that it was insufficient to uphold the verdict. The conflict in the evidence was sufficient to present a question for the jury even though it existed in the testimony of a single witness (85 Cal. App. 3d 933, 940) .

[a] Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict

Reuther v. Viall (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 470, 42 Cal. Rptr. 456, 398 P.2d 792 , was a personal injury action in which plaintiffs recovered judgment on a special jury verdict finding willful misconduct by defendant automobile driver. The court of appeal stated that since there was a sufficient showing from which the jury could reasonably conclude that defendant's actions constituted willful misconduct, the trial court's order denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was proper (62 Cal. 2d 470, 472) .

Hergenrether v. East (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 440, 39 Cal. Rptr. 4, 393 P.2d 164 , was an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident resulting from the negligent operation of defendants' vehicle by an unapprehended and unidentified thief. Since there was substantial evidence that justified the imposition of liability on defendants, the court of appeal reversed the lower court's granting of defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiffs (61 Cal. 2d 440, 445) .

In Tan Jay Internat., Ltd. v. Canadian Indemnity Co. (1988) 198 Cal. App. 3d 695, 243 Cal. Rptr. 907 , an action by an insured against its insurer based on the insurer's refusal to defend and settle a third-party suit, the court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of the insurer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict with regard to one of the plaintiffs. The court noted that the insurer did little to refute the existence of substantial evidence supporting its breach of duty, and held that if there is any substantial evidence, or reasonable inferences to be drawn from it, in support of the verdict, the motion should be denied (198 Cal. App. 3d 695, 703) .

The factual background of Foggy v. Ralph F. Clark & Associates, Inc. (1987) 192 Cal. App. 3d 1204, 238 Cal. Rptr. 130 , is discussed in § 155.10[3][h]. In reversing a judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict for plaintiffs, the court said that it is well established that a motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict of a jury may properly be granted only if it appears from the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the party securing the verdict, that there is no substantial evidence to support the verdict and that, if there is any substantial evidence, or reasonable inferences to be drawn from the evidence, in support of the verdict, the motion should be denied (192 Cal. App. 3d 1204, 1213) .

Grimshaw v. Ford Motor Co. (1981) 119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 174 Cal. Rptr. 348 , was an action for personal injuries sustained when a Ford Pinto was rear-ended by a car proceeding in the same direction. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court denied defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict on the issue of punitive damages. The court of appeal affirmed the denial, stating that there was substantial evidence from which the jury could reasonably find corporate malice on the part of defendant (119 Cal. App. 3d 757, 814) .

Musgrove v. Ambrose Properties (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722 , involved an action in which plaintiff sued a shopping center for personal injuries suffered when she was struck by a bicycle that a young boy rode on the premises. The court of appeal reversed judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict, stating that the evidence supported a verdict in favor of the plaintiff since it sustained a finding that the chance of the accident was foreseeable, that defendant breached its duty of care to plaintiff, and that the breach was a proximate cause of plaintiff's injury (87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 53) .

Hozz v. Felder (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 197, 334 P.2d 159 , was an action to recover the value of merchandise allegedly sold by plaintiffs to defendants on an open-book account. Since it was apparent from the evidence presented that the jury could have returned various verdicts, all supported by substantial evidence, the court of appeal reversed the lower court's granting of plaintiffs' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict (167 Cal. App. 2d 197, 200) .

Quintal v. Laurel Grove Hospital (1964) 62 Cal. 2d 154, 41 Cal. Rptr. 577, 397 P.2d 161 , was a medical malpractice action based on a six-year-old boy's permanent brain injury suffered as a result of cardiac arrest during the administration of an anesthetic. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The Supreme Court reversed, stating that the trial court is not permitted to weigh the evidence, and since the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury of the issue of negligence, the granting of the motion was improper (62 Cal. 2d 154, 159-163) .

Knight v. Contracting Engineers Co. (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 435, 15 Cal. Rptr. 194 , was an action by a roofing subcontractor's employee against the general contractor for personal injuries. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal affirmed the granting of the motion, stating that the court may not consider the credibility of witnesses, but must give the plaintiff's evidence its full legal value and must draw all legitimate inferences from that evidence (194 Cal. App. 2d 435, 442) .

[c] Substantial Conflict in Evidence

In Castro v. State of California (1981) 114 Cal. App. 3d 503, 170 Cal. Rptr. 734 , an employee of a construction company engaged by the state sued the state for injuries suffered when another employee backed his truck into plaintiff. After judgment for plaintiff based on the jury's special verdict finding that the state should have recognized that the work done by the contractor would create a peculiar risk of harm without special precautions, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict, holding that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding and that the existence of conflicting evidence made it inappropriate to grant the motion (114 Cal. App. 3d 503, 512-513) .

McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 , was an action by plaintiff for damages for breach of an escrow agreement. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal reversed, stating that a basic requirement for sustaining a judgment notwithstanding the verdict is that no substantial conflict exists in the evidence. The granting of the motion was improper, since the evidence was in conflict on the points foundational to the trial court's rulings (8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 226) .

Spillman v. City etc. of San Francisco (1967) 252 Cal. App. 2d 782, 60 Cal. Rptr. 809 , was an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision. Since the jury found that plaintiff sustained no damages as a result of defendants' negligence, it entered a verdict in favor of plaintiff on the issue of liability and in favor of defendants on the issue of damages. After the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and fixed plaintiff's damages at $10,000, the court of appeal reversed, stating that since there was a considerable conflict in the evidence regarding the amount of damages sustained by plaintiff, the trial court abused its discretion in granting the motion and usurped defendants' right to trial by jury in assessing plaintiff's damages (252 Cal. App. 2d 782, 786-787) .

[d] Evidence Presents Question for Jury's Determination

Beck v. San Francisco etc. Sch. Dist. (1964) 225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 37 Cal. Rptr. 471 , was a student's action for personal injury against the school district based on its alleged failure to adequately supervise school activities. The trial court's denial of defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict was affirmed since although the district argued that the proximate cause of the action was not lack of supervision but an intervening wrong, the causal relationship between lack of supervision and injury was a factual determination for the jury (225 Cal. App. 2d 503, 508-509) .

In Urland v. French (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 278, 296 P.2d 568 , plaintiff sought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal held that it was reversible error to grant defendant's motion because the question of negligence and proximate cause was one for the jury's determination, and there was substantial evidence, considered in the light most favorable to plaintiff, on which the jury could have concluded that defendant was negligent and that the negligence proximately caused the accident (141 Cal. App. 2d 278, 284-285) .

A MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE WAS AN IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COURT THAT PREVENTED THE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial on Ground of Irregularity in Court Proceedings. On the application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court by which either party is prevented from having a fair trial if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)).

B. Departure by Court From Due and Orderly Method. An irregularity in the proceedings of the court is any departure by the court from the due and orderly method of disposition of an action by which the substantial rights of a party are materially affected (Gay v. Torrance (1904) 145 Cal. 144, 149, 78 P. 540).

[Optional] C. Court's Prejudgment of Case Before Hearing. A new trial may be granted on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court when the trial judge has prejudged a case before the introduction of all evidence by either party (Webber v. Webber (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 153, 156-158, 199 P.2d 934 ; McVey v. McVey (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 122-125, 281 P.2d 898).

[Optional] D. Court's Prejudicial Expression and Action Against Use of Particular Witness. An expression of prejudice by the court against the use of a particular witness, notwithstanding the competency of his or her testimony, with such prejudice being reflected in the action of the court against the aggrieved party, is an irregularity preventing the aggrieved party from having a fair trial and materially affecting his or her substantial rights (Pratt v. Pratt (1903) 141 Cal. 247, 250-252, 74 P. 742).

[Optional] E. Court's Invasion of Province of Jury and Influence on Verdict. When the court attempts to invade the province of the jury and the verdict appears to have been influenced by the court's misconduct, a new trial may be granted on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court preventing the aggrieved party from having a fair trial and materially affecting his or her substantial rights (Crowe v. Sacks (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 590, 598, 283 P.2d 689 ; Cook v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 591, 593-594, 91 P.2d 118).

[Optional] F. Failure to Give 15 Days' Notice of Trial. Failure to give the aggrieved party 15 days' notice of the time set for trial as required by Code Civ. Proc. § 594(a) is an irregularity in the proceedings of the court preventing the aggrieved party from having a fair trial and materially affecting his or her substantial rights (Gordon v. Gordon (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 231, 233-234, 302 P.2d 355 (decided under former Code Civ. Proc. § 594(1), which required five days' notice)).

[Optional] G. Objection by Aggrieved Party and Admonishing Instruction by Court Unnecessary. If an admonition of the judge to the jury to disregard his or her misconduct would not remove its prejudicial effect, it is not a prerequisite that the aggrieved party have objected and made the request that the jury be instructed to disregard it (Etzel v. Rosenbloom (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 758, 762, 189 P.2d 848 ; see Ward v. De Martini (1930) 108 Cal. App 745, 751, 292 P. 192).

[Optional] H. Assignment by Court of Irregularity as Error Unnecessary. An assignment of judicial misconduct as error is unnecessary if it is evident from the attitude of the trial judge, as shown by the record, that any assignment of misconduct would be disregarded and counsel, by making the assignment, would bring further attack on himself or herself (People v. Mahoney (1927) 201 Cal. 618, 622, 258 P. 607).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. In addition to Paragraphs A and B, any combination of the optional Paragraphs C--H may be used if applicable to the facts of the case.

[b] Argument

[c] Supporting Declarations or Affidavits Required

A motion for new trial made on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[e] Related Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 155.55 may be combined in an appropriate case with those in this form.

[f] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.60 or § 155.65 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Departure by Court From Due and Orderly Method

Gay v. Torrance (1904) 145 Cal. 144, 78 P. 540 , was a divorce action in which defendant husband was granted an interlocutory judgment on his cross complaint against petitioner, his wife. Subsequently, petitioner wife moved for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on alleged misconduct of the trial judge. The trial court, on motion of defendant husband, made an order striking petitioner's affidavits on the ground that one was based solely on information and belief and that all affidavits contained immaterial, impertinent, and scandalous charges against the judge who heard the case. Petitioner asked for a writ of mandate commanding the judge to certify a bill of exceptions containing the stricken affidavits to be used on appeal from the order striking the affidavits. She also sought a writ of prohibition restraining the judge from hearing the motion for new trial pending the hearing of the appeal from the order striking the affidavits. An alternative writ was issued requiring the judge to certify the bill of exceptions containing the affidavits or show cause why he had not done so.

The Supreme Court discharged the alternative writ of mandate and denied the application for a peremptory writ of mandate because it found that the affidavits only contained information and belief and embodied no competent or proper evidence (145 Cal. 144, 151-154) . However, the Court stated that personal misconduct of a judge who has under advisement a case tried in his or her court can be an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted under Code Civ. Proc. 657(1) (145 Cal. 144, 148) . The language of the statute is sufficiently broad to include any departure by the court from the due and orderly method of disposition of an action by which the substantial rights of a party have been materially affected, where such departure is not evidenced by a ruling or order that may be the subject of an exception (145 Cal. 144, 149-150) . The Court stated that personal habits, conduct, deportment, or statements of the judge that have no relation to or effect on the disposition of the case are not the proper subject of complaint on a motion for new trial (145 Cal. 144, 150) . The question is whether the acts were of a nature and done under such circumstances as to afford reasonable grounds for the conclusion that the defeated party has not had a fair and impartial trial (145 Cal. 144, 150) .

[b] Court's Prejudgment of Case Before Hearing

Webber v. Webber (1948) 33 Cal. 2d 153, 199 P.2d 934 , was a divorce action in which plaintiff was awarded an interlocutory decree of divorce, custody of her son, and one half of the community property. However, she was denied any right of support before the trial judge had heard her testimony regarding her condition or need. The Supreme Court reversed the interlocutory judgment of divorce on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the court's prejudgment of the case before the aggrieved party had an opportunity to present her evidence (33 Cal. 2d 153, 156-158) . The Court stated that it was apparent that she did not have a fair trial by reason of the trial judge's preconceived and declared aversion to spousal support (33 Cal. 2d 153, 157) . The Court also noted that plaintiff's lack of affidavits in support of her motion for new trial did not prevent her from raising the alleged misconduct of the trial judge on appeal since she relied wholly on facts appearing on the face of the record (33 Cal. 2d 153, 163-164) . Even though motions based on the first four grounds of Code Civ. Proc. § 657 are required to be supported by affidavit [Code Civ. Proc. § 658], the Court held that if the moving party relies wholly on facts appearing on the face of the record, the reason for the rule requiring affidavits is no longer valid and the rule is inapplicable (33 Cal. 2d 153, 164) . Accordingly, the court ordered a new trial (33 Cal. 2d 153, 165) .

In McVey v. McVey (1955) 132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 281 P.2d 898 , plaintiff wife filed an action for separate maintenance and defendant husband cross complained for divorce. Before the trial judge had heard any evidence, he stated in chambers to the parties and their attorneys that a husband and wife who were separated without the possibility of reconciliation should be divorced and that separate maintenance was socially and morally undesirable. After introduction of plaintiff's evidence, the trial judge, in chambers, also stated this viewpoint to counsel for both parties. Before hearing defendant's testimony, the judge also encouraged plaintiff to change her prayer to request a divorce, indicating that he might be persuaded by defendant's testimony to grant him a divorce, deny her alimony, and award her less than half of the property. After plaintiff was denied a decree of separate maintenance and defendant was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce, plaintiff moved for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the judge's alleged preconceived and declared aversion to an action for separate maintenance. Her motion was denied.

The court of appeal reversed the interlocutory decree, stating that a judge should not prejudge the issues but should keep an open mind until all the evidence is presented (132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 123) . When a trial judge sits as a trier of facts he takes the place of a jury, and his conduct is subject to the same rules, one of which is that before the case is submitted to him, he should not form or express an opinion thereon (132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 123) . The court stated that it was apparent that plaintiff did not receive a fair trial by reason of the preconceived and declared aversion of the trial judge to an action for separate maintenance (132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 124) . The record shows that plaintiff established a strong case for separate maintenance, and defendant a weak case for divorce (132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 125) . The court stated that it appeared from what the judge said after plaintiff had made her proof that he had made up his mind not to award her separate maintenance (132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 125) . The trial judge's conduct, which indicated his unsympathetic attitude toward the litigation, did not accord with recognized principles of judicial behavior and were not consistent with the presentation of a case in an atmosphere of fairness and impartiality (132 Cal. App. 2d 120, 125) .

[c] Court's Prejudicial Expression and Action Against Use of Particular Witness

In Pratt v. Pratt (1903) 141 Cal. 247, 74 P. 742 , plaintiff wife sought an accounting from defendant husband regarding the disposition of separate property derived from her mother's estate. Plaintiff wife claimed that defendant had purchased certain property with her separate funds. Defendant husband did not refer to the purchase, but claimed that he had given the rents to his wife. During trial, the judge interrupted the examination of plaintiff's and defendant's daughter, who was giving competent testimony in favor of defendant. The judge intimated that the failure to withdraw the daughter as a witness would seriously prejudice defendant's case, since a child put on the witness stand to dispute a parent was shocking and revolting. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. The motion was denied.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that the action of the judge was an irregularity in the proceedings of the court. The testimony of the daughter was competent and proper, and therefore the judge had no right to permit it to arouse in his mind a prejudice against the father. The court also had no right, by an expression of such prejudice and its threatened results, to drive the party to withdraw testimony against which no legal objection existed. Extreme prejudice to defendant was shown by an examination of the findings, which were against him in every particular to which the proposed testimony of the daughter was directed. The trial of a case should not only be fair in fact, but it should also appear to be fair. If the contrary appears, it shocks the judicial instinct to allow the judgment to stand (141 Cal. 247, 252) .

[d] Court's Invasion of Province of Jury and Influence on Verdict

In Crowe v. Sacks (1955) 44 Cal. 2d 590, 283 P.2d 689 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision with defendant. After the jury had rendered a verdict for plaintiffs, the judge sent the jury back for further deliberation, stating that he found the verdict grossly inadequate. The jury later returned a verdict for plaintiffs for a substantially higher sum. Defendant's motion for a new trial, based on the judge's conduct, was denied. Defendant appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed judgment for plaintiffs, stating that the trial court had invaded the province of the jury when it attempted to influence the amount of damages awarded. The higher sum reached on redeliberation was a clear indication that the jury was thus influenced in reaching its final verdict (44 Cal. 2d 590, 598) . Any action of the judge in the correction of verdicts should be taken with caution. The judge must not throw the weight of his or her influence into the deliberations of the jury as to matters exclusively within its province. If the jury allows damages so grossly inadequate as to show that it must have disregarded the evidence and the instructions of the court, it should be returned for further deliberation under proper instruction (44 Cal. 2d 590, 598) .

In Cook v. Los Angeles Ry. Corp. (1939) 13 Cal. 2d 591, 91 P.2d 118 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries allegedly suffered as a result of the negligent operation of a streetcar owned by defendant. After slightly less than two hours of deliberation, the jury returned to the courtroom after the foreman requested a rereading of the instructions. The judge then remarked that he did not believe that the plaintiff was entitled to recover and that the jury should not take more than 10 minutes to state that conclusion in a verdict. Approximately 10 minutes later, the jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant. Plaintiff appealed both the judgment and an order that struck from the file affidavits presented by her in support of a motion for new trial.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that considering all the circumstances shown, the trial judge's remarks unquestionably prejudiced the plaintiff's right to a fair trial and invaded the province of the jury (13 Cal. 2d 591, 595) . The exclusive right to agree or disagree rests with the jury; the judge may not tell them that they must agree nor may he harry their deliberations with coercive threats or disparaging remarks (13 Cal. 2d 591, 594) . The Court stated that the remarks may have also been suggestive and misleading (13 Cal. 2d 591, 595) . While the words do not, on their face, appear to show any bias in favor of defendant, other factors that are not disclosed by the record, such as the tone or inflection with which the comments were delivered, or the attitude of the court during the trial of the case, may well have imparted such an impression to the jurors (13 Cal. 2d 591, 595) .

[e] Failure to Give 15 Days' Notice of Trial

Gordon v. Gordon (1956) 145 Cal. App. 2d 231, 302 P.2d 355 , was a divorce action in which plaintiff was not given adequate notice of trial under former Code Civ. Proc. § 594(1) [now see Code Civ. Proc. § 594(a)]. When plaintiff failed to appear for trial, the court heard evidence on defendant's cross complaint and, at the conclusion of the testimony, granted him an interlocutory decree of divorce, all the community property, and custody of their two-year-old child. Plaintiff's motion for new trial, on the ground that she was not served with written notice of trial, was granted.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the failure to give notice of trial was a proper ground for the granting of a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) on the theory of error in law or irregularity in the proceedings of the court (145 Cal. App. 2d 231, 233) . Code Civ. Proc. § 594 requires service of notice of trial and, when the adverse party fails to appear, proof of service. Compliance with the section is mandatory (145 Cal. App. 2d 231, 233) . The court deemed the appeal from the order frivolous and assessed a penalty against defendant (145 Cal. App. 2d 231, 235) .

[f] Objection by Aggrieved Party and Admonishing Instruction by Court Unnecessary

Etzel v. Rosenbloom (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 758, 189 P.2d 848 , was an action for personal injuries arising from an automobile accident. During trial, the judge made many comments that indicated that he believed that one defendant was not telling the truth and that defense counsel was trying to keep the facts from being presented to the jury. Defendants did not object to the remarks during trial. After the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff, defendants appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, stating that the judge's conduct constituted prejudicial error that deprived defendants of a fair and impartial trial by jury (83 Cal. App. 2d 758, 762-765) . The court added that the general rule is that unless the harmful result of the trial judge's misconduct cannot be obviated by an appropriate instruction, error cannot be predicated thereon in the absence of an assignment of such misconduct as error and a request to the trial court to instruct the jury to disregard it. However, in cases in which an admonition of the judge to the jury to disregard the misconduct would not remove the prejudicial effect of the misconduct, it is not a prerequisite to the urging of such error on appeal for the appellant to have objected thereto and made a request that the jury be instructed to disregard it. In this case, the court stated that it was evident that an objection to the misconduct and an admonition by the court to the jury to disregard it would have been ineffectual and would have accentuated the error rather than have removed it. Hence, the court felt that this case was an exception to the general rule and that it was not necessary for defendants to have objected to the judge's misconduct and to have requested that he admonish the jury to disregard it (83 Cal. App. 2d 758, 762) .

Although this case did not involve a motion for new trial, the rule regarding objection and an admonishing instruction appears to be the general rule when moving for a new trial based on irregularity in the proceedings of the court [see Ward v. De Martini (1930) 108 Cal. App 745, 751, 292 P. 192] .

In Ward v. De Martini (1930) 108 Cal. App 745, 292 P. 192 , plaintiff recovered damages for personal injuries alleged to have been maliciously inflicted by defendant. Defendant's motion for new trial, based on several grounds, including prejudicial remarks by the judge, was denied. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, it stated that courts' oral statements to the jury that the witness is a person of respectability had, in several cases, been held as error (108 Cal. App 745, 750-751) . However, it was also the duty of the defendant to promptly call attention to the impropriety of the remarks to give the court an opportunity to prevent any prejudicial effect on the jury by means of a proper instruction (108 Cal. App 745, 751) . If the admonition of the judge to the jury to disregard the misconduct would not remove its prejudicial effect, the aggrieved party need not have objected and requested that the jury be instructed to disregard the impropriety. In this case, the court felt that a court's instruction to the jury may have obviated any prejudicial effect (108 Cal. App 745, 751) . Nevertheless, notwithstanding the error or misconduct, it felt that the jury's verdict was fully sustained by the evidence and the judge's misconduct resulted in no miscarriage of justice requiring a reversal of the judgment (108 Cal. App 745, 751-752) .

[g] Assignment by Court of Irregularity as Error Unnecessary

In People v. Mahoney (1927) 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607 , defendant, a contractor, was convicted of manslaughter in connection with the faulty construction of a grandstand that collapsed and killed several spectators. During the trial, the judge made frequent disparaging remarks to defendant's counsel and witnesses. Defendant's motion for new trial, based on the alleged misconduct of the judge and the alleged erroneous admission of certain evidence, was denied.

The Supreme Court reversed the conviction and ordered a new trial on the basis of the judge's misconduct (201 Cal. 618, 627) . The Court recognized the rule that effort had to be made at trial to correct and undo that harm caused by the judge's conduct; however, it was evident from the attitude of the trial judge that any assignment of misconduct would have been disregarded and counsel, by making an assignment, would have brought himself under further judicial attack (201 Cal. 618, 622) . The Court held that when the trial court persists in making discourteous and disparaging remarks to defendant's counsel and witnesses, and utters frequent comment from which the jury may plainly perceive that the judge does not believe the witnesses, a new trial is necessary (201 Cal. 618, 627) .

It appears that the rule of People v. Mahoney (1927) 201 Cal. 618, 258 P. 607 , a criminal case, may be used as authority when moving for a new trial in a civil action under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 657 and 659 [see Ward v. De Martini (1930) 108 Cal. App 745, 751, 292 P. 192 (citing People v. Mahoney)].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Departure by Court From Due and Orderly Method

Jacoby v. Feldman (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 432, 146 Cal. Rptr. 334 , was an action for declaratory relief brought by the surviving partners seeking interpretation of an amended partnership agreement. After judgment for defendant that dissolved the partnership, the trial court denied plaintiffs' motion for new trial that was made on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court. Although the court of appeal affirmed the denial, it stated that the language of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) is sufficiently broad to include any departure by the court from the due and orderly method of disposition of an action by which the substantial rights of a party have been materially affected (81 Cal. App. 3d 432, 446) .

[b] Court's Prejudgment of Case Before Hearing

Rosenfield v. Vosper (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 365, 114 P.2d 29 , was an action for the reasonable value of legal services in which the court of appeal reversed a judgment for plaintiff on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the court's prejudgment of the case (45 Cal. App. 2d 365, 372) . The trial judge had suggested a settlement of $7,500 before plaintiff had finished his testimony and before defendants had presented any testimony as to an alleged accord and satisfaction (45 Cal. App. 2d 365, 371-372) . The trial judge had the duty to refrain from forming an opinion until the case was finally submitted to him (45 Cal. App. 2d 365, 372) .

[c] Court's Invasion of Province of Jury and Influence on Verdict

In Delzell v. Day (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 349, 223 P.2d 625 , the Supreme Court reversed judgments for defendants against two plaintiffs and in favor of a third plaintiff in a personal injury action on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Numerous comments and remarks by the trial judge during the examination of jurors and witnesses, taken as a whole, had prejudiced the appellants' case (36 Cal. 2d 349, 351) . The Court ordered a new trial, since in the absence of the comments complained of, a different verdict would not have been improbable (36 Cal. 2d 349, 351-352) .

Shippy v. Peninsula Rapid Transit Co. (1925) 197 Cal. 290, 240 P. 785 , was a personal injury action in which the Supreme Court affirmed the trial court's order granting a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court (197 Cal. 290, 296) . During trial and after the conclusion of the taking of evidence, the court asked the jury if it was prepared to pass upon the issues in the case without argument of counsel or instruction by the court on the law of the case (197 Cal. 290, 294-295) . This amounted to a requirement of the jurors that they evince a fixed state of mind that they were not entitled to hold at that stage of the proceedings (197 Cal. 290, 295) .

In People v. Burns (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 524, 241 P.2d 308 , the court of appeal reversed a conviction of second-degree murder on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court based on the trial judge's exhibition of hostility toward defense counsel. When the district attorney had not objected to certain testimony, the court would interrupt defendant's examination or cross examination of a witness and rule that the subject was not admissible. While the judge admonished the jury that it was the sole judge of the evidence and that it must draw no conclusion as to guilt or innocence based on the court's remarks, these admonitions did not overcome the judge's evident attitude throughout the trial (109 Cal. App. 2d 524, 542) .

Langdon v. Superior Court (1923) 65 Cal. App 41, 223 P. 72 , was an action for damages arising from an automobile collision. After the jury had rendered a compromise verdict for one dollar, the trial court directed the jury to return a verdict for $248.32, the stipulated amount expended for repairs. Judgment was entered on the verdict and a new trial was denied (65 Cal. App 41, 42) . The court of appeal issued a writ of certiorari annulling the verdict for plaintiff, since it determined that the functions of the jury in determining the facts were usurped by the judge (65 Cal. App 41, 43) . The court's thinly veiled threats and intimidation of the jury coerced it into returning a verdict on which it otherwise would not have agreed (65 Cal. App 41, 43) .

[d] Failure to Give 15 Days' Notice of Trial

Simon v. Tomasini (1950) 97 Cal. App. 2d 115, 217 P.2d 488 , was an action for attorney's fees and expenses which was kept on the ready calendar for almost two years pursuant to an agreement between the parties. When the case was assigned for trial, plaintiff failed to give defendant adequate notice under Code Civ. Proc. § 594, and defendant did not appear. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting a new trial, stating that lack of notice, as required by law, constituted an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial should be granted (97 Cal. App. 2d 115, 123) .

[e] Objection by Aggrieved Party and Admonishing Instruction by Court Unnecessary

The factual and procedural background of Delzell v. Day (1950) 36 Cal. 2d 349, 223 P.2d 625 , is discussed in [c], above. In that case, plaintiffs appealed from a judgment for defendants, contending that the judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct. The Supreme Court stated that although a request for an instruction, in addition to an assignment of error, generally is necessary as the basis for an appeal on the ground of misconduct of counsel, there is no such requirement when it is charged that the appellant's rights were prejudiced by the improper action of the trial judge. A request for an instruction would in all probability have made a bad matter worse. The remarks would probably have been repeated with emphasis, and counsel would have found himself or herself in a position anything but pleasant or secure (36 Cal. 2d 349, 351) .

A. New Trial on Ground of Order of Court or Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground that there was an order of the court or abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (*Code Civ. [2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that there was an order of the court or abuse of discretion that prevented a party from having a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)].

Note that an order of the court that may be asserted as erroneous under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) may also be asserted under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7) as an error in law occurring at trial [see § 155.250 et seq.]. Counsel may desire to raise the claimed error as grounds for new trial under both provisions.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show how the order or abuse of discretion prevented the moving party from having a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. If the motion is based on a court order, counsel may desire to include a copy of the order after obtaining one from the court clerk.

A motion for new trial based on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

[d] Related Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 155.50 may be combined in an appropriate case with those in this form.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.60 or § 155.65 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial on Ground of Order of Court or Abuse of Discretion Preventing Fair Trial

In Hays v. Viscome (1953) 122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 264 P.2d 173 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against defendants for injuries suffered in an automobile accident. Before commencement of trial and at defendants' request, plaintiff submitted to two physical examinations by two different doctors. However, at trial, defendants failed to call one of the doctors as a witness. Since it was presumed that the doctor's testimony was adverse to defendants, plaintiff's attorney requested a continuance to give him an opportunity to bring the doctor to testify. Plaintiff's counsel explained that he was surprised by defendants' failure to call the doctor and he had not placed the doctor under subpoena because he had not anticipated that it would be necessary to call him as plaintiff's witness. The court refused the continuance because it felt that there were too many cases pending and it could not permit delay. It stated that plaintiff should have already had the doctor under subpoena. After judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $700, she moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied, she appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and ordered a retrial, stating that it was an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse the continuance. The fact that there were other cases awaiting trial did not warrant the denial of the continuance in light of the possibly vital nature of the doctor's testimony (122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140) . The court added that plaintiff's counsel could not have known much earlier that he would have to call the doctor as a witness. Therefore, he could not have had the doctor under subpoena. The matter arose as soon as defendants had rested their case, and it was not until then that plaintiff's counsel knew that defendants would not call the doctor. Guided by its own judgment and experience, the court held that plaintiff's case was prejudiced for no good reason by denial of her request for a short continuance (122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140-141) .

[b] Order Preventing Reliance on Favorable Presumption

The factual and procedural background of Hays v. Viscome (1953) 122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 264 P.2d 173 , is discussed in [a], above. After defendants failed to call a certain doctor as a witness, plaintiff moved for a continuance so that she could bring him in to testify. The court refused to grant the motion for a continuance, and the jury rendered a small award of damages to plaintiff in light of the severity of the injuries claimed. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and she appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and granted a retrial, stating that the general rule was that willfully suppressed evidence will be presumed adverse to the party that suppressed it, citing former Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1963(6), 2061(6), 2061(7) [now see Evid. Code § 413]. In this case, defendants requested that plaintiff submit to an examination by two doctors, and they failed to call one of the doctors to testify at trial. However, the trial court improperly instructed the jury on the presumption and the jury failed to take the presumption into consideration. The court stated that the critical question in the case was whether plaintiff had suffered an injury that resulted in nerve pressure. Had the significance of the failure to call the doctor been explained to the jury, the conclusion as to the extent of plaintiff's injuries might have been altogether different. The court noted that the small verdict manifested that the jury disbelieved that plaintiff's injuries were serious. It added that plaintiff should have been permitted the full benefit of the rule of evidence which was excluded from the jury's consideration by the court's ruling (122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 139-140) . Because of the prejudicial effect of the trial court's ruling, the court of appeal reversed the judgment and granted plaintiff a new trial (122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 143) .

[c] Denial of Continuance to Produce Material Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Hays v. Viscome (1953) 122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 264 P.2d 173 , is discussed in [a], above. After defendants failed to call a certain doctor as a witness, plaintiff moved for a continuance so that she could bring him in to testify. The court refused to grant the motion, and the jury rendered a small award of damages in light of the severity of injuries claimed by plaintiff. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and she appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and granted a retrial, stating that the court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the continuance. The court said that the trial judge stated no sound reason for denying the continuance, and the appellate court could discover none. Plaintiff's attorneys were not negligent in failing to anticipate that defendants would not call the doctor as a witness. They acted promptly and their request for a continuance was reasonable. Guided by the dictates of its own judgment, the court stated that plaintiff's case was prejudiced for no good reason by denial of her request of a short continuance. Accordingly, the court reversed the judgment and granted a new trial (122 Cal. App. 2d 135, 140-143) .

In Murr v. Murr (1948) 87 Cal. App. 2d 511, 197 P.2d 369 , plaintiff brought an action for divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, specifying that defendant wife gave birth to an illegitimate child. After defendant had rested her case, plaintiff's counsel moved for a continuance since he desired to recall a doctor in rebuttal and that particular doctor was not present at the time. Plaintiff's counsel stated that he did not ask the doctor to return, when the doctor was present in court, since he did not have knowledge at that time of the facts he desired to present. The court denied the motion for a continuance. After an interlocutory decree of divorce was granted to defendant on her cross complaint, plaintiff moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment, contending that the trial judge had abused his discretion in denying plaintiff's motions for a new trial and for a continuance.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and remanded the cause for a new trial, because it found that the trial judge abused his discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for a continuance. It stated that the trial judge should have granted the continuance because of the nature of the proposed evidence. The testimony of the doctor was material in that, if true, it would have indicated that defendant was pregnant in June before plaintiff returned home in July. Since the court felt that plaintiff's case had been prejudicially affected by the denial of the continuance, it remanded the case for a new trial (87 Cal. App. 2d 511, 521-522) .

[a] Denial of Continuance to Produce Material Evidence

In Henderson v. Drake (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 777, 258 P.2d 879 , the court of appeal affirmed the granting of plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and the court's improper denial of a motion for continuance [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Before trial, the lower court denied plaintiff's motion for a continuance so that plaintiff could be present to testify at trial. The court of appeal stated that even though the granting or denial of the continuance was probably within the discretion of the court, it was entirely proper for the court, in light of later developments in the case, to decide that it had abused its discretion in denying the motion for a continuance and to grant a new trial (118 Cal. App. 2d 777, 782-783) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE THERE WAS NO IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE COURT THAT PREVENTED _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. No New Trial for Harmless Error. The trial court is bound by the rule of Article VI, Section 13, of the California Constitution that prejudicial error is a basis for granting a new trial, but the court has no discretion to grant a new trial for harmless error (Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 265-266, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584).

B. Judge's Personal Habits, Conduct, or Statements. Personal habits, conduct, deportment, or statements of the judge that have no relation to or effect on the disposition of the case are not an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted under Section 657(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Gay v. Torrance (1904) 145 Cal. 144, 150, 78 P. 540).

C. Decided Cases Not Controlling Precedents in New Situation. Decided cases in which trial judges have been found guilty of misconduct are not controlling precedents in a new situation in which new factual questions are presented (Weil v. Weil (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 770, 786, 236 P.2d 159 ; Gardner v. Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 225-226, 31 Cal. Rptr. 731).

[Optional] D. Judge's Expression of Disagreement With Policy of Statute. It is not an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted under Section 657(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure if the court expresses to the parties its disagreement with the policy of a statute and what the policy should be if its disagreement does not lead the court to disregard the statute (Weil v. Weil (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 770, 776, 236 P.2d 159).

[Optional] E. Judge's Encouragement of Settlement of Litigated Cases. A trial judge, within proper bounds, may encourage the settlement of litigated cases, and such encouragement is not an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted under Section 657(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure (Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 639-640, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106 ; Gardner v. Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 224-226, 31 Cal. Rptr. 731).

[Optional] F. Judge's Expression of Tentative Views of Case. The judge's expression of tentative views of the case to respective counsel during the course of trial so that counsel may be advised of what course to take is not a prejudgment of the case for which a new trial may be granted when the views are expressly subject to modification in the event that later evidence should require it (Gardner v. Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 222, 225-226, 31 Cal. Rptr. 731).

[Optional] G. Judge's Expression of Doubt Concerning Credibility of Witness. In a nonjury trial, the trial judge's expression of doubt concerning the credibility of a trial witness, if made after the evidence has been presented, is not an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted if it is apparent from a reading of the entire record that both sides received a fair trial (see Jaffe v. Vitz (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 810, 813-814, 191 P.2d 802 ; see also Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 640-641, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106).

[Optional] H. Judge's Expression of Opinion on Question of Law or Interpretation of Statute. The court's remarks before the introduction of evidence by either party are not an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted under Section 657(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure when the court merely expressed an opinion on a question of law and the interpretation of a statute and the moving party was permitted to present his/her case fully without any hindrance or restraint on the part of the court (Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 638-639, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106).

[Optional] I. Judge's Questioning of Witness. The trial judge is entitled to question a witness in order to ascertain the truth and it is not error for him or her to do so when the party claiming error cannot point out the error or the prejudicial effect (Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 640, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106).

[Optional] J. Judge's Bias or Prejudice Not Irregularity. Bias or prejudice is not an irregularity, but a condition of mind that may only be challenged by moving for disqualification pursuant to Sections 170 through 170.5 of the Code of Civil Procedure. If the aggrieved party did not urge disqualification at the time the judge made his or her comments, the party is deemed to have waived objection and cannot raise the issue for the first time on motion for new trial ( Develop-Amatic Engineering v. Republic Mortgage Co. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 143, 150, 91 Cal. Rptr. 193).

[Optional] K. Lack of Objection to Improper Statement. The moving party has a duty to call attention to the impropriety of the court's remarks in order to give the court an opportunity to prevent, by proper instruction, any prejudicial effect on the jury; when there is a failure to do so, the claim of misconduct will not be considered if any harmful effect on the jury could have been removed by instructing it to disregard the remarks (Ward v. De Martini (1930) 108 Cal. App 745, 751, 292 P. 192).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should set out the alleged irregularity and show that it did not prevent the moving party from having a fair trial. This might include argument that the judge's actions did not constitute misconduct. For example, if a judge expresses disagreement with the policy of a statute during trial, counsel should show that despite his or her comments, the judge tried the case according to the law, and hence there was no misconduct [see Weil v. Weil (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 770, 776, 236 P.2d 159] . In addition, counsel might argue that even though the trial judge's conduct may constitute error, the error was not prejudicial and not a basis for granting a new trial [see Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 265-266, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584] .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.50 or § 155.55.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No New Trial for Harmless Error

In Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584 , plaintiff seller brought an action for damages against a buyer for breach of a contract to purchase real property. After the jury returned a verdict for the buyer, the trial court granted the seller's motion for a new trial on the ground that the court had abused its discretion by admonishing plaintiff and counsel in front of the jury and by refusing to allow plaintiff on rebuttal to call an expert witness to testify to the fair market value of the real property at the time of the breach. The court of appeal reversed the order granting a new trial, stating that the trial court is bound by the rule of Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13, which states that prejudicial error is the basis for a new trial and there is no discretion to grant a new trial for harmless error. In this case, the trial judge appeared to state that he did not think that his conduct could have been prejudicial, but he granted a new trial, because he believed that the grant was required as a matter of form to foster the appearance of justice. On examining the merits of the case, the court decided that the order was unsound, since it was clear that prejudicial error did not occur (80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 266-267) . The grant of a new trial for harmless error violates the constitutional provision and wastes judicial time and resources to no purpose (80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 266) .

[b] Judge's Personal Habits, Conduct, or Statements

The factual and procedural background of Gay v. Torrance (1904) 145 Cal. 144, 78 P. 540 is discussed in § 155.50[3][a]. The Supreme Court stated that personal misconduct of a judge who has under advisement a case tried in his or her court can be an irregularity in the proceedings of the court for which a new trial may be granted under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) (145 Cal. 144, 148-149) . The language of the statute is sufficiently broad to include any departure by the court from the due and orderly method of disposition of an action by which the substantial rights of a party have been materially affected, where such departure is not evidenced by a ruling or order that may be the subject of an exception (145 Cal. 144, 149-150) . The Court stated, however, that the personal habits, conduct, deportment, or statements of the judge that have no relation to or effect on the disposition of the case are not the proper subject of complaint on motion for new trial. The question is whether the acts were of a nature and done under such circumstances as to afford reasonable grounds for the conclusion that the defeated party has not had a fair and impartial trial (145 Cal. 144, 150) .

[c] Decided Cases Not Controlling Precedents in New Situation

In Weil v. Weil (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 770, 236 P.2d 159 , plaintiff husband brought an action for divorce and defendant wife cross complained for separate maintenance. During trial, the judge stated to counsel at the bench and in chambers that he did not believe in separate maintenance for short marriages and that unless there was additional evidence that he had not heard, he would not award separate maintenance. He also stated that if defendant amended her cross complaint to ask for divorce, he was disposed to granting one. At the conclusion of trial, defendant amended her cross complaint to pray for divorce. A divorce was granted to defendant, and a property settlement was made. After the decree was entered, defendant refused to comply with its provisions. She discharged her attorney and moved for new trial on the ground that the trial judge was guilty of misconduct in coercing her to amend her prayer and consent to the judgment. Her motion was denied.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment granting defendant a divorce on the amended cross complaint, stating that each of the cited cases in which trial judges have been found guilty of misconduct has been substantially different from the others. None of them can be a controlling precedent in a new situation in which new factual questions are presented. Differences in the nature of the litigation, the particular comments or conduct of the trial judge, the scope and reliability of affidavits by parties and attorneys, and the state of the evidence at the trial make it essential that each case turn on its own facts (37 Cal. 2d 770, 786) .

In Gardner v. Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 31 Cal. Rptr. 731 , plaintiffs lessors brought an action to reform a written lease agreement and to recover damages from defendant lessee for the breach of the agreement as reformed. After judgment for defendant, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground that there were irregularities in the proceedings of the court by which they were prevented from having a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. The plaintiffs claimed that the trial judge formed an opinion on the merits of the case before they had completed presentation of their evidence and that he also expressed this opinion to respective counsel, urging them to make a settlement. Their motion was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant, concluding that the record did not present a situation in which the trial judge was guilty of misconduct that required the granting of a new trial (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 226) . Each of the cases that plaintiffs cited in which trial judges had been found guilty of misconduct differed substantially from the others; none of them can be a controlling precedent in a new situation in which new factual questions are presented. Each case must turn on its own facts because of differences in the nature of the litigation, the particular comments or conduct of the trial judge, the scope or reliability of affidavits, and the state of the evidence (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 225-226) .

[d] Judge's Expression of Disagreement With Policy of Statute

The factual and procedural background of Weil v. Weil (1951) 37 Cal. 2d 770, 236 P.2d 159 , is discussed in [c], above. After defendant's motion for new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the judge's alleged misconduct was denied, she appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment granting defendant a divorce on the amended cross complaint, stating that the judge's statement that he did not believe in separate maintenance for short marriages did not evidence an unwillingness to try defendant's case according to law. A judge is not required to approve every statute or precedent by which his decision is governed. A judge who disagrees with the policy of a statute is not necessarily disqualified from hearing a case in which that statute must be applied. In the present case, the judge's opposition to separate maintenance was a personal opinion concerning the wisdom of the legislation. The judge stated that his mind was still open on this issue and that he did not believe that separate maintenance should be granted unless there was additional evidence that he had not heard. Had he regarded length of marriage as a controlling circumstance, additional evidence would have made no difference to him. Therefore, the judge was not guilty of misconduct in thus expressing to the parties what he believed the law should be (37 Cal. 2d 770, 776) .

[e] Judge's Encouragement of Settlement of Litigated Cases

Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106 , was an action brought by plaintiff to foreclose a mechanic's lien against the property owner with whom plaintiff had contracted, the present owners of the property who had purchased it from the prior owner, and the assignees of a second deed of trust from the prior owner. After judgment was rendered for plaintiff against all defendants, defendants moved for a new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. The motion was based on conduct of the trial judge that allegedly prevented defendants from having a fair trial.

The court of appeal modified the judgment to provide liability only against the prior owner who had contracted with the plaintiff and affirmed the original judgment with the modification (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 642) . The court rejected defendants' contention that the trial judge committed certain irregularities that prevented them from having a fair trial. Although defendants contended that the judge exerted pressure on defendants to settle the case in the amount offered by plaintiff, the claim of coercion was without substance. The judge's statement that he thought counsel for plaintiff offered a fair figure was made in the light of the court's belief that defendants' defense, based on lack of prelien notice, was not valid. When the offer was unequivocally rejected, the judge proceeded with trial (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 639) . According to the record, there was nothing more than a sincere effort on the part of the judge to settle a case which, as it then appeared to him, was one that called for settlement. The trial judge's ultimate decision was one that he was obliged to render under the law and was not one that could be said to be the result of pique because the settlement had been rejected (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 639-640) .

The factual and procedural background of Gardner v. Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 31 Cal. Rptr. 731 , is discussed in [c], above. After judgment for defendant, plaintiffs moved for new trial on the ground of irregularities in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Plaintiffs claimed that the trial judge had formed an opinion on the merits of the case before plaintiffs had completed the presentation of their evidence and had expressed his opinion to respective counsel, urging them to make a settlement. Plaintiffs' motion was denied, and they appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant, stating that the rule is well established that, within proper bounds, a trial judge should encourage the settlement of litigated cases. The trial judge's comment that he was interested in knowing whether a settlement could be made and his indication that he thought a figure of less than $1,000 was appropriate was not more than a comment that the judge felt might be considered in a settlement discussion. It merely represented an observation based upon what had transpired up to that point in the case. It did not indicate that the judge had closed his mind on the issue of damages or that he would not award damages if the law and the evidence required him to do so (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 223-224) . The court distinguished the instant case from Rosenfield v. Vosper (1941) 45 Cal. App. 2d 365, 114 P.2d 29 (discussed in § 155.50[4][b]), in which the judge urged defendant's counsel to settle for $7,500 before defendants had presented any evidence. In the case at bar, the remarks of the court were made after plaintiffs had been conducting their case for three days and had not yet produced sufficient evidence to establish a prima facie case (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 225) . Considering the court's frame of mind at the conference, his remarks became less significant, since if plaintiffs were not going to be able to prove a prima facie case or damages as a result of breach, there would be no point in defendant offering a settlement of any substantial amount (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 225) .

[f] Judge's Expression of Tentative Views of Case

The factual and procedural background of Gardner v. Mobil Oil Co. (1963) 217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 31 Cal. Rptr. 731 , is discussed in [c] and [e], above. On motion for new trial, plaintiffs claimed that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct when he stated in chambers that he was interested in knowing whether a settlement could be made and was thinking of a figure less than $1,000. After denial of plaintiffs' motion, they appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant, stating that the comments of the trial judge were made without bias or prejudice toward either party. The comments were made with a desire to give counsel for the respective parties an expression of the conclusions of the trial judge up to the moment so that counsel could be advised of what course to take (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 226) . The judge's remarks represented an observation based upon what had transpired up to that point in the case. They did not indicate that he had closed his mind on the issue of damages or that he would not award damages if the law and evidence required him to do so (217 Cal. App. 2d 220, 224) .

[g] Judge's Expression of Doubt Concerning Credibility of Witness

In Jaffe v. Vitz (1948) 84 Cal. App. 2d 810, 191 P.2d 802 , plaintiff brought an action on a written contract for services rendered in connection with the purchase of real property. As the trial neared completion, the trial judge remarked sharply on defendant's lack of credibility as a witness. Defendant appealed the judgment for plaintiff, charging that the trial judge was guilty of prejudicial misconduct and that a new trial should be granted.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for plaintiff, stating that it was apparent from the entire record that both parties received a fair trial. There was no intimation that the judge prejudged the case. In fact, the remarks of the court for which complaint was made had been uttered either after the case had closed or at the end of trial, and the witness in question had already been thoroughly impeached by an entirely disinterested witness. The judge had the right to announce the mental processes by which he determined the credibility of the witnesses and by which he arrived at his conclusions. A new trial cannot be demanded on the ground that the judge in exercising this right may have exceeded the bounds of propriety (84 Cal. App. 2d 810, 814) .

The factual and procedural background of Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106 , is discussed in [e], above. The court of appeal rejected defendants' contention that the trial judge committed certain irregularities that prevented them from having a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. One irregularity that defendants asserted was that the trial judge expressed a doubt concerning the credibility of Chinese witnesses. In a colloquy between the court and counsel at the time findings were being settled, defense counsel asserted that it was apparent that two Chinese witnesses had not lied, and the trial judge stated that he did not know whether they had lied or not. The judge related a previous experience when a Chinese witness testified that he did not understand English and later turned out to be a university graduate who was articulate in English. The judge added, however, that he should not judge individuals by past experience. Although the court of appeal stated that it would have been better to have left these remarks unsaid, it was apparent from the other remarks of the trial judge that he was not motivated by past experience in judging the credibility of the Chinese witnesses in the case at bar (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 640-641) .

[h] Judge's Expression of Opinion on Question of Law or Interpretation of Statute

The factual and procedural background of Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106 , is discussed in [e], above. The court of appeal rejected defendants' contention that the trial judge committed certain irregularities that prevented them from having a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Defendants contended that the trial court prejudged the case in favor of plaintiff before the introduction of any evidence by either party (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 638-639) . Defendants' declaration asserted that after hearing opening statements, the trial judge stated that defendants did not have a defense, that he thought title companies should pay claims like this one, that he referred to title companies as the "Supreme Court of Montgomery Street," and that he used this expression several times in a manner indicating hostility to title companies. The counterdeclaration stated that the colloquy between court and counsel revolved around whether plaintiff was required to give prelien notice and that the trial judge stated in effect that although he was not prejudging the case, he felt that there was no merit in the defense of lack of prelien notice to the buyer of the property. The court of appeal said that it was apparent that the trial judge was merely expressing an opinion on a question of law and the interpretation of a statute, an interpretation with which the court agreed. The trial record revealed that the defendants were permitted at trial to present their defenses, both legal and factual, without any hindrance or restraint on the part of the court. Therefore, this was not grounds for a new trial pursuant to Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 638-639) .

[i] Judge's Questioning of Witness

The factual and procedural background of Schrader Iron Works, Inc. v. Lee (1972) 26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 103 Cal. Rptr. 106 , is discussed in [e], above. The court of appeal rejected defendants' contention that the trial judge committed certain irregularities that prevented them from having a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Defendants claimed that the trial court demonstrated hostility toward the defense in connection with the testimony of a witness. Defendants' declaration stated that the judge took over the examination of the witness concerning the purchase contract of the real property before the witness had been permitted to testify concerning that matter on direct examination. During this questioning, the court allegedly used leading questions to elicit confused testimony contrary to the face of the document. The court of appeal stated that the statements made in the declaration were essentially conclusionary and were not evidentiary. The court pointed out that a trial judge is permitted to question a witness in order to ascertain the truth and that it is not error for him or her to do so unless the party claiming error can point out such error, as well as its prejudicial effect (26 Cal. App. 3d 621, 640) .

[j] Judge's Bias or Prejudice Not Irregularity

In Develop-Amatic Engineering v. Republic Mortgage Co. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 143, 91 Cal. Rptr. 193 , a corporation brought an action against several defendants for declaratory relief, an accounting, and an injunction in an effort to have a deed absolute in form to be declared a mortgage in fact and to quiet title to a parcel of land. After closing arguments, the trial judge remarked that he found the value estimates of the property adduced during trial difficult to believe. The court ordered that plaintiff take nothing by its complaint. Plaintiff moved for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], contending that the trial judge's judgment was based on bias and prejudice as defined by former Code Civ. Proc. § 170(5) (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 170.1(a)(6)), which provides for the disqualification of a judge by reason of bias or prejudice. Plaintiff did not move to disqualify the judge during the action and urged bias or prejudice for the first time on its motion for a new trial. After its motion was denied, it appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that plaintiff should have moved to disqualify the judge as provided by former Code Civ. Proc. § 170(5) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170.1(a)(6), 170.3(c)) when the judge made the comments in question. The disqualification of a judge as provided in former Code Civ. Proc. § 170(5) (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170.1(a)(6), 170.3(c)) must be asserted at the earliest practicable opportunity, otherwise it is deemed waived. Since plaintiff failed to do so, he waived any claimed grounds of disqualification, since he could not gamble on a favorable judgment and then move for disqualification on receiving an adverse judgment. The court also observed that the question of bias or prejudice cannot be raised for the first time on a motion for a new trial. Bias or prejudice is not an irregularity but a condition of mind that may only be taken advantage of by the method prescribed in former Code Civ. Proc. § 170 (now see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 170-170.5). However, evidence of the trial judge's conduct during the trial may be shown as evidence of irregularities preventing a fair trial. An irregularity is an overt act of the judge that prevents the complaining party from having a fair trial (12 Cal. App. 3d 143, 150) . However, plaintiff's declaration in support of its motion for a new trial did not show any irregularities in the conduct of the court. In the court's findings, the trial judge accepted the valuation placed on the property by a witness for defendant. Accordingly, the court of appeal presumed that plaintiff was attempting to impeach the trial court's findings by using remarks the trial court made from the bench. The plaintiff could not do this, since the findings superseded any opinion the judge may have expressed (12 Cal. App. 3d 143, 151) .

[k] Lack of Objection to Improper Statement

The factual and procedural background of Ward v. De Martini (1930) 108 Cal. App. 745, 292 P. 192 , is discussed in § 155.50[3][f]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that it was the duty of the defendant promptly to call attention to the impropriety of the remarks in order to give the court an opportunity to prevent any prejudicial effect on the jury by means of a proper instruction. When there is a failure to do so, the claim of misconduct will not be considered on appeal unless the conduct complained of was such that a harmful result could not be obviated by an instruction. In this case, the court could not say that any harmful effect upon the jury could not have been removed by instructing them to disregard the remarks. In fact, the trial court instructed the jury that questions of fact were solely for the jury's consideration, and that the court had no right to suggest, and did not suggest, what facts had been established in the case (108 Cal. App. 745, 751) . After examining the entire case, the court was satisfied that the verdict was fully sustained by the evidence and that no miscarriage of justice occurred (108 Cal. App. 745, 750-752) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No New Trial for Harmless Error

In Mosesian v. Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 236 Cal. Rptr. 778 , the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground that prejudicial hearsay statements were admitted into evidence, and defendants appealed. The court of appeal reversed, holding, inter alia, that even if admission of the disputed statements constituted error, the error was harmless in light of the substantial evidence supporting the judgment and the mitigating admonishments given to the jury (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 867) . The court therefore adhered to the holding in Osborne v. Cal-Am Financial Corp. (1978) 80 Cal. App. 3d 259, 265-266, 145 Cal. Rptr. 584 (see [3][a], above), stating that granting a new trial motion on harmless error violates Cal. Const., Art. VI, § 13, and rejected the holding of Richard v.

Scott (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 65, 144 Cal. Rptr. 672 , stating that the party prevailing on the motion for new trial is not required to demonstrate that prejudice resulted from the error for which a new trial was granted (191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 858-860) .

[b] Judge's Personal Habits, Conduct, or Statements

In Lowe v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 Cal. App. 3d 718, 127 Cal. Rptr. 23 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment against the plaintiff assignees of a loan applicant for the return of a deposit retained by an insurance company on failure to close the loan. The court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the court's remarks. The court noted that personal habits, conduct, deportment, or statements of the judge that have no relation to or effect on the disposition of the case are not the proper subject of complaint on a motion for new trial (54 Cal. App. 3d 718, 740) .

[c] Judge's Encouragement of Settlement of Litigated Cases

In Chalfin v. Chalfin (1953) 121 Cal. App. 2d 229, 263 P.2d 16 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment of divorce that distributed the property of the parties. Plaintiff wife maintained that she had been coerced by the court into accepting a property settlement. However, the court of appeal stated that the position assumed by the judge did not deprive her of her day in court, since the court never forbade her from introducing pertinent and competent evidence (121 Cal. App. 2d 229, 236) . The trial court also repeatedly insisted that plaintiff not make a property settlement unless she chose to do so of her own free will (121 Cal. App. 2d 229, 235) .

[d] Judge's Expression of Tentative Views of Case

Hansen v. Hansen (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 575, 43 Cal. Rptr. 729 , was a divorce action in which plaintiff wife was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment on the ground that the trial judge manifested such prejudice that it was impossible for her to receive a fair and impartial trial on the merits. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment in part and reversed it in part, but held that the conduct of the judge did not constitute prejudicial misconduct. The court noted that it has the right, if not the duty, to give the parties its tentative conclusions as the case unfolds, or to give an expression of its conclusions up to the moment, in order that counsel may be advised what course to take (233 Cal. App. 2d 575, 585) .

[e] Judge's Expression of Doubt Concerning Credibility of Witness

In Smith v. Coleman (1941) 46 Cal. App. 2d 507, 116 P.2d 133 , the court of appeal affirmed a judgment against defendant physicians in a medical malpractice action. At the conclusion of a nonjury trial, the trial judge referred to defendants as "butchers and bunglers," suggested that they were committing perjury or were suffering from a loss of memory, and stated that an expert witness was endeavoring to cover up for his professional colleagues (46 Cal. App. 2d 507, 513-514) . The court of appeal stated that the trial judge had a right to announce the mental processes by which he determined the credibility of the witnesses and by which he arrived at his conclusions. It added that a new trial cannot be demanded in a nonjury trial on the ground that the judge in exercising this right may have exceeded the bounds of propriety (46 Cal. App. 2d 507, 514) .

[f] Judge's Questioning of Witness

Toriyama v. Putnam (1933) 134 Cal. App. 201, 25 P.2d 34 , was an action for wrongful death resulting from an automobile accident in which defendant passed plaintiff's car and plaintiff's car ran off the road. After the jury returned a verdict for defendant, plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and newly discovered evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)] was denied. Plaintiff's charge of prejudicial misconduct was based on the fact that the judge asked several questions of plaintiff's witness regarding the location of bamboo plants on the left running board of plaintiff's car. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that prejudicial misconduct could not be predicated on the judge's questions, since he desired to clear up uncertainty in the testimony concerning a material point and testimony relating to the condition of the car and plaintiff's load had been previously offered by both sides without objection (134 Cal. App. 201, 204-205) .

[g] Lack of Objection to Improper Statement

In Woods v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1949) 91 Cal. App. 2d 572, 205 P.2d 738 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant bus company in a personal injury action. The court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying plaintiffs' motion for new trial based on the remarks of the trial judge [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. It is not improper for a trial judge, in passing on the competency of evidence to which an objection has been made, to give his reasons for the ruling, provided that the remarks are not expressed in language or manner that is prejudicial. Furthermore, plaintiffs waived their objection to the alleged prejudicial nature of the court's statement of its reason for sustaining the objection to the question propounded by their failure to assign it as prejudicial error or to ask the court to instruct the jury to disregard it (91 Cal. App. 2d 572, 575) .

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED SINCE THE _____ [ORDER OF THE COURT and/or ALLEGED ABUSE OF DISCRETION] DID NOT PREVENT _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND DID NOT MATERIALLY AFFECT HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. No New Trial If No Prejudice to Jury and Evidence Supports Verdict. A new trial will not be granted for an order of the court or abuse of discretion if there is no evidence that it prejudiced the jury and if the evidence in the case is sufficient to sustain the verdict (Sheehan v. Hammond (1905) 2 Cal. App. 371, 375, 84 P. 340).

[Optional] B. Indiscreet Order of Court. An indiscreet order of the court made during trial, but after the retirement of the jury, is not grounds for granting a new trial when it is shown that none of the jurors had knowledge of the order until after the rendition of the verdict (Sheehan v. Hammond (1905) 2 Cal. App. 371, 375-376, 84 P. 340).

[Optional] C. Denial of Continuance to Produce Material Party-Witness. A new trial will not be granted if the denial of a motion for continuance was within the discretion of the trial court (see Henderson v. Drake (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 777, 782, 258 P.2d 879).

[Optional] D. Refusal of Leave to Amend Answer. A new trial will not be granted for refusal to allow defendant leave to amend his or her answer if the alleged abuse of discretion was entirely within the discretion of the trial court (*Cook v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground that there was a court order or abuse of discretion that prevented the moving party from having a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. It generally opposes a motion for new trial that is supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.55.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the moving party was not prejudiced by the order of the court or the alleged abuse of discretion. If the motion is based on a court order, counsel may desire to include a copy of the order after obtaining one from the court clerk.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No New Trial If No Prejudice to Jury and Evidence Supports Verdict

In Sheehan v. Hammond (1905) 2 Cal. App. 371, 84 P. 340 , plaintiff employee brought an action for personal injuries claimed to have resulted from defendant employer's negligence in furnishing unsafe appliances for plaintiff to use in the course of employment. During trial, a witness for defendant testified during cross examination that he had given false testimony at the direction of defendant. After the case had been submitted to the jury, the court made an order that recited that the witness's testimony was "a tissue of falsehoods" and that the record had shown that he had been suborned to testify as he did by the defendant. The court further committed defendant to the custody of the sheriff and set his bail at $2,000. After the jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including an order of the court preventing a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, finding that the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a new trial was proper. The court stated that the order of the court, under the circumstances disclosed by the record, was not a ground for granting a new trial. If the jury had known of the order, the order would have seriously injured defendant. However, the order was not made in the presence or hearing of the jury. The bailiff who had charge of the jury had sworn that the jury had no knowledge of the order until after the verdict had been rendered. The court stated that it could not set aside the verdict because the court made an order of which the jury was ignorant (2 Cal. App. 371, 375) . Furthermore, the evidence was sufficient to sustain the verdict. There was evidence showing that the appliance was defective and that plaintiff was not warned of the danger (2 Cal. App. 371, 375-376) . Since no prejudice resulted to the jury and the evidence supported the verdict, the court affirmed the judgment and the order denying a new trial (2 Cal. App. 371, 375-377) .

[b] Indiscreet Order of Court

The factual and procedural background of Sheehan v. Hammond (1905) 2 Cal. App. 371, 84 P. 340 , is discussed in [a], above. After the case had been submitted to the jury, the court made an order that stated that a witness's testimony was a "tissue of falsehoods" and that the record had shown that he had been suborned by defendant to perjure himself. The court committed defendant to the custody of the sheriff and set his bail at $2,000. After the jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including an order of court preventing a fair trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. When defendant's motion was denied, he appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, noting that the trial court's denial of defendant's motion for a new trial was proper. The court stated that the court order regarding the witness's testimony was indiscreet and made without the mature and careful deliberation that should characterize all judicial action. Nevertheless, the circumstances of the record did not justify the granting of a new trial. The order was not made until after the jury had retired. The bailiff who had charge of the jury had sworn that they had no knowledge of the order until after the verdict had been rendered and the jury had been discharged. The court added that it cannot set aside a verdict because the court, after the jury retired, made an order of which the jury was ignorant. Furthermore, the evidence in the case sufficiently supported the verdict. Since there was no showing that the jury had been prejudiced by the order in question and the evidence supported the verdict, the court affirmed the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial (2 Cal. App. 371, 375-376) .

[c] Denial of Continuance to Produce Material Party-Witness

In Henderson v. Drake (1953) 118 Cal. App. 2d 777, 258 P.2d 879 , plaintiff brought an action on a draft payable to him and for the enforcement of a Mexican judgment obtained on the draft. Defendant had executed the draft in Mexico as payment to plaintiff for legal services. Before trial, plaintiff's counsel moved for a continuance on the ground that it was imperative for plaintiff, who was then in Mexico, to be present at trial. Counsel had thought that plaintiff would not have to be present at trial until defendant amended her cross complaint to allege that plaintiff had conspired with a third party to defraud defendant. The trial court denied the motion for a continuance and ordered the case to trial the next day. After judgment for defendant, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis of insufficiency of the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and improper denial of a motion for a continuance [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Defendant appealed the order.

Even though the court of appeal affirmed the order, it stated that it was quite apparent that the granting or denial of this continuance was probably within the discretion of the trial court and that a ruling either way on the motion probably would not be disturbed on appeal. It was equally apparent, the court added, that on the motion for new trial, after the court had presumably discovered how imperative plaintiff's presence was for the presentation of his case, it had decided that it had abused its discretion in denying the motion and concluded that the motion should have been granted (118 Cal. App. 2d 777, 782-783) . No reason appeared why the trial court, on the motion for new trial, cannot change its mind as to the weight of certain facts on which discretionary action was predicated. The court added that the ground of improper denial of the continuance was sufficient to support the trial court's order granting a new trial and that the order granting the new trial should therefore be affirmed (118 Cal. App. 2d 777, 783) .

[d] Refusal of Leave to Amend Answer

Cook v. Suburban Realty Co. (1912) 20 Cal. App. 538, 129 P. 801 , was an action to recover damages for injuries alleged to have been inflicted on the real property of plaintiff by defendant's wrongful acts. Defendant allegedly filled a natural drain that carried water from plaintiff's property and a large portion of plaintiff's land had, on numerous occasions, been submerged. After verdict for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial, claiming that the court prejudicially erred when it refused to allow defendant to amend his answer. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal dismissed the appeal and affirmed the order denying a new trial. It noted that Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) specifies four separate and distinct grounds on which a motion for a new trial may be made, and the last of these grounds is any order of the court or abuse of discretion by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial. The court stated that the action of a trial court in refusing a party leave to amend a pleading can only be reviewed on a motion for new trial, and in that case, the notice of intention must set forth the ground enumerated above. Since the motion at bar did not set forth this ground, the court stated that the alleged abuse of discretion could not be reviewed (20 Cal. App. 538, 542) . However, the court added, assuming that the notice of intention were properly filed and served, the refusal of the amendment was a matter entirely within the discretion of the court. Even though the trial courts should generally allow great liberality in the matter of amendments to pleadings, the circumstances of the case disclosed that the court's denial of the proposed amendment was not an abuse of discretion. In this case, defendant, by his answer, virtually admitted a material allegation of the complaint and had allowed the admission to stand for nearly a year before attempting to controvert it (20 Cal. App. 538, 541-542) .

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE WAS AN IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JURY THAT PREVENTED _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial on the Ground of Irregularity in the Proceedings of the Jury. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury by which either party was prevented from having a fair trial, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)).

B. Evidence Admissible to Show Misconduct. Upon an inquiry as to the validity of the verdict, any otherwise admissible evidence may be received as to statements made, or conduct, conditions, or events occurring, either within or without the jury room, of such a character as is likely to have influenced the verdict improperly. No evidence is admissible to show the effect of such statement, conduct, condition, or event upon a juror either in influencing him to assent to or dissent from the verdict or concerning the mental processes by which it was determined (Evid. Code § 1150(a); see Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 414-415, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171).

C. Use of Affidavit to Show Statements or Objective Facts. Affidavits of jurors may be received to show statements or other objective facts that were likely to have influenced the verdict improperly and entitle the moving party to a new trial (People v. Hutchinson (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 342, 350, 78 Cal. Rptr. 196, 455 P.2d 132).

D. No-Knowledge Requirement. A new trial is properly granted on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury or juror misconduct if a party and his or her counsel were unaware of the misconduct until after the verdict was returned (Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 103, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. This form is a general one that should be used in combination with more specific forms of points and authorities relating to particular issues or fact situations [see § 155.71 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should set out the alleged irregularity and show how it prevented the moving party from having a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

[c] Supporting Declarations or Affidavits Required

A motion for new trial made on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]. Counsel may include declarations from the offending juror or other jurors showing, for example, that certain conduct occurred. This declaration should contain evidence of objective facts and not mental processes by which the jurors reached their verdict [see Evid. Code § 1150; see also People v. Hutchinson (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 342, 350, 78 Cal. Rptr. 196, 455 P.2d 132] . It must be based on personal knowledge and cannot contain hearsay [Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 105, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132] . If a juror's out-of-court statements are offered to show that the statements were made and are evidence of the bias of the speaker, they are not hearsay, since they are not offered to prove the truth of the matter stated [see Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 109-110, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132] .

[d] "No Knowledge" Requirement

A party relying on the ground of jury irregularities must support his or her motion for new trial with a declaration or affidavit showing that neither counsel nor the moving party had knowledge of the facts constituting the irregularity until the rendition of the verdict [Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 103, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132] . For a form of "no knowledge" declaration, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[e] Irregularity of Jury Proceedings Versus Jury Misconduct

The definition of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury as a ground for new trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] is unclear in light of the subsequent provision that enumerates jury misconduct as a separate ground for new trial [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2); see also Gray v. Robinson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 182, 91 P.2d 194] . Consequently the ground of jury irregularity has been used primarily to challenge proceedings other than misconduct, such as matters relating to the formation of the jury [see, e.g., People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Curtis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 388-389, 63 Cal. Rptr. 138 (concealment of bias on voir dire); Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248, 296 P.2d 563 (competency of juror)].

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury and a related form of supporting declaration, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender). For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the separate ground of jury misconduct, see Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts in that publication.

[g] Related Memoranda

For more specific points and authorities based on the same ground, that of irregularity of the proceedings of the jury, see § 155.71 et seq. For points and authorities on the closely related ground of jury misconduct, see § 155.80 et seq.

[h] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 155.100 et seq. may be used to oppose those set out in this form.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Admissible to Show Misconduct

The factual and procedural background of Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , is discussed in § 155.110[3][b]. The Hasson decision involved a products liability action in which the court of appeal overturned a judgment for plaintiffs on the sole ground of juror misconduct. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court judgment. The Court found that defendant had made a prima facie showing of improper conduct by certain jurors in that some jurors had engaged in distracting activities during the presentation of evidence at trial. It held that plaintiffs could not rely on jurors' counterdeclarations to rebut the inference that some jurors were inattentive during trial, because these counterdeclarations relate to the subjective mental processes of the jurors and are inadmissible under Evid. Code § 1150(a) (32 Cal. 3d 388, 414-415) . Nevertheless, the Court affirmed the trial court judgment because defendant failed to show it was prejudiced by the jurors' inattentiveness (32 Cal. 3d 388, 414-417) .

[b] Use of Affidavit to Show Statements or Objective Facts

In People v. Hutchinson (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 342, 78 Cal. Rptr. 196, 455 P.2d 132 , defendant was found guilty of possession of marijuana. His motion for new trial, based on the misconduct of the bailiff while the jury deliberated, was denied. On appeal, defendant contended that the trial court erred in refusing to consider the affidavit of a juror when it ruled on the motion for new trial. The court of appeal vacated the order denying new trial with directions to the trial court to determine the motion in accordance with its opinion (71 Cal. 2d 342, 351) . Although the general rule was that a jury could not impeach its own verdict except to prove certain judicially or statutorily recognized exceptions, the Legislature, in enacting Evid. Code § 1150(a), permitted a juror to impeach a verdict by proof of overt acts, but not by proof of subjective reasoning processes of individual jurors (71 Cal. 2d 342, 349) . The bailiff's remarks and the tone of their delivery constituted statements and conduct that were likely to have influenced the verdict (71 Cal. 2d 342, 351) . Admission of the jurors' affidavits within the limits set by Evid. Code § 1150 protects the stability of verdicts and allows proof by the best evidence of misconduct on the part of either jurors or third parties that should be exposed and upon which no verdict should be based. Admission of this evidence on a motion for new trial would not present a breach in the postverdict privacy of jury deliberations. It would merely ensure that evidence of misconduct will be available to courts, freeing them to determine the substantive questions of whether the particular misconduct is a recognized ground for new trial and whether it has prejudiced the losing party (71 Cal. 2d 342, 350) .

[c] No-Knowledge Requirement

Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132 , was an action for wrongful death due to medical malpractice brought by a widow and her two children. After judgment for defendants, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, based on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] was granted. Defendants appealed the order, challenging the sufficiency of plaintiffs' declarations. Defendants contended that plaintiffs' motion for new trial was fatally defective because it was not supported by separate declarations by plaintiffs as well as by their counsel that indicated their respective lack of knowledge of the alleged jury irregularities prior to the rendition of the verdict.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that a litigant seeking a new trial on the ground of juror improprieties must present affidavits showing that neither he or she and counsel were aware of the misbehavior until after the verdict was returned. The rationale for the requirement was to prevent a party from withholding knowledge of jury improprieties until after an unfavorable verdict. Although in this case only the attorney submitted a declaration and the parties did not, the Court held that the attorney's declaration substantially complied with the "no-knowledge" rule. In the declaration, the attorney unequivocally stated that both plaintiffs and their attorneys lacked prior knowledge of the jury misconduct raised in the motion for new trial. The Court concluded that although the filing of separate affidavits was preferable, the failure of plaintiffs to do so was not fatal error (5 Cal. 3d 98, 103-105) . After examining the record, the Court upheld the order on the basis of several jurors' concealment of bias on voir dire (5 Cal. 3d 98, 110-111) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Use of Affidavit to Show Statements or Objective Facts

Clemens v. Regents of University of California (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 1, 87 Cal. Rptr. 108 , was a medical malpractice action in which plaintiff, on a motion for new trial, sought to introduce affidavits of jurors to show that a juror concealed a bias on voir dire. The trial court rejected the offer on the ground that statements made during trial did not show that the juror was biased at the time of his voir dire examination. The court of appeal stated that jurors are competent witnesses to prove objective facts to impeach a verdict under Evid. Code § 1150 and that the affidavits in question contained competent evidence as defined by People v. Hutchinson (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 342, 351, 78 Cal. Rptr. 196, 455 P.2d 132 (discussed in [3][b], above). The increased scope of consideration to be given juror affidavits as mandated by Hutchinson would require a determination not only of the issue of the juror's allegedly concealed bias but also of his or her possible misconduct while serving on the jury (8 Cal. App. 3d 1, 19) .

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury (see, e.g., § 155.70).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JURY BECAUSE A JUROR CONCEALED A BIAS ON VOIR DIRE THAT PREVENTED _____ [HIM or HER] FROM ACTING IMPARTIALLY AT TRIAL, THUS DEPRIVING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Constitutional Right to Unbiased Jury. The right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors is an inseparable and inalienable part of the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the California Constitution (Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 110, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132).

B. Juror's Concealment of Bias on Voir Dire. Concealment by a juror during voir dire examination of a state of mind that would prevent his or her acting impartially is misconduct constituting irregularity for which a new trial may be granted. Such concealment need not be intentional (People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Curtis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 388-389, 63 Cal. Rptr. 138 ; *Shipley v. Permanente Hospital (1954) 127 Cal. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a juror's concealment of bias on voir dire. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [see § 155.70].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should set out the conduct of the juror that showed the concealment of bias on voir dire and show how this bias prevented the moving party from having a fair trial. For example, if a juror made certain statements during deliberations that indicated that he or she was biased against plaintiff, counsel should include declarations from the offending juror or other jurors to show which statements were made. Counsel should then argue that the statements were evidence of a bias that prevented this juror from acting impartially [see Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 106-111, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132] . For further discussion of this declaration, see § 155.70[2][c].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial and other supporting papers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.101 and § 155.102 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constitutional Right to Unbiased Jury

The factual and procedural background of Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132 , is discussed in § 155.70[3][c]. The Supreme Court affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. The Court stated that the right to unbiased and unprejudiced jurors is an inseparable and inalienable part of the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the California Constitution. In this case, the Court upheld the order on the basis that a juror concealed a bias on voir dire. Since the verdict was nine to three, the Court stated that the disqualification for bias of any one of the majority jurors could have resulted in a different verdict. Therefore, the Court concluded that the order granting the new trial was sufficiently supported by competent evidence (5 Cal. 3d 98, 110) .

[b] Juror's Concealment of Bias on Voir Dire

In People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Curtis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 63 Cal. Rptr. 138 , defendant condemnees appealed from a judgment awarding them payment for property taken for highway purposes and for severance damages to the remaining property. During the voir dire examination of the jury, a prospective juror, who later became foreman, did not disclose that he was attending weekly classes in real estate appraisal even though he was asked if he had any connection, direct or indirect, with real estate valuation or appraisal or had any preconceived ideas on the subject. The trial court denied defendants' motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], and they appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, stating that concealment by a juror during voir dire examination of a state of mind that would prevent his or her acting impartially is misconduct constituting an irregularity for which a new trial may be granted. Concealment need not be intentional (255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 388-389) . Information that the jury foreman received in his real estate class about the qualifications of real estate appraisers tended to prejudice his judgment of the case. The questions propounded to him on voir dire fairly called for disclosure of this prejudice (255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 389) . During deliberations at a point when the jury was deadlocked, the foreman told the jury that one of the state's appraisers had higher qualifications than one of appellants' appraisers (255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 390) . The prejudicial effect of the misconduct was apparent, since the amount of the verdict indicated rejection of appellant's appraisal testimony in favor of a value much closer to the one fixed by the state's appraisers (255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 391) .

In Shipley v. Permanente Hospital (1954) 127 Cal. App. 2d 417, 274 P.2d 53 , plaintiffs brought a medical malpractice action for negligent diagnosis of a back injury. After judgment for defendants, plaintiffs were granted a new trial. Plaintiffs' motion was based on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury and adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)], accident and surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)], and error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]. The hearing of the motion was concerned mainly with the alleged sympathy of some jurors with the doctors charged with malpractice, which contradicted those jurors' answers on voir dire, and the trial judge indicated that he considered this to be the main point.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the impaneling of a juror who is subject to challenge for cause in consequence of untrue answers that concealed the ground of challenge is certainly an irregularity (127 Cal. App. 2d 417, 424) . The affidavits of the jurors that stated that the prejudiced frame of mind existed from the outset of the trial were conclusional and without evidentiary value. However, the trial judge in his or her wide discretion could infer the earlier existence of the prejudice from the utterances in the jury room (127 Cal. App. 2d 417, 424-425) . No circumstances were shown or urged that made it probable that the prejudice had developed during the trial. Since the prejudice did not relate to a specific person involved in the trial but was generally in favor of all physicians charged with malpractice, the probability was that the prejudice existed longer than the few days of trial (127 Cal. App. 2d 417, 425) .

Shipley v. Permanente Hospital was disapproved on other grounds by the Supreme Court in Kollert v. Cundiff (1958) 50 Cal. 2d 768, 773, 329 P.2d 897 , which in turn was overruled on other grounds by People v. Hutchinson (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 342, 351, 78 Cal. Rptr. 196, 455 P.2d 132 [see Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 110, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Juror's Concealment of Bias on Voir Dire

In Tapia v. Barker (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 761, 206 Cal. Rptr. 803 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for new trial on the grounds of jury misconduct and irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1), (2)]. The court of appeal noted that the jurors concealed bias during voir dire when none of them had answered affirmatively when asked if they would be reluctant to award damages for pain and suffering or if the plaintiff's Mexican background would affect their ability to be fair and impartial. The court of appeal found that the jurors' declarations showed that several jurors stated during deliberations that they did not believe that a dollar amount could be put on pain and suffering and made remarks indicating that they were racially prejudiced against the plaintiff (160 Cal. App. 3d 761, 765-767) .

In Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of a motion for new trial, stating that improper communications by a juror evidenced a concealment of bias on voir dire and constituted misconduct as shown by jurors' affidavits. The juror had made no affirmative answer to a question whether or not there was anything about a lawsuit to recover damages for personal injuries that would interfere with the juror's ability to give both sides a fair trial, but during jury deliberations, the juror told fellow jurors that he was against people suing one another and that high verdicts in cases like this one caused high insurance rates (100 Cal. App. 3d

Clemens v. Regents of University of California (1971) 20 Cal. App. 3d 356, 97 Cal. Rptr. 589 , was a medical malpractice action in which the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment for defendant. The court held that plaintiff was denied a fair trial by the undisclosed bias of a juror and that plaintiff's motion for new trial should have been granted (20 Cal. App. 3d 356, 366-367) . On voir dire, when asked the nature of his profession, a juror did not indicate that he was a dentist. Affidavits and declarations of other jurors contained statements attributing substantial bias and prejudice of the juror against persons, including plaintiff, who would prosecute a medical malpractice action, as well as evidence of prejudgment of the case (20 Cal. App. 3d 356, 362-363) .

In Pollock v. Standard Oil Co. (1967) 256 Cal. App. 2d 307, 64 Cal. Rptr. 66 , the court of appeal affirmed an order vacating an order that denied a new trial. The effect of the order was to require a new trial of the case. The court stated that the rule is clear that a juror's intentional concealment, on voir dire, of a state of mind that would prevent his acting impartially constitutes an irregularity for which a new trial may be granted (256 Cal. App. 2d 307, 309) .

§ 155.72 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Irregularity in Jury Proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]--Mental Incompetency of Juror

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury (see, e.g., § 155.70).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JURY BECAUSE A JUROR WAS MENTALLY INCOMPETENT DURING TRIAL, THUS PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Constitutional Right to Mentally Competent Jury. The right to a trial before mentally competent jurors is as fundamental as the right to trial before unbiased and unprejudiced jurors which courts have held to be an inseparable and inalienable part of the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the California Constitution (Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248, 296 P.2d 563).

B. Mental Incompetence of Juror. Mental incompetence of a juror at the time of trial may be an irregularity for which a new trial may be granted (see Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248-250, 296 P.2d 563).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a juror's mental incompetence during trial. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [see § 155.70].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show that the juror was mentally incompetent at the time of trial, that this fact could not be discovered on voir dire examination of that juror, and that the juror's mental incompetence prevented the moving party from having a fair trial. For discussion of the requirement that the facts be established by supporting declarations or affidavits, see § 155.70[2][c].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial and other supporting papers, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.103 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a notice of intention to move for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Constitutional Right to Mentally Competent Jury

Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 296 P.2d 563 , was an action for personal injuries in which a jury verdict was rendered in favor of defendant. No ruling was made on plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, and it was deemed denied by operation of law [see Code Civ. Proc. § 660]. On appeal, plaintiffs contended that they were denied their right to trial by 12 competent persons, since the foreman of the jury was mentally incompetent at the time of trial. Eleven days after trial, the juror's wife filed a petition to have him declared mentally ill and later had him committed to a state hospital. Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, it stated that there can be no question that the right to trial before mentally competent jurors is as fundamental as the right to trial before unbiased and unprejudiced jurors which the courts have held to be an inseparable and inalienable part of the right to trial by jury guaranteed by the California Constitution. The Legislature has determined by statute who are competent [former Code Civ. Proc. § 198 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 203)] and who are not competent to act as jurors [former Code Civ. Proc. § 199 (now see Code Civ. Proc. § 203)]. By such provision, a person who is not in possession of his natural faculties may be disqualified to act as a juror (141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248) . However, in this case, the affidavits in support of and in opposition to the motion were conflicting, and although a different conclusion by the trial court would have been equally well founded, the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for new trial (141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 250) .

[b] Mental Incompetence of Juror

The factual and procedural background of Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 296 P.2d 563 , is discussed in [a], above. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of the alleged mental incompetence of the jury foreman at the time of trial. After trial, the juror's wife filed a petition to have him declared mentally ill and had him committed to a state mental hospital. Although the court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion, it recognized that the incompetency of a juror may be a basis for granting a new trial (141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248-251) . It noted that possession of one's natural faculties would not necessarily be disclosed under ordinary questioning on voir dire. Therefore, contrary to defendant's argument, the very nature of the affliction would preclude the application of any rule predicated upon the intentional or unintentional failure to disclose one's disqualification on voir dire (141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE WAS JURY MISCONDUCT THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED THE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT].

A. New Trial on Ground of Jury Misconduct. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of misconduct of the jury, if the substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)).

B. Evidence Admissible to Show Misconduct. [See § 155.70[1], Paragraph B.]

C. New Trial if Prejudice Results From Misconduct. A new trial may be granted on the ground of jury misconduct if the misconduct results in prejudice to the opposing party's case (Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 953-954, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377).

D. Presumption of Prejudice. Once juror misconduct is established, a presumption of prejudice arises. The presumption may be rebutted only by an affirmative evidentiary showing that prejudice does not exist (Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 321, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 ; Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 953-954, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. It is a general form that should be used in conjunction with points and authorities relating to the specific fact situation [see, e.g., § 155.81 et seq.].

[b] Argument

[c] Supporting Declarations or Affidavits Required

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[d] Jury Misconduct Versus Irregularity of Jury Proceedings

Irregularities in the formation of the jury, such as a juror's concealment of a bias on voir dire or the mental incompetency of a juror, are generally challenged under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1) as an irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [see, e.g., People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Curtis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 388-389, 63 Cal. Rptr. 138 (concealment of bias on voir dire); Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248, 296 P.2d 563 (mental competency of juror); see also § 155.70 et seq. (supporting motion for new trial on ground of irregularity in proceedings of jury)]. However, the definition of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury is unclear in light of the ground of jury misconduct as a basis for new trial [see Gray v. Robinson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 182, 91 P.2d 194] . Therefore, counsel may desire to make the motion on both grounds, even if the alleged misconduct does not occur during jury formation and clearly seems to be jury misconduct under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2) [see also discussion in § 155.70[2][e]].

[e] Burden of Proof

The initial burden of proof is on the party supporting a new trial. The party must establish that misconduct occurred. Once juror misconduct is established, a presumption of prejudice arises that must be rebutted [Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 321, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 ; Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 953-954, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377] . For a memorandum of points and authorities contending that the opposing party has failed to rebut the presumption of prejudice, see § 155.81.

[f] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial , and Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts (Matthew Bender).

[g] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.110 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial if Prejudice Results From Misconduct

The factual and procedural background of Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , is discussed in § 155.83[3][a]. During trial, the jury foreman told other jurors about his back problem in discussing one plaintiff's alleged back injuries. After the jury awarded a small amount of damages in light of the injuries claimed, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the basis of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed, stating that the juror's misconduct resulted in prejudice to plaintiff's cause. The court explained that in communicating his evidence to the jurors, the foreman precluded the plaintiffs from testing it or making an answer and thus deprived plaintiffs of due process of law (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 954) . Jurors cannot, without violation of their oath, receive or communicate information to fellow jurors from sources outside the evidence in the case (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 952) . The foreman's statement supported defense doctors' conclusions that the automobile accident did not cause plaintiff's lower back injury.

The jury's small award of damages in light of the severity of the injuries claimed indicated a reasonable probability of actual harm to plaintiff's case. Accordingly, the court reversed the judgment (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 953-954) .

[b] Presumption of Prejudice

In Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 , plaintiffs sued defendant firearms distributor for injuries caused by a revolver that unexpectedly discharged during a hunting trip while being carried in a holster. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, and defendant appealed from the judgment. Defendant claimed that the trial court erred in denying its motion for new trial based on juror misconduct. Defendant also contended that two of the jurors committed misconduct in looking up the dictionary definition of "preponderance" and discussing it with the other jurors.

The court of appeal reversed. The court stated that once juror misconduct is established, a presumption of prejudice arises. Citing Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (discussed in § 155.110[3][b]), the court stated that the presumption developed in criminal cases, but that civil litigants also have a constitutionally protected right to the complete consideration of their case by an impartial panel of jurors (226 Cal.

App. 3d 314, 322 n.4). The presumption may be rebutted only by an affirmative evidentiary showing that prejudice does not exist or by a reviewing court's examination of the actual harm to the complaining party resulting from misconduct (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 321) . After reviewing the record, the court stated that there was a substantial likelihood that the jury was improperly influenced by the extraneous dictionary definition to the defendant's detriment (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 326) .

The factual and procedural background of Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , is discussed in § 155.83[3][a] and in [a], above. The court of appeal stated that a presumption of prejudice arises from any juror misconduct and that presumption may be rebutted by proof that no prejudice actually resulted. In this case, the presumption of harm was unrebutted (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 953-954) . Moreover, the court's analysis of the facts of the case demonstrated a reasonable probability of actual harm from the jury foreman's interjection of information from a source outside the evidence in the case (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 954) . Therefore, the court reversed the judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis of jury misconduct under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2) (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 960) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] New Trial if Prejudice Results From Misconduct

In Tapia v. Barker (1984) 160 Cal. App. 3d 761, 206 Cal. Rptr. 803 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for new trial on the grounds of jury misconduct and irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1), (2)]. The court of appeal noted that the jurors had concealed bias during voir dire, that they had discussed collateral sources of income and high insurance rates during deliberations, and had made racially prejudiced statements against the plaintiff. The court found that the jury misconduct during deliberations resulted in an unfair trial (160 Cal. App. 3d 761, 765-767) .

§ 155.81 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Juror Misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]--Presumption of Prejudice Not Rebutted

[1] FORM

[The following may submitted in a supplemental memorandum or reply brief, or may be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct (see § 155.80).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE OPPOSING PARTY HAS FAILED TO REBUT THE PRESUMPTION OF JURY MISCONDUCT.

A. Presumption of Prejudice. [See § 155.80[1], Paragraph D.]

B. Test for Determining Prejudice. The standard to be applied in civil cases is whether there is a substantial likelihood that enough jurors were impermissibly influenced by misconduct to have affected the verdict to the detriment of the complaining party. If so, there is reasonable probability of actual harm to the complaining party resulting from the misconduct and the presumption of prejudice is not rebutted (Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 322-323, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430).

C. Factors for Determining Whether Presumption Is Rebutted. Some of the factors to be considered when determining whether the presumption of prejudice is rebutted are the strength of the evidence that misconduct occurred, the nature and seriousness of the misconduct, and the probability that actual prejudice may have ensued (Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430).

[2] Comments

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] on the basis that the opposing party has failed to rebut the presumption of prejudice resulting from the misconduct.

Once it is established that misconduct was committed, a presumption of prejudice arises and the burden shifts to the opposing party to rebut the presumption by proving that prejudice does not exist [Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 321, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430] . Thus, these points and authorities would normally be used in a supplemental memorandum or reply brief submitted in response to an opposing memorandum that has failed to rebut the presumption of prejudice.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Test for Determining Prejudice

The facts and procedural background of Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 , is discussed in § 155.80[3][b]. In Glage, the court of appeal reversed the trial court's judgment and order denying new trial. After referring to the standard in criminal cases, the court stated that when it finds a substantial likelihood that enough jurors were impermissibly influenced by misconduct to have affected the verdict to the detriment of the complaining party, there is a reasonable probability of harm to the complaining party resulting from the misconduct (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 322) . Under such circumstances, the presumption of prejudice is not rebutted (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323) .

The court gave some examples illustrating that the number of tainted jurors needed to justify a new trial will vary since unanimity is not required in civil cases. For example, when a jury renders a unanimous verdict against the complaining party, evidence of only one impermissibly tainted juror does not compel reversal because the remaining untainted jurors were sufficiently numerous to render a proper and fair verdict, and the record conclusively rebuts the presumption of prejudice. However, evidence of only one tainted juror would not necessarily rebut the presumption when the jury's verdict is nine to three, unless that juror voted for the complaining party (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323 n.5).

[b] Factors for Determining Whether Presumption Is Rebutted

The facts and procedural background of Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 , are discussed in § 155.80[3][b]. In Glage, the court cited Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 417, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (discussed in § 155.110[3][b]), to state that some of the factors to be considered when determining whether the presumption of prejudice is rebutted are the strength of the evidence that misconduct occurred, the nature and seriousness of the misconduct, and the probability that actual prejudice may have ensued (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 324) .

[c] Test for Determining Prejudice

In Province v. Center for Women's Health & Family Birth (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 667 , a juror read a newspaper article that discussed the case and a previous trial in the case that had resulted in a hung jury. The juror had told several other jurors about the article. After returning the verdict, juror declarations established the misconduct. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that a new trial was warranted. Prejudice was presumed from the misconduct, and that prejudice was not rebutted because the misconduct was serious, the final tally of the vote was nine to three, and a previous trial had resulted in a hung jury, indicating that a different result might have occurred had there not been the misconduct (20 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 1678-1680) .

§ 155.82 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Juror Misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]--Improper Communications, Discussions, Statements of Opinion

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct (see § 155.80).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF JURY MISCONDUCT BECAUSE A JUROR IMPROPERLY COMMUNICATED OR DISCUSSED MATTERS PERTAINING TO THE CASE DURING TRIAL, THUS PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial for Jurors' Improper Discussion of Case Before Submission. It is improper for jurors to discuss a case before its submission to them and a new trial may be granted if the improper discussion has resulted in prejudice to the moving party (see Monaghan v. Rolling Mill Co. (1889) 81 Cal. 190, 194, 22 P. 590 ; see also City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 431-432, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] B. Discussion of Case Outside Court. It is misconduct if a juror discusses a matter under investigation outside the court, and a new trial may be granted if this discussion improperly influences the verdict (see People v. Cissna (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 486-493, ___ Cal. Rptr. 3d ___ ; People v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 593, 598-599, 128 Cal. Rptr. 697).

[Optional] C. Prejudgment of Case Before Court's Instruction. A new trial may be granted for misconduct of the jury if a juror expresses an opinion that shows prejudgment of the case before the jury has been instructed by the court (Deward v. Clough (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 439, 442-444, 54 Cal. Rptr. 68).

[Optional] D. Jury Entertained by Party or Counsel. During the trial, if the jury has been treated, fed, or entertained by the successful party or his or her counsel, or at the expense of either, a new trial will, in nearly all cases, be granted (Wright v. Eastlick (1899) 125 Cal. 517, 520, 58 P. 87).

[Optional] E. Communication Between Juror and Witness. Communication between a witness and a juror may be a ground for granting a new trial if there is a showing that the juror was influenced by the communication to the prejudice of one of the parties to the action (see City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 428, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] F. Erroneous Statement of Law Made by Juror to Fellow Jurors. Juror misconduct occurs when a juror communicates an erroneous statement of law to other members of the jury (Young v. Brunicardi (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1344, 1349-1350, 232 Cal. Rptr. 588).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] on the basis of a juror's improper communications, discussions, or statements of opinion. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the basis of jury misconduct [see § 155.80].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature of the jury misconduct and how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.110 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial for Jurors' Improper Discussion of Case Before Submission

Monaghan v. Rolling Mill Co. (1889) 81 Cal. 190, 22 P. 590 , was an action for personal injuries caused by defendant's allegedly negligent maintenance of machinery. During trial, one juror discussed the case with the other jurors, stating that "if the hook at the top of the suspended rod had been entirely closed or lashed, the accident could not have happened." After a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied, he appealed.

The Supreme Court stated that it is improper for jurors to talk with each other about a case before it is finally submitted. However, it affirmed the judgment and felt that the order denying the new trial was proper because the juror stated a self-evident fact that could not have improperly influenced the verdict. Moreover, the Court noted that defendant knew of the occurrence when it happened, yet made no objection, and the Court felt that he could not remain quiet, take the chance of a favorable verdict, and raise the point for the first time on a motion for new trial (81 Cal. 190, 194) .

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in [e], below. During trial, one juror alleged that four named jurors were discussing the case during trial, two of them on many occasions. Although the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant and felt that the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper, it stated that it is improper for jurors to discuss a case before its submission to them. The court noted that the allegedly offending jurors offered subscribed allegations to the effect that they did not discuss the case except in the jury room (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 429) . Because the lower court found that the misconduct was not prejudicial, the court of appeal decided that denial of the motion should not be set aside unless there was no evidence to sustain it (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 430) . After examining the record, the court held that the trial court was warranted in finding that no prejudice ensued (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 431) .

[b] Discussion of Case Outside Court

In People v. Cissna (2010) 182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 486-493, ___ Cal. Rptr. 3d ___ , a juror on a criminal case spoke to a friend about the case every day of the trial. The juror and his friend submitted declarations stating that every day they discussed the evidence presented that day, the victim's possible motives for falsely accusing the defendant, and whether the defendant would testify. On learning of these communications, the defendant filed a motion for a new trial. The prosecutor agreed the juror's conduct constituted misconduct and created a presumption of prejudice, but argued the presumption of prejudice had been rebutted. The trial court agreed and denied the new trial motion.

On appeal, the court reiterated that to challenge the validity of a verdict based on juror misconduct, a defendant may present evidence of overt acts or statements that are objectively ascertainable by sight, hearing, or the other senses [182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 486] . The court held that when the record shows there was juror misconduct, the defendant is afforded the benefit of a rebuttable presumption of prejudice [182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 487] . The court held that juror bias does not require that a juror's animosity towards the defendant; juror bias exists if there is a substantial likelihood that a juror's verdict was based on an improper outside influence, rather than on the evidence and instructions presented at trial, and the nature of the influence was detrimental to the defendant [182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 487] . On these facts, the court held that the juror misconduct was both pervasive (occurring every day of the trial) and substantive (involving deliberative discussions about the merits of the case) [182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 489] .

In addition, the court held that the juror's failure to comply with the trial court's admonitions not to discuss the case cast doubt on his willingness to follow the court's other instructions [182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 489-490] . The court held the defendant was further prejudiced in that the juror's friend acted as a 13th juror who had not been through voir dire, had not been sworn to follow the law, and had not heard all the evidence. Further, the court held that the juror's discussion of defendant's decision not to testify carried a high potential of prejudice to the defense [182 Cal. App. 4th 475, 481-492] .

In People v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 593, 128 Cal. Rptr. 697 , the state brought an action against a power company for fire suppression expenses pursuant to Health & Safety Code §§ 13007-13009. In fighting a fire allegedly caused by the contact of defendant's 12,000-volt power line with an oak tree, the state incurred substantial expenses and sought reimbursement from defendant. During the course of trial, a juror went to the store where he was employed to finish some work. The juror talked to a power company employee who happened to be there and asked him whether or not a limb could catch fire when it came in contact with a powerline. The power company employee answered affirmatively. During jury deliberations, the juror orally communicated this information to the other jurors. After a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the sole ground of jury misconduct [Code

Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When defendant's motion was granted, plaintiff appealed the order and defendant filed a timely protective cross appeal from the judgment.

Although the court of appeal reversed the order granting defendant a new trial, it stated that the facts of the case were patently adequate to support the trial court's order granting a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. However, the defendant's declaration was technically insufficient since it failed to show that the party and counsel were not aware of the misconduct until after the verdict was returned. Counsel's declaration only showed that he lacked knowledge of the misconduct; absence of knowledge on the part of the party was not established. Therefore, the court reversed the order granting defendant's motion for a new trial (56 Cal. App. 3d 593, 598-602) .

[c] Prejudgment of Case Prior to Court's Instruction

In Deward v. Clough (1966) 245 Cal. App. 2d 439, 54 Cal. Rptr. 68 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries resulting from a collision of his motorcycle with defendant's car. During the morning recess of the last day of trial, several jurors came out of the courtroom and headed for the jury room, but found the door to the jury room locked. One juror said, "I don't see why they don't open up the jury room now. We could bring in a verdict already." After verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, stating that since the misconduct was clearly proved and resulted in an unfair trial, the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial was reversible error (245 Cal. App. 2d 439, 441-442) . The court stated that the timing of the incident was significant. It occurred after all of the evidence had been introduced and after plaintiff's attorney had completed his opening argument. However, defendant had not made her argument, and the jury had not yet been instructed. The court characterized the incident as misconduct that was serious, especially in light of the fact that the juror had made up his mind before hearing all of the arguments or any of the court's instructions (245 Cal. App. 2d 439, 443-444) . Furthermore, on voir dire, the juror stated that he would keep an open mind until he heard all of the evidence and the law. The jurors had also been admonished by the court that it was their duty not to form or express an opinion on any subject of the trial until the case had finally been submitted to them. The court stated that the juror failed to keep his promises that he would keep an open mind and had also failed to heed the court's admonitions. Absent any counteraffidavit from the juror, the court accepted the fact that the juror had prejudged the case (245 Cal. App. 2d 439, 444) . Accordingly, the court reversed the judgment and ordered a retrial of the case (245 Cal. App. 2d 439, 453) .

[d] Jury Entertained by Party or Counsel

Wright v. Eastlick (1899) 125 Cal. 517, 58 P. 87 , was an action involving a dispute over the borderline dividing two mining claims. During trial, two jurors went drinking with defendants. After a verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment noting that the order denying a new trial was proper. The Court stated that if the jury has been treated, fed, or entertained by the successful party or his or her counsel, or at the expense of either, a new trial will, in nearly all cases, be granted (125 Cal. 517, 520) . The Court added that this rule is deemed indispensably necessary to preserve the integrity of juries and is a rule of public policy that will be enforced without reference to the question of whether or not the verdict was correct (125 Cal. 517, 520-521) . Even though defendants contended that such drinking and carousing was a custom among miners in the mining district, the Court stated that miners must realize the obligations of their oath and their duty as good citizens, and act accordingly. Furthermore, the Court stated that the verdict in the case was by the bare constitutional number required of nine to three and the result might have been different if the misconduct did not occur. Therefore, the Court concluded that on this showing, the lower court should have granted a new trial (125 Cal. 517, 519-521) .

[e] Communication Between Juror and Witness

In City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , plaintiff city brought an action against a church to condemn certain church lands. During trial, a juror had a conversation with an appraisal witness for the church. The juror had admitted on voir dire that he had bought a home from the witness 18 years before. After judgment for defendant church, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds including misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

Although the court of appeal affirmed the judgment, it stated that communication between a witness and a juror is not a ground for granting a new trial in the absence of a showing that the juror was influenced by the communication to the prejudice of one of the parties to the action. Here, the judge had interviewed the juror in chambers after the conversation, and the juror had assured him that the conversation was purely social and that there had been no discussion of the pending case. Even though the court found no prejudice in this case, the court indicated that a new trial might be proper in a situation in which a party was prejudiced (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 427-428) .

[f] Erroneous Statement of Law Made by Juror to Fellow Jurors

In Young v. Brunicardi (1986) 187 Cal. App. 3d 1344, 232 Cal. Rptr. 588 , plaintiff brought suit for personal injury arising out of an automobile accident. The jury returned a special verdict that defendant was not negligent in causing the accident. During jury deliberations, a juror who was a retired police officer stated to the other jury members that defendant was not negligent if he was not cited for a Vehicle Code violation as a consequence of the accident. This juror also stated that plaintiff must have had something to hide because the police report of the accident was not brought into evidence. Plaintiff brought a motion for a new trial citing jury misconduct based on jurors' affidavits of the statements made by the retired police officer. The trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal reversed. Initially, the court noted that once juror misconduct is established, a presumption of prejudice will arise, but that the presumption is not conclusive and may be rebutted by an affirmative evidentiary showing that the prejudice does not exist or by a reviewing court's finding, after an examination of the entire record, that there was no reasonable probability of actual harm to the complaining party resulting from the misconduct (187 Cal. App. 3d 1344, 1348) . The court then found juror misconduct based on the fact that the retired officer violated his duty to follow the law according to the court's jury instructions by describing his own experiences as a police officer on a question of law, and by instructing the jury that defendant was not negligent if he was not cited as a result of the accident. The court further found that defendant did not rebut the presumption of prejudice, and that there was a reasonable probability that plaintiff suffered harm as a result of the juror's misconduct given the nine to three jury verdict and in light of the fact that other jurors had apparently followed the erroneous statement of law made by the retired officer (187 Cal. App. 3d 1344, 1351-1352) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Discussion of Case Outside Court

People v. Pierce (1979) 24 Cal. 3d 199, 155 Cal. Rptr. 657, 595 P.2d 91 , was a second-degree murder action in which the Supreme Court reversed the conviction of defendant on the basis of prejudicial jury misconduct. After adjournment, the jury foreman approached his neighbor, one of the first police officers to arrive at the scene of the crime, and asked him questions about the evidence presented in the case. The Supreme Court stated that the juror's misconduct resulted in a presumption of prejudice and since the prosecution did not rebut that presumption, defendant was entitled to a new trial (24 Cal. 3d 199, 206-209) .

Although this case was a criminal proceeding decided under a criminal new trials statute, Penal Code § 1181(3), it has been cited in civil cases decided under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2) [see, e.g., Wagner v. Doulton (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d

945, 950, 169 Cal. Rptr. 550] . Furthermore, the presumption of prejudice raised by jury misconduct has also been applied in civil cases [see, e.g., Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 953-954, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377] .

§ 155.83 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Juror Misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]--Improper Reception of Evidence

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct (see § 155.80).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF JURY MISCONDUCT SINCE A JUROR IMPROPERLY RECEIVED EVIDENCE DURING TRIAL, THUS PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial for Improper Reception of Evidence. A new trial may be granted for misconduct of the jury if a juror receives evidence on the subject of litigation from sources outside of court and the improper reception of evidence results in prejudice to the moving party (Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 952-953, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377).

[Optional] B. Experiment by Juror, Viewing of Premises, Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence. Certain experiments by jurors, the viewing of the premises, and the examination of exhibits not in evidence but acquired by the jurors have been held to be the equivalent of taking evidence outside of court and will require a new trial (Walter v. Ayvazian (1933) 134 Cal. App. 360, 364, 25 P.2d 526).

[Optional] C. Experiment by Juror. A new trial may be granted if a juror conducts experiments that put him or her in possession of evidence not offered at trial and that evidence is prejudicial to the moving party's case (see Higgins v. L.A. Gas & Electric Co. (1911) 159 Cal. 651, 657, 115 P. 313 ; see also Wagner v. Doulton (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 945, 950, 169 Cal. Rptr. 550).

[Optional] D. Unauthorized View of Premises. A new trial may be granted for an unauthorized view of the premises if the juror has made observations or measurements that indicate that he or she has received evidence outside of court (see Woebbe v. Sperry (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 344, 119 P.2d 743).

[Optional] E. Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence. A new trial may be granted if a juror examines an exhibit prior to its introduction in evidence if the examination consists of taking evidence along new lines that the opposing party had no opportunity to explain or refute (Tunmore v. McLeish (1919) 45 Cal. App. 266, 268, 187 P. 443).

[Optional] F. Reliance by Juror on Outside Expert. A new trial may be granted when a juror solicits an opinion from an outside expert source on a question that is material to the principal issue, is submitted to the jury for its determination, and on which qualified experts in the case have differed (Walter v. Ayvazian (1933) 134 Cal. App. 360, 364, 25 P.2d 526).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] on the basis of a juror's improper reception of evidence. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the basis of jury misconduct [see § 155.80].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the nature of the juror's improper reception of evidence, showing how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial and Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.112 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial for Improper Reception of Evidence

In Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, brought an action for back injuries allegedly sustained by wife as a result of an automobile accident and for loss of consortium suffered by her husband. During jury deliberation, the foreman of the jury told other jurors about his back condition when discussing whether or not plaintiff should have complained of back pain immediately after the accident. The juror stated that when his back "went out" it "hurt right away," but that he could still go to work. Since defendant had conceded liability and the absence of any contributory negligence, the trial was solely on the issue of damages. After the jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff wife in the amount of $10,000 and a verdict of zero as to plaintiff husband, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the basis of alleged jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] and on several alleged instances of misconduct of counsel [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and granted plaintiffs a new trial, stating that jurors cannot, without violation of their oath, receive or communicate information to fellow jurors from sources outside the evidence in the case. The jury foreman's statement interjected improper evidence at the most critical point in the case. An analysis of the facts of the case demonstrated a reasonable probability of actual harm. The jury's verdict, when viewed in light of the evidence most favorable to it, gave no award, or only a token award for the wife's general damages. No award was made to the husband, even though the evidence of his loss of consortium was uncontradicted. Had the juror's communication been revealed in open court, evidence could possibly have been introduced to distinguish the injuries. By communicating his evidence to the jurors outside the court, the foreman precluded plaintiffs from testing it or making an answer and thus deprived plaintiff of due process of law (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 952-954) .

[b] Experiments by Jurors, Viewing of Premises, Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence

In Walter v. Ayvazian (1933) 134 Cal. App. 360, 25 P.2d 526 , plaintiff husband brought an action for damages allegedly caused by defendant's negligent operation of an automobile. The accident allegedly caused kidney injuries to plaintiff's wife who later died from the injuries. During the jury's deliberation, one juror telephoned her family doctor to ask about a symptom of decedent's kidney condition. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the basis of prejudicial jury misconduct, stating that it is a fundamental rule that all evidence must be taken in open court, and that each party to the controversy must have knowledge of that evidence in order to meet and answer it. The court said that certain experiments by jurors, viewing of premises, and examination of exhibits not in evidence but acquired by the jurors, have been held to be the equivalent of taking evidence outside of court. The court noted that this deprives a party of his or her constitutional right to have knowledge of and to meet and answer the evidence and, therefore, requires the granting of a new trial (134 Cal. App. 360, 364) . Since the juror had greater confidence in the opinion of her family doctor than in the opinions of the doctors produced at trial, the court could not say that the verdict was not influenced by outside evidence (134 Cal. App. 360, 364-365) . Furthermore, the expert witnesses disagreed on the issue at trial, and this issue had been submitted to the jury as a question of fact on which to base its verdict (134 Cal. App. 360, 364) .

[c] Experiment by Juror

In Higgins v. L.A. Gas & Electric Co. (1911) 159 Cal. 651, 115 P. 313 , plaintiff landlord brought an action against defendant gas company for damages caused to plaintiff's building by a gas explosion. Plaintiff claimed that the explosion was caused by a spark from a flashlight used by defendant's employee to investigate a gas leak. Defendant contended that the explosion was caused by a flame from an oil stove and that plaintiff's tenant was negligent in not having extinguished the flame after defendant's employee demanded that he do so. Although the original flashlight was lost in the explosion, a similar light was given to the jury to use in its deliberations. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the basis of the jury's allegedly prejudicial use of the flashlight in its deliberation. When the motion was granted, plaintiff appealed the order.

Although the Supreme Court reversed the order because it found that defendant was not prejudiced by the jury's use of the flashlight, it stated that the fundamental rule is that all evidence must be taken in open court and that each party to a controversy must have knowledge of, and thus to have the opportunity to meet and answer, any evidence brought against that party. This rule, the Court said, governs the use of exhibits by the jurors. They may use the exhibit according to its nature to aid in weighing the evidence that has been given and in reaching a conclusion on a controverted matter. They may carry out experiments within the lines of offered evidence, but if their experiments invade new fields and their verdict is influenced by discoveries from these experiments, then the jury has taken evidence without the knowledge of either party, evidence that the injured party could not meet, answer, or explain (159 Cal. 651, 656-657) . However, even though the trial judge felt that he had committed an error in allowing the jury to experiment with the exhibit without limiting the scope of its experiments by proper instruction, the Supreme Court found that defendant could not have been injured by the improper experiment. Even if the explosion were caused by the tenant's oil stove, plaintiff's action could not be defeated by proof of the tenant's contributory negligence. Thus, if it were established that the concurrent negligence of the gas company and the tenant united to produce the injury to the property, the landlord would have recourse against the gas company and/or tenant. Therefore, the Court stated that the finding that the spark from the flashlight caused the explosion, even if erroneous or erroneously arrived at, could not have caused injury to defendant, and a new trial was not necessary (159 Cal. 651, 660-661, 663) .

Note that an order denying a motion for new trial is no longer appealable [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4), 904.2(e)]. If a party attempts to appeal from an order denying a new trial, the reviewing court will dismiss the appeal [see Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 199-200, 210, 250 P.2d 166] . A party must appeal the judgment, and if he or she raises the issue on appeal, the appellate court, when reviewing the judgment, will assess the propriety of the trial court's ruling on the motion for new trial [see Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 199-200, 210, 250 P.2d 166] .

In Wagner v. Doulton (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 945, 169 Cal. Rptr. 550 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in a collision between his motorcycle and defendants' automobile. During the jury's deliberation, a juror, who was also an engineer, prepared a scale map of the accident location. After verdict for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of the juror's presentation of extrajudicial evidence during jury deliberations. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

Although the court of appeal affirmed judgment, noting that the denial of the motion for new trial was proper, it restated the basic rule that jurors may not receive evidence out of court and may not conduct experiments that put them in possession of evidence not offered at trial. However, the juror's affidavit revealed that he had prepared the map in the jury room using evidence obtained at trial. The court stated that the diagram the juror prepared was a pictorial representation of his idea of the testimony he heard during trial. The fact that the juror was an engineer and was perhaps more skillful at drawing diagrams made no difference since each juror's discussion of the case is necessarily tinged or affected by his or her own viewpoint or experience. Therefore, the court held that it was not misconduct for a juror to make a diagram based solely on the evidence received in court. Accordingly, the court affirmed the judgment (112 Cal. App. 3d 945, 950-951) .

In Woebbe v. Sperry (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 119 P.2d 743 , plaintiff passenger brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile accident that occurred when the driver of the car attempted to turn left and was struck by an oncoming car driven by one of defendants. Before trial, a juror repeatedly passed through the intersection where the accident occurred as he drove between his place of business and his home. During trial, he continued to travel the same path. After judgment for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial based on the juror's misconduct in viewing the scene. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment since there was no evidence that indicated that the juror had received evidence outside of court. If there were evidence that the juror had stopped at the intersection and made observations and measurements, the court indicated that a new trial may have been necessary. In this case, however, the juror's affidavit gave no indication that he received, directly or indirectly, any evidence during his view of the scene (48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 344) .

[e] Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence

In Tunmore v. McLeish (1919) 45 Cal. App. 266, 187 P. 443 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when plaintiff's motorcycle collided with defendant's car. During a recess from trial and before the motorcycle was introduced into evidence, two jurors carefully examined the motorcycle and discussed whether or not plaintiff's wife could see the speedometer from where she was sitting on the rear seat at the time of the accident. Subsequent affidavits by plaintiff and plaintiff's wife showed that the speedometer had slipped from its original location because of the impact of the collision. No evidence was introduced at trial regarding the position of the speedometer prior to the collision. After the jury rendered a verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds including misconduct of the jurors in examining the motorcycle out of court. When the motion was granted, defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that the jurors' examination of the motorcycle was not only the taking of evidence outside of court without the knowledge of the parties, but was also the taking of evidence along new lines which the plaintiff had no opportunity to explain or refute. The fundamental rule, the court explained, was that all evidence must be taken in open court so that each party will have knowledge of and have the opportunity to meet and answer any evidence brought against that party. The court stated that this fundamental rule governs the use of exhibits by the jury. Jurors may use exhibits to aid them in weighing the evidence and may carry out experiments within the lines of offered evidence, but if their experiments invade new fields and their verdict is influenced by discoveries from such experiments, then they have impermissibly taken evidence outside of court without the knowledge of either party. Furthermore, in this case, the court found an added irregularity since the exhibit was examined before it was introduced in evidence. Because of the prejudicial nature of the jury's misconduct, the court affirmed the order granting plaintiff a new trial (45 Cal. App. 266, 268-269) .

[f] Reliance by Juror on Outside Expert

The factual and procedural background of Walter v. Ayvazian (1933) 134 Cal. App. 360, 25 P.2d 526 , is discussed in [b], above. During the jury's deliberation, a juror telephoned her family doctor to ask about a symptom that the decedent allegedly suffered as a result of an automobile accident with defendant. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the basis of prejudicial jury misconduct, stating that the juror's consultation with the doctor consisted of evidence taken outside of court that would require a new trial. The use of the expert opinion could not withstand that degree of scrutiny as to fairness that guaranteed the rendition of a just verdict, uninfluenced by outside evidence. Since the juror had greater confidence in the opinion of her family doctor than in the opinions of the doctors produced at trial, the court could not say that the verdict was not influenced by the outside evidence. Furthermore, the opinion of the doctor was direct evidence on a material question of the case. This material question had been submitted to the jury for its determination as a question of fact on which to base its verdict and on which expert witnesses at trial had differed (134 Cal. App. 360, 364-365) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] New Trial for Improper Reception of Evidence

In Province v. Center for Women's Health & Family Birth (1993) 20 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 25 Cal. Rptr. 2d 667 , a juror read a newspaper article that discussed the case and a previous trial in the case that had resulted in a hung jury. The juror had told several other jurors about the article. After returning the verdict, juror declarations established the misconduct. The court of appeal reversed the judgment, holding that a new trial was warranted. Prejudice was presumed from the misconduct, and that prejudice was not rebutted because the misconduct was serious, the final tally of the vote was nine to three, and a previous trial had resulted in a hung jury, indicating that a different result might have occurred had there not been the misconduct (20 Cal. App. 4th 1673, 1678-1680) .

People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Curtis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 63 Cal. Rptr. 138 , was a condemnation action in which the court of appeal reversed a judgment for defendants and awarded defendants a new trial on the basis of misconduct and irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 657(1), 657(2)]. On voir dire examination, a juror concealed the fact that he was attending real estate appraisal classes, and during the jury's deliberation, he referred to information learned in the classes when discussing the qualifications of appraisers produced at trial. The court stated that the juror's misconduct in imparting information received out of court prejudiced the outcome of the case and that the trial court abused its discretion in denying defendants' motion for a new trial (255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 386-392) .

Smoketree-Lake Murray, Ltd. v. Mills Concrete Construction Co. (1991) 234 Cal. App. 3d 1724, 286 Cal. Rptr. 435 , involved a cross complaint by a developer against various subcontractors for indemnification for damages resulting from defects in the construction of a condominium complex. The developer moved for new trial based on juror misconduct, contending that one of the jurors committed prejudicial misconduct by performing an experiment on pouring concrete. The juror used a small box, filled with kitty litter, and some crayons to demonstrate how concrete was poured. In conducting the demonstration, the juror explained that she knew about concrete construction practice from discussion with her family. She also told the jury how inconsistencies in the sand, on top of which the concrete is placed, can be caused by footprints of people walking back and forth across the building pad before the concrete is poured. The court concluded from these facts that the demonstration constituted misconduct because it brought new evidence into the deliberations (234 Cal. App. 3d 1724, 1749) .

§ 155.84 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Juror Misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]--Arrival at Verdict by Chance

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct (see § 155.80).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE JURORS ARRIVED AT A VERDICT BY CHANCE, THUS PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial for Chance Verdict. The jury's arrival at a verdict by chance is misconduct for which a new trial may be granted (Dixon v. Pluns (1893) 98 Cal. 384, 385, 33 P. 268 ; see Buhl v. Wood Truck Lines (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 544, 144 P.2d 847).

B. Hazard, Risk, or Result of Uncertain Conditions. Chance may be defined as hazard, risk, or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces (Dixon v. Pluns (1893) 98 Cal. 384, 387, 33 P. 268 ; see Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 400, 404, 35 P.2d 513).

[Optional] C. Quotient Verdict. An agreement to vote for an amount calculated by averaging sums favored by the individual jurors, without further deliberation, is a verdict arrived at by chance, and such a verdict constitutes jury misconduct for which a new trial may be granted (Buhl v. Wood Truck Lines (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 544-546, 144 P.2d 847).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] on the basis of the jury's rendition of a verdict obtained by chance. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the basis of jury misconduct [see § 155.80].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show how the verdict was reached by chance and how this deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]. Counsel may also submit an affidavit or declaration of any one of the jurors to show that the verdict was reached by chance [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial , and Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.115 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial for Chance Verdict

In Dixon v. Pluns (1893) 98 Cal. 384, 33 P. 268 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against defendant for injuries suffered when struck by a chisel that fell from a scaffolding. During the jury's deliberations, each juror agreed to write on a piece of paper what he or she thought the amount of the verdict should be. The sums were added together and divided by 12, and the result was rendered as the verdict. Defendant moved for a new trial. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed the order denying a new trial and remanded the cause for further proceedings on the motion for new trial, finding that the verdict was obtained by a resort to chance (98 Cal. 384, 387-389) . The Court stated that the arrival at a verdict by chance is misconduct that could be shown by the affidavits of jurors (98 Cal. 384, 385) . The Court added that in arriving at the verdict in the manner here practiced, the chance of the respective parties, plaintiff and defendant, to secure the verdict is entirely dependent on the sum total of the estimates made by the various jurors, and that sum total is as uncertain and unknown to the jurors as the casting of a die is to a gamester (98 Cal. 384, 387) .

Buhl v. Wood Truck Lines (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 144 P.2d 847 , was an action for damages brought by plaintiffs against a trucking company. During the jury's deliberation, each juror wrote down the amount that he or she favored as a verdict, and this sum was divided by 12. After a verdict was rendered for plaintiffs, defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury. When the motion was granted, plaintiffs appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that an agreement to vote for an amount calculated by averaging the sums favored by the individual juror is a verdict arrived at by chance. Chance verdicts constitute misconduct for which a new trial may be granted. However, the court said that the jury may calculate an average amount as a basis for discussion if there is a later consideration of the amount and a vote on it, even if the jury agrees on the original amount. Affidavits submitted by the jurors were conflicting regarding whether the verdict was fixed by averaging the different amounts or whether after discussion and subsequent voting, a different sum was arrived at. Since the affidavits did in fact create a conflict, the court decided not to disturb the order made by the trial court. Accordingly, it affirmed the order (62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 544-546) .

[b] Hazard, Risk, or Result of Uncertain Conditions

The factual and procedural background of Dixon v. Pluns (1893) 98 Cal. 384, 33 P. 268 , is discussed in [a], above. In that case, the Supreme Court reversed an order denying defendant a new trial and remanded the case since it found that the verdict was obtained by a resort to chance (98 Cal. 384, 387-389) . The Court stated that chance may be defined to be hazard, risk, or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces, and that the facts of the case clearly brought it within this definition (98 Cal. 384, 387) .

Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 400, 35 P.2d 513 , was an action for damages for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff. While deliberating, the jurors could not decide on the amount of damages to award plaintiff. Hence, they decided to vote on two known figures and agreed to accept the figure that received a majority of votes as its unanimous verdict. When the sum of $5,000 received the most votes, the jurors accepted it without further discussion. After this verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct on the part of the jurors in resorting to a chance verdict. When the court denied the motion, defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court stated that chance is commonly understood to imply an absence of explainable or controllable causation and has, moreover, been defined as hazard, risk, or the result of uncertain or unknown conditions or forces. The Court noted, however, that each juror accepted one of the two known figures as his or her first choice and, by way of compromise and for the sake of coming to an agreement, agreed to accept the other as a verdict if it should be the first choice of the majority. The Court felt that there was no operation of any unknown force or unexplainable cause in the jury's verdict, but the verdict was an exercise of judgment of each juror. Therefore, the Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff (98 Cal. 384) .

[c] Quotient Verdict

The factual and procedural background of Buhl v. Wood Truck Lines (1944) 62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 144 P.2d 847 , is discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting defendants a new trial in an action in which each juror wrote down the amount that he or she favored as a verdict, and the sum was divided by 12. The court stated that an agreement to vote for an amount calculated by averaging the sums favored by the individual jurors is a verdict arrived at by chance (62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 544) . In this case, the jurors' affidavits conflicted as to whether the amount of the verdict was fixed by averaging the different amounts, or whether, after discussion and subsequent vote, a different sum was arrived at (62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 545) . Since the court of appeal concluded that the affidavits did conflict, it decided not to disturb the finding of the lower court that a new trial was necessary (62 Cal. App. 2d 542, 545-546) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Quotient Verdict

Ham v. County of Los Angeles (1920) 46 Cal. App. 148, 189 P. 462 , was an action for wrongful death in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting a new trial made on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. The jury reached its verdict by averaging the sums favored by the individual jury members. The court stated that it was obviously a chance verdict that made a new trial imperative (46 Cal. App. 148, 152-153) .

§ 155.85 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Juror Misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]--Reference to Dictionary to Define Term in Instruction

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct (see § 155.80).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF JURY MISCONDUCT BECAUSE _____ [A JUROR HAS or JURORS HAVE] REFERRED TO A DICTIONARY TO DEFINE A TERM USED IN THE INSTRUCTION.

Juror Reference to Dictionary Is Misconduct. It is well established that a juror's reference to a dictionary for the definition of a term used in an instruction constitutes misconduct (Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

These points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)], on the basis of a juror's reference to a dictionary for the definition of a term given in the instruction to the jury.

Once it is established that misconduct was committed, a presumption of prejudice arises and the burden shifts to the opposing party to rebut the presumption [Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 ; see § 155.81].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should identify facts showing that a juror or jurors consulted a dictionary for the meaning of a term used in the instruction.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial , and Ch. 326A, Jury Verdicts (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in § 155.110 et seq. may be used to oppose the motion supported by the foregoing points and authorities.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Juror Reference to Dictionary Is Misconduct

The facts and procedural background of Glage v. Hawes Firearms Co. (1990) 226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 276 Cal. Rptr. 430 , are discussed in § 155.80[3][b]. In Glage, the court reversed the trial court's judgment and order denying new trial. Among the contentions on appeal was the charge that two of the jurors committed misconduct in looking up the dictionary definition of "preponderance" and discussing it with the other jurors (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 320) . The court stated that it is well established that a juror's reference to a dictionary for the definition of a term used in an instruction constitutes misconduct. The court quoted from the explanation in People v. Karis (1988) 46 Cal. 3d 612, 642, 250 Cal. Rptr. 659, 758 P.2d 1189 , that use of a dictionary to obtain further understanding of the court's instructions poses a risk that the jury will misunderstand the meaning of terms that have a technical or unique usage in the law (note, however, that Karis found no basis for prejudice in the jury's consideration of the dictionary definition of "mitigating"). Further, the jury in Glage was specifically instructed not to consult reference works for additional information [see California Jury Instructions--Civil BAJI No. 1.00.5 (7th ed. 1986)], and the plaintiff conceded that the jurors committed misconduct by looking up the definition of "preponderance" and discussing it with all the jurors (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323) .

The issue before the court then became whether the presumption of prejudice from the misconduct had been rebutted (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 323 ; see § 155.81). The court determined that in light of the restricted legal meaning of "preponderance of the evidence," the broader scope of the common definition of "preponderance" stated in dictionaries and the jury's duty to use the former and not the latter, the juror misconduct created a clear and substantial risk that the jury might apply the burden of proof in a mechanical, quantitative way rather than to properly determine which evidence was most convincing. Thus, the court held that the record amply supported a finding of a substantial likelihood that the jury was improperly influenced by the extraneous dictionary definition (226 Cal. App. 3d 314, 326) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED, BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS FAILED TO AFFIRMATIVELY SHOW THAT _____ [HE/SHE/IT and/or HIS/HER/ITS COUNSEL] HAD NO KNOWLEDGE OF THE ALLEGED JURY IRREGULARITY BEFORE THE RENDITION OF THE VERDICT, AND THE FAILURE TO MAKE THIS SHOWING IS FATAL TO THE MOTION.

Affirmative Showing of Lack of Prior Knowledge of Misconduct. A party moving for a new trial under Section 657(1) of the Code of Civil Procedure on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury must affirmatively show that neither he or she nor his or her counsel knew of the facts constituting the claimed misconduct before the rendition of the verdict; absence of this showing is fatal to the motion (*see Forman v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the moving party's failure to show no prior knowledge of the irregularity. In an appropriate case, this form may be used to oppose a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.70 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the moving party has failed to affirmatively show that he or she and his or her counsel were unaware of the facts constituting the alleged irregularity until after the verdict was rendered. Counsel may submit declarations of those parties who had personal knowledge that either the moving party or counsel knew of the alleged irregularity during trial [see Lindemann v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 480, 495-496, 55 P.2d 870] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Affirmative Showing of Lack of Prior Knowledge of Misconduct

Forman v. Alexander's Markets (1956) 138 Cal. App. 2d 671, 292 P.2d 257 , was an action for personal injuries in which verdict was rendered for defendants. Plaintiffs' motion for new trial, based on a juror's allegedly concealed bias on voir dire, was denied, and plaintiff appealed the judgment. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, noting that a motion for a new trial may be granted on the ground that a juror made untrue answers to questions asked on voir dire if it appears that the moving party was not aware of the falsity at the time of the completion of the impanelment of the jury and did not discover that fact during the trial and before rendition of the verdict (138 Cal. App. 2d 671, 674) . In the case at bar, neither plaintiffs nor their attorney submitted any affidavits. Plaintiffs failed to affirmatively show in support of their motion for a new trial that both they and their counsel were ignorant of the facts constituting the claimed misconduct prior to the rendition of the verdict. The absence of such a showing in support of the motion for a new trial was fatal (138 Cal. App. 2d 671, 674-675) . The court quoted Sherwin v. Southern Pacific Co. (1914) 168 Cal. 722, 726, 145 P. 92 , which stated that if the moving party or its attorneys had discovered these facts at any time during the trial it would have been their duty, if they desired to take advantage thereof, to apply to the court for leave to reopen the examination of the jurors, elicit the facts, and offer a challenge to the juror guilty of misconduct.

In failing to show that they did not acquire such knowledge during the course of the trial after the jury was sworn, the moving party failed to present sufficient ground for new trial on that cause (138 Cal. App. 2d 671, 675) .

The factual and procedural background of Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132 , is discussed in § 155.70[3][c]. Plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] was granted, and defendant appealed the order, claiming that plaintiffs' motion was fatally defective because it failed to include supporting declarations by both plaintiffs and their counsel to show their lack of knowledge of the juror improprieties prior to the rendition of the verdict.

Although the Supreme Court affirmed the order, it reiterated the basic rule that a litigant seeking a new trial on the ground of juror improprieties must present affidavits that neither he or she nor counsel were aware of the misbehavior until after the verdict was returned. The purpose of the rule is to prevent a party who has learned of some jury misconduct during the course of the proceedings from gambling on the outcome of trial while secretly preserving the error to be raised on a motion for new trial in the event of an unfavorable verdict. When at any time during trial a party or counsel becomes aware of facts constituting misconduct or irregularity in the proceedings of the jury, he or she must promptly bring such matters to the attention of the court, if an objection is desired. Otherwise, the point will be waived as a ground for a motion for new trial (5 Cal. 3d 98, 103) . In this case, the declaration submitted by plaintiffs' attorney substantially complied with the requirement that plaintiffs and their counsel lack prior knowledge of any jury misconduct. In counsel's declaration he unequivocally stated that both plaintiffs and their attorneys lacked prior knowledge of the jury misconduct raised in the motion for new trial. Although the filing of separate declarations by counsel and client was undoubtedly far preferable, the failure of plaintiffs to do so was not fatal error (5 Cal. 3d 98, 105) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Affirmative Showing of Lack of Prior Knowledge of Misconduct

In Lindemann v. San Joaquin Cotton Oil Co. (1936) 5 Cal. 2d 480, 55 P.2d 870 , the trial court properly denied defendants' motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a juror's alleged concealment, on voir dire, of her friendship with plaintiff and his wife. Affidavits of plaintiff's wife and defendant's counsel showed that counsel knew of the facts during trial. The Supreme Court stated that it is improper to permit a party knowing of misconduct to withhold action and gamble on the outcome of trial before making a complaint (5 Cal. 2d 480, 495-496) .

§ 155.101 Opposing Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Irregularity in Jury Proceedings [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]--Moving Party Has Not Shown Alleged Concealment of Bias Was Prejudicial

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JURY, BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS FAILED TO SHOW THAT THE JUROR'S ALLEGED CONCEALMENT OF BIAS ON VOIR DIRE WAS PREJUDICIAL TO HIS/HER/ITS CASE; THUS _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] WAS NOT PREVENTED FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS WERE NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED.

A. Showing of Prejudice Required. In the absence of a showing of prejudice from an alleged irregularity in impaneling a juror with concealed bias or prejudice, a motion for new trial is properly denied (see City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 432-433, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 ; see also West v. Reigal (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 638, 642-643, 25 Cal. Rptr. 288).

B. Proof by Preponderance of Evidence. An order granting a new trial based on a juror's alleged concealment of bias on voir dire must be supported by a preponderance of the evidence to show that the statements were actually made by the juror and that the juror was, because of a general bias against the party, irrevocably committed to voting against that party regardless of the facts that might emerge at trial. An order for a new trial based on insufficient evidence is an abuse of discretion (Johns v. City of Los Angeles (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 990-996, 144 Cal. Rptr. 629).

C. Juror Must Be Subject to Challenge for Cause. A motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury based on a juror's concealment of bias on voir dire is properly denied in the absence of an adequate showing that the juror was subject to challenge for cause as a consequence of untrue answers (Castro v. Fowler Equipment Co. (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 416, 423-424, 43 Cal. Rptr. 589).

[Optional] D. Jurors as Unable to Deny Prejudicial Influence in Declaration. Jurors' declarations to the effect that their subjective reasoning processes were not affected by the conduct of the allegedly offending juror should not be considered in ruling on the motion for new trial, because jurors cannot deny the prejudicial influence on their minds of knowledge acquired by misconduct (see Evid. Code § 1150; City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 433, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a juror's alleged concealment of bias on voir dire. This form may be used to oppose a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.71.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should argue that the moving party failed to affirmatively show that he or she was prejudiced by the juror's alleged bias. Counsel may include declarations from the allegedly offending juror stating that he or she was not prejudiced against the moving party's case either at the outset of trial or during the conduct of trial, and also never said anything to that effect [see West v. Reigal (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 638, 640-641, 25 Cal. Rptr. 288] . Counsel may also include declarations from any person with personal knowledge that a juror's biased statements were not made [see West v. Reigal (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 638, 641, 25 Cal. Rptr. 288 (declaration from defendant's attorney)] or declarations from other jurors stating that the allegedly biased juror deliberated in a fair and impartial manner without attempting to dominate or influence the other jurors in an improper manner [see West v. Reigal (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 638, 643, 25 Cal. Rptr. 288] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Showing of Prejudice Required

In City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , a city brought an action to condemn certain lands that belonged to a church. The primary issue at trial was whether or not the church had suffered severance damages. After judgment for defendant church, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds, including irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Plaintiff alleged that juror Steede had expressed the opinion that cities should not have the right to condemn property and that he concealed this bias on voir dire examination. Plaintiff also contended that juror McClarinon concealed her prior knowledge that the church was engaged in beneficial youth work. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, and it appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, finding that the jurors' alleged concealment did not constitute a sufficient basis for the granting of a new trial (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 433) . The declaration of the accused jurors provided ample support for the finding that neither juror was prejudiced against the city prior to his or her selection as a juror (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 432) . It was questionable whether the statements attributed to juror McClarinon evidenced a demonstrated concealment of a prejudiced mind (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 432-433) . Furthermore, juror Steede's vote was not needed for the verdict. Under these circumstances, it has been held that no prejudice requiring a new trial is demonstrated by showing the misconduct of a single juror. Nevertheless, if juror Steede's alleged prejudice was communicated to and acted upon by other jurors, it could require a new trial. However, the city failed to show that any juror was influenced by juror Steede's opinion, and therefore the granting of a new trial was not necessary (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 433) .

West v. Reigal (1962) 208 Cal. App. 2d 638, 25 Cal. Rptr. 288 , was an action for personal injuries in which plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, based on a juror's allegedly concealed bias on voir dire, was denied. On voir dire examination, the juror stated that he felt that he could be a fair juror, that he had no prejudice against plaintiffs as a class, that they had a right to come into court and have their cases determined by a jury, and that he would decide the case entirely on the basis of the evidence and the law.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant, stating that assuming that the juror was prejudiced against plaintiff as claimed, it still remained the burden of plaintiff to affirmatively show that prejudice resulted therefrom. In this case, the jury voted 10 to two in favor of the defendant. The uncontradicted affidavit of another juror showed that the deliberations of the jury were confined to the evidence and the law as given to it by the court's instructions. There was no showing that the allegedly biased juror attempted to dominate the other jurors or in any way influence them in an improper manner. Since nine votes would secure a verdict for defendant, even if the biased juror had voted the other way, the verdict would still be for defendant. Since there was nothing to indicate that plaintiff's rights to a fair trial were prejudiced, the court of appeal did not disturb the trial court's ruling (208 Cal. App. 2d 638, 643-644) .

[b] Proof by Preponderance of Evidence

Johns v. City of Los Angeles (1978) 78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 144 Cal. Rptr. 629 , was a wrongful death action in which verdict was rendered for defendants. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds, including irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on two jurors' concealment of bias on voir dire and on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. Both instances of misconduct rested on the affidavit of a single, although different, juror. However, the instances were refuted by the affidavits of all the other jurors. The trial judge granted the motion for new trial.

The court of appeal reversed the order, holding that it was arbitrary and an abuse of discretion (78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 999) . A trial judge may accept the testimony of one witness as against that of opposing witnesses, but does not have the same unfettered right to accept the untested averments in one affidavit as against 11 to the contrary (78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 993) . Plaintiffs on a motion for new trial had the burden of proving by a preponderance of evidence that the controverted statements of the jurors were made and that the jurors who had made them had in fact committed perjury on voir dire (78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 991) . It was then necessary for the trial judge, before granting the motion, to find that the juror was, because of a general bias against plaintiffs, irrevocably committed to voting against plaintiffs regardless of the facts that might emerge at trial (78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 996) . The court concluded that there was insufficient evidence in the record to support a finding that either of the jurors made the contested statements or that they harbored a bias against plaintiffs' cause which they concealed on voir dire (78 Cal. App. 3d 983, 996, 998) .

[c] Juror Must Be Subject to Challenge for Cause

Castro v. Fowler Equipment Co. (1965) 233 Cal. App. 2d 416, 43 Cal. Rptr. 589 , was an employee's action against a third-party tortfeasor for personal injuries sustained in plaintiffs' employment. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial based on a juror's false answer given on voir dire examination [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. After the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment and also sought review of the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the moving party must show that the questioned juror had a biased or prejudiced state of mind towards the defendant and that a challenge for cause would have been granted (233 Cal. App. 2d 416, 423-424) . In this case, the juror was asked if any member of her family had been injured in an accident, to which she replied negatively. After trial, appellant hired a professional investigator who found that the juror's husband had filed a claim with an insurance company for personal injuries arising out of an automobile accident. However, the juror's declaration showed that she did not recall the specific question relating to injuries suffered by an immediate member of her family. She averred that her husband had been in an accident and at a later date had seen a doctor, but she did not know that it was in connection with the accident. She also did not know that he had retained an attorney or had filed a claim. She further stated that her husband owned a vending machine company, had 20 vehicles, drove constantly, and did not discuss business matters with her (233 Cal. App. 2d 416, 423) .

Note that a subsequent court of appeal decision has held that concealment of bias by a juror during voir dire examination need not be willful in order for a new trial to be granted [see People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Curtis (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 378, 388-389, 63 Cal. Rptr. 138 , discussed in § 155.71[3][b]].

[d] Jurors as Unable to Deny Prejudicial Influence in Declaration

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, stating that the court under prior law refused to consider the affidavits of the prevailing jurors to show that the misconduct did not result in their receiving improper information [see Kritzer v. Citron (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 36-37, 224 P.2d 808] . In Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos etc. Ry. Co. (1909) 156 Cal. 379, 388-389, 104 P. 986 , the Court stated that it is thoroughly settled that jurors cannot be heard to deny the prejudicial influence on their minds of knowledge acquired by misconduct. In this case, the court of appeal stated that this ruling prohibiting evidence of a juror's subjective state is retained by Evid. Code § 1150, which provides that no evidence is admissible to show the effect of such statement, conduct, condition, or event on a juror either in influencing him or her to assent to or dissent from the verdict or concerning the mental processes by which it was determined. Here, some of the jurors' declarations contained statements that their subjective reasoning processes were not affected by anything said or done by the allegedly biased juror. The court explained that even if these statements were stricken, plaintiff had still failed to show that the jury was influenced by the statements of the biased juror. Therefore, the court affirmed the order denying the motion (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 433) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Showing of Prejudice Required

Brickell v. Wittmar (1959) 175 Cal. App. 2d 190, 345 P.2d 494 , was a personal injury action in which plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground that one of the jurors concealed his prejudice on voir dire was denied. On voir dire examination, the juror stated that he was not prejudiced against anyone bringing a personal injury action in which the amount of damages sought was $15,000-$25,000. However, during jury deliberations, the juror remarked that actions in which high verdicts are awarded make everyone's insurance premiums increase. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, since the question of damages was never considered by the jury and there was no affirmative showing that the juror's statements caused prejudice sufficient to warrant a reversal (175 Cal. App. 2d 190 196) .

[b] Juror Must Be Subject to Challenge for Cause

The facts and procedural background of Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , are discussed in § 155.110[3][b]. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court judgment, which was entered after the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial based on alleged juror misconduct. The Court found that retrial was not necessary due to the concealment of bias against defendant by two jurors when questioned on voir dire, because the incidents only involved failure to respond affirmatively to generalized inquiries asked of a group of jurors. The Court held that this failure did not amount to concealment of bias, and defendant did not present evidence of actual bias other than silence on voir dire (32 Cal. 3d 388, 408) .

Dunford v. General Water Heater Corp. (1957) 150 Cal. App. 2d 260, 309 P.2d 958 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendants and the denial of plaintiffs' motion for new trial based, in part, on a juror's allegedly false answers given on voir dire. Although plaintiffs maintained that the juror gave untrue answers and that truthful answers would have given rise to a successful challenge for cause, plaintiffs failed to make an adequate showing when they failed to supply the court with a record of the voir dire proceedings or sufficient affidavits (150 Cal. App. 2d 260, 264-265) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JURY BECAUSE COUNSEL FOR THE MOVING PARTY FAILED TO FULLY INTERROGATE THE JUROR ON VOIR DIRE ON THOSE MATTERS THAT MAY HAVE EXPOSED THE ALLEGED BIAS; THUS, THE MOVING PARTY HAS WAIVED ANY OBJECTION TO THE JUROR'S POSSIBLE PREJUDICE.

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a juror's alleged concealment of bias on voir dire. This form may be used to oppose a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.71.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should argue that the juror did not answer untruthfully or conceal any bias on voir dire, and assuming that the moving party's declarations showed that the juror might have been prejudiced, the prejudice concerned matters that the juror could have been but was not interrogated about [see Davilla v. Liberty Life Ins. Co. (1931) 114 Cal. App. 308, 312, 299 P. 831] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Objection If Counsel Fails to Interrogate Juror Fully on Voir Dire

In Davilla v. Liberty Life Ins. Co. (1931) 114 Cal. App. 308, 299 P. 831 , plaintiff beneficiary received a verdict holding the insurer liable in the amount of the policy for her husband's death. The defendant insurance company's motion for a new trial was dismissed for failure to state whether the motion would be made on affidavits or the minutes of the court or both [see Code Civ. Proc. § 659]. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that, assuming the question of the juror's prejudice was properly presented, the affidavits did not disclose that the juror, on voir dire examination, answered untruthfully or concealed any prejudice (114 Cal. App. 308, 311-312) . Even assuming that such prejudice was shown, it appeared that the prejudice concerned matters in which she could have been interrogated but was not. A juror is not required to volunteer information. Failure of counsel to more fully interrogate waived any disqualification that might have developed (114 Cal. App. 308, 312) .

Although defendant's motion for a new trial was denied in this case because it failed to state whether the motion would be based on affidavits or the minutes of the court or both, the Supreme Court has held that if the notice of motion states the grounds on which it will be made, the court abuses its discretion if it denies the motion for a failure to state the nature of the supporting documents [see Nichols v. Hast (1965) 62 Cal. 2d 598, 601, 43 Cal. Rptr. 641, 400 P.2d 753] .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver of Objection If Counsel Fails to Interrogate Juror Fully on Voir Dire

Jutzi v. County of Los Angeles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 242 Cal. Rptr. 74 , was an action against defendant county for alleged medical malpractice involving the Los Angeles County U.S.C. Medical Center (County Hospital) in rendering emergency medical services to plaintiff for a broken ankle, which allegedly caused gangrene and resulted in the amputation of plaintiff's leg. In response to a general question directed by the trial judge to the entire jury panel, a juror revealed that she had been a patient at County Hospital some 18 or 19 years before during one of her pregnancies, but her experience would not affect her ability to render a fair and impartial verdict. Plaintiff's counsel chose not to examine the juror on this subject. The juror later stated to fellow jurors that she had been a patient of the center some 17 times and they always treated her well. Judgment was for the defendant. Plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground of juror misconduct was denied, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed. With respect to the asserted juror misconduct, the court said that although one of the statements that the juror may have made would indicate a bias in favor of County Hospital, there was no evidence that she intentionally concealed such a bias on voir dire, that, on the contrary, she willingly revealed her experience as a patient in response to the general question directed to the entire panel (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 654-655) . The court said that it must be assumed that follow-up questions from counsel further probing the juror's feelings as a result of her experience as a patient would have been answered with the same candor with which she responded to the general question (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 655) . Declining to follow the rule promulgated in People v. Diaz (1984) 152 Cal. App. 3d 926, 932, 200 Cal. Rptr. 77 , that even an inadvertent failure to reveal "a strong potential of juror bias" constitutes misconduct, the court said it was clear that where a juror intentionally lies on voir dire, such an act constitutes misconduct, but that to find misconduct where "concealment" is unintentional and the result of misunderstanding or forgetfulness is clearly excessive (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 655) . The court explained that the juror had made no attempt to conceal her past involvement with County Hospital and said that once her experience was revealed it was the function of plaintiff's attorney to explore the subject if he wished to decide for himself whether a potential for juror bias existed (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 655) . The court concluded that there was no misconduct on the part of the juror with respect to the voir dire (196 Cal. App. 3d 637, 655) .

Pollind v. Polich (1947) 78 Cal. App. 2d 87, 177 P.2d 63 , was an action for personal injuries in which plaintiff's motion for a new trial, on the ground that a juror concealed a bias on voir dire, was denied. The court of appeal held that it was not error to deny plaintiff's motion when the juror was not questioned regarding a possible prejudice against young drivers or his knowledge of the intersection where the accident occurred. If the plaintiff feared that the jurors might be prejudiced against the driving of automobiles by young boys, the jurors should have been questioned on that point (78 Cal. App. 2d 87, 92) .

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE JURY, BECAUSE THE MOVING PARTY HAS FAILED TO SHOW THAT A JUROR WAS INCOMPETENT AT THE TIME OF TRIAL.

Preponderance of Evidence Required. Mental incompetence of a juror is not a basis for granting a new trial if it cannot be shown by a preponderance of evidence that the juror was insane at the time of trial (Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248, 296 P.2d 563).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a juror's mental incompetency during trial. This form may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.72.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should argue that the moving party has failed to show by a preponderance of evidence that the juror was incompetent during trial. Counsel may also argue that the juror's alleged incompetency has not been shown to have been prejudicial to the moving party's case.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Preponderance of Evidence Required

The factual and procedural background of Church v. Capital Freight Lines (1956) 141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 296 P.2d 563 , is discussed in § 155.72[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the denial of plaintiffs' motion for new trial, stating that the presumption is always that a person is sane and that, therefore, plaintiffs had the burden of proving, by a preponderance of evidence, that the juror was insane at the time of trial. The fact that the juror was insane subsequent to trial may have some evidentiary effect but will not create or carry a presumption of the past existence of such insanity (141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 248) . In view of the conflicting evidence presented by affidavit, the court of appeal stated that although a different conclusion by the trial court would have been equally well founded, the trial judge did not abuse his discretion in following the conclusion of defendants' doctors rather than the evidence produced by plaintiffs (141 Cal. App. 2d 246, 250) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT OF THE JURY DID NOT PREVENT _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND DID NOT MATERIALLY AFFECT HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Denial of Motion if No Showing of Prejudice. A motion for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct is properly denied if the moving party fails to show that he or she has suffered prejudice by reason of the juror's misconduct (Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 556-558, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 ; Kritzer v. Citron (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 37, 224 P.2d 808).

B. Misconduct of Trifling Nature. A new trial will not be granted for misconduct of the jury if the misconduct was of such a trifling nature that it could not have been prejudicial to the moving party, and when it appears that the fairness of trial was not affected by the impropriety (Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 417-418, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 ; Siemsen v. Oakland, S. L., & H. E. Railway (1901) 134 Cal. 494, 498, 66 P. 672 ; see Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 556-558, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630).

[Optional] C. Improper Discussion, Communication, or Statement of Opinion. A new trial will not be granted for a juror's improper discussion, communication, or statement of opinion if no prejudice to the moving party has resulted from the misconduct (City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 426-431, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] D. Discussion of Case Before Final Submission to Jury. If jurors have improperly discussed the case before its final submission, and no prejudice to the substantial rights of a party has resulted, a new trial will not be granted (City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 428-430, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 ; Williams v. Layne (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 81, 86, 127 P.2d 582).

[Optional] E. Comments by Juror on Evidence. When a juror, while in the jury box, comments on an introduced piece of evidence at trial, a new trial will not be granted if the remarks were vague and the moving party suffered no prejudice from the remarks (Sepulveda v. Ishimaru (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 543, 547, 308 P.2d 809).

[Optional] F. Communication Between Juror and Counsel. The mere fact that a few words were spoken between an attorney and a member of the jury does not, in itself, constitute prejudicial misconduct for which a new trial will be granted (Dimmick v. Alvarez (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 211, 217, 16 Cal. Rptr. 308).

[Optional] G. Communication Between Juror and Witness. Mere communication between a juror and a witness in a civil action is not a ground for setting aside the verdict or granting a new trial in the absence of a showing that the juror was influenced by the communication to the prejudice of one of the parties to the action (City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 427-428, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1).

[Optional] H. Improper Reception of Evidence. A new trial will not be granted for jury misconduct when a juror has improperly received evidence at trial if the improper reception of evidence did not result in prejudice to the moving party (Anderson v. Pacific Tank Lines (1942) 52 Cal. App. 2d 244, 249, 126 P.2d 153).

[Optional] I. Unauthorized View of Premises. A new trial will not be granted if a juror has made an unauthorized view of the premises if no prejudice to the moving party has resulted from the juror's inspection (Higgins v. L.A. Gas & Electric Co. (1911) 159 Cal. 651, 661-663, 115 P. 313 ; see Maffeo v. Holmes (1941) 47 Cal. App. 2d 292, 296, 117 P.2d 948).

[Optional] J. Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence. A new trial will not be granted if a juror examines an exhibit that is not in evidence if no prejudice has resulted from the juror's misconduct (Anderson v. Pacific Tank Lines (1942) 52 Cal. App. 2d 244, 249, 126 P.2d 153).

[Optional] K. Reliance by Juror on Outside Expert. A new trial will not be granted when a juror consults with an outside expert concerning an issue pertinent to the litigation if the information did not result in prejudice to the moving party (Kritzer v. Citron (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 36-37, 224 P.2d 808).

[Optional] L. Inattentive Jurors. A new trial will not be granted when a juror is inattentive while evidence is being presented at trial if no prejudice has resulted from the juror's misconduct (Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 417, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. It may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.80 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the nature of the alleged jury misconduct, showing how it did not deprive the moving party of a fair trial and did not materially affect the moving party's substantial rights.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Denial of Motion if No Showing of Prejudice

Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 , was a wrongful death action based on strict liability and negligence arising out of an air crash. The jury returned a general verdict against defendant aircraft manufacturer, but two jurors voted in favor of defendant. During a recess in the trial, and before the jury began deliberations, a television program aired, criticizing the safety record of aircraft such as that at issue in the trial and mentioning defendant-manufacturer. Subsequent to return of the verdict, a juror who had voted in defendant's favor signed a declaration stating that two jurors had indicated they had seen the program. No counteraffidavits were filed. Defendant moved for a new trial, claiming this event amounted to jury misconduct raising a presumption of prejudice. After viewing a videotape of the program and a transcript of the videotape, the trial court denied defendant's motion.

On appeal, the Supreme Court affirmed, finding that any misconduct was not of such a character as was likely to have influenced the verdict improperly (37 Cal. 3d 540, 558) . The Court held that even if the jurors committed misconduct by watching the program and a presumption of prejudice arose, the presumption was rebutted (37 Cal. 3d 540, 557) . Citing Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 (discussed in [b], below), the Court stated that the test is whether there is a reasonable probability of actual harm to the complaining party resulting from the misconduct. Some of the factors to be considered in applying the test are the strength of the evidence that misconduct occurred, the nature and seriousness of the misconduct, and the probability that actual prejudice may have ensued (37 Cal. 3d 540, 557) . Applying the test, the Court found that the evidence of misconduct was not convincing, because the declarant was uncertain of the identity of one of the jurors who allegedly viewed the program. There was no indication that either juror saw the whole program, and the declaration lacked specificity regarding the actual statements of the two jurors and the circumstances under which they were made (37 Cal. 3d 540, 557-558) . The Court also found that the misconduct, if it occurred, was not serious in the sense of revealing a deliberate act by the two jurors in violating the trial court's instruction to confine their consideration of the case to evidence heard in court. Finally, the Court found it highly unlikely that the jurors were prejudiced by viewing the program. It noted that the two jurors' statements that they had viewed the program were not made in the jury room, the broadcast did not refer to either the type of aircraft or the accident at issue in the case, and the transcript of the television program left the Court unable to conclude whether it favored plaintiffs' theory of design defect or defendant's theory of pilot error Cal. 3d 540, 558).

In Kritzer v. Citron (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 224 P.2d 808 , plaintiffs brought an action against defendants for damages resulting from an allegedly unauthorized operation on one plaintiff, following delivery of her third child.

During trial, a juror contacted her own doctor and asked him questions relating to the proper practice in performing the operation in question. After judgment for defendants, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was granted. Defendants appealed the order granting plaintiffs a new trial, and plaintiffs appealed the judgment for defendants.

The court of appeal reversed the order for a new trial and affirmed the judgment, stating that it was incumbent on plaintiffs to prove that they were deprived of a fair trial, and since they failed to show that they suffered prejudice by reason of the juror's misconduct, the order granting the motion for a new trial had to be reversed. In this case, while the juror did attempt to acquire pertinent information from a learned source outside of court, plaintiffs did not show that she imparted any of the information to her fellow jurors. Furthermore, the juror accused of misconduct did not vote on the verdict, but abstained from voting. Since nine jurors may determine the factual matters submitted to a jury, and 10 voted for defendants, the court found that the verdict was not tainted by the offending juror. Therefore, the court reversed the order granting a new trial (101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 36-37) .

[b] Misconduct of Trifling Nature

The facts and procedural background of Elsworth v. Beech Aircraft Corp. (1984) 37 Cal. 3d 540, 208 Cal. Rptr. 874, 691 P.2d 630 , are discussed in [a], above. In affirming judgment after denial of defendant's motion for new trial, the Supreme Court found that any presumption of prejudice raised by claimed jury misconduct was rebutted. It found that the fact that two jurors, sitting on a wrongful death case arising out of an airplane crash, viewed a television program criticizing aircraft safety records, did not constitute serious misconduct in the sense of revealing a deliberate act by jurors in violation of the trial court's instructions to confine their consideration of the case to the evidence they heard in court (37 Cal. 3d 540, 558) .

In Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , plaintiffs sued defendant, an automobile manufacturer, on theories of strict liability and negligence for damages incurred when the brakes on plaintiffs' automobile failed. The jury found defendant to be negligent and strictly liable. Defendant moved for a new trial on numerous grounds, including several varieties of jury misconduct. One form of jury misconduct claimed by defendant was inattentiveness at trial. Defendant presented juror declarations stating that one juror was reading a novel during trial while other jurors worked crossword puzzles. Counterdeclarations were submitted denying inattentiveness. The trial court rejected all grounds for a new trial, and judgment was entered for plaintiffs but in a reduced amount. The court of appeal overturned the judgment and ordered a new trial on the ground of juror misconduct. Defendant appealed the judgment to the Supreme Court, and plaintiffs cross appealed the trial court order reducing the amount of their compensatory award.

The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court judgment. The Court stated that a jury's failure to pay attention to the evidence presented at trial is a form of misconduct that will justify the granting of a new trial if shown to be prejudicial to the losing party (32 Cal. 3d 388, 411) . The Court held that the trial court improperly considered juror counterdeclarations that only proved the subjective mental processes of the jurors, and thus defendant's juror declarations remained unrebutted (32 Cal. 3d 388, 414-415) . However, a new trial is required only if it is established that defendant was somehow prejudiced by the jurors' inattentiveness. Prejudice exists if, in the absence of proven misconduct, it is reasonably probable that a result more favorable to the complaining party would have been achieved. The Court stated that based on the facts of the case, there was but the flimsiest evidence of actual prejudice (32 Cal. 3d 388, 415) . Even if one accepted defendant's argument that prejudice should be presumed in civil cases from juror misconduct, the Court stated, such a presumption may be rebutted by an affirmative evidentiary showing that prejudice does not exist or by a reviewing court's examination of the entire record to determine whether or not there is a reasonable probability of actual harm to the complaining party resulting from the misconduct. Some factors to be considered when determining if the presumption is rebutted are the strength of the evidence that misconduct occurred, the nature and seriousness of the misconduct, and the probability that actual prejudice may have ensued (32 Cal. 3d 388, 416-417) . The Court stated that the jurors in the case engaged in essentially neutral, albeit distracting, activities at unspecified times during the presentation of evidence. There was overwhelming proof of liability against defendant and no substantial likelihood that actual prejudice may have resulted from the jurors' activities. It was not clear what type of evidence was being presented while misconduct occurred or even which side' case was being presented. In conclusion, the Court held that the showing of misconduct was rebutted by an examination of the record, which revealed no substantial likelihood that defendant was given anything less than a full and fair consideration of its case by an impartial jury (32 Cal. 3d 388, 417) .

In Siemsen v. Oakland, S. L., & H. E. Railway (1901) 134 Cal. 494, 66 P. 672 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained when he was thrown by one of defendant's electric streetcars. It was alleged that during trial, a juror visited the scene of the accident and made an examination of the track and rails. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was granted, plaintiff appealed the order.

The Supreme Court reversed the order, stating that while the exercise of a liberal discretion in the granting of new trials is recognized, it does not follow that an order must always be upheld when an examination of the record discloses that the misconduct was of such trifling nature that it could not have been prejudicial to the moving party. When it appears that the fairness of the trial has not been affected by such impropriety, the verdict will not be disturbed. The Court noted that if the location or its condition had an essential bearing on the controversy, it may well be that a verdict should be set aside on proof that a juror improperly acquired knowledge of the location or its condition by visiting the scene. In this case, however, the place of the accident was not disputed, nor was it charged that the car left the track because of defective rails. The complaint alleged that the car was negligently maintained, operated, and managed so that while moving at great and unlawful speed, the car ran off the track. Defendant answered that the accident was caused by a latent defect in a wheel that could not, by the exercise of due care, have been discovered. After considering a juror's affidavit, the Court felt that the evidence presented therein was insufficient to justify the granting of a new trial. Therefore, the Court reversed the order granting defendant a new trial (134 Cal. 494, 498-499) .

[c] Improper Discussion, Communication, or Statement of Opinion

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in § 155.82[3][e]. In that case, several instances of juror misconduct were alleged by plaintiff, including a juror's improper conversation with a witness, the jurors' improper discussion of the case among themselves during trial, and the jurors' formation and expression of opinions on the merits of the case before it was submitted to them. After judgment for defendant church, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that a new trial will not be granted for misconduct if it is so trifling that it could not have been prejudicial to the moving party, and when it appears that the fairness of the trial has not been affected by the impropriety. In this case, the trial court had all the evidence before it and was in the best position to evaluate the prejudicial effect of the alleged misconduct. This finding of no prejudice, the court explained, should not be set aside unless there is no evidence to sustain it. The court of appeal then concluded that the findings of the trial court should govern. Therefore, it affirmed the judgment and order denying a new trial (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 429-430) .

Note that an order denying a motion for new trial is no longer appealable [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4), 904.2(e)]. If a party attempts to appeal from an order denying a new trial, the reviewing court will dismiss the appeal [see Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 199-200, 210, 250 P.2d 166] . A party must appeal the judgment, and if he or she raises the issue on appeal, the appellate court, when reviewing the judgment, will assess the propriety of the trial court's ruling on the motion for new trial [see Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 199-200, 210, 250 P.2d 166] .

[d] Discussion of Case Before Final Submission to Jury

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in § 155.82[3][e] and in [c], above. In that case, several instances of juror misconduct were alleged by plaintiff, including the discussion of the case by four named jurors during trial. After judgment was rendered for defendant church, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that it is improper for jurors to discuss a case prior to its submission to them. Insofar as any juror formed and expressed an opinion prior to the submission of the case, the juror violated the prescribed protocol for performance of his or her duties. However, the affidavits of the jurors were in conflict regarding whether or not the jurors had discussed the case except in the jury room. Because of this conflict, the court of appeal stated that the weight and sufficiency of the affidavits and the credence to be given to them was for the trial court to determine (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 429) . Since the trial court determined that the alleged misconduct did not prejudice plaintiff, the court of appeal upheld the trial court's findings and affirmed the judgment and order denying a new trial (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 430) .

In Williams v. Layne (1942) 53 Cal. App. 2d 81, 127 P.2d 582 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when her car collided with defendants' parked truck. During a court recess, several jury members conversed with the court reporter and the bailiff. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment because the only testimony concerning the conversation was given by the court reporter and the bailiff in chambers soon after the conversation took place, and both testified positively that no reference whatsoever was made to the present case or to any of the facts involved. The court stated that even when it is shown that jurors have improperly talked to each other about the case before its final submission, a new trial is not justified unless it appears that prejudice to the substantial rights of a party resultedtherefrom. Since no reference was made in the conversation to the present case, the court concluded that no prejudice resulted. Therefore, the court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff and the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial (53 Cal. App. 2d 81, 86) .

[e] Comments by Juror on Evidence

In Sepulveda v. Ishimaru (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 543, 308 P.2d 809 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. During trial, when plaintiffs' attorney placed a bumper on the counsel table, he heard a juror say, "He can sell that for a fee." After verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the possible prejudicial character and influence on the jurors of the very vague remark were primarily matters of fact for the trial court. The order denying the new trial decided by implication that the verdict was not materially affected by the matter complained of and that the plaintiffs suffered no prejudice through it. Furthermore, counsel for plaintiffs did not bring the matter to the attention of the court. When knowledge of the objectionable fact is obtained in time to apply to the court to remedy or correct it, a party may not sit by in silence, taking chances of a favorable verdict, and complain after a hostile verdict is rendered. That party will have waived his or her right to complain. Because of the lack of prejudice and counsel's failure to immediately raise the issue at trial, the court of appeal affirmed the denial of plaintiffs' motion for a new trial (149 Cal. App. 2d 543, 547) .

[f] Communication Between Juror and Counsel

In Dimmick v. Alvarez (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 211, 16 Cal. Rptr. 308 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries and property damage against defendants. After the case was submitted to the jury, plaintiffs' attorney informed the court that during recess he had observed conversations between members of the jury and counsel for defendants.

Counsel for defendant explained that the juror had asked him if he could ask a question and that he told the juror that it was not a good idea in light of the court's admonition. When defendant's counsel suggested that the jurors involved be questioned, plaintiffs' attorney indicated that he was only stating the matter for the record. After a verdict was rendered for plaintiffs, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the mere fact that a few words were spoken between an attorney and a member of the jury does not in itself amount to prejudicial misconduct. In this case, the juror wanted to ask a question of defense counsel, but never asked the intended question. Furthermore, plaintiffs' counsel failed to object to the conversation and waited until after the case had been submitted to the jury to call it to the attention of the court. By failing to object and by failing to ask for a mistrial at the time the fact of the conversation came to his attention, plaintiffs' counsel waived any right he might have had for a new trial or reversal of the judgment on that ground (196 Cal. App. 2d 211, 217) .

[g] Communication Between Juror and Witness

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in § 155.82[3][e] and in [c] and [d], above. In that case, several instances of juror misconduct were alleged by plaintiff, including improper communication between a witness and a juror. After judgment was rendered for defendant church, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that it is generally held that a mere communication between a witness and a juror in a civil action is not a ground for setting aside the verdict or granting a new trial in the absence of a showing that the juror was influenced by such communication to the prejudice of one of the parties to the action. When misconduct of a juror is urged, prejudice from that misconduct must be shown. The court added that the trial court passed on the matter and that by its denial of the motion for a new trial, the trial court had determined that the alleged misconduct of the juror was not prejudicial. The court concluded that since there was no showing of abuse of discretion, the trial court's decision would not be disturbed on appeal (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 427-428) .

[h] Improper Reception of Evidence

In Anderson v. Pacific Tank Lines (1942) 52 Cal. App. 2d 244, 126 P.2d 153 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in a truck accident. During trial, a juror inspected plaintiff's truck to learn about the condition of the brakes. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct. When both motions were denied, defendants appealed the judgment and the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Defendants also maintained that the lower court should have granted their motion for new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, stating that when misconduct of a juror is urged, prejudice from that misconduct must be shown. In this case, there was no showing of prejudice to defendants resulting from the misconduct of the juror. There was no showing of what information, if any, the juror obtained, or what effect, if any, the inspection of the truck had on the verdict. The record showedthat 11 jurors voted for the verdict that was returned in favor of plaintiff, and one voted against it. The court stated that it may be that the juror who inspected the truck was the one who voted against the return of the verdict. However, the court stated that it could not assume prejudice and in the absence of a showing of prejudice, it could not regard the misconduct of the juror as prejudicial (52 Cal. App. 2d 244, 249) .

[I] Unauthorized View of the Premises

The factual and procedural background of Higgins v. L.A. Gas & Electric Co. (1911) 159 Cal. 651, 115 P. 313 , is discussed in § 155.83[3][c] and in § 155.114[3][a]. During trial, the sheriff in charge of the jury led the jurors past plaintiff's damaged building while conducting them to lunch. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant's motion for new trial was granted on the ground that the court erred in sending the jury to the consultation room with a specific piece of demonstrative evidence. Plaintiff appealed the order granting defendant a new trial. Defendant maintained that the use of this demonstrative evidence by the jury was prejudicial and that the trial court also erred in allowing the jurors to view the scene of the property damage.

The Supreme Court reversed the order, stating that the use of the demonstrative evidence did not prejudice defendant and that the jurors were not conducted past the building for the purpose of inspection. It did not appear that the jurors knew that they were passing the building or that their attention was directed to it. The building itself had been so repaired at the time and the circumstance was of so trifling a character, that even if the case had been criminal, it would not be a ground for disturbing the verdict. In a criminal case, the court noted that a mere casual visit of the jury to the res gestae, as where the jury walked by the scene while taking exercise under the custody of an officer, is not a ground for setting aside the verdict. It added that the rule should be no more rigid in a civil case (159 Cal. 651, 661-662) . Therefore, the Court reversed the order granting defendant a new trial (159 Cal. 651, 663) .

In Maffeo v. Holmes (1941) 47 Cal. App. 2d 292, 117 P.2d 948 , plaintiff brought an action for wrongful death of her minor child due to defendant's alleged negligent operation of an automobile. During trial, two jurors visited the scene of the accident. One juror drove along the street at the same time of day that the accident occurred. Another juror visited the scene and made observations concerning the lighting conditions and the position of the boy's body with reference to the crosswalk. After judgment for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] and irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment because plaintiff submitted improper affidavits to impeach the jury's verdict. However, the court also stated that it was not shown that the jurors' misconduct substantially prejudiced plaintiff's rights. By denying the motion, the court stated, the trial court implied that no prejudice was suffered. Accordingly, the court affirmed judgment for defendant (47 Cal. App. 2d 292, 295-296) .

Note that in a later case, the Supreme Court held that affidavits of jurors may be received to show statements or other objective facts that were likely to have influenced the verdict and that entitled the moving party to a new trial [People v. Hutchinson (1969) 71 Cal. 2d 342, 78 Cal. Rptr. 196, 455 P.2d 132 ; see also Evid. Code § 1150(a)].

[j] Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Anderson v. Pacific Tank Lines (1942) 52 Cal. App. 2d 244, 126 P.2d 153 , is discussed in [h], above. During trial, a juror inspected plaintiff's truck to learn about the condition of the brakes. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendants moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial. When both motions were denied, defendants appealed the judgment and the order denying judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, stating that there was no showing of prejudice to defendants resulting from the juror's misconduct. There was no showing of what information, if any, the juror obtained, or what effect, if any, the inspection of the truck had on the verdict. The record showed that 11 jurors voted for the verdict that was returned for plaintiff, and one voted against it. The court stated that it may be that the juror who inspected the truck was the one who voted against the return of the verdict. However, the court said that it could not assume prejudice, and in the absence of a showing of prejudice, it could not regard the misconduct of the juror as prejudicial (52 Cal. App. 2d 244, 249) .

[k] Reliance by Juror on Outside Expert

The factual and procedural background of Kritzer v. Citron (1950) 101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 224 P.2d 808 , is discussed in [a], above. During trial, a juror contacted her personal doctor and asked him questions relating to a surgical procedure at issue during trial. After a verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct was granted. Defendants appealed the order; plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the order and affirmed the judgment, stating that it is misconduct for a juror to discuss the matter under investigation outside of court or to receive information on the subject of the litigation except in open court and in the manner provided by law. Such misconduct, unless shown by theprevailing party to have been harmless, will invalidate the verdict. The court found, however, that no prejudice was caused by the conduct of the juror in this case. While she did attempt to acquire pertinent information from a learned source, it was not shown that she imparted any of the information to her fellow jurors. Moreover, she abstained from voting and 10 jurors voted for defendants. Since nine jurors may determine the factual matters submitted to a jury and 10 voted for the defendants the court felt that the verdict was not affected by the juror's misconduct either by her conversation or her vote. Since it was incumbent on plaintiffs to prove, and since they failed to show that they suffered prejudice by reason of the juror's misconduct, the court of appeal reversed the order granting a new trial (101 Cal. App. 2d 33, 36-37) .

Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , is discussed in [b], above.

[a] Misconduct of Trifling Nature

In Locksley v. Ungureanu (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 457, 223 Cal. Rptr. 737 , plaintiff, a pedestrian, was walking across a street at an intersection when he was struck by a vehicle driven by defendant. A jury found that defendant was not negligent, and plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of juror misconduct. Plaintiff's claim was based on the fact that a juror experimented by driving with one eye shut because defendant had only one good eye. The trial court denied plaintiff's motion, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that even if the juror's experiment was misconduct, not every minor infraction of the rules by juror mandates a new trial. If the conduct is of such a nonprobative nature that it could not, in the nature of things, have prevented a party from having a fair trial, the verdict should not be set aside. The court held that the trial court's finding that the experiment could not have prejudicially effected the outcome of the case was not an abuse of discretion (178 Cal. App. 3d 457, 461-462) .

In Akers v. Kelley Company Inc. (1985) 173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 219 Cal. Rptr. 513 , defendant moved to overturn the verdict of the jury based on the affidavit of one of the jurors suggesting various forms of jury misconduct. The appellate court affirmed the trial court's denial of defendant's motions. The court initially noted that not every insignificant infringement of the rules calls for a new trial (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 656) . The court then held that the juror's affidavit was insufficient evidence of misconduct since elements relied on as constituting misconduct, such as statements made, conduct, conditions, or events, must be objectively ascertainable and subject to corroboration, and the juror's affidavit consisted mainly of conjecture and incompetent evidence (173 Cal. App. 3d 633, 656-659) .

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in § 155.82[3][e] and in [c], above. In affirming the judgment granted after denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial, the court of appeal stated that a new trial will not be granted for misconduct of the jury if it is so trifling that it could not have been prejudicial to the moving party and when it appeared that the fairness of the trial had not been affected by the impropriety (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 430) .

[b] Discussion of Case Before Final Submission to Jury

Wilson v. California Cab Co. (1932) 125 Cal. App. 383, 13 P.2d 758 , was an action for wrongful death in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff, noting that an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct was proper [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. During a five-minute recess from trial, after all the evidence had been introduced and both parties had rested, several jurors were observed to have been talking while pointing to a map of the accident scene that had been properly admitted in evidence. The court of appeal stated that assuming that this conduct was a technical violation of the court's instruction to the jury not to discuss the case until it was finally submitted to them, the conduct had not been shown to have been prejudicial to defendants. Therefore, the court affirmed the judgment (125 Cal. App. 383, 386) .

[c] Communication Between Juror and Witness

The factual and procedural background of Los Angeles Co. F.C. Dist. v. Abbot (1938) 24 Cal. App. 2d 728, 76 P.2d 188 , is discussed in [g], below. During the progress of trial, a juror asked a witness, the city engineer, questions concerning the deposits of sand, rock, and gravel on certain land. The court stated that although the conduct of the juror was reprehensible, it tended to aid rather than to militate against plaintiff. Thus, the court affirmed the judgment, noting that the denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper (24 Cal. App. 2d 728, 741) .

[d] Improper Reception of Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Hasson v. Ford Motor Co. (1982) 32 Cal. 3d 388, 185 Cal. Rptr. 654, 650 P.2d 1171 , is discussed in [b], above. The Supreme Court affirmed the trial court judgment, which was entered after the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial based on alleged juror misconduct. The Court rejected defendant's argument that a juror's paralegal studies during trial amounted to improper reception of evidence concerning the subject of the trial. The Court held that a juror's inadvertent attendance of a single class during which the subject of an arguably related piece of litigation was mentioned did not constitute misconduct [32 Cal. 3d 388, 409].

[e] Unauthorized View of Premises

Siemsen v. Oakland, S. L., & H. E. Railway (1901) 134 Cal. 494, 66 P. 672 , was a personal injury action in which the Supreme Court reversed an order granting defendant a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct. During trial, a juror allegedly inspected the scene of the accident. However, the Court stated that an examination of the record disclosed that the misconduct was of such a trifling nature that it could not have been prejudicial to the moving party. Since the Court felt that the fairness of the trial was in no way affected by the juror's conduct, it reversed the order granting a new trial (134 Cal. 494, 498) .

An order denying a motion for new trial is no longer appealable [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4), 904.2(e)]. If a party attempts to appeal from an order denying a new trial, the reviewing court will dismiss the appeal [see Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 199-200, 210, 250 P.2d 166] . A party must appeal the judgment, and if he or she raises the issue on appeal, the appellate court, when reviewing the judgment, will assess the propriety of the trial court's ruling on the motion for new trial [see Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 199-200, 210, 250 P.2d 166] .

The factual and procedural background of Woebbe v. Sperry (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 119 P.2d 743 , is discussed in § 155.83[3][d]. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, noting that order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper because even though the juror repeatedly drove through the intersection where the accident had occurred, there was no indication that he had received evidence outside of court during the view of the scene. The juror did not stop at the intersection or make any observations or measurements (48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 344) .

[f] Examination of Exhibits Not in Evidence

Kimic v. San Jose-Los Gatos etc. Ry. Co. (1909) 156 Cal. 379, 104 P. 986 , was a personal injury action in which the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff, noting that an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was proper. While the jurors visited the scene of the accident under a court order, they examined the railroad car's brakes, even though the quality of the brakes was not at issue in the litigation. Since the evidence received out of court was immaterial to any real issue in the case, the Court stated that it could not see how the examination of the brake and its mechanism was a matter of any importance or that it could have been prejudicial to defendant (156 Cal. 379, 398-399) .

Watson v. Los Angeles Transit Lines (1958) 157 Cal. App. 2d 112, 320 P.2d 890 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, noting that the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper. During the jury's deliberation, one juror read the dictionary definitions of "negligent" and "prudent" to the other jurors. The court stated, however, that no prejudice had resulted to plaintiff by reason of the juror's conduct. Accordingly, it affirmed the judgment (157 Cal. App. 2d 112, 116) .

[g] Reliance by Juror on Outside Expert

Los Angeles Co. F.C. Dist. v. Abbot (1938) 24 Cal. App. 2d 728, 76 P.2d 188 , was an eminent domain proceeding in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, noting that an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper. During the progress of trial, a juror asked a witness, the city engineer, questions concerning the deposits of sand, rock, and gravel on certain land. The court stated that although the conduct of the juror was reprehensible, it tended to aid rather than to militate against plaintiff. Thus, the court affirmed the denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial (24 Cal. App. 2d 728, 741) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FAILED TO SHOW THAT BOTH _____ [HE or SHE] AND COUNSEL WERE NOT AWARE OF THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT UNTIL AFTER THE VERDICT WAS RETURNED.

No-Knowledge Requirement. A litigant seeking a new trial on the ground of juror improprieties must present affidavits showing that neither the party nor his or her attorney were aware of the misbehavior until after the verdict was returned, and if the party does not comply with this requirement, the motion for a new trial is properly denied (People v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 593, 598-600, 128 Cal. Rptr. 697).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. It may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial that is supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.80 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show how the moving party's affidavits or declarations failed to show that both the moving party and his or her counsel were unaware of the misconduct until after the verdict was rendered. Although the filing of separate affidavits or declarations by counsel and client is preferable, the moving party's failure to do so will not be fatal to his or her motion [see Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 105, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132] .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No-Knowledge Requirement

The factual and procedural background of People v. Southern Cal. Edison Co. (1976) 56 Cal. App. 3d 593, 128 Cal. Rptr. 697 , is discussed in § 155.82[3][b]. After a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the sole ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When defendant's motion was granted, plaintiff appealed the order and defendant filed a timely protective cross appeal from the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting defendant a new trial, stating that defendant's declaration was technically insufficient because it failed to show that the party and counsel were unaware of the misconduct until after the verdict was returned. The court stated that uninterrupted case authority since Sherwin v. Southern Pacific Co. (1914) 168 Cal. 722, 145 P. 92 , imposes the inflexible requirement that a litigant seeking a new trial on the ground of juror improprieties present affidavits showing that neither he or she nor his or her attorney was aware of the misbehavior until after the verdict was returned. Applying these principles to the facts, the court concluded that the declaration submitted by defendant's attorney established by inference that the attorney did not know of the misconduct until after the verdict was rendered. The requirement that a declaration establish an absence of knowledge on the part of the client remained unsatisfied. Even though the declaration, if technically sufficient, would have made a patently adequate showing to support the trial court's order granting a new trial, the court could not extend counsel's declaration to include his or her client. Therefore, the court reversed the order granting the motion for a new trial (56 Cal. App. 3d 593, 598-600) .

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss how the moving party or his or her counsel gained knowledge of the alleged misconduct during trial and should argue that the moving party's failure to object constituted a waiver of his or her right to complain on a later motion for new trial.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Right to Complain

The factual and procedural background of Sepulveda v. Ishimaru (1957) 149 Cal. App. 2d 543, 308 P.2d 809 , is discussed in § 155.110[3][e]. After verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that when knowledge of the objectionable fact is obtained in time to apply to the court to remedy or correct it, a party may not sit by in silence, taking chances of a favorable verdict, and be heard to complain after a hostile verdict. He or she will have waived the right to complain. In this case, counsel heard the alleged improper comments by the juror, but counsel did not move for a mistrial or bring the matter to the attention of the court. The possible prejudicial character and influence over the jury of the very vague remark made by a fellow juror were primarily matters of fact for the trial court to determine. The order denying the new trial decided by implication that the verdict was not materially affected by the matter complained of and that appellants suffered no prejudice through it. Accordingly, the court affirmed the judgment (149 Cal. App. 2d 543, 547) .

[4] Additional Authorities

Newton v. Thomas (1955) 137 Cal. App. 2d 748, 291 P.2d 503 , was a wrongful death action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court also noted that a new trial was not necessary even though the jury had inadvertently been given certain papers that were not exhibits in evidence. After the jury deliberated for 20-25 minutes, defense counsel became aware that the jurors had these papers in their possession, yet he failed to call the situation to the attention of the court. The court stated that the rule is that when knowledge of the irregularity is made known in time for the court to remedy or correct it, a party may not sit by in silence, taking chances of a favorable verdict, and after a hostile verdict, for the first time, be heard to complain (137 Cal. App. 2d 748, 769) .

THE COURT SHOULD DENY THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] _____ [DECLARATIONS or AFFIDAVITS] ARE PRIMARILY SUPPORTED BY INCOMPETENT EVIDENCE THAT SHOULD NOT BE CONSIDERED.

A. Incompetent Evidence. Incompetent evidence contained in the moving party's affidavits or declarations supporting his or her motion for new trial should not be considered by the trial court in ruling on the motion (see Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 105, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132).

[Optional] B. Hearsay. Evidence presented by affidavit or declaration in connection with a motion for new trial, like oral testimony at trial, must be given from personal knowledge and cannot contain hearsay (Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 105, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132 ; Burns v. 20th Century Ins. Co. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1666, 1670, 1672, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462).

[Optional] C. Evidence of Mental Processes of Jurors. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of jury misconduct if the moving party's motion is supported by affidavits or declarations that are based on inadmissible evidence of the mental processes of jurors (see Evid. Code § 1150(a); Aronowicz v. Nalley's, Inc. (1972) 30 Cal. App. 3d 27, 41, 106 Cal. Rptr. 424).

[Optional] D. [b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the substantive law of evidence to show that the moving party's affidavits or declarations contain incompetent evidence that should not be considered by the court. Counsel may also desire to argue that the admissible evidence contained in the moving party's affidavits or declarations is either insufficient to show the alleged misconduct or to show that the moving party was prevented from having a fair trial.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Incompetent Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132 , is discussed in § 155.70[3][c]. Although the Supreme Court affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)], it indicated that certain types of evidence contained in jurors' declarations were not admissible. The Court noted that hearsay evidence, if contained in a juror's declaration, is inadmissible (5 Cal. 3d 98, 105) . The Court also indicated that only overt acts of jurors, as opposed to mental processes, may be shown by a juror's declaration under Evid. Code § 1150(a) (5 Cal. 3d 98, 111) .

[b] Hearsay

The factual and procedural background of Weathers v. Kaiser Foundation Hospitals (1971) 5 Cal. 3d 98, 95 Cal. Rptr. 516, 485 P.2d 1132 , is discussed in § 155.70[3][c], and in [a], above. Although the Supreme Court affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ.

Proc. § 657(1)] and jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)], it stated that evidence presented by affidavit in connection with a motion for new trial, like oral testimony at trial, must be given from personal knowledge and cannot contain hearsay (5 Cal. 3d 98, 105) . The Court stated, however, that since the trial court did not grant defendants' motion to strike certain portions from the juror's affidavit, it impliedly determined that the testimony was not hearsay. The Court added that it could not say that the lower court's conclusion was erroneous (5 Cal. 3d 98, 106) .

In Burns v. 20th Century Ins. Co. (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1666, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 462 , after trial in her action against her insurance company for bad faith, the plaintiff moved for a new trial based on juror misconduct. In support of the motion, the plaintiff submitted two declarations from her attorney's investigator purporting to recount his conversations with two jurors following the verdict. The declaration stated that the jurors informed him that they were insured by the defendant insurer and that they had never received treatment such as that described in the plaintiff's case. The trial court denied the motion and the plaintiff's appeal followed.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court cited the statutory rule that on an inquiry as to a verdict's validity, any otherwise admissible evidence may be received as to statements made, or conduct, conditions, or events occurring, in or out the jury room, of such a character as is likely to have influenced the verdict improperly [Evid. Code § 1150(a)]. Further, under Evid. Code § 1200, except as provided by law, hearsay is inadmissible. The court stated that the only evidence the plaintiff submitted in support of her new trial motion consisted of the declarations from her attorney's investigator concerning the purported statements and thoughts of two jurors during their deliberations. The declarations, observed the court, were inadmissible hearsay (9 Cal. App. 4th 1666, 1670) . The court held that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the plaintiff's new trial motion. In so deciding, the court cited the Supreme Court's statement in People v. Williams (1988) 45 Cal. 3d 1268, 1318, 248 Cal. Rptr. 834, 756 P.2d 221 , that the determination of a motion for a new trial rests so completely within the court's discretion that its action will not be disturbed unless a manifest and unmistakable abuse of discretion clearly appears (9 Cal. App. 4th 1666, 1672) .

[c] Evidence of Mental Processes of Jurors

In Aronowicz v. Nalley's, Inc. (1972) 30 Cal. App. 3d 27, 106 Cal. Rptr. 424 , plaintiffs brought an action based on breach of contract and alternatively on the doctrine of promissory estoppel. After verdict was rendered for plaintiffs, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. Defendant alleged that the jury reached its verdict by chance and submitted defense counsel's declaration reciting a conversation that counsel had with a juror immediately after the verdict. The juror told counsel that the million dollar verdict was based on the assumption that there were about 100 shareholders in plaintiffs' corporation and one million dollars seemed about right for that number of shareholders. The juror further said that if the jury had known there were fewer shareholders, the verdict would have been less. When defendant's motion was granted, plaintiffs appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order and affirmed judgment for plaintiffs, stating that so far as the matter set out in counsel's declaration is intended to show the mental processes by which the verdict was reached, the declaration is inadmissible under Evid. Code § 1150. The court added that counsel's declaration contained the rankest kind of hearsay and that the matter recited did not show that the verdict was reached by chance. After considering other potential grounds for a new trial, the court reversed the order (30 Cal. App. 3d 27, 41) .

[d] "Mental Processes" Include Misunderstanding of Law

Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1124-1126, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 485 , involved a car accident. The injured driver sued the manufacturer of the car for negligence and products liability. The special verdict included questions regarding "potential risk." The jurors submitted questions to the court regarding the meaning of "potential risk." After deliberating with the parties' counsel, the court submitted an answer to the jurors that it was unable to answer the question as phrased. The jury did not rephrase the question. After the jury found for the defendant, the plaintiff moved for a new trial. The plaintiff submitted declarations from jurors stating that they did not understand what was meant by "potential risk." The trial court held that it committed prejudicial error by not answering the jurors' questions, and granted the motion for new trial.

The court of appeal disagreed. It held that juror declarations are admissible to the extent that they describe overt acts constituting jury misconduct, but they are inadmissible to the extent that they describe the effect of any event on a juror's subjective reasoning process (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1124-1125) . Therefore, the court held, the declarations were inadmissible to the extent they described the jurors' understanding of the instructions (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1125) .

In Mesecher v. County of San Diego (1992) 9 Cal. App. 4th 1677, 12 Cal. Rptr. 2d 279 , the plaintiff brought an action against a county and deputy sheriff for battery and violation of her civil rights when the defendant deputy sheriff allegedly twisted her arm behind her back, administered a "compliance hold," and forced her to the ground. The incident occurred when the plaintiff did not present satisfactory identification as she attempted to leave a prison after a video arraignment with her client. At trial, the jury awarded the plaintiff damages for the tortious conduct and the county moved for new trial and/or judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The trial court denied the county's motion, and the defendants appealed from the judgment entered on the jury's verdict.

The court of appeal affirmed. The county contended that because of juror misconduct, the trial court was required to grant its new trial motion on the battery cause of action. Specifically, the county submitted declarations by six jurors in support of its motion stating that during the deliberations they, and other jurors, defined a "battery" as contact that is intentional or unlawful or harmful or offensive. This definition conflicted with the court's instruction which provided that a battery is any intentional, unlawful and harmful or offensive contact by one person with the person of another (9 Cal. App. 4th 1677, 1682-1683) . The court stated that although jurors may testify to overt acts, that is, statements, conduct, conditions, or events open to sight, hearing, and the other senses and thus subject to corroboration, they may not testify to the subjective reasoning processes of the individual juror. Likewise, stated the court, evidence about a jury's subjective collective mental process purporting to show how the verdict was reached is inadmissible to impeach a jury verdict. Thus, juror declarations are inadmissible when they at most suggest deliberative error in the jury's collective mental process; that is, confusion, misunderstanding, and misinterpretation of the law (9 Cal. App. 4th 1677, 1683) . The county attempted to avoid the impact of these rules by focusing on the fact that several of the jurors communicated their misunderstanding of the instructions during deliberations. However, the subjective quality of one juror's reasoning is not purged by the fact that another juror heard and remembers the verbalization of that reasoning. To hold otherwise would destroy the rule that clearly prohibits the upsetting of a jury verdict by assailing these subjective mental processes. It would also restrict the free exchange of ideas during the jury's deliberations (9 Cal. App. 4th 1677, 1683-1684) .

[a] Evidence of Mental Processes of Jurors

Worden v. Gentry (1975) 50 Cal. App. 3d 600, 123 Cal. Rptr. 496 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal reversed plaintiff's motion for a new trial that was made on several grounds, including misconduct of the jury. The court stated that the declaration of counsel filed with the motion was merely hearsay as to the jurors' alleged prejudice based on feelings against police officers, and the lower court properly concluded that it was an impermissible attempt to impeach the jury's verdict and mental processes; thus, the declaration could not be considered in support of the motion for new trial (50 Cal. App. 3d 600, 606-607) .

Cove, Inc. v. Mora (1985) 172 Cal. App. 3d 97, 218 Cal. Rptr. 7 , was an action concerning the breach of a lease and related matters. The court of appeal reversed an order granting a new trial to defendants that was based on declarations by jurors stating that the jury had rewarded compensatory damages on a nonexistent legal theory. The court held that the declarations were insufficient to impeach the verdict because they concerned the jurors' beliefs and intents at the time they rendered the verdict, and were not based on improper influences open to sight, hearing, and the other senses subject to corroboration (172 Cal. App. 3d 97, 100-103) .

In Maple v. Cincinnati, Inc. (1985) 163 Cal. App. 3d 387, 209 Cal. Rptr. 451 , the court of appeal reversed the trial court's granting of plaintiff's motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct after verdict for defendant in a personal injury action. The court of appeal reasoned that the trial court erred in considering the jurors' oral testimony, because an application for a new trial must be on the basis of affidavits or declarations [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] (163 Cal. App. 3d 387, 392) . The court further held that the decision was improperly based on the trial judge's subjective determination that the jurors failed to correctly analyze the case, rather than on objective evidence of a verdict arrived at by lot or chance (163 Cal. App. 3d 387, 393-394) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] based on a juror's conduct in carrying out experiments to test certain evidence offered at trial. This form may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.83.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature of the juror's experiment, showing that it was within the lines of the evidence offered at trial and was consistent with that evidence. Counsel should also argue that the moving party was not deprived of a fair trial and that his or her substantial rights were not materially affected by the juror's experiment.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Experiment by Juror

The factual and procedural background of Higgins v. L.A. Gas & Electric Co. (1911) 159 Cal. 651, 115 P. 313 , is discussed in § 155.83[3][c]. During deliberation, the jury was allowed to examine a flashlight that was similar to the one lost in a gas explosion allegedly caused by defendant gas company's negligence. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the basis of the jury's allegedly prejudicial use of the flashlight in its deliberation. When the motion was granted, plaintiff appealed the order.

The Supreme Court reversed the order because it found that defendant was not prejudiced by the jury's use of the flashlight. The Court stated that the fundamental rule is that all evidence must be taken in open court and that each party to a controversy must have knowledge of, and thus be enabled to meet and answer, any evidence brought against that party. Jurors may use exhibits to aid in weighing the evidence that has been given and in reaching a conclusion on a controverted matter. They may carry out experiments within the lines of offered evidence. However, if these experiments invade new fields and influence the jury's verdict, then the jury has taken evidence without the knowledge of either party, evidence that the injured party could not meet, answer, or explain (159 Cal. 651, 656-657) . In this case, though the trial judge concluded that he had committed an error in allowing the jury to experiment with the exhibit without limiting the scope of its experiments by proper instruction, the Supreme Court found that the defendant could not have been injured by the improper experiment. Even if the explosion were caused by the tenant's oil stove, the landlord plaintiff's action could not be defeated by the tenant's contributory negligence. Thus, if it were established that the concurrent negligence of the gas company and the tenant united to produce the injury to the property, the landlord would have recourse against the gas company or tenant. Therefore, the Court stated that the finding that the spark from the flashlight caused the explosion, even if erroneous, or erroneously arrived at, could not have worked injury to the defendant, and a new trial was not necessary (159 Cal. 651, 660-661) .

The factual and procedural background of Wagner v. Doulton (1980) 112 Cal. App. 3d 945, 169 Cal. Rptr. 550 , is discussed in § 155.83[3][c]. During the jury's deliberations, a juror, who was also an engineer, prepared a scale map of the accident location. After verdict for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of the juror's presentation of extrajudicial evidence during jury deliberations. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, noting that the denial of the motion was proper. The court stated that it was not misconduct for a juror to make a diagram that was based solely on the evidence received in court. It restated the basic rule that jurors may not receive evidence out of court and may not conduct experiments that put them in possession of evidence not offered at trial. However, the juror's affidavit revealed that he had prepared the map in the jury room using evidence obtained at trial. The court stated that the diagram that the juror prepared was a pictorial representation of his idea of the testimony he heard during trial. The fact that the juror was an engineer and was perhaps more skillful at drawing diagrams made no difference since each juror's discussion of the case is necessarily tinged or affected by his or her own viewpoint or experience. Accordingly, the court affirmed the judgment (112 Cal. App. 3d 945, 950-951) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Experiment by Juror

The facts and procedural background of Locksley v. Ungureanu (1986) 178 Cal. App. 3d 457, 223 Cal. Rptr. 737 , are discussed in § 155.110[4][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of juror misconduct. Plaintiff based his motion on the fact that a juror experimented by driving with one eye shut because defendant had only one good eye. The court held that it was not at all clear that the juror's actions were an impermissible experiment, and thus misconduct, as the actions did not invade a new field. They were merely an experiment on an issue within the evidence, to wit, the ability of a one-eyed individual to drive (178 Cal. App. 3d 457, 461) .

In People v. Phillips (1981) 122 Cal. App. 3d 69, 175 Cal. Rptr. 703 , defendant was convicted of murdering one of her two adopted children and willfully endangering the life and health of the other. Defendant allegedly poisoned her children with sodium bicarbonate in their formula. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, noting the propriety of an order denying defendant a new trial on the ground that a juror had engaged in misconduct by conducting an at-home experiment involving the solubility of sodium bicarbonate in water. The court stated that defendant was not adversely affected by the experiment since the experiment was consistent with evidence presented at trial, related to a matter of fairly common knowledge, and was tangential rather than critical to the case (122 Cal. App. 3d 69, 80-81) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE JURY'S VERDICT IS NOT A CHANCE VERDICT.

A. Verdict Not Chance Verdict. A verdict that is reached without the operation of any unknown force or unexplainable cause, but which required the exercise of the judgment of each juror, is not a chance verdict, even though some jurors may have reached a decision by methods other than weighing the evidence and may have based considerations on other than his or her opinion of the proper amount of damages to be awarded (Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 400, 404, 35 P.2d 513).

[Optional] B. Jury Votes on Two Known Sums and Agrees to Accept One. A jury verdict that is reached by the jurors voting on two known sums, while agreeing to accept the sum that receives the most votes, is not a chance verdict for which a new trial may be granted (Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 400, 404, 35 P.2d 513).

[Optional] C. Subsequent Discussion of Quotient Verdict. A quotient verdict, obtained by taking the average of sums voted by the jurors, does not constitute a chance verdict if the jurors adopted the sum after subsequent discussion and were not bound to accept the sum without further consideration (Bardessono v. Michels (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 780, 795, 91 Cal. Rptr. 760, 478 P.2d 480 ; City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 434-435, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] on the basis of the jury's rendition of a verdict allegedly obtained by chance. This form may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.84.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the manner in which the jury reached its verdict to show that the verdict rendered was not reached by chance. Counsel may desire to include affidavits or declarations of jurors to show, for example, that the jurors discussed the verdict and were not bound to accept the sum without further consideration. The affidavits of declarations may include evidence of overt acts of the jurors and cannot discuss the mental processes by which the jurors reached their verdict [see Evid. Code § 1150(a)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Verdict Not Chance Verdict

The factual and procedural background of Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 400, 35 P.2d 513 , is discussed in § 155.84[3][b]. In that case, the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff, noting that the order denying defendants' motion for a new trial was proper. During deliberations, the jury voted on two known sums and agreed to accept the figure that received the majority of votes as its verdict. The Court felt that this manner of arriving at a verdict involved no operation of any unknown force or unexplainable cause, but required an exercise of the judgment of each juror. The Court stated that each juror, by an act of conscious volition, participated in the determination of the amount of the verdict even though he or she may have reached a decision by other methods than weighing the evidence and may have based his or her judgment on considerations other than an opinion of the proper amount of damages to be awarded. The Court held that the jury's manner of arriving at the verdict did not involve a resort to the determination of chance (1 Cal. 2d 400, 404) .

[b] Jury Votes on Two Known Sums and Agrees to Accept One

The factual and procedural background of Mirabito v. San Francisco Dairy Co. (1934) 1 Cal. 2d 400, 35 P.2d 513 , is discussed in § 155.84[3][b] and in [a], above. While deliberating, the jurors could not decide on the amount of damages to award plaintiff in a personal injury action. Therefore, they decided to vote on two known sums and agreed to accept the sum that received a majority of votes as its unanimous verdict. When the sum of $5,000 received the most votes, the jurors accepted it without further discussion. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial made on several grounds, including jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. The Court stated that the manner of arriving at a verdict involved no operation of any unknown force or unexplainable cause, but required an exercise of the judgment of each juror. Hence, the Court concluded that the verdict was not a chance verdict (1 Cal. 2d 400, 404) .

[c] Subsequent Discussion of Quotient Verdict

In Bardessono v. Michels (1970) 3 Cal. 3d 780, 91 Cal. Rptr. 760, 478 P.2d 480 , plaintiff brought a medical malpractice action against an orthopedic surgeon. After verdict for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. Defendant alleged that the jury had arrived at its verdict by adding to a total sum the damages favored by each of the 12 jurors and then dividing that total sum by 12 to reach a final decision. Plaintiff, however, produced the testimony of two jurors indicating that the jurors had not agreed that they would be bound by the figure arrived at by this quotient method, and that the jurors later revised the quotient figure and ultimately agreed on the revised damages. When defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, she appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, noting that the order denying the motion for a new trial was proper. The Court stated that a quotient verdict does not necessarily constitute a chance verdict, provided that the average sum which is thus procured is not adopted without subsequent consideration or balloting by the jurors. If, after a quotient figure is obtained, the jurors discuss and ballot on the adoption or rejection of that sum, it is conclusive evidence that they were not bound by a previous agreement to accept it without further consideration. The Court stated that the foregoing rule applied to this case and that it would not disturb the findings of the trial court in the absence of a clear abuse of discretion. The Court felt that the trial judge was familiar with the evidence, witnesses, and proceedings and was in the best position to determine whether, in view of all the circumstances, justice demanded a retrial. Since the Court did not find any abuse of discretion, it upheld the trial court's denial of the motion for new trial (3 Cal. 3d 780, 794-796) .

The factual and procedural background of City of Pleasant Hill v. First Baptist Church (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 82 Cal. Rptr. 1 , is discussed in § 155.82[3][e]. After judgment for defendant church in an eminent domain action, plaintiff city moved for a new trial on several grounds, including jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. The affidavit of one juror indicated that in determining severance damages, the jurors pooled or averaged their respective opinions as to value, and pursuant to prior agreement, they returned that sum as compensation for the damages to the remaining property. On the other hand, 11 jurors averred that there was no agreement that the jurors would be bound by the figure arrived at after adding the figures and dividing by 12, and that they voted on the figure later. When plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied, it appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the situation was governed by the rule of Balkwill v. City of Stockton (1942) 50 Cal. App. 2d 661, 670-672, 123 P.2d 596 . In Balkwill, the court stated that a quotient verdict does not necessarily constitute a chance verdict, provided that the average sum which is procured is not adopted without subsequent consideration or balloting by the jurors. If, after a quotient figure is obtained, the jurors discuss and ballot on the adoption or rejection of the sum, it is conclusive evidence that they were not bound by previous agreement to accept it without further consideration. In the Pleasant Hill case, the court of appeal felt that the trial court's determination that the facts lay within this rule was binding on it, and it therefore upheld the trial court's denial of the motion for new trial (1 Cal. App. 3d 384, 434-435) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Subsequent Discussion of Quotient Verdict

Will v. Southern Pacific Co. (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 468, 116 P.2d 44 , was a wrongful death action in which the Supreme Court reversed an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. After averaging the amount that each juror submitted as proper damages, the jurors discussed the average amount in detail. The Court stated that it was not improper for jurors to calculate an average amount as a basis for discussion if there is a later consideration of the amount and a vote on it. Since the jurors discussed the average amount at length and the amount awarded was $1,000 less than the final average computed, the Court reversed the order granting a new trial (18 Cal. 2d 468, 477-478) .

Diamond Springs Lime Co. v. American River Constructors (1971) 16 Cal. App. 3d 581, 94 Cal. Rptr. 200 , was a negligence action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff against one defendant and the denial of that defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)]. In reaching a damages award, the jurors averaged an amount that each juror submitted on paper. However, their affidavits were in conflict on whether or not they had agreed to be bound in advance by this figure. The court of appeal stated that a quotient verdict does not necessarily constitute a chance verdict, provided that the average sum which is procured is not adopted without subsequent consideration or balloting by the jurors. The court of appeal declined to disturb the trial court's determination that the jurors had not agreed to be bound by the quotient amount (16 Cal. App. 3d 581, 605) .

Glass v. Gulf Oil Corp. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 412, 96 Cal. Rptr. 902 , was a slander of title action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs, noting that an order denying defendants' motion for new trial on grounds including irregularity in the proceedings of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and misconduct of the jury [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] was proper. Three jurors averred that in determining the amount of punitive damages, each juror gave a figure and the sum of the figures was divided by 12. The average came to $6,300 and was rounded off to $6,500. The court stated that it is not improper for jurors to calculate an average amount as a basis for discussion if there is a later consideration of the amount and a vote on it. Since the court found evidence of a discussion after the averaging had been done, it agreed with the lower court's denial of the motion (12 Cal. App. 3d 412, 435-436)

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of jury misconduct [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(2)] on the basis of the jury's rendition of a verdict allegedly rendered because of improper communications, by failing to discuss an issue during deliberations. This issue may arise when the jury has returned with what may be considered a quick verdict.

This form may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.82.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show that the lack of discussion by the jury was a result of the jury's choice not to discuss the issue.

If appropriate, counsel may point to the absence of facts in the moving papers showing that the jury did not have an opportunity to view any specific evidence before retiring for deliberations, or of any overt conduct or statements showing jurors failed to properly perform their duties to pay attention during trial and consider all the evidence presented or that any jurors were compelled to render a vote before they were ready to do so [see Vomaska v. City of San Diego (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 905, 911, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 492 , discussed in [3][a], below].

Counsel may desire to include affidavits or declarations of jurors to show, for example, that the jurors discussed the verdict and were not bound to accept, without further consideration, the sum prayed for by the moving party. The affidavits of declarations may include evidence of overt acts of the jurors and cannot discuss the mental processes by which the jurors reached their verdict [see Evid. Code § 1150(a)].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Moving Party Has No Right to Compel Jurors to Discuss Issues

Vomaska v. City of San Diego (1997) 55 Cal. App. 4th 905, 64 Cal. Rptr. 2d. 492 , involved an action for personal injuries against a city defendant. The trial court rendered a judgment in favor of the city after a jury verdict finding no dangerous condition on public property where the plaintiff was seriously injured. The plaintiff filed a motion for a new trial, supported by five juror declarations, showing that the bailiff was informed that the jury had reached a verdict after retiring to the jury deliberation room for about 10 to 15 minutes. At the time of the announcement, exhibits had not yet been brought into the jury room. After the jury selected a foreperson, the foreperson suggested everyone write their vote on separate pieces of paper as to the first question asking whether the public property was in a dangerous condition. After adding up the votes, the foreperson announced there were 10 "no" votes and 2 "yes" votes; he then said "that's it;" and without further discussion, he filled out and signed the special verdict form. The jurors did not discuss their individual views before the special verdict form was filled out and signed.

At trial, the jury was given BAJI instruction 15.30, telling them, "[e]ach of you must decide the case for yourself, but should do so only after considering the views of each juror." The motion for new trial was denied and the plaintiff appealed from the judgment, arguing that the judgment should be reversed because, among other contentions, the jury failed to deliberate an issue they were bound to consider.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment. The court stated that discussion of the case, as instructed by the BAJI instructions, would be the preferred procedure so as to ensure the jury carefully considered the evidence and its possible varying interpretations. The court was not persuaded, however, that a party's constitutional right to have his or case decided by a jury includes the right to compel jurors to discuss issues which they have chosen to decide without discussion (55 Cal. App. 4th 905, 911) . The court observed that the jurors took a straw vote to see how they each viewed the issue, and when that vote revealed 10 jurors were in agreement, they decided to render a verdict rather than discuss the issue further. The court concluded that this procedure is a type of "deliberations," in that each juror, having considered the evidence and arguments independently, is setting forth his or her opinion, albeit without accompanying reasons or explanations (55 Cal. App. 4th 905, 912) . The court quoted from an opinion of another state: "While the verdict should be the result of sound judgment, dispassionate consideration, and conscientious reflection, and the jury should, if necessary, deliberate patiently and long on the issues which have been submitted to them, yet, where the law does not positively prescribe the length of time a jury shall consider their verdict, they may render a valid verdict without retiring, or on very brief deliberation after retiring, although the trial court may, in its discretion, cause the jury to reconsider the case if their decision is so hasty as to indicate a flippant disregard of their duties." The court concluded that the affidavits on their face did not show a flippant disregard, and the trial court apparently had not observed any such disregard (55 Cal. App. 4th 905, 913) .

The court noted that this is not a case in which the jury does choose to discuss a case, in which situation each juror must have the opportunity to participate equally in all discussions in order to satisfy the constitutional right to trial by jury. Regarding the contention that the verdict was rendered before the exhibits, including photographs of the accident scene, were delivered to the jury room, the court cited the fact that the jury visited the scene of the accident themselves, and thus had ample opportunity to consider the import of the photographs. In addition, no argument was made that the jury did not have an opportunity to view any specific pertinent exhibit prior to retiring for deliberations. Nor was there any indication of any overt conduct or statements showing jurors failed properly to perform their duties to pay attention during trial and consider all the evidence presented or that any jurors were compelled to render a vote before they were ready to do so. The jurors were polled in open court as to their individual votes, and all answered without equivocation (55 Cal. App. 4th 905, 912) .

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE WAS AN IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE ADVERSE PARTY, CONSISTING OF THAT PARTY'S MISCONDUCT, THAT PREVENTED _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial on Ground of Irregularity in Proceedings of Adverse Party. On the application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party by which either party is prevented from having a fair trial if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)).

B. Overt Acts of Adverse Party. An overt act of the adverse party, violating the right to a fair and impartial trial and amounting to misconduct, may be regarded as an irregularity for which a new trial may be granted (see Gray v. Robinson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 182, 91 P.2d 194).

[Optional] C. Admonishing Instruction Not Obviating Prejudicial Effect. The court may grant a new trial for irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party although the jury was admonished to disregard the irregularity, if it appears that the admonition did not obviate the prejudicial effect (Baroni v. Rosenberg (1930) 209 Cal. 4, 6-7, 284 P. 1111).

[Optional] D. One Party Misled by Act of Other. Whenever one party is misled to his or her prejudice by the act of the other, justice demands that a new trial be granted (Pinkham & McDonough v. McFarland & Elrod (1855) 5 Cal. 137).

[Optional] E. Prevention of Full Presentation of Evidence. Any misconduct of a party to an action that prevents full presentation to the court or jury of evidence material to the other party's cause, thus preventing a fair trial, is an irregularity for which a new trial may be granted (Piercy v. Piercy (1906) 149 Cal. 163, 166, 86 P. 507).

[Optional] F. Witness Induced to Give False Evidence. When an adverse party has induced a witness to give false evidence on matters material to the case, thereby preventing a fair trial, a new trial should be granted (Smith v. Mitchell (1923) 64 Cal. App. 463, 469, 221 P. 964).

[Optional] G. Intentional Misconduct of Party in Courtroom. Intentional misconduct of a party in the courtroom, such as a simulated fainting spell or collapse, that has aroused the sympathy of the jury and influenced the verdict may be an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (see Fonts v. Southern Pacific Co. (1916) 30 Cal. App. 633, 637-638, 159 P. 215).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on a party's misconduct.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the nature of the opposing party's misconduct, showing how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

[c] Supporting Declarations or Affidavits Required

A motion for new trial made on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Overt Acts of Adverse Party

In Gray v. Robinson (1939) 33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 91 P.2d 194 , plaintiffs brought a personal injury action for damages resulting from an automobile accident. After judgment for plaintiffs, defendants were granted a new trial on the basis of misconduct of the jury and irregularity in the proceedings by which defendants were prevented from having a fair trial. The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that there was no evidence that the trial court abused its discretion in granting the motion for a new trial (33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 185) . It defined an irregularity as an overt act of the trial court, jury, or adverse party, violating the right to a fair and impartial trial and amounting to misconduct (33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 182) . The court felt that the injection by plaintiffs' counsel of the fact that defendants carried liability insurance, coupled with the concealed bias of a juror on voir dire, may have resulted in prejudice to the rights of the defendants. Therefore, the granting of defendants' motion for a new trial was proper (33 Cal. App. 2d 177, 182-185) .

[b] Admonishing Instruction Not Obviating Prejudicial Effect

In Baroni v. Rosenberg (1930) 209 Cal. 4, 284 P. 1111 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action for injuries sustained when he was struck by defendant's dump truck. During trial, defendant's counsel falsely stated that plaintiff was to receive Workers' Compensation for the rest of his life. After verdict for defendant, plaintiff's motion for new trial was granted.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order on the basis of counsel's prejudicial misconduct (209 Cal. 4, 5-7) . Although the court admonished the jury to disregard counsel's remarks, the harm was done and the court had no power to wipe away the false concept of the situation imprinted on the minds of the members of the jury. The remark was properly assigned as misconduct and, despite the admonition, was still prejudicial (209 Cal. 4, 6) . The absolutely erroneous statement that plaintiff would get compensation as long as he lived was flatly made by defendant's counsel and correct information regarding the method of rating disabilities was not and could not be given to the jury (209 Cal. 4, 6-7) . The Court stated that there was ample justification for the exercise of the trial court's discretion in granting a new trial (209 Cal. 4, 7) .

[c] One Party Misled by Act of Other

In Pinkham & McDonough v. McFarland & Elrod (1855) 5 Cal. 137 , defendants were sued as the makers of two promissory notes. The notes were regularly endorsed to plaintiffs. Defendants' answer admitted the genuineness and execution of the notes but alleged that plaintiffs were not the legal holders of the notes. At trial, plaintiffs offered the notes and rested. Defendants moved for a nonsuit on the ground that plaintiffs had not proved the genuineness of the endorsements. The trial court granted the nonsuit. On appeal, the Supreme Court granted a new trial, stating that the plaintiffs had been misled by the acts of the defendants and that justice required that a new trial should be granted (5 Cal. 137, 138) . The endorsements of the notes were not denied with sufficient certainty by defendants' answers. If defendants intended to deny the genuineness of the endorsements, they should have objected to the introduction of the notes in evidence (5 Cal. 137, 137-138) .

[d] Prevention of Full Presentation of Evidence

In Piercy v. Piercy (1906) 149 Cal. 163, 86 P. 507 , plaintiff brought an action to set aside a deed purporting to convey real property from her to defendant. Plaintiff alleged that the deed had been obtained from her by defendant by means of undue influence and ignorance on her part as to the contents of the deed. After judgment for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of irregularities in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. Plaintiff alleged that through the wrongful procurement of defendant, the case was tried as a mere formal matter without any full presentation of plaintiff's case, since those representing her at trial, a guardian ad litem and his attorney, had the understanding that the transaction between the parties was entirely regular and valid and that the real object of the trial was to dispose of any question of the validity of the deed and to confirm title in defendant. The motion for new trial was granted, and defendant appealed the order.

The Supreme Court affirmed the granting of the order, stating that any misconduct of a party to an action that prevents a full presentation to the court or jury of evidence material to the other party's cause is an irregularity for which a new trial may be granted (149 Cal. 163, 166) . The direct effect of the irregularity was that certain material evidence in support of plaintiff's claim was not presented. The trial court, having heard and seen the witnesses at trial and having knowledge of the circumstances of the case, is in a better position than the appellate court to determine the effect of the irregularity on the result of the trial. However, the Court felt that there was sufficient evidence to justify the finding of misconduct on the part of the defendant. Although the Court felt that it was true that there was a conflict in the evidence, the Supreme Court cannot interfere with the trial court's determination when there is substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached (149 Cal. 163, 166) .

[e] Witness Induced to Give False Evidence

In Smith v. Mitchell (1923) 64 Cal. App. 463, 221 P. 964 , plaintiff sued to recover damages for the alienation of his wife's affections by defendant. During trial, plaintiff's wife was the most important witness for defendant. She denied the material parts of her husband's testimony and testified that defendant had in no manner influenced her conduct toward her husband or caused her to lose affection for him. After verdict for defendant, plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party and error in law was granted. The court of appeal affirmed the order on the ground of defendant's misconduct. Plaintiff's wife stated in an affidavit that she was induced by defendant to testify falsely. She revealed that at the time of trial she was under defendant's dominion and influence to such an extent that by reason of his persuasion, promises, and influence she testified falsely regarding facts material to the case (64 Cal. App. 463, 465) . When a party to an action induces a witness to give perjured testimony in matters material to the case, he or she thereby prevents the other party from having a fair trial. The uncontradicted evidence presented at the hearing of the motion for a new trial entitled plaintiff to a retrial (64 Cal. App. 463, 469) .

[f] Intentional Misconduct of Party in Courtroom

In Fonts v. Southern Pacific Co. (1916) 30 Cal. App. 633, 159 P. 215 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained while in the employment of defendant. During trial, plaintiff, while on the witness stand, lost consciousness and fell from his chair. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial, contending that the fainting episode excited the sympathy of the jury and influenced their verdict. However, the defendant's motion was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and order, stating that it did not feel that the jury's verdict was influenced by plaintiff's conduct. The presumption is that the jury regarded its oath and determined the cause according to the law and the evidence. The granting of a new trial in consequence of the unavoidable illness of the plaintiff, sudden though it be and in the presence of the jury, would certainly be something novel in the history of judicial proceedings. However, the court noted that if there had been simulation on the part of the plaintiff or other intentional misconduct, the case would be obviously different (30 Cal. App. 633, 638) .

[a] Admonishing Instruction Not Obviating Prejudicial Effect

The factual and procedural background of Hoffman v. Brandt (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 549, 55 Cal. Rptr. 417, 421 P.2d 425 , is discussed in § 155.132[3][a], [b]. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment for defendant and ordered a new trial on the basis of defense counsel's misconduct. Even though the plaintiff objected to the prejudicial statement made by defense counsel, the court stated that the trial court's equivocal admonition did not cure the error (65 Cal. 2d 549, 553)

The factual and procedural background of Seimon v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 600, 136 Cal. Rptr. 787 , is discussed in § 155.132[3][b]. The court of appeal affirmed defendant's order granting a partial new trial on the issue of damages on the basis of prejudicial misconduct by plaintiff's counsel. The fact that counsel for respondent failed to take timely exception to the prejudicial remarks is not to be considered in determining whether the trial court has abused its discretion in granting a new trial. To hold otherwise would mean that the trial court, by reason of the action of the parties, would be powerless to correct an obvious miscarriage of justice (67 Cal. App. 3d 600, 604-605) .

The factual and procedural background of Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 38 Cal. Rptr. 183 , is discussed in § 155.133[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff in a malpractice action and ordered a new trial even though defendant did not always object to counsel's misconduct or ask that the jury be admonished. It stated that multiple objections have a tendency to alienate a jury's goodwill. Error may be cured by admonishing the jury when the error is isolated and unemphasized, but an attempt to rectify repeated and resounding misconduct is "like trying to unring a bell" (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 392) .

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the misconduct of opposing counsel. It is a general form that may be used alone or in conjunction with forms containing points and authorities relating to specific factual situations [see, e.g., § 155.132 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the nature of opposing counsel's misconduct, showing how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Influence on Jury's Verdict

The factual and procedural background of Cote v. Rogers (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 19 Cal. Rptr. 767 , is discussed in § 155.134[3][d]. The case involved defense counsel's alleged misconduct in using an inadmissible magazine article during trial of a wrongful death action. After judgment for defendants, plaintiff's motion for a new trial was denied. The court of appeal reversed the judgment and order denying a new trial, stating that misconduct of counsel results in a miscarriage of justice that furnishes ground for reversal when it fairly appears, from all of the evidence considered, that the irregularities complained of, in all probability, largely influenced the jury in arriving at its verdict (201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 144) . In this case, the court felt that counsel's conduct warranted a new trial. The court stated that defense counsel might just as well have prepared a handbill containing the inadmissible evidence and taken it around to the homes of the jurors (201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 145) .

[b] Improper Argument by Counsel

The factual and procedural background of Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 38 Cal. Rptr. 183 , is discussed in § 155.133[3][a]. The case involved alleged misconduct of plaintiff's counsel in vilifying defendant's counsel, in referring to defendant corporation's wealth, and in asking questions on cross examination that were designed to introduce matters that were not in evidence. The court of appeal reversed judgment for plaintiff and ordered a new trial on the basis of counsel's misconduct. The court stated that aggressive advocacy is not only proper, but desirable, and that long trials that are vigorously prosecuted and defended sometimes cause frayed tempers that lead to intemperate outbursts. However, in this case, counsel's conduct went beyond the limit. The misconduct here was intentional, blatant, and continuous from opening statement, throughout the trial, to closing argument (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 393) . It was committed by a seasoned and experienced trial lawyer, and the record left no doubt that it was carefully contrived and calculated to produce a result (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 393-394) . That sought-for result was to arouse and inflame the jury so that it would render a large verdict. The court noted that the verdict was an unusually large one. It was satisfied that the conduct was prejudicial and that justice miscarried (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 394) .

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party's counsel (see § 155.131).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED SINCE OPPOSING COUNSEL MADE AN APPEAL TO THE SYMPATHY OR PREJUDICE OF THE JURY THAT PREVENTED _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Appeal to Sympathy or Prejudice of Jury. An appeal by opposing counsel to the sympathy or prejudices of the jury that is irrelevant to the issues of the case and that is calculated to produce a certain result, with that result being achieved, is an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (Hoffman v. Brandt (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 549, 552-553, 55 Cal. Rptr. 417, 421 P.2d 425 ; Deibler v. Wright (1931) 119 Cal. App. 277, 282-283, 6 P.2d 344).

[Optional] B. Improper Comments Concerning Relative Wealth of Litigants. A deliberate attempt by counsel to appeal to the social or economic prejudices of the jury, including the wealth or poverty of the litigants, is misconduct warranting a new trial when the asserted wealth or poverty is not relevant to the issues of the case (Hoffman v. Brandt (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 549, 552-553, 55 Cal. Rptr. 417, 421 P.2d 425 ; Seimon v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 600, 606, 136 Cal. Rptr. 787).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] on the basis of counsel's improper appeal to the prejudice or sympathy of the jury. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the basis of misconduct of counsel [see § 155.131].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the improper appeal to the prejudice or sympathy of the jury and how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. Counsel may refer to a reporter's transcript of the proceedings, and if used, counsel should attach relevant portions of the transcript to this memorandum.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Appeal to Sympathy or Prejudice of Jury

In Hoffman v. Brandt (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 549, 55 Cal. Rptr. 417, 421 P.2d 425 , plaintiff, a 20-year-old woman, brought an action for personal injuries and property damage resulting from an automobile collision with defendant, a 69-year-old retired machinist. During closing argument, defendant's counsel commented on the age disparity, stating that a judgment for plaintiff would put defendant in Laguna Honda Home, a city and county home for the indigent. After verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial, claiming that defense counsel's statement constituted misconduct because it was based on matters not supported by the evidence, it was an appeal to sympathy and prejudice, and it implied that there was no liability insurance when there actually was. The motion was denied.

On appeal, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that the argument was clearly erroneous (65 Cal. 2d 549, 552) . The possibility, even if true, that a judgment for plaintiff would mean that defendant would have to go to the Laguna Honda Home, had no relevance to the issues of the case, and the argument of defense counsel was clearly a transparent attempt to appeal to the sympathies of the jury on the basis of the claimed lack of wealth of the defendant. As such, it was clearly misconduct (65 Cal. 2d 549, 553) .

In Deibler v. Wright (1931) 119 Cal. App. 277, 6 P.2d 344 , plaintiff sued through her guardian for damages resulting from an automobile collision. During trial, plaintiff's counsel questioned plaintiff's father regarding a military medical examination in which he was suspected of having tuberculosis on the theory that plaintiff's injury might make her less likely to resist the disease if she had been exposed to the disease in her home. Counsel further stated that plaintiff had been harassed for the greater part of an afternoon in the taking of a deposition and was in bed for two weeks afterwards. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed, claiming that the verdict was excessive because of the misconduct of plaintiff's counsel and because of error in jury instructions which allowed the jury to consider a preexisting ailment of plaintiff in awarding damages.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and granted a new trial on the basis of the misconduct of plaintiff's attorney. The court stated that in view of the expert evidence that plaintiff had not been afflicted with tuberculosis since her return home, the inquiry relating to prior home conditions had no bearing on the case. It was apparent that the inquiry was solely for the purpose of enlisting the sympathy of the jurors toward plaintiff and her father because of his "World War" services (119 Cal. App. 277, 283) . Counsel's statement regarding plaintiff's harassment in the taking of a deposition was unsupported by any evidence. Counsel admitted that it was unsupported and although the court admonished the jury to disregard the remarks, the error was not cured by the admonition (119 Cal. App. 277, 282-283) . Since the damages awarded were far in excess of what ordinarily might be expected for the injury, the court found that the misconduct prejudiced defendant (119 Cal. App. 277, 283) .

[b] Improper Comments Concerning Relative Wealth of Litigants

The factual and procedural background of Hoffman v. Brandt (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 549, 55 Cal. Rptr. 417, 421 P.2d 425 , is discussed in [a], above. During closing argument, defendant's counsel commented on the age disparity between plaintiff and his client, stating that a judgment for plaintiff would put defendant in Laguna Honda Home, a city and county home for the indigent. After plaintiff's motion for new trial was denied, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment in favor of defendant, stating that defense counsel's argument was clearly erroneous (65 Cal. 2d 549, 552) . Justice is to be accorded to rich and poor alike, and a deliberate attempt by counsel to appeal to the social or economic prejudices of the jury, including the wealth or poverty of the litigants, is misconduct when the asserted wealth or poverty is not relevant to the issues of the case (65 Cal. 2d 549, 552-553) . The questions of liability and the amount of damages, if any, in the ordinary personal injury case are to be determined without regard to the defendant's ability to pay any judgment rendered against him or her (65 Cal. 2d 549, 554) . The argument of defense counsel was clearly a transparent attempt to appeal to the sympathies of the jury on the basis of the claimed lack of wealth of the defendant (65 Cal. 2d 549, 553) .

Seimon v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1977) 67 Cal. App. 3d 600, 136 Cal. Rptr. 787 , was an action against a railroad for personal injuries suffered by plaintiff when his truck was struck by a train. During closing argument, plaintiff's counsel attempted to portray himself and his client as financial underdogs, or as "little guys" against the wealthy "big guy" railroad corporation. After the jury returned a special verdict finding both parties negligent and allowing a 50 percent recovery to plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial alleging misconduct by plaintiff's counsel and excessive damages. The motion for new trial was granted as to the issue of damages after plaintiff refused to agree to remittitur, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the granting of the new trial, stating that counsel's remarks were clearly improper. The court quoted Hoffman v. Brandt (1966) 65 Cal. 2d 549, 552-553, 55 Cal. Rptr. 417, 421 P.2d 425 , discussed above, which said that justice is to be accorded to rich and poor alike, and a deliberate attempt by counsel to appeal to social or economic prejudices of the jury, including the wealth or poverty of the litigants, is misconduct when the asserted wealth or poverty is not relevant to the issues of the case. The questions of liability and the amount of damages in the ordinary personal injury case are to be determined without regard to the existing financial status of the plaintiff or plaintiff's counsel, or the ability of defendant to pay any judgment that might be rendered against him or her. The court stated that the improper comments may have caused the jury to render an inflated verdict. Even though the error did not seem too serious from the court's vantage point, it gave weight to the expressed opinion of the trial judge that the error resulted in a verdict of passion or prejudice (67 Cal. App. 3d 600, 606) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Improper Comments Concerning Relative Wealth of Litigants

Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , was an action for personal injuries sustained by a wife and for loss of consortium suffered by her husband. The trial concerned solely the issue of damages because defendant conceded liability and the absence of contributory negligence. After the jury awarded plaintiff wife $10,000, but did not award any damages to plaintiff husband, plaintiffs moved for a new trial, and on its denial, they appealed the judgment. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on several grounds, including defense counsel's misconduct in suggesting that plaintiffs were wealthy. Though plaintiffs' objections were sustained, the jurors asserted that they were impressed with the idea that plaintiffs "already had a lot of money" and "didn't need any more" (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 960) .

Weaver v. Shell Oil Co. of California (1933) 129 Cal. App. 232, 18 P.2d 736 , was an action for wrongful death in which verdict was rendered for plaintiffs. The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order granting defendant's motion for a new trial on the basis of improper statements made by plaintiffs' counsel. During closing argument, counsel stated that someone must take care of decedent's widow and her four children and that the defendant, Shell Company, is a great big, rich corporation that has millions and can afford to take care of them (129 Cal. App. 232, 234) .

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on opposing counsel's personal attacks on the character or motives of the moving party, his or her counsel, or witnesses. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the basis of counsel's misconduct [see § 155.131].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the derogatory characterizations or remarks, showing how they were calculated to inflame the jury, and how an unfavorable trial result was produced by these remarks. If appropriate, counsel may refer to a reporter's transcript of the proceedings, and if used, counsel should attach relevant portions of the transcript to this memorandum.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Personal Attacks on Character or Motives of Adverse Party, Counsel, or Witness

Simmons v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 133 Cal. Rptr. 42 , was an action for damages against a railroad company following an accident in which one plaintiff and another plaintiff's decedent were struck by a train. After verdict for plaintiffs, defendant's motion for a new trial was denied. Defendant appealed the judgment. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the basis of prejudicial misconduct by plaintiffs' counsel. A study of the record showed that from the very beginning of trial, plaintiffs' counsel embarked on a campaign of hate, vilification, and subterfuge for the sole purpose of prejudicing the jury against defendant Southern Pacific and its employees (62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 351) . Plaintiffs' counsel engaged in numerous instances of misconduct, including statements that the workers of Southern Pacific would perjure, cheat, lie, and steal. Counsel emphasized the wealth of the railroad company, insinuated that the company had tampered with a crucial file, produced a whiskey bottle with a faked evidence tag when questioning defendant's witness, and questioned witnesses on immaterial or purported facts. The court stated that the ultimate determination of the issue of alleged misconduct depriving a party of a fair trial rests on the court's view of the overall record, taking into account such factors as the nature and seriousness of the remarks and misconduct, the general atmosphere, including the judge's control of the trial, the likelihood of prejudicing the jury, and the efficacy of objection or admonition under all the circumstances (62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 351) . Even though some of the instances were of minor importance, in their totality, together with the totally irrelevant testimony of one witness, they made it impossible for Southern Pacific to have a fair trial (62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 355) . The court's admonitions, when given, were mostly inadequate. Even though objections were not always made, the record showed that further objections would have overemphasized the objectionable material and would have alienated the jury, who, because of plaintiffs' counsel's conduct, was unfavorably disposed against defendant (62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 355) .

Love v. Wolf (1964) 226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 38 Cal. Rptr. 183 , was a medical malpractice and negligence action against a treating physician and a drug company, Parke-Davis. Following a substantial verdict against defendants, they appealed primarily on the ground that plaintiff's attorney was guilty of outrageous misconduct. The court of appeal reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial, concluding that counsel had been guilty of prejudicial, egregious misconduct from the opening day of trial until its conclusion (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 393) . Plaintiff's counsel continually vilified defendant's counsel by calling him "an idiot," "a smart guy," and a "laughing hyena." He characterized defense objections as "asinine" and "hogwash" and accused defense counsel of suborning perjury. He frequently told defense counsel to "shut up" (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 391) . He also made references to Parke-Davis' earnings, false references to profits on those earnings, and repeatedly used "Do you know that" type questions that were designed not to obtain information or test adverse testimony but to afford him a device by which his own unsworn statements could reach the ears of the jury and be accepted by it as proof (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 390) . The court stated that the record left no doubt that the conduct was carefully contrived and calculated to arouse and inflame the jury to render a large verdict. The verdict was an unusually large one (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 394) . Although the court found that there was substantial, but conflicting, evidence of negligence on the part of the doctor, the court felt that both defendants were denied a fair trial because of counsel's misconduct (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 392-393) . Even though it could not be stated with certainty that the misconduct changed the result of the case, a litigant who had engaged in misconduct is not entitled to the benefit of calculation, which can be little better than speculation, as to the extent of the wrong inflicted on his opponent. The court was satisfied that counsel's behavior was prejudicial and that justice miscarried. Accordingly, it reversed the judgment and remanded the case for new trial (226 Cal. App. 2d 378, 394) .

§ 155.134 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Irregularity of Proceedings Due to Adverse Party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]--Misconduct of Counsel--Urging Facts Not in Evidence, Insinuation of Matters Not Supported by Evidence, or Attempt to Introduce Inadmissible Objects Into Evidence

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party's counsel (see § 155.131).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE OPPOSING COUNSEL _____ [URGED FACTS THAT WERE NOT IN EVIDENCE and/or INSINUATED MATTERS THAT WERE NOT SUPPORTED BY THE EVIDENCE and/or ATTEMPTED TO INTRODUCE INADMISSIBLE PHYSICAL OBJECTS INTO EVIDENCE], THUS PREJUDICING THE JURY AND PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Counsel's Suggestion of Matters Other Than by Legitimate Introduction Into Evidence. Counsel's attempts to suggest matters of an evidentiary nature to a jury other than by the legitimate introduction into evidence, whether by questions on cross examination, argument, or other means, is misconduct for which a new trial may be granted (Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 960, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377).

[EITHER, if improper statements made during counsel's argument]

B. Assuming Facts Not in Evidence During Argument. Argument by counsel that assumes facts that are not in evidence, or that are known to be unsupported by any factual basis and invite the jury to speculate on unsupported inferences, is an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (Malkasian v. Irwin (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 738, 745-748, 40 Cal. Rptr. 78, 394 P.2d 822).

[AND/OR, if improper statements made during counsel's cross examination of witness]

B. Insinuation of Untrue Matters or Inadmissible Evidence on Cross Examination. On cross examination, when counsel insinuates as fact, matters which he or she knows are not fact or cannot be put into evidence, counsel may be guilty of prejudicial misconduct constituting an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party (Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957-960, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377).

[AND/OR when counsel uses objects that are not admissible as evidence]

B. Use of Object Not Admissible as Evidence. Attempts by counsel to place inadmissible physical evidence before the jury in an effort to influence the jury in reaching its verdict and that has influenced the jury, may be an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (Cote v. Rogers (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 140-146, 19 Cal. Rptr. 767).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on opposing counsel's improper urging of facts not in evidence, insinuation of matters not supported by the evidence, or attempt to introduce inadmissible physical objects into evidence.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the improper conduct of opposing counsel and show how this conduct deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the substantial rights of the moving party. Counsel may refer to a reporter's transcript of the proceedings, and if used, counsel should attach relevant portions of the transcript to this memorandum.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Counsel's Suggestion of Matters Other Than by Legitimate Introduction Into Evidence

Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , was an action for personal injuries suffered by a wife and loss of consortium suffered by her husband. Defendant conceded liability and the absence of contributory negligence, and the trial was solely on the issue of damages. During his opening statement, counsel stated that plaintiff wife went to a psychiatrist who said that her pain was purely psychological and that she had an antagonism toward her husband that made her desire to punish him. Plaintiff had consulted a psychiatrist and a psychologist; however, the balance of counsel's statement was pure speculation. Counsel also stated that plaintiff's psychologist did not want her as a patient anymore. The doctor, however, left his practice for military services and had referred her to a neurologist. After the jury awarded $10,000 to the wife, but awarded no damages to the husband, plaintiffs moved for a new trial. When their motion was denied, they appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on several grounds, including defense counsel's misconduct. During opening statement and cross examination, counsel insinuated as fact matters that he knew were not fact or could not be put into evidence (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957) . The court stated that counsel, in opening statements, should not include testimony that he or she knows will not be received and state that testimony for the purpose of prejudicing the jury. When prejudice results from such improper statements, a new trial should be awarded (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 958-959) . During cross examination, counsel asked plaintiff wife questions that asked for patent hearsay evidence that did not come within any cited exception to the hearsay rule. The court stated that California courts have repeatedly held that attempts to suggest matters of an evidentiary nature to a jury other than by legitimate introduction into evidence constitute misconduct. This applies to questions on cross examination, argument, or any other means (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 960) .

[b] Assuming Facts Not in Evidence During Argument

In Malkasian v. Irwin (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 738, 40 Cal. Rptr. 78, 394 P.2d 822 , plaintiff brought an action for wrongful death of her son. During closing argument, counsel for defendant gave several possible scenarios for the accident, all unsupported by, or contrary to, the evidence. Counsel suggested that decedent drove off the highway, returned, hit the truck-trailer in the rear, then bounced into the south lane. There was damage, however, only on one side of the trailer and witnesses, prior to and at the time of the accident, stated that the decedent was traveling south the whole time in the southbound lane of highway. Following verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial. When the motion was granted, defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order on the basis of defense counsel's improper argument to the jury. The Court stated that there was no factual foundation for any of counsel's speculations, assumptions, or inferences. He was not simply arguing that the cause of the accident was unknown. He was arguing that defendant ran into the trailer because of any one of the suggested reasons and that the jury could speculate as to which one was true (61 Cal. 2d 738, 746) . There can be no doubt that to argue facts not justified by the record, and to suggest that the jury could speculate, was misconduct. While counsel may indulge in all fair arguments in favor of his or her client's case, he or she may not assume facts not in evidence or invite the jury to speculate as to unsupported inferences. The trial court has broad discretion in considering motions for new trial. Here, the Court definitely determined that there had been a miscarriage of justice (61 Cal. 2d 738, 747) .

Note that the Court in Malkasian held that the party that prevailed in a motion for new trial in the trial court is not required to demonstrate that prejudice resulted from the error for which a new trial was granted. For discussion of subsequent conflicting decisions that extended or explained that holding, see § 155.251[3][a].

[c] Insinuation of Untrue Matters or Inadmissible Evidence on Cross Examination

The factual and procedural background of Smith v. Covell (1980) 100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 161 Cal. Rptr. 377 , is discussed in [a], above. When plaintiffs' motion for new trial was denied, they appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment on several grounds, including defense counsel's prejudicial misconduct during cross examination when he insinuated that certain matters were fact although he knew that these matters were not fact or could not be put into evidence. During cross examination, counsel asked plaintiff if her doctor or any other doctor had told her that her injury was a means of getting attention or of demonstrating dependence or hostility, thus suggesting that a qualified doctor had formed an opinion that her symptoms were purely psychological. However, no evidence was later offered to support these insinuations. Defense counsel's medical witnesses gave no testimony that the pain was in plaintiff's mind or that she had an antagonism toward her husband and that this was her way of punishing him as defense counsel had falsely alleged during his opening statement (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 957-958) . The court noted that California courts have repeatedly held attempts to suggest matters of an evidentiary nature to a jury other than by legitimate introduction into evidence to be misconduct. This applies to questions on cross examination, argument, or any other means (100 Cal. App. 3d 947, 959-960) .

[d] Use of Object Not Admissible as Evidence

Cote v. Rogers (1962) 201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 19 Cal. Rptr. 767 , was an action for wrongful death arising from a truck collision. During trial, defense counsel sought to place a California Highway Patrol magazine article before the jury. The article carried pictures of the accident and stated that the cause of the accident was improper care of loose equipment in the cab of the truck that prevented decedent from braking. After the court rejected the admission of the article as hearsay, counsel had the article published in a local newspaper and broadcast over a local radio station. Counsel referred to the article during cross examination and carried it in his hand during trial. After judgment for defendants, plaintiff's motion for a new trial, based on the alleged misconduct of counsel, was denied.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment and order denying a new trial, stating that defense counsel knew that the article was not admissible in evidence and that his continuing reference to it, while holding a copy of the magazine in his hand, was calculated solely to impress the jury that a statement of a highly respected law enforcement agency was being withheld from it because of some obscure, highly technical rule of evidence. While none of the jurors admitted to having read the newspaper story, the court stated that a juror who had done so would be extremely reluctant to publicly admit it (201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 144) . The court also felt that it would be extremely naive to conclude that the jury neither saw nor read the article which appeared in the local newspaper. If a newspaper read by jurors contains matters in connection with the subject of the trial that would be likely to influence the jurors in the performance of their duties, a presumption of improper influence arises and a new trial will be granted, without requiring the offended party to show that harm was in fact done to his cause (201 Cal. App. 2d 138, 145) .

[a] Assuming Facts Not in Evidence During Argument

City of Los Angeles v. Decker (1977) 18 Cal. 3d 860, 135 Cal. Rptr. 647, 558 P.2d 545 , was an eminent domain proceeding involving property condemned for airport expansion. Defendant maintained that the highest and best use for her property was as an airport parking lot. Following a jury determination of the value of the land based on its use as a residence, defendant property owner's motion for new trial was denied. The Supreme Court reversed, holding that the city attorney committed misconduct that warranted a new trial when he argued that there was no need for airport parking when he knew of the city's determination that there was such a need and that defendant's property was suitable to fill it (18 Cal. 3d 860, 870-871) .

Kenworthy v. State of California (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 378, 46 Cal. Rptr. 396 , was an action by a contractor for loss of profits allegedly due to the state's breach of a construction and lease contract. After judgment for plaintiffs, defendant's motion for new trial was denied. The court of appeal reversed, finding no substantial evidence to support the verdict and prejudicial misconduct of plaintiffs' counsel (236 Cal. App. 2d 378, 380) . During trial, counsel engaged in numerous instances of misconduct, including improper attempts to introduce irrelevant evidence in the jury's presence, unproven suggestions of bribery of state officials, unfounded accusations of suppression of evidence by the state, gratuitous remarks made in front of the jury, and arguments replete with insinuations, none of which had any support in the record (236 Cal. App. 2d 378, 396-401) .

[b] Insinuation of Untrue Matters or Inadmissible Evidence on Cross Examination

The factual and procedural background of Simmons v. Southern Pac. Transportation Co. (1976) 62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 133 Cal. Rptr. 42 , is discussed in § 155.133[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed the judgment on the basis of prejudicial misconduct by plaintiffs' counsel. Counsel engaged in many instances of misconduct, including the frequent placing of immaterial or purported facts before the jury by asking witnesses questions prefaced by "Isn't it true that" or "Did you know that" (62 Cal. App. 3d 341, 354) .

Dastagir v. Dastagir (1952) 109 Cal. App. 2d 809, 241 P.2d 656 , was a paternity suit instituted by the mother of an infant daughter against defendant. After judgment for defendant, the court of appeal reversed, granting a new trial on the basis of defense counsel's misconduct. During cross examination of plaintiff, counsel sought to intimate that plaintiff had engaged in illicit relations with men other than defendant at a time prior to the date the child must have been conceived. The court stated that while wide latitude should be given in cross examination, counsel should not be allowed to assume facts not in evidence and state as positive assertions facts which, if true, would be detrimental to the opposing party's case and of such a nature as to inflame and prejudice the minds of the jurors (109 Cal. App. 2d 809, 818) .

[This form should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party's counsel (see § 155.131).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] COUNSEL DELIBERATELY ACCUSED AND INSINUATED THAT COUNSEL FOR _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] WILLFULLY SUPPRESSED EVIDENCE, THEREBY PREJUDICING THE JURY AND DEPRIVING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] OF A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

Accusation of Suppression of Evidence. Counsel's deliberate accusation and insinuation that opposing counsel has willfully suppressed evidence that has created a prejudice in the mind of the jury may be an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (Keena v. United Railroads (1925) 197 Cal. 148, 156-160, 239 P. 1061).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] on the basis of counsel's accusation that opposing counsel has suppressed evidence. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the basis of misconduct of counsel [see § 155.131].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the nature of opposing counsel's accusation of suppression of evidence and show how it deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. Counsel may refer to a reporter's transcript, and if used, counsel should attach relevant portions of the transcript to this memorandum.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accusation of Suppression of Evidence

Keena v. United Railroads (1925) 197 Cal. 148, 239 P. 1061 , was an action for wrongful death of an infant due to a cable car accident. At the close of plaintiff's case, defendant called two witnesses and then rested its case without calling the gripman who had operated the cable car at the time of the accident. In the presence of the jury, plaintiff's counsel repeatedly asked defendant's counsel about the whereabouts of the gripman and if he intended to call him as a witness. Plaintiff's counsel then called defense counsel as a witness and pursued the inquiry while repeatedly charging that defense counsel was guilty of willful suppression of the evidence in failing to call the gripman. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed judgment for plaintiff, stating that the misconduct of the attorney for plaintiff prejudicially and materially affected the substantial rights of defendant and prevented it from having a fair trial (197 Cal. 148, 160) . The Court stated that failure to call a witness does not amount to willful suppression of evidence (197 Cal. 148, 158) . Quoting the dissenting opinion in LaFargue v. United R. of San Francisco (1920) 183 Cal. 720, 728, 192 P. 538 , the Court stated that an entirely false quantity was injected into the case by plaintiff's counsel, over repeated admonitions of the court, and the false quantity was of a character so prejudicial to the defendant as to have prevented the jury from considering the case fairly on its own merits (197 Cal. 148, 159) . In this case, the Court noted that the misconduct was not induced by possible emotion of the attorney or untoward thoughtlessness, but was the result of premeditation and deliberation (197 Cal. 148, 159) . It did not consist of a single utterance of a charge, but embraced repetition and included hints, suggestions, and insinuations to such an extent that there was no possibility that counsel's meaning could have been misinterpreted or misunderstood by the jury (197 Cal. 148, 159) . The purpose of the accusation was to bolster a weak case by creating a prejudice against defendant in the minds of the members of the jury (197 Cal. 148, 159-160) . The Court concluded that the misconduct of plaintiff's attorney prejudicially and materially affected the substantial rights of defendant and prevented it from having a fair trial (197 Cal. 148, 160) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Accusation of Suppression of Evidence

Kenworthy v. State of California (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 378, 46 Cal. After judgment for plaintiffs, defendant's motion for a new trial was denied. The court of appeal reversed, finding no substantial evidence to support the verdict and prejudicial misconduct of plaintiffs' counsel. During trial, counsel engaged in numerous instances of misconduct, including unfounded accusations of suppression of evidence by the state (236 Cal. App. 2d 378, 398) .

§ 155.136 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Irregularity of Proceedings Due to Adverse Party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]--Misconduct of Counsel--Reference to Insurance Before Jury

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party's counsel (see § 155.131).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE OPPOSING COUNSEL REFERRED TO _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] INSURANCE DURING TRIAL AND THE REFERENCE PREJUDICED THE JURY, THUS PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. Reference to Insurance During Trial. If opposing counsel refers to a party's insurance during trial and this reference prejudices the jury, a new trial may be granted on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party based on counsel's misconduct (see Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 12-14, 116 Cal. Rptr. 575).

[Optional] B. Fact of Insurance Injected to Show Defendant Well Insured. In a personal injury action, the prejudicial injection by opposing counsel of the fact of liability insurance to show that defendant is well insured and able to respond in damages is an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (see Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co. (1903) 140 Cal. 563, 574-577, 74 P. 147).

[Optional] C. Plaintiff Already Compensated by Insurance. Defense counsel's attempt to prove, in the presence of the jury, that plaintiff carried insurance policies that have already compensated him or her for damages, is an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (Loggie v. Interstate Transit Co. (1930) 108 Cal. App. 165, 168-169, 291 P. 618).

[Optional] D. Plaintiff Shows That One Defendant Not Well Insured. In a personal injury action, the action of plaintiff's counsel in showing that one defendant is not well insured so that the jury will find a codefendant liable is an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party for which a new trial may be granted (Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 12-14, 116 Cal. Rptr. 575).

[Optional] E. Plaintiff's Insurance Company Real Party in Interest. Defense counsel's attempt to show that an insurance company is the real party in interest behind plaintiff's case may be prejudicial misconduct of counsel for which a new trial may be granted (Mangino v. Bonslett (1930) 109 Cal. App. 205, 208-212, 292 P. 1006).

[Optional] F. Questions About Insurance on Voir Dire. When an insurance company is not a party to an action, it is improper for counsel to question prospective jurors on voir dire about ownership of stock or other financial interests in insurance companies, and when the error results in prejudice, a new trial may be granted (Scally v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 813-814, 100 Cal. Rptr. 501).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on opposing counsel's misconduct in referring to insurance during trial. It does not provide a complete form, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party based on counsel's misconduct [see § 155.131].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show how opposing counsel's reference to insurance deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected the moving party's substantial rights. This argument may refer to a reporter's transcript, and if used, relevant portions should be attached to this memorandum.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq., and particularly those set out in § 155.153, may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reference to Insurance During Trial

The factual and procedural background of Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 116 Cal. Rptr. 575 , is discussed in [d], below. The court of appeal affirmed orders denying defendant's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but granted defendant's motion for new trial on several grounds, including opposing counsel's misconduct in referring to one codefendant's limited amount of insurance during trial. The court stated that the reference to insurance was clearly prejudicial in light of the amount of damages claimed by plaintiff and references of plaintiff's counsel during trial to the other defendant's wealth and profits (42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 13-14) .

[b] Fact of Insurance Injected to Show Defendant Well Insured

In Roche v. Llewellyn Iron Works Co. (1903) 140 Cal. 563, 74 P. 147 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by reason of the negligence of his employer, a corporation. During trial, plaintiff's counsel asked the corporation president if the company was insured by a named insurer and if the defense counsel was defending the action on behalf of the insurer at the request of defendant company. After defendant's objections to these questions were overruled, the company president answered affirmatively. After verdict for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial, and the motion was denied.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and order denying a new trial, stating that it was prejudicial error to permit evidence showing that defendant was being defended by an insurance company at defendant's request. The evidence that defendant objected to showed that the claim was well founded, that the defendant did in fact have a policy covering its employees, that the insurance company admitted its liability thereon, and that if plaintiff recovered judgment, the defendant would not be injured thereby, but that the loss would fall on the insurance company (140 Cal. 563, 577) . The evidence also did not tend to prove or disprove any of the issues in the case (140 Cal. 563, 576-577) . Accordingly, a new trial was ordered (140 Cal. 563, 577) .

[c] Plaintiff Already Compensated by Insurance

In Loggie v. Interstate Transit Co. (1930) 108 Cal. App. 165, 291 P. 618 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries and property damage allegedly caused by the negligence of defendant. During trial, defense counsel attempted to show that plaintiff carried accident and collision insurance and that the insurance company had already compensated plaintiff for damages to his automobile. When the jury returned a verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party based on counsel's misconduct. The motion was granted and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial, stating that counsel's reference was prejudicial (108 Cal. App. 165, 168-170) . It added that the first thought of the juror, unfamiliar with legal principles, was that plaintiff had probably received full compensation for his loss and was not entitled to a second recovery (108 Cal. App. 165, 168-169) . The court noted that counsel should not be permitted to obtain verdicts by other than fair presentations of causes on the facts and legitimate argument based on these facts, and when verdicts are otherwise obtained, they should promptly be set aside by the trial court (108 Cal. App. 165, 170) .

[d] Plaintiff Shows That One Defendant Not Well Insured

In Self v. General Motors Corp. (1974) 42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 116 Cal. Rptr. 575 , plaintiff brought a personal injury action against the manufacturer of the car in which she was a passenger and the driver of the car that struck it in the rear. After verdict for plaintiff, the trial court granted defendant manufacturer's motion for new trial on the basis of a juror's concealment of certain facts on voir dire and because of the conduct of plaintiff's attorney in bringing to the jury's attention the limited amount of defendant driver's insurance coverage. The court also denied defendant manufacturer's motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal affirmed the orders denying the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and granting a new trial, stating that the reference to defendant driver's insurance coverage was clearly prejudicial to the manufacturer in light of the damages claimed by the plaintiff and references of plaintiff's counsel during trial to defendant manufacturer's wealth and profits (42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 13-14) . The vice in the misconduct lay not in the familiar "injection of the subject of insurance into the case" to show that defendant was well insured and well able to respond in damages, but to show the contrary--that he was not adequately insured or otherwise financially responsible. The purpose of this was to impress upon the jury that one of two concurrent or successive tortfeasors was unable to respond in damages in an amount in excess of $25,000. Therefore, the jury must find against the other tortfeasor in order to satisfy the judgment for the very substantial damages warranted by the evidence. The prejudicial effect of the misconduct was compounded by counsel's persistent and ill-advised references during trial to General Motors' wealth and profits and the magnitude of its operations. Repeated references to a litigant's wealth or poverty amount to prejudicial misconduct. The court stated that the trial court was in the best position to assess the impact of counsel's misconduct on the jury and that it agreed with the trial court's decision to grant a new trial (42 Cal. App. 3d 1, 14) .

[e] Plaintiff's Insurance Company Real Party in Interest

In Mangino v. Bonslett (1930) 109 Cal. App. 205, 292 P. 1006 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries resulting from an automobile accident. Throughout the entire trial and during closing argument, defense counsel attempted to convey to the jury that an insurance company was the real party in interest behind plaintiffs' case. After judgment for defendant, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was granted. Plaintiffs predicated their motion on practically all of the grounds in Code Civ. Proc. § 657, but cited the alleged prejudicial misconduct of defense counsel as the main specification of error.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial, stating that the record was replete with prejudicial remarks by defendant's counsel during his closing argument (109 Cal. App. 205, 208) . These remarks were not warranted by any phase of the testimony and could have had but one purpose, that is to prejudice the minds of the jury against plaintiffs' case. The court stated that there was no evidence in the record that plaintiffs were insured or that an insurance company was the real party in interest in plaintiffs' case. Nor did the court's repeated admonition to the jury to disregard the remarks of counsel cure the prejudicial effect of the remarks. The court was satisfied that the remarks were of such a character, and the purpose of their injection into the case so apparent, that they could not have been completely obliterated from the minds of the jury by any admonition that the court gave or could have given (109 Cal. App. 205, 212) . The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial, stating that it was of the opinion that the trial court exercised its discretion wisely in granting plaintiffs a new trial (109 Cal. App. 205, 213) .

[f] Questions About Insurance on Voir Dire

In Scally v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 100 Cal. Rptr. 501 , plaintiffs brought an action for property damage allegedly caused by defendant power company's negligence. During voir dire, defense counsel asked a juror if he owned stock in any of several named insurance companies. When the juror stated that his car was insured with Farmers Insurance, counsel responded that Farmers was not involved in this action but Fireman's Fund was involved. Plaintiffs objected, and the court gave a curative instruction and admonished the jury. After verdict for defendant, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds including misconduct of defendant's attorney. When the motion was denied, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment since it found that no prejudice resulted from the attorney's conduct. The court noted that Evid. Code § 1155 codifies the long-established rule that evidence that a party is insured is inadmissible to prove that party's negligence. Notwithstanding the logic of this rule, however, the court said that a totally illogical and unnecessary circumvention was engrafted by case law whereby under the guise of voir dire, counsel may, in good faith, ask prospective jurors whether they are interested in a particular insurance company so long as the question does not unnecessarily convey the impression that defendant is in fact insured. The court stated that to suggest that such a question can be asked without telling the jury that a party is in fact insured is naivete of the highest order. It added that lawsuits are not games and the appellate courts should not be distributors of toys with which counsel can play. Furthermore, the court said that any judge or lawyer who has observed or participated in jury voir dire knows that such questions are asked for one purpose only--to convey the impression that a party is insured (23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 813) . The court stated that when an insurance company is not a party, it is improper to ask prospective jurors any questions about ownership of stock or other financial interest in insurance companies (23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 814) . In this case, however, counsel acted in good faith and his single act of misconduct was not repeated. Furthermore, the trial judge's curative instructions and the jury's verdict showed that there was no prejudicial effect on the jury (23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 814-815) . Thus, the court affirmed the order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial (23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 821) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Fact of Insurance Injected to Show Defendant Well Insured

Schlenker v. Egloff (1933) 133 Cal. App. 393, 24 P.2d 224 , was an action for wrongful death in which the court of appeal reversed a judgment for plaintiff on the basis of prejudicial misconduct of plaintiff's counsel. During trial, plaintiff's counsel stated that defendant had told a police officer at the scene that she was insured and that her insurance company would pay for all the damages. The court found, however, that the statement was not an admission against interest since counsel referred to it for the sole purpose of impressing the fact of insurance and creating a prejudice in the minds of the jury members (133 Cal. App. 393, 399-402) .

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party's counsel (see § 155.131).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE OPPOSING COUNSEL RAISED THE ISSUE OF HIS/HER OWN CLIENT'S PERJURY AND COLLUSION WITH _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THUS PREJUDICING THE JURY AND PREVENTING _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND MATERIALLY AFFECTING HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

Reference to Own Client's Perjury and Collusion With Other Party. When counsel for one party interjects the issue of that party's perjury and collusion with the other party, thus acting adversely to his or her own client's interest, it is an abuse of discretion to deny the other party's motion for new trial on the grounds of irregularity (Price v. Giles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1469, 1473-1474, 242 Cal. Rptr. 559).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings by the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], specifically, opposing counsel's misconduct in referring during trial to the possibility of his or her client's perjury and collusion with the opposing party. It does not provide a complete form but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings by the adverse party because of counsel's misconduct [see § 155.131].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show how adverse counsel's reference to the possibility of his or her own client's perjury and collusion with the moving party deprived the moving party of a fair trial and materially affected his or her substantial rights. This argument may refer to a reporter's transcript, and, if used, relevant portions should be attached to this memorandum.

A motion for new trial made on this ground must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial and a declaration to be submitted in support of the motion on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.150 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Reference to Own Client's Perjury and Collusion With Other Party

In Price v. Giles (1987) 196 Cal. App. 3d 1469, 242 Cal. Rptr. 559 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against the owner of a pick-up truck in which she was a passenger. There was conflicting evidence at trial regarding whether plaintiff or defendant had been driving the truck at the time of the accident. During trial, defense counsel repeatedly questioned the veracity of his client's testimony and stated to the jury that he himself did not believe his client. He also intimated that plaintiff and defendant had some sort of personal interest in each other. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendant and specifically found that he was not negligent. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of irregularity in the proceedings, surprise, and insufficiency of the evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1), (3), and (6), respectively. The trial court denied the motion, and plaintiff appealed.

The court of appeal reversed. The court relied on Pennix v. Winton (1943) 61 Cal. App. 2d 761, 766, 143 P.2d 940 , a case involving a defense counsel retained by an insurance company to represent the insured as defendant. In that case, defense counsel attempted to impeach the insured by attacking the veracity of both plaintiff and defendant. The court noted that in the case at bar, while it may have appeared that defense counsel acted in his client's interest when he stated that he did not believe his client's testimony that he was driving, counsel was, in fact, impugning his client's integrity by making it appear that he had committed perjury or conspiracy. The court concluded that once defense counsel had indicated to the jury that defendant was not credible, it was impossible for plaintiff to receive a fair trial. A jury is unlikely to believe a party whom his or her own counsel disbelieves, even if that party is in fact telling the truth. This action by defense counsel warranted reversal under Pennix (196 Cal. App. 3d 1469, 1473) . The court thus found that it was an abuse of discretion on the trial court's part to deny plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings (196 Cal. App. 3d 1469, 1474) .

B. Motions for New Trial
3. Misconduct of Adverse Party or Counsel

15-155 California Points & Authorities § 155.150

§ 155.150 Opposing Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Irregularity of Proceedings Due to Adverse Party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]--Alleged Misconduct of Party or Counsel Not Prejudicial

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE ADVERSE PARTY, BECAUSE THE ALLEGED MISCONDUCT OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT or COUNSEL FOR _____ (PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT)] DID NOT PREVENT THE MOVING PARTY FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND DID NOT MATERIALLY AFFECT HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. No Prejudice Error Resulting From Alleged Misconduct. A new trial will not be granted for irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party if no prejudice has resulted from the alleged misconduct of a party or a party's counsel (Robinson v. Western States Gas etc. Co. (1920) 184 Cal. 401, 407, 194 P. 39 ; People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Hunt (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 158, 172, 82 Cal. Rptr. 546 ; Winningar v. Bales (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 273, 281-282, 14 Cal. Rptr. 908).

B. Court Must View Overall Record. Each case must ultimately rest on the court's view of the overall record, taking into account such factors as the nature and seriousness of the remarks and misconduct, the general atmosphere, including the judge's control of the trial, the likelihood of prejudicing the jury, and the efficacy of objection or admonition under all the circumstances (Sabella v. Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 311, 321, 74 Cal. Rptr. 534, 449 P.2d 750).

[Optional] C. Remarks Made by Party. A new trial will not be granted for a party's remarks allegedly made for the purpose of influencing the jury if the evidence fails to show that the remarks were communicated to the juror, or, if communicated, the record shows that no prejudice resulted (Bramble v. McEwan (1940) 40 Cal. App. 2d 400, 415-416, 104 P.2d 1054).

[Optional] D. Conduct of Party in Courtroom. A new trial will not be granted for the conduct of a party in the courtroom, such as a fainting spell or collapse, if there is insufficient evidence to show that the occurrence was simulated (see Wright v. Southern Counties Gas Co. (1929) 102 Cal. App. 656, 668, 283 P. 823).

[Optional] E. Counsel's Statements Were Vigorous Argument. A new trial will not be granted on the basis of opposing counsel's comments on a party, counsel, or witness if the remarks were part of a vigorous and effective argument of counsel and if no prejudice has resulted to the opposing party (Henninger v. Southern Pacific Co. (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 872, 881, 59 Cal. Rptr. 76).

[Optional] F. Assuming Language Was Misconduct, No Prejudice to Opposing Party. Assuming that counsel's strong language in referring to a party, counsel, or witness was misconduct, if in light of the evidence and verdict reached, it does not appear that the conduct was prejudicial to the opposing party, the granting of a new trial is improper (Deevy v. Tassi (1942) 21 Cal. 2d 109, 130 P.2d 389).

[Optional] G. Mention of Financial Condition Not Prejudicial. Although the mention of the financial condition of a party is improper and should not be made, a new trial will not be granted when counsel's conduct did not result in prejudice to the opposing party (Drotleff v. Renshaw (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 176, 180, 208 P.2d 969 ; Shabshin v. Pacifici (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 192, 200, 16 Cal. Rptr. 440).

[Optional] H. Reference During Argument to Existence of Facts Not Proven During Trial. If counsel, in his or her opening argument, makes reference to the existence of facts that counsel is prepared to prove but later does not attempt to prove and allegedly knew at the time that the facts could not be proven, this reference is not grounds for granting a new trial if the conduct resulted in no serious prejudice to the opposing party (Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 724, 737-738, 81 P.2d 950).

[Optional] I. Reference to Extraneous Matters During Argument. Although counsel's reference to extraneous matters during argument may be misconduct, if it is not prejudicial to the opposing party, a new trial is not proper (Woebbe v. Sperry (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 344, 119 P.2d 743).

[Optional] J. Insinuation of Untrue or Inadmissible Matters on Cross Examination. During cross examination, counsel's insinuation of matters that are not factually true or are inadmissible as evidence is not a basis for granting a new trial if the statements are not prejudicial to the opposing party's case (Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1122-1123, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 485 ; People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Auburn Ski Club (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 781, 787-789, 50 Cal. Rptr. 859).

[Optional] K. Counsel's Attempt to Place Inadmissible Physical Evidence Before Jury. If the complaining party is not prevented from having a fair trial, counsel's attempt to place certain inadmissible physical evidence before the jury is not grounds for granting a new trial (Robinson v. Western States Gas etc. Co. (1920) 184 Cal. 401, 407, 194 P. 39).

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the misconduct of a party or a party's counsel. In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.130 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the alleged misconduct, showing that the moving party was not prejudiced by it and that his or her substantial rights were not materially affected. Counsel may desire to refer to a reporter's transcript of the proceedings, and if used, he or she should attach relevant portions of the transcript to this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Prejudice Resulting From Alleged Misconduct

In Robinson v. Western States Gas etc. Co. (1920) 184 Cal. 401, 194 P. 39 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death allegedly caused by defendant's negligence. During trial, plaintiffs' attorney, when offering papers in evidence, attempted to read the contents of incompetent documents in the presence of the jury. After judgment for plaintiffs, defendant's motion for a new trial was denied, and defendant appealed the judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that misconduct is not cause for reversal or a new trial unless it has the effect of preventing the complaining party from having a fair trial. The Court stated the ruling rejecting the evidence together with the court's instruction to the jury lessened the injurious effect of the misconduct so that it could not be deemed sufficient to justify a reversal of the case (184 Cal. 401, 407) .

People ex rel. Dept. Pub. Wks. v. Hunt (1969) 2 Cal. App. 3d 158, 82 Cal. Rptr. 546 , was a condemnation action in which the condemnees were granted a new trial after a judgment was entered on a verdict that awarded them $35,000 for the property taken. The order granting the new trial failed to state the grounds on which it was granted. The state, as condemnor, appealed the order.

On appeal, when no grounds are specified in the order, the movant must advance any grounds on which the order must be upheld (2 Cal. App. 3d 158, 162) . Condemnees claimed that there was an irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] and accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)] since they expected the condemnor's witness to testify that the property was worth more than the value he gave at trial. In a telephone conversation, the state's counsel allegedly told counsel for condemnees that the state's appraisal would be very close to the staff appraisal. Therefore, condemnees' attorney did not subpoena the staff appraiser since it was his practice to do so only if the state's appraisal was sufficiently below the staff value. Counsel claimed that opposing counsel was guilty of intentionally deceiving him, thereby violating ethical standards, as well as constituting grounds for a new trial.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting a new trial, stating that it was questionable whether the irregularity or accident or surprise of which the condemnees complained, materially affected their substantial rights. The reason for this was that the jury returned a verdict which was equal to or in excess of the appraisal that the condemnees alleged they were precluded from producing. It has been aptly stated that the trial court, no less than an appellate court, is expressly enjoined by Cal. Const., Art. VI, § 13 from granting a new trial for errors unless they are prejudicial, and that if it clearly appears that such errors could not have affected the result of the trial, the court is bound to deny the motion (2 Cal. App. 3d 158, 172) . Furthermore, the court held that the record had shown that condemnor's counsel did not intentionally deceive opposing counsel and that there was no cognizable accident or surprise (2 Cal. App. 3d 158, 162, 166-172) . Thus, the order granting a new trial was reversed (2 Cal. App. 3d 158, 172) .

In Winningar v. Bales (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 273, 14 Cal. Rptr. 908 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries arising out of an automobile accident. Before the opening of court on the second day of trial, a spectator asked the defendant, in the presence of about half the impaneled jurors, if he was covered by insurance. He replied negatively. After verdict for defendant, plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the basis of alleged prejudice of a juror and defendant's remark was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, since defendant's remarks did not appear to have prejudiced the jury in favor of defendant. While a party should not discuss the question of insurance in the presence of any juror, it cannot be said that defendant's statement influenced the verdict. Although the spectator and one juror said that the statement was made in the presence of the jury, no other juror claimed to have heard it. In fact, eight jurors denied hearing it (194 Cal. App. 2d 273, 281) . The court cited Bramble v. McEwan (1940) 40 Cal. App. 2d 400, 104 P.2d 1054 , in which the respondent allegedly made remarks to the mother and sister of a juror for the purpose of influencing the juror. While the evidence failed to show that the remarks were communicated to the juror, the court said, in effect, that even if they were communicated, the juror voted for the other party, and hence there could be no prejudice (194 Cal. App. 2d 273, 281-282) .

[b] Court Must View Overall Record

In Sabella v. Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 311, 74 Cal. Rptr. 534, 449 P.2d 750 , plaintiff brought an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act [45 U.S.C. § 51] for personal injuries sustained in the course of his employment. During trial, plaintiff's counsel made statements that disparaged defendant by repeatedly referring to defendant as "inhuman" and "heartless," and as a "cheapskate" who cast plaintiff on the "human trash pile" and who attempted to put up a smokescreen by perjury and deceit. Counsel also made reference to the disparity in wealth between defendant and plaintiff. After verdict for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds including the misconduct of plaintiff's attorney. A new trial was denied, however, on the condition that plaintiff consent to a reduction of the verdict. Plaintiff agreed, and defendant appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment even though it found counsel's conduct to be improper and possibly prejudicial (70 Cal. 2d 311, 318) . In the absence of a timely objection, the offended party is deemed to have waived the claim of error through his participation in the atmosphere which produced the claim of prejudice. In this case, defendant remained silent as to all but one line of argument, and as to the latter, he objected, but failed to request an admonition of the jury to disregard the remarks (70 Cal. 2d 311, 319) . However, the Court emphasized that its conclusions should in no way be interpreted as condoning the deplorable conduct of plaintiff's counsel. Each case must ultimately rest on the court's view of the overall record, taking into account such factors as the nature and seriousness of the remarks and misconduct, the general atmosphere, including the judge's control of the trial, the likelihood of prejudicing the jury, and the efficacy of objection or admonition under all the circumstances (70 Cal. 2d 311, 320-321) .

[c] Remarks Made by Party

In Bramble v. McEwan (1940) 40 Cal. App. 2d 400, 104 P.2d 1054 , plaintiffs brought an action to recover damages for the death of their daughter in an automobile accident. Outside the courtroom, defendant allegedly told the mother and sister of one of the jurors that the deceased looked as though she were pregnant and that she ran around with service men. He also allegedly stated that her funeral bill was excessive for people on the WPA, a government work program. After judgment for defendant, plaintiff's motion for a new trial, based on defendant's remarks, was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, since there was an absence of proof that the jury heard the conversation. The witnesses testified that they had not told the juror of the conversation until after the rendition of the verdict (40 Cal. App. 2d 400, 415) . The court stated that even if the juror were informed of this conversation before the verdict was returned, she was one of three who voted for the plaintiffs. Hence, there was no prejudice as shown by the record, and the motion for a new trial was properly denied (40 Cal. App. 2d 400, 416) .

[d] Conduct of Party in Courtroom

In Wright v. Southern Counties Gas Co. (1929) 102 Cal. App. 656, 283 P. 823 , plaintiff brought an action against a gas company and a building owner to recover for personal injuries suffered in a gas explosion. During trial, plaintiff collapsed on the witness stand during the course of his cross examination. After verdict was rendered against defendant building owner, his motion for a new trial, based on the alleged misconduct of plaintiff, was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment (102 Cal. App. 656, 668) . Conflicting affidavits were submitted to the court on the question of whether or not the collapse was actual or simulated. Since the trial court observed the occurrence, it had a basis for its ruling that the court of appeal did not have. Nevertheless, on the basis of the affidavits, the court of appeal found that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion (102 Cal. App. 656, 668) .

[e] Counsel's Statements Were Vigorous Argument

In Henninger v. Southern Pacific Co. (1967) 250 Cal. App. 2d 872, 59 Cal. Rptr. 76 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained in the course of his employment. Plaintiff, a conductor brakeman, lost both legs as a result of a train accident. During trial, plaintiff's counsel asserted that defendant's counsel was insincere in pretending not to understand the present value of money. He argued that defense counsel's purpose was to "save the railroad every bit of money that has already been set aside, mind you, as a deductible expense of doing business." He characterized defense counsel's suggestion of a verdict for a particular amount as "ridiculous" and labeled his efforts as "an attempt to short change a cripple." Defendant's motion for a new trial based, in part, on plaintiff's counsel's allegedly prejudicial misconduct, was denied. Defendant appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the record left no doubt that counsel's argument was vigorous and effective, but it did not amount to prejudicial misconduct for which a new trial should be granted. The court concluded that the judge who presided at trial was in a far better position to evaluate the effect of the disputed argument. The judge's determination of the issue will not be set aside unless it is unquestionably wrong (250 Cal. App. 2d 872, 881) . Here, the court could not say that the trial judge was unquestionably wrong or wrong at all. Furthermore, defendant failed to object to plaintiff's counsel's argument or to request that the jury be admonished to disregard it. The court stated that it is clear that when no claim of misconduct is made in the trial court, complaint cannot be made for the first time on appeal (250 Cal. App. 2d 872, 882) .

[f] Assuming Language Was Misconduct, No Prejudice to Opposing Party

In Deevy v. Tassi (1942) 21 Cal. 2d 109, 130 P.2d 389 , plaintiffs brought an action for assault and battery against two defendants who allegedly injured plaintiffs when they sought to repossess plaintiffs' cattle. Plaintiffs were in default under the terms of a chattel mortgage on the cattle. During trial, plaintiffs' counsel referred to defendants as desperadoes, racketeers, cowpunchers, cattle gangsters, and drunken brutes. After each plaintiff was awarded compensatory and punitive damages against both defendants, defendants moved for a new trial. The motion, based in part on plaintiffs' counsel's alleged misconduct, was denied. Defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court found nothing in the record that justified the granting of a new trial, but modified the judgment by striking the award of punitive damages as against one defendant (21 Cal. 2d 109) . The Court stated that it did not appear that the jurors were incited to passion or prejudice by counsel's remarks. The language was strong, but so was the evidence. Furthermore, assuming that the use of such language in the heat of a trial was misconduct, the Court said that it did not appear, in the light of the evidence and the verdicts reached, that such misconduct was prejudicial (21 Cal. 2d 109) .

[g] Mention of Financial Condition Not Prejudicial

The factual and procedural background of Drotleff v. Renshaw (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 176, 208 P.2d 969 , is discussed in § 155.151[3][a]. The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff, stating that the conduct of plaintiff's attorney in referring to the plaintiff's financial condition did not operate to defendants' prejudice. The reference was a casual one, with no effort at repetition to aggravate the effect, and the trial court acted promptly to correct the impropriety and remove any effect it might otherwise have had (34 Cal. 2d 176, 180) . Under the circumstances, it could not be said that the reference in question contributed to the amount of the verdict, and that the trial court's timely action was ineffectual in curing the impropriety (34 Cal. 2d 176, 181) .

In Shabshin v. Pacifici (1961) 196 Cal. App. 2d 192, 16 Cal. Rptr. 440 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against the owner and the manufacturer of a gas stove. During trial, one defendant's counsel referred to the other defendant's financial condition. However, opposing counsel objected, and the court admonished the jury to disregard the reference. After judgment for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of prejudicial misconduct of one defendant's counsel. The motion was denied, and plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants since it found that the remark had done no damage to plaintiff's case. Under the circumstances, the court could not say that the reference in question contributed to the amount of the verdict and that the trial court's timely action was ineffectual in curing the impropriety. Considering the record, the apparent personal conflict existing among counsel, the nature of the remark and that it was a casual one, the time it was made during the argument, the trial judge's immediate instruction to the jury, and that it was never referred to or repeated, the court found that no prejudice had resulted (196 Cal. App. 2d 192, 200) .

[h] Reference During Argument to Existence of Facts Not Proven During Trial

In Mudrick v. Market Street Ry. Co. (1938) 11 Cal. 2d 724, 81 P.2d 950 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendant, a railway company. During his opening statement, plaintiff's counsel represented that plaintiff was prepared to prove certain facts. These facts concerned defendant's allegedly old and obsolete equipment, defendant's understaffing of its cars at the time and place of the accident, and defendant's failure to maintain proper guards to prevent a passenger thrown from a car from going under the wheels. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including prejudicial misconduct of plaintiff's attorney. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, since the remarks resulted in no serious prejudice to defendant. The Court noted that the trial court had instructed the jury that there was no evidence that the equipment of the corporation's car was not of standard kind and character (11 Cal. 2d 724, 738) . While the practice indulged in by plaintiff's counsel has frequently been condemned by the courts, it has also been held that unless prejudice has resulted, a new trial will not be awarded (11 Cal. 2d 724, 737) . While the Court was not willing to place its stamp of approval on the conduct, it was also not prepared to say that defendant was prejudiced by counsel's remarks (11 Cal. 2d 724, 738) .

[i] Reference to Extraneous Matters During Argument

In Woebbe v. Sperry (1941) 48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 119 P.2d 743 , plaintiff brought an action against defendants for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. During argument, while defendants' counsel discussed testimony given by a police officer, counsel referred to a police scandal. After judgment for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds, including the allegedly prejudicial misconduct of defendants' attorney. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, conceding that although the conduct may have been error, it is patent that the misconduct was not prejudicial. The court noted that plaintiff's counsel had promptly objected to the argument and that the trial court told the jury that police scandals had nothing to do with the case. Furthermore, since the trial court was not asked to admonish the jury to disregard the statements, the alleged misconduct may not be urged for the first time on appeal (48 Cal. App. 2d 340, 344) .

[j] Insinuation of Untrue or Inadmissible Matters on Cross Examination

Bell v. Bayerische Motoren Werke Aktiengesellschaft (2010) 181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1122-1123, 105 Cal. Rptr. 3d 485 , involved a car accident. The injured driver sued the manufacturer of the car for negligence and products liability. When the defendant's counsel cross-examined a witness to the accident, counsel asked the witness if the witness had asked the plaintiff whether the plaintiff had insurance. On the plaintiff's objection, the trial judge instructed the jury to disregard the question. The plaintiff moved for a mistrial based on the question, and the trial court denied the motion.

The court of appeal agreed. The court first noted that attorney misconduct can justify a new trial only if it is reasonably probable that the moving party would have obtained a more favorable result absent the misconduct (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1123) . It then noted that under Evid. Code § 1155, evidence that a person was insured against liability for another person's injury is inadmissible to prove negligence or other wrongdoing, and that evidence suggesting that the plaintiff was insured could cause the jury to believe that the plaintiff would be compensated by insurance, which could cause the jury to find no liability more readily or to award lower damages (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1123) . Nonetheless, the court held that it is common knowledge today that most drivers in California carry automobile insurance protecting them from liability. The court held that the mention of the plaintiff's insurance in an action against an automobile manufacturer for products liability was unlikely to cause the jury to conclude either that the plaintiff would be fully compensated by insurance or that the defendant should be relieved of liability. In addition, the court held that the trial court instructed the jury not to consider the insurance, and that such admonitions are ordinarily effective except in cases of extreme misconduct (181 Cal. App. 4th 1108, 1123) .

People ex rel. Dept. Public Works v. Auburn Ski Club (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 781, 50 Cal. Rptr. 859 , was a condemnation action brought by the state, which had acquired land for freeway purposes, against defendant condemnees. During trial, defendants' attorney frequently made attempts to suggest facts that could not be introduced as evidence or that were not supported by the evidence when he used the "do you know that" technique in asking questions during cross examination. Counsel used this phrase to inject his unsworn statements into trial. After defendants were awarded a judgment, the state moved for a new trial on the ground of counsel's allegedly prejudicial misconduct. When the motion was denied, the state appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the jury was not seriously affected by counsel's overzealous advocacy. It stated that the trial judge kept control of the proceedings; objections were promptly ruled on and the jury was at no time permitted to forget that the statements of counsel were not to be considered by it (241 Cal. App. 2d 781, 791) . The court noted that the use of the phrase, "do you know that," does not automatically make a question improper. Counsel frequently used the phrase to state a commonly known fact or readily verifiable matter (241 Cal. App. 2d 781, 789) . The court added that it is only in extreme cases that the court, when acting promptly, cannot correct the impropriety of the act of counsel and remove any effect that his or her remarks would otherwise have. Regardless of the antagonism between the attorneys, the court did not believe that it was likely to have had any effect on the jury except to compel boredom (241 Cal. App. 2d 781, 792) .

[k] Counsel's Attempt to Place Inadmissible Physical Evidence Before Jury

In Robinson v. Western States Gas etc. Co. (1920) 184 Cal. 401, 194 P. 39 , plaintiffs brought an action for decedent's wrongful death that was allegedly caused by defendant power company's negligence. During trial, plaintiffs' attorney proceeded to read a document that was hearsay and incompetent. Although the court failed to promptly prevent him from doing so, it rejected the evidence pursuant to an objection by opposing counsel. After judgment for plaintiffs, defendant moved for a new trial on several grounds, including prejudicial misconduct of plaintiffs' attorney. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that the ruling rejecting the evidence and the court's further instruction to the jury, taken together, lessened the injurious effect of the misconduct so that it could not be deemed to justify a reversal of the case. Misconduct is not cause for reversal or a new trial unless it has the effect of preventing the complaining party from having a fair trial. The Court stated that the other assignments of misconduct were too trivial to be worthy of discussion. Hence, it affirmed the judgment (184 Cal. 401, 407) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Prejudice Resulting from Alleged Misconduct

The court of appeal in Da Silva v. Pacific King, Inc. (1987) 195 Cal. App. 3d 1, 240 Cal. Rptr. 395 , affirmed a judgment for an injured seaman. Plaintiff claimed that defense counsel acted improperly in displaying to the jury medical records that disclosed plaintiff's application for social security benefits. Plaintiff's counsel refused a curative instruction, but moved for a new trial. The trial court denied the motion, holding that there was no prejudice by defense counsel's reference to a collateral source of compensation. The court of appeal agreed that there was no prejudice, noting that damages appeared to have been calculated without deduction for the collateral source and that plaintiff failed to ask for a curative instruction (195 Cal. App. 3d 1, 9-10) .

The factual and procedural background of Jackson v. Barnett (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 167, 324 P.2d 643 , is discussed in § 155.152[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on defendant's alleged misconduct. The court stated that it affirmatively appeared that the jurors did not participate in the allegedly prejudicial conversation or consider it as having any effect on them (160 Cal. App. 2d 167, 172) .

The factual and procedural background of Fonts v. Southern Pacific Co. (1916) 30 Cal. App. 633, 159 P. 215 , is discussed in § 155.130[3][f]. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendant's motion for new trial on the basis of plaintiff's fainting spell while on the witness stand. The court stated that it did not feel that the jury's verdict was influenced by plaintiff's conduct. The presumption is that the jury members regarded their oaths and determined the case according to law and evidence (30 Cal. App. 633, 638) .

[b] Remarks Made by Party

The factual and procedural background of Winningar v. Bales (1961) 194 Cal. App. 2d 273, 14 Cal. Rptr. 908 , is discussed inn [3][a], above. The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial because defendant's remarks did not appear to have prejudiced the jury. Although a spectator and one juror said that the statement was made in the presence of the jury, no other juror claimed to have heard it. In fact, eight jurors denied hearing it (194 Cal. App. 2d 273, 281) .

The factual and procedural background of Jackson v. Barnett (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 167, 324 P.2d 643 , is discussed in § 155.152[3][a]. The court of appeal affirmed the denial of plaintiff's motion for new trial based on defendant's allegedly prejudicial statements to the jury. After the judge left the courtroom with respective counsel to discuss a matter, defendant remained on the witness stand and remarked to the jury,"I guess they want to talk about something they don't want us to hear," and the jury laughed. The court affirmed the denial of the motion because it appeared that the remark did not prejudice the jury and because plaintiff did not call the remark to the attention of the court until after the return of a verdict (160 Cal. App. 2d 167, 171-172) .

[c] Conduct of Party in Courtroom

The factual and procedural background of Fonts v. Southern Pacific Co. (1916) 30 Cal. App. 633, 159 P. 215 , is discussed in § 155.130[3][f]. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. During trial, plaintiff fainted while on the witness stand. However, since there was no evidence of simulation or other intentional misconduct, the court held that a new trial was not proper because of the unavoidable illness of the plaintiff (30 Cal. App. 633, 638) .

[d] Assuming Language Was Misconduct, No Prejudice to Opposing Party

In Curcio v. Svanevik (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 202 Cal. Rptr. 499 , plaintiff sought to recover for injuries sustained in a vehicle collision. The jury found for plaintiff, and defendant moved for a new trial based on alleged instances of misconduct by plaintiff's counsel. These instances included reference to plaintiff's receiving a Purple Heart, reference to the relative financial status of the parties, insinuation that the defendant was suppressing evidence, and the implication that defendant had filed its general denial in bad faith (155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 961) . The trial court denied the motion. Defendant appealed, and the court of appeal affirmed. The court held that, assuming arguendo that the misconduct occurred as claimed, the court did not believe that a different or more favorable verdict would have resulted in its absence (155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 966) .

In Mize v. Atchison, T. & S.F. Ry. Co. (1975) 46 Cal. App. 3d 436, 120 Cal. Rptr. 787 , the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and the denial of defendants' motion for new trial in a wrongful death action. The court upheld the trial court's determination that no prejudice resulted from plaintiff's counsel's conduct in asking decedent's ex-wife if she suffered a nervous breakdown following decedent's death and if her present husband was in good health. Nothing had been brought to the court's attention to indicate any play for sympathy because of Mrs. Jones's condition (46 Cal. App. 3d 436, 451-452) .

Jonte v. Key System (1949) 89 Cal. App. 2d 654, 201 P.2d 562 , was a personal injury action against a transportation company in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. During trial, counsel stated that defendant was accustomed to trying to "beat" claims of its patrons by such means as subjecting them to the expense of lawsuits, influencing witnesses, confusing evidence, and using political influence. Although the court concluded that counsel's statements constituted misconduct, the court's admonition to the jury to disregard the statements cured the error and the denial of the motion for new trial was proper (89 Cal. App. 2d 654, 659-660) .

McCabe v. Cheseldine (1931) 117 Cal. App. 526, 4 P.2d 282 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. During his argument to the jury, plaintiff's counsel referred to defendant as a "potential murderer." The court stated that assuming that the expression had no place in the case, it did not result in a miscarriage of justice and that a new trial was not necessary (117 Cal. App. 526, 527) .

Porter v. Granich (1934) 136 Cal. App. 523, 29 P.2d 220 , was a false imprisonment action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial. During trial, plaintiff's counsel habitually mispronounced defendant's name, Granich, and referred to his client as an "American boy" in an effort to prejudice the jury against a man with a foreign name. The court stated that the trial court was in a better position to pass on this point than it was and that the lower court's decision did not appear to be an abuse of discretion (136 Cal. App. 523, 531) .

Aydlott v. Key System Transit Co. (1930) 104 Cal. App. 621, 286 P. 456 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. During trial, plaintiff's counsel stated that since plaintiff could no longer work, she could not help her husband pay for their home and they had to move to a house over a garage. Counsel also stated that plaintiff was in danger of becoming a public charge. Although the court stated that remarks that attempt to unjustly enlist the jury's sympathies and prejudices are always improper and should be avoided, it decided that the trial judge's decision to deny the motion was proper since the verdict did not appear to have been influenced by misconduct of counsel (104 Cal. App. 621, 628-629) .

[e] Reference During Argument to Existence of Facts Not Proven During Trial

Rather v. City & County of San Francisco (1947) 81 Cal. App. 2d 625, 184 P.2d 727 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. During trial, defendants' counsel repeatedly told the jury that he had an eyewitness to the accident, but he never produced this witness. The court of appeal stated that the trial court was in a better position to decide whether or not the situation worked to the prejudice of plaintiff, and since the trial court decided that no prejudice resulted, its denial of the motion was upheld (81 Cal. App. 2d 625, 637-639) .

[f] Insinuation of Untrue or Inadmissible Matters on Cross Examination

Liberty Bank v. Nonnenmann (1929) 96 Cal. App. 478, 274 P. 568 , was an action on two promissory notes executed by defendants in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. During his cross examination of a witness, defense counsel repeatedly referred to a verdict in another case, in which judgment had been reversed, with the innuendo that another jury had found plaintiff guilty of fraud. The court stated that the evidence so amply supported the verdict for defendants that the same result would have been reached even if counsel had not made reference to the other verdict (96 Cal. App. 478, 487-488) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE ADVERSE PARTY BECAUSE COUNSEL'S ALLEGED MISCONDUCT WAS CURED BY A TIMELY OBJECTION AND ADMONITION, THUS _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] WAS NOT PREVENTED FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS WERE NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED.

A. Casual Statement Cured by Court's Action. A new trial will not be granted if counsel's allegedly prejudicial statement was a casual one with no effort at repetition to aggravate the effect and if the trial court acted promptly to correct the impropriety by directing the jury to disregard the statement and by reprimanding counsel (*Drotleff v. B. Impropriety Correctable Except in Extreme Cases. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on the misconduct of a party or a party's counsel. In an appropriate case, this memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.130 et seq.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss the inconsequential nature of the alleged misconduct and show that the moving party was not deprived of a fair trial because of the court's admonition to the jury and reprimand of the adverse party or adverse party's counsel.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Casual Statement Cured by Court's Action

In Drotleff v. Renshaw (1949) 34 Cal. 2d 176, 208 P.2d 969 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision. During closing argument, plaintiff's attorney informed the jury that he did not bring a certain doctor to testify in the case because plaintiff could not afford the expense. After judgment for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on the basis of prejudicial misconduct of plaintiff's attorney. The motion was denied, and defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that the conduct of plaintiff's attorney did not operate to prejudice against defendants in relation to the fixing of the amount of the verdict. Other physicians testified sufficiently to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that the particular injuries to plaintiff had occurred. Even though the reference to plaintiff's financial condition was improper and should not have been made, the reference was a casual one, with no effort at repetition to aggravate the effect. The trial court acted promptly to correct the impropriety and remove any effect it otherwise might have had, not only in directing the jury to disregard the objectionable statement, but in reprimanding plaintiff's attorney with an admonition to confine his remarks to the evidence in the case. Under these circumstances, the Court could not say that the reference in question contributed to the amount of the verdict. Moreover, the alleged consequences of the cited reference were fully but unavailingly argued before the trial court as grounds for a new trial. There appeared to be no reason to disturb the trial court's conclusion on these points (34 Cal. 2d 176, 180-181) .

[b] Impropriety Correctable Except in Extreme Cases

Dominguez v. Pantalone (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 201, 260 Cal. Rptr. 431 , was a personal injury action based on a collision between plaintiff's motorcycle and defendant's automobile. During trial, plaintiff's counsel repeatedly sought to introduce improper evidence of a police officer's opinion of the fault of the accident, and defendant's counsel objected.

The jury found in favor of plaintiff and judgment was entered against defendant. Defendant thereafter moved for new trial on the ground that misconduct of plaintiff's attorney resulted in prejudice because defendant was unable to cross-examine the officer on the subject of the opinion, thus depriving defendant of a fair trial. The trial court denied the motion and defendant appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment. The court stated that plaintiff's attorney's attempts to find other theories of relevancy or admissibility of the officer's opinion did not overstep the permissible line of proper lawyering conduct. The court also concluded that even were the acts to constitute misconduct, they would not be prejudicial, because it was a lengthy trial, aggressively litigated on both sides, with many witnesses and with frequent objections being made on both sides; the officer's opinion was not a major theme of the trial; the trial court maintained firm control of the proceedings, which resulted in an impartial and dignified atmosphere; and the admonitions given to the jury were sufficient to remove any impropriety and prejudice which could have resulted from the attorney's conduct. The court also quoted Tingley v. Times Mirror (1907) 151 Cal. 1, 23, 89 P. 1097 , stating that it is only in extreme cases that the court, when acting promptly and speaking clearly and directly on the subject, cannot, by instructing the jury to disregard such matters, correct the impropriety of the act of counsel and remove any effect his conduct or remarks would otherwise have (212 Cal. App. 3d 201, 213-214) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Casual Statement Cured by Court's Action

The factual and procedural background of Curcio v. Svanevik (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 202 Cal. Rptr. 499 , is discussed in § 155.150[4][d]. In affirming, the court of appeal held that any possible prejudice resulting from a reference by plaintiff's counsel during direct examination to plaintiff's receipt of a Purple Heart in Vietnam was surely cured by the trial court's admonition to the jury that they were not to consider as evidence any statements of counsel (155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 962-963) .

Hart v. Wielt (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 84 Cal. Rptr. 220 , the court of appeal affirmed the denial of defendant's motion for new trial based on argument of plaintiff's counsel in which he stated that plaintiff was a burden on taxpayers and subject to charity because of her personal injuries. Even though the references to charity were improper, the trial court admonished the jury to decide the case on facts and law, not on appeals to emotion. The court felt that this admonition cured the error and that no prejudice resulted from the improper conduct (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 234-235) .

Failure of Moving Party to Make Timely Objection. A motion for new trial, based on the misconduct of a party or a party's counsel, will be denied if a timely and proper objection is not made at trial, since a party cannot await the outcome of the case and raise the irregularity for the first time on a motion for new trial (*Sabella v. [3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure of Moving Party to Make Timely Objection

The factual and procedural background of Sabella v. Southern Pac. Co. (1969) 70 Cal. 2d 311, 74 Cal. Rptr. 534, 449 P.2d 750 , is discussed in § 155.150[3][b].

The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff even though it concluded that plaintiff's counsel was guilty of deplorable misconduct which might have been prejudicial (70 Cal. 2d 311, 318) . During trial, defendant did not object to the allegedly prejudicial remarks except on one occasion. When defendant did object, he failed to request an admonition of the jury to disregard the remarks. The Court stated that in the absence of a timely objection, the offended party is deemed to have waived the claim of error through his or her participation in the atmosphere which produced the claim of prejudice (70 Cal. 2d 311, 319) . It is only in extreme cases that the court, when acting promptly and speaking clearly and directly on the subject, cannot, by instructing the jury to disregard such matters, correct the impropriety of the act of counsel and remove any effect his or her conduct or remarks would otherwise have (70 Cal. 2d 311, 318) . Since defendant remained silent as to all but one line of argument, the Court concluded that defendant must be denied relief (70 Cal. 2d 311, 319) .

In Horn v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 602, 39 Cal. Rptr. 721, 394 P.2d 561 , plaintiff brought an action under the Federal Employers' Liability Act [45 U.S.C. § 51] and the Safety Appliance Act [45 U.S.C. § 2] for personal injuries suffered while working as an employee of defendant railroad company. During trial, plaintiff's counsel made frequent abusive remarks directed at defendant and its witnesses. Counsel also asked the jury members to fix damages as if they or a loved one were the injured party. Counsel for defendant did not object to the claimed instances of misconduct during trial. At the conclusion of opposing counsel's closing argument, defendant's counsel moved for a mistrial. The motion was denied. The trial court also denied defendant's motion for a new trial, which was made on numerous grounds, including misconduct of plaintiff's counsel.

The Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff, stating that defendant waived its right to complain by its failure to make timely objections (61 Cal. 2d 602, 609-610) . In the absence of a timely objection, the offended party is deemed to have waived the claim of error through his or her participation in the atmosphere which produced the claim of prejudice. The purpose of the rule requiring the making of timely objections is remedial in nature, and seeks to give the court the opportunity to admonish the jury, instruct counsel, and forestall the accumulation of prejudice by repeating improprieties, thus avoiding the necessity of a retrial. It is only in extreme cases that the court, when acting promptly and speaking clearly and directly on the subject, cannot, by instructing the jury to disregard such matters, correct the impropriety of the act of counsel and remove any effect his or her conduct or remarks would otherwise have. In this case, the Court stated that misconduct of plaintiff's counsel could have been obviated by timely objections and instructions. An attack on the instances of misconduct at the onset, together with proper instruction from the court to both the jury and counsel, would not only have removed the effect of the initial improprieties, but would also have forestalled the commission of subsequent acts of misconduct (61 Cal. 2d 602, 610-611) .

In Jackson v. Barnett (1958) 160 Cal. App. 2d 167, 324 P.2d 643 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered in a fall from the balcony of defendant's store. During trial, the judge left the courtroom to discuss an objection in chambers with counsel for the respective parties. Defendant remained on the witness stand and allegedly remarked, "I guess they want to talk about something they don't want us to hear," and the jury laughed. After verdict was rendered for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of defendant's misconduct. The motion was denied.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and the denial of the motion, since the claimed error was not called to the attention of the court until after the return of a verdict and on a motion for new trial. Plaintiff's wife noticed the irregularity, but no action was taken by plaintiff or his counsel. The court indicated that the trial court was justified in denying the motion on this ground. Furthermore, although the remark should not have been made, it was probably true. It also affirmatively appeared that the jurors did not participate in the conversation or consider it as having any effect on them (160 Cal. App. 2d 167, 172) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure of Moving Party to Make Timely Objection

The factual and procedural background of Curcio v. Svanevik (1984) 155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 202 Cal. Rptr. 499 , is discussed in § 155.150[4][d]. In affirming, the court of appeal held that defendant had waived its claim of misconduct based on the reference of plaintiff's counsel during trial to the relative wealth of defendant, because the record failed to disclose a timely and proper objection and a request that the jury be admonished (155 Cal. App. 3d 955, 963) .

Hansen v. Warco Steel Corp. (1965) 237 Cal. App. 2d 870, 47 Cal. Rptr. 428 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and the denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial based on the allegedly prejudicial misconduct of defendant's counsel. The court stated that counsel was guilty of serious misconduct in arguing the importance of an excluded document and in asking the jury to draw an inference because plaintiff's attorney had made an objection that the court had sustained. Because plaintiff did not object or request that the jury be admonished, however, he waived the claim of error and could not demand a retrial after hearing a disappointing verdict (237 Cal. App. 2d 870, 878-879) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE COUNSEL'S REFERENCE TO THE FACT OF LIABILITY INSURANCE DID NOT PREVENT _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FROM HAVING A FAIR TRIAL AND DID NOT MATERIALLY AFFECT HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. No Prejudice to Opposing Party. In a personal injury action, a new trial will not be granted because of a reference to insurance if the reference caused no prejudice to the opposing party (Hatfield v. Levy Brothers (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 798, 813-814, 117 P.2d 841 ; Hart v. Wielt (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 230-233, 84 Cal. Rptr. 220).

B. Court Must View Overall Record. In a closely balanced case, whether counsel's reference to insurance constitutes prejudicial misconduct that cannot be cured by the court's admonition is determined by the court's view of the overall record, taking into account the nature and seriousness of the remarks, the good faith of counsel, whether the misconduct consisted of a single utterance or repeated persistent reiteration thereof, the judge's control of the trial, and the probable likelihood of prejudicing the jury (Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 473, 130 Cal. Rptr. 786).

[Optional] C. Reference to Insurance During Voir Dire. In a personal injury action, counsel may, in good faith, ask prospective jurors whether they are interested in a particular insurance company so long as the question does not unnecessarily convey the impression that a party is in fact insured (*Hart v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)] based on opposing counsel's alleged misconduct in injecting the fact of liability insurance into trial. It generally opposes a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities contained in § 155.136.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show the inconsequential nature of the reference to insurance and how this reference did not deprive the moving party of a fair trial.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] No Prejudice to Opposing Party

In Hatfield v. Levy Brothers (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 798, 117 P.2d 841 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, brought an action for personal injuries sustained when one plaintiff fell inside defendants' store. While cross examining a witness during trial, plaintiffs' counsel asked about a conversation that occurred immediately after the accident. In that conversation, the witness related that she told plaintiff that the store was insured. After the witness was excused, defendants moved for a mistrial. The court denied the motion, but instructed the jury that insurance was not involved in the case. After verdict for plaintiffs, defendants moved for a new trial on the basis of opposing counsel's misconduct. When the motion was denied, defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed, stating that it did not believe that defendants could claim prejudice in view of all the circumstances. No objection was made by defendants until the witness had left the stand. Defendants never made a motion to strike and never asked the court to instruct the jury to disregard the references. Furthermore, there was nothing in cross examination of plaintiff's counsel that indicated a design and intent to inject insurance into the case and thereby influence the jury. Since the witness was defendants' and not plaintiffs', it cannot be presumed that plaintiffs' counsel knew what the answer would be, as might be the case if plaintiffs or one of their witnesses were testifying. Under the circumstances, the Court stated that it was not inclined to disturb the trial court's denial of the motion (18 Cal. 2d 798, 813-814) .

In Hart v. Wielt (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 84 Cal. Rptr. 220 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. During voir dire examination of a prospective juror, plaintiff's counsel asked if he or any member of his family were employed by or owned stock in State Farm Insurance Company. During trial, counsel asked plaintiff several questions about medical bills and examinations and plaintiff's answers contained references to State Farm. When plaintiff's counsel cross examined defendants' private investigator, it was revealed that the private investigator had previously worked at State Farm. After judgment for plaintiff, defendants' motion for a new trial made on several grounds, including misconduct of plaintiff's counsel, was denied. Defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, concluding that there was no prejudicial error in the repeated references to insurance. Although the court said that it was aware of the thin line that exists in this area, it felt that the line had not been crossed. Furthermore, the court stated that the trial court impliedly found no misconduct, or at least no prejudice, when ruling on the motion for new trial. A trial judge is in a better position than an appellate court to determine whether a verdict resulted wholly, or in part, from the asserted misconduct of counsel and the court's conclusion in the matter will not be disturbed unless, under all the circumstances, it is plainly wrong. Since the decision of the trial court did not appear to be plainly wrong, the court upheld the denial of defendant's motion (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 232-233) .

[b] Court Must View Overall Record

In Neumann v. Bishop (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 130 Cal. Rptr. 786 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. During trial, plaintiff's attorney referred to defendant as "defense interests," a term that allegedly was an improper reference to insurance. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant's motion for a new trial on several grounds, including misconduct of plaintiff's counsel, was denied, and defendant appealed the judgment. The court of appeal affirmed, stating that, in a closely balanced case, whether counsel's improper reference to insurance constitutes misconduct that cannot be cured by the court's admonition is determined by the court's view of the overall record, taking into account, inter alia, the nature and seriousness of the remarks, the good faith of counsel, whether the misconduct consisted of a single utterance or repeated, persistent reiteration thereof, the judge's control of the trial, and the probable likelihood of prejudicing the jury. In this case, counsel's references were ambiguous at best and suffered from a lack of objection. The court stated that if defense counsel felt that the issue of insurance had been improperly interjected into the case, he should have asked for an admonishing instruction to be given to the jury. The court conceded that such an instruction might "blow smoldering coals into a blazing fire of speculation," but if defense counsel thought that such speculation would occur anyway, he should have asked for an instruction. Since the court felt that there was no demonstrable prejudicial misconduct in hinting at the existence of insurance, it affirmed the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial (59 Cal. App. 3d 451, 473) .

[c] Reference to Insurance During Voir Dire

The factual and procedural background of Hart v. Wielt (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 84 Cal. Rptr. 220 , is discussed in [a], above. During voir dire examination of prospective jurors, plaintiff's counsel asked if he or any member of his family were employed by or owned stock in the State Farm Insurance Company. Counsel for defendants made no timely objection and did not request that the jury be admonished. After judgment for plaintiff, defendants' motion for a new trial made on several grounds, including plaintiff's counsel's misconduct, was denied. Defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that in a personal injury action, counsel may, in good faith, ask prospective jurors whether they are interested in a particular insurance company so long as the question does not unnecessarily convey the impression that defendant is in fact insured. The court stated that it found no evidence of bad faith in this case, and even though plaintiff's counsel referred to insurance at other times during trial, the court stated that it found no prejudicial error (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 230) . Accordingly, the court upheld the trial court's denial of the motion.

The decision in Hart v. Wielt was sharply criticized by the court of appeal in another case, Scally v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1972) 23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 100 Cal. Rptr. 501 . In the Scally case, the court stated that to suggest that such a question can be asked without telling the jury that a party is in fact insured is naivete of the highest order. Any lawyer or judge who has observed or participated in jury voir dire knows that such questions are asked for one purpose only--to convey the impression that a party is insured (23 Cal. App. 3d 806, 813) . For further discussion of the Scally case, see § 155.136[3][f].

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] No Prejudice to Opposing Party

Rocray v. Pasadena City Lines, Inc. (1958) 159 Cal. App. 2d 265, 323 P.2d 772 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and an order denying defendant transit company's motion for a new trial. Defendant claimed that plaintiff's counsel prejudicially and unnecessarily made references to insurance when counsel repeatedly referred to defendant's claims manager. However, the court of appeal felt that no prejudice resulted from counsel's conduct and it upheld the denial of the motion (159 Cal. App. 2d 265, 271-275) .

Covely v. C.A.B. Construction Co. (1952) 110 Cal. App. 2d 30, 242 P.2d 87 , was a wrongful death action against a construction company in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants and the denial of plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs claimed that defense counsel improperly brought the subject of insurance into the case when he stated in his argument to the jury that the accident was an industrial accident for which the law provides workers' compensation. However, the court of appeal agreed with the trial court's determination that no prejudice had resulted, and it decided not to disturb the trial court's denial of plaintiffs' motion (110 Cal. App. 2d 30, 35-36) .

Adams v. Southern Pacific Co. (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 560, 186 P.2d 729 , was a personal injury action against a railroad company in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants and an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs claimed that defendants' attorney was guilty of prejudicial misconduct in questioning witnesses on cross examination with respect to compensation insurance which was carried by plaintiffs' employer and in referring to that insurance in his argument to the jury. However, the court concluded that defense attorney's conduct resulted in no prejudice to plaintiffs, since the existence of compensation insurance was shown with the express consent of plaintiffs' counsel, and plaintiffs may not complain of evidence that was adduced with their consent (82 Cal. App. 2d 560, 564) .

[b] Reference to Insurance During Voir Dire

Shriver v. Silva (1944) 65 Cal. App. 2d 753, 151 P.2d 528 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs and upheld an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial. Defendants claimed that plaintiffs' counsel was guilty of prejudicially injecting the fact of insurance into the case during voir dire examination of the jury. However, the court of appeal stated that counsel may, in good faith, ask a prospective juror whether he or she is interested in any insurance company as long as the questions do not convey the impression that defendant is in fact insured. In this case, the court said that it was doubtful whether the question asked by plaintiffs' counsel contained any implication that defendants were insured, and if it did convey that impression, the statement by defense attorney and by the trial court that no insurance company was involved in the action negated any prejudicial effect (65 Cal. App. 2d 753, 762) .

Jones v. Bayley (1942) 49 Cal. App. 2d 647, 122 P.2d 293 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs and the denial of defendants' motion for a new trial. Defendants claimed that plaintiffs' counsel prejudicially and unnecessarily brought the matter of insurance before the jury during voir dire examination. However, the court stated that counsel may, in good faith, ask whether a prospective juror is interested in insurance as long as the questions do not unnecessarily convey the impression that a party is in fact insured. Since the court found that no prejudice resulted from counsel's conduct, it upheld the denial of defendants' motion (49 Cal. App. 2d 647, 658-659) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF IRREGULARITY IN THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE ADVERSE PARTY BECAUSE COUNSEL'S REFERENCE TO INSURANCE WAS RELEVANT TO A MATERIAL ISSUE IN THE CASE, THUS _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] WAS NOT DEPRIVED OF A FAIR TRIAL AND HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS WERE NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED.

A. Relevance to Issue in Case. In a personal injury action, counsel may refer to the existence of insurance if it is relevant to a material issue in the case (Huber v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 278, 285, 162 P.2d 693 ; Brown v. McCuan (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 35, 40, 132 P.2d 838).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc.§ 657(1)] based on opposing counsel's reference to insurance during trial. It generally opposes a motion for new trial that is supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.136.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show how the reference to insurance was relevant to the case and how the reference did not prevent the moving party from having a fair trial.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Relevance to Issue in Case

In Huber v. Henry J. Kaiser Co. (1945) 71 Cal. App. 2d 278, 162 P.2d 693 , plaintiff brought an action against a third party to recover damages for personal injuries suffered in the course of his employment. His employer had already paid compensation and plaintiff, through his attorney, filed a notice of lien in the case for compensation for benefits his employee had paid plaintiff. During defense counsel's argument, he made reference to the compensation insurance. The court instructed the jury that it was not to consider the fact of compensation insurance in determining the amount damages to be awarded plaintiff, if damages were to be awarded. After judgment was rendered for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of prejudicial misconduct of defendants' attorney. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that when the existence of compensation insurance is relevant to a material issue, it may be discussed in argument and considered by the jury. Here, the existence of insurance was a fact of record that could not be kept from the jury. Furthermore, the jury had been properly instructed on its lack of relevance to the issue of damages. The court of appeal stated that when the case comes to it after the trial judge has denied a new trial, the judgment must be affirmed unless there is no reasonable basis for his or her finding. Since the court felt that there had been a reasonable basis for the trial judge's finding, it did not disturb the denial of the motion (71 Cal. App. 2d 278, 285-286) .

In Brown v. McCuan (1942) 56 Cal. App. 2d 35, 132 P.2d 838 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. During trial, defendant's counsel asked the doctor, who testified to the nature of plaintiff's injury, who had referred plaintiff to him. The doctor answered that the insurance company had done so. During counsel's final argument, he again referred to the insurance company in order to cast doubt on the integrity of plaintiff's witnesses. After judgment for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the basis of defendant's counsel's misconduct. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that there is nothing to prevent a prejudicial fact such as the existence of insurance from going before the jury as long as it is relevant to an issue in the case. Here the jury might have found the testimony of the doctor to have been biased by reason of his connection with the insurance company. The evidence objected to was admissible to prove that theory. Furthermore, plaintiff himself put the fact that an insurance company was involved in the case before the jury. He introduced exhibits for medical expenses that were all addressed to the insurance carrier, attempted to impeach one of defendant's witnesses with a written statement given to an insurance investigator, and also made references to insurance during his final argument. Since the trial court had found that no prejudice had existed in the case, the court of appeal upheld the determination (56 Cal. App. 2d 35, 40-41) . The court stated that it could not assume that the jury denied plaintiff any recovery because it believed that he might get compensation from another source. It was more reasonable, the court maintained, to assume that the verdict followed the evidence on the issues of the case (56 Cal. App. 2d 35, 41-42) .

[b] Facts Tending to Show Interest, Bias, or Motive

The factual and procedural background of Hart v. Wielt (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 84 Cal. Rptr. 220 , is discussed in § 155.153[3][a]. During the cross examination of defendants' private investigator by plaintiff's counsel, it was revealed that the private investigator had previously worked for State Farm Insurance Company. Plaintiff's counsel added that defendants' counsel was the attorney for State Farm. He also made other references to insurance during the trial and had made such references during the voir dire examination of prospective jurors. After judgment for plaintiff, defendants' motion for a new trial, made on several grounds, including the misconduct of plaintiff's counsel, was denied. Defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that in a personal injury action, counsel may, in good faith, ask prospective jurors whether they are interested in a particular insurance company so long as the question does not unnecessarily convey the impression that the defendant is insured. The court concluded that there was no evidence of bad faith in this case (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 230) . Furthermore, quoting Moniz v. Bettencourt (1938) 24 Cal. App. 2d 718, 76 P.2d 535 , the court said that facts tending to show interest, bias, or motive on the part of a witness may always be brought out on cross examination, even though it may thereby be disclosed that defendant was protected by insurance (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 231) . In Hart, the court of appeal noted that the trial court had denied defendant's motion for a new trial and for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court of appeal stated that the lower court impliedly found no misconduct, or at least no prejudice when ruling on these motions (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 233) . During trial, defense counsel immediately objected to the misconduct of counsel and the lower court admonished the jury that the case was to be decided on facts and law, not on "emotional feelings" (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 234) . After examining the entire record, the court of appeal found that there was no prejudicial error and affirmed the judgment (4 Cal. App. 3d 224, 236) .

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE A(N) _____ [ACCIDENT and/or SURPRISE] OCCURRED AT TRIAL THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS, AGAINST WHICH ORDINARY PRUDENCE COULD NOT HAVE GUARDED.

A. New Trial on Ground of Accident or Surprise. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of accident or surprise, against which ordinary prudence could not have guarded, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)).

B. Accident and Surprise Defined. The terms, accident and surprise, although not strictly synonymous, have substantially the same meaning, as each is used to denote some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his or her injury, without any default or negligence of his or her own and which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against (Kauffman v. De Mutiis (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 429, 432, 189 P.2d 271).

C. Different Result Probable on Retrial. A new trial may be granted on the ground of accident or surprise if the aggrieved party shows that in the event of a new trial, a different result would be reached that will be favorable to that party (Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 738, 64 P.2d 960).

D. Exercise of Ordinary Prudence to Guard Against Surprise or Accident. A new trial may be granted if the aggrieved party has exercised ordinary prudence to guard against the surprise or accident (Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 739-740, 64 P.2d 960).

[Optional] E. Failure to Seek Continuance or Ask for Relief at Time of Surprise. A new trial may be granted even though the aggrieved party has failed to seek a continuance or to ask for relief at the time of the accident or surprise, if no practicable steps that counsel could have taken would have effaced the disastrous effect of the accident or surprise (see Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 737, 64 P.2d 960).

[Optional] F. Raising New Material Issue by Adverse Party. A new trial may be granted on the ground of accident or surprise if, during the trial, the adverse party raises a new issue that did not appear in the pleadings and that is supported by testimony contrary to what was anticipated (Blankman v. Parsons (1925) 73 Cal. App. 218, 224-225, 238 P. 728).

[Optional] G. Raising New Material Issue by Court at Close of Trial. A new trial may be granted on the ground of accident or surprise if the court, at the close of trial, raises a new material issue not raised by the pleadings (Lavely v. Nonemaker (1931) 212 Cal. 380, 386-387, 298 P. 976).

[Optional] H. Testimony by Own Witness Contrary to Anticipated Testimony. If a party has used reasonable diligence to ascertain what his or her witness will testify, has reasonable grounds to believe that the witness will testify to a certain state of facts, relies on the witness to do so, but the witness does not do so at trial and the case is lost in consequence, a new trial may be granted on the ground of accident or surprise (Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 736, 64 P.2d 960).

[Optional] I. Abandonment of Case by Counsel Without Notice. The complete abandonment of the case of the aggrieved party by his or her counsel without any notice or ground for anticipating the abandonment is an accident or surprise for which a new trial may be granted (Peoples F. & T. Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (1930) 104 Cal. App. 334, 336-337, 285 P. 857).

[Optional] J. Presentation by Adverse Party of Unknown and Nondiscoverable Material Evidence. The presentation by the adverse party during trial of unknown and nondiscoverable material evidence is an accident or surprise for which a new trial may be granted (Delmas v. Martin (1870) 39 Cal. 555, 556-557) .

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of accident or surprise, which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the accident or surprise could not have been guarded against with the use of ordinary prudence and how the moving party was prevented from having a fair trial.

[c] Supporting Declarations or Affidavits Required

A motion for new trial made on the ground of accident or surprise must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5].

[d] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)], see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.180 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Accident and Surprise Defined

In Kauffman v. De Mutiis (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 429, 189 P.2d 271 , plaintiffs brought an action for damages due to personal injuries suffered in an automobile collision. During trial, an eyewitness, subpoenaed by plaintiffs, failed to appear. Plaintiffs had planned to use him as a rebuttal witness. After verdict was rendered for defendant, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the sole ground of accident or surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. When the motion was granted, defendant appealed the order.

Although the Supreme Court reversed the order, it defined the terms "accident" and "surprise," stating that although not strictly synonymous, the terms have substantially the same meaning, as each is used to denote some condition or situation in which a party to a cause is unexpectedly placed, to his or her injury, without any default or negligence of his or her own, and against which ordinary prudence could not have guarded. However, when a situation arises that might constitute legal surprise, counsel cannot speculate on a favorable verdict. He or she must act at the earliest possible time for the right to a new trial on the ground of surprise. This right is waived if, when the surprise is discovered, it is not made known to the court, and no motion is made for a mistrial or continuance of the cause. In this case, since the litigant did not take prompt action when confronted by the absence of a material witness, the Court held that the trial court's granting of the motion was improper and it reversed the order granting a new trial (31 Cal. 2d 429, 432-434) .

[b] Different Result Probable on Retrial

In Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 64 P.2d 960 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendant. During trial, one of defendant's witnesses testified that a mark on the highway was of recent occurrence. Defendant expected the witness to testify that it was an old mark in order to show that it was made by defendant's car and that the car was on the proper side of the highway. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of surprise occurring at trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. When the motion was granted, plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order even though plaintiff had contended that the showing of surprise was insufficient since it was not shown that a different result was probable in the event of a new trial. The court stated that the lower court apparently believed that a different result might have been reached and that this conclusion was not wholly unfounded. In a new trial, the witness would testify as he originally stated to the attorney. Even if the witness were not called as a witness in a new trial, the court said that defendant's case would be in much better shape than it was when the witness testified against him. Although the court admitted that the witness's testimony regarding the age of the mark was a mere conclusion and would be inadmissible as evidence, the court stated that on a new trial, if objection were made, the witness could testify to the physical condition of the mark and leave it for the jury to conclude what its age might be. While the rule is that one seeking relief on the ground of surprise must show what case he or she could establish in the event of a new trial and that a different result favorable to him or her would be reached, it cannot be said in this case that the lower court manifestly abused its discretion in holding that such a showing was made. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 738-739) .

[c] Exercise of Ordinary Prudence to Guard Against Surprise or Accident

The factual and procedural background of Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 64 P.2d 960 , is discussed in [b], above. During trial, the testimony of a defense witness differed from the statement that he made originally to defense counsel. When defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise was granted, plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, even though the plaintiff maintained that defendant failed to explain why he did not exercise ordinary prudence in guarding against any surprise occurring at trial. The court stated that neither ordinary nor extraordinary prudence could have guarded against the witness's change in testimony without warning. According to affidavits on which the lower court based its action, counsel had interviewed the witness before he came into court. There was nothing from this interview or during any time prior to the delivery of the changed testimony that gave defense counsel any intimation that the witness would testify differently than he previously related. The witness claimed that he became confused on the witness stand, but whether this claim was true or not, the court stated that the net result was testimony that defendant neither expected nor could have reasonably anticipated. The court said that defendant need only show that the reason for the change is not chargeable to himself or herself, and having done so, defendant need not go further in this regard. Since defendant did show that he was in no way responsible or prepared for the actions of the witness, the court concluded that the motion for a new trial was properly granted (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 739-740) .

[d] Failure to Seek Continuance or Ask for Relief at Time of Surprise

The factual and procedural background of Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 64 P.2d 960 , is discussed in [b], above. During trial, the testimony of a defense witness differed from the statement that he originally made to defense counsel. When defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise was granted, plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order even though defendant failed to take immediate action at trial by moving for a continuance or by introducing new testimony. The court stated that the general rule was that a party surprised at trial must apply for relief at the earliest practicable moment, and in such method as to produce the least vexation, expense, and delay. A party will not be allowed to speculate on the chances of a favorable decision on other points, and if an unfavorable result is produced, that party cannot fall back on a motion for new trial on the ground of surprise (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 735) . In this case, however, the lower court held that there was nothing that counsel could have done that would have adequately met the situation. The lower court evidently felt, from its familiarity with the case, that the witness's testimony created an effect that nothing could obviate. The court of appeal noted that a continuance would probably have been futile under the circumstances and an attempt at impeachment might only have made matters worse. Furthermore, the court of appeal conceded that the trial judge was in a better position to determine whether there were any practicable steps that counsel should reasonably have been required to take at trial that would have effaced the disastrous effect of the testimony. Hence, the court of appeal concluded that it could not be said, from a complete examination of the entire record, that the lower court's conclusion was unwarranted. Therefore, the court affirmed the order (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 737) .

[e] Raising New Material Issue by Adverse Party

In Blankman v. Parsons (1925) 73 Cal. App. 218, 238 P. 728 , plaintiff brought an action against an administrator of decedent's estate to recover money allegedly loaned to the decedent. The administrator filed a cross complaint against plaintiff. During trial, defendant's counsel introduced testimony that various payments had been made to plaintiff by decedent pursuant to a grubstake agreement. However, there was nothing in defendant's cross complaint to give warning to plaintiff, who at the time of trial was in Alaska, that defendant would introduce testimony concerning the grubstake agreement. After judgment was rendered against plaintiff, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment with instructions to the trial court to grant plaintiff and cross defendant a new trial (73 Cal. App. 218, 225) . The court stated that there was nothing in the pleadings that would have given warning to plaintiff or counsel that the testimony would be introduced, and if it came as a surprise to plaintiff's counsel, justice and equity demanded that the plaintiff be given an opportunity to put forth the claim. The peculiar circumstances of this case, the plaintiff being in Alaska and the other party to the transaction being dead, coupled with the fact that much of the testimony introduced on behalf of defendant was hearsay, required a little more leniency to enable the parties to have the case decided on the merits (73 Cal. App. 218, 223) . The court concluded that the situation was squarely within the new trial provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3), on the ground of accident or surprise, and Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4), on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and that plaintiff was entitled to a new trial (73 Cal. App. 218, 225) .

[f] Raising New Material Issue by Court at Close of Trial

In Lavely v. Nonemaker (1931) 212 Cal. 380, 298 P. 976 , plaintiff father brought an action to cancel a deed on the ground of fraud and undue influence against defendant daughter. Although the pleadings in the case did not raise the issue of delivery of the deed, the trial court questioned plaintiff concerning the circumstances surrounding the execution of the deed. The court found the allegations of fraud and undue influence to be untrue, and also found that there had been no valid delivery of the deed. At the conclusion of the trial, the court permitted plaintiff to amend his complaint to conform to the proof and to allege that there was no delivery of the deed. After judgment for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial specifying, among other grounds, that it was error to allow the amendment after the evidence had been closed, and asserting surprise which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, stating that defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of surprise should have been granted in order that she might be afforded the opportunity to meet this new issue so unconsciously injected into the case by the queries of the court (212 Cal. 380, 387) . The Court said that amendments of pleadings to conform to the proof should not be allowed when they raise new issues not included in the original pleadings and on which the adverse party had no opportunity to defend (212 Cal. 380, 385) . The record failed to disclose that defendant was given an opportunity, either on the trial of the cause or at any subsequent time, to meet or rebut this new issue aimed at the validity of the deed under which she claimed title. Accordingly, the Court reversed the judgment (212 Cal. 380, 386-388) .

[g] Testimony by Own Witness Contrary to Anticipated Testimony

The factual and procedural background of Whitfield v. Debrincat (1937) 18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 64 P.2d 960 , is discussed in [b], above. During trial, defendant's witness testified differently from what was expected by defendant's attorney. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise was granted, and plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that if a party has used reasonable diligence to ascertain what his or her witness will testify to, has reasonable grounds to believe that the witness will testify to a certain state of facts, relies on his or her doing so, but the witness does not do so and the case is lost in consequence, a new trial will be granted (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 736) . In this case, defense counsel interviewed the witness before trial and anticipated that the witness would testify that a mark on the highway was an old mark in order to show that it was made by defendant's car. However, the witness testified that the mark was of recent occurrence. The court stated that there were other cases to the effect that the mere fact that the witness of a party swears contrary to the party's expectation does not furnish adequate ground for granting a new trial, but all cases agree that if the witness suddenly changes front, by collusion with the party against whom he or she is called, or fails to testify in accordance with previous assurances, by reason of any fact or occurrence for which neither the witness nor the party calling the witness is in any measure responsible, a new trial will be granted as a matter of right (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 734-735) . After examining the record in the case, the court was convinced that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order (18 Cal. App. 2d 730, 740) .

[h] Abandonment of Case by Counsel Without Notice

Peoples F. & T. Co. v. Phoenix Assur. Co. (1930) 104 Cal. App. 334, 285 P. 857 , was an action in which defendants' attorneys abandoned their case without notice to defendants who lacked knowledge that their attorneys of record were not looking after their interests. After judgment for plaintiff, defendants were granted a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. Plaintiff appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial, stating that the attorneys' conduct was a complete abandonment of the case and was an accident and surprise that defendants could not, in the exercise of ordinary prudence, have guarded against. Affidavits filed in support of the motion indicated that defendants had retained attorneys of established reputation to represent them. These attorneys had a conference with defendants' agents, had advised defendants of a good and valid defense to the action, and had filed an answer to the complaint. The notice of the time set for trial was served on the attorneys, but they failed to appear at trial, and failed to notify defendants of the date of trial, so that defendants had no notice or knowledge of the trial until long after the rendition and entry of judgment against them. The court stated that a client has a right to assume and rely on his or her attorneys of record to make the necessary appearances for the protection of that party's rights. If the attorneys abandon the client's interests without notice or any ground for anticipating the abandonment, the abandonment will constitute accident or surprise for which a new trial will be granted (104 Cal. App. 334, 336-337) . Therefore, the court affirmed the lower court's granting of defendants' motion for a new trial (104 Cal. App. 334, 340) .

[i] Presentation by Adverse Party of Unknown and Nondiscoverable Material Evidence

In Delmas v. Martin (1870) 39 Cal. 555 , plaintiff brought an action to recover certain land that plaintiff claimed had been conveyed to him by deed. During trial, plaintiff introduced an unrecorded deed that conveyed the land to plaintiff a few days prior to trial. After a verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on several grounds, including the ground of accident and surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. Defendants claimed that they had been surprised by the production of the deed to plaintiff at trial and were unable to call a certain rebuttal witness who lived a considerable distance from the place of trial. When defendants' motion was denied, they appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial, stating that surprise was sufficiently established and a new trial should have been granted on that ground. Defendants had no reason to infer that the grantor would have made this conveyance to plaintiff. Furthermore, the Court found that defendants were not guilty of laches and rejected plaintiff's contention that defendants had not come to trial prepared with adequate proof of title, since the deed was not recorded but produced at trial from the custody of plaintiff (39 Cal. 555, 556-557) . Even though defendants did not move for a continuance at trial, the Court relaxed the general rule that a party surprised at trial must apply for relief at the earliest practicable moment. In this case, the deed presented by plaintiff was the last evidence offered at trial, and the trial court immediately proceeded to charge the jury. The Court stated that it perceived nothing in the record to justify the belief that defendants and their counsel did not act in good faith in omitting to apply for a continuance, and it was satisfied that defendants were surprised within the meaning of the statute. Therefore, the Court reversed the judgment and ordered a new trial (39 Cal. 555, 557-558) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Seek Continuance or Ask for Relief at Time of Surprise

The factual and procedural background of Delmas v. Martin (1870) 39 Cal. 555 , is discussed in [I], above. Even though defendants did not move for a continuance when surprised at trial, under the circumstances of the case, the Supreme Court relaxed the general rule that a party surprised at trial must apply for relief at the earliest practicable moment. The Court stated that it perceived nothing in the record to justify the belief that defendants did not act in good faith and that it was satisfied that defendants were surprised within the meaning of the statute (39 Cal. 555, 557-558) .

[b] Testimony by Own Witness Contrary to Anticipated Testimony

Rodriguez v. Comstock (1864) 24 Cal. 85 , was an action for ejectment in which the Supreme Court reversed judgment for plaintiffs and ordered a new trial for defendants. During trial, defendants were surprised by the testimony of their own witness who testified differently from how he previously stated that he would testify. The Court stated that if a witness suddenly changes his testimony, by collusion with the party against whom he is called, or fails to testify in accordance with his or her previous assurances, by reason of any fact or occurrence for which neither the party calling the witness nor the witness is responsible, a new trial will be granted as a matter of right (24 Cal. 85, 89) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE DENIED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FAILED TO EXERCISE ORDINARY PRUDENCE TO GUARD AGAINST THE ACCIDENT OR SURPRISE AT TRIAL.

A. Court's Suspicion of Ground. The courts have traditionally looked on the granting of a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise with suspicion, and a motion on this ground is seldom successful (Fletcher v. Pierceall (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 859, 866, 304 P.2d 770).

B. Failure to Exercise Ordinary Prudence. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of accident or surprise if ordinary prudence could have guarded against and prevented the surprise and the moving party was negligent under the circumstances (see Wade v. De Bernardi (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 967, 971-972, 84 Cal. Rptr. 817).

[Optional] C. Testimony by Witness Contrary to Anticipated Testimony. While a trial court may grant a motion for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise when it appears that a party is misled by a witness as to the evidence expected from that party, or is unexpectedly presented with claimed perjured testimony, the court is not compelled to grant the motion when the evidence related to an issue that is obviously within the issues to be tried (Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 206, 250 P.2d 166).

[Optional] D. Absence of Material Witness. The absence of a material witness does not warrant the granting of a new trial on the ground of surprise, since the parties are bound to use reasonable diligence in endeavoring to procure the attendance of witnesses, and, in the case of their nonappearance, to move for a continuance (see Kauffman v. De Mutiis (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 429, 432-433, 189 P.2d 271 ; Baker v. Berreman (1943) 61 Cal. App. 2d 235, 237-238, 142 P.2d

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. It may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.170.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of how the accident or surprise could have been guarded against if the moving party had used ordinary prudence.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Court's Suspicion of Ground

In Fletcher v. Pierceall (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 859, 304 P.2d 770 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for personal injuries sustained when the car in which plaintiff was riding as a guest was hit from the rear by a car driven by defendant. During trial, a witness for defendant testified that there were certain signs posted on the freeway where the accident occurred. After the witness had testified, however, he discovered that the area was not signposted on the day of the accident. After verdict was rendered for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of surprise and newly discovered evidence. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed, stating that from a very early date the courts have held that surprise, as a ground for a motion for a new trial, should be looked on with suspicion [relying on Schellhous v. Ball (1866) 29 Cal. 605] . A motion on this ground is seldom successful because the moving party must make a showing of injury, a showing of diligence, and a showing that he or she did not unduly delay in seeking redress. In this case, the court stated that plaintiff did not exercise reasonable diligence that would require a reversal of the order denying a new trial. Reasonable diligence would seem to have required that the attorney, before trial, should have investigated whether the highway was or was not signposted. Thus, the court affirmed the judgment (146 Cal. App. 2d 859, 865-867) .

[b] Failure to Exercise Ordinary Prudence

In Wade v. De Bernardi (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 967, 84 Cal. Rptr. 817 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death and personal injuries arising out of an automobile accident with defendants. Defendants filed a cross complaint. During trial, plaintiffs' expert testified adversely regarding the speed of the two vehicles at the time of the accident. After a verdict was rendered for defendants on the complaint, and in favor of plaintiffs on the cross complaint, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise was granted [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. Defendants appealed from the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that surprise as a ground for a new trial denotes some condition or situation in which a party to an action is unexpectedly placed to his or her detriment. The condition or situation must have been such that ordinary prudence on the part of the person claiming surprise could not have guarded against and prevented it. Such party must not have been negligent in the circumstances. In this case, the court stated that the plaintiffs failed to exercise due diligence to protect themselves against potentially adverse testimony from the expert witness. The declarations in support of and in opposition to the granting of the motions showed that the witness was employed by the plaintiffs on May 14, 1968, to give expert testimony at trial on July 31, 1968. No reports were rendered by the witness, nor was contact made with him, until the afternoon of the last day of trial, at which time a brief oral interview was accomplished. No estimate of the speed of plaintiffs' vehicle was ever solicited prior to trial. There was no evidence in the record to suggest that plaintiffs sought a pretrial interview with their other expert, an officer of the highway patrol, who they then declared had evidence favorable to them on this issue. Since it was apparent to the court that the plaintiffs had no justification whatsoever for expecting favorable testimony from the expert witness, the court reversed the order granting plaintiffs a new trial (4 Cal. App. 3d 967, 971-972) .

[c] Testimony by Witness Contrary to Anticipated Testimony

In Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 250 P.2d 166 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when he allegedly slipped on defendants' cafe floor. Defendants claimed that plaintiff's injury was caused when the screwdriver he was using slipped upward into his eye. During trial, defendants produced a screwdriver that allegedly was not the screwdriver that plaintiff had used at the time of the accident. After a verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of newly discovered evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)] and accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. Plaintiff's counsel claimed that he learned of the testimony of additional witnesses after trial and that he did not know of the existence of the screwdriver. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, stating that while a trial court may grant a motion for a new trial on the ground of accident and surprise when it appears that a party is misled by a witness as to the evidence expected from him or her, or is unexpectedly presented with claimed perjured testimony, the court is not compelled to grant the motion when the evidence relates to an issue that is obviously within the issues to be tried. The surprise must be the result of some fact or circumstance occurring at trial that could not reasonably have been anticipated and is of such importance or magnitude in its influence on the result at trial as to have produced injury or damage to the rights of the moving party (114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 206) . The court stated that the mere giving of testimony contrary to the interests of a party, or even the fact that false testimony has thus been given, although wholly unexpected by that party, will not always operate as a predicate for the awarding of a new trial on that issue (114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 206-207) . In examining the facts of this case, the court stated that it is not certain that the proffered testimony would be of such a nature that, if accepted, a different result would have been reached by the jury. Furthermore, the plaintiff did not claim at trial that he was surprised by the production of the screwdriver, nor did he request a continuance to secure opposing evidence. Under these circumstances, the court stated that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in denying the motion for a new trial (114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 207) .

[d] Absence of Material Witness

The factual and procedural background of Kauffman v. De Mutiis (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 429, 189 P.2d 271 , is discussed in § 155.170[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed an order granting plaintiffs a new trial, stating that when a situation arises that might constitute legal surprise, counsel must act at the earliest possible moment, since the right to a new trial on the ground of surprise is waived if, when the surprise is discovered, it is not made known to the court, and no motion is made for a mistrial or continuance of the cause. Although plaintiffs conceded that a litigant must take prompt action when he or she is confronted by the absence of a material witness, the Court disagreed with their contention that they were excused from asking for a continuance because they did not have time for deliberation as to the effect of not calling the witness. In this case, the Court said that plaintiffs and their counsel knew that the witness would not be able to attend before they commenced the presentation of rebuttal evidence. Defendant's attorney suggested a continuance so that the witness might testify, but opposing counsel stated that he did not intend to have the case continued and that if anything went wrong he would move for a new trial. The Court held that this amounted to an express statement that counsel intended to speculate on a favorable verdict. The Court felt that plaintiffs were disappointed rather than surprised. Accordingly, the Court reversed the order granting a new trial (31 Cal. 2d 429, 432-434) .

In Baker v. Berreman (1943) 61 Cal. App. 2d 235, 142 P.2d 448 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death caused by an automobile accident. An eyewitness to the accident agreed to testify at trial; however, two days prior to trial, he informed plaintiffs that he could not appear at trial because he had been inducted into the army and the outbreak of war made it impossible for him to attend. After judgment for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds, including the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. When the motion was granted, defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that the absence of a witness does not warrant the granting of a new trial on the ground of surprise, since the parties are bound to use reasonable diligence in endeavoring to procure the attendance of witnesses, and, in the case of their nonappearance, to move for a continuance. The court stated that here the record shows that the witness had never been subpoenaed, nor had any attempt been made to take his deposition, although up to two days prior to the trial plaintiffs were given ample opportunity to do so. Furthermore, two days prior to the commencement of trial, the witness notified plaintiffs that he would not be able to attend, and plaintiffs did not request a continuance, nor did they at any time intimate to the court or opposing counsel that they had suffered any accident or surprise because of the absence of any witness (61 Cal. App. 2d 235, 237-238) . Since there was a lack of diligence in failing to procure the deposition of the witness, and a failure to bring the matter to the attention of the court, the court concluded that the lower court's order granting plaintiffs a new trial was not sustainable (61 Cal. App. 2d 235, 240-246) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Exercise Ordinary Prudence

In In re Marriage of Liu (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 143, 242 Cal. Rptr. 649 , the court of appeal held that a wife's motion for a new trial in an annulment action was properly denied. In considering the merits of her motion, it held that she could not obtain a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise that ordinary prudence would not have guarded against. She claimed that the negligence of her own attorney created an accident or surprise that she could not have guarded against because of her limited knowledge of English and lack of familiarity with American culture. However, it is established that trial counsel's negligence is not a ground on which a new trial may be granted (197 Cal. App. 3d 143, 154-155) .

The factual and procedural background of Fletcher v. Pierceall (1956) 146 Cal. App. 2d 859, 304 P.2d 770 , is discussed in [3][a], above. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendant, finding that the trial court's denial of plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper. The court stated that plaintiff did not sufficiently exercise reasonable diligence in the case. Reasonable diligence would have required plaintiff's attorney to make an investigation of whether or not the highway was signposted at the time of the accident so that plaintiff would not have been surprised by the witness's testimony (146 Cal. App. 2d 859, 865-867) .

The factual and procedural background of Baker v. Berreman (1943) 61 Cal. App. 2d 235, 142 P.2d 448 , is discussed in [3][d], above. The court of appeal reversed an order granting plaintiffs a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise. Although one of plaintiffs' material witnesses failed to appear at trial, the court stated that there was a lack of diligence in failing to procure the testimony of the witness. In this case, plaintiffs knew for two and one-half months before trial that the witness had been inducted into the army and might be transferred at any time. Plaintiffs failed, however, to procure the deposition of the witness. Therefore, the court reversed the order (61 Cal. App. 2d 235, 239-240) .

[b] Testimony by Witness Contrary to Anticipated Testimony

Rudin v. Luman (1921) 53 Cal. App. 212, 199 P. 874 , was an action to recover the rental value of property in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs, finding that an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was proper. During trial, one of plaintiffs' witnesses testified differently from what was expected. The court stated that the mere giving of testimony contrary to the interests of the party, or even the fact that false testimony has been given, will not always operate as a predicate for awarding a new trial. Furthermore, no grounds exist for the granting of a new trial on the basis of surprise when the alleged surprise is clearly within the issues presented by the pleadings (53 Cal. App. 212, 220-221) .

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Failure to Show Different Result Probable on Retrial

The factual and procedural background of Wade v. De Bernardi (1970) 4 Cal. App. 3d 967, 84 Cal. Rptr. 817 , is discussed in § 155.180[3][b]. After plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was granted on the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)], defendants appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that even if the surprise was in no way attributable to plaintiffs' lack of diligence in investigation, it afforded no grounds for granting plaintiffs a new trial because there was no showing that plaintiffs will have other evidence that could produce a different result on retrial. Although plaintiffs indicated that, on retrial, they planned to introduce the testimony of a highway patrol officer regarding the speed of plaintiffs' car, they made no effort to demonstrate that they had other evidence on the speed of the defendant's car or that their expert witness would change his adverse testimony. The court said that even assuming that plaintiffs will merely delete the testimony of the expert witness on this point at the new trial, the court did not believe that it was reasonably possible that a different result would be forthcoming. Plaintiffs had not shown that this testimony was a material influence on the jury. They made no effort to show that the testimony substantially affected the jurors and, therefore, that a different verdict could reasonably be expected if this testimony were omitted. Under these circumstances, the court concluded that the surprise was not a sufficient basis for granting a new trial (4 Cal. App. 3d 967, 972-973) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Failure to Show Different Result Probable on Retrial

Wilson v. Kopp (1952) 114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 250 P.2d 166 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, noting that the order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper. Plaintiff's attorney averred that he did not learn of the identity or testimony of three witnesses until after the date of trial and that he did not know of the existence of a certain item produced in evidence until after defendants had produced it at trial. The court stated that it was not certain that the proffered evidence was of such a nature that, if accepted, a different result would have been reached by the jury. Thus, the court affirmed the judgment (114 Cal. App. 2d 198, 207) .

McNary v. Hanley (1933) 131 Cal. App. 188, 20 P.2d 966 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff, noting that the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of accident or surprise was proper. During trial, certain witnesses testified contrary to their written statements made prior to trial. The court stated that defendant must show facts that establish that he can produce a different result on retrial. Since the witnesses were confronted with their inconsistent statement while on the witness stand and the jury weighed the worth of their testimony in light of these inconsistencies, there was no showing that a new trial would change the result in the case. Therefore, the court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff (131 Cal. App. 188, 190) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] FAILED TO TAKE ACTION AT TRIAL WHEN THE ACCIDENT OR SURPRISE WAS DISCOVERED; HENCE, HE/SHE/IT HAS WAIVED THE GROUND ON A SUBSEQUENT MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL.

A. Court's Suspicion of Ground. [See § 155.180[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Waiver of Ground If No Immediate Action. When a situation arises that might constitute legal surprise, counsel cannot speculate on a favorable verdict, but must act at the earliest possible moment, since the right to a new trial on the ground of surprise is waived if, when the surprise is discovered, it is not made known to the court, and no motion is made for a mistrial or a continuance of the cause (Kauffman v. De Mutiis (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 429, 432, 189 P.2d 271).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of accident or surprise [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(3)]. It may, in an appropriate case, be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.170.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the moving party's failure to take action during trial when the accident or surprise was discovered and should argue that this failure to take action constituted a waiver of the ground.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Waiver of Ground If No Immediate Action

The factual and procedural background of Kauffman v. De Mutiis (1948) 31 Cal. 2d 429, 189 P.2d 271 , is discussed in § 155.170[3][a]. The Supreme Court reversed an order granting plaintiffs a new trial, stating that when a situation arises that might constitute legal surprise, counsel cannot speculate on a favorable verdict. He or she must act at the earliest possible time because the right to a new trial on the ground of surprise is waived if, when the surprise is discovered, it is not made known to the court, and no motion is made for a mistrial or continuance of the cause. In this case, since the litigant did not take prompt action when confronted by the absence of a material witness, the Court held that the trial court's granting of the motion was improper, and it reversed the order granting the new trial (31 Cal. 2d 429, 432-434) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Waiver of Ground If No Immediate Action

McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 , was an action for breach of an escrow agreement in which the court of appeal reversed a judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict and an order granting defendants a new trial in the alternative. When a situation arose that might have constituted legal surprise, defendants' counsel did not claim surprise and move for a continuance, ask to reopen the case and produce further evidence, or move for a mistrial. The court stated that the right to a new trial on the ground of surprise is waived if, when the surprise is discovered, it is not made known to the court and no motion for a mistrial or continuance is made. Since there was no timely claim of surprise in this case, the court held that the granting of a new trial on this ground was error (8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228) .

§ 155.190 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Newly Discovered Evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)]

[Caption. See § 155.50[1].]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE IS NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE THAT IS MATERIAL FOR _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], WHICH HE/SHE/IT COULD NOT, WITH REASONABLE DILIGENCE, HAVE PRODUCED AT TRIAL; THUS, THE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAVE BEEN MATERIALLY AFFECTED.

A. New Trial on Ground of Newly Discovered Evidence. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of newly discovered evidence, material for the party making the application, which he or she could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at trial, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)).

B. Requirements for Granting of Motion. In order for a trial court to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must satisfactorily appear that reasonable diligence was used to discover and produce the evidence at trial; that the newly discovered evidence is not merely cumulative; and that it may be reasonably inferred that the result of the trial would have been different if the newly discovered evidence had been presented at trial (Cahill v. E.B. & A.L. Stone Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 126, 133, 138 P. 712 ; see Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 909-910, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888).

C. Newly Discovered Evidence. Evidence is newly discovered if it was not available at the time of trial and could not have been discovered with reasonable diligence (see Andersen v. Howland (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 384, 83 Cal. Rptr. 308 ; Dasso v. Bradbury (1940) 39 Cal. App. 2d 712, 717, 104 P.2d 128).

D. Reasonable Diligence. Reasonable diligence is exercised when the moving party has made every reasonable effort to produce the new evidence before the case was submitted to the jury and no grounds for estoppel appear (Celli v. French (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603, 237 P.2d 536).

E. Materiality. A new trial is proper on the ground of newly discovered evidence if the evidence is material to the issues and of so important a character as to render a different result probable on retrial (Oberlander v. Fixen & Co. (1900) 129 Cal. 690, 691, 62 P. 254 ; Brannock v. Bromley (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 520, 86 P.2d 1062).

[Optional] F. Cumulative Evidence Showing Different Result Probable. Even if the newly discovered evidence is cumulative, a new trial may be granted if that evidence renders a different result probable on retrial (Cahill v. E.B. & A.L. Stone Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 126, 135, 138 P. 712).

[Optional] G. Failure to Move for Continuance. When the moving party does not know the nature or materiality of the newly discovered evidence, and the procurement of a continuance would have been impossible, it is not a lack of due diligence to fail to ask for a continuance (Andersen v. Howland (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 383, 83 Cal. Rptr. 308).

[Optional] H. Newly Discovered Witness. A new trial may be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence when the moving party, after resting his or her case, discovers a new witness whose testimony may clarify the situation and might affect the outcome of the case (see Celli v. French (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 602, 237 P.2d 536).

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, material for the party making the application, which he or she could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced at trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show that the evidence is newly discovered, that reasonable diligence has been exercised in its discovery and production, and that the evidence is material to the moving party's case [see Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 909-910, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888] .

[c] Supporting Declarations or Affidavits Required

A motion for new trial made on the ground of newly discovered evidence must be supported by declarations or affidavits [Code Civ. Proc. § 658; see Code Civ. Proc. § 2015.5]. In order to sufficiently show that the moving party exercised reasonable diligence, the affidavit or declaration should specifically enumerate facts that show the steps taken by the moving party or counsel to find the newly discovered evidence in time for trial [see Brannock v. Bromley (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 522, 86 P.2d 1062] .

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.200 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Granting of Motion

In Cahill v. E.B. & A.L. Stone Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 126, 138 P. 712 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when his foot was caught under the wheels of a railroad car. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained, but on appeal the judgment was reversed, and the case was then set for trial seven years after the accident had occurred. Defendant, relying on the assurance of counsel that the judgment would be affirmed on appeal, made no attempt to preserve evidence, but routinely destroyed the old records containing the names of the employees present at the time and place of the accident. At trial, defendant could only ascertain the names of two employees, but it later learned of other employees who could give material testimony. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff, defendant's motion for a new trial was granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that in order for a trial court to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, it must satisfactorily appear, among other things, that reasonable diligence was used to discover and produce the evidence at the former trial; that the newly discovered evidence was not merely cumulative; and that it may be reasonably inferred that the result of the trial would have been different if the newly discovered evidence had been presented at trial (167 Cal. 126, 133) . The Court found that the defendant exercised reasonable diligence in the discovery and the production of the evidence, since it appeared that representatives of the defendant were working to secure the evidence on its behalf for several weeks prior to trial and that there was no source of information that indicated the identity of the newly discovered witnesses (167 Cal. 126, 134) . Furthermore, the Court chose not to disturb the trial court's determination that even though the evidence may have been cumulative, it might have produced a different result had it been introduced at trial (167 Cal. 126, 135) . Accordingly, the Court affirmed the order granting a new trial (167 Cal. 126, 141) .

In Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death of their son in an automobile accident with defendant. On July 20, 1965, plaintiffs received a letter from a Mr. Andrus in which he stated that he and his wife arrived on the scene and heard defendant say "he didn't know what had happened but thought the other car swerved in front of him, although he couldn't say for sure." On February 2, 1968, plaintiffs' attorney attempted to have Andrus served with a subpoena for attendance in court on February 5; on February 5, counsel was informed that Andrus had moved and could not be located; on February 7, an investigator reported that Andrus had been located, but by that time the case had gone to the jury. After verdict was rendered for defendant, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds, including newly discovered evidence and insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. When the motion was granted on both grounds, defendant appealed the order granting the new trial.

Although the court of appeal reversed the order granting the motion, it reiterated the essential elements that must be established for the granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. These elements are that the evidence must be newly discovered, that reasonable diligence has been exercised in its discovery and production, and that the evidence is material to the movant's case. In this case, the court felt that the declaration by plaintiffs' counsel was fatally deficient in material respects. The evidence was not newly discovered since the plaintiffs had the letter from Andrus two and one-half years before trial, there was no showing of due diligence in the production of the evidence, and the evidence was not shown to have been material to the movants' case. Accordingly, the court reversed the order (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 910) .

[b] Newly Discovered Evidence

In Andersen v. Howland (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 83 Cal. Rptr. 308 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained when her car was struck from behind by defendant's car. During trial, plaintiff's treating doctor testified regarding the whiplash injury to her neck. A radiologist, who had not yet testified, discovered a previously undiagnosed fracture of plaintiff's cervical vertebra. However, the radiologist did not testify regarding the existence of the fracture at trial. Plaintiff's treating physician had left the jurisdiction and could not be immediately brought back to court to testify concerning the significance of the discovery. After verdict was rendered for plaintiff in the amount of $2,800, plaintiff was denied a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and she appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, stating that the evidence was newly discovered within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4). The court said that the new evidence was not the discovery of the fracture by the radiologist; it was the later-developed opinion of the treating physician that further painful and disabling arthritis would be suffered. The opinion of a qualified expert was itself evidence, though it was partly based on other evidence such as x-ray pictures already put before the jury. The new opinion was highly material evidence; it did not exist at the time of trial, but was newly discovered when it was communicated to counsel after the treating physician had completed a reexamination of plaintiff. Furthermore, the court deferred to the trial court's finding that plaintiff was not guilty of a lack of due diligence in the case. Accordingly, the court reversed the judgment (3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 384-385) .

In Dasso v. Bradbury (1940) 39 Cal. App. 2d 712, 104 P.2d 128 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries suffered when an automobile that one plaintiff was driving was struck by an automobile owned by defendants but operated by their chauffeur. At the time of the accident, neither defendant was riding in the car, and defendants denied that the chauffeur was acting within the scope and course of his employment and authority. After judgment was rendered for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a new trial on several grounds, including the ground of newly discovered evidence. Plaintiffs claimed that they had located a witness who had new evidence showing that defendant told her chauffeur to get gasoline when the accident occurred. When the motion was granted, defendants appealed the order, contending that plaintiffs failed to show that the evidence was newly discovered and that it could not with reasonable diligence have been discovered and produced at trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, holding that the evidence was newly discovered and that plaintiffs had exercised reasonable effort to discover and produce it at trial. The court stated that a party who relies on the ground of newly discovered evidence must have made a reasonable effort to produce all the evidence at trial, and that party will not be allowed a new trial for the purpose of introducing evidence known and obtainable at trial, or which would have been known if he or she simply had exercised reasonable effort to discover and present it. In this case, the court felt that plaintiffs did not lack diligence in attempting to produce the evidence at trial. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order (39 Cal. App. 2d 712, 717-718) .

[c] Reasonable Diligence

In Celli v. French (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 237 P.2d 536 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries when he was struck by defendant's automobile. The main question at trial was whether or not defendant had been traveling on the wrong side of the street. None of plaintiff's witnesses were able to testify to this matter. After verdict was rendered in favor of the defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Plaintiff claimed that he had discovered a new witness that could clarify this situation. When the motion was granted, defendant appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that every reasonable effort was made to produce the new evidence before the case was submitted to the jury and no grounds for estoppel appeared. Plaintiff's counsel made a considerable effort for several months to discover any witnesses who might know facts material to the case by interviewing all of the neighbors near the scene of the accident. He had gone twice to the house sometimes occupied by the new witness, finding it closed and unoccupied, and no one had told him that the witness was present at the scene of the accident. There was no evidence of anything that could reasonably be expected to have indicated to the plaintiff that this new witness had been present at the scene, or that she knew of any facts that were material to the action that was pending. Furthermore, plaintiff was not estopped from seeking a new trial since he did not request a continuance. He acted as soon as the new evidence became known and before the close of trial, trying to have the case reopened and offering to pay the expense of bringing defendant back from Oregon. When his requests were denied, he made a timely motion for a new trial. Accordingly, the court held that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in making the order (107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603) .

[d] Materiality

In Oberlander v. Fixen & Co. (1900) 129 Cal. 690, 62 P. 254 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when she fell down a staircase leading to defendant's storeroom. After judgment was rendered for plaintiff, defendant was granted a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Plaintiff appealed the order, claiming, in part, that defendant lacked diligence in preparing for trial, and that the newly discovered evidence was merely cumulative.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that the newly discovered evidence had to be material for the party making the application, or it must materially affect the substantial rights of the moving party. The Court said that this requisite seemed to imply that the newly discovered evidence should be of such a character as to render a different result probable on a new trial. A new trial should not be granted when the evidence is merely cumulative unless it is clear that such evidence would change the result. In this case, the Court felt that the trial judge could best determine whether or not the evidence, although possibly cumulative, was sufficiently strong to render a different result possible (129 Cal. 690, 691-692) . A trial judge's discretion will not be interfered with except in cases of manifest abuse. Since the trial judge determined that the evidence was of a character that would probably affect the result on a new trial and the Court was not convinced to a certainty that such a determination was wrong, the Court did not disturb the finding (129 Cal. 690, 691-692) .

In Brannock v. Bromley (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 86 P.2d 1062 , plaintiffs, husband and wife, brought an action against defendants for personal injuries arising out of an automobile accident in which wife, a pedestrian, was admittedly struck by an automobile driven by one defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of defendants since it found that both plaintiffs and defendants were guilty of negligence. Plaintiffs moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and in support of the motion, they filed an affidavit of an eyewitness who stated that defendants' car was traveling no less than 45 miles per hour and that the car swerved off the highway and struck plaintiff wife even though she had already crossed the road. When plaintiffs' motion was granted, defendants appealed the order, claiming that the newly discovered evidence was cumulative and that there was no reasonable probability that the result of a retrial would be different.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the newly discovered evidence must be material to the issues and of so important a character as to satisfy the court that it may reasonably be inferred that the verdict would have been different if the newly discovered evidence had been introduced at the former trial. In this case, there was no direct evidence regarding the speed of defendant's automobile. The newly discovered evidence showed the speed of the automobile to have been excessive, and this affected the issue of contributory negligence of plaintiff. If the jury should find that the car was actually going 45 miles per hour, it might reasonably find that plaintiff could have crossed in safety. Furthermore, the newly discovered witness was the only disinterested witness to the accident. Since there was a doubt as to whether or not the evidence was cumulative, the court of appeal decided to defer to the finding of the trial court unless there had been a manifest abuse of discretion. Since no abuse of discretion appeared, the court decided not to interfere (30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 520-521) . After examining the record, the court also held that plaintiffs showed due diligence in seeking to produce the testimony at trial, and it accordingly affirmed the order (30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 521-524) .

[e] Cumulative Evidence Showing Different Result Probable

The factual and procedural background of Cahill v. E.B. & A.L. Stone Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 126, 138 P. 712 , is discussed in [a], above. The Supreme Court affirmed an order granting defendant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, stating that even if the newly discovered evidence is merely cumulative, the court is not precluded from granting a new trial. When the newly discovered evidence is cumulative, the question before the trial court is whether the newly discovered evidence would probably have produced a different result if it had been presented at trial. The determination of that question is peculiarly within the province of the trial court, and its discretion will not be reviewed except for manifest abuse. In this case, the trial court determined that if the newly discovered evidence had been presented to the jury, they may have rendered a different result, and the court of appeal chose not to disturb that determination (167 Cal. 126, 135) . After the court concluded that defendant did not lack due diligence in seeking to produce this information at trial, it affirmed the order granting the motion (167 Cal. 126, 135-141) .

[f] Failure to Move for Continuance

The factual and procedural background of Andersen v. Howland (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 83 Cal. Rptr. 308 , is discussed in [b], above. After verdict was returned for plaintiff in the amount of $2,800, plaintiff was denied a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, and she appealed the judgment. Plaintiff claimed that a newly formed expert opinion was sufficient to support an order granting a new trial.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, stating that the evidence was newly discovered within the meaning of the statute [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)]. On appeal, defendant contended that plaintiff was not diligent since she failed to ask for a continuance at trial. The court acknowledged that when a party knows of an important witness and the materiality of his or her testimony, but is unable to produce the witness at trial, due diligence normally requires the party to move for a continuance. His or her failure to seek a continuance justifies the denial of a subsequent motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. In this case, however, the newly discovered evidence did not exist at the time of trial, and the facts that indicated that newly discovered evidence might be forthcoming did not permit counsel to show the nature or materiality of the evidence, so that counsel could have successfully moved for a continuance (3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 383-384) . In denying the motion in the trial court, the judge expressly stated his determination that there was no lack of diligence in the case, but he felt that a change of professional opinion after the date of trial is not a ground for new trial. The court of appeal, on the other hand, felt that a newly formed expert opinion was sufficient to support an order granting a new trial as a matter of law. Because it noted that there was no lack of due diligence in the case, the court of appeal reversed the judgment (3 Cal. App. 3d 380, 384-385) .

[g] Newly Discovered Witness

The factual and procedural background of Celli v. French (1951) 107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 237 P.2d 536 , is discussed in [c], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The court stated that the newly discovered witness could offer evidence that would naturally clarify a puzzling situation and might well affect the result of trial. The new witness viewed a very material element of the situation from a different angle than that of any of the other witnesses. The court stated that it appeared, without dispute, that the identity of this new witness, and the fact that she had been present and seen certain things, was not known to plaintiff or counsel until after the taking of evidence was completed. The court concluded that the evidence in question was sufficient to constitute newly discovered evidence within the meaning of the established rules (107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 602) . Accordingly, the court affirmed the order granting plaintiff a new trial (107 Cal. App. 2d 599, 603) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Reasonable Diligence

The factual and procedural background of Brannock v. Bromley (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 86 P.2d 1062 , is discussed in [3][d], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, stating that there was a sufficient showing of diligence under the circumstances. Plaintiffs diligently searched for witnesses who might have seen the accident in question, and it was not until after trial that a witness informed plaintiffs that he had seen the accident. The court added that although there is no hard-and-fast rule to the effect that each step taken by the moving party in searching for witnesses must be detailed in a meticulous manner, it is the better practice to specifically enumerate such facts (30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 522) .

[b] Cumulative Evidence Showing Different Result Probable

The factual and procedural background of Brannock v. Bromley (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 86 P.2d 1062 , is discussed in [3][d] and in [a], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial, stating that the newly discovered evidence must be material to the issues, and of so important a character as to satisfy the court that it may reasonably be inferred that the verdict would have been different if the newly discovered evidence had been introduced at trial. However, the court added that a new trial should not be refused for the reason that the evidence is cumulative, if the cumulation is sufficiently strong to render a different result probable (30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 520) .

[c] Failure to Move for Continuance

MacKenzie v. Angle (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 254, 186 P.2d 30 , was an action for damages for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. During the trial, plaintiff failed to move for a continuance in order to produce a certain witness. The court stated that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting plaintiff a new trial because the trial court was in the best position to determine whether it would have granted a continuance, if requested, in light of the fact that plaintiff did not know the exact nature of the witness's testimony, may not have been able to show that he could produce the witness at a subsequent time, and could not have offered any statement as to the witness's testimony to which defendant would have stipulated (82 Cal. App. 2d 254, 262) .

[d] Newly Discovered Witness

The factual and procedural background of MacKenzie v. Angle (1947) 82 Cal. App. 2d 254, 186 P.2d 30 , is discussed in [c], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence since plaintiff discovered after trial a material witness who saw the accident in question. The court concluded that the materiality of the witness's testimony was not known to plaintiff or his attorneys. Though it was believed that the witness would be able to shed light on the situation, it was not known how he would testify until after trial (82 Cal. App. 2d 254, 259) .

The factual and procedural background of Brannock v. Bromley (1939) 30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 86 P.2d 1062 , is discussed in [3][d], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiffs' motion for a new trial since plaintiffs discovered an additional witness who would be the only disinterested witness to the accident in question. This additional witness, discovered after trial, also would be able to offer testimony regarding the speed of defendant's vehicle when it struck plaintiff. Since there was a question as to whether or not this newly discovered evidence would render a different result probable on retrial, the court of appeal decided to defer to the finding of the trial court, and it affirmed the granting of the motion (30 Cal. App. 2d 516, 521) .

Laverne v. Dold (1936) 17 Cal. App. 2d 180, 61 P.2d 497 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and newly discovered evidence. After trial, a new witness was discovered who claimed to have seen the automobile accident from a different angle than the other witnesses, and who would have testified to the position of the cars and the speed of each. After examining the affidavits in support of the motion, the court concluded that the evidence of the missing witness justified the granting of a new trial (17 Cal. App. 2d 180, 183-184) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE CLAIMED TO HAVE BEEN NEWLY DISCOVERED WAS KNOWN TO _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] _____ [BEFORE TRIAL and/or AT THE TIME OF TRIAL].

A. Requirements for Granting of Motion. The court should not grant a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence unless the moving party establishes (1) that the evidence is newly discovered, (2) that reasonable diligence has been exercised in its discovery and production, and (3) that the evidence is material to the moving party's case (Wood v. Jamison (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 ; Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 909-910, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888).

B. Distrust and Disfavor of Courts. The claim of newly discovered evidence as a ground for new trial is uniformly looked on by the courts with distrust and disfavor; public policy requires a litigant to exhaust every reasonable effort to produce at trial all existing evidence in his or her behalf (Estate of Shepard (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 76, 34 Cal. Rptr. 212).

C. Evidence Not Newly Discovered. A new trial will not be granted on the ground of newly discovered evidence if the evidence claimed to have been newly discovered is known to the moving party before or at the time of trial (Broads v. Mead and Cook (1911) 159 Cal. 765, 768, 116 P. 46 ; Hayutin v. Weintraub (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 497, 512, 24 Cal. Rptr. 761).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)]. In an appropriate case, it may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.190.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the moving party's knowledge of the evidence either before or during trial to show that the evidence was not newly discovered.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Requirements for Granting of Motion

Wood v. Jamison (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 , involved legal malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty claims arising from a questionable investment deal where the attorney seemingly represented the plaintiff and the other parties. The losing defendant sought a new trial based on an alleged newly discovered contract between the parties disclosing to the plaintiff that the defendant did not represent her and that she agreed to have independent counsel review the deal. The defendant claimed he received a copy of the agreement in the mail, approximately seven months after trial, from an anonymous source. The trial court denied the motion, stating that the agreement was not material to the case.

The court of appeal refused to make an independent determination as to whether the newly discovered contract was material. The court of appeal held that it need not make an independent determination as to materiality after a bench trial. Unlike a jury trial, a bench trial involves no conjecture as to what the trier of fact may find material [167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161]. As to the merits of the defendant's argument, the court of appeal held that the new evidence was not compelling. It came from an unknown source and there was no evidence as to the circumstances of its making. There was no showing the plaintiff had received any legal advice about conflict of interest. In addition, the court held that the defendant's actions belied the statements in the agreement that he did not represent the plaintiff [167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161].

The factual and procedural background of Schultz v. Mathias (1970) 3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 83 Cal. Rptr. 888 , is discussed in § 155.190[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed the order granting plaintiffs a new trial on the grounds of newly discovered evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)] and insufficiency of the evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. It stated that the essential elements that must be established for the granting of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence are (1) that the evidence is newly discovered (2) that reasonable diligence has been exercised in its discovery and production and (3) that the evidence is material to the movant's case (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 909-910) . In this case, the court stated that the evidence was not newly discovered since the plaintiffs had a letter from the newly discovered witness more than two and one-half years prior to trial, that there was no showing of due diligence in the production of the evidence, and that the evidence was not shown to have been material to the movants' case. Accordingly, the court reversed the order (3 Cal. App. 3d 904, 910) .

[b] Distrust and Disfavor of Courts

In Estate of Shepard (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 34 Cal. Rptr. 212 , plaintiffs brought an action to determine if they were the granddaughters and pretermitted heirs of the deceased. After the trial court found against plaintiffs, they moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Plaintiffs claimed that they had found two new witnesses that would testify to the fact that the decedent had been married to a Carl Baddaky and had given birth to plaintiffs' mother. When the motion was denied by operation of law, plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the claim of newly discovered evidence is uniformly looked on by the courts with distrust and disfavor. It is said that public policy requires a litigant to exhaust every reasonable effort to produce at trial all existing evidence in his or her behalf (221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 76) . In this case, although the court conceded that the newly discovered evidence might produce a different result on retrial, plaintiffs did not show that they exercised reasonable diligence in discovering and producing this evidence at trial. Accordingly, the court affirmed the judgment (221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 76-80) .

[c] Evidence Not Newly Discovered

In Broads v. Mead and Cook (1911) 159 Cal. 765, 116 P. 46 , plaintiff brought an action for damages and to enjoin defendants from maintaining advertising signs on plaintiff's upper-story wall space. Defendants claimed that there was an oral agreement between themselves and the original lessee and assignor of plaintiff that gave defendants the privilege of placing their signs on the upper walls. After judgment was entered for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Defendants claimed that they had located the original lessee who would testify that the oral agreement had been made as claimed. When the motion was denied, defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court modified the judgment as to the amount of damages and affirmed the judgment as modified, noting that the lower court's order denying the motion for new trial was proper. The Court stated that defendants' affidavit showed that they knew, prior to trial, that the witness would testify in the manner claimed. Hence, it was not strictly newly discovered evidence. The Court added that it was not shown or claimed that any application was made to postpone the trial to give an opportunity to discover the witness and secure his attendance or deposition. Therefore, the Court held that a new trial was properly denied (159 Cal. 765, 768) .

In Hayutin v. Weintraub (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 497, 24 Cal. Rptr. 761 , plaintiff brought an action for equitable cancellation of an agreement in which plaintiff and defendant participated in a private auction of their shares of corporate stock. Defendant cross complained for specific performance. Plaintiff and defendant, each 50 percent owners of the capital stock, agreed that they would bid for each other's stock in the corporation. Plaintiff claimed that the parties agreed to deliver letters to each other setting forth all the assets, activities, potential deals, and negotiations of the corporation so that the parties could evaluate the worth of the company. Defendant outbid plaintiff at the auction and was declared to be the buyer. After trial, the court awarded defendant specific performance on his cross complaint. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, claiming that defendant failed to disclose prior to the date of the auction that a wholly owned subsidiary of the corporation had acquired a valuable asset. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that this was not newly discovered evidence for purposes of a motion for a new trial. The court said that evidence within the knowledge of the moving party before the action was begun, while the case was pending, or which under the circumstances must have been known to the moving party at the trial, or by the use of reasonable diligence might have been known and produced at trial, may not be regarded as newly discovered. In this case, plaintiff's counsel averred this alleged concealment in a proposed amendment to the complaint and insisted on proving it at trial. Counsel's proposal to amend the complaint grew out of his examination of the depositions. Since the court did not feel that the evidence was newly discovered, it stated that there was no error in the ruling on the motion for new trial (207 Cal. App. 2d 497, 512-513) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Requirements for Granting of Motion

White v. Dorfman (1981) 116 Cal. App. 3d 892, 172 Cal. Rptr. 326 , was an action concerning the violation by defendants of certain restrictive covenants on real property in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants and an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial. Plaintiffs sought to introduce the testimony of a newly discovered witness who offered a definition of certain terms in the declaration of restrictions. The court stated that the essential elements that must be established by plaintiffs are: (1) that the evidence is newly discovered, (2) that reasonable diligence has been exercised in its discovery and production, and (3) that the evidence is material to the movant's case. Since the court felt that the newly discovered evidence was cumulative to the testimony of a witness produced at trial and was also probably immaterial and irrelevant, it affirmed the denial of the motion (116 Cal. App. 3d 892, 899-900) .

[b] Distrust and Disfavor of Courts

Hicks v. Ocean Shore Railroad, Inc. (1941) 18 Cal. 2d 773, 117 P.2d 850 , was a personal injury action in which the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff, noting that an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial was proper. The Court stated that newly discovered evidence is regarded with suspicion and disfavor and that there was no abuse in discretion by the trial court in denying the motion (18 Cal. 2d 773, 789) .

Horowitz v. Noble (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 120, 144 Cal. Rptr. 710 , involved an action for declaratory relief of rights under an easement by implication in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs, noting that an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was proper. The court stated that ordinarily newly discovered evidence is looked on with suspicion and disfavor. Since the trial court found that the newly discovered evidence would not have changed the result of trial, the court of appeal upheld the denial of the motion (79 Cal. App. 3d 120, 138) .

[c] Evidence Not Newly Discovered

The factual and procedural background of Scanlan v. San Francisco etc. Ry. Co. (1900) 128 Cal. 586, 61 P. 271 , is discussed in § 155.201[3][b]. The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff, noting that an order denying defendant a new trial was proper. It stated that the testimony, urged as newly discovered evidence, was in no sense newly discovered. Defendant's engineers had knowledge through their attorney of the materiality of the witness's testimony, and took certain steps to procure his attendance at trial, but did not discover him until after trial. The Court concluded that since defendant knew the importance of this witness's testimony, defendant should have moved for a continuance (128 Cal. 586, 589) .

Rosenfeld, Meyer & Susman v. Cohen (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 237 Cal. Rptr. 14 , was an appeal considering three judgments in three separate actions between former partners after dissolution of their partnership. Some of the partners continued most of the business in a new partnership. One of the matters involved an accounting by the continuing partners in which they were required to segregate receipts from ongoing clients between receipts representing payments of fees earned by the dissolved partnership and receipts relating to matters handled by the new partnership. Because they had failed to keep records that showed segregation, all receipts that could not be properly allocated were treated as receipts of the dissolved partnership. Before judgment was entered, but after the trial court announced its tentative decision, the continuing partners moved to reopen to present new evidence that their accountant's declaration said could be developed by questioning clients. The court of appeal affirmed the denial of the motion to reopen, saying that denial is proper when failure to present evidence earlier is neither inadvertent nor excusable but a knowing and informed choice of trial tactic (191 Cal. App. 3d 1035, 1052-1053) .

In Hartford Acc. & Indem., Co. v. Goossen (1978) 84 Cal. App. 3d 649, 148 Cal. Rptr. 784 , plaintiff insurance company brought an action for declaratory relief against a claimant of uninsured motorist coverage, and the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff, noting that an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was proper. The court stated that the additional facts did not support a motion for a new trial because they were not newly discovered, since they were known to defendant from the time of the accident (84 Cal. App. 3d 649, 653) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] HAS FAILED TO SHOW THAT THE EVIDENCE, WITH REASONABLE DILIGENCE, COULD NOT HAVE BEEN DISCOVERED AND PRODUCED AT TRIAL.

A. Requirements for Granting of Motion. [See § 155.200[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Distrust and Disfavor of Courts. [See § 155.200[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Inadequate Showing of Reasonable Diligence. A new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will be granted only if the affidavit in support thereof recites facts showing that the evidence, with reasonable diligence, could not have been discovered and produced at trial (*Fomco, Inc. v. [Optional] D. Failure to Move for Continuance. If the existence and materiality of evidence is known, but cannot be located, the party desiring to produce it must seek a continuance for the purpose of locating and producing the evidence; failure to do so prevents a subsequent successful motion for a new trial based on newly discovered evidence (*Scanlan v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)]. In an appropriate case, it may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.190.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should discuss how the moving party's affidavits or declarations do not recite facts sufficient to show that the moving party exercised reasonable diligence in attempting to produce the evidence at trial.

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inadequate Showing of Reasonable Diligence

In Fomco, Inc. v. Joe Maggio, Inc. (1961) 55 Cal. 2d 162, 10 Cal. Rptr. 462, 358 P.2d 918 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for breach of a contract for the sale of carrot crops. After judgment was entered for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Defendants claimed that they had recently discovered that plaintiff could not recover because it was not licensed as a dealer or cash buyer as required by the Agricultural Code. When the motion was denied, defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will be granted only when the affidavit in support thereof recites facts showing that the evidence could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced at trial (55 Cal. 2d 162, 165) . In this case, the Court said that there was no showing of diligence on the part of defendants before trial. In fact, none could have been made since the fact was a matter of public record open to defendants' discovery at any time on inquiry or examination of the records. The Court added that none of the decided cases hold that after a judgment has been entered without any evidence having been introduced establishing illegality, a court must grant a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence of illegality even though the moving party has failed to show the exercise of diligence. Accordingly, the Court affirmed the judgment for plaintiff (55 Cal. 2d 162, 166) .

[b] Failure to Move for Continuance

In Scanlan v. San Francisco etc. Ry. Co. (1900) 128 Cal. 586, 61 P. 271 , plaintiff contractor brought an action to recover the contract price for the construction of a railway embankment. Payment for the embankment was to be based on the cubic contents of the embankment. At trial, plaintiff called an engineer who testified on the measurements of the embankment and its cubic contents. After judgment was rendered for plaintiff, based on the computation of plaintiff's engineer, defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment and order denying a new trial.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that the trial court did not err in refusing defendant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Although defendant sought to produce an engineer who had made a survey of the embankment, had left defendant's employ, and had been discovered too late to be produced at trial, the Court stated that since defendant had known of the importance of this witness's testimony, defendant should have moved for a continuance. In failing to do so, defendant entered on the trial at its peril. Thus, the Court affirmed the judgment and order denying a new trial (128 Cal. 586, 589) .

Note that, while the defendant in Scanlan appealed an order denying a new trial, such orders are no longer appealable [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4), 904.2(e)].

The factual and procedural background of Estate of Shepard (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 34 Cal. Rptr. 212 , is discussed in § 155.200[3][b]. When the plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied by operation of law, they appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that if the existence of a witness and the materiality of his or her testimony is known prior to trial, a failure to seek a continuance in order to determine the witness's whereabouts and to obtain his or her testimony prevents a subsequent successful motion for a new trial based on that testimony (221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 77) . In this case, the court felt that the plaintiffs did not exercise reasonable diligence in discovering and producing the newly discovered evidence at trial. After an adverse judgment was rendered against plaintiffs, they ran newspaper ads in Hawaii to find out if there were any witnesses still living there who might remember the deceased's relationship with Carl Baddaky. Plaintiffs discovered that the decedent may have lived in Hawaii when defense counsel showed plaintiffs' counsel certain newspaper clippings and photographs of the decedent prior to trial. However, plaintiffs failed to seek a continuance to enable them to investigate any leads that may have arisen from the clippings. They did not take the deposition of defendant, the husband of the deceased, who had possession of these items, nor did they avail themselves of any discovery proceedings which almost certainly would have led to the earlier discovery of the evidence. The court concluded that such a total lack of diligence prevented reliance on evidence allegedly derived from the newspaper clipping and photographs, particularly when no continuance was sought even when the existence of the items became known. Accordingly, the court affirmed the judgment (221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 80) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inadequate Showing of Reasonable Diligence

In In re Marriage of Liu (1987) 197 Cal. App. 3d 143, 242 Cal. Rptr. 649 , the court of appeal held that a wife's motion for a new trial in an annulment action was properly denied. In considering the merits of her motion, it held that she could not obtain a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence because she failed to show that the evidence could not have been produced at trial with reasonable diligence. In making a motion for new trial on this ground, the party seeking relief has the burden to prove that he or she exercised reasonable diligence to discover and produce the evidence at trial. If this showing is not made, the motion must be denied. A general averment of diligence is insufficient;the moving party must state the particular acts or circumstances that establish diligence (197 Cal. App. 3d 143, 153-154) .

National Elevator Services, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 186 Cal. Rptr. 165 , involved a petition by an elevator inspection company for a writ of mandate to command defendant to issue annual elevator permits based on plaintiff's inspections. The petition was granted and defendant appealed from the denial of its motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence. The court of appeal stated that the proponent of a motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence must show that reasonable diligence has been exercised in its discovery and production (136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 137) . The court found that defendant had failed to make a satisfactory showing that it had been diligent in producing new evidence (136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 138) . For that and other reasons, the court held that the motion for new trial was properly denied (136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 137, 138) .

Bostard v. Bostard (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 793, 66 Cal. Rptr. 348 , was an action for divorce in which the court of appeal affirmed the granting of an interlocutory decree of divorce to each party, noting that an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial was proper. The court stated that a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence will be granted only when the affidavit in support of the motion recites facts showing that the evidence could not, with reasonable diligence, have been discovered and produced at trial (258 Cal. App. 2d 793, 797) . The court felt that plaintiff's failure to discover the information was inexcusable and showed a complete lack of diligence. The court added that a litigant is required to exhaust diligent and reasonable effort to produce at trial all existing evidence in his or her behalf (258 Cal. App. 2d 793, 798) .

The factual and procedural background of Estate of Shepard (1963) 221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 34 Cal. Rptr. 212 , is discussed in § 155.200[3][b] and in [3][b], above. The court stated that parties should use a high degree of diligence in discovering and presenting at trial all the evidence of which the cause is to be determined. Since the court did not feel that plaintiffs exercised reasonable diligence in the case, it affirmed the judgment, finding that an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence did not constitute reversible error (221 Cal. App. 2d 70, 79-80) .

[b] Failure to Move for Continuance

Baron v. Sanger Motor Sales (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 846, 57 Cal. Rptr. 896 , is also discussed in § 155.202[4][b]. The court of appeal reversed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial, stating that plaintiff failed to act with reasonable diligence and that she waived her right to request a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. The court explained that plaintiff failed to advise the court of her surprise at the testimony of a witness and also failed to ask the court for a reasonable continuance time and time again. Furthermore, the newly discovered evidence related to standard automobile painting practices which could have been obtained with minimal effort (249 Cal. App. 2d 846, 861) .

Griffeth v. Fehsel (1943) 61 Cal. App. 2d 600, 143 P.2d 522 , was an action to determine whether or not a joint venture was terminated by mutual consent of the parties. The court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, noting that an order denying plaintiff a new trial was proper. The court stated that plaintiff failed to make a sufficient showing of diligence in support of the motion. The court said that when plaintiff could not contact his corroborating witnesses, he should have moved for a continuance at the commencement of trial or for a reopening of the case prior to rendition of judgment (61 Cal. App. 2d 600, 607) .

[Caption. See § 155.60[1].]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE IT IS NOT PROBABLE THAT THE ADDITIONAL NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE WOULD PRODUCE A DIFFERENT RESULT ON RETRIAL.

A. Requirements for Granting of Motion. [See § 155.200[1], Paragraph A.]

B. Distrust and Disfavor of Courts. [See § 155.200[1], Paragraph B.]

C. Different Result Not Probable. A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly denied when, in the opinion of the trial court, it is not probable that the additional evidence would have produced a different result (Atkinson v. Western D. Syndicate (1915) 170 Cal. 511, 512, 150 P. 363 ; Wood v. Jamison (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877).

[Optional] D. Impeachment of Witness. Newly discovered evidence that is merely designed to contradict a witness is not of a character to warrant a new trial if the evidence is not material in the sense that its use would make a different result probable on retrial (see *Waer v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)]. In an appropriate case, it may be submitted in opposition to a motion for a new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.190.

[b] Argument

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Different Result Not Probable

In Atkinson v. Western D. Syndicate (1915) 170 Cal. 511, 150 P. 363 , plaintiff judgment creditor brought an action to set aside a conveyance by the defendant judgment debtors on the ground of fraud. After judgment was entered for defendants, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the order.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is properly denied when, in the opinion of the trial court, it is not probable that the additional evidence would have produced a different result. Although plaintiff desired to introduce evidence that defendant was insolvent at the time of the transfer, the issue of insolvency was not essential to the support of the judgment in favor of defendants. The Supreme Court stated that the trial court may well have concluded that, regardless of any evidence on the question of solvency, the same conclusions regarding intent and consideration would have been reached. After examining the record, the Supreme Court decided that the lower court was justified in denying a new trial (170 Cal. 511, 512) .

Note that although plaintiff in Atkinson appealed an order denying a new trial in this case, such orders are no longer appealable. Only orders granting a new trial are appealable [Code Civ. Proc. §§ 904.1(a)(4), 904.2(e)]. An order denying a new trial is reviewable on appeal from the judgment; an appeal from an order denying a new trial will be dismissed [Hayutin v. Weintraub (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 497, 514, 24 Cal. Rptr. 761] .

The factual and procedural background of Wood v. Jamison (2008) 167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161, 83 Cal. Rptr. 3d 877 , is discussed in § 155.190[3][a]. The case involved legal malpractice and breach of fiduciary duty claims arising from a questionable investment deal where the attorney seemingly represented the plaintiff and the other parties. The losing defendant sought a new trial based on an alleged newly discovered contract between the parties disclosing to the plaintiff that the defendant did not represent her and that she agreed to have independent counsel review the deal. The defendant claimed he received a copy of the agreement in the mail, approximately seven months after trial, from an anonymous source. The trial court denied the motion, stating that the agreement was not material to the case. The court of appeal refused to make an independent determination as to whether the newly discovered contract was material. The court of appeal held that it need not make an independent determination as to materiality after a bench trial. Unlike a jury trial, a bench trial involves no conjecture as to what the trier of fact may find material (167 Cal. App. 4th 156, 161).

[b] Impeachment of Witness

In Waer v. Waer (1922) 189 Cal. 178, 207 P. 891 , plaintiff brought an action to quiet title to certain real property. Plaintiff claimed that he had made and signed a deed, but that he never delivered it to defendants. Defendants, he contended, stole the deed and recorded it without his knowledge and consent. After judgment was entered for plaintiff, defendants moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Defendants presented the affidavit of a newly discovered witness who related a conversation with plaintiff concerning the loss of the deed in which plaintiff said that four or five days after the deed was executed, he discovered that the deed was missing. At trial, however, plaintiff stated that he had made the deed on May 10 and did not discover the loss of the deed until December. When the motion was denied, defendants appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that newly discovered evidence which is merely designed to contradict a witness is not of a character to warrant a new trial. Since the affidavit purported to narrate a statement that contradicted something that plaintiff had testified to at trial, it was impeaching in character and did not constitute grounds for reversal of the order. Moreover, the affidavit in question purported to embody evidence which, if produced at trial, would have had no probative force against the testimony of plaintiff concerning nondelivery of the deed. The newly discovered evidence was in harmony with and corroborative of plaintiff's testimony that the deed had been stolen from him. Therefore, the Court concluded that the affidavit in question, was valueless as support for the motion for a new trial, and accordingly, the Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff (189 Cal. 178, 181-182) .

In Lubeck v. Lopes (1967) 254 Cal. App. 2d 63, 62 Cal. Rptr. 36 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision. During trial, defendant was asked if he had any trouble with his eyesight. He answered that he did not. Following this response, he was asked when he had last had an eye examination and who his eye doctor was. He then stated that his eye doctor was Dr. Magginis. After a verdict was rendered for defendants, plaintiff was granted a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Defendants appealed the order, and plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting a new trial and affirmed the judgment. Even though plaintiff discovered evidence that a Dr. Magginis had never been listed in state licensing records, had not been listed as the owner of a city business license, had not been listed in the telephone or police directory, and was generally unknown among local optometrists; the court stated that newly discovered evidence to impeach or discredit a witness, even when discovered shortly after trial and made the basis of a motion for a new trial, is not sufficient to require granting of a new trial. In this case, the court stated that the evidence could not be characterized as material in the sense that its use by way of impeachment on retrial would make a different result probable. The newly discovered evidence did not in any way controvert evidence presented during trial concerning the actual condition of defendant's eyesight. Furthermore, defendant's eyesight did not appear to have been a material issue in the trial, and the name of the doctor who had examined defendant's eyes was clearly a collateral matter (254 Cal. App. 2d 63, 68-69) . Moreover, the court noted that defendant's testimony concerning the doctor was already uncertain and confused, so that it can hardly be said that the newly discovered evidence would have a significant effect on attacking defendant's credibility on retrial. The court concluded that the newly discovered evidence only served to impeach defendant's testimony on an immaterial fact of the case (254 Cal. App. 2d 63, 69-70) . After examining the entire record, the court reversed the order (254 Cal. App. 2d 63, 70-76) .

[c] Evidence Merely Cumulative

In Kircher v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 176, 195 P.2d 427 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries. Plaintiff claimed that he tripped in a depression in the pavement, hit his head, was rendered unconscious, and rolled under the train which then ran over his hand. After judgment was entered for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. When the motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that a motion for new trial is properly denied if it is shown that the newly discovered evidence is to be used for impeachment purposes, or if it is merely cumulative. In this case, the alleged new evidence consisted of hospital records, plaintiff's military record, and an affidavit by plaintiff setting forth facts relating to the injury. Defendant sought to introduce the hospital records to refute plaintiff's testimony that he had suffered a blow on his head at the time of the accident. Plaintiff's counsel's counteraffidavit stated that the records were merely cumulative and entirely consistent with the testimony given at the trial. The trial court apparently agreed with this contention, and the Supreme Court stated that unless there is a clear showing of an abuse of discretion, the trial court's denial of the motion will not be interfered with by an appellate court. Since the Supreme Court found no abuse of discretion in the trial court's ruling, it affirmed the judgment (32 Cal. 2d 176, 187-188) .

Note that the Supreme Court has held in another case that a court is not precluded from granting a new trial if the newly discovered evidence is cumulative but would produce a different result on retrial [see Cahill v. E.B. & A.L. Stone Co. (1914) 167 Cal. 126, 135, 138 P. 712 ; see also § 155.190[3][e]]. It appears, however, that the cumulative evidence in Kircher v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 176, 195 P.2d 427 , was entirely consistent with the evidence produced at trial and hence, a different result would not be probable if the evidence were introduced on retrial [see Kircher v. Atchison, T & S. F. R. Co. (1948) 32 Cal. 2d 176, 187-188, 195 P.2d 427] . Thus, while these cases appear to conflict, they may be reconciled.

[d] Evidence Speculative and Arguably Remote

In Cansdale v. Board of Administration (1976) 59 Cal. App. 3d 656, 130 Cal. Rptr. 880 , plaintiff highway patrol officer sought a writ of mandate to set aside a decision of the Board of Administration that cancelled his disability retirement benefits. When the petition was denied, plaintiff filed a notice of motion to reopen the case on the basis of newly discovered evidence. This motion was also denied. Plaintiff then filed a notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. When the motion was denied, plaintiff appealed the judgment denying the writ and also purported to appeal the order denying the motion for a new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the newly discovered evidence must be material in the sense that it is likely to produce a different result. In this case, plaintiff sought to introduce the opinion of a doctor who had diagnosed a current back injury of plaintiff. Plaintiff alleged that current diagnosis represented an independent objective finding of disability and had this evidence been presented to the board's doctor, he would have changed his evaluation to agree with the doctors who stated that plaintiff could not perform the duties of a highway patrolman. However, the court concluded that the newly discovered evidence was speculative and arguably remote. In order to grant a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, the court explained, the evidence must be specific, and if it is not, a new trial cannot be granted. Since all presumptions are in favor of the order made by the trial court, a reviewing court will not interfere unless a clear abuse of discretion is shown. Since plaintiff did not prove a clear abuse of discretion, the court affirmed the judgment and dismissed plaintiff's attempted appeal from the order denying his motion for a new trial (59 Cal. App. 3d 656, 667-668) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Different Result Not Probable

The facts and procedural background of National Elevator Services, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations (1982) 136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 186 Cal. Rptr. 165 , are discussed in § 155.201[4][a]. In National Elevator, the court of appeal stated that the proponent of a motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence must show that the evidence is likely to produce a different result at trial (136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 137) . The court found that the proffered evidence would not produce a different result because it was cumulative and did not address a fundamental issue in the case (136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 138-139) . For that and other reasons, the court held that the motion for new trial was properly denied (136 Cal. App. 3d 131, 137, 138) .

Carpenter v. Kilgour (1965) 236 Cal. App. 2d 651, 46 Cal. Rptr. 115 , was an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage on a house in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants, noting that an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was proper. The court stated that it was well settled that the evidence produced in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must be material to the moving party's case in that it is likely that the evidence will produce a different decision. Since the evidence presented by plaintiffs was clearly irrelevant to the issue of failure of consideration that was actually before the court, the court stated that the trial court did not err in denying plaintiffs' motion (236 Cal. App. 2d 651, 658) .

[b] Impeachment of Witness

Baron v. Sanger Motor Sales (1967) 249 Cal. App. 2d 846, 57 Cal. Rptr. 896 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal reversed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial with directions to enter a judgment on the verdict in favor of defendant. The court stated that the newly discovered evidence would be cumulative of the testimony already given at trial by a witness, and if not cumulative, it would be given primarily for impeachment purposes. The court added that it is generally held that a new trial is not compelled by newly discovered evidence that is offered for impeachment purposes only (249 Cal. App. 2d 846, 859) .

[c] Evidence Merely Cumulative

Kyle v. Stone (1965) 234 Cal. App. 2d 286, 44 Cal. Rptr. 390 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for defendants noting that an order denying plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence was proper. The court stated that when the motion for a new trial is based on newly discovered evidence, it must appear that the evidence is not cumulative (234 Cal. App. 2d 286, 294) . In this case, the court concluded that the proffered testimony was cumulative in nature and similar to testimony introduced by plaintiffs at trial. It did not appear that the case should or would have resulted differently had the evidence been received (234 Cal. App. 2d 286, 293-294) .

§ 155.210 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Insufficiency of Evidence to Justify Verdict or Decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)]

[Caption. See § 155.50[1].]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY THE _____ [VERDICT or DECISION] AND SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] WERE MATERIALLY AFFECTED THEREBY.

A. New Trial on Ground of Insufficiency of Evidence. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)).

B. Judge or Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Decision or Verdict. A motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence is properly granted if, after weighing the evidence and reasonable conferences, the court is convinced that it or the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict or decision (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; Russell v. Nelson (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 919, 922, 82 Cal. Rptr. 221).

C. Judge Required to Weigh Evidence. In passing on a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the trial judge is required to weigh the evidence and in so doing he or she may disbelieve witnesses and draw inferences contrary to those supporting the verdict (see Mercer v. Perez (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 104, 112, 436 P.2d 315 ; Dietrich v. Litton Industries, Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 704, 707, 717, 90 Cal. Rptr. 856).

D. Duty to Grant New Trial If Verdict or Decision Against Weight of Evidence. On a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the judge must weigh and consider the evidence of both parties; if he or she is convinced that the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence, it is the judge's duty to grant a new trial even though there are conflicts in the evidence (Lucas v. Hesperia Golf & Country Club (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 241, 253, 63 Cal. Rptr. 189).

[Optional] E. Court Not Bound by Prior Rulings on Questions of Law or Prior View of Evidence. In granting a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the court is not bound by its prior rulings on questions of law or its prior view of the evidence (Yarrow v. State of California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 437, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687).

[Optional] F. Judge Not Bound by Conflicts in Evidence. A judge is not bound by a conflict in the evidence when ruling on a motion for a new trial; rather, he or she must reweigh the evidence, the inferences therefrom, and the credibility of witnesses in determining whether the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict (Lippold v. Hart (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 24, 25, 78 Cal. Rptr. 833).

[Optional] G. Judge's Duty to Set Aside Verdict If Unjust. It is the trial judge's duty to set aside the jury's verdict whenever his or her conscience is impressed with the injustice thereof (Moore v. City & County of San Francisco (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 738, 85 Cal. Rptr. 281).

[Optional] H. Unreliable but Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict. If, in the opinion of the court, the evidence is unreliable, it is the court's duty to grant a new trial and it may grant a new trial even when there is substantial evidence to sustain the verdict if it believes that the evidence preponderates against the verdict (see Moore v. City & County of San Francisco (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 738, 85 Cal. Rptr. 281).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict or other decision, and how the court may be convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences, that it or the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict or decision [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)].

Counsel should add further points and authorities that set forth the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense. For example, in a personal injury action in which plaintiff moves for a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict for defendant, plaintiff should discuss the substantive law of negligence in order to argue that the evidence clearly showed defendant's negligence and plaintiff's lack of contributory negligence [see Russell v. Nelson (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 919, 922-923, 82 Cal. Rptr. 221] . Similarly, in a libel action in which defendant moves for a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support plaintiff's verdict, defendant should discuss the substantive law of libel in order to argue, for example, that the defense of truth has been established by a preponderance of evidence [see Dietrich v. Litton Industries, Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 704, 717, 90 Cal. Rptr. 856] . When preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

The grounds of insufficiency of evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and excessive or inadequate damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)] are frequently combined. For memoranda of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive or inadequate damages, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort , and Ch. 65, Damages: Contract in this publication.

[e] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.220 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Judge or Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Decision or Verdict

In Russell v. Nelson (1969) 1 Cal. App. 3d 919, 82 Cal. Rptr. 221 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when defendant's car struck him as he walked across the street. After the jury rendered a verdict for defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on several grounds, including insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. When the motion was granted on that ground, defendant appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that the record supported the trial court's determination that, after weighing the evidence, the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict. The facts of the case showed substantial support for the reasons specified in the order granting the motion. The court of appeal added that the trial court could well have concluded that the accident resulted from defendant's negligent inattention to his driving, that plaintiff acted with reasonable caution under the circumstances, and that his conduct did not proximately contribute to the accident (1 Cal. App. 3d 919, 922-923) . After concluding that the preparation of the order by an attorney was harmless error, the court affirmed the order (1 Cal. App. 3d 919, 923-924) .

[b] Judge Required to Weigh Evidence

In Mercer v. Perez (1968) 68 Cal. 2d 104, 436 P.2d 315 , plaintiffs brought a personal injury action against defendants. After the jury returned a verdict for defendants, plaintiffs moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and, in the alternative, for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. The trial court denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but granted the motion for a new trial. Defendants appealed from the order, and plaintiffs cross appealed from the judgment.

The Supreme Court reversed the order granting a new trial because the order failed to specify the trial court's reasons for granting the motion. The Court, however, stated that the trial judge has traditionally broad powers in passing of a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. This motion is addressed to the judge's sound discretion; he or she is vested with the authority, for example, to disbelieve witnesses, reweigh the evidence, and draw reasonable inferences therefrom contrary to those of the trier of fact (68 Cal. 2d 104, 112) . In this case, the order stated the ground on which the motion was granted, but wholly failed to specify the court's reasons for doing so. Since the 1965 amendments to Code Civ. Proc. § 657 specifically provided that the court must specify the grounds and the reasons for granting a new trial on each ground stated, the order in this case was insufficient, and the Court thus reversed it (68 Cal. 2d 104, 108) .

In Dietrich v. Litton Industries, Inc. (1970) 12 Cal. App. 3d 704, 90 Cal. Rptr. 856 , plaintiff brought an action for libel against a company and its president and vice-president. After the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff, the court granted defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and also ordering a new trial if the judgment should be reversed on appeal. Plaintiff appealed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and the order granting a new trial; defendants brought a precautionary cross appeal from the judgment on the verdict.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and affirmed the order granting a new trial. The court stated that in passing on a motion for a new trial made on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the trial judge is required to weigh the evidence and in so doing he or she may disbelieve witnesses and draw inferences contrary to those supporting the verdict. When the motion is granted on this ground, the appellate court may reverse only when, as a matter of law, there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment. In this case, the order granting a new trial specifically stated the portions of the evidence that the trial judge found credible and the inferences he or she drew therefrom to reach a conclusion that the weight of the evidence was contrary to the jury's verdict. Once the trial judge determined that the defense of truth had been established by a preponderance of the evidence, the order granting a new trial necessarily followed. The court stated that since the order was adequately supported on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, it was unnecessary to discuss any other grounds on which it was granted (12 Cal. App. 3d 704, 717) .

[c] Duty to Grant New Trial If Verdict or Decision Against Weight of Evidence

In Lucas v. Hesperia Golf & Country Club (1967) 255 Cal. App. 2d 241, 63 Cal. Rptr. 189 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death of a 14-year-old boy who died by drowning in a swimming pool maintained by defendants. The jury returned a verdict in favor of plaintiffs, but the trial court granted defendants' motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and alternatively ordered a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict. Plaintiffs appealed from the judgment and order granting a new trial.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict, but affirmed the order granting a new trial. The court stated that on a motion for a new trial, the judge must weigh and consider the evidence of both parties. If he or she is convinced that the verdict is clearly against the weight of the evidence, it is the judge's duty to grant a new trial even though there may be conflicts in the evidence. In view of the evidence on some of the crucial issues in the case, the court said that there was no abuse of discretion in granting defendant's motion for a new trial. Accordingly, the court affirmed the order (255 Cal. App. 2d 241, 253-254) .

[d] Court Not Bound by Prior Rulings on Questions of Law or Prior View of Evidence

In Yarrow v. State of California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile accident. After the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiffs, defendant moved for a new trial on all statutory grounds including insufficiency of the evidence and that the verdict was against law. Defendant also moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court granted the motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict but denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict. Plaintiffs appealed the order.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that in granting a new trial, the trial court is not bound by its prior rulings on questions of law or its prior view of the evidence. In denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and granting the motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the trial court held that the state was not protected by sovereign immunity from a judgment, but that the record did not contain sufficient evidence to make the state liable to these plaintiffs. Although the reasons given in the order appeared to be contradictory to the portion of the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, the plain unequivocal language of the order stated that the motion was denied and the motion for a new trial granted. Since an order is measured by its terms and not by any reasons the court may give for it, the Court affirmed the order granting defendant a new trial (53 Cal. 2d 427, 437-443) .

[e] Judge Not Bound by Conflicts in Evidence

In Lippold v. Hart (1969) 274 Cal. App. 2d 24, 78 Cal. Rptr. 833 , plaintiffs brought an action to recover for personal injuries and property damage suffered in an automobile collision. After the jury returned a verdict for defendant, plaintiffs' motion for a new trial was denied. Plaintiffs appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, stating that a judge is not bound by a conflict in the evidence when ruling on a motion for a new trial; rather, he or she must reweigh the evidence, the inferences therefrom, and the credibility of the witnesses in determining whether the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict. In this case, the comments that the trial judge made at the hearing on the motion for a new trial indicated that he misconceived his function at the hearing. His comments suggested that he thought that he was bound to uphold the jury verdict since the evidence was conflicting. The court of appeal added that if the comments of the trial judge indicated that the judge misconceived his duty at the hearing on the motion, an appellate court will not blindly affirm the judgment because there is some evidence to support it. Such an approach would let the form control the substance. The court of appeal found that the trial judge properly made an independent evaluation of the evidence, but erroneously failed to base his decision on the motion for new trial on that evaluation. Accordingly, the court reversed the judgment (274 Cal. App. 2d 24, 25-27) .

[f] Judge's Duty to Set Aside Verdict If Unjust

In Moore v. City & County of San Francisco (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 85 Cal. Rptr. 281 , plaintiff brought an action for false arrest and imprisonment against the city and county and the arresting officers. After the jury rendered a verdict for all defendants, plaintiff moved for judgment notwithstanding the verdict and for a new trial. The court granted plaintiff a limited judgment notwithstanding the verdict and, in the alternative, granted a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against the law. Defendant appealed the order.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment notwithstanding the verdict and affirmed the order granting a new trial. Since the trial court's order was granted solely on the issue of false imprisonment, the court of appeal extended the order to the entire judgment. The court stated that it is the trial judge's duty to set aside the jury's verdict whenever his or her conscience is impressed with the injustice thereof. The trial court concluded that plaintiff's detention constituted false imprisonment. The court is authorized to determine the effect of the evidence contrary to the determination of the jury (5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 738-739) . Since the court held that the issues of false arrest and imprisonment embraced a single tort, it extended the order granting a new trial to the entire cause and affirmed the lower court's granting of the motion (5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 740-741) .

[g] Unreliable but Substantial Evidence Supports Verdict

The factual and procedural background of Moore v. City & County of San Francisco (1970) 5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 85 Cal. Rptr. 281 , is discussed in [f], above. In affirming an alternative order granting plaintiff a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against law, the court of appeal stated that it is the duty of the trial court to grant a new trial if he or she believes that the evidence is unreliable. It added that the trial court has the power to grant a new trial even though the evidence might justify a verdict. In this case, the trial court conceded that the jury's findings were not clearly in error. However, the facts of the case showed that the police officers did not act reasonably since the evidence was undisputed that the bail was placed five or six hours prior to the time plaintiff was released. Even though the jury concluded that defendants did not falsely imprison plaintiff, the trial court felt that plaintiff was falsely imprisoned by defendants. The court of appeal stated that if there is any evidence that would uphold and substantiate a verdict for the moving party, if the jury had decided for her, the trial court is justified in ordering a new trial (5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 738-739) . Since the court concluded that such evidence existed, it affirmed the order granting a new trial (5 Cal. App. 3d 728, 739-740) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Judge or Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Decision or Verdict

Matlock v. Farmers Mercantile Co. (1968) 258 Cal. App. 2d 362, 65 Cal. Rptr. 723 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiffs a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. After reviewing the evidence, the court concluded that the jury clearly should have reached a contrary verdict. It stated that the statutory standard of Code Civ. Proc. § 657 had been met and that the lower court did not abuse its discretion in granting a new trial (258 Cal. App. 2d 362, 366) .

[b] Judge Required to Weigh Evidence

The factual and procedural background of Yarrow v. State of California (1960) 53 Cal. 2d 427, 2 Cal. Rptr. 137, 348 P.2d 687 , is discussed in [3][d], above. The Supreme Court affirmed an order granting defendant a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. It stated that in considering the sufficiency of the evidence on the hearing of a motion for a new trial, the trial court may judge the credibility of witnesses, determine the probative force of the testimony, weigh the evidence, and draw reasonable inferences therefrom opposed to those drawn by the trier of fact (53 Cal. 2d 427, 434) .

Widener v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co. (1977) 75 Cal. App. 3d 415, 142 Cal. Rptr. 304 , was a libel action in which the court of appeal reversed an order granting defendant a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and affirmed an alternate order granting defendant a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and excessive damages. The court stated that in passing on a motion for a new trial made on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the trial judge is required to weigh the evidence and in so doing he or she may disbelieve witnesses and draw inferences contrary to those supporting the verdict (75 Cal. App. 3d 415, 440) . After examining the record, the court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion (75 Cal. App. 3d 415, 438-440) .

[c] Judge Not Bound by Conflicts in Evidence

Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines (1946) 28 Cal. 2d 357, 170 P.2d 465 , was an action for personal injuries in which the Supreme Court affirmed an order granting defendant a new trial, stating that the trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by a conflict in the evidence and has not abused its discretion when there is any evidence that would support a judgment in favor of the moving party (28 Cal. 2d 357, 358-359) . After examining the entire record, the court concluded that the trial court did not abuse its discretion in granting the motion (28 Cal. 2d 357, 359-362) .

Candido v. Huitt (1984) 151 Cal. App. 3d 918, 199 Cal. Rptr. 41 , was a negligence action in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. In its order the trial court said that there was not sufficient evidence in the record to support the jury's finding that plaintiff's negligence was not a proximate cause of the damage alleged by the plaintiff. The appellate court found that this statement was a sufficient explanation of the reason for the order. It also noted that a new trial may be granted even if there is sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict on appeal, as long as the court determines that the weight of the evidence is against the verdict (151 Cal. App. 3d 918, 923) .

Martinez v. Harris (1969) 273 Cal. App. 2d 385, 78 Cal. Rptr. 325 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The court stated that the trial court, in considering a motion for new trial, is not bound by a conflict in the evidence and has not abused its discretion when there is any evidence which would support a judgment in favor of the moving party (273 Cal. App. 2d 385, 397) . The court concluded that there was evidence that would support a judgment in favor of the moving party, and it accordingly affirmed the order (273 Cal. App. 2d 385, 398-399) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED FOR INSUFFICIENCY OF THE EVIDENCE TO JUSTIFY THE _____ [VERDICT or DECISION] BECAUSE SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT] WERE NOT MATERIALLY AFFECTED THEREBY, AND THE _____ [JURY or COURT] SHOULD NOT CLEARLY HAVE REACHED A DIFFERENT _____ [VERDICT or DECISION].

A. New Trial Precluded Unless Court Convinced That Court or Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Result. A new trial must not be granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or decision unless, after weighing the evidence, the court is convinced from the entire record, including reasonable inferences therefrom, that the jury or court clearly should have reached a different verdict or decision (Code Civ. Proc. § 657; Charles D. Warner & Sons, Inc. v. Seilon, Inc. (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 612, 616-617, 112 Cal. Rptr. 425).

B. Evidence Sufficient to Justify Verdict or Decision. In considering a motion for a new trial, the judge has an affirmative duty to make an independent appraisal of the evidence and to grant the motion when a preponderance of the evidence is opposed to the findings of the jury; however, the motion is properly denied if the judge concludes that the evidence is sufficient to justify the verdict (see Byrne v. City and County of San Francisco (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 739-742, 170 Cal. Rptr. 302).

[Optional] C. Denial of Motion When Judge Would Have Ruled Differently If Deciding Case. A motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence may be denied, even though the judge felt that he or she would have ruled differently if deciding the case, when the judge does not conclude that the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict (County of Riverside v. Loma Linda University (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 300, 322, 173 Cal. Rptr. 371

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.210.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. In particular, counsel should show how the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict or other decision, and how the court or the jury should not clearly have reached a different verdict or decision [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657; see also Charles D. Warner & Sons, Inc. v. Seilon, Inc. (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 612, 616-617, 112 Cal. Rptr. 425] .

Counsel should add further points and authorities that set forth the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense. For example, in a personal injury action in which plaintiff moves for a new trial on the ground that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict for defendant, defendant should discuss the substantive law of negligence in order to argue that there was sufficient evidence from which the jury could conclude that defendant was not guilty of negligence that proximately caused plaintiff's injuries [see Byrne v. City and County of San Francisco (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 742, 170 Cal. Rptr. 302] . When preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a notice of intention to move for a new trial as well as an order denying the motion, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Related Memoranda

The grounds of insufficiency of evidence [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and excessive or inadequate damages [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5)] are frequently combined. For memoranda of points and authorities opposing a motion for new trial on the ground of excessive or inadequate damages, see Ch. 64, Damages: Tort , and Ch. 65, Damages: Contract in this publication.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] New Trial Precluded Unless Court Convinced That Court or Jury Clearly Should Have Reached Different Result

In Charles D. Warner & Sons, Inc. v. Seilon, Inc*. (1974) 37 Cal. App. 3d 612, 112 Cal. Rptr. 425* , plaintiff corporation brought an action against two rubber companies and the dealer for damages when one of the corporation's trucks was completely destroyed by the blowout of a defective tire. After the jury returned verdicts against all three defendants, the two rubber companies moved for a new trial on the grounds of excessive damages and insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(5), (6)]. The court denied the motion, and defendants appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, stating that the trial judge satisfied the duty imposed on him in ruling on the motion. He weighed the evidence and exercised independent judgment as to whether the verdict was in error or against the fair preponderance of the evidence (37 Cal. App. 3d 612, 617) . However, in the memorandum of decision on the motion for new trial, the judge stated that it was not clear that the jury should have reached a different verdict; reasonable minds might differ with respect to the weight given to the testimony of the witnesses and the opinions expressed (37 Cal. App. 3d 612, 616-617) . In reviewing the trial court's exercise of discretion, the court of appeal stated that it does not weigh the evidence, but determines whether or not there is any substantial evidence that will support the conclusion reached by the jury. Since there was clear evidence to support the jury's findings, the court concluded that the verdict must stand. Therefore, it held that the denial of the motion was proper (37 Cal. App. 3d 612, 617) .

[b] Evidence Sufficient to Justify Verdict or Decision

In Byrne v. City and County of San Francisco (1980) 113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 170 Cal. Rptr. 302 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries suffered when she was struck by motor vehicles of two defendants while crossing an intersection in a marked crosswalk. Judgment for defendants was entered on a special jury finding that the evidence did not establish negligence on the part of any defendant that amounted to a proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries. Plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict. She claimed that defendants were guilty of negligence per se since she was in the crosswalk when she was struck. The court denied the motion, and plaintiff appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment for defendants, stating that in considering a motion for a new trial, the trial court has an affirmative duty to make an independent appraisal of the evidence and to grant the motion when the preponderance of the evidence is opposed to the findings of the jury (113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 739) . In this case, however, there was sufficient evidence from which the judge and the jury could conclude that there had been no negligence that was the proximate cause of the injuries incurred by plaintiff (113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 742) . The record showed that the defendants had met the burden necessary to excuse the technical violation of the pedestrian's right-of-way statute [Veh. Code § 29150]. The view of the defendant who first struck plaintiff was obscured by a stopped bus at the crosswalk; the view of the second defendant was obstructed by the other defendant. Also, it appeared from the record that each defendant responded to the possibility of a pedestrian in the crosswalk by easing off the accelerator and by proceeding when the crosswalk was apparently clear (113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 741) . Furthermore, plaintiff did not exercise her statutory and case law duty of care in crossing the street since she was familiar with the intersection and aware of the danger but did not take any precaution before stepping from behind the bus. Therefore, the court concluded that the record did not establish an abuse of discretion by the trial court in denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial since sufficient evidence supported the verdict. The court then affirmed the judgment (113 Cal. App. 3d 731, 741-742) .

[c] Denial of Motion When Judge Would Have Ruled Differently If Deciding Case

In County of Riverside v. Loma Linda University (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 300, 173 Cal. Rptr. 371 , plaintiff county brought an action for indemnification against a medical school for the monetary value of a settlement of a medical malpractice action. The medical school was affiliated with the county hospital, and the doctors involved in the medical malpractice suit were residents under a joint residency program between the university and the county hospital. However, the university was not named as a defendant in the medical malpractice action. Following the settlement of that action, the county brought this action for indemnity against the university. The jury returned a special verdict in favor of the county on two theories: (1) that the university and the county were joint venturers, and (2) that the two entities were joint tortfeasors with fault apportioned equally. Defendant university moved for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. When its motion was denied, defendant university appealed the judgment.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment, even though the judge had told the jurors before he discharged them that he disagreed with their conclusion, and if deciding the case, he would have exonerated the university. He added, however, that there was sufficient evidentiary basis for the jury's determination. The court of appeal stated that a motion for a new trial should not be granted for insufficiency of the evidence unless the court is convinced from the entire record that the jury clearly should have rendered a different verdict. Here, the judge did not say that he thought that the jury clearly should have reached a different verdict. The court of appeal concluded that the fact that the judge stated that he would have ruled differently did not indicate an abuse of discretion. Accordingly, it affirmed the judgment (118 Cal. App. 3d 300, 322-323) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence Sufficient to Justify Verdict or Decision

Stevens v. Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno (1975) 49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 123 Cal. Rptr. 171 , was a wrongful death action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs finding that the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence was proper. The plaintiffs sued the driver of the car, who was a missionary from France, as well as the Roman Catholic Bishop of Fresno, a corporation, on the basis of an alleged principal-agent relationship. The court of appeal concluded that there was sufficient evidence to support the jury's finding that the missionary was acting within the scope of his agency at the time of the accident and that the trial court's denial of the motion was proper (49 Cal. App. 3d 877, 889) .

Windeler v. Scheers Jewelers (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 88 Cal. Rptr. 39 , was an action for personal injuries and property loss in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff finding that the denial of defendant's motion for a new trial on several grounds including insufficiency of the evidence was proper. The court stated that it could perceive no abuse of discretion in the trial court's denial of defendant's motion, nor could it conclude that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the verdict. There was substantial evidence as to defendant's negligence, as to plaintiff's physical and mental suffering, and as to the property damage sustained by her (8 Cal. App. 3d 844, 852-853) .

Whyatt v. Kukura (1958) 157 Cal. App. 2d 803, 321 P.2d 860 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff, finding that an order denying her motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict was proper. Plaintiff felt that the damages awarded at trial were grossly inadequate. The court of appeal examined expert testimony concerning plaintiff's preexisting injuries and concluded that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict and judgment. The court stated that the evidence was such that the jury might reasonably have believed that plaintiff's physical disabilities were chargeable largely to preexisting causes (157 Cal. App. 2d 803, 804-805) .

[b] Denial of Motion When Judge Would Have Ruled Differently If Deciding Case

In Dominguez v. Pantalone (1989) 212 Cal. App. 3d 201, 260 Cal. Rptr. 431 (discussed in § 155.151[3][b]), the court of appeal rejected appellant's claim that the trial court erroneously denied a motion for new trial on the ground of insufficiency of evidence. The appellate court stated that, even though trial court judge independently weighed the evidence and concluded that the jury clearly should have reached a different result, the judge also impliedly found that there was sufficient credible evidence to support the verdict, and that the jury was reasonable in believing the witnesses it apparently had believed in reaching its verdict. The trial court properly recognized that it could not grant the motion for new trial simply because it would have found differently than the jury (212 Cal. App. 3d 201, 216) .

Causey v. Cornelius (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 269, 330 P.2d 468 , was a personal injury action in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiff and reversed an order granting defendants a new trial on the ground of irregularity in the proceedings of the adverse party [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(1)]. The trial court had also denied defendants' motion for a new trial on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence. The court of appeal stated that on this ground the motion was properly denied. The judge should give due respect to the verdict of the jury and may sometimes properly deny a new trial in cases when if submitted to him or her without a jury, the judge might have made a different decision. The judge must clearly be satisfied that the verdict is wrong; otherwise, he or she should let it stand (164 Cal. App. 2d 269, 284) .

Although Causey v. Cornelius (1958) 164 Cal. App. 2d 269, 330 P.2d 468 , was decided prior to the 1965 amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 657 [see Stats. 1965, ch 1749], it has been cited with approval in County of Riverside v. Loma Linda University (1981) 118 Cal. App. 3d 300, 322, 173 Cal. Rptr. 371 [see [3][c], above].

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict or decision is against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. It is a general form that should be used in conjunction with more specific points and authorities [see, e.g., § 155.231 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the verdict or decision, showing how it is against law and how it materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

In a general sense, a verdict or decision is against law if there is any ground whatsoever for granting a new trial. However, the application of this ground has been limited to those factual situations that are not covered by the other subdivisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 657. Furthermore, although the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and verdict or decision against law are contained in the same subdivision of Code Civ. Proc. § 657, they are entirely distinct grounds for a new trial motion. They are stated in the disjunctive and are alternatives [see Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 382-383, 215 P.2d 487 (difference between decision against law and insufficiency of evidence to justify decision); see also Kaiser Cement & Gypsum Corp. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 948, 958, 111 Cal. Rptr. 210 (difference between verdict against law and insufficiency of evidence to justify verdict)].

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of verdict or decision against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.240 et seq. may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the grounds of verdict or decision against law (see § 155.230).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE VERDICT IS AGAINST LAW IN THAT IT IS UNSUPPORTED BY ANY SUBSTANTIAL EVIDENCE AND THE ENTIRE EVIDENCE WOULD JUSTIFY A DIRECTED VERDICT IN FAVOR OF _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT].

General Verdict Unsupported by Any Substantial Evidence. When a general verdict is returned, it is against law when it is unsupported by any substantial evidence, that is, when the entire evidence would justify a directed verdict against the party in whose favor the verdict is returned (see Kralyevich v. Magrini (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 789, 342 P.2d 903).

[Add further points and authorities, if appropriate, discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict is against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] because it is unsupported by substantial evidence. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the grounds that the verdict or decision is against law [see § 155.230].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show that the verdict is against law because it is unsupported by any substantial evidence and that the evidence justifies a directed verdict in favor of the moving party. Counsel should add further points and authorities that set forth the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense. For example, in a personal injury action in which plaintiff moves for a new trial on the ground that the verdict for defendant is against law, plaintiff should discuss the substantive law of negligence to show that the verdict is without any substantial evidentiary support [see Kralyevich v. Magrini (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 789, 342 P.2d 903] . To aid in preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of verdict or decision against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.240 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] General Verdict Unsupported by Any Substantial Evidence

In Kralyevich v. Magrini (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 342 P.2d 903 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendant. After the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff in the amount of $2,500, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against law. The court granted the motion, stating that a new trial was granted on the question of damages. More than 10 days after the granting of the motion, and after defendant's notice of appeal had been filed, the court attempted to amend nunc pro tunc the previous order granting a new trial. The nunc pro tunc order was made on the ground of clerical error; it recited that the new trial was granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and that the verdict was against law.

The court of appeal held that the nunc pro tunc order was void and of no effect, and it considered the first order that did not specify grounds but stated that the new trial was granted as to the question of damages. The court noted that the notice of motion set forth the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against law. It stated that when a general verdict is returned, it can be said to be against law only when it is unsupported by any substantial evidence, that is, when the entire evidence is such as would justify a directed verdict against the party in whose favor the verdict is returned. However, it explained that the words "against law" do not import a situation in which the court weighs conflicting evidence and merely finds a balance against the judgment. In this case, the court's order granting a new trial on damages only carried the inescapable inference that there was sufficient evidence to support the verdict, but that the amount of damages awarded was either too large or too small. The court concluded that this inference was irreconcilable with the ground of verdict against law since a verdict must be without any substantial evidentiary support (172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 789) . After reviewing the evidence on the issues of liability and damages, the court held that the issue of liability was never properly determined. Thus, it reversed the order granting a new trial on the issue of damages only. It remanded the cause to the trial court with directions to vacate the judgment and order a new trial on all issues (172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 793) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] General Verdict Unsupported by Any Substantial Evidence

Bray v. Rosen (1959) 167 Cal. App. 2d 680, 335 P.2d 137 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal reversed an order granting plaintiff a new trial. The court noted, however, that a verdict is against law when the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point (167 Cal. App. 2d 680, 683) . In this case, the court found that there was conflicting evidence regarding the amount of damage sustained. Accordingly, it could not say that the verdict and judgment were against law (167 Cal. App. 2d 680, 684) .

§ 155.232 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Verdict or Decision Is Against the Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]--Verdict Contrary to Correct Jury Instructions

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of verdict or decision against law (see § 155.230).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE JURY'S VERDICT IS CONTRARY TO CORRECT JURY INSTRUCTIONS.

Verdict Contrary to Correct Jury Instructions. A new trial may be granted on the ground of verdict against law if the verdict is contrary to correct jury instructions (see Manufacturers' F. Corp. v. Pacific W. Radio (1933) 130 Cal. App. 239, 243, 19 P.2d 1013).

[Add further points and authorities, if appropriate, discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict is against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] because it is contrary to correct jury instructions. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the grounds that the verdict or decision is against law [see § 155.230].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show that the jury instructions are correct and that the jury's verdict is contrary to these instructions. If, however, the jury instructions are incorrect and the verdict is in disregard of them, a new trial is improper [see Rystrom v. Sutter Butte Canal Co. (1925) 72 Cal. App. 518, 523-524, 249 P. 53] .

Counsel may also include a discussion of the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense in order to show that the jury instructions are a correct statement of law [see Rystrom v. Sutter Butte Canal Co. (1925) 72 Cal. App. 518, 521, 249 P. 53] . To aid in preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The points and authorities set out in § 155.240 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Verdict Contrary to Correct Jury Instructions

In Manufacturers' F. Corp. v. Pacific W. Radio (1933) 130 Cal. App. 239, 19 P.2d 1013 , plaintiff transferee filed two actions against defendant, one based on trade acceptances, and the other on an unpaid balance due on an open book account. Defendant counterclaimed against plaintiff's transferor, Fried-Eisemann Radio Corp. The jury returned a verdict in the first action in favor of plaintiff; in the second action, it returned a verdict for defendant in the amount of the unpaid balance on the open book account. Both plaintiff and defendant moved for new trials. Both motions were granted. Plaintiff appealed from the order entered in the first action; defendant appealed from the order entered in the second.

The court of appeal affirmed plaintiff's order on the ground that there was an error of law and affirmed defendant's order on the ground that the verdict was against law. The court stated that defendant's demands against the transferor could not be made the basis for an affirmative liability on the part of plaintiff, and the verdict in that respect was contrary to the instructions of the court. Consequently, the court concluded that it was a verdict against law and might be set aside on a motion for a new trial (130 Cal. App. 239, 243) .

§ 155.233 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Verdict or Decision Is Against the Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]--Inconsistent Verdict

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of verdict or decision against law (see § 155.230).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE VERDICT IS AGAINST LAW IN THAT THE JURY HAS RENDERED VERDICTS THAT ARE BASED ON THE SAME SET OF FACTS, BUT THAT ARE FATALLY INCONSISTENT.

A. Inconsistent Verdicts. Verdicts are against law if the jury renders verdicts that are based on the same set of facts but that are fatally inconsistent, and a new trial may be granted (Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 716, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 ; Cavallaro v. Michelin Tire Corp. (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 95, 101, 157 Cal. Rptr. 602 ; Morris v. McCauley's Quality Transmission Service (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 964, 970-972, 132 Cal. Rptr. 37).

[Optional] B. No Waiver of Defective Verdict. If the verdicts are held fatally inconsistent, the defect is not waived by the aggrieved party's failure to call it to the attention of the trial court prior to discharging the jury (Morris v. McCauley's Quality Transmission Service (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 964, 972, 132 Cal. Rptr. 37).

[Optional] C. Inconsistent Damage Awards. A new trial may be granted on the basis of inconsistent verdicts if the jury renders an award of punitive damages without awarding compensatory damages (Haydel v. Morton (1935) 8 Cal. App. 2d 730, 736, 48 P.2d 709).

[Add further memoranda, if appropriate, discussing the substantive law pertaining to particular cause of action or defense.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict is against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] because the jury has rendered inconsistent verdicts. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict or decision is against law [see § 155.230].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show that the verdicts are inconsistent and are therefore against law. It may be necessary for counsel to include further points and authorities that discuss the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense in order to show how the verdicts are inconsistent. For example, in a personal injury action against three defendants, the wholesaler, retailer, and manufacturer of a product, in which the jury exonerates the manufacturer and retailer, but finds the wholesaler liable, counsel for wholesaler may find it necessary to discuss the substantive law of products liability to show that the verdicts rendered are inconsistent [see Cavallaro v. Michelin Tire Corp. (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 95, 101-103, 157 Cal. Rptr. 602] . To aid in preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum set out in § 155.240 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Inconsistent Verdicts

In Oxford v. Foster Wheeler LLC (2009) 177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 716, 99 Cal. Rptr. 3d 418 , an asbestos case, the jury used a special verdict form and found against the plaintiffs on their products liability claims for design defect and failure to warn, but found in favor of the plaintiffs on their negligence claim. The trial court held the verdicts were not inconsistent, reasoning that the jury could have found the defendant negligent in ways other than failing to warn or design defect.

On appeal, the court held that the verdicts were inconsistent, that a finding of negligent failure to warn is logically and legally inconsistent with the jury's finding on the plaintiffs' strict products liability failure to warn (177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 720) . The court held that inconsistent verdicts are against the law and the proper remedy is a new trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6). The court held that there was an irreconcilable inconsistency in the verdicts as to the defendant's liability, and therefore none of these verdicts may stand (177 Cal. App. 4th 700, 721-722) .

In Cavallaro v. Michelin Tire Corp. (1979) 96 Cal. App. 3d 95, 157 Cal. Rptr. 602 , plaintiffs brought an action for wrongful death and personal injuries against an automobile manufacturer, the wholesaler of a tire, and the retailer of the tire. The jury returned verdicts exonerating the automobile manufacturer, but finding the wholesaler of the tire liable. No verdict was returned determining that the retailer had any liability. Defendant wholesaler moved for a new trial on several grounds, including the ground that the verdict was against law. Defendant claimed that the verdicts were inconsistent since the liability of the wholesaler and retailer had to be identical because both were tire suppliers to the car. The court denied the motion, and defendant wholesaler appealed the judgment. Plaintiffs cross appealed.

The court of appeal reversed the judgment, concluding that the verdicts were fatally inconsistent and defendant wholesaler's motion for new trial should have been granted (96 Cal. App. 3d 95, 99, 110) . The court stated that inconsistent verdicts are against law and explained that the inconsistent verdict rule is based on the fundamental proposition that a factfinder may not make inconsistent determinations of fact based on the same evidence. In this case, it appeared that the jury's verdict exonerating the retailer was based on a determination that the tire in question was not defectively manufactured; whereas, the verdict against the wholesaler was based on a determination that the tire was defectively manufactured (96 Cal. App. 3d 95, 101-103) . After examining other issues raised on appeal, the court reversed the judgment (96 Cal. App. 3d 95, 103-110) .

In Morris v. McCauley's Quality Transmission Service (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 964, 132 Cal. Rptr. 37 , a child brought an action, through her guardian ad litem, for personal injuries. The jury rendered verdicts for the guardian, but against the child. The trial court granted a new trial to the child on the ground that the verdicts were inconsistent and entered judgment for the guardian. Defendant appealed the order granting a new trial and the judgment for the guardian. The child appealed the portion of the order granting a new trial that failed to limit the new trial to the issue of damages, and also from an order granting certain costs to defendant.

The court of appeal affirmed the order for new trial, reversed the judgment for the guardian, and dismissed the child's appeal with regard to costs. The court agreed that the two verdicts were inconsistent. The verdict in favor of the guardian for the approximate amount of medical expenses incurred on behalf of the child necessarily implied that defendant was negligent, that the guardian was not negligent, and that the medical expenses were proximately caused and reasonably required by defendant's negligence. The verdict in favor of defendant against the child necessarily implied that defendant was not negligent, or that the child failed to establish any substantial damages proximately caused by defendant's negligence or both. The court explained that this inconsistency based on the same set of facts cannot be permitted to stand. It concluded that the verdicts were against law and therefore constituted proper grounds for a new trial (60 Cal. App. 3d 964, 970) .

[b] No Waiver of Defective Verdict

The factual and procedural background of Morris v. McCauley's Quality Transmission Service (1976) 60 Cal. App. 3d 964, 132 Cal. Rptr. 37 , is discussed in [a], above. Defendant contended that plaintiffs waived the right to complain about the inconsistent verdicts when they opposed the resubmission of the case to the jury before the jury was discharged so that corrective action could be taken. Defendant relied on Code Civ. Proc. § 619, which gives the court power to require the jury to deliberate further when an informal or insufficient verdict has been returned, and on Brown v. Regan (1938) 10 Cal. 2d 519, 75 P.2d 1063 , which held that a party waives the error if that party fails to request the correction of the verdict when it is rendered.

The court of appeal held that the issue was not waived by plaintiffs. It stated that the waiver rule set out in Brown is not automatic and that there are many exceptions to it. Other cases, it explained, have held that if the verdicts are fatally inconsistent, the defect is not waived by a failure to call it to the attention of the trial court prior to discharging the jury. Although in this case, plaintiffs' counsel actively opposed sending the case back, rather than merely failing to draw attention to the problem, defendant's counsel was also opposed to resubmitting the matter. Accordingly, the court held that the issue was not waived (60 Cal. App. 3d 964, 972) .

[c] Inconsistent Damage Awards

Haydel v. Morton (1935) 8 Cal. App. 2d 730, 48 P.2d 709 , plaintiff brought an action based on three counts. The first count was based on alleged malicious prosecution. The second and third counts were based on alleged slander. The jury returned three verdicts in favor of plaintiff. On the second and third counts, the jury assessed compensatory damages of zero and punitive damages of $10,000. Defendant's motion for a new trial was granted on the second and third counts because of the invalidity of the verdicts.

The court of appeal affirmed the order granting a new trial on the second and third counts. The court stated that the jury did not inadvertently omit to assess compensatory damages, but expressly found and determined that plaintiff had not suffered any actual damage. The court said that when a jury expressly finds that plaintiff has not suffered any damages, an award of punitive damages without a verdict for compensatory damages cannot be upheld. Therefore, the court affirmed the order granting a new trial (8 Cal. App. 2d 730, 736-737) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Inconsistent Verdicts

In Manor Investment Co. v. F. W. Woolworth, Inc. (1984) 159 Cal. App. 3d 586, 206 Cal. Rptr. 37 , the court of appeal modified the trial court's determination, holding that a new trial was required on both inconsistent verdicts rendered by a jury. The plaintiff had alleged a cause of action against one defendant for wrongful interference with a contract and another cause of action against all defendants for conspiracy to wrongfully interfere with the same contract. The jury found that the first defendant was not liable for wrongful interference, but that all defendants were liable for conspiracy to wrongfully interfere. The trial court granted a new trial on only the conspiracy cause of action on the ground of excessive damages. The court of appeal, however, concluded that the verdicts were inconsistent and set aside both verdicts, because both were equally against the law (159 Cal. App. 3d 586, 596-597) .

Campbell v. Zokelt (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 315, 77 Cal. Rptr. 561 , was an action in which plaintiff passenger sued the driver of her car and the driver of another car. Defendants also cross complained against each other for damages. The jury returned verdicts that found defendant driver of the other car negligent as to the plaintiff passenger, but not negligent as to the driver of plaintiff's car. The court of appeal affirmed the order granting plaintiff passenger and defendant driver of plaintiff's car a new trial. The court concluded that the verdicts were clearly inconsistent and could not stand, stating that a decision is against law when the findings are irreconcilable (272 Cal. App. 2d 315, 318-320) .

[b] No Waiver of Defective Verdict

The factual and procedural background of Campbell v. Zokelt (1969) 272 Cal. App. 2d 315, 77 Cal. Rptr. 561 , is discussed in [a], above. The court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff a new trial on the basis of inconsistent verdicts. The court also held that plaintiff passenger and defendant driver of plaintiff's car did not waive their right to complain of the inconsistent verdicts when they failed to object to the form of the verdict before the discharging of the jury. The court concluded that Code Civ. Proc. § 619 provided that only informal or insufficient verdicts need be called to the attention of the court, and inconsistent verdicts were not covered by the statute (272 Cal. App. 2d 315, 320) .

§ 155.234 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Verdict or Decision Is Against the Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]--Decision Against Law

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of verdict or decision against law (see § 155.230).]

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE DECISION IS AGAINST LAW IN THAT _____ [THE COURT FAILED TO FIND ON A MATERIAL ISSUE or THE STATEMENT OF DECISION IS IRRECONCILABLE or THE EVIDENCE IS INSUFFICIENT IN LAW AND WITHOUT CONFLICT ON ANY MATERIAL POINT].

A. Decision Against Law. A decision is against law only (1) when there is a failure to find on a material issue; (2) when the findings are irreconcilable; or (3) when the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point (see Kralyevich v. Magrini (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 789, 342 P.2d 903 ; see also Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383, 215 P.2d 487).

[Optional] B. Failure to Resolve Specified Controverted Issue. The court's failure to resolve a specified controverted issue in its statement of decision may be a basis for granting a new trial on the ground of decision against law if that failure materially affects the substantial rights of the aggrieved party (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 634, 657; see also Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383, 215 P.2d 487).

[Optional] C. Inconsistent, Ambiguous, and Uncertain Statement of Decision. If the statement of decision is so inconsistent, ambiguous, and uncertain that it is incapable of being reconciled and it is impossible to tell how a specified controverted issue is determined, the decision may be against law and a new trial may be granted if the substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected (see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 634, 657; see also Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383, 215 P.2d 487).

[Optional] D. Evidence Insufficient as Matter of Law and Without Conflict on Any Material Point. A decision may be against law if the evidence in the case is insufficient as a matter of law and without conflict on any material point (In re Marriage of Beilock (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 728, 146 Cal. Rptr. 675).

[Optional] E. Moving Party May Raise New Legal Theory. Section 657(6) of the Code of Civil Procedure empowers a trial court to consider new legal challenges not previously raised before the verdict or judgment when the court is ruling on a motion for new trial (Hoffman-Haag v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 15-16, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805).

[Add further memoranda, if appropriate, discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the decision is against the law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)]. It does not provide a complete memorandum, but is designed to be combined with a general form in support of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict or decision is against law [see § 155.230].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, depending on the facts of the case, counsel should include a discussion of either the nature of the court's failure to find on a material issue, the manner in which the statement of decision is irreconcilable, or the reasons that the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point. It may be necessary for counsel to add further points and authorities that discuss the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense. For example, in a case involving a marital settlement agreement in which a former wife moves for a new trial on the ground that her former husband's order quashing a writ is against law, counsel for the wife should discuss certain substantive principles of family law to establish that the order is against law and that the evidence is without conflict on any material point [see In re Marriage of Beilock (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 728, 146 Cal. Rptr. 675] . To aid in preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of verdict or decision against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Memoranda

The memorandum set out in § 155.241 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Decision Against Law

The factual and procedural background of Kralyevich v. Magrini (1959) 172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 342 P.2d 903 , is discussed in § 155.231[3][a]. The court of appeal reversed an order granting a new trial as to damages and remanded the cause to the trial court with instructions to vacate the judgment and order a new trial on all issues. The court noted that the plaintiff's motion for a new trial was based on insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against law. It stated that the latter ground is of very limited application, and that a decision can be said to be against law only: (1) when there is a failure to find on a material issue; (2) when the findings are irreconcilable; and (3) when the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point (172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 789) . Although the court determined that the order granting the motion was not based on a verdict or decision against law, it concluded that the issue of liability in the case was never properly determined. Therefore, it reversed the order granting a new trial on the issue of damages only and concluded that a new trial on all issues was necessary (172 Cal. App. 2d 784, 790-793) .

In Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 215 P.2d 487 , plaintiffs brought an action for recovery of money paid on the purchase price of property on the theory of inducement through false and fraudulent representations. Defendant filed a cross complaint for the recovery of the balance of the purchase price. The trial court found generally in accord with the allegations of the complaint and against the allegations of the cross complaint and rendered judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant's motion for a new trial was granted, and plaintiffs appealed the order. On appeal, defendant asserted that the order was based on the ground that the decision was against law.

Even though the court of appeal reversed the order, it stated that the phrase "against law" refers to a situation furnishing a reason for a reexamination of an issue of fact. If the court fails to find on material issues made by the pleadings--issues as to which a finding would have the effect to countervail or destroy the effect of the other findings--and as to which evidence was introduced, the decision is against law. If the findings are so inconsistent, ambiguous and uncertain that they are incapable of being reconciled and it is impossible to tell how a material issue is determined, the decision is against law. A decision is also against law if the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict in any material point (96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383) . In this case, the court concluded that the court did not fail to find on any issue of fact. The findings were consistent, unambiguous, and certain. Furthermore, the evidence was sufficient to support the findings. Therefore, the court held that the decision was not against law. Accordingly, it reversed the order (96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 385-386) .

In 1981, the Legislature amended Code Civ. Proc. § 632, eliminating findings of fact and conclusions of law and replacing them with a procedure for issuing a statement of decision. Cases such as this one, decided under the prior law, should be used with care.

[b] Failure to Resolve Specified Controverted Issue

The factual and procedural background of Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 215 P.2d 487 , is discussed in [a], above. Even though the court of appeal reversed an order granting defendant a new trial, it stated that the phrase "against law" referred to a situation furnishing a reason for a reexamination of an issue of fact. If the court fails to find on material issues made by the pleadings--issues as to which a finding would have the effect to countervail or destroy the effect of other findings--and as to which evidence was introduced, the decision is against law. In such a case, the court said, a reexamination of the facts is necessary in order that the issues of fact may be determined (96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383) .

In 1981, the Legislature amended Code Civ. Proc. § 632, eliminating findings of fact and conclusions of law and replacing them with a procedure for issuing a statement of decision. Now, a party must specify those controverted issues as to which that party is requesting the statement of decision [see Code Civ. Proc. § 632]. Even though this is so, it appears that the court may still fail to resolve a specified controverted issue in its statement of decision [see Code Civ. Proc. §§ 632, 634]. However, the court's mere failure to resolve a specified controverted issue does not seem to be grounds for the granting of a new trial unless that failure materially affects the substantial rights of the moving party [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657]. This may mean that the failure must involve an issue which, if determined, would countervail or destroy the effect of the other determined issues [see Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383, 215 P.2d 487] . In any event, cases such as this one, decided under the prior law, should be used with care.

[c] Inconsistent, Ambiguous, and Uncertain Statement of Decision

The factual and procedural background of Renfer v. Skaggs (1950) 96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 215 P.2d 487 , is discussed in [a] and [b], above. Even though the court of appeal reversed an order granting defendant a new trial, it stated that if the findings are so inconsistent, ambiguous, and uncertain that they are incapable of being reconciled and it is impossible to tell how a material issue is determined, the decision is against law (96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 383) . In this case, the court concluded that the findings were consistent, unambiguous, and certain and, after examining the findings more closely, the court held that the decision was not against law (96 Cal. App. 2d 380, 385-386) .

In 1981, the Legislature amended Code Civ. Proc. § 632, replacing findings of fact and conclusions of law with statements of decision. However, it appears that the resulting statement of decision may be inconsistent, ambiguous, and uncertain, even though a party may file proposals as to the contents of the statement, and the other party may object to these proposed contents [see Code Civ. Proc. § 634; Cal. Rules of Ct., Rule 3.1590(e), (f), (i)]. However, the inconsistent, ambiguous, or uncertain statement of decision will probably not afford a ground for the granting of a new trial unless the substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected [see Code Civ. Proc. § 657]. In any event, cases such as this one, decided under the prior law, should be used with care.

[d] Evidence Insufficient as Matter of Law and Without Conflict on Any Material Point

In re Marriage of Beilock (1978) 81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 146 Cal. Rptr. 675 , was an action in which a former wife obtained a writ of execution and levy on her former husband's property for arrearages of child and spousal support payments. Her former husband then obtained an order quashing the writ, claiming that he had no obligation to pay support payments since his wife was living with another man and holding herself out to be his wife [see former Civ. Code § 4801.5 (replaced by Fam. Code § 4323)], and that although the marital settlement agreement provided for the support of a child until she reached 21, his daughter had become emancipated at age 17. The former wife then moved for a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and decision against law. The motion was granted, and the husband appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order on the ground that the decision was against law. The court stated that a decision is against the law if the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point (81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 728) . In this case, the court noted that the husband's arrearages preceded the effective date of Civ. Code § 4801.5, providing for the termination of spousal support payments if a spouse is living with a person of the opposite sex and holding himself or herself as the spouse of the other person. Therefore, even if Civ. Code § 4801.5 could be applied, it could only justify termination of payments for two of the six years that the payments were due under the terms of the agreement (81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 729-730). Secondly, the court held that a child's emancipation did not automatically terminate the parent's obligation of support (81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 730) . Finally, the court of appeal concluded that the trial judge may have decided to exercise his or her discretion to quash the writ on the basis of equitable considerations, but later decided to change his or her mind on the matter. Although the court of appeal could not say categorically that the original choice was against the law, it declined to disturb the order granting a new trial since there was no showing that there was an abuse of discretion in the choice of the trial judge to change his or her mind. In other words, the court stated, the judge was within the bounds of permissible action to conclude that the original decision he or she had made was against the law (81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 732-733) . Accordingly, the court affirmed the order granting a new trial (81 Cal. App. 3d 713, 733) .

[e] Moving Party May Raise New Legal Theory

In Hoffman-Haag v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1991) 1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 1 Cal. Rptr. 2d 805 , parents of a child brought an action against an owner of a day care home after the child died from injuries suffered when she fell down a set of stairs while at the day care facility. The day care owner's homeowner insurance carrier denied coverage of the parents' claim. The issue of coverage was tried by the trial court without a jury and the court entered judgment against the insurer. The insurer filed a motion for new trial. In its motion, the insurer relied for the first time on Insur. Code § 676.1(c) (it is against public policy for a residential property insurance policy to provide liability coverage for losses arising out of operation of a family day care home). The trial court vacated its earlier judgment and the parents appealed.

The court of appeal affirmed the trial court's order. On appeal, the parents contended that the insurer's tardy reliance on the Insurance Code section did not permit the trial court to grant a new trial or vacate its prior judgment, and, citing Slemons v. Paterson (1939) 14 Cal. 2d 612, 615, 96 P.2d 125 , that a mistake of law will not support an order granting a new trial or an order vacating a judgment. The Hoffman-Haag court distinguished Slemons, recognizing that Slemons correctly held that, on a motion for new trial based on newly discovered evidence (see Code Civ. Proc. § 657(4)), mistake of law claimed to have been the cause for having failed to see earlier the relevance of the evidence is inadequate to support the motion. That restriction, however, the court concluded, does not apply to all the grounds on which a new trial may be made or a judgment vacated (1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 14) . Contrary to the parents' argument, legal challenges that may brought by way of Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6) and Code Civ. Proc. § 663(1) (motion to vacate), based on the ground that the decision is "against the law" are not limited to those raised before verdict or judgment (1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 15) . The court noted that on appeal a party may change the legal theory he or she relied on at trial, so long as the new theory presents a question of law to be applied to undisputed facts in the record. The court held that in ruling on a new trial motion, Sections 657 and 663 give a trial court no less power to consider new legal theories. Since the insurer could have argued on appeal that the Insurance Code, as applied to stipulated facts, barred coverage; there was no sound reason that prevented the insurer from making the same argument in its motion for new trial (1 Cal. App. 4th 10, 16) .

THE MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL SHOULD NOT BE GRANTED BECAUSE THE _____ [VERDICT or DECISION] IS NOT AGAINST LAW IN THAT THE EVIDENCE IS NOT WITHOUT CONFLICT ON ALL MATERIAL POINTS.

A. Evidence Must Be Without Conflict on All Material Points. A jury's verdict is against law only if it is unsupported by any substantial evidence; that is, if the entire evidence was such as would justify a directed verdict against the parties in whose favor the verdict is returned. To put it another way, a verdict or decision can be said to be against law only if the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point (Sanchez-Corea v. Bank of America (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 892, 906, 215 Cal. Rptr. 679, 701 P.2d 826 ; McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 229, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213).

[Optional] B. "Against Law" Does Not Allow Weighing of Evidence. The words "against law" in Section 657(6) of the Code of Civil Procedure do not import a situation in which the court weighs the evidence and merely finds a balance against the verdict (Sanchez-Corea v. Bank of America (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 892, 906, 215 Cal. Rptr. 679, 701 P.2d 826 ; McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 229, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213).

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict or decision is against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] when the evidence is not without conflict on all material points. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in §§ 155.230, 155.231, and 155.234.

Optional Paragraph B is for use in opposing the erroneous contention that a verdict is against law based on a weighing of the evidence. The argument may be used when, of course, the party supporting the motion for new trial would not otherwise prevail on the Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6) ground of insufficiency of the evidence [see, e.g., Musgrove v. Ambrose Properties (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 56, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722 (order granting new trial not sustainable under either grounds of sufficiency of evidence or verdict against law)].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the evidence in the case in order to show that there may be a conflict on a material point. Counsel should add additional points and authorities that discuss the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense. For example, in a wrongful death action in which plaintiff moves for a new trial on the ground that the verdict for defendant is against law, defense counsel may find it necessary to discuss the substantive law of negligence in order to argue that there are conflicts in the evidence regarding whether or not defendant is negligent as a matter of law [see Hilts v. County of Solano (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 161, 177-178, 71 Cal. Rptr. 275] . To aid in preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Evidence Must Be Without Conflict on All Material Points

Sanchez-Corea v. Bank of America (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 892, 215 Cal. Rptr. 679, 701 P.2d 826 , involved an action for damages in which plaintiffs were awarded a $2.1 million judgment against a defendant bank. The bank moved for a new trial and the trial court granted the motion. The plaintiffs appealed.

The Supreme Court reversed. The Court stated that the jury's verdict is "against law" only if it is unsupported by any substantial evidence, that is, if the entire evidence is such as would justify a directed verdict against the parties in whose favor the verdict was returned. The Court went on to say that the function of the trial court on a motion for a directed verdict is analogous to and practically the same as that of a reviewing court in determining, on appeal, whether there is evidence in the record of sufficient substance to support the verdict (38 Cal. 3d 892, 906) . Accordingly, the Court examined the record to determine whether the verdict for the plaintiffs was, as a matter of law, unsupported by substantial evidence. In applying the established rule of appellate review, the Court concluded that the judgment entered on the jury verdict was supported by substantial evidence (38 Cal. 3d 892, 907) .

In McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 , plaintiff purchaser brought an action against the defendant sellers for damages caused by the sellers' alleged breach of an escrow agreement. A verdict was rendered for plaintiff and, on defendants' motions, the court granted judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict and, alternately, ordered a new trial. The court's order granting the motion specified that it was granted on three grounds: insufficiency of the evidence, accident or surprise, and verdict against law. Plaintiff appealed from the judgment and from the order granting a new trial.

The court of appeal reversed both the judgment for defendants notwithstanding the verdict and the order granting defendants a new trial. The court stated that a verdict or decision can be said to be against law only when the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point. In this case, the court of appeal noted that the trial court entertained an erroneous concept of the application of estoppel in this case. If the court had been correct in deciding that only conduct before a certain date could create an estoppel, then the granting of a new trial because the verdict was against law would have been proper in that there was no evidence of such conduct before that date. However, since an estoppel could have been based on acts occurring after that date and evidence of those acts was received, the court concluded that the verdict was not against law (8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228-230) . After examining the granting of the motion on the other grounds, the court reversed the order granting defendants a new trial (8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 230) .

[b] "Against Law" Does Not Allow Weighing of Evidence

The facts and procedural background of Sanchez-Corea v. Bank of America (1985) 38 Cal. 3d 892, 215 Cal. Rptr. 679, 701 P.2d 826 , are discussed in [a], above. In Sanchez-Corea, in which the Supreme Court reversed an order granting a new trial, the Court stated that the ground that the verdict "is against law" is separate and distinct from the other grounds listed in Code Civ. Proc. § 657 and does not include any, or all, of those other separate and distinct grounds for new trial. The Court cited Musgrove v. Ambrose Properties (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 56, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722 for the proposition that in contrast to the grounds of insufficient evidence and excessive or inadequate damages, the phrase "against law" does not import a situation in which the court weighs the evidence and finds a balance against the verdict, as it does in considering the ground of insufficiency of evidence. The Court then considered the record on that theory and concluded that the judgment entered on the jury verdict was supported by substantial evidence (38 Cal. 3d 892, 907) .

The facts and procedural background of McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 87 Cal. Rptr. 213 , are discussed in [a], above. In McCown, which reversed the trial court's order granting defendants a new trial, the court of appeal stated that the words "against law" do not import a situation in which the court weighs conflicting evidence and merely finds a balance against the judgment (8 Cal. App. 3d 216, 228) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Evidence Must Be Without Conflict on All Material Points

Musgrove v. Ambrose Properties (1978) 87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 150 Cal. Rptr. 722 , was an action for personal injuries in which the court of appeal reversed a judgment for defendant notwithstanding the verdict and an order granting defendant a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against law. The court stated that the phrase "against law" does not import a situation in which the court weighs the evidence and finds a balance against the verdict; the granting of a new trial on that ground is authorized only when there is no substantial evidence to sustain the verdict. Since the evidence was sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff, the court concluded that a new trial was improperly granted on the ground that the verdict was against law (87 Cal. App. 3d 44, 56) .

S.F. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. v. McKeegan (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 263, 71 Cal. Rptr. 204 , was a condemnation action that apportioned an award between lessors and lessees. The court of appeal reversed an order granting a new trial to the lessors that was based on several grounds including verdict or decision against law. The court stated that the granting of a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against law is authorized when there is no substantial evidence to sustain the verdict. Since there was substantial evidence that supported the lessees' judgment, the court reversed the order (265 Cal. App. 2d 263, 272-273) .

Hilts v. County of Solano (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 161, 71 Cal. Rptr. 275 , was an action for wrongful death against the driver and owner of a truck and a county. The court of appeal reversed an order granting a new trial to the defendant owner. The court stated that a verdict is against law when the evidence is insufficient in law so that a directed verdict would have been proper for plaintiff. In this case, the court stated that the plaintiffs were not entitled to a directed verdict because the evidence conflicted as to whether the truck driver or decedent entered the intersection first and as to whether the truck driver was negligent in view of his speed and the limited visibility conditions at the intersection. While the court conceded that the driver of the truck exceeded the prima facie speed limit, this fact did not establish that he was negligent as a matter of law. Therefore, the court concluded that the order could not be sustained on the ground that the verdict was against the law (265 Cal. App. 2d 161, 177-178) .

Thompson v. Guyer-Hays (1962) 207 Cal. App. 2d 366, 24 Cal. Rptr. 461 , was an action for rescission of a contract for the sale of real property and for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation in which the court of appeal affirmed judgment for plaintiffs and reversed an order granting defendants' motion for a new trial on the ground that the decision was against law. The court of appeal stated that a decision is against law when the evidence is insufficient in law and without conflict on any material point; the words "against law" do not import a situation in which the court weighs conflicting evidence and merely finds a balance against the judgment. Since there was substantial evidence in this case to support the judgment, the court of appeal concluded that it was improper to grant the motion for new trial on the ground that the decision was against law (207 Cal. App. 2d 366, 375) .

A. Verdict Not Contrary to Correct Instruction. A verdict is against law when it is contrary to the instructions given to the jury, and that verdict is contrary to an instruction only when the evidence on a point covered by the instruction is without conflict and fails to show a set of facts that would warrant the verdict reached (*Kaiser Cement & Gypsum Corp. v. [a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict is against law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(6)] when either the verdict is not contrary to correct jury instructions or the verdict is contrary to incorrect jury instructions. In an appropriate case, the points and authorities set out in this form may be submitted in opposition to a motion for new trial supported by the points and authorities set out in § 155.232.

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the nature of the verdict rendered and the instruction given in order to show that the verdict is not against law. It may be necessary for counsel to add further points and authorities discussing the substantive law pertaining to the particular cause of action or defense. For example, in a personal injury action in which defendant moves for a new trial on the ground that plaintiff's verdict is against law, plaintiff may discuss the substantive law of negligence to show that the jury instructions were erroneous statements of the law on contributory negligence, but that the jury reached a verdict that was in disregard of the instructions [see Tousley v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1913) 166 Cal. 457, 462-463, 137 P. 31] . To aid in preparing these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters contained in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender).

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Verdict Not Contrary to Correct Instruction

In Kaiser Cement & Gypsum Corp. v. Allis-Chalmers Mfg. Co. (1973) 35 Cal. App. 3d 948, 111 Cal. Rptr. 210 , plaintiff purchaser brought an action for breach of warranty and negligence against the manufacturer and seller of industrial electric motors. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff on the breach of warranty cause of action. Defendant moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict and a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against law. The court denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, but granted the motion for a new trial. Plaintiff appealed the order granting a new trial; defendant appealed from the order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The court of appeal reversed the order granting defendant's motion for a new trial, stating that a verdict is against law when it is contrary to the instructions given the jury. However, that a verdict is against law or that it is not supported by the evidence are separate grounds for a new trial. An order granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against law cannot be stated by merely showing that the verdict is unsupported by the evidence. It is possible to determine whether a verdict is contrary to an instruction only when the evidence on a point covered by the instruction is without conflict and fails to show a set of facts, which, under the instruction, would warrant the verdict reached. However, the court explained that if the evidence on that point is conflicting but sufficient to support a finding of fact under which the instruction warrants the verdict, it must be presumed that the jury would make such a finding and hence its verdict is not contrary to the instruction and not against the law. In this case, the court found that the evidence was in conflict and sufficient to support the verdict. Therefore, it was not contrary to the instructions given to the jury and was not against law (35 Cal. App. 3d 948, 958) .

In Hawkinson v. Oesdean (1943) 61 Cal. App. 2d 712, 143 P.2d 967 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendant. After the jury rendered a verdict in favor of defendant, plaintiff moved for a new trial on the ground that the verdict was against law. The court granted the motion, and defendant appealed the order. On appeal, plaintiff claimed that the verdict was against law because the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict.

The court of appeal reversed the order, stating that a verdict is against law when it is contrary to the instructions given to the jury. The court observed that no conflict was claimed or appeared between the verdict and the instructions. It explained that a verdict is not against law merely because the evidence is insufficient to justify it. Insufficiency of the evidence and verdict against law are two separate grounds for a new trial, and an order granting a new trial on the ground that the verdict is against law cannot be sustained by merely showing that it is unsupported by the evidence. The court added that it is possible to determine whether a verdict is contrary to an instruction only when the evidence on a point covered by the instruction is without conflict and fails to show a set of facts that under the instructions, would warrant the verdict reached. When the evidence on that point is conflicting, but sufficient to support a finding of fact that under the instruction, warrants the verdict, it must be presumed that the jury did make such a finding, and hence its verdict is not contrary to the instruction and not against law. Furthermore, the court added that the evidence was legally sufficient to justify the verdict, and after examining other possible grounds for the granting of the motion, the court concluded that the order should be reversed (61 Cal. App. 2d 712, 717-720) .

[b] Special Verdict Form Need Not Repeat Detail of Instruction

In Neal v. Montgomery Elevator Co. (1992) 7 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 9 Cal. Rptr. 2d 497 , the plaintiff in a personal injury action moved for new trial on his cause of action for strict liability against the defendant manufacturer. The parties agreed to products liability jury instructions on burden of proof and defective design and on the special verdict form for negligence and products liability [see BAJI No. 16.11 (7th ed. 1986)]. The trial court suggested that counsel could modify the form "if it needs to be modified" to conform with the leading case, but plaintiff's counsel declined to modify the form. The trial court subsequently granted the motion for new trial because the special verdict form had not been revised to comport with the applicable burden of proof. The defendant appealed from the order.

The court of appeal reversed and reinstated the original judgment. The court reviewed the law regarding the burden of proof applicable to products liability cases from Bernal v. Richard Wolf Medical Instruments Corp. (1990) 221 Cal. App. 3d 1326, 1332, 272 Cal. Rptr. 41 , and concluded that the instructions correctly laid out each issue on which the plaintiff and defendant had the burden of proof. The special verdict form given to the jury, however, did not repeat the burden of proof instructions. The court stated that although Bernal used the same special verdict form and judgment for defendant was reversed, the jury's special verdict in that case quite likely resulted from the jury following the trial court's instructions. Since the jury in the instant case was provided with correct instructions, the court saw no reason why the instructions had to be repeated in detail in the special verdict form (7 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1199) . Thus, the court held that the special verdict form was correct and reversed (7 Cal. App. 4th 1194, 1196) .

[c] Verdict Contrary to Incorrect Instruction

In Tousley v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co. (1913) 166 Cal. 457, 137 P. 31 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries against defendant. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff, and defendant moved for a new trial. When its motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment. Defendant claimed that the verdicts were against law since they were in violation of two instructions given to the jury on the question of contributory negligence.

The Supreme Court affirmed the judgment, stating that it was manifest from reading the instructions that they could, in no degree, have prejudiced defendant's case. The Court stated that while a jury should conform to the instructions of the court on matters of law, if it appears to the appellate tribunal that an instruction was erroneous, it will not disregard a verdict contrary to the erroneous instruction. The fact that the lower court erroneously instructed the jury to the contrary does not make the verdict against law (166 Cal. 457, 462-463) . Accordingly, the Court affirmed the order denying the new trial (166 Cal. 457, 464) .

In Rystrom v. Sutter Butte Canal Co. (1925) 72 Cal. App. 518, 249 P. 53 , plaintiff brought an action to recover damages for loss of crops due to the alleged failure of defendant to furnish water for irrigation purposes. The jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff, and defendant moved for a new trial. When its motion was denied, defendant appealed the judgment on the basis of alleged erroneous jury instructions.

The court of appeal affirmed the judgment and found that defendant had not been prejudiced by the erroneous instruction since the jury did not follow the erroneous rule laid down by the court. The court stated that while the jury should conform to the instructions of the court on matters of law, if it appears to the appellate tribunal that an instruction was erroneous, it will not disregard a verdict contrary to such an erroneous instruction. The court stated that former Cal. Const., art. VI, § 41/2 [now see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13] directs that no judgment should be set aside or new trial granted unless the court is of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. The court concluded that the error in this case did not and could not have produced a miscarriage of justice. Accordingly, the court affirmed the judgment (72 Cal. App. 518, 524) .

[a] Verdict Contrary to Incorrect Instruction

O'Neill v. Thomas Day Co. (1907) 152 Cal. 357, 92 P. 856 , was a personal injury action in which the Supreme Court affirmed judgment for plaintiff finding that an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial was proper. The lower court gave an erroneous instruction to the jury that enumerated certain facts and told the jury that if it found those facts to exist, then plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Although those facts indisputably did exist, the jury found that plaintiff was not contributorily negligent. The Supreme Court stated that while the jury should conform to the instructions of the court on matters of law, if it appears to the appellate tribunal that an instruction was erroneous, it will not disregard a verdict contrary to erroneous instruction (152 Cal. 357, 361) . After examining other issues raised on appeal, the Court affirmed the judgment (152 Cal. 357, 362-364) .

S.F. Bay Area Rapid Transit Dist. v. McKeegan (1968) 265 Cal. App. 2d 263, 71 Cal. Rptr. 204 , was a condemnation action that apportioned the award between a lessor and lessee. The court of appeal reversed an order granting a new trial to the lessors that was based, in part, on an erroneous instruction that was given to the jury. The court stated that a new trial cannot be justified on an erroneous instruction that favored rather than prejudiced the movant and that the jury properly refused to apply (265 Cal. App. 2d 263, 272) .

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED BECAUSE THERE WAS AN ERROR IN LAW, OCCURRING AT THE TRIAL AND EXCEPTED TO BY _____ [PLAINTIFF or DEFENDANT], THAT MATERIALLY AFFECTED HIS/HER/ITS SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

A. New Trial on Ground of Error in Law Occurring at Trial. On application of the party aggrieved, the verdict or decision may be vacated, in whole or in part, and a new trial may be granted, on all or some of the issues, on the ground of error in law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the party making the application, if substantial rights of the aggrieved party are materially affected thereby (Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)).

B. Error Must Be Prejudicial. A court is expressly enjoined by Article VI, Section 13, of the California Constitution from granting a new trial for an error in law unless the error is prejudicial; however, if the error could possibly have been prejudicial, the court must consider its probable effect and decide the motion accordingly, and if it concludes that the error is prejudicial, a new trial is properly granted (Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 256, 262, 143 P.2d 929).

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law occurring at trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]. It is a general form that should be in conjunction with forms containing points and authorities relating to specific issues or fact situations [see, e.g., § 155.251 et seq.].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should include a discussion of the nature of the error of law, showing that the moving party excepted to the error at trial. Counsel should also show how the error materially affected the moving party's substantial rights.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.270 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Error Must Be Prejudicial

In Brown v. George Pepperdine Foundation (1943) 23 Cal. 2d 256, 143 P.2d 929 , plaintiffs brought an action for personal injuries against two defendants. The jury rendered a verdict for defendants, and the court granted plaintiffs' motion for a new trial on the basis of errors in law occurring in the jury instructions. One defendant appealed from the order granting a new trial.

The Supreme Court affirmed the order, stating that the trial court, no less than the appellate court, is expressly enjoined by former Cal. Const, art VI, § 41/2 [now see Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13], to deny a new trial for errors of law unless the errors were prejudicial. However, if the error could possibly have been prejudicial, the trial court must consider its probable effect and decide the motion accordingly. In this case, the trial court determined that the errors in the instructions prejudiced plaintiffs' case, and the Court could not say, in light of the record, that the trial court was in error. Accordingly, it affirmed the order (23 Cal. 2d 256, 262) .

[4] Additional Authorities

[a] Error Must Be Prejudicial

Los Angeles City High School Dist. v. Kita (1959) 169 Cal. App. 2d 655, 338 P.2d 60 , was an action in eminent domain in which the court of appeal affirmed an order granting plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of error in law. The court stated that if the error could possibly have been prejudicial, the trial court must consider its probable effect and decide the motion for a new trial accordingly (169 Cal. App. 2d 655, 664) . In this case, the lower court determined that it abused its discretion in permitting the admission of certain evidence and that such error prejudiced plaintiff's cause. The court of appeal stated that it could not conclude that the trial judge incorrectly granted a new trial. Accordingly, it affirmed the order (169 Cal. App. 2d 655, 666) .

§ 155.251 Supporting Motion for New Trial [Code Civ. Proc. § 659]--Error of Law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)]--Erroneous Admission or Exclusion of Evidence

[1] FORM

[The following should be combined with a general form of memorandum of points and authorities supporting a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law (see § 155.250).]

A NEW TRIAL SHOULD BE GRANTED ON THE GROUND OF ERROR IN LAW, OCCURRING AT TRIAL AND EXCEPTED TO BY THE PARTY MAKING THE APPLICATION, BECAUSE THE COURT ERRONEOUSLY_____ [ADMITTED and/or EXCLUDED] EVIDENCE AT TRIAL, THUS MATERIALLY AFFECTING _____ [PLAINTIFF'S or DEFENDANT'S] SUBSTANTIAL RIGHTS.

[EITHER]

A. Erroneous Admission of Evidence. The trial court's erroneous ruling on the admission of certain evidence is an error in law for which a new trial may be granted if the evidence admitted is not sufficiently probative and results in prejudice to the aggrieved party (see Richard v. Scott (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 63-64, 144 Cal. Rptr. 672 ; see also Holling v. Chandler (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 19, 23, 50 Cal. Rptr. 219).

[AND/OR]

A. Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence. A new trial may be granted on the ground of error in law if the trial court erroneously excludes certain admissible evidence and that exclusion results in prejudice to the moving party (see Burroughs v. Ben's Auto Park, Inc. (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 449, 456, 164 P.2d 897).

B. Adverse Ruling on Evidence Deemed Excepted To. A court's ruling sustaining or overruling an objection to evidence is deemed excepted to without formal objection (Code Civ. Proc. § 647).

C. Discretion of Trial Judge. If an error of law has occurred in the admission or rejection of evidence, the trial judge may consider all the circumstances surrounding the ruling, including the weight that may be accorded to the questioned evidence, the attitude of the interrogator, and any other fact tending to show the importance of the admission or rejection of the evidence (De Victoria v. Erickson (1948) 83 Cal. App. 2d 206, 208-209, 188 P.2d 276).

[Add further points and authorities discussing the substantive law of evidence in order to show that the evidentiary ruling was erroneous.]

[2] Comments

[a] Use of Form

This memorandum of points and authorities may be submitted in support of a motion for new trial on the ground occurring at trial and excepted to by the party making the application [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] when the court has erroneously excluded or admitted evidence. It does not provide a complete form, but it is designed to be combined with a general form of points and authorities in support of a motion for new trial on the ground of error in law [see § 155.250].

[b] Argument

Counsel should add argument linking the points in this form with the facts of his or her case. Thus, counsel should show why the exclusion or admission of the evidence was erroneous and how it prevented the moving party from having a fair trial, materially affecting the substantial rights of the moving party. Counsel should also add further points and authorities relating to the rules of evidence in order to show that the ruling was erroneous. To aid in the preparation of these substantive points and authorities, counsel may consult the substantive chapters in this publication and in California Forms of Pleading and Practice (Matthew Bender), as well as the provisions of the California Evidence Code.

[c] Related Pleading and Practice Forms

For a form of notice of intention to move for a new trial on the ground of error in law [Code Civ. Proc. § 657(7)] and other related forms, see California Forms of Pleading and Practice, Ch. 371, Motions After Trial (Matthew Bender).

[d] Opposing Points and Authorities

The points and authorities set out in § 155.270 may be used in an appropriate case to oppose a motion for a new trial supported by this memorandum.

[3] Discussion of Authorities

[a] Erroneous Admission of Evidence

In Richard v. Scott (1978) 79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 144 Cal. Rptr. 672 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision with one defendant. The jury found that plaintiff sustained damages in the sum of $6,000, but apportioned 50 percent fault to each party and rendered a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $3,000. Plaintiff's motion for a new trial was granted on the ground that the court erred in admitting the opinion of defendants' accident reconstruction expert that plaintiff was traveling in excess of the posted speed limit. Defendants appealed the order granting a new trial.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, noting that an erroneous evidentiary ruling may be an error of law for which a new trial may be granted (79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 63 n.2). The court said that the admissibility of the expert's opinion involved a mixed question of fact and law. The factual aspect of the question was whether or not there was evidentiary support for the assumptions made by the expert in formulating his or her opinion. An opinion based on surmise, guess, or conjecture has little evidentiary value (79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 63) . The court felt that the trial judge, having heard the evidence, was in a better position to determine whether the factual assumptions made by the expert were adequately supported by the evidence or whether they were based on conjecture. In this case, the record supported the trial judge's determination that many of the factual assumptions made by the expert in arriving at his or her opinion lacked sufficient evidentiary support. Therefore, the court of appeal found no abuse of discretion in granting the motion, and accordingly, it affirmed the order (79 Cal. App. 3d 57, 64) .

Note that the holding in Richard was rejected by another court of appeal for categorically holding that the prevailing moving party in a motion for new trial is not required to demonstrate that prejudice resulted from the error for which a new trial was granted (Mosesian v. Pennwalt Corp. (1987) 191 Cal. App. 3d 851, 859, 236 Cal. Rptr. 778). Although Richard cited Malkasian v. Irwin (1964) 61 Cal. 2d 738, 747-749, 40 Cal. Rptr. 78, 394 P.2d 822 (discussed in § 155.134[3][b]) for that holding, the court in Mosesian held that the Richard decision was overbroad in its statement that a litigant need not show that any prejudice resulted from an error, and that the Richard court's statement of the rule indulges the discretion of the trial court beyond the degree contemplated by the Malkasian court, which noted that the trial court found that a miscarriage of justice had occurred. The court in Mosesian held that granting a new trial motion when the error alleged is harmless violates Cal. Const., art. VI, § 13, which states that the standard for granting new trial motions is prejudicial error.

In Holling v. Chandler (1966) 241 Cal. App. 2d 19, 50 Cal. Rptr. 219 , plaintiff brought an action for personal injuries sustained in an automobile collision with defendant. After the jury returned a verdict for defendant, the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial on the ground of error in law. The trial court stated that it had erroneously admitted experimental evidence for the limited purpose of impeaching plaintiff's expert witness and that it also failed to instruct the jury on the limited purpose for which the evidence was admitted. Defendant appealed the order.

The court of appeal affirmed the order, stating that testimony relating to the results of experiments concerning a disputed material fact should be admitted only if the conditions under which the experiments were made are substantially identical to those out of which the disputed fact arose, should be of the character which will clarify rather than confuse the issue at hand, and should not be admitted if it predominantly involves a consideration of collateral issues. In this case, the conditions at the time of the accident and those at the time of the experiment presented many variables. The evidence served to distract the attention of the jury by submitting a variety of collateral issues to it (241 Cal. App. 2d 19, 24-25) . Furthermore, the evidence was confusing and not dependable. Therefore, the court of appeal concluded that the lower court was justified in concluding that the evidence did not sufficiently establish the facts for which it was proffered, and that this error was compounded by the court's failure to give a limiting instruction. Accordingly, the court held that the order granting a new trial was not an abuse of discretion, and it affirmed the order (241 Cal. App. 2d 19, 25-26) .

[b] Erroneous Exclusion of Evidence

In Burroughs v. Ben's Auto Park, Inc. (1945) 27 Cal. 2d 449, 164 P.2d 897 , plaintiff was injured at night when he fell into an areaway adjacent to a parking lot where he had left his automobile. He sued the lessee and operator of the parking lot, the owner and lessor of the parking lot, and the owners of the adjoining property on which the areaway was situated. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the owner and lessor and against the other defendants. The owners of the adjoining property were granted a new trial on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence and error in law occurring at trial. Plaintiff appealed the judgment in favor of the owner and lessor and from the order granting the other defendants a new trial.
